

C.H. Spurgeon On John Trapp

Would it be possible to eulogise too much the incomparably sententious and suggestive folios of John Trapp? Since Mr. Dickinson has rendered them accessible, I trust most of you have bought them. Trapp will be most valuable to men of discernment, to thoughtful men, to men who only want a start in a line of thought, and are then able to run alone. Trapp excels in witty stories on the one hand, and learned allusions on the other. You will not thoroughly enjoy him unless you can turn to the original, and yet a mere dunce at classics will prize him.

His writings remind me of himself: he was a pastor, hence his holy practical remarks; he was the head of a public school, and everywhere we see his profound scholarship; he was for some time amid the guns and drums of a parliamentary garrison, and he gossips and tells queer anecdotes like a man used to a soldier's life; yet withal, he comments as if he had been nothing else but a commentator all his days. Some of his remarks are far fetched, and like the far fetched rarities of Solomon's Tarshish, there is much gold and silver, but there are also apes and peacocks.

His criticisms would some of them be the cause of amusement in these days of greater scholarship; but for all that, he who shall excel Trapp had need rise very early in the morning. Trapp is my especial companion and treasure; I can read him when I am too weary for anything else. Trapp is salt, pepper, mustard, vinegar, and all the other condiments. Put him on the table when you study, and when you have your dish ready, use him by way of spicing the whole thing. Yes, gentlemen, read Trapp certainly, and if you catch the infection of his consecrated humour, so much the better for your hearers.

EDITOR'S PREFACE

It may be right to state what the nature of the Editorial labour expended on this Work has been. I have gone on the principle of taking the minimum of liberty with the Author's text, consistent with presenting it in the most serviceable form. The spelling has been modernised, and the punctuation corrected; but the Author's admirable quaintness has been left untouched. Occasionally an obsolete word has been explained, by placing beside it, in brackets, its modern equivalent; and in a very few instances the meaning of a sentence has been cleared up by a slight transposition of two or three words.

The multitudinous classical, patristic, historical, and literary quotations and references scattered down the margin of the Author's page, have been connected by numerals with the portion of the text to which they belong, and brought to the foot of the page. To have verified all these countless quotations, would have been to entail an expense that would have more materially enhanced the price than the value of the Work; but the reader now has them in an orderly form, and with an amount of accuracy, which have never hitherto pertained to them. In accomplishing this result, I have been greatly indebted to DAVID LAING, Esq., LL. D., of the Signet Library, for facilities and assistance, uniformly rendered with a patience and courtesy meriting my best acknowledgments.

The very numerous quotations from Scripture, characteristic of the Puritans—"mighty in the Scriptures,"—have been all verified, and an Index of them is now appended, which it is believed will be very useful. The light thrown on passages of Scripture in incidental quotation by such a writer as TRAPP, is frequently as valuable as express comments in loco; and those who may use this Work as a help in preparation for the Pulpit, will see that this Index, by its extent and fulness, is fitted to be very serviceable to them. It is accompanied by TRAPP'S original Index of Topics, now considerably enlarged.

I think it unnecessary to speak in commendation of my Author. The labour of many months spent over his pages in endeavouring to present them in a form (for the first time) worthy of their valuable contents, enables me cordially to indorse the high estimate expressed of this Commentary by numerous most competent judges.

LASSWADE, BY EDINBURGH, 19th December 1866.

Memoir of John Trapp, M.A.

THERE is a vivid little book bearing the title of "A TRAP to Catch a Sunbeam." Ever since my promise to the enterprising and deserving young Publisher, to furnish a Memoir for his proposed reprint—now so happily concluded—I have been reversing the process, by seeking to 'catch' our 'TRAPP' among the 'Sunbeams' of the usual Puritan authorities, and contemporary books and manuscripts; or, to put it more humbly, have been carrying my literary lanthorn into all likely and unlikely places, towards getting 'light' on the ancient 'Life.' If—as in too many previous cases—it must anew be questioned, with SIR THOMAS BROWNE, "whether the best men be known, or whether there be not more remarkable persons forgot than any that stand remembered in the known account of time," {1} and if, -notwithstanding all persistent and anxious research, -the results be inadequate, I have yet to congratulate myself on a much fuller Memoir than is anywhere else to be found, and than at one time I could have hoped for—seeing that, over and over, inquiry was balked by destroyed Church registers, and that up to the present moment the response to the 'Notice' and appeal prefixed to the first volume Genesis—II. Chronicles has been absolutely—NIL. {2} Moreover, research started under the disadvantage of entire silence on the part of NEAL and CALAMY, PALMER and BROOK; while the same rule that excluded him from the "Worthies"—viz., that he was still living when that most genial, and pleasautest even of Fuller's books, was issued, excludes him also from the kindred "Lives" of SAMUEL CLARK, and the terse, fine-natured "Notices" of Edward Leigh Esq. One mourns the want of the two latter, as both were men who knew and loved him, wisely and well. However—to our task, that is no task, but truest "labour of love."

The name TRAPP is not at all a common one in England or anywhere, so far as I have been able to trace. It is met with under the varying orthography of TRAP, TRAPP, TRAPPE, TRAPS and TRAPPS. The 'shield' of our Trapp bears three cal-trops (or calthrops)—those deadly snare-traps that played such havoc with Edward's cavalry at Bannockburn. Perhaps we have here an instance of punning heraldry—to wit, in the "cal-trops," or Latin trib-uli.

The earliest TRAPPS that have come under our notice are these: a Rector of Duddinghurst, in the Archdeaconry of Essex, "Richard Trapp, S. T. P., 30th June 1491," {3} and good ROBERT TRAPP (or TRAPS), "goldsmith," of London, 1526, and his like-minded daughter, JODOCA or JOYCE. Before "the Fire" in the Church of St Leonard, Foster Lane, London, there was a fair monument to the memory of these large-hearted citizens. The beginning reads thus:—

When the Bells be merely rounge,
And the Masse devoutly soung,
And the Meate merely eaten,
Then shall ROBERT TRAPPIS, his wyffe, and his children, be forgotten.

The enormous Alexandrine at the close—which beats Dryden hollow—will be forgiven for sake of the 'alms-deeds' commemorated. The daughter "Joyce" Trapp (or Traps), is still a vital name in Brasenose College, Oxford, being remembered in the "annual thanks" to Benefactors. {4} There was a Henry Trippe, M.A.—probably another spelling of Trappe merely—Rector of North Okendon in 1569, and of St Stephen's, Walbrook, London, in 1572. {5} His name is all that has reached posterity. NEWCOURT gives it with all carefulness, and with all carefulness omits that of THOMAS WATSON, another Rector of St Stephen's, Walbrook. Yet is the unrecorded, 'Ejected' Rector the remembered and venerated, and the recorded—forgotten! I have failed to get at connecting links between these TRAPPS.

Like the "heavenly" SIBBES, and innumerable other of the venerable and holy names of England, our JOHN TRAPP had for birthplace one of the humble, sequestered 'Villages' that so 'take' our foreign pilgrim-visitants, especially those from over the Atlantic; and, like the author of "The Soul's Conflict" and "Bruised Reed," his parentage was in all probability of "the common people," lowly, but godly. He was son of NICHOLAS TRAPP, of Kempsey—sometimes KEMSEY, and KEMESEY—situated in the lower division of the Hundred of OSWALDSLOW, in WORCESTERSHIRE. In his "Decads" of "Commonplaces," {6} our Worthy mentions reverently "Mr SIMON TRAPPE, late minister of God's Word at Stratford-upon-Avon," as his "dear and near kinsman, both in the flesh and in the faith." This "good" man—Vicar of Stratford-upon-Avon—was in all likelihood a brother of Nicholas. {7} Contemporary 'registers' and other documents are gone; but circumstances must have led the paternal TRAPP to leave Kempsey for a neighbouring hamlet, named CROMB D'ABITOT, where, on 5th June 1601, our Commentator was born. {8} A little way off—on 8th September of same year—Mary Shakespere, mother of Shakespere—was left a widow.

KEMPSEY is described as a "handsome village"; but the one noticeable bit of fact placed on record concerning it is, that in 1779 certain fine elm-trees, planted in 1688, in commemoration of the immortal event of that year, were cut down. Gravestones, bearing dates so (comparatively) recent as 1702 and 1721, still solicit "prayers" for "the soul" of those lying beneath them, which would indicate a Roman Catholic "remnant" there. CROME D'AEITOT—spelled by Wood "Crome D'Abitot," and described as "commonly called Crumdebitot," and elsewhere CROMB OSBERN—is situated in the same Hundred with KEMPSEY, but in the deanery of PERSHORE, whereas the latter is in the deanery of WORCESTER. In the County Histories we have all manner of details concerning names that the world should "willingly let die," but not a syllable of the TRAPPS, or of our TRAPP. It chagrins one to have to labour through exhaustive and exhausting pedigrees of D'ABITOTS, and Youngs, and RICES, and CLARES, and COVENTRYS, and other "gentle" nobodies, -or bodies only, -and to be perplexed with barbarisms of this sort, that CRUMBE had "three carucates" {In ancient deeds the normal carucate is either 120 acres or 80 acres by the Norman number (5 score to the hundred) and 144 acres or 96 acres by the English number (6 score to the hundred). CED} and three villans, {an occupier of land in the feudal vill. CED} and five bordars with three carucates," and "quarentines of wood" away back in the Conqueror's time; while there is utter forgetfulness or supercilious ignorance, of those who were of the richer "blue blood" of the King of Kings' "family"—with reverence be it spoken. {9} Well! There is compensation—KEMPSEY remains dear to many hearts to this day, not because some of the "great ones" (so called) of the Land lived and died there, but because of THOMAS BROMWICH, its 'Ejected' Vicar, concerning whom RICHARD BAXTER testified that he was "an ancient, reverend, able minister, of an upright life"; {10} and CROMB D'ABITOT is lustrous still, not from its D'ABITOTS, but as the birthplace of the old Puritan—JOHN TRAPP. {11}

Our Worthy, in the same place wherein he recalls the memory of his uncle—SIMON TRAPPE—and elsewhere, tells us of a deeper thing than birth or birthplace or kinsmanship. By a strange oversight on the part either of my accomplished friend the Editor (Rev. WILLIAM WEBSTER M.A.), or of the Printers—either, or both—the entire passage—a most characteristic one—has been left out; and hence, for the double reason of its own rare interest and this omission, must here be given. He is speaking of alms—as our readers will find on turning to the volume containing the New Testament; {12} and, after the example of "liberal givers" there adduced, ending with Antoninus the emperor, he thus chattily continues:—

"Queen Anne Bullen carried ever about her a little purse for the poor; thinking no day well spent wherein some man had not fared the better by some benefit at her hand. She kept her maids, and such as were about her, so employed in sewing and working garments for the poor, that neither was there seen any idleness then among them, nor any leisure to follow foolish pastimes. So did Dorcas before her, and so before them both Bathsheba, or the good housewife that she commends to her son Solomon: 'She layeth her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff.' {#Pr 31:19} But why this? And what need she be so work-brittle, being a queen? It followeth in the next words, {#Pr 31:20} 'She stretcheth out her hand to the poor; yea, she reacheth forth her hands to the needy.' She was of his mind, belike, that said, (and suffered for so saying, in King Henry VIII's days Foxe, 765.) 'That alms should not be given until it sweat in a man's hand,' Mr Bradford, martyr, counted that hour lost wherein he did not some good with his tongue, pen, or purse Ibid., 1457. The young Lord Harrington gave the tenth of his allowance (which was a thousand pounds a year during his minority) to the poor and other good uses (as appeared by his accounts after his death), besides what he gave in the way as he walked and travelled, which he did often and much, &c. {13} M. Whateley also, that late painful and powerful preacher of God's Word at Banbury, as he was much in pressing the duty of liberality, so himself abounded in works of mercy. He set apart and expended for the space of many years, for good uses, the tenth part of his yearly comings in, both out of his temporal and ecclesiastical means of maintenance." {14} Then come in our more immediate biographic references:—

"Neither may I here forget that late reverend man of God, Mr John Ballam, pastor of the church of Evesham, my SPIRITUAL FATHER and bountiful benefactor; nor yet M. Simon Trappe" as before..."Both which, out of that little they had (for God saw fit to hold them here to strait allowance, who deserved a larger proportion; but a rich store is of no less worth when locked up in a wicker casket {15} than when set in a bishop's mitre), they laid up by them weekly in store somewhat for the poor of that their little; and they were no losers by it."

The remainder of the overlooked paragraph, -only passing by the confirming marginal quotations, -may as well appear here:—

"The poor man's box is Christ's treasury (saith a Father), and He sits by as an Archdeacon to see what every man casts into this treasury, and with what affection. The people—Mr 12:41—cast in money (brass money, saith the original); somewhat they must do, for none might appear empty handed before the Lord, but they would do as little as might be; they cast in, saith the text, not silver or gold, but brass money, into the treasury. And many that were rich cast in much; but the poor widow cast in 'more than all the rest,' saith our Saviour; less in arithmetical proportion, but more in geometrical, because all she had. And women are noted for being more hard and tenacious than men; whence it is that the joy for finding the lost groat is propounded in the person of a woman (#Lu 15:8,9) But this was a 'widow indeed,' trusting in God, as St Paul describeth such—in the living God, as this text hath it, 'who giveth us all things richly to enjoy.' This is one part of God's charge here; and another is, to be 'rich in good works, ready to distribute,' &c. And that is our first reason," &c.

We may very safely assume that it was between Master SIMON TRAPPE and Master JOHN BALLAM that Master JOHN TRAPP obtained his early school training; while to the dear 'pastor' of EVESHAM—worthy predecessor of the 'Ejected' GEORGE HOPKINS there {16} -there was the tenderer and holier debt of 'spiritual' fatherhood, which was no idle phrase or conventional thing from such a pen. We have another grateful allusion to BALLAM in his Commentary on #Pr 4:3 "For I was my father's son." On this he says, in his own full way:—

"Plato praised God that he was pupil to Socrates, Bucholcerus that he was bred under Melanchthon, Mr Whateley under Mr DOD's ministry, and I under Mr BALLAM'S at Evesham."

It is lamentable that next to nothing of earthly 'record' remains of MASTER BALLAM. NEAL and BROOK knew not of him; and as is their wont, the County-Histories lavish all their pains on the dry-as-dust herald-lore of the 'big' Families. Shade of Fuller, forgive us if we venture a pun in coveting that some one of even such "Asses" had spoken of such a Ballam!

EVESHAM is not far from KEMPSEY and CROMB D'ABITOT, being within the Hundred of BLAKENHURST. It owes its origin to the great Abbey that once stood in its wood-land solitudes. {17} I could not pass the gray walls of the humble Church without paying the reverence of a bared head to the memory of him who so long ago was used to "quicken" therein the larger and stronger soul than his own, perchance. One wistfully wishes a sight of the 'sermon' from whose quiver the arrow went forth that wounded to heal; as one in like sort longs unsatisfiedly to set eyes and heart on the "Hidden Treasure" of ZACHARY CATLIN, the friend and "pastor" of Sibbes.

Thus 'trained' under MASTER BALLAM, young TRAPP proceeded from his village-home to the county town (or city), -his native WORCESTER—passing hither as "a king's scholar," to the renowned "Free School" in Worcester. {19} The Master was HENRY BRIGHT, of whom Anthony a-Wood speaks laudingly. Having told us, under "January 17th, 1583," that he was then made "B.A."—along with HENRY AIRAY, the commentator on "Philippians"; and JOHN DOVE—by whom, if I err not, is designated the quaint author of that rarest of rare books, the savoury quarto on the Song of Solomon, now before me—and "M.A." in 1586, he continues, "He was afterwards master of the king's school at Worcester (in which city he was born) for forty years together, and prebendary of the church there for the last seven years of his life. He had a most excellent faculty in instructing youths in Latin, Greek, and Hebrew, most of which were afterwards sent to the Universities, where they proved eminent to emulation. He was also an excellent preacher, was resorted to far and near, and dying 4th March 1626, was buried in the cathedral church in Worcester." {20}

Doubtless Master BALLAM'S "bountiful benefaction" aided now; and of certainty his protegee recompensed him for all his love and care and bounty. Whatever of "Latin, Greek, and Hebrew" BRIGHT had to "teach," Master TRAPP with "all diligence" acquired; and although it may not be "written in the books of the chronicles of the kings," the foremost "pupil" of this school was the rustic villager of CROMB D'ABITOT. Later there came to the same 'school' and 'Master,' SAMUEL BUTLER, and the ATHENAE records as "scholars" of HENRY BRIGHT, such names as ROBERT HARRIS, and JOHN DOUGHTIE, and FRANCIS POTTER, and ROGER MANWARING, and the DUGARDS; but who of them all in potential service may once be named with the Puritan Commentator—albeit I would speak with high regard of the keen-brained and rich freighted Puritan ROBERT HARRIS? and as to the poet of "Hudibras," comparison and estimate are impossible where the differences are so fundamental. Curious it certainly is, and declarative on his part, of robust independence of thought and decision, that while the Master and school-"mates" of our Worthy, in so far as these names go—save HARRIS—became Churchly and Royalist to the backbone, he, when the crisis came, took his 'side' for the Kingdom rather than the King; or let us put it, for the Monarchy rather than the Monarch, and for plain PRESBYTERY as opposed to stately PRELACY—as afterwards to be told.

ANTHONY A-WOOD, as above, informs us that most of HENRY BRIGHT'S four-languaged "pupils" (English being assumed) were "sent" to the Universities. His "Lives" confirm this, and specifically of TRAPP he states, "In 1618 he made his academical entry into Christ Church Oxford, and lived there some years in the condition, as it seems, of a servitor, under the tuition of Mr GEORGE JAY, a student of that house, and partly by the benefaction of Dr Corbet, then dean thereof."

What determined the preference of OXFORD over Cambridge, and the selection of WOLSEY'S college of "Christ Church" has not been transmitted. Certainly, however illustrious, this particular College was not at all distinguished as Puritan—after the type of CAMBRIDGE contemporaneously, and even of lesser Colleges in OXFORD. It is pleasant to find the sunny-natured poet-Bishop, while "dean," taking kindly interest in Master TRAPP. Of his tutor, GEORGE JAY, not very much is known, but what is known deepens the surprise that out of such continued Churchly and Royalist influences our Puritan came forth so staunch and true. But the Churchism and the Royalism of such men as CORBET and JAY were not the slimy and crawling things ultimately gendered. Here is the notice of JAY by ANTHONY A-WOOD:—

"At the same time 1660 were letters from the chancellor read for GEORGE JAY of Christ Church to be created Doctor of Divinity; but being not present, he was to be admitted when he made his appearance. The said letter speaks thus of him. 'He continued a student of Christ Church for the space of twenty years and upwards, and in the year 1614 he proceeded Master of Arts, and was first made grammar-reader, then terrae-filius at the public act, and afterwards was made chaplain to the Earl of Anglesea, and after to the Duke of Bucks, and then to Dr White, Bishop of Ely, lately deceased. And now his majesty taking special notice of Mr Jay's worth and ability, as also of his services done to him, and his sufferings for him, hath been graciously pleased, without any privy or seeking of his own, to give unto him an eminent preferment in the Church. By reasons of the late troubles he was forced beyond the seas to save his life, &c. This Mr Jay, who was born of genteel parents in Dorsetshire, but not admitted doctor, hath several sermons extant, which I have not seen." {21} All honour to such genuine allegiance to conviction; but all wonder and sorrow over the object of it. How the ideal glorified the actual in such minds as JAY and THOMAS FULLER and others that might be named—much as the haze of sunlight transfigures even the ordure of the dunghill and the corrupt green of the stagnant pool! TRAPP passed "B.A." in 1621, and proceeded "M.A." in 1624. {22} A glance at contemporary 'entries' gives us, on the same pages, JOHN TOMBES and GEORGE NEWTON, JOHN ANGELL and JAMES CRANFORD, JOHN GUMBLEDEN and WILLIAM STRODE, WILLIAM STREAT, OLIVER WHITBY, and JOHN WILSON—all names still found on ancient Puritan title-pages: the first, the antagonist of Baxter; the second, the penetrative expounder of John xvii; the third, fetcher of a tear of human pity from Laud; the fourth, well-meaning, but flayed alive by BAXTER; the fifth, the ripe and rich expositor of the narrative of the Lord's Temptation, and other choice portions of Scripture; the sixth, the "public orator" of the University, and one who subsequently played a conspicuous part in the Commonwealth; the seventh, a quaint and wise reconciler of Bible-difficulties; the eighth, the friend of WILLIAM CHILLINGWORTH; the ninth, one of the tenderest and truest and raciest of the elder minor writers. {23} It were easy to cull other names through the period—1618 to 1624—but it is not needed. From the after-veneration with which these and kindred fellow-students quoted "Master Trapp," and the inevitableness of citation whenever opportunity offered, it is clear JOHN TRAPP left his mark on his contemporaries in Oxford, and won their love. With the self-respect of a cultured intellect, he failed not to announce on his "Commentaries" that he was "sometime of Christ-Church, in Oxford." In the dedication of his volume on the "Minor Prophets"—1654—he closes it thus, "Eiusdem Aedis Christi, annis ab hinc triginta, Alumnus." Deducting "thirty" from 1654 takes us back to 1624; so that he left the University finally upon proceeding "M.A." There must have been an interval of non-residence; for in 1622, Mr ALEXANDER ASPINALL, Head-Master of the Free School in Stratford-upon-Avon, being aged, and desirous of an usher or associate to take the active superintendence of the establishment, young Master Trapp offered himself for the situation, in opposition to Mr George Quiney—a name familiar to Shakesperians {24} -and was appointed by the Corporation, on the ground that Master Quiney, as being assistant-minister to the Vicar, was ineligible. {25} In all likelihood it was on this occasion that he found a friend and patron in Sir ROBERT LEE of BILSELEY, Warwickshire, as gratefully acknowledged by him in the dedication of his volume on the Pentateuch to Sir CHARLES LEE, his son, eg., "I must never forget, though it be well-nigh forty years since, how much I stood obliged for many signal favours and real courtesies to that renowned knight your father." The date of the epistle is 1662, from which deducting 'forty' years, we have the year of the appointment, viz., 1622.

This was the main event in our Worthy's uneventful life, inasmuch as coming to Stratford in 1622, that is, in his twenty-first year, he continued there unto his white-haired old age. Upon the death of ASPINALL—which took place in February 1624—he was, by the vote of the Body-Corporate, elected on 2d April, Head-Master, with the salary and residence appertaining to it; {26} and almost coincident with this—Mr Quiney's death taking place about the same time—the Rev Simon Trapp—of whom before—was elected (on 19th April) "assistant-minister" in his place. Thus uncle and nephew were brought together. His good 'kinsman' continued "curate" or "associate" from 1524 to 1641. Nor was this all that marked 1624; for besides his University honours in this year, he was then also united in marriage to "Anne Gibbard"—a Christian name that reminds us of another "Anne" who had only a few months before—1623—been laid beside her immortal husband in that world's pilgrim-shrine, the "north side of the chancel." Probably Master TRAPP fetched his bride from Cromb D'Abitot, or, at any rate, from his native WORCESTERSHIRE—the name not being found in Stratford. {27}

It was no common "School" of which our Puritan was thus appointed "Head-Master." That is, in the glory of its one supreme "scholar" it has a renown compared with which that of the proudest College is bald. But all this came afterwards. True, the "folio" was published by the "players" in 1623—very soon after TRAPP'S election. Nevertheless the aureole (glorifying halo) of fame—within whose ring of light all lowliest things are dilated—kindled only slowly. The grandchildren of Shakespere were doubtless among the ‘pupils’ of our Worthy, as Mistress SUSANNAH HALL—"witty above her sex"—his daughter, and her husband, Dr JOHN HALL, were his personal friends—the latter his "physician," as will appear very interestingly in the sequel.

For sixteen years—reckoning from 1622 to 1638—TRAPP was occupied with his school duties and the "occasional service" of a chapel at Luddington near Stratford. {28} He so commended himself as "Master" to the Corporation that they annually presented him with a "gratuity," or New Year's gift beyond his salary. {29}

In 1638 he first appeared as an author in his "God's Love-Tokens." {30} It is dedicated very tenderly and simply to "The Right Honourable and most virtuous Lady, the Lady Anne, Countess of Middlesex." He tells the Countess that his treatise was "conceived at first for his own solace," but had since been preached, and was now published for her's, by reason of "the transplanting" of her "darling daughter—that hopeful young plant, the Lady SUSANNA CRANFIELD—into His heavenly paradise." It is an uncommonly soft, sweet, soothing, gospel-full little book, and must have come as the very nail-pierced Hand to wipe away the tears of the mourners in Bilseley. He himself, in speaking out of his own heart, also spoke to his own heart. He needed "consolation." John, his first-born, "baptized" on 22d May 1625, died on 25th July same year: an "infant," apparently unbaptized, died 10th December 1627: Phebe, baptized 28th April 1633, died 11th June 1633: and Mary, baptized 8th June 1626, died 19th March 1635-6. So that the shadow lay on the humble hearth of the good Schoolmaster as well as on that of the Hall.

In 1639, LIONEL EARL OF MIDDLESEX—husband of Lady Anne—"presented" TRAPP to the Vicarage of Weston-on-Avon—as gratefully acknowledged in the "Epistle Dedicatory" to the "True Treasure"—e.g., "My first adventure into the world I presumed to present, some three years since, to your most noble and virtuous consort, for a consolatory. This next being my first-fruits at your lordship's Weston, I knew not to whom more fitly to address than to your honourable self; who may lay as good a claim to the man as to the manor. The one yields you an annual increase, a goodly income; and the other hates to be held either barren or not busy in the Lord's vineyard, whether you have so freely and fairly sent him and set him a-work." This 'living,' though of small revenue to him, was yet rendered valuable by the parish containing the ancient manor-house of Milcot, the seat and frequent residence of his patron: and also by its convenient contiguity to Stratford, as it was only about two miles farther south of Luddington. It was thus easy to combine the labours of the unambitious plurality of the School and Church.

Weston-on-Avon—second in interest only to Cowper's "Weston"—remains to this day a small hamlet within the Parish of Marshfield, formerly called Old Marsfield, or Little Marsfield in the Hundred of Thornbury, Gloucestershire. It was formerly a distinct parish called St Pancras: and a well in this place still bears the name of that saint.

I must confess to be ignorant of the saint here named, and profane enough not to mind much to have this ignorance dispelled: but I accept the "well" that still gushes forth clearly and coldly—flashing under the alders and through the primroses—as a fit symbol of the 'ministry' of our later Saint. Certes Weston-on-Avon received in its Vicar one whose every sermon was as a cup of "living water" fetched straight from the Fountain. He entered on its duties under the shadow of a keenly-felt loss: for over at EVESHAM holy and loved JOHN BALLAM was just laid in his grave. I do not doubt that his "spiritual" son was there to lay the gray head softly to rest. {32}

From 1639 to 1662 TRAPP designates himself in all his title-pages either "Pastour," or "Pastor and Preacher of the Word of God at WESTON-UPON-AVON in Gloucestershire": and "Weston" was his charge-proper during those years. But he dates his "Epistle Dedicatory" to "the reverend and his much-honoured father, Mr John Ley, pastor and preacher of God's Word at GREAT BUDWORTH in Cheshire," from "Welford," 16th day of November 1647: {33} again to Edward Leigh, Sept. 8, 1656: {34} and once more on 24th October 1659 he dates his "Epistle Dedicatory" to the Stephenses from the same place: {35} and so elsewhere. There are no 'records' of his having been instituted as Rector at Welford: but it appears to be certain that he was the actual "pastor" or "parson." He received the 'presentation' doubtless from the Parliament, and perchance to the "ousting" of a Royalist, "scandalous" or merely politically faulty—viz., one Dr Bowen, who figures in Walker's "Sufferings" as one of the "restored" of The Restoration—and nowhere else to mortal knowledge. {36} In the Saunders' Manuscripts (as before) it is stated that TRAPP was "superseded" in the school by "Mr Robert Dale" in 1650: and the reason assigned is, that it was "on taking the Covenant, and being appointed an Assistant to the Commissioners for the ejection of those parochial clergymen who still adhered to the Crown and Episcopacy": and earlier, that he had rendered himself "from his Puritanical bias, obnoxious to the Cavaliers." That Trapp "suffered" during the "troubles" of this memorable period will be shown immediately: but the supercession from the School at Stratford by Mr Robert Dale must have been voluntary, inasmuch as in the Welford "Registers," under date "November 12, 1650," there is still extant this entry:—

“Mr Robert Dale of Stratford to Susanna Trapp of Welford: married Nov. 12.” {37}

The handwriting is that of our Trapp, indicative of the ceremony having been performed by himself. We cannot greatly err therefore if we conclude that the father-in-law himself transferred his School to his son-in-law: and until the Restoration confined himself to the oversight of WESTON and WELFORD—both adjoining—and aided by a "curate" or "associate." {38} That he loved his "Welford" flock very tenderly is incidentally revealed by a golden sentence in one of his already noticed Welford-dated "Epistles Dedicatory," viz., to John Ley—e.g., "Whatever else is wanting in them his Notes or Commentaries, a will, I am sure, is not wanting, of laying forth my small talent to the honour of my Master and the good of my fellow servants, those of mine own particular charge especially, to whom most of these things have been delivered, and of whom I can truly say, as Reverend Mr Stock did of his people in Bread Street, London, that he had rather win one of them than twenty others."

A little way back it emerges that our TRAPP was appointed one of the "assistants" to the "Commissioners for the Ejection" of the "scandalous" clergy and schoolmasters. {39} This is scarcely the place wherein to argue the pros and cons of this procedure, or of the expediency or non-expediency of the overthrow of Episcopacy. The "testimony" of RICHARD BAXTER has settled for all candid minds the general righteousness of the verdicts; and the scathing tractates of JOHN GOODWIN—powerful as Milton's and sparkling as Marvell's—has equally established the unrighteous intrusion of the Parliament and their "Commissioners" into a domain whither none may enter save the One King and Head of the Church; nor less so—without forgetting their splendid service otherwise—that the dominant Presbyterians—alas! that I, a Presbyterian, have to write it—but ignobly filled the magnificent part given them in God's providence, indulging in such fierce and unreasoning fulminations against "Toleration" of any save themselves, as flush one's cheek, half in anger and half in contempt. The more's the pity that personally they were the "excellent" of the earth, as their mere names suffice to prove. But the FACT is valuable, as it is a window through which we get a sight of our Puritan—as already remarked—in the stand he took at the grand Crisis of the Nation.

It needeth not that the story of England preceding, continuing through, and succeeding the Civil War should be here re-told. I shall limit myself to events as they affected our Worthy.

Regarded broadly, all who know anything of the period will know that Church and State alike, were, from nearly the time of Trapp's institution at Weston, in confusion. Before that, the misguided king had 'broken' with his Parliament and the nation, 'broken' from his own conscience. There followed in swift succession, for laws—proclamations: for legislation—prerogative: for enacted taxation—forced loans: for government—the will, or rather the caprice, of one man, and he not kingly, albeit he wore a crown. It was, as I have said before, and elsewhere, a crisis-time, "during which all Englishmen were choosing their parts, and preparing for civil war." "The king's pursuivants and his commissions of array are being encountered by the commissioners and the ordinances of the Parliament: the old corselet and steel-cap, the old pike and sword and carbine are being taken down from the wall, where they had hung since the time of the Armada; the hunter and the farm-horse are being trained to stand fire; squadrons of yeomen, battalions of burghers, are being drilled by officers who had served under Gustavus; French and German engineers are organising the artillery; uniforms are being made for Newcastle's white coats, Hampden's green coats, Lord Saye's blue coats, the city of London's red coats; banners are being embroidered with mottos, loyal or patriotic; friends who have taken opposite sides, with sad hearts are waving a last farewell across the widening gulf to each other." {40}

Trapp 'chose' the side of the nation; and sorrowfully and reluctantly, but decisively, aided the marshalling of Roundhead against Cavalier—for the Right. Persistent faithlessness and mendacity had so lowered the man that the king unclothed himself of all credence, much more of reverence; and Prelacy had so lorded it, and so aped the very fantastics of Popery, that it went by default.

We have glimpses of TRAPP at this memorable period in his "Epistle Dedicatory" to that Colonel Bridges, governor of Warwick Castle, who is so honoured in the RELIQUIAE BAXTERIAN Æ. {41} "This book of mine," he says, in presenting his "Commentary" on the "New Testament," (2d edition, 1656,) "doth at once both crave and claim your patronage; for I cannot bethink me of any one that—all things considered—hath better right to it and me than yourself. I must never forget how that, being carried prisoner by the enemies, you soon set me off by exchange; and after that, being by them driven from house and home, you received me to harbour; yea, being driven out of one pulpit—where they thought to have surprised me—you presently put me into another, where I had a comfortable employment and a competent encouragement." Then follows as extraordinary a revelation as ever has been made concerning the circumstances under which a book was produced:—"What hours I could THEN well spare," he continues, "from that pensum diurnum of praying and preaching, I gladly spent on these Notes upon the New Testament: as hating with the Athenians, ησυχίαν απαργμονα, a fruitless feriatio (Thucyd.); and holding with Cato that account must be given, not of our labour only, but of our leisure also: Non solum negotii, sed et otii reddenda est ratio (Cic. de Senec.)" Then very pathetically: "For that two years' space, well-nigh, that I lived in your garrison, I think I may truly say with Seneca, Nullus mihi per otium exiit dies, partem etiam noctium studiis vindicavi, that I laboured night and day, (amidst many fears and tears for the labouring Church and bleeding State,) ut ad vitam communem aliquem saltem fructum ferre possem; that I might be some way serviceable to the public and to you (Cicero). And albeit I was even sick at heart sometimes of the affliction of Joseph, {#Am 6:6} and even ready through faintness to let fall my pen, as it befell Jerome, when writing upon Ezekiel, he heard of the sacking of the city of Rome by the Goths: yet as God (who comforteth those that are cast down, #2Co 7:6) gave us any lucida intervalla (this last triumphant year especially), I took heart afresh to set closer to the work, which now, by God's grace, is brought to some period." By "this last triumphant year" was marked the full attainment of his magnificent authority by OLIVER CROMWELL. In the light of the events, it is no marvel that saintly SAMUEL CLARK, in his "Epistle to the Reader,"—following the author's own, -should thus write:—"He TRAPP is a man...who hath wholly devoted and given up himself to the service of God's Church, and doth naturally care for the good thereof: witness his constant preaching, even whilst the burden and care of a public school lay upon him; and now in these calamitous and bloody times, wherein he hath suffered deeply, being driven from his charge, and forced to shroud himself in a garrison of the Parliament's; yet, notwithstanding his daily labours amongst the soldiers, and IN THE MIDST OF THE NOISES OF GUNS AND DRUMS, he hath betaken himself to writing of Commentaries upon the sacred Scriptures."

These "noises of guns and drums," under whose din our calm Puritan wrote his "Notes," remind us of RICHARD BAXTER'S sermon in the village church of Alcester, while the roaring of the cannon announced the battle of Edgehill. {42} Besides his "service" in the "garrison," and taking of the Covenant, and sharing in the Parliament's ecclesiastical "commission," TRAPP scatters up and down his "Commentaries," burning words that leave no doubt on his sentiments. He mourns over the gallant Lord Brook in beautiful contrast with the superstitious twaddle of retribution by Laud, on the same event; and has articulate and lofty thanks for Edgehill and Naseby. He was out and out a Presbyterian, but uncontroversial and clement. {43}

The RESTORATION came in 1660; and, as we have seen, the Royalist "rector" of Welford was reinstated thereupon. Our Worthy quietly, meekly withdrew to his school at Stratford, along with which he continued to hold his slender benefice of Weston, which, up to 1787, was invariably combined with the mastership of the school. That he was not "ejected" with the "Two Thousand," but left undisturbed and unharassed with demands of "Assent and Consent," is explained by the relation of Weston to the School; and no more eloquent FACT could be adduced of the immoveable place he had won in the respect and confidence of the community. It telleth also, perchance, that he had mellowed as he aged, and lived "a quiet and peaceable life" in all "godliness," being of the type of MELANCTHON rather than of LUTHER, or of RICHARD SIBBES rather than of fiery, outspoken JOHN GOODWIN. And so he went "out and in" in all simpleness "unto the end." He died on 17th October 1669, and was buried in his own church of Weston-upon-Avon, within the communion rail, and "near to the grave of his sometime wife." {44} His son John, then vicar of Stratford-upon-Avon, placed a plain stone over his parents. It is now time-worn and half illegible; but Wheler, in his "Guide," has preserved the most of it as follows:—

GRANGER very well gathers up the universal tradition of our Worthy as found in Wheler and Saunders and all. "He never had, or even wished for, any preferment besides his vicarage of Weston, which lay at the convenient distance of two miles from his School. His character for strictness of life and as a preacher was such, that he was, on the foot of his merit, offered very considerable benefices, which he refused to accept, as his condition was equal to his wishes." {46}

Even during his life he was held in the profoundest veneration by his contemporaries. In every subsequently published "Exposition" or "Commentary," you find "Trapp" quoted with better than merely laudatory epithets—his immense hunger for "work" and laboriousness in everything, having signal recognition; and the son-in-law of WILLIAM SHAKESPERE, in that oddest of books ever ventured to the press, whether read in its quaint Latin or in Cooke's plain-speached English—"Observations on English Bodies"—interweaves with his printed "Prescription" for him—and which is a curiosity in itself, and in its homely wording—this great 'testimony':—

"OBSERV. LXXXII. Mr J. Trap, minister, for his piety and learning, SECOND TO NONE." {47} With similar respect, indeed reverent love, does the famous THOMAS HALL, of King's Norton—ripest and rarest of the later Puritans, and a genuine scholar—dedicate to him his "Pulpit Guarded"—the long, quaint, sarcastic title page of which, -as marking one phase of the Puritan Nonconformist controversy, within the more cultured sphere, -will be found below. {48} TRAPP had acted as 'Moderator' or Chairman {49} in the singular debate; and so HALL, after an English "Epistle Dedicatory" to the "Right Honourable, Reverend, and Religious Judges, John Wilde and Edward Atkins," adds another to him as "Ornatissimo Viro, amico amicissimo, necnon Patri celeberrimo, Dno Iohanni Trapp, Pastori de Bello-vado"; and there follow words of measured but glowing homage and praise.

Similar is the finely put praise of the "Preface" to the volume on the "Minor Prophets," by the ever to be venerated Drs JOHN BRYAN and OBADIAH GREW of Coventry—both, of the illustrious "Two Thousand" of 1662—e.g., " We need not commend the author: all his works speak him to be 'a workman that needeth not to be ashamed'; an 'interpreter, one among a thousand.' We may say of him as Cyprian to Cald., Adeo exercitatus et in Scripturis peritus, ut caute omnia et consulto gerat. Origen, speaking of the prophets, calls them bees, and their prophecies honeycombs. This Expositor God hath made skilful, both in hiving and expressing." So too immediately thereafter 'testifies' one who elsewhere has given admirable evidence of power of insight and estimate—Samuel Clark. And so throughout, and especially in the "numerous verse" of the Rector of neighbouring Barford—Thomas Dugard. So that JENKYN'S priceless eulogy of GOUGE may be transferred, without one jot of abatement, to our Worthy:—"How unblameable, temperate, holy, was his deportment in all places! How exemplary was he to the flock! He was not like some of whom I have heard, that they preach so well that it's a pity they should ever be out of the pulpit; but they live so ill, that it's pity they should ever be in the pulpit"; and again, "Of his spiritual fulness of age, he was one who may be fitly called both 'one of a thousand,' and also a thousand men in one, for his excellent endowments, for his usefulness in his employments." {50}

It is noteworthy that TRAPP does not appear to have fallen in with the usage of the age, of bequeathing a sum for a funeral sermon. His modest "property" was valued at 116 pounds or thereby, {51} equal perhaps to 500 pounds now; but none of it went to purchase posthumous or funeral laudations. I do not doubt that many of his contemporaries should have, unbought, preached the usual sermon; but in 1669 most of his surviving associates were in 'hiding,' and under bitter persecution, and the Churchly funeral sermon was a poor thing, as frank-mouthed EDWARD BOTELER has, with Fullerian wit portrayed—e.g., " It is too much known how the glossing tongues of some mercenary orators have preached themselves and this kind of preaching out of credit; the rank flowers of whose unsavoury rhetoric, sprinkled upon rotten names, have not only distasted some sick-brained and silly ones, but even turned the stomachs of sound and sober persons. So that the preacher of a Funeral Sermon may find his fittest text in that complaint of the prophet, #Isa 53:1, 'Who hath believed our report?' And a 'here lies' may as truly be inscribed on the pulpit of the preacher as the grave or monument of the deceased." {52}

Of TRAPP'S personal appearance an idea may be formed from his Commentary Portraits, one when he was in his fifty-third, and the other when he was in his fifty-ninth year. I deeply regretted that the earlier had been chosen for reproduction by the Publisher for this reprint; but I am thankful that, with creditable readiness, he has agreed to my request to give the later also—along with a facsimile of Trapp's autograph, secured at Stratford. The earlier is inferior to the other; and besides is somewhat poorly done by the modern artist. That of 1660—originally prefixed to the volume, "Proverbs to Daniel"—is a noble head, wide-brewed, ox-eyed, but flashing out brain-power, arched and shaggy eye-brows, thin locks, neatly trimmed moustache and imperial, small vehement mouth, Shakesperian long upper lip, large nose, rounded chin, care-shadowed face altogether. {53} He was small in stature; as Dugard sings, "One of the age's greatest LITTLE men"—the allusion being to contemporaries all noted for their Zacehean size, as Falkland and Southampton, Cavendish and Godolphin, Hales of Eaton, and William Chillingworth, and rare Daniel Featley and Laud. {54}

And now, in bringing our little Memoir to a close, I have nothing to withdraw of my already published judgment of the "Commentaries," now reprinted; e.g., " There is more of recondite learning ingeniously applied, more of spiritual insight felicitously expressed, more of searching application tersely put, more of genial sunny wit, nimble fancy, chatty anecdote, racy allusion, vivid suggestiveness, and robust common sense, within the five noble folios of JOHN TRAPP, than in any half-a-hundred of the miserable trash that circulates as religious commentary." I rejoice in the completion of the present undertaking—the more so that, in addition to his "Commentaries," there are included all his miscellaneous Writings, so that we have here his complete Works—and I cannot but rejoice further, that alongside of it, Mr Nichol's Series of Puritan Commentaries is having like success. I must express a hope that both Mr Nichol worthy son of worthy sire—and Mr Dickenson and others, will persevere, until many others are added to those already overtaken. We have still Christopher Ness and Francis Roberts, Caryl and Petter, Mayer and Willet, Hildersam and Burgess and Elton, Byefield and Guild and Thomas Wilson, and John Rogers and Attersoll and Otis and their compeers. May the faith and enterprise that have risked the others be richly rewarded, and cease not until, side by side with the learning and discursive speculation of German "translations," there stand representatives of the co-equal learning of England of the olden massive kind, and the finer in-sight, further out-sight, riper and more judicial thought, manlier sense, -or call it wisdom, -truer ex-position if less subtle im-position, and still less demolition; inestimable wealth of experimental 'teaching,' out of "true hearts," and the manifold sparkling, memory-haunting, aphorisms of the best intellect of the best time of our Theology and Preaching. I must add articulately, that it is an ignorant pedantry that deems it the thing, by excursi and dissertations and over-loaden "Notes," to barbarize our splendid language by parading this, that, and the other Continental exegete, while our own English books are unnamed, or jauntily named, without looking beyond the title-page. Nor is it other than unscholarly and uncritical and uncatholic on the part of your German and other divines and expositors to ignore a literature and learning worthy of their supreme discussion. It seemed a fitting opportunity, in presenting such a thoroughly English "Commentary" as this of JOHN TRAPP, to make this protest, though I yield to none in admiration of and gratitude to, the Meyers and Ewalds, Stiers and Dorners, Keils and Delitschs, Van Oosterzees and Ebrards, and others that might be named. I simply assert for the Theology and Scholarship of our island, dead and Hying, parity if not superiority.

POSTSCRIPT.

Since writing the preceding Memoir, I have discovered that in the original quarto edition of the 'Commentary on Genesis,' &c., and on 'Proverbs,' &c., there are two Epistles Dedicatory that were subsequently displaced by others in the respective folios, -viz., one to SIR THOMAS ROUS, and one to WILLIAM COMBE, Esquire of Stratford-upon-Avon—the former the chosen friend of RICHARD BAXTER, who dedicated ‘The Saint’s Everlasting Rest’ to him—as TRAPP appreciatingly notices in his ‘Epistle’—and the latter, of no common interest to SHAKESPEREANS and all readers of Shakespere’s one self-authenticating memorial, his ‘Last Will.’ For it is something to get the insight which this ‘Epistle Dedicatory’ affords, into the character of one with whom Shakespere held so intimate relations. Trapp’s ‘Epistle’ has hitherto escaped the Briarean research of Shakespere Commentators. Besides these two valuable and characteristic ‘Epistles’—which it would be pity to lose—there are a number of Verses in Greek, Latin, Hebrew, and English. The whole I have asked the accomplished Editor (Rev. Hugh Martin, M.A.) to add as an Appendix to our Memoir—and accordingly they will be found in the next pages re-printed under his careful supervision. But I would call attention in this place to three biographic allusions toward the close of the Epistle to ROUS, confirmatory of statements and conclusions in our Memoir, -viz. (1.) Acknowledgment of kindness during the Civil War, and many "former favours, and recall courtesies shewed to me and mine in those late doleful days of our common banishment"; and (2.) Recognition of the service rendered by the Parliament’s ‘Committee’ on Religious Matters; "especially for that singular good service that you (with the rest of those worthy gentlemen of the Committee of the County of Worcester) have done to God, and to my dear native country, in setting up there a learned and zealous ministry, where, afore-time, ignorance and prophaness seemed to strive for mastery"—the reference to Worcestershire as his ‘dear native country’ being the third thing I wished to notice.

I may add that it was with high hopes of finding notices of our Worthy I turned to the ‘Diary’ of the Rev. John Ward of Stratford-upon-Avon—1648 to 1679, -but it was only to be again disappointed. The following seems to be the only solitary morsel in the entire volume, "I have heard Mr Trapp say that the parsons of Tredington were always needie."

- {2} As hitherto, however, I have very cordially to acknowledge the invariable courtesy and interest shown by the many clergymen to whom, as representatives of names sought after, I from time to time applied. The frequency with which I have found "Registers" imperfect, and wanting altogether, makes me express a very strong desire that something were done, and done instantly; to guard these documents from further loss and neglect. Some of the 'report's sent me would be ludicrous, were they not so saddening.

very desirous to add this to my SIBBESIANA, along with certain other lesser things picked up since my edition of Sibbes was completed.

- {24} I may recall that Judith, Shakespere's twin-daughter, married Mr Thomas Quiney, by whom she bore three sons, who all died unmarried.
- {25} I must here return my heartfelt thanks to the Rev. Thomas Rea Medwin, M.A., Head Master of King Edward's Grammar School, and Minister of the Guild Chapel, Stratford-on-Avon, for the very great earnestness and courtesy shewn by him toward aiding my Trapp researches. I owe to him access to, and extracts from, the Manuscript Collections of Stratfordiana, of Wheler and of Captain Saunders, preserved in the Shakespere "Museum," and for various hints and suggestions, and an 'Address' by himself on the ter-centenary of his immortal School, full of interesting details. I must include in this acknowledgment the Rev. M. J. Evans and Mr John Averill of Stratford, who have been most helpful and obliging.
- {26} These dates are taken from the MSS. of Wheler and Captain Saunders, as supra; and it will be noticed that they correct the errors of Wood in his Athenae. Wood assigns the first appointment to 1624, and otherwise mistakes. R. B. Wheler was author of a "History" of Stratford (1806), and of a "Guide to Stratford-upon-Avon" (1814), from the latter of which I shall have occasion to quote in the sequel. Captain Saunders was Chamberlain of Stratford, and as such had unrestricted access to the Stratford "Records": his MSS. are models of neatness and accuracy.
- {27} From Nash's "Worcestershire," sn., as before, we learn that a John Giffard de Slouchtie was incumbent of Cromb D'Abitot in 1358. It is quite possible that Gibbard is a corruption of this name. Wheler's "Guide," as before, incorrectly names her "Mary" (page 118).
- {28} From Mr Medwin, as before, I learn that all that now remains of "Luddington chapel" is a door and its key both in the possession of a farmer; and that the tradition is, that the Registers were destroyed by a drunken church warden. It is to be noted that Thomas Hunt when 'Master' of the Stratford Free-School was also curate of Luddington. It is immortality to him that he taught Shakespere his A B C's.

- {34} Epistle Dedicatory to "Ezra-Psalms."
- {35} Epistle Dedicatory to "Proverbs-Daniel."
- {36} Wheler in his "Guide" (as before) throws all into confusion by misquoting Weston for Welford from Walker's "Sufferings." See page 118. Walker puts it saucily, that he (Bowen) was succeeded by 'one Trapp'—which reminds of the Royalist 'one Milton,' and later of Henry's 'one Burns.'
- {37} I am indebted for this to Robert F. Tomes, Esq., Welford Hill, Stratford.
- {38} Since writing above, Mr Medwin (as before) has kindly furnished me with a further extract from Wheler's MSS., which confirms my conclusions above. It is as follows: "During his residence there at Welford he appointed Robert Dale to be his deputy as schoolmaster at Stratford, who received all the emoluments of the school, and was married at Welford by her father to Susannah his daughter."

Susannah was born at Stratford, and baptized 8th May 1631, so that in 1650 she was just "sweet nineteen." But with reference to the School at Stratford, while Trapp as above is seen not to have been "superseded," he must have had "difficulties" from probably Royalist members of the Corporation, inasmuch as among the Wheeler manuscripts there is a memorandum of a letter from him to the Corporation, complaining that his "stipend" was left unpaid, his "small pittance" being "detained," and nevertheless charged on for "maintenance of the soldiers." The pass of the Avon rendered the town a military post, and explains the reference to the "soldiers." Stratford was garrisoned, as parties were alternately successful, by the troops of the King and the Parliament. Trapp welcomed the latter. Mr Medwin, as before, did his best for me to get access to the Corporation documents, in order to furnish a copy of this letter; but their present custodier seems a disciple of the Circumlocution office, and put all manner of obstacles in the way; and since time was urgent, I could not wait. WHEELER conjectures the date of this letter (which is undated) to have been 1649. I suspect it was rather later. I hope to gain a copy hereafter, and perchance further information from the Stratford Muniments. But it were hard to write either History or Biography if many Dogberrys of the present Stratford type had to be dealt with; fortunately they are rare in this nineteenth century.

- {39} Wood (as before) says: "I find our author was appointed an assistant to the commissioners of Warwickshire, for the ejection of such whom they then (in Oliver's reign) called scandalous, ignorant, insufficient ministers and schoolmasters."—Vol, iii. p. 844.

- {42} Of this incident Mr Marsden has said, "Was it the eloquence of the great Puritan preacher that entranced his hearers, and suspended their alarm, within hearing of a battle, in which five-and-twenty thousand of their countrymen were arrayed against each other? If so, the recorded eloquence of ancient or of modern times certainly relates no triumph to be compared with Baxter's. In a moment of intense excitement, he stilled the most ungovernable feelings to which man is liable, anxious suspense, and fear, and passionate expectation."—Later Puritans, p. 130.
- {43} Anthony A-Wood, in Athenae, as before, thus puts it:—"He was by those of the Puritanical party esteemed to be a person endowed with several virtuous qualifications, and to be one of the prime preachers of his time. Yet very characteristic 'yet' oh! most Churchly Anthony! this the reader must know, that upon the breaking out of the Rebellion, he closed with the Presbyterians, took the Covenant, and in his preachings and discourses became violent against the king, his cause, and adherents: yet lost nothing for so doing, but was a gainer by it, indeed! as he was, by the publication of those books following, taken into the hands and admired by the brethren, but by others not."—Vol, iii. pp. 843, 844.

- {45} As before, p. 120.
- {46} 5th Edit., 1824, 6 vols. 8vo, vol. iii. pp. 327, 328.
- {47} The following is the title-page of this excessively rare and apparently unconsulted book:—"Select Observations on English Bodies, or Cures, both Empericall and Historical, performed upon very eminent Persons in desperate Diseases. First written in Latin by Mr J. Hall, Physician, living at Stratford-upon-Avon, in Warwickshire, where he was very famous, as also in the counties adjacent, as appears by these Observations drawn out of several hundreds of his as choisest, now put into English for common benefit, by James Cooke, Practitioner in Physick and Chirurgery. {Medicine and Surgery} London: Printed for John Shirley, at the Golden Pelican, in Little Britain. 1657," (12mo.) One reads this treatise with quickened zest in the knowledge that its author was accepted by Shakespere as a son-in-law; and mourns that the "Cases" begin subsequent to 1616, for one should have read with strange interest the one "Case" of that year, of world-wide momentousness. I have only seen extracts from the original Latin. As a specimen of the "Cases," and as biographically valuable, it may be acceptable to some to have Trapp's in full. Here it is:—

"OBSERV. LXXXII. Mr J. Trapp, minister, for his piety and learning second to none, about the 33d year of his age, of a melancholy temper, and by much study, fell into hypochondriack melancholy and pain of the spleen, with some scorbutic symptoms, viz., difficulty of breathing after gentle motion of the body, beating of the heart, with fainting at the rising of the vapour, and became a little better when they were dispersed: he had a gentle erratic fever, so that he was much emaciated. After he had done preaching on the Sabbath, he could scarce speak; his urine changed often, his pulse was mutable and unequal, and he languished much. Some ordinary medicines were used; but not succeeding, he desired my help and counsel, which was readily performed by me in prescribing the following, by which he was restored from the very jaws of death, both safely, quickly, and pleasantly." Then follow several prescriptions, the effects of which upon the patient are described with a minuteness of specification which none but a Nurse of the olden time could endure to read: oculis irretortis. In another place (p. 154) there is the case of "Lydia," a little child of Trapp's. A 2d edit. of the 'Observations' (8vo) appeared in 1679, dedicated to Fulke Lord Brook; and with a new title-page only, as a 3d edit., later.

- {48} "The Pulpit Guarded, with XX Arguments proving the Unlawfulness, Sinfulness, and Danger of suffering Private persons to take upon them Public Preaching and expounding the Scriptures without a Call; as being contrary to the Word of God, contrary to the practice of all Reformed Churches, contrary to the Three and twentieth Article of Religion, contrary to two Ordinances of Parliament, and contrary to the Judgement of a whole Jury of learned, judicious, pious Divines, both Forreign and Domestic. Occasioned by a Dispute at Henly in Arden, in Warwickshire, Aug. 20, 1650. Against Lawrence Williams, a Nailer-Publike-Preacher; Tho. Palmer, a Baker-Preacher; Tho. Hinde, a Plough-Wright. Public-Preacher; Sergeant Oakes, a Weaver-Preacher; Hum. Rogers (lately) a Baker's-Boy-Public-Preacher. Here you have all their Arguments (never yet compiled in one Tract) refelled and answered, many Texts of Scripture cleared, the Quintessence and Marrow of most of our Modern Authors (in reference to this Controversie) collected, with References to such Authors as clear any Doubt more fully; many incident Cases resolved, the utmost extent of Laymens using their Gifts, in Eleven Particulars demonstrated, and above Thirty Objections answered. Blackmore, at the Angel, in Paul's Churchyard, 1651. (4to.)" Though not given in the title-page, Hall's name is appended to the "Epistles Dedicatory."

{54} I may add in a footnote here that the Stratford "Registers" give us a list of eleven children born to Trapp. See Wheler's "Guide" (as before), p. 118. Besides those noticed in our Memoir, there was his eighth, "John," who was born 13th November 1635, and died 7th July 1684. On the floor of Stratford Church is a stone over him, with this inscription: "John Trapp, A.M., Vicar of this Church, died the 5th of July 1684, aged 48." His father, in his Epistle Dedicatory to Leigh, thanks him cordially as follows for "those many real courtesies lately done me (a mere stranger), in mine eldest none, whom you have freely beneficed and fairly encouraged." And earlier (1659) he thanks the Stephens, for the "choice" made of this son, "student of Christ-Church, Oxon," as "tutor" for the younger branches of the family. Then there was, ninth, a Joseph, who became rector of Cherington in Gloucestershire. The second son of this "Joseph" became the somewhat celebrated Ray. Dr Joseph Trapp, professor of Poetry at Oxford, and patronised by Swift. A 'Memoir' of him will be found in the Gentleman's Magazine for 1786, pp. 381-384 and pp. 660-662. The father of this Dr Joseph Trapp died, September 24th 1698, at Cherington, and was there buried. The inscription on a brass, no doubt the composition of his High-Church Son, will interest. Here it is:—

As I send my Memoir to the printer, a communication reaches me from Robert F. Tomes, Esq., Welford Hill, Stratford-on-Avon, whence I learn that a part of our TRAPP'S Library remained in the neighbourhood of Welford until about twenty years ago, when it was swept away, and most likely used to light fires! EPISTLES DEDICATORY TO QUARTO ON GENESIS, &c, , AND ON PROVERBS, AND VERSES PREFIXED.

TO THE RIGHT WORSHIPFUL
 SIR THOMAS ROUS,
 OF ROUS LENCH, IN THE COUNTY OF WORCESTER, KNIGHT AND BARONET, ALL HAPPINESS OF THIS LIFE AND THE NEXT.

MOST RESPECTED SIR,

Of Origen, the first Christian commentator, it is recorded ^{1} that, in less than twelve years time, he set notes upon the whole Bible. Jerome somewhere saith that himself had read six thousand several books of Origen's making. Short ones they were likely, being so very many of them; such as, and perhaps the same as, his homilies to the people were—an hour long at utmost, and some of them not half an hour. For he held it the wiser way, saith Erasmus, ^{2} to preach oft rather than long; and lightly to point at, rather than largely to prosecute, that fulness of matter in fewness of words that he found couched in the Holy Scriptures. {3} God, of his goodness, hath given to some of the choicest servants his interpreters— "one among a thousand," {4} #Job 33:23, such as Basil {5} and Bucer {6} were in their generations—to be curt and concise, but in addition full and clear, in their discourses; to speak much in few, and to utter more sentences than sayings, as the orator affirmeth of his Euripides. {7} Densus et brevis et semper sibi instans Thucydides, was a fine commendation given him by Quintilian. {8} Thucydides writes thick and quick, close and clear. Elocutione tota gravis et brevis, densus sententiis, sanus iudiciis, as a later critic {9} hath it; solid he is and succinct, sententious and judicious. Or, as before them both, Cicero {10} saith of the same Thucydides, that he was adeo plenus refertusque rebus, &c.; so very full fraught with matter, that you have almost so many syllables, so many sentences. And hence he is so highly prized by all, and by some preferred before all, ut primus in historia. Volve, volve, et sinu gesta illum thesaurum, saith learned Colerus; read over and over that golden book, and make it thy manual. But what a gift, saith one of our countrymen {11} out of Mercator, had John Haselbach, a professor at Vienna, in tediousness, who being to expound the prophet Isaiah to his audience, read one and twenty years on Isaiah the first, and yet finished it not. And what shall we say of Salmeron, with his twelve volumes upon the evangelists? and of Tostatus, with his eight score questions upon the shortest chapter in the Bible? Of the former of these two one saith truly, He hath created himself and his readers a great deal of needless toil and trouble, by striving to write much rather than well. Of the latter, This man would fain have us all read him, and none but him, laying aside all others for his sake. {12}

It is far enough from me, noble Sir, though I presume to prefix your name to these notes, and to crave your patronage, a course never scrupled, I think, from St Luke's time, {#Lu 1:3 Ac 1:1} till now alate {13} in this sceptical age, to wish you so much hurt as thereby to divert or detain you from better and more able authors. There is a very precious piece {14} lately published and dedicated to your Worship, that well deserves your most diligent perusal and daily practice. All that I aim at in this Dedication, next unto your soul's health, which I humbly pray for and heartily desire hereby to promote, is to testify my true respects and due thankfulness to your

Worship, as for those many former favours and real courtesies shewed to me and mine in those late doleful days of our common banishment; so especially for that singular good service that you, with the rest of those worthy gentlemen of the committee of the county of Worcester, have done to God and to my dear native country, in setting up there a learned and zealous ministry, where aforetime ignorance and profaneness seemed to strive for mastery.

Accept, I beseech you, Sir, this small testimony of that great affection and observance that he deservedly beareth, and yet still oweth unto yourself and your virtuous lady, who professeth to continue at the throne of grace,

Your hearty remembrancer, and daily orator,
JOHN TRAPP.

TO THE WORSHIPFUL, HIS HIGHLY HONOURED

WILLIAM COMB, ESQ.,

OF STRATFORD-UPON-AVON, JUSTICE OF THE PEACE FOR THE COUNTY OF WARWICK.

WORTHY SIR,

You may well wonder, not so much that I now dedicate this piece of my pains unto you, as that I did it not till now, considering how long I have known you, and how very much I am obliged to you. The truth is this, these notes upon Genesis were the first, in this kind, that ever I finished; and you were deservedly among the first that came into my thoughts for a patron to them. But as Pharez once made a breach upon his brother Zarah, {#Ge 38:29} and got into the world before him, so did those other works of mine, if at least that name be not too good for them, deal by this, which now, with its red thread, a sign of its intended seniority, humbly implores your patronage, and, if worth while, your perusal. I know you have somewhat else to do than to read commentaries; and yet I must needs know too that you, that are so sedulous a searcher of the Scriptures, and so seriously inquisitive after the genuine sense of such and such dark texts therein as in conference occasionally you have oft proposed unto me, cannot but delight to be duly exercised in books of this nature. That reverend doctor of Cambridge, {15} that, in the behalf of himself and his whole college, for a very good turn you did them, presented you with the fairest large Bible that ever I beheld, saw something surely of your pious inclination to the study of that blessed Book. And, if to the better understanding thereof, this or anything else that I have yet written may be any way serviceable, I have that I sought for. Alphonsus, King of Arragon, is said to have read over the Bible fourteen times, with Lyra's notes upon it. {16} And those English exiles for Christ's sake at Geneva knew they could not present anything more pleasing to that incomparable Queen Elizabeth than their new translation of, and marginal notes upon the Holy Bible, which Book of books she had received, with both her hands, from the Londoners soon after her coronation; and kissing it, laid it to her breast, saying, That the same had been her chiefest delight, and should be the rule whereby she meant to frame her whole deportment. {17} Let it be still yours, good Sir, as hitherto it hath been; and let this poor piece of mine, if at any time you think good to consult with it, tell you, in my absence, what my sense is of such places as wherein, with that noble eunuch, {#Ac 8:31} you may need an interpreter. No more, Sir, at present than to pray the "Father of lights," {#Jas 1:17} "who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, to give you the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ"; {#2Co 4:6} that though you "have this treasure" presented to you in an earthen vessel, {#2Co 4:7} in a vile oyster shell, as the Greek hath it, εν οστρακινοις οκευεσιν; yet you may partake of the excellency of the power that is of God, and not of me, who "preach not," present not, "myself, but Christ Jesus the Lord; and myself." {#2Co 4:5}

Your Servant for Jesus' sake,

JOHN TRAPP.

A Commentary Or Exposition

Upon The Following Books of Holy Scripture

The Five Books of Moses, Joshua, Judges, Ruth, First and Second Samuel, First and Second Kings, and First and Second Chronicles

TO THE WORSHIPFUL, HIS MUCH HONOURED FRIENDS, EDWARD STEPHENS OF SADBURY,
TOGETHER WITH THE WORSHIPFUL
COLONEL THOMAS STEPHENS, ESQ.
AND HIS THRICE WORTHY CONSORT, MRS KATHARINE STEPHENS,
AS ALSO TO THEIR ONLY SON,
MR THOMAS STEPHENS THE YOUNGER. ESQ.,

MUCH HONOURED AND DEARLY BELOVED IN THE LORD,

I No sooner bethought me of this dedication than there came likewise into my mind that apostolic distinction of true Christians into "fathers, young men, and little children." {#1Jo 2:12,13} All these, taken coniunctim, comonly, St John had, by a most kind compellation, called "little children." {#1Jo 2:1} "My little children," saith he, "these things write I unto you," as in an epistle dedicatory, "that ye sin not"—sc., sinningly (as in #1Jo 3:6) and mortally (as in #1Jo 5:16). "But if any man do sin"—as, alas! we can do no less—"we have an advocate with the Father"—appearing for us, as a lawyer appeareth for his client {#Heb 9:24} -even "Jesus Christ the just one," the Judge's own Son, "and he is the propitiation"—that is, the propitiator, by a metalepsis—"for our sins." {a} Learn this in general, saith the holy apostle, and hold it fast as with both hands, {b} for it is of the very foundation.

As for particulars, I have yet somewhat more to say to you, divisim, severally and asunder. And first, for you, "little children," or babes in Christ, who have had your spiritual conception, {#Ga 4:19} birth, {#1Pe 1:23} and are now in your childhood, {#1Co 3:12 Heb 5:13} as well appeareth, (1.) "Because your sins are forgiven you for his name's sake," {#1Jo 2:12} for an assurance whereof God hath given you the sacrament of baptism; to signify, as by sign; to ascertain you, as by seal; to convey to you, as by instrument, Christ Jesus with all his benefits: (2.) "Because ye have known the Father," in some degree at least, while he hath inwardly sealed you up by his Spirit, set his mark upon you, and sent you word, as it were, how well he loveth you. Now, then, the lesson that I have to lay before you, little ones, is only this, that "it is the last hour; and as ye have heard that antichrist shall come, even now there are many antichrists abroad"; {#1Jo 2:18} look well to yourselves, therefore, that ye be not beguiled, as little ones are apt to be; "that ye fall not from your own steadfastness," but, for a "preservative," grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ: to him be glory both now and for ever. Amen. {#2Pe 3:18}

Next, for you, "fathers"; you who are old disciples—as Mnason is called {#Ac 21:16} -you that are already gray headed and experienced Christians, saints of the first magnitude, {#Eph 4:13} such as the psalmist celebrateth in #Ps 92:14, I grant that "ye have known him that is from the beginning," {#1Jo 2:13} and I say it again, for your singular commendation and encouragement, "Ye have known him that is from the beginning," {#1Jo 2:14} even that "Ancient of days," whose "head and hair are white like wool, as white as snow." {#Re 1:14} You know him, I say, with a knowledge, not only apprehensive and disciplinary, but also affective and directive of your whole life. Nevertheless, I must friendly forewarn you of this one thing, though ye know it already, "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world." {#1Jo 2:15} It is strange you should, and yet it is often seen you do, doat over impotently on these things here below, even then when you have one foot in the grave, and should have the other foot in heaven, whither ye are hasting. The higher the sun, the shorter surely should be the shade. The nearer to the sea, the sooner shall come in the tide; and as in a pyramid, the higher you go, the lesser compass you find. So ought it to be with you, reverend fathers, upon whose heads God hath set a silver crown of hoary hairs already, and will shortly set upon them an imperishable crown of glory. {c}

Lastly, for you, "young men," that are not only past the spoon, but come to a well grown age in Christ, I have to praise you for this, and again I praise you, that ye have in a good measure "overcome that wicked one," τον πονηρον, the troubler, {#1Jo 2:13,14} "because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you." {#1Jo 2:14} But yet, as strong as ye are—and "the glory of young men (Heb., of choice young men) is their strength," {#Pr 20:29} well improved by you, because made use of against the devil—yet let me caution you also, as well as elder saints, to beware of the world, a subtle, a sly enemy, and very insinuating into the best breasts. "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world," is your lesson too. {#1Jo 2:15} Divorce the flesh from the world, and then your adversary the devil can do you no hurt.

Hitherto, worthy sirs, you have heard the beloved disciple, only glossed and paraphrased a little, and a better you cannot hear; for he was a secretis from secrets to the "Wonderful Counsellor," and leaned on his bosom. Shall I now take the humble boldness, gentlemen, after so great an apostle, to bespeak you severally in like sort, only with a little inversion of the apostle's order?

And, first, for you, Sir—the grandsire, the most ancient and most honourable of this thrice worthy ternio—besides your singular sagacity and prudence, both civil and sacred (the holy apostle's character of a father), these four notes of an old man in Christ are all fairly pencilled out and exemplified in your religious and righteous life and practice, absit verbo invidia, lacking jealous words, was in any man's I know alive in this day.

1. Such a one is exceeding humble; as Abraham was; {#Ge 18:27} I am but "dust and ashes," as Jacob was; {#Ge 32:10} "I am less than the least of thy lovingkindnesses, Lord"; as David was; {#Ps 22:6} "I am a worm and no man"; as Nehemiah was, when he prayed for pardon of his reformations; {#Ne 13:22} as Paul was, with his minimissimus sum I am the least, (so Estius rendereth him, #Eph 3:8); as Ignatius was, with his tantillitas nostra, our utmost meanness; as Augustine was, with his non sum dignus, quem tu diligas, I am utterly unworthy of thy least love; as blessed Bradford was, with his miserrimus peccator John Bradford; as Mr Dod and Mr Cleaver (your and my old and good acquaintance) were, with whom, we well remember, it was usual, Agur-like, to vilify, yea, to nullify themselves to the utmost. And this comes (1.) From increase of light; (2.) From much and long experience of their unavoidable failings and infirmities.
2. He is very heavenly minded; as having by the constant practice of mortification comfortably subdued his corruptions, seen through the vanity and vexation of outward things, set one foot upon the battlements of heaven, had here much sweet intercourse and communion with God, gotten a full grip of Christ, laid fast hold upon eternal life; for the full fruition whereof he therefore dearly and daily longs and labours. Hence also it comes to pass that this good old saint, this earthly angel, is so heavenly in his spirit, fruitful in good speeches, innocent in his life, abundant in deeds of piety and charity, still doing something that may further his reckoning, and add weight to his crown, which he ever eyeth, and even reacheth after. The former instances might be here called over again; all whose humility was not more low than their aims were lofty.

3. This good old disciple of Christ is very able to bear and forbear; like as a man at maturity can bear with little children's follies, and not "set his wit to theirs," as we use to phrase it. Thus Abraham bore with Lot's rudeness; Moses with the people's petulance and insolence; Paul with the buffooneries and indignities put upon him by the Corinthians and Galatians: "Ye have not injured me at all," saith he. {#Ga 4:12} Your disrespects and affronts reach me not. I am far above them; I am out of your gunshot. So Fulgentius, an ancient of the Church, being abused by one who was by far his inferior, put it off with Plura adhuc pro Christo toleranda, { a} This is a small trial; I must frame to bear more yet for Christ. As an old porter that had been beaten to the cross, he went singing under his burden, holding it no small grace to be disgraced { e} for the name of Jesus, as it is said of those disciples of our Saviour, {#Ac 5:41} who, soon after his ascension, were, all upon the sudden, of babes become grandees in grace.
4. Lastly, he is much affected with the state of others. Good Abraham could not rest in his bed that night, for thinking of poor Sodom, {#Ge 19:27} as Luther observeth. But especially he is affected with the welfare or ill fare of the churches, as being himself of a public, that is, of a noble spirit; and as a living member of Christ's mystical body, he feels twinges whensoever others are hurt in the least. See this in Daniel, Nehemiah, Ezra, but especially in Paul, upon whom lay "the care and cumber of all the churches." It came upon him as an armed man, and gave him no rest or respite. { b} Cyprian's Cum singulis pectus meum copulo I bind my heart together with each one, is well known. And of Calvin it is recorded in his life, by Beza, that he was no otherwise affected toward the churches, though far remote, than if he had borne them on his own shoulders. This is a sure note of a father. Indeed, babes and young men are so cumbered with their own corruptions, have so much work of their own to do within doors, that they have little leisure, or list, to look abroad. Neither are they, therefore, so much affected with other men's conditions.

To speak a little of those two also in their order. And first, of the "young man" in Christ. Where let it be, I beseech you, no trouble or offence of heart— singultus cordis, some render it {#Isa 25:31} -to you, noble colonel, together with your elect or choice lady, {g} to be set among the second sort of good Christians. Though I must needs say, for your very eximious and exemplary piety and prudence, you may well claim place in the upper form of this lower world. But you know who it was that said long since, Honestum est ei, qui in primis non potest, in secundis tertiusve consistere. And to have a doorkeeper's place in God's house David held no small preferment. {#Ps 84:10} But to go on with our business. A "young man" in Christ may be thus characterised:—

1. He is strong in grace, but in addition he hath some one, or more, strong corruption, suppose passion, evil concupiscence, worldliness, or the like, that holds him play, and puts him shrewdly to it, so that sometimes he could almost find in his heart to sin. "My feet were almost gone, my steps had well nigh slipped." {#Ps 73:2} But afterwards he better bethinks himself, forbears and forgoes it, as a man would do a serpent in his way, or poison in his meats. He maketh strong resistance, and reneweth his well knit resolutions against sin. A mighty combat and coil there is other whiles, as it useth to be in a thunder clap, caused by a hot dry vapour wrapt up in a cold moist cloud, which ends in a great rumble and dreadful crack. Patient Job and devout David, for instance, the one "abhorring himself" for his impatient outbursts, the other berating himself for his precipitance, his rash resolves, one time, when sick of the fret. {#Ps 73:22}
2. Next, the "weapons" of this young man's "warfare are not carnal"—such as natural reason, shame of the world, fear of hell,

&c., have put into his hand—"but spiritual, mighty through God to the pulling down of Satan's strongest holds," the digging down of his deepest trenches. {#2Co 10:5} He fights against the enemies of his soul, with God's own arm, and with God's own armour. He is "strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might"; and taking the "sword of his Spirit"—mingling with faith in his heart the precepts, menaces, and promises—he lays about him lustily, and prevails accordingly, driving the field of that old man slayer.

3. He is much affected with his success. If he get the better in any measure, so that he doth not so much and often break out as he was wont; if his corruption be any whit abated, his strength increased a little, he is marvellously glad and thankful. Was not David so when disarmed by the discretion of Abigail, and detained from shedding innocent blood? {#ISA 25:32,33} As on the other side, if wounded and worsted at any time, he is all amort, sorely disquieted, restless as on a rack; like a man thrust through the body, he bleeds and sinks, till with Peter he run to Christ, the right surgeon in this case, with tears in his eyes, bitter complaints in his mouth, and utmost self-abhorrence in his heart, and is cured and set right again.
4. Lastly, he proves at length "more than a conqueror, through Christ that loveth him"; and whose work it is to "send forth judgment unto victory" {#Mt 12:20} -Gr., εκβαλη, thrust it forth with violence—the devil and the world in vain opposing the work of true grace, called "judgment" in that text, which shall surely be perfected: "Because ye have overcome that wicked one," saith St John. {#1Jo 2:14} Yea, ye over overcome, saith St Paul; {#Ro 8:37, υπερνικουμεν} because ye do gather strength by opposition, as that giant, Antaeus, that fought with Hercules, is fabled to do by his falling to the earth; ye conquer even by being conquered. You do daily get ground and outgrow your corruptions, which are already laid bleeding and dying at your feet. And "God shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly." {#Ro 16:20} So that the broken horns of that old red dragon shall be the trumpets of your triumph and the cornets of your joy.

Lo, Sir, this is that miles Christianus, Christian soldier, that pancratiastes evangelicus, which while you, a colonel once in the best of armies, and yet still so by your well becoming praenomen, personal name, shall strive to personate, and go on to express, you shall "war a good warfare, holding faith and a good conscience, which some having put away"—Gr., απωσαμενοι, expelled, as Amnon did Tamar, as colleges do scoundrels, without all hope of re-entry—"concerning faith have made shipwreck." {#1Ti 1:18,19} Whereas you, noble Sir, continue constant in and to the "truth which is according to godliness," {#Tit 1:1} and a hearty hater of all heresies and heterodoxies whatsoever. For the which your faithfulness and firmness in adhering to God's holy cause, and promoting his kingdom, your reward is sure with him, though not all presently paid you. A Christian soldier may have a very great arrear; Paul speaks as if all his pay were then to take up, when all his warfare was accomplished. {#2Ti 4:7,8}

Lastly, for you, sweet Sir, Mr Thomas Stephens the younger, for whom my heart's desire and prayer to God is, and shall be, that of David's servants for young Solomon, {#1Ki 1:47} or that of Hector in Homer for his son Astyanax,

“ειη τε πατρος θ ογε πολλων αμεινων.”

May it be your great care now early, I beseech you, to "know the God of your fathers, and to serve him with a perfect heart, and a willing mind." {#1Ch 28:9} Deum cognoscere, et colere, est totum hominis. {h} If you be yet no more than a babe in Christ, one of his little children, for innocence and ignocence, it shall suffice, till such time at least as you "come unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ," {#Eph 4:13} till you grow up to more maturity, and "increase with the increase of God." {#Col 2:19} Only it behoveth you, Sir, as such a babe, to see,

1. That Christ be formed in you of a truth; that you be indeed a "partaker of the divine nature" and of the "life of God"; that you have some of every grace though but a little,

“— inest sua gratia parvis.”

2. That you be very sensible of your weakness, and discontentedly contented with it; like as a child is oft troubled that he is not able to run, lift, labour as men do, and he will be doing as he can at men's actions.

3. As babes are very hungry, never well but when the teat or spoon is in the mouth, or food in the hand, so should you, Sir, hunger and thirst after grace and the means of grace; as a "newborn babe, desire earnestly the sincere milk of God's word, that you may grow thereby." {#1Pe 2:2} Grow, I say, not in notion, but motion, not in light so much as in heat, in gifts as in graces. There are those who have the spiritual rickets, grow big in the head, but decay in the vitals; be you none such.

4. Lastly, as children are naturally apt to imitate their parents, whether in good, as Jehoshaphat did his father David, or in evil, as Isaac did his father Abraham, so let it be your great endeavour to tread in the holy footsteps, as of your mother Lois, and of your grandmother Eunice, {#2Ti 1:5} both of them famous in the Church, so especially of your renowned grandfather and father, in whose imparal- lel examples you have a very globe of precepts; and by passing into the likeness of which surpassing patterns, you shall become of a young saint an old angel, of a young wellwisher to the public, a worthy and well accomplished patriot, able and apt to serve God and your country in places of noblest note, and highest employment, as your progenitors have done in their generations. And hereunto if either my poor prayers, as a suitor at the throne of grace, or my son's {i} utmost endeavours, as a tutor made choice of by your best friends, for your ingenuous education, may contribute anything, I dare assure you of both.

To draw to an end of this prefatory discourse, which begins to swell beyond the bounds of an epistle; you may very well say, Sir, as Solomon once did: #Pr 4:3-5, "I was my father's son, tender and dearly beloved in the sight of my mother. He taught me also, and said unto me, Let thine heart retain my words: keep my commandments, and live. Get wisdom, get understanding, forget it not," &c. Your religious mother also hath not been behind, I dare say, to lesson her Lemuel with "What, my son, and what, the son of my womb, and what, the son of my vows?" {#Pr 31:2} You may please to peruse what I have written upon those two texts, and the rest now presented and put into your hands in both parts of this third volume upon the Holy Bible. Wherein if anything occur that may be of use either to your much honoured parents or to your well beloved self for theirs and your increase and furtherance in knowledge and holiness, I shall take it for a sufficient operae precium, precious work, and yet hope too that "for the gift"—how mean so ever—"bestowed upon me"—how unworthy soever—"for the behoof of many others, thanks may be given to God by many on my behalf." {#2Co 1:11}

Now the very God of peace multiply grace, mercy, and peace upon you all, from the greatest to the least, and upon his whole Israel. This is the unfeigned, and shall be the constant, desire of him who is, and will be,

Noble Gentlemen,

Yours in all due observance till death,

[EPISTLES DEDICATORY PREFIXED TO THE ORIGINAL EDITION OF THE VOLUME ON THE PENTATEUCH.]

TO THE RIGHT WORSHIPFUL AND WORTHILY HONOURED
SIR CHARLES LEE, KNIGHT,
JUSTICE OF THE PEACE FOR, THE COUNTY OF WARWICK, AND
ONE OF HIS MAJESTY'S DEPUTY LIEUTENANTS FOR THAT COUNTY,

Grace, Mercy, and Peace be multiplied.

NOBLE SIR,

Your so very friendly acceptance and frequent perusal (testified before many) of the piece I last published, hath not a little encouraged me to present unto you this ^{a} also (being the first of the five) for a New Year's gift, and to crave your patronage.

I must never forget, though it be well nigh forty years since, how much I stood obliged for many signal favours, and real courtesies, to that renowned knight your father, ^{b} in whose room you are now risen up, a branch of the old stock, ^{c} -give me leave, Sir, to bespeak you in your own words, -and as a right worthy patriot do exactly express him, ^{d} to the honour of your family and the great content of your country, by whom you are universally valued, and (which is better) most entirely beloved.

As for myself, the meanest among the many honourers of your virtues, I cannot but humbly adore the divine goodness whereby you, the youngest of all your brethren, are, after some interchanges of occurrences, unexpectedly brought back to your native Bilseley, and there fixed, as a right orient star in your proper orb, to diffuse fair light and benign influence, not to the neighbourhood only, who do therein hold themselves not a little happy, but to the whole country also, which plentifully partaketh of your splendour, and rejoiceth in your regiment; though, like the fixed stars, ^{e} the higher you are set, the less you desire to seem.

May it still be your Christian care, noble Sir, and constant endeavour, to glorify that God who hath done so great things for you, by advancing his interest to the utmost, wherever you have to do and by promoting the public good, whereunto you may seem, Cato-like, {f} to have been born, and Phocion-like, {g} to be wholly addicted,

Hoc virtutis opus. ”—Virg.*

Fame followeth virtue closer at the heels than the shadow doth the body, as without it a man may be notable, or notorious, but not truly noble. This you will easily see, Sir, exemplified in these ancient archetypes, the Old Testament elders, who "by faith obtained a good report," {#Heb 11:2} and "by patient continuance in well doing" got "glory, and honour, and immortality," yea, "eternal life"; {#Ro 2:10} in imitation of whom may you proceed to "do worthily in Ephrata," and so be yet further "famous in Bethlehem," {#Ru 4:11} that your faith and piety "may be found unto praise, honour, and glory, at the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ." {#1Pe 1:7}

And hereunto, if either my poor pains or heartiest prayers may any whit conduce, you shall be, sure of both, which indeed is no more than the bounden duty, and shall be the daily task of,

Noble Sir,

Your Worship's very humbly and officiously devoted,

JOHN TRAPP.

TO
THE RIGHT WORSHIPFUL AND VERY VIRTUOUS LADY, THE LADY MARY LEE,
WIFE TO SIR CHARLES LEE OF BILSELEY, IN WARWICKSHIRE,

Grace, Mercy, and Peace be multiplied.

GOOD MADAM,

It is the command of our dear Lord, "Search the Scriptures"; {#Joh 5:39} and it was the practice of his Virgin mother, as is manifest by her Magnificat, {#Lu 1:46} mostly made up of other holy scriptures, in the reading whereof she is told {h} to have spent a third part of her precious time.

That Roman lady and noble martyr, Cecilia, had by much reading made her bosom the "Library of Jesus Christ"; {i} and Gorgonia is much commended by her brother Nazianzen for her assiduity in this holy exercise.

Julian, indeed, {j} that odious apostate and professed enemy of the truth, twits the Christians of those primitive times with this, that their women also were meddlers with the Scriptures; and Cardinal Hosius {k} blusheth not to affirm that a distaff were a far deal fitter for a woman's hand than a Bible: but St Jerome {l} very highly commendeth, for their Scripture skill, those noble ladies of his time, Eustochium, Salvina, Celantia, Paula, exhorting them not to lay down their Bibles until, being overcome with sleep, they bowed down their heads, as it were, to salute those holy leaves with a kiss.

Our renowned Queen Elizabeth was excellently well versed in God's blessed Book; {m} and so was that incomparable young princess the late Lady Elizabeth {n} (sister to our most gracious sovereign that now is, whom God long preserve), as being trained up of a child in the Word of truth; as was also another lady yet alive {o} and not many miles distant, the Lady Packington of Westwood, in Worcestershire, of whom I find this rare testimony given by a person of credit (Mr W. Durham's "Family Instruc.," page 17), that, by the strictness of her education and happiness of her memory, she hath a great part of the Old Testament and all the New so perfectly by heart, that she can repeat almost any chapter of either, backward or forward, tell any particular verse or words, where they are, what goes before, and what follows after. {p}

A singular praise, certainly, in a person of her sex and quality, and an unparalleled precedent, I believe, to all the ladies in Christendom.

I shall say no more to your Ladyship now, though I might say much in your just commendation, and would, too, but that I know you love not long salutations in the markets, {#Mt 23:7} save only this of the apostle, "Let the word of Christ dwell richly in you in all wisdom." {#Col 3:16}

And if, by tongue or pen, I may be any way serviceable to your faith, I shall take it for a singular happiness unto,

Noble Madam,

Your Worship's very humbly and officiously devoted,

JOHN TRAPP.

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. In the beginning.] A BEGINNING there was then, whatever Aristotle {a} fancied of the world's eternity. So true is that of a learned Italians—Philosophy seeks after truth; divinity only finds it; religion improves it. {b} { Veritatem quaerit philosophia, invenit theologia, & c. } But the philosopher would be yet better satisfied. He had read (say some) {c} this first of Genesis, and was heard to say thereupon, Well said, Sir Moses; how prove you what you have so said? { Egregie dicis, domine Moses; sed quomodo probas? } An ancient {d} answereth, I believe it, I need not prove it. { credo, non probo } Another, {e} we believe the holy penmen before heathen wise men. { piscatoribus credimus, non dialecticis } A third, {f} The mysteries of the Christian religion are better understood by believing, than believed by understanding { Multo melius credendo intelliguntur, quam intelligendo creduntur fidei Christianae mysteria. Abbas Tuiciensis. } Theologia non est argumentativa. {g} But, best of all, the apostle, "Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God; so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear." {#Heb 11:3} Divinity doth not use to prove her principles, whereof this is one. No, not Aristotle's own divinity, (his Metaphysics, I mean) wherein he requires to be believed upon his bare word. Albeit, if Ramus may be judge, those fourteen books of his are the most idle and impious piece of sophistry that ever was set forth by any man. {h} Thus, "Professing themselves to be wise, they become fools." {#Ro 1:22} "Behold, they have rejected the word of the Lord; and what wisdom is in them?" {#Jer 8:9}

Plato had read Moses, whatever Aristotle had done; and held truly, that the world had a beginning. So did all the philosophers that were before Aristotle, except the Chaldeans, and Hossellus Lucanus, the Pythagorean, out of whom Aristotle took his arguments, which are to be read, {Physic, viii. c. 8, and ii. and l. 1. De Coelo, c. 1, and l. xii.; Metaphysics, c. 7.} But it is more than probable that he taught the world's eternity in opposition to Plato and others, who rightly concluded the world must needs have had a beginning; otherwise we could not know whether the egg or the bird, the seed or the plant, the day or the night, the light or the darkness, were first; sure it is that he held that opinion rather out of an affectation of singularity, than for any soundness of the matter or strength of argument. Himself, in his first book of Topics, and ninth chapter, saith that it is no more than a topical problem: he should have said a plain paradox, yea, a mere falsity. For "In the beginning," the Jerusalem Targum hath "In wisdom," that is, in God the Son, saith Augustine, according to #Joh 1:3 Heb 1:2 Col 1:16. And indeed God created all things by his Son Christ; not as by a concreating cause, but as by his own essential Wisdom. {#1Co 1:24 Pr 1:20 8:1} And of this mystery and appellation some suppose the heathens had some traditional knowledge; for aa Christ, the Wisdom of the Father, was eternally and ineffably begotten in the divine essence, so they worshipped a goddess whom they called the goddess of wisdom, and feigned that she was begotten by Jupiter of his own brain; and they called her Αθηνη, which word is much like in sound with the Hebrew Adonai, as a reverend man {i} hath well observed.

God created.] Heb. Dii creavit. {Plural subject "Dii" (Gods) singular verb "creavit". Editor.} The Mystery of the blessed Trinity, called by Elihu, {#Job 35:10} Eloah Gnoscai, "God my Makers"; and by David, {#Ps 149:1} "The Makers of Israel," and "Remember thy Creators," saith Solomon. {#Ec 12:1} To the same sense, sweetly sounds the Haphtera, or portion of Scripture which is read by the Jews, {j} together with this of Moses, viz., #Isa 42:5. And that of the psalmist, {#Ps 33:6} "By the word of the Lord were the heavens made, and all the host of them by the breath or spirit of his mouth": that is, God the Father, by the Son, through the Holy Ghost, created all. This Trismegist, {k} an ancient Egyptian (for he flourished before Pharaoh), acknowledged, and thence had his name. The Hebrews also of old were no strangers to this mystery, though their posterity understood it not. Rabbi Solomon Jarchi, writing on that, {#So 1:11} "We will make," &c., interprets it, "I and my judgment hall." Now a judgment hall in Israel consisted of three at least, which in their close manner of speech, they applied to God, who is Three in one, and One in three.

Rabbi Simeon, the son of Johai, brings a place out of Rabbi Ibba, on #De 6:4, "Jehovah Elohenu, Jehovah Echad, 'The Lord our God is one Lord.'" Here the first Jehovah, saith he, is God the Father, Elohenu, the Son (who is fitly called our God, because he assumed our nature, as is well observed by Galatinus), the third Jehovah is God the Holy Ghost. Echad, one, showeth the unity of essence in this plurality of persons; wherefore, saith Luther, doth not Moses begin thus, "In the beginning, God said, Let there be a heaven, and earth," but because he would set forth the three persons in order; the Father, when he saith, God created; the Son, when he saith, God said; and the Holy Ghost, when he saith, God saw the light that it was good?

Created.] Made all things of nothing, in a most marvellous and magnificent manner, as the word signifieth. This Plato doubts of, Aristotle denies, Galen derides as a thing impossible, {l} because, with Nicodemus, he cannot conceive how these things can be. "The natural man," the mere animal, {Ψυχικός, #ICo 2:14} whose reason is not elevated by religion, "pereeiveth not these things of the Spirit of God: they are foolishness unto him." The cock on the dunghill meddles not with these matters. Well might St Paul tell the men of Athens, {#Ac 17:23,24} (and yet Athens was the Greece of Greece, Ελλάς Ελλαδος {m} and had in it the most mercurial wits in the world), that God, "that made all things of nothing," was to them the "unknown God": and Lactantius fitly saith of Plato (who yet merited the style of Divine amongst them), that he dreamed of God, rather than had any true knowledge of him. {n} He nowhere called God the Creator, but Δημιουργον, the workman; as one that had made the world of a preexistent matter, co-eternal to himself. Atheists of old scorned at the work of creation; and asked, "Quibus machinis," with what tools, engines, ladders, scaffolds, did the Lord set up this mighty frame? But, "Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed" (set in joint, ξατηζιτσηαι, #Heb 11:3, the word signifieth, as all the members of the body are tied together by several ligaments), "by the word of God," without either tool or toil. {#Isa 40:28} He not only formed and made, but created all by the word of his power: see all these ascribed unto him in #Isa 43:7. There were four errors, saith a late learned man, ^{o} about the creation: some affirmed that the world was eternal; some that it had a material beginning, and was made of something; some held two beginners of things: that one beginner made things incorruptible, and another made things corruptible. Lastly, some said God made the superior creatures himself, and the inferior by angels. This very first verse of the Bible confutes all four. In the beginning, shows the world not to be eternal. Created, notes that it was made of nothing. The heaven and the earth, shows that God was the only beginner of all creatures. God created all: this excludes the angels. In the government of the world, we grant they have a great stroke. ^{#Eze 1:5,6 Da 10:1-11:45} Not so in the making of the world, wherein God was alone, and by himself. ^{#Isa 44:24} And, lest any should imagine otherwise, the creation of angels is not so much as mentioned by Moses, unless it be tacitly intimated in these words—"The heavens and the earth"; ^{p} "The world and all the things that are therein"; ^{#Ac 17:24} "Things visible and invisible"; ^{#Col 1:16} "whether they be thrones or dominions," &c., called elsewhere "angels of heaven"; ^{#Mt 24:26 Ga 1:8} because, probably, created with, and in the highest heaven, as Christ's soul was created with, and in his body, in the Virgin's womb, the self-same moment. The highest heaven, and the angels were of necessity, say some, to be created the first instant, that they might have their perfection of matter and form together; otherwise they should be corruptible. For whatsoever is of a pre-existent matter is resolvable, and subject to corruption; but that which is immediately of nothing is perfectly composed, hath no other change, but by the same hand to return to nothing again.

Ques. But if this were the heaven, what was the earth here mentioned?

Answ. Not that we now tread upon, for that was not made till the third day; but the matter of all that was afterwards to be created—being all things in power, nothing in act.

The Cabbalists observe that there are in this first verse of the Holy Bible six Alephs: and therehence they conclude, that the world shall last six thousand years. But they may be therein as far out as that wise man ^{q} was who, A.D. 1533, affirmed that the world would be at an end that very year, in the month of October, and that he pretended to gather out of those words, Iesus Nazarenus Rex Iudaeorum: and again those, Videbunt in quem transfixerunt. So some {r} since that, but little wiser, have foretold as much concerning the year of grace 1657, from those words mundi conflagratio; and because the universal flood fell out in the year of the world 1657. According to these groundless conjectures, confuted already by time, some have argued, that because Solomon's temple was finished in the year of the world three thousand, therefore the spiritual temple shall be consummated in three thousand more. This reckoning comes up to that of the Cabbalists above mentioned; and to that known prophecy of Elias (but not the Tishbite), that as there were two thousand years, plus minus, before the law, and two thousand under the law, so there are to be two thousand under the gospel.

Ver. 2. And the earth was without form and void,] that is, as yet it had neither essential nor accidental perfection. The Lord afterward did form it into light, the firmament, the water, and the earth; so beginning above, and building downwards (in the new creature he doth otherwise); and in three days laying the parts of the world, and in other three days adorning them. The Rabbins tell us that Tohu and Bohu do properly import Materia prima and privatio; {a} and others of Tohu, derive Chaos, whence the ancient Latins called the world Chobus, and borrowed their word Inchoo (εγγυω), &c.

And darkness was upon the face of the deep,] that is, not of hell, as Origen expounds it, but of the deep waters (αβυσσος, see the like, #Lu 8:31), which "as a garment covered the earth, and stood above the mountains." {#Ps 104:6} This darkness God created not, for it was but the want of light. And to say that God dwelt in darkness till he had created light, was a devilish sarcasm of the Manichees, as if God were not light itself, {#1Jo 1:5} and "the Father of lights"; {#Jas 1:17} or, as if God had not ever been a heaven to Himself, "Ere ever he had formed the earth and the heavens." {#Ps 90:2} What he did, or how he employed himself before the creation, is a sea over which no ship hath sailed, a mine into which no spade hath delved, an abyss into which no bucket hath dived. Our sight is too tender to behold this sun. A thousand years, saith a great divine, {b} are to God but as one day, &c. And who knoweth what the Lord hath done? Indeed, he made but one world to our knowledge; but who knoweth what he did before, and what he will do after? Thus he. As for St Augustine:

“The bishop Lybicus was shaping the underworld according to these verses, he said these ideas which he helps to be examined by means of such a mind.” {c}

Excellently another, {d} who wanted not wit: As in the element of fire, saith he, there is a faculty of heating and enlightening; whence proceedeth heat and light unto the external near bodies; and besides this faculty, there is also in it a natural power to go upward; which, when it cometh into act, is received into no other subject, but the fire itself: so that if fire could, by abstractive imagination, be conceived of as wanting those two transient operations, yet could we not justly say it had no action, forasmuch as it might move upward, which is an immanent and inward action. So, and much more so, though we grant that there was no external work of the Godhead, until the making of the world, yet can there be no necessary illation inference of idleness, seeing it might have (as indeed it had) actions immanent, included in the circle of the Trinity. This is an answer to such as ask, What God did before he made the world? God, saith Plotinus the Platonist, {e} not working at all, but resting in himself, doeth and performeth very great things.

And the Spirit of God moved, &c.] Or hovered over, {f} and hatched out the creature, as the hen doth her chickens; or as the eagle fluttereth over her young, to provoke them to flight. {#De 32:11} Or as by a like operation, this same Holy Spirit formed the child Jesus in the Virgin's womb, in that wonderful "overshadowing" {#Lu 1:35}. The Chaldee here hath it, "The Spirit breathed"; and David saith the same. {#Ps 33:6} He became, to that rude dead mass, a quickening, comforting Spirit. He kept it together, which else would have shattered. And so he doth still, or else all would soon fall asunder, {#Heb 1:3 Ps 104:29} were not his conserving mercy still over, or upon, all his works. {#Ps 145:9}

Ver. 3. And God saith, Let there, &c.] He commanded the "light to shine out of darkness." {#2Co 4:6} "He spake the word, and it was done." {#Ps 33:9 148:5} {a} Creation is no motion, but a simple and bare emanation; which is, when without any repugnancy of the patient, or labour of the agent, the work or effect doth voluntarily and freely arise from the action of the working cause, as the shadow from the body. So God's irresistible power made this admirable work of the world, by his bare word, as the shadow and obscure representation of his unsearchable wisdom and omnipotency.

And there was light.] This first light was not the angels, as Augustine would have it; nor the element of fire, as Damascene; nor the sun, which was not yet created, nor a lightsome cloud, nor any such thing; but the "first day," which God could make without means, as Calvin well observeth. This light was the first ornament of the visible world, and so is still of the "hidden man of the heart," the new creature. {#Ac 26:18} The first thing in St Paul's commission there, was to "open men's eyes, to turn them from darkness to light," &c. To dart such a saving light into the soul, as might illighten both organ and object. In which great work also, Christ's words are operative, together with his commands, in the mouths of his ministers. "Know the Lord; understand, O ye brutish among the people," &c. {#Ps 94:8} There goes forth a power to heal, as it did in #Lu 5:17; or as when he bade Lazarus arise, he made him to arise, so here the word and the Spirit go together; and then what wonder that the spirit of darkness falls from the heaven of men's hearts, "as lightning". {#Lu 10:18} So as that they that erst "were darkness, are now light in the Lord," {#Eph 5:8} and do "preach forth the praises of him who hath called them out of darkness into his marvellous light".

Ver. 4. And God saw the light that it was good.]—Moveover he foresaw, so one renders it. {a} He saw this long before, but he would have us to see it; he commends the goodness of this work of his to us. Good it is surely, and a goodly creature: "sweet," saith Solomon; {#Ec 11:7} "comfortable," saith David. {#Ps 97:11} Which when one made question of—"That's a blind man's question," said the philosopher. {b} What is it then to enjoy him that is light essential? The Platonists (who were blind in divinis, and could not see afar off) could say that he was a blessed man, who enjoyed God, as the eye doth enjoy the light. {c}

And God divided the light, &c.]—Let not us confound them, {#2Co 6:14 1Th 5:5-7} and so alter God's order by doing deeds of darkness, in a day of grace, in a land of light. What make owls at Athens? or such "spots," σπιλοι και μωμοι, among saints, as "count it pleasure to riot in the daytime?" {#2Pe 2:13} It was a shame that it should be said, There was never less wisdom in Greece, than in the time of the seven wise men of Greece. {d} It was a worse "shame," that it should be said to the Corinthians, that "some of them had not the knowledge of God"; {#1Co 15:34} and that such fornication was found among them as was not heard of among the heathen. {#1Co 5:1} For what fellowship hath light with darkness? {#2Co 6:14} Surely none. Our morning shadows fall as far as they can toward the west, evening toward the east, noonday toward the north, &c. Ver. 5. And God called the light day, &c.] He taught men to call them so; day מַרְי, from the noise and hurry; night לַהֲלֵי, from the yelling of wild beasts. Darkness he created not, but only by accident; and yet not that, without some notable use. Much less that darkness of affliction which he is said to "create". {#Isa 45:7} "Unto the upright there ariseth light in darkness," {#Ps 112:4} yea, light by darkness, as to Paul, whose bodily blindness opened the eyes of his mind. Luther said that God's works are effected usually by contraries. {a} {Opera Dei sunt in mediis contrariis}

And the evening and the morning, &c.] Thales, one of the seven sages, had learned this truth by going to school in Egypt. For being asked whether was first, the day or the night? he answered, that the night was sooner by one day: {b} as who should say, afore God had created the light, it must needs be confessed that out of him there was nothing but darkness. Evening separates by darkness, morning by light; so the one disjoins day from night, the other night from day. Only this first evening separated not, because light was then uncreated. Yet it was of God appointed, even then, to stand between light and darkness. In the first evening was heaven and earth created, and in the first morning the light, both which make the civil day called νυχθημερον by the apostle. {#2Co 11:25} And this (which doubtless is the natural order of reckoning the day, from evening to evening), was in use among the Athenians, {c} and is to this day retained by the Jews, Italians, Bohemians, Silesians, and other nations. Our life likewise is such a day, and begins with the dark evening of misery here; but death is to saints the daybreak of eternal brightness. Mourning lasteth but till morning. {#Ps 30:5} Nay, not so long; for, "Behold at eventide trouble, and before the morning he is not." {#Isa 17:14} It is but a "moment," yea, a very little moment, and the indignation will pertransire, be overpast, saith the prophet; {#Isa 26:20} so "little a while" as you can scarce imagine, saith the apostle. {ετι γαρ μικρον οσον οσον, #Heb 10:37} If it seem otherwise to any of us, consider:

1. That we have some lucida intervalla, some respites, interspirates, breathing whiles. And it is a mercy that the man is not always sweating out a poor living, the woman ever in pangs of childbirth, &c. {#Ge 3:16-19}
2. That this is nothing to eternity of extremity, which is the just hire of the least sin. {#Ro 6:23}
3. That much good accrues unto us hereby. {#Heb 12:10} Yea, this "light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh out unto us that far more excellent and eternal weight of glory." {#2Co 4:17} Oh, pray, pray "that the eyes of our understanding being enlightened by that Spirit of wisdom and revelation, we may know what is the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints," &c. {#Eph 1:17,18}

Ver. 6. Let there be a firmament.] Yet not so firm, but it shall be dissolved. {#2Pe 3:11} That it is not presently so; that those windows of heaven are not opened, as once in the deluge, having no better a bar than the liquid air, and we suddenly buried in one universal grave of waters; see a miracle of God's mercy, and thank him for this powerful word of his, "Let there be a firmament." Bartholinus {a} tells us, that in the year of Christ 1551, a very great multitude of men and cattle were drowned by a terrible tempest, the clouds suddenly dissolving, and the waters pouring down amain with such a strange stupendous violence, that the massy walls of many cities, various vineyards, and fair houses were utterly destroyed and ruined. Clouds, those bottles of rain, are vessels as thin as the liquor which is contained in them. There they hang and move, though weighty with their burdens. How they are upheld, saith a reverend divine, {b} and why they fall here and now, we know not, and wonder. {#Job 26:8} They water our lands, as we do our gardens, and are therefore called our heavens. {#De 33:28}

Ver. 7. Waters which were above the firmament.] That is the clouds, and watery meteors above the lower region of the air, where God's "pavilion round about him is dark waters, and thick clouds of the skies". {#Ps 18:11 Jer 10:13} These he "weighs by measure"; {#Job 28:25} not a drop falls in vain, or in a wrong place. And this is the first heaven: as the second is the starry sky, which is firm and fast, "as a molten looking-glass". {#Job 37:18} To this heaven, some that have calculated curiously, have found it five hundred years' journey. Others say, that if a stone should fall from the eighth sphere, and should pass every hour a hundred miles, it would be sixty-five years or more, before it would come to ground. {a} Beyond this second heaven, Aristotle acknowledgeth none other. Beyond the movable heavens, saith he, there is neither body, nor time, nor place, nor vacuum. {b} But "we have a more sure word of prophecy." God's blessed book assures us of a "third heaven," {#2Co 12:2} called elsewhere "the heaven of heavens," {#De 10:14} the "Paradise" of God, {#Lu 22:43} the "bosom of Abraham," {#Lu 16:22} the "Father's house," {#Joh 14:2} the "city of the living God," {#Heb 12:22} the "country" of his pilgrims. {#Heb 12:14} A body it is, for bodies are in it; but a subtile, fine, spiritual body; next in purity to the substance of angels and men's souls. It is also, say some, {c} solid as stone, but "clear as crystal" {#Re 21:11 Job 37:18} A true firmament, indeed, not penetrable by any, no, not by angels, spirits, and bodies of just men made perfect; but by a miracle, God making way by His power, where there is no natural passage. It opens to the very angels, {#Joh 1:51 Ge 28:12} who yet are able to penetrate all under it. The other two heavens are to be passed through by the grossest bodies.

Ver. 8. And the evening, &c.] Here is no mention of God's approbation of this second day's work. Not for that hell was then created, or the reprobate angels then ejected, as the Jews give as the reason of it; but because this day's work was left unperfected, till the next; to the which, therefore, the blessing was reserved, and is then redoubled. God delights to do his works, not all at once, but by degrees, that we may take time to contemplate them piecemeal, and see him in every one of them, as in an optic glass. "Consider the lilies of the field," saith our Saviour. {Καταμανητε #Mt 6:28}; "Go to the ant, thou sluggard," saith Solomon. {#Pr 6:6}; Luther {a} wished Pontanus, Chancellor of Saxony, to contemplate the star-chamber of heaven, that stupendous archwork borne up by no props or pillars, and yet not falling on our heads: the thick clouds also hanging often over us with great weight, and yet vanishing again, when they have greeted us but with their threatening looks. And cannot God as easily uphold his sinking saints, and blow over any storm that hangs over their heads? An artificer takes it ill, if when he hath finished some intricate piece of work, and sets it forth to be seen, as Apelles was wont to do, men slight it, and take no notice of his handiwork. And is there not a woe to such stupid persons as "regard not the work of the Lord, neither consider the operation of his hands?." {#Isa 5:12} He was telling any tale from a bowl but that one stirred our ears, {A sino quispiam narrabat fabulam, at ille movebat aures} is a proverb among the Greeks. Christ was by at the creation, and rejoiced; {#Pr 8:30} angels also were by at the doing of a great deal, and were wrapped with admiration. {#Job 38:4-7} Shall they shout for joy, and we be silent? Oh, how should we vex at the vile dulness of our hearts, that are no more affected with these indelible ravishments!

Ver. 9,10. Let the waters under the heaven be gathered, &c.] The water, they say, is ten times greater than the earth, as is the air ten times greater than the water, and the fire than the air. Sure it is, that the proper place of the water is to be "above the earth". {#Ps 104:6} Sailors tell us that as they draw nigh to shore, when they enter into the haven, they run as it were downhill. "The waters stood above the mountain," till (at God's rebuke here) they "fled, and hasted away at the voice of his thunder, to the place which he had founded for them". {#Ps 104:6-8} This drew from Aristotle, in one place, {a} a testimony of God's providence, which elsewhere he denies. And

David, in the 104th Psalm, which one calleth his Physics, tells us that till the word of command, "Let the waters," &c., God "had covered the earth with the deep as with a garment." For as the garment, in the proper use of it, is above the body, so is the sea above the land. And such a garment, saith the divine cosmographer, would it have been to the earth, but for God's providence towards us, as the shirt made for the murdering of Agamemnon, where he had no issue out. But "thou hast set a bound," saith the psalmist, "that they may not pass over, that they turn not again to cover the earth". {#Ps 104:9} God had set the solid earth upon and above the liquid waters for our conveniency; so that men are said "to go down" (not up) "to the sea in ships". {#Ps 107:23} See his mercy herein, as in a mirror, and believe that God, whose work it is still to "appoint us the bounds of our habitation," {#Ac 17:26} will not fail to provide us a hospitium, a place to reside in, when cast out of all, as he did David, {#Ps 27:10} and David's parents, {#Isa 22:4} and the apostles, {#2Co 6:10} and the English exiles in Queen Mary's days, and, before them, Luther, who, being asked where he thought to be safe, answered Under Heaven, {Sub caelo} {b} and yet before him, those persecuted Waldenses, after whom the Romish dragon cast out so much water as a flood, but the earth swallowed it; {#Re 12:15} and God so provided that they could travel from Cullen in Germany to Milan in Italy, and every night lodge with hosts of their own profession. {c} The waters of affliction are often gathered together against the godly, but, by God's gracious appointment, ever under the heaven, -where our conversation is, {#Php 3:20} though our commoration be a while upon earth, -and unto one place, as the text here has it. {d} The dry land will appear, and we shall come safe to shore, be sure of it. The rock of eternity, {#Isa 26:4} whereupon we are set, is above all billows. Washed we may be, as Paul was in the shipwreck; drowned we cannot be, because in the same bottom with Christ, and "kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation." {#1Pe 1:5}

Ver. 12. And the earth brought forth, &c.] Augustine {a} thinks that thorns and thistles, brambles and briars were before the fall, though not in the same abundance as now. Basil thinks otherwise, and that till sin came in, the rose was without prickles. It is likely there were such shrubs at first created, {non ut loederent hominem non peccantem, sed peccatum,} saith Pareus. Now since the fall, all creatures are armed against man: as that sword which Hector gave Ajax, which, so long as he used against men, his enemies, served for help and defence; but after he began to abuse it to the hurt of haemless beasts, it turned into his own bowels.

Yielding fruit after his kind.] So that men do not "gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles". {#Lu 6:44} "Can a fig tree," saith James, "bear olive berries? or a vine, figs?"; {#Jas 3:12} that were monstrous.

And should not every man in like manner bear his own fruit, proper to his kind, to his calling? do his own work? weed his own gardens. "walk within his own house with a perfect heart," {#Ps 101:2} till God come unto him? Come he will, and look for fruit in its season. When he comes, he will turn up your leaves; and look that, like the tree of life, {#Re 22:21} we bear fruit every month: or that we be like the lemon tree, which ever and anon sendeth forth new lemons as soon as the former are fallen down with ripeness; or the Egyptian fig tree, which, saith Solinus, {b} beareth fruit seven times a year; pull off a fig, and another breaks forth in the place shortly after. Now if we be found like the barren fig tree, {#Lu 13:6-9} that had leaves only; or the cypress tree, which is said to be fair and tall, but altogether fruitless; or the cyparittree, of which Pliny {c} affirms, that it is always fruitless; {natu morosa, fructu supervacanea, baccis parva, foliis amara, odore violenta, ac ne umbra quidem gratiosa} what can we expect, but that he should set down his basket, and taking up his axe, hew us down as fuel for the fire of hell? Spain is said to have nothing barren in it, or not some way useful; {d} and why should Christ's orchard, the Church? He pares and prunes {αρει χαηαρει, #Joh 15:2} his leaves and luxuriances; yea, cuts and slashes where need requires; and all that we may bear more fruit. Sincerity alone will not comfort a man, unless it grow up to fruitfulness; which, springing from the exercise of grace, hath a sweet reflection on the soul, as in sick Hezekiah; {#Isa 38:3} and sweetly seals up our "calling to glory and virtue," {#2Pe 1:3} as the budding of Aaron's rod did his calling to the priesthood: whereupon one well observeth, that not only all the plants of God's setting, but the very boughs cut off from the body of them will flourish. Here some demand, Were the trees so created at first, that if sin had never entered, they had ever flourished, laden with fruit? Answer is made by a worthy divine, {e} that the allusion {#Re 22:2} seems to intimate some such matter. And perhaps Christ would else never have cursed the fruitless fig tree, since the time of figs was not yet come. {#Mr 11:13}

Ver. 14,15. Let there be light.] The sun, moon, and stars, are, as it were, certain vessels, whereinto the Lord did gather the light, which before was scattered in the heavens. The sun, that prince of planets, but servant to the saints of the Most High, as his name imports, {a} cometh "out of his chamber as a bridegroom, and rejoiceth as a strong man to run a race"; {#Ps 119:5} this he doth with such a wonderful swiftness, as exceedeth the eagle's flight, more than it goeth beyond the slow motion of a snail: and with such incomparable "sweetness," {#Ec 11:7} that Eudoxus, the philosopher, professed that he would be willing to be burnt up by the sun presently, so he might be admitted to come so near it as to learn the nature of it. { In aeternum atri et tetri sunt et habentor, qui non tam cute quam corde Aethiopici, Solem quo magis luceat, eo magis execrentur! } { b} Chrysostom {c} cannot but wonder, that whereas all fire tends upwards, the sun should shoot down his rays to the earth, and send his light abroad all beneath him. This is the Lord's own work, and it ought to be marvellous in our eyes. {#De 4:19} It illuminates and beautifies all the orbs and heavenly bodies about it; yea, it strikes through the firmament, in the transparent parts, and seeks to bestow his beauty and brightness even beyond the heavens. It illightens even the opposite part of heaven (gliding by the sides of the earth) with all those glorious stars we see shining in the night. {d} Yea, it insinuates in every chink and cranny of the earth, and concurs to the making of those precious metals which lie in her bowels, besides those "precious fruits brought forth by the sun, and the precious things thrust forth by the moon." {#De 33:14} For as the sun by warmth, so the moon by moisture, maketh the earth fruitful: whence also she hath her name in the Hebrew, יָרֵאֵךְ, Jareach, from refreshing the earth with her cool influences. She is here called a "light," and a "great light": therefore she hath some light of her own, as the stars also have, besides what she borroweth of the sun; though not strong enough to rule the night without light from the sun. Galileo used perspectives to descry mountains in the moon; and some will needs place hell in the hollow of it. It is easy to discern that her body is not all alike lightsome, some parts being thicker and some thinner than others, and that the light of the sun falling on her is not alike diffused through her. It is sufficient that the Church looketh forth, at first, as the morning or day-dawning; she shall be "fair as the moon" at least in regard of sanctification, and (for justification) "clear as the sun," and therefore to the devil and his angels "terrible as an army with banners." {#So 6:10} Clouded she may be, or eclipsed, but not utterly darkened, or denied of light. Astronomers {e} tell us, that she hath at all times as much light as in the full; but oftentimes a great part of the bright side is turned to heaven, and a lesser part to the earth. God seems therefore to have set it lowest in the heavens, and nearest the earth, that it might daily put as in mind of the constancy of the one and the inconstancy of the other; herself in some sort partaking of both, though in a different manner; of the one in her substance, of the other in her visage.

Ver. 16,17. He made also the stars.] To be receptacles of that first light, whence they are called "stars of light," {#Ps 148:3} and to work upon inferior bodies, which they do by their motion, light, and influence, { efficiendo imbres, ventos, grandines, procellas, sudum, &c., } by causing foul or fair weather, as God appoints it. Stars are the storehouses of God's good treasure, which he openeth to our profit. {#De 28:12} By their influence they make a scatter of riches upon the earth, which good men gather, and muckworms scramble for. Every star is like a purse of gold, out of which God throws down riches and plenteousness into the earth. "The heavens" also are "garnished" by them; {#Job 26:13} they are, as it were, the spangled curtain of the bridegroom's chamber, the glorious and glittering rough-cast of his heavenly palace, the utmost court of it, at least, from the which they twinkle to us, and teach us to remember our and their Creator, who in them makes himself visible, nay "palpable" {ψηλοφασειαν, #Ac 17:27} His wisdom, power, justice, and goodness are lined out unto us in the brows of the firmament; the countenance whereof we are bound to mark, and to discern the face of the heavens, which therefore are somewhere compared to a scroll that is written. "The heavens," those catholic preachers, "declare the glory of God," &c.; "their line," saith David; {#Ps 19:1; קִלְבִּי, #Hab 3:3} "their voice," saith Paul, citing the same text {φωνησας, #Ro 10:18} is gone out throughout all the earth; they are real postils of his divinity. this school are we now put back, as idle truants to their A B C. Only let us not, as children, look most on the babies on the backside of our books; gaze not, as they do, on the gilded leaves and covers, never looking to our lessons; but as travellers in a foreign country, observe and make use of everything, not content with the natural use of the creature, as brute beasts, but mark how every creature reads us a divinity lecture, from the highest angel to the lowest worm.

Ver. 21. And God created great whales.] In creating whereof, {creavit Deus vastitates et stupores.} For, as Pliny {a} writes of them, when they swim and show themselves above water, they seem to be so many islands, an nare insulas putes and have been so esteemed by seafaring men, to their great danger and disadvantage. Into the rivers of Arabia, saith Pliny, {b} there have come whales 600 feet long, and 360 feet broad. This is "that leviathan" that plays in the sea, besides other "creeping" or moving "things innumerable". {#Ps 104:25} This one word of God's mouth, Fiat, hath made such infinite numbers of fishes, that their names may fill a dictionary. Philosophers tell us that whatsoever creature is upon the earth, there is the like thereof in the sea, yea, many that are nowhere else to be found; but with this difference, that those things that on the earth are hurtful, the like thereunto in the waters are hurtless, as eels, those water snakes, are without poison, &c., yea, they are wholesome and delicious food. Piscis comes of paseo; and in Hebrew the same word הכרב signifieth a pond or fishpool, and blessing. Many islands are maintained, and people fed by fish, besides the wealth of the sea. The ill-favoured oyster hath sometimes a bright pearl in it. In allusion whereunto "we have our treasure," that pearl of price, the gospel, saith Paul, οστραξινοις σξξουασιν, "in oyster-shells". {#2Co 4:7} And albeit now "every creature of God is good," and "to be received with thanksgiving of them which believe"; {#1Ti 4:3,4} yet under the Law, those fish only were reputed clean that had fins and scales. {#De 14:9} So saith St. Bernard, {c} are those only clean in the sight of God, that have the scales of patience, and fins of cheerfulness. {qui squamas et loricas habent patientiae, et pinnulas hilaritatis}

And every winged fowl.] Birds were made of all Sour elements, yet have more of the earth. {#Ge 2:19} And therefore that they are so light, and do so delight in the air, it is so much the more marvellous. They sing not at all till they have taken up a stand to their mind; nor shall we praise God till content with our estate. They use not to sing when they are on the ground, but when got into the air, or on the tops of trees. Nor can we praise God aright, unless weanedly affected to the world. It was a good speech of heathen Epictetus, {d} {Si luscinia essem, facerem quod luscinia. Cure autem homo rationalis sim, quid faciam? Laudabo Deum, nec cessabo unquam; vos vero, ut idem faciatis, hortor.} But concerning the creation of birds, there is in Macrobius {e} a large dispute and disquisition, whether were first, the egg or the bird? And here reason cannot resolve it, since neither can the egg be produced without the bird, nor yet the bird without the egg. But now both Scripture and nature determine it, that all things were at first produced in their essential perfection.

Ver. 22. Be fruitful and multiply.] By bidding them do so, he made them do so, for his words are operative. Trismegist saith the self-same things in effect that Moses here doth. God, saith he, crieth out to his works by his holy word, saying, "Bring ye forth fruit, grow and increase," &c. Note the harmony here, and in twenty more passages, between Mercury and Moses. {a} God hath not left his truth without witness from the mouths of heathen writers. We may profitably read them, but not for ostentation. That were to make a calf of the treasure gotten out of Egypt.

Ver. 24, 25. Let the earth, & c.] Lo here the earth, in itself a dead element, brings forth, at God's command, living creatures, tame, wild, and creeping. "Why then should it be thought a thing incredible," that the same earth, at God's command, should bring forth again our dead bodies restored to life, at the last day? {#Ac 26:8} Surely if that speech of Christ, "Lazarus, Come forth," {#Joh 11:43} had been directed to all the dead, they had all presently risen. If he speak to the rocks, they rend; if to the mountains, they melt; if to the earth, it opens; if to the sea, it yields up her dead; if to the whole host of heaven, they tremble and stand amazed, waiting his pleasure. And shall he not prevail by his mighty power, the same that he put forth in the raising of his Son Christ, {#Eph 1:19} to raise us from the death of sin; and of carnal, to make us a people created again? {#Ps 102:18} Doth he not "plant the heavens, and lay the foundations of the earth, that he may say to Zion, Thou art my people?" {#Isa 51:16} "Empty man would be wise," saith Zophar, {#Job 11:12} "though man be born like a wild ass-colt." Man's heart is a mere emptiness, a very Tohu vabohu, as void of matter to make him a new creature of, as the hollow of a tree is of heart of oak. God, therefore, creates in his people clean hearts. {#Ps 51:10} And, as in the first creation, {a} so in the new creature, the first day, as it were, God works light of knowledge; the second day, the firmament of faith; the third day seas and trees, that is, repentant tears, and worthy fruits; the fourth day, the sun, joining light and heat together, heat of zeal with light of knowledge; the fifth day, fishes to play, and fowls to fly, so to live and rejoice in a sea of troubles, and fly heavenward by prayer and contemplation; the sixth day God makes beasts and man, yea, of a wild ass-colt, a man in Christ, with whom "old things are past, all things are become new," {#2Co 5:17} and to whom, besides that they are all taught of God {#θεοδιδασκτοι, #1Th 4:9} the very beasts {#Isa 1:2} and birds {#Jer 8:7} do read a divinity lecture. "Ask now the beasts, and they shall teach thee, and the fowls of the air, they shall tell thee". {#Job 12:7} The whole world is nothing else, saith one, but {b} "God expressed," so that we cannot plead ignorance; for all are, or may be, book-learned in the creature. This is the shepherd's calendar, the ploughman's alphabet; we may run and read in this great book, which hath three leaves—heaven, earth, sea. "A brutish man knoweth not, neither doth a fool understand this". {#Ps 92:6} They stand gazing and gaping on the outside of things only, but ask not who is their Father, their Creator; like little children, which when they find a picture in their book, they gaze and make sport with it, but never consider it. Either their minds are like a clock that is over-wound above the ordinary pitch, and so stands still; their thoughts are amazed for a time; they are like a block, thinking nothing at all, or else they think, atheistically, that all comes by nature; but "hast thou not known?" saith the prophet, "hast thou not heard, that the everlasting God, the Lord, the Creator?" &c. {#Isa 40:28} Or, at best, as the common passenger looks only at the hand of the dial to see what of the clock it is, but takes no notice of the clockwork within, the wheels and poises and various turnings and windings in the work; so it is here with the man that is no more than a mere "natural." "But he that is spiritual discerneth all things"; {#2Co 2:15} he entereth into the clock-house, as it were, and views every motion, beginning at the great wheel, and ending in the least and last that is moved. He studies the glory of God revealed in this great book of nature, and praiseth his power, wisdom, goodness, &c. And for that in these things "he cannot order his speech, because of darkness," {#Job 37:19} he begs of God a larger heart, and better language, and cries out continually with David, "Blessed be the Lord God, the God of Israel, who only doeth wondrous things. And blessed be his glorious name for ever and ever: and let the whole earth be filled with his glory. Amen and Amen". {#Ps 72:18,19}

Ver. 25. And all creeping things of the earth.] God assigns the parts of the people as of the gnat, saith an ancient. {Disponit Deus membra publicis et culicis.} And the wisdom of men and angels, saith a modern writer, cannot mend the least thing in a fly. The figure, colour, quality, quantity of every worm, and every flower, with what exactness is it ordered! as if God nod nothing else to do, but to bring forth such a creature into the world, as the product of his infinite wisdom. The devil, with all his skill, could not create a louse. {#Ex 8:18} Myrmecides spent more time to make an artificial bee, than some do to build a house. Pliny {a} makes mention of one who had spent sixty-eight years in searching out the nature of the bee, and yet had not fully found it out. God is the greatest in the smallest matters. {Deus est maximus in minimis.} Holy Mr Dod, being at Holmeby, and invited by an honourable person to see that once stately house, desired to be excused, and to sit still, looking on a flower which he had in his hand. "In this flower," saith he, "I can see more of God than in all the beautiful buildings in the world." {b}

Ver. 26. And God said, Let us make man.] Man is the masterpiece of God's handiwork. Sun, moon, and stars are but "the work of his fingers," {#Ps 8:3} but man the work of his hands. He is made of divine nature, {cura divini ingenii} made by counsel at first, "Let us make," &c.; and his body, which is but the soul's sheath {a} {#Da 7:15} is still

"curiously wrought in the lower parts of the earth," that is, in the womb; {comp. #Ps 139:15 Eph 4:9} as curious workmen, when they have some choice piece in hand, they perfect it in private, and then bring it forth to light for men to gaze at. "Thine hands have made me" (or took special pains about me), "and fashioned me," saith Job. {#Job 19:8} "Thou hast formed me by the book," saith David, {#Ps 139:16} yea, embroidered me with nerves, veins, and variety of limbs, {#Ps 139:15} miracles enough, saith one, beteen head and foot, to fill a volume. There are six hundred muscles, saith another out of Galen, in the body of man; and every one fitted for ten uses: so for bones, nerves, arteries, and veins, whosoever observeth their use, situation, and correspondency of them, cannot but fall into admiration of the wisdom of the Maker; who hath thus exactly framed all things at first out of nothing; and still out of the froth of the blood. Man, saith a heathen, is the bold attempt of daring nature; {b} the fair workmanship of a wise artificer, {c} {d} saith another; the greatest of all miracles, {e} saith a third. And surely should a man be born into the world but once in a hundred years, all the world would run to see the wonder. {Sed miracula assiduitate vilescent.} Galen, {f} that profane man, was forced, upon the description of man and the parts of his body only, to sing a hymn to the Creator, whom yet he knew not. I make here, saith he, a true hymn in the honour of our Maker; whose service, I believe verily, consisteth not in the sacrificing of hecatombs, or in burning great heaps of frankincense before him, but in acknowledging the greatness of his wisdom, power, and goodness; and in making the same known to others, &c. And, in another place, Who is he, saith Galen, which, looking but only upon the skin of a thing, wondereth not at the cunning of the Creator? Yet, notwithstanding, he dissembleth not that he had tried by all means to find some reason of the composing of living creatures; and that he would rather have fathered the doing thereof upon nature, than upon the very Author of nature. And in the end, {g} concludeth thus: I confess that I know not what the soul is, though I have sought very narrowly for it. Favorinus the philosopher was wont to say, The greatest thing in this world is man, and the greatest thing in man is his soul. {h} It is an abridgment of the invisible world, as the body is of the visible. Hence, man is called by the Hebrews, Gnolam hakkaton, and by the Greeks, microcosmus, a little world. And it was a witty essay of him, {i} who styled woman the second edition of the epitome of the whole world. The soul is set in the body of them both, as a little god in this little world, as Jehovah is a great God in the great world. Whence Proclus the philosopher could say, that the mind that is in us is an image of the first mind, that is, of God.

In our image, after our likeness,] that is, as like us as may be, to come as near us as is possible; for these two expressions signify but one and the same thing; and, therefore, {#Ge 1:27 5:1 9:6} one of them only is used: howbeit, Basil refers image to the reasonable soul in man, similitude to a conformity to God in holy actions. Some of the fathers had a conceit that Christ made man's body with his own hands according to the form and likeness of that body which himself would afterwards assume and suffer in. We deny not that man's body also is God's image, as it is a little world; and so the idea or example of the world, that was in God from all eternity, is, as it were, briefly and summarily expressed by God in man's body. But far be it from us to conceive of God as a bodily substance, to think him like unto us, as we are very apt to do. God made man in his own image; and men, of the other side, quasi ad hostimentum, would make God after their image. {l} It was seriously disputed by the monks of Egypt, A.D. 493, {k} and much ado there was about it, whether God were not a bodily substance, having hands, eyes, ears, and other parts, as we have. For so the simpler sort among them were clearly of opinion. And in the second Council of Nice under Irene, {l} John, one of the legates of the Eastern Churches, proved {m} the making of images lawful, because God had said in this text, "Let us make man after our own image." And it was there decreed that they should be revered and adored in as ample and pious manner as the glorious Trinity. But "God is a Spirit," {#Joh 4:24} saith our Saviour, who best knew, for he came out of his Father's bosom. And man's soul is a spirit likewise, invisible, immaterial, immortal, distinguished into three powers, which all make up one spirit. Spirit signifies breath; {n} which, indeed, is a body. But because it is the finest body, the most subtile and most invisible, therefore immaterial substances, which we are not able to conceive, are represented unto us under this name. Such is the soul of man, which, for the worth of it, the Stoics called the whole of man. {o} The body is but the sheath of the soul, said Daniel; the shell of it, said Zoroastes; the servant, {p} yea, the sepulchre {q} of it, say others. Compared to the soul, it is but as a clay wall that encompasseth a treasure; as a wooden box of a jeweller; as a coarse case to a rich instrument; or as a mask to a beautiful face. He that alone knew, and went to the worth of souls, hath told us, that a soul is more worth than all the world besides, because infused by God, and stamped with, his image and superscription. Now, if we must give to Caesar the things that are Caesar's, και τα του θεου τω θεω, three articles, for one in the former clause; {#Mt 22:21} Gaspar Ens says—why give we not our souls to God, since they are made in his image? {Cur non etnos animam nostram, Dei imaginem, soli Deo consignemus?}

Why "present we not our bodies" also to God, "a living sacrifice," since {#Ro 12:1} it is so curiously wrought, so neatly made up? Luther, upon the Fourth Commandment, tells of two cardinals, in the time of the Council of Constance, who, riding thither, saw a shepherd weeping bitterly; they pressed him to tell the cause. He said, "I, looking upon this toad, considered that I never praised God as I ought, for making me a comely and reasonable creature, and not a toad." {See Trapp on "Ge 1:28"}

Ver. 27. So God created man in his own image.] There is a double image of God in the soul. One in the substance of it, whereof I have spoken in the former verse. The other in the qualities and supernatural graces, of knowledge in the understanding, rightness or straitness in the will, and holiness in the affections. In all these, man, when he came first out of God's mint, shone most gloriously. {O! quantum haec Niobe, &c.} But now, Oh, think of this burnt temple, and mourn, as they in Ezra {#Ezr 3:12} {Ebur candidissimum, adhibito igne, nigrescit.}

Ver. 28. Subdue the earth, and have dominion.] Make it habitable by driving out the wild beasts that infest and annoy it. Make it arable also, and useful to yourselves and yours. The creatures are man's servants and household stuff. "God hath put all things under his feet," {#Ps 8} that he may raise himself thereby to God his maker. {a} A wise philosopher could say, that man is the end of all things in a semicircle; that is, all things in the world are made for him, and he is made for God; to know and acknowledge him, to serve and express him, to say to him as David, and that Son of David, Lord, "a body (a soul) hast thou given me; behold I come to do thy will, O God" {#Heb 10:5 Ps 40:6} The very Manichees, that denied God to be the author of the body, fasted on Sundays, and in fasting, exercised a humiliation of the body. The Paternians are not worth speaking of, who held this heresy {b} in the year of Christ 387, that the lower parts of man's body were not made by God, but by the devil; and therefore allowing liberty of all wickedness to those parts, they lived most impurely. But if superstitious persons must reckon for it, that punish their bodies {#Col 2:22} without commandment from God, where shall those beasts appear that defile their bodies, and damn their soul? How shall all the creatures, instead of serving them, take up arms for God, and serve against them, yea, rise up in judgment and condemn them, for that when all other things keep their fit and proper places in the frame, and observe their peculiar ends and uses whereunto they were created, men only, as so many Heteroclitites and Irregulars, should prove unprofitable, unuseful, nay, hurtful to the whole frame, causing vanity and misery to the poor creature which groans under it, and so defiling the very visible heavens, that they must be purged by the last fire, as those vessels were in the law that held the sin-offering! As for those that are in Christ, they are restored to the privileges of their first creation, as fellowship with God, dominion over the creatures, &c. {#Ro 8}, as appears by comparing #Ps 8:6 Heb

2:6,7, &c., where whatever is spoken of man is applied to Christ, and so is proper to the Church, which is Christ mystical, union being the ground of communion. Christ is married to his people in faithfulness, and as part of a jointure, he hath taken and bound over the best of the creatures to serve them, and bring them in provision {#Ho 2:20-22}

Ver. 29. Behold, I have given you.] By this "behold," God stirs up them and us to confidence, thankfulness, {#Ps 16} and obedience to so liberal a Lord, so bountiful a benefactor. And surely as iron put into the fire seems to be nothing but fire, so Adam, thus beloved of God, was turned into a lump of love, and bethinks himself what to do by way of retribution. All other creatures also willingly submitted to God's ordinance and man's service, well apaid of God's provision, that great housekeeper of the world, that hath continually so many millions at bed and board. This is intimated in that last clause.

Ver. 30. And it was so.] Both man and beast were well paid of God's appointment, as good cause they had; for he is no penny father, but openeth his hand, and filleth with his blessing every thing living. {#Ps 145:16} "And it was so"; an undoubted argument surely of God's infinite goodness, thus to have provided for so divers natures and appetites, divers food, remedies, and armour; {#Ps 104} for men, especially, "filling their hearts with food and gladness" {#Ac 14:17}

Ver. 31. Behold it was very good.] Or, extreme good, pleasant and profitable, a curious and glorious frame, full of admirable variety and skill, such as caused delight and complacency in God, and commands contemplation and admiration from us, like as a great garden, stored with fruits and flowers, calls our eyes on every side. Wherefore else hath God given us a reasonable soul, and a Sabbath day, and a countenance bent upward, and, as they say, {a} peculiar nerves in the eyes, to pull them up toward the seat of their rest? Besides a nature carried with delight after plays, pageants, masks, strange shows, and rare sights, which oft are sinful or vain, or, at best, imperfect and unsatisfactory? Surely those that "regard not the works of the Lord, nor the operation of his hands, God shall destroy, and not build them up"; {#Ps 28:5} which to prevent, good is the counsel of the prophet Amos; and that upon this very ground,

"Prepare to meet thy God, O Israel: for lo, he that formeth the mountains, and createth the wind," &c. {#Am 4:12,13} When he had made man, he made an end of making anything more, because he meant to rest in man, to delight in him, to communicate himself unto him, and to be enjoyed by him throughout all eternity. And notwithstanding the fall, he hath "found a ransom," {#Job 33:24} and "creating us in Christ Jesus unto good works," {#Eph 2:10} he "rejoiceth over" his new workmanship "with joy"; yea, he "rests in his love," and wilt seek no further {#Zep 3:17} But what a mouth of madness did Alfonso {b} the Wise open, when he said openly, that if he had been of God's counsel at the creation, some things should have been better made and marshalled! Prodigious blasphemy!

Ver. 4. Jehovah God.] Moses first calls God JEHOVAH here, when the universal creation had its absolute being. This is the proper name of God. The Jews pronounce it not; we profane it, which is to them a great stumbling block. The first among the Christians that pronounced Jehovah was Petrus Galatinus. But if ye would pronounce it according to the own letters, it should be Jahua, as Jarmuth, Jagnakob. This essential and incommunicable name of God, is by the more ancient better minded Hebrews called Hashem, "the name," by an excellency; and Shem hamphorash, "the expounded name," because it might be expounded by a name of twelve letters, which is this, say they, Ab, Ben veruach hakkodesh, that is, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. They call it also Tetragrammaton, or the name consisting of four letters. In reference whereunto, likely, the Pythagoreans used to swear by τετραρακτη, quaternity, or the number of four; which they also called "the fountain of everlasting nature," παγαν αεναου φουσεως.

Ver. 5. The Lord hath caused it to rain.] And none but he can give rain, {#Jer 14:22} the means of fruitfulness, which yet he is not tied to as here. The Egyptians used in mockery to tell the Grecians, that if God should forget to rain, they might chance to starve for it.

Ver. 6. But there went up a mist.] The matter of rain: and hereby God tempered the mortar whereof he would make man, as he did the clay with spittle, wherewith he cured the blind. {#Joh 9:6}

Ver. 7. Formed man of the dust.] Not of the rocks of the earth, but dust, that is soon dispersed, to note our frailty, vility, and impurity. {Lutum enim conspurcat omnia, sic et caro.} {a} But why should so glorious a soul (called here Neshamah, of affinity to Shamajim, heaven, whence it came) dwell in this corruptible and contemptible body? For answer, besides God's will, and for order of the universe, Lombard saith, {b} that by the conjunction of the soul with the body, so far its inferior, man might learn and believe a possibility of the union of man with God in glory, notwithstanding the vast distance of nature, and excellence; the infiniteness of both in God, the finiteness of both in man.

And breathed into his nostrils.] The greatest man is but a little air and dust tempered together. {Quidam volunt metaphoram sumptam a vitrorum formatione.} What is man, saith one, {c} but Νους και χους, soul and soil, breath and body, a pile of dust the one, a puff of wind the other, no solidity in either? Man is nothing else but the son of the earth, the nephew of nothing, {terrae filius, nihili nepos} saith Augustine; or a piece of clay neatly made up, {d} as Arian upon Epictetus hath it.

And man became a living soul.] Dicaearchus doubted of the soul, whether there was such a thing in natural events. {rerum natural} {e} He could not have doubted of it without it; as man cannot prove logic to be unnecessary, but by logic.

And the Lord God planted.] Had planted (to wit, on the third day, when he made trees) for man's pleasure, a garden or paradise in Eden, whence ηδωνη, in the upper part of Chaldea, whereabout Babel was founded. It was destroyed by the deluge; the place indeed remained, but not so the pleasantness of the place, the rose fell and remained thorny. {cecidit rosa, mansit spina} And yet that country is still very fruitful, returning, if Herodotus and Pliny {a} may be believed, the seed beyond credulity.

He put the man whom he had formed.] And formed him not far from the garden, say the Hebrews; to mind him that he was not here to set up his rest, but to "wait till his change should come."

The tree of knowledge of good and evil.] So called, not because itself either knew, or could cause man to know; but from the event; God forewarning our first parents, that they should know by woeful experience, unless they abstained, what was the worth of good, by the want of it; and what the presence of evil, by the sense of it. In like sort the waters of Meribah, and Kibroth Hattaavah, or the graves of lust, received their names from that which happened in those places.

Ver. 10. And a river went out.] Pliny writeth, ^{a} that in the province of Babylon there is burning and smothering a certain lake or bog, about the size of an acre. And who knows, whether that be not a piece of Paradise now drowned and destroyed?

Ver. 11. Where there is gold.] Which, though never so much admired and studiously acquired, is but the guts and garbage of the earth. Gold is that which the basest element yields, the most savage Indians get, servile apprentices work, Midianitish camels carry, miserable muckworms adore, unthrifty ruffians spend. It is to be wondered that, treading upon these minerals, we cannot contemn them. They lie farthest from heaven, and the best of them in Havilah, farthest of all from the Church. Adam had them in the first paradise. In the second we shall not need them. Money is the monarch of this world, and answers all things; but in the matters of God, money bears no mastery, will fetch in no commodity ^{#Job 28:15} Wise men esteemed it as the stones of the street. ^{#2Ch 1:15} Children of wisdom might not possess it in their girdles. ^{#Mt 10:9} Medes cared not for it; ^{#Isa 13:17} and devils were sent to keep rich and pleasant palaces. ^{#Isa 13:22} So subject these metals are to ensnare and defile us, that God made a law to have them purified, ere he would have them used, ^{#Nu 31:22,23} and appointed the snuffers and snuff-dishes ^{#Ex 25:38} of the sanctuary to be made of pure gold, to teach us to make no account of what he put to so base offices, and is frequently given to so bad men. man, what is good," &c. {Ostendam tibi omne bonum} {#Mic 6:8,9} As for gold, how good soever in itself, it is to men but an imaginary good at best: for it is opinion which setteth the price upon it: brass or leather, {forma publica percussum} saith Seneca, that is, stamped for coin, may pass as well as gold; it did so some time in the Roman provinces; and here in England also, in the time of the barons' wars. Yea, gold oft proves to the possessors a real evil. {#Pr 1:19,20} It doth always so, when it gets within them, {b} as it did within the covetous Pharisees, so that they "said to the fine gold, Thou art my confidence". {as #Job 31:24} Pindar saith, it was an opinion of the people concerning Rhodes, that Jupiter rained down gold upon that city, so rich it was; yet is it now in slavery to the Turk. America is said to have as much gold ore as other earth: yet are the Americans bound by the proud Spaniard to be both popish and poor upon pain of death. Susiana, the country here called Havilah, the gold whereof is so good, had its name from Shushan or Susa, the palace of the kings of Persia, the stones whereof were joined together with gold, saith Cassiodorus: yet is it now called, in the Persian tongue, Valdac, from the poverty of the place. "Trust not," therefore, "in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy". {#1Ti 6:17}

Ver. 13. The name of the second river is Gihon.] This is the same, say some, which the Egyptians call Nile. Others make it to be a channel of the river Euphrates, called by those that dwell near it Naharsares. The hill where Solomon was anointed king, was also called Gihon.

Ver. 14. Hiddekel.] Or Tigris, which hath its name from the swiftness of the stream: Tigris in the Median tongue signifieth an arrow, saith Curtius, which flieth very swiftly. The tiger also is the swiftest of all beasts. Hiddekel signifieth sharp, swift. Contrariwise, Nile floweth gently, {Lene fluit Nilus} saith Claudian; so do the waters of Shiloah, {#Isa 8:6} creeping and crooking" slowly" and slily, called therefore, as some think, "the dragon well". {#Ne 2:13} And of the river

Araris (probably Saone) in Germany, Caesar said, {a} whether it move forward, or backward, who can tell?

Ver. 15. To dress it, and to keep it.] This he did as without necessity, so without pains, without weariness. It was rather his recreation than his occupation. He laboured now by an ordinance; it was after his fall laid upon him as a punishment, {#Ge 3:19} to eat his bread in the sweat of his nose. God never made any, as he made Leviathan, to sport himself only; or to do, as it is said of the people of Tombutum in Africa, that they spend their whole time in piping and dancing; but to "work," either "with his hands" or his head, "in the sweat of his brow," or of his brain, "the thing that is good"; {#Eph 4:28} and with how much the more cheerfulness any one goeth about his business, by so much the nearer he cometh to his paradise.

Ver. 16. Commanded the man, saying.] God hath given man dominion over all the sublunary creatures; and lest he should forget that he had a Lord whom to serve and obey, he gave him this command to keep.

Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat.] The less need he had to have been so lickerish after forbidden fruit. προθεραπειαν hic adhibet, quod misericordiae est. But stolen waters are sweet; Nitimur in vetitum, & c.

Ver. 17. But of the tree, &c.] An exploratory prohibition. God knew well where we are weakest, and worst able to withstand; viz., about moderating the pleasures of our touch and taste, because these befall us not as men, but as living creatures. {a} Here, therefore, he lays a law upon Adam for the trial of his love, which, left to his own free will, he soon transgressed.

Thou shalt surely die.] Thou shalt surely and shortly, saith Zuinglius; or suddenly, die. {Certissime citissimeque morieris} And without doubt every man should die the same day he is born: the wages of death should be paid him presently. But Christ begs their lives for a season. For which cause he is said to be "the Saviour of all men," {#1Ti 4:10} not of eternal preservation, but of temporal reservation. In which respect, also, God is said "so to have loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son," &c. {#Joh 3:16} It was a mercy to all mankind that the Messiah was promised and provided, "sealed and sent into the world," that some might be saved, and the rest sustained in life, for their sakes. Symmachus renders it, Thou shalt be mortal.

Ver. 18. And the Lord God said.] Had said; to wit, on the sixth day when he made man, and there was not a meet help found for him. Then God said, "It is not good," &c., and so created the woman by deliberate counsel, as before he had done the man. Only there it was in the plural, "Let us make," here, "I will make"; to show the unity of the essence of the Trinity of persons.

It is not good for man to be alone.] It is neither for his profit, nor his comfort. {Optimum solatium sodalitiū.} The Hebrews, in their bigger Genesis, say, He who wanteth a wife, wanteth a help, a joy, a blessing, an expiation: R. Josua saith, he wants a name: R. Levi addeth, he wants life: R. Hija, the son of Gamri, saith, he is no perfect man who is unmarried: R. Iose saith, such a one is without a wall, without glory, riches, a crown, favour. {a}

I will make him a help meet for him.] Or, such another as himself, of the same form for perfection of nature, and for gifts inward and outward; one in whom he may see himself, and that may be to him as an alter-ego, a second self. {#Eph 5:28} Such a one as may be a help to him—both for this life, (1.) by continual society and cohabitation; (2.) for procreation and education of children; -and for the life to come, (1.) as a remedy against sin; {#1Co 7:2} (2.) as a companion in God's service. {#1Pe 3:7} Nazianzen {b} saith, that his mother was not only a meet help to his father in matters of piety, but also a doctress and a governess; and yet he was no baby, but an able minister of the gospel. Budaeus, that learned Frenchman, had a great help of his wife in points of learning; she would be as busy in his study as about her housewifery. Placilla, the Empress, was a singular help to her husband, Theodosius, in things both temporal and spiritual. And so was our King Edward III's Queen, a lady of excellent virtue, the same that built Queen's College in Oxford. She drew evenly, saith the historian, {c} with the king her husband in all the courses of honour that appertained to her side, and seemed a piece so just cut for him, as answered him rightly in every joint.

Ver. 19. To see what he would call them.] If he had been permitted to name himself, it should have been, probably, the son of God, as he is called by Luke, {#Lu 3:38} in regard of his creation. But God, to humble him, calls him, first, Adam, and after the fall, Enosh, that is, frail, sorry man, a mass of mortality, a mass of misery.

Ver. 20. Adam gave names.] A sign of his sovereignty; {#Nu 32:38,41} an argument also of his wisdom, in giving them names according to their natures, as Hebricians well know.

But for Adam there was not found, &c.] God set all the creatures before him, ere he gave him a wife: (1.) That, seeing the sexes, he might desire to have a help in his kind and nature also. Men should not marry till they find in themselves the need of a wife. (2.) That seeing no other fit help, he might the more prize her. {a}

{a} Ut ei commendatius esset Dei donum.—Pet. Martyr.

Ver. 21. And the Lord God caused a deep sleep.] It may be thought that Adam, observing that among all the creatures there was no meet match found for him, prayed in this deep sleep, or ecstasy, that such a help might be given unto him. This is Peter Martyr's note upon the text. Isaac went forth to pray, {#Ge 24:63, marg.} when he had sent forth for a wife; and it was but reason. "For a prudent wife is from the Lord". {#Pr 19:14} And he that "findeth a wife, findeth a good thing," {#Pr 18:22} saith the wise man. A wife, that is, a good wife; for every married woman is not a wife, unless she be a help to her husband, in the best things especially. The heathen well saith, that every man when he marrieth, brings either a good or an evil spirit into his house, and so makes it either a heaven or a hell. {a} And it is a device of the Rabbins, but the moral is good, that in the names of Ish and Ishah is included Jah, the name of God; and that, if you take out Jod and He, whereof that name consists, there remains nothing but Esch, Esch, fire, fire; the fire of dissension and brawl, which burneth and consumeth to the fire of hell. It is not evil therefore to marry, but it is good to be wary to "marry in the Lord," as the apostle hath it. He that marrieth in the Lord, marrieth also with the Lord; and he cannot be absent from his own marriage. A good wife was one of the first real and royal gifts bestowed upon Adam; and God consults not with him to make him happy. As he was ignorant while himself was made, so shall he not know while a second self is made out of him; both that the comfort might be greater than was expected, as also that he might not upbraid his wife with any great dependence or obligation; he neither willing the work nor suffering any pain to have it done. {b} The rib can challenge no more of her than the earth can of him.

And he took one of his ribs.] The woman was made of a bone, saith a reverend writer, {c} and but one bone, {ne esset ossea} lest she should be stiff and stubborn. The species of the bone is expressed to be a rib, a bone that might be best spared, because there are many of them: a bone of the side, not of the head; the wife must not usurp authority over her husband: nor yet of the foot; she is not a slave, but a fellow-helper. A bone, not of any anterior part; she is not praelata, preferred before the man: neither yet of any hinder part; she is not post-posita, set behind the man: but a bone of the side, of the middle and indifferent part, to show that she is a companion, and "the wife of thy covenant". {#Mal 2:14} A bone she is from under the arm, to put man in mind of protection and defence to the woman. A bone not far from his heart, to put him in mind of dilection and love to the woman. A bone from the left side, as many think likely, {d} where the heart is, to teach that hearty love ought to be betwixt married couples.

Uxorem vir amato,

A man will love his wife,

The husband is that heart of her,
That husband is the head of her.

Ver. 22. And the rib which the Lord God had taken.] Matter, in the beginning of time, was taken from man to make a woman. And matter, in the fulness of time, was taken from a woman to make a man, even "the man Christ Jesus". {#ITi 2:5} And as out of the side of sleeping Adam Eve was formed; so, from the blood issuing out of the side and flesh of dying Christ, came his spouse the Church. His chief care therein was to "sanctify and cleanse" {#Eph 5:26} his Church, and therefore he "came by water and blood". {#IJo 5:6} So should it be every husband's; then would not the devil so oft break his head with his own rib; or, as St Gregory hath it, climb so oft by his rib to his heart, as by a ladder. {a} A good wife doth him good, and not evil, all her days. But this is not every man's happiness. Lucky Sulla, if he should not have had a wife. {Sulla faellx, si non habuisset uxorem!} So Job and Moses, for whom marriage caused problems. {quorum conjugium, conjurgium} There is in most a propension to the nuptial conjunction. The man misseth his rib, say the Rabbins; {b} the woman would be in her old place again, under the man's arm or wing. "Then Naomi her mother-in-law said unto her, My daughter, shall I not seek rest for thee, that it may be well with thee?" {#Ru 3:1}

Made he a woman.] Heb., builded, that is, created with special care, art, and fit proportion, in the manner of a house. A body hath God given the woman more capacious and roomy, both for the conceiving and containing of her young babe, which dwells in her womb, as in its house, and hath all its household stuff, as it were, about it, till time produce it into the light of life. Adam was formed, Eve built; her frame consists of rarer rooms, of a more exact composition than his doth. And if place be any privilege, we find, saith one, hers built in Paradise, when his was made out of it.

And brought her unto the man.] Marriage, then, is of Divine institution. The Saturnalian heretics sinfully said, that it was of the devil. And the blemish will never be wiped off from some of the ancients, who, to establish their own idol, of, I know not what virginity, have written most wickedly and basely against marriage. Three things we have here out of Moses to say for it against whatsoever opposite—viz., God's (1.) Spoke; (2.) Led; (3.) Blessed. {#Ge 1:28} {Dixit, Duxit, Benedixit} God the Father ordained it; God the Son honoured it with His first miracle; God the Holy Ghost did the like, by overshadowing the betrothed Virgin. Papists and others that disgrace it appear herein more like devils than divines, if Paul may be judge; {#1Ti 4:2,3} or Ignatius, who saith, If any call marriage a defilement, he hath the devil dwelling in him, and speaking by him.

Ver. 23. This is now bone of my bone.] This sentence, saith Tertullian, and, after him, Beda, is the first prophecy that was ever uttered in the world. And it is uttered in a way of admiration, which they that are taken with, do commonly use a concise kind of speech; especially if overjoyed, as Adam here was upon the first sight of the woman; whom he no sooner saw but knew, and thereupon cried out as wondering at God's goodness to himself, "This now is bone of my bone and flesh of my flesh." Luther, the night before he died, was reasonably well, and sat with his friends at table. The matter of their discourse was, whether they should know one another in heaven, or not. Luther held it affirmatively, and this was one reason he gave: Adam as soon as he saw Eve, knew what she was, not by discourse, but by divine revelation; so shall we in the life to come. All the saints shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, having communion with them, not only as godly men, but as Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. And if with them, why not with others? {a} Chrysostom {b} saith, we shall point them out, and say, Lo, yonder is Peter, and that's Paul, and there are the prophets, apostles, &c.

She shall be called woman.] Or maness, of man; as Ishah of Ish. He gave her her name from his own, by taking away one numeral letter that stands for ten, and adding another that stands for five; to note her infirmity, and duty of submitting to her husband, whose very naming of her notes her subjection.

Ver. 24. Therefore shall a man leave, &c.] Whether these are the words of God, Adam, or Moses, it is uncertain, and not much material. {a} The husband is bound more to love his wife than his parents, in regard of domestical communion, adhesion, and cohabitation, not in regard of honour, obedience, and recompense.

And they two shall be one flesh.] Two in one flesh; not three or four, as the patriarchs of old, through ignorance, or inobservance of that plain prohibition. {#Le 18:18} It is possible they might mistake the word sister for one so by blood, which was spoken of a sister by nation, as those clauses, "to vex her," and "during her life," do evince.

Ver. 25. They were both naked, and not ashamed.] Neither needed they. Sin and shame, as Papists say, hops and heresy, came in together. Clothes are the ensigns of our sin, and covers of our shame; to be proud of them is as great folly as for a beggar to be proud of his rags, or a thief of his halter. As the prisoner, looking on his irons, thinketh on his theft; so we, looking on our garments, should think on our sins.

Chapter 3

Ver. 1. Now the serpent was more subtle, &c.] And so a more fit instrument of that old serpent the devil, that deceiveth all the world. {#Re 12:9} {a} Good natural parts abused, prove rather as pressmoney to impiety, {b} as he phraseth it, and their wisdom was the crime counselor, {culpa suasoria} as Ambrose speaketh. Wit unsanctified is a fit tool for the devil to work with. Neither is there a likelier anvil in all the shop of hell, whereon to forge mischief, than one that is learned and lewd, wittily wicked. {ingeniose nequam}

And he said,] that is, the devil in the serpent, as the angel in Balaam's ass. {Satan istius prima fabulae poeta fuit, serpens histrio.} By the ear he brought death into the world; and God, to cross him, brings life in by the same door; for it is, "Hear, and your souls shall live". {#Isa 55:3} The dragon bites the elephant's ear, and thence sucks his blood; because he knows that to be the only place which he cannot reach with his trunk to defend. {c} So here, that great red dragon dealt with miserable mankind, setting first upon the woman as the weaker vessel—where the hedge is lowest, there the beast leaps over—and so climbing by Adam's rib to his heart, as by a ladder, as I said before, out of St Gregory.

Yea, hath God said?] In the Chaldee, Is it true that God hath said? A concise expression, implying that this was not the first of their discourse; something had been said before. {d} It is not safe parleying with the devil. {Satan et si semel videatur verax, millies est mendax et semper fallax.} Halter him up therefore, and stop his mouth {e} soon, as our Saviour did. Or do as the French say in their proverb, When the Spaniard comes to parley of peace, then double bolt the door. The Hollanders are said to make no conditions with the Spaniard, but such as are made at sea, and scaled with great ordinance, &c. {f} He shoots with Satan in his own bow that thinks by parleying with him to put him off.

Hath God said, Ye shall not eat?] Here he began his assault upon our first parents; here, upon Christ, {#Mt 4:3,3:17} and here he doth still upon us; endeavouring to elevate {g} the truth and certainty of God's word, and to weaken our faith in his precepts, promises, and menaces. And here, if he take us out of our trenches, if he can but wring this sword of the Spirit out of our hands he may do what he will with us. Get but the heretics, said that subtle sophister, out of the paper walls of the Scriptures, into the open fields of fathers and councils, and ye shall soon do well enough with them. {h}

Ver. 2. And the woman said unto the serpent.] Our first parents were not, in the state of innocency, silly and witless, like young children, as Socinians make them; but very knowing, though but of small experience. But if they fell the same day {a} wherein they were created, as most hold, how sudden was the serpent's seducing, the woman's consenting, Adam's yielding, and God's executing!

{a} ημερα επλασθη και εξηλασθη

Ver. 3. Neither shall ye touch it.] This is of the woman's own addition, and of a good intention doubtless. For afterwards, when she had drunk in more of the serpent's deadly poison, from gazing upon the fruit, she fell to gaping after it, from touching to tasting. {a} He that would not feed on sin's meat, must beware of the broth; "keep thee from an evil matter," saith Moses. {#Ex 23:7} A good man dare not come near the treachery, though he be far off the blow; he dare not venture on the occasion, lest his tinder should take fire. It is ill playing upon the hole of the asp, or coming too near hell-mouth; {b} for by so doing, you may beseem to drop in. "Watch therefore, and pray" too, "that ye enter not into temptation," saith our blessed Saviour; and mark his reason, "the spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak": q.d., though the spirit purpose otherwise, the flesh will falter, and be foiled: witness the woman here with her "lest ye die." She held the precept in the utmost extent of it, but that which she failed in, was that she minced the matter, and opposed not the commination to the temptation. And see how the devil works upon her weakness, as he watcheth for our haltings, and where to have us on the hip.

Ver. 4. Ye shall not surely die.] He saith not, Dying ye shall not die, or, Surely ye shall not die; this had been too plain a contradiction to that word of God that had threatened assured death; but, Ye shall not die in dying; that is, It is not certain ye shall die. And this latter is more nice and ambiguous. She seems to doubt of the certainty of what God had said. He plainly and cleanly impugns it: whereas had God's word abidden in her, she had overcome that wicked one. {#1Jo

2:14} The word is compared to mustard seed, which being mixed with vinegar, is, they say, a sovereign medicine against serpents.

Ver. 5. For God doth know, &c.] It should take care of itself because nothing is hidden with God. {Id quod cum Deum non lateat, sibi cavet.} {a} It is remarkable that the devil here charges God with envy, which is his own proper disease; for ever since he himself fell from heaven, he cannot abide that any should come there; but of pure spite hindereth them all that may be. Here he envied that God should be served by man, and that man should be gifted and graced by God. So that he points out, and paints out himself, in saying that God envied man the gift of wisdom. There is nothing more usual with the wicked, than to muse as they use, and to suppose that evil to be in others that they find to be in themselves. Caligula, {b} that impure beast, would not believe there was any chaste person upon earth. And, I dare say, said Bonner to Hawks, the martyr, that Cranmer would recant, if he might have his living—so, judging others by himself, for Papists apply themselves, said our protomartyr, Mr Rogers, to the present state; yea, if the state should change ten times in the year, they would ever be ready at hand to change with it, and so follow the cry, and rather utterly forsake God, and be of no religion, than that they would forego lust, or living, for God or religion. {c}

Then your eyes shall be opened.] There is an opening of the eyes of the mind to contemplation and joy. There is also an opening of the eyes of the body to confusion and shame. He promised them the former, but intends the latter, and so cheats them, as he doth thousands now-a-days, by the cogging of a die, as St Paul hath it {εἰς τὴν κωβεία, #Eph 4:14} giving them an apple in exchange for paradise. Thus of old he cheated Ahab and Croesus {d} with promises of victory; which, when it fell out otherwise, he had a hole to creep out, and save his credit by an equivocation. Thus of latter time he begiled Pope Sylvester II., assuring him that he should never die, till he came to say mass in Jerusalem; he, resolving never to come there, made no reckoning but to live a long time. But it fell out somewhat otherwise; for as he was saying mass in a certain church in Rome, called Jerusalem, fearing nothing, the devil claimed his due, and had it. For he was there and then taken with a strong fever, and lying on his deathbed, he sent for all his cardinals, and declaring before them what a wretched bargain he had made with the devil, selling his soul for the popedom, and deceived by him with promise of long life, he bitterly bewailed his own folly, and advised them to beware by his example. {e} And was not Leoline II., Prince of North Wales, as finely cheated? For, consulting with a witch, he was told that it was his destiny to ride through London with a crown on his head. Hereupon, he growing burthensome to the English Borders, was in a battle overthrown. His head fixed upon a stake, and adorned with a paper crown, was by a horseman triumphantly carried through London; and so the prophecy was fulfilled, A.D. 1282.

And ye shall be as gods.] The serpent's grammar first taught, saith Damianus, "to bring down God to much; you will be as gods." {Deum pluraliter declinare; eritis sicut Dii.} This the woman understood of the Trinity, as appears, {#Ge 3:22} but the devil might mean it of the angels (so the Chaldee Paraphrast translates it) which had sinned, and now had woeful experience of the good which they had lost, and the evil wherein they lay. "Lo, this only have I found," saith the wise man, "that God made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions". {#Ec 7:29} {Ipsi autem quae siverunt cogitationes Magnatum (so some render it), sive angelorum; apostatarum scilicet.} But they soon sought out the tricks or devices of great ones, that is, of the angels, who, not content with their own station, "forsook it". {#Jude 6} So did our Protaplasts.

Ver. 6. And when the woman saw.] At this portal the devil entered. How many thousand souls have died of the wound of the eye, and cried out, as Eve might here, "When I saw it, I died!" {Ut vidi, ut perii!} {a} If we do not let in sin at the window of the eye, or the door of the ear, it cannot enter into our hearts. "The way to our crimes is through the eyes in our mind." Quintilian said. {Vitis nobis in animum per oculos est via} Wherefore, "if thine eye offend thee, pull it out." In Barbary, it is death for any man to see one of the Shereefs concubines; and for them too, if when they see a man, though but through a casement, they do not suddenly screech out. {b}

She took of the fruit thereof.] Whatever it were, whether an apple, as Bernard {c} and others gathered out of #So 2:3, or a fig, as Theodoret; or a pomegranate, as Mohammed in his Alkoran; or a bad peach; {malum Persicum} or "fruit of Paradise," {Pomum Paradisi}, as the Syrians call a kind of fruit common among them. God created us of nothing, and we offended him for a matter of nothing. All the legions of the reprobate devils, said one, {d} entered into one beast, and, by the Pitho and Suada of that viperous tongue, crept into the bosom of Eve, as it were by all the topic places in logic, figures in rhetoric, and other engines of guile and deceit, till they had brought her into a fool's paradise, with the loss of the earthly, and hazard of the heavenly.

And gave it also to her husband.] It is probable, saith the same author, that Adam stood by all the time of the disputation; therefore his sin was the greater, that he rebuked not the serpent, &c. And again, I cannot believe, said he, but that the devils in the serpent did as well tempt Adam as Eve, though first they began with her, as a further means of enticing him. Others {e} are of another mind, as that the tempter set upon the woman alone and apart from her husband, as she was curiously prying into the pleasures of the garden; that the serpent crept into Paradise unseen of Adam, who was to keep beasts out of it; that he remained there without being seen by him, and crept out again when he had done his feat; that when she gave him the fruit, she gave him also a relation of the serpent's promise concerning the force of that fruit, that it would make them wise as God, knowing good and evil, &c., whence he is said to have hearkened to her voice. {#Ge 3:17} And surely, every Adam hath still his Eve, every David his Bathsheba, a tempter in his own bosom, his own flesh, whereby he is so soon "drawn away, and enticed" as a fish by the bait, -beauty {f} is a hook without a bait, {g} as one saith, -till "when lust hath conceived," as here it did in Eve, "it bringeth forth sin; and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death". {#Jas 1:14,15} Satan hath only a persuasive sleight, not an enforcing might. Ver. 7. They knew that they were naked.] Bereft of God's blessed image; no more of it left than, as of one of Job's messengers, to bear witness of our great loss. I call it ours, because we were all in Adam, as Levi was in Abraham, or as the whole country is in a Parliament man. tie was our head; and if the head plot treason, all the body is guilty. Hence the prophet Hosea: "O Israel, one hath destroyed thee; but in me is thy help". {#Ho 13:9} So some read it. Had we been by when this wretched "one" destroyed us all; had we seen him stand staggering betwixt God's commandment and Eve's allurement, not yet resolved which way to incline, and could have foreseen the danger hanging over him and ourselves, we would surely have cried out to him, Take heed, thou wretch. {Cave miser} And why do we not the same to ourselves, when solicited to sin?, {Alterius perditio tua sit cautio} saith Isidore; and, {cavebis si pavebis} saith another. {a} There is a practical judgment still practised in our hearts. On the one side is propounded the commodity of sin; on the other, the offence whereby we provoke God. So that in the one end of the balance is laid God, in the other sin, and man stands in the midst, rejecting the comnland of God, and accepting of the pleasure of sin. What is this but to prefer Paris before Paradise with Cardinal Bourbon, Barabbas before Christ, a thing of nought before heaven's happiness? Our first parents were born with the royal robe of righteousness, as those Porphyrogeniti in Constantinople; but the devil soon stripped them of it (the same day, as some think), {b} and so they became sore ashamed of their bodily nakedness, which therefore they sought to cover by making themselves aprons to cover their privities.

Quest. But why did they, and do we still, so studiously hide those parts, rather than their eyes and ears, which they had abused to sin with?

Ans. Because sin has become natural, and derived by generation. {#Ps 51:7 Ge 5:3} Therefore circumcision was also on that part of man's body; to show that that which was begotten thereby, deserved in like manner, as execrable and accursed, to be cut off and thrown away, by God. Here some ground their opinion, that it is a sin against nature to look on the nakedness of another. A foul shame it was for old Noah to lie so uncovered in the midst of his tent, but far fouler for those worshippers of Priapus, which Jerome and Isidore make to be that Baal-peor, {#Nu 25:5} that shamed not to say, { Nos, pudore pulso, stamus sub dove, coelis apertis}& c. {c} But in man's soul is now a πανσπερμια, the seed of all sin, though never so heinous or hideous. Neither by nature is there ever a better of us; "but as in water face answereth to face, so doth the heart of a man to a man". {#Pr 27:19} And as there were many Marii in one Caesar, so are there many Caius and Caiaphases in the best of us all. { Totus homo est iuersus decalogus} The whole man is in evil, and whole evil is in man. As the Chaos had the seeds of all creatures, and wanted only the Spirit's motion to produce them; so our corrupt nature hath all sins in it, and wants but the warmth of Satan's temptation to bring them into act, if God restrain not. Sure it is, we can stay no more from sinning, than the heart can from punting, and the pulse from beating. The first man defiled the nature; and ever since, the nature defiles the man. As poison put into a cup of wine disperseth itself, and makes it deadly; so original sin polluteth and poisoneth our whole man. And as the whitest ivory turns with the fire into the deepest black, the sweetest wine becomes the sourest vinegar; so here. The more unnatural any quality is, the more extreme will it be, as a cold wind from the south is intolerable, &c. So Adam, "being in honour, was without understanding," and is now in worse case than the very "beasts that perish":, {#Ps 49:20} { Pecoribus morticinis} saith Treme]; the beasts that die of the murrain, and so become carrion, and are good for nothing.

Ver. 8. And they heard the voice of the Lord.] Either speaking something by himself of that which Adam hath done against his command; as who should say, Hath he served me so indeed? or else calling to Adam in a mighty thunder, as to Pharaoh, {#Ex 9:28} or in a terrible whirlwind, as to Job, {#Job 38:1} the better to humble him, and prepare for a sermon of mercy and forgiveness. God poureth not the off of his grace, save only into broken vessels. Christ came to cure not the sound, but the sick with sin: the Holy Ghost is poured out upon thirsty souls only that are scorched and parched with the sense of sin and fear of wrath. {#Isa 35:7,44:3} As the way to Zion was by Sinai, so, unless we desire rather to be carnally secured than soundly comforted, we must pass by Baca to Berachah, by a sight of our sin and misery, to a sense of God's grace and mercy.

Walking in the garden in the cool of the day.] God did not meet the man angrily, as he did Moses in the inn, when he had much ado to forbear killing him; {#Ex 4:24} nor as the angel did Balaam, with a drawn sword in his hand to destroy him; neither did he rush upon him, as David ran upon Goliath, and cut off his head; but, with a soft and slow pace {a} (as if he had no mind to it), he comes walking toward them, to do this, his work, "his strange work," {#Isa 28:21} of sentencing sinners; and that in the cool of the day, too, or towards the evening, as St Ambrose {b} hath it, after the Septuagint. Whereas to show mercy, "behold, he comes leaping {c} upon the mountains, skipping upon the hills." Lo, "this is the voice," and the pace "of my beloved." {#So 2:8} God was but six days in making the whole world, yet seven days in destroying one city, Jericho, as Chrysostom long since observed. He scourgeth not his people, "till there be no remedy." {#2Ch 36:16} He forbears us, though he "cry like a travailing woman," {#Isa 42:14} to be delivered of his judgments.

And Adam and his wife hid themselves.] Their covering of fig-leaves, then, was too short; for here they ran with their aprons into the thicket to hide from God. A poor shift, God wot, but such as is still too much in use. "If I have covered my transgressions as Adam," or after the manner of men, saith Job, {#Job 31:33} then let this and this evil befall me. The bad heart runs from God, and would run from its own terrors, {d} as the wounded deer from the deadly arrow that sticks in his side; but refusing ordinary trial, it is in danger to be pressed to death inevitably. We have no better refuge than to run from God to God. Bloodletting is a cure of bleeding, a burn of a burn. To close and get in, avoids the blow, &c. Our first parents here, in hiding themselves, did but as the fish which swimmeth to the length of the line, with a hook in the mouth, as one well observeth.

Ver. 9. Where art thou?] Not as if God knew not; for he searcheth Jerusalem with lights; yea, himself is the "father of lights," {#Jas 1:17} the great eye of the world, to whom the sun itself is but a snuff. He hath "seven eyes upon one stone"; {#Zec 3:9} yea, "his eyes run to and fro through the earth"; {#2Ch 16:9} and "all things are naked and open"—naked, for the outside, and open, for the inside—"before the eyes of Him with whom we have to deal." {#Heb 4:13} Simple men hide God from themselves, and then think they have hid themselves from God; like the struthiocamelus, they thrust their heads into a hole, when hunted, and then think none seeth them. {a} But he "searcheth"—so one may do, yet not find—"and knoweth." {#Ps 139:1} "He seeth"—so one may do, yet not observe—"and pondereth." {#Pr 5:21} Though men hide their sins, as close as Rachel did her idols, or Rahab the spies; though they dig deep to hide their counsels, God can and will detect them, with a woe to boot. {#Isa 29:15} For "hell and destruction are before him"; {#Pr 15:11} how then can Saul think to be hid behind the stuff, or Adam behind the bush? At the voice of the Lord he must appear, will he, nill he, to give account of his fear, of his flight. This he doth (but untowardly) in the words following.

Ver. 10. I heard thy voice.] So he had done before his fall, and feared not. "Do not my words do good to him that walketh uprightly?" {#Mic 2:7} Excellently St Austin, Adversarius est nobis, quamdiu sumus et ipsi nobis: Quamdiu tu tibi inimicus es, inimicum habebis sermonem Dei . Yea, but I was naked, and therefore hid myself. This also was non causa pro causa . There was another pad in the straw, which he studiously conceals, viz., the conscience of his sin. {a} Hic vero non factum suum, sed Dei factum in semetipso reprehendit saith Rupertus. He blames not himself, but God, for making him naked; and so verifies that of Solomon, "The foolishness of man perverteth his way"; (#Pr 19:3) and then, to mend the matter, "his heart fretteth against the Lord." O silly simple!

Ver. 11. Who told thee.] His own conscience, awakened and cited by God's voice, "told him"—as the woman of Samaria said of our Saviour—"all {#Joh 4:29} that ever he did." Before and in the acting of sin, we will hear nothing; but afterwards, conscience will send forth a shrill and sharp voice, that shall be heard all the soul over; such as was that of Reuben to his brethren: "Spake I not unto you, saying, Do not sin against the child?" &c. {#Ge 42:22} The books of our consciences are now sealed up, and the woeful contents are not read by the law. They remain as letters written with the juice of oranges or onions, which are only to be made legible by the fire of God's wrath. Then shall the wicked run away (but all in vain). with those words in their mouths, "Who amongst us shall dwell with the devouring fire? who shall dwell with everlasting burnings?" {#Isa 33:14} Then shall they tire the mountains with their hideous outcries, Fall upon us, hide us, crush us in pieces, grind us to powder. But how can that be, when the mountains melt, and the rocks rend asunder at the presence of the Lord, at the presence of the God of Jacob?

Ver. 12. The woman whom thou gavest.] Here he rejects the fault upon the woman, and, through her, upon God, who gave her to be with him, or before him; or such another as himself (with reference to that Kenegdo), {#Ge 2:20} or a help meet for him. This she might have been to him, had he been (as he ought to her) a manly guide in the way to heaven. He should have rebuked her, as Job did his wicked wife, for transgressing God's law and tempting him to the like. Then had her sin been personal, resting upon herself, and gone no further, had not he hearkened to her voice. But he not only did thus, but instead of agnising his fault, seeks to transfer it upon God; that, since he could not be like unto God in the divinity, which he aimed at, he might make God like unto himself in iniquity; which was to fill up the measure of his sin, that wrath might have come upon him to the utmost, but that God's mercy was then, and is still, over all his own good, and our bad, works.

Ver. 13. And the woman said, The serpent.] Thus the flesh never wants excuses; nature need not be taught to tell her own tale. Sin and shifting came into the world together; never yet any came to hell, but had some pretence for coming there. It is a very coarse wool that will take no dye. Sin and Satan are alike in this; they cannot abide to appear in their own colour. Men wrap themselves in excuses, as they do their hands, to defend them from pricks. This is still the vile poison of our hearts; that they will needs be naught; and yet will not yield but that there is reason to be mad, and great sense in sinning.

Ver. 14. And the Lord said to the serpent.] The serpent was not examined, because God would show no mercy to him; but presently doomed, because of mere malice he had offended. The heathens {a} called certain devils, Κοβαλοι, quasi χαχοβοθλοι,

η δε κακη βουλη παρ βουλευσαντι κυκιστη

Evil befell him that evil bethought him. As Balaam, that advised evil against Israel, was slain by the sword of Israel. The serpent also hath his part in the punishment, because instrumental to the devil. Both authors, actors, and abettors of evil shall rue it together. The serpent here is first cut shorter by the feet, and made to wriggle upon his belly; secondly, confined to the dust for his diet; which is also, saith an ancient, χαταβρωμα του εχθρου, the devil's diet: for your adversary the devil—that "ruler of the darkness of this world" {#Eph 6:6} as he dwells in dark hearts, as so many holes and caverns—so, Behemoth-like, "he eats grass as an ox"; {#Job 40:10} yea, dust as a serpent, continually "seeking whom he may devour"; {#1Pe 5:7} and is therefore cursed above all creatures. He hath swallowed down souls, "and he shall vomit them up again: God shall cast them out of his belly." {#Job 20:15} He sinneth every day the sin against the Holy Ghost, and shall lie lowest in hell. Every soul that he drew thither by his temptation shall be as a millstone hanged about his neck, to hold him down in the bottomless lake.

Ver. 15. And I will put enmity.] Instead of that amity and familiarity thou hast lately had with the woman. And here begins the Book of the Lord's wars: his hand is here upon his throne, he hath solemnly sworn that he will have war (not with Amalek only, but) with the whole serpentine seed, from generation to generation. {#Ex 17:16} There is also a capital antipathy (saith Bodinus) {a} between the woman and the serpent: so that in a great multitude of men, if there be but one woman amongst them, he makes at her, and stings her about the heel. Pliny {b} also tells us, that the fastingspittle of a man is deadly to serpents; and that if a serpent wound a man, he is no more entertained by the earth, or admitted thereinto. Others {c} tell us that a snake fears and flies from a naked man, but pursues him when clothed or covered. "Put on Christ," and thou art safe. His blood, as Polium, is a preservative against serpents. {#Re 12:9}

It shall bruise thy head.] And so kill thee quite; as a serpent is not killed dead till knocked on the head, which he therefore carefully saves with the hazard of his whole body. To elude, or elevate {d} at least this sweet promise, this grand charter of our salvation, the devil, no doubt, devised, and by his factors, the poets, divulged that frivolous fable of Hercules, his clubbing down the Lernaean serpent, and cutting off his many heads. But Christ alone is that stronger man, that, drawing the dragon out of his den, hath cracked his crown, destroyed his works, made him to fall as lightning from the heaven of men's hearts, and "will tread him also under our feet shortly," {#Ro 16} as he hath already done under his own, when "spoiling these principalities and powers, he made a show of them openly, triumphing over them on his cross." {#Col 2:15} As in the meanwhile, till this be fully done, nibble he may at our heel, but cannot come at our head. Achilles is said to have taken his death by a wound in his heel. But "he that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and that wicked one the devil toucheth him not." {#Joh 5:18} That is, Tactu qualitativo , saith Cajetan, with a deadly touch; he thrusteth not his sting so far into him as to do him to death. For Christ, "who is our life," {#Col 3:4} can as soon die at the right hand of his heavenly Father, as in the heart of a faithful Christian; since "our life is hid with Christ in God"; his life is bound up in his child's life. He shall make the broken horns of Satan to be the trumpets of his glory, and the cornets of our joy.

Thou shalt bruise his heel.] Not both his heels, but one only; so that he shall stand upon one, though hurt in the other; or if overthrown, yet he shall rise again, and be "more than a conqueror," {#Ro 8:37} {e} or "overcome" him that overturned him. He is the victor that breaketh the head; whenas he that bruise the heel, though he be an enemy, yet he lies along, and can do no great mischief there. And hereto the prophet seems to refer, when he saith, "Why should I fear in the days of evil, when the iniquity of my heels" (that is, when the punishment of mine iniquity that reacheth but to the heels) "shall compass me about?... God will redeem my soul from the hand of hell." {#Ps 49:5,15} But how wretchedly was Josephus the Jew mistaken here, both in natural and theological history! (1.) In that, in affirming that the serpent before he deceived our first parents had the faculty of speech, went upon feet; but, by reason of that misdemeanour, was amerced of those abilities, and also had poison, as a badge of his enmity toward man, put under his tongue: (2.) In this, as esteeming what was only the instrument in tempting Eve, the principal agent: and the promise, a precept (the observance whereof would prove but of a shallow advantage) that God's meaning was only this, that every one as he met with a serpent should strike it upon the head, which contained in it somewhat hurtful ϕ o mankind. The Chaldee paraphrast attained the mind of the sentence; thus he senseth it: he put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy son and her son: he shall remember what thou didst to him iu the beginning, and thou shalt observe him in the end; i.e., Thou shalt, by thy malicious attempts, endeavour to hinder the consummation of God's works of mercy, the application of Christ's merits, as mine author interpreteth him. I conclude with that memorable saying of a holy martyr:—If {f} we had a lively feeling of the serpent's poison, we could not but rejoice in our Captain, who hath bruised his head. What though the serpent shoot his sting into our heel, and make us halt: yet let us go on, though halting, to heaven; yea, "run with patience the race that is set before us; looking at Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith," &c. {#Heb 12:1,2}

Ver. 16. I will greatly multiply thy sorrow.] The greatest of sorrows this is, as we are given to understand, both out of divine and human writings. "I had rather die in battle ten times over, than bring forth but once only," said Medea in the tragedy. {a} But we have a better example, in the Ecclesiastical History, {b} of a Roman lady, called Sabina; who, being great with child, was cast in prison for the profession of Christ's truth. Now when the time came that she should be delivered, and she cried out for extremity of pain, the keeper of the prison asked her why she made such a stir now; and how she would, two or three days hence, endure to die at a stake, or by the sword. She answered, "Now I suffer as a woman, the punishment of my sin; but then I shall not suffer, but Christ shall suffer in me." In peace offerings there might be oil mixed, not so in sin offerings. In our sufferings for Christ there is joy, not so when we suffer for our sins.

In sorrow thou shalt bring forth.] And in sorrow shalt thou bring up, after the birth. {as #Ge 50:23} Children are certain cares, but uncertain comforts. {c} Eve had a great catch of it, when she had got a man-child of the Lord, she called him Cain, a possession, as David did Absalom, his father's peace. But

And he shall rule over thee כַּפְּךָ.] Yet not with rigour. She must, though to her grief and regret, be subject to all her husband's lawful commands and restraints. But he must carry himself as a man of knowledge towards her, and make her yoke as easy as may be. It is remarkable that when the apostle had bid "wives, submit to your own husbands," &c.; {#Col 3:19} he doth not say, Husbands, rule over your wives, for that they will do fast enough without bidding; but, "Husbands, love your wives, and be not bitter unto them."

Ver. 17. Because thou hast hearkened to the voice of thy wife.] Our English historian, {a} relating the deadly difference that fell out beteen those two noble Seymours (the Lord Protector, and the Admiral his brother) in Edward VI's time, through the instigation of their ambitious wives, passionately cries out, "O wives! The most sweet poison, the most desired evil in the world," &c. "Woman was first given to man for a comforter," saith he, "not for a counsellor, much less a controller and director." And therefore in the first sentence against man, this cause is expressed, "Because thou hast obeyed the voice of thy wife," &c.

Cursed is the ground for thy sake.] Hence the Greeks and Latins borrow their words {b} for ground of the Hebrew word that signifieth cursed. The curse of emptiness and unsatisfyingness lies upon it, that no man hath enough, though never so much of it. The curse also of barrenness, or unprofitable fruits, "whose end is to be burned." {#Heb 6:8} The whole earth and the works therein shall be burnt up. {#2Pe 3:10} It was never beautiful, nor cheerful, since Adam's fall. Rudeness hath no respect either to sex or condition. Those churls of Succoth were worthily "threshed with thorns of the wilderness, and with briers," and thereby "taught" better manners. {#Jud 8:7-16}

Thou shalt eat the herb of the field.] And no longer feed on these pleasant fruits of Paradise, which by thy sin thou hast forfeited. Thus man is driven from his dainty and delicate diet, to eat husks with hogs, as the prodigal, or at least, grass with the ox, as Nebuchadnezzar, and be glad of it too; as our ancestors, who though they fed not at first on acorns, as the poets fable, yet if they could get a dish of good green herbs, they held themselves as well provided for as if they had all.

Ver. 19. In the sweat of thy face.] Or, of thy nose, as one {a} rendereth it; that sweat that, beginning in thy brow, runs down by thy nose, through thy hard labour. This is a law laid upon all sorts, to sweat out a poor living, to humble themselves, by just labour, to sweat either their brows or their brains, {b} for this latter also is a "sore" occupation, {#Ec 1:13} and the minister's toil is compared to that of those that cleave wood; or work hard in harvest. {#1Th 3:5 Mt 10:10 1Co 9:14, &c.} {c}

Shalt thou eat bread.] Not herbs only, as ver. 18. And here take notice of an elegant gradation, together with a merciful mitigation of man's misery. Thou shalt eat "earth" (ver. 17), "herbs" (ver. 18), and now here, "Thou shalt eat bread," that stay and staff of man's life under his hard labour {d}

Until thou return unto the ground.] "O earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the Lord," {#Jer 22:29} i.e., "earth" by creation, "earth" by corruption, "earth" by resolution. This is the end of all men, and the living should lay it to heart. In this third of Genesis we find man's Exodus. This is the first text of mortality, and all comments, yea, all dead corpses {e} concur to the exposition of it.

For dust thou art.] Think on this, and be proud, if thou canst. We were created εικονι θεου, but now we live ει κονι χοιχη, saith Agapetus. Had we so sweet a generation as that little creature Scaliger {f} speaks of, that is bred in sugar, we might have some ground of boasting; but now we may sprinkle the dust of humility on our heads, as the ancients used to do, in token that they deserved to be as far under, as now they were above ground.

And to dust thou shalt return.] By this limitation, God restrains man's death here threatened, to that earthy part of him, his body. The sorest death occurs when a man "dies in his sins," as those Jews did. {#Joh 8:21} Better die in a ditch a far deal. When he is "killed with death," as Jezebel's "children," {#Re 2:23} this is the second death. The condemned person comes out of a dark prison, and goes to the place of execution; so do many from the womb to the tomb, nay, to that tormenting Tophet, to the which death is but a trap-door to give them entrance.

Ver. 20. And Adam called his wife's name Eve.] That is, Life, or Living. Not, per antiphrasim, as some would have it; much less out of pride and stomach, in contempt of the divine sentence denounced against them both, that they should surely die, as Rupertus would have it: but because she was to be mother of all living, whether a natural or a spiritual life; and likewise for a testimony of his faith in, and thankfulness for, that lively and lifegiving oracle. {a} {#Ge 3:15}

The mother of all living.] "Have we not all," as "one father," {#Mat 2:10} so, one mother? did we not all tumble in a belly? Ver. 21. Coats of skins and clothed them.] God put them in leather, when yet there was better means of clothing, to humble them doubtless, and draw them to repentance. Whether God created these skins anew, or took them off the backs of sheep and goats killed for sacrifice, to remind man of his mortality and mortification, it much matters not. Our first parents, who, even after the fall were the goodliest creatures that ever lived, went no better clothed: no more did those worthies "of whom the world was not worthy." {#Heb 11:38} And surely, howsoever our condition and calling afford us better array, and the vulgar, like a Bohemian cur, {a} fawn upon every good suit (purpuram magis quam Deam colunt), yet we must take heed that pride creep not into our clothes, those ensigns of our sin and shame, since our fineness is our filthiness, our neatness our nastiness. It is a sure sign of a base mind, {b} though in high place, to think he can make himself great with anything that is less than himself, and win more credit by his garments than his graces. St Peter teacheth women (who, many of them, are too much addicted to over-much fineness) to garnish themselves, not with gay clothes, but with a "meek and quiet spirit," {#1Pe 3:3,4} as Sarah did, and not as those mincing dames, whose pride the prophet inveighs against, as punctually as if he had viewed the ladies' wardrobes in Jerusalem. {#Isa 3} Rich apparel are but fine covers of the foulest shame. The worst is nature's garment; the best but folly's garnish. How blessed a nation were we, if every silken suit did cover a sanctified soul: or if we would look upon our clothes, as our first parents did, as lovetokens from God!

Paradise, in the sight thereof (as Stella {a} observeth out of the Septuagint) that, by often beholding, the sorrow of his sin, might be increased, that his "eye might affect his heart" {b} {#La 3:5} Yet, "lest he should be swallowed up of over-much sorrow," and so Satan get "an advantage of him"—for {#2Co 2:7,11} God is not ignorant of his devices—Christ, the promised Seed, was, by his voluntary banishment, to bring back all believers to their heavenly home; to bear them by his angels into Abraham's bosom, and to "give them to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God." {#Re 2:7} Our whole life here is nothing else but a banishment. That we like it no worse, is because we never knew better. They that were born in hell, saith the proverb, think there's no other heaven. The poor posterity of a banished prince take their mean condition well-aworth; Moses counts Egypt, where yet he was but a sojourner, his home; and in reference to it calls his son, born in Midian, Gershom, that is, a stranger there. Oh, how should we breathe after our heavenly home! groaning within ourselves, like those birds of paradise naturalists {c} speak of, stretching forth the neck, as the apostle's word {d} importeth, "waiting for the adoption, even the redemption of our bodies," {#Ro 8:23} glorifying God meanwhile with our spirits and bodies, devouring all difficulties, donec a spe ad speciem transeamus, till Christ, who is gone to prepare a place for us, return and say, "This day thou shalt be with me in Paradise."

Ver. 24. So he drove out the man.] The Hebrews say, God led Adam gently by the hand, till he came to the porch of Paradise, and then thrust him out violently, who hung back, and played loath to depart. That he went out unwillingly, as I wonder not, so that he should strive with God about his going out, I believe not. This garden, planted merely for his pleasure, and all the benefits created for his use and service in six days, he lost in six hours, say some; in nine, say others; the same day he was made, say all, almost. What cause then have all his sinful posterity to distrust themselves! And how little cause had that blasphemous pope {a} to set his mouth against heaven, when—being in a great rage at his steward for a cold peacock not brought to table according to his appointment, and desired by one of his cardinals not to be so much moved at a matter of so small moment, -he answered: If God were so angry for an apple, that he cast our first parents out of Paradise for the same; why may not I, being his vicar, be angry then for a peacock, since it is a greater matter than an apple? ^{b} Is not this that mouth of the beast that "speaketh great things and blasphemies?" ^{#Re 13:5}

Ver. 1. I have gotten a man from the Lord.] Or, that famous man, the Lord; as if she had brought forth the man Christ Jesus. These were words of hope not of substance ^{verba spei, non rei}; for "Cain was of that wicked one," the devil, ^{#1Jo 3:12} as all reprobates are. ^{#1Jo 3:10} Cain the author of the city of the world, saith Augustine, ^{a} is born first, and called Cain, that is, a "possession," because he buildeth a city, is given to the cares and pomp of the world, and persecutes his brother that was chosen out of the world. But Abel, the author of the city of God, is born second, called "vanity," because he saw the world's vanity, and is therefore driven out of the world by an untimely death. So early came martyrdom into the world; the first man that died, died for religion. In a witty sense, saith Hugh Broughton, ^{b} Cain and Abel contain in their names advertisements for matter of true continuance and corruption. Cain betokeneth possession in this world; and Abel betokeneth one humbled in mind, and holding such possession vain. Such was his offering—sheep kind, the gentlest of all living beasts; and therefore the favour of God followed him. And the offering of Cain was of the fruit of the earth; as he loved the possession of this world, and the service of the body, which yet can have no continuance, and followed after bodily lusts; therefore the blessed God favoured him not. Thus far he cited from the Rabbins. Another English divine ^{c} hath this note upon these words, I have gotten a man from the Lord, Jehovah. Adam and Eve were all about the composition of Cain. His soul was inspired pure and holy; yet as soon as the vital spirits laid hold of it, it was in the compound, a son of Adam. A skilful artificer makes a clock of all its essential parts most accurately; only he leaves the putting of all parts together to his unskilful apprentice, who so jumbles together the several joints, that all falls to jarring, and can keep no time at all, every wheel running backward-way. So God most artificially still perfects both body and soul; but our accursed parents put all out of frame, and set every part in a contrary course to God's will. Sin is propagated, and proceeds from the union of body and soul into one man, That phrase, "warmed in sin," {#Ps 51:5} is meant of the preparation of the body as an instrument of evil, which is not so actually, till the soul come.

Ver. 3. In process of time.] That distance of time between the creation and the general flood, Varro, the most learned of the Romans, calleth 'Ασηλον, obscure or unknown, because the heathen had no records of that which we now clearly understand to have been then done, out of the Holy Scriptures.

Cain brought of the fruit.] They brought their sacrifices to Adam, the high priest of the family, who offered them to God in their name. {a} So in the Levitical law, though a man's offering were never so good, he might not offer it himself, upon pain of death; but the priest must offer it. And the priest was to offer as well the poor man's turtle, as the rich man's ox. To teach that none may present his service to God, how good soever he may conceit it, but in the hand of the high priest of the New Testament Jesus Christ, the Just One, who will not only present, but perfume the poorest performances of an upright heart, with his odours. {#Re 8:3}

Ver. 4. Of the firstlings of his flock.] He brought the best of the best; {a} not anything that came next to hand, as Cain seems to have done, holding anything good enough, as did those rich wretches that cast brass-money {b} into the treasury. "But cursed be that cheat who has a male in his flock, and offers to God a corrupt thing." "Offer it now to thy Prince," will he be content with thy refuse stuff? Behold, "I am a great King," saith God. {#Mat 1:8,14} He stands upon his seniority, and looks to be honoured with the best of our substance.

Mary that loved much, thought nothing too much for her sweet Saviour. She brought an alabaster box of ointment of great price, and poured it upon him, and he defends her in it against those that held it waste. {#Joh 12:7} Among the Papists, their Lady of Loretto hath her churches so stuffed with vowed presents of the best, as they are fain to hang their cloisters and churchyards with them. {c} Shall not their superstition rise up and condemn our irreligion, our slubbering service, and doughbaked duties? The Turks build their private houses low and homely, but their mosques or temples stately and magnificent. {d}

Had respect to Abel and his offering.] "The eyes of the Lord are still upon the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers": {#1Pe 3:11} he "looks" {#Isa 66:2} upon such with singular delight, with special intimation of his love; he is "ravished with one of their eyes," lifted up in prayer, "with one chain of their graces"; {#So 4:9} whenas he was no whit affected with the offer of all the world's glory. {#Mt 4:8-10} He saith of such to the wicked, as the prophet said of Jehoshaphat to the king of Israel, "Surely, were it not that I regard the presence of Jehoshaphat king of Judah, I would not look toward thee, nor see thee," -Cain {#2Ki 3:14} here, for instance.

animus non prodere vultu {a} He was discontented at God, and displeased at his brother. He looks but sour and sullen upon him, and God takes him up for it. Ver. 7. Sin lies at the door.] Like a great bandog, ready to pull out the throat of thy soul, if thou but look over the hatch. Say this dog lie asleep for a while, yet the door is for continual pass and repass, and so no fit place for any long sleep. Your sin will surely find you out, saith Moses, as a bloodhound, and haunt you like a hell hag, as the heathen could say, Nemo crimen gerit in pectore, qui non idem Nemesin {a} in tergo. A late divine {b} by sin here understandeth a sin offering, and telleth us, that as God had read the first lecture of faith to Adam, {#Ge 3:15} so here he reads the first lecture of repentance to Cain, under the doctrine of a sin offering; telling him, that if he did well, he should certainly be accepted; and though he did not well, yet a sin offering lies at the door; if he repented, there was hope of pardon. {c}

Ver. 8. And Cain talked with Abel.] What talk they had is not set down. The Septuagint and vulgar versions tell us, Cain said, Let us go out into the field. The Chaldee adds, that he should say, There was no judgment, nor judge, nor world to come, nor reward for justice, nor vengeance for wickedness, &c. Certain it is that those that are set to go on in sin do lay hold upon all the principles in their heads, and "imprison them in unrighteousness," {#Ro 1:18} that they may sin more freely. They muzzle the mouths of their consciences, that they may satisfy their lusts without control. But had Zimri peace that slew his master? or Cain that slew his brother? hath any ever waxed fierce against God and prospered? {#Job 9:4}

Cain rose up against Abel his brother and slew.] So Cain was the devil's patriarch, and Abel the Church's protomartyr. It is not long since Alphonsus Diazius, a Spaniard, an advocate to the Court of Rome, came from Rome to Neoberg, in Germany, to kill his own brother, John Diazius, a faithful professor of the Reformed religion, and a familiar friend to Bucer, who gives him an excellent commendation. {a} But it is worth the observing, says one, {b} that the first quarrel about religion arose propemodum inter media sacrificia, in the midst of the sacrifices almost. These theological hatreds (as I may call them) are most bitter hatreds, and are carried on, for most part, with Cain-like rage and bloody opposition. No fire sooner breaks forth, none goes out more slowly, than that which is kindled about matters of religion; and the nearer any come to other, the more deadly are their differences, and the more desperate their designs one against another. The Persians and Turks are both Mohammedans, and yet disagreeing about some small points in the interpretation of their Alkoran, the Persians burn whatsoever books they find of the Turkish sect. And the Turks hold it more meritorious to kill one Persian, than seventy Christians. {c} The Jew can better brook a heathen than a Christian; they curse us in their daily devotions, concluding them with a Maledic Domine Nazaraeis. The Pope will dispense with Jews, but not with Protestants. Lutherans will sooner join hands with a Papist than a Calvinist. And what a spirit had he, that in a sermon at Norwich, not long since, inveighing against Puritans, said, If a cup of cold water had a reward, much more a cup of such men's blood! {d} Mortuus est Cain sed utinam ille non viveret in suis filiis, qui clavum eius, sanguine Abelis rubentem, ut rem sacrum, circumferunt, adorant et venerantur. The place where Cain slew Abel is by some thought to be Damascus in Syria, called therefore Damesec, that is, a bag of blood, {e}

Ver. 9. I know not: Am I my brother's keeper?] As if he had bid God, Go look. Let us not think much to receive dogged answers and disdainful speeches from profane persons. When they have learned to think better, they will speak better. As till then, pity and pray for them. These churlish dogs will be barking.

Ver. 10. What hast thou done?] Here God appeals to the murderer's conscience, which is instead of a thousand witnesses. As oft as we feel the secret smitings of our own hearts for sin, think we hear him that is greater than our hearts, saying to us as here, What have you done? And that there is no good to be done by denying or dawbing, for he knows all things, {#1Jo 3:20} and requires that we should see our sins to confession, or we shall see them to our confusion.

The voice of thy brother's blood.] The blood of one Abel had so many tongues as drops, and every drop a voice to cry for vengeance. "Give them blood to drink, for they are worthy." {#Re 16:6} Charles IX. of France, author of that bloody massacre of Paris, died of exceeding bleeding. Richard III. of this kingdom, and Queen Mary, had the shortest reigns of any since the Conquest; according to that, "Bloody and deceitful men shall not live out half their days," {#Ps 55:23} anno 1586. {a} Walsh, Bishop of Ossery, in Ireland, a man of honest life, with his two servants, were stabbed to death by one Dulland, an Irish old soldier, while he gravely admonished him of his foul adulteries; and the wicked murderer escaped away, who had now committed forty-five murders with his own hand. Ver. 11. And now thou art cursed.] The Pope contrarily blesses and saints traitors to their country, and murderers of their natural sovereigns; as Ravilliac, and others his assassins, those sworn swordsmen of the devil. Aphonsus Diazius, who killed his own brother for the cause of religion, as above said, fled to Rome, and was there highly commended for his zeal, and largely rewarded, as Bucer reports {a} But, driven thereto by the terrors of his own guilty

Ver. 12. A fugitive and a vagabond, &c.] The patriarchs were pilgrims, and stayed not long in a place. The apostles also were hurried about, {#Ro 15:19} and had "no certain dwellingplace." {#2Co 4:11} But first, God numbered their wanderings. {#Ps 56:8} He kept just reckoning of therein his count-book. Secondly, Their hearts were fixed, trusting in the Lord. {#Ps 112:7} They could call their souls to rest, when they had no rest in their bones; and fly up to heaven with the wings of a dove, when hunted on earth as so many partridges. So could not Cain the prisoner. He was not more a fugitive in the earth, than in his own conscience; {a} fain he would have fled from the terrors of it, but could not; he was prisoner to it, and must abide by it. Hence the Greek translates this text, Sighing and trembling shall you be on the earth; and so the word here used is applied elsewhere to the trembling of the heart, {#Isa 7:2} to the walking of the lips, {#ISA 1:13} to the shaking of the forest by a violent wind, {#Isa 7:2} to the leaping of the lintel at the presence of the Lord {#Isa 6:4-8} And this, in all probability, was that mark that God set upon him. {#Ge 4:15} Not a horn in his forehead, as the Jews feign, but a hornet in his conscience, such as God vexed the Hivites with, {#Ex 23:28} stinging them with unquestionable conviction and horror. For assuredly a body is not so tormented with stings, or torn with stripes, as a mind with remembrance of wicked actions. {b}

Ver. 13. My punishment is greater than I can bear.] Or, mine iniquity is greater than can be forgiven. In either sense he sins exceedingly, and worse perhaps than in slaying his brother, whether he murmur against God's justice, or despair of his mercy. Mine iniquity is greater, &c. Mentiris, Cain, saith a Father. Cain did not say so, because it was so; but it was so, because he said so. Despair is Satan's masterpiece; it carries men headlong to hell, as the devils did the herd of swine into the deep; witness Guarlacus, Bomelius, Latomus of Lovain, Johannes de Canis, our English Hubertus, a covetous oppressor, who made this will, -I yield my goods to the king, my body to the grave, my soul to the devil. Pope Paul III., that spent his time in filthy pleasures, after that he had heard of the death of his son Petrus Aloisius, died in a peevish rage, and crying out in despair, Peccatum meum contra me semper, My sin is ever against me; and so gave up the ghost. {a}

Ver. 14. From the face of the earth.] That is, of this earth, this country, my father's family; which in the next words he calls God's face, the place of his public worship, from the which Cain was here justly excommunicated. And surely St Jude's woe will light heavily upon all such as, going in the way of Cain, and not willing to hear of their wicked ways, do wilfully absent themselves from the powerful preaching of the word. They that will not hear the word, shall hear the rod. {#Mic 6:9} Yea, a sword shall pierce through their souls, as it did Cain's here; in whom was fulfilled that of Eliphaz; -"A dreadful sound was in his ears, lest in his prosperity the destroyer should come upon him. He believed not that he should return out of darkness, and he is waited for of the sword." {#Job 15:21,22}

Every one that finds me shall slay me.] Quam male est extra legem viventibus! quicquid meruerunt semper expectant. {a} Fat swine cry hideously, if but touched or meddled with, as knowing they owe their life to them that will take it. Tiberius felt the remorse of conscience so violent, that he protested to the senate, that he suffered death daily; whereupon Tacitus makes this good note, Tandem facinora et flagitia in supplicium vertuntur. As every body hath its shadow appertaining to it, so hath every sin its punishment. And although they escape the lash of the law, yet "vengeance will not suffer them to live," {#Ac 28:4} as the barbarians rashly censured St Paul, -to live quietly at least. Richard III., after the murder of his two innocent nephews, had fearful dreams and visions; insomuch that he did often leap out of his bed in the dark, and catching his sword, which, always naked, stuck by his side, he would go distractedly about the chamber, everywhere seeking to find out the cause of his own occasioned disquiet. {b} Polidor Virgil thus writes of his dream that night before Bosworth Field, where he was slain, that he thought that all the devils in hell pulled and hailed him in most hideous and ugly shapes; and concludes of it at last, "I do not think it was so much his dream, as his evil conscience that bred those terrors." It is as proper for sin to raise fears in the soul, as for rotten flesh and wood to breed worms. That worm that never dies is bred here in the froth of filthy lusts and flagitious courses, and lies gnawing and grubbing upon men's inwards, many times in the ruffe of all their jollity. This makes Saul call for a minstrel, Belshazzar for his carousing cups, Cain for his workmen to build him a city, others for other of the devil's drugs, to put on the pangs of their wounded spirits and throbbing consciences. Charles IX., after the massacre of France, could never endure to be awakened in the night without music, or some like diversion; he became as terrible to himself, as formerly he had been to others. {c} But above all, I pity the loss of their souls, who serve themselves as the Jesuit in Lancashire, followed by one that found his glove, with a desire to restore it him. But pursued inwardly with a guilty conscience, he leaps over a hedge, plunges into a deep pit behind it, unseen and unthought of, wherein he was drowned. {d}

Ver. 15. The Lord set a mark, &c.] Some say it was the letter Tau; others, some letter of Jehovah: probably it was the perpetual trembling of his hands, and whole body, the very sight whereof made people pity him, till at length he was slain, say some, by his nephew Lamech. Cedrenus {a} tells us, if we may believe him, that Cain took his death by the fall of a house in the year of the world 931, the next year after the death of his father Adam. But however he died, sure it is, he had but an ill life of it. He was marked, says Philo, {b} but to his misery; he might not be killed by any, that he might everyday is dying, having a hell in his conscience, and standing in fear of every man he met with. He that would not hearken to God, so sweetly inciting and enticing him to do well, ({#Ge 4:7} has now Pavor and Pallor for his gods, as Lanctantius {c} reports of Tullius Hostilius, who had profanely derided the devotions of his predecessor Numa, as here Cain had done his brother Abel's.

Ver. 16. And Cain went out from the presence, &c.] But whither could he go from God's Spirit? or whither could he fly from his presence? {a} {#Ps 139:7} From the presence of his power he could not: for,

"Enter, praesenter, Deus hic et ubique potenter."

God is "not very far from any one of us," saith St Paul. {#Ac 17:27} Not so far surely as the bark is from the tree, "for all things consist in him"; {#Col 1:17} so that a wicked man cannot wag hand or foot without his privity. But it was the presence of his grace, and use of his ordinances that this wretch fled from; as did likewise Jonah, {#Jon 1:3} in that, as wise as he, so going out of the grace of God into the warm sun, as we say. God fetched Jonah home again by weeping-cross, and made him feelingly acknowledge, for it had like to cost him a choking, that "they that observe lying vanities," as he had done, "forsake their own mercies." {#Jon 2:8} But Cain seated himself in the land of Nod, and there fell to building and planting, in contempt, as it is thought, of the divine doom denounced against him; or rather to drown the noise of his conscience, as the old Italians were wont to do the noise of the heavens in time of thunder, by ringing their greatest bells, and letting off their greatest ordinance. {b}

Ver. 17. And he builded a city.] So, many drown themselves either in secular businesses, or sensual pleasures, and all to put by their melancholy dumps, and heart-qualms, as they call them; indeed to muffle up the mouths of their horribly guilty consciences. So Nicephorus Phocas, when, Zimri-like, he had killed his master, he laboured, like Cain, to secure himself with building high walls. After which, he heard a voice telling him, that though he built his walls never so high, yet sin within the walls would undermine all. {a} Besides that, one small drop of an evil conscience troubles a whole sea of outward comforts and contentments: a confluence whereof would no more ease conscience, than a silken stocking would do a broken leg. Silly are they that think to glide away their groans with games, and their cares with cards, &c.

Called the city after the name of his son Enoch.] That he might be styled, Lord Enoch of Enoch! This is the ambition of worldly men; their names are not written in heaven; they will propagate them therefore upon earth, as Nimrod by his tower, Absalom by his pillar, Cain by his city Enoch (which St Augustine fitly maketh a figure of Rome, because both of them were built by a parricide). "Their inward thought is," saith the psalmist, "that their houses shall continue for ever, and their dwelling places to all generations"; and therefore, "they call their lands after their own names." {#Ps 49:11} They seek to immortalise themselves upon their possessions; but the third heir seldom ever owns them. {b} Hence, houses and lands change masters so oft (Olim eram Menippi, nunc Spensippi, & c., said that house in the Apologue). God justly crosses these "inhabitants of the earth," {#Re 12:12} as they are called, in opposition to the saints, whose "conversation is in heaven," {#Php 3:20} whereof they are fellow citizens. These know that they have here no abiding city, they look for one therefore above, not Henochia, but Heaven, "whose builder and maker is God." {#Heb 11:10}

Ver. 18. And unto Enoch was born Irad, &c.] Cain had a numerous offspring. Seven generations of his are here reckoned. Seth is not yet born, that we hear of. The wicked "are full of children, and leave the rest of their substance to their babes." {#Ps 17:14} "They send forth their little ones like a flock, and their children dance." They dance to "the timbrel and harp," (as here Jabal and Jubal did,) but they suddenly turn into hell, and so their merry dance ends in a miserable downfall. {#Job 21:11-13}

Ver. 19. Lamech took unto himself.] As his own lust led him, not caring for consent of parents. And two wives, {a} as little caring for the command of God, that "two," and no more, "should be one flesh," {#Ge 2:24} yea, though he "had the residue of the spirit," and so could have made many wives for Adam, yet "made he but one," saith the prophet {b} {#Mal 2:15} And wherefore one? but that he might seek a godly seed. Solomon's polygamy was punished with barrenness. We read not of any son he had but one, and he none of the wisest neither, Rehoboam. This great king had but one son by many housefuls of wives, when many a poor man hath a house full of children by one wife. Erasmus tells a story of a poor English cripple, lame on both legs, that married a blind woman, and gave this reason, We shall the better agree, when neither can hit other in the teeth with our several defects and deformities. Nec fefellit hominem iudicium, saith he; it proved a happy match. They lived lovingly and cheerfully together, and God Almighty blessed them with a dozen lusty boys, that had not the least deformity about them. {c} Sardus tells us, that the old Britons would ten or twelve of them take one woman to wife. {d} Likely women were scarce among them. But yet that was better than the old Scots, of whom St Hierome reports, that they took no wives; but satisfied their lusts up and down as they wished, and wheresoever they liked, after the manner of brute creatures. {e} I have somewhere read, that not many hundreds of years since, they had a custom kept up among them, that the landlord might demand the first night of his tenant's wife, as a chief rent. And Mr Fox relates, {f} that the friars in Germany were grown to that height of impudence, as to require the tenth night of every man's wife, as a tithe due to them. Which to prevent, the Helvetians, when they received any new priest into their churches, they bargained with him before, to take his concubine, lest he should attempt any misuse of their wives and daughters. How much better were it, for the "avoiding of fornication, if every man of them had his own wife," saith Paul. {#1Co 7:2} Not so, not so, saith Cardinal Campeius; {g} for if comparison should be made, much greater offence it is, a priest to have a wife, than to have and keep at home many harlots; for they that keep harlots, saith he, as it is naught that they do, so do they acknowledge their sin; the other persuade themselves they do well, and so continue without repentance, or conscience of their fact. A fit reason for a carnal cardinal. Such another was his brother, Cardinalis Cremonensis, who after his stout replying in the Council of London, against the married estate of priests, exclaiming what a shameful thing it was to rise from the sides of a whore, to make Christ's body, the night following was shamefully taken with a notable whore. {h} This was bad enough, but that was worse in Johannes from Casa, Dean of the Pope's chamber, who so far forgot humanity and honesty, that he set forth a book in Italian metre, in commendation of Sodomitry, saying that he never used any other. {i} This might better have become a Turk, than a bishop. Sodomy in the Levant is not held a vice, so debauched they are grown. {j} The Turkish bashaws, besides their wives, whereof they have ten at least, each bashaw has as many, or likely more calamites, which are their serious loves. For their wives are used but to dress their meat, to laundress, and for reputation. {k} Only when the great Turk gives his daughter or sister to any bashaw to wife, it is somewhat otherwise. For he gives her at the same time a dagger, saying, I give you to this man to be your slave and bedfellow. If he is not loving, obedient, and dutiful to thee, I give you here this cunzhare or dagger to cut off his head. {l} Yet can she not forbid him to marry more wives "to vex her," {#Le 18:18} and fret her, as Peninnah did Hannah, {#ISa 1:6} yea, to make her to thunder, as the word here signifies: for Turks may take as many wives as they are able to maintain. Hence it is that in jealousy they exceed Italians, making their women go muffled all but their eyes; and not suffering them to go to church, or so much as look out of their own windows. {m}

Ver. 20. Adah bare Jabal.] Jabal, a good husband. Jubal, a merry Greek; whence the word iubilo in Latin, and our English jovial. Jabal, that dwelt in tents, and tended the herds, had Jubal to his brother, the father of hand and wind music. Jabal and Jubal, frugality and mirth, good husbandry and sweet content, dwell together. Virgil makes mention of a happy husbandman in his time, who

"Regum aequabat opes animis, seraque reversus Nocte domum, dapibus mensas onerabat inemptis."
- Georg.

Ver. 21. As handle the harp and organ.] He invented Musicam, mentis medicinam maestae. The word here rendered organ is in the Chaldee Paraphrast, a pipe. It imports loveliness and delight: for men do naturally love and delight in music. Ezekiel's hearers seemed to be much taken with his pulpit music, {#Eze 33:32} but proved at length like the Jassians in Strabo, who, delighted with the music of an excellent harper, ran all away as soon as the market bell rang, save only one deaf old man. These antediluvians likely were set all upon the merry mode, and not unlike the inhabitants of Tombutum in Africa, who are said to spend their whole time in piping and dancing.

Ver. 22. And Zillah bare Tubal-cain.] Perhaps the same that the poets call Vulcan. He was a cunning artificer in brass and iron. Tools they had before, and instruments of iron: how else could they have ploughed the accursed earth? But this man, artem iam inventam excoluit ornavitque, saith Junius; and is therefore called, a whetter or polisher of every artificer in brass and iron. They had the art of it before: but he added to their skill by his invention; he sharply and wittily taught smith's craft; and is therefore by the heathens feigned to be the god of smiths, says another interpreter. {a}

Ver. 23. And Lamech said unto his wives.] Who, it seems, were troublesome to him with their domestic discords, and led him a discontented life. He therefore gives them to understand in this set speech, what a man he is, if molested by them or any other, and what slaughters he can make, if provoked by an adversary. I would slay a man, if but wounded, &c. This revenge he counts manhood, which indeed is doghood rather. So Alexander Phereus consecrated his javelin, wherewith he slew his uncle Polyphron, as a monument of his manhood, and called it his god Tychon. {a} So Sulla caused it to be registered in the public records, {b} that he had proscribed, and put to death, four thousand and seven hundred Romans. So Stokesly, Bishop of London, comforted himself upon his deathbed with this, that in his time he had burned fifty heretics, as he called them. {c} Is not this to "glory in their shame, and to have damnation for their end?" {#Php 3:19} Is it not the devil which sets men working to do thus, as he did Saul to seek David's life, and Lamech to domineer in this sort over his wives, seeking so to repress their strife? A certain Indian coming into a house of the New English where a man and his wife were brawling, and they bidding him sit down, he was welcome: he answered, he would not stay there; "Hobomack," that is, the devil, was there; and so departed. {d}

Ver. 24. If Cain shall be avenged sevenfold, &c.] Boastful Lamech brags, and goes on to outdare God himself. For it is as if he should say, If God will take vengeance on them that condemn him, why may not I on those that condemn me, wives or other? Nay, though God will forgive evils against him, yet will not I evils against me. I'll have the odds of him, seventy to seven; so Junius interprets it. A desperate expression, and somewhat like that of Pope Julius III., above mentioned, in the last note upon the former chapter; whereunto may here be added, {a} that the same Pope being forbidden by his physician to eat swine's flesh, as being harmful and bad for his gout, he called for his steward in a great rage, and said, Bring me my pork flesh, al despito di Dio , in despite of God. O wretch!

Ver. 25. She bare a son, and called, &c.] Sic uno avulso, non deficit alter Aureus .{ a} Dead bones may revive, and out of the ashes of a phoenix another phoenix spring. Iana iacet phoenix nato phoenice ,& c. The two witnesses that were killed, received the Spirit of life from God again. {#Re 11:11} John Baptist reviveth in our Saviour (qui huic succenturiatus est), and Stephen in Paul; John Huss in Luther (the goose in the swan); and the suppressed Waldenses in the Protestants. The Papists gave out that when Luther died, all his sect would die with him: and when Queen Elizabeth's head was laid, we should have strange work in England. A false Jesuit in a scandalous libel published it, {b} that she wished that she might, after her death, hang a while in the air, to see what striving would be for her kingdom. But she both lived and died with glory; her rightful successor came in peaceably, not a dog moving his tongue at him; the true reformed religion was established, and is hitherto maintained among us, evil the malice of Rome and hell. It was the legacy left us by our ancestors: the blood of those blessed martyrs was the seed of our Church, of which I may say, as he of his city,

Obruit hostiles illa ruina domos.* ”

When the devil and his imps had got Abel into his grave, and saw Adam without another in his place for a hundred and thirty years' space, or near upon, what a deal of joy was there, think we, among them, and sending of gifts! But God in due time sets up a Seth, instead of Abel, and so cuts the devil's comb, confutes his confidence. He will have a Church, when all's done. The Pope {c} could tell the Turk so much in a message, “ *Niteris incassum Christi submergere navem:

Ver. 26. Then began men to call upon, &c.] Publicly, and in solemn assemblies to serve the Lord; and to make a bold and wise profession of his name: "shining as lamps" {a} amidst that "perverse" generation of irreligious Cainites, "who said unto God, Depart from us," &c. {#Job 22:17} This Job speaks there of these wicked, "which were cut down out of time, their foundation was overflown with the flood." {#Job 22:16} The Jews translate it to this day, Then began men to fall from God; as Maimonides, their most learned rabbi, observes.

Ver. 1. This is the book of the generations.] Sepher, {a} a ciphering of their names, acts, and accidents; that we might know, first, who were Christ's progenitors; secondly, by whom the Church was continued; thirdly, how long the old world lasted, viz., one thousand six hundred and fifty-six years. {b} Whence some have grounded a conjecture, that the year of Christ one thousand six hundred and fifty-six will bring forth some strange alteration in the world. Others think the world will be then at an end, and they base this on this chronogram, MunDi ConfLagratIo.

In the likeness of God made he him.] This is much inculcated, that it may be much observed, and we much humbled, that have parted with so fair a patrimony; striving as much as may be to recover it in Christ, who being "the express image of his Father's person," {c} is both apt and able to renew that lost image of God in us, by his merit and Spirit, by his value and virtue.

Ver. 2. Male and female created he them.] The Jews at this day have base conceits of women: as that they have not so divine a soul as men; that they are of a lower creation, made only for the propagation and pleasure of man, &c. {a} And therefore they suffer them not to enter the synagogue, but appoint them a gallery without. Thus "they err, not knowing the Scriptures." {#Mt 22:29} {See Trapp on "Ge 2:22"}

{a} Blunt's Voyage, p. 122.

Ver. 3. Adam lived one hundred and thirty years, and begat.] This was a great trial to his faith, to wait so long for a better issue, when the Cainites spread abroad, erected cities, and perhaps meditated monarchies.

After his own image.] Corruptus corruptum. For "who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean?" says Job. {#Job 14:4} "That which is born of the flesh is flesh," {#Joh 3:6} saith our Saviour, and we can say no better of it. This is hard to persuade men to; for each one is apt to think his own penny as good silver: and a dead woman will have four to carry her forth, as the proverb has it. The Pharisee, bad enough though he be, yet is very braggardly of his good estate to Godward: And Novatus cries out, Non habeo, Domine, quod mihi ignoscas . How much better St Augustine, Ego admisi, Domine, unde tu damnare potes me; sed non amisisti, unde tu salvare potes me . One has destroyed me, but from you is my help—my safety here, and salvation hereafter. Lord I am hell, but you are heaven, as that martyr ^{a} once said, &c. “One depth called upon another”; ^{#Ps 42:7} the depth of my misery, the depth of thy mercy. Heaven denies me; earth groans under me; hell gapes for me: help, Lord, or your servant perishes. "Wash me thoroughly from my iniquity, and purge me from my sin"; ^{#Ps 51:2} whether that imputed to me, inherent in me, or issuing from me.

^{a} Bp. Hooper.

Ver. 4. He begat sons and daughters.] Philo and Epiphanius give him twelve sons; Beda thirty sons, and as many daughters.

Ver. 5. Nine hundred and thirty years.] Till the fifty-sixth year of the patriarch Lamech. In all which time he doubtless instructed his good nephews in all those great things which himself had learned from God’s mouth, and “proved” in his own experience "what that good, and holy, and acceptable will of God was". ^{#Ro 12:2} Moreover, out of his mouth, as out of a fountain, flowed whatsoever profitable doctrine, discipline, skill, and wisdom is in the world.

And he died.] This is not in vain so often iterated in this chapter; for there is in us by nature a secret conceit of immortality, and we can hardly be beaten out of it. That all must die, every man will yield; but that he may live yet, a day longer at least, there is none but hopes. We can see death in other men’s brows, but not in our own bosoms. It must make forcible entry, and break in violently. God must “cut” men “in twain,” ^{διχοτομησει, #Mt 24:51} and tear their souls from their bodies, ere they will yield to die. The best are too backward, and would not “be unclothed, but clothed upon,” ^{#2Co 5:4} if they might have their will. Moses himself prays, “Lord, teach us so to number our days, that we may apply,” or, as the Hebrew hath it, that we may cause “our hearts” to come “to wisdom.” ^{#Ps 90:12} Cause them to come, whether they will or not; for naturally they hang off, and would not come to any such bargain. How needful is it therefore to be told us, that Adam died, that Seth, Enos, and Cainan died, &c.; that this may be as a handwriting on the wall, to tell us that we must also die, and come to judgment.

Ver. 6. And begat Enos,] that is, Sorry-man, which was appellatio a dolore. Nomen cure re convenit. Homo enim est animal aerumnis plenum, imo ipsa aerumna, et calamitas, ut est apud Herodotum {See Trapp on "Ge 5:9"}.

Ver. 7. Eight hundred and seven years.] {See Trapp on "Ge 5:20"}

Ver. 8. And he died.] {See Trapp on "Ge 5:5"} Omnes una manet nox: Et calcanda semel via lethi {a} Death is the way of all flesh, saith David: of all the world, says Joshua. {#Jos 23:14} On this condition came I into the world, said Socrates, {b} that I might go out again, when called for.

Ver. 9. Enos begat Cainan.] Enos, that is, Sorry-man, begat Cainan, that is, A man of sorrows. Thus the fathers, though long-lived, were not unmindful of their mortality and misery.

Ver. 10. And begat sons and daughters.] Epiphanius in his Leptogenesis, as he calls it, will tell you how many: but you are not bound to believe him.

Ver. 11. And he died.] This final account is given in of them all, though never so dear to God. And it puts me in mind of a speech of Theodosius the good emperor; -It {a} is no news that a man dies: but that a man, dead in trespasses and sins, rises again by repentance to a life well pleasing to God, this is a marvellous matter, a just wonder. {See Trapp on "Ge 5:5"} {See Trapp on "Ge 5:8"}

Ver. 12. And begat Mahalaleel,] i.e., Praised be God; a good name; imminding him of a good duty. God is to be incessantly praised for his excellency, thanked for his benefits. "Thou art good, and doest good."

Ver. 13. And begat sons and daughters.] Everything is generative of itself, says the philosopher. {a} And, that man is unworthy to be born, of whom another is not born, says the orator.

Ver. 15. And begat Jared,] i.e., One that is going down, sc., to the dust of death: for, to live, is but to lie a-dying: every day we yield somewhat to death, and a man's cradle stands in his grave.

Ver. 16. And begat.] {See Trapp on "Ge 5:13}

Ver. 17. And he died.] Mors, omnibus finis, multis remedium, quibusdam votum . It was so doubtless to these holy patriarchs, more willing to die, than ever they had been to dine.

Ver. 18. And he begat Enoch,] i.e., Dedicated, and catechised. Consecrated he was to God, and accordingly brought up "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." {#Eph 6:8} What wonder then that he became eminent and outstanding in holiness!

Ver. 19. And Jared lived after he begat Enoch.] He lived the longer, likely, for the great content he took in so good a son. Towardly and hopeful children do help to lengthen their parents' days. God therefore lengtheneth theirs, according to that "first commandment with promise." {#Eph 6:2} Or, if he take from them this long lease, he gives them, as he did Enoch, a freehold of a better value.

Ver. 20. Nine hundred sixty and two years.] Rabbi Livi citing Genebrardus, the longevity of the patriarchs was the work of providence, not the result of nature. Rabbi Levi, citante Genebrardo, longevitatem patriarcharum opus providentiae, non natarae appellat {a} Their children also, that they waited so long for, were not more the issue of their bodies, than of their faith.

Ver. 21. And begat Methuselah,] that is, Death's dart, or piercing death (death is a skilful archer, that never misseth the mark it shoots at); or, He once dead, in comes the dart, i.e., the deluge: and so it did, even in the very year of his death: though the Septuagint miscounts, and make him to live fourteen years after the flood.

Ver. 22. And Enoch walked with God,] i.e., he walked in the fear of the Lord, as the Chaldee here paraphraseth: and this he did without intermission, not for a time or two, but continually, constantly: he walked with God by a humble familiarity, and a holy conformity; as a man doth with his friend. To walk with God, before God, and after God, are much at one. {See Trapp on "Ge 5:24"}

Ver. 23. All the days of Enoch were three hundred sixty and five years.] So many years only lived Enoch as there be days in the year. But what he wanted in the shortening of his time, was made up in his son Methuselah, the longest living man. Besides that, God took him to a better place, transplanted {#So 6:2} {a} him, as it were out of the kitchen garden into his heavenly paradise; which was not more to his own benefit, than to the comfort of the other patriarchs that survived him, before the fear of death, and the crosses of life. Seth in Enoch (whatever discouragement they had in Abel's death) they had a hidden demonstration that "there is a reward for the righteous," and that it is not altogether in vain to walk with God.

Ver. 24. And Enoch walked with God.] And so "condemned the world": {#Heb 11:7} first, by his life; secondly, at his death. By his life, in that he kept a constant counter-motion to the corrupt courses of the times; not only not swimming down the stream with the wicked, but pronouncing God's severe judgment against them, even to the extreme curse of Anathema Maranatha, as St Jude tells us {#Jude 1:14} Secondly, by his death he condemned them: in that so strange a testimony of God's grace and glory, in his wonderful translation, did not affect and move them to amend their evil manners. The heathens had heard somewhat afar off, concerning this candidate of immortality, as the ancients call him, {a} and thence grounded their apotheoses. Eupolemon saith that their Atlas was Enoch, as their Janus was Noah. And how fitly are the Papists called heathens {b} by St John. {#Re 11:2} Since, besides their Atlas of Rome, on whose shoulders the whole Church, that new heaven, must rest, there was at Ruremund, in Gilderland, a play acted by the Jesuits, anno 1622, under the title of the "Apotheosis of St Ignatius." {c}

We used to call them poor souls, whom we pity: but a man may have a rich soul, in a poor condition. {#Re 2:9}

Ver. 26. And Methuselah lived.] But had the less joy of his longest life, because he lived in the very rust of that iron age; and so felt ultima senescentis mundi deliria , the utmost dotages of that decrepit old world.

Ver. 27. And all the days of Methuselah.] He lived longest of any, yet wanted thirty-one years of a thousand. Oecolampadius thinks there was a mystery in this, that they all died short of a thousand, which is a type of perfection; {a} to teach us, says he, that live we never so long here, and grow we never so fast in grace, we cannot possibly be perfect, till we get to heaven. Enoch lived long in a little time; and foreseeing the flood, named his son Methuselah; that is to say, he dies, and the dart (or flood) comes. And so it happened; for no sooner was his head laid, but in came the flood. “The righteous are taken away from the evil to come.” {#Isa 57:1} And their death is a sad presage of an imminent calamity. Hippo could not be taken while Augustine lived, nor Heidelberg while Paraeus. Semen sanctum statumen terrae {b} {#Isa 6:13} The holy seed upholdeth the state. Absque stationibus non staret mundus {c} “The innocent shall deliver the island, and it is delivered by the pureness of thy hands,” {#Job 22:30} whereas, “one sinner destroyeth much good.” {#Ec 9:18} Ambrose is said to have been “the walls of Italy.” {d} Stilico the earl said, that his death did threaten destruction to that country.

Ver. 29. This same shall comfort us.] Herein a figure of Christ. And Peter Martyr thinks that Lamech was in hope that this son of his would have been the Christ. A pardonable error, proceeding from an earnest desire of seeing his day, whom their souls loved, and longed for: “Greeting ^{a} the promise afar off,” ^{#Heb 11:13} and “waiting for the consolation of Israel.” ^{#Lu 2:25}

Ver. 30. Five hundred, &c.] And yet if one had asked old Lamech, as he in Gerson did an old Frenchman, Quot annos habes ? How many years old are you? he might have answered as there, Annos non habeo , I reckon not upon any years: but death has avoided me these five hundred and odd years.

Ver. 31. And he died.] Death is that mistress of the world that will not be courted, nor yet cast off, by any. Hesiod may tell of Nectar and Ambrosia, the sweet wines of the gods, that will make men immortal. Pliny may prattle of the herb Moly, which hath virtue to make an old man young. Historians may write of certain fortunate islands where men live to an incredible age. But where lives that man that sees not death at length? ^{See Trapp on "Ge 5:5"} ^{See Trapp on "Ge 5:8"}

^{See Trapp on "Ge 5:17"}

Ver. 32. And Noah begat Shem, Ham, and Japheth.] Twenty years had he heard from God, that the world should be destroyed, before he had any child. Here was “the faith and patience of this saint.” ^{#Re 13:10} At length he hath Japheth first; though Shem be first named, because he was in dignity preferred before his brother, to be grandfather to the Messiah. Now any relation to Christ ennobleth either place or person. If it were an honour to Mark to have been Barnabas’s sister’s son, what is it then to be related to the Son of God? Bethlehem, where he was born, though it were least, says Micah; yet it was not the least, says Matthew, among all the cities of Judah, because out of it should come Christ the Governor. ^{#Mic 5:2 Mt 2:6}

Ver. 1. When men began to multiply.] Not good men only, but bad men too; who therefore took them more wives than one, that they might multiply amain. A numerous offspring is no sure sign of God’s special favour. It is well observed, that when God promised children as a blessing, he said, “The wife should be as the vine, and the children as olive plants”;—two ^{#Ps 128:3} of the best fruits, the one for cheering the heart, the other for clearing the face; ^{#Ps 104:15 Jud 9:9,13}

the one for sweetness, the other for fatness. "Blessed is the man that hath his quiver full of such, as are the arrows of a strong man." {#Ps 127:4,5} Hence it follows, that they must have more in them than nature; for arrows are not arrows by growth, but by art: so they must be such children, the knottiness of whose nature is refined and reformed, and made smooth by grace. This workmanship of God in the hearts and lives of children, is like the engraving of a king's "palace," or the "polished corners" of the temple. {#Ps 144:12} This preserves "Jacob from confusion, and his face from waxing pale":—this makes religious parents to "sanctify God's name," even to "sanctify the Holy One," and with singular encouragement from "the God of Israel." {#Isa 29:22,23} It never goes well with the Church, but when the son marries the mother. {#Isa 62:5}

Ver. 2. That the sons of God saw the daughters.] Sons of God; such as had called themselves by his name, {#Ge 4:26} his peculiar professant people, called sons of Jehovah, {#De 14:1} yea, his firstborn, and so higher than the kings of the earth. {#Ps 89:27} Hence, after mention made of the four monarchies, a greater than them all succeeds; and that is the "kingdom of the saints of the Most High"; {#Da 7:17,18} saints at large he means; all "that have made a covenant with him by sacrifice". {#Ps 50:5} Now we read of sacrificing Sodomites; {#Isa 1:10} "sinners in Sion"; {#Isa 33:14} profligate professors; {#Mt 7:23} who, though called "Israel," yet are to God "as Ethiopians". {#Am 9:7} Such were these sons of God.

Saw the daughters of men that they were fair.] Beauty is a dangerous bait, and lust is sharpsighted. It is not safe gazing on a fair woman. How many have died of the wound in the eye! No one means has so enriched hell as beautiful faces. Take heed our eyes are not windows of wickedness and loopholes of lust. Make "a covenant with them" as Job; {#Job 31:1} pray against the abuse of them with David; {#Ps 119:37} and curb them from forbidden objects, as Nazianzen, who had learned τούς σφθαλμούς σωφρονίζειν, to nurture his eyes, as himself tells us. {See note on "Ge 3:6"}

They took them wives.] Of their own heads, without God's licence, or parents' consent; as Esau did; and of all which they chose, that is, that they liked and loved. Thus, as some marry by their ears, upon mere hearsay; others, by their fingers' ends, for money; so these gallants married by their eyes. They were led by the "lust of their hearts, and sight of their eyes," {#Pr 31:30} as Solomon's young nobleman; not considering that "favour is deceitful, beauty vanity"; and that many a woman is like Helen without, but Hecuba within, or an earthen "potsherd covered with silver dross". {#Pr 26:23} {a}

Jerom.

Ver. 3. My Spirit shall not always strive,] that is, I'll consult no longer, but resolve to ruin them, as some gloss it; or, I'll pull the sword out of the sheath, the soul out of the body, as others gather out of the Hebrew word {a} here used. But they do best, in my mind, that sense it thus: My Spirit—whereby I hitherto "went and preached," by Noah and other patriarchs, to those "spirits" (once in pleasure, now) "in prison," {#Ec 11:9 1Pe 3:18,19} but prevailed not—shall not always strive with perverse men by preaching, disputing, convincing, in the mouths of my servants, whom I have sent unto them; nor in their own minds and consciences, by inward checks and motions, which they have made no good use of. Delicata res est Spiritus Dei. Grieve it once, and you may drive it away for ever. It "bloweth where it listeth," and will not be at your whistle.

For that he also is flesh.] He is therefore the worse, because he ought to be better, {b} God expects singular things from his people, and takes it ill when they are "carnal and walk as men". {#1Co 3:3} They should be higher than others by head and shoulders, as Saul was; and all that is in them, or comes from them, should be as the fruit of the trees in Paradise, fair to the eye, and sweet to the taste.

Yet his days shall be a hundred and twenty years.] It shall be so long ere I destroy. This longsuffering of God is celebrated by St Peter, {#1Pe 3:19,20 2Pe 2:5} and well it may; for had he not been God, and not man, he could never have held his hands so long. Neither indeed did he; for so extreme was the provocation, that he cut them off twenty years of this promised count: that all the earth might "know" to their woe his "breach of promise". {#Nu 14:34}

Ver. 4. There were giants.] Gigantes, quasi Γηγενεις, earth-sprung. They were "of the earth, they spake of the earth," {#Joh 3:31} and the earth heard them; heard them, I say, and fell before them; as the beasts of the field do before the roaring lion. Hence they are called in Hebrew, Nephilim; such as being fallen from God, fell upon men, {#Job 1:15} and by fear and force, made others fall before them. Thus they sought to renown and raise themselves, by depressing others, and doing violence. But this was not the way; for now they lie shrouded in the sheet of shame. To "do worthily in Ephrata," is to "be famous in Bethlehem". {#Ru 4:11} To be patiently perseverant "in well-doing," is to "seek for glory and honour"; yea, to attain "immortality and eternal life" {#Ro 2:7}

Ver. 5. The wickedness of man was great in the earth.] Which was now grown so foul, that God saw it but time to wash it with a flood; as he shall shortly do again with streams of fire. He destroyed the world then with water, for the heat of lust; he shall destroy it with fire, for the coldness of love, as saith Ludolfu. {a}

And that every imagination of the thoughts.] Omne figmentum cogitationum :The whole fiction or "every creature of the heart," as the apostle has it, {#Heb 4:13} speaking there of the thoughts and intents of the heart. There is a general disorderliness; the whole frame is out of frame. {b} The understanding dark as hell, and yet proud as the devil. The will cross and overthwart. The memory slippery and waterish to receive and retain good impressions; but of a marble firmness to hold fast that which is evil. The affections crooked and preposterous. The very tongue a world of wickedness, what then the heart? Si trabes in oculo, strues in corde . The operations thereof are evil, only evil; "every day evil," saith this text; and assigneth it for the source of the old world's wickedness. David also resolves his adultery and murder into this pravity of his nature, as the principle of it; {#Ps 51:5} so doth Job; {#Job 40:4} Paul; {#Ro 7:24} Isaiah {#Isa 6:5} The whole Church {#Isa 64:6} cries out, "Unclean, unclean," {#Le 13:45} and, "All we like sheep have gone astray". {#Isa 53:6} Now, as no creature is more apt to wander, so none less able to return, than a sheep. "The ox knoweth his owner, the ass his master's crib"; {#Isa 1:3} the very swine accustomed to the trough, if he go abroad, yet at night will find the way home again: not so the sheep. Lo! such is man. Quintilian, therefore, was quite out when he said, "It is more marvel that one man sinneth, than that all men should live honestly; sin is so against the nature of man." But he erred, not knowing the Scripture. For "do ye think," saith St James, alluding to this text, "that the scripture saith in vain, The spirit that dwelleth in us lusteth to envy?" {#Jas 4:5} The civil man's nature is as bad as the worst, -not changed, but chained up. Truly said Cicero, Cum primum nascimur in omni continuo pravitare versamur . We are no sooner born than buried in a bog of wickedness.

{b} All the thoughts extensively are intensively only evil, and protensively continually.

Ver. 6. And it repented the Lord, &c., and it grieved him.] These things are spoken of God ανθρωποπαθως, after the manner of men; but must be taken and understood θεοσπρεπως, as it beseemeth God. When repentance is attributed to God, saith Mr Perkins, it noteth only the alteration of things and actions done by him, and no change of his purpose and secret decree, which is immutable. God's repentance, saith another learned divine, {a} is not a change of his will, but of his work. Repentance with man is the changing of his will; repentance with God is the willing of a change. Mutatio rei, non Dei; effectus, non affectus; facti, non confilii .

Ver. 7. I will destroy man.] See here the venemous and mischievous nature of sin. It causeth God to make a world, and again to unmake it: it sets him against man his masterpiece, and makes him, though he be φιλανθρωπος, not only to devise, but to delight in the destruction of his own creature, to "mock at," and make merry in his "calamity," {#Pr 1:26} to deliver "the beloved of his soul into the hands of the destroyer". {#Jer 12:7} Time was, when Christ, being by at the creation, "rejoiced in this habitable part of God's earth, and his delights were with the sons of men". {#Pr 8:31} But since the fall, it is far otherwise; for he is "of more pure eyes than to behold sin" {#Hab 1:13} with patience. He hates it worse than he hates the devil: for he hates the devil for sin's sake, and not sin for the devil's sake. Now the natural and next effect of hatred is revenge. Hence he resolves, "I will destroy man."

Both man and beast, the creeping thing, &c.] Why, "what have those poor sheep done?" {#2Sa 24:17} They are all undone by man's sin, and are, for his punishment, to perish with him, as they were created for him. This is a piece of that bondage they are still subject to; and grievously groan under, waiting deliverance. {#Ro 8:21,22}

Ver. 8. But Noah found grace.] Because in covenant with God; who of himself was a child of wrath, and saved by grace only, though "just and perfect in his generation." The mercy seat was no larger than the ark; to show that the grace of God extends no further than the covenant. As all out of the ark were drowned, so all out of the covenant are damned.

Ver. 9. Noah was a just man.] By a twofold justice: 1. imputed; 2. imparted. By the former he was justified; by the latter, sanctified: and note, that he found grace in God's eyes, before he was either of these; for grace is the foundation of all our felicity, and comprehends all blessings, as manna is said to have done all good tastes,

Perfect in his generation.] At best in those worst times, which is a singular commendation; and perfect, that is upright: aiming at perfection, willing {θελωντες, #Heb 13:18} in all things to please God; and yet not more desiring to be perfect, than hating to seem only to be so. Or, Noah was perfect, compared to that sinful generation; which yet gloried in the title of the sons of God, and children of the Church. But was not Judas called "friend," and Dives "son?" {#Lu 16:25} Hath not many a ship been known by the name of "safeguard" and "goodspeed," which yet hath dashed upon the rocks, or miscarried by-pirates? External privileges profit not, where the heart is not upright, but increase wrath. It was an aggravation to Solomon's sin, that God "had appeared unto him twice"; {#1Ki 11:9} and that he had been timely forewarned by his mother to beware of wine and women, {#Pr 31:3,4} both which he was afterwards, nevertheless, most inordinately addicted to. {#Ec 2:1}

Ver. 10. Shem, Ham, and Japheth.] {See Trapp on "Ge 5:32"}

Ver. 11. The earth also was corrupt before God.] Or, rotten, putrid, and stank again. Sin is an offence to all God's senses; yea, to his very soul, as he complains in #Isa 1:1-16. Oh that it were so to ours! then would we not hide it under our tongues, as a child doth sugar, and harbour it in our hearts; yea, let it eat of our meat, and drink of our cup, and lie in our bosoms, as the poor man's lamb did in Nathan's parable. {#2Sa 12:3} Lust was but a stranger to David, as the prophet there intimates {#2Sa 12:4} At other times, and when himself, "I hate vain thoughts," saith he, {#Ps 119:113} yea, "every false way," {#Ps 119:104} as the vomit of a dog, as the devil's excrements, as the putrefaction of a dead soul, dead in trespasses; dead and rotten, as here, stinking (τεταρταιος), worse before God, than Lazarus was or could be, after he had lain four days in the grave. {#Joh 11:39}

Ver. 12. All flesh had corrupted his way.] General defection precedes general destruction; as here all sorts and sexes were fallen from God. All kinds of sins were common among them. In the family, promiscuous lusts, unlawful marriages, &c. In the state, tyranny, violence, injustice. In the Church, contempt of God's word; abuse of his patience to presumption; of his bounty to security in sin. For they ate, they drank, they married, they planted, they builded, &c. And all this they did constantly and pleasantly, passing from eating to drinking; from drinking to marrying (for, Venus in vinis, and gluttony, is the gallery that wantonness walks through); from marrying to planting, for the use of posterity, as St Luke sweetly sets forth by an elegant rhetorical figure {a} All this they did, and God was silent, {#Ps 22:2} therefore their hearts grew fat as brawn, and they knew nothing, saith our Saviour, nor would know, till the very day that the flood came. Into such a dead lethargy were they cast by their sins; which were therefore grown ripe, and ready for the sickle.

Ver. 13. The end of all flesh is come before me.] I will surely, and swiftly (certissime citissimeque) destroy them. A like threatening there is used in #Eze 7:2,3,6, against Israel, when once their sins were full ripe, and "hanged but for mowing," as we say: "The end is come," "is come," "is come," and so some ten or twelve times, "Is come, is come," q. d., destruction is at next door by, and Noah must know it too. Not by his skill in astrology, as Berosus belies him, but by divine premonition. For "shall I hide from" Noah, from "Abraham," "that thing which I do"? {#Ge 18:17} No surely, they shall know all: they shall be both of God's court and counsel For "the secret of the Lord is with them that fear him" {#Ps 25:14} And "the Lord will do nothing" of this nature, "but he will first reveal it unto his servants the prophets". {#Am 3:7} And even to this day, the more faithful and familiar we are with God, so much the sooner and better do we foresee his judgments, and can foreshow them to others; as those that are well acquainted with men, know by their looks and gestures that which strangers understand not, but by their actions: As finer tempers are more sensible of the changes of weather, &c.

I will destroy them.] I will corrupt them, -so the Hebrew hath it, -I will punish them in kind; pay them in their own coin; corrupt them from the earth, as they have corrupted themselves in the earth, which also now is burdened with them, and cries to me for a vomit to spue them out.

Ver. 14. Make thee an ark.] Or chest, or coffin. And indeed by the description here set down, the ark, in shape, was like to a coffin for a man's body, six times so long as it was broad, and ten times so long as it was high: and so fit to figure out, saith an interpreter, {a} Christ's death and burial, and ours with him, by mortification of the old man: as the apostle applies this type to baptism, {#1Pe 3:20,21} whereby we are become "dead" and "buried with Christ". {#Ro 6:3,4,6} The poets' ship, "Argos," may have reference to this ark.

Ver. 16. A window shalt thou make.] The ark had little outward light; so the Church, till she become triumphant. There could not but be much stench among all those creatures, though shut up in several rooms; so here, there is much annoyance to those that have their "senses exercised to discern good and evil". {#Heb 5:14} Compare the estate of Prince Charles in his queen-mother's womb with his condition at full age, in all the glory of his father's court; there is a broad difference. And it may fitly resemble, saith one, {a} the difference of our present and future estate; while the Church doth here travail of us, we are pent up in dark cloisters, and annoyed with much stench of sin, both in ourselves and others; but when we come to heaven, we shall see and enjoy the light of life, our feet shall be as hinds' feet, upon the everlasting mountains.

{a} Bain's Letter,

Ver. 17. And behold I, even I.] Verba stomachantis, &c., confirmantis veritatem comminationis suae. Abused mercy turns into fury. God will not alway serve men for a sinning stock. Crudelem medicum intemperans ager facit. {a}

Every thing that is in the earth shall die.] A dismal doom; and God is now absolute in his threatening, because he will be resolute in his execution. Oh, tremble and sin not; while others sin and tremble not. "Kiss the Son, lest he be angry"; {#Ps 2:12} "Who knoweth the power of his anger? Surely according to our fear, is his wrath". {#Ps 90:11} It is a just presage and desert of ruin, not to be warned. God hath hanged up the old world in gibbets, as it were, for our admonition. Worthily are they made examples, that will not take them. Who pities the second captain, consumed by fire with his company, {#2Ki 1:11,12} since he had a fair warning, but would not beware by it? "Behold the day of the Lord cometh, that shall burn as an oven," {#Mal 4:1} This last day was foretold by Enoch, {#Jude 1:14} before the deluge was by Noah. Longer it is before it comes, but shall be more terrible when it is come.

Ver. 18. Thou and thy sons.] Yet Ham, soon after, degenerated: for the present he concealed his wickedness from men; from God he could not. He bears with hypocrites in his visible Church for a season, till the time of separation. In area nobiscum esse possunt, in horreo non possunt, {a} "He will thoroughly purge his floor". {#Mt 3:12} "The Canaanite shall not be in the land any longer"; nor "the unclean spirit". {#Zec 13:2,14:21} O foelicem illam dieculam !

Two of every sort,] i.e., Two at least: for of clean creatures (fit for sacrifice) {b} there were more.

{a} Augustin.

{b} Rab. Solom.

Ver. 20. Two of every sort shall come unto thee.] "For they are all thy servants," saith David; {#Ps 119:91} they wait upon thy word. This Noah might make good use of; and did, no doubt. See how sequacious these poor creatures are to God their centurion. If he bid them come, they come; if go, they go. And shall not I obey God, and follow his call, be there never so many lions in my way?

Ver. 21. Take thou unto thee of all food.] God could have kept them alive without either food or ark. But he will have us serve his providence, in use of lawful means; and so to trust him, as that we do not tempt him.

Ver. 22. Thus did Noah, according to all, &c.] The wicked world could not flout him out of his faith; but that "moved with fear," {#Heb 11:7} he preacheth, and buildeth, and finisheth; every stroke upon the ark being a real sermon (as Nazianzen hath it) to forewarn them to flee from the wrath to come; {a} which yet they did not, -no, not the very shipwrights that made the ark, -but were all buried together, in one universal grave of waters.

{a} He preached without preaching, saith Basil of Selucia.

Ver. 1. For thee have I seen righteous before me.] Not only before men, as Pharisees, {#Lu 16:15} and civil justiciaries, {#Ro 2:29} but before me who see the inside, and love "truth in the hidden man of the heart". {#Ps 51:6 1Pe 3:5} And here Noah's sincerity prevailed with God for his safety, as did likewise Lot's, whom God hid in Zoar; and Abram's, to whom God was a shield to save him from the deadly thrusts of destruction, when he pursued the four kings and foiled them, because he "walked before him, and was upright." {#Ge 15:1 14:15} So true is that of Solomon, "He that walketh uprightly, walketh safely," {#Pr 10:9} as if he were in a tower of brass, or town of war. And again, "In the fear of the Lord is strong confidence, and his children have a place of refuge". {#Pr 14:26} The old Rock is still ready to relieve them. {#Isa 26:3}

In this generation.] Called by St Peter, "a world of ungodly ones," {#2Pe 2:5} far worse, no doubt, than those in Enoch's days. The greater praise was it to Noah, that, by a holy antiperistasis, he kindled from their coldness, and became nothing the worse, but much the better (as it is the nature of true goodness) by their oppositions. It was an invincible faith, whereby he both conquered the world and "condemned" it. What else could have carried him over so many difficulties, as he must needs encounter? Well might the apostle say, "By faith he prepared an ark". {#Heb 12:7} For if he had been led by sense, he would have fled as far as Jonah did, ere ever he had gone about it.

Ver. 2. Of every clean beast thou shalt take by sevens.] Three pair for generation, and a single one for sacrifice, after the flood was past. #Ge 8:20 God must have a share; and good reason. But that two only of a sort, of the unclean hurtful creatures were preserved, note his fatherly providence. To this day we see, though sheep and birds be so killed up for man's use, yet there are far more of them, than of other unserviceable or cruel creatures. Besides, the weaker creatures go in herds together, the stronger and more savage go alone. For if they should go in multitudes, no man nor beast could stand before them. This you shall find set down to your hand. #Job 37:8 Ps 104:17-30 Ammianus Marcellinus writeth, "that in Chaldea there are a huge number of lions, which were like enough to devour up both men and beasts throughout the country. But withal, he saith, that by reason of the store of water and mud thereof, there breed yearly an innumerable company of gnats, whose property is to flee into the eye of the lion, as being a bright and orient thing, where, biting and stinging the lion, he teareth so fiercely with the claws, that he puts out his own eyes; and by that means many are drowned in the rivers, others starve for want of prey, and many the more easily killed by the inhabitants. Bodin ^{a} telleth us, that the wolf never seeth his sire, his dam, nor his young: for that the herd of wolves set upon, and killeth that wolf, which by the smell they perceive to have coupled with the she wolf; which unless they did, what a deal of mischief would be done by them everywhere among cattle!

Ver. 3. Of fowls also.] Such as are of clean kinds, as R. Solomon senseth it. The eagle and the lion were not for sacrifice; like as were the lamb and the dove. "Not many mighty," &c. ^{#1Co 1:26}

Ver. 4. For yet seven days, &c.] God could have destroyed them by water, or otherwise, in a far shorter space: But, of his free grace, he gives them yet seven days further, and then rains upon the earth forty days, as, not willing that any should "eternally perish, but that all should come to repentance". ^{#2Pe 3:9} The Hebrew doctors are very injurious to Noah, because we read not that he prayed for the old world, but only took care of himself, and his own family, censuring him therefore of self-love and hard-heartedness. So they judge very uncharitably of those that perished in the flood; sending them all to hell, and wresting some scriptures thereunto; as, that in this present verse, God saith, he will destroy them, or blot them out; that is, say they, {a} out of the land of the world to come, the land of the living. I deny not, but many of their "spirits are in prison"; so saith St Peter. {#1Pe 3:19} But withal, in the next chapter, the same apostle tells us, that "for this cause the gospel was preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit". {#1Pe 4:6} Compare these words with those in #1Pe 3:18-20, and it will appear, the apostle speaks of these antediluvians. All were not saved that were in the ark, nor all damned, we may well think, that were out of it. Could they see their "foundation overflown with a flood," as the phrase is, {#Job 22:16} and "not lay for themselves a good foundation" by "laying hold on eternal life"? {#1Ti 6:19} St Ambrose conceiveth, that Noah was seven days in the Ark, before the flood came; that as God was six days in creating the world, and rested the seventh; so these perishing persons, admonished by the number of the days of the creation, might "remember their creator," {#Ec 12:1} and make their peace. Nunquam sero, si serio.

Ver. 5. And Noah did according unto all.] This "All," is a little word, but of large extent. He doth not his master's but his own will, that doth no more than himself will. A dispensatory conscience is an evil conscience. God cries to us, η ολωσ, η μη ολωσ. He will have universal obedience both for subject and object. (Quicquid propter Deum sit, aequaliter sit.) We must be entirely willing in all things to please God, or we utterly displease him. Herod did many things, and was not a button the better. Jehu's golden calves made an end of him, though he made an end of Baal's worship. He that doth some, and not "all God's will," with David, {θελήματα, #Ac 13:22} in desire and affection at least, doth but as Benhadad, recover of one disease, and die of another: yea, if he take not a better course for himself, he doth but take pains to go to hell. Then shall we not be ashamed, when we have respect, at least, to all God's commandments. {#Ps 119:6}

Ver. 6. And Noah was six hundred years old.] He was five hundred old when God first foretold the flood, and promised the old world one hundred and twenty years' respite: but, wearied out with their obstinacy in sin, he "cut the work short in righteousness," {#Ro

9:28} and brought the flood upon them twenty years sooner: as it is said of Christ's second coming, that, "for the elect's sake, those days shall be shortened"; {#Mt 24:22} so, for the contumacy of these ungodly sinners, their judgment was hastened. For God is not asleep, or gone a journey, as the prophet said of Baal, &c. {#1Ki 18:27}

Ver. 7. And Noah went in, and his sons, &c.] Not till he was compelled by the coming in of the flood, say the Jews: of no good will, but because there was no other remedy. Thus they belie the good old preacher. Let no man think much to be misjudged. Novit sapiens ad hoc scamma se productum, ut depuguet cure iis, qui maledictis aluntur, ut venenis capreae .{ a}

And his wife, and his sons' wives.] Here some have noted, that when they entered into the ark, the Holy Ghost puts the men by themselves, and the women by themselves; as, when they went out, God joined them together; to teach us, say they, that in a common calamity "those that have wives, must be as they that have none".

{#1Co 7:5,29}

{a} Jo. Wolverinus in Polymath.

Ver. 8. And of those that are not clean.] So a Doeg may set his foot as far within the sanctuary as a David: A "generation of vipers" may come to John's baptism, {#Mt 3:7} as well as better men. But as these beasts came unclean to the ark, and went thence as unclean; so do most men to the holy ordinances; which yet are the heavenly exchange betwixt God and his elect: they present duty, He confers mercy. "The just Lord is in the midst thereof; he will not do iniquity: ... but the unjust knoweth no shame"; {#Zep 3:5} he that is "filthy," will "be filthy still". {#Re 22:11}

Ver. 9. There went in two and two.] Of their own accord, by divine instinct. Noah was not put to the pains of hunting after them, or driving them in. Only he seems to have been six days in receiving and disposing of them in their various cells, and fetching in food. When God bids us do this or that, never stand to cast perils; but set upon the work, yield "the obedience of faith," and fear nothing. The creatures came in to Noah, without his care or cost. He had no more to do, but to take them in, and place them. The prophet alludes hereto in #Isa 11:6,7, -all bloodiness and rapine aside.

Ver. 10. The waters of the flood were upon the earth.] God is as faithful in his menaces, as in his promises. {#Zep 3:5} The wicked think them but wind, but shall feel them to be "fire". {#Jer 5:14} "Your fathers, where are they? Did not my word" (though never so much slighted) "lay hold upon them? And they returned" (that is, changed their minds, when they smarted) "and said, Like as the Lord thought to do unto us, so hath he dealt with us". {#Zec 1:5,6} Veratio dat intellectum. There wanted not those in the old world, that held all the threats of a flood to be in terrorem only; and, when they heard Noah thundering, put off all, as those in the gospel, with "God forbid". {#Lu 20:16} We cannot get men to believe that God is so just, or the devil so black, or sin so heavy, or hell so hot; till it hath even closed her mouth upon them. "The fool rageth and is confident," {#Pr 14:16} "passeth on and is punished," {#Pr 22:3} and will not be better advised. But what said the martyr? {a} They that tremble not in hearing, shall be crushed to pieces in feeling. God's wrath is such as none can avert or avoid.

Ver. 11. In the second month.] In April, as it is thought; then when everything was in its prime and pride; birds chirping, trees sprouting, &c., nothing less looked for than a flood; then God "shot at them with an arrow suddenly," {#Ps 64:7} as saith the psalmist. So shall "sudden destruction" {#1Th 5:3} come upon the wicked at the last day, when they least look for it. So the sun shone fair upon Sodom the same day wherein, ere night, it was fearfully consumed. What can be more lovely to look on, than the grain field a day before harvest, or a vineyard before the vintage?

All the fountains of the great deep, &c.] So, we live continually betwixt two deaths, the waters above and below us. {a} "Serve the Lord with fear."

Ver. 12. Forty days and forty nights.] This was God's last warning-piece, shot off at these secure sinners, to arouse them, if haply they would awake out of "the snare of the devil," who lay "taken captive by him, at his will": {#2Ti 2:26} God loveth to fore-signify, saith the heathen historian.

Ver. 13. In the self-same day.] Things are repeated, that they may be the better observed, and the greatness of the mercy the more acknowledged: that God should single out so few, and save them, &c.

Ver. 14. They, and every beast after his kind.] Laying aside all their antipathies, and hostilities, for self-preservation, in that common danger. Oh that men were thus wise! Some Roman generals did so; and some fathers of the Church: but few such now-a-days: Apparent rari, &c.

Ver. 15. And they went in unto Noah.] Of their own accord, by an instinct from God, whose hosts all creatures are called, for their (1.) number, (2.) order, (3.) obedience. {See Trapp on "Ge 6:20"}

Ver. 16. And the Lord shut him in.] A mean office, one would think, for God to shut the door after Noah. He could not well do it himself, the door doubtless being great and heavy, and others that were without would not do him so much service. God therefore doth it himself, and therefore it could not but be well done indeed. In a case of necessity, we need not question God's readiness to do us any good office, so long as we keep close to him in a holy communion. {#2Ch 15:2} In a letter of B. Hooper's, to certain good people, taken praying in Bow churchyard, and now in trouble, thus he writes; -"Read {a} the second chapter of Luke; there the shepherds that watched upon their sheep all night, as soon as they heard Christ was born at Bethlehem, by and by they went to see him. They did not reason, nor debate with themselves, who should keep the wolf from the sheep in the meanwhile; but did as they were commanded, and committed their sheep to him, whose pleasure they obeyed. So let us do. Now we be called, commit all other things to him that calleth us. He will take heed that all things shall be well: he will help the husband, comfort the wife, guide the servants, keep the house, preserve the goods: yea, rather than it shall be undone, he will wash the dishes, and rock the cradle. Cast therefore all your care upon God," &c. Thus he.

Ver. 17. It was lift up above the waters.] Afterwards it went upon the face of the waters, till, at last, the highest hills were covered with waters; the ark floating upon the surface of them, and not swallowed up by them. In reference whereunto David prays, "Let not the waterflood overflow me, neither let the deep swallow me up". {#Ps 69:15} The true Christian may be tossed on the waters of affliction, yea, doused over head and ears; and, as a drowning man, sink twice to the bottom; yet shall up again, if out of the deep he call upon God, as Jonah did: "Then I said, I am cast out of thy sight" (there you may take him up for dead), "yet I will look again toward thy holy temple" (there he revives and recovers comfort), {#Jon 2:4} Yea, though hell had swallowed up a servant of God into her bowels, yet it must, in despite of it, render him up, as the whale did Jonah: which, if he had lighted upon the mariners, would have devoured and digested twenty of them in less space.

Ver. 18. And the ark went upon the face of the waters.] Where now were those profane scoffers that asked what the old fool meant to build such a vessel? and whether, when he had made his ship, he would also make a sea for it to swim in?

Ver. 19. And all the high hills.] So high, some of them, that their tops are above the clouds and winds. And yet, as high as they were, they could not save those from the flood that fled to them. "Truly," might they say, "in vain is salvation hoped for from the mountains". {#Jer 3:23} Well for them, if, taught by their present distress and danger, they could go on, with the Church there, and say, "Surely in the Lord our God is the salvation of Israel." Happy storm, that beats us into the harbour!

Ver. 20. Fifteen cubits upward.] So, above any mountain. The Popish fable of Enoch, preserved alive in some high place of the earthly paradise, shall as soon be believed as the Jewish tale of Og (one of the old giants, say they), escaping death by riding astride upon the ark.

Ver. 21. And every man died.] Now these mockers behold that ark with envy, that erst they beheld with scorn; they wish themselves in the darkest corner of it, that lately laughed at it, and perhaps did what they could to hinder the finishing of it. {a} Yea, some, likely, to save them from drowning, caught at and clung as fast to the outside of the ark as Joab, for the same cause, did to the horns of the altar. But all in vain; for,

Ver. 22. All in whose nostrils was the breath of life died, of all that was in the dry land.] This last clause exempts fishes: though the Jews would needs persuade us that these also died; for that the waters of the flood were boiling hot. But rain-water uses not to be hot, we know; and therefore we reject this conceit as a Jewish fable.

Ver. 23. And every living substance was destroyed.] That all ensuing ages, considering this standing monument of God's wrath against sin (whence once it is become, as physicians say of some diseases, corruptio totius substantiae), might hear, and fear, and do no more so.

Ver. 24. A hundred and fifty days.] Reckoning from the first day of the falling of the rain {#Ge 7:11} unto the end of the sixth month: well might the poet say—

Οψε θεων αλευουσι μυλαι, αλευουσι δε λεπτον.

Chapter 8

Ver. 1. And God remembered Noah.] He might begin to think that God had forgotten him, having not heard from God for five months together, and not yet seeing how he could possibly escape. He had been a whole year in the ark; {a} and now was ready to groan out that doleful Usquequo Domine: Hast thou forgotten to be merciful? &c. But forgetfulness befalls not the Almighty. The butler may forget Joseph; and Joseph, his father's house: Ahasuerus may forget Mordecai; and the delivered city the poor man that by his wisdom preserved it. {#Ec 9:15} The Sichemites may forget Gideon; but "God is not unfaithful to forget your work and labour of love," saith the apostle. {#Heb 6:10} And there is "a book of remembrance written before him," saith the prophet, "for them that fear the Lord". {#Mal 3:16} A metaphor from kings that commonly keep a calendar or chronicle of such as have done them good service: as Ahasuerus, {#Es 6:1} and Tamerlane, {b} who had a catalogue of their names and good deserts, which he daily perused, oftentimes saying that day to be lost wherein he had not given them something. God also is said to have such a book of remembrance. Not that he hath so, or needeth to have; for all things, both past and future, are present with him: he hath the idea of them within himself, and every thought is before his eyes, so that he cannot be forgetful. But he is said to remember his people (so he is pleased to speak to our capacity) when he showeth his care of us, and makes good his promise to us. We also are said to be his "remembrancers" {#Isa 62:6} when we plead his promise, and press him to performance. Not that we persuade him thereby to do us good, but we persuade our own hearts to more faith, love, obedience, &c., whereby we become more capable of that good.

God made a wind.] So he worketh usually by means, though he needeth them not. But many times his works are, as Luther speaketh, in contrariis mediis. As here he assuageth the waters by a wind, which naturally "lifteth up the waves thereof," and enrageth them. {#Ps 107:25 Jon 1:4} God worketh by contraries, saith Nazianzen, {c} that he may be the more admired.

Though our ark be driven in a tempestuous sea, saith one, yet it shall neither sink nor split, whiles we sail in the thoughts of Almighty God.

Ver. 2. And the rain from heaven was restrained.] These four keys, say the Rabbis, God keeps under his own belt: 1. Of the womb; 2. Of the grave; 3. Of the rain; 4. Of the heart. "He openeth, and no man shutteth; he shutteth and no man openeth". {#Re 3:7}

Ver. 3. And the waters returned continually.] Or, hastily (Heb., בּוּשׁוּ דְלוּזָה). In going and returning; or, heaving and shoving, with all possible speed to return to their place, at God's appointment. See a like cheerfulness in God's servants. {#Zec 8:21 Isa 9:8 Ps 110:3}

Ver. 4. Mountains of Ararat.] On the tops of the Gordaeen mountains (where Noah's ark rested) we find many ruins and huge foundations (saith the Preacher in his travels), {a} of which no reason can be rendered but that which Josephus gives: {b} that they that escaped the flood were so astonished and amazed that they dared not descend into the plains and low countries, but kept on the tops of those mountains, and there built.

{b} Joseph. Antiq. lib. i. cap. 5.

Ver. 5. The waters decreased.] Not all on the sudden, but by little and little, for exercise of Noah's faith. "He that believeth maketh not haste". {#Isa 28:16} God limiteth our sufferings for time, manner, and measure. Joseph was a prisoner till the time came. Smyrna was in tribulation for ten days. Physic must have a time to work; and gold must lie some while in the fire. "In the opportunity of time," saith Peter, "God will exalt you." {ev kairos, #1Pe 5:6} Prescribe not to him, with those Bethulians in Judith; but wait his leisure, and let him do what is good in his own eyes. He waits a fit season to show us mercy, {#Isa 30:18} and thinks as long of the time as we do.

Ver. 6. At the end of forty days.] Viz., After that the tops of the mountains were discovered.

The window of the ark,] i.e., That in the upper loft of the ark, where the fowls were.

Ver. 7. And he sent forth a raven.] Which when it is made tame, though it delights in dead carcasses, whereof Noah knew the earth was now full, yet doth not easily forget its station, but returns thereto, when nature is satisfied.

Which went forth to and fro.] Fluttered about the ark, but kept out of it. Manet foris cum voce corvina, qui non habet simplicitatem columbinam. (August.)

Ver. 8. Also he sent forth a dove.] A bird that being swift and simple, willingly "flies" back "to his windows," {#Isa 60:8} through love and faithfulness to his mate and young. Besides, he fleeth a long while together, and very near the ground, and so was fitter for this service. Josephus saith, that he came into the ark with his feet and wings wet and dirty, which could not but be good news to Noah. Plutarch affirmeth, that Deucalion sent a dove to try whether the waters were dried: Satan est Dei simia .

Ver. 9. And the dove found no rest.] No more doth man's soul (God's turtle) till it rest in God. Domine , saith St Augustine, fecisti nos ad te, ideoque cor nostrum inquietam est, donec requieverit in te. Hic finis nostrae formationis , saith another, ut homo sit templum Dei, et Deus ara hominis . How oft doth the good soul cry, "Oh that I had the wings of a dove!" &c. {#Pss 55:6} Or, if that "Oh" will not set him at liberty, she takes up that "Woe" to express her misery: "Woe is me that I sojourn in Mesech," &c. {#Pss 120:5} {a}

{a} "My heart panteth," {#Pss 38:10} סַחֲרָסַח, as merchants run from country to country.—Bucholc.

Ver. 10. And again he sent forth the dove.] The fitter for such a purpose, because she flieth long and low; and out of love to her mate would soon return with the good news so much longed for by Noah and his company.

Ver. 11. In her mouth was an olive leaf.] The olive never casteth her leaf, and is greenest in the spring, saith Pliny. It might very well continue so under water during the flood. It may also very well, by an allegory, set forth that grace and peace by Jesus Christ, brought in the mouth of his ministers in this evening of the world. {#Ro 10:15} The dove returned at first without her errand; but, sent again, she brought better tidings. The man of God must not only be "apt to teach," but "patient, in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves; proving, if at any time, God will give them repentance." {a} All are not sent into the vineyard at the same hour of the day. Holy Melancthon, being himself newly converted, thought it impossible for his hearers to withstand the evidence of the gospel. But after he had been a preacher a while, 'tis said he complained, "that old Adam was too hard for young Melancthon." {b} And yet he lacked not afterwards the seal of his ministry. For among many others converted by him, was that sweet saint, George, Prince of Anhalt, whose house was eccelesia, academia, curia, and whose heart was so upright with God, his life so laudable among men, that Melancthon {c} (once publicly defending the certainty of our future felicity by this argument, that godly men must be hereafter rewarded, wicked men punished), he named this pious prince as an unquestionable example of such a man, as might assuredly expect the promised crown of life eternal, which God the righteous Judge will give to all his. {#2Ti 4:8}

Ver. 12. Which returned not unto him any more.] But, out of love of liberty, forgat both her mate and her master; who yet was hereby certified, to his comfort, that now she had, abroad, met with both footing and feeding.

Ver. 13. The face of the ground.] The surface of it was dry, but yet soft and muddy: he therefore waited two months longer. Let us also "be patient". {#Jas 5:7}

Ver. 14. And in the second month.] This was God's good time, which holy Noah was content to wait; which we must also learn to do, or all will be out of order. Christ oft stayeth long, till "the fourth watch". {#Mt 14:25} As he never faileth at his own time, so he seldom cometh at ours. Do therefore as the martyr did, who might have escaped privately out of prison, and was tempted so to do by his friends. But he replied, I will not go out of prison, when my friends would have it so, for that would be too soon; neither shall I stay here, till mine enemies would let me go, for that would be too long; but when God seeth good, and makes a fair way for me, &c.

Ver. 15. And God spake unto Noah.] {See Trapp on "Ge 8:16"}

Ver. 16. Go forth of the ark.] Learn we of this holy patriarch, to do all by God's direction, and not dare to attempt anything without his warrant; approving ourselves to him in our comings in and goings out. He hath "charged his angels" {#Ps 91:11} with us, so long as we keep the king's highway; but if we go out of his precincts, we go out of his protection. Take counsel at his mouth, and then we may safely say, "Lord, if I be deceived, thou hast deceived me". {#Jer 20:7} This, as at all times we have need to do, so now especially, when there is {as #2Ch 15:5} "no peace to him that goeth out, nor to him that cometh in, but great vexation upon all countries. Nation being destroyed of nation, and city of city," &c.

Ver. 17. That they may breed abundantly.] R. Solomon thinks that not only reasonable, but unreasonable creatures also did forbear carnal copulation during the flood; {See Trapp on "Ge 7:7"} which yet Mercer holds not probable.

Ver. 18. And Noah went forth.] In obedience to the divine command. ΘΕΩ ΕΠΟΥ, "follow God," was the old and good rule. {See Trapp on "Ge 8:16"}

Ver. 19. Every beast after their kind.] Heb., After their families: that is, not confusedly and pell-mell, as we say, but distinctly and in order: the lion with the lioness, &c., every male with his female, the clean by themselves, and the unclean by themselves. And as these latter came to the ark unclean, and unclean they departed; so do millions, now-a-days, to the ordinances. A preacher hath as much joy to see them there as John Baptist had to see the Pharisees thronging to his baptism, when he cried out, "O generation of vipers," who sent for you "who hath forewarned you?" &c. {#Mt 3:7}

Ver. 20. And Noah builded an altar to the Lord.] This was his first care; and so it was Abraham's wherever he came. It must be also ours, after great deliverances especially. God's mercies are binders: Beneficium postulat officium. He is content we have the comfort of his blessings, so he may have the praise of them. This peppercorn is all the rent he looks for. Oh, cover we God's altar "with the calves of our lips, giving thanks to his name". {#Heb 13:15} This will "please him better than an ox that hath horns and hoofs". {#Ps 69:31} Only let it be done, the first thing that we do, after the receipt of a benefit, which else will soon wax stale and putrify as fish. No part of the thank offering might be kept unspent to the third day. Hezekiah wrote his song the third day after his recovery. Noah was no sooner out of the ark, but he offered on his newly built altar; as well for testification of his thankfulness, as for confirmation of his faith in that Lamb of God, slain and sacrificed from the beginning of the world. "God was" now also "in Christ reconciling this" new "world to himself".

Ver. 21. And the Lord smelled a sweet savour.] Heb., A savour of rest {a} Greek, εὐωδίας; which the apostle followeth, saying that Christ gave himself for us an offering and a sacrifice to God for a smell of sweet savour. {#Eph 5:2} All our sacrifices are accepted for this of Christ, which otherwise would be turned off with, "who required these things at your hands?" {#Isa 1:12} The sacrifice of the wicked is, abomination to the Lord; {b} yea, though he should bring "thousands of rams, and ten thousand rivers of oil," with those miscreants in Micah. {#Mic 6:7} that by their munificence would fain have purchased a dispensation to sin: whereas Noah with his ox, ram, he-goat, turtle, and young pigeon, laid in for him by God himself for this same purpose, is highly accepted in that beloved One, as Christ is called

The Lord said in his heart.] All his promises are heart-sprung; the issue of a most faithful and righteous will, void of any the least insincerity and falsehood. Whatsoever he speaks, he speaks from his heart. We may write upon it, "the eternity of Israel cannot lie". {#Isa 15:29}

I will not again curse the ground, & c., for the imagination of man's heart. As who should say, Man doth but his kind now, in committing evil before me. He hath by his fall brought upon himself a miserable necessity of sinning, so that he cannot but "do wickedly with both hands earnestly"; {#Mic 7:3} which though it be no excuse, but an aggravation rather of his actual sin (that he doth it out of the pravity of his nature), yet I will not take advantages to deal with him after his deserts; for then there would be no end of making worlds, and unmaking them again. "I will not curse, I will not smite any more." Where note, that God's smiting his creature is a fruit of sin, and a piece of the curse. And unless men "return to him that smiteth them," {#Isa 9:13} all that they suffer here, is but a typical hell. Here the leaves only fall upon them, the trees will fall upon them hereafter.

Ver. 27. While the earth remaineth.] Heb., All the days of the earth. The earth then (though Solomon in some sense says it endureth for ever) hath its set and certain number of days appointed it by God. For "the earth also and the works therein shall be burnt up". {#2Pe 3:10} And this the heathen had heard of, and hammered at; as Lucretius, who disputes the matter out of natural causes. So doth Cicero, De Nat. Deorum , lib. i. 2. And Ovid, Metamorph . i. : Esse quoque in fatis meminit , & c. There he hath also a large relation of the general flood in Deucalion's days: so he calleth Noah. Lucian {a} hath the like in his book, De Dea Syriae . And Plutarch speaketh of the sending forth of the dove, and of her return unto Deucalion into the ark. "But we have a more sure word of prophecy."

Cold and heat, and summer and winter, &c.] Lopez de Gomara saith that the kings of Mexico, when they are consecrated, use to take their oath after this manner:—I swear that the sun, during my life, shall hold on his course, and keep his wonted glory and brightness, and that the clouds shall send down rain, the river shall run, and the earth bring forth all manner of fruit, &c. But "can any of the vanities of the heathen give rain?" &c. {#Jer 14:22}

Ver. 1. Be fruitful and multiply.] Here God reneweth the world by the same word wherewith he had created it; and being reconciled to mankind, he blesseth them in like manner as before the fall. Sin once pardoned, is as if it never had been committed. Christ tells his returning Shulamite, that she was as amiable in every point as she had been before her relapse, {#So 4:1} her hair, teeth, temples, all as fair and well-featured as ever.

Ver. 2. And the fear of you, &c.] Timor, quo a bestiis timeamini, et terror quo bestias terreatis. .(Piscat.) This is a piece of God's image yet remaining to man, that every nature of wild beasts, birds, creeping things, and things in the sea is tamed, and hath been tamed of the nature of man. {#Jas 3:7, marg.} {a}

Ver. 3. Every moving thing that liveth shall be meat for you.] God of his goodness grants here to mankind, after the flood, the use of flesh and wine, that the new and much weakened world might have new and more strengthening nourishment. For it is not to be doubted but that, by the deluge, a great decay was wrought both in the earth with its fruits, and also in man's nature. Various ridges and scars, as it were, of God's wrath and malediction abided and appeared in the earth. Sundry maladies also and infirmities befell man's body, not felt before the flood. God therefore in great mercy provides, penum quoddam et pharmacopolium mundo senescenti , { a } new food and physic for the languishing world. "Every moving thing that liveth," &c., only, that as the green herb have I given you all things; that is, as you may use them as freely as you used to do herbs, so you must use them soberly, and without curiosity; taking such things as are at hand, and eating to live, not living to eat, as the rich glutton, that fared deliciously every day:—

Ver. 4. But flesh with the life thereof, the blood.] Blood was forbidden: First, as not so wholesome food: Secondly, lest by being fleshed in blood, they should become bloody-minded: Thirdly, blood, the organ of life, is holy to God the author of life (who was also to be pacified by the blood of his Son), and therefore they should not pollute or profane it, by devouring thereof.

Ver. 5. Your blood of your lives will I require,] i.e., I will punish it either by the magistrate, or if he fail to do his office, by mine own immediate hand; as he did in David, Charles the Ninth of France, Richard the Third of England, Felix Count of Waterburg, and others, that either were above law, or escaped the lash of it. See for this, "The Thunderbolt of God's Judgments," lib. ii. cap. iv. 5,16. Richard the Third used the instruments of his bloody plots, as men do their candles; burn the first out to a snuff, and then having lighted another, tread that under foot. {a}

Ver. 6. Whoso sheddeth man's blood.] Some are of the opinion, that before the flood, the punishment of murder and other capital crimes, was only excommunication and exclusion from the Church and their father's family. And that now first, God made murder to be a matter of death. The firstborn had power, at first, over their own families, to bless, curse, cast out, disinherit, yea, and punish with death, {#Ge 38:24} even in case of adultery, as some will have it thus among the people of God. {a} But what a madness was that in the Egyptians to make no conscience of murder, that they might enjoy their lust! And what a blindness to make less account of murder than adultery!. {#Ge 12:13} I have seen, saith the Preacher in his Travels, the king of Persia many times to alight from his horse, only to do justice to a poor body. He punishes theft and manslaughter so severely, that in an age a man shall not hear either of the one, or of the other. {b} A severity fit for France; where within ten years, six thousand gentlemen have been slain, saith he, as it appears by the king's pardons. {c}

Ver. 7. Be fruitful.] {See Trapp on "Ge 1:28"}

Ver. 8. And God spake.] {See Trapp on #Ge 9:9"} {See Trapp on #Ge 9:10"}

Ver. 9. And I, behold, I establish my covenant with you.] This covenant God had made with them before the flood; but here he renews it for their further confirmation: for he knows our infirmities, and therefore seals again. This covenant is said to be made with an oath, {#Isa 54:9} yet we find no such thing here expressed, because God's bare word is as sure as an oath. So God is said to have sworn to Abraham, that which he said to him only. {#Ex 32:13, with #Ge 12:7}

Ver. 10. And with every living creature, &c.] Note this against Anabaptists, who exclude infants, for that they want the use of reason. And yet that was but a foolish reason of the canonist, that infants are therefore to be baptized, because the disciples brought to our Saviour, not the ass only, but the foal also. {a}

Ver. 11. Neither shall all flesh be cut off.] {See Trapp on "Isa 54:9"} {See Trapp on "Isa 54:10"}

Ver. 12. This is the token of the covenant, &c.] See here the antiquity of confirming men's faith, by outward signs, as by the two trees in Paradise: and here the word and sacrament go together. And as God, in Noah, made a covenant with his posterity also, and confirmed it with a sign, so doth he in Christ with the Church, and ratified it with the sacraments; besides, witnesses we have three in heaven, and three in earth, &c. {#1Jo 5:7,8}

Ver. 13. I do set my bow in the cloud, &c.] There it was before, but not till now as a token of the covenant; as still it is applied for a sign of grace from God to his Church. {#Re 4:3 10:1 Eze 1:28} It is planted in the clouds, as if man were shooting at God, and not God at man. This bow with both ends downward, and back to heaven, must needs be an emblem of mercy; for he that shooteth, holdeth the back of the bow from him. Of God's bow we read, but not of his arrows, saith Ambrose on this text. "He hath bent his bow, and made it ready," saith David; but if "he ordain his arrows," it is not but "against the persecutors". {#Ps 7:12,13} If he shoot at his servants, it is as Jonathan shot at his friend David; {#2Sa 20:20} to warn them, not to wound them. They are "arrows of the Lord's deliverance," {#2Ki 13:17} which therefore he multiplies, that they may "compass him about with songs of deliverance". {#Ps 32:7} If he "bend his bow like an enemy," {#La 2:4} yet in wrath he remembereth mercy.

Ver. 14. The bow shall be seen in the cloud.] In this heaven-bow, there are many wonders: first, the beautiful shape and various colours; in which respect Plato thinks the poets feign Iris, or the rainbow, to be the daughter of Thaumias, or admiration. The waterish colours therein signify (say some) the former overthrow of the world by water. The fiery colours, the future judgment of the world by fire. The green, that present grace of freedom from both, by virtue of God's covenant, whereof this bow is a sign. Next, the rainbow hath in it two contrary significations, viz., of rain, and fair weather; of this in the evening, of that in the morning, saith Scaliger. Add hereunto, that whereas naturally it is a sign of rain (and is therefore feigned by the poets to be the messenger of Juno, and called imbrifera, or showery), yet it is turned by God into a sure sign of dry weather, and of restraint of waters. Let us learn to look upon it, not only in the natural causes, as it is an effect of the sun in a thick cloud; but as a sacramental sign of the covenant of grace; a monument of God's both justice in drowning the world, and mercy in conserving it from the like calamity. {#Isa 54:9,10} The Jews have an odd conceit, {a} that the name Jehovah is written on the rainbow. And therefore, as oft as it appeareth unto them, they go forth of doors, hide their eyes, confess their sins (that deserved a second deluge), and celebrate God's goodness, in sparing the wicked world, and remembering his covenant. Set aside their superstition, and their practice invites our imitation. Tam Dei meminisse opus est quam respirare .{ b}

Ver. 15,16. I will remember.] That is, I will make you to know and remember by this visible monitor.

“ *Segnius irritant animum demissa per aures,
Quam quae sunt oculis commissa fidelibus.* ”

The rainbow is a double sacrament, answering both to Baptism and the Lord's Supper; and declares by its colours, saith one, how Christ came by water and blood. {#1Jo 5:6}

Ver. 17. This is the token of the Covenant.] This is often repeated, {a} that it may be the better observed, and we full assured; as Pharaoh's dream was for this cause doubled. God goes over the same thing often with us, as the knife doth the whetstone, which is the scriptural allusion. He well knows how slow of heart we are, and how dull of hearing; and therefore whets and beats things of high concernment upon us, that we may once apprehend and embrace them. Christ is said to have "a rainbow on his head," {#Re 10:1} to show that he is faithful and constant in his promises, and that tempests shall blow over. Let us see God's love in his corrections, as by a rainbow we see the beautiful image of the sun's light, in the midst of a dark and waterish cloud.

Ver. 18. Ham is the father of Canaan.] Who was cursed together with his father (and why, see #Ge 9:25), and became the progenitor of those cursed Canaanites, cast out by the Israelites.

Ver. 19. And of them was the whole earth overspread.] So that we need not add to them (as some have done), Jonitus, a fourth son of Noah (begotten by him after the flood), to replenish a fourth part of the world, with his posterity. Berosus and Nauclerus talk of Tuisco, another son of Noah, whom they make the father and founder of the Germans: but this is too great boldness.

Ver. 20. And Noah began to be a husbandman.] Veteres si quem virum, bonum colonum appellarent, amplissime laudasse existimabant. Cic. Nunquam vilior erat annona Romae, referente Plinio, quam cum terram colerent iidem qui Remp. regerent; quasi gauderet terra laureato vomere, scilicet, et Aratore triumphali. See #2Ch 26:10.

And he planted a vineyard.] Hence Berosus and the poets call him Janus Oenotrius. Janus, of the Hebrew, iajin, vinum; and Oenotrius of οἰνοϝ, whence our English word wine.

Ver. 21. And was drunk.] For his own shame, but our learning. Instruunt nos patres tum docentes tum labentes .{ a} The best have their blemishes, and a black part, as that cloud had, that conducted Israel out of Egypt; which, while the Egyptians followed, they fell into the sea. {#Heb 11:29}

And was uncovered within his tent.] One hour's drunkenness betrays that which more than six hundred years' sobriety had modestly concealed. Well might Solomon say, "Wine is a mocker"; {#Pr 20:1} for it mocked Noah with a witness; and exposed him to the mockage of his own bosom-bird.

{a} Augustin.

Ver. 22. And Ham, the father of Canaan, saw.] The Hebrews say, that Canaan first saw it, and then showed it to Ham his father, who looks upon it with delight, Ut vultures ad male olentia feruntur, saith Basil; as carrion-kites are carried after stinking carcasses.

And told his two brethren without.] Sic et impii hodie ex Ecclesiae tragaediis comaedias componunt. How glad are the wicked, if they can but get any hint to lay hold on, whereby to blaspheme, and blaze abroad the saints' infirmities! "Report say they, and we will report". {#Jer 20:10} Yea, rather than want matter against God's people, they will suck it out of their own fingers' ends. But if such a thing as this fall out, that Noah be drunk, though but once in an age, the banks of blasphemy will soon be broken down, and the whole race of religious persons must rue for it; among these Canaanites some also will be found to excuse them in it, as Scaliger doth Ham.

Ver. 23. And Shem and Japhet took a garment.] Ham had no hand in this good work; which shows what a good one he was, and how far from being of that good emperor's mind, {a} who said, that if he should find a bishop committing adultery, he would rather cover that unclean act with his imperial cloak, than suffer it to come abroad to the scandal of the weak, and the scorn of the wicked.

{a} Constant. Mag. Theodoret., lib. i.—Eccles. Hist., cap. xi.

Ver. 24. And Noah awoke from his wine.] And returned no more to it. Once was enough; "the time past may well suffice, to have walked in excess of wine". {#1Pe 4:3} We will buy repentance so dear no more. It is expressly noted of Judah, that "he knew Tamar again no more". {#Ge 38:26} And we may be well assured, that Noah was never drunk again. Solomon's drunkard cries, "when shall I awake? I will seek it yet again". {#Pr 23:35} As swine break their bellies, so do such men their heads, with filthy quaffing; yea, "whoredom and wine, and new wine, take away the heart," saith the prophet. {#Ho 4:11} They beset and infatuate, yea, rob a man of himself, and lay a beast in his room. Our drunkards say, as the vine in Jotham's parable; Non possum relinquere vinum meum ." Take away my liquor, you take away my life." {a} How often, saith a grave divine, {b} have I seen vermin sucking the drunkard's blood, as fast as he that of the grape and malt, yet would he not leave his hold, or lose his draught! Some are soaked with drink, and then laid out to be sunned and scorned.

And knew what his younger son had done unto him.] It is probable, that finding himself covered with a cloak, he asked his wife and children how he came covered; and that then Shem and Japhet told him all the matter; which moved him to bless them. It is our wisest way, to do what good we can to others. And though they, for present, being drunk with malice, or rash anger, know it not, yet a waking time may come, when they may see the good, and bless us for it, as David did Abigail. {#ISa 25:33} When he had slept out his drunken passion, he saw cause to bless God, to bless her, and to bless her counsel. Mr Gilpin's plain dealing with the Bishop of Durham, how well it succeeded. See his life written by Bishop Carleton, p. 58.

{b} Mr Harris's Drunkard's Cup.

Ver. 25. And he said, Cursed be Canaan.] Because an imitator, and abettor of his father's sin. Neither good egg, nor good bird, as they say. God himself hath cursed such captives with a curse. {#Pr 30:17} "The eye that mocketh at his father, and despiseth to obey his mother; the ravens of the valley shall pick it out; and the young eagles shall eat it." {a} Now they are cursed with a witness, whom the Holy Ghost thus curseth, in such emphatical manner, with such exquisite terms. Their parents also, through their unnaturalness, are compelled to curse them, as Noah here: as Oedipus of old; {b} and our Henry II., who, seeing a few hours before he died, a list of their names that had conspired, with the King of France and Earl Richard (his son and successor), against him, and finding therein his son John to be the first, falls into a grievous passion, both cursing his sons, and the day wherein himself was born; and in that distemperature, departs the world, which so often himself had distempered. {c} "The causeless curse," indeed (though from a parent's mouth), "shall not come". {#Pr 26:2} Such was it that befell Julius Palmer, martyr, {d} who, when he asked his mother's blessing, "Thou shalt," said she, "have Christ's curse and mine, wheresoever thou goest." He, pausing a little, as one amazed at so heavy a greeting, at length said: "O mother, your own curse you may give me, which God knoweth I never deserved; but God's curse you cannot; for he hath already blessed me, and I shall be blessed." "As for money and goods," said she, "which thou suest to me for, as bequeathed thee by thy father, I have none of thine. Thy father bequeathed nothing for heretics. Faggots I have to burn thee; more thou gettest not at my hands." "Mother," said he, "whereas you have cursed me, I again pray to God to bless and prosper you, all your life long." And so he departed, and shortly after, valiantly suffered for the truth, at Newbury in Berkshire, having some time been Fellow of Magdalen College in Oxford, and all King Edward's days an obstinate Papist. Thus for the causeless curse of parents. ^{e} But where it is just, it lights heavy. The very complaint of a parent makes a loud cry in God's ears. It is said, that God, by cutting off Abimelech, "rendered the wickedness that he did to his father". ^{#Jud 9:56} And who can read with dry eyes that pitiful supplication of the old Emperor Andronicus to his young nephew of the same name (Turk. Hist., fol. 172)? But when it proceeds to a curse, lamentable effects have followed. Leonard, son of the Lord Dacres (one of the rebels in the north against Queen Elizabeth), whose father prayed God upon his death-bed, to send him much sorrow for his disobedience, drew forth a most poor life in the Netherlands, to where he escaped, living upon a very slender pension from the Spaniards. ^{f} That rebellion (like the bubbles which children blow up into the air) was no sooner blown up, than blown out, and fell into the eyes of those who with the blasts of ambition and superstition held it up. But most remarkable is that, and apposite to our present purpose, that Manlius reports ^{g} of a certain mother, whom he and many others had seen leading about her miserable daughter, who was possessed by the devil upon her cursing her, and bidding "the devil take her." Involet in te diabolus. Luther and others prayed publicly for the girl; and when Luther said to the devil, Increpet te Deus," The Lord rebuke thee, Satan," the devil answered, muttering through the maid's lips, Increpet, increpet. Another like example, the same author hath, ^{h} of a certain angry old man, in the town of Friburg in Misnia, who bidding his son do some business for him, and he making no haste to do it, nor stirring from the place he stood in; the father cursed him, and wished he might never stir alive from that place. God said Amen to it: and although he lived seven years after, yet there he stood leaning upon a desk while he slept, eating little, and speaking not much. When he was asked how he did, he would answer, that he was chastised justly by God, in whose hand it was what should at length become of him here. But of his eternal salvation, by the merits of Christ alone, he nothing doubted; being chastised of the Lord, that he might not be condemned with the world. The prints of his feet are to be seen in the pavement where he stood, to this day, saith the historian. After seven years' suffering, he departed in the true faith of Christ, with good hopes of a better estate in heaven, September the eleventh, Anno 1552.

A servant of servants shall he be to his brethren.] In which title the Pope of Rome (not without the providence of God) will needs be his successor. A servant of God's servants he will by all means be called. And yet he stamps upon his coin, "That Nation and Country that will not serve thee, shall be rooted out." What pride equal to the pope's, making kings kiss his pantofles (upon which he hath Christ's cross shining with pearls and precious stones, Ut plenis faucibus crucem Christi derideat)! What humility greater than his, to administer himself absolution daily to an ordinary priest! One while he will be styled, Servus servorum Dei ; another while, Dominus regnorum mundi , which is one of the devil's titles; yea, Dominus Deus noster Papa ; taking upon him a power to excommunicate the very angels; yea, lifting up himself above Christ, who is called Pontifex Magnus ,^{ #Heb 4:14} but the Pope calls himself Pontifex Maximus . Gregory the Great was the first that styled himself "a servant of servants"; in opposition, forsooth, to that proud prelate of Constantinople, who affected to be called Universal Bishop. But after the death of Mauricius, when Phocas the traitor came to be emperor, this Gregory clawed him shamefully, and all to attain that dignity and dominion that he so much condemned in another. ^{i} The Pope of Constantinople could not bear a superior, nor the Pope of Rome an equal. The one sought to subdue to himself the East; the other, East and West too: and thence grew all the heat between them. See the like ambition under the colour of zeal for their religion in Selymus the Turk, and Hismael the Persian. ^{j}

Ver. 26. Blessed be the Lord God of Shem.] Shem seems to have been the chief actor and persuader of that reverent behaviour; and therefore, as he is first named, {#Ge 9:23} before his elder brother Japhet; so here he hath the first and chief blessing. It is good to be first in a good matter, yea, prompt and "present to every good work," as Paul hath it. {#Tit 3:1}

And Canaan shall be his servant.] This curse was not fulfilled for many hundred years after, till the sins of the Amorites were grown full, and then it was accomplished. God's forbearance is no acquittance. He can also turn a curse into a blessing, as he did this to Araunah the Jebusite, of the worst and most stubborn of the Canaanites; for they held the Tower of Jebus from the posterity of Shem after all the rest had yielded. {#2Sa 5:7} Yet he became a godly proselyte, and gave, as a king, his freehold to King David, to build an altar on, {#2Sa 24:18} and this deed of his was long after remembered. {#Zec 9:7} The like may be said of the Gibeonites, who are called Nethinims in Ezra and Nehemiah. They were made servants to the Shemites, drawers of water to the temple, as a kind of punishment. God made this cross a mercy. Their employment so near the house of God gave them fit occasion to be partakers of the things of God. And the Lord, we see, did wonderfully honour them; the nearer they were to the church, the nearer to God. It is good getting into his house, though to be but "a doorkeeper" with David, or a water bearer with these Gibeonites. Stand but in God's way as he passeth, and thou shalt be preferred.

Ver. 27. God persuade Japhet.] For none else can do it. Men may speak persuasively, but to persuade is proper to God alone. He "speaks to the heart"; {#Ho 2:14} we to the ear only. He persuadeth and allureth, not only by a moral persuasion, but by an irresistible inward drawing. {#Ac 11:17} In the Hebrew there is a sweet Agnomination; q.d., God shall persuade the persuasible. He shall draw them to faith and obedience, Monendo potius quam minando, docendo quam ducendo, saith St Austin; by informing, not enforcing. He brings in his elect by a merciful violence. He sent forth at first, not swordsmen but fishermen; and prevailed by them in those places where the Romans could never come with all their forces. {a} Elisha could do more with a kiss than his man could do with a staff, in raising the dead child. "Let him kiss me with the kisses of his mouth," {#So 1:2} and then follows, "Draw me; we will run after thee."

And he shall dwell in the tents of Shem.] The Church's abode here, is but in tents; she hath "no continuing city, on earth, but seeks one to come". {#Heb 13:14} This, whether prophecy or prayer, was fulfilled when "God was manifested in the flesh, preached unto the Gentiles, and believed on in the world," {#1Ti 3:16} some thousands of years after. The Gentiles were converted by virtue of this prayer, as Paul was by St Stephen's, and as we enjoy the gospel by Latimer's "yet once more," and the prayers of other martyrs.

Ver. 28, 29. And Noah lived after the flood, &c.] This man, if ever any that was born of a woman, had a long life, and full of misery. {#Job 14:1} He saw the tenth generation after him before his death. But, oh, how oft was he occasioned to get under the juniper-tree with Elias, and desire to die! Before the flood, what a deal of wickedness and disorder beheld he in family, Church, and commonwealth; and all this punished by the deluge, to his unspeakable heart-break! Soon after he was mocked by his own son, and despised by almost all the rest of his posterity; whose unheard-of hardiness in building the tower of Babel, he was nolens volens, forced to see and suffer; and then shortly after, the confusion of tongues as their just punishment. What should I speak of their so many and so great cruelties, insolences, tyrannical usurpations, effusions of innocent blood, wars, stirs, strifes, superstitions, and abominable idolatries, under Nimrod, Jupiter, Belus, Semiramis, Zoroaster (the magic master), and other Emims and Zamzummims of the earth! Of all which, and a great deal more, this good old patriarch was, to his sorrow, not only an ear but an eye-witness. All which considered, it must needs be granted, that living so long, never any martyr, or other out of hell, suffered more misery than Noah did. ^{a} And the like may be said of Athanasius, of whom Master Hooker witnesseth, that for the space of forty-six years, from the time of his consecration to succeed Alexander Archbishop of Alexandria, till the last hour of his life in this world, his enemies never suffered him to enjoy the comfort of a peaceable day. Was not he to be reckoned a martyr, though he died in his bed? Cur verear Chrysostomum appellare Martyrem? saith Erasmus. ^{b} And why may not any man say as much of Luther? &c.

Ver. 29. {See Trapp on "Ge 9:28"}

Chapter 10

Ver. 1. And unto them were sons born after the flood.] Great store of sons: else how could they so soon have peopled the whole earth? See here the virtue of that divine benediction, #Ge 9:1,7.

Ver. 2. The sons of Japheth.] Not all, but the chief men of renown, Ethnarchs: think the same of the other two sons of Noah: seventy-one of their posterity are here registered (fourteen of Japheth, thirty-one of Ham, and twenty-six of Shem); hence it went for current among the ancients (grounding upon #Ge 10:31,32 of this chapter) that the nations were afterwards distinguished by so many tongues and countries.

Ver. 3. Ashkenaz.] Hinc Tuiscones, or Duitschmen, say the Jews; making Ashkenaz the father of the Germans, as Gomer of the Cimbrians or Danes, and Meshec of the Muscovites. But of these things there is little certainty. See Breerwood's Inquiries.

Ver. 4. Elishah.] Whence the Eolians.

Tarshish.] Whence the Cilicians, where Tarsus (Paul's country) was.

Kittim.] Whence the Macedonians. {#Nu 24:24 Da 11:30}

Dodanim.] Whence the Epirotes (Scanderberg's country), where stands the city Dodaena.

Ver. 5. By these were the isles of the Gentiles.] That is, the countries of Europe and Asia the Less, inhabited by Japheth's posterity. Europe hath its name, in Greek, ^{a} from the latitude and large surface of it, which answers well to the name of Japheth (signifying enlargement), who, together with his offspring, was, by God's appointment, to rule there far and wide toward the west and north. Asia hath its name from two Hebrew words that signify the fire of the Lord, ^{b} which, in Persia and other parts thereof, they superstitiously deified. Asia the Less, was so called first by Attalus, king of Pergamus, who, being the last of that name and race, made the Romans his heirs by will. They turned his country into a province, and called it Asia, by the name of the continent—as devouring, doubtless in hope, that whole part of the world by this small beginning. Hence, likely, came that first distinction of the Lesser Asia.

^{b} אשׁיה Ignis Domini Q. Curtius saith of Darius, that he called upon the sacred and eternal fire.

Ver. 6. Cush.] Ethiopians came of him. ^{#Ps 7:1. title} Wicked Saul, for his black deeds, is called Cush. ^{confer #Jer 13:23 Am 9:7}

Mizraim.] From whom came the Egyptians. Turks and Arabians call Egypt Mesra, or Masra, at this day. ^{a}

^{a} Chald. parap.

Ver. 7. Seba.] Of whom seem to have come the Abassines in Africa, the only region there entirely possessed by Christians. Hence came the Queen of Sheba, &c.

Ver. 8. Nimrod, he began to be a mighty one.] His name signifies a rebel: he was the chief Babel builder, and there began to be a mighty one. A giant, saith the Greek, -such another as Goliath was in his generation, ^{#Isa 17:51} where the same word is used, -a magnifico, a grandio; such a one as sought to make himself great, even to a proverb. ^{#Ge 10:9} But there is a double greatness; first, genuine; secondly, brutal. This latter is no such commendation; a beast in this may, and doth exceed us; as in the former, we exceed ourselves and others.

Ver. 9. He was a mighty hunter.] Of men, whose lives he sacrificed to his lust, not of beasts for sacrifice to the Lord, as Aben-Ezra will have it, and takes occasion thereupon highly to commend him. {a} But there wanted not those that commended Cain also for killing his brother, and were therefore called Cainites. Of others we read that extolled the Sodomites, Korah and his complices, Judas the traitor. Yea, there was one Bruno found that wrote an oration in commendation of the devil, who hath given him his reward, no doubt, by this, unless he recanted that monstrous madness.

Ver. 10. And the beginning of his kingdom was Babel.] But not the end of it. Ambition is boundless, rides without reins, builds itself on the ruins of others, and cares not to swim to its design, though in a sea of blood. Crescit interea Roma Albae ruinis, begins one of Livy's Decades.

Ver. 11. Out of that land went forth Asshur.] Either because wickedness dwelt there, {#Zec 5:11} for Asshur was a son of Shem, and might have so much goodness in him; {#Ge 10:22} or else he was hunted thence by Nimrod, who made himself the first monarch, and had Babel, in the land of Shinar, or Chaldea, for the beginning of his kingdom.

Ver. 12. The same is a great city.] As consisting of three cities, and having more people within the walls than are now in some one kingdom. See the greatness of this city set forth in the Preacher's Travels, p. 89. The greatest city in the world at this day is said to be Quinsai, in Tartary, which is a hundred miles about, as M. Paulus Venetus writeth, who himself dwelt therein, about the year 1260. Cambula, the imperial city, and seat of the great Cham of Tartary, is in circuit twenty-eight miles about. {a} Nineveh was three days' journey in Jonah's days: now it is destroyed (as was long since prophesied by Nahum), being nothing else than a sepulchre of herself, a little town of small trade, where the Patriarch of the Nestorians keeps his seat at the devotion of the Turk. As Susa, in Persia, once a lily (as the name signifies), for the sweet sight, and so rich, as afterwards is reported, {#Ge 11:3} is now called Valdac, of the poverty of the place. {b}

{b} Preacher's Travels, 88.

Ver. 13, 14, Ludim and Anamim.] Aben-Ezra thinks that these were names of provinces, and that in every province there was a family; whence also the names are all plural.

Ver. 14. {See Trapp on "Ge 10:13"}

Ver. 15. Canaan begat Sidon.] Who built the city Sidon, in Phoenicia, near to Tyre, which afterwards contended with it for principality. It fell afterwards by lot to the tribe of Asher. {#Jos 19:28}

Ver. 16-18. These are those accursed nations.] Whose countries God afterwards gave to his people Israel, having "espied" it out of all lands for such a purpose. {#Eze 20:6}

Ver. 18. {See Trapp on "Ge 10:16"}

Ver. 19. And the border of the Canaanites.] Which was afterwards enlarged to the Israelites by the addition of two kingdoms beyond Jordan.

Ver. 20. These are the sons of Ham.] More in number, and more sweetly situated, than the posterity of either Shem or Japheth: thirty sons and nephews of cursed Ham are here recited and registered, when of blessed Shem we find but twenty-six, and of Japheth but fourteen. And for their countries, Canaan hath the navel of the world (sumen totius orbis , as one {a} calls that country), a land that floweth with milk for necessity, and honey for delight; where the hardest rocks sweat out honey and oil. {#De 32:13 Ex 3:17} Nihil mollius coelo, nihil uberius solo , as Florus saith of Campania; a land that God had spied out among all lands for his own peculiar people, yea, for himself to dwell in. Lo, this was Ham's possession, when his two better brethren dwelt in the more barren waste countries of the east and west. God deals by his people here as the host doth by his guests, who lets them have the best meats and fairest lodgings, but reserves the inheritance for his children. The Lord holds his servants to hard meat many times; but then they have it of free cost: whereas the wicked eat of the fat and drink of the sweet; but their "meat in their bowels is turned into the gall of asps, God shall cast it out of their bellies". {#Job 20:14,15} In fattening them he doth but fit them for destruction, as he did these Canaanites, whose pleasant land he afterwards made a spoil to his own Israel. They grew a burden to that good land, which therefore, for their wickedness, spued them out, {#Le 18:25} after they had filled it from corner to corner with their abominable uncleannesses. {#Ezr 9:11}

{a} L. Flor, lib. i. cap. 16. See #De 8:7-9 11:11,12.

Ver. 21. Unto Shem also.] His issue is set down last, because to be most insisted on in the holy history.

Ver. 22. Elam.] Father of the Persians, that warlike people, but worshippers of the sun. We read of a Persian ambassador, who, when he was among Christians, would have these words much in his mouth, Soli Deo gloria, cunningly, under that covert, giving honour to the sun.

Ver. 23. Uz.] Haply Job's country: for we can here but hariolari in re dubia, go by conjecture only.

Ver. 24. And Arphaxad.] Held to be the father of the Chaldees.

Ver. 25. Peleg, for in his days was the earth divided.] Eber, of whom came the Hebrews or Israelites, {#Ex 1:15} that he might have before his eyes a perpetual monument of God's just displeasure against the ambitious Babel builders, calls his son Peleg, or Division, because in his days was the earth divided. It is good to write the remembrance of God's worthy works, whether of mercy or justice, upon the names of our children, or otherwise as we can best, to put us in mind of them; for we need all help; such is either our dulness or forgetfulness. What was it else that made David so often to put the thorn to his breast? {#Ps 103:1-3} And why would God have the plates of the censers of those sinners against their own souls, to be a covering to the altar, but to be a memorial to the children of Israel, that no stranger come near to offer incense, that he be not as Korah and his company, &c.? {#Nu 16:38,40}

Ver. 26. Joktan begat Almodad, &c.] This man with his sons may seem to have seated in the East Indies; but, fallen from Heber's faith to heathenism, they are written in the dust: there is little mention of them in the Scriptures. They have lost their genealogy, as those degenerate priests, who in the time of the captivity took scorn to be in the register, and were therefore worthily afterwards rejected by the Tirshatha. {#Ezr 2:62,63}

Ver. 1. And the whole earth was of one language.] Unity without verity, is no better than conspiracy. A legion of devils could accord to get into one man; and, though many, yet they speak and act as one in that possession. That infernal kingdom is not divided against itself. A shame for God's saints to be at difference. What should sheep do snarling, like dogs, one at another? The children of this world are wiser, a fair deal, in their generation; {#Heb 3:10} they can combine and comply, as here; though their society be as unsavoury as the slime and filth that is congealed, when many toads and other vermin meet together.

Ver. 2. In the land of Shinar.] Which was a part of the garden of Eden, as most geographers think, fat and fruitful still above belief (Herodot. lib. i. cap. 93; Plin. lib. vi. cap. 26).

Ver. 3. And they said one to another.] One broached this counsel, and the rest soon consented. Let us consider one another to whet on to love and good works. {#Heb 10:24} One live coal may set a whole stack on fire. When Silas came, Paul "burned in spirit," {#Ac 18:5} {a} and preached lustily.

Let us make brick, &c.] Thus, wanting stones, they devised matter for their cursed building. {b} Good cause hath the Church to be as ingenious and sedulous in building staircases for heaven, as the devil and his imps in digging descents to hell.

And they had brick for stone, and slime for mortar.] And yet though the walls were high and huge, this city was taken first by Cyrus, afterwards by Alexander, and plundered at several times by many other enemies. Shusa in Persia was first built by Tithonus and his son Memnon, who was so exceeding prodigal, that, as Cassiodorus writes, he joined the stones together with gold; so rich it was that Aristagoras thus cheered up his soldiers that besieged it. This city if you can take, you may vie with Jove himself for wealth and riches. {c} Here Alexander found 50,000 talents of gold, besides silver. But what is all this to the heavenly Jerusalem, whose pavement is pure gold, and her walls garnished with all precious stones? {#Re 21:19} Why do we then labour in the fire, to "load ourselves with thick clay"? {#Hab 2:6} Why doth not this "kingdom of heaven suffer violence by us, sith the violent take it by force," {#Mt

11:12} or make a prey, a prize of it (so Hilany {d} rendereth it) as soldiers do of a city they have taken? Oh that we could say of heaven, as Sextus Ruffus doth of Cyprus, Cyprus famosa divitiis paupertatem populi Rom. ut occuparetur sollicitavit ! This island was anciently called Macaria: Heaven more truly.

Ver. 4. Let us build us a city and a tower.] This tower raised a head of majesty, 5164 paces from the ground, having its basis and circumference equal to the height. The passage to go up, went winding about the outside, and was of an exceeding great breadth, there being not only room for horses, carts, &c., to meet and turn, but lodgings also for man and beast (as Verstegan reports), grass and grain fields for their nourishment. {a}

Let us make us a name.] This is a disease that cleaves to us all, to "receive honour one of another, and not to seek the honour that cometh from God only". {#Joh 5:44} A rare man he is surely, that has not some Babel of his own, whereon he bestows pains and cost, only to be talked of. Hoc ego primus vidi, was Zabarelle's επιπικτιον. {b} Epicurus would have us believe, that he was the first that ever found out the truth of things. Palaemon gave out, that all learning was born and would die with him. {c} Aratus the astrologer, that he had numbered the stars, and written of them all. Archimedes, the mathematician, that if he had but where to set his foot, he could move the earth out of its place. Herostratus burnt Diana's temple for a name. {d} And Plato {e} writes of Protagoras, that he bragged, that whereas he had lived sixty years, forty of them he had spent in corrupting of youth. Cicero {f} tells us, that Gracchus did all for popular applause; and observes, that those philosophers that have written of the contempt of glory, have yet set their names to their own writings, which shows an itch after that glory they persuaded others to despise. These two things, saith Cicero somewhere of himself, I have to boast of, Optimarum artium scientiam et maximarum rerum gloriam, my learned works, and noble acts.

Julius Caesar had his picture set upon the globe of the world, with a sword in his right hand, a book in his left, with this motto, Ex utroque Caesar. Vibius Rufus used the chair wherein Caesar was wont to sit, and was slain; he married also Cicero's widow, and boasted of them both, as if either for that seat he had been Caesar, or for that wife an orator, {g} When Maximus died in the last day of his consulship, Caninius Rebilus petitioned Caesar for that part of the day, that he might be said to have been consul. {h} So many of the Popish clergy have with great care and cost procured a cardinal's hat, when they have lain a dying, that they might be entitled cardinals in their epitaph, as Erasmus writes. But for men's ennobling themselves by building, those seven wonders of the world were made merely for a name. Pharos, a watch-tower in Egypt, being one of the seven, was built by Ptolomy Philadelph, all of white marble. The chief architect was Sostratus of Gnidos, who engraved on the work this inscription, "Sostratus of Gnidos, son of Dexiphanes, to the gods protectors, for the safeguard of sailors." This inscription he covered with plaster, and thereon engraved the name and title of the king the founder: that (that soon wasted and washed away) his own that was written in marble, might be eternised to posterity. This tower, saith Wickam, is a known story. And Phidias, the famous carver, so cunningly set his own countenance into Minerva's shield at Athens, that it could not be defaced, but the shield itself must be disfigured. The Hague, in Holland, has two thousand households in it. The inhabitants will not wall it, as desiring to have it counted rather the principal village of Europe, than a lesser city. And Sextus Marius, being once offended with his neighbour, invited him to be his guest for two days together. The first of those two days he pulled down his neighbour's farmhouse; the next, he set it up again, far bigger and better than before. And all this for a name, that his neighbours might see and say, what good or harm he could do to them at his pleasure. {i}

Ver. 5. And the Lord came down.] Non motu locali, sed actu iudiciali .

To see the city, & c.] That so his sentence, grounded not upon hearsay, or uncertain information, might be above all cavillation or exception. A fair precedent for judges. Caiaphas first sentenced our Saviour, and then asked the assessors what they thought of it. The chief captain first commanded Paul to be scourged, and then examined. {#Ac 22:24,25} This was preposterous. God, though he knew all before, is yet said to come down to see. Let his actions be our instructions. No man must be rashly pronounced a leper: and the judges must "make diligent inquisition," {#De 19:18} as flints must carry fire but not easily express it. Potiphar was too hasty with Joseph, and David with Mephibosheth. Aeneas Sylvius {a} tells us of some places, where thieves taken but upon suspicion, are presently trussed up, and three days after they sit in judgment upon the party executed. If they find him guilty, they let him hang till he fall. And if not, they take down the body and bury it honourably at the public charge. This is not Godlike, nor a point of wisdom: for Nervus est sapientiae non temere credere .

Which the children of men builded.] Nimrod chiefly, with his fellow Hamites. But that some of Shem's and Japheth's posterity had a hand in it, is more than probable, by their common punishment, the confusion of tongues. Heber and his had nothing to do with them; and therefore retained the Hebrew tongue, called thenceforth "the Jews' language," {#Isa 36:11} until they were carried captive to Babylon, where grew a mixture among them of Hebrew and Chaldee, whence came up the Syriac tongue, common in our Saviour's time, as appears by many Syriac words in the Gospels.

{a} Aene. Sylvius., Europ., cap. xx.

Ver. 6. Behold the people is one, &c.] This benefit they abused to their pride and ambition, which they should have used to the help of the humane society, and common intercourse. They built, and God bare with them for a time, that he might make fools of them in the end. And this he doth daily.

Ver. 7. Go to, let us go down.] "Go to," say they: "Go to," saith He. "Let us build to heaven," say they: "Let us go down and see it," saith He. "Let us make us a name," say they: "Let us confound their language, that they may not so much as know their own names," saith He. "Lest we be scattered," say they: "Let us scatter them abroad the world," saith He. Thus God words it with them, and confutes their folly from point to point. Thus he sets himself in battle array against the proud, as St James has it, {αντιτασσειται, #Jas 4:7} and overthrows them in plain field. He dealt more severely with David for numbering the people than for the matter of Uriah. He turned Nebuchadnezzar grazing among beasts, for pruning and priding himself upon this Babel. "Is not this great Babel, that I have built?" Why, no; Nimrod built it, and Ninus, and Semiramis: Nebuchadnezzar only beautified it, or, at utmost, enlarged it. But pride detracts from God and man, and is therefore justly hated and scorned of both.

And there confound their language.] When men began once θεομαχειν, they were compelled by God λογομαχειν.

“Bring me, quoth one, a trowel quickly; quick
One brings him up a hammer; hew this brick,
Another bids, and then they cleave a tree;
Make fast this rope, and then they let it flee.
One calls for plank; another mortar lacks:
They bring the first a stone, the last an axe.”—Dubartus.

Neither is there any better understanding and agreement among the Babel builders at this day (Babylon enim altera, nempe propinquior atque recentior adhuc stat, cito itidem casura, si essetis viri, said Petrarch long since); witness their many sects and deadly dissensions among themselves, of which read the "Peace of Rome," "Rhemes against Rome," {a} and various other English treatises to the same purpose. Bellarmine teaches, that the bread in the sacrament is not turned into Christ's body productive, but adductive. And this, saith he, is the opinion of the Church of Rome. This Suarez denies, and saith, it is not the Church's opinion. {b} Thus these great master-builders are confounded in their language, and understand not their own mother. The greatest clerks among them cannot yet determine how the saints know our hearts and prayers—whether by hearing or seeing, or presence everywhere, or by God’s relating or revealing men’s prayers and needs unto them. All which ways some of them hold as possible or probable; and others deny and confute them as untrue. {c} Alsted calls Baronius’s "Annals" the Tower of Babel. And another saith, Baronius doth not write annals, but maketh them. How he takes up St Paul for reproving Peter at Antioch, and contradicts the Holy Ghost, is well known; as also how he thunders against the king of Spain, his sovereign, concerning the kingdom of Sicily; for the which rudeness, when he was reprehended by another cardinal, he thus defended himself: An imperious zeal hath no power to spare, no, not God himself. Was not this an apology well befitting a Babel builder? Christchurch, in Oxford, like the tower of Babel, saith one, began with such stupendous magnificence, under the pride of Wolsey (another cardinal of the Church of Rome), who resolved to make it a work of wonder, that the Controller of men’s actions determined to make it a work of confusion; and so, when the cardinal fell, the walls had fallen too, had not Henry VIII. looked graciously upon it, to set it up, to some purpose. {d}

Ver. 8. So the Lord scattered them abroad.] Which was the evil they feared, and by this enterprise, sought to prevent. But there is neither counsel, power, nor policy against the Lord. "The fear of the wicked shall come upon him". {#Pr 10:24} As it befell those wretched Jews, {#Joh 11:48} "The Romans shall come," &c., and come they did accordingly. Pilate, for fear of losing his office, delivered up Christ, and was by Caius kicked off the bench.

Ver. 9. The Lord did there confound the language.] A sore cross and hindrance of interchange of commodities between nation and nation. This great labour also hath God laid hereby upon the sons of men, that a great part of our best time is spent about the shell (in learning of language) before we can come at the kernel of true wisdom, Scripture wisdom especially. Our Saviour's epitaph, written in Hebrew, Greek, and Latin, as it sets forth Christ unto us to be; First, The most holy (for the Hebrew tongue is called the holy tongue); Secondly, The most wise (for in Greek is all human wisdom written); Thirdly, The most powerful (for the Latins were lords of the earth, and propagated their tongue among all the nations). So it signifies that God would have the dignity and study of these three tongues to be retained and maintained in the churches of Christ to the world's end. Hebricians, saith Reuchlin, drink of the fountains; Grecians of the rivers; Latinists of the standing pools only. {a} There were that mocked at the multitude of tongues. {#Ac 2:13} And the monks were mad almost at such Camilli literarii as chased out barbarism and brought in the learned languages. {b} But let us acknowledge it a singular gift of God, as for the gathering of the Church at first, {#Ac 2:1-4} so still for the edifying of the body of Christ, "till we all come unto a perfect man," {#Eph 4:13} to speak the language of Canaan, in the kingdom of heaven.

And from thence did the Lord scatter them.] The Hebrew doctors say, {c} that at this dispersion there were seventy nations, with seventy various languages. Epiphanius saith, that their one language was divided into seventy-two; for so many men were then present, and each man had his own dialect, and went his own way with it. Cleopatra is famous in history for her skill in tongues. She could give a ready answer to ambassadors that came, whether they were Ethiopians, Hebrews, Arabians, Syrians, Medes, or Parthians. Yea, she could tune and turn her tongue, as an instrument of many strings, saith Plutarch, {d} to whatever language she pleased. This minds me of those cloven tongues, and of that utterance the Spirit gave them. {#Ac 2} "Parthians, Medes, Elamites, strangers of Rome, Jews and proselytes, Cretes and Arabians heard" the apostles speak "in their own tongue the wonderful works of God," to the singular advantage of the Church, that was then out of all nations to be collected, and that by a like means as these rebels were scattered.

Ver. 10. These are the generations of Shem.] To whose genealogy Moses here returneth, that he may come to the history of Abraham, the father of the faithful.

Ver. 11. And Shem lived after he begat, &c.] He saw ten generations, and lived till Isaac was fifty years old, who might well be his pupil, which (if Shem were Melchisedec) is so much the more likely. Heber also lived till Abraham was dead; a singular blessing to them both. This comfort the patriarchs had of their tiresome and tedious pilgrimage, that as Shem saw Lamech, so Lamech saw Adam, and Isaac saw Shem. Now, ipse aspectus viri boni delectat, saith Seneca. How much more, when "they that fear the Lord speak often one to another" {#Mat 3:16} for mutual edification and encouragement? This the mad world calls faction and capriciousness. But what saith Tertullian to it? Cum boni, cum probi coeunt, cum pii, cum casti congregantur, non est factio dicenda, sed curia: et e contrario illis nomen factionis accommodandum est, qui in odium bonorum et proborum conspirant. {a}

Ver. 27. Terah begat Abram.] Who whether he were Terah's firstborn, is a great question; but, being an important man, he is first mentioned. (Abram was not Terah's first born. #Ge 11:32 12:4 This means that Terah was 130 years old when he begot Abram. Editor.)

Ver. 28. And Haran died before his father Terah.] The Hebrews say he died a martyr, being burnt with fire by his countrymen the Chaldees, because he would not worship the fire, which they had made their god. Martyrdom came early into the world, as we know in Abel, who as he was the first that died, so he died for religion. Now if this be true of Haran, as the Jewish doctors will have it; then he had, for aught we know, the maidenhead (as a certain martyr phrased it) of that kind of martyrdom. The first that were burnt for religion, since the Reformation, are said to be Henry and John, two Augustinian monks at Brussels, anno 1523, under James Hogostratus the Dominican Inquisitor. The executioner, being demanded whether they recanted in the flames, denied there was any such thing; but said, that when the fire was put to them, they continued singing the creed, and Te Deum, till the flame took away their voice. All this Erasmus testifieth, ^{a} though he was no Lutheran; and thereupon maketh this good but wary note, Damnari, dissecari, suspendi, exuri, decollari, piis cum impiis sunt communia: damnare, dissecare, in crucem agere, exurere, decollare, bonis iudicibus cum piratis ac tyrannis communia sunt. Varia sunt hominum iudicia, ille foelix qui iudice Deo absolvitur. Our protomartyr in Queen Mary's days was Reverend Master Rogers; he gave the first adventure upon the fire. His wife, and children, being eleven in number, ten able to go, and one sucking at her breast, met him by the way as he went toward Smithfield. This sorrowful sight of his own flesh and blood could nothing move him, but that he constantly held out to the death, and so received a crown of life. ^{b} Neither hath God left himself without witness among the very heathens. For in the city of Lima, in Mexico, not two months before our coming there, saith Captain Drake, ^{c} twelve persons were condemned by the Spaniards there for profession of the gospel; of which, six were bound to one stake and burnt; the rest remained yet in prison, to drink of the same cup within a few days.

Ver. 29. And the father of Iscah.] The Chaldee Paraphrast addeth Hi Sara;, the same is Sarah. It was not yet flatly forbidden to marry a brother's daughter, as afterwards it was. ^{#Le 18:14} Why then should Burgensis on the text say, that such marriages were never prohibited?

Ver. 30. But Sarai was barren.] Till she had prayed for a child thirty years, and then she had him with abundance of joy. At first she believed not the promise, but laughed at the unlikelihood, and was checked for it. But when she had better bethought herself, "through faith she received strength to conceive seed, because she judged him faithful who had promised". {#Heb 11:11} She was (when past age) delivered of a child; who was not more the child of her flesh, than of her faith. Whether she were that Iscah spoken of in the verse next aforegoing, the doctors are divided. Some say that Iscah, in Chaldee, signifieth the same that Sarai in Hebrew. Others more probably make Sarai another woman, and the daughter not of Haran, but of Terah: how else could Abram say of her, that she was the daughter of his father, but not of his mother? {#Ge 20:12} {a}

{a} Ea quae clavum administrationis tenet.

Ver. 31. And Terah took, &c.] Being admonished of the Divine oracle, {#Ac 7:2,3} by his son Abram, he rebuked him not, neither charged him, upon his blessing, to abide in his native country, as many a father would have done (for what was he wiser and better than his forefathers?) but abandoned his idols, and went as far as his old legs could carry him toward the country that God should show them. For as yet they "went forth, not knowing whither they went". {#Heb 11:8} But having God by the hand, they knew they could not go amiss. This was a blessed blind obedience, not to dispute, but to despatch; to wink, and put themselves into God's hand, to be led about at his pleasure, to follow him without sciscitation. {a}

Ver. 32. Terah died in Haran.] And so fell short of the earthly, but not of the heavenly Canaan; to the which, there is as ready a way and as speedy a passage, from one place, as from another. But as the body, when once glorified, shall soon be wheresoever the soul will: so soon shall be the soul where God wills, when once delivered.

Ver. 1. Now the Lord had said to Abram.] But was not this to command him to do that which was against nature? No, but only against corrupt nature, which must be denied, and mortified, or there is no heaven to be had. Father and friends must be hated (that is, not loved, as "Esau have I hated"), where they hang in our light, or stand in our way to keep us from Christ. {#Mt 10:37}

Get thee out of thy country.] This is a hard saying to flesh and blood; for, Nescio qua natale solum, & c. But hard or not hard, it must be done, because God bids it; and difficulty, in such a case, doth but whet on heroic spirits, making them the more eager and resolute. It pleased David well to be set to fetch a hundred foreskins of the Philistines. God's kingdom must be taken by violence. It is but a delicacy to dream of coming there in a featherbed. Too many, with Joseph, dream of their preferment, but not of their imprisonment. He that will be Christ's disciple here, and co-heir hereafter, must deny himself; that is an indispensable duty. Abram was old-excellent at it.

And from thy kindred, and father's house.] Who set out fair with Abram—as did likewise Orphah with Ruth—but settled in Haran, which was also in Chaldea, not far from Ur, and would go no farther, after the old man's death. There they had feathered their nests, gathered substance, and got souls, that is servants; {#Ge 12:4} and, therefore, there they would set up their staff, and afterwards turned again to idolatry. {#Ge 31:30,53 Jos 24:2} Many follow God as Samson did his parents, till he light upon a honeycomb; or as a dog doth his master, till he meet with carrion; and then turn him up. Demas forsook God, and embracing this present world, became afterwards a priest in an idol-temple, as Dorotheus tells us.

Unto a land that I will show thee.] Yet told him not whither, till he was upon the way, but "called him to his foot," {#Isa 41:2} that is, to follow him, and his direction. Magnus est animus qui se Deo tradidit, saith Seneca. Eundum quocunque Deus vocarit, saith another, etiamsi in ea loca migrandum esset —

Arbor aestiva recreatur aura:
Quod latus mundi nebulae malusque
Iupiter urget.*”

Ver. 2. And I will make of thee a great nation.] Why then should the scornful Jews call us nations or Gentiles in contempt? yea, heathen bastards, heathen dogs, as they do at this day? ^{a} Surely, either themselves are of this great Goi or nation here mentioned, or else they have not Abraham to their father; choose them which.

I will bless thee.] As a father his children, with all spiritual comforts, ^{#Eph 1:3} and earthly contentments; with the blessings of the right hand, and of the left; with "the upper and nether springs," ^{#Jud 1:15} as Caleb blessed his daughter Achsah. "He will give grace and glory," and (if that be not enough) "no good thing will he withhold," &c. ^{#Ps 84:11} Hence Moses cries out, "Happy art thou O Israel; who is like unto thee!" &c. ^{#De 33:29}

And make thy name great.] A great name then is a great blessing. So David took it. ^{#2Sa 7:9} And it was no small comfort to him, that whatever he did, pleased the people. Blessing and praise (or good name) is expressed by one and the same word ^{b} in both Testaments. ^{#Pr 27:21} Only (as it is in the same text) it then proves a blessing, when it is to a man "as the fining pot for silver, and furnace for gold," when it melts us, and makes us better, when it works in us a care to walk worthy of the praise given us, to purge ourselves from all filth, that we may be as pure vessels, meet for the Master's use, fit to be set upon the celestial shelf, as that martyr phrased it, ^{c} "Since thou hast been precious in my sight, thou hast been honourable". ^{#Isa 43:4} Virtue is instead of a thousand coat-of-arms on shields.

And thou shalt be a blessing.] That is, in a high degree blessed; or a common blessing ^{d} to all, wherever thou comest, who shall fare the better for thee. Or, a public pattern of blessing (so some Hebrews expound it). Those that wish well to themselves, or others, shall pray God that Abram's blessedness may befall them. The contrary hereunto is now befallen his unhappy posterity for their obstinacy. A curse they are become among the Gentiles, as was foretold them. ^{#Zec 8:13} Sanctius, upon that text, tells us, that all over Turkey they have taken it up for a curse, -I would I might die a Jew, then; and, Let me be a Jew if I deceive thee. ^{e}

Ver. 3. And I will bless them that bless thee.] Some there are that will curse those whom God blessed; but nothing so many as they that will rise up and call them blessed. These are expressed here in the plural number; those in the singular only. "For who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good?" {#IPe 3:13} But say there be some Balaams that would curse God's Israel, {#Nu 23:2} or some Esaus that could wish them unblest again; yet God will turn Balaam's curse into a blessing (which is reckoned as a great favour); and he will tell Esau (if not in his ear, yet in his conscience) that Jacob is blest, "and he shall be blest." {#Ge 27:33} If Isaac, drawn aside by natural affection, would go about to reverse the blessing, God will cause him to "tremble very exceedingly," and so overawe him that he shall not be able to do it. But see here (as in a mirror) the wonderful love of God to his children: so dear they are unto him, that he cannot but love all that love them, and bless those that bless them. They have a powerful speech in Spain, -He that wipes the child's nose kisseth the mother's cheek. Surely, as natural parents take the kindnesses and unkindnesses showed to their children as done to themselves, so doth God.

And in thee shall all families, &c.] That is, "in thy seed," as it is interpreted, #Ge 22:18. To wit, in Christ that shall take flesh of thee, as both Peter and Paul expound it, #Ac 3:25 Ga 3:9,16. Hence Christ is called "the gift," {#Joh 4:10} and "the benefit," {#1Ti 6:2} by an excellency, "and the desire of all nations," {#Hag 2:7} sent a purpose "to bless us, in turning every one of us from our iniquities". {#Ac 3:26}

Ver. 4. So Abram departed.] He had now enough, having such precious promises, though he previously had nothing else. He parted with his friends and kindred, but is now become the friend of God, and akin to Christ. Let their money perish with them, who esteem all the gold in the world worth one day's society with Jesus Christ, and his Holy Spirit, said that noble Marquess Galeacius Caracciolus, {a} who being nephew to Pope Paul V., and a prince of great wealth and power, left all for Christ, living and dying a poor exile at Geneva, that he might enjoy the liberty of his conscience, and serve God according to the truth of the gospel. Remarkable is that which Calvin writes of him in his dedicatory epistle to him, set before his Commentary upon the First Epistle to the Corinthians, — Etsi neque tu, & c.

And Lot went with him.] Herein Abram was more happy than Caracciolus; for he, being converted by Peter Martyr's Lecture on the First Epistle to the Corinthians, and resolving thereupon to leave all and go to Geneva, opened his mind to some of his most familiar friends, and wrought upon them so far, as they promised and vowed to accompany him, &c.; but when they came to the borders of Italy, and considered what they forsook, they first looked back with Lot's wife, and then, without any entreaty, went back as Orpah: so going out of God's blessing into the world's warm sun, as they say, which yet they long enjoyed not; for they were after taken by the Spanish Inquisition, and forced to abjure Christian religion, being neither trusted nor loved of one side nor other. {b}

And Abram was seventy-five years old when he departed.] So he continued a pilgrim for a hundred years together, {#Ge 25:7} having ten sore trials, and every one worse than other.

{a} His life is set forth by Mr. Crashaw.

Ver. 5. And Abram took Sarai his wife.] The faithful companion of all his travels and troubles—one that "did him good, and not evil all her days". {#Pr 31:12} And although she suffered much hardship with him, and for his sake, and was oft put to it, yet she was "not afraid with any amazement," as many a woman would have been. {#IPe 3:6} A valiant woman she was, and no less violent than he for God's kingdom, whereof Canaan was but a type.

Ver. 6,7. And the Canaanite was then in the land. And the Lord appeared to Abram.] The sight of those wicked Canaanites might discourage him, and unsettle his faith. But then the sight of God relieved him (he is the first man that God is said to appear to); and the promise, "Unto thy seed will I give this land," could not but put spirits into him, and make his good old heart to dance a lively dance { levaltoes } in his bosom. When the poor soul even sinks sometimes at the sight of these Canaanites (corruptions), and despairs almost of a conquest, God lets in a beam of his own light, and comforts it with some cordial promise, which is as Boaz was to Naomi, "A restorer of his life, and a nourisher of his old age". {#Ru 4:15}

Ver. 7. And there builded he an altar to Jehovah.] Although the Canaanite was then in the land. God hath promised, when he cleanseth his Church, that "the Canaanite shall be there no more". {#Zec 14:21} But while they are there, we must "shine as lamps amidst a crooked and cursed generation, holding forth the word of life"; {#Php 2:15,16} as an ensign, bearing up God's name as a badge, or beacon; wearing his mark in our foreheads, {#Re 9:4} the place of open profession; setting up an altar even amidst idolaters, as Abram, and calling it "Jehovahnessi—the Lord is my banner," as Moses. {#Ex 17:15} Some that seemed to wish well to Edmund Allan Martyr, {a} bid him keep his conscience to himself, and to follow Baruch's counsel: {#APC Bar 6} Wherefore, when ye see the multitude of people worshipping them behind and before, say in your hearts, O Lord, it is thou that oughtest only to be worshipped. These had more of Nicodemus in them than of Nathanael.

Ver. 8. And he removed from thence.] Because his building altars to Jehovah was offensive to the Canaanites. Indeed, it was a wonder they stoned him not; but God restrained them.

And there he builded an altar to the Lord.] This was still his first care wherever he came, and should be ours. We are a kingdom of priests, and have an altar, {#Heb 13:10} which is Christ, who sanctifies the offering. {#Mt 23:19} "By him, therefore, let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually". {#Heb 13:15} Imo altare extruamus non lapideum, sed carneum in cordibus .

Ver. 9. Going on still towards the south.] As toward the sun, whereby may be figured, saith an expositor, his progress in faith and grace, as #Pr 4:18 2Co 3:18.

Ver. 10. Abram went down into Egypt.] Which the Hebrews much condemn him for, saying that it was out of distrust, and that for this fault of his the Israelites suffered so long and hard bondage in Egypt. But that is but a rash judgment, and as weak an argument; for God, though he must be trusted, yet he may not be tempted. But tempted he is, first, when men are too much addicted to the means, as Thomas; secondly, when they reject them, as Ahaz, who would not ask a sign, though offered him. It was not diffidence, but obedience in Abram to go down to Egypt (that granary of the world), when now, by the want of food in Canaan, he found it was God's will he should seek out.

Ver. 11. Behold now, I know that thou art a fair woman.] And yet she was now sixty-five years of age; wherein she was a figure of "Jerusalem the mother of us all." {#Ga 4:26 So 1:15 4:1} Sarai's chief beauty was that of "the hidden man of the heart," as saith St Peter. {#1Pe 3:4,6} But outward beauty is very lovely and attractive. Plato calls it the principality of nature; Aristotle, a greater commendation than all epistles. And being asked whether beauty were amiable, he answered, That's a blind man's question. {a} The poet could say, Gratior est pulchro veniens in corpore virtus —

That virtue hath a better grace
That shineth from a beauteous face.

Howbeit, Seneca saith, he was out in that saying; for that virtue needs no ornament more than she hath of her own, but beautifies herself sufficiently, and consecrates the body, wherein she dwells. {b} But by the leave of so great a philosopher, I am of the poet's mind; and although I grant that favour without grace is but a gold ring in a swine's snout, as Solomon hath it, or ornamentum in luto, as another (so it was in Alcibiades for a man, and in Aurelia Orestilla for a woman), yet surely, where they meet, they make a happy conjunction, and draw all hearts to them, as in Germanicus (for a man), in whom beauty and virtue strove for precedency; and Artaxerxes Longimanus, the son of Esther, who is said to have been of all men the most beautiful and most bountiful. {c} So in Esther (for a woman), who "obtained favour in the sight of all that looked upon her". {#Es 2:15} And Aspasia Milesia, the wife of Cyrus, who deserved to be styled καλη και σοφη, fair and wise, as Aelian relateth {d} As on the other side in Vatinius, deformity of body strove with dishonesty of mind, adeo ut animus eius dignissimo domicilio inclusus videretur, saith Paterculus.

Ver. 12. Therefore it shall come to pass, &c.] Note here, saith Pererius, 1. The raging affection of the Egyptians, that made no conscience of murder to enjoy their lust; 2. Their blindness, that made less account of murder than adultery. Note again, saith Piscator, that beauty exposeth a body to the danger of dishonesty, and that, as the poet hath it,

Let those therefore that have beauty {a} look to their chastity, and possess their vessels in holiness and honour;

“ *Thesaurum cum virgo, tuum vas fictile servet,
Ut caveas quae sunt noxia, tuta time .*”

Filthiness in a woman is most abominable; therefore is a whore called a strange woman.

Ver. 13. Say, I pray thee, thou art my sister.] The truth was here not only concealed, but dissembled. As the moon hath her specks, so the best have their blemishes: a sheep may slip into a slough as soon as a swine, and an apple tree may have a fit of barrenness as well as a crab tree.

Ver. 14. The Egyptians beheld the woman.] Pleasure is blamed, in Xenophon, for this, that she ever and anon looketh back upon her own shadow, and giveth her eyes leave to rove and range without restraint. An honest man, saith Plautus, should have continent eyes, hands, and tongue. {a} Nihil enim interest quibus membris cinoedi sitis posterioribus an prioribus , said Archelaus, the philosopher, to a wanton young gentleman. The eye (that light of all the members) is an ornament to the whole body. And yet that lightsome part of the body draweth too oft the whole soul into darkness. This Job knew, and therefore "made a covenant" {#Job 31:1} to look to his looks; {b} sight of looking came lusting. Charles V., when the city of Antwerp thought to gratify him in a mask with the sight of certain fair maids brought in before him almost naked, he would not once look at them. {c} The young Lord Harrington, when he should meet with fair women in the streets, or elsewhere, would usually pull his hat over his eyes, as knowing that of our Saviour, "He that looks upon a woman, to lust after her," &c., whereupon immediately follows, "If thine eye offend thee," &c. {d} Eckius was sharply rebuked at a feast, by a modest matron, for his uncivil glances and behavior, in these words (as Melancthon relateth), Es tu doctor? Non existimo te in honesta familia, sed in lupanari educatum. Thou a doctor? I do not believe thou wast bred anywhere else but in a brothel house. {See Trapp on "Ge 6:2"}

Ver. 15. The princes also of Pharaoh, &c.] Flattering courtiers please princes' humours, and serve their delights, though to the procuring of their plagues, as here, and in young King Joash. "If a ruler hearken to lies," saith Solomon, "all his servants are wicked". {#Pr 29:12} Aulici sunt instar speculi, saith one. And Mirifica est sympathia, said another, inter magnates and parasitos. Herodotus writeth that, when Cambyses demanded of his courtiers and counsellors whether it were not lawful for him to marry his own sister, whom he greatly desired, they answered, that they found no law to license such a match: but another law they found, that the King of Persia might do what he wanted to. {a}

And the woman was taken into Pharaoh's house.] Not for any worse purpose than to get her goodwill to become his wife.

Ver. 16. And he entreated Abram well for her sake.] To the end that he might solicit his sister to yield consent; or might not be a backward friend, at least, out of displeasure because they had taken away his sister from him to the court. So King Henry VIII advanced all Anne Boleyn's kindred, &c.

Ver. 17. And the Lord plagued Pharaoh.] Plagued him with plagues, saith the Hebrew: tormented him with torments, or set him on the rack, saith the Greek. And for this he might thank his court parasites, who put him upon this rape. Chrysostom thinketh that Sarai was in bed with the king, and that in the bed God by his plague so restrained him that she remained untouched. But we cannot gather by the text that he intended to commit adultery, sed quod levitate et vaga libidine peccavit, but offended only in going after the sight of his eyes and lust of his heart, as Solomon hath it.

Ver. 18. What is this that thou hast done unto me?] God had reproved Pharaoh, according to that; "He suffered no man to do them wrong, but reproved kings for their sakes"; {#Ps 105:14} and now Pharaoh reproves Abram. It is a sad thing that saints should do that for which they should justly fall under the reproof of the wicked: we should rather dazzle their eyes, and draw from their consciences, at least, a testimony of our innocency, as David did from Saul's, when he said, "Thou art more righteous than I, my son David". {#1Sa 24:17} "Whose ox have I taken?" saith Samuel. {#1Sa 12:3} "And which of you can condemn me of sin?" saith Christ. {#Joh 8:46} Now, the life of a Christian should be a commentary upon Christ's life. {#1Pe 2:21} "Ye are a holy nation, a peculiar people, that ye should preach forth εξαγγελιητε his virtues," {#1Pe 2:9} and not hang his picture—his image and graces—in a dark hole, but in a conspicuous place. Bucer so lived that neither could his friends sufficiently praise him, nor his foes justly blame him for any miscarriage. And Bradford was had in so great reverence and admiration for his holiness, that a multitude which never knew him but by fame greatly lamented his death; yea, and a number also of Papists themselves wished heartily his life. {a} But to have Egyptians jeer us, and that for sin, is threatened as a grievous misery. {#Ho 7:16}

Ver. 19. Why saidst thou, She is my sister?] He might have answered, Because I was afraid. His fear it was that put him upon this exploit. So it did David when he changed his behaviour, and Peter when he denied his Master, &c. Men should rather die than lie. Nec prodam, nec mentiar, said that good bishop {a} in St Augustine. And that was a brave woman in St Jerome, that being on the rack resolved, and answered the tormentor, Non ideo negare volo ne peream, sed ideo mentiri nolo ne peccem . The chameleon, saith Pliny, is the most fearful of all creatures, and doth therefore turn into all colours, to save itself. So will timorous persons. See #Zep 3:13. Let us fortify our hearts against this cowardly passion.

Ver. 20. And Pharaoh commanded.] Thus God comes, as it were, out of an engine, {a} and helps his people at a pinch. Abram had brought himself into the briars, and could find no way out. Many a heavy heart he had, no doubt, for his dear wife (who suffered by his default), and she again for him. God, upon their repentance, provides graciously for them both: she is kept undefiled, he greatly enriched for her sake; and now they are both secured, and dismissed with the king's safeconduct. Oh, who would not serve such a God, as turns our errors and evil counsels to our great good, as the Athenians dreamed their goddess Minerva did for them!

Chapter 13

Ver. 1. And Abram went up out of Egypt.] There must be likewise daily ascensions in our hearts, out of the Egypt of this world, to the heavenly Canaan, where Christ our altar is. The Church is compared to "pillars of smoke" ascending. {#So 3:6} Black she is as smoke in regard of infirmities, yet hath a principle to carry her upwards. Who is this that ascends out of this Egypt below with pillars of smoke, elationibus fumi , that is, with her affections, thoughts, desires, upward, heavenward? Our Edward I had a mighty desire to go to the Holy Land; and because he was hindered, he gave his son a charge upon his deathbed, to carry his heart thither, and prepared 32,000 English pounds to that purpose. {a} The children of faithful Abram, though their bodies be on earth, yet they take much pains, and are at great charge, to get up their hearts to heaven. Hence they are called "eagles," {#Mt 24:28} for their high soaring, and are said to have "noses like the tower of Lebanon," {#So 7:4} for their singular sagacity in resenting and smelling after Christ, the true all quickening body.

Ver. 2. And Abram was very rich.] All rich men therefore are not rejected of God, though it be hard for such to hit on heaven. Poor Lazarus lies in the bosom of rich Abraham there. Riches neither further nor hinder in themselves, but as they are used: as a cipher by itself is nothing, but a figure being set before it, it increaseth the sum. Wealth, if well used, is an ornament, an encouragement to duty, and an instrument of much good. All the danger lies in loving these things. Have them we may, and use them too, as a traveller doth his staff, to help him the sooner to his journey's end; but when we pass away our hearts to them, they become a mischief, and as the word here rendered rich, signifies in the original a burden. Let not therefore the bramble be king: let not earthly things bear rule over thy affections; "fire will rise out of them that will consume thy cedars," {#Jud 9:15} emasculate all the powers of thy soul, as they did Solomon's, whose wealth did him more hurt than his wisdom good. How many have we now-a-days, that when poor, could pray, read, &c., who, grown rich, resemble the moon, which, grown full, gets farthest off from the sun, never suffers eclipse but then, and that by earth's interposition! Let rich men therefore take heed how they handle their thorns; let them gird up the loins of their minds, lest their long garments {a} hinder them in the way to heaven; let them see to it, that they be not tied to their abundance, as little Lentulus was said to have been to his long sword; {b} that they be not held prisoners in those golden fetters, as the king of Armenia was by Anthony, and so sent by him for a present to Cleopatra, {c} lest at length they send their mammon of unrighteousness, as Croesus did his fetters, for a present to the devil, who had deluded him with false hopes of victory. {d}

Ver. 3. And he went on his journeys.] Many a weary step, and rested not till he came to his old altar at Bethel. Lo here a pattern of great piety and singular zeal, in father Abram. Egypt, with all her plenty and pleasure, had not stolen away his heart, so as not to hold his own in the promised land. Neither had he so laden himself with thick clay, but that he went "from strength to strength" (as those good souls did, #Ps 84:7); he took long strides; perexit per perfectiones suas, as it is here. He went journey after journey, till he appeared before God at his altar, there to sanctify that good he had got in Egypt, and to give God thanks for it; yea, to consecrate all to him the bestower of it. Oh, let us show ourselves children of Abram indeed, by "walking in these steps of our father Abram" {#Ro 4:12} Otherwise our outward profession and privileges will profit us no more than it did Dives in hell, that he could call Abraham, father.

Ver. 4. Unto the place of the altar, & c.] There he had found God to his comfort, and there he looks now to find him so again. It will be some help to us, for the strengthening of our faith in prayer, to hold ourselves to the same place, to have a set oratory.

Ver. 5. And Lot also, which went with Abram.] So he lost not all, by leaving friends and means, to go with Abram. They that side with the saints, shall thrive with the saints. God had promised to bless Abram, and he did it; for it is the blessing of God that maketh rich. God had promised again to bless them that blessed Abram, or wished well to him, and did him any favour or furtherance. Let Lot speak now whether this were not made good to him in those flocks and herds of his (that is, in all kind of riches), {a} and tents, that is, servants dwelling in tents. {#Jer 49:29 1Ch 4:41}

Ver. 6. And the land was not able to bear them.] This was sour sauce to their sweet meat, lest they should surfeit of their abundance. All earthly comforts are dissweetened with crosses, and there are thorns in all the world's roses. It is seldom seen that God allows any, though never so dear to himself, a perfect contentment. Something they must have to complain of, that shall give an unsavoury verdure to their sweetest morsels, that they may long after heaven. It could not but be a great cut to this good couple, to be now at length sundered, and deprived of mutual society.

Ver. 7. And there was a strife between.] How oft do servants set masters at variance! But the devil is in it, when good folk fall out especially. He is restless himself, and doth what he can to disquiet others. He loves to fish in troubled waters; and well knows out of his "devilish wisdom," saith St James, that "where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work". {#Jas 3:15,16} But what was it that made the herdsmen fall out, but penury of pasture? and what bred penury of pasture, but plenty of cattle? Great riches many times breed great brabbles. This the heathen found, and therefore feigned that Mars was the son of Juno, {a} because Juno is the goddess of riches, which prove the cause of strife and stirs among many.

And the Canaanite and Perizzite dwelled then in the land.] This is added, either as a cause of their being straitened of fit pasture, because the Canaanites possessed the better grounds; or else to set forth how unseasonable and unsavoury it was, for such men to jar, and so to expose themselves to the scandal and scorn of such wicked neighbours as desired no better sport than to see them falling out. This latter is Lyra's {b} gloss, and I like it well. One of the main scandals the Jews take at this day from Protestants, is their dissensions. Error condonari potest, modo fides adsit in Christum: discordiam, neque si sanguinem fundamus, expiabimus , said reverend Oecolampadius in a letter to the litigious Lutherans of Sueveland. {c}

Ver. 8. And Abram said to Lot.] Speech endeth anger, silence nourisheth it. Much malice and grudge would be avoided, and the very poison of it drawn out, did we but give it a vent at first, by reasoning with the party that wronged us, and expostulating the injury, which most times is but a mere mistake. Now many, on the contrary, harbour this viper in their bosoms, till it hath eaten to their hearts; they not only let "the sun go down," but go its whole round "upon their wrath," {#Eph 4:26} and cannot find time from one end of the year to the other, to utter their minds, and compound their discords. Not only Abram, but Aristippus shall rise up in judgment against such pseudo-Christians, and condemn them. For when Aeschines and he had been at long debate, {a} and there was, I stout, and thou stout, and neither could find in their hearts to go to the other; Aristippus went at length to Aeschines, and said unto him, "Shall we not agree to be friends, before we make ourselves a common scorn to the whole country?" Whereunto when Aeschines answered, that he was content to be friends with all his heart; Aristippus replied, "Remember then, that although I were the elder and the better man, yet I first sought unto thee." "In very deed," said

Aeschines, "thou art a far better man than I; for I began the quarrel, and thou hast been first in making up the breach." And thus these two became fast friends for ever.

For we are brethren.] This is a cooler; and should be like the angel that stayed Abram's hand when the blow was coming.

{a} Plutarch De Cohib. Ira, Laer., lib. ii.

Ver. 9. Is not the whole land before thee?] Abram chooseth rather to take wrong, than to strive for his right, which he here parts with for peace's sake. They that do otherwise, though they think they do bravely, and get the better of their adversary, yet (if St Paul may judge) they sit down by the loss. For he purposely disgraceth their contentious courses, in standing for their utmost right, without respect to peace and quietness, by a word (ηττημα) that signifieth disgrace, or loss of victory:—"Now therefore there is utterly a fault," or a defect of true manhood, "amongst you, because ye go to law one with another; why do ye not rather take wrong? why do ye not rather suffer yourselves to be defrauded?" {#1Co 6:7} Aristotle {a} by the dim light of nature, could see and say, that it is better to suffer wrong than do it. It was a brave speech of Calvin: "Though Luther call me devil, yet I will honour him as a servant of God." And when a fierce friar, in dispute with Beza and his colleagues, called them foxes, apes, asses, &c., Beza answered no more but this, Nos non magis credere, quam Transubstantionem. In rixa is inferior est, qui victor est, saith Basil. And Demosthenes when he was reproached by one, thought it sufficient to say, Nolim tecum in hoc genus certaminis descendere, in quo qui vincitur ipso victore est melior.

Separate thyself, I pray thee, from me.] Sometimes, and between some natures, separation one from another better nourisheth friendship than nearer familiarity. {b} There are, that can never agree together.

If thou wilt take the right hand, &c.] As who should say; We will not be far apart, though we cannot be together; but still helpful one to the other, as the right hand is to the left. {c}

Ver. 10. And Lot lifted up his eyes.] This was "the lust of the eye" St John speaketh of, {#1Jo 2:16} as he afterwards fell into "the lust of the flesh," {#Ge 19:33} {a} his incestuous posterity into "the pride of life." We have heard of the pride of Moab, and the ambition of Ammon, .{ #Jer 48:1-49:39} Lot might not be suffered so much as to look at Sodom while it was burning, as Abram might. God knew his weakness, and so prevented the temptation. He should have had the good manners to let his uncle choose first; but the dust of covetousness had put out his eyes, that he saw not what beseemed him for the present, as afterwards he did, when God so crossed him {#Ps 66:12} in that which he chose, and so blessed Abram in that which was left him. {#Ps 107:33,35} Lot was a good man, but this, το της φιλοχρημοτιας νοσημα, somewhat obscured his virtues. {b}

That it was well watered everywhere,] and so fruitful. Hence the inhabitants, through abuse of their plenty, became wholly drowned in fleshly delights. It faring with them in this respect, as with the inhabitants of Oenoe, {c} a dry island besides Athens, who bestowed much labour to draw into it a river to water it, and make it more fruitful. But, when all the passages were opened, and the receptacles prepared, the water came in so plentifully, that it overflowed all, and at the first tide, drowned the island, and all the people. "They that will be rich," saith the apostle, -that are resolved to rise in the world, by what means it matters not, these, -"fall into temptation and a snare," as Lot, (that is the least evil can come of it), "and into many foolish and noisome lusts," as his neighbours the Sodomites did, "which" desperately "drown {d} men in" double "destruction". {#1Ti 6:9}

Like the land of Egypt.] Which was called of old, publicum orbis horreum the world's great granary. A country so fair and fertile, that the Egyptians were wont to boast, they could feed all men, and feast all the gods, without any sensible diminution of their provision.

Ver. 11. And they separated themselves the one from the other.] But not very far asunder. And herein they became a symbol of friendship: for friends, as parallel lines, neither go far apart, nor yet interfere one with another.

Ver. 12. And Lot dwelled in the cities of the plain.] Not in the land of Canaan with Abram, and his seed: God had a holy hand in that.

Lot pitched his tent towards Sodom.] A good place to pass through, but an ill place to take up in: as one once said of Athens.

Ver. 13. But the men of Sodom were wicked, &c.] See their chief sins set down, #Eze 16:49,50. The Chaldee Paraphrast here translateth, they were first unrighteous with their mammon: and secondly, sinners with their bodies, before the Lord. That unnameable sin had its name from them, who against nature were scalded $\epsilon\chi\epsilon\kappa\alpha\theta\eta\sigma\alpha\nu$ in their lust, one toward another. {#Ro 1:27} The apostle there gives it in of the heathen philosophers, many of whom were patrons of this abhorred filth; as Cicero complains of Plato; and Socrates was shrewdly suspected, to be no more honest than he should be with Alcibiades; nor Seneca with Nero. {a} "The wisdom from above is pure," saith St James; {#Jas 1:17} and in this wisdom is "truth" and purity, saith Solomon, {#Pr 8:7} whereas all worldly wisdom is stained with error or lewdness. God punisheth the pride of all flesh with some foul sin, and so sets a Noverint universi, as it were, upon the world's wizards, that all men may know them to be but arrant fools.

And sinners before the Lord exceedingly.] They were grown so debauched and impudent in evil, that neither fear of God nor shame of men could restrain them. Though God looked on, they were no whit abashed or abased before him. God "found not" out their sins "by secret search," {#Jer 2:34} he needed not to search them with lights. {#Zep 1:12} For "the show of their countenance did witness against them"; they could blush no more than a sackbut: shamelessness sat in their foreheads; "they declared their sins," even to a proverb. {#Isa 3:9} They "set them" in open view "upon the cliff of the rock". {#Eze 24:7} They faced the heavens, and held their heads aloft, as if they deserved commendation, rather than else. This is a high degree of sin, and an immediate forerunner of destruction.

Ver. 14. After that Lot was separated from him.] Till Lot was departed, and the strife ceased, God appeared not. He is the God of peace, and hates contention; which as it indisposeth us to holy duties, {#Ipe 3:7} so it keepeth God from us by his comforts and influences. They say of bees, that stir and strife among them is a sign their queen is about to remove, to leave the hive, and to be gone somewhere else. God refuseth to be served till the matter be agreed. {#Mt 5:24}

Lift up now thine eyes.] God's comforts are therefore most sweet, because most seasonable. Abram had now parted with Lot, to his great grief: God makes up that loss to him in his own gracious presence and promise: which he here repeateth, to teach us, moreover, that the continual weakness of man needeth continual comfort from God.

Ver. 15. For all the land which thou seest is thine.] "God gave him no inheritance in it, no, not so much as a foot breadth"; {#Ac 7:5} yet he promised that he would give it to him: and that Abram took for good freehold. Men use to reckon their wealth, not by what ready money they have only, but by the good bonds and leases they can produce. A great part of a Christian's estate lies in bonds and bills of God's hand.

Ver. 16. And I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth.] Afterwards, {#Ge 15:5} God promiseth that his seed shall be as the stars of heaven. Abram's seed, saith one, {a} are of two sorts: some are visible members of a church, yet have earthly hearts: others are as the stars of heaven, for spiritual light, motion, and influence.

Ver. 17. Arise, walk through the land.] Thus God rewards contented Abram with the whole country. He never suffers any man to lose by a humble remission of his right, in a desire of peace. "The meek shall inherit the earth," {#Mt 5:5} and have heaven to boot; which was the chief thing here promised to Abram, in this survey. {#Heb 11:10,16}

Ver. 18. Built an altar.] {See Trapp on "Ge 12:8"}

Chapter 14

Ver. 1. In the days of Amraphel,] i.e., Nimrod, as R. Salomon saith: or Ninus, as others.

King of nations.] Of a people made up of sundry nations, saith Lyra. Symmachus rendereth it, King of Scythians: others, of Pamphylia.

Ver. 2. That these made war.] War is the slaughter house of mankind, and the hell of this present world. It hews itself a way through a wood of men, and lays "heaps upon heaps" (as Samson did, #Jud 15:16), not with "a jaw-bone of an ass," and one after another, but in a minute of time, and by the mouth of a murdering piece. Alphonsus D. of Ferrara had two of these cannons ^{a} of a wonderful size; the one whereof he called Archidiabolo, the other, the Earthquake. The Turks battered the walls of Rhodes, with twelve basilisks, so aptly named of the serpent, basiliscus, who, as Pliny writes, killeth man or beast with his very sight. But before these bloody instruments of death were heard of in the world, men could find means to slaughter one another in war; witness these five kings, that came with Chedorlaomer, and smote the Rephaims or giants, the Zuzims or Zamzummims, ^{#De 2:20} and the Emims or terrible ones, as their name imports. These they slew by the way, besides what they did in the vale of Siddim, where they joined battle with the five kings, and cut off many. If we may judge one battle by another, hear what was done in a bloody fight between Amurath III, king of the Turks, and Lazarus, despot of Servia. Many thousands fell on both sides; the brightness of the armour and weapons was as like the lightning; the multitude of lances and other horsemen's staves shadowed the light of the sun. Arrows and darts fell so fast, that a man would have thought they had poured down from heaven. The noise of the instruments of war, with the neighing of horses, and outcries of men, was so terrible and great, that the wild beasts in the mountains stood astonished therewith; and the Turkish histories, ^{b} to express the terror of the day, vainly say, that the angels in heaven, amazed with that hideous noise, for that time, forgot the heavenly hymns wherewith they always glorify God. In conclusion, Lazarus was slain, and Amurath had the victory, but a very bloody one, and such as he had no great joy of. For he lost many of his Turks; as did likewise Adrian the Emperor of the Romans, when he fought against the Jews and had the better: but with such a loss of his own men, that when he wrote of his victory to the Senate, he forbore to use that common exordium, that the emperors in like ease were wont to use, Si vos liberique vestri valeatis, bene est: Ego quidem et exercitus valemus. {c} There was no such thing, believe it, nor but seldom is there. But as the dragon sucks out the blood of the elephant, and the weight of the falling elephant crushes the dragon, and both usually perish together; {d} so doth it many times fall out with those that undertake war. These four kings beat the five; but, when they got home, became a prey to Abram and his confederates. The Low-countrymen are said to grow rich—whereas {e} all other nations grow poor—with war. But they may thank a good queen, under God (Queen Elizabeth, I mean), who first undertook their protection against the Spaniard. For the which act of hers, all princes admired her fortitude: and the King of Sweden said, that she had now taken the diadem from her head, and set it upon the doubtful chance of war. {f} Dubia sane est Martis alea, nec raro utrique parti noxia, saith Bucholcerus. {g} And I cannot but—as the case stands with us, especially at this present, by reason of these unnatural uncivil wars stirred up amongst us—go on, and give my vote with him. Ideo pons aureus (ut vulgato proverbio dicitur) hosti fugienti extruendus est et magno precio, precibus, patientia ac prudentia alma pax redimenda, ne infoelicitatis portas, pacis tempore clausas, infaustum bellum aperiat. War is sweet, they say, to them that never made trial of it. {h} But I cannot sufficiently wonder at Pyrrhus, king of Epirus, of whom Justin witnesseth, that he took as much pleasure in war, as others do in supreme government. {i} He might have better learned of his own prophets; so St Paul calleth their poets. {#Tit 1:12} Homer, the prince of them, ever brings in Mars, as most hated of Jupiter above any other god, as born for a common mischief, and being right of his mother Juno's disposition, which was fierce, vast, contumacious, and malignant. We that are Christians, as we cannot but, with the prophet Isaiah, count and call war a singular evil; so we must acknowledge with him, that it is an evil of God's own creating. {#Isa 45:7} "I make peace, and create evil," {j} that is, war. I, is emphatic and exclusive, as who should say, I, and I alone. Whencesoever the sword comes, it is bathed in heaven. {#Isa 34:5} God is pleased for this to style himself, "A man of war". {#Ex 15:3} The Chaldee expresseth it thus, "the Lord and victor of wars". {#Ge 17:1} God elsewhere calleth himself, El Shaddai. Aben-Ezra interpreteth Shaddai a conqueror. And indeed the Hebrew word Shadad signifieth to dissipate and destroy: both which he must needs do that becomes a conqueror. {k} God seems to glory much in his workings about warlike affairs. Hence, -"Who {#Ps 24:8} is the King of glory? The Lord strong and mighty; the Lord mighty in battle." He is in Scripture said to "send the sword"; {#Eze 14:17} to "muster" the men; {#Isa 13:4} to order the ammunition; {#Jer 50:25} to bring up both van and rear; {#Isa 52:12} to give wisdom, valour, and victory. {#Ps 144:1 Eze 30:24 Ec 9:11} The whole battle is his. {#Isa 17:47} And he oft thereby "revenge the quarrel of his covenant". {#Le 26:25} So he hath done already upon the Jews and Germans: so he is now doing, alas, upon Ireland and England. And here I cannot but insert that which I find observed by a prime preacher of our kingdom. The late battle at Edgehill was fought in a place called "the Vale of the Red Horse," as if God had said, "I have now sent you the red horse, to avenge the quarrel of the white"; {#Re 6:2,4} the blood spilt at Edgehill the same day of the month in which the rebellion broke out in Ireland, the year before, October 23. Yea, and upon the self-same day, if our intelligence be true, in which that bloody battle was fought near Leipsic, in Germany. This conjuncture is a sad presage, that England is to drink deep in Germany's and Ireland's cup. "Father, if it be thy will, let this cup pass from us." "A cup of trembling" it is, surely, to myself, among many others; such as maketh my pen almost to fall out of my fingers, while I write these things; and affects me no otherwise—when I consider of the many fearful convulsions of our kingdom, tending doubtless to a deadly consumption—than the siege of Rome did St Jerome. For hearing that that city was besieged, at such time as he was writing a Commentary upon Ezekiel, {l} and that many of his godly acquaintance there were slain, he was so astonished at the news, that for many nights and days he could think of nothing. When I think {m} of what should move the Lord to make this breach upon us, and notwithstanding that he hath been so earnestly besought; yet for all this, his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still; that of Cajetan comes before me; who, then commenting upon Matthew when the French soldiers having broken into Rome, offered all manner of abuse and violence to the clergy, inserts this passage into his Notes on Matt. 5:13—"Ye are the salt of the earth,"—as my former author {n} allegeth, and rendereth him:—"We, the prelates of Rome, do now find the truth of this by woeful experience, being become a scorn and a prey, not to infidels but Christians, by the most righteous judgment of God, because we, who by our places should have been 'the salt of the earth,' had 'lost our savour,' and were good for little else but looking after the rites and revenues of the Church. {o} Hence it is, that together with us, this city comes to be trodden under foot, this sixth of May 1527." That city, till it became idolatrous, was ever victorious: but since it hath been the nest of Antichrist, it was never besieged but it was taken and sacked. The God of heaven purge out of our Church, daily more and more, that land desolating sin of idolatry, and make good his promise, "That there shall be no more the Canaanite in the house of the Lord of hosts," {#Zec 14:21} no evil spirit left in the land. Fiat, fiat . For of England we may now well say, as he once did of Rome: Nunquam magis iustis iudiciis approbatum est, non esse curae Deo securitatem nostrum, esse vindictam. {p}

{a} Peacham's Valley of Varieties. {#Re 9:17} "Fire, smoke, and brimstone," seem to note out the Turks' guns and ordnance. For the drawing of that gun that Mohammed used in besieging Constantinople, seventy yokes of oxen and two thousand men were employed.

Ver. 5. Chedorlaomer.] King of Persia; he was commander in chief; and upon his sword might have been written, as was upon Agamemnon's, ουτος μεν φοβος εστιν ανθρωπων, this is the common terror. {a}

{a} Pausan.

Ver. 6. And the Horites in their mount Seir.] Their Seir could not secure them, when once they fell into the hands of these Ardeliones, {#Eze 21:31} burning or "brutish men," skilful to destroy.

Ver. 7. And smote all the country.] Great is the woe of war. {See Trapp on "Ge 14:2"} Great also was the goodness of God to Abram, in giving so many, and so victorious, nations into his hands.

Ver. 8. And there went out the king of Sodom, &c.] These five neighbouring kings were combined against the four kings that invaded them. It was not then a civil dissension, that worst of wars, such as was that of France (and is now, alas, of England), wherein the sons fought against their fathers, and brothers against brothers; and even women took arms on both sides for defence of their religion. {a} That was not more monstrous, that the Suevian women threw their young children at the Romans, their enemies, instead of darts, {b} than that other was piteous between the Romans themselves, those that were for Vitellius, and the other for Vespasian; that, when the women brought the Vitellians food by night, into the camp, they not only refreshed themselves, but their adversaries also, with food and drink. Each man called to his adversary by name, and said, Accipe, mi commilito, ede: Non enim tibi gladium proebeo, sed panem. Accipe rursum et bibe: Non enim tibi scutum, sed poculum trado: ut, sive tu me interficias, sive ego te, moriamur facilius: atque ut ne me, enervata atque imbecilla manu occidas, aut ego te. Hae nostrae sunt exequiae, nobis adhuc viventibus. {c} Thus they greeted over night, and the next day despatched one another; they gave wounds, and took wounds; they slew, and were slain, as the same author hath it. {d} Which as oft as I think on, I cannot but highly commend that speech of Otho the Emperor to his soldiers, a little before he took his end: I hate civil wars, though I were sure to overcome. {e} I know not why any Englishman should love it, that shall call to mind, that in the civil dissensions between the houses of York and Lancaster, there were slain (ere the quarrel ended) fourscore princes of the blood royal, and twice as many natives of England as were lost in the two conquests of France. {f} War is easily taken up, saith the wise historian, {g} but not so easily laid down again; neither is the beginning and the end of a war in any one man's power. If the Scots should come in on the one side, and the French or Irish on the other, what an Aceldama should we soon become! what an Ireland, a seat of wrath, because a seat of war! It is never to be forgotten by us, that the dissension between England and Scotland consumed more Christian blood, wrought more spoil and destruction, and continued longer than ever quarrel we read of did between any two people of the world. Our Edward I adjured his son and nobles, that, if he died on his journey into Scotland, they should carry his corpse about Scotland, and not suffer it to be interred, till they had absolutely subdued the country. A desire more martial than Christian; a design of revenge beyond his life. Such spirits are raised in men "that delight in war". {#Ps 68:30} "Oh! pray for the peace of Jerusalem." So saith David. {#Ps 122:6} And so doth David in the next verse, "Peace be within thy walls, and prosperity within thy palaces." The Athenians, when they had gotten the better at sea of the Lacedemonians, were so overjoyed, that they then first set up altars to the public peace; and appointed a cushion to be laid thereon, for that goddess to rest upon. {h} Oh, would the Lord but once more grant us, that "righteousness and peace might kiss each other, and mercy and truth meet" in our land, {#Ps 85:9,10} how happy should we hold ourselves; how infinitely obliged to sing, Servati sumus, ut serviamus ! {#Lu 1:74} How should we prize our restored peace, and improve it as Abram did here, to the paying of tithes, in token of thankfulness; yea, to the setting up of altars, not to public peace, as those heathens, but to the God of peace, as Abram after this did, when he had concluded a peace with King Abimelech, and his general, Phichol! {#Ge 21:32,33}

Ver. 9. Four kings with five.] These five were but free princes of cities, petty kings, such as we had here of old in this island; which is therefore said, by Jerome, to be tyrannorum fertilis, fertile of tyrants.

Ver. 10. And the vale of Siddim was full of slimepits.] Chosen therefore on purpose by the five kings, who fled and fell there; or (as some understand the text) made haste to fall down there; {a} skulking and scouting, {b} till their enemies should pursue them, and so perish in those pits. But their cunning failed them; for as they had travailed with iniquity and conceived mischief, so they brought forth a lie. They "made a pit and digged it, but fell into the ditch that themselves had made". {#Ps 7:15} The way of this world, saith one, is like the vale of Siddim, slimy and slippery, full of slime pits and pitfalls, springs and stumbling-blocks, laid by Satan to maim or mischief us, to procure our ruin or ruth. To defeat him therefore (as these four kings did the five), let us tread gingerly, step warily, lift not up one foot till we find sure footing for the other: let us look ere we leap. Alioqui saliens antequam videat, casurus est antequam debeat, as St Bernard hath it. {c}

Ver. 12. And they took Lot.] God passeth not by the sins of his dearest saints, without a sensible check. Lot, for his affecting the first choice, had soon enough of it. Strong affections bring strong afflictions; as hard knots require hard wedges. Earthly things court us, that they may cut our throats: these hosts welcome us into our inn with smiling countenance, that they may despatch us in our beds. Beware of the world's cut-throat kindnesses; consort not with Sodomites, lest ye partake of their plagues. Hamath lies nigh to Damascus in place, and fares the worse for its neighbourhood. {#Zec 9:2} Lot loseth his goods and liberty; Jehoshaphat had well-nigh lost his life, for "loving those that hated the Lord." {#2Ch 18:31 19:2}.

Ver. 13. And there came one that had escaped.] A Sodomite likely, but a servant to God's good providence, for Lot's rescue. "The Lord knoweth how to deliver his," &c. {#2Pe 2:9} He that "led captivity captive," {#Eph 4:8} can "turn our captivity as the streams in the south". {#Ps 126:4}

Ver. 14. He armed his trained servants.] Or, catechised; such as he had painfully principled both in religion and military discipline, tractable and trusty, ready pressed for any such purpose. It is recorded to the commendation of Queen Elizabeth, that she provided for war, even when she had most perfect peace with all men. {a} Speers foreseen are dintless.

Ver. 15. Smote them, and pursued them.] Abram came upon them as they were, -secure, sleepy, and drunken, as Josephus writeth. So did David upon the Amalekites, {#1Sa 30:16} and Ahab the Syrians. {#1Ki 20:16} The division of his company, and taking benefit of the night, teacheth the use of godly policies and stratagems.

Ver. 16. And he brought back all the goods.] The five kings were deprived of the whole victory, because they sparest not a man whom they should have spared. One act of injustice oft loseth much that was justly gotten. Beware, saith a reverend writer hereupon, {a} of swallowing ill-gotten wealth; it hath a poisonous operation; and, like some evil simple in the stomach, will bring up the good food together with the evil humours.

And also brought again his brother Lot.] Many a crooked nature would have thought of the old jar, and let Lot taste of the fruits of his departure. In a friend's distress, let former faults be forgotten, and all possible helps afforded.

And the women also, and the people.] The hope of this might haply move that officious messenger to address himself to the old Hebrew, {#Ge 14:13} little set by, till now that they were in distress. General Vere told the King of Denmark that kings cared not for soldiers (no more did the king of Sodom for Abram, and his soldiers) until such time as the crowns hang on the one side of their heads. {b}

Ver. 18. Melehizedek king of Salem.] Who this Melchizedek was is much controverted. Some would have him to be the Holy Ghost. Others, the Lord Christ in the habit of a king and priest. The Jerusalem Targum saith, Hu Shem Rabba: this was Shem the Great. And of the same opinion are not a few of the Hebrew doctors, and others. But what should Shem do in Canaan; which country fell not to him, but to his brother Ham? To this they answer—That by the instinct of the Holy Ghost, he left his own posterity now fallen away, for most part, to idolatry, and came to the land of Canaan, a type of heaven, and the place from whence peace and salvation should be preached to all people. If this were so, it might very well be that Amraphel, who was of Shem's lineage, and his fellow-soldiers, moved with reverence of this their great-grandfather Shem, might forbear to molest him at Salem, or invade his territories, when they wasted and smote all the neighbour nations. {a} But then, on the other side, if Melchizedek were Shem, 1. Why doth not Moses call him so, but change his name? 2. Why did not Abram, dwelling so near, visit him all this while, that was so near allied to him, and so highly respected by him, as it was meet? 3. Why did Melchizedek, the grandfather, take tithes of his nephew, to whom he should rather have given gifts and legacies? {#2Co 12:14} Most likely, Melchizedek was a Canaanite of the Canaanites; yet a most righteous king and priest of the most High God, and so a pledge and firstfruits of the calling of the Gentiles to the knowledge and obedience of Jesus Christ, of whom he was a lively type. {#Heb 7:2}

Brought forth bread and wine.] This he did as a king; as a priest he blessed Abram; which latter therefore the apostle pitcheth upon, {#Heb 7:1} as being to treat of Christ's priesthood. The Papists think to find footing here for their unbloody sacrifice in the Mass. Melchizedek, say they, as a priest offered bread and wine to God; for he was a priest of the living God. So they render it, or rather wrest this text, to make it speak what it never meant. Cadem Scripturarum faciunt ad materiam suam, they murder the Scriptures to serve their own purposes, saith Tertullian. {b} Where can they show us in all the Book of God, that the Hebrew word Hotsi here used, signifieth to offer? But anything serves turn that hath but a show of what they allege it for. A Sorbonist finding it written at the end of St Paul's Epistles, Missa est, &c., bragged he had found the Mass in his Bible! So another reading #Joh 1:41, "Invenimus Messiam," made the same conclusion, {c} A third, no whit wiser than the two former, speaking of these words I now write upon, Rex Salem panem et vinum protulit, fell into a large discourse of the nature of salt! {a} Agreeable whereunto Dr Poynes {e} writes, that it was foretold in the Old Testament that the Protestants were a malignant Church, alleging #2Ch 24:19 Mittebatque Prophetas, ut reverterentur ad Dominum, quos Protestantes illi audire nolebant.

Ver. 19. And he blessed him.] Lo, here an instance of the communion of saints: Melchizedek doth all good offices to Abram (a believer, though a stranger), not of courtesy only and humanity, but of charity and piety.

Ver. 20. And he gave him tithes of all.] Not of the Sodomites' goods, which he restored wholly, {#Ge 14:23} but of the other lawful spoil he had taken from the four conquered kings; in testimony of his thankfulness to God, the giver of all victory.

Ver. 21. And the king of Sodom said.] He that a few days since faced the heavens, and cared not for four kings, can now become suppliant to a forlorn foreigner. Affliction will tame and take down the proudest spirits; they buckle in adversity that bore their heads on high in prosperity. "In their month you may find these wild asses."

Give me the persons.] Abram did so, and yet they were no whit amended by their late captivity, or former servitude; from both which now they are freed by Abram, but still held captive by the devil, who owes them yet a further spite, as we shall see, #Ge 19.

Ver. 22. I have lifted up my hand.] A swearing gesture. {#Da 12:7 Re 10:5,6} Neither doth he this rashly, but for very good reason first, that by this oath, as by a buckler, he might fence himself against all covetous desires of the spoil; secondly, to show that he did seriously remit of that which was his right, and went not to war for wages; thirdly, hereby to profess his faith and religion in opposition to their superstitious vanities, &c.

The possessor of heaven and earth.] The true and rightful proprietary, whose tenants-at-pleasure we all are, as Philo from this text well observeth. And here take notice how Melchizedek and Abram concur in the very terms of professing their faith, "The most high God, possessor of heaven and earth." Whereunto Abram adds "Jehovah," by which name Melchizedek haply knew not God as yet; like as Apollos was ignorant of many needful truths, till better instructed by Aquila and Priscilla. {#Ac 18:26}

Ver. 23. That I will not take from a thread.] Melchizedek, from God, had made Abram heir of all things; for, saith he, I am the priest of the most high God, possessor of heaven and earth, who hath sent me with this bread and wine, as by turf and twig, as by an earnest and a little for the whole, to give thee possession of both. Now, therefore, when the king of Sodom presently after offers him the goods he had taken, Abram would none; he was grown too great to accept of such an offer; God was his "exceeding great reward". {#Ge 15:1} Aquila non captat muscas .

Lest thou shouldst say, I have made Abram rich.] Occasion must not be given to any to speak the least evil of us, lest Christ be dishonoured: for every Christian quartereth arms with Christ. And if Abram do anything unbecoming himself, Abram's God shall be blasphemed at Sodom.

Ver. 24. Let them take their portion.] In things indifferent, we may abridge ourselves; we may not prescribe to others, as if they must needs be just of our make. "My brethren, be not many masters," {#Jas 3:1} as Magistri nostri parisienses . See #1Co 9:14,15.

Ver. 1. Fear not, Abram.] Either as Daniel feared upon sight of a like vision; {#Da 10:7,8} or as Jacob feared after the sack of Shechem, lest he should be set upon by those whom he had lately discomfited. Or, fear not lest thou shalt die childless; which seemeth to be that which chiefly affrighted and afflicted him at this time. The heart is not in case to receive promises till freed of false fears. These are quelled and killed by faith only.

I am thy shield.] From the envy of thy neighbours, and enmity of others, whom thou hast lately vanquished: yea, I will deliver thee from all danger, as I have done from this. See a like promise to all believers, #Ps 115:9-11. The shield is between the body and the thrust; so is God between his and harm. He "beareth them as on eagles' wings". {#De 32:11} The eagle fleeth with her young on her back; {a} there is no shooting them but through her body. No more can any devoratory evil, as Tertullian's phrase is, befall the saints, but through God.

And thy exceeding great reward.] So that thou shalt lose nothing by refusing the king of Sodom's offer. God is a liberal paymaster, and his retributions are more than bountiful. A hundredfold here, and heaven hereafter. {#Mt 19:29} Not only Caleb shall have Hebron for his valour, but Nebuchadnezzar shall have Egypt as his pay for his pains at Tyre. Never ask with Peter, What shall we have? {#Mt 19:27} You shall have whatever heart can wish, or need require. The world gives hard wages; but God's reward is exceeding great. He will also recompense our losses for his sake, as the king of Poland did his noble servant Zelilaus; having lost his hand in his wars, he sent him a golden hand for it: so Gaius gave Agrippa, that had been imprisoned for his sake, a chain of gold as heavy as his chain of iron had been. {b}

{b} Cromerus.

Ver. 2. Lord God, what wilt thou give me, &c.] Dominator Jehovah. Adonai cum Camets sonat Dominator . A stately style. We must magnify God when we have got him into our hearts, and enlarge his room there when we conceive of him, as much as may be: do our utmost, and then say, Claudicat ingenium, delirat linguaque, mensque .{a}

Seeing I go childless.] He had no great joy of his former victory, or the present promise, because childless. His mouth was so out of taste with the sense of his want that he could relish no comfort. This was his fault, and is often ours: like children, if we have not that piece we would have, we grow sullen, and will have none. Had not God been to Abram instead of ten children? Is he not all in all to his?

And the steward of my house.] Filius discursitationis, vel derelictionis domus meae . He that now runs about my business, and to whom I am likely to leave all. A faithful steward he was, and fearing God, {#Ge 24:2,3, &c.} and therefore might look not to live long in a low place. {#Pr 22:29}

This Eliezer of Damascus.] Or Eliazar, as #Ex 6:25. Whence Lazarus, said in the parable to be in Abraham's bosom, {#Lu 16:23} as dear to him, and set next him in heaven.

Ver. 3. And Abram said, Behold, to me, &c.] He harps again upon the same string; when we fall upon crosses we add, we multiply, we rise in our discourse, we are eloquent above measure, and beyond truth sometimes. But how comes Abram to speak thus to God once and again? In former visions God only spake, here Abram answers. It appears he grew in a holy familiarity with the divine Majesty, and a humble boldness, as Cajetan here observeth.

Ver. 4. And, behold, the word of the Lord, &c.] Abram's "Behold" of grief, is answered with God's "Behold" of grace. The Greek rendereth it, "And straightway." God was straight at hand to help Abram's infirmity, and to raise up his faith that began to flag and hang the wing, as the best faith will, if long put to it. Adeo nihil est in nobis magni, quod non queat minui .

Ver. 5. And he brought him forth abroad.] Abram having prayed a good part of the day within, is now drawn forth at night to receive the promise. Pray that ye may joy, saith Christ: {#Joh 16:24} and, if ye will "rejoice evermore," "Pray without ceasing," saith the apostle.

If thou be able to number them.] Then mayest thou number thy posterity; and they, their privileges. It is God only that "tellethe the number of the stars, and calleth them all by their names". {#Ps 147:4} No man can number them. {#Jer 33:22} And yet Aratus and Eudoxus vainly vaunted, saith St Augustine, {a} that they had cast up the stars, and could call them all by their names.

{a} Aug. De Civ. Dei., lib. xvi.

Ver 6. And he believed.] When thus the promise was repeated. So needful it is, that the word should be often preached, and the sweet promises of the gospel beaten to the smell; that God's "name being as an ointment poured out, the virgins may love him," {#So 1:3} believe in him, and "rejoice with joy unspeakable, and full of glory." {#1Pe 1:8}

And he counted it to him for righteousness.] This imputative righteousness the Papists scoff at, calling it putative, or imaginary. This the Jews also jeer at to this day; as their fathers did of old, {#Ro 10:2,3} so do they. For being asked whether they believe to be saved by the righteousness of Christ imputed to them, they answer, that every fox must pay his own skin to the finger. But is not Christ called in their law, "Jehovah our righteousness?" {#Jer 23:6} And how so, but by means of that imputation so often hammered on by the apostle? {#Ro 4} adding after all, that what is said here of Abram, "is not written for his sake alone, that it was imputed to him, but for us also, to whom it shall be imputed, if we believe on him that raised up Jesus," &c. {#Ro 4:24} If Adam's sin be mine, though I committed it not; why should it seem so strange, that the merit of Christ's entire obedience should by the like means be mine, though I wrought it not? See #Ro 5:19 2Co 5:19. "If he hath wronged thee aught, reckon that to me," said Paul to Philemon, concerning Onesimus; {#Phm 1:18} saith Christ to his Father concerning us. And—to stop the Papists' mouth—if another man's faith may benefit infants at their baptism, as Bellarmine affirmeth; why should it seem so absurd that believers should be benefited by Christ's righteousness imputed?

Ver. 7. I am the Lord that brought thee.] Let the remembrance of what I have done for thee confirm thy confidence, since every former mercy is a pledge of a future. God giveth after he hath given, as the spring runneth after it hath run. And as the eye is not weary of seeing, nor the ear of hearing, no more is God of doing good to his people. "Draw out thy lovingkindness," saith David, {#Ps 36:10, marg.} as a continued series or chain, where one link draws on another to the utmost length.

Ver. 8. Lord God, whereby shall I know?] He desires a sign, not that he believed not before, but that he might better believe. How great is God's love in giving us sacraments, and therein to make himself to us visible, as well as audible

Ver. 9. Take me a heifer, &c.] Here God commands him a busy sacrifice, and then casts him into a terrible sleep; the better to prepare him to receive the ensuing oracle, and to teach him that he may not rashly rush upon divine mysteries. Heathens could say, Non loquendum de Deo absque lumine ;{ a} that is, without premeditation and advised consideration.

Ver. 10. Divided them in the midst.] In signum exitii foedifrago eventuri . This was the federal rite both among Jews {#Jer 34:18,19} and Gentiles, as it is to be seen in Virgil, {a} describing the covenant of Romulus and Tatius. God also threateneth to cut the evil servant in twain (διχοτομησει) that forgetteth the covenant of his God. {#Mt 24:51} These dissected creatures are the oppressed Israelites; the parts laid each against other signify, that God will make them up again, though dissected; the fowls that came down upon them, are the Egyptians; Abram's chasing them away, is their deliverance by Moses after four hundred years, signified by those four kinds of creatures, as Luther interpreteth.

Ver. 11. Abram drove them away.] So must we do evil motions and distractive thoughts in holy duties, which else will muster and swarm in our hearts like the flies of Egypt; pestering us worse than the fly in Albertus Magnus, that was ever hankering after the bald head; though he flapt it off again and again, he could not be rid of it.

Ver. 12. And when the sun was going down] Heb., When he was ready to enter, to wit, into his "bride chamber". {#Ps 19:6}

Ver. 13. Know of a surety, that thy seed.] Must first suffer, before they can enter; and so be conformed to Christ their Captain, who was "perfected by sufferings," {#Heb 2:10} and came not to the Crown but by the Cross. Difficile est ut praesentibus bonis quis fruatur et futuris; ut hic ventrem, illic mentem reficiat, ut de deliciis ad delicias transeat; ut in coelo et in terra gloriosus appareat, saith St Jerome. Through many tribulations we must enter into heaven. He that will go any other way, let him (as the emperor said to the heretic) erect a ladder, and go up alone {a}

Ver. 14. Afterward shall they come out, &c.] All the saints' abasements are but in order to their advancement. As God brought forth his Israel with jewels, and other wealth; so the "afflicted" Church, and "tossed with tempest," shall build her walls and "lay her foundations with sapphires and agates". {#Isa 54:11,12} See #Isa 62:3,4.

Ver. 15. Thou shalt go to thy fathers.] The "spirits of just men made perfect"; all the court of heaven shall meet thee, and welcome thee into their society. That brave Panegyris, #Heb 12:22,23.

In peace.] So Josiah did, according to the promise, though he died in battle. {#2Ch 34:28} God made war to be peace to him. {a}

In a good old age.] Heb., With a good hoar head, which is "a crown," when "found in the way of righteousness". {#Pr 16:31}

Ver. 16. The iniquity of the Amorites, &c.] A metaphor from a large vessel filled by drops; as elsewhere, from a harvest ready for the sickle, and from the vine ripe for the winepress. Pererius the Jesuit, writing upon this text, saith, If any marvel why England continueth to flourish, notwithstanding the cruel persecution of Catholics there (just execution of Catholics he should have said); I answer, Because their sin is not yet full. God grant it! {#Jer 28:6} Sed veniet tandem iniquitatis complementum, saith he. A true prophet, I fear me. That terrible text rings in mine ears, "An end is come, the end is come: it watcheth for thee; behold it is come, it is come." {#Eze 7:6}

Ver. 17. A smoking furnace, and a burning lamp.] Figuring out either God (who is a consuming fire) cutting covenant, {#Ge 15:10} per condescensum ; or else, the furnace of Israel's affliction, and then the lamp of their salvation.

Ver. 18. From the river of Egypt.] Sihor. {#Jer 2:18} This was fulfilled in Solomon's, and especially in Christ's kingdom.

Ver. 19-21. The Kenites, and the Kenezites.] R. Salomon noteth, that whereas ten nations are here reckoned up, seven only were given to the Israelites. He addeth also, that the Kenites, Kenezites, and Cadmonims were the same with the Edomites, Moabites, and Ammonites, all which were at length to be possessed by the Israelites.

Chapter 16

Ver. 1. Now Sarai, Abram's wife, bare him no children.] God had foretold him of his children's affliction, and yet gave him no child, but holds him still in suspense. He knows how to commend his favours to us by withholding them, Cito data cito vilescent ; we account it scarce worth taking, that is not twice worth asking.

A handmaid, an Egyptian.] One of those maids, belike, that were given her in Egypt. {#Ge 12:16}

Ver. 2. The Lord hath restrained me.] She faults herself, not her husband, as many a cranky dame would have done.

It may be that I may obtain children by her.] Heb., Be builded by her; as God "made the midwives' houses," that is, gave them children, for their mercy to the poor children, and {#Ex 1:21} as he promised to make David a house, {#2Sa 7:11,12} that is, to give him seed to sit upon his throne. Sarai's aim was good here, but the means she used naught. She was too hasty; Abram too facile; both to blame, for want of faith, and violation of wedlock. Albeit this might be a sin of ignorance in them, as was also polygamy. God had promised a seed to Abram, but not expressly as yet unto Sarai. Now, by the law, {a} bondservants' children were their master's. {#Ex 21:4} And among the heathens, Stratonice, the wife of King Diotarus, being barren, gave secretly her maid Electra unto her husband, by whom she had an heir to the crown. {b}

{b} Plutarch.

Ver. 3. After Abram had dwelt ten years.] The Rabbis tell us of a tradition that the Hebrews grounded from hence, that if a woman had no child in the first ten years, she might be held barren, and another wife taken. But this is like one of their ill glosses that marred so many good texts, and refuted by our Saviour the Lawgiver, who best understood his own meaning. {#Mt 5:31,32}

Ver. 4. Her mistress was despised in her eyes.] Heb., Allevata est, sive elevata est :and so she was beaten with her own rod, and yet complains. Neither is it any wonder; for, "for three things the earth is disquieted," saith Agur, and two of them are, "for an odious woman when she is married, and a handmaid that is heir to her mistress". {#Pr 30:21,23} Asperius nihil est humili dum surgit in altum . Set a beggar on horseback, and there's no hoe with him.

Ver. 5. My wrong be upon thee.] The greatest wrong doers are the greatest complainers commonly; {as #Ex 2:13,14} guiltiness is ever exceptious and clamorous. Here be verba stomachantis atque imprecantis . Or, as some think rather, verba implorantis vindictam divinam seque consolantis spe defensionis divinae . Take it which way you will, as a passionate person, she "pours out foolishness," {#Pr 15:2} and (besides the false charge she lays upon her husband) takes God's name in vain. "Fret not thyself to do evil". {#Ps 37:8}

The Lord judge.] He must not be sent for all in haste, to decide the controversy; who, if he had come, you may soon see which of them would have had the worst of it. The best, we see, have their domestic contentions; some household words will now and then pass between them: we match not with angels, but men and women. Two flints may as soon smite together, and not fire come forth, as two persons meet in marriage and not offences fall out. Publius Rubius Celer was held a happy man among the Romans, that commanded it to be engraven upon his gravestone, that he had lived three and forty years and eight months with C. Eunia, his wife, sine querela , without the least quarrel. Another I have read of, that complained that his coniugium marriage was a continual coniurgium quarrel; and when he died, gave order it should be written upon his tomb, Heus, Viator, miraculum! hic vir et uxor non litigant ,& c. {a} This to prevent, Alphonsus, king of Arragon, was wont to say, that to procure a quiet life, the husband must be deaf and the wife blind. But they say better that advise to a mutual forbearance, that no offence be given on either side, or, if given, yet not taken. The second blow makes the fray, we say. Be not both incensed together. If Abram were to blame in conniving at Hagar's contempt of her mistress (as it may be he was somewhat), yet it was his wisdom to bear with Sarai when she was in her passion. Let two fires meet, and it will be hard quenching them. A choleric couple being asked how they agreed so well, the husband made this answer, "When my wife's fit is on her, I bear with her, as Abram did with Sarai, and when my fit is on me, she bears with me, and so we never chide together, but asunder." {b} Those unkind husbands had much to answer for that caused their wives to "cover the Lord's altar with tears, with weeping and with crying out, so that he regarded not the offering any more". {#Mal 2:13} And those wives can never answer it to God that live customarily in the sin of frowardness or rebellion against their husbands. Among all the infirmities noted in any godly woman in the Scriptures, there is no example of any that did so. This of Sarai is but of one only fact: and for that of Zipporah, {#Ex 4:26} the error seems to be as much in her judgment as in her affections. Those couples that are ever warbling can neither be at peace within themselves, {#1Co 7:15} nor pray as they should do to God, {#1Pe 3:7} which, if they did often, as Isaac and Rebecca did, they could not disagree. For either praying together would make them leave jarring, or jarring will make them leave praying, which the apostle accounts no small hindrance.

{b} Greenham.

Ver. 6. But Abram said to Sarai, Behold, &c.] Here that of Solomon is verified, "A soft answer pacieth wrath". {#Pr 15:1} Hard to soft cloth no hurt, as a bullet against a wooll sack. Uxor is vitium aut tollendum, aut tollerandum, said Varro, πασα γυνη χολος εστι {a} The woman is the weaker, and hath many provocations among children and servants that the man meets not with. This must be considered, and all bitterness abandoned. The heathens, when they sacrificed at their marriage feasts, used to cast the gall of the beast sacrificed out of doors. {b} Vipera virus, ob venerationem nuptiarum, evomit, saith St Basil, et tu duritiam animi, tu feritatem, tu crudelitatem ob unionis reverentiam non deponis? What kin art thou to him, whose name is Wormwood? {#Re 8:11}

And when Sarai dealt hardly with her.] Beat her, belike; for "a servant will not be corrected by words," {#Pr 29:19} and then he must have blows, and be "buffeted". {#1Pe 2:20} Not so a wife. M. Aurelius, the emperor, though a heathen, could say to the shame of many bedlams among us: Uxor admonenda persaepe, reprehendenda raro, violentis manibus tractanda nunquam.

She fled.] This was her fault. {#Ec 10:4} But our natures are refractory, and will sooner break than bend, till God subdue them.

{b} Plutarch. Procepep. Conjug., Basil. Hexemer., hom. vii.

Ver. 7. In the way to Shur.] Which lay between Canaan and Egypt. So she was fleeing homewards to her own country. Oh that our afflictions might drive us heavenward!

Ver. 8. Hagar, Sarai's maid.] This was a good item to her, that she was out of her way, because out of her place.

Whence comest thou? and whither wilt thou?] Such is the sweet and secret voice of God's Spirit, that angelus tutelaris, as I may say, in our hearts, when extravagant, so that we cannot do the evil we would. {#Ga 5:17}

I flee from the face of my mistress, Sarai.] Who haply had overdone, as we are all apt to do, when we are judges in our own causes and concernments. She should have thought of that of Job, {#Job 31:15} "Did not he that made me in the womb make" her? and that of Paul, Have not I also "a Master in heaven"? {#Col 4:1} But passion is headlong, and, like heavy bodies down steep hills, once in motion, rest not till they come to the bottom. Look to it, therefore, in corrections especially.

Ver. 9. Return to thy mistress.] When now she had smarted, she is in case to be counselled. There is great skill in the choice of a fit time for admonition. It is not to give a man a purge in a fever-fit.

Submit thyself.] Heb., Afflict thyself, or suffer thyself to be afflicted or humbled under her hands. The like counsel is given us all by St James, "Be afflicted, and weep, and mourn," &c, "Humble yourselves under the mighty hand of God, and he will lift you up"

Ver. 10. I will multiply thy seed.] Thus God contemneth not poor servants; nay, if they be faithful, he will give them "the reward of inheritance," {#Col 3:24} even a child's part, as Hagar and her child had. We read not that she cried to God; but her affliction spake for her; and he is oft—out of his mere "philanthropy"—"found {#Tit 3:4} of them that sought him not". {#Ro 10:20} He heareth "the young ravens, that cry to him" only by way of implication. {#Ps 147:9} "The Lord hath heard thy affliction," saith the angel in the next verse.

Ver. 11. Thou art with child.] Lyra rendereth it (but not well), Thou shalt conceive. Burgensis saith, Lyra hic delirat ; and Matthias Doring (his Hyperaspistes, but an illiterate dunce) {a} saith as good as nothing in his defence; indignus sane qui nominetur , saith Steuchus of him, ob universam U. T. Scripturam foedissima barbarie conspurcatam :he is not fit to be once named for the sorry notes he hath set upon the whole Old Testament.

Ver. 12. And he will be a wild man.] Heb., A wild ass, which is fierce, untractable, and untameable. And such by nature is every mother's child of us, {#Job 11:12} "a wild ass's colt." An ass is none of the wisest of creatures, much less an ass's colt; least of all, a wild ass's colt. Lo, such is man.

His hand will be against every man.] This was first accomplished in his person, and then in his posterity. For himself, he was ferus et pugnax , ever quarrelling and contending. {a} Now a quarrelsome man is like a cock of the game, that is still bloody with the blood of others, and of himself. As for his posterity the Saracens, Mohammed, the mischief of mankind, had his generation from this wild ass. And Sarai was utterly disappointed; for these Agarens were ever enemies, and so continue to be to her seed.

Ver. 13. Thou God seest me.] This shows she had been well trained and tutored in her master Abram's house. Before, she told the angel the plain truth, and lied not. {#Ge 16:8} And here she thankfully acknowledgeth God's goodness in looking upon her forlorn solitariness, setting up a memorial of that mercy to all posterity. The greater was her sin again, that being so well principled, she should have any thoughts of returning to Egypt, there to forsake her faith learned in Abram's family.

Have I also here looked, &c.,] q.d., Have I found God here also in the wilderness, as I had done oft before in my master's house? Or, am I yet alive, though I have seen God? {#Ge 32:30 Ex 24:11 Jud 13:23}

Ver. 14. Beer-lahai-roi,] i.e., "The well of him that liveth and seeth me," that is, of the living God, who hath seen to my safety. So rich men are "charged" to "trust not in uncertain riches, but in God," who both "liveth" and "giveth". {#1Ti 6:17}

Ver. 15. Ishmael.] A good name, had he made good use of it, and a great name still among the Persians.

Ver. 1. The Lord appeared to Abram.] After thirteen years' absence and silence, far aught we read; so that Abram began to conclude, that Ishmael surely was the promised seed, and all the sons he was likely to have to inherit the land. The Church then may err, when she cleaves not close to the word; though God at length will direct her into the right way, as here he did Abram.

I am God Almighty.] Or all-sufficient, self-sufficient (so Aquila), {a} independent, absolute, the original, universal good. Aben-Ezra interprets Shaddai, a conqueror: others, a destroyer, which a conqueror must needs be. Eundem victorem et vastatorem esse oportet, saith Cameron. And to this the Scripture alludes when it saith Shod shall come from Shaddai, "Destruction from the Almighty". {#Isa 13:6} Some there are that derive Shaddai of Shad a dug, because God feeds his children with sufficiency of all good things, as the loving mother doth the child with the milk of her breasts. Hence the heathen called Diana (and likewise Ceres) πολυμαθον and Mammosam, as if she were the nurse of all living creatures. God is the only satisfactory good, proportionable and fitting to our souls, as the dug to the child's stomach.

Walk before me.] Heb., Indesinenter ambula, Walk constantly, step for step, and keep pace with me. Austin would not, for the gain of a million of worlds, be an athiest for half an hour, because he knew not but God might in that time make an end of him. For "can two walk together and they not agreed?" saith the prophet. {#Am 3:3} "Ye cannot serve the Lord," saith Joshua to the people that promised fair, {#Jos 24:19}; that is, unless ye will serve him entirely, walk uprightly, as Abram here; walk evenly, without halting or halving with him. Holiness must run through the whole life, as the warp doth through the woof: all the parts of our line of life must be straight before God. "As for such as turn aside to their crooked ways, the Lord shall lead them forth with the workers of iniquity," with openly profane persons, when "peace shall be upon Israel," {#Ps 125:5} upon all that are "Israelites indeed, in whom there is no guile". {#Joh 1:27 Ps 32:2} Surely, as an unequal pulse shows a distempered body, so doth uneven walking an unsound soul, -such as is not verily persuaded that God is all-sufficient, able, and ready to reward the upright, and punish the hypocrite.

{a} Αὐταπικης Ικανος.—Aquila. Ανευδης.—Plato

Ver. 2. And I will make my covenant.] This is now the fifth confirmation of the Covenant; which shows that it is the alpha and omega, the first, second, and third of our salvation; and it is fit we should be well studied in it, and assured of our interest. For as the mercy seat was no larger than the ark, {#Ex 25:10-17} so neither is the grace of God than the covenant. And as the ark and mercy seat were never separated; so neither is his mercy from his people.

Ver. 3. And Abram fell on his face.] It was fit he should, now that God talked with him. Such a posture of body befits us at the hearing of the word, as may best express our reverence, and further our attention. Balak is bid to rise up to hear Balaam's parable. {#Nu 23:18} Eglon, though a fat unwieldy man, riseth up from his seat to hear God's message from Ehud. {#Jud 3:20} The people in Nehemiah "stood up" {#Ne 8:5} to hear the law read and expounded. Constantine the Great would not be entreated to sit down or be covered at a sermon: {a} no more would our Edward VI, whose custom was also to take notes of what he heard, which (together with his own applications of the word to himself) he wrote in Greek characters, that his servants might not read them. {b} The Thessalonians are commended for this, that they heard Paul's preaching "as the word of God, and not of man". {#1Th 2:13} Had Samuel thought it had been God that called to him (and not Eli), he would not have slept, but fallen on his face before the Lord, as Abram here, who was no novice, but knew well that though God loves to be acquainted with men in the walks of their obedience yet he takes state upon him in his ordinances, and will be trembled at in his word and judgments.

Ver. 4. As for me.] Ego ecce. An abrupt speech, to show what haste God made to comfort and confirm Abram, now fallen at his feet.

Thou shalt be a father of many nations.] The Israelites, Ishmaelites, Edomites, Keturites, &c., besides all believers. {#Ga 3:28,29}

Ver. 5. Neither shall thy name any more, &c.] This is reckoned for a high favour by those holy Levites. {#Ne 9:7} The Jews say, that for honour's sake, God inserted one of the letters of his own incommunicable name Jehovah into the name of Abram, now Abraham. Sure it is, that by styling himself "the God of Abraham," he doth him more honour, than if he had engraven the word Abraham upon the firmament, or in the clouds in letters of gold.

Ver. 6. I will make thee exceeding fruitful.] Heb., Foecundabo te valde valde: and as oft as thou thinkest upon thy new name, thou shalt remember my promise, and rest assured of my performance. See how God, of his grace, condescends unto us, and accommodates us.

Ver. 7. For an everlasting covenant.] Circumcision, the outward sign of it, was temporary, and changeable into baptism; but the covenant of grace, thereby then, and by baptism now, sealed up unto us, is eternal; being established and ratified. by the death of the Testator, "by the blood of the Arch-shepherd". {#Heb 13:20} Here it must be considered {a} that there is a twofold covenant: 1. Single; such as God makes with children, when baptized; viz., if you will repent, believe, and walk with me, ye shall be saved. Now, if they break the condition, God is freed, he it not bound any further. 2. Double; such as God makes with his elect only; and that is to perform both parts, sc., if you will believe, repent, obey, ye shall be saved: and further, I will give you a new heart, so that you shall repent, believe, &c., and be saved. Thus God undertakes for both parts, and so it becomes an everlasting covenant, such as hath the "sure" or unfailable "mercies of David" {b} {#Isa 55:3} And here those, that are in double covenant with God, are fitly compared to them that are gone in at a church door: some are farther in than others, but yet all are in. So, though the weak in faith be not so forward, yet they may be in, though not so far in.

Ver. 8. All the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession.] And yet now, for their inexpressible guilt, in putting to death the Lord of life, they are utterly dispossessed of that pleasant land. In Jerusalem itself there are not to be found a hundred households of Jews. {a} Adrian the emperor drove them utterly out of Judea, and commanded them by proclamation not so much as to look toward it, from any tower or high mountain. {b} Yea, long before this, the Lord, for their wickedness, counted them but usurpers, and called them "sojourners in that land." {#Eze 20:38 11:15} If men forfeit their privileges, God may, at his pleasure, take the forfeiture, and disprivilege them, as he did Saul, and Judas, who "by transgression fell" from his office, "that he might go to his own place". {#Ac 1:25}

I will be their God.] This is a singular comfort for all believing parents. Their greatest care is for their poor little ones, what they shall do another day: why, cast them upon God, their God as well as thine: for is not tie in covenant with them too? It would be a great stay of mind, if God should say to us for our children, as David said to Mephibosheth, or to Barzillai, of his son Chimham, "Chimham shall go over with me, and will I do to him that which shall seem good unto thee; and whatsoever thou shalt require of me, that will I do for, thee," {#2Sa 19:38} Behold, God saith all this, and more to us, when he saith, "I will be a God to thee, and to thy seed after thee." I remember a sweet passage of Mr Saunders the martyr in a letter to his wife: "Though we do shortly depart hence, and leave our poor infant, to our seeming, at all adventures, yet shall he have our gracious God to be his God: for so hath he said—and he cannot lie; -'I will be thy God, and of thy seed.' Yea, if you leave him in the wilderness, destitute of all helps, being called of God to do his will, either to die for the confession of Christ, or any work of obedience; that God, which heard the cry of the little poor infant of Hagar, and did succour it, will do the like to the children of you, or any other fearing him, and trusting in him." {c}

Ver. 9. Thou shalt keep my covenant.] This is the stipulation on Abraham's part, by receiving the sacrament of circumcision, to "avouch God to be his God". {#De 26:17} Now to the making the Lord to be our God, it is required, that with highest estimations, most vigorous affections, and utmost endeavours we bestow ourselves upon him. Thus, if we choose God for our God, {#Ps 73:25} we shall be assured that he hath chosen and avouched us for his people. {#1Jo 4:19}

Ver. 10. Every man-child among you.] Infants were circumcised to signify that we had better be flayed, and have our skin quite stripped off, than to have it as a skin-bottle hanging in the smoke of filthy desires, and blown full of unclean motions with the breath of Satan. That wretched renegade that betrayed Rhodes was well served. For his promised wife and portion were presented: but the Turk told him that he would not have a Christian to be his son-in-law, but he must be a Mussulman, that is, a believing Turk, within and without. And therefore he caused his baptized skin, as he called it, to be flayed off, and him to be cast in a bed, strewed with salt, that he might get a new skin, and so he should be his son-in-law. But the wicked wretch ended his life with shame and torment. {a}

Ver. 11. It shall be a token of the covenant.] It seals up nothing then to those that are not in covenant. Circumcision to such is but as a seal to a blank. Unregenerate Israel was to God as Ethiopia. {#Am 9:7} Circumcision of itself avails nothing, if the heart be uncircumcised. The apostle distinguisheth of circumcision, {#Col 2:11} and tells us that the true circumcision is "made without hands" (αχειροποιητος), and "is that of the heart, in the spirit, and not in the letter". {#Ro 2:29} It is a wonderful work of the Spirit, wrought by the word, upon the saints in their first conversion, whereby corruption of nature is wounded, beloved sins cast away with sorrow, and the sinner received into an everlasting communion with God and his saints. Labour this, or you are not a button the better for your baptism. A man may go to hell with font-water on his face, if not baptized "with the Holy Ghost, and with fire". {#Mt 3:11} Circumcision seals not up any covenant of grace to Turks, as it did not, of old, to Ishmaelites, Edomites, and Midianites, who yet would needs be circumcised.

Ver. 12. And he that is eight days old.] This warrants our baptizing of infants of both sexes. {See Trapp on "Ge 9:10"} (Great leap of logic here! Editor.)

Ver. 13. He that is born in thy house.] Householders must see to it, that their families fear God. They walk not "in a perfect way" that do otherwise, {#Ps 101:2} that look not

My covenant shall be in your flesh.] That is, the sign of my covenant (by a metonymy of the subject), seem it never so simple, and prove it never so painful and shameful. The foolishness of God is wiser than men, that cry, Credat Iudaeus Apella ,& c.

Ver. 14. That soul shall be cut off.] From the commonwealth of Israel; so shall those be from benefit by Christ, that are uncircumcised in heart; as hateful to him as Goliath was to David. Pray, therefore, that God will thrust his holy hand into thy bosom, and pull off that abominable foreskin. He had much ado to forbear Moses, when he met him in the inn; and we know why. {#Ex 4:24,25}

Ver. 15. Thou shalt not call her name Sarai, but Sarah.] The Chaldee, Sarai, is made Hebrew, Sarah: One of the four letters of Jehovah being also added (as before in Abraham), that she may be, absolutely, a lady or princess.

Ver. 16. Yea, I will bless her.] This is repeated, for the greater comfort of this good old couple, q.d., I will double-bless her, bless her with a witness. Margarita in mari nascitur, verum ex rore coelesti .

Ver. 17. Abraham fell upon his face, and laughed.] Not as doubting, much less deriding, {#Ro 4:19} but as rejoicing and admiring the goodness and power of God. The narrow-mouthed vessel of his heart not quickly capable of so great comfort—for, Tarda solet magnis rebus inesse fides -he fell upon his face, and laughed.

Ver. 18. Oh that Ishmael might live.] The life of grace here, and of glory hereafter: that he be not "killed with death" when he dies, as Jezebel's children were. {#Re 2:23}

Ver. 19. I will establish my covenant with him.] This was a far greater favour than that bestowed on Ishmael in the next verse, "Twelve princes shall he beget." Nothing so ennobled as Christ, graces, being in the covenant, &c. {#Isa 19:25} "Assyria" is "the work of" God's "hands," but "Israel" his "inheritance."

Ver. 20. And us for Ishmael, I have heard thee.] Faithful prayer may have anything at God's hands. It is but ask and have, with Abraham. As Zedekiah said to his courtiers glossingly, God saith to his servants seriously, The King can deny you nothing. Let this encourage us to pray for ourselves and children; for by prayer we may take out of God's treasury, plentiful mercy for ourselves and ours.

Ver. 21. But my covenant.] This is the thirteenth time that the covenant is named in this chapter, saith an interpreter; and hereby is meant the promise of Christ and salvation by him. A subject so sweet to every sanctified soul, that St Paul cannot come off it. He names the Lord Jesus Christ ten times together in ten verses. {#1Co 1:1-10} It was to him Mel in ore, melos in aure, iubilum in corde .{a}

Ver. 22. And he left off talking with him.] As man with his friend. Such honour have all his saints. Oh, speak it when I am gone, and preach it at my funeral, God dealeth familiarly with man, said that heavenly spark, now ready to be extinct {a} St Paul calls prayer εντευξις, an entreparlance with God, {#1Ti 2:1} and επερωτημα, the confident interrogatory or rejoinder of a good conscience toward God. {#1Pe 3:21} The Persian monarchs held it a piece of their silly glory to keep themselves from their greatest subjects. {#Es 4:11} And Jupiter's image at Crete was made without ears. Plutarch gives the reason, Non enim convenit audiri ab eo quenquam, qui omnium rerum sit Dominus atqui princeps . A pretty plea for Baal! He is too great to talk with men. Our God thinks not himself so. He solicits suitors, and loves to be, interchangably, solicited by them.

{a} Mr. John Holland, B.D. See my True Treas., p. 373.

Ver. 23. Abraham took Ishmael.] To make the other more willing.

Circumcised the flesh.] Not regarding the affliction, danger, scandal, shame of the action in the eyes of the world.

Ver. 24. And Abraham was ninety years old and nine.] Five different times is Abraham's age exactly noted in Scripture; which showeth how dear the saints are to God; when the wicked are, ουτιδανοι, little set by; men of no account.

Ver. 25. And Ishmael his son was thirteen years old.] The Turks' children are not circumcised till they are ten years old, and then they use great feasting, banqueting, music, and bringing of presents. {a} They say that Abraham loved Ishmael, and not Isaac: and that it was Ishmael whom Abraham would have sacrificed.

{a} The Grand Sign Sereg., pp. 113,191.

Ver. 26. In the self-same day.] To show his prompt and present obedience, without shucking and hucking, without delays and consults.

Ver. 27. All the men of his house.] Faciles se proebent in re ardua et ridicula . An excellent pattern of a well-ordered family.

Chapter 18

Ver. 1. And the Lord appeared unto him.] 1. Ut proeludium incarnationis . 2. Ex philanthropia ; "his delight" is "in the habitable part of" God's "earth". {#Pr 8:31}

And he sat in the tent-door.] He dwelt in a tent (let us be content, though we dwell not to our minds), yet kept a good house. A very hearty householder he was.

In the heat of the day.] The usual time of rest and repast, when travellers wax faint and hungry.

Ver. 2. And he lift up his eyes and looked.] As "pursuing hospitality" (that is the apostle's expression, #Ro 12:13), and waiting an opportunity of doing good. Charity is no churl. "The liberal man deviseth liberal things"; {#Isa 32:8} "he considereth the poor and needy". {#Ps 41:1} Praeoccupat vocem petitori , as Augustine expounds it, {a} he stays not till he is asked a good turn; he ministereth to the uses, not only "to the necessities {b} of the saints," as the apostle's word is, {#Ro 12:13} and as Bishop Hooper's and Dr Taylor's practice was. The one had his board of beggars sent for, and served every day with whole and wholesome meats, ere himself sat down to dinner. And the other went once a fortnight at the least, to the almshouse, and other poor men that had, many children, and were sick, to see what they lacked, and to supply them. {c}

And bowed himself toward the ground.] Piety is no enemy to courtesy; it doth not remove but rectify it, that it be not only complimentary and ridiculous. Potest Augur Augurem videre et non ridere? {d} So it may be said of our common cringers.

{a} Aug. in Psalm ciii.

{d} Cicero.

Ver. 3. My Lord.] He directs his speech to one of them, in whom appeared to be most majesty; and whom he afterwards knew to be the Lord by an excellency.

Ver. 4. And wash your feet.] Fouled with going barefoot; as in these parts men used to do, because of the great heat.

Ver. 5. For therefore are ye come to your servant.] He meaneth not, that they therefore came to him to taste of his cheer; but that God, by his providence, had so ordered that he should see them passing, and invite them to his house. How glad was this good man of an occasion to show kindness, acknowledging God's good providence! And how improvident are we for ourselves, that will not offer a sacrifice, when God sets up an altar before us!

So do as thou hast said.] The angels needed not his courtesy, yet kindly accept of it. Good offers or offices, even from inferiors, are not to be rejected, but regarded, yea, rewarded.

Ver. 6. Make ready quickly.] Habent aulae suum cito, cito, saith one. So had Abraham's house here. He, she, the boy, and all hasted, and had their various offices. The very expression itself here used, is concise and quick; much like that of the prophet in the case of returning to God, "If ye will inquire, inquire; return, come". {#Isa 21:12}

“ Praecipita tempus; mors atra impendet agenti .”— Silius.

Three measures of fine meal.] Three pecks for three man’s dinners; and the best of the best too; fine meal, the fat calf, butter and milk, God’s plenty of all, and hearty welcome; the goodman himself standing by, and bidding them "Come": which shows his humanity, and his humility also.

Ver. 7. And gave it unto a young man.] Here was a well-ordered family; every one knew his office, and did it. In every society, say the politicians, as in a well-tuned harp, the several strings must concur to make up a harmony.

Ver. 8. And they did eat.] The angels, as they assumed human shapes, so they did truly eat, according to the present dispensation of the shape so assumed.

Ver. 9. Behold, in the tent.] David compares a good woman to the vines upon the walls of the house, because she cleaveth to her house. Others to a snail, that carrieth her house on her back. St Paul reckons it for a virtue in a woman to "keep at home"; {#Tit 2:5} and Solomon for a sign of a lewd housewife, that "her feet abide not in her house". {#Pr 7:11} Among the Grecians, the bride was carried through the streets in a chariot, the axle spokes was burnt, to signify that she must keep home.

Ver. 10. According to the time of life.] That is, when this time shall return again; this time twelve month. {See Trapp on "Ge 18:14"}

Sarah heard it in the tent-door.] She was listening out of womanish curiosity. Yet some think, the angel asked for her on purpose, that she hearing her name mentioned might listen.

Ver. 11. Now Abraham and Sarah were old.] So, when we were altogether "without strength," according to the time of life, "Christ died for the ungodly". {#Ro 5:6}

Ver. 12. Sarah laughed.] God’s promises seem absurd and ridiculous, many of them, to human reason, which therefore must be silenced, and shut out, as Hagar was; for it will argue carnally, as that unbelieving lord {#2Ki 7:2} storms at God’s offers, as Naaman at the message {#2Ki 5:11} looks upon God’s Jordan with Syrian eyes, as he, and after all, cries out with Nicodemus, "How can these things be?" {#Joh 3:4} measuring God by its own model; and casting him into its own mould.

After I am waxed old, shall I lust?] Old and cold, is our English proverb; and the Greek word for an old body signifies one in whom natural heat is extinct. {a} It is a most undecent thing to see the pleasure of youth prevailing in times of age, among old decrepit goats. Were it not monstrous to behold green apples on a tree in winter?

My lord being old also?] This was the only good word in the whole sentence: God takes notice of it, and by St Peter records it to her eternal commendation; {#1Pe 3:6} yea, he was so well pleased with her subjection to her husband, whom she here in her heart calleth Lord, that he is content to forgive her great sin of unbelief.

Ver. 13. Said to Abraham, Wherefore did Sarah laugh?] The wife's sin reflects upon the husband. But Solomon shows that some wives are so intemperate and wilful, that a man may as well hide the wind in his fist, or oil in his hand, as restrain them from ill doing. {#Pr 27:15,16} Liberum arbitrium, pro quo tantopere contenditur, viri amiserunt, uxores arripuerunt, saith one {a} wittily.

{a} Heidfeld.

Ver. 14. Is anything too hard for the Lord?] He can do all things possible and honourable. He cannot lie, die, deny himself, for that implieth impotency. "He could do no mighty work" in his own country "because of their unbelief." {#Mr 6:5,6} He could not, because he would not. He can do more than he will, as "of stones raise up" churches, {#Mt 3:9} call for "legions of angels," {#Mt 26:53} create more worlds in an instant. But whatsoever he willeth, that he doeth in heaven and earth, and none can say, what doest thou? "Our God can deliver us". {#Da 3:17} "Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean". {#Mt 8:2, &c.}

I will return to thee, according to the time of life.] He returned not personally, that we read of; but virtually he did, by making good his promise at the appointed time. That of Dr Sands, afterwards Bishop of Worcester, is wonderful, and worth relating. He, departing the land for fear of Queen Mary, took his leave of his host and hostess, who was childless, and had been married eight years. When the wind served, as he went toward the ship, he gave his hostess a fine handkerchief, and an old royal of gold in it, thanking her much, and said, Be of good comfort; ere that one whole year be past, God shall give you a child, a boy. And it came to pass, that day twelve months later, lacking one day, God gave her a fair son. {a}

Ver. 15. I laughed not: for she was afraid.] And well she might; for as everybody hath its shadow, so hath every sin its fear. Her sin she saw was detected, and her conscience she felt was troubled; hence her fear.

Nay, but thou didst laugh.] A lie must be roundly reprov'd, and the truth asserted. She laughed but within herself, but as good she might have laughed out aloud; for God searcheth the heart. "I pray thee, O Lord, was not this my saying, when I was in my country? {#Jon 4:2} No, Jonah, it was not thy saying, it was only thy thinking: but that is all one before him who understandeth thy thoughts afar off". {#Ps 139:2}

Ver. 16. To bring them on the way.] A special piece of courtesy, and much spoken of in Scripture. {#3Jo 1:6 Ac 20:38 21:5 Ro 15:24 1Co 16:11 Tit 3:13}

Ver. 17. Shall I hide from Abraham?] My bosom friend. He shall be both of God's court, and his council. His "secret is with them that fear him". {#Ps 25:14} The kings of Israel had some one courtier, called the king's friend by a specialty, to whom they imparted arcana imperii, state secrets. Such an office had Abraham about God, who calls him "Abraham my friend." See what our Saviour saith to all his, #Joh 15:15. "This honour have all his saints."

Ver. 18, 19. Seeing that Abraham, &c.] God's first motive here is, from his own antecedent love to Abraham, as the second from his consequent.

Ver. 19. For I know him.] God hath a quick eye to see our good works. He weighs and rewards every circumstance. Christ could tell, that the people had come from far to hear him; that they had fasted three days; that they were in a wilderness, where they could not cater for themselves; that if they should be sent home so, they would faint by the way. {#Joh 6:5-14} What was it that he took not knowledge of? "I know thy works, and thy labour" in doing them. {#Re 2:2}

That he will command his children, &c.] A good householder, whatsoever he gets abroad, he brings home to his family, as bees bring all their honey to the hive. "The lips of the righteous feed many"; {#Pr 10:21} those under his own roof especially. Well fare Popery for that. Old folks will tell us that, when in those days they had holy bread given them at church, they would bear a part thereof to those that did abide at home. The way to get more, is to share what we have, according to that, Habenti dabitur. {#Lu 8:18} No man hath received aught from God for private use: neither is any one born for himself, much less newborn. He that hid his talent was soon loose it.

Ver. 20. Because their sin is very grievous.] Or, very heavy; such as the very ground groans under; the axle of the earth is ready to break under it. Sin is a burden to God. {#Am 2:13} It was so to Christ; he fell to the ground when he was in his agony. It was so to the angels, who sunk into hell under it. It was so to Korah and his company; the earth could not bear them. It was so to the Sodomites; they were so clogged with this excrement of naughtiness, {a} as St James calleth it, {#Jas 1:21} that God came from heaven to give their land a vomit.

Ver 21. I will go down now, and see, &c.] The Sodomites sinned as freely and securely as if God knew nothing. Now therefore he is come to know, that is, to give them to know that he knew all, as well as if he had been in their bosoms.

Ver. 22. Abraham stood yet before the Lord.] And without such to stand and pray, the world could not stand: they bear up the pillars of it. Oh, the price with God, and profit to men, of praying persons! God will yield something to such, when most of all enraged {#Mt 24:20} or resolved. Lot was saved for Abraham's sake, when all the rest perished.

Ver. 23. And Abraham drew near.] A privilege proper to such as have "a true heart," "full assurance of faith," and "a good conscience". {#Heb 10:22} "The hypocrite shall not come before him"

{#Job 13:16} He must stand without as a vagrant at the gate, that knows not whether the master is providing for him an alms, or a cudgel. But the upright comes into the parlour; yea, "dwells in God's presence," {#Ps 140:13} in the light of his countenance.

Wilt thou also destroy the righteous?] Single suits speed not: we must back them with sound arguments, and reason the case with God concerning his judgments. {#Jer 12:1}

Ver. 24. Peradventure there be fifty righteous.] Charity presumes the best, hopes the best. The disciples could not imagine that Judas was so very a traitor: each one suspects himself sooner than him. And when our Saviour said, "What thou doest do quickly"; they thought he had meant of making provision, or giving something to the poor. {#Joh 13:27-29}

Ver. 25. Shall not the Judge, &c.] He "fills his mouth with arguments". {#Job 23:4} Let us also: this will increase faith and fervency.

Ver. 26. If I find fifty righteous.] The saints are the salt of the earth, that keep the rest from rotting and putrifying.

Ver. 27. Which am but dust and ashes.] Gnaphar veephar , χοις et cinus ; none so humble as they that have nearest communion with God. The angels that stand before him, cover their faces with two wings as with a double scarf. {#Isa 6:2}

Ver. 28. Peradventure, &c.] {See Trapp on "Ge 18:29"} {See Trapp on "Ge 18:30"}

Ver. 29. And he spake unto him yet again.] Cum in colloquium descendimus cum Deo, replicemus licet, duplicemus, triplicemus, et quadruplicemus .{a} The bolder we make, the better welcome.

{a} Alsted.

Ver. 30. I will not do it, &c.] If God so yielded to Abraham interceding for wicked Sodom, will he not hear us for his labouring Church? Joab never pleased David better, than when he sued to him for Absalom. What shall we think of God in like case? How angry is he with those that "help forward" the anger! {#Zec 1:15} How ready to answer those that speak to him for his Church, "with good words, and comfortable words!" {#Zec 1:13} Yea, should there be no praying Christians among us (as there are many thousands), yet there is hope, if any of another kingdom make intercession for us, as Abraham here did for Sodom, to the which he was a stranger.

Ver. 31. Behold now, I have taken upon me.] {See Trapp on "Ge 18:29"} {See Trapp on "Ge 18:30"}

Ver. 32. Peradventure ten shall be found there.] Lo, all the slavery and misery they had sustained hath not yet made ten good men in those five bad cities. Till God strike the stroke, and work upon the heart, afflictions, God's hammers, do but beat upon cold iron. The wicked are no whit better by them, but much the worse; as water becomes more cold after a heat, and naughty boys more stubborn and stupid after a whipping.

Ver. 33. And the Lord went his way.] Abraham bargined with the Lord so long, till he had brought him down from fifty to ten: and mark, that he stopped begging ere God stopped lessening. Let us find praying hearts, and he will find a pitying heart.

Ver. 1. Lot sat in the gate.] Not as a judge (as the Hebrews will have it), nor as a merchant; much less as a noveller; but as a good householder, looking for his herds, and as a good housekeeper, looking for guests.

Ver. 2. Nay, but we will abide in the street.] They would have done so, but for Lot's importunity. So our Saviour would have gone farther, but that the two disciples constrained him to stay. {#Lu 24:29} This was no simulation; or if so, yet it was only exploratory, without deceit or hypocrisy. And if Solomon sinned not in making believe he would do that which was unlawful to be done, {#IKi 3:24} it can be no sin to do the like in things indifferent.

Ver. 3. And they did eat.] They made as if they did eat and drink, saith the Hierosolymi-Targum, but not well. {See Trapp on "Ge 18:8"}

Ver. 4. Both old and young.] Nulla aetas erat culpae immunis, ideo nec exitii. — Ambrose. Sin spreads as leaven, and is as catching as the plague; like the Jerusalem artichoke, plant it where you will, it overruns the ground, and chokes the heart.

Ver. 5. That we may know them.] O faces hatched with impudency! They shroud not their sin in a mantle of secrecy, but hang out these sour grapes to the sun to ripen.

Ver. 6. Lot went out.] So he exposed himself, to save his strangers, hoping to save them from that abominable violence. The right of strangers is so holy, that there was scarce ever any nation so barbarous that would violate the same. When Stephen Gardiner had in his power the renowned clerk Peter Martyr, then teaching at Oxford, he would not keep him to punish him; but when he should go his way, as it is reported, gave him wherewith to bear his charges. But these Sodomites had not so much humanity left in them. They had put off the man, and were become dogs and worse. {#De 23:18} Am I a dog? saith Abner; {#2Sa 3:8} that is, so given as dogs be to lust. Lot was the world's miracle, who kept himself fresh in Sodom's salt waters.

Ver. 7. Do not so wickedly.] They were the first that fell into this foul sin, and were therefore worthily hanged up in gibbets by God for a terror to others; and besides, they "suffer the vengeance of eternal fire". {#Jude 1:7} The Pope pretends to be Christ's vicar, and presumes to assume the title of Holiness. But how far he is from expressing God to the world appears by his, if not committing, yet conniving at, this detestable sin of sodomy... God hath delivered up these Papagans (as he did those Pagans, #Ro 1:24) to reprobate sense, to vile affections, to dishonour their own bodies between themselves, for that they have worshipped and served the creature more than the Creator. {#Ro 1:24-26} Hence it is that Rome is called Sodom in the Revelation. {#Re 11:8}

Ver. 8. Behold now, I have two daughters.] This was an inconsiderate motion, such as the best minds easily yield, when once troubled, it was proper to the Lord Christ to be subject to natural passions and perturbations, "yet without sin"; as a crystal glass full of clear water remains still pure, howsoever it be shaken. The Hebrews think that for this sinful offering to prostitute his daughters, he was given up by God to commit incest with his daughters.

Ver. 9. Stand back, &c.] They set up the bristles at Lot's admonition; a sure forerunner of destruction, as in Eli's sons.

Ver. 10. But the men.] Thus Lot is rescued at a dead lift; that is God's opportunity, who "knows how to deliver the godly". {#2Pe 2:9}

Ver. 11. With blindness.] Subito scotomate, saith Junius: With blindness both of body and mind, saith Aben Ezra: such as tormented their eyes, as if they had been pricked with thorns, as the Hebrew word signifies. And yet they continue groping for the door, as if they were ambitious of destruction, which now was at next door by. Deus quem destruit dementat. So Pharaoh, when under that palpable three days' darkness, rageth against God, and threateneth Moses with death. Though doomsday should be tomorrow next, wicked men must and will serve their lusts. Vale lumen amicum , said Theotimus in St Ambrose, who chose rather to lose his sight than his sin.

Ver. 12. Hast thou here any, &c.] It is something for safety, to be Lot's kinsman. So the Kenites in Saul's time, receive life from Jethro's dust, many ages after his death, and favour from his hospitality. {#1Sa 15:6}

Ver. 13. For we will destroy this place.] Even the good angels are God's executioners. And the first execution they did in the world, that we read of, was upon these filthy Sodomites. So will it be, likely, at the last day. And St Peter seems to say as much. {#2Pe 2:9} The Lord reserves the unjust to the day of judgment, to be punished, "but chiefly them that walk after the flesh, in the lust of uncleanness." Mark that chiefly.

Ver. 14. But he seemed as one that mocked.] Sed fuit habitus tanquam iocabundus . Graceless hearts jeer, when they should fear, and are senseless and secure, as if they were out of the reach of God's rod, and needed not to fear his wrath. Lot here is counted but a Lob, of his own sons-in-law. {a} Wonder not, if we meet with the same measure.

Ver. 15. Lest thou be consumed.] So #Re 18:4. "Come out of her, that ye receive not of her plagues." Musculi ruinis imminentibus praemigrant, et aranei cum telis primi eadunt , saith Pliny. {a} Swine flee home before a storm. Let men hasten out of their natural estate, as Lot was bidden to do out of Sodom: there is the smell of the fire and brimstone upon them.

Ver. 16. And while he lingered.] Or distracted himself with much business, {a} which David did not. {#Ps 119:60}

The Lord being merciful unto him.] What is he then to us, in "delivering us from the wrath to come?" {#1Th 1:10} Why save we not ourselves from this untoward generation? {#Ac 2:40} Why see we not his mercy to us in our losses and crosses; his hand laying hold on us, when he takes away that which may hinder us from heaven?

Ver. 17. Look not behind thee.] As loath to depart. Non minus difficulter a deliciis Sodomorum abstrahimur, quam canis ab uncto corio .

Ver. 18. Oh! not so, my Lord.] But who shall prescribe to the Almighty? Or limit the Holy One of Israel? Are we wiser than he? Have we a trick beyond him? He lets us sometimes have our way, but to our woe at last.

Ver. 19. Behold now, thy servant, &c.] We can receive and commend God's favours, but be backward enough to obey him.

Ver. 20. Is it not a little one?] Let no man use this plea for his sin. Even the philosopher {a} tells us, that the smallest errors prove many times most dangerous. It is as much treason to coin pence, as bigger pieces.

{a} Αδικηματα ελαχιστα πολλακις μεγατα—Arist. Rhet., lib. i.

Ver. 21. I will not overthrow this city.] Zoar, of all the five cites, was preserved by Lot's prayer, saith Jerome. See #De 29:23 Isa 15:5.

Ver. 22. For I cannot do anything.] Not that the execution of the divine decree depended simply upon Lot's removal to Zoar; but upon another decree, for Lot's removal ere Sodom were destroyed.

Ver. 24. Then the Lord rained, &c.] Lot was no sooner taken out of Sodom, but Sodom was soon taken out of the world. The wicked are relieved for the sake of the godly, and, but for them would suddenly be ruined. {#Isa 30:33}

Rained upon Sodom, &c.] Rained, not sprinkled; and not fire only, but brimstone and fire for increase of torment, and for a hell above ground, and aforehand. {#Jude 1:7} Hot fire they had for their burning lusts; and stinking brimstone for their stinking brutishness. Charles II, king of Navarre, was much given to sensual pleasures, which so wasted his spirits, that in his old age, he fell into a kind of lethargy. To comfort his benumbed joints, he was bound and sewed up naked in a sheet, steeped in boiling aqua vitae :the surgeon, having made an end of sewing him, and wanting a knife to cut off the thread, took a wax candle that stood lighted by him. But the flame, running down by the thread, caught hold on the sheet; which, according to the nature of the aqua vitae , burned with that vehemency, that the miserable king ended his days in the fire. {a}

{a} Heyl., Geog. p. 42.

Ver. 25. And he overthrew, &c.] Some footsteps of this overthrow are to be read of in Solinus and Tacitus. Josephus {a} tells us of the mock-apples of Sodom, and saith, that an ox, having all his legs bound, will not sink into the lake of Sodom, the water is so dense.

Ver. 26. But his wife looked back.] Whether out of curiosity, or foolish pity, or as loath to leave so sweet a country, she turned her about, and she was turned. Some think she was a Sodomite, and some tell us her name was Tytea. {a} Her sin, seem it never so light, was a compound of many sins. And her punishment was part of the plague of Sodom, which was "brimstone and salt," {#De 29:23} so that it became a sea of salt. And all this to season us, saith Augustine; to caution us, saith our Saviour, that we look not back. The fable of Eurydice, lost by her husband's looking back upon her, was devised by the devil to elude this holy history. The "pillar of salt," into which Lot's wife was turned, stands yet, saith Benjamin in his "Itinerary," about two miles from the Dead Sea; and if, by the rubbing or licking of cattle, it be any whit diminished, it groweth again forthwith, to its former size.

Ver. 27. And Abraham gat up.] So solicitous he was for Sodom, that, as Luther thinks, he could not sleep all night. Lot was delivered by his prayers, though Abraham knew it not.

Ver. 28. And he looked.] Abraham might look upon the smoke of Sodom; Lot might not; because it would work more on Lot's heart, than on Abraham's, who had more grace.

The smoke of the country.] Nothing else was now to be seen of that fair and fruitful plain. Sic transit gloria mundi . When we most greedily grasp earthly things, we embrace nothing but smoke, which wrings tears from our eyes, and soon vanisheth into nothing.

Ver. 29. God remembered Abraham, &c.] And shall he forget us, who have Christ to intercede for us?

Ver. 30. Lot went up out of Zoar, &c.] So he should have done at first; and so he had obeyed God, saved his wife, and prevented that sin of incest with his daughters.

Ver. 31. And the firstborn, &c.] It is dangerous to live in a wicked place: yea, for though thyself mayest escape infection, thy children may be tainted, as Lot's were.

Ver. 32. Come, let us make our father drink.] ^{a} She knew too well, that Venus in vinis, ignis in igne furit . It is like they had wine from Zoar. They sinned against conscience; and therefore intoxicated their father, who now forgets that he is a father, and does that, in a drunken pang, that which heaven and earth were afterwards ashamed of.

Ver. 33. Nor when she arose.] There is a tittle extraordinary in the Hebrew, to note that this is a thing incredible, ^{a} Coire quempiam nescientem . Cajetan and Pererius conclude it possible, and give reasons for it. Calvin saith best, that it was not so much his wine, as a spirit of slumber sent upon him from God, for a scourge of his intemperance. Luther adds, Ne nos abeamus in securitatem , that we may watch against security.

Ver. 34. The firstborn said unto the younger.] Lot offended against both their chastities, in offering them up to the Sodomites: and they both now conspire against his chastity.

Ver. 35. And they made, &c.] Decepit ebrietas Lotum, quem Sodoma non decepit , saith Origen. Well might Athenaeus call drunkenness the metropolis of mischief, ^{a}

^{a} Μητροπολιν παντων δεινων.

Ver. 36. With child by their father.] God suffers, oft, such unlawful commixions to take effect; for a just punishment of the same. But as a fair and perfect child born, doth not make anything better the adultery or incest in which it was begotten, so neither doth God's purpose the sins of graceless persons.

Ver. 37. Called his name Moab.] That is, the begotten of my father: so, Benammi; that is, begotten of one of my near kindred, viz., her father. Thus "they declared their sin as Sodom, they hid it not," {#Isa 3:9} but gloried in their shame. It is as hard to come from Sodom, and not taste of the sap of such a soil, as to walk barefaced in the hot sun, and not be tanned.

Ver. 1. And Abraham journeyed from thence, &c.] Either as grieved at the sight of Sodom; or annoyed by the ill air thereof; {a} or as loathing Lot's incest; or driven out by a famine; or desirous of doing good to many. Whatever it was that occasioned his removal, we find him ever and anon journeying from one place, and sojourning in another. God's people are a brood of travellers. This was Abram the Hebrew, of Heber, which signifieth, pilgrim or stranger. They look toward heaven as their home, as Ulysses is said to do toward Ithaca, {b} as a bird looks to her nest on the highest rocks.

Ver. 2. She is my sister.] This is the second time he thus sinned, both against piety by distrust; and charity, in exposing his wife to other men's pleasure, and his neighbour thereby to God's displeasure. So Jehoshaphat was twice taken tardy in Ahab's amity; {#2Ch 19:2 20:37} Jonah twice reprov'd for rebellion; and John for angel worship; Samson, twenty years after he had loved the Philistine woman, goes down to Gaza, and went into Delilah. {#Jud 15:20 16:1} Lot committed incest two nights together. Indeed, the orifice of his lust was not yet stopped by repentance. But Jonah had surely repented of his former frowardness; and so had Samson, Jehoshaphat, and Abraham too, {a} of his former hypocrisy; which made the Lord to move Pharaoh to deal kindly with him, so that "he had sheep and oxen," &c. {#Ge 12:16} But what shall we say to that example of the apostles, {#Lu 22:24} among whom "there was a strife who should be accounted the greatest?" And this was not the first, but the third time they had thus offended by ambition; and even after our Saviour had discoursed unto them of his cross. But this last time, most absurdly, and unseasonably, after that he had foretold his passion to follow within two days; had taught them that he was anointed by the woman for the day of his burial; had administered to them the sacrament, that seal of mutual love; had washed their feet, to teach them humility and charity, &c. Oh, the incredible perverseness of corrupt nature! How strongly do the best still smell of the old cask, taste of the old stock, though ingrafted into Christ, and though poured from vessel to vessel. {#Joh 5:14} "And this have ye done again," saith the Lord. {#Mal 2:13} A great aggravation, as numbers added to numbers, are first ten times more, and then a hundred, and then a thousand. "How oft did they provoke him in the wilderness, and grieve him in the desert". {#Ps 78:40} A regenerate man may fall into the same sin again that he hath truly repented of nor can we define how oft, and into how heinous but surely, not oft into the same, that is heinous and scandalous. That is a graceless person that hath "eyes full of adultery, and that cannot cease to sin". {#2Pe 2:14} An enemy to God, that "goeth on still in his trespasses". {#Ps 68:21} It is expressly noted of Judah, {#Ge 38:26} that "he knew Tamar again no more."

And Abimelech king of Gerar.] A fit name for a king; and a common name to the kings of this country: it signifies father king. "I was a father to the poor," saith Job. {#Job 29:16} And "kings shall be nursing fathers" to the Church, saith Isaiah. {#Isa 49:23} Augustus was styled Pater Patriae. And Trajan gloried most in his title Optimus. He desired more to be loved, than honoured, and counted it a greater dignity, Prodesse quam praeesse. { b} He tare his own garment to bind up therewith the wounds of his soldiers; and professed that he would so carry himself to private persons, now that he was emperor, as he wished, when he was a private man, that the emperors should carry themselves toward him. {c} Titus, for his sweet nature and carriage, was called the world's darling. {d} Scipio the city's sweetheart. {e} Julian the apostate, as he came not short of the greatest philosophers for learning, so neither of Titus for lenity, of Antoninus for clemency, of Marcus Aurelius for moderation, setting aside his satanical hatred of the Christian religion. {f} Queen Elizabeth ever accounted devotion and mercy the brightest stars in the sphere of majesty. She always thought it more fit to offend a man, than to hate him, saith Master Camden. In the year 1579, a young man discharged a piece out of a boat, and shot one of the bargemen in the Queen's barge (where she was then) through both his arms; who was soon apprehended, and led to the gallows for a terror to him. But whereas he religiously affirmed, that he did it unwittingly, and thought no harm, he was discharged: the Queen many times saying, that she could believe nothing of her people that parents would not believe of their children. {g} This made her so beloved at home and admired abroad. Queen Elizabeth was the most glorious and happy woman that ever wore a crown, said that thrice noble Princess Anna Atestina, the mother of the Dukes of Guise and Nemours, as Thuanus hath recorded it {h} Her subjects were ready to say to her, as the senate said to Severus, All is well with us, so long as thou rulest well over us. {i}

Ver. 3. But God came to Abimelech in a dream.] Dreams are either natural or supernatural. Natural dreams are not much to be regarded. {#Ec 5:7} Diviners and dreamers we are forbid to hearken to. {#Jer 27:9} Cicero confutes them that do, in his book De Divinatione. {a} What use there is of them is in physic, to discern our temperatures, -in divinity, our beloved sins. Supernatural dreams are sent by God and his angels; and that either to comfort us, as, {#Mt 2:19} or to chasten us. {#Job 7:13,14} And these are, first, usually repeated till they are regarded; as Pharaoh's and young Samuel's dreams: secondly, they do much affect us, and leave a certain persuasion, an inward sense of God's presence in the soul; as Daniel's, Joseph's, and Pareus's dreams. In the Calends of April, -saith he, in his domestical Diary, or Day Book, 1618, -I had a terrible dream at four of the clock in the morning. For I thought, I saw all Heidelberg in a thick smoke, but the prince's palace all on a light fire. O Deus clementissime, averte sinistrum omen, et serva Sareptam tuam a vastatione hostium intus et foris . {b} Thus that good man dreamed, and thus he prayed: but the decree was passed, and shortly after executed, according to his dream. There are also dreams diabolical. Eusebius tells us, that Simon Magus had his dream-haunting devils, ονειροπομπους, his familiars by whom he deluded men in their dreams, and drew them into the admiration of himself. These devilish dreams are either mere illusions, as that of Eliphaz is thought {c} to be no better. {#Job 4:12,16,17} Or else they tend to sin, as nocturnal pollutions, and other evil dreams; whereby the devil sometimes fasteneth that sin upon the saints when asleep, that he cannot prevail with them to commit while awake. As for Pilate's wife's dream, some divines think it was from the devil, seeking thereby to hinder the work of our redemption.

For she is a man's wife.] Adultery, even in kings, is punishable by death. Emperors and Popes {d} have been cut off by the just hand of God, in, and for this filthy sin. Society, and the purity of posterity, could not otherwise continue among men, if this crime were not capital. At Geneva they punish fornication with nine days' fasting; adultery with death. God appointed that such should be stoned. He stoneth them, howsoever, with the stone in the heart. {#Ho 4:11 Pr 7:22} Hetfer the Anabaptist was put to death for this sin at Constance. {e} He being a learned man, and a preacher, insinuated himself into the familiarity of many women of good rank and repute, and defiled them; when he came to execution, he confessed that he would many times have repented of that foul sin, but could not; so fast was he held in the devil's bonds: and that now he was willing to die, and accept of the chastisement of his iniquity. Howbeit, it is an opinion held and maintained by the Anabaptists, that adultery is not to be punished by men, because the Scripture saith, "whoremongers and adulterers God will judge". {#Heb 13:4} Others would prove the same from those words of our Saviour, to the woman taken in adultery, "Neither do I condemn thee". {#Joh 8:11} But they may as well say, that inheritances are not to be divided between brethren, because Christ would not divide them, when required thereto. {#Lu 12:14}

Ver. 4. But Abimelech had not come near her.] Being hindered by sickness. {#Ge 20:17} Well might St Ambrose call sickness the shop of virtues. {a} When men are fastened to their beds, and their bones made to rattle in their skin, lust will be laid asleep, and little leisure left for luxury. {b} This made King Alfred pray God to send him always some sickness, whereby his body might be tamed, and he the better disposed and affectioned to Godward. If it be painful to the vine to bleed, it is worse to wither. Better be pruned to grow, than cut up to burn. Otho tertius, Imperator, dictus miraculum mundi, amoribus periit. {c} How much happier he that sang, Periissem nisi Periissem.

Lord, wilt thou slay also a righteous nation?] For he knew that whole nations had smarted for the sins of their rulers; this sin of adultery especially, as we read of Shechem, Troy, &c. How were the Greeks plagued for the rape of Chrysis! and the Lacedemonian commonwealth utterly overturned by Epaminondas in the battle of Leuctra, for a rape committed upon the two daughters of Scedasus by a couple of Spartan gentlemen, travelling to Delphi! This might make Abimelech afraid lest, for his fault, wrath should fall upon his people also.

Ver. 5. Said he not unto me, She is my sister? &c.] Here Abraham and Sarah, though both famous, he for his faith, {#Ro 4:19} and she for not being afraid with any amazement, {#Ipe 3:6} yet here they show some trepidation. Sense, saith one, {a} fights sore against faith, when it is upon its own dunghill, I mean in a sensible danger. Nature's retraction of itself from a visible fear, may cause the pulse of a Christian that beats truly and strongly in the main point (the state of the soul) to intermit and falter at such a time. {b}

In the integrity of my heart.] Great is the boldness of a clear conscience, be it but in some one particular, as here in Abimelech; a man that was magis extra vitia quam cum virtutibus (as Tacitus {c} saith of Galba) rather not evil than good; one whose nature was not changed, but chained up only. Civil men are but wolves chained up, tame devils, swine in a fair meadow; and yet these are the world's honest men, and as high a price set upon them, as was once upon a cab of dove's dung in the famine of Samaria. But these Abimelechs, these Catos, these civil judges, they want sincerity in the first table, and integrity in the second; for they stand not upon the inward corruptions, nor lesser breaches of the law. Abimelech, for all his confidence here, was to blame for his wandering, rash lust. And Cato, that mirror of morality, was a griping usurer, prostituted his wife, and slew himself. And yet Paterculus {d} will tell you, that he was, Homo virtuti simillimus, et per omnia virtute Diis quam hominibus propior, & c.

Ver. 6. Yea, I know that thou didst this, &c.] God takes his excuse, and yet chastiseth him; to teach us, saith Calvin (in loco), Non prorsus vacare culpa qui humano modo puri sunt. He can find flaws in that for which we may look for thanks. This makes Nehemiah crave pardon of his zealous reformations; and David cries out, "Enter not into judgment," &c. {#Ps 143:2} Sordet in conspectu iudicis, quod fulget in conspectu operantis, saith Gregory. "Ye are they that justify yourselves before men," saith Christ to the Pharisees; "but God knoweth your hearts: for that which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God". {#Lu 16:15} A thing which I see in the night may shine, and that shining proceed from nothing but rottenness. "But be not deceived," or if ye be, yet "God is not mocked". {#Ga 6:7} When he comes to turn the bottom of the bag upwards—as the steward did Benjamin's—all our secret thefts will out, all our collusions come to light {a} His law is a law of fire; {#De 33:2} His tribunal, of fire; {#Eze 1:27} His pleading with sinners, in flames of fire. {#Isa 66:15,16} The trial of our work shall be by fire; {#1Co 3:15} and before God, who is a consuming fire. {#Heb 12:29} Happy are they that are here purged by that spirit of judgment, and burning.

For I also withheld thee.] Either by sickness, as aforesaid, or by a spirit of restraint, "a gift" that God gives "to men, yea, to the rebellious also, that the Lord God might dwell among them" {#Ps 68:18} in his religion and worshippers; which else the wicked would never suffer. Thus God chained up Laban, and made Saul to melt over David, &c. Now many take this poor counter (that is, I am not as some others are, so bad as the worst) and set it down for a thousand pounds. Our Saviour indeed is said to have "looked upon" the young Pharisee, and to have "loved him," {#Mr 10:21} because he saw him to be a tame man, free from foul crimes, and fit to live in a commonwealth: but no otherwise than as we love pictures, which are pretty things to look on, and that is all they are good for. A better nature, if rested in, is but a beautiful abomination, a smooth way to hell. And yet, say what we can, this kind of men grow crooked and aged with good opinions of themselves, and can seldom or never be set straight again. They will trust in Moses; {#Joh 5:45} and when they have sick fits, and qualms of conscience, lick themselves whole by their repentance, and so rest in it: which made Austin say, that repentance dammeth more than sin. They seek not to be saved by the righteousness of faith neither see they any necessity of growing from faith to faith. No, they are set, they are as good as ever they mean to be; they that outstrip them are too forward, they that fall short of them are deeply censured.

Ver. 7. Now therefore restore.] Let knowledge reform what ignorance offended in. "The times of ignorance God winked at, but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent". {#Ac 17:30} As a master, when he sets up his servant a double light, expects more work and better. We have a privilege not only above the blind Ethnics, but above the Church of the Old Testament. The sea about the altar was brazen; {#1Ki 7:23} and what eyes could pierce through it? Now our sea about the throne is glassy, {#Re 4:6} "like unto crystal," clearly conveying the light and sight of God to our eyes. God hath "destroyed the face of the covering cast over all people". {#Isa 25:7} "And we all with open face beholding, as in a glass, the glory of the Lord," must see to it, that we be "changed into the same image, from glory to glory". {#2Co 3:18} If those good souls passed "from strength to strength," {#Ps 84:7} travelling many a weary step, to see the face of God in Sion, in the obscure glass of the ceremonies; voe torpori nostro, woe to us, if, now that such a light is sprung up, we walk not as children of that light! To know heavenly things, is to "ascend into heaven". {#Pr 30:3,4} And to know our Master's will is a great talent; of all other, there is a "much" in that. {#Lu 12:48} But then, not to do his will so known, is to "be beaten with many stripes." None so deep in hell, as your knowing men, {a} because they "imprisoned the truth" (which is as a prophet from God) "in unrighteousness"; {#Ro 1:18} they kept it in their heads, as rain in the middle region, not suffering it to warm their hearts, or work upon their affections; therefore came wrath upon them to the utmost. None are oftener drowned than they that have most skill in swimming. So none sooner miscarry than men of greatest parts.

For he is a prophet, and he shall pray for thee.] The proper work of a prophet. "If they be prophets, let them entreat the Lord": {#Jer 27:18} they shall be heard, when others shall not; as the father's blessing is most effectual; as the child could not be raised till Elisha came himself, nor the sick be healed, till the elders of the Church be called for. {#Jas 5:14} The apostles divided their time between praying and preaching. {#Ac 6:4} So did the priests of the Old Testament; "They shall teach Jacob thy judgments, they shall put incense before thee". {#De 33:10} As with every sacrifice there was incense, so should every ministerial duty be performed with prayer. St Paul begins his Epistles with prayer, and proceeds and ends in like manner. What is it that he would have every of his Epistles stamped with by his own hand, but prayer for all his people. {#2Th 3:17,18}

Thou shalt surely die.] So dear to God are his saints, that he grievously punisheth even kings for their sakes; as Jehoram "in his bowels with an incurable disease," {#2Ch 21:18} the two Herods by the lousy malady. {b} Maximinus the emperor, a cruel persecutor, cast upon his bed of sickness by God, was glad to crave the prayers of the Church, as Eusebius relates it. Valens being to subscribe an order for the banishment of Basil, was smitten with a sudden trembling of his hand, that he could not. Afterward he was burned to death by the

Goths, whom he had corrupted by sending them Arian teachers. {c} The putting out of that French king's eyes, which promised {d} before with his eyes to see Anne du Bourg (one of God's true servants) burned, who seeth not to be the stroke of God's own hand? Then, his son Francis, not regarding his father's stripe, would needs yet proceed in the burning the same man. And did not the same God give him such a blow on the ear as cost him his life? As for Charles IX, author of the French massacre, though he were wittily warned by Beza to beware (upon occasion of that new star appearing in Cassiopeia, Nov. 1572, which he applied to that star at Christ's birth, and to the infanticide then) with, Tu vero, Herodes sanguinolente, time ; yet because he repented not, God gave him blood to drink, as he was worthy; for the fifth month after the vanishing of this star, Constans fama est illum, dum e variis corporis partibus sanguis emanaret, in lecto saepe volutatum, inter terribilium blasphemiarum diras tantam sanguinis vim proiecisse, ut paucas post horas, mortuus fuerit .{ e} This Charles IX, in the massacre of Paris, beholding the bloody bodies of the butchered Protestants, and feeding his eye upon that woeful spectacle, is said to have breathed out this bloody speech, Quam bonus est odor hostis mortui ! {f} Another great queen, seeing the ground covered with naked carcasses of her Protestant subjects said, {g} that it was the bravest piece of tapestry that ever she beheld; {h} but it was not long that she beheld it. Our Queen Mary, though non natura sed Pontificiorum arte ferox—ipsa solum nomen regium ferebat, coeterum omnem regni potestatem Pharisaei possidebant -died {i} of a tympany, or, as some (by her much sighing before her death) supposed, she died of thought and sorrow, either for the loss of Calais, or for the departure of King Philip. This king, going from the Low Countries by sea into Spain, with resolution never to remove thence, fell into a storm, in which almost all the fleet was wrecked, his household stuff of very great value lost, and himself hardly escaped. He said he was delivered by the singular providence of God, to root out Lutheranism, which he presently began to do, protesting that he had rather have no subjects, than Lutheran subjects, {j} Whether it was this Philip or his successor, I cannot certainly tell. But Carolus Scribanius tells a lamentable story of one of those two Philips. {k} Hear him else, Ulcerum magnitudinem, multitudinem, acerbitatem, foetorem, lecto tanquam durae cruci, anno integro, affixionem, ut in

Ver. 8. Therefore Abimelech rose early, &c.] He "made haste, and delayed not to keep God's commandments". {#Ps 119:60} This is a check to our dulness, whom so many exhortations and menaces of God's mouth move not to amend. Some are semper victuri, as Seneca saith. They defer so long till the drawbridge be taken up, till the gale of grace be blown over, till the bridegroom goes by, and so are shut out with the foolish virgins, for their lingering and futuring. Nolite vero tempus in nugis terere, vel Cras, ut ille, Seria, reiectis in hilari computatione, literis indiciis hodie morituri, protelare. At the next puff of breath thou mayest blow away thy life; or, by not discerning thy time, thou mayest lose thy soul, as Saul did his kingdom. Opportunities are headlong. {a}

And called all his servants.] Nature taught infidels to take care of their own families. Socrates is said to have called philosophy down from heaven to earth; {b} that is, to have directed men to be good at home, and setting aside other studies, chiefly to mind,

Cato said that he could pardon all men's faults, save only the faults of his own family. And Augustus, when he went about to restrain garish attire, and looseness of life in others, was jeered and upbraided at Rome with the excesses and enormities of his own household. He had three untoward children whom he was wont to term tres vomicas, tria carcinomata so many mattery impostumes, ulcerous sores. His wife Livia was thought to be too familiar with her friend and physician, Eudemus; Pliny calls him her paramour. Tacitus saith, he was specie artis, frequens secretis. All this might be without his fault, but not without his reproach. {c} The malicious Pharisees could object it to our Saviour—"thy disciples wash not," "thy disciples fast not," &c.; as if he were much to blame for suffering such things. And surely, he is not a complete Christian, walks not "in a perfect way," that is not good "at home," {#Ps 101:2} that is, not relatively good. The fifth commandment is called by Philo, εντολη μικτη, a mixed commandment, and made a part of the first table. It is therefore set between both tables of the law, saith another, because all we get from God or men we bring it home to our houses—as Abimelech here relates his divine dream to his servants—the place of well employing it.

And the men were sore afraid.] This fear freed them; for according to men's fear, so is God's displeasure. {#Ps 90:11} Cavebis si pavebis. {#Ro 11:21} But they that tremble not in hearing, shall be crushed to pieces in feeling, said that martyr. {d} This was a sign that the Israelites feared God, when they believed God, and his servant Moses. {#Ex 4:31} The best way of prevention is to tremble at God's judgments, while they hang in the threatenings. But frequentissimum initium calamitatis securitas, saith Paterculus. Sola igitur securitas est, nunquam esse securum, sed semper pavidum et trementem, saith another. {e} Should servants fear their masters {#Col 3:22} because they have power over the flesh, and not we fear God? &c.

Ver. 9. What hast thou done unto us? &c.] Some warmth must be in a reproof, but it must not be scalding hot. Words of reviling and disgrace, they scald, as it were; but words that tend to stir up the conscience to a due consideration of the fault (as here) they be duly warm, and tend to make the physic work more kindly. {a} How could Abraham resist this sweet and sovereign reprehension? How could he but be much ashamed, that he should give occasion to it? No oratory is so powerful with good natures as that of mildness. Remember to reprove with modesty and moderation.

Ver. 10. What sawest thou?] He hath not yet done, but further expostulateth the injury, and setteth on the reproof. Personatae reprehensiones frigent . " Rebuke them sharply". {#Tit 1:13}

Ver. 11. Surely the fear of God, &c.] The only best curb to restrain from evil, and spur to incite to good. All honesty flows from this holy fear. It is a problem in Aristotle, why men are credited more than other creatures. The answer is, Οτι θεους νομιζει μόνον; "Man only reverenceth God," therefore you may trust in him, therefore you may commit yourself to him. He that truly feareth God is like unto Cato, of whom it is said, He never did well that he might appear to do so, but because he could do no otherwise. {a} You need not fear me, said Joseph to his brethren, for I fear God, and so dare do you no harm. Ought ye not to have feared God? said Nehemiah to those usurious Jews. {#Ne 5:9}

Ver. 14. And Ablmelech took sheep and oxen.] Great men should be bountiful to good men. Aeneas Sylvius was wont to say of learning—how much more may it be said of grace?—popular men should esteem it as silver, noblemen as gold, princes prize it as pearls. Arcadius the emperor gave his schoolmaster Arsenes, a holy man, the revenues of all Egypt, desiring him to pray for him.

Arsenes promised him his prayers, but refused his rich offer; saying, that he wanted no money, as being long since dead to the world. {a}

Ver. 15. Behold, my land.] This is the way to make a reproof work kindly, viz., to preserve still an opinion in the hearts of the reprov'd, that we love them nevertheless, and would do them any good.

Ver. 16. I have given thy brother.] Not thee, to avoid suspicion, "Provide," we must, "things honest in the sight of all men"; {#Ro 12:17} and not only keep a good conscience, but a good name as much as may be; learning this of the unjust steward, by lawful (though he did it by unlawful) means. For our Saviour noted this defect, when he said, "The children of this world," &c. {#Lu 16:8} It was good counsel that Livia gave her husband Augustus. It behoveth thee not only not to do wrong, but not to seem to do so, &c. {a} We must shun, and be shy of, the very show and shadow of sin, if we tender either our credit abroad or comfort at home. The Church took it ill, that her veil was pulled off, and that she was judged to be a dishonest woman. {#So 5:7} As in the first chapter, she prays her spouse to tell her, where she may come to him: for "why should she be as one that turneth aside," or as one that was veiled or covered, a sign of lightness and dishonesty? {#Ge 38:14,15} She was willing to eschew all appearance of evil. Some take the sense of the text thus:—I have given thy husband money to buy thee a veil, to cover thy face that all may know thee to be a married woman.

Ver. 17. So Abraham prayed unto God, and God healed Abimelech.] Here was that of St James verified, "The prayer of faith shall save the sick; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him". {#Jas 5:15} So he is healed on both sides. The story of Luther is well known, how by his prayers he recovered Theodorus Virus of a consumption, after the physicians had given him up for dead. {a} The saints are God's favourites; they may have anything of him. Sejanus found Tiberius so facile, that he needed only to ask, and give thanks. {b} He never denied him anything, and oftentimes anticipated his request. Chapter 21

Ver. 1. And the Lord visited Sarah.] God pays not his people with words only, as Sertorius did his soldiers, {a} He fools them not off with fair promises, {b} as Ptolemy (surnamed therefore Δωσων) did his favourites; but is real, yea, royal in his promises and performances. Of many promisers it may be said, as Tertullian of the peacock, all in changeable colours: as oft changed as moved. Italians all; as Aeneas Sylvius said of Italy; Novitate quadam, nihil habet stabile . Not so their ancestors, the Romans. They had a great care always to perform their word; insomuch, that the first temple built in Rome was dedicated to the goddess Fidelity. Great men's words, saith one, are like dead men's shoes: he may go barefoot that waits for them. Not so good men; they will stand to their oath, though it tend to their loss. {#Ps 15:4} They are children that will not lie. {#Isa 63:8} Their Father is a God that cannot lie. {#Tit 1:2} He is the God of Amen, as Isaiah calleth him; {#Isa 65:16} and "all his promises are Yea and Amen in Christ Jesus," {#2Co 1:20} "the faithful and true witness". {#Re 3:14} Judah would not break promise with the harlot, lest he should be shamed. {#Ge 38:23} One of the laws of the knights of the band in Spain was, that if any of them broke his promise, he went alone by himself, and nobody spake to him, nor he to any. When God serves any so, let him be so served. But the promises are ancient. {#Tit 1:2} And not any tittle of them, as yet, ever fell to the ground. Wherefore, "gird up the loins of your minds, and trust perfectly on the grace that is brought unto you". {#1Pe 1:13} "Faithful is he that hath promised, who also will do it". {#1Th 5:24}

Ver. 2. For Sarah conceived.] By the force of her faith, though at first she faltered. {#Heb 11:11}

And bare Abraham a son in his old age.] Beatae senectutis et emeritae fidei filium, as one well calleth Isaac. {a} St Paul, for this, saith he was "born after the Spirit". {#Ga 4:29}

Ver. 3. And Abraham called the name, &c.] A ridiculous name, but such as God had imposed. All God's ways are foolishness to the world, -Christ and all. But—as old men use to say to young—they think us fools, we know them to be so. It will not be long ere they shall wail and howl out, Nos insensati, we fools held their life madness, &c. Say therefore with David, If this be to be vile, we will be more vile. God hath a barren womb for mocking Michal. He is a fool, we say, that would be laughed out of his coat; but he is a double fool that would be laughed out of his skin, that would hazard his soul, because loath to be laughed at. Caligula socerum Scyllanum, molestum ei propter virtutem et affinitatem, ad mortem sibi consciscendam ludibriis adegit. More fool he.

Ver. 4. And Abraham circumcised his son.] At circumcision, as now at baptism, names were given. Let them be such as are significant, and may immind us of some good, either person or thing; all will be found little enough, Optima nomina, non appellando fieri mala, faenerator Alfius dixisse verissime fertur. {a} We read of a good woman, that had named her three daughters, Faith, Hope, and Charity. And when she was to be condemned by Bonner; My lord, said she, if you burn me, I hope you will keep Faith, Hope, and Charity. No, by my truth, will I not, quoth the bishop; keep them who will, I'll take no charge of them. {b} We read also of another, that, courting a harlot, asked her name: she answered, Mary; whereupon, remembering Mary Magdalene, that penitent harlot, he repented him of his evil purpose, and, advising the courtesan to repent by her example, departed, and lived honestly. {c} We cannot have too many monitors to mind us of our duty.

Ver. 5. And Abraham was a hundred years old.] After twenty years' praying, and waiting the fulfilling of the promise; besides thirteen of those years' silence, for aught we read, after the promise of a child. This was a sore trial; but God knew him to be armour of proof, and therefore tried him thus with musket-shot. Well might the apostle say, "Ye have need of patience, that after ye have done the will of God," and suffered it too, "ye might receive the promise". {#Heb 10:36} The "spoiling of their goods" required patience: but this waiting much more. Good men find it easier to bear evil, than to wait till the promised good be enjoyed. This waiting is nothing but hope and trust lengthened; which they that cannot do, like children, they pull apples afore they are ripe, {a} and have worms bred of them; as those hasty Ephraimites, that set upon the Philistines, and were slain in Gath. They had indeed a promise of the land, but the time was not yet come. They were weary of the Egyptian bondage, and would have thus got out; but they were too hasty. Fugientes ergo fumum, incidebant in ignem . { #1Ch 7:21,22 Ps 78:9}

Ver. 6. God hath made me to laugh.] "A wise son maketh a glad father". {#Pr 10:1} Monstri autem simil est, quando pro risu sunt fletus, sunt flagellum . And yet this is many a good man's case. How many parents are put to wish Moses' wish, {#Nu 11:15} "Lord, if I have found favour in thy sight, kill me, that I behold not my misery!" Had he lived to see what ways his grandchild Jonathan took, what a grief would it have been unto him! {#Jud 18:30} "Jonathan, the son of Gershom, the son of Manasseh," &c. In the best Hebrew copies, Nun is suspended in that name: whereupon the Hebrews descant, that this Gershom was the son of Moses; but because he and his posterity walked not in the ways of Moses, but rather of Manasses, {#2Ki 21:1-9} and did his works: therefore the penman of this book would not so far disgrace Moses, as to make him his son, as indeed he was, {#Ex 2:1,2,10 1Ch 23:14,15} but rather of Manasses, whom he imitated and resembled. {a} How much better and happier had it been for them both if they had expressed their father's manners, as Constantine's sons did: of whom it is said, that they had put on whole Constantine, and in all good things did exactly resemble him.

Ver. 7. That Sarah should have given children suck.] So she had a double blessing, -of the womb, and of the breasts. Milk she had at those years, and great store of it too: whence she is said to "give children suck," not a child only. She could have nursed another for a need, besides her own. Note, that though she were a great lady, yet she was a nurse. Let it not be niceness, but necessity that hinders any mother from so doing; lest she be found more monstrous than the "sea-monsters," that "draw out their breast, and give suck to their young". {#La 4:3} If the child must be set out, let a fit nurse be looked after. Quidam scrofae lacte nutritus cum esset, in coeno sese identidem volutabat. {a}

Ver. 8. And Abraham made a great feast.] A laudable custom, saith Cajetan, that the beginning of the eating of the firstborn should be celebrated with a feast. St Augustine observeth here, that this solemnity at the weaning of Isaac, was a type of our spiritual regeneration: at, and after which, the faithful keep a continual feast, {a} "Let us keep the festivity, {εορταζομεν #ICo 5:7} or holy day," saith Paul, that "feast of fat things full of marrow; of wines on the lees well refined," {#Isa 25:6} proceeding from milk to stronger meat, {#Heb 5:12} and being to the world, as a weaned child. His mouth doth not water after homely provisions, that hath lately tasted of delicate sustenance.

Ver. 9. And Sarah saw the son of Hagar mocking.] At that mystical name Isaac, as a gaud, or laughingstock. At the feast also, made upon such a frivolous occasion. As who should say, What care I, though this ado be made now about Isaac's weaning? I am the firstborn, and beloved of my father, who will not deny me the inheritance. This Sarah had soon spied, or overheard. Liberorum curiosi sunt parentes . The mother especially observeth the wrong done to the child. And besides, dislike soon spies a fault. A fault it was no doubt, and a great one too. Otherwise, the apostle would not have called it "persecution": {#Ga 4:29} nor God have punished it with ejection. Machiavel, that scoffing atheist, rotted in the prison at Florence. Jeering Julian had his payment from Heaven. Sir Thomas Moor (qui sceptice et scabiose de Luthero et Religione Reformata loquebatur) lost his head. Another lost his wits for mocking at James Abbs, martyr, as a madman; for that, having no money, he gave his apparel to the poor; some to one, some to another, as he went to the stake {a} "What is truth?" {#Joh 18:38} said Pilate to our Saviour, in a scornful profane manner. Not long after which, he became his own deathsman. Apion scoffed at circumcision, and had an ulcer at the same time, and in the same place. {b} Surely, God is the avenger of all such: he calls it blasphemy in the second table, and shows his wrath from heaven against it, as that which proceeds from the very superfluity of malice (as herein Ishmael) and tends to murder. The Hebrew word here used signifies that he not only mocked Isaac, but also made others to mock him.

{b} Josephus.

Ver. 10. Cast out this bondwoman.] Who had been, likely, either an author or abettor of her son's sin, in ambitiously seeking the inheritance. Out they must, therefore, together: as all hypocrites one day must be cast out of God's kingdom. Heaven is an "undefiled inheritance": no dirty dog ever trampled on that golden pavement. There is no passing e coeno in coelum . Heaven would be no heaven to the unregenerate. Beetles love dunghills better than ointments; and swine love mud better than a garden.

“*What of Paris? To reign in safety and live in happiness,
- nothing, he says, can force him.*”
- Horat., epist. 2, lines 9, 10.

Ver. 11. And the thing was very grievous, &c.] See, there is grief sometimes between the best couples as above said. {#Ge 16:5} But why was it so grievous to cast out Ishmael, when in the next chapter, it seems no such grief to him to slay Isaac? Surely for that, here, he hears only his wife's voice: there he well understood it to be the will of God. Veniat, veniat verbum Domini, et submittemus illi, sexcenta si nobis essent colla , said that reverend Dutchman. {a} When Abraham came to know it was God's will as well as Sarah's, he soon yielded.

Ver. 12. In all that Sarah hath said unto thee, &c.] The wife then is to be hearkened to when she speaks reason. Samson's mother had more faith than her husband: {#Jud 13:23} and Priscilla is sometimes set before Aquila. Paul's hearers at Philippi were only women at first. {#Ac 16:13} And St Peter tells Christian wives that they may win their husbands to Christ by their "chaste conversation coupled with fear". {#1Pe 3:1} "The Scripture" is said to "say" what Sarah here saith. {#Ga 4:30}

Ver. 13. Because he is thy seed.] So bountiful a Master is God, so liberal a Lord, that he blesseth his servants in their seed too. We count it a great favour if an earthly lord give an old servant a country cottage, with some small annuity for life; but God's love extends beyond life; as David's love to Jonathan preserves Mephibosheth from the gallows, yea, promoteth him to a princely allowance, and respect at court. Your children shall find and feel it, double and treble, said that martyr, whatsoever you do or suffer for the Lord's sake. {a}

Ver. 14. And Abraham rose up early.] He was not disobedient to the heavenly vision, but set upon the execution of God's will with expedition. Voluntas Dei, necessitas rei . A godly man says Amen to God's Amen, go it never so much against the hair with him: he puts his fiat, his assent to God's; and saith, {as #Ac 21:14} "The will of the Lord be done," which was Vox vere Christianorum, as one said.

Ver. 15. And the water was spent in the bottle.] All creature comforts will fade and fail us; as the brook Cherith dried up while the prophet was drinking of it; as those pools about Jerusalem, that might be dried up, with the tramlings of horse and horsemen. {#2Ki 19:24} But they that drink of Christ's water shall never thirst; for it shall be in them (as the widow's oil, or Aaron's ointment) "a well of water springing up to eternal life". {#Joh 4:14}

She cast the child, &c.] Whom till then she had led in her hand, faint, and ready to die for thirst; who while he lived at the full in his father's house, but could not be contented. God loves to let us see the worth of his favours by the want of them; {a} to chasten men's insolency with indigency, as he did the prodigal in the gospel.

Ver. 16. Let me not see the death of the child.] This, saith an interpreter, {a} was but poor love. Give me a friend that will not leave in the instant of death. {#Ge 46:4}

She lift up her voice, and wept.] As hinds by calving, so we by weeping "cast out our sorrows". {#Job 39:3}

“ Expletur lachrymis, egeriturque dolor .”

{a} Babington.

Ver. 17. And God heard the voice of the lad.] Weeping hath a voice. {#Ps 6:8} And as music upon the water sounds farther and more harmoniously than upon the land, so prayers joined with tears. These, if they proceed from faith, are showers quenching the devil's cannon shot; a second baptism of the soul, wherein it is rinsed anew, nay, perfectly cured: as the tears of vines cure the leprosy; as the lame were healed in the troubled waters. Whether Hagar's and Ishmael's tears were for sin, or for the present pressure only, I have not to say. {a} But God is so pitiful, that he hears and helps our affliction, as he had done Hagar's once afore. {#Ge 16:11} And as our Saviour raised the young man of Nain, though none sought to him, merely because he was the only son of his mother, a widow, the stay of her life, and staff of her old age. See a sweet place, #2Ki 14:26,27.

Ver. 18. For I will make him a great nation.] A nation by himself, as he had promised to Abraham. This had not come to pass, had not she missed her way to Egypt, and wandered in this wilderness. God, by his providence, ordereth our disorders to his own glory. Divinum consilium dum devitatur, impletur: Humana sapientia dum reluctatur, comprehenditur. {a}

{a} Gregor.

Ver. 19. God opened her eyes, &c.] The well was there before, but she saw it not till her eyes were opened. So, till God irradiate both the organ and the object, we neither see nor suck those "breasts of consolation". {#Isa 66:11} We turn the back, and not the palm of the hand, to the staff of the promises.

Ver. 20. And God was with the lad, &c.] The fountain of Hagar, saith a divine, lying between Bared and Kadesh Barnea, was afterwards called the well of the living God; and seemeth mystically to represent baptism, the laver of regeneration. For the Church, like Hagar with her son Ishmael, travelling through the wilderness of this world, is pressed with a multitude of sins and miseries, &c. Wherefore they, joining together in prayer, crave to be refreshed with the water of life. For Hagar signifieth a pilgrim. Ishmael, a man whom the Lord heareth; who, travelling together with his mother the Church in this world, fighteth against the enemies thereof, and shooteth the arrows of faith against all infernal and cruel beasts and lusts. Thus he. {a}

Ver. 21. And his mother took him a wife.] Adeo est iuris non gentium, sed ipsius naturae, ut parentes matrimonia liberis procurent . Children are a chief part of their parents' goods; therefore to be disposed of by them in marriage. When Satan had commission to afflict Job in his goods, he fell upon his children. Yet, in the Church of Rome, parents' consent is not much regarded.

Ver. 22. God is with thee in all that thou doest.] Natural conscience cannot choose but stoop to the image of God stamped upon the natures and works of the godly. When they see in them that which is above ordinary, they are afraid of the name of God called upon by them. Their hearts even ache and quake within them. {#De 28:10}

Ver. 23. Swear unto me here by God, &c.] This visit, we see, was more of fear than of love: there can be no hearty love, indeed, but between true Christians. Kings, then, have their cares, crowns their crosses: thistles in their arms, and thorns in their sides. This made one cry out of his diadem, O vilis pannus, &c. And Canutus set his crown upon the crucifix. Frederick, the Elector of Saxony, is said to have been born with the sign of a cross upon his back. {a} And the next night after that Rodolphus Rufus was crowned emperor of Germany, anno Dom. 1273, over the temple, where the crown was set upon his head, a golden cross was seen to shine, like a star, to the admiration of all that beheld it. {b} These were the same emperor's verses concerning his crown imperial:—

Innumeris curis sed comitata venis;
Quod bene si nosset omnes expendere, nemo
Nemo foret, qui te tollere vellet humo .”*

Ver. 24. I will swear.] Abraham quickly consents to so reasonable a request, from so honourable a person. The wisdom from above is "easy to be entreated". {#Jas 3:17} The churl Nabal holds it a goodly thing to hold off. It is but manners to reciprocate: very publicans can find in their hearts to do good to those that have been good to them.

{#Mt 5:46,47}

Ver. 25. And Abraham reprov'd Abimelech.] Inferiors may reprove their superiors, so they do it wisely and modestly.

Ver. 26. I wot not who hath done this thing.] A fault it might be in Abraham, not to complain to the king. For many a good prince is even bought and sold by his officers and counsellors; as it was said of Aurelian the Emperor, who might know nothing but as they informed him. As of another German prince it was said, Esset alius, si esset apud alios. {a}

Ver. 27. Abraham took sheep and oxen.] In token of true and hearty reconciliation. Reconciliationes , saith Menander, sunt vulpinae amicitiae . Let it be so among heathens. But we have not so learned Christ.

Ver. 28. By themselves.] Because for a distinct use; nothing concerning the covenant aforementioned.

Ver. 29, 30. These seven ewe-lambs.] Wherewith I will buy my peaceable enjoyment of this well, for the future.

That they may be a witness.] A means to prevent contention, which is sooner stirred than stinted. And I have not observed, saith one, that many have been healed by going into troubled waters, though moved by the best angels of the Church.

Ver. 31. They sware both of them.] Or, they were sworn. The Hebrew is passive (עָבַדְתִּי). To show that an oath is not rashly to be undertaken, but by a kind of necessity imposed. It comes of a root that signifies to satisfy; because he, to whom we swear, must therewith be contented. An oath is an end of strife, saith the apostle. {#Heb 6:16} The Greeks call it ορχος ψυασι ερχος, a hedge, which a man may not break.

Ver. 32. A covenant.] Foedus , παρα το πεποιθεναι {a}

Ver. 33. Abraham planted a grove.] That he might have a private place for prayer and meditation. And thus he improved and employed that recent peace he had made with Ahimelech. Oh that God would once more try us, and trust us with the blessing of peace! How should we now prize it, and praise him for it! Bona a tergo formosissima .

Ver. 34. Many days.] Twenty-five years at least: for so old was Isaac when he went to be sacrificed. Some halcyons God vouchsafes to his "afflicted, and tossed with tempest"; {#Isa 54:11} some rest and repose to his poor pilgrims. Laus Deo .

Ver. 1. God did tempt Abraham.] Temptation is twofold—(1.) Probationis (2.) Perditionis The former is of God; the latter, of the devil. God is said to tempt, when he puts us upon the trial of our faith and obedience, that he may "do us good in the latter end". {#De 8:16} Satan ever seeks to do us harm. He, when he comes to tempt, comes with his sieve, as to Peter. {#Lu 23:21} Christ with his "fan". {#Mt 3:12} Now a fan casteth out the worst, and keepeth in the best; a sieve keepeth in the worst, and casteth out the best. Right so Christ (and his trials) purgeth our corruption, and increaseth grace: contrarily the devil, if there be any ill thing in us, confirmeth it; if faith, or any good thing in us, he weakeneth it. Now the temptations of Satan are either (1.) of seducement; {#Jas 1:15} or (2.) of buffeting and grievance. {#2Co 12:7} In seducement we are pressed with some lesser or darling corruption, whereto our appetites by nature are most propense. And here Satan hath his machinations; {#2Co 2:11} methods; {#Eph 6:11} "depths"; {#Re 2:24} "darts"; {#Eph 6:16} "fiery darts" pointed and poisoned with the venom of serpents, which set the heart on fire from one lust to another. In buffetings we are dogged with the foulest lusts of atheism, suicide, &c., such as nature startleth at, and abhorreth; and these, if we resist, and be merely passive, are only our crosses, Satan's sins. For before a temptation can be a sin, it must have somewhat of coveting in it. And trials are only taps to give vent to corruption.

Ver. 2. Take now thy son, thine only son Isaac, &c.] This was the last of Abraham's ten trials, and the sorest. All our troubles to this are but as the stivers and chips of that cross upon which this good patriarch was crucified. Origen hence persuades parents to bear patiently the loss of their children. Laetus offer filium Deo, esto sacerdos animae filii tui, &c. Abraham was not only to kill his only son (which yet was more than to have torn out his own heart with his own hands), but to cut him in pieces, to lay him orderly on the altar, after the manner of a sacrifice, and to burn him to ashes; himself making and tending the fire, and putting him in, piece after piece, when any was out. A hard and heavy task: especially since it directly crossed the promise, that "in Isaac all nations of the earth should be blessed"; and seemed to involve the utter ruin of all mankind. Here, reason was at a stand. It was faith only that could extricate the perplexed patriarch, by giving him to know "that God was able to raise him up even from the dead". {#Heb 11:19} Hoc Abrahamum fecit ἀμεταπτωτον. This was it that kept him from tripping.

Get thee into the land of Moriah.] Both Abraham's great temptations began with one strain, Vade tibi, Get thee gone. {#Ge 12:1,22:2} Here God led Abraham into temptation, but delivered him from evil. Have you not been tempted, saith the holy man, {a} in this or that kind? It is because God in mercy would not "lead you into temptation." Yea, this is in some sort more to be acknowledged than victory when you are tempted. For not to be tempted is more immediately from God, and less in man's power than to prevail against temptation. Since nothing doth overcome us against our will: but without our will God doth lead us into trials: for he knoweth we would taste little of these if we might be our own carvers.

Ver. 3. And Abraham rose up early, &c.] To show his prompt and present obedience. He neither consulted with his wife, nor with his own reason. She might have haply hung upon him and hindered him, as Zipporah did Moses to the hazarding of his life. {#Ex 4:24-26} He captivates all the powers of the soul to his Creator; goes after him without questioning, and so shows himself to be "renewed in the spirit of his mind": that is, in his natural reason: for that, like an old beldam, is the mother and nurse of all our distempers and strayings. Cassianus tells us of a young man that had given himself up to a Christian life: and his parents, misliking that way, wrote letters to dissuade him from it; which when he knew, he would not once open them, but threw them in the fire. Let us do so by the suggestions of flesh and blood, and the counsel of carnal friends, or we shall never rest and feast in Abraham's bosom. I know not by what reason, said Borthwick the Scotch martyr, they so called them my friends, which so greatly laboured to convert me, as they called it: neither will I more esteem them than the Midianites, which in time past called the children of Israel to do sacrifice to their idols. {a}

Ver. 4. Then on the third day.] A great while for him to be plodding, ere he came to the place. But we must conceive that his brains were better busied, than many of ours would have been therewhile. We must not weigh the cross, for then it will prove heavy: we must not chew the pill, but swallow it whole, else it will prove bitter. We must not plod too much, but ply the throne of grace for a good use and a good issue of all our trials and tribulations.

Ver. 5. Abide ye here with the ass.] This, the Hebrews use for a proverb, against such as are dull and uncapable. Zophar saith, that "man is born as a wild ass's colt". {#Job 11:12} As an "ass's foal" for rudeness, and "a wild ass's" for unruliness. It imports that he is untamed and untractable, till a new heart be put into him. Agur had not the understanding of a man, till he spake to Ithiel and Ucal for it. {#Pr 30:1,2} He wants the whole man, totum hominis, that doth not fear God and keep his commandments. {#Ec 12:13} Tu et asinus unum estote, will not do it; which was the counsel given to a young novice entering a monastery {a}

Ver. 6. And laid it upon Isaac his son.] Who was herein a lively type of Christ, bearing the cross whereon he was offered up. Το σωματι των χολαζομενων εχαστος εκφερει τον εαυτου σταυρον, , saith Plutarch, speaking of the Roman fashion of crucifying malefactors. And surely it was by a wonderful providence of God that the Jews brought our Saviour to Pilate to be put to death; since they hated nothing more than to confirm or countenance the Roman tyranny among them by any means. Hence Gamaliel gave counsel to dismiss the apostles. {#Ac 5:38} And hence the chief priests and rulers took it as so exceedingly heinous that Paul was taken out of their hands by the chief captain. {#Ac 23:10} But God had a hand in it, that this and other types and scriptures might be fulfilled, that foretold the very manner of his death on a tree. Let the Jews stumble now at the cross, and fall backward. Let the Gentiles jeer us, as Lucian {a} doth, for that we deny the multitude of their gods, and yet believe in a crucified God, {b} Let us desire to know nothing but Christ, and him crucified; and if ever we desire to be kings in heaven, -and every man must be aut Caesar, aut nullus, a king or a captive, -let us seek by the eye of faith to see the Sun of Righteousness in the west (as Strato's servant taught him): let us look upon Christ hanging on the cross, dying on that altar, and we shall live for ever.

Ver. 7. Where is the lamb for a burnt offering.] Isaac was not to be told now what belonged to a sacrifice. He had been long since taught by his father what was to be done in the service of God. "When I was young, my father taught me," saith Solomon, {#Pr 4:4} so did his mother also, {#Pr 31} in her Lemuel's lesson. Plantus tenellas frequentius adaquare proderit , saith Primasius. {a}

Sed scribo haec frustra, quia tu secundum philosophiam vestram, has res ratione rogere, hoc est, ut ait ille, cum ratione insanire pergis, et occidis teipsum; nec vides prorsus extra manum tuam et consilium positam esse causam, etiam extra curam tuam velle agi.* {c}

Ver 9. And they came to the place.] Mount Moriah; where the temple was afterwards built. {#2Ch 3:1} This was a little from Salem, as Mount Calvary also was a little from Jerusalem.

And bound Isaac his son.] Who struggled not, neither resisted, though able for his age (being twenty-five years old, as Josephus makes him; others thirty-three) to have overpowered his old father. He was acquainted with God's counsel, saith Luther, wherein he rested. Yet he was bound, (1.) For that the rite of sacrifices so required; {#Ps 118:27} (2.) Lest any involuntary motion, by pangs of death, should be procured. Whence various of the martyrs, as Ridley, Rawlins, &c, desired to be bound fast to the stake, lest the flesh should play its part. Rawlins, when the smith cast a chain about him at the stake, "I pray you, good friend," said he, "knock in the chain fast; for it may be, that the flesh would strive mightily. But, God, of thy great mercy, give me strength and patience to abide the extremity." {a} Nature at death will have a bout with the best, whether he die as Elisha, slowly, or as Elijah, suddenly.

Ver. 10. And Abraham stretched forth his hand, &c,] What painter in the world can possibly express the affection of Abraham, when thus he bound his son, and bent his sword? Surely that painter that set forth the sacrificing of Iphigenia, would also have drawn Abraham, as he did Agamemnon, with his face veiled; as not able to delineate his inconceivable grief. {a} But a man in Christ is more than a man, and can do that which other men cannot reach unto. It was a matter of blame to the carnal Corinthians, that "they walked as men". {#ICo 3:3} And our Saviour looks for some singular thing to be done to those that pretend to him. {#Mt 5:47} Abraham had denied himself in his beloved Isaac, and therefore went an end with his work, hard though it were. Another that hath not done so, shall find a heavy business of it, an unsupportable burden. Sozomon {b} tells of a certain merchant, whose two sons being taken captives and adjudged to die, he offered himself to die for them; and with this promised to give the soldiers all the gold he had. They, pitying the poor man's calamity, allowed his request for one of his sons (which he would); but let them both escape they could not, because such a number must be put to death. The miserable man, therefore, looking at and lamenting both his sons, could not find in his heart to make choice of either, as overcome with an equal love to them both, but stood doubting and deliberating till they were both slain. At the siege of Buda in Hungary, there was among the German captains a nobleman, called Erkius Raschachius, whose son, a valiant young gentleman, being got out of the army without his father's knowledge, bore himself so gallantly in fight against the enemy, in the sight of his father and the army, that he was highly commended of all men, and especially of his father that knew him not at all. Yet before he could clear himself, he was compassed in with the enemy, and, valiantly fighting, slain. Raschachius exceedingly moved with the death of so brave a man, ignorant how near he touched himself, turning about to the other captains, said, This noble gentleman, whosoever he be, is worthy of eternal commendation, and to be most honourably buried by the whole army. As the rest of the captains were with like compassion approving his speech, the dead body of the unfortunate son rescued, was presented to the most miserable father; which caused all them that were there present to shed tears. But such a sudden and inward grief surprised the aged father, and struck so to his heart, that after he had stood a while speechless with his eyes set in his head, he suddenly fell down dead, Anno Dom. 1541. {c}

And took the knife to slay his son.] The apostle with, he did offer him up a slain sacrifice. {#Heb 11:17} God took it in as good part as if indeed he had done it, because he would have done it. Every man is so good before God, as he truly desires to be. In vitae libro scribuntur omnes, qui quod possunt faciunt, etsi quod debent, non possunt, saith one father. {d} And another, {e} Tota vita boni Christiani sanctum desiderium est. Ambulas, si amas. Non enim passibus ad Deum sed affectibus currimus. Tantum velis, et Deus tibi praeoccoret, saith a third. {f}

Ver. 11. And said, Abraham, Abraham!] Twice, for haste's sake: yet not at all till the very instant. When the knife was up, the Lord came. God delights to bring his people to the mount, yea, to the very brow of the hill, till their feet slip, and then delivers them. He reserves his holy hand for a dead lift. Only be sure you look to your calling; for it was otherwise with Jephthah, {#Jud 11:1} whom St Augustine calls facinorosum et improbum, a lewd and naughty man, in his questions upon the Old Testament. What then would he have said to Thomas the Anabaptist, who beheaded his brother

Leonard, in the sight of his parents, at Sangal in France, Anno 1526, pretending the example of Abraham? ^{a} As did likewise those odious idolaters of old, that offered their children in sacrifice to Moloch in the valley of Hinnom; which was so called, because the poor child put into the arms of the red-hot image, was נהם, nohem, that is, roaring; or because the priests comforting the parents said, Jehenneh lach. "It shall be profitable or pleasant to thee," as Kimchi hath it. ^{b} So, because Abraham planted a grove to serve God in, ^{#Ge 21:33} the devil, God's ape, set the blind heathens a work to plant a thicket near the altar of their god Priapus, whereinto his worshippers stepped when the sacrifice was ended, and there, like brute beasts promiscuously satisfied their lusts, thereby, as they conceived, best pleasing their god; which was the true cause, as it seems, that the true God commanded that no groves should be planted near the place of his worship; and if any were, they should be cut down.

Ver. 12. Lay not thine hand upon the lad.] As he was about to do, having armed his pious hand, not only with the knife, but with faith that works by love; as had likewise David, when going against the giant, he flies upon him, perinde ac si fundae suae tunicis non lapillum, sed Deum ipsum induisset ac implicuisset. ^{a}

Now I know that thou fearest me.] With a fear of love (Hoses iii. 5). And here that of Fulgentius is true, and taketh place. Deum sique parum metuit, valde contemnit; huius qui non memorat beneficentiam, auget iniuriam . God knew Abraham's fear before, but now he made experience of it. Nunc expertus sum , saith Junius. Nunc omnibus declarasti , saith Chrysostom.

Ver. 13. Behold, behind him a ram.] Be like the angel called behind him; which when he turned to listen to, he spied the ram caught in a thicket, Heb., Sabbech, which signifies the perplexity; winding or binding of a bush or brier. And to this both David seems to allude, ^{#Ps 116:19} and the son of David in that famous "Lama Sabachthani" of his. ^{#Mr 15:34}

And Abraham went and took the ram, &c.] How likely is it, saith one, ^{a} that we will offer to God Isaac, our joy, who will not sacrifice the ram; that is, mortify our sinful lusts, and the desires of our flesh! God tempteth us now, saith Mr Philpot, martyr, as he did our father Abraham—commanding him to slay his son Isaac, which by interpretation signifieth mirth and joy—who by his obedience preserved Isaac unto life, and offered a ram in his stead. Similarly, we are to sacrifice to God, our Isaac; that is, our joy and consolation; which if we be ready to do, our joy shall not perish, but live and be increased: although our ram be sacrificed; that is, the pride and concupiscence of our flesh entangled, through sin, with the cares of this stinging world, for the preservation and perfect augmentation of our mirth and joy, sealed up for us in Christ. Thus he. ^{b} And as God provided another sacrifice, saith a third, ^{c} for Abraham, that so he might save his son, which was a ram tied and entangled in thorns: so God provided a sacrifice for the salvation of the world, Christ that immaculate Lamb; whose head being crowned with thorns, and hanging on the cross, by his death opened unto us the door, and made us capable of eternal happiness. It is probable, saith Bucholcerus, that Abraham, when he slew and sacrificed the ram, looked up to heaven with new eyes full of divine light; and that being filled with the Spirit of God, and carried beyond himself, he thought of more things, he felt more, he seemed to see and hear more than was possible to be uttered. Ipsē Deus quodammodo expositurus, et declaraturus Abrahæ actionis præsentis augustam significationem, et manu eum ducturus ad introspectiendā huius sacrificiī sui adyta, promissionem de Christo repetit, et iureiurando confirmat .^{d}

And Abraham called the name of that place Jehovahjireh.] To perpetuate the memory of God's mercy; not of his own obedience, which yet was notable, and not to be matched again. If we honour God, we shall have honour: that is a bargain of God's own making.

{#1Sa 2:31}

Ver. 15. And the angel of the Lord.] Who stood, as a spectator and applauder of Abraham's heroical faith and transcendent obedience. Spectant Dii magnos viros, cum calamitate colluctantes. Ecce spectaculum, ad quod respiciat operi suo intentus Deus, saith Seneca of Cato, {a} and other gallant Roman spirits. Jehovahjireh, in the precedent verse, signifies, the Lord doth see; as if it had been a sight, that God and his angels came down to look upon.

Ver. 16. By myself have I sworn.] God swears for the further confirmation of our faith. For here he swore, not more for Abraham's sake, than ours, as the apostle shows. {#Heb 6:13,14,17,18} As when he spake with Jacob at Penuel, "there he spake with us"; {#Ho 12:4} and what he said to Joshua, he said to all, "I will not leave thee, nor forsake thee". {#Heb 13:5}

And hast not withheld thy son, thine only son.] And yet what was this to that sic without a sicut that hyperbole, that excess of love in God, that moved him to send his Son to die for our sins? He loved Christ far better than Abraham could love Isaac; and yet he gave him up freely, which Abraham would never have done without a command and to die as a malefactor, and by the hands of barbarous and bloody enemies; whereas Isaac was to die as a holy sacrifice, and by the hand of a tender father. How much more cause have we to say, Now I know the Lord loves me: and to swear as David did, to "keep his righteous judgments". {#Ps 119:106}

Ver. 17. Shall possess the gate,] i.e., Both their strength and government.

Ver. 18. Because thou hast obeyed.] This "because" is not so much causal, as rational. Significat non causam meritoriam, sed subalternam, et sine qua non.

Ver. 19. Went together to Beersheba.] The Hebrews conceive, because here is no mention of Isaac's return, that he was sent by his father to Shem, or that he remained for certain years in Mount Moriah. But this is uncertain.

Ver. 20. It was told Abraham.] Good news out of a far country; God usually cheers up his children after sharpest trials; brings them, as once, from Marah to Elim, &c.

Ver. 21. Buz.] Of whom came (likely) Elihu the Buzite, {See Trapp on "Job 32:2"} as of Huz some say Job came.

Ver. 22. Bethuel.] Of whom {See Trapp on "Ge 24:15"}

Ver. 23. And Bethuel begat Rebekah.] Rebekah is born; Sarah dies: thus one generation passeth, and another cometh. Our children are the Danes that drive us out of the country.

Ver. 24. His concubine.] Or half-wife, as the word signifies; one that was between a servant and a wife.

Chapter 23

Ver. 1. And Sarah was a hundred, &c.] It is observed by divines, that God thought not fit to tell us of the length of the life of any woman in Scripture, but Sarah, to humble that sex, that because they were first in bringing in death, deserved not to have the continuance of their lives recorded by God's pen.

Ver. 2. And Sarah died.] The Jews would persuade us that the devil represented to her the offering of Isaac, whereat she took sick and died. This is but a mere conceit of theirs; for Abraham then dwelt at Beersheba, now at Hebron.

And Abraham came to mourn for Sarah.] So she was the first that we read of mourned for at death; and it is mentioned as an honour to her. Solon's Mors mea ne careat lachrymis , is to be preferred before Ennius's Nemo me decoret lachrymis . It is one of the dues of the dead, {a} to be lamented at their funerals; and the want of it is threatened as a curse in many scriptures. It is a practice warranted by the best in all ages; and mourn we may in death of friends, so we mourn (1.) in truth, and not feignedly; (2.) in measure, and not as men without hope. For the first, how grossly did Tiberius dissemble at the death of Augustus, {b} and at the funeral of Drusus! Whereupon Tacitus makes his note, Vana et irrisa vero et honesto fidem adimunt . So when Julius Caesar wept over Pompey's head, presented to him in Egypt, they that saw it, laughed in their sleeves, {c} and held them no better than crocodile's tears. So the mourning that Nero and his mother made over the Emperor Claudius, whose death they had conspired and effected, was deep dissimulation. {d} This is no less hateful, than to mourn heartily, but yet immoderately, is unlawful. Here Jacob forgot himself, when so overgrown with grief for his Joseph, {#Ge 37:35} and Rachel for the rest of their children, that they would not be comforted. {#Jer 31:15} So David for his Absalom: Alexander the Great for his friend Hephestion; when he not only clipped his horses' and mules' hair, but plucked down also the battlements of the walls of the city, &c. The soldiers of Pelopidas {e} were no less excessive, when for grief of his death they would neither unbridle their horses, nor untie their armour, nor dress their wounds. Something here may be yielded to nature, nothing to impatience. Immoderate sorrow for losses past hope of recovery is more sullen than useful. Our stomach may be bewrayed by it, not our wisdom. The Egyptians mourned seventy days for Jacob: Joseph (who had more cause, but with it more grace) mourned but twenty days. God flatly forbade his people those heathenish customs, of shaving their heads and cutting their flesh, {#Le 21:1} in token of mourning for the dead. We read in the gospel of minstrels and people making a noise {f} at the terming-house, as they call it. {#Mt 9:23} And the Jews that were comforting Mary, when they saw her rise up hastily and go forth, followed her, saying, "She goeth unto the grave to weep there". {#Joh 11:31} Such customs, it seems, they had in those days among them, to provoke themselves to weeping and lamentation; which was, saith one, {g} as if they that have the dropsy should eat salt meats. How much better father Abraham here, who came indeed from his own tent to Sarah's, to mourn for her (as good reason he had), but exceeded not, as the Jews think is signified by that one letter less than ordinary in the Hebrew word for weep (Libcothah) used here in the text. {Hebrew Text Note} Baal-turim gives but a bald reason of it: Parum flevit; erat enim vetula ; Abraham wept not much for her, she being but an old wife, and past her best. Buxtorf gives a better: Potius quia luctus eius fuit moderatus . And therefore also in the next verse it is said, that he stood up from before his dead—where in likelihood he had sat a while on the earth, as was the manner of mourners to do {#Job 2:12,13 Isa 47:1} -to take order for her burial, as having good hopes of a glorious resurrection. Excellent for our purpose is that of St Jerome, Lugeatur mortuus, sed ille quem Gehenna suscipit, quem Tartarns devorat, in cuius poenam aeternus ignis aestuat. Nos, quorum exitum Angelorum turba comitatur, quibus obviam Christus occurret, &c., gravemur magis, si diutius in tabernaculo isto habitemus . Mourn for none, but such as are dead in their sins, killed with death, as those in #Re 2:23.

Ver. 3. And Abraham stood up from before his dead.] So she is called eight several times in this chapter; to note that death makes not any such divorce between godly couples and friends, but that there remains still a blessed conjunction between them, which is founded in the hope of a happy resurrection. {a} Job's children were still his, even after they were dead and buried. How else could it be said, that God "gave Job twice as much of everything as he had before," {#Job 42:10,13 1:2} since he had afterwards but his first number of children, viz., "seven sons and three daughters"?

Ver. 4. That I may bury my dead out of my sight.] She that had been "the desire of his eyes," {#Eze 24:16} the sweet companion of his life, is by death so defaced, that he loathes to look on her. This we are to think on in our mourning for the dead; to bewail the common curse of mankind, the defacing of God's image by death through sin, &c. And yet to comfort ourselves in this, that these "vile bodies" of ours, shall once be "conformed to Christ's glorious body," {#Php 3:21} the standard in incorruption, agility, beauty, brightness, and other most blessed and inconceivable parts and properties.

Ver. 5. And the children of Heth answered Abraham.] "With good words and comfortable". {as #Zec 1:13} "Be pitiful, be courteous". {#1Pe 3:8}

Ver. 6. Thou art a prince of God amongst us.] That is, excellent or prosperous, as #Ge 21:22; and it was their ingenuity and candour to acknowledge it. God's people are "princes in all lands" {#Ps 45:16}

Kings they are in righteousness and peace; but somewhat obscure ones, as was Melehizedek, and therefore little set by. {#1Jo 3:1,2} Unkent, unkist, as the northern proverb is. So was Christ the heir of all. But "we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him"; that is enough for us. In the meantime, "the righteous is more excellent than his neighbour" (let him dwell by whomsoever), and shall be more prosperous, if it may be for his good.

Ver. 7. Abraham stood up and bowed himself, &c.] It is very comely in Christians to salute willingly; and in words and gestures to show civil respect even to wicked men. Abraham's behaviour to these Hittites may shame the most Christians; yea, the very Hittites themselves may teach them good manners. Even the savage cannibals, saith a grave divine, {a} may receive an answer of outward courtesy. If a very dog fawn upon us, we stroke him on the head, and clap him on the side. Much less is the common band of humanity untied by grace. If Elisha bade his man, or our Saviour his disciples, salute no man by the way, that was for haste's sake; they should not hinder themselves in their journey by overmuch courtesy. Our Saviour was sweet and sociable in his whole conduct, and the proud Pharisees upbraided him for it. He never refused to go to any man's table when invited, yea, to Zaccheus' he invited himself, not for the pleasure of the dishes, but for the benefit of so winning a conversation. Courtesy allureth men's minds, as fair flowers do their eyes. Pomponius Atticus so carried himself at Athens, ut communis infimis, par principibus videretur. {b} Alexander the Great, got the hearts of his foot soldiers, by calling them pezetairouv, his fellow footmen, {c} Aristotle, the better to insinuate into his hearers, read not to them (as other philosophers used to do) from a lofty seat or desk, but walking and talking with them familiarly, as with his friends, in Apollo's porch, he made them great philosophers. {d} Vespasian was as highly esteemed by the people for his courtesy, as Coriolanus contemned and condemned of all for his rusticity. With one churlish breath Rehoboam lost ten tribes, whom he would, and might not, recover with his blood. But whatsoever David did pleased the people. What a deal of courtesy passed between Boaz and his reapers! "The Lord be with you," said he; "The Lord bless thee," said they. {#Ru 2:4} The Turks' salutation at this day is, Salaum aleek, Peace be to thee: the reply is, Aleek salaum, Peace be to thee also. {e} The Romans had their χαίρης and their υγιαίνε, answerable to our Good day, and Good evening. {f} That finger next to the thumb they called Salutaris, because they put that finger to their mouth (as at this day the Roman dames do) when they saluted any. {g} Charles V is renowned for his courtesy: when he passed by John Frederick the elector of Saxony, he always took off his hat and bowed to him, though he were his prisoner, and had been taken by him in battle. And when he had in his power Melancthon, Pomeran, and other divines of the reformed religion, he courteously dismissed them. {h} As he is the best Christian that is most humble; so is he the truest gentleman that is most courteous. Your haughty upstarts, the French call gentle-villains.

Ver. 8. If it be your mind that I should bury my dead.] Alexander the Great lay unburied thirty days together. His conquests above ground purchased him no title for habitation underground. So Pompey the Great,

“Nidus pascit aves, iacet in qui possidet orbem, Exiguae telluris inops.”—Claudian.

Ut cui modo ad victoriam terra defuerat, deesset ad sepulturam, saith Paterculus. So William the Conqueror's corpse lay unburied for three days; his interment being hindered by one that claimed the ground to be his. {a} Abraham therefore doth well to make sure of a place of sepulture for him and his; and this at Hebron—which signifieth society or conjunction—for there lay those reverend couples, Abraham and Sarah, Isaac and Rebecca, Jacob and Leah, &c. These died upon the Promised Land, and being there buried, kept possession, as it were, for their posterity; as those that are dead in Christ do of heaven, for the saints that survive them. Sepulchres are symbols of the communion of saints, and of the resurrection of the dead. Hence the Hebrews call church yards Bethchajim, the house of the living. {b} Job also calls the grave "the congregation house of all living". {#Job 30:23} As the apostle after him calleth heaven "the congregation house of the firstborn". {#Heb 12:23} The Hebrews call it gnolam hammalachim, the world of angels; and the author to the Hebrews, saith that the saints are come by Christ "to an innumerable company of angels". {πανηγυριον, #Heb 12:23} When godly men die, they are said to be gathered to their people. They do no more than repatriasse, as Bernard hath it; they are not put out of service, but removed only out of one room into another, out of the outter houses into the presence chamber. They change their place, but not their company, as good Dr Preston said upon his death bed. They are gathered by Christ's hand, as lilies, {#So 6:2} and transplanted into the Paradise of God. And this, Plotinus the Philosopher had a notion of, when breathing his last, he said, That in me that is divine, I resign up to the First Divine, that is, to God. {c} As for the body it is but the case, the cabinet, the suit, the slough, the sheath of the soul, as Daniel calleth it. Scaligeri quod reliquum est, {d} was Julius Scaliger's epitaph. It returns to its original dust, and is sown as seed in the ground till the resurrection. {#1Co 15:35}

Ver. 9. For a possession of a burying place.] It is remarkable that the first purchase of possession mentioned in Scripture, was a place to bury in, not to build in. The Jews also had their sepulchres hewn out long before their deaths, to mind them of their mortality. Joseph of Arimathea had his tomb in his garden, to season his delights with the meditation of his end. The Egyptians had a death's head carried about the table at their feasts. The emperors of Constantinople had a mason who came to them on their Coronation Day with choice of tomb stones, and these verses in his mouth—

Ipse tibi tumulum me fabricare velis .* ”

Our first parents, saith one, {a} made them garments of fig leaves; but God, misliking that, gave them garments of skins. So in the gospel he cursed the fig tree, which did bear only leaves to cover our sin, but commended the Baptist who did wear skins to discover our mortality.

Ver. 11. The field give I thee, &c.] A brave speech of a bountiful spirit, to a stranger especially; and in that respect beyond that of Araunah the noble Jebusite to David, his liege lord; "All these things did Araunah as a king give to the king". {#2Sa 24:23} Indeed, to give is a kingly employment; making men like to "the Father of lights, from whom comes every good gift and perfect giving". {#Jas 1:17} Kings are styled benefactors; {a} and of the ancient kings of Egypt it is recorded, and was rehearsed among other of their praises, that they were ευμεταδοτοι, και κοινωνικοι, "willing to distribute, ready to communicate," which are the apostle's two words in #1Ti 6:18. Cyrus took more delight in giving than possessing, as his soldiers could say of him in Xenophon. {b} It is not only better, but sweeter to do good, than to receive good, said Epicurus. {c} It is a "more blessed" thing, saith our Saviour. Titus would say, when he had done no good, he had lost a day: et molestius erat Severo Imperatori nihil peti, quam dare. Our General Norrice, like that Bishop of Lincoln, never thought he had that thing, which he did not give. Few such now-a-days.

Ver. 12. Abraham bowed down himself.] Civil courtesy is a Christian duty. Religion teacheth not a severe austerity of carriage, or rusticity; but humanity and a genuine affection.

Ver. 13. I will give thee money.] Full money, as he had said, {#Ge 23:7} or as much money as it is worth. Such is the care of the conscientious, that they had rather lose of their own, than usurp of another's. And that he gives a just price for the field, was an act of great wisdom; for hereby he provided that his posterity might not hereafter be put beside it.

Ver. 14, 15. What is that between me and thee?] Who both are great friends, and well underlaid. See a like kind contestation between David and Araunah, #2Sa 24:22,23.

Ver. 16. In the audience of the sons of Heth.] Whom he takes to witness, and so provideth for his security and quietness afterwards; as did also Jeremiah in the purchase of his uncle's field. Wisdom and circumspection are to be used in contracts and covenants.

Current with the merchant.] It may well be said of money hoarders, they have no quicksilver, no current money.

Ver. 17. Which was in Machpelah.] Where was a double cave, one within another: and haply one for men, and another for women. This was not that purchased burying place whereof Stephen spake, {#Ac 7:16} for that was in Sychem, this in Hebron; that was bought of Emor the father of Sychem, this of Ephron.

Ver. 18. Unto Abraham for a possession.] Thus Abraham, as a purchaser, had some land in Canaan; but not as possessed of it by God's gift, which is St Stephen's sense. {#Ac 7:5}

Ver. 19. And Abraham buried Sarah his wife.] The last office of love to bring the deceased saints honourably to their "long home," {#Ec 12:5} to lay them in their last "bed," {#Isa 57:2} to put them into the grave, as into a haven and harbout, where they may rest from their labours, "till their change shall come." {#Job 14:14} This is to "deal kindly with the dead"; {#Ru 1:8} "to show mercy to them," {#2Sa 2:5} especially when "the mourners go about the streets," {#Ec 12:5} when there is a "great mourning made over them," as for Stephen, {#Ac 8:2} and a "great burning for them," as for Asa, {#2Ch 16:14} -of whom also it is further added, as an honour, that he was "buried in his own sepulchre, which he had dug for himself among the kings of Israel in the city of David, and laid in the bed that was filled with sweet odours," &c. Of Joram, Joas, and Ahaz, it is expressly noted in the Chronicles, that they were buried in the city of David, but not in the sepulchres of the kings of Judah. A worse place was thought good enough for them, unless they had been better. As of Tiberius the emperor it is storied, that he was so hated for his tyranny, that when he was dead, some of the people would have had him thrown into the river Tiber; {a} some, hanged up at such another place as Tyburn.

Others also made prayer to mother Earth, to grant him, now dead, no place but among the wicked. {b} Contrarily when Dio died, the people of Syracuse would have gladly redeemed his life with their own blood; which because they could not, they buried him very honourably in an eminent place of their city. {c} Whereas anciently, as Lambinus well noteth, {d} kings and princes, in Homer and other poets, are not read to have been buried, but without the gates, somewhere in the fields and gardens; as the patriarchs also were, looking for the return of that everlasting spring.

Ver. 1. And Abraham was old.] Non tam canis et annis, quam virtutibus et sapientia gravis, as one saith of Atticus. {a} Abraham had a good gray head, as it is elsewhere said of him: hence, so honoured not only at home, but by the Hittites. {#Ge 23:6} Cognata sunt γνρας et γερας (ut ηθος et εθος), old age and honour are near akin in the Greek tongue. And God bids, "honour the face of the old man"; {#Le 19:32} for the hoary head is a crown, so that it be found in the way of righteousness. God is called "the Ancient of days": and, because "holy," therefore "reverend is his name," as saith the psalmist. {#Ps 111:9} But it is a poor praise to Nectarius, who succeeded Nazianzen in the church of Antioch, that he was veneranda canitie et vultu sacerdote digno, a comely old man, and of a bishop like visage, and that was all that could be said for him. {b}

Ver. 2. Put, I pray thee, thy hand under my thigh.] Either as a token of subjection, or for the honour of circumcision, quae erat in parte femoris; q.d., I adjure thee by the Lord of the covenant, whereof circumcision is a sign. Or (which is most likely) in reference to Christ, who was to come of Abraham, according to that phrase. "The souls that came out of Jacob's thigh". {#Ge 46:26}

Ver. 3. I will make thee swear by the Lord.] Who alone is the proper object of an oath. {#Isa 65:16} Howbeit, in lawful contracts with an infidel or idolater, we may allow such oaths, whereby they swear by false gods; as those of old, that swore by God and Malcom; and the Turks' great oath now-a-days is, By the immortal God, and by the four hundred prophets, by Mohammed, by his father's soul, by his own children, and by the sword wherewith he is girt, &c. {a}

That thou shalt not take a wife unto my son, & c.] Lest they should "turn away" his heart "from following God," {#De 7:3,4} as those "foreign wives" did Solomon, {#Ne 13:26} whom therefore God Almighty punished both in himself and his successor Rehoboam, his only son (that we read of) by so many wives and concubines; and he was none of the wisest, nor happiest: tam auspicata sunt coniugia contra Dei legem contracta, saith the divine chronologer. "Be not unequally yoked," {#2Co 6:14} therefore, with any untamed heifer that bears not Christ's yoke. If religion be any other than a cipher, how dare we disregard it in our most important choice? I wish Manoah could speak so loud, saith a reverend divine, {b} that all our Israelites might hear him. "Is there never a woman among the daughters of thy brethren, or among all God's people, that thou goest to take a wife of the uncircumcised Philistines?" {#Jud 14:3} What is the reason the Pope will not dispense in Spain or Italy, if a Papist marry a Protestant (yet here they will); but in hope to draw more to them? For they well know what power wives many times get over their husbands, as Jezebel did over Ahab; the hen was suffered to crow, and all went as she would have it. And therefore the Legates in the Council of Trent were blamed for allowing the article of priests' marriage to be disputed, as dangerous, {c} because it is plain that married priests will turn their affections and love to wife and children; and, by consequence, to their house and country. So that the strict dependence that the clergy hath upon the apostolic See would cease: and to grant marriage to priests would destroy the ecclesiastical hierarchy, and make the Pope to be Bishop of Rome only.

Ver. 4. But thou shalt go unto my country, &c.] Nahor's stock were neither pure in religion nor precise in life, {#Jos 24:2 Ge 31:30} yet far better in both than those cursed Canaanites. Some knowledge they retained of the true God, of whom they speak much in this chapter, and concerning whom they hear Eliezer here relating how he had answered his prayer, and prospered his journey. And for their manners, we find them hospitable, and their daughter, though fair, yet a pure virgin. Now,

Like unto these are the Greek Church at this day, which is far greater than the Roman: and though in some points unsound, and in others very superstitious, yet holdeth sufficient for salvation. Cyril, their good patriarch of Constantinople, set forth the confession of the faith of those Eastern churches anno 1629, agreeable in all things for most part to the reformed Protestant religion, but diametrically opposite to that they call the Roman Catholic. He is also busy about a general reformation among them, and hath done much good. {a}

Ver. 5. Peradventure the woman, &c.] He swears cautiously, he doth not rashly rush upon his oath; he swears not in jest, but in judgment. So must we, {#Jer 4:2} duly considering the conditions and circumstances; as the nature of an oath, the matter whereabout, the person by whom, and before whom, the time, the place, our calling, and warrant thereunto. "Be not rash"; {#Ec 5:2} the best that can come of that is repentance, that fair and happy daughter of an ugly and odious mother. {a} Swear not in heat and choler, as David did when he was going against Nabal; but soon after blessed Abigail for better counsel. Swear not in jest, lest you go to hell in earnest. {#Jas 5:12} Swear not petty oaths, those civilised compliments, and interjections of common talk, Faith and truth, &c. Thou must not swear by thy hairs, thou canst not make one of them white or black; much less by faith and truth, that is more worth than hairs. Remember that large roll, ten yards long, and five yards broad, full of curses against the swearer. {#Zec 5:2} And it rests upon his house, where he thinks himself most secure. When we are called to take a lawful oath, we must be reverently affected (as this good servant in the text), according to the excellency of the duty, and greatness of the person, whom we attest and invoke. The ancient form of taking and imposing an oath was, "Give glory to God". {#Jos 7:19 Joh 9:24} And he that took the oath was said to "confess to God". {#Isa 45:23 Ro 14:11} Therefore also St Paul, in swearing, useth a word of attention, and saith "Behold," I speak it "before God". {#Ga 1:20} Louis the French king was taken prisoner by Meletisaka the Sultan; and conditions of peace being concluded between them, for more assurance thereof, the Sultan offered to swear, if he failed in performance of anything, to renounce his Mohammed; requiring likewise of the king to swear, if he failed in anything that he had promised, to deny his Christ to be God: which profane oath the king detesting, and wishing rather to die than to give the same, the Sultan wondering at his constancy, took his word without any oath at all, and so published the league. {b} As on the other side, King John of England, being overcome in his barons' wars, when he sent ambassadors to the monarch of Morocco for aid, offering to swear fidelity to him, and to receive the law of Mohammed, he grew into such a dislike of our king, that ever after he abhorred the mention of him. {c}

Ver. 6. That thou bring not my son thither again.] Where yet he had never been, but in his father's loins. He would not his son should part with the Promised Land for any outward accommodations. "Let us fear, lest a promise being left us of entering into God's rest, any of us should seem to come short, to fail back, or be left behind". {υστερηκεναι, #Heb 4:1} Take we all heed lest, for our lingering and hankering after the flesh pots of Egypt, God carry us back again into Egypt, which was the last and greatest curse threatened against the people of Israel, and is the greatest misery that can come upon this nation. {#De 28:68}

Ver. 7. He shall send his angel.] There are myriads of angels, {#Da 7:10} and all sent out for the solace and safe conduct of the saints. {#Heb 1:14} Oh, the dignity and safety of a child of God!

Thou shalt take a wife.] He argues from what God hath done for him, to what he will do. Every former favour is a pledge of a future. Thou hast, thou wilt, is a Scripture demonstration. {see #Ps 85:1-4} Six thou hast; whereupon he infers and enforceth his, "Turn us, O God of our salvation," &c.

Ver. 8. Only bring not my son thither again.] This second time he lays charge on his servant not to do it. Better no wife, than displease God, than violate conscience. He purchaseth his pleasure at too dear a rate, that pays his honesty to get it. He hath less of the ballast, and more of the sail, makes more haste than good speed, that thus speeds himself.

Ver. 9. And the servant put his hand., &c.] That, and the lifting up of the hand to heaven, {#Ge 14:22} was the ceremony of old, as now it is, laying the hand upon the book. Let it be what it will, if not wicked, we need not scruple it. Henry III of England, undertaking the crusade, in taking his oath laid his right hand on his breast (according i to the manner of a priest, saith the history); {a} and after on the book, and kissed it as a layman. The Moors, when they swear to be faithful to any, put their swords to their own throats. {b} At the siege of Norwich by Ket and his complices in Edward VI's time, the Earl of Warwick, general for the king, drew his sword, and caused others to do the like; and (according to a soldierly custom in cases of extremity) by interchange of a kiss by everyone of them upon the swords of others, they bound themselves, as by an oath, to maintain the place? {c}

Ver. 10. Took ten camels.] Creatures that are famous for their swiftness, strength, hardiness; for they will travel, they say, three days together, without water, which, in those hot countries, is in many places hard to come by. Sir Francis Drake in his travels {a} tells us of certain sheep in America as large as a cow, and replacing horses for burden or travel. The mule, they say, must have the bag hang by his mouth; so must some, the pipe or the pot at their elbows.

Ver. 11. And he made his camels to kneel down.] Or, rest themselves, as the Greek interprets it. A good man is merciful to his beast; {#Pr 12:10} but the poor "creature groaneth and travaileth in pain" {#Ro 8:22} under our abuses.

Ver. 12. And he said, O Lord God.] Begin we all our enterprizes with prayer. God may give good success without, but it will be nothing so sweet. See therefore that,

Ver. 13. And the daughters, &c.] So did Rachel, and those in Deborah’s song, that rehearsed the acts of the Lord at the places of drawing water; {#Jud 5:11} and Jethro’s daughters, though he were prince of Median. Oh, the simplicity and plainness of those times! They that plead Rebekah’s ornaments for their garish attire, would be loath to take her office—to be at the pains that she was.

Ver. 14. Drink, and I will give thy camels, &c.] This argued a good nature, a kind, courteous disposition; which therefore may be he singled out as a token of a suitable wife, as a thing especially to be looked at in a wife. Good dispositions sanctified, become more useful, because more amiable; and so more graceful to the gospel, and powerful with others. As if not yet sanctified, yet there is more hopes they may be. For where a good nature is, the soul is a plain, smooth board, whereon a painter may more easily draw a picture: and a harsh crabbed nature, is as a board full of knots, and rugged, whereon the artificer cannot so well show his workmanship. And though the power of God will show itself wherever he intends to make a vessel of mercy, yet it is with more ado; and will cost a man the more sorrow, and him that hath the working of it the more pains.

Ver. 15. Before he had done speaking.] So quick is God, many times, in the answer of prayers. {#Isa 65:24 Da 9:23} The angel had even tired himself with flight, to tell Daniel that his prayers were heard. Rebekah came out.] She took her name, saith one, as it may seem, from the expectation of eternal life. Therefore, she is a notable type of the Church, which is the spouse of Christ shadowed in Isaac. {a}

Ver. 16. And the damsel was very fair.] Καλη και σοφη, Fair and wise, as it was said of Aspasia Milesia. {a} Here beauty was not ill-bestowed, as a gold ring in a swine's snout, but (as the history {b} reports of the Lady Jane Gray) adorned with all variety of moral virtues, as a clear sky with stars, as a princely diadem with jewels. Beauty is of itself very attractive, as the poet hath it. {c} For which cause, Heraclonas, the young emperor of Constantinople, being sent into banishment, together with Martina his mother, had his nose cut off, lest his beauty should move the people to pity. And Angli tanquam Angeli, said Gregory the Great, of the English boys presented to him. How much more when accompanied and accomplished with chastity, as in this damsel. {d}

A virgin, neither had any man known her.] This latter clause is added, because many pass for virgins that are not so; if that of the poet be true, especially “Quae, quia non licuit, non facit, illa facit.”—Ovid.

And that of the orator, {e} Incesta est, et sine stupro, quae stuprum cupit. The Romans cashiered a vestal virgin for uttering this verse—

“Foelices nuptae! moriar, nisi nubere dulce est.”

The strumpet when she eats stolen bread, hath such dexterity in wiping her lips, that not the least crumb shall be seen to her shame. So that Solomon shows it to be as hard to find it out, "As the way of an eagle in the air, the way of a serpent upon a rock, the way of a ship in the sea, and the way of a man with a maid," {#Pr 30:18-20} that is a close and chaste virgin; one that should be chaste at least, as being kept close from the access of strangers.

Filled her pitcher, and came up.] Here was no tarrying, gazing, gossiping. Not slothful in business. {#Ro 12:11} She had not been delicately or wantonly bred, but inured to hard labour, and she followed it closely. Thucydides scribit Lacedaemoniis πατριος γεγονεναι εκ στων τονων τας αρετας κταθαι. {f}

Ver. 17. And the servant ran to meet her.] For although he was at the well before, praying, {#Ge 24:13} yet, having stood at a distance till she had done drawing, he now ran to meet her. Though marriages are made in heaven, and a good wife must be sought of God, adhibenda tamen sunt media ordinaria et ordinata, yet due means must be used, &c.

Ver. 18, 19. {See Trapp on "Ge 24:14"}

Ver. 19. I will draw water for thy camels also.] This was, in everything, according to his desire. {#Ge 24:14} God sometimes fitteth his mercy, ad cardinem desiderii, letteth it be to his servants even as they will. As, at other times, he answereth their prayers, non secundum voluntatem, tamen ad utilitatem, not as they wish, but as is best for them. {a}

Ver. 20. And ran again to the well.] In the city of Haran, at this day, saith one, there is to be seen a well of very clear water, where Rebekah gave drink to Eliezer and his camels; there likewise, Rachel, Laban's daughter, first spake to Jacob, &c. It is called by the townsmen Abraham's Well. {a} This water hath a very pleasant taste, and is a notable type of holy baptism. For as the patriarchs took their wives by this well; so Christ receiveth his spouse the Church, by that sacrament; which is, Beersheba, the Well of an Oath, where we pass into the covenant, and are betrothed unto Christ in faithfulness, {#Ho 2:20} the thistle to the cedar. {#2Ki 14:9}

Ver. 21. Wondering at her.] At her courtesy; but more at God's good providence, and so sweet a return of his prayers. The Greek hath it, He considered her, and held his peace.

Ver. 22. The man took a golden earring.] Abiliment, or jewel; Ut imponeret naso eius, saith Junius, to hang upon her nose, or forehead. {as #Ge 24:47} Each country hath its fashions and garnishes. In very many places of America, they have their lower lips bored through; as likewise, the upper parts of their ears, and something put into them. Which, as it seems to themselves to be a point of beauty, so it makes them appear to others to be wondrous ugly. {a}

{a} Archb. Abbot's Geog., 278.

Ver. 23. Whose daughter art thou?] This he had asked her, before he had put upon her the jewel aforesaid, as may be seen, #Ge 24:47.

Ver. 24. The son of Milcah.] Bethuel's wife, not concubine.

Ver. 25. She said moreover unto him, &c.] It is well observed by an interpreter, {a} that in the narration of this story (which yet seemeth to be of light and trivial matters) the Spirit of God is very exact and large; whereas other things wherein great mysteries are infolded (as the history of Melchizedek, &c.), are set down in few words; that men might consider God's wisdom and providence in things of least esteem among men. I add, that all may see what delight he takes in the meanest actions and speeches of his dearest children; when the great acts and exploits of Nimrod, Ninus, and other nobles of the world are not once mentioned, but lie shrouded in the sheet of oblivion or shame.

Ver. 26. And the man bowed down his head.] See how he relisheth of his master's house, and showeth a gracious heart, ready to offer up a sacrifice of praise, wherever God shall please to set it up an altar. The same word in Greek (χαρις) signifieth, grace and thanks; to show, that as any man hath more grace, he is more grateful to God and man. It is observable also, that our Saviour sets these two together, -"the unthankful, and the evil"; "He is kind to the unthankful, and to the evil". {#Lu 6:35}

Ver. 27. Who hath not left destitute my master.] He ascribeth all to God's good providence, nothing to his good luck or service. Men play the atheists in speaking of fortune, like those {#Isa 65:11} "that prepared a table for fortune": and those Philistines, that said, "It is a chance". {#1Sa 6:9} Augustine repented that ever he spoke such language of Ashdod.

Ver. 28. Of her mother's house.] For the women had houses apart from the men: and the daughters were most about their mothers' lodgings.

Ver. 29. And Laban ran out.] Whether out of courtesy or covetousness. {See Trapp on "Ge 24:30"}

Ver. 30. When he saw the earring and bracelets.] These were the boons that Laban looked after; these drew the churl forth, and made him so courteous. Worldlings in serving God, serve themselves of God; they follow him for loaves more than for love. Vix diligitur Iesus propter Iesum. Hypocrites would use Christ as a bridge to get to heaven by; which if they could compass, let Christ sink or swim for them, they would not much care. Their love is meretricious, their obedience mercenary; they work only for wages. {a} Fac me pontificem, et ero Christianus, said one Pammachius, a heathen, to the Pope. Those degenerate priests would fain have had priests' places, when something was to be got, but might not. {#Ezr 2:61,62}

{a} These make earth their throne, heaven their footstool.—August.

Ver. 31, 32. And he ungirded his camels.] Laban did. Si spes lucri affulserit, & c. Sing but a song of "Utile," and many will dance after it, yea, stoop to any drudgery almost.

Ver. 32. {See Trapp on "Ge 24:31"}

Ver. 33. I will not eat, till I have told mine errand.] He preferred his work before his food. So did our Saviour at the well of Samaria. {#Joh 4:6-8,31-38} And another time, when he thought to have slaked his hunger at the barren fig tree, and found nothing but leaves, he went on to Jerusalem; and forgetting his hunger, as he had before forgot his breakfast, he turned not into a victualling house, but went to the temple and taught the people; and confuted the elders all that day long till the evening. {#Mt 21:18-27 Mr 11:13-15} Job "esteemed God's word more than his necessary food"; {#Job 23:12} not only more than his dainties or superfluities.

Ver. 35. And the Lord hath blessed my master.] Ministers, Christ's spokesmen, must likewise woo for Christ, by setting forth his great wealth; and not speak one word for Christ and two for themselves, as those did in #Php 1:15. John Baptist was no such spokesman.

{#Joh 3:29} It is the special office of the ministry to lay Christ open, to hold up the tapestry, and let men see him as he is set forth, {#Heb 1:2,3} that they may be sick of love; for otherwise, Christ is like to have but a cold suit of it.

Ver. 36. Unto him hath he given all that he hath.] This he knew would take well with them. What hath he? is a main question. In suites both of law and of love, money weighs and sways much. R. Solomon here addeth to the text (but not well) these words, -And lo the conveyance, or deed of gift is here in mine hand.

Ver. 38. {See Trapp on "Ge 24:3"} {See Trapp on "Ge 24:4"}

Ver. 39. Preadventure the woman will not.] Here he leaveth out, in his discretion, Abraham's charge. {#Ge 24:6} For that would but have offended and irritated. Part of the truth may be concealed sometimes, as #Jer 38:27.

Quilibet haec animo reputet, medicamina dando.”*

But what shall we think of that practice of Buchanan the Scotch poet, who being taken hold of by some of the Pope's inquisitors in his travels, to acquit himself, sent this Distichon to the Pope—

“ Laus tua non tua fraus, virtus non copia rerum Scandere te fecit hoc decus eximium.”

Hereupon he was released: but, when got out of the Pope's jurisdiction, he sent to him, and desired that his verses might not be misunderstood; but, according to his true meaning, might be read backward: which being so read, stand thus—

“ Eximium decus hoc fecit te scandere rerum Copia, non virtus; fraus tua, non tua laus.”

This was, saith one, so only to speak the truth, as to leave the incorrigible to their lusts, wisely avoiding their hatred: this is σοφον φαρμακον, at least, say I.

Ver. 40. The Lord, before whom I walk.] To walk before God, with God, after God, are much at one: est, quod Persius dixit vivere cum Deo: est ad Dei voluntatem vitam instituere, it is to be ever in the sense of his presence, and light of his countenance.

Ver. 41. {See Trapp on "Ge 24:8"}

Ver. 42. And I came this day to the well.] God's providences are carefully to be observed and registered. We might have a Divinity of our own, would we but lay up our experiences: which are nothing else, saith the philosopher, but multiplex memoria. David "will remember God from the land of Jordan, and of the Hermonites, from the hill Mizar," where he had formerly found him to his comfort. {#Ps 42:6}

Ver. 43. Behold, I stand by the well.] But at a distance, as {See Trapp on "Ge 24:17"} See also {See Trapp on "Ge 24:20"}

Ver. 44. The woman, whom the Lord hath appointed.] God is the match maker, and marriages are made in heaven, as very heathens have yielded. The Governor of Eskichisar, hearing Othoman's relation of a fair lady, with whom he was in love, seemed greatly to like of his choice; saying, that she was by the Divine Providence (for so the Turks religiously use to speak) appointed only for him to have. {a}

{a} Turk. Hist., fol. 136.

Ver. 45. With her pitcher on her shoulder.] Though a sufficient man's daughter, and a match for a prince's son. {See Trapp on "Ge 23:6"}

Ver. 46. And she made the camels drink.] {See Trapp on "Ge 24:14"}

Ver. 47. And I put the earring upon her face.] So did Christ put upon his spouse his own comeliness, {a} which was as a jewel on her forehead, an earring in her ear, and a beautiful crown upon her head; {#Eze 16:12-14}—whence she is called Callah, of the perfection of her beauty and bravery; and {#Jer 2:32} Hephzibah, {#Isa 62:4} of his delight in her; since he hath purified her, as Esther; sanctified her; {#Eph 5:26} and so beautified her, that now he "rejoiceth over her as a bridegroom doth over his bride". {#Isa 62:5} Yea, he "resteth in his love," and will seek no further; he "joyeth over her with singing," as well paid for his choice. {#Zep 3:17}

{a} "Uxor splendet radiis mariti." A maxim in the civil law.

Ver. 48. And I bowed down my head.] A good Christian is ever either praying or praising: he drives a constant trade between earth and heaven.

Ver. 49. That I may turn to the right hand, &c.,] i.e., Seek somewhere else: for something I must do, in answer to my trust. "It is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful". {#1Co 4:2}

Ver. 50. Laban and Bethuel.] Laban, the young master, was the great doer in this affair.

We cannot speak unto thee bad or good.] "Good" (with reason) we cannot say against the motion; and "bad" we will not say. Demosthenes, pressed by his friends to plead for one whom he greatly liked not, answered, επαινειν αυτον ου δυναμαι ψεγειν δε ου βουλομαι: Say for him I cannot; say against him I will not.

Ver. 51. As the Lord hath spoken.] For his signs also are vocal. {#Ex 4:8}

Ver. 52. He worshipped.] {See Trapp on "Ge 24:48"}

Bowing himself to the earth.] This humble posture he had learned, belike, of his holy master, who walked before God in a humble familiarity. God loves to be acquainted with men in the walks of their obedience; yet he takes state upon him in his ordinances, and will be trembled at in his judgments.

Ver. 53. And gave them to Rebekah: he gave also.] Note, that the custom was then, to give gifts to the bride and her friends. Now it is otherwise. Yet in Hungary their women have no portion, they say, {a} but a new coat at their wedding. Moris est apud Thraces (saith Solinus, cap. 14), ut nupturae non parentum arbitratu transeant ad matiros; sed quae prae coeteris specie valent, subhastari volunt; et licentia taxationis admissa, non moribus nubunt, sed proemiis.

{a} Heyl., Geog.

Ver. 54. And they did eat and drink.] It is lawful to be honestly merry after business despatched.

Ver. 55. Let the damsel abide with us.] Men promise in baste; perform by leisure.

Ver. 56. Hinder me not.] Say we so to Satan soliciting us to stay a while in our old courses and companies.

Ver. 57. And inquire at her mouth.] Eve was not dragged, but brought by God to her husband. There must be a mutual consent, or it is not of God.

Ver. 58. I will go.] Christ's Hephzibah is no less willing to go with him: he toucheth her heart, and maketh her so. {#Isa 56:6} He commanded his lovingkindness; {#Ps 42:8} q.d., Go, Mercy, and seize on them; go, Lovingkindness, and make them take you. Hence it is, that they are a freehearted people; {#Ps 110:3} they wait for his law; {#Isa 42:4} they love to be his people. {#Isa 56:6} The Macedonians were Αυθαιρεστοι volunteers; {#2Co 8:3} they had their own free choice.

Ver. 59. And her nurse.] Deborah, who was a great stay to Jacob's family, and her loss much lamented. {#Ge 35:8}

Ver. 60. Be thou the mother of thousands.] Votum nuptiale, Hebraeis solenne. We wish them joy, we assure them sorrow, and that in the flesh, where they look for most felicity.

Ver. 61. They rode upon the camels.] A tiresome and tedious journey it was, but for a good husband. Suffer we with, and for Christ, "that we may be glorified together," {#Ro 8:17} when the marriage shall be consummated. Heaven will pay for all. What though thou ride on a trotting camel it is to be married. He that rides to be crowned, will not think much of a rainy day.

Ver. 62. The well Lahairoi.] Whereof see #Ge 16:14. To this well there was, likely, some convenient walk from Beersheba, where Isaac dwelt with his father.

Ver. 63. To meditate in the field.] Or to pray; there he had his oratory; there he used to pray secretly (but now more earnestly, upon so important an occasion) with deep meditation or soliloquy. Domitian, about the beginning of his empire, usually sequestered himself from company an hour every day; but did nothing the while but catch flies and kill them with a pen-knife. {a} God's people can better employ their solitariness, and do never want company, as having God and themselves to talk with. And these secret meals are those that make the soul fat. It was a witty and divine speech of Bernard, that Christ, the soul's spouse, is bashful, neither willingly cometh to his bride in the presence of a multitude.

Ver. 64. She lighted off the camel.] To meet him with the more reverence and submission; for which cause also, she veiled herself. Here that of the poet held not.

“Fastus inest pulchris, sequiturque superbia formam.”—Ovid.

Ver. 66. And the servant told Isaac.] Ministers also must give account of their stewardship. Happy he that can present his people "as a chaste virgin to Christ," with Paul {#2Co 11:2} that can say, with the prophet, "Here am I, and the children that thou hast given me"; {#Isa 8:18} and with that arch-prophet, "I have glorified thee on the earth: I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do". {#Joh 17:4} Reverend Mr Stork was wont to protest, that it was more comfort to him to win one of his own charge than twenty others. {a}

{a} Abrah. Deceas., by T. Gataker.

Ver. 67. Isaac brought her into his mother's tent.] There to rest till the marriage rites were performed; till he had got her goodwill; till their affections were knit, and in some sort settled; till they had pledged their mutual trust; sought God for a blessing, and performed such solemnities as the time required. Youth rides in post to be married: but in the end, finds the inn of repentance to be lodged in.

And took Rebekah.] Not as Shechem took Dinah, or Amnon Tamar, to deflower her; but as Boaz took Ruth, and David Abigail, to make her his wife by lawful wedlock.

And he loved her.] Not only as his countrywoman or his kinswoman, or a good woman, &c., but as his woman, with a conjugal love. And he had reason: for (1.) She was his wife, the proper object of his love; (2.) A wife of God's providing; a mate meet for him; none in all the world so meet; (3.) She was love-worthy, because fair, courteous, virtuous: and as meat pleaseth us better in a clean dish, so doth virtue in comely persons, saith Hugo; (4.) She forgot her father's house, and forsook all her friends for him, &c.

And Isaac was comforted.] If God takes away one comfort, he will give another. Cheer up, therefore.

Chapter 25

Ver. 1. Then again Abraham, &c.] After Sarah's death, though Calvin thinks otherwise. His body, dry and dead forty years before, is now, by God's blessing, made lively and lusty.

Ver. 2. No Text for this verse.

Ver. 3. No Text for this verse.

Ver. 4. Ephah, and Ephher.] These five were, haply, the founders of the families of those five kings of Midian mentioned in #Nu 31:8.

Ver. 5. Abraham gave all, &c.] So #Isa 19:25, Assyria is the work of God's hand, and Israel his inheritance.

Ver. 6. Abraham gave gifts.] So doth God to reprobates; but they are giftless gifts, better be without them. {a} Saepe Deus dat iratus quod negat propitius. God gives wealth to the wicked, non aliter ac siquis crumenam auto plenam latrinae iniectat. {b} The Turkish empire, saith Luther, as great as it is, is but a crust cast to the dogs by the rich householder, {c} or as Joseph's cup, &c.

Eastward, to the east country.] To both the Arabias, which were countries rough but rich; looked rudely, but, searched regularly, afforded great store of fine gold, precious stones, and pleasant odours.

Ver. 7. !!An hundred threescore and fifteen years.] He was sixty-five when he came out of Haran: a whole hundred years he was a stranger in the land, contenting himself with the bare promise of God, and "dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise." {#Heb 11:9} Salmanticensis giveth him this eulogy: Erat modestus, mimineque invidus, spiritu depresso, animoque humili, et munificus admodum. Beatus ipse, et beati filii eius post eum.

Ver. 8. Gave up the ghost.] Deficit; leniter, expiravit. Describit Moses placidam et optatam, quasi, εϋθανασιαν; which in Abraham, God's friend, is no wonder. But how could that apostate, Julian, say, in truth, Vitam reposcenti naturae, tanquam debitor bonae fidei, rediturus, exulto? Sure it was but a copy of his countenance, but not of his dying countenance; for no wicked man alive can look death in the face with blood in his cheeks.

Died in a good old age.] Or, with a good hoar head, after a hundred years' troublesome pilgrimage in the Promised Land. We, if for one year we suffer hardship, think it a great business. Non quia dura, sed quia molles patimur, saith Seneca.

An old man, and full of years.] The godly have oft a satiety of life: as willing they are to leave the world, as men are wont to be to rise from the board when they have eaten their fill, said the heathen poet: and they feign that when Tithonus might have been made immortal, he would not, because of the miseries of life. This made Plotinus the Platonist account mortality a mercy, {a} and Cato protest, that if any god would grant him, of old to be made young again, he would seriously refuse it. {b} As for me, said Queen Elizabeth, in a certain speech, I see no such great cause why I should be fond to live, or afraid to die. {c} And again, while I call to mind things past, behold things present, and expect things to come, I hold him happiest that goeth hence soonest.

Ver. 9. And his sons Isaac and Ishmael, &c.] It is like that Abraham, a little afore his death, sent for his two sons and reconciled them. This joining with Isaac in the burying of Abraham, some take for an argument of his repentance; whereunto also they add, that his whole lifetime is recorded in Holy Scripture, which cannot be showed of any reprobate, and that he is said, when he died, to be gathered to his fathers.

Which is beside Mamre.] Where, seventy-six years before, he had entertained the Lord Christ, and heard from his mouth the promise of the Messiah. Wherefore, in remembrance of that most amiable apparition, and for love and honour of the divine promise there uttered, he would there be buried, in full hope of a glorious resurrection; and that his posterity might take notice that he even died upon the promise. As that brave Roman captain {a} told his soldiers, that if they could not conquer Britain, yet they would get possession of it by laying their bones in it.

Ver. 11. Isaac dwelt by the well Lahairoi.] This had been his oratory, where he had formerly found God; {#Ge 24:62} and he loved it the better ever after.

Ver. 12. These are the generations of Ishmael.] Who became the progenitor of twelve princes, according to the promise. {#Ge 17:20}

Ver. 13. These are the names of the sons of Ishmael.] When Isaac was twenty years married, and had no child; and afterwards, no so many as Ishmael, nor so great in the world. This is God's usual way of dealing forth his favours: saints suffer; wicked prosper. This made Pompey deny Divine Providence; Brutus cry out, Ω τλημων αρετην: Oh miserable virtue, slave of fortune, &c. {a} The Athenians, in Thucydides, {b} when they had lost Nicias their good general, who, together with his whole army perished in Sicily, were at a great stand, and much offended; seeing so pious a person fare nothing better than those that were far worse. And what wonder, when Jeremiah and David stumbled at the same stone, ran upon the same rock, and were well-nigh shipwrecked? {#Jer 12:1 Ps 73:3,4} Neither they only, but many other of God's dear servants, as it is in the same Psalm {#Ps 73:10}, "Therefore his people return hither"; that is, are every whit as wise (or rather, as foolish) as I have been, to miscensure and misconstrue God's dealings on this manner; to repent me of my repentance, and to condemn the generation of the just, "because waters of a full cup are wrung out to the wicked." When David went into God's sanctuary, and there consulted his Word, he was better resolved: then he saw that the sunshine of prosperity doth but ripen the sin of the wicked, and so fits them for destruction: {#Ho 14:9} as fatted ware are but fitted for the slaughter. What good is there in having a fine suit with the plague in it? Poison in wine works more seriously than in water. Had Haman known the danger of Esther's banquet, he would not have been so brag of it. The prosperity of the wicked hath ever plus deceptionis, quam delectationis, saith one; more deceit than delight; able to entice, and ready to kill the entangled. As cunning to do that, as the spirit that seduced Ahab; and as willing to do the other, as the ghost that met Brutus at the battle of Philippi. In which respect, David having spoken of these "men of God's hand, that have their portion in this life," {#Ps 17:14} &c., wishes them make them merry with it, and subjoins, "As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness; I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness." {#Ps 17:15} As who should say, I neither envy nor covet their happiness, but long after a glorious resurrection, and have, in the meanwhile, that which is sufficient to sustain me; "I shall behold thy face in righteousness," that is, Beshechinah, in Christ, as Rabbi Menachem {c} expounds it. And one good look of God is worth all the world. It is better to feel his favour one hour, than to sit whole ages, as these Ishmaelites did, under the world's warmest sunshine.

Ver. 14. And Mishma, and Dumah, and Massah.] Out of these three names—which signify hearing, silence, and suffering—the Masorites gather the three principal duties of man, in common conversation; viz., to hear, to keep silence, and bear: these, say they, make a quiet and good life. Sustine et abstine, is the philosopher's {a} counsel. Video, Taceo, "I see, and say nothing," was Queen Elizabeth's {b} motto: and "I am for peace," {#Ps 120:7} was David's; or, as the Hebrew hath it, "I am peace." He "heard the slander of many, fear was on every side"; {#Ps 31:13} but he "as a deaf man heard not, and as a dumb man, so he opened not his mouth". {#Ps 38:13} Facile est in me dicere, cum non sim responsurus, said one once, to another that reviled him; thou shalt fight without an adversary, for I will hear and bear, and say nothing. The best answer to words of scorn and petulancy, saith learned Hooker, is Isaac's apology to his brother Ishmael, patience and silence, no apology. Πασιν, απολογεισθαι θεραπευτικον. A man would not be bound to such a slavery as to answer every calumny. Qui nescit ferre calumnias, convitia, iniurias, nescit vivere, saith Chytraeus. He that cannot patiently bear reproaches and injuries, may make up his pack, and get him out of the world; for here is no being for him. Vitus Theodorus sent to advise with Melancthon, what he should do when Osiander preached against him: Melancthon per Deum obtestatur, ut taceret, et se ira gereret, quasi non audiret: Melancthon besought him, for God's sake, to say nothing in that case, but to carry himself so as if he heard not. Vitus writes back, that this was very hard; yet he would obey. {c} It is hard to swallow down physical pills: but better swallow them whole, then chew them between the teeth.

Ver. 15. Naphish, and Kedemah.] Twelve in all, princes of their tribes, as was promised. {#Ge 17:20} See, saith one, {a} here, what God can do for a poor boy sent out with a bottle of water on his back. God "setteth the solitary in families"; {#Ps 68:6} "he raiseth the poor out of the dust, and lifteth up the beggar from the dunghill, to set him among princes," &c. {#ISA 2:8}

Ver. 16. These are their names by their towns.] Which they called after their own names, as Cain did, that first built the city Enoch, after his son's name; that he might be styled "Lord Enoch of Enoch." So, the many Alexandrias, Caesareas, Augustas, &c. See #Ps 49:11.

Ver. 17. And he gave up the ghost and died; and was gathered,] sc., to "the congregation house of all living," as the grave is called, {#Job 30:23} and, for aught we know, to "the congregation house (πανηγυρις) of the firstborn," as heaven is called. {#Heb 12:23} Abraham prayed that Ishmael might live in God's sight: Ishmael joined with his brother Isaac in burying their father Abraham. {#Ge 25:9} Here he hath his whole lifetime recorded, the like whereof cannot be showed of any reprobate; and at his death, he is said gently to "give up the ghost," or yield up the spirit (as Abraham also did, #Ge 25:8), and to be "gathered to his people," as he. These are probable arguments, that, however he lived, yet he died in the faith of his father Abraham. He runs far, we say, that never turns. Nunquam sere si serio.

Ver. 18. And they dwelt from Havilah unto Shur.] A large tract and territory; but nothing so large as his posterity the Saracens', called more rightly Hagarenes, {#Ps 83:6} proved to be; whose name and empire notwithstanding is now swallowed up in the greatness of the Turkish empire; which laboureth with nothing more, than with the weightiness of itself. {a}

And he died.] Or, dwelt, as some read it. Compare #Ge 16:12.

Ver. 19. And these are the generations.] That is, the affairs and occurrences.

Ver. 20. And Isaac was forty years old.] He was not overhasty to marry in the heat of his youth: but by hard labour, ardent prayers, and pious meditations, kept under his body, and brought it into subjection, as St Paul likewise did. {#1Co 9:27} "We are not debtors to the flesh"; {#Ro 8:12} we owe it nothing but stripes, nothing but the blue eye, that the apostle gave it.

Ver. 21. And Isaac entreated the Lord for his wife.] He did it constantly and instantly, as the word נַתַּן signifies; he multiplied prayer, which (as those arrows of deliverance, #2Ki 13:19) must be often iterated, ere the mercy can be obtained.

And the Lord was entreated of him.] Though it were long first, even full twenty years. God knows how to commend his mercies to us, and therefore holds us long in suspense. Cito data, vilescent. Manna, lightly come by, was as lightly set by.

Ver. 22. And the children struggled together.] Heb., Jithrotsatsu. They ran at tilt, as it were, and jostled one against another, even to bruising and hurting. Esau, that he might lose no time, began to set against Jacob before he was born.

If it be so, why am I thus?] A passionate abrupt speech: q.d., Better no children, than so troubled with them. {See Trapp on "Ge 27:46"} {See Trapp on "Ge 3:16"} "I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception." This she should have borne more patiently: but she presently bethought her of the best course; for "she went to inquire of the Lord": she got into a corner, and prayed, and was answered. She prayed down her passions, as a man sleeps out his drunkenness, and set to work lustily, and so got the ensuing oracle.

Ver. 23. And the Lord said unto her.] Either by an angel, or a prophet, or some divine answer in her own heart.

Two nations are in thy womb.] So, what can a man "see in the Shulamite," in every sanctified soul, but "as it were the company of two armies"? {#So 6:13} Every good man is a divided man; every new man, two men.

Ver. 24. And when her days to be delivered.] Which fell out fifteen years before Abraham's death, to his great comfort, no doubt. God doth for his, his best at last.

There were twins in her womb.] See #So 4:2, Isa 66:8.

Ver. 25. And the first came out red.] Red and rough, cruel and crafty, as that red old dragon {#Re 12:3} who inhabited in him, and both acted and agitated him. {#Eph 2:2} Ab ascensore suo daemone perurgebatur; saith Bernard. And so are those Romish Edomites, Esauites, Jesuites, &c.

And they called his name Esau.] Factus et perrictus pilis, a bearded man, one that had everything more like a man than a babe; a manly child.

Ver. 26. And after that came his brother out.] God could have brought Jacob out first, for it is he that "takes us out of the womb"; {#Ps 22:9} but he suffereth Esau for a time to enjoy the first birthright, till his own time came to set things to rights. God "waits to be gracious; for he is a God of judgment". {#Isa 30:18}

And his hand took hold on Esau's heel.] As if he would have turned up his heels, and got to the goal before him.

And his name was called Jacob.] Calcanearius, a heel catcher, or supplanter, as he afterwards proved to Esau, who hit him also in the teeth with it. {#Ge 27:36}

And Isaac was threescore years old.] He lived twice threescore years after this, being a hundred and eighty when he died. {#Ge 35:28} Five years longer he lived than his father Abraham, {#Ge 25:17} being blind for the last forty. {#Ge 27:1}

Ver. 27. And the boys grew.] Nature, art, grace, all proceed from less perfect to more perfect. "Grow in grace," saith Peter: {#2Pe 3:18} grow "unto a perfect man," even "unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ," saith Paul. {#Eph 4:13}

And Esau was a cunning hunter.] Like Nimrod and Ishmael, whom he chose to imitate, rather than Abraham, and those holy patriarchs that had lived before him.

A plain man.] Sept., Απλαστος, without welt or gard, guile or gall. Gregory hereby notes the diverse dispositions of worldly and godly men.

Ver. 28. And Isaac loved Esau, &c.] Here, as likewise in Manoah's wife, more grace appears in the woman than in the man; whose blind and misplaced love, for carnal ends, commends and illustrates the divine adoption.

Ver. 29. And Jacob sod pottage.] Pottage of lentiles, which was a kind of pulse much like to vetches or small peas: so frugal and sparing was the diet of those precious patriarchs, to the shame of our luxury. Quicquid avium volitat, quicquid piscium natat, quicquid ferarum discurrit, nostris sepelitur ventribus. {a} We devour the wealth of earth, air, and sea. {b}

Esau came from the field, and he was faint.] Labor est etiam ipsa voluptas. Of carnal pleasures, a man may break his neck sooner than his fast. Nor is it want of variety in them, but inward weakness, or the curse of unsatisfyingness, that lies upon them. The creature is now as the husk without the grain, the shell without the kernel, full of nothing but emptiness; and so may faint us, but not fill us.

Ver. 30. Feed me, I pray thee, with that red, red.] He doubleth it, and could not, for haste and hunger, tell what to call it, to show his greediness. {a} And saith, "Feed me," or let me swallow at once; as camels are fed by casting gobbets into their mouth. He thought he should never have enough Our proverb is, As hungry as a hunter: but this hunter hath no he with him, and is therefore branded for a "profane" {#Heb 12:16} sensualist, Edom. The word used for a glutton, {#De 21:20} is used for a vile person, or a worthless person. {#Jer 15:19}

Ver. 31. Sell me this day thy birthright.] Which he knew, by the instruction of his mother, to be his by God's appointment; and therefore takes this opportunity to get it. A well chosen season is the greatest advantage of any action.

Ver. 32. What profit shall this birthright, &c.] Pluris facio pulticulam bonam, quam titulam inahem. Sensualists look only at the present pleasure, and sell their souls for it. Earthly things are present and pleasant, therefore we so cleave to them; striving, like the toad, who shall fall asleep with most earth in his paws.

Ver. 33. Swear to me.] With fickle men, make all firm and fast.

And he sold his birthright to Jacob.] And, with it, heaven also, as the Jerusalem Paraphrast addeth, whereof the birthright was a type and pledge. So his sin was in unthankfulness for such a dignity; in limiting it to this life; in selling it so very cheap; but especially, in his profane parting with a spiritual blessing for a temporal. Such a foolish bargain makes every impenitent person in the sale of his soul for a thing of nought; which Christ, who only went to the price of a soul, saith is more worth than a world. "Let there be no fornicator," as every worldling is, {#Jas 4:4} "or profane person among us, as Esau". {#Heb 12:16} And that there may not, let not men take pleasure in pleasure, spend too much time in it, shoot their affections too far into it. It is no wisdom, to go as far as we may. It was not simply a sin in Esau to go a hunting: but yet the more he used it the more profane he grew by it, and came at length to condemn his birthright. Adrian {a} the emperor was a great hunter; broke his leg in hunting; called a city that he built in Mysia, by the name of Adrian's huntings: but how little care he took for his poor soul, that Animula vagula blandula of his, abundantly testifieth. The maddest hunter that ever I read of was Mithridates; who was so set upon it, that he came not into any house, either of city or country for seven years together. {b} To lawful delights and recreations, God allows men to stoop, for their bodies' sake; as the eagle to the prey, or as Gideon's soldiers, to soop their handful, not to gorge their bellyful. An honest man's heart is where his calling is: such a one, when he is elsewhere, is like a fish in the air, whereunto if it leap for recreation or necessity, yet it soon returns to its own element.

Ver. 34. He did eat and drink, and rose up, &c.] Hac verborum congeri, impenitentia Esau describitur. {a} Away he went, without showing the least remorse or regret for what he had done. Lysimachus soon repented him for parting with his crown for a draught of cold water, in his extreme thirst. {b} Wine is a prohibited ware among Turks; which makes some drink with scruple, others with danger. The baser sort, when taken drunk, are often caned on the soles of their bare feet. And I have seen some, saith mine author, {c} after a fit of drunkenness, lie a whole night, crying and praying to Mohammed for intercession, that I could not sleep near them; so strong is conscience, even where the foundation is but imaginary, to the shame of many profligate professors—cauterised Christians.

Ver. 1. Beside the first famine.] New sins bring new plagues Flagitium et flagellura, ut acus et filum. Where iniquity breakfasts, calamity will be sure to dine—to sup where it dines, and to lodge where it sups. If the Canaanites had amended by the former famine, this later had been prevented; for "God afflicts not willingly, nor grieves the children of men". {#La 3:35} Polybius wonders why man should be held the wisest of creatures, when to him he seemeth the foolishest. For other things, saith he, where they have smarted once will beware for the future. The fox will not rashly return to the snare; the wolf to the pitfall, the dog to the club, &c. Solus homo, ab aevo ad aevum peccat fere in iisdem, et in iisdem plectitur. Only man is neither weary of sinning, nor wary of smarting for it.

And Isaac went to Abimelech.] As Abraham had done before to Pharaoh. {#Ge 12:10} The trials of God's servants, in several ages, are much alike: we suffer the same things that our betters have done afore us: which both Paul and Peter press as a lenitive to our miseries, and a motive to patience. {#1Co 10:13 1Pe 5:9} The same fable is acted over again in the world, as of old; the persons only changed. "That which hath been, is now; and that which is to be, hath already been": "and there is no new thing under the sun," saith Solomon. {#Ec 3:15 1:9,10}

Ver. 2. And the Lord appeared unto him.] God knows our souls, and our souls him, best in adversity. See #Zec 13:9. This famine was to the Canaanites in the nature of a curse; to Isaac, of a cure. Hinc distinctio illa poenae in conferentem et nocentem, sive in suffocantem et promoventem; item in poenam vindictae et poenam cautelae, sire in condemnantem et corrigentem.

Ver. 3. Sojourn in this land.] Though it lay under the common lash; that he might see God's power in providing for him amidst greatest straits and difficulties. Poenam duplicem habet ordinationem: unam ad culpam quae praecedit, alteram, ad gloriam Dei quam praecedit. {a}

Ver. 4. As the stars of heaven.] {See Trapp on "Ge 13:16"}

Ver. 5. Because that Abraham.] His obedience was universal to all the wills of God; and is here alleged, not as the meritorious cause, but as an antecedent, of the blessing. Our good works do truly please God in Christ, and move him, after a sort, to do us good; yet not as merits, but as certain effects of Christ's merits alone, and such as of his merit. {a}

{a} Rulloc., De Vocatione, p. 25.

Ver. 7. She is my sister.] How apt are children to imitate their father's infirmities! Πατροπαραδοτου. {#1Pe 1:18} Which yet is no excuse, {#Eze 18:14} but an aggravation. {#Da 5:22,23} The orator {a} therefore was far wide, that said, Me ex ea opinione, quam a Maioribus accepi, de cultu deorum immortalium, nullius unquam oratio aut docti aut indocti movebit. Isaac's fault here, was greater than Abraham's, because he was not warned by domestical examples. Seest thou another make shipwreck of a good conscience? look well to thy tacklings. Sin is worse after warning.

For he feared to say, &c.] Fear and infidelity are found in the most faithful. Corruption, in the best, will have some flurts, some outbursts. As therefore Luther entreats his readers, if they find in his writings anything that smelleth of the old cask of Popery, to remember he was once a poor monk; so when we see the saints humanum aliquid pati, to play some mad pranks, we must consider they were but lately cured of a spiritual frenzy.

Because she was fair to look upon.] Beauty therefore is not much to be desired, or the want of it to be bewailed; because it creates so many dangers to them that have it, and their dearest husbands. The British virgins deformed themselves, that the Danes might not deflower them. {b}

Ver. 8. Sporting with Rebekah his wife.] Or, laughing and rejoicing; according to that of Solomon, "Rejoice with the wife of thy youth: let her be as the loving hind, and pleasant roe," &c. {#Pr 5:18} The hind and roe are the females of the hart and roebuck. Now of the hart and roebuck, it is noted, saith a grave divine, {a} that of all other beasts they are most enamoured, as I may so speak, with their mates, and even mad again with heat and desire after them. Which, being taken in a good sense, doth set forth the lawful vehement affection that an Isaac may bear to his Rebekah; which may be such, as that others may think he even dotes on her. And so much is imported in that which follows: "Let her breasts satisfy thee at all times, and err thou always in her love". {#Pr 5:19, marg.} Not but that a man may be out in this lawful error too, and exceed in love to his wife; as he in Seneca did, who, whenever he went abroad, wore his wife's fillet on his bosom for a favour, would never willingly be without her company, nor drink, but when she drank to him; with many the like fooleries, in quae improvida vis affectus erumpebat, saith he. The beginning of this love was honest; but the nimiety was not without deformity. Est modus in rebus.

Ver. 9. Lest I die for her.] {See Trapp on "Ge 20:11"} {See Trapp on "Ge 11:29"}

Ver. 10. Brought guiltiness upon us.] Or, a shameful crime, subjecting us to condign punishment. This is more than many pseudo-Christians will yield; who hold adultery a light sin, if any at all, a trick of youth: being of the same mind with that old dotard in Terence: It is nothing for a young man to be found potting, piping, drinking, drabbing, swearing, whoring, &c. {a} And this poisonous position passed, it seems, for current at Corinth; whence the apostle Paul so strives to uproot that wretched opinion, by many arguments. {#1Co 6} And {#1Co 10:8} instead of the cloak of heat of youth, he puts upon fornication a bloody cloak, bathed in the blood of three and twenty thousand.

Ver. 11. He that toucheth this man, &c.] So sweetly doth God, many times, turn even our sins to our safety here, and to our salvation hereafter. What is not God able to do for his?

Ver. 12. Then Isaac sowed in that land.] In ground hired for his use, and managed by himself: for it was anciently a great commendation, saith Cicero, to be a good husbandman. {a} M. Curius, after three triumphs, returned to the plough, and held it no disgrace; neither ever was there more plenty at Rome than then, saith Pliny; Quasi gauderet terra laureato vomere, et Aratore triumphali. This good husbandman in the text, sowing in that barren land, and in a time of famine too, hath a hundredfold increase; which is the utmost that our Saviour mentioneth in the parable of the sower; {#Mt 13:23} and in reference hereunto, he elsewhere assureth such as part with all for his sake and the gospel's, they "shall receive a hundredfold here, and eternal life hereafter". {#Mt 19:29} That which Herodotus and Pliny report of Babylon is beyond belief: that the land thereabouts returns two hundredfold increase. {b} But grant it were true, yet he that is a good husband for his soul, sows in a better ground, and shall have a better return: for, "he that soweth to the Spirit, shall, of the Spirit, reap life everlasting." Only it is required, that he "be not weary in well doing: for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not". {#Ga 6:8,9} We must not look to sow and reap all in a day, as he {c} saith of the Hyperborean people far north; that they sow shortly after the sunrising, and reap before the sunset; because the whole half year is one continual day with them. We must "wait," with "the husbandman, for the precious fruit of the earth, and have long patience for it, until we receive the former and latter rain". {#Jas 5:7} And "be diligent" in the meanwhile, that when Christ comes, "we may be found of him in peace". {#2Pe 3:14} Heaven will pay for all our pains and patience. "He which soweth sparingly shall reap sparingly; and he that soweth bountifully shall reap bountifully," {#2Co 9:6} even blessing upon blessing, as the word there (επ ευλογιας) signifies: he "shall doubtless come again with joy, bringing his sheaves with him". {#Ps 126:6}

Ver. 13. And the man waxed great.] Because the Lord blessed him, {#Ge 26:12} for it is his blessing that maketh rich. He sowed, and feared God, and the Lord blessed him. Godliness hath the promises of both lives. {#1Ti 4:8} Now the promises are "the unsearchable riches of Christ," {#Eph 3:6,9} who is "the heir of all," {#Heb 1:2} and hath made godly men his co-heirs, {#Ro 8:17} entailing upon them riches and honour, delight and pleasure, life and length of days, the blessings of both hands. {#Pr 3:16,17 8:18 De 28:1-14 Ps 112:2,3} Godly men, in Scripture, are read to have been richer than any; as Abraham, Isaac, David, &c., so they might be now (likely) if they would be as godly, Bonus Deus Constantinum Magnum, tantis terrenis implevit muneribus, quanta optare nullus auderet, saith Augustine. {a} If God deny gain to godliness, it is that it may be admired for itself, as having an autarchy. (μετ' αυταρκειας), a self-sufficiency {#1Ti 6:6} He makes up in the true treasure: and a grain of grace is worth all the gold of Ophir; a remnant of faith, better than all gay clothing. Achan's wedge of gold served for no better purpose, than to cleave asunder his soul from his body; and the Babylonish garment but for a shroud. But, contented godliness, like Solomon's good wife, "doth a man good, and not evil, all his days": {#Pr 31:12} for it brings his mind and his means together, and makes him rest well assured of a sufficiency, though he miss of a superfluity.

Ver. 14. And the Philistines envied him.] Envy is the constant companion of prosperity, as David felt and complained. Succoth and Pennel contemn Gideon, out of envy of his victory; Joseph's brethren cannot abide him, because more favoured of his father. Korah maligneth Moses; Saul, David; the Pharisees, our Saviour; their malice wilfully crossing their consciences. Caligula sacrificed to Neptune and Envy, ne sibi, ut ipse dicebat, invideretur. {a} He thought other men sick, like him, of his disease (as the devil accused God of envy to our first parents); for certainly there was not a more envious person living than he; witness his throwing down the statues of all famous men, and defacing their titles; forbidding any new to be set up without his leave and liking. So that tiger, Tiberius, laid hold, with his spiteful teeth, on all the excellent spirits of his time: he put a poet to death, for making an excellent tragedy; {b} and banished a certain architect, for building an elaborate porch at Rome, which he could not choose but admire and reward with money. Nero envied all men that were any whit gracious with the people. {c} Valentinian hated all that were well appavelled, or well learned, or wealthy, or noble {d} Fortibus etiam detrahere solebat, ut solus videretur bonis artibus eminere, saith Ammianus. {e} Germanicus had not any more deadly enemies than his own ornaments, {f} and his adversaries (as here Isaac's) had—nothing to complain of him, more than his greatness. So true is that of Salust; {g} Difficillimum inter mortales est, gloria invidiam vincere. Hercules had not more ado with Hydra than a good man shall have with this beast. Envied he shall be of his neighbour, for his labour and right work. {#Ec 4:4} "This is also vanity, and vexation of spirit."

Ver. 15. The Philistines had stopped them.] They deprived themselves of the benefit of those wells, so that Isaac might not water at them. Envy doth nothing with reason. It is vitium diabolicum, saith Augustine. {a} The devil, of pure spite, hinders men from heaven: he rageth and rangeth, roaring up and down, "seeking whom to devour"; and not caring to be doubly damned himself, so that others may not be saved. We should be so far from envying at the happiness of others, that we should rejoice in it. This were to be as the angels of God; and the contrary, is to be like the devils of hell, as Saul was, who, because he could not see David's heart, fed upon his own. Envy devours itself, as the worm doth the nut out of which it grows.

Ver. 16. Go from us; for thou art, &c.] Isaaco ob benedictionem Dei Ostracismus indicitur. It was well they had nothing against him. Ενθα το ηδυ πλησιον και το λυπηρον. {a} So near neighbours are prosperity and adversity. Friends are very changeable creatures, saith Plato {b} Friends! there is no friend, saith {c} Socrates, no fast friend. Faithful friends, quoth the Duke of Buckingham to Bishop Morton in Richard III's time, are in this age, all, for the most part, gone in pilgrimage; and their return is uncertain. {d} Sejanus's friends showed themselves, as did likewise Haman's, most passionate against him; saying, that if Caesar had clemency, he ought to reserve it for men, not use it toward monsters. Carnal friends were never true to any that trusted to them: whereas, trust in God, at length, will triumph, as we see in this patriarch.

Ver. 19. A well of springing water.] Heb., Living; so called for their continual motion. Life consisteth in action: and the godly esteem of life, by that stirring they find in their souls. "O Lord," saith Hezekiah, "by these things men live, and in all these things is the life of my spirit". {#Isa 38:16} And thus, many a man lives more in a shorter, than others in a longer time. St Jerome tells of one, qui in brevi vitae spatio tempora virtutum multa replevit. {a} As Seneca of another, qui non diu vixit, sed diu fuit: Non multum navigavit, sed multum iactatus est. Oh, live, live, live, saith a reverend man, {b} quickly, much, long: else you are but hissed and kicked off this stage of the world, as Phocas was by Heraclius; nay, as many {#Job 27:23,15} who were buried before half dead.

Ver. 22. And he removed from thence, &c.] See here a pattern of a patient and peaceable disposition, not broken by the continual injuries and affronts of the Philistines, that maligned and molested him, "I am peace," saith David; {#Ps 120:7} and I, saith Isaac; and I, saith every son of peace, every child of wisdom. How well might good Isaac take up that of David, and say, "My feet stand in an even place" ^{a} ^{#Ps 26:12} now that he was at Rehoboth especially, and God had made room for him: The scales of his mind neither rose up toward the beam, through their own lightness; nor were too much depressed with any load of sorrow: but, hanging equally and unmoved between both, gave him liberty, in all occurrences, to enjoy himself. Our minds, saith a divine, ^{b} should be like to the adamant, that no knife can cut; the salamander, that no fire can burn; the rock, which no waves can shake; the cypress tree, which no weather can alter; the hill Olympus, higher than storm or tempest, wind or weather can reach unto; or rather, "like mount Zion, that cannot be removed, but standeth fast for ever". ^{#Ps 125:1} Thus Paul had "learned how to abound, and to be abased". ^{#Php 4:11} Bradford, if the Queen would give him life, he would thank her; if banish him, he would thank her; if burn him, he will thank her; if condemn him to perpetual imprisonment, he will thank her; as he told one Cresswell, that offered to intercede for him. ^{c} Praeclara est, aequabilitas in omni vita, et idem semper vultus eademque frons, ut de Socrate, idemque de C. Laelio accepimus, saith Cicero, in his books of offices, ^{d} which book the old Lord Burleigh, Lord High Treasurer to Queen Elizabeth, would always carry about him, to his dying day, either in his bosom or pocket: ^{e} and what use he made of it, take M. Camden's ^{f} testimony: Burleigh, Lord Treasurer, was wont to say, that he overcame envy more by patience than pertinacy. His private estate he managed with that integrity, that he never sued any man, no man ever sued him. He was in the number of those few, that both lived and died with glory.

Ver. 24. Fear not.] For the continued opposition of the Philistines, or whatever other discouragement. The best minds, when troubled for any long time, yield inconsiderate motions, and suffer some perturbation; as water that is violently stirred sends up bubbles. They cannot be so much master over their passions, as not otherwhiles to be disquieted: for, not the evenest weights but, at their first putting into the balance, somewhat sway both parts thereof, not without some show of inequality; which, after some tittle motion, settle themselves in a meet poise. Potissimum vero fidei murus, tentationum ariete durius aliquanto pulsatus et concussus, facile nutare ac ruinam minari incipit, nisi divinitus sustentetur. {a}

Ver. 25. And called upon the name of the Lord.] That had made room for him; and now, by his presence and promise, comforted him. Let the streams of God's bounty lead us, as the watercourse doth, either to the spring upward, or downward to the main ocean, to the source and fountain whence they flow. Let God taste of the fruit of his own planting. Otherwise, it is no better than the refreshing of him that standeth by a good fire, "and crieth, Aha, I am warm". {#Isa 44:16} We are no better than brute beasts, if, contenting ourselves with a natural use of the creatures, we rise not up to the Author; if, instead of being temples of his praise, we become graves of his benefits. Isaac first built an altar, and then digged a well.

Ver. 26. And Abimelech went to him.] Not of any great love, but as (1.) pricked in conscience; (2.) to provide for posterity. It was a mercy to him, howsoever, that strangers and heathens should do him this honour: as it was to Luther, that when the pope had excommunicated him, the emperor proscribed him, two kings written against him, &c., the elector of Saxony should nevertheless stick to him; and that the great Turk should send him word, not to be discouraged, for he would become his gracious lord, &c., though "from such a lord," said Luther, "good Lord deliver me." {a}

Ver. 27. Wherefore come ye to me?] Here was his magnanimity and his modesty both, in expostulating the wrongs they had done unto him. He could not but be sensible of their discourtesies, though he dissembled them. A sheep feels the bite of a dog, as well as a swine, though she make no such noise. Isaac having now a fit opportunity, gives them the telling of it: and "how forcible are right words"! {#Job 6:25} There is a real confutation of injuries: and we should consult, whether, in such a case, it be best to deal with the wrongdoers, at all, by words. God's way is by works: and he must get an Isaac-like temperance and prudence, that thinks himself able to convince them by reason, and to set them down.

Ver. 28. Let there be now an oath.] See here, saith Chrysostom, {a} how great the power of virtue is, and the might of meekness. For they that lately drove him out from among them, now come to him in courtesy, though a forlorn foreigner; and not only give him satisfaction, but seek his friendship. Thus "when a man's ways please the Lord, he maketh his enemies to be at peace with him". {#Pr 16:7}

Ver. 30. And he made them a feast.] Not to mischief them thereat, as Absalom did Amnon, as Alexander did Philotas, as the great Turk doth the nobles whom he intends to strangle; {a} but to show there was no rancour or purpose of revenge.

Ver. 31. And they rose up betimes, &c,] The proverb is, De sero convivium, de mane consilium. It was the Persians' barbarous manner, in the midst of their cups, to advise of their weightiest affairs, as Pererius here noteth: Ardua negotia, praesertim in quibus iuramentum intervenit, ieiuno stomacho suscipi peragique debent, saith Piscator. Weighty businesses are best despatched fasting.

Ver. 32. We have found water.] As crosses, so mercies, seldom come single, but by troops; as she said, when her son Gad was born, "A company cometh". {#Ge 30:11}

Ver. 33. Is Beersheba to this day.] So it was before; but the name was almost worn out, the well being stopped up. Isaac therefore newly names it, and so preserves it for a monument of God's mercy to his father, and to himself.

Ver. 34. And Esau was forty years old.] In an apish imitation of his father, who married not till that age; keeping under his body, and bringing it into subjection, as Paul, {#1Co 9:27} being inured by good education, to hard labour, prayer, and pious meditation. But Esau did not so, a pleasure monger; he was a profane person, and, as the Hebrews say, a filthy whore master. So much also the apostle seems to intimate, when he sets them together, and saith, "Let there be no fornicator, or profane person, as Esau". {#Heb 12:16}

He took to wife.] Not consulting his parents, or craving their consent. This was abdicationis praeludium; Deus quem destruit, dementat.

Ver. 1. Isaac was old, and his eyes were dim.] Old age is of itself a disease, and the sink of all diseases. This Solomon sweetly sets forth {#Ec 12:1-7} by a continued allegory, Ubi quot lumina imo flumina orationis exerit saith one. In general, he calls it "the evil day, the years that have no pleasure in them." In particular, the senses all fail; the hands tremble; the legs buckle; the teeth cannot do their office, as being either lost or loosened; "the silver cord," that is, the marrow of their backs, is consumed; "the golden ewer," that is, the brainpan, broke; "the pitcher at the well," that is, the veins at the liver; "the wheel at the cistern," that is, the head, which draws the power of life from the heart; all these worn weak, and wanting to their office. So that sleep faileth; "desire faileth"; {a} neither spring nor summer (signified by the almond tree and grasshopper) shall affect with pleasure; "the daughters of music shall be brought low," as they were in old Barzillai; "the sun, moon, and stars are darkened," for any delight they take in their sweet shine; yea, "the clouds return after rain"; a continual succession of miseries, like April weather, as one shower is unburdened, another is brewed, and the sky is still overcast with clouds. Lo, such is old age. And is this a fit present for God? wilt thou give him the dregs, the bottom, the very last sands, thy dotage, which thyself and friends are weary of? "Offer it now to thy prince, will he be pleased with thee"? {#Mal 1:8} The Circassians, a kind of mongrel Christians, as they baptize not their children till the eighth year, so they enter not into the Church, the gentlemen specially, till the sixtieth year, but hear divine service standing outside the temple; that is to any, till through age they grow unable to continue their rapines and robberies, to which sin that nation is exceedingly addicted: so dividing their time between sin and devotion; dedicating their youth to rapine, and their old age to repentance. {b} But God will not be so put off. He is "a great King," and stands upon his seniority. {#Mal 1:14} In the Levitical law, there were three sorts of firstfruits:

1. Of the ears of corn, offered about the Passover;
2. Of the loaves, offered about Pentecost;
3. About the end of the year in Autumn.

Now of the first two God had a part, but not of the last: to teach us, that he will accept of the services of our youth or middle-age: but for old age, vix aut ne vix quidem. Besides Abraham in the Old Testament, and Nicodemus in the New, I know not whether we read of any old man ever brought home to God.

{b} Brerewood's Enquiries, p. 135.

Ver. 2. I am old, I know not the day of my death.] No more doth any, though never so young. There be as many young skulls as old, in Golgotha. But, young men, we say, may die; old men must die. To the old, death is pro ianuis; to the young, in insidiis. Senex, quasi semi-nex. Old men have pedem in cymba Charontis, one foot in the grave already. Our decrepit age both expects death, and solicits it: it goes grovelling, as groaning for the grave. Whence Terence {a} calls an old man Silicernium; and the Greeks γηροντα, πασα το εις γην οραν, of looking toward the ground, whither he is tending; or, as others will have it, of loving earth and earthly things; which old folk greedily grasp at, because they fear they shall not have to suffice them while alive, and to bring them honestly home, as they say, when they are dead; as Plutarch gives the reason, {b}

{b} Τους θριψαντας, και τους θαψαντας.

Ver. 3. Take me some venison.] It is some blemish to holy Isaac, that he so favoured and loved Esau, and that because he did eat of his venison, or because venison was in his mouth. {#Ge 25:28} "All things are lawful for me, but I will not be brought under of any thing". {#1Co 6:12} It is a shame to a saint, to be a slave to his appetite, that it should be said of him, as it was of Epicurus, Dum palato quid sit optimum iudicat, coeli palatium suspexit. {a}

Ver. 4. That my soul may bless thee before I die.] The words of dying men are living oracles. It was the patriarch's care, and must be ours, to leave a blessing behind us; to seek the salvation of our children while we live, and to say something to the same purpose when we die, that may stick by them. So when we are laid in our graves, our stock remains, goes forward, and shall do till the day of doom.

Ver. 5. Esau went to the field to hunt, &c.] But before he returned, the blessing was otherwise bestowed. "The hope of the hypocrite shall perish". {#Job 8:13} How many lie languishing at hope's hospital, as he at the pool of Bethesda, and no help comes! They repair to the creatures, as to a lottery, with heads full of hopes, but return with hearts full of blanks. Or, if they draw nigh to God, they think they take hold of him; but it is but as the child that catcheth at the shadow or the wall, which he thinks he holds fast in his hand; but it vanisheth. The common hope is ill bottomed. "Hope unfailable," {#Ro 5:5} is founded upon "faith unfeigned". {#1Ti 1:5} Deo confisi nunquam confusi. He sneaketh sweetest comfort "to the heart, in the wilderness". {#Ho 2:14}

Ver. 6. I heard thy father.] She overheard what Isaac spake secretly. Women will be listening; as Sarah behind the door, when she laughed, and little thought to be questioned for it.

Ver. 7. That I may eat, and bless thee.] Being cheered up by thy good cheer and wine, I may be the fitter instrument of the Spirit of God. So the prophet called for a minstrel. {#2Ki 3:14,15} Plato called wine and music μαλακτικα, the mollifying medicines of human miseries. Cheerfulness is called for in all services.

Ver. 8. How therefore, my son, obey my voice.] Which yet he ought not to have done, because she commanded him that which was evil: and they that do thus, are peremptores, potius quam parentes; rather parricides than parents, as saith St Bernard.

Ver. 9. Savoury meat for thy father, &c.] She knew his diet, and could fit his tooth. The wife is to take care to please (μεριμνα) her husband; to use her wits, and busy her thoughts how to give him content in diet, and other things of the world, as the apostle hath it. {#1Co 7:34} It was devilish policy in Agrippina, the mother of Nero—and it came home to her—to temper the poison that she gave her husband Claudius the emperor, in the meat he most delighted in, {a} and then to make a jest of it. Let us be sure to bring God such service as he loveth. He will eat, not only our "honey," but our "honeycomb"; he will drink, not only our "wine," but our "milk"; {#So 5:1} take in good part unperfect performances, so the heart be upright. But displeasing service is a double dishonour. The fat of rams was rejected with infinite disdain, where the hands are full of blood, the heart of sin. {#Isa 1:11,15} The philosopher {b} could complain of his countrymen, that when they went to offer sacrifice to health, they did then banquet most riotously against health.

Ver. 10. And thou shalt bring it to thy father.] Though this action, in the general intendment, was good, yet the execution of it wanted not particular error. Her course had been, rather, to have reminded her husband of God's promise to Jacob, and gently to have exhorted him to do nothing against it; and then to have entreated the Lord, to bend his mind to the obedience of his divine will, though to the crossing of his own. But the saint's righteousness, while here, is mixed; as light and darkness, dimness at least, in a painted glass, dyed with some obscure and dim colour: it is transparent, and giveth good, but not clear and pure light.

Ver. 11. Esau my brother is a hairy man.] This Rebekah thought not of. Plus vident oculi, quam oculus. Two is better than one; but woe be to him that is alone. We want much of our strength, in the want of a faithful friend, who might be our monitor. Whence David so bemoans the loss of his Jonathan; and St Paul counted it a special mercy to him, that Epaphroditus recovered. {#Php 2:25-27} This the heathen persecutors knew, and therefore banished the Christians, and confined them to isles and mines, where they could not have access one to another. {a} Dr Taylor rejoiced that ever he came into prison, there to be acquainted with that angel of God—so he calls him—John Bradford. While Ridley and Latimer lived, they kept up Cranmer from entertaining counsels of revolt. It was not for nothing, surely, that our Saviour sent forth his disciples by two and two. He knew, by experience, that Satan is readiest to assault when none is by to assist. Aaron may be for a mouth to Moses, Moses for a God to Aaron. {#Ex 4:16}

Ver. 12. My father peradventure will feel me.] Our heavenly Father will certainly feel us, and better feel us; and we shall feel him too, in his fatherly corrections, before he bless us. Suffer we must, or ere we reign: no coming to the crown, but by the cross. Christ himself was "perfected by sufferings"; {#Heb 2:10,5:9} and we must be "conformed to his image". {#Ro 8:29} When Ignatius came to the wild beasts, Now, saith he, I begin to be a Christian. Qui non eat Crucianus, non est Christianus, saith Luther, on the 29th of Genesis: and in another place, I have no stronger argument, saith he, against the Pope's kingdom, than this, that he reigneth without the cross.

And I shall seem to him as a deceiver.] So shall all complimenting hypocrites to God, that pretend his service to their wicked or worldly ends and aims. They think, belike, to deceive him; {a} but therein they are fairly deceived, for he searcheth the hearts; and bring a curse, instead of a blessing, upon themselves and their posterity. "The hypocrite in heart heaps up wrath". {#Job 36:13} Nemo enim magis; ram meretur; saith a father, {b} quam amicum simulans inimicus. Where shall we read of a hypocrite received to mercy?

{b} Bern.

Ver. 13. Upon me be thy curse, my son.] A bold speech: but she respected the promise by faith; she relied on that oracle, {#Ge 25:23} which Isaac might misinterpret, understanding it not of the persons of his sons, but of their posterity. Bernardus non vidit omnia. Isaac was not more blind in his eyes than in his affection to his firstborn; and that might mislead him. But Rebekah saw further than he, and therefore made this bold adventure, not without some mixture of infirmity, to procure Jacob the blessing, against her husband's will and intention. A wife is not to perform such blind obedience to her husband as Plutarch ^{a} prescribeth, when he layeth it as a law of wedlock on the wife to acknowledge and worship the same gods, and none else, but those whom her husband honours and reposes for gods. Be men pleased or displeased, God must not be displeased.

Ver. 14. And he went, and fetched.] Herein he was over obsequious to his mother. It was an act of faith in her to seek to transfer the patriarchal blessing upon Jacob: it was likewise an act of faith in him to seek to get that blessing. Sed fides utriusque impegit in via; But they took not a right course for the compassing of it.

Ver. 15. And Rebekah took goodly raiment.] The priestly garments, some think, proper to Esau had he kept his birthright; but kept, not by Esau or his wives, but by the mother of the family. The Hebrew calleth them Vestes desiderabiles, garments of desires; goodly, sweet, precious; yet far inferior to that rich and royal robe of Christ's righteousness, that garment of our Older Brother, wherewith arrayed we obtain the blessing. We read of Solomen's bravery; of Herod's cloth of silver; of Alcisthenes the Sybarite's cloak, sold to the Carthaginians by Dionysius for one hundred and twenty talents; of Demetrius's robe of estate, which, for the exceeding costliness of it, no prince that came after him would ever put on. ^{a} But all these were but rags to the robe of righteousness, that fine white linen, and shining. ^{#Re 19:14}

Ver. 16. And she put the skins of the kids.] This by some is excused, as if it were only dolus bonus, to keep her husband from wrong doing; as, when the physician deceives his patient, that he may heal him. But howsoever what she did may be extenuated, it can hardly be justified, albeit God ordered it to his own purpose.

Ver. 17. And she gave.] ^{See Trapp on "Ge 27:14"}

Ver. 19. I am Esau thy firstborn, &c.] Here he utters three lies in a breath: besides his ascribing to God that he did, ^{#Ge 27:20} so taking that reverend name in vain. This was his sin, and he smarted for it to his dying day: for he had scarcely a merry hour after this; but God followed him with one sorrow upon another, to teach him and us what an "evil and bitter thing sin is," {#Jer 2:19} and how it ensnares and ensnarls us. Aristotle could say, that a lie is in itself evil and wicked. {a} The Hebrews call it Aven, a great iniquity. And the Scripture reckons it among monstrous sins, {#Re 21:8} and condemns it to hell, -whether it be the officious, merry, or pernicious lie. Indeed, every lie is pernicious to ourselves or others, or both; because flatly forbidden of God, and because it is against the order of nature, and for that "no lie is of the truth," as St John hath it, {#1Jo 2:21} but of the devil, who began, and still upholds his kingdom by lies. {#Joh 8:44} Contrarily, God is truth, and his children are all such as will not lie, {#Isa 63:8 Re 14:5} at least, not get a haunt and a habit of lying, which David calls "a way of lying": "Remove from me the way of lying," saith he, {#Ps 119:29} that I make not a trade or common practice of it. We find that {#Isa 21:2} he very roundly telleth two or three lies together, as Jacob here did; and all deliberate. So that tale he told Achish of invading the south of Judah, when he had been upon the Geshurites and Gerarites. {#Isa 27:8-11} I know not how it can be excused. But this was not David's "way," his common course; pity it should. Honest heathens condemned lying; the Persians punished it severely in their children. {b} Homer censures it in Dolon, Ulysses, and others, {c} Clitarchi historici, saith Quintilian, ingenium probatur, fides infamatur. Nepos reporteth of Epaminondas, {d} that he so loved truth that he would not once lie, no, not in jest. A shame to many Christians, who think the officious and sporting lie to be nothing. Whereas {#Ga 1:10} we must not speak the truth to please men, much less lie. And for saving ourselves, we must rather die then lie; else Peter had not sinned in denying his Master. As for profiting others, we may not lie, though it were to save a soul. {#Ro 3:7} We may as well commit fornication with the Moabites, to draw them to our religion, or steal from rich men to give to the poor, as lie to do another man a good turn. Ver. 20. How is it that thou hast found it so quickly?] A man may very well ask our common Protestants this question concerning the faith they so much boast of, but came by it too quickly to be fight. They were never yet in the furnace of mortification, -felt the spirit of bondage, the terrors of God in their consciences. Their faith is like Jonah's gourd, that grew up in a night; or a bullet in a mould, that is made in a moment. Let ours be like the water of Bethlehem, much longed for, and hardly come by, &c. {#2Sa 23:15}

Ver. 21. That I may feel thee, my son.] Here Isaac used all his senses, and yet is cozened. Ver. 22. The voice is Jacob's voice.] Jacob must name himself Esau, with the voice of Jacob. It is hard, if our tongues do not betray us, in spite of our clothes, as it did the wife of Jeroboam.

Ver. 23. So he blessed him.] {See Trapp on "Ge 27:25"}

Ver. 24. Art thou my very son Esau? And he said, I am.] Thus one sin entertained fetcheth in another; a lie especially, which, being a tinkerly, blushful sin, is either denied by the liar, who is ashamed to be taken with it, or else covered by another and another lie, as we see here in Jacob, who, being once over shoes, will be over boots too, but he will persuade his father that he is his very son Esau.

Ver. 25. Bring it near to me.] Divinum consilium dum devitatur, impletur: humana sapientia, dum reluctatur, comprehenditur, saith Gregory. Here Isaac doth unwilling and unwitting justice.

Ver. 26. Come near now, and kiss me, my son.] Kissing is a symbol of sweetest love: and those that "love out of a pure heart fervently," {#1Pe 1:22} do therefore kiss, as desiring to transfuse, if it might be, the souls of either into other, and to become one with the party so beloved, and, in the best sense, kissed.

Ver. 27. As the smell of a field.] Compare #So 2:13,4:12-14. Aristotle {a} writes of a parcel of ground in Sicily that sendeth such a strong smell of fragrant flowers to all the fields and pasturages thereabouts, that no hound can hunt there, the scent is so confounded by the sweet smell of those flowers. Labour we so to resent heavenly sweetnesses, so to savour the things above, that we may have no mind to hunt after earthly vanities, &c. Alexander's body is said to be of such an exact constitution, that it gave a sweet scent where it went. Christ, the true body, smells so sweet to all heavenly eagles, that, being now lifted up, he draws them after him. {#Mt 24:28 Joh 12:32}

Ver. 28. God give thee of the dew.] For that country was dry and thirsty. They had rain, say some, but twice a year; the former in seedtime, and the latter rain in May. The blessings here bestowed are plenty, victory, domestical preeminency, and outward prosperity. Esau likewise hath the like, but not with a God give thee. But beyond all these, "some better thing" was provided and promised. Erant enim speculum, et pignus coelestium. The Church of Rome borrows her mark from the market plenty, or cheapness, &c.; she vaunts of her temporal felicity, and makes a catalogue of the strange victories which the Catholics have had. Immo vix unquam fuerunt Haeretici superiores, quando iusto proelio dimicatum est, saith Bellarmine. {a} Upon one of the Easter holidays, saith George Marsh, martyr, Master Sherburn and Master More sent for me, persuading me much to leave mine opinions, saying, all the bringers up and favourers of that religion had ill luck, and were either put to death, or in prison, and in danger of life. {b} Again, the favourers of the religion now used, had wondrous good luck and prosperity in all things. These wizards, these "disputers of this world," as the apostle calls them, {#1Co 1:20} either knew not, or believed not, that the Church is the heir of the Cross, Ecclesia haeres Crucis, as an ancient speaketh; that opposition is, as Calvin wrote to the French king, Evangelii genius ; - the bad genius that dogs the gospel; that truth breeds hatred, {c} as the fair nymphs did the ill favoured fawns and satyrs, and seldom goes without a scratched face. Some halcyons the Church hath here, as in Constantine's time (Repugnante contra temetipsam tua faelicitate, saith Salvian, in his first book to the Catholic Church); but grace she shall be sure of here, "with persecution"; and glory hereafter without interruption. As for outward things, aut aderunt sane, aut non oberunt; either she shall have them, or be as well without them. Ver. 30. Esau his brother came in.] All too late. Detained he was by the devil, say the Hebrews, who not seldom makes a fool of hunters, and leads them about. A sweet providence of God there was in it, certainly, that he should come in as soon as Isaac had done and Jacob was gone, and no sooner. Like as there was in that which Master Fox {a} reports of Luther, that on a time, as he was sitting in a certain place upon his stool, a great stone there was in the vault, over his head; which being stayed miraculously so long as he was sitting, as soon as he was up, immediately fell upon the place where he sat, able to have crushed him in pieces. A warrant once came down, under seal, for the execution of the Lady Elizabeth: Stephen Gardiner was the engineer, and thought he had been sure of his prey, but God pulled the morsel out of his mouth; for one Master Bridges, mistrusting false play, presently made haste to the queen, who renounced and reversed it. {b} Another time, while Sir Henry Benningfield, her keeper, was at court, one Basset, a gentleman and a great favourite of Stephen Gardiner's, came, with twenty men well appointed, to Woodstock to have murdered her. But by God's great providence, Sir Henry had left so strict a charge behind him, that no living soul might have access unto the princess, upon what occasion soever, till his return, that they could not be admitted, whereby their bloody enterprise was utterly disappointed. "The Lord knoweth how to deliver his". {#2Pe 2:9} "He keepeth all their bones, not one of them is broken". {#Ps 34:20}

{b} England's Elizabeth, by Heywood.

Ver. 31. And he also had made savoury meat.] Esau's works here are better than Jacob's. Election is not of works, but of grace. {#Ro 9:11} Quis te discernit? saith the apostle. {#1Co 4:7} Grevinchovius, the Arminian, saucily answers, Ego meipsum dicerno. And surely, had the cause of our election been either by our faith, or good works foreseen, as the Papists and Arminians would have it, St Paul might have spared his question, or soon received a ready answer.

Ver. 32. Thy firstborn Esau.] But have you forgot that you sold your first birthright to your brother Jacob, who now hath outwitted you?

Ver. 33. And Isaac trembled very exceedingly.] The fear of God reined him in that he durst not reverse the blessing, though haply he had a mind to it; nay, he stablished it to Jacob here, and more advisedly in the next chapter. Noli peccare: nam Deus videt, Angeli astant, diabolus accusabit, conscientia testabitur, infernus cruciabit. A reverend and religious man had this written before his eyes, in his study, saith M. Gataker.

Ver. 34. He cried with a great and exceeding bitter cry.] Not for his sin, in selling the birthright; but for his loss, in missing the blessing: {a} though having sold the birthright, he had no right to the blessing. This is the guise of the ungodly. He cries, Perii; not Peccavi. If he "howl upon his bed," {#Ho 7:14} it is for corn and oil, as a dog tied up howls for his dinner: it never troubles him, that a good God is offended, which to an honest heart is the prime cause of greatest sorrow.

Ver. 35. Thy brother came with subtilty.] Junius observes, that Isaac here, to please his son, committeth some oversight, in transferring the fault upon Jacob. He might have seen how God chastised his seeking to cross the oracle, in the sin of Rebekah and Jacob, who beguiled him. But our minds are as ill set as our eyes, -neither of them apt to turn inwards.

Ver. 36. Is he not rightly named Jacob?] He cavils and quarrels at his brother's guile; at his father's store, Hast thou but one blessing? &c.; but not a word we hear of his own profaneness. How apt are men to mistake the cause of their sufferings, and to blame anything sooner than their own untowardness!

Ver. 37. I have made him thy Lord.] {See Trapp on "Ge 27:29"} This Isaac did, as he was the minister and prophet of God.

Ver. 38. Esau lifted up his voice, and wept.] Yet, "found no place for repentance". {#Heb 12:17} That is, he could not, by his tears, prevail with his father to reverse the blessing. See the fruit of God's holy fear. Moses' rod was not so famous for being turned into a serpent, for even the magicians did as much, as for devouring the magicians' rods: so the true fear of God is most eminent and effectual when set in emulation or opposition to other fears or carnal aims and affections.

Ver. 39. Answered and said unto him.] Dixit, non benedixit; quia potius fuit praedictio futurae conditionis, quam benedictio, saith Pareus. And whereas we read, "Behold, thy dwelling shall be the fatness of the earth, and of the dew of heaven"; Castalio renders it thus: Tua quidem sedes a terrae pinguitudine, et a supero coeli rore aberit. For Mishmanne, saith he, signifieth ab pinguitudine, sive sine pinguitudine: as it doth also, #Ps 109:24, "My flesh faileth from fatness," that is, for lack of fatness, or, without fatness." {a} So the sense he sets upon this text is, Thou shalt dwell far from the fatness of the earth, in a barren country, &c. For Isaac could not give Esau what he had given Jacob afore: and this was what Esau so grieved at, and threatened his brother for. Or if he could, what cause had Esau so to take on? why should it trouble me, that another partakes of the sunlight with me, when I have never the less? &c. Objection. But the apostle saith, "Isaac blessed Jacob and Esau". {#Heb 11:20} Solution. It was a blessing, no doubt, that Edom should shake off Israel's yoke; as it follows, #Ge 27:40, and happened, #2Ki 8:20.

Ver. 40. When thou shalt have the dominion.] Cum planxeris, saith Junius; when thou hast for some time undergone hard, troublesome, and lamentable servitude, the grief whereof thou dost greatly groan under; as in David's time, {#2Sa 8:14} who "cast his shoe over them". {#Ps 60:8} The Sodomites, those worst of men, were the first that we find in Scripture brought in bondage to others. {#Ge 14:4} When the Danes and other foreigners domineered in this kingdom, was it not a lamentable time? were not men's dearest lives sold as cheap as sparrows were among the Jews, five for two farthings? Did we but live a while in Turkey, Persia, yea, or but in France, saith one, a dram of that liberty we yet enjoy, would be as precious as a drop of cold water would have been to the rich man in hell, when he was so grievously tormented with those flames. Take we heed, lest for the abuse of this sweet mercy, God send in the Midianites to thresh out our grain, the Assyrians to drink up our milk, to make a spoil of our cattle, {#Jer 49:32} and to cause us to eat the bread of our souls in the peril of our lives, as our fathers did in Queen Mary's days.

Ver. 41. And Esau hated Jacob, &c.] Because God said, "Jacob have I loved." And, as all hatred is bloody, he resolves to be his death. "The righteous is abomination to the wicked," saith Solomon. {#Pr 29:27} Moab was irked because of Israel, or, did fret and vex at them, {#Nu 22:3,4} who yet passed by them in peace. But the old Serpent had set his limbs in them, transfused his venom into them: hence that deadly hatred that is and will be betwixt the godly and the wicked. Pliny speaks of the scorpion, that there is not one minute wherein he doth not put forth the sting: so doth that serpentine seed, acted by Satan. The panther so hates man, that he flies upon the very picture of a man, and tears it to pieces. So doth Satan and his imps upon the image of God, in whomsoever they find it. They "satanically hate me," saith David {#Ps 35:19} of his enemies. And seest thou thy persecutor full of rage? saith Bernard; know thou, that he is spurred on by the devil that rides him, {a} that acts and agitates him. {#Eph 2:2}

And Esau said in his heart.] Effutiverat etiam minaces voces; he had also bolted out some suspicious speeches, as our gunpowder traitors did whereby he was prevented.

The days of mourning for my father.] No matter for his mother: yet God saith, "Ye shall fear every man his mother and his father". {#Le 19:3} The mother is first mentioned, because usually most slighted. Luther thinks, he threateneth his father also, in these words; as if he should say, I will be avenged, by being the death of my brother, though it be to the breaking of my father's heart. {b} A bloody speech of a vindictive spirit, whom nothing would satisfy, but to be a double parricide.

I will slay my brother.] But threatened men live long: for even Isaac, who died soonest, lived above forty years beyond this. "My times are in thy hand," saith David. {#Ps 31:15}

Ver. 42. And these words of Esau, &c.] For he could not hold, as Absalom did, who, intending to murder Amnon, spake neither good nor evil to him. These still revenges are most dangerous, as a dog that barks not. That Esau vented himself in words, was a great mercy of God to Jacob. He thought nothing, good man, but followed his calling, not knowing his danger. But his provident mother heard about it, and took course to prevent it. So doth the sweet fatherly providence of God take care and course for the safety of his servants, when they are either ignorant or secure. Masses were said in Rome for the good success of the Powder Plot; but no prayers in England for our deliverance: and yet we were delivered. A sevenfold psalmody they had framed here, which secretly passed from hand to hand, with tunes set, to be sung for the cheering up of their wicked hearts, with an expectation, as they called it, of their day of Jubilee.

{a} The matter consisteth of railing upon King Edward, Queen Elizabeth, and King James; of petition, imprecation, prophecy, and praise. This Psalter is hard to be had: for they are taken up by the Papists as other books are, that discover their shame. But Mendoza, that liar (conveniunt rebus nomina saepe suis), sounded the triumph before the victory. That blind letter of theirs brought all to light, by the mere mercy of "the Father of lights," who was pleased to put a divine sentence into the mouth of the king. Sorex suo perit indicio. Hunc tibi pugionem mittit Senatus, dixit ille: detexit facinus fatuus, et non implevit. So here. See the like, #1Sa 19:2 Ac 9:24,23:16.

And she sent and called Jacob.] Why did she not call both her sons together, and make them friends, by causing the younger to resign up his blessing to the elder? Because she preferred heaven before earth, and eternity before any the world's amity or felicity whatsoever. The devil would fain compound with us when he cannot conquer us; as Pharaoh would let some go, not all; or if all, yet not far. Religiosum oportet esse, sed non religantem. He cannot abide this strictness, &c. But we must be resolute for God and heaven.

Better flee with Jacob, yea, die a thousand deaths, than, with the loss of God's blessing, to accord with Esau.

Ver. 43. Flee thou to Laban.] Flee then we may, when in danger of life; so it be with the wings of a dove, not with the pinions of a dragon. God must be trusted, not tempted. Means must be neither trusted nor neglected.

Ver. 44. Tarry with him a few days.] Heb., unos dies. Sed facti sunt viginti anni. She reckoned upon a few days; but it proved to be twenty whole years: and she never saw Jacob again, as the Hebrew doctors gather. Thus man purposeth, God disposeth. Some think she sent Deborah her nurse to fetch him home, who died on the return.

{#Ge 35:8}

Ver. 45. And he forget, &c.] While wrongs are remembered, they are not remitted. He forgives not, that forgets not. When an inconsiderate fellow had stricken Cato in the bath, and afterwards cried him mercy, he replied, I remember not that thou didst strike me. {a} Our Henry VI is said to have been of that happy memory, that he never forgot anything but injuries. Esau was none such: he was of that sort whom they call πικροχολοι, soon angry, but not soon pleased. His anger was like "coals of juniper," {#Ps 120:4} which burn extremely, last long (a whole twelve month about, as some write), and though they seem extinct, revive again:—

“Flamma redardescit, quae modo nullas fuit.”—Ovid.

{a} Sen., De Ira., lib. i.

Ver. 46. I am weary of my life, &c.] A wise woman, saith an interpreter, not willing to grieve her husband, she conceals from him Esau's malicious hatred of Jacob, and pretends another cause of sending him away, to take him a fit wife. Let women learn not to exasperate their husbands with quick words or froward deeds; but study their quiet. Livia, wife to Augustus, {a} being asked how she could so absolutely rule her husband, answered, By not prying into his actions, and dissembling his affections, &c.

Chapter 28

Ver. 1. Isaac called Jacob, and blessed him.] He doth not rate him, or rail at him. Anger must have an end. The prodigal's father met him and kissed him, when one would have thought he should rather have kicked him and killed him. Pro peccato magno, paululum supplicii satis est patri .{ a }

{a} Terent.

Ver. 2. Arise, go to Padanaram.] Jacob was no sooner blest, but banished. So our Saviour was no sooner out of the water of baptism, and had heard, "This is my beloved Son," &c., but he was presently in the fire of temptation, and heard, "If thou be the Son," &c. {#Mt 3:1-4:11} When Hezekiah had set all in good order, {#2Ch 31} then up came Sennacherib with an army. {#2Ch 32:1} God puts his people to it; and often, after sweetest feelings.

Ver. 3. And God Almighty bless thee.] Here Isaac establishes the blessing to Jacob, lest haply he should think, that the blessing so got, would be of no force to him. God passeth by the evil of our actions, and blesseth the good.

Ver. 4. And give thee the blessing of Abraham.] Here he is made "heir of the blessing," as are also all true Christians. {#1Pe 3:9} Caesar, when he was sad, said to himself, Cogita te esse Caesarem :so, think thou art an heir of heaven, and be sad if thou canst.

Ver. 5. Isaac sent away Jacob.] With his staff only, {#Ge 32:10} and to "serve for a wife". {#Ho 12:12} It was otherwise, when a wife was provided for Isaac. But Jacob went as privately as he could; "he fled into Syria," probably, that his brother Esau might not know of his journey, and wait him a shrewd turn by the way. Theodoret saith, it was that the divine providence might be the better declared toward him, no better attended or accommodated.

Ver. 6. When Esau saw, &c.] But he was ever too late (Οψινοος), and therefore what he did was to little purpose. An overlate sight is good neither in piety nor policy. They will find it so that are semper victuri ,{ a } and never can find time to begin till they are shut out of heaven for their trifling. How many have we known taken away in their offers and essays; before they had prepared their hearts to cleave to God!

Ver. 7. And was gone to Padanaram.] Which was distant from Beersheba almost five hundred miles. This was the father of the that family of travellers; and his affliction is our instruction. {#Ro 15:4 1Co 10:11}

Ver. 8. Pleased not Isaac his father.] Whether himself or they pleased God or not, was no part of his care. God is not in all the wicked man's thoughts. {#Ps 10:4} What he strives for is, to be well esteemed of by others, to have the good will and good word of his neighbours and friends, such especially as he hopes for benefit by. Thus Julian counterfeited zeal, till he had got the empire: afterwards, of Julian, he became Idolian, as Nazianzen saith he was commonly called, because he set open again the idols' temples, which had been shut up by Constantine, and restored them to the heathens.

Ver. 9. Then went Esau unto Ishmael.] Stulta haec fuit κακοζηλια, et hypocrisis , saith Pareus rightly. Apes will be imitating men: spiders have their webs, and wasps their honeycombs. Hypocrites will needs do something, that they may seem to be somebody: but, for want of an inward principle, they do nothing well: they amend one error with another, as Esau here; and as Herod prevents perjury by murder. Thus, while they shun the sands, they rush upon the rocks, and while they keep off the shallows, they fall into the whirlpool. {a} Sed nemo ira perplexus tenetur inter duo vitia, quin exitus pateat absque tertio , saith an ancient.

Ver. 10. And Jacob went out from Beersheba.] A long journey, but nothing so long as Christ took, from heaven to earth, to serve for a wife, his Church; who yet is more coy than Rachel, and can hardly be spoken with, though he stand clapping and calling, "Open to me, my sister, my spouse." Stupenda dignatio , saith one; a wonderful condescending.

Ver. 11. And he lighted upon a certain place.] Little thinking to have found heaven there. Let this comfort travellers, and friends that part with them. Jacob never lay better than when he lay outdoors; nor yet slept sweeter than when he laid his head upon a stone. {a} He was a rich man's son, and yet inured to take harsh situation.

Ver. 12. Behold a ladder.] Scala est, piorum in hoc mundo peregrinatio , saith Pareus, after Junius. But besides this interpretation, our Saviour offereth us another, {#Joh 1:51} applying it to himself, the true ladder of life, per quem solum in coelum ascendere possimus . He that will go up any other way must, as the emperor once said, erect a ladder and go up alone. He touched heaven, in respect of his Deity; earth, in respect of his humanity; and joined earth to heaven, by reconciling man to God. Gregory speaks elegantly of Christ, γεφυρωσας, that he joined heaven and earth together, as with a bridge; being the only true Pontifex , or bridge-maker. Heaven is now open and obvious, to them that acknowledge him their sole Mediator, and lay hold, by the hand of faith, on his merits, as the rungs of this heavenly ladder: these only ascend; that is, their consciences are drawn out of the depths of despair, and put into heaven, as it were, by pardon, and peace with God, rest sweetly in his bosom, calling him, Abba, Father, and have the holy angels ascending to report their needs, and descending, as messengers of mercies. We must also ascend, saith St Bernard, by those two feet, as it were, -meditation and prayer: yea, there must be continual ascensions in our hearts, as that martyr {a} said: and as Jacob saw the angels ascending, and descending, and none standing still; so must we be active, and abundant in God's work, "as knowing that our labour is not in vain in the Lord": {#1Co 15:58} and that, non proficere est deficere ,{b} not to go forward is to go backward.

{a} M. Philpot.

{b} Bern.

Ver. 13. I am the Lord God of Abraham, &c.] What an honour is this to Abraham, that God was not ashamed to be called his and his son's God! Eusebius the historian, was called Eusebius Pamphili, for the love that was between him and the martyr Pamphilus, as St Jerome testifieth. "Friend to Sir Philip Sidney," is engraven upon a nobleman's {a} tomb in this kingdom, as one of his titles. Behold the goodness of God, stooping so low as to style himself "the God of Abraham"; and Abraham again, "the friend of God."

{a} The old Lord Brook.

Ver. 14, 15. And thy seed shall be as the dust.] Against his fourfold cross, here is a fourfold comfort, as Pererius well observeth, a plaster as broad as the sore, and sovereign for it. (1.) Against the loss of his friends, "I will be with thee": (2.) Of his country; "I will give thee this land": (3.) Against his poverty; "Thou shalt spread abroad, to the east, west," &c. (4.) His solitariness and aloneness; angels shall attend thee, and "thy seed shall be as the dust," &c. And "who can count the dust of Jacob?" {#Nu 23:10} saith Balaam, that spellman of the devil, as one calls him. Whereunto we may add that which surpasseth and comprehendeth all the rest; "In thee, and thy seed, shall all the families of the earth be blessed." Now whatsoever God spake here with Jacob, he spake with us, as well as with him, saith Hosea. {#Ho 12:4}

Ver. 15. {See Trapp on "Ge 28:14"}

Ver. 16. And I knew it not,] viz., That God is graciously present in one place, as well as in another. Our ignorance and unbelief is freely to be confessed and acknowledged. Thus David; {#Ps 73:22} Agur. {#Pr 30:2} Pray for me, saith Father Latimer to his friend; pray for me, I say: for I am sometimes so fearful, that I would creep into a mouse hole. {a} And in a certain sermon; {b} I myself, saith he, have used, in mine earnest matters, to say, "Yea, by St Mary"; which indeed is naught.

{a} In his letter to Ridley, Act. and Mon., 1565.

{b} Sermon in 3d Sunday in Advent.

Ver. 17. How dreadful is this place!] The place of God's public worship is a place of angels and archangels, saith Chrysostom; {a} it is the kingdom of God; it is very heaven. What wonder, then, though Jacob be afraid, albeit he saw nothing but visions of love and mercy? "In thy fear will I worship toward thy holy temple," saith David. {#Ps 5:7} The very Turk, when he comes into his temple, lays by all his state, and hath none to attend him all the while. Omnino opertet nos, orationis tempore, curiam intrare coelestem, saith St Bernard, {b} in qua Rex regum stellato sedet solio, & c. Quanta ergo cum reverentia, quanto timore, quanta illuc humilitate accedere debet e palude sua procedens et repens vilis ranuncula? Our addresses must be made unto God with the greatest reverence that is possible.

{b} Bern., De Divers., 25.

Ver. 18. And set it up for a pillar.] The better to perpetuate the memory of that mercy he had there received; and that it might be a witness against him, if hereafter he failed of fulfilling his vow. It is not amiss, in making holy vows, to take some friend to witness, that, in case we be not careful to fulfil them, may mind us, and admonish us of our duty in that behalf. Jacob, that was here so free, when the matter was fresh, to promise God a chapel at Bethel, was afterwards backward enough; and stood in need that God should pull him by the ear, once and again, with a "Go up to Bethel," and punish him for his delays, in the rape of his daughter, cruelty of his sons, &c.

Ver. 19. Bethel,] i.e., The house of God; yet afterwards for the calf worship there set up by Jeroboam, it became Bethaven. {#Ho 4:15} See the note there. God grant that Anglia, once called Regnum Dei, never become Thronus Satanae, the place "where Satan's seat is". {#Re 2:13} And let all true hearted Englishmen with one mind and one mouth say, Amen and Amen.

Ver. 20. And Jacob vowed a vow.] The first holy vow that ever we read of: whence Jacob also is called the father of vows; which, out of this text, may be thus described. A vow is nothing else but a religious promise made to God in prayer, and grounded upon the promise of God; whereby we tie ourselves, by way of thankfulness, to do something that is lawful, and within our power; with condition of obtaining some further favour at the hands of God. Thus Jacob vows to God only: he is the sole object of fear, therefore also of vows. See them set together, #Ps 76:11. Next, he prays when he vows. Ευχη ετ προσευχη: a vow and a prayer are of near and necessary affinity. See #Ps 61:8 Jud 11:30,31. That was a blasphemous vow of Pope Julius, that said, he would have his will, al despito di Dio. {a} And not unlike of Solyman the great Turk, in a speech to his soldiers: So help me great Mohammed, I vow, in despite of Christ and John, in short time to set up mine ensigns with the Moon, in the middle of the market place in Rhodes. {b} Jacob, as he vowed only by the fear of his father Isaac, so he presented his vow in a holy prayer, not in a hellish execration. I add, that it is a promise grounded upon God's promise; so was Jacob's here, in all points, as is to be seen if compared with #Ge 28:15. Next, I say, that by this vow we bind ourselves, &c. Not as casting any new snare upon ourselves thereby; but rather a new provocation to the payment of an old debt. For what can Jacob vow to God that he owes him not beforehand, without any such obligation? This he doth, too, by way of thankfulness; as doth likewise David in #Ps 116:8,9, and otherwhere. And that which he voweth is lawful and possible: not as theirs was, that vowed Paul's death, {#Ac 23:14} or as Julian the apostate's, who, going against the Persians, made this vow; that if he sped well, he would offer the blood of Christians. Or as that Constable of France, who covenanted with God, that if he had the victory at St Quintin's, he would attack Geneva. {c} These men thought they had made a great good bargain with God; but did not his hot wrath kindle against them? So Gerald Earl of Desmond's Irishmen were justly consumed with famine and sword, which had barbarously vowed to forswear God, before they would forsake him. {d} Lastly, all this that Jacob doth, is on condition of some further favour: "If God will be with me, and will preserve me, and provide for me," &c. All which he doubts not of, as having a promise; but yet helps forward his faith by this holy vow; then shall God have the utmost, both in inward and outward worship: for God shall be his God; and he will build him a house, and pay him tithes, &c.

And will give me bread to eat.] "Having food and raiment," saith the apostle, "let us therewith be content." Nature is content with little; {e} grace with less. Insaniae damnandi sunt, qui tam multa, tam anxie congerunt, quum sit tam paucis opus, saith Ludovicus Vives. Ολιγοδεης ο σπουδαιος, saith Clem. Alex. Cibus et potus sunt divitiae Christianorum, saith Jerome. Bread and water, with the gospel, are good cheer, saith Greenham. Cui cum paupertate bene convenit, pauper non est. {f} The disciples are bid pray for bread, not biscuit: they dined, on a Sabbath day, with grain rubbed in their hands, with broiled fish, &c. Luther made many a meal of a herring; {g} Junius, of an egg. One told a philosopher, If you will be content to please Dionysius, you need not feed upon green herbs. He replied, And if you be content to feed upon green herbs, you need not please Dionysius.

Ver. 1. Then Jacob went on his journey.] Heb., Lifted up his feet: indefessi cursoris instar ; as it were a generous and manly horse, refreshed with his wait by the way, he went lightly on his long journey. "The joy of the Lord was" Jacob's "strength": {#Ne 8:10} it became as oil; wherewith his soul being supplied, he was made more lithe, nimble, and fit for action. He that is once soaked in this oil, and bathed, with Jacob, in this bath at Bethel, will cheerfully do or suffer aught for God's sake. Tua praesentia, Domine, Laurentio ipsam craticulam dulcem fecit , saith one. {a} Gaudebat Crispina cum tenebatur; cum audiebatur; cum damnabatur; cum ducebatur , saith Austin. So did many of the Marian martyrs, as were easy to instance. Bernard gives the reasons: The cross is oiled, {b} saith he; and, by the grace of the Spirit helping our infirmities, it is made, not only light, but sweet; and not only not troublous and terrible, but desirable and delectable. From the delectable orchard of the Leonine prison: so that Italian martyr Algerius dated his letter. {c} Another Dutch martyr, feeling the flame to come to his beard, Ah, said he, what a small pain is this, to be compared to the glory to come! {d} Let us pluck up our feet, pass from strength to strength, and take long and lusty strides toward heaven. It is but a little afore us; and a ready heart rids the way apace.

Ver. 2. Three flocks of sheep lying by it.] Semblably Christ, the chief Shepherd, "feeds" and "leads his flock to the lively fountains of waters"; {#Re 7:16,17 Ps 23:2} commanding his under shepherds, the ministers, to roll away the stone, by opening the promises, that his sheep may drink "water with joy out of those wells of salvation".

Ver. 3. And they put the stone again upon the well's mouth.] To keep the waters clean and filth free. The Turks had procured some traitor in Scodra, where Scanderbeg ruled, to poison the town well. {a} The Pope hath endeavoured the like, by pouring out his deadly poison "upon the rivers and fountains of water" (the Scriptures) "that they might become blood". {#Re 16:4} Witness that heathenish decree of the Council of Trent; equalising, if not preferring, the Apocrypha to the canonical Scripture; the vulgar translation to the original; traditions to Holy Writ; and affirming that the Holy Ghost himself is not to be heard, though he bring never so plain Scripture for himself; nisi accedat meretricis purpuratae effrons interpretatio , saith a learned doctor, unless the Pope may interpret it. {b} Horrible blasphemy! Had not God's servants need to see to the cleansing of this well, and the keeping it free from the tramlings and defilements of this foul beast? The Council of Constance comes in with a Non-obstante against Christ's institution, withholding the cup from the sacrament. {c} Before that the gospel was corrected, amended, and expounded, say the Canonists, there were many things permitted (as priests' marriage); which now, since the time is come that all things are made perfect, are clearly abolished and taken away. When the Hussites denied to admit any doctrine that could not be proved by the Holy Scriptures, the Council of Basil answered them, by Cardinal Cusanus, that the Scriptures were not of the essence of the Church, but of the well being of it only; that the Word of God was so much the better taught the people, by how much it had less of the Scriptures in it; that the Scripture was to be interpreted according to the current rite of the Church; {d} qua mutante sententiam, mutetur et Dei iudicium . Can any hear this, and his ears not tingle? This was then the Pope's express: for in Popish councils, the bishops and others have no more to do, but simply, inclinato capite , to say Placet to that which in the Pope's name is propounded to them: as nothing was resolved by the Trent fathers, but all in Rome: whence grew that blasphemous proverb, which I abhor to relate. {e} This council was that sea, upon which the second angel poured out his vial, {#Re 16:3} and it became as the blood of a dead man; and every living soul died in that sea. Cavete .

Ver. 4. And Jacob said.] These petty passages are recorded, when the acts of mighty monarchs are unmentioned; to show God's dear respect to his poor servants. The lion and eagle were not offered in sacrifice as the lamb and dove were. Mr Fox being asked, whether he knew such an honest poor man, answered, I remember him well: I tell you, I forget lords and ladies, to remember such. So doth God.

Ver. 5. {See Trapp on "Ge 29:4"}

Ver. 6. And, behold, Rachel his daughter.] Note, that our least and ordinary actions are ordered and directed by God; as Nathanael's being under the fig tree, {#Joh 1:48} &c. Birds flying seem to fly at liberty, yet are guided by an overruling hand of Heaven: so are our thoughts, affections, actions. Sic curat Deus universos, quasi singulos; sic singulos, quasi solos, saith Augustine, Rachel, by a divine providence, meets Jacob at the well: so doth the Church (that shepherdess, #So 1:7,8) meet Christ in his ordinances. {#Ps 23:2,3}

Ver. 7. Neither is it time, &c.] Time is a precious commodity, and must be thriftily husbanded. The common complaint is, We want time: but the truth is, we do not so much want, as waste it, as the heathen observed: {a} which they that do, are wastefullest prodigals: for, of all other possessions, two may be had together; but two moments of time cannot be possessed together. This made the philosopher so parsimonious of time: Nullus mihi per otium exit dies -I cannot afford to cast away a day; pattem noctium studii vindico -part of the night I take for my studies. So did Charles the Great; and after him, Charles the Fifth, who, when at any time in the field against the enemy, spent what hours he could spare in the study of the mathematics. He had, for that purpose, as his instructor, Turrianus of Cremona ever with him. As if he had been of Cato's mind, {b} that great men must be able to give good account, non minus otii, quam negotii; no less of their leisure, than of their labour. His constant custom was, saith Cicero, {c} to call to mind, at evening, what thing soever he had seen, read, or done, that day. King Alfred, that reigned here (Anno Dom. 872), is said to have cast the natural day into three parts: eight hours he spent in praying, study, and writing; eight in the service of his body; eight in the affairs of state. Which spaces (having then no other engine for it) he measured by a great wax light, divided into so many parts; receiving notice by the keeper thereof, as the various hours passed in the burning. {d}

Ver. 8. We cannot, until all the flocks.] As we are not, by the example of these shepherds, to enterprise things above our strength, {#Ps 131:1} so neither to be discouraged by every difficulty; but to lend, and borrow help one of another; each man "pleasing his neighbour for his good, and serving him in love, to edification". {#Ro 14:1,2}

Ore Lutherus oves, flore Melancthon apes .* ”

Ver. 9. For she kept them.] Leah might be left at home, for the tenderness of her eyes. A man is to see that all under his roof have a fit employment; as the master gave each servant his task, his talent, {#Mt 25:15} according to his various abilities, secundum peritiam et potentiam . And everyone hath some excellency or other in him, can we but find and improve it. God hath dispensed his gifts diversely, for the common benefit. And as, in the same pasture, the ox can find fodder, the hound a hare, the stork a lizard, the fair maid flowers: so there is none so worthless, but something may be made of him; some good extracted out of the unlikeliest. Yea, wisdom is such an elixir, as by contaction (if there be any disposition of goodness in the same metal) it will render it of the property.

Ver. 10. Went near, and rolled the stone, &c.] If he did this alone, as the text seemeth to say, it was very strange. He might put forth his strength, to gratify Rachel, and to insinuate himself into her love.

Ver. 11. Lifted up his voice, and wept.] For joy, that he had so happily lighted upon his kinswoman. It argued also his great affection, and passion of mind, for her sake; love is ecstatical; nec iuris se sinit esse sui. Animus est ubi amat, non ubi animat. {a} He kisseth Rachel, as if he would have transfused his soul into her: and wept aloud; not as those vain lovers, who ut flerent, oculos erudiere suos :nor as the Brasileans, {b} whose faculty is such, that tears are for a present salutation, and as soon gone, as if they had said, How do you? but as Joseph wept over Benjamin; the prodigal's father over him, &c.

Ver. 12. That he was her father's brother.] And therefore made so bold with her, upon no further acquaintance. His kisses were not unchaste, but modest; such as were common among kindred. And yet here care must be taken that Satan corrupt not our courtesy, or more intimate acquaintance, with never so near an alliance. Flies may settle upon the sweetest perfumes, and putrify them. St Paul saw cause to exhort Timothy (that mortified young man) to exhort the younger women, "as sisters with all purity"; {#1Ti 5:2} because, through the subtilty of Satan, and the deceit of his own heart, even whilst he was exhorting them to chastity, some unchaste motions might steal upon him. A great deal of caution doth no hurt. {a}

Ver. 13. He ran to meet him, and embraced him.] All in hypocrisy, as the Hebrews hold. There be many Labans: hot at first, cold at last; friendly in the beginning, froward in the end. A free friend at first, a kind friend to the last, is rara avis in terris ." Trust not in a friend, put not confidence in a brother," &c. {#Mic 7:5} Look rather unto the Lord, as the Church doth there: he is the only one dependable, as they say, and will never fail us; when the world, as Laban, will show itself at parting, if not before.

He told Laban all these things.] Why and how he came so poorly to him, whereas Abram's servant, coming upon a like errand, came far better attended and appointed; which was the thing that Laban likely looked after when he ran out to meet Jacob.

Ver. 14. Surely thou art my bone, &c.] Good words cost nothing; and the veriest countrymen are commonly freer of them than of real courtesies. Pertinax the emperor was surnamed Χρηστολογος, quid blandus esset, magis quam benignus . But that of Nero was abominable, who, the very day before he killed his mother, most lovingly embraced her, kissed her eyes and hands, and, accompanying her when she departed, used these sweet words: All happiness attend you, my good mother; for in you I live, and by you I reign. {a} "As a potsherd covered with silver dross, so are burning lips and a wicked heart". {#Pr 26:23}

Ver. 15. Shouldst thou therefore serve me.] He pretends love and equity to his covetous aims and reaches. Candid he would needs seem (according to his name) {a} and considerate. But as blackmoors have their teeth only white, so is Laban's kindness from the teeth outward. He was as a whited wall or painted sepulchre, or an Egyptian temple—fair and specious without, but within, some cat, rat, or calf there idolised and adored. Hypocrites, whatever they pretend, have a hawk's eye to praise or profit: they must be gainers by their piety or humanity, which must be another Diana, to bring gain to the craftsman. The eagle, when she soareth highest, hath an eye ever to the prey.

Ver. 16. The name of the elder was Leah,] i.e., Weak and wearish, by her natural constitution {a} No marvel, therefore, though she were weak-sighted, as #Ge 29:17.

Ver. 17. Leah was tender-eyed.] Purlblind or squint, as one {a} interprets it. Now, a froward look and squint eyes, saith the historian, {b} are the certain notes of a nature to be suspected. The Jerusalem Targum tells us, that her eyes were tender with weeping and praying. Mary Magdalene is famous for her tears; and Christ was never so near her as when she could not see him for weeping. After which she spent (as some report) thirty years in Gallia Narbonensi, in weeping for her sins.

But Rachel was beautiful, &c.] Plato calls beauty the principality of nature; Aristotle, a greater commendation than all epistles. {See Trapp on "Ge 24:16"}

{b} Turk. Hist., fol. 483.

Ver. 18. I will serve thee seven years.] He had nothing to endow her with; he would therefore earn her with his hard labour: which, as it shows Laban's churlishness to suffer it, and his baseness to make a prize and a prey of his two daughters, so it sets forth Jacob's meekness, poverty, patience, and hard condition here, mentioned many years after by the prophet Hosea. {#Ho 12:12} He was a man of many sorrows; and from him therefore the Church hath her denomination: neither were the faithful ever since called Abrahamites but Israelites.

Ver. 19. It is better that I give her to thee.] Indeed, he sold her to him for seven years' service. This was Laban, or Nabal, choose you which. Their names were not more like than their conditions. Laban's daughters and Nabal's wife were alike handled by their unkind parents. "He hath sold us," said they, "and hath also quite devoured our money". {#Ge 31:15} And, He hath married me, might Abigail have said, to the money, and not to the man; and though he named me his joy, yet he hath caused me much sorrow. How many a child is so cast away by the covetous parents! It was better with Laban's two daughters; but no thanks to their father.

Ver. 20. And they seemed unto him but a few days.] And yet lovers' hours are full of eternity. But love facilitated the service, and made the time seem short. {a} Should anything seem hard or heavy to us, so we may have heaven at length? The affliction is but light and momentary; the glory massive, and for all eternity. Hold out, Faith and Patience. Love is a passion, and seen most in suffering; "much water cannot quench it". {#So 8:7} Nay, like fire, it devours all delays and difficulties, spending and exhaling itself, as it were, in continual wishes to be at home, to be with Christ, which is "far, far the better," (πολλω μαλλον, κρεισσον, #Php 1:23). Oh, let the eternal weight of the crown weigh down with us the light and momentary weight of the cross.

Ver. 21. Give me my wife, for my days, &c.] Jacob had served out his time, and now demands his due. David also is said to have "served the will of God, for his own age"; {#Ac 13:36} and John Baptist to have "fulfilled his course". {#Ac 13:25} "Moses also was faithful in all God's house, as a servant". {#Heb 3:2} Yet these could not call for heaven as their wages, because they were (as the best are, at their best) but "unprofitable servants," {#Lu 17:10} and did not, in any measure, what their duty was to do. We have not a bit of bread of our own earning; and are therefore taught to pray, "Give us this day our daily bread": we get our living by begging. Our best plea is, Domine, non sum dignus, nihi—lominus tamen sum indigens :Lord, I am not worthy, but I am needy, as Pomeran said. Then will God, of his free grace, supply all our necessities, and "afterwards receive us to glory." He will bring us into the bride chamber of heaven, and there will he give us his loves. He will let out himself into us, to our infinite delight. Of all natural delights, that of marriage is the greatest, because there is the greatest communication of one creature to another; and according to the degrees of communication are the degrees of delight. Think the same in the mystical marriage.

Ver. 22. And made a feast.] Never more seasonable, surely, than at the recovery of the lost rib. The wedding day is called, "The day of the rejoicing of a man's heart". {#So 3:11} Our Saviour graced such a feast with his presence and first miracle: he supplied them with wine to glad their hearts; not with a little, for health's sake only, but with a great quantity, for sober delight and honest affluence. It is noted as an absurd thing in Samson's wife, that "she wept all the days of the feast". {#Jud 14:17} A feast, then, there was at Samson's wedding, and of seven days' continuance. And so there was at Jacob's, as may be gathered out of #Ge 29:27. "Fulfil her week," saith Laban; to wit, of banquet or bride-ale, as we call it: only that of Chrysostom comes here in fitly, De nuptiis Iacobi legimus; de choreis et tripudiis non legimus :of Jacob's wedding feast we read; but of dancing and dalliance, of tracing and tripping on the toe, we read not. In maxima libertate, minima licentia , saith Salvian. Merry we may be, at such a time, but in the Lord: eat and drink we may, but "before the Lord". {#De 12:7} The old world may be a warning to us: they "fed without fear"; {#Jude 1:12} and therefore perished without favour. Let such look to it, as "live in pleasure, and are wanton"; {#Jas 5:5} that eat to excess, and drink to drunkenness, accounting nothing mirth, but madness; no bread sweet, but stolen; no such pleasure, as to have the devil their playfellow; so "nourishing their hearts as in a day of slaughter," or belly-cheer, {#Jas 5:5} and swallowing down those murdering morsels now, that they must digest in hell. {a}

Ver. 23. He took Leah his daughter.] The elder, for the younger; by a like fraud, as Rebekah his mother had not long before, in a cunning disguise, substituted him, the younger son, for the elder. God pays us often in our own coin, {a} and measures to us again the self-same measure that we have meted to others. {#Mt 7:2} Herod mocked the wise men, and is mocked of them. {#Mt 2:16} And how oft do we see those that would beguile others, punished with illusion? God usually retaliates, and proportions jealousy to jealousy, provocation to provocation, {#De 32:21} number to number, {#Isa 65:11,12} choice to choice, {#Isa 66:3,4} device to device, {#Mic 2:1,3} frowardness to frowardness, {#Ps 18:26} contrariety to contrariety. {#Le 26:21} Even the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth, {#Pr 11:31} as was Jacob.

Ver. 24. Zilpah his maid.] Who, very likely, was of the conspiracy.

Ver. 25. In the morning, behold, it was Leah.] A foul disappointment: but so the world ever serves us. The Hebrews have taken up this passage for a proverb, when a man's hopes are deceived in a wife, or anything else, wherein he looked for content and comfort.

Ver. 26. It must not be so done in our country.] A sorry excuse; but better, he thought, than none at all. A subtle fox he was, and far too hard for honest Jacob, who was "simple to evil," but of a large reach for heaven. "The children of this world are wise in their generation"; and so is the fox in his: but God will take them in their own craft, as wild beasts in a snare, "made and taken to be destroyed". {#1Co 3:19,20} {a} Let us take heed how we deal with them, and make our bargains as wise as we can. Crebro nobis, sicut Ciceroni ,{ b} vafer ille Siculus insusurret Epicharmi cantilenam illam suam , Νυφε και μεμνησο απινειν. "We have not received the spirit of this world"; {#1Co 2:12} we cannot skill of the devil's depths: but we have received a better thing; "the Spirit which searcheth all, yea, the deep things of God". {#1Co 2:10}

Ver. 27. We will give thee this also.] See here the guise of wicked and deceitful men: when one fetch has been born in their minds, they devise another; and make no end of overreaching; there never wanting (as the proverb hath it) a new knack in a knave's cap. They will search the devil's skull, but they will find out one slippery trick or another, to cheat and go beyond those they deal with. But let them look to it; "God is the avenger of all such," {#1Th 4:6} whose, not heads only, but "bellies prepare deceit". {#Job 15:35}

Ver. 28. And Jacob did so.] A mirror of patience; which, in Jacob here, had line and rope, "her perfect work"; showing him to be "perfect and entire, wanting nothing". {#Jas 1:3,4} Godly people can bear wrongs best of any: compel them to go a mile, they will be content, if it may do good, to go twain; {#Mt 5:41} yea, as far as the shoes of "the preparation of the gospel of peace" {#Eph 6:15} will carry them.

Ver. 29. Bilhah his handmaid.] Who afterward played false play with her master and husband, and incestuously lay with Reuben.

Ver. 30. And he went in also unto Rachel.] Which incestuous fact cannot ordinarily be justified, nor may at all be imitated. Wicked Julia, soliciting Caracalla to incestuous marriage with her, when he answered, Vellem si liceret, replied impudently (and is therefore, by very heathens, condemned extremely), Si libet, licet: an nescis te Imperatorem esse, leges dare non accipere ?& c. Herod, for marrying his brother's wife, was reprov'd, and punished.

Ver. 31. When the Lord saw that Leah was hated.] That is, less loved and respected. So God hated Esau; and accounts the neglects of wife or husband, no better than hatred. {#Eph 5:25}

But Rachel was barren.] God commonly crosseth men's preposterous affections, that he may draw all love to himself. Jonah loseth his gourd, and we our dearest delights, by overloving them.

Ver. 32. Therefore my husband will love me.] This was her greatest care (and is every good wife's)—to "please her husband," {#1Co 7:14} and to win his love.

Ver. 33. And she conceived again.] God usually heapeth his favours upon those whom others slight, and look aloof on.

Ver. 34. And she conceived again.] So, what she wanted in beauty, she had in fecundity or fruitfulness: and this redounded to God's greater glory, by Leah's thankfulness; who might say—

“ Si mihi difficilis formam natura negavit, Laude Dei, formae, damna rependo, meae. ”
- Sappho, apud Ovid.

Ver. 35. Now will I praise the Lord.] So she had done before, at the birth of her other children: but now she would do it anew, upon the receipt of a new mercy: according to that, "Sing unto the Lord a new song." {#Isa 42:10} A good woman she seems to have been; and the better, because not so well beloved of her husband; which she could not but see to be just upon her, for her consenting (with her father) to the sin of deceiving Jacob. #Ge 30:1

Ver. 1. Give me children, or else I die.] She was sick of the fret; and could not live, unless Jacob could cure her. "Envy is the rottenness of the bones," {#Pr 14:30} and ever devours itself first; as the worm doth the nut out of which it groweth.

Ver. 2. And Jacob's anger was kindled.] He that will be angry, and not sin, must not be angry, but for sin. Reprove thy wife, thou mayest; chide her, thou mayest not, unless the offence be against God, as here, and #Job 2:10. And here a man may carry a severe rebuke in his countenance, as God doth, #Ps 80:16, though he say nothing: he may chide with his looks only.

Am I in God's stead?] Who carrieth this key under his own girdle; as is aforenoted. "Lo, children are a heritage that cometh of the Lord," as David {#Ps 127:3} once sang for Solomon, who had the experience of it: for of so many wives, he had but one son, that we read of; and he was none of the wisest. {#Ec 2:19} This Solomon foresaw, and bewailed, as one unhappy bird, in his nest of vanities.

Ver. 3. Behold my maid Bilhah.] Given her by her father on purpose, it may seem; that in case she proved barren, she might be built up by her. So Stratonice, the wife of King Dejotarus, being barren, gave secretly her maid Electra unto her husband; by whom she had an heir to the crown, as Plutarch relateth.

Ver. 4. And Jacob went in unto her.] Merely to please his wife, he yielded to that which he could not but disallow as evil. Heed must be taken that the hen crow not, that the wife rule not. This γυναικοκρατεία was a part of Jacob's punishment.

Ver. 5. And bare Jacob a son.] Whom Rachel might adopt, and dandle "on her knees," as #Ge 30:3.

Ver. 6. God hath judged me, &c.] A vile profanation of God's holy name, under an opinion and pretence of piety. So they that, brow-beating their brethren, better than themselves, said, "Let the Lord be glorified"; {#Isa 66:5} and it grew to a proverb, In nomine Domini incipit omne malum. The conspirators in Edward VI's time endorsed their letters with "Glory be to God on high, on earth peace," &c. {a} A fair glove drawn upon a foul hand.

{a} Act. and Mon.

Ver. 8. With great wrestlings.] Heb., With wrestlings of God; that is, with excellent and most earnest wrestlings and endeavours; by storms of sighs, and showers of tears. {a} Stupidity is the low extreme, like the dull earth. Despair is as much too high, as it were in the element of fire, which scorches up the spirit. The middle region of air and water, sighs and tears, is the best.

Ver. 9. Left bearing,] viz., Till she began again, #Ge 30:17.

Ver. 10. Bare Jacob a son.] Here Jacob was too indulgent both to his wives and to himself.

Ver. 11. A troop cometh.] Or, as some render it, Good luck cometh; compare #Isa 65:11. Theodoret saith Leah speaks thus, as one that had been profanely bred; and could not so suddenly forget her old language.

Ver. 13. For the daughters will call me blessed.] This phrase the Virgin Mary maketh use of, {#Lu 1:48} as she doth also of various other Scripture phrases, in that holy song of hers: which showeth that she was very well versed in the Book of God.

Ver. 14. And found mandrakes.] Some render it, lovely flowers; others, violets; others, lilies; others again, cherries of Jury; the Greek, and most interpreters, mandrakes, or mandrake apples. It is a plant very amiable, according to the name, {a} both for sweetness of smell, {#So 7:13} the loveliness of the flower resembling a man; and for the peculiar virtue it hath, to cause sleep, affection, and conception.

{a} 717א'ם— Vide Drus. in fine Com. Ruth.

Ver. 15. Therefore he shall lie with thee, &c.] Thus he is bought and sold by his emulous wives: which was no small affliction to him, and a punishment of his polygamy.

Ver. 16. Thou must come in unto me.] These contentions, saith an interpreter, {a} were not merely carnal, but partly also for desire of God's ordinary blessing in propagation; and chiefly, for the increase of the Church, and obtaining the promised Seed for salvation.

{a} Ainsw.

Ver. 17. God hearkened unto Leah.] She prayed then, and invited God to her marriage bed. This was praiseworthy in her, howsoever.

Ver. 18. God hath given me my hire.] Wherein she was much mistaken, as having not her "senses exercised to discern good and evil." Here she rejoiceth in that for which she should have repented; and was in the common error of measuring and judging of things by the success; {a} as if God were not many times angry with men, though they outwardly prosper. Thus Dionysius, after the spoils of an idol temple, finding the winds favourable, Lo, said he, how the gods approve of sacrilege!

Ver. 20. God hath endued me with a good dowry.] That is, as it proves, though children are dulcis acerbitas, saith one; certain cares, but uncertain comforts, saith another; {a} yet all men desire them: how much more should we covet grace, and those things that accompany salvation! These having gotten, we may safely and surely say, "God hath endued me with a good dowry."

Ver. 21. And called her name Dinah.] Philo in his "Antiquities" saith (but we need not believe him) that this Dinah was afterwards married to Job, and brought him many children.

Ver. 22. And God remembered Rachel.] She began to think that God had forgotten her, because she was so long suspended, and her prayers not answered. This is a common fault. David bewails it in himself. {#Ps 77} Basil grew so weary of the Arian persecution, that once he cried out, An Ecclesias suas prorsus dereliquit Dominus? an novissima hora est? &c. So the Church of old: "Where is thy zeal and thy strength, Lord? the sounding of thy heart and of thy mercies toward us? are they restrained?". {#Isa 63:15} Here we must check and chide ourselves, for once questioning God's kind remembrance of us, whom he cannot forget, and learn and labour not to "waken our well beloved, until he please". {#So 3:5} He "waits to be gracious," {#Isa 30:19} and, when it is fit, will come "leaping over the mountains of Bether," {#So 2:17} all lets and impediments.

Ver. 23. God hath taken away my reproach.] That is, her barrenness, -with which she was often upbraided, -when now she was sufficiently humbled; besides that her children, as the rest of those women that were long barren, are noted to have been the best, and most gracious; as Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, Samuel, the Baptist, &c. A child of many prayers cannot lightly miscarry, as he {a} told Monica.

Ver. 24. The Lord shall add to me another son.] A sweet and sure way of argumentation. God, that hath thus and thus done me good, will not be wanting to me in anything that may be conducive to mine eternal comfort; but "will perfect that which concerneth me". {#Ps 138:8} Qui ad vituli hortatur esum, quid tandem mihi negaturus est?

{a} Bernard.

Ver. 25. Unto mine own place.] The Promised Land, which he reckoned his own. The promises are good surehold.

Ver. 26. Let me go.] Here Jacob was too hasty; as Moses was, in doing justice before his time, and therefore fled for it. {#Ex 2:11-14}

Ver. 27. I pray thee, if I have found favour, &c.] This miserable muckworm, so he may advance his own ends, abased himself to his servants, colloquing or anything, to curry favour, and compass commodity. But he that is swallowed up of the earth (as Korah was), his ears stopped, his heart stuffed, and all passages for God's Spirit obstructed by it, shall have earth enough when he dies: his mouth shall be filled with a spadeful of mould, and his never-enough quit with fire-enough, in the bottom of hell. Such another courteous caitiff as this in the text was that Plautianus, a rich Roman, of great authority with Severus the Emperor. Omnia enim petebat ab omnibus, et cupiebat omnia, saith the historian {b} Herein only he differed from Laban, when he married his daughter to Antonius the son of Severus, he gave her as much portion as would have sufficed for fifty queens. {a}

Ver. 28. Appoint me thy wages.] Heb., Expressly name, or nominate plainly.

And I will give it.] Pollicitis dives quilibet esse potest .

Ver. 29. Thou knowest how I have served thee,] sc., With all my might, and to thy singular advantage: if therefore I stay longer, reason requireth that there should be some respect had to my benefit also, since he that "provideth not for his own is worse than an infidel". {#1Ti 5:8}

Ver. 30. The Lord hath blessed thee since my coming.] Heb., At my foot. Hence grew that proverb used in Africa, Homo boni pedis ; a man whose coming is prosperous; -applicable to the ministers of the gospel, whose "feet are beautiful," {#Isa 52:7 Ro 10:15} and prosperous, if they faithfully feed the flock.

Ver. 31. What shall I give thee?] Solent multum quaerere, qui cupiunt parum dare . But Laban would know his price, that he might be out of his pain.

Ver. 32. And of such shall be my hire.] As white and black sheep were most set by in Mesopotamia, so were the variously coloured in Palestine, Jacob's country; whence the shepherds there are called Nochudim , {#Am 1:1} that is, keepers of spotted cattle. This might be a reason why Jacob desires to be paid in such; and, perhaps, had learned that skill there which he used in the following verses.

Ver. 33. So shall my righteousness, &c.] A good conscience fears no judge; no, not God himself, in some particulars. {as #Ps 7:3,4} That which Jacob did here was of God. {#Ge 31:10} It was also a plain bargain between them, and Laban was handled in his kind. Besides, the means Jacob used was not fraudulent, but natural; not depending on man's skill, but God's blessing: and all to recover out of the wretch's hands that which was but due to him for his hard service, and for his wives' dowry.

Ver. 34. Behold, I would it might be.] He was glad to have him on the hip for a bad bargain, but is fairly deceived himself. God will see to his servants, that they shall not lose all: though the world think it neither sin nor pity to defraud them of their due.

Ver. 36. And he set three days' journey.] Hoping so to disappoint Jacob of having anything, and to make his own party good with him. For, naturally, the cattle would bring forth others like themselves; and so Jacob's part should be little enough. Sed et hic fallitur sordidus impostor, saith Pareus. Laban was utterly out in his count, and crossed in his design.

Ver. 37. And of the hazel.] Or nut tree, Heb. Luz, which was the ancient name of the city of Bethel; {#Ge 28:19} so called, as it seemeth, of nut trees growing there.

Ver. 38. And he set the rods which he had pilled.] This was done, partly by the force of the fantasy, which is much affected with objects of the sight; or some other cogitation in the time of conception: partly and chiefly by the blessing of God: for, he that shall now try the same conclusion, shall find himself frustrated.

Ver. 39. Ring-straked.] With a round streak, or ring, about their legs, as if they were gartered.

Ver. 40. And set the faces of the flocks, &c.] That by the sight of the speckled cattle they might bring forth lambs like them that were in their eye.

Ver. 41. The stronger cattle.] Heb., Bound together, i.e., lusty and well set.

Ver. 42. So the feebler were Laban's.] So elsewhere God promiseth that his people "shall rob those that robbed them, and spoil those that spoiled them". {#Eze 39:10}

Ver. 43. And the man increased exceedingly.] So shall all those do, if it be for their eternal good, that depend upon God for success and blessing upon their hard and honest labours. As for others, that will needs care and carve for themselves, being troubled about many things, but neglecting that "one thing necessary," the Lord either gives the souls of such over to suffer shipwreck, or else strips them of all their lading and tacklings, breaking their estates all to pieces, and making them glad to go to heaven upon a broken plank.

Ver. 1. And he heard the words of Laban's sons.] These were chips off the old block, as they say; as like the father, as if spit out of his mouth. Avarice made them think, as Sejanus did, Quicquid non acquiritur, damnum; {a} all lost, that fell beside their own lips. As a ship may be overladen with gold and silver, even unto sinking, and yet have compass and sides enough to hold ten times more: so, covetous men, though they have enough to sink them, yet have they never enough to satisfy them.

Hath he gotten all this glory.] That is, All this wealth, which easily gets glory; and goes therefore joined with it. {#Pr 3:16 8:18} This regina pecunia doth all, and hath all here below, saith Solomon. {#Ec 10:19} Money beareth the mastery, and is the monarch of this world. None so admired, or so soon admitted, as he that is well heeled. The Chaldee word for money, {b} signifies to do some great work. It was commonly said in Greece, that not Philip but his money took their cities. {c} And a certain Grecian coming to Rome, where the honour of a lord was offered unto him, answered—

Allin had a cardinal's hat there bestowed upon him by the Pope: but because his hat had so thin lining—he wanted wealth, I mean, to support his state—he was commonly called, The starveling cardinal; and nobody cared for him. {d}

Ver. 2. And Jacob beheld the countenance of Laban.] He said little, for shame, but thought the more, and could not so conceal his discontent, but that it appeared in his lowering looks. That which he had parted with in his riches, was, as it were, raked out of his belly; {#Job 20:15} he had as beloved have parted with his very heart blood. And this was plain to Jacob by his countenance, which had been friendly, smooth, and smiling; but now was cloudy, sad, spiteful. The young men were hot, and could not hold or hide what was in their heart, but blurted it out, and spoke their minds freely. This old fox held his tongue, but could not keep his countenance.

Ver. 3. Return unto the land of thy fathers.] Laban’s frowns were a grief to Jacob; the Lord calls upon him therefore to look homeward. Let the world’s affronts, and the change of men’s countenances, drive us to him who changeth not, and mind us of heaven, where is a perpetual serenity and sweetness.

Ver. 4. And Jacob sent and called Rachel, &c.] He consults with his wives; so should we in matters of weight, of remove especially. They are our "companions," the wives "of our covenant," {#Mat 2:14} not our vassals or footstools; and must therefore be both of our court and counsel.

Ver. 5. I see your father’s countenance, &c.] This is the world’s wages. All Jacob’s good service is now forgotten. Do an unthankful person nineteen kindnesses, unless you add the twentieth, all is lost {a} Perraro grati homines reperiuntur , saith Cicero. {b} Nemo beneficium in Calendarium scribit , saith Seneca. And the poet Ausonius not unfitly—

Ausoniam, domiti quae caput orbis erat:
Nec tamen ad portam placide deponat eosdem,
Gratia praeteriti nulla laboris erit”

{a} Παλαια μιν ευδει χαρις αμνημονες δε βροτοι.—Pindar.

{b} Orat. pro Planc.

Ver. 6. With all my power I have served.] The word translated power signifieth that natural moisture of the body that maketh it lively and lusty, vigorous and valorous to do service. So it is used, #Ge 49:3 Ps 22:15. Now if Jacob served Laban with all his might, should not we the Lord, a far better Master? Baruch "repaired earnestly". {#Ne 3:20} Caleb "fulfilled after God". {#Nu 14:24} Nehemiah traded every talent with which divine providence had trusted him: he worketh, warreth, watcheth, commandeth, encourageth, threateneth, punisheth, &c. "David danced with all his might," {#2Sa 6:14} and did all the wills of God to his dying day; painfully serving out his time to the last. Happy is he that can say, in a spiritual sense, as it was said of Moses, that, after a long profession of religion, he remits not of his zeal; "his sight is not waxed dim, nor his natural" heat or "force abated"; {#De 34:7} that he is "not slothful in business, but fervent in spirit, serving the Lord". {#Ro 12:11}

Ver. 7. Changed my wages ten times.] And ever for the worse. The matter mended, with poor Jacob, as sour ale doth in summer. Laban, the churl, the richer he grew by him, the harder he was to him: like children with mouthfuls and handfuls, who will yet rather spoil all, then part with any. It is the love, not the lack of money, that makes men churls.

Ver. 8. Ring-straked.] {See Trapp on "Ge 30:39"}

Ver. 9. Thus God hath taken away, &c.] He is the true proprietary, and gives and takes away these outward things at pleasure; as Hannah hath it. {#Isa 2:7} And, "promotion cometh neither from the east nor west," saith David; "nor yet from the south," {#Ps 75:6} where the warm sunshine is: much less from the north (for, Ab Aquilone nihil boni); "but God is the judge; he puts down" Laban "and sets up" Jacob; {#Ps 75:7} he spoiled the Egyptians, and enriched the Israelites with their jewels; {#Ex 12:36} which yet proved a snare to them, perhaps, in the matter of the golden calf; as riches always do, when sent to men by God's providence only, and not out of his favour, as here to Jacob, and by virtue of the promise.

Ver. 10-12. I saw in a dream, &c.] Of divine dreams, such as this was, {See Trapp on "Ge 20:3"}

Ver. 11. {See Trapp on "Ge 31:10"}

Ver. 12. I have seen all that Laban doeth.] And am resolved to fleece him for thy hire. Gain ill got will burn men's fingers, and burn through their purses. Yea, the greater wealth, the greater spoil awaits such misers; as a tree with thick and large boughs, every man desires to lop it. {See Trapp on "Ge 31:10"}

Ver. 13. I am the God of Bethel, &c.] Here God pulls Jacob by the ear, as it were, and reminds him of his vow which he had well nigh forgotten. But the Lord looked for a performance, and afterward punished him for his slackness. Most men's practice proclaims, that having escaped the danger, they would willingly deceive the saint. {a} And of those that vow against sin, how many have we, who, when temptations, like strong Philistines, are upon them, break all bonds of God, whereby foul breaches are made into their consciences, such as nothing can cure, but the blood of that great votary, that Nazarite, Christ Jesus. Vows are solemn services; and they have much to answer for that care not either to make or keep them; that dally and play with them, as children do with nuts and beads. When the cardinals meet to choose a pope, they make a vow, Whosoever is chosen, he shall swear to such articles as they make. And Sleidan ^{b} saith, The pope is no sooner chosen, but he breaks them all, and checks their insolences; as if they went about to limit his power, to whom all power is given, both in heaven and earth. Is not this pretty collusion? But "God is the avenger of all such."

Ver. 14. Is there yet any portion,] q.d., We have all we are like to have. In setting forth their father's ill usage of them, they offend not in some respect—viz., in that they speak the truth. Only herein they were to blame, that they speak the truth with more passion, and with less respect to their father than was fit.

Ver. 15. Are we not counted of him strangers?] Well might that father ^{a} say, Αεινος και παντολμος πης φιλοχρηματιος ερωσ. "The love of money is the root of all evil," as the apostle hath it. ^{#1Ti 6:10} This kyte-footed corruption, wheresoever it seizeth and domineereth, it blasteth and banisheth all nobleness of spirit, natural affection, humanity, reason, discretion, manliness, mutual entertainment, intercourse of kindness and love: so that, for any fair dealing, a man had as good converse with a cannibal, as with a truly covetous captive. Well might the apostle set "covetousness" and "want of natural affection" together, as signs of a reprobate sense. ^{#Ro 1:29,31} Laban sells his own daughters here, and devours also their price. And the covetous Pharisees taught children to starve their parents, to offer to the altar; that is, to their paunches and purses. ^{#Mt 15:4-6}

Ver. 16. For all the riches, &c.] Here they speak the truth; but offend, (1.) In that they utter it passionately, and with perturbation of spirit; (2.) In that they seem somewhat to obscure God's blessing; as though it were but their due, as daughters. In dealing with those that have done us wrong, it is hard not to offend, either in the matter or manner of our expressions.

Now then, whatsoever God hath said, &c.] Thus they prefer a husband to a father. So did Michal, though there was no great store of religion in her. And so nature had taught that "daughter of women" to do, #Da 11:17. Antiochus the Great gave Cleopatra, his daughter, to Ptolemy Epiphanes, thinking to use her as an instrument to destroy him. But she, contrary to his expectation, clave to her husband.

Ver. 17. Then Jacob rose up.] Taking his time, when Laban was from home, shearing his sheep.

Ver. 18. To go to Isaac.] But was long in going; about ten years.

Ver. 19. Rachel had stolen the images.] She was somewhat tackt ^{a} with her father's superstition, though somewhat reclaimed. "Little children, keep yourselves from idols". ^{#1Jo 5:21} Nothing so natural to us as image worship. Nothing so retained by us, when once entertained. After all that airing in the wilderness, Micah's mother smells of Egypt, and hath her molten and graven gods. ^{#Jud 17:3} Rachel also had her idols a long time after this. ^{#Ge 35:2,4} The devil is εἰδωλοχαρής, saith Synesius; and so he would have us. Fence we therefore ourselves and ours against this abomination: the itch of it, once got, is hardly ever cured and clawed off.

Ver. 20. And Jacob stole away.] God's saints are put upon the use of such means sometimes, for their own safety, as render them contemptible to worldly men; all whose contumelies they can bravely bear, so long as their consciences clear and cheer them: yea, they can rejoice and say, It is a mercy they know no worse by me. It is a great work of nature to keep the filth of the body, when it is in man, from being unsavoury to others. But it is a greater work of God to keep the filth of the soul, that is so unsavoury to him, from the knowledge of those that wait all occasions to blaze and blaspheme us.

Ver. 21. He passed over the river.] Euphrates; and so declined the ordinary way, that Laban might not overtake him; which yet he did. So God would have it, that he might have the greater glory of Jacob's deliverance.

Ver. 22. That Jacob was fled.] Here was verified that saying of Eliphaz, #Job 5:12,13.

Ver. 23. And he took his brethren.] The wicked may band themselves, and bend their strength against the saints; but they are bounded by God. He lets them have the ball on their foot many times, till they come to the very goal, and yet then makes them miss the game. He lets out their tether, and then pulls them back again to their task.

Ver. 24. Take heed thou speak not good or bad.] That is, that thou seek not, either by flattery or force, by allurement or affrightment, to bring him back. They write of the asp, that he never wanders alone, without his companion with him. So the flattering promises of the Church's adversaries go ever accompanied with cruel menaces, their rising tongues with their terrifying saws. {#Heb 11:37} "None of them shall want their mate"; as the Scripture speaks of those birds of prey and desolation. {#Isa 34:16}

Ver. 25. Jacob had pitched his tent.] Seeing Laban so near, he set himself in as good order as he could, fearing the worst, saith Musculus. But God was better to him than his fears. He spake for him; and so he can, and doth oft for us, in the hearts of our enemies. See #Isa 41:9. Charles V—than {a} whom, all Christendom had not a more prudent prince, nor the Church of Christ almost a sorer enemy, -when he had in his hand Luther dead, and Melancthon, Pomeran, and certain other preachers of the gospel alive, he not only determined not anything extremely against them, or violated their graves; but also, entreating them gently, sent them away, not so much as once forbidding them to publish openly the doctrine that they professed.

Ver. 26. As captives taken with the sword.] No such matter; but that the old churl must have somewhat to say: for Jacob had their goodwills to go with him: and besides, they were now his more than Laban's. Jacob had them in marriage, and not in bondage: he carried them not as his captives, but companions.

Ver. 27. That I might have sent thee away with mirth.] A likely matter! but it is the hypocrite's best now, to say the best. He durst do no other; for God had overawed him, and put his hook into his nostrils. Hypocrites are likened to "bulrushes," {#Isa 58:5} which are green and smooth; and he is curious to a miracle, that can find a knot in them; but within is nothing but a useless and spongy pith.

Compared they are also to "vipers," {#Mt 3:7} that are painted, as it were, without, but poisonous within: they have their teeth also buried in their gums, saith Pliny, so that one would think them to be harmless beasts, and that they could not bite. So hypocrites seem most innocent. Who would have thought otherwise of Laban, that had not known him, considering his dispute here with Jacob, his protests, afterwards, of deep and dear love to his daughters, and lastly, his attestation and taking God to witness for their good usage, and his heap of stones to witness (together with his heap of words to small purpose), calling it first Jegar-sahadutha, as a witness betwixt man and man; and then Mizpeh, as a watch-tower or witness between God and man? Who could take Laban for less now, than a loving father, yea, and an honest man? But, as the historian {a} saith of another, so may we of him; Palam compositus pudor; intus summa adipiscendi libido. All this was but blanched hypocrisy, and coloured covetousness, as St Paul calls it. {#1Th 2:5}

Ver. 28. Thou hast now done foolishly.] And yet he had done no more than God bade him do. Wretched men dare reprehend that which they do not comprehend. But if a wise man speak evil of thee, or to thee, endure him; if a fool, pardon him. Shake off reproaches and hard censures, as Paul did the viper; yea, in a holy scorn, laugh at them, as the wild ass doth at the horse and his rider. "Diotrephes prates against us," saith St John. {#3Jo 1:10} In the Greek (φλυαζει) it is, "trifles against us with malicious words." Although his words were malicious, and he a great man, yet all was but trifles to a clear conscience.

Ver. 29. It is in the power of my hand.] It was, he might have said, till God forbade him: though indeed it never was (as our Saviour told Pilate, upon a like bravado, #Joh 19:10,11), further than "given him from above." "To God belong the issues of death," {#Ps 68:20} whatever tyrants dream they can do. Rideo, dicebat Caligula, Consulibus, quod uno nutu meo iugulare vos possim, et uxori tam bana cervix, simul ac iussero, demetur. And Caesar told Metellus, that he could as easily take away his life, as bid it to be done. But what saith our Saviour? "Fear not them that kill the body"; {#Mt 10:28} to wit, by divine permission. He saith not, them that can kill the body, have power to do it at their own pleasure: for that is a royalty belongs to God only.

But the God of your father spake unto me, &c.] Hypocrites forbear sin, as dogs do their meat; not because they hate the carrion, but fear the club. These are as wicked, in their fearful abstaining from sin, as in their furious committing of it. Lupus venit ad ovile: quaerit invadere, iugulare devorare vigilant pastores, latrant canes. —Lupus venit fremens, redit tremens: lupus est tamen, et fremens et tremens, saith Augustine. {a}

{a} Aug., De Verb. Apost., ser. 21.

Ver. 30. Why hast thou stolen my gods?] Goodly gods that could not save themselves from the thief! See #Jer 10:5,11,15. But Jacob, a just man, is here made a thief of. The best must look to be blasted; "as deceivers, and yet true". {#2Co 6:8} Wicked men's "throats are open sepulchres," {#Ps 5:9} wherein the good names of God's innocent ones too oft lie buried: their breath, as fire, shall devour them, saith the prophet. {#Isa 33:11} Joseph suffered as a dishonest person; Elisha, as a troubler of the state; Jeremiah, as a traitor; Luther, as the trumpet of rebellion. {a} Nay, in one of his Epistles to Spalatinus, Prorsus Satan est Lutherus, saith he; sed Christus vivit et regnat, Amen. He adds his Amen to it; so little was he moved at it. He had learned, and so must we, to pass through "good and evil report," with Paul. {#2Co 6:8} Epiphanius saith, somewhere, that the Jews give out that St Paul turned Christian for spite, because he could not obtain the high priest's daughter in marriage. We are made "the filth of the world, the sweepings of all things," {περιψημματα; #1Co 4:13} saith St Paul of himself and his companions; who yet were the very "glory of Jesus Christ". {#2Co 8:23} Phagius reports the story of an Egyptian who said, The Christians were a company of most filthy lecherous people. And for the keeping of the Sabbath, he saith, they had a disease upon them, and were therefore fain to rest the seventh day.

Ver. 31. Because I was afraid.] Note the patriarch's simplicity and veracity, without cunning or colouring. Truth is like our first parents; most beautiful when naked. It was sin covered them; and so this, for the most part.

Ver. 32. Let him not live.] This was a rash sentence. Hasty speech may work much woe. How sorry would Jacob have been if Laban had found the images under Rachel, and taken him at his word! What a snare befell Jephthah by his rash speaking! It is a proverb among the Arabians, Cave ne feriat lingua tua collum tuum. {a} "He is a perfect man that offends not in word," saith St James; for "the tongue is an unruly evil". {#Jas 3:2,8} Sooner may a man teach a camel to dance upon a rope, than bridle his tongue from evil speaking. Pareus {b} reckons up five virtues of the tongue that perfect a man: but Peraldus {c} recounts twenty-four various vices of it, that, if not restrained, will work his ruth (distress) and ruin. It should seem by that of our Saviour {#Mt 12:37} that a man's most and worst sins are his words. And St Paul, making the anatomy of a natural man, stands more upon the organ of speaking than on all the other members: {#Ro 3:9-18} Let therefore thy words be few, true, and ponderous. An open mouth is a purgatory to the master. Carry a pair of balances betwixt thy lips. Nescit poenitenda loqui, qui proferenda prius suo tradidit examini, saith Cassiodone. {d} Jacob might have learned of the heathen Romans, to speak warily in passing sentence on, or giving testimony of, another. Romani semper Videri in sententiis, in testimoniis Arbitrari, dicebant, saith Cicero.

Ver. 33. And Laban went into Jacob's tent.] Hypocrites are suspicious of others better than themselves, and impudently inquisitive: Curiosi ad cognoscendam vitam alienam, desidiosi ad corrigendam suam; as Augustine hath it. Those that are most inquisitive about other men's manners, are most careless of their own.

Ver. 34. Put them in the camel's furniture, and sat upon them.] Presumptuous sinners deal as homely with the dear mercies of Almighty God, pleading and pretending them to their wicked courses; and so kicking against his heart; which are therefore fast closed against them.

Ver. 35. For the custom of women is upon me.] A subtle, but sinful excuse, to shift a shame. Women's wits, we say, are best at a pinch: but they must take heed they be not as C. Curio the Roman, ingeniose nequam, wittily wicked, {a} Wit will not bear out sin.

Ver. 36. And Jacob was wroth, and chode.] An angry expostulation; but not without some error, in the heat of altercation. "Be angry, and sin not," {#Eph 4:26} is, saith one, the easiest charge, under the hardest condition, that can be. It is difficult to kindle and keep quick the fire of zeal, which is the best kind of anger, without all smoke of sin.

Ver. 37. Set it here before my brethren.] See the confidence of a clear conscience! Happy is he that can be acquitted by himself in private; in public by others; in both by God. Lucrum in arca, saepe facit damnum in conscientia. But all such as conceive with guile, by that time they have reckoned their months aright, though they grow never so big, shall bring forth nothing but wind and vanity. Yea, they that "sow the wind, shall reap the whirlwind". {#Ho 8:7} Let that thou hast be well gotten, and thou needest not care whom thou lookest in the face; thou shalt not be ashamed to "speak with thine enemies in the gate". {#Ps 127:5}

Ver. 38. The rams of thy flock have I not eaten.] A lively picture of a careful pastor. {#2Co 11:9} He fats not himself, but feeds the flock; he seeks not theirs, neither fleece nor flesh, but them and their welfare. He takes not to him "the instruments of a foolish shepherd"; {#Zec 11:15} that is, forcipes et mulctram, that he may carry away lac et lanam; but feeds the flock of God, and takes care of the cure, as Peter bids; "not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind," &c. {#1Pe 5:2} About the year of Christ 1260, the people and clergy of England, the Pope's ass, as it was called, opposed themselves to the legate's exactions. And when Rustandus, the legate, alleged that all churches were the Pope's, Leonard, a learned man of those times, answered, Tuitione, non fruitione; defensione, non dissipatione. {a}

{a} Jac. Revius, De Vitis Pontif., p. 178.

Ver. 39. Of my hand didst thou require it.] Which was against all right and reason; {#Ex 22:10,13} but that weighed little with this covetous cormorant. God "smites his fists" at such "dishonest gain," as Balak did at Balaam, in token of extreme indignation. {#Eze 22:13} And lest Laban, or any like, should object, that these were but great words; -The Lord would not do it; They would deal well enough with the Lord for that matter; -he adds, in the next verse, "Can thine heart endure, or can thine hands be strong, in the days that I shall deal with thee? I the Lord have spoken it, and I will do it". {#Ge 31:14}

Ver. 40. Thus I was; in the day, &c.] Nonresidents do none of all this, those idol, and idle shepherds: they cry out, as he, Pan curet oves, oviumque magistros; {a} being herein not only worse than this good shepherd in the text, but also than Ulysses' swineherd, in Homer, who would not lie from his charge, {b}

Ver. 41. I served thee fourteen years, &c.] If all this, to be son-in-law to Laban; what should not we do, or suffer gladly, to be the sons of God?

Ver. 42. The fear of Isaac.] God, the proper object of fear; whence he is absolutely called "The fear". {#Ps 76:11} "Bring presents to fear"; that is, to him, to whom all dread is due. The Chaldee Paraphrast rendereth Teraphim, {#Ge 31:32} Laban's fear. It was an atheistical speech of Statius, Primus in orbe deos fecit Timor. But it was a true saying of Varro, as Calvin cites his words, They that first brought in images of the gods, increased men's error, but took away their fear.

Ver. 43. These daughters are my daughters, &c.] All this is a flaunt, or rather a flattery. Now he seeks to curry favour, where he could not exercise cruelty; smoothing over the matter, as if he meant them no harm; when he was merely bridled, and could not do them that harm that he desired. This is still the guise of hypocrites, and false brethren; they would be taken for friends, and seek to build up themselves upon better men's ruins: as here Laban would render Jacob suspicious to his daughters, as one that would hereafter deal hardly with them, if not bound by him, in a covenant, to his good abearance toward them.

Ver. 44. Now therefore come thou, &c.] "A fool is full of words," saith Solomon. Which odious custom of his is expressed, μμητικως, in his vain tautologies: "A man cannot tell what shall be; and what shall be after him, who can tell?". {#Ec 10:14} Laban likewise talks a great deal here; and is up with the more, and down with the less, as they say. A covenant he will have, a pillar he will have, and a heap he will have; and that heap shall be a witness, and that pillar a witness, and God a witness, and a Judge too, &c., -there is no end of his discourse; as if, Domnio-like, he cared not so much what, as how much, he spake. {a} The basest things are ever most plentiful. History and experience tell us, that some kind of mouse breedeth an hundred and twenty young ones in one nest whereas the lion and elephant bears but one at once. So the least worth yields the most words.

Ver. 53. And Jacob swear by the Fear of his father.] The Chaldee Paraphrast sometimes useth the word fear, or terror, for God, for the reason above given. {#Ge 31:42} Hence Jacob, coming from Syria, and being to swear to a Syrian, swears here by "the Fear of his father Isaac." Where note, that he riseth up no higher than his father, whereas Laban, the idolater, pretends antiquity, appeals to the gods of Abraham, of Nahor, and of their father Terah, who served strange gods. {#Jos 24:2} Papists boast much of antiquity, as once the Gibeonites did of old shoes and mouldy bread. A gentleman being importuned by a Popish questionist, to tell where our religion was before Luther; answered, That our religion was always in the Bible, where your religion never was. Mine antiquity is Jesus Christ, saith Ignatius, and we with him. {a}

Ver. 1. Angels of God met him.] Sensibly and visibly, as servants meet their masters, as the guard their prince. Oh, the dignity and safety of the saints! who are in five respects, say some, above the angels. (1.) Our nature is more highly advanced in Christ. (2.) The righteousness whereby we come to glory is more excellent than theirs; which, though perfect in its kind, is but the righteousness of mere creatures, such as God may find fault with, {#Job 4:18} such as may need mercy; therefore the cherubims are said to stand upon the mercy seat, and to be made of the matter thereof. (3.) The sonship of the saints is founded in a higher right than theirs—viz., in the Sonship of the second Person in Trinity. (4.) They are members of Christ, and so in nearer union than any creature. (5.) They are the spouse, the bride; angels only servants of the Bridegroom, and "ministering spirits, sent out (as here) to minister for them that shall be heirs of salvation". {#Heb 1:14} They meet us still, as they did Jacob: they minister many blessings to us, yet will not be seen to receive any thanks of us: they stand at our right hands, {#Lu 1:11} as ready to relieve us as the devils to mischief us. {#Zec 3:1} If Satan, for terror, show himself like the great "leviathan"; or, for fraud, like a "crooked" and "piercing serpent"; or, for violence and fury, like "the dragon in the seas"; yet the Lord will smite him by his angels, as with his "great, and sore, and strong sword". {#Isa 27:1} Angels are in heaven as in their watch tower {whence they are called watchers, #Da 4:13}, to keep the world, the saints especially, their chief charge, in whose behalf, they "stand ever before the face of God," {#Mt 18:10} waiting and wishing to be sent upon any design or expedition, for the service and safety of the saints. They are like masters or tutors, to whom the great King of heaven commits his children: these they bear in their bosoms, as the nurse doth her babe, or as the servants of the house do their young master, glad to do them any good office; ready to secure them from that roaring lion, that rangeth up and down, seeking to devour them. The philosopher told his friends, when they came into his little and low cottage, Εντευθεν ουκ απεισι θεοι, The gods are here with me. The true Christian may say, though he dwell never so meanly, God and his holy angels are ever with him, &c.

Ver. 2. This is God's host.] So called, for their number, order, obedience, strength, &c. God hath a complete host of horse and foot. Angels, and heavenly bodies, are his horse, as it were; "horses and chariots of fire"; {#2Ki 6:17} yea, both horse and foot: for there are whole "legions" of them. {#Mt 26:53} Now a legion is judged to be six thousand foot, and seven hundred horse. Daniel tells us, there be millions of angels, {#Da 7:10} yea, "an innumerable company," saith the author to the Hebrews. {#Heb 12:22} The Greek poet could say, There were thirty thousands of them here upon earth, keepers of mortal men, and observers of their works: {a} some think they are meant in the parable, by the ninety and nine sheep; as if they were ninety and nine times as many as mankind in number. All these, how many soever, pitch camp round about the godly, {#Ps 34:7} make a lane for them, as they did here for Jacob at Mahanaim (which signifies a double camp), fight in battle array against their enemies, {#Da 10:20} and convey them at death, as they did Lazarus, through their enemies' country, the air, into Abraham's bosom. {#Lu 16:22} So that all God's children may call death, as Jacob did this place, Mahanaim; because there the angels meet them. And as the palsied man, in the gospel, was let down with his bed through the tiling before Jesus, {#Lu 5:19} so is every good soul taken up in a heavenly couch (or coach, rather) through the roof of his house, and carried into Christ's presence, by the blessed angels.

Hesiod.

Ver. 3. And Jacob sent messengers.] Means, he knew, was to be used by him, though well assured of safeguard. God must be trusted, not tempted: means must be used, but not trusted. Jacob was "as one that fled from a lion, and a bear met him". {#Am 5:19} Laban, as a lion, had some shamefacedness, saith a Rabbi: {a} Esau, as a bear, had none. Jacob therefore prays, and sends, and submits, and presents him; and all to pacify him. He that meets with a bear, will not strive with him for the wall, but be glad to escape by him.

{a} Pirkei R. Eliez., cap. 37.

Ver. 4. Unto my lord Esau; Thy servant Jacob, &c.] This was not baseness of spirit, much less a renouncing of his birthright and blessing; but a necessary submission for a time, such as was that of David to Saul, {#Isa 24:7,9} till the prophecy of his superiority should be fulfilled. That was baseness in the Samaritans, that in writing to Antiochus Epiphanes, that great king of Syria, because he tormented the Jews, to excuse themselves that they were no Jews they stiled him, Antiochus the mighty God: {a} the Scripture styles him "a vile person". {#Da 11:21} So was that also in Teridates, king of the Parthians, who, with bended knee and hands held up, worshipped Nero, and thus bespake that monster of mankind: To thee I come as to my god; and thee I adore as I do the sun: what thou decreest of me, I will be and do; for thou art to me both fate and fortune &c. {b} And what shall we think of those superstitious Sicilians, who, when they were excommunicated by Pope Martin IV, laid themselves prostrate at his feet, and cried; -O Lamb of God that takest away the sins of the world, grant us thy peace. The Venetians also, being excommunicated by Pope Clemens V, {c} could not be absolved till such time as their ambassador Dandalus had not only fallen at the Pope's feet, but lain also under his table as a dog with an iron chain about his neck, feeding on such scraps as were cast unto him. {d} Had this dog dealt by the Pope as the Earl of Wiltshire's spaniel did, he had served him but right. This earl, with Doctor Cranmer, and others, being sent ambassador to Rome about King Henry's divorce; when he should have kissed the Pope's foot, his spaniel, as though he had been of purpose appointed thereunto, went and caught the Pope by the great toe, which the spaniel haply mistook for some kind of repast. {e} But this by the way only. What hard servitude kings and emperors were forced to undergo in former times, and how basely to avile {f} themselves to the beast of Rome, is better known than that it need to be here related. Henry II of England, Henry IV of France, and Henry, the fourth Emperor of Germany, for instance. This last came, in the midst of a sore winter, upon his bare feet, to the gates of the Castle of Canusium, and stood there fasting from morning to night for three days together, waiting for the Pope's judicial sentence, and craving his pardon: which yet he could not obtain by his own or others' tears, or by the intercession of any saint, save only of a certain harlot, with whom the Pope was then taking his carnal pleasure. {g} The good emperor mistook who thought that the Pope could be pacified by fasting and prayer. This god required another kind of sacrifice than these. And here that of Solomon was fulfilled, "I have seen servants upon horses, and princes walking as servants upon the earth". {#Ec 10:7}

Ver. 5. And I have oxen, and asses, &c.] This Jacob mentioneth in his message, that Esau might not think that he sought to him for any need; but only for his favour. And this was something, to a man of Esau's make; for such like not to hear of, or be haunted with, their poor kindred. {#Lu 15:30} "This thy son," saith he, that felt no want: he saith not, This my brother: he would not own him, because in poverty. {a}

Ver. 6. And four hundred men with him.] Four hundred cut-throats, as appears, #Ge 32:8. And here, good Jacob is brought again into the briars. When he was well rid of his father-in-law, he thought all safe; and his joy was completed by the sight of that army of angels. Presently upon this, he is so damped and terrified with this sad message of Esau's approach and hostile intentions, that he knows not what course to take to. Out of heaven he is thrust suddenly, as it were, into hell, saith Pareus. {a} This is the godly man's case while here. Fluctus fluctum trudit: one trouble follows in the neck of another. {b} Ripen we apace, and so get to heaven, if we would be out of the gunshot, The ark was transportative, till settled in Solomon's Temple; so, till we come to heaven, shall we be tossed up and down and turmoiled: "within" will be "fears, without fightings," {#2Co 7:5} while we are in hoc exilio, in hoc ergastulo, in hac peregrinatione, in hac valle lachrymarum, as Bernard hath it; in this exile, in this purgatory, in this pilgrimage, in this vale of tears.

Ver. 7. Then Jacob was greatly afraid.] This was his weakness, and may be ours in like case, as looking to the present peril, and "forgetting the consolation," as the apostle speaketh, #Heb 12:5, that he might have drawn from the promise of God, and presence of angels. Faith quelleth and killeth distrustful fears: but Satan, in a distress, hides from us that which should support us, and greatens that that may appal us. But what saith the Spanish proverb? The lion is not so fierce as he is painted; nor danger, usually, so great as it is represented. Some hold that Esau was here wronged, by being presumed an enemy, when he was a friend. Pessimus in dubiis augur Timor.

Ver. 8. If Esau come, &c.] It is a point of prudence, if we cannot keep all, to save what we can.

Ver 9. The Lord which saidst unto me.] Promises must be prayed over. God loves to be burdened with, and to be importuned in, his own words; to be sued upon his own bond. Prayer is a putting the promises into suit. And it is no arrogancy nor presumption, to burden God, as it were, with his promise; and of duty to claim and challenge his aid, help, and assistance, in all perils, said Robert Glover, martyr, in a letter to his wife. {a} Such prayers will be nigh the Lord day and night, {#1Ki 8:59} he can as little deny them, as deny himself.

Ver. 10. I am not worthy of the least, &c.] In prayer, we must avile ourselves before God to the utmost; confessing our extreme both indigency and indignity of better. "I am dust and ashes," saith Abraham. "I am a worm, and no man," saith David. "I am more brutish than any man," saith Agur. "I am a man, a sinner" (ανηρ αμαρτωλος #Lu 5:8), saith Peter. "I am not worthy to be called thy son," saith the prodigal. Pharisaeus non vulnera, sed munera ostendit. The proud Pharisee sets forth not his wants, but his worth: "God, I thank thee," &c. But if David were so humbled before Saul that he called himself "a flea," {#1Sa 26:20} what should we do to God? Unworthy we should acknowledge ourselves of the least mercies we enjoy, with Jacob; and yet not rest satisfied with the greatest things in the world, for our portion, as Luther. Valde protestatas sum me nolle sic a Deo satiari: he deeply protested that God should not put him off with these poor things below. {a}

For with my staff I passed over this Jordan.] Paupertatem baculinam commemorat. Jacob, though now grown great, forgets not his former meanness, but cries out with that noble captain, ‘Εξ οἴων, εἰς οἴα: From how small, to how great an estate am I raised! {b} So did Agathocles, who, of a potter’s son, became King of Sicily; yet, would ever be served in earthen vessels. And in the year of Christ 1011, one Willigis, bishop of Ments, being son to a wheelwright, caused wheels, and such like things, to be hanged on the walls, up and down his palace, with these words written over them, in capital letters; Willigis, Willigis, recole unde veneris. {c} Excellent was that counsel that Placilla, the Empress, gave her husband Theodosius: Remember, O husbaud, what lately you were, and what now you are: so shall you govern well the empire, and give God his due praise for so great an advancement. {d}

Ver. 11. And the mother with the children.] It seems to be a metaphor taken from birds, when fowlers take away the young and the dams together; which God forbade, #De 22:6. See the like also of the ewe and the lamb, not to be slain in one day, #Le 22:28. But, Homo homini lupus, nay, daemon. The Indians would say that it had been better for them that their country had been given to the devils of hell, than to the Spaniards, such hath been their cruelty towards those poor creatures; and that, if Spaniards went to heaven, they would never come there. Three poor women were burnt at the Isle of Guernsey for religion; together with the infant child falling out of the mother’s womb, and cruelly cast back into the flames. {a} Another sweet child of eight or nine years old, coming to Bonner’s house, to see if he might speak with his father, a prisoner in the Lollard’s Tower, was, for some bold answer that he gave the bishop’s chaplain, so cruelly whipped, that he died within four days after. {b} At Merindol in France, besides other execrable outrages and butcheries there done by Minerius, one of the Pope's captains, the paps of many women were cut off, which gave suck to their children; which, looking for suck at their mother's breasts, being dead before, died also for hunger. {c} Was not this, to "kill the mother with the children?" And was not that a barbarous act of Pope Honorius III, in the year of grace 1224, to cause four hundred Scots to be hanged up, and their children castrated! and all for the death of Adam, bishop of Caithness, who was burned in his own kitchen, by his own citizens, for that he had excommunicated some of them for non-payment of tithes. {d}

Ver. 12. And thou saidst, I will surely do thee good.] So Jacob interprets that promise, "I will be with thee": {#Ge 28:15} which, indeed, hath in it whatsoever heart can wish, or need require. This promise was so sweet to the patriarch, that he repeats and ruminates it, rolling it as sugar in his mouth, and hiding it under his tongue. God "spake it once, he heard it twice"; as David, {#Ps 62:11} in another case. "He sucks, and is satisfied with these breasts of consolation"; he presseseth and oppresseseth them—such a metaphor there is in that text, {#Isa 66:11} -as a rich man doth the poor man, till he hath gotten out of him all that he hath. A fly can make little of a flower; but a bee will not off till he hath the sweet thyme out of it. The promises are precious spices, which, being beaten to the smell, by the preaching of the Word, yield a heavenly and supernatural scent in the souls of God's people. Oh! it is a sweet time with them, when Christ "brings them into his banqueting house" of the Holy Scriptures, and there "stays them with flagons" of divine consolations, and bolsters them up "with apples" of heavenly doctrines. When these, by the Spirit, are applied to the love sick soul, then is Christ's left hand under their head, and his right hand—which "teacheth him terrible things"—doth {#Ps 14:5} embrace them. All in Christ, is for their support and succour: his love also is displayed over them, as a banner. And this doth so fully satisfy their souls, and transport them with joy, that now they are content to wait God's leisure for deliverance; and would not have their "Beloved wakened, until he please." See all this, #So 2:4-7.

Ver. 13. And took of that which came to his hand, &c.] Or, that was in his power. Such as he had, he sent. Silver and gold he had none; cattle he had, and of these he made no spare: for he knew that "a gift" (such a rich gift, especially) "maketh room for a man, and bringeth him before great ones". {#Pr 18:16} And here Jacob, for our instruction, takes a right course, observes a right method; which is, to pray, and use means; to use means, and pray. Ora et labora, was the Emperor's symbol; and, Admota manu invocanda est Minerva, the heathen's proverb. "Why criest thou unto me?" saith God to Moses; {#Ex 14:15} "speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward." There was a fault: Moses craved help, but was not forward in the course whereby to make way for God's help. So, "get thee up," saith God to praying Joshua; "wherefore liest thou thus upon thy face?" Israel hath sinned, and thou must go search, &c. {#Jos 7:10,11} So, he that would have knowledge, must not only beg for it, but "dig for it," saith Solomon, out of his own experience. {#Pr 2:3-5}

Ver. 14. Two hundred she-goats, &c.] A very great present for a private person to send. Five hundred and fifty beasts, of sundry sorts, for store. He spares no cost, that he may buy his peace, and enjoy his birthright. Heaven, he knew (whereof Canaan was a type and pledge), would pay for all. Get but a patriarch's eye to see heaven afar off, and we shall be soon ready to buy it at any rate. The pearl of price cannot be a dear bargain, though we part with all to purchase it. Moses was forty years old, and therefore no baby, when "he preferred the reproach of Christ," the worst thing about him, "before the treasures of Egypt". {#Heb 11:26} Egypt was a country rich, fruitful, and learned. Thence Solomon had his chief horses; {#2Ch 9:28} thence the harlot had her fine linens. {#Pr 7:16} Moses might, in likelihood, have been king of Egypt, yea, and of Ethiopia too, as some think: but he had a better prize in his hand, and therefore slights all the world's flitting and flattering felicities. When Basil was tempted with money and preferment, he answered, pecuniam da quae permaneat, ac continuo daret, gloriam quae semper floreat. This the world cannot do; nay, it cannot keep off diseases, death, &c. Non domus et fundus, &c. When Michael Paleologus, Emperor of Constantinople, sent to Nugas the Scythian prince, for a present, certain royal robes and rich ornaments, he set light by them, asking,

Whether they could drive away calamities, sickness, death? ^{a} No, no: this, nothing can do, but the favour of God and interest in Christ. Wherefore should I die, being so rich? was the foolish question of that rich and wretched cardinal, Henry Beaufort, bishop of Winchester, and Chancellor of England, in the reign of Henry VI. Fie, quoth he, will not death be hired? will money do nothing? ^{b} No, saith Solomon: "Treasures of wickedness profit nothing; but righteousness delivereth from death". ^{#Pr 10:2} Many are loath to die, because they have treasures in the world; as those ten men had in the field. ^{#Jer 41:8} The Irish ask, -What! such men mean to die? But such men must die; nor can their riches reprieve them. Oh! happy is he that, with Jacob, lays hold on the heavenly inheritance, though with the loss of earthly possessions; that cares not to part with his cattle, so he may have his crown; with his swine, so he may have his Saviour. ^{#Mt 8:34} This is the wise merchant, this is the true tradesman, that traffics for heaven; looking upon the world as a great dunghill, with Paul, σκυβαλα, dog's dung. ^{#Php 3:8}

This a hypocrite may seem to do, either of custom or vain glory: as the Pharisee went up to the temple to pray solitarily, as well as the publican; the temple being then, in regard of ceremonial holiness, the place as well of private as public prayer. "But will the hypocrite delight in God? will he pray always?". {#Job 27:10}

There wrestled a man with him.] In a proper combat, by might and slight; to the raising of dust, and causing of sweat; as the word importeth. This strife was not only corporeal, but spiritual; as well by the force of his faith, as strength of body. "He prevailed," saith the prophet, {#Ho 12:4} by prayers and tears. Our Saviour also prayed himself into "an agony"; {#Lu 22:44} and we are bidden to "strive in prayer," even to an agony. {#Ro 15:30, συναγωνισασθαι} Nehemiah prayed himself pale. {#Ne 2:2} Daniel prayed himself "sick". {#Da 8:27} Hannah prayed, striving with such an unusual motion of her lips, that old Eli, looking upon her, thought her drunk. {#1Sa 1:13} Elijah puts his head betwixt his knees, as straining every string of his heart in prayer: {#1Ki 18:42} "he prayed, and prayed," saith St James; and, by his prayer, he had what he would of God. Whereupon also he infers (as a result) that "the effectual prayer of a righteous man avails much," if it be "fervent" {#Jas 5:16,17, ενεργουμενη} or working; if it be such as sets all the faculties awork, and all the graces awork, then it speeds. Every sound is not music; so neither is every uttering petitions to God a prayer. It is not the labour of the lips, but the travail of the heart. Common beggary is the easiest and poorest trade: but this beggary, as it is the richest, so the hardest. A man can with more ease hear two hours together than pray half an hour, if he "pray in the Holy Ghost," as St Jude hath it. {#Jude 1:20} He must strive with his own indevotion, with Satan's temptations, with the world's distraction: he must wrestle with God, and wring the blessing out of his hands, as the woman of Canaan did: he must "stir up himself to take hold of God," {#Isa 64:7} as the Shunamite did of Elisha, {#2Ki 4:30} as the Church did of her spouse, {#So 3:4} and "not let him go" till he bless us. This is to wrestle; this is to threaten heaven, as Gorgonia did, thus to be modestly impudent and invincible, as her brother speaks of her; in beseeching God, to besiege him, and get the better of him. as Jacob; whose wrestling was by "weeping," and his "prevailing" by praying. Ver. 25. And when he saw that he prevailed not.] He, that is, "the angel" (Christ) "that redeemed Jacob from all evil," {#Ge 48:16} and here held him up with the one hand as he strove against him with the other; and yielded himself overcome by the patriarch's prayers and tears. Deus ipse, qui nullis contra se viribus superari potest, precibus vincitur, saith Jerome.

He touched the hollow of his thigh.] That, if he would needs have the blessing, he might have somewhat with it, ^{a} that might keep him humble, not ascribing the victory to his own strength. Pride is a weed that will grow out of any ground (like misletoe that will grow upon any tree); but, for most part, from the best. Like air in all bodies, it will have a being in every soul, and creeps into every action, either in the beginning, proceeding, or conclusion. Now therefore it is God's care to cure his people of this dangerous disease, as he did Jacob here, and afterwards Paul; ^{#2Co 12:7} who, if he had not been buffeted, "had been exalted," and carried higher in conceit than ever he was in his ecstasy.

Ver. 26. Let me go, &c.] Pugna suum finem, cum rogat hostis, habet. Jacob, though lamed, and hard laid at, will not let Christ go without a blessing: to teach us, as our Saviour did, by the parable of the importunate widow, ^{#Lu 18:1-8} to persevere in prayer, and to devour all discouragements. Jacob holds with his hands, when his joints were out of joint. The woman of Canaan will not be put off, either with silence or sad answers. The importunate widow teacheth us to press God so far, till we put him to the blush, yea, leave a blot in his face (as the word there used signifies, ὑποπιαζῆ, #Lu 18:5), unless we be masters of our request. Latimer so plied the throne of grace with his, Once again, once again, restore the gospel to England, that he would have no nay at God's hands. ^{a} He many times continued kneeling and knocking so long together, that he was not able to rise without help. His knees were grown hard like camels' knees, as Eusebius reports of James, the Lord's brother. Paul "prayed thrice," ^{#2Co 12:8} that is, often, till he had his desire. Nay, Paulus Aemilius, the Roman general, began to fight against Perses, king of Macedonia, when, as he had sacrificed to his god Hercules and it proved not to his mind, he slew twenty various sacrifices one after another; and would not stop till in the one and twentieth he had descried certain arguments of victory. ^{b} Surely his superstition shames our indevotion, his importunity our faint heartedness and shortness of spirit. Surely, as painfulness of speaking shows a sick body, so doth irksomeness of praying a sick soul.

{a} Act. and Mon.

Ver. 27. What is thy name?] As if the angel should say, Thou art such a fellow as I never met withal. Titles of honour are not worthy of thee. Kneel thou down "Jacob," rise up "ISRAEL": Thou art a conqueror, if ever any were. Factus et teipso fortior, et Creatore tuo superior. O quam hic honos non est omnium! {a}

{a} Bucholz.

Ver. 28. No more Jacob, but Israel.] That is, not only, or not so much Jacob as Israel. Both these names he had given him, of striving and struggling. All God's Israel are wrestlers by calling, {#Eph 6:12} and, "as good soldiers of Jesus Christ," must "suffer hardness". {#2Ti 2:3} Nothing is to be "seen in the Shulamite, but as the appearance of two armies," {#So 6:13} maintaining civil broils within her. {a} The spirit would always get the better of the flesh, were it upon equal terms: but when the flesh shall get the hill, as it were, of temptation, and shall have the wind to drive the smoke upon the eyes of the combatant, and so to blind him, -upon such a disadvantage, he is overcome. For it is "not flesh and blood only" that "we wrestle against,"—whether we take the apostle's meaning, for the weakness of our nature or the corruption of it, -"but against principalities, against powers," &c.; against many, mighty, malicious adversaries; "spiritual wickednesses in high places," that are above us, and hang over our necks. Wherefore, we have more than need to "take unto us the whole armour of God," and to strengthen ourselves with every piece of it: whether those of defence, as "the girdle of truth, the breastplate of righteousness, the shoes of peace" and patience, "the shield of faith, the helmet of hope"; or those of offence, as, "the sword of the spirit," and the darts of prayer. {#Eph 6:14} At no place must we lie open; for our enemy is a serpent. If he can but bite the heel, he will transfuse his venom to the heart and head. God's "Spirit" in us "sets up a standard". {#Isa 59:19} The apostle sounds the alarm, Arm, arm. {#Eph 6:10-17} The Holy Scripture is our armoury, like "Solomon's tower, where hang a thousand shields, and all the weapons of strong men". {#So 4:4} God himself is the '

Αγωνοθεπης, that both ordaineth and ordereth our temptations with his own hand, as he dealt with Jacob. And the Lord Christ stands over us, as he did once over Stephen, {#Ac 7:55} with a crown upon his head and another in his hand, with this inscription, Vincenti dabo, "To him that overcometh will I give," &c. {#Re 2:7,11,17,26 3:5,12,21} Fight but with his arms and with his armour, and we are sure to overcome before we fight; for he hath made all our foes our footstool, and hath "caused us to triumph". {#2Co 2:14} Let therefore the assaults of our already vanquished enemies not weaken, but waken us: let their faint oppositions and spruntings before death encourage us, or rather enrage us, to do them to death: we are sure to be "more than conquerors," {#Ro 8:37} and to have Victoriam Halleluatieam, as the Britons, fighting for their religion, had once against the Saxons and Picts in this kingdom. {b}

Ver. 29. And he blessed him there.] That was a better thing to Jacob than to answer his curious request of knowing the angel's name. So when the disciples asked our Saviour, {#Ac 1:6} "Wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" "It is not for you to know the times," saith he, "but ye shall receive the Holy Ghost"; that is better for you, &c. {#Ac 1:8} God sometimes doth not only "grant a man's prayer," but "fulfil his counsel." {#Ps 20:4} This if he do not, because we sometimes ask we know not what, yet some better thing we shall be sure of. "I will strengthen the house of Judah, and they shall be as if I had not cast them off I and I will hear them." {#Zec 10:6}

Ver. 30. I have seen God face to face.] Christ would not tell Jacob his name, to lift up his mind above what he saw of him, and to insinuate that his name was "Wonderful," his essence incomprehensible. {#Jud 13:17,18} And whereas Jacob said here, he had "seen God face to face": he means only, praesens praesentem, as Moses spake with God "mouth to mouth". {#Nu 12:8} He saw not God's majesty and essence; for he is a God "that hides himself," {#Isa 8:17} and "dwells in the light unapproachable". {#1Ti 6:16} But he saw him more apparently and manifestly than ever he had done before. We can see but his "back parts" {#Ex 33:23} and live; we need see no more, that we may live. God that fills all, saith Nazianzen, though he lighten the mind, yet flies before the beams thereof; still leaving it, as it is able, in sight to follow him; draws it by degrees to higher things; but ever interposeth between it and his incomparable essence, as many veils as were over the tabernacle. Some created shape, some glimpse of glory, Jacob saw; whereby God was pleased, for the present, to testify his more immediate presence; but not himself.

Ver. 31. He halted upon his thigh.] Yet had the blessing. So God's people are promised a hundredfold here, with persecution; that is tied, as a rag, to the profession of Christianity. Christ, our Captain, had a bloody victory of it. Paul "bare in his body the marks," or scars, "of the Lord Jesus"; {#Ga 6:17} and glories in these "infirmities," {#2Co 12:9,10} as he calls them. These are God's gems and precious ornaments, said Munster to his friends, pointing them to his sores and ulcers, wherewith God decketh his children, that he may draw them to himself. This he said a little before his death. At death, saith Piscator, God wrestles with his people, laying hold on their consciences by the menaces of the law. {a} They again resist this assault by laying hold upon God, by the faith of the gospel, well assured that Christ hath freed them from the curse of the law, by being made a curse for them on the cross. God yields himself overcome by this re-encounter; but yet toucheth their thigh, takes away their life. Howbeit, this hindereth not the sun of life eternal to arise upon them as they pass over Penuel.

Ver. 32. Therefore the children, &c.] This custom, Josephus saith, continued till his time. A ceremony indifferent in itself, and good by institution (in remembrance of that famous conquest), might become evil by abuse, if it turned into superstition.

Chapter 33

Ver. 1. He divided the children.] Carnal fear oft expels man's wisdom, and leaves him shiftless. But Jacob, after he had prayed and prevailed, was not so moped as not to know what to do in that great danger: he masters his fears, and makes use of two the likeliest means: (1.) The marshalling of his wives and children in best manner, for the saving of the last, at least; (2.) The marching before them himself, and doing low obeisance. So Esther, when she had prayed, resolved to venture to the king, whatever came of it. And our Saviour, though before fearful, yet, after he had prayed in the garden, goes forth and meets his enemies in the face, asking them, "Whom seek ye?". {#Joh 18:4} Great is the power of prayer to steel the heart against whatsoever amazements.

Ver. 2. He put the handmaids, &c.] Of children and friends, some may be better beloved than others: and whereas all cannot be saved or helped, the dearest may be chiefly cared for.

Ver. 3. And he passed over before them.] As a good captain and shepherd, ready to be sacrificed for the safety of his charge. So the Captain of our salvation, the Arch-shepherd, Christ. So should the under-shepherds, the captains, as ministers are called, fight in the front, and bear the brunt of the battle, "not loving their lives unto the death, so they may finish their course with joy," {#Ac 20:24} de scuto magis quam de vita solliciti, as Epaminondas. The diamond in the priests' breastplate showed what should be their hardness and hardiness, for the people's welfare.

Ver. 4. And kissed him.] The word kissed hath a prick over every letter in the original: to note, say the Hebrew doctors, that this was a false and hypocritical kiss, a Judas-kiss. {#Hebrew Text Note} Καταφιλειν ου εστι φιλειν, saith Philo: Amos non semper est in osculo. But our interpreters are agreed that this kiss was a sign that his heart was changed from his former hatred, {a} and that those extraordinary pricks do denote the wonder of God's work therein; which is further confirmed in that they both wept, which could not easily be counterfeit, though they were in Ishmael, that notable hypocrite, {#Jer 41:6} and in the emperor Andronicus, who, when he had injuriously caused many of the nobility to be put to death, pretended himself sorry for them, and that with tears plentifully running down his aged cheeks, as if he had been the most sorrowful man alive. So the Egyptian crocodile, having killed some living beast, lieth upon the dead body, and washeth the head thereof with her warm tears, which she afterward devoureth, with the dead body. {b} We judge more charitably of Esau here. And yet we cannot be of their mind, that herehence conclude his true conversion and salvation. We must take heed we neither make censure's whip nor charity's cloak too long: we may offend in both, and incur the curse, as well by "calling evil good," as "good evil". {#Isa 5:20} Latomus of Lovain wrote, that there was no other a faith in Abraham than in Cicero. Another wrote a long defence and commendation of Cicero, and makes him a very good Christian, and true penitentiary, because he saith, somewhere, Reprehendo peccata mea, quid Pompeio confusus, eiusque partes secutus fuerim. I believe neither of them. {c}

{c} Joh. Manlii, loc. com., 496, 483.

Ver. 5. The children which God hath graciously given.] Sept., Εχαριτατο. For children are God's gifts, as David taught Solomon. {#Ps 127:3} It is well observed, that good Jacob before a bad man, speaks religiously, "God of his grace," &c.; and Esau, as bad as he was, makes no jest of it. There is no surer sign of a profane heart, than to jeer at good expressions; than which, nothing now-a-days is more familiar. Carnal spirits cannot hear savoury words, but they turn them off with a scorn, as Pilate did our Saviour, speaking of the truth, with that scornful profane question, "What is truth?" Shall these scoffers be counted Christians? Could any that heard Elijah mocking the service and servants of Baal, believe that Baal was God in his esteem? Shall not Esau rise up in judgment against such profane persons? And shall not Jacob disclaim all such profligate professors for having any relation to him, that dare not speak religiously, for fear of some Esau in company? that are ashamed to seem what they are, with Zedekiah, lest they that are fallen to the Chaldeans should mock them?

Ver. 7. After came Joseph near, &c.] Iussus accedere Joseph, saith Junius; for he was but a little one of six years old, therefore he did nothing, but as his mother bade him; and, because he went before her, he is first named.

Ver. 8. What meanest thou by all this drove? &c.] He met it, but had not yet accepted of it: either that he might take occasion at their meeting, more mannerly to refuse the present; or, that he might show his brotherly affection frankly and freely, not purchased or procured by any gift or present. Utrumque liberale et civile est, oblata munera modeste recusare, proesertim si grandia sint, et eadem ab instante humaniter acceptare. {a}

Ver. 9. I have enough, my brother.] Here is no mention of God: God is not in all the wicked man's thoughts: he contents himself with a natural use of the creature, as brute beasts do. The godly taketh all as from God, and findeth no such sweetness, as in tasting how good the Lord is, in the creature. Tam Dei meminisse, opus est, quam respirare, saith one. But profane Esaus will neither have God in their heads, {#Ps 10:4} nor hearts, {#Ps 14:1} nor ways, {#Tit 1:16} nor words. {#Ps 12:4} They stand in a posture of distance, nay, of defiance to God.

Ver. 10. As though I had seen the face of God.] I cannot but see God, and his goodness, in thy so unexpected kindness. "The Lord hath done great things for me, whereof I am glad," {#Ps 126:3} and think my present well bestowed.

Ver. 11. I have enough.] Heb., I have all. Esau had much, but Jacob had all, because he had the God of all. Habet omnia qui habet habentem omnia, saith Augustine. Esau's "enough," in the original, is not the same with Jacob's. {a} There are two manner of enoughts. Godliness only hath contentedness. {#1Ti 6:6}

Ver. 12. Let us take our journey.] The Hebrews note, that Esau speaks in few, Jacob more fully: because it is the guise of proud stately persons to speak briefly, and hardly to bring forth half their words. "The poor speaketh supplications," saith Solomon; "but the rich answereth roughly". {#Pr 18:23}

Ver. 13. If men should over-drive.] A pattern of a good pastor, ever to have an eye to the weak ones; and so to regard all in his flock, as he overdrive not any. "Who hath despised the day of small things?" {#Zec 4:10} Weak ones are to be received, "but not to doubtful disputations." {#Ro 14:1} Novices are not to be put upon the austerities of religion. {#Mt 9:15} Christ preached "as they were able to hear." {#Mr 4:33} Peter was specially charged to look to the "lambs." {#Joh 21:15} Christ "bears them in his bosom, and gently leads those that are with young." {#Isa 40:11}

Ver. 14. Until I come unto my lord, unto Seir.] Which yet he never meant, say some: it was but an officious lie, saith Tostatus. Others think that he did go to Seir, though it he not recorded. It is like he purposed to go, but was otherwise warned by God; as the wise men were, {#Mt 2:12} or necessarily hindered, as St Paul was in many of his intended journeys.

Ver. 15. Let me find grace.] That is, Condescend unto me, and leave none.

Ver. 16. On his way unto Seir.] Whither God had sent him beforehand to plant, out of Jacob's way. He was grown rich, desired liberty, and saw that his wives were offensive to the old couple; therefore he moved his dwelling to mount Seir, and left better room for Jacob; who, perhaps, had intelligence thereof from his mother, by Deborah, and so was the rather willing to return.

Ver. 17. Built him an house, and made booths.] So did his posterity, at their going out of Egypt, {#Ex 12:37} and, for a perpetual memorial thereof, were appointed to keep a yearly feast of booths or tabernacles, {#Le 23:34} made of green boughs of trees, in praise of God, who had now vouchsafed them better houses. And here one would wonder, saith a divine, {a} that all along, during the reign of David and Solomon, who gave a pattern of, and built the temple, and all those succeeding reformers, there should something be omitted about this feast of tabernacles, till their return from Babylon: yet so it was. {#Ne 8:16,17} This feast was kept, as it is thought, by Solomon, {#2Ch 7:8} and by these same Jews, {#Ezr 3:4} yet not in this manner. Now {#Ne 8:14} they had learned, by sad experience, to keep it aright, in dwelling in booths, by having been lately strangers out of their own land: to signify which, and profess themselves strangers—as this "Syrian ready to perish their father" {#De 26:5} was, now at Succoth—was the intent of that feast, and that rite of it, dwelling in booths. This is intimated, "They did read also out of the law," &c., {#Ne 8:17,18} which, till then, they had not done.

{a} T. Goodwin.

Ver. 18. Came to Shalem.] Or, Came safe and sound to Shechem, as the Chaldee interprets it.

Ver. 19. For an hundred pieces of money.] Heb., Lambs, -as {a} we call angels, Jacobuses, -because stamped with the image of a lamb. So #Jos 24:32, marg.; #Job 42:11.

{a} Sic pecunia, a pecude.

Ver. 20. And he erected there an altar.] (1.) As a memorial of the promises, and a symbol of God's presence; (2.) As an external profession of his piety; (3.) That he might set up God in his family, and season all his worldly affairs with a relish of religion.

Chapter 34

Ver. 1. Went out to see the daughters of the land.] Who went abroad at this time, with timbrels, to play, say the Hebrews; kept a solemn feast, saith Josephus. Hence Dinah's desire to see them. But what saith St Bernard? Si tu otiose spectas, otiose non spectaris: tu curiose spectas, sed curiosius spectaris. Dinah's wanton gadding, and gazing on others, gave occasion to the adulterer to look and lust after her. See the fruit of her needless getting abroad to see fashions and novelties. The name of a virgin, in the original tongues, {a} is derived from the house hiding; shadow; locked treasure; apple of the eye: to teach them to refrain ill company, and idle gadding. Young women are taught "to be keepers at home". {#Tit 2:5} As when they come abroad among men, they must be, if not veiled, as at Venice, yet clothed, and in their right minds, as that demoniac in #Lu 8:35. And this not only in winter, that they take no cold; but in the summer, that others take no heat from them, -which may rather burn them, than warm them, -as Shechem here did.

{a} תלוּחַב; of תב a house; הַמלע; of מלע to hide; אַתילט; of ללט to shadow. Παρθενος; of παραθειναι, to lay up. Κορη, a virgin, and the apple of the eye.

Ver. 2. Saw her, he look her, and lay with her.] Ut vidit, periit. By those windows of the eyes and ears, sin and death often enter: through them the devil throws balls of wild fire into the soul, and sets all into a combustion. Visus, colloquium, contactus, osculum, concubitus, do too oft one succeed another. {a} See to the five senses, if ye would keep out the enemy. Shut up the five windows, if ye would have the house, the heart, full of light, saith the Arabian proverb. Joseph's mistress cast her eyes upon him; but when she laid hands on him, she was the more inflamed, and set agog, as it were. The viewing, touching, or familiar talking with a woman, either without necessary occasion, or then, without prayer for holy affection, is dangerous, saith a grave divine. {b} Thou mayest not look intently upon what thou mayest not love. Democritus the philosopher pulled out his eyes, that he might not look upon forbidden beauties. This was no part of his wisdom: but it shall be ours, by mortification, to pluck the wanton eye out of old Adam, and to set it sober into the new man: to get that oculum irretortum, that well-ordered eye, that Job had; {#Job 31:1} that Joseph had; that

Gregory Nazianzen had, who could σοφρονιζειν τους οφθαλμους, tutor his eyes; that Charles V, Emperor of Germany, had, who would shut the casements, when at any time he saw fair women afar off, or heard that such were to pass by his window {c} It is not safe to pry into the beauty of a fair woman. Circe {d} often used allusively. may enchant us, the cockatrice slay us with her sight. "Let her not take thee with her eyelids," saith Solomon; {#Pr 6:25} as larks, while they gaze in a glass, are taken in a hunter's net. {See Trapp on "Ge 6:2"} {See Trapp on "Ge 26:7"}

{d} In Greek and Latin mythology the name of an enchantress who dwelt in the island of Aea, and transformed all who drank of her cup into swine.

Ver. 3. And his soul clave unto Dinah.] He kicked her not out of doors, as Amnon did Tamar, far sweeter to him in the ambition, than in the fruition; but to make amends, as they call it, by marriage, he seeks to go by the old rule in that case, Et dote, et ducat. Howbeit, marriage, God's ordinance, is not to be entered into through the devil's portal.

Ver. 4: Get me this damsel to wife.] This is praise worthy in Shechem, as bad as he was, that he correcteth his base-born love, or lust rather, by seeking to make her his wife; not without consent of parents on both sides; which, in the Church of Rome, is oftentimes not regarded. Children are a principal part of their parents' possessions, as Job's children were accounted by Satan; yea, a piece of themselves. "Have mercy upon me," that is, "upon my daughter". {#Mt 15:22} Fit it is, therefore, that they should by the parents be disposed of in marriage.

Ver. 5. And Jacob heard.] To his very great grief and regret: for she was his only daughter; a damsel of not more than fifteen years of age. The Hebrews say she was afterwards given to Job in marriage; but that is not likely; for she is reckoned among those that went down to Egypt. {#Ge 46:15}

And Jacob held his peace.] He felt God's hand upon his back; he therefore lays his own hand upon his mouth. And herein he did better in "ruling his own spirit," than his sons did, that "took the city." {#Pr 16:32} "He sitteth alone, and is silent," {#La 3:28} saith the prophet of the afflicted person. So was Aaron; {#Le 10:3} so was David; {#Ps 39:9} so was the Lord Christ, as a sheep dumb before the shearer. The Romans placed the image of their goddess Angeronia upon the altar of Volupia, with her mouth shut, and sealed up; to signify, saith Macrobius, {a} that they that bridle their grief, and say nothing, shall, by their patience, soon attain to greatest pleasure. Patience in the soul, as the town clerk at Ephesus, {#Ac 19:35,36} sends away mutinous thoughts, as he did the many headed multitude; it quiets the boiling spirit, as Christ becalmed the raging sea, with "Peace," and "Be still"; it makes a David dumb—a dumb show, but a very good one; it says, Cedamus: leve fit, quod bene fertur onus.

{a} Macrob., lib. i., in Som. Scip.

Ver. 6. And Hamor the father of Shechem,] Unruly youth put their aged parents, many times, to much travail and trouble; as Samson, Shechem, Paris, &c. Green wood is ever shrinking and warping; whereas the well-seasoned holds a constant firmness.

Ver. 7. The men were grieved, and very wroth.] A pair of unruly passions, when combined, especially: they ride one upon the back of another, as kine do in a strait passage; and will make an Alexander kill his best friends, such as he would afterwards have revived, with the best and warmest blood in his own heart.

Infectum velit esse, dolor quod suaserit, et mens.”
- Horat.

Because he had wrought folly in Israel.] That is, in the Church, where fornication should "not be once named," much less committed. {#Eph 5:3} Sin is odious anywhere; most of all among saints. A thistle is unseemly in a garden, filthiness in a vestal, baseness in a prince. And yet, by the malice of Satan, there are, many times, more scandals in the Church than else where: such incest at Corinth, {#1Co 5:1} as not among heathens; such folly in Jacob's family, as not at Shechem, or Seir. "Sodom, thy sister, hath not done, she nor her daughters, as thou hast done, thou and thy daughters." {#Eze 16:48} This is lamentable!

Ver. 8. And Hamor communed with them.] A fond father seeks to satisfy the lust of a loose son, whom he should severely have punished; such parents are peremptores potius quam parentes, saith Bernard; like apes, that kill their young with culling them. They show their love as little, as if, by clapping their hands on their children's mouths, to keep the cold wind from them, they should strangle them to death. A fair hand, here, maketh a foul wound; when correction would be a kind of cure. Severitas tamen non sit tetra, sed tetrica, saith Sidonius. {a} For, as a cur by trying waxeth fiercer, and as new wine breaketh weak vessels; so too much severity overthroweth, and quite spillesh a tender mind.

Ver. 9. And make ye marriages with us.] The world thinks we may do as they; and what need we be so scrupulous and straitlaced? But saints must "walk accurately" {a} {#Eph 5:15} by line, and by rule; not as unwise, but as wise; having their feet where other men's heads are: for "the way of the wise is on high," saith Solomon; he goes a higher way to work than others; he may not buckle and stoop to their base courses. Singular things are conferred upon him; singular things are expected from him. An Israelite dare not yoke himself with any Sichemish heifer, that bears not the yoke of Jesus Christ. Those that "stood with the Lamb," had "not defiled themselves with women," &c. {#Re 14:4} Nec aliunde noscibiles, saith Tertullian of those primitive Christians, quam de emendatione vitiorum pristinorum. {b} They were distinguished from all others by their holy behaviour.

{b} Tertul., Ad Scapulam.

Ver. 10. And ye shall dwell with us, &c.] Thus the world tempts the saints, by offer of profits, pleasures, and preferments. Sed surdo cantilenam. For they answer the world, as here, "We, cannot do this thing"; {#Ge 34:14} or, as the children of Israel bespake the king of Edom, "Let us pass, I pray thee, through thy country: we will not pass through the fields of profit, or vineyards of pleasure, &c.; we will go by the king's highway," chalked unto us in the Holy Scriptures: we will not turn to the right hand, or to the left, for any allurement or affrightment of thine, "until we have passed thy borders". {#Nu 20:17}

Ver. 11, 12. Ask me never so much dowry.] Heb., Multiply ye upon me, vehemently. Unbridled affection spares for no cost, so it may be satisfied. Judah parted with his signet, bracelets, and staff to the harlot. {#Ge 38:18} Herod, that old fornicator, bids the dancing damsel ask what she will, to the half of his kingdom. {#Mt 16:7} One there was that would not buy repentance so dear as the harlot demanded. {a} But those miscreants in Micah will give anything for a dispensation to live in sin; they offer "thousands of rams, and ten thousands of rivers of oil; yea, the sons of their body, for the sins of their souls." {#Mic 6:7}

Ver. 13. Deceitfully, and said, Because he had, &c.] Therefore they thought they had reason to do as they did. Satan doth so bemist men, many times, that they think they have reason to be mad, and that there is some sense in sinning; when as, indeed, our only wisdom is to keep God's laws; {#De 4:6} all which are founded upon so good reason, that, had God never made them, yet it had been best for us to have practised them.

Ver. 14. That were a reproach unto us.] And yet the world reproached them with nothing more than with their circumcision; as it is to be seen in Horace, Juvenal, Tacitus. Appion scoffs at it, and is answered by Josephus. But, as he were a fool that would be mocked out of his inheritance; so he, much more, that would be mocked out of his religion. "Ye have shamed the counsel of the poor," saith David, "because the Lord is his refuge"; because he runs to God by prayer. But to show how little he regarded their reproaches, he falls presently a-praying, "Oh that the salvation of Israel," &c. {#Ps 14:6,7} So Nazareth was a reproach cast upon Christ; and he glories in it: {#Ac 22:8} "I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom thou persecutest." He saith not; I am the Son of God, heir of all things, King of the Church, &c.; but, "I am Jesus of Nazareth." "If this be to be vile," said David, "I will be yet more vile." {#2Sa 6:22}

Ver. 15. That every male of you be circumcised.] Lo, herein was their deceit. How often is religion pretended, made a stale and stalking-horse to worldly and wicked aims and respects! A horrible profanation: as when Naboth was put to death at a fast; Henry VII, Emperor, poisoned in the sacramental bread, by a monk. Herod pretends to worship Christ; intends to worry him, &c. "From such stand off," saith St Paul; {#1Ti 6:5} or, if ye come near them, "set a mark upon them". {#Ro 16:17,18} Foenum habet in cornu.

Ver. 16. Then will we give our daughters.] Whether Jacob were present at this whole conference, it is not certain. It is probable that he was not. For surely, he would either have dissuaded them from thus doing; or, if he had consented, he would have said something more to the Shechemites, for their better assurance. It is a maxim in Maehiavel; Fidem tamdiu servandam esse, quamdiu expediat. But Jacob had not known this depth of the devil: his sons better could skill of it. They seem to be somewhat akin to those Thracians, of whom it was anciently said, Eos foedera nescire; that they knew no covenants: or the Turks at this day, whose covenants, grounded upon the law of nations, be they with never so strong capitulations concluded, or solemnity of oath confirmed, have, with them, no longer force, than standeth with their own profit; serving, indeed, but as snares to entangle other princes in. {a} There is no faith, say they, to be kept with dogs; that is, with Christians. {b} And this, perhaps, they have learned of those pseudo-Christians, the Papists, who dealt so perfidiously with them at the great battle of Varna; where Amurath, the great Turk, seeing the great slaughter of his men, in spite of the oath given him by king Ladislaus, dispensed with by the Pope's legate, and beholding the picture of the crucifix in the displayed ensigns of the voluntary Christians, he plucked the writing out of his bosom, wherein the late league was comprised, and holding it up in his hand, with his eyes cast up to heaven, said, Behold, thou crucified Christ, this is the league thy Christians, in thy Name, made with me, which they have, without cause, violated: Now, if thou be a God, as they say thou art, and as we dream, revenge the wrong now done to thy Name, and me; and show thy power upon thy perjurious people, who, in their deeds, deny thee their God. {c} And it happened out accordingly: for God hates foul and faithless dealing. {#Zec 5:4 Ro 1:31} Periurii poena divina exitium; humana, dedecus. This was one of the laws of the twelve tables in Rome. {d}

Ver. 17. But if ye will not hearken.] How often have men found treason in trust, and murder under show of marriage! as in #1Sa 18:17,25 Da 11:17, and in the massacre of Paris.

Ver. 18. And their words.] See the force of love, and hope of profit!

Ver. 19. And the young man deferred not, &c.] Heb., Neque distulit puer; The lad deferred not. He is called a lad or a child, that is, a fool; because he was carried, not by right reason, but blind affection, "walking in the ways of his heart and sight of his eyes". {#Ec 11:9} And the word {a} used to signify "youth," {#Ec 11:10} signifieth darkness; to note, that youth is the dark age, hot, and headlong, indeliberate and slippery, such as had need to "cleans their ways, by cleaving to the Word," saith David; {#Ps 119:9} where the word for "cleansing," properly signifies the cleansing of glass, which, as it is slick and slippery, so, though it be very clean, yet it will gather filth, even in the sunbeams, and of itself: which noteth the great corruption of this age.

Ver. 20. And Hamor and Shechem, &c.] These great men easily persuaded and prevailed with the people to have what they would. Great need have we to pray for good governors. When Crispus believed, who was the chief ruler of the synagogue, many Corinthians believed also. {#Ac 18:8} Paul was loath to lose the deputy; because his conversion would draw on many others, is on the contrary, Jeroboam caused Israel to sin; and generally, as the kings were good or evil, so were the people; in which, as in a beast, the whole body follows the head.

Ver. 21. These men are peaceable, &c.] Nothing more ordinary, with politicians, than to cover private ends and respects, with pretence of public good: as Jeroboam told the people, it was too much trouble for them to go up to Jerusalem to worship; they should take a shorter cut to Dan and Bethel. So Jehu, in all his reformatiōns, had a hawk's eye to a kingdom; his main end was, to settle the crown upon his own head. The Turkish Janizaries, desirous to be rid of their Sultan Osman, pretended, and persuaded the people, that he was Jaour, that is, an infidel; and that he endeavoured to betray the Turkish Empire to Christian dogs, May 18, 1622. {a}

Ver. 22. If every male among us be circumcised.] {See Trapp on "Ge 34:26"}

Ver. 23. Shall not their cattle, &c.] Profit persuades mightily with the multitude. They all look to their own way; "Every one for his gain from his quarter". {#Isa 56:11} "Who will show us any good?" is Vox populi. {#Ps 4:6} And who begs not attention, or inoculates not his faithful endeavour into his friend's creed and belief, with a tale of gain!

Ver. 24. And every male was circumcised.] Many have lost their blood, and suffered so much trouble for their lusts, as, had it been for religion, they had been martyrs. But the cause, and not the punishment, makes the martyr. Samson and the Philistines died together; sed diverse fine at fate. Multum interest, saith Augustine, et qualia quis, et qualis quisque patiatur.

Ver. 25. On the third day.] Which is the worst day to those that are wounded; the critical day, as the surgeons call it. Wicked men are witty, to take their opportunity to act villany.

Ver. 26. And they slew Hamor and Shechem.] This is commended in apocryphal Judith {#RAPC Jdt 9:2} for zeal; which the canonical Scripture condemneth for self-will; and Jacob, on his death bed, cursed it for cruelty, and blessed himself from their assembly. {#Ge 49:6,7} Quest. But why doth he not more sharply reprove it here? Ans. First, he considered God's just judgment on the Shechemites; who, without the knowledge and faith of God, had profaned the sacrament of circumcision. A sin that God suffers not to pass without a sensible check, {#1Co 11:29,30} in his dearest children; how much less in strangers and enemies? The Donatists, that cast the holy elements of the Lord's Supper to dogs, were devoured of dogs. He that came without his wedding garment, was taken from the table to the tormentor. Secondly, Jacob gave place, for present, to his sons' rage and fury. Discretion in the choice of seasons for reprovng, is no less necessary than zeal and faithfulness in reprovng. Good physicians use not to evacuate the body, in the extremities of heat and cold. Good mariners do not hoise up sail in every wind.

Ver. 27. Because they had defiled their sister.] So it was just in God, though unjust in the instruments; who were therefore cursed by Jacob; {#Ge 49:7} but yet not rejected by God. His election is of free grace, and not of foreseen faith or works.

Ver. 28. They took their sheet, &c.] One only sinned; all suffered. "A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump". {#1Co 5:2,6} All the Corinthians were tacked with, and taxed for, the incestuous man's offence, because they bewailed it not, repressed it not He knew what he did, that prayed for pardon of his other men's sins.

Ver. 29. And all their wealth,] Or, Power: for in a man's wealth is his power; yea, it is his "tower of strength," {#Pr 18:11} and so much he is valued at, as he is able to disburse. {See Trapp on "Ge 31:1"}

And spoiled even all that was in the house.] So dealt Minerius at Merindol; Charles V, at Magdeburg; the bloody Papists, at the Parisian massacre. But when the Lord came to "make inquisition for blood, he remembered them." {#Ps 9:12} He drew articles of inquiry against them, as strict, and as critical, as ever the Spanish Inquisition; and dealt with them accordingly. Cambyses lighting off his horse, after he had been showing great cruelty to them of Athens, his sword flew out of the scabbard, and slew him. {a} If these brethren in iniquity sped better, they may thank a good God, whose terror fell upon the adjacent cities. For they did enough to undo, not themselves only, but their father, and his whole family. It was good counsel to such, that Tertullian gives to bloody Scapula; Si nobis non parcis, tibi parce: si non tibi, Carthagini: See thou undo not thyself and thy city by thy cruelty to Christians.

Ver. 30. Are have troubled me.] In mind and estate, {a} and many such trouble houses and trouble towns there are abroad. All places are full of them, and so is hell too. There God will trouble them another while, as he did Achan, {#Jos 7:25} when he will show mercy to such Jacobs in whose families that is committed that they abhor.

I being few in, number.] So the saints were ever a little flock, a poor few to the many; jewels, nothing so much in bulk as lumber; strangers, few, in respect of home dwellers; sons of God, few, to common subjects. When Christ "came to his own, his own received him not." {#Joh 1:12} He wondered at one good Nathanael, and set a "Behold" upon him, as a rare bird. {#Joh 1:47}

{a} Cum in animo tum in rationibus. -Jun.

Ver. 31. Should he deal with our sister as with an harlot?] Why, no: but should you therefore speak so boldly to your father, and deal so cruelly with your confederates; whom you first cheated into a covenant, and then basely butchered, when not able to help themselves? But anger is outrageous, and forethinks not what will follow hereafter, or becomes a man for present. Bridle it therefore.

Chapter 35

Ver. 1. Arise, go up to Bethel.] This is not the first time that God tells him of that vow, and calls for performance. See #Ge 31:13. It is with us, as with children—Eaten bread is soon forgotten: deliverances, commonly, are but nine days' wonderment at most; and it is ten to one, that any leper returns to give praise to God. If anything arouse and raise up our hearts to thankful remembrance of former mercy, it must be the sense of some present misery, as here. Jacob was in a great strait and fright: his sons had troubled him; the country was ready to rise upon him, and root him out: God also was justly displeased with him for his forgotten vow; yet chides him not, now that he was in heaviness; but takes his opportunity, for we are best when at worst, and gently minds him of what was his duty, and would be for his safety. Numa is said to have put so much confidence in his gods, that when he was sacrificing and news came that the enemy was at hand, he laughed, and said, At ego rein divinam facio. {a} Those Philistines were even ambitious of destruction, and ran to meet their ruin, that gathered themselves against Israel, while they were sacrificing and serving the Lord in their meet at Mizpeh. {#Isa 7:7} The Church, in her worship, is "terrible as an army with banners"; {#So 6:10} "a cup of trembling to all the people round about"; "a burdensome stone for all people"; "a torch of fire in a sheaf." {#Zec 12:2,3,6} He is a mad man that will meddle with her while she is upon good terms with Christ, her Champion. {#Isa 37:22} Balaam knew this, and therefore gave that villanous counsel. All Germany was in arms against that handful of Hussites in Bohemia, yet could not suppress them. {b} Geneva, a small people, surrounded with enemies, and barred from aid of neighbours, yet faithful with God, hath been hitherto strangely upheld. At the siege of Mountabone in France, the people of God, using daily humiliation, as their service would permit, did sing a Psalm after, and immediately before, their sallying forth. With which practice the enemy coming acquainted, ever, upon the singing of the Psalm, upon which they expected a sally, they would so quake and tremble, crying, They come, they come, as though the wrath of God had been breaking out upon them. {c}

Ver. 2. Then Jacob said unto his household.] So Gideon began his reformation at his father's house. David also would walk wisely in the midst of his house; and this he calls "a perfect way," a sign of sincerity. {#Ps 101:2} This Psalm Bishop Ridley read over often to his family, hiring them to learn it by heart; and taking care that they might be a spectacle to all others of virtue and honesty.

Put away the strange gods.] Strange it was that such idols should be suffered among them. Calvin thinks that Jacob winked at Rachel's superstition, of a blind love to her; as Solomon gratified his mistresses of Moab. I should think rather that they were the idols of Shechem, brought into the house either by Jacob's sons and servants, or by the captive women.

Be clean, and change your garments.] God is to be approached unto with the best preparation we can make. Heathens saw that God is not to be drawn nigh unto, hand over head, but preparation to be made at home. {a} We wash us every day; but, when to dine with great ones, we wash us with balls, and put on our best.

Ver. 3. And was with me in the way, &c.] Deducendo, reducendo, fraenumque socero, fratri, finitimisque Shecemi inieciendo, ne me ullo pacto laederent, saith Junius. All this called for thankfulness. Prayer and thanks should be like the double motion of the lungs. The air that is sucked in by prayer should be breathed out again by praises. God had heard Jacob; now he should hear of him.

Ver. 4. And they gave unto Jacob.] Now they were in danger of destruction, they would do anything. So those false Israelites, when God "slew them, then they sought him." {#Ps 78:34} So many, when they are deadly sick, are wondrous good; as William Rufus, who vowed, upon his recovery, to see all vacancies furnished. {a} In the sweating sickness, so long as the ferventness of the plague lasted, there was crying, Peccavi, peccavi: the ministers were sought for in every corner—You must come to nay lord, you must come to my lady, &c. {b} The walnut tree is most fruitful when most beaten. Fish thrive best in cold and salt waters. The most plentiful summer follows upon the hardest winter. David was never so tender as when hunted like a partridge; nor Jonah so watchful, prayerful, as in the whale's belly. {c} When men suffer for their sin, {#La 3:39,41} hands and hearts and all are lift up to heaven, that before were as "without God in the world," and thought they could do well enough without him. A lethargy is commonly cured by a fever; worms killed with aloes; so are crawling lusts by bitter afflictions. Israel under the cross, will "defile" the idols that they had deified; {#Isa 30:22} and after that they were captives in Babylon, they could never be drawn to that sin, whatever they suffered for their refusal, as under Antiochus. I end, with St Ambrose: Beata anima, quae est instar domus Iacobi, in qua nulla simulachra, nulla effigies vanitatis: Blessed is that soul, that, like Jacob's house, hath no idol in it.

Ver. 5. The terror of God was upon the cities.] The Hebrews tell us, that they pursued Jacob, and were beaten back by him: whereupon he saith, {#Ge 48:22} that he took that country "out of the hand of the Amorites, with his sword and with his bow." God might send a panic terror upon them as they were fighting against Jacob, and so bridle them from further attempts. The Syrians heard a noise of chariots and horses in the air, {#2Ki 7:7} made by angels, likely; or whether it were but their own fancy, as #Jud 9:36, and as the Burgundians took a field of standing corn for an army of fighting men, and fled for their lives. Theodosius, the Emperor, overcame the Persians and Saracens by means of a panic terror smitten into them by God; so that they ran into the river Euphrates, and above a hundred thousand of them perished in the waters. {a}

Ver. 6. So Jacob came to Luz.] Which was thirty miles from Shechem: a long journey for such a large family, who went it with hearts full of heaviness, for, "without were fightings, within fears": but this was their comfort, they went to see the face of God at Bethel. As they that "passed through the valley of Baca," though they took many a weary step, yet went "from strength to strength," because they were to "appear before God in Zion." {#Ps 84:6,7} Popish pilgrims, though used hardly and put to much expense and inconvenience, yet satisfy themselves in this, I have that I came for, viz., the sight of a dumb idol, as Calvin notes. What, then, should not we suffer to see God in his ordinances? "They shall bring your brethren as an offering to the Lord, upon horses, in chariots, and in litters," saith the prophet: {#Isa 66:20} that is, though sick, weakly, and unfit for travel; yet, rather in litters, than not at all.

Ver. 7. Because there God appeared.] Heb., Revelavissent Dii. Not the angels, but the sacred Trinity. {See Trapp on "Ge 1:1"}

Ver. 8. But Deborah, Rebekah's nurse, died.] A grave matron she was; of great use while she lived, and much missed when she died. This is not every man's case. Some have their souls, as swine, for no other use, than, as salt, to keep their bodies from putrefaction. {a} And when they die, they are no more missed than the sweepings of the house, or parings of the nails.

Ver. 9. And God appeared, &c.] A sweet allayment of his late heaviness for Deborah, and a gracious preparative to the ensuing loss of Rachel. The joy of the Lord is the Christian man's strength. {#Ne 8:10} One sight of him is enough to carry one through all conditions with comfort. As a man that hath his bones filled with marrow, and that hath abundance of good blood and fresh spirits in his body, he can endure to go with less clothes than another, because he is well lined within; so it is with a heart that hath a great deal of fat and marrow, communion with God, and feeling of his favour; he will go through troubles, in the fail of outward comforts. And as the lily is fresh, and looks fair, though among thorns; so will he, amidst miseries.

Ver. 10. And God said unto him, &c.] It is usual with God to revive and renew the promises with fresh supplies of comforts upon the hearts of his faithful servants, for the further confirmation of their faith and hope. Thus he seals to us at every sacrament, besides those sweet supplies of the Spirit of promise, {επιχορηγια, #Php 1:19} whereby we are daily sealed to the day of redemption, as the merchant's goods are signed with his seal. {#Eph 1:13,4:30}

Ver. 11. I am God Almighty.] This is hardly persuaded; and yet it is the ground of all true comfort and spiritual security. We are apt to measure things according to our own model, as to think God so powerful as our understanding can reach, &c. But, for a finite creature to believe the infinite all-sufficiency of God, he is not able to do it thoroughly without supernatural grace; nor can he be soundly comforted till he comes to comprehend it. Of his will to do us good we doubt not, till, in some measure, we doubt of his power to help.

Ver. 13. And God went up from him.] Not by local ascension; for he is everywhere; but in respect of that visible sign of his glory, which he now withdrew from over, or from upon Jacob. For the righteous are as God's chariot, say the Hebrews on this text. Compare #So 6:12.

Where he talked with him.] Prayer is a free and familiar conference or intercourse with God; a parling with his Majesty, as St Paul calls it; {εντροχις, #1Ti 2:1} a standing upon interrogatories with him; especially when Satan, sin, and conscience accuse. It was a part of the Persian kings' silly glory, to keep their greatest subjects from coming near them without special licence. {#Es 4:11} To God we have free access upon all occasions, and are bid to "come boldly." {#Heb 4:16} If Seneca could say, Audacter Deum roges, nihil illum de alieno rogaturus; how much more may the faithful Christian, since all is his, God and all! {#1Co 3:22} Moses and Luther could have what they would of God. Fiat voluntas mea, saith Luther; and then he adds, Mea voluntas, Domine, quia tua: Let my will be done; but no otherwise mine, than as thine, Lord.

Ver. 14. And Jacob set up a pillar.] Or, Had set up a pillar, had poured a drink offering, &c., -to wit, #Ge 28:18,19. And now he either repeats it in the presence, and for the edification of his family; or else he repairs the pillar now ruined, and new consecrates it, by the old name Bethel.

Ver. 16. She had hard labour.] Woman, of all creatures, bringeth forth with most pain and peril, as the philosopher {a} observeth, and experience confirmeth. Her only way is to send for Lady Faith, the best midwife; {#ITi 2:15} and thereby to repose upon him whose "voice causeth the hinds to calve," {#Ps 29:9} which yet, of all brute creatures, bring forth with greatest trouble, "bowing themselves," bruising their young, and "casting out their sorrows." {#Job 39:3,4}

{a} Arist., De Anima., lib. vii.

Ver. 17. Thou shalt have this son also.] So she had "children," according to her desire; but this last, to her cost, for a chastisement of her strong affections, which drew on strong afflictions; as hard knots must have hard wedges. They that would needs have a penny for their pains, had no joy of their penny: when the end of the day came, {#Mt 20:13} when they were to go into another world, they saw that their penny was no such good silver; that preferment, profit, credit, were but empty things, and could not satisfy. It is best to be moderate in our desires after these outward things; and not so set upon it as to indent with God for such, and so much: this may be dangerous.

Ver. 18. As her soul was in departing,] viz., To God that gave it. It is a spiritual, immortal substance, distinct from the body; and can subsist of itself; {a} as the mariner can, when the ship is broken.

For she died.] In our birth, we rent our mothers, to death sometimes, whom before we had burdened; so far nature witnessing our viperous generation, because of sin, which we bring into the world.

But his father called him Benjamin.] Lest the former name should be a daily reminder of his loss. Let men make their burdens as light as they can, and not increase their worldly sorrow by sight of sad objects. It will come, as we say of foul weather, soon enough; we need not send for it. What should dropsy men do eating salt meats?

Ver. 19. And Rachel died.] We forfeit many favours, by over loving them. Our jealous God will not endure us to idolise any creature. Let them that have wives, or any other thing they hold most dear to themselves, be as if they had none. So love, as to think of loss. {a}

Let all outward things hang loose, as an upper garment that we can throw off at pleasure. {#1Co 7:29}

Ver. 20. And Jacob set a pillar upon her grave.] To testify his love, and continue her remembrance. Dead friends may be lawfully thus honoured with monuments; modo vitetur luxus et superstitio. .

Ver. 21. Beyond the tower of Edar.] Or, Of the flock. This tower was built, it seems, for the safety and service of shepherds. There it was, probably, that those shepherds, #Lu 2:8, watched their flocks. There also, Helena, mother to Constantine the Great, did afterwards build a temple, for a memorial of the angels that there appeared to those shepherds, carolling Christ into the world.

Ver. 22. Reuben went and lay with Bilhah.] A foul fault, in so good a family: but so it sometimes falls out, by the malice of Satan, for the discrediting of religion. Such ugly incest was committed at Corinth, as was hardly {a} "heard of among heathen, that a man should have his father's wife." {#1Co 5:1} Some such there were among the kings of Egypt; but not many. Ethelbald, king of West Saxons, with great infamy marrying his father's widow Judith, enjoyed his kingdom but two years and a half. {b} But how hateful is that Spanish incest, by Papal dispensation! King Philip of Spain might call the Archduke Albert, both brother, cousin, nephew, and son: for all this was he unto him, either by blood or affinity; being uncle to himself, first cousin to his father, husband to his sister, and father to his wife. {c} Abhorred filth!

And Israel heard it.] And held his peace, because he saw God in it, chastising him for his polygamy. The punishment is sometimes so like the sin, that a man may boldly say, Such a sin was the mother of such a misery. And here is a pause in the Hebrew, to show Jacob's great amazement at this sad tidings. Dolores ingentes stupent. He was even "dumb, and opened not his mouth, because God was in it."

Ver. 23. Reuben, Jacob's firstborn.] Who, though by his sin he fell from his birthright, yet is here reckoned as a patriarch, and afterwards, upon his repentance, not a little honoured. {#Ex 28:21,29 Re 21:12} God is not off and on with his elect; their frowardness interrupts not the course of his goodness.

Ver. 29. And Isaac gave up the ghost.] Twelve years after Joseph was sold, and forty years after he first became blind. Three special friends Jacob buries, in this chapter. Crosses come thick: be patient.

Chapter 36

Ver. 1. Who is Edom.] The name and note of his profaneness. A stigmatical Belialist. It were a happiness to the wicked, if they might be forgotten. {#Ec 8:10}

Ver. 4. Eliphaz.] Job's friend, say some: a good man; but much mistaken in Job, whom he so sharply censures.

Ver. 6. From the face of his brother Jacob.] Or, Before the coming of his brother Jacob; by a special providence of God, to make room for the right heir. It is he that "determineth the bounds of our habitations." {#Ac 17:26} It was he that espied out this land for his peculiar people; and that kept the room empty all the time of the Babylonish captivity, till the return of the natives; though it were a pleasant country, left destitute of inhabitants, and surrounded with many warlike nations. Piscator renders this text, propter Iacobum, and expounds it, Because he knew that the land of Canaan should be Jacob's, according to God's promise made to him in his father's blessing of him. But I doubt whether Esau would yield to him for any such reason.

Ver. 7. For their riches were more, &c.] And besides, mount Seir was more fit for a hunter. A good ease it was to Jacob, who had little joy in his neighbourhood. "God will not take the ungodly by the hand"; {#Job 8:20, marg.} no more will his people. When they are forced to be in ill company, they cry, "Oh that I had the wings of a dove! that I might flee away": {#Ps 55:6} or if that "Oh" will not set them at liberty, they take up that "Woe," to express their misery; "Woe is me, that I sojourn in Meshech!" &c. {#Ps 120:5} It was once the prayer of a good gentlewoman, when she came to die, being in much trouble of conscience: O Lord, let me not go to hell, where the wicked are; for, Lord, thou knowest I never loved their company here. {a}

{a} Moses's Choice, by M. Bur., p. 330.

Ver. 11. And the sons of Eliphaz.] See here the fulfilling of God's predictions and promises, even to an Esau. Will he be wanting to his obedient people?

Ver. 20. These are the sons of Seir.] Esau was by marriage allied to this Seir: for he married his niece Aholibamah: {#Ge 36:2} yet the children of Esau chased away the Horims of Seir, and dwelt in their stead in mount Seir. {#De 2:12} Wicked men are void of natural affection, in their pursuit of profit or preferment; Abimelech, Absalom, Athaliah, for instance; and that Amida, son of Muleasses, king of Tunis, who rose up against his father, and possessing himself of his kingdom, slew his captains, polluted his wives, took the castle of Tunis; and, after all, put out his father's and brethren's eyes, like as Muleasses himself, before, had dealt with his own brethren. {a}

Ver. 24. That found the mules.] By breeding different kinds together, contrary to #Le 19:19. Neither did the world, till then, want any perfect kind of creature; for the mule and the ass differ not, but only in degree. The Greeks call mules half-asses. {a} See here, saith one, {b} the busy curiosity of some men's natures, given to new and strange inventions. So he that taught a parrot in Rome to repeat the Creed, every article in order, and by itself, distinctly. {c} Another, that painted the whole story of our Saviour's passion, both for persons and things, upon the nails of his own fingers. Had not he little to do, that learned to write a fair hand with his feet? Heidfeld saith he saw it with wonderment. And he {d} as little, that enclosed Homer's Iliads written in a nut? which Cicero tells us he saw with his eyes. These were laborious toys, quae nec ignorantibus nocent, nec scientibus iuvant, as Seneca saith {e} of sophistry. Hard they are to come by; but of no use or worth: like an olive, or date stone; hard to crack the one, or cleave the other: but nothing, or nothing worth aught, when cracked or cloven, within either, {f} This same foolish wittiness Alexander wittily scoffed, when he gave a fellow only a bushel of peas, for his pains of throwing, every time, a pea upon a needle's point, standing a pretty way off.

Ver. 31. Before there reigned any king, &c.] Sicut herba tectorum praecocem habet vigorem, sed citius arescit. Exoriuntur impii, sed exuruntur. They are set up on high, but "on slippery places"; {#Ps 73:18} advanced, as Haman, but to be brought down again with a vengeance. This observation the Hebrews make upon this text: While Edom reigns and flourishes, Israel groanes under the servitude of Egypt. Pomp and prosperity, then, is no sure note of the true Church.

Ver. 40. Duke Timnah, duke Alvah.] We had a Duke d'Alva lately in the Netherlands, governor there for the Spaniard, infamous for his inhumanity. For he roasted some to death, starved others, and that even after quarter; saying, though he promised to give them their lives, he did not promise to find them meat. {a} This was a right Romish Edomite. The Hebrews think the Romans came of the Idumeans. Sure I am, if they be not of the natural descent, they are of the spiritual, or unnatural; and so like, as by the one we may see the face, favour, and affection of the other.

Ver. 43. These be the dukes of Edom.] As the principality of Edom began with dukes, and rose to kings; so it returneth to dukes again, after the death of Hadad, in Moses's time. {#1Ch 1:51} It is likely, saith an interpreter, that, upon the unkind dealing of that Hadad, in denying to let Israel pass through his land, the Lord removed the dignity of kings from that commonwealth, and let it be ruled by dukes again; whereof eleven are here by name rehearsed. So sensible is God, and so severe, in punishing the least unkindness done to his people. Julius Pflugius, complaining to the Emperor, by whom he had been employed, of great wrong done him by the Duke of Saxony, received this answer: Have a little patience; tua causa erit mea causa. So saith God to his abused. "He reproveth," yea, deposes "even kings for their sakes"; {#Ps 105:14} and accounts that the whole "world is not worthy of them!" {#Heb 11:38} nay, not worth one of them, how mean soever regard of outwards; as Chrysostom expounds it.

Chapter 37

Ver. 1. In the land of his father's sojournings (Marg.).] The dukes of Edom had habitations in the land of their possessions. {#Ge 36:43} But Jacob, with his father Isaac, were pilgrims in the land of Canaan; content to dwell in tents here, that they might dwell with God for ever. Justin Martyr saith of the Christians of his time: They dwell in their own countries but as strangers; have fight to all, as citizens; but suffer hardship, as foreigners, &c. {a}

Ver. 2. These are the generations.] That is, Events, begotten of time, after he came to live with his father Isaac, who also wept for Joseph, {#Ge 37:35} as Junius.

With the sons of Bilhah, &c.] It is thought that these sons of the handmaids, for the baseness of their birth, were more modest than the rest; and that Joseph therefore, out of his humility, sorted himself with them. Probable it is, they were more unruly than the rest, and ill conditioned, -as such are, commonly, -whereof Joseph made complaint, and was therefore hated. Veritas odium parit. Truth is a good mistress; but he that follows her too close at heels, may hap to have his teeth struck out. An expectas ut Quintillanus ametur? said he. Those that are wakened out of sleep are usually unquiet, ready to brawl with their best friends. So here.

Ver. 3. Because he was the son of his old age.] The Chaldee Paraphrast renders it morally, Because he was a wise son, in quo ante canos sapientia: such a one as Macarius was, of whom Nicephorus saith, that, for his prudence and gravity while he was yet but a youth, he was surnamed παιδαριογερων, the old stripling. Josephus saith, he was very like his mother Rachel; and therefore his father so loved him. But Chrysostom saith, better, that it was for his virtuous life, and godly disposition. Goodness is lovely in any; much more in an own child. John was the best beloved disciple, because best conditioned. But otherwise, Cavete, saith Ambrose, ne quos natura coniunxit, paterna gratia dividat. Parents' partiality may breed heart-burings. {#Eph 6:4}

Ver. 4. They hated him.] 1. There is a passion of hatred: this is a kind of averseness, and rising of the heart against a man, when one seeth him; so that he cannot away with him, nor speak to him, nor look courteously or peaceably upon him; but one's countenance falls whea he sees him, and he oven turns away, and, by his good will, would have nothing to do with him. 2. There is a habit of hatred: when the soul is so soured with this leaven, so settled in this alienation and estrangement, that it grows to wish, and desire, and seek his hurt. And this is one difference between hatred and envy: whom men hate, they will harm; but sometimes men's gifts are envied, against whom no hurt is intended.

Ver. 5. And Joseph dreamed.] Of divine dreams to be regarded as oracles, {See Trapp on "Ge 20:3"}

They hated him yet the more.] So the Jews did Jesus, for his parables; especially when he spake of his exaltation.

Ver. 6. Hear, I pray you, this dream.] Thus he bespeaketh them, not out of a vain glorious boasting, but out of youthful simplicity, and because himself wondered at it. God also had a holy hand in it.

Ver. 7. We were binding sheaves.] This was fulfilled, when they came to him for grain into Egypt. Here Joseph dreams of his advancement, but not of his imprisonment: so do many professors, which therefore prove apostates.

Ver. 8. Shalt thou indeed reign over us?] They rightly interpreted the dream, yet stubbornly resist the revealed will of God. This leaves sin without a cloak, {#Joh 15:22} as it did in the Pharisees. They rightly interpreted that place in Micah, {#Mt 2:1-10} and yet, when Christ, to whom all their own signs did so well agree, came amongst them, they would by no means receive him; nay, they sent a message after him, saying, "We will not have this man to reign over us."

Ver. 9. Behold, the sun, and the moon.] The father of the family should be as the sun, full of heavenly light, and illightening all about him: The mother, as the moon, shining out in her husband's absence, and veiling to him, when he is in place. The children, as stars of light, or rather, as a heaven full of stars, as one saith well of Joseph: Fuit Iosephi vita coelum quoddam lucidissimis virtutum stellis exornatum. The people of God are called, "the host of heaven," {#Da 8:10} and are bid to shine as lamps, or rather, φωστῆρες, as those great lights of heaven. {#Php 2:15}

Ver. 10. And his father rebuked him.] Either as not yet understanding the mystery, or dissembling it. It is wisdom, at some time, and in some place, to pretend a dislike of another man's fact (so far as we may with truth), for the preventing of envy. This, some think, was Jacob's drift here. And therefore he draws an argument, ab impossibili et absurdo; Shall thy dead mother rise and reverence thee? A likely matter: and yet, as light as Jacob made of it, to unload Joseph of the envy, he laid it to heart. {#Ge 37:11}

Ver. 11. And his brethren envied him.] Envy is a filthy fruit of the flesh {#Ga 5:21} and the devil; who is called, the envious man; {#Mt 13:19,25} and such wisdom is said to be "devilish." {#Jas 3:15} The Pharisees, envying our Saviour, did the devil's work. {#Joh 8:41} So did Cain, the devil's patriarch, when he laid his cruel club on the innocent head of his brother Abel. And Saul, when, seized upon by the evil spirit more than a melancholy humour, he envied David, and sought his death. For, this vice, as it makes the heart to boil with hellish venom, so it blisters out at the tongue, as here; "They could not speak peaceably to Joseph," but scoff, and consult his ruin. It sits, also, looking out at the windows of the eyes; and, as a basilisk, blasteth the object. {a} Hence, invidere; to see with an evil eye, and naughty mind: and our English saith, to overlook a thing; that is, to bewitch it. This very looking upon other precellencies, whereby we are over shined, so as to lust to have that light put out, that our candle might shine above it—this is every man's sin—though it act nothing, yet it is abominable. {#Jas 4:5} As, on the other side, to rejoice in the good parts of others, though it eclipseth our light, and this from the heart; this is indeed more than to excel others in any excellency, if this be wanting. For this, it is good to get the heart fraught with mercy, meekness of wisdom, fear of God, -whose providence cuts us out our various conditions and proportions, -zeal for his glory, as Moses; humility, charity ("Love envieth not," #1Co 13:4); and to take heed of strife. {#Ro 13:13} "Envy and strife" go coupled; they are brought in there by the brace, as it were twisted together. Likewise, of pride and vain-glory; {#Php 2:3} covetousness; {#Pr 28:22} contention about words; {#1Ti 6:4} self-love, ignorance, &c.; all which make the soul sick of the fret, {#Ps 37:8 73:3} and to pierce itself through with many sorrows. For, this sin killeth the silly one, {#Job 5:2} if it kill no other. Envy and murder {b} go coupled. {#Ro 1:29 Ga 5:21} A hectic it is to itself, however; the same that rust is to iron, blasting to corn, or a moth to the cloth it breeds in. It drinketh the most part of its own venom, gnaws on its own heart, is consumed in its own fire, as Nadab and Abihu were; and, like the snake in the fable, licks off its own tongue, as envying teeth to the file in the forge. Socrates called it, the saw of the soul. {c} David compares it to fire in billets of juniper, which burns vehemently, and continues, they say, more years than one. Simul peccat et plectitur: expedita iustitia, saith Petrarch. Other sins have some pleasure; this hath none, but torment. It is a very hell above ground, and paves a way to the unpardonable sin, as in Saul, and the Pharisees.

Ver. 12. In Shechem.] Sixty miles from Hebron, where Jacob now dwelt.

Ver. 13. And he said to him, Here am I.] "Children obey your parents,"— quorum divina est dignitas, saith Chrysostom: our parents are Θεοι εφεστιοι, saith another; and Philo, for this maketh the fifth commandment a part of the first table, "for this is right." {#Eph 6:1} Blind nature saw it to be so. For it is not fit, saith the philosopher, to cross the gods, a man's own father, and his tutor or teacher. {a}

Ver. 14. Well with thy brethren, and well with the flocks.] His first care is for the welfare of his children. Many a Laban is more solicitous of his flock than of his family. It were better being Herod's swine than his son, said Augustus. Hawks and hounds are better tended and tutored in some great houses than children. Or if they be taught manners, and handsome behaviour, that is all that is cared for. But piety must be principally planted, where God's blessing upon posterity is expected: the promise whereof is therefore specially annexed to the second commandment. {a}

Ver. 15. What seekest thou?] This was not the angel Gabriel, as the Hebrews will have it; but some courteous passenger, that thus offereth himself to wandering Joseph, and sets him in his way again.

At Athens there were public curses appointed against such as showed not those their error that were out of the way. ^{a} See the like, #De 27:18. "Brethren," saith St James, "if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him, let him know that he saves a soul from death"; ^{#Jas 5:19,20} yea, he pulls him out of the fire of hell, saith Jude ^{b} ^{#Jude 1:23} for they that err from God's commandments are cursed. ^{#Ps 119:21}

Ver. 16. I seek my brethren.] He stayed not at Shechem, whither his father sent him; but missing them there, he seeks farther, till he found them. This is true obedience, whether to God or man, when we look not so much to the letter of the law, as to the mind of the lawmaker; apices iuris non sunt ius.

Ver. 17. And found them in Dothan.] That is, In Defection. So found our Saviour his lost sheep, in utter defection, both of doctrine and manners: some four, or fewer, "that looked for the consolation of Israel."

Ver. 18. They conspired against him.] So did the husbandmen against Christ: "This is the heir," say they, &c. ^{#Lu 20:14} The word is by one rendered, They craftily conspired. The Greek hath it, malignantly: craft and cruelty go usually together in the Church's adversaries. The devil lends them his seven heads to plot, and his ten horns to push poor Joseph, that dreads no danger.

Ver. 19. Behold, this dreamer.] This captain dreamer, or, this architect of dreams. A lewd scoff, and, by it, a cruel calumny. Envy, so it may gall, or kill, cares not how true or false it be, that, it allegeth: it usually aggravates the matter beyond truth, to do mischief, as here. Their hearts were so big, swollen with spite and spleen, that they could not call him by his name, but "this dreamer." So the Pharisees called our Saviour, "this fellow." ^{#Lu 23:2} And "the Jews sought him at the feast, and said, Where is he?"—εκεινος—^{#Joh 7:11} They could not find in their hearts to say, Where is Jesus? as Saul asked not for David, but for "the son of Jesse," by way of contempt. Christ tells his disciples that men shall, in hatred of them, cast out their names for evil, for his sake. ^{#Lu 6:22} Their persons should be proscribed, and their names expunged, as unworthy to breathe in the common air. That like as we give names to newly born babes; so when we cannot afford to mention a man's name, it shows we wish him out of the world: {a} Nomine Christianorum deleto, qui Remp. exercebant. So those bloody tyrants of the primitive times sounded the triumph beforehand, and engraved the victory they never got, upon pillars of marble. Ubicunque invenitur nomen Calvini, deleatur, saith the Index Expurgatorius. After Stephen Brune the martyr's death, his adversaries commanded it to be cried, that none should make any more mention of him, under pain of heresy. {b} So in Queen Mary's days, one Tooly, hanged for felony, for defying the Pope, was, after his death, suspended and excommunicated; and strict charge given, that no man should eat or drink with him; or if any met him by the way, he should not bid him good morrow, or call him by his name. {c} It was not for nothing, surely, that our Saviour, in token of hearty reconciliation, requires men to greet their enemies, and to call them friendly by their names. {#Mt 5:47}

Ver. 20. And we will say.] So they consult, to cover their murder with a lie. One sin admitted makes way for another. He that hath fallen down one rung of hell's ladder, knows not where he shall stop, till he break his neck at the bottom.

Ver. 21. And he delivered him out of their hands.] Josephus relates his arguments, whereby he prevailed with them: as (1.) That God would surely see them; (2.) Their father would extremely grieve at it; (3.) That Joseph was but a child, and their brother; (4.) That they would bring upon themselves the guilt of innocent blood, &c. It was happy they hearkened to him. God would have it so: and he will ever have one Reuben or another, to deliver his. It is not in vain for some one to stand for God and his people against many adverreties. When the Pharisees had destined our Saviour to death, {#Joh 7:1} Nicodemus, though he had none in the council to second him, spoke in his behalf, {#Joh 7:51} and for that time frustrated their bloody intention. See the like, #Jer 26:24.

Ver. 22. Shed no blood.] Every drop of it hath a tongue to cry for vengeance. Well might King James say, that if God did allow him to kill a man, he would think God did not love him. David, God's darling, falling into that crimson sin, carried the bruise of that fall with him to his grave. Woe to those Italians that blaspheme oftener than swear; and murder more than revile or slander! {a}

{a} Sandys's Relation of West. Relig., sec. 13.

Ver. 23. They stripe Joseph out of his coat.] For, (1) It an eyesore to them; (2.) There with they would colour their cruelty. And this while they were doing, Joseph used many entreaties for himself, but they would not hear him. {#Ge 42:21} Reuben also pleaded hard for the child, but all to no purpose. {#Ge 37:22} Their tender mercies were cruelties.

Ver. 24. They cast him into a pit.] Where they meant he should pine and perish with hunger, which is a more cruel death than to die by the sword. {#La 4:9} Thus died Drusus by the command of Tiberius; food being denied him, he had eaten the stuffings of his bed. {a} I have heard of a certain bishop, saith Melancthon, who, having cast ten men into a dungeon for their religion's sake, kept them there so long without all manner of food, that they devoured one another. {b}

Ver. 25. And they sat down to eat.] To weep for their wickedness, they should have sat down rather. But the devil had drawn a hard hoof over their hearts, that either they felt no remorse of what they had done, for present; or else they sought to ease themselves of it by eating and merry making. "They drank wine in bowls; but no man was sorry for the affliction of Joseph." {#Am 6:6} Nay, perhaps they had so tired themselves with making away their brother, that they were even spent again, and stood in need of some refreshing. The good providence of God was in it howsoever, that they should there sit down, till the merchants came by from Gilead, which was a market for merchants. {#Jer 8:22 22:6} "All things co-operate for good to them that love God." {#Ro 8:28}

Ver. 26. What profit is it? &c.] Cui bono said that old judge in Rome. {a} This is a song that most men will listen to. As the Jassians in Strabo, delighted with the music of an excellent harper, ran all away, when once they heard the market bell ring, save a deaf old man, that could take little delight in the harper's ditties. But it were to be wished, that whenever we are tempted to sin, we would ask ourselves this question, What profit is it? &c.

Ver. 27. For he is our brother, and our flesh.] This consideration should be, as the angel's call to Abraham, to stay our hand from striking another; (1.) That he is our brother, in respect of God; for "have we not all one father? hath not one God created us?" {#Mal 2:10} (2.) That he is "our flesh," in regard of our first parents. {#Ac 17:26 Isa 58:7}

Ver. 28. For twenty pieces of silver.] A goodly price! not all out the price of a slave. {#Ex 21:32} Here "they sold the just one for silver, and the poor for a pair of shoes." {#Am 2:6} The Hebrews tell us, that of these twenty shekels, every of the ten brethren had two, to buy shoes for their feet {a}

And they brought Joseph into Egypt.] Little knowing what a prize they had in their hand, even the jewel of the world, and him that should one day be lord of Egypt. The saints, for their worth, are called "princes in all lands"; {#Ps 45:16} kings in righteousness, {b} though somewhat obscure ones, -as Melchisedec. {#Heb 7} They are called "God's portion"; {#De 32:9} "the dearly beloved of his soul"; {#Jer 12:7} "a royal diadem in the hands of Jehovah." {#Isa 62:3} This the cock on the dunghill, the Midianitish muckworms take no notice of. They could see no comeliness in Christ, though the fairest of ten thousand; nothing more than a despicable man. "How can this man give us his flesh to eat?" {#Joh 6:52} God had hid him ("in whom all the treasures of" worth and "wisdom were hid," #Col 2:3) under the carpenter's son: this pearl was covered with a shellfish; so are all God's precious people, for most part, objects in the world's eye; their glory is within; "their life is hid": they are great heirs, but as yet in their non-age; kings, but in a strange country; heads destined to the diadem; but this "the world knows not." {#1Jo 3:1} Let it suffice us that God, and all that can spiritually discern, know it; and so shall others: as Joseph's brethren did him, in his bravery. For "when Christ, our life, appear, we shall appear with him in glory." {#Col 3:4}

Ver. 29. He rent his clothes.] In token of extreme passion. A custom in use also among some heathens.

Ver. 30. The child is not; and I, &c.] In an old manuscript, I met with these words thus pathetically rendered:—

“Heu quid agam! periit puer ille, puer puer ille.”

Reuben was the oldest, and therefore thought he should be most blamed. Besides, he had not forgot how highly his father had been lately offended with him, for his detestable incest.

Ver. 31. And dipped the coat in the blood.] That Jacob might think his son Joseph was dead; and so make no further inquiry after him.

Ver. 32. Know now whether it be thy son's coat.] One Philip, bishop of Beauvieu, in France, in the time of our Richard I, being a martial man, and much annoying our borders, was by King Richard in a skirmish happily taken, and put in prison. The bishop hereupon complained to the Pope, who wrote in the behalf of his son, as an ecclesiastical person, &c. The king sent to the Pope the armour he was taken in, with these words engraven thereon, "Know whether this be thy son's coat, or not." Which the Pope viewing, swore it was rather the coat of a son of Mars, than a son of the Church; and so bade the king use his pleasure. {a}

Ver. 33. It is my son's coat, &c.] The Lord may well say as much of hypocrites: Their outward form of godliness is the garb of my sons and daughters; but some evil spirit hath devoured them, who use it only in hypocrisy. They are fair professors, but foul sinners. And when the filthy stoner goes damned to hell, what shall become of the zealous professor? As the churl said to the Bishop of Cullen, praying in the church like a bishop; but as he was a duke, going guarded like a tyrant: Whither thinkest thou the bishop shall go, when the duke shall be damned?

Ver. 34. Mourned for his son many days.] Puerilitas est periculorum pelagus. Few live to be old, for one evil beast or another that devours them: as for one apple that hangs till it falls, many are cudgelled down or gathered off the tree. We should learn to bury children and friends, while yet alive; by acting their death to ourselves aforehand.

Ver. 35. And all his sons, &c.] Oh, faces hatched with impudence! Oh, hearts hewn out of a rock! Could they cause his woe, and then comfort him? Miserable comforters were they all; such as the usurer is to the young novice, or the crocodile that weeps over the dead body that it is devouring. These were the evil beasts that devoured Joseph. {a}

But he refused to be comforted.] Wherein he showed his fatherly love, but not his son-like subjection to God's good providence: without the which, no evil beast could have set tooth in Joseph; whom he was sure also to receive safe and whole again at the resurrection: which was a great comfort to those afflicted Jews, {#Da 12:2} and those mangled martyrs. {#Heb 11:34}

Thus his father wept for him.] Jacob's father Isaac, saith Junius; which might very well be; for he lived twelve years after this, and likely loved Joseph best, for his great towardsness.

A sad thing that a heathen should see cause to say so.

Ver. 36. And the Midianites.] Little knew Joseph what God was in doing. Have patience, till he have brought both ends together.

Chapter 38

Ver. 1. And it came to pass at that time.] Before the rape of Dinah, the sale of Joseph, and soon after their return from Mesopotamia.

Judah went down from his brethren.] A green youth of thirteen or fourteen years of age, left his company, where he might have had better counsel. There is a special tie to perseverance in the communion of saints. They that "forsake the assembling of themselves together," axe in a fair way for apostasy. {#Heb 10:25}

To a certain Adullamite.] There is a double danger of evil company. (1.) Infection of sin, -at least, defection from grace. (2.) Infliction of punishment. {#Re 18:4}

Ver. 2. And Judah saw there, &c.] He saw, took, went in, all in haste: Patre inconsulto, forte etiam invite; his father neither willing nor witting. Hence, for a punishment, was so little mercy showed to his sons. These hasty headlong matches seldom succeed well. It is not amiss to marry, but good to be wary. Young men are blamed of folly for following "the sight of their eyes" and "lust of their hearts." {#Ec 11:10} Sed Leo cassibus irretitus dicet, Si praescivissem.

Ver. 3. And she conceived, &c.] St Jerome tells us of a certain drunken nurse, that was got with child by her nursling, a boy of ten years old. {a} This he relates as monstrous, and takes God to witness that he knew it to be so.

{a} Bruson., lib. iv. cap. 9.

Ver. 4. She called.] Shush named her two latter children; the one it is like by the licence, the other by the absence of her husband.

Ver. 5. He was at Chezib.] Called also Achzib. {#Mic 1:14} It hath its name from lying.

Ver. 6. And Judah took a wife for Er.] When he was but fourteen years of age, as appears by the Chronicle, seven years after the selling of Joseph. And here it is well observed, {a} that though Judah took a wife without his father's consent, yet he will not have Er to do so.

{a} Musculus.

Ver. 7. Wicked in the sight of the Lord.] A Sodomite, say the Hebrews; but this is hard to say. {a} As an evildoer, he was soon cut off. {#Ps 37:9} God would not have such to be his son Christ's progenitor. Too wicked he was to live: you may know him to be the son of a Canaanitess. Partus sequitur ventrem.

Ver. 8. And Judah said unto Onan.] At fourteen years of age likewise. For, from the birth of Judah to their going down to Egypt, were but forty-three years. And yet before that, Pharez had Hezron and Hamul, {#Ge 46:12} being married about the fourteenth year of his age; which was, doubtless, too soon. Childhood is counted and called the flower of age. {#ICo 7:36} And so long the apostle would have marriage forborne. While the flower of the plant sprouteth, the seed is green, unfit to be sown. Either it comes not up, or soon withereth. Too early marriages is one cause of our too short lives. Pursuit of sexual pleasure is death's best harbinger, saith one.

Ver. 9. When he went in unto his brother's wife.] God, for the respect he bears to his own institution of marriage, is pleased to bear with, cover, and not impute many frailties, follies, vanities, wickednesses that are found between man and wife. Howbeit, there is required of such a holy care and conscience, to preserve between themselves, by a conjugal chastity, the marriage bed undefiled; taking heed of an intemperate or intempestive use of it: which by divines, {a} both ancient and modern, is deemed no better than plain adultery before God. Qui cum uxore sua, quasi eum aliena, concumbit, adulter est, saith that heathen. {b} Onan's sin here was self-pollution, aggravated much by his envy that moved him to it, expressed in these words, "lest he should give seed to his deceased brother." And the more sinful was this sin of his in spilling his seed; because it should have served for the propagation of the Messiah; therefore the Lord slew him: as also, because he was not warned by his brother's punishment. {c}

Ver. 10. Wherefore he slew him.] God oft punisheth the abuse of the marriage bed, either with untimely death—it was well said of one, {a} that Venus provides not for those that are already born, but for those that shall be born—or else with no children, misshapen children, idiots, or prodigiously wicked children, &c. Cavete let this consideration be as the angel standing with a drawn sword over Balaam's shoulders.

{a} Cuffe's Differ. of Ages, 106.

Ver. 11. Lest peradventure he die also, &c.] Judah lays the fault all on her, whereas it was in his sons. Sarah, on the other side, blamed herself only for barrenness. {#Ge 16:2} "Judge not, that ye be not judged": but "if we judge ourselves, we shall not be judged." In judging of the cause of our crosses, we are oft as far out as she was, that laid the death of her child to the presence of the good prophet.

Ver. 12. The daughter of Shuah, &c.] This was just in God upon Judah, for his fraudulent dealing with Tamar; whom he neither married to his son Shelah, nor suffered to be married to another. Sin is oft punished in kind.

Ver. 13. To shear his sheep.] And so to put by his sorrow, as Jonathan did his anger, by going into the field to shoot. At sheep shearings they had feasts. {#Isa 25:8,11}

Ver. 14. Covered her with a veil.] As they that do evil shun the light. She was going about a deed of darkness.

For she saw that Shelah was grown.] She ran into this foul sin, partly for revenge, and partly for issue. But this excuseth her not: for the revenge she took was private; and she should have sought a godly seed by lawful wedlock, and not by abominable incest. Discontent is the mother of much mischief; as it was in Judas, Haman, &c.

Ver. 15. He thought her to be an harlot.] Because she sat in an open place: first, In bivio, saith Junius, where there is liberty of looking every way; the guise and garb of harlots. {#Pr 7:12,9:14 Eze 16:24,25} Next, she sat covered: whores were not altogether so shameless then as now: they shun not to be seen with bold and bare faces, breasts, and wrists. {a} Such a sight may soon inflame a Judah; nay, occasion a Job to break his covenant. {#Job 31:1} The ivy bush showeth there is wine within: which, though no evil follow upon it; yet the party shall be damned, saith Jerome, because she offered poison to others, though none would drink it. See #Isa 3:16.

Because she had covered her face.] Some read, Because she had coloured or painted her face. But that he knew her not by her voice one would wonder. Surely, he was so set upon the satisfying of his lust that he minded nothing else. Lust is blind; "and if the blind lead the blind," &c.

laid out, and painted, or patched.

Ver. 16. Let me come in unto thee.] This is recorded, (1.) To cut the comb of those proud Jews, that glory so much of their pedigree, and name of Judah. How could they say, "We be not born of fornication?" {#Joh 8:41} (2.) To mind us that there is no Church to be found on earth without blot and blemish. (3.) That we may consider and admire the utter abasement of our Lord Christ, who would be born, not only of holy, but of impure parentage. And this, to show, 1. That he borrowed no grace or glory from his progenitors, and as he needed not to be ennobled, so neither was he disparaged by them; 2. That by his purity and passion all our sins are expiated and done away; like as the sun cleareth whatsoever filth is found in the air or on the earth. Three women only are mentioned in his genealogy; Rahab the harlot, Bathsheba the adulteress, and this incestuous Tamar; {#Mt 1:3,5,6} to show his readiness to receive the most notorious offenders, that come unto him with bleeding and believing hearts.

Ver. 17. Wilt thou give me.] The love of money breeds noisome lusts. {#ITi 6:9} Harlots are sordida poscinumia, as Plautus hath it.

Ver. 18. And he gave it her, and came in unto her.] He gave her whatsoever she desired; as the manner of such men is: and although he committed incest ignorantly, yet not through ignorance, but through heat of lust, which is brutish and boisterous, burning as an oven: whence the Greeks have named it: and Plato compares it to a headstrong horse. {a}

Βραχυτραχηλός, μελαγχρῶς, κωφός, μαντιγί μογίς υτεικῶν.

Ver. 20. By the hand of his friend.] His broker. Fie upon such Adullamites! Such coal carriers as this, saith one, be good to scour a hot oven with. Such another was Jonadab to Amnon. How much better that heathen, that answered, Amicus tibi sum, sed usque ad aras.

Ver. 21. Where is the harlot?] The holy whore, as the Hebrew word importeth; such as committed that filthiness, under a pretence of holiness. Such, among the heathens, were the lewd worshippers of Priapus (this is thought to be Baalpeor); and Venus at Cyprus; where the maids, in honour of their goddess, prostituted their chastity to all that would, once a year. So in their Lupercals and Bacchanals at Rome, in quibus discurrebatur ad publicos concubitus, for like reason. Of such unclean persons, even by God's house, we read in #2Ki 23:7, and of such as "sacrificed with harlots" in #Ho 4:14, who brought their hire for a vow; called therefore, the price of a salt bitch (dog). {#De 23:17,18} Vah propudium!

Ver. 22. There was no harlot in this place.] Few places can say so. Every house in Egypt had a dead corpse in it; and too many houses here have such, as, "living in pleasure, are dead while they live." {#171 5:6} {a} Of this sort was that Arlet, a skinner's daughter in Normandy, whose nimbleness in her dance made Duke Robert enamoured, &c. On her he begat our William the Conqueror. {b} In spite to whom, and disgrace to his mother, the English called all whores, harlets. But who can read without detestation, that in Rome a Jewess may not be admitted into the stews, unless she will be first baptized? as Espencaeus, an honest Papist, complains. {c}

{b} Heyl., Geog., p. 96.

Ver. 23. Lest we be shamed.] His care was more to shun shame, than sin. How much better that heathen! Satis nobis persuasum esse debet, &c.; this we should be fully persuaded of, saith he, that although we could conceal the matter from all, both gods and men, yet we should do nothing covetously, nothing unjustly, nothing against chastity, or common honesty. {a} Though I were sure, saith another philosopher, {b} that all men would be ignorant of what evil I do, and that all the gods would forgive it me; yet, for the filthiness that is in sin, I would not commit it. Plato condemns the poets for saying, that it were no matter though men did commit sin, so they could hide it. {c} Si non caste, saltem caute. How much better the Christian poet! Turpe quid acturus, te, sine teste, time. "Wherefore hast thou despised the commandment of the Lord, to do evil in his sight," though none else saw thee? said God to David. {#2Sa 12:9} And David, in his sorrowful confession, saith as much to God upon the matter; "Against thee, thee only, have I sinned"; viz., in respect of the secrecy of my sin; therefore it is added, "and done this evil in thy sight." {#Ps 51:4}

Behold, I sent this kid, &c.] He comforts himself in the loss of his pledge, that yet he had been as good as his word: but not a word we hear of sorrow for his sin; which, if he can but keep secret, he rests secure. This is a piece of natural atheism; and it is general. {d}

Ver. 24. Bring her forth, and let her be burnt.] He was willing to be rid of her, for fear of losing his son Shelah, and therefore passeth a precipitate and savage sentence, to burn a great-bellied woman; which the very heathens condemned as a cruelty, in Claudius. {a} Howbeit there are that take these to be his words, not as a judge in the cause, but as an accuser. {b} "Bring her forth," sc., into the gates, before the judges; and let her be burnt if found guilty, according to the custom of the country. We read not of any that were, by God's law, to be burnt with fire, but the high priest's daughter only, for adultery. {#Le 21:9} Hence the Hebrews say, that this Tamar was Melchizedek the high priest's daughter. But it is more likely she was a Canaanitish proselyte. Let us beware of that sin, for which so peculiar a plague was appointed, and by very heathens executed. See #Jer 29:22,23.

Ver. 25. By the man, whose these are, &c.] So his secret sin comes to light. All will out at length, though never so studiously concealed. {#Mt 10:26} "That which hath wings shall tell the matter." {#Ec 10:20} It was a quill, a piece of a wing, that discovered the Gun Powder Plot. {a}

Discern, I pray thee, whose are these.] So, when we come to God, though he seem never so angry and ill set against us, can we but present unto him ourselves his own; our prayer, Mediator, arguments, all his; and then say, as she here to Judah, "Whose are these?" he cannot deny himself.

Ver. 26. She hath been more righteous than I.] A free confession, joined with confusion of his sin; for he knew her no more. This was, to "confess and forsake sin," as Solomon hath it. {#Pr 28:13} Not like that of Saul; "I have sinned, yet honour me before the people": {#1Sa 15:30} or that of those in the wilderness; "We have sinned; we will go up": they might as well have said, We have sinned, we will sin. {#De 1:41} The worser sort of Papists will say, When we have sinned, we must confess; and when we have confessed, we must sin again, that we may also confess again, and make work for new indulgences and jubilees; making account of confessing, as drunkards do of vomiting. {a} But true confession goes along with hatred, care, apology.

{a} Sandys's Relation of West. Relig., sec. 8.

Ver. 27. Behold, twins were in her womb.] Betokening two peoples pertaining to Christ. The Jews first put forth their hand, as it were, willing to be justified by their works, and to regenerate themselves. For this, they were bound with a scarlet thread—condemned by the law: wherefore, pulling back their hand, they fell from God. Then came forth Pharez, the breach-maker, that is, the violent and valiant Gentiles; who took the first birthright and kingdom by force: who when they are fully born, then shall the Jews come forth again. {#Ro 11:11,25,26} And that this is not far off, hear what a worthy divine, {a} yet living, saith: In #Da 12:11 we have a prophecy of the final restoration of the Jews, and the time is expressed, which is 1290 years after the ceasing of the daily sacrifice, and the setting up of the abomination of desolation, which is conceived to be in Julian's time; who did essay to rebuild the Temple of the Jews, which was an abomination to God; who therefore destroyed it by fire out of the earth, tearing up the very foundation thereof, to the nethermost stone. This was Anno Dom. 360, to which if you add 1290 years, it will pitch this calculation upon the year 1650. Before this, Babylon must down, &c.

Chapter 39

Ver. 1. And Potiphar, an officer of Pharaoh's.] See here a sweet providence, that Joseph should fall into such hands. Potiphar was provost-marshal, keeper of the king's prisoners. And what could Joseph have wished better than this, that, since he must be a prisoner, he should be put into that prison, where he might, by interpreting the butler's dream, come to so great preferment? Chrysostom, in his nineteenth Homily on the Ephesians, saith: We must not once doubt of the divine providence, though we presently perceive not the causes and reasons of many passages. And this he sweetly sets forth by apt similitudes drawn from the works of carpenters, painters, bees, ants, spiders, swallows, &c. Surely, as a man, by a chain made up of various links, some of gold, others of silver, some of brass, iron, or tin, may be drawn out of a pit: so the Lord by the concurrence of several subordinate things, which have no manner of dependence, or natural coincidency among themselves, hath oftentimes wrought and brought about the deliverance and exaltation of his children, that it might appear to be the work of his own hand. {a}

Ver. 2. And the Lord was with Joseph, and he, &c.] "The Lord" also "is with you, while ye be with him": {#2Ch 15:2} and so long you may promise yourselves prosperity; that of Gaius, howsoever, -that your souls shall prosper; and for most part also, your outward estates. If it fall out otherwise, it is because God will have godliness admired for itself. If ungodly men prosper, it is that ease may slay them, {#Pr 1:32} and "that they may perish for ever." {#Ps 37:20} Moritur Zacharias Papa, rebus pro Ecclesiae salute et Apostolicae sedis dignitate, non tam pie quam prospere gestis, saith Sigonius. This was little to his commendation, -that he was not so pious as he was prosperous.

Ver. 3. And his master saw.] Though he knew not God, yet he acknowledged that God was the giver of prosperity, and that piety pleaseth him. This ran into his senses, but wrought not kindly upon his heart.

Ver. 4. And Joseph found grace in his sight.] This also was of God, who fashioneth men's opinions, and therefore Paul, though he went to carry alms (and such are commonly welcome), yet prays that his "service might be accepted of the saints." {#Ro 15:31}

And he served him.] As his page or chamberlain; afterwards he became his steward. He that is faithful in a little shall be master of more.

Ver. 5. The Lord blessed the Egyptian's house.] There is nothing lost by any love men show to the saints. "God is not unfaithful to forget" it, nor unmindful to reward it. {#Heb 6:10}

Ver. 6. And he knew not aught he had, &c.] Some expound this of Joseph, that he took nothing for all his pains, but the food he ate; did not feather his own nest, as many in his place would have done; nor embezzle his master's goods committed to his trust. But without doubt the other is the better sense: Potiphar took what was provided for him, and cared for no more. This is few men's happiness; for usually the master is the greatest servant in the house.

And Joseph was a goodly person.] But nothing so goodly on the outside as on the inside. {a} His brethren had stript him of his coat, but could not disrobe him of his graces. Still he retained his piety and fear of God, his integrity and faithfulness toward his master, his chastity and modesty toward his mistress, his spiritual prudence and watchfulness over himself. How stoutly did he resist the devil, despise the world, subdue the flesh! Many "archers shot at him, but his bow abode in strength, and the arms of his hands were made firm by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob." {#Ge 49:23,24} Of bodily beauty, {See Trapp on "Ge 6:2"}

Ver. 7. After these things.] After he had been ten or eleven years in that house. So long he was safe: yet at length set upon. Learn we always to stand upon our guard; to do, as it is reported of the bird Onocrotalus, that she is so well practised to expect the hawk to grapple with her, that even, when she shutteth her eyes, she sleepeth with her beak exalted, as if she would contend with her adversary. {a} A man is to expect, if he live out his days, to be urged to all sins, to the breach of every branch of the ten commandments, and to be put to it in respect of every article of our creed.

His master's wife cast her eyes upon Joseph.] She looked and lusted. {b} {See Trapp on "Ge 34:2"}

And she said, Lie with me.] An impudent harlotry, that could so barely and basely solicit. Such a frontless propudium was that in the #Pr 7:13,18. Such were those insatiate empresses, Messalina, wife to Claudius; and Barbara, wife to Sigismund, emperor of Germany, faemina immensae libidinis et procacitatis inverecundae, quae saepius viros peteret quam peteretur. Vitam omnem censuit inanem, quae non coitu, luxu, ac libidine contereretur. {c} And such were those brazen faced courtezans that Franciscus Junius, that learned man, met with; and for their sakes abhorred the company of all women ever after, as himself recordeth in his own life.

Ver. 8. But he refused.] So would but a few have done of his years (he was now about twenty-seven), and that might have committed this sweet sin, as they wickedly call it, with so much security and secrecy, &c. The fear of God is both a virtue, and a keeper of other virtues. It is the bond of perfections, as Paul saith of charity. It is the ribbon or string that ties together all those precious pearls, the graces, as Peter saith of humility. {a} It is, as Basil saith of the same grace, caeterarum virtutum θησαυροφυλακτιον, the storehouse of other virtues; and, as Chrysostom, the mother, and root, and nurse, and foundation, and ligament of all good things in us. {b}

Behold, my master wotteth not, &c.] Beneficium postulat officium. To argue from bounty to duty, is but right reason: but to argue, as most do, from God's liberality to liberty in sin, is the devil's logic. Joseph will not deal so basely with his master, though an Egyptian. To render good for evil is divine; good for good is human; evil for evil is brutish; but evil for good is devilish. "Should we again break thy commandments," saith holy Ezra, {#Ezr 9:14} after so many mercies and deliverances? There is so much unthankfulness and disingenuity in such an entertainment of mercy, that heaven and earth, he thinks, would be ashamed of it. Every blessing is a binder, and each new deliverance a new tie to obedience. The "goodness of God should lead us to repentance," saith Paul. {#Ro 2:4} And this Peter picks out of Paul's Epistles, as one of the choicest sentences, and urged it upon those to whom he wrote. {#2Pe 3:15}

Ver. 9. Neither hath he kept back anything from me but thee.] As the beams of the sun shining upon fire doth discourage the burning of that, so should the shining of God's mercies or man's favours on us quench and quell lust and licentiousness in us.

How then can I do this great wickedness? &c.] So he calls it; not a trick of youth, a light offence, a peccadillo; but "wickedness," and "great wickedness." Abhorred be that religion of Rome that licenseth it; nothing better herein than that of the Turks, whose Koran tells us, that God did not give men lusts and appetites to be frustrated, but enjoyed; as made for the enjoyment of man, and not for his torment, wherein his Creator delights not. {b}

And sin against God.] Who makes the marriage covenant, and keepeth the bonds. {#Pr 2:17} Thus David, {#Ps 51:4} "Against thee, thee only, have I sinned," &c. The trespass was against Uriah, but the transgression against God, who only can remove the guilt, remit the punishment. And here, though the iron entered into Joseph's soul, sin could not; because it was fraught with: God's fear. He had "set God at his right hand," with David, {#Ps 16:8} and "therefore was not moved" by the importunate impudency of his wanton mistress. Satan knocked oft at that door, but there was none within to answer or open. He struck fire, but upon wet tinder. Joseph in Egypt, like a pearl in a puddle, keeps his virtue still, wherever he comes.

Ver. 10. And it came to pass, as she spake, &c.] A violent temptation valiantly withstood and vanquished; and that by the force of the fear of God, that powerful grace where it may bear sway. Alexander, Scipio, Pompey, tempted with the exquisiteness and variety of choicest beauties, forbore that villany; not for conscience' sake, or fear of God, whom they knew not, but lest thereby they should stop the current of their victories, and obscure the glory of their remarkable valour. But what saith Cyprian? As it is the greatest pleasure to have overcome pleasure, so there is no such victory as that that is gotten over a man's lusts. This none but a Joseph fearing God can do. For "the fear of the Lord is pure," saith David: {#Ps 19:9} it "is to hate evil," not forbear it only, saith Solomon; and he instanceth in inward evils, as pride, arrogancy, &c., so unchaste thoughts, lustful vipers, and hankerings after strange flesh. These the fear of God purgeth upon and represseth; not suffering a man to sin, though he could do it so closely and covertly that the world should be never the wiser. Lo, this is chastity: and it differs herein from continency, which is the best we can say for those heathens aforementioned. The continent person refrains the outward act of uncleanness, either for love of praise or fear of punishment, but not without grief; for inwardly he is scalded with boiling lust. Whereas the chaste man, like St Paul's virgin, {#1Co 7:34} is "holy both in body and in spirit"; and this with delight, out of fear of God and love of virtue. Now, if upon such a ground we can refuse proffered pleasures and preferments, resolving rather to lie in the dust with Joseph than to rise by wicked principles, the trial is as sound as if we had endured the tortures of the rack. {#Heb 11:35}

As she spake to Joseph day by day.] Satan will not be said with a little, nor sit down by a light repulse. A man must give him a peremptory denial (απαρνησασθω) again and again, as our Saviour did; and yet the tempter departed not, but for a season. He is called Beelzebub, that is, the Master Fly, because he is impudent as a fly, and soon returns to the bait from which he was beaten. He will be egging us again and again to the same sin, and try every way to overturn us. Many times he tempts by extremes, as he did Mr John Knox, on his deathbed; first, to despair, by setting before him his sins; and, when foiled there, afterwards to presumption, and challenging of heaven as his due, for his many good works, and zeal in the Scottish Reformation. {a} So he dealt here by Joseph. He first set upon him on the left hand, when he sold him for a slave; and when this prevailed not, he sets here a Delilah to tickle him on the right side, and to tie him with the green withes of youthful pleasures. Sed pari successu: but he lost his labour. Joseph was semper idem; famous for all the four cardinal virtues, if ever any were. See here in this one temptation, his fortitude; justice; temperance; and prudence, in that he shuns the occasion; for he would not only not lie with her, but not "be with her," saith the text: and that a man is indeed, that he is in a temptation; which is but a tap to give vent to corruption.

To lie by her, or to be with her.] "Keep thee far from an evil matter," saith Moses. {#Ex 23:7} "Come not nigh the door of" the harlot's "house," saith Solomon. {#Pr 5:8} "Flee fornication," saith Paul. {#1Co 6:18} And "Flee youthful lusts." {#2Ti 2:22} Not abstain from them only, but "flee" them, as ye would do a flying serpent. These are God's commandments: and they are to be "kept as the sight of the eye." {#Pr 7:2} The Nazarite might not only not drink wine, but not taste a raisin or the husk of a grape. {#Nu 6:3,4} The good Christian is taught to "abstain from all appearance of evil"; {#1Th 5:22} and to "hate the very garment that is spotted by the flesh." The devil counts a fit occasion half a conquest; for he knows that corrupt nature hath a πανσπερμια, a seed plot of all sin: which being drawn forth and watered by the breath of ill company, or some other occasion, is soon set awork, to the producing of death. Satan cheats us, when he persuades us that it is no conquest, except we beat away the temptation, yet keep the occasion by us. God will not remove the temptation till we remove the occasion. And in such case to pray, "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil," is to thrust our finger into the fire, and then pray it may not be burnt. A bird while aloft is safe; but she comes not near the snare without danger. Solomon thought himself wise enough to convert his wives, and not be corrupted by them. But "it came to pass, when Solomon was old, that his wives turned away his heart after other gods," &c. {#1Ki 11:4} He that can shun or remove the occasion, of his own proper motion, as Joseph did, he is the man; this is grace; here is a victory.

{a} Mr Perkins.

Ver. 11. To do his business.] To look up his bills of account, saith the Chaldee. Idleness is the devil's opportunity, the hour of temptation. But let a man be never so busy about his lawful employments, he is to expect assaults. As he is not idle, so neither is Satan: but walks about, and spreads his snares for us in all places, and businesses; speaking a good word also in temptations that come from the flesh, which are therefore called "his messengers," {#2Co 12:7} and by giving place to them, we "give place to the devil." {#Eph 4:27}

And there was none of the men of the house there within.] Josephus saith that they were all gone forth to a feast; and she only left at home, as feigning herself sick. Sick she was, as likewise

Amnon, with the lust of concupiscence, which the apostle calls παθος, a disease, {#1Th 4:5} such as those which the physicians say are corruptio totius substantiae; the body and soul are both tainted and rotted by it. Other diseases consume only the matter of the body, but this, the holiness and honour of the body. {a} Other sicknesses sanctify us, but this profanes us, and lets the devil into our hearts. Behemoth lieth in the fens; {#Job 40:21} that is, the devil in sensual hearts; as Gul. Paris. applieth it. And when the waters of the sanctuary flowed, the miry places could not be healed. {#Eze 47:11}

Ver. 12. And she caught him by his garment.] By wanton touches and dalliance, mental adultery is oft committed. He that "toucheth his neighbour's wife, shall not be innocent," saith Solomon. {#Pr 6:29} This is the offensive "right hand," that must be "cut off." {#Mt 5:30} The harlot "caught the silly simple, and kissed him; and with an impudent face said unto him; —" {#Pr 7:13} "till a dart struck through his liver": {#Pr 7:23} cogit amare iecur.

And he left his garment in her hand.] This second time is Joseph stript of his garment; before, in the violence of envy, now of lust; before, of necessity, now of choice; before, to deceive his father, now his master. Infamy and other misery he was sure to suffer, but that must not drive from duty. {#2Co 6:8} The Church "comes from the wilderness," that is, through troubles and afflictions, "leaning on her beloved"; {#So 8:5} choosing rather to suffer than to sin. The good heart goes in a right line to God, and will not fetch a compass, but strikes through all troubles and hazards to get to him. It will not break the hedge of ally commandment, to avoid any piece of foul way. The primitive Christians chose rather to be thrown to lions without, than left to lusts within: Ad leonem mayis quam lenonem, saith Tertullian. I had rather go to hell pure from sin, saith Anselm, than to heaven polluted with that filth. {a} I will rather leap into a bonfire, saith another of the fathers, than wilfully commit wickedness against God. {b} Of the mouse of Armenia they write, that she will rather die than be defiled with any filth. Insomuch as if her hole be besmeared with dirt, she will rather choose to be taken than to be polluted. Such are, or ought to be, the servants of God; "unspotted of the world," {#Jas 1:27} "undefiled in the way." {#Ps 119:1}

Ver. 13. And it came to pass, &c.] Incontinency is a breeder. It never goes alone, as some say the asp doth not, but hath many vices; impudency, subtlety, treacherous cruelty, &c., that come of it, and accompany it; crying out, and calling to one another, as they once did; "Now Moab to the spoil." {#2Ki 3:23}

Ver. 14. See, he hath brought in an Hebrew.] So she calls him, by way of contempt; as they called our Saviour Nazarene, and his followers Galileans. The Arians called the true Christians Ambrosians Athanasians, Homousians, &c. {a} And at this day, the most honourable name of Christian is in Italy and at Rome a name of reproach; and usually abused, to signify a fool, or a dolt. {b}

Ver. 15. And it came to pass, &c.] How many innocents, in all ages, have perished by false accusation! Here, this vermin accuseth her husband of foolishness, her servant of filthiness; which she first affirmeth, secondly confirmeth, by producing his garment, left in her hands. That "accuser of the brethren" {#Re 12:10} set her on; as he did the malicious heathens, to traduce and denigrate those pure primitive Christians (purer than snow, whiter than milk; ruddier than rubies; their polishing was of sapphire, #La 4:7), as so many murderers, man-eaters, adulterers, church-robbers traitors, &c. {a} Which last, Lipsius calls Unicum crimen eorum, qui crimine vacabant. So the Waldenses were spitefully accused of Manicheeism, and Catharism; and thereupon a Croisado crusade was published against them, as common enemies. {b} So, a little afore the massacre of Paris, it was given out by the French Papists, that the Protestants in their conventicles plotted treason, acted villany, &c. {c} And after the massacre, there was a coin stamped, in the fore-part whereof, together with the king's picture, was this inscription; Virtus in rebelles: and on the other side, Pietas excitavit iustitiam. Those that kill a dog, make the world believe he was mad first: so the enemies of the Church ever first traduced her to the world, and then persecuted her; {d} first "pulled off her veil," and then "wounded her." {#So 5:7}

Ver. 17. And she spake unto him, &c.] Here "the adulteress hunteth for the precious life." {#Pr 6:26} Her lust, as Amnon's, turneth into extreme hatred. This is just the custom of a courtezan:—

“Aut te ardentem amat, aut te capitaliter odit.”

- Mantuan.

Heathens tell us the like of their Hippolytus; that when Phaedra, his stepmother, could not win him to her will this way, she accused him to his father Theseus, as if he had attempted her chastity: whereupon he was forced to flee his country. Likewise of Bellerophon, a young prince, with whose beauty Sthenobaea, queen of Argives, being taken, solicited him to lie with her; which when he refused, she accused him to her husband, that he would have ravished her. {a} This he believing, sent him with letters to Iobates, king of Lycia, to make him away; Iobates put him upon many desperate services, to have despatched him. But finding him a valiant and victorious man, he afterwards bestowed his daughter on him, with part of his kingdom. Which when Sthenobaea heard of, she hanged herself for woe. {b} So perhaps did this housewife in the text, when she saw Joseph so highly advanced by Pharaoh. The death, howsoever, was too good for her.

Ver. 18. {See Trapp on "Ge 39:15"}

Ver. 19. His wrath was kindled.] Heb., Exarsit nasus eius. Good cause he had, if all had been true that his wife told him. {#Pr 6:34,35} It is well known how the rape of Lucrece was punished upon the Tarquins. Valentinian, the Emperor, defiled the wife of his subject Maximus. Maximus afterwards slew Valentinian, succeeded him in the empire, ravished his wife, and forced her to marry him. She, to be revenged, sent for Gensericus, who seized upon all Italy, &c. {a}

But Potiphar was too light of belief; and should have examined the matter ere he had condemned the man. Credulity is a note of folly.

Ver. 20. And Joseph's master took him.] It was a providence that he had not presently slain him upon that false accusation. The devil is first a liar, and then a murderer; {#Joh 8:44} but he is limited by God. Joseph is imprisoned in the round tower, where "they hurt his feet with fetters; the iron entered into his soul." {#Ps 105:18, marg.} He, meanwhile, either pleads not, or is not heard. Doubtless he denied the fact; but durst not accuse the offender. His innocency might afterwards appear, and thereupon the chief keeper show him favour. {#Ge 39:21} But his master should have been better advised. If he lived till Joseph was advanced, he had as good cause to fear his power, as ever Joseph's brethren had. Cardinal Wolsey was first schoolmaster of Magdalen School in Oxford; after that, beneficed by Marquess Dorset, whose children he had there taught; where he had not long been, but one Sir James Paulet, upon some displeasure, set him by the heels: which affront was afterwards neither forgotten nor forgiven. For when the schoolmaster became Lord Chancellor of England, he sent for him; and after a sharp reproof, imprisoned him: {a} a good precedent for men in authority which work their own wiles without wit; not to punish out of humour, &c. Discite iustitiam moniti, &c. Despise not any man's lowness; we know not his destiny.

Ver. 21. But the Lord was with Joseph.] A prison keeps not God from his; witness the apostles and martyrs, whose prisons, by God's presence, became palaces; the fiery furnace, a gallery of pleasure; the stocks, a music school. {#Ac 16:25} Bradford, after he was put in prison, had better health than before; and found great favour with his keeper, who suffered him to go whither he would, upon his promise to return by such an hour to his prison again. {a}

Ver. 1. Had offended their lord the king of Egypt.] What their offence was is not expressed. The Hebrews say, Pharaoh found a fly in his cup, and a little gravel in his bread, and therefore imprisoned these two great officers. But this had been to kill a fly, as one said, upon a man's forehead with a great beetle. Some think they attempted the chastity of Pharaoh's daughters. Such a thing as this made Augustus so angry against Ovid. But most likely it was for some conspiracy; such as was that of Bigthan and Teresh. {#Es 2:21} The present government is, for most part, always grievous; {a} to some discontented great ones especially, who know not when they are well, but are ready to drive a good prince out of the world, and then would dig him up again, if they could; as the swain said of Dionysius. {b} But what said Alphonsus, that renowned king, to this, in a speech to the Pope's ambassador? He professed that he did not so much wonder at his courtiers' ingratitude to him, who had raised sundry of them from mean to great estates, as at his own to God, whom by every sin we seek to depose, nay, to murder: for, Peccatum est Deicidium . { #Ro 1:30 1Jo 3:15}

{a} Αει το παρον βαρυ.—Thucyd.

Ver. 2. And Pharaoh was wroth, &c.] That had been enough to have broke their hearts: as a frown from Augustus did Cornelius Gallus; and another from Queen Elizabeth did Lord Chancellor Hatton. {a}

“ Ut mala nulla feram, nisi nudam Caesaris iram Nuda parum nobis Caesaris ira mali est? ” saith Ovid. And again,

“ Omne trahit secum, Caesaris ira, malum. ”

Ver. 3. And he put them in ward, &c.] See the slippery estate of courtiers: today in favour, tomorrow in disgrace; as Haman; Sejanus, whom the same senators conducted to the prison, who had accompanied him to the senate. They which sacrificed unto him, as to their god, which kneeled down to adore him, now scoffed at him, seeing him dragged from the temple to the jail, from supreme honour to extreme ignominy. His greatest friends were most passionate against him, &c., they would not once look at him; as men look not after sundials, longer than the sun shines upon them.

{a}

The place where Joseph was bound.] Here was a "wheel within a wheel," {#Eze 1:16} a sweet providence; that these obnoxious officers should be sent to Joseph's prison.

{a} Tacit.

Ver. 4. And the captain of the guard, &c.] This was Potiphar probably: who by this time saw his own error, and Joseph's innocency; yet kept him still in prison, perhaps to save his wife's honesty. Truth is the daughter of Time; {a} it will not always lie hid. Splendet cure obscuratur; vincit cum opprimitur; Hinc, ut Pacis templum in media urbe extruxerunt olim Romani, ita Veritatis statuam in suis urbibus olim coluerunt Aegyptii. {b}

Ver. 5. And they dreamed, &c.] Of dreams natural and supernatural. {See Trapp on "Ge 20:3"}

Ver. 6. And, behold, they were sad.] Or, Angry; and yet knew not how to help themselves. But carnal men digest their passions, as horses do their choler, by chewing on the bit. Pope Boniface being kept prisoner by Cardinal Columnus, tore his own flesh with his own teeth, and died raving. {a} Bajazet, the great Turk, could not be pacified in three days, after he was taken by Tamerlane; but, as a desperate man, still sought after death, and called for it. {b} Vivere noluit, mori nesciit; as it is said of that bishop of Salisbury, {c} prisoner in King Stephen's days.

{c} Roger, Bishop of Salisbury.

Ver. 7. And he asked Pharaoh's officers, &c.] Vincula qui sensit, didicit succurrere vincitis. Joseph's tender heart soon yearned toward them, upon the sight of their sadness: and, unasked, he offers himself to them; as our Saviour did to the widow of Nain, and to those two doubting disciples, #Lu 24:17. Cyprian's compassion is remarkable: Cum singulis pectus meum copulo, maeroris et funeris pondera luctuosa participo: cum plangentibus plunge, cum deflentibus defleo, &c. I weep with those that weep, and am like affected, as if like afflicted.

Ver. 8. And there is no interpreter.] The superstitious Egyptians did curiously observe their dreams; and commonly repaired to the soothsayers for an interpretation. {#Ge 41:8} Joseph calls these idolaters from their superstitions vanities to the living God; as Isaiah did those of his time, {#Isa 8:19,20} and Daniel those of his. {#Da 2:28,5:18} He had consulted with God by prayer, and with the Scripture, which revealed sufficient direction to him, {#Eze 31:1-12} and so soon despatched the interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream. {#Da 4:10} So Joseph here; he suffered "troubles as an evildoer, even unto bonds: but the word of God is not bound." {#2Ti 2:9}

Ver. 9. Behold, a vine was before me.] God, of his infinite grace and wisdom, gives men such signs as excellently answer and agree to the thing thereby signified; those two sacraments of the New Testament, for instance; which the Greek fathers (in the apostle's sense, #Heb 9:24) call σημεία, signs and symbols of better things, signified and sealed up thereby to the believer. The Lord, saith venerable Beza, knowing well the vanity of our natures, prone to idolatry, hath appointed us two sacraments only; and those consisting also of most simple signs and rites. For signs, he gave us water, bread, and wine. The rites are no more than to sprinkle, eat, drink (things of most common use); and a very little of these too, that men may not too much doat on the elements, or external acts in the sacrament, but be wholly raised up to the mystery, and by faith mount up to Christ thereby set forth and exhibited—fetching him down, as it were, that we may feed on him. Hence the outward sign is no further used than may serve to mind us of the inward grace. {a} The minister also stirs up the people to look higher than to what they see, with Sursum corda; Lift up your hearts. A thing in use among the primitive Christians. {b}

Ver. 10. It was as though it budded.] As though; for dreams are but the empty bubbles of the mind, children and tales of fancy, &c.

Ver. 11. And pressed them into Pharaoh's cup.] That he might have his wine fresh and new.

Ver. 12. The three branches are three days.] That is, They signify three days. So #Ge 41:26. "The seven kine are seven years." So, "this is my body": that is, This signifieth my body, saith Zuinglius, after Augustine and Ambrose. Or, This is the sign and figure of my body, saith Calvin, after Augustine and Tertullian; whatsoever Bellarmine and Hunnius {a} prate to the contrary. It is an ordinary metonymy, whereby the name of a thing signified is given to the sign, for the analogy that is between them, and for the certainty of signification. Homer and Virgil have the like. {b} As for those Christians that eat their God, let my soul be with the philosophers, rather than with them, saith Averroes, the learned Arabian. When it was objected to Nicolas Shetterden, martyr, by Archdeacon Harpsfield, that the words of Christ, when he said, Hoc est corpus meum, did change the substance, without any other interpretation, or spiritual meaning, he answered: Then like when Christ said, "This cup is my blood," the substance of the cup was changed into his blood, without any other meaning; and so the cup was changed, and not the wine. Harpsfield hereupon was forced to confess that Christ's testament was broken, and his institution changed from that he left it; but he said, they had power so to do. {c}

Ver. 13. Yet within three days.] Joseph foresaw the time of the butler's deliverance; he knew not the time of his own. In good hope he was, that now he should have been delivered, upon the restoration of the butler, and his intercession for him; but he was fain to stay two years longer; "till the time that God's word came: the word of the Lord tried him"; {#Psa 105:19} by trying, as in a fire, his faith and patience in afflictions.

Ver. 14. But think on me, &c.] Liberty is sweet, and should be sought by all lawful means. {#1Co 7:21} The Jews censure Joseph for requesting this favour of the butler; and say, he was therefore two years longer imprisoned. But this is a hard saying. Possible it is, that Joseph might trust too much to this man, and be too hasty to set God this time, and no other; and so might be justly crossed of his expectation. It is hard and happy so to use the means as not to trust to them; and so to wait God's good leisure, as not to "limit the Holy One of Israel." We trust a skilful workman to go his own way to work, and to take his own time. Shall we not do as much for God! He oft goes a way by himself, and gives a blessing to those times and means whereof we despair.

Ver. 15. For indeed I was stolen away.] Joseph inveighs not against his brethren that he may clear himself; but hideth their infamy with the mantle of charity, which is large enough to cover a multitude of sins. It is a fault to speak of other men's faults, unless it be in an ordinance. Infamy soon spreads. {a}

Out of the land of the Hebrews.] So he by faith calls the land of Canaan; which yet was detained from them, till the sins of the Amorites were become full. But God's promises are good freehold. Jacob disposeth of this land on his deathbed; though not the least master of it.

And here also have I done nothing, &c.] We may not betray our innocency by a base silence, but make seasonable apology; as did Daniel, {#Da 6:12} Paul, {#Ac 24:12,13} Justin Martyr, Tertullian, and other the primitive apologists. Francis, king of France, to excuse his cruelty exercised upon his Protestant subjects to the German princes, whose friendship he sought after, set forth a declaration to this purpose: that he punished only Anabaptists, that preferred their private revelations before the Word of God, and set at nought all civil government. {b} Which brand set upon the true religion, and all the professors thereof, Calvin not enduring, though he were then a young divine, twenty-five years old, yet he compiled and set forth that admirable work of his, called, "The Institution of Christian Religion." In commendation whereof, one {c} writes boldly—

Ver. 16. When the chief baker saw.] So when hypocrites hear good to be spoken, in the word, to God's children, they also listen, and fasten upon the comforts, as pertaining to them: they "receive the word with joy": {#Mt 13:20} they laugh, as men use to do in some merry dream; they catch at the deserts as children, and conclude with Haman, that they are the men whom the king means to honour. But when they must practise duty, or bear the cross, they depart "sad"; {#Mr 10:22} and Christ may keep his heaven to himself, if it be had on no other conditions.

Ver. 17. And the birds did eat them.] He seeth not that he did anything, but suffereth only. He heareth therefore an displeasing interpretation, saith Pareus.

Ver. 18. And Joseph answered, &c.] It is probable he used some preface to this sad destiny he reads him; as Philo brings him in saying, I would thou hadst not dreamed such a dream: {a} or as Daniel prefaced to Nebuchadnezzar; "My lord, the dream be to them that hate thee, and the interpretation to thine enemies." {#Da 4:19} If ministers, God's interpreters, must be mannerly in the form, yet in the matter of their message they must be resolute. {a} Not only toothless, but bitter truths must be told, however they be taken. "If I yet please men, I should not be the servant of Christ." {#Ga 1:10}

Ver. 19. And shall hang thee on a tree, &c.] This was cold comfort to the baker: so shall the last judgment be to the ungodly; when the saints, as the butler, shall lift up their heads with joy. But what a sweet providence of God was this, that the butler should first relate his dream, and receive his interpretation, as good as he could wish! Had the baker begun, the butler would have been disheartened, and hindered, perhaps, from declaring his dream. And then, where had Joseph's hopes been of deliverance by the butler? How could he have had that opportunity of setting forth his innocence, and requesting the butler's favour, and good word to Pharaoh for his freedom? ^{a} See how all things work together for good to them that love God.

The birds shall eat thy flesh.] Those that were hanged among the Jews were taken down. ^{#De 21:23} Not so among the Gentiles. A sore judgment of God threatened, in a special manner, against those that despise parents ^{b} ^{#Pr 30:17} and fulfilled in Absalom. Abslon Marte furens, pensilis arbore obit. Gretser, the Jesuit, to show his wit, calls that tree, a cross; and makes it a manifest figure of the cross of Christ. Sed o mirum et delirum figurativae crueis fabrum! Our Lord indeed died upon the cross, and that with a curse. But that Absalom should, in that behalf, be a type of him, is a new Jesuitical invention. Some say, that in honour of Christ crucified, Constantine the Great abolished that kind of death throughout the empire.

Ver. 20. Which was Pharaoh's birthday.] An ancient and commendable custom, to keep banquets on birthdays; in honour of God, our Sospitator, for his mercy in our creation, education, preservation, &c.

Ver. 22. But he hanged the chief baker.] God's menaces, as well as promises, will have their accomplishment. Vengeance is "in readiness" for the rebellious. ^{#2Co 10:6} Every whit as ready in God's hand, as in the minister's mouth.

Ver. 23. Yet did not the chief butler.] Too many such butlers, that forget poor Joseph! What cares Nabal though David die at his door, so he may eat the fat and drink the sweet, &c.? The heathens' picture of their graces, young and fresh, two looking towards you, and one from you, bids check to all ungrateful persons.

Ver. 1. At the end of two full years.] After the butler was restored; by whose intercession Joseph hoped to have been presently delivered, but was fairly deceived. So are all such sure to be, as depend upon living men (never true to them that trust in them) or deceased saints to intercede for them to God. Deus O. M. pro ineffabili sua clementia dignetur; et in Tosterum Divo Kiliano intercessore, Amplitudinem tuam contra fidei et Ecclesiae hostes tueri fortiter, et fovere suaviter, saith Eckius, in a certain Espistle {a} to a Popish bishop. Such a prayer begs nothing but a denial, with a curse to boot.

Ver. 2. There came up out of the river] Nile; which, by overflowing, fatteneth the plain of Egypt, filling it with fruits; and so fitly deciphering the seven years of plenty. {a} So far as this river watereth, there is a black mould so fruitful, that they do but throw in the seed, and have four rich harvests in less than four months, say travellers. {b}

Ver. 3. Seven other kine came up out of the river.] These, by their leanness, portended drought and dearth, though they came up out of Nile also. This river, when it overflows unto twelve cubits' height only, causeth famine; when to thirteen scarcity; when to fourteen, cheerfulness; when to fifteen, affluence; when to sixteen, abundance, as Pliny tells us. The greatest increase ever known, was of eighteen cubits, under Claudius (we read of a general famine in his days, #Ac 11:28, mentioned also by Suetonius and Josephus); {a} the smallest of five cubits, in the history of the Pharsalian wars. Such a thing might happen now, to cause this sore famine. Or the river, for their sins, might be dried up, as God threatens them. {#Eze 29:3,9 Isa 19:5,6} And as it happened in the reign of Cleopatra, that prodigiously prodigal queen, the river overflowed not for two years together, saith Seneca: as at another time it overflowed not for nine years together, saith Callimachus; and after him Ovid. {b} How easy is it for God to starve us all, by denying us a few harvests! In case of famine, let us inquire the supernatural cause; as David did, {#2Sa 21:1} when he knew the natural cause to be the drought.

Ver. 4. Did eat up the seven, &c.] In famine is not only outward want, but a greedy dog-like appetite within (Βουλμια, appetitus caninus), that an ordinary meal sufficeth not, {#Isa 9:20} but men are ready to eat one another: as they did at Potidea, in the Peloponnesian war; at Utica, when it was besieged by Hamilcar the father of Hannibal; at Jerusalem, when it was beleaguered by Vespasian; at Tunis, in the African war, when the soldiers were tithed, that is, every tenth man was cut in pieces and devoured. Such a famine there was at Rome in the days of Honorius the Emperor, that they were ready to eat one another; and this voice was heard in the place of public meeting, Pone precium humanae carni. At Antioch in Syria, many of the Christians, in the holy war, through famine, devoured the dead bodies of their recently slain enemies. At the siege of Scodra, they were well-nigh put to this extremity, when horses were dainty meat; yea, they were glad to eat dogs, cats, rats, and the skins of beasts sod. It exceedeth all credit, to tell at what exceeding great price a little mouse was sold, or puddings made of dogs' guts. {a} And if our relations deceived us not, such things as these we heard of lately, to have happened in Germany. Alterius perditio, tua cautio. Ver. 8. All the magicians.] Or, Natural philosophers, that studied the secrets of nature, and could give a ready reason of everything. Magus is a Persian word, and hath affinity with the Hebrew מַגִּישׁ, a contemplative person; σφοδρως θεωρητικος: Such as was Aristotle among the heathens, and Augustine among Christians—the greatest and accuratest of men, after the apostles, in contemplation and argumentation, as many are of opinion. The Grecians were so delighted with his learned labours, that they have translated him wholly into their tongue. {a} As for the deep theorems of natural philosophy, they make one learned indeed, but seldom better, oftentimes worse, nearly atheists; as these wise men of Egypt, elsewhere called enchanters, wizards. {#Ex 7:11} Of these were "Jannes and Jambres" that "resisted Moses"; {#2Ti 3:8} learned they were, and lewd, as were those philosophers. {#Ro 1:18-32}

But there was none that could interpret.] Because God had smitten them with a spirit of dizziness, and made the "wisdom of the wise to perish"; {#Isa 29:14} for else, it had been easy for them to have seen plenty in the fat kine, and penury in the lean, &c. But God had reserved that honour to Joseph, as a step or stirrup to further preferment.

Ver. 9. I do remember my faults this day.] Oratio vere aulica, saith Pareus, -a right courtier's speech. He so relates the history of his imprisonment, that he takes all the blame thereof to himself; gives Pharaoh the full commendation of his justice and clemency. As for Joseph, he mentions him to the king, lest, if any else should have done it before him, he should have been disgraced for his silence; but somewhat slenderly, and more for self-respects, than of any good affection to the innocent prisoner; whom he calls a young man, a bondman, and Hebrew; in whose behalf he neither adviseth, nor entreateth that he may be sent for. So very little is it that Joseph oweth to this patron! And such, for most part, are court commendations. There you have αναβολην και μεταβολην; as one said of old, delays and changes good store: every man seeking and serving his own aims and ends; but little minding the good of others, further than subservient to their own.

Ver. 10. Pharaoh was wroth with his servants, &c.] It is wisdom in a man to confess his faults before the prince whom he hath offended; and to commend his clemency in pardoning them: as Cicero did Caesar's; {a} as Mephibosheth did David's, &c. The Lord Cobham, the Lord Gray, Sir Griffin Markham, being condemned for treason, about the beginning of King James, anno 1603, and brought forth to execution, as they were upon the scaffold, the sheriff notified the king's pardon, his Majesty's warrant for the stay of the execution: at which unexpected clemency, besides the great shouts of the people, the condemned wished that they might sacrifice their lives to redeem their fault, and to repurchase so merciful a prince's love. {b}

Ver. 12. And he interpreted to us our dreams.] And well you requited him! But better late than never, {a} though a ready despatch doubleth the benefit. Howbeit God had an overruling hand in it, for Joseph's greatest good: he turneth the world's ingratitude to the salvation of his servants.

Ver. 13. As he interpreted to us, so it was.] Similiarly: as Christ foretold the two thieves with whom he suffered, so it happened; the one went to heaven, the other to hell. And so it shall fare with all men at the last day, according to #Isa 3:10,11.

Ver. 14. And they brought him hastily.] Heb., They made him run: who haply knew not what this haste and hurry meant, but was betwixt hope and fear till he came to the king. It is God that "bringeth low, and lifteth up; that raiseth up the poor out of the dust, and lifteth up the beggar from the dunghill, to set him among princes," &c. {#Isa 2:7,8} In the year of grace 1622, the Turkish Janizaries, who have learned that damnable art of making and unmaking their king at pleasure, drew Mustapha, whom they had formerly deposed, out of prison: and when he begged for his life they assured him of the empire; and carrying him forth upon their shoulders, cried with a loud voice "This is Mustapha, Sultan of the Turks; God save Mustapha, &c.," with which sudden change the man was so affected that he fell into a swoon for joy, and they had much ado to keep life in him. {a} Our Henry IV was crowned the very same day, that the year before he had been banished the realm

Ver. 15. I have dreamed a dream, and there is none, &c.] So men send not for the minister till given up by the physician. Then they cry out with him in the gospel: "Sir, if thou canst do anything, help us," &c. {#Mr 9:22} Whereunto what can we reply, but as that king of Israel did to the woman that cried to him for help, in the famine of Samaria; "If the Lord help thee not, whence shall I help thee? out of the barn floor, or out of the winepress?" {#2Ki 6:27} Did not I forewarn you, saying, "touch not the unclean thing," &c., and ye would not hear? "Therefore is this thing come upon you." {#Ge 42:21 2Co 6:17}

And I have heard say, &c.] Pharaoh despiseth not wisdom, how meanly soever habited. Saepe sub attrita latitat sapientia veste: Paupertas est philosophiae vernacula, saith he in Apuleius: and Eumolpus in Petronius, being asked why he went so poorly apparelled, answered, "The study of wisdom never made any man wealthy." {a} And afterward he addeth, "However it comes to pass, poverty is the sister of piety, {b} and virtue is forsaken of fortune." Nudus opum, sed cui coelum terraeque paterent, saith Silius of Archimedes, that great mathematician. And Aelian observes, that the best of the Greeks, Aristides, Phocion, Pelopidas, Epaminondas, Socrates, were very poor men: Lactantius, that Christian Cicero, as Jerome calls him, {c} was so needy that he wanted necessaries. All that Calvin left behind him, books and all, came scarcely to three hundred French crowns, as Beza his colleague witnesseth.

Ver. 16. It is not in me: God shall give Pharaoh, &c.] This is the voice of all that have true worth in them: they are humble upon the knowledge of their perfections; they vilify and nullify themselves before God and men: like true balm, that put into water, sinks to the bottom; or like a vessel cast into the sea, which the more it fills, the deeper it sinks. And this is the bottom and bosom of humility, and very next degree to exaltation, as here.

Ver. 17. And Pharaoh said unto Joseph.] Here begins Joseph's rise. Being in prison, he struck not fire, though he had a good brain: but waited till it came down from heaven to him, first in the butler's dream, and now in Pharaoh's. Had he ravenously roamed after preferment, and ravished it, as in his mistress's offer he might have done, it would have shunned him, &c.

Ver. 25. The dream of Pharaoh is one.] One in signification, but diverse in respect of vision. Why it was doubled, {#Ge 41:32} Repetitions in Scripture are not tautologies, but serve to set forth to us the necessity, excellency, or difficulty of the thing so reinforced. "To write" to the Philippians "the same things," to St Paul, "it is not grievous, and for them it is safe." {#Php 3:1} Nunquam satis dicitur, quod nunquam satis discitur. {a} Away then with those nice novelists that can abide to hear nothing but what is new minted. Ministers meet with many that are slow of heart and dull of hearing; these must have "precept upon precept, line upon line," &c.; many also of brawny breasts and horny heart strings; that, as ducklings stoop and dive at any little stone thrown by a man at them, yet shrink not at the heaven's great thunder, &c. Here a minister must beat and inculcate; turn himself into all fashions of spirit and speech, to win and work upon his hearers. He must so long pursue and stand upon one and the same point, saith Austin, till, by the gesture and countenance of his auditors, he perceives they understand and assent to it. {b} "Hear this, all ye people; give ear, all ye inhabitants of the world," saith the Psalmist; "both low and high, rich and poor, together." {#Ps 49:1,2} Quid dignum tanto feret hle promissor hiatu, {c} will some proud spirit say? what so great matter is there delivered in this Psalm, that so much attention is called for? Is it not an ordinary argument, such as we have heard of a hundred times—viz., the happy and secure estate of the saints, though in trouble, and the miserable and slippery condition of the wicked, though they prosper in the world? True, saith the Holy Ghost; this is the subject of this Psalm; and this, how common a theme soever, is the great wisdom, and the dark saying, that I will here open unto you, and that calls for your utmost attention.

Ver. 33. Now therefore let Pharaoh, &c.] This was good counsel, and it proved best to the counsellor. The Jews injuriously charge him with ambitious self-seeking: so they did Noah, as is above noted, with hard-heartedness and incompassionateness to the old world. These made the worst of things, and so condemned the generation of God's children. How much better had it been to have followed that golden rule of Epictetus! Take every man by that name whereby he may best be held; {a} as Virgil dealt by Ennius, Cyprian by Tertullian, Jerome by Origen, Augustine by Tichonius. If an action had a hundred various faces, we should always cast our sight upon the fairest; and make the best of everything. What Joseph did here, he did doubtless by divine direction. {b}

Ver. 34. And take up the fifth part of the land.] For so much money as it is worth. The Egyptians might well spare it, and the king might as well buy it, since he should sell it again for very good profit. Neither would Joseph advise, nor Pharaoh be advised, to take his subjects' goods by violence. When Samuel tells the people that their king, whom they called for, would take their fields and vineyards, the best of them, and give them to his servants, &c., loquitur non tam de iure quam de more, he speaks not of the right of kings, as if all were theirs, and no man had anything of his own, but of the manner, and illimited power that some kings take over their subjects' goods; as in Turkey, Persia, &c. Let it be the voice of a Nero, whensoever he put any one in office, Scis quid mihi opus sit, et hoc agamus, nequis quicquam habeat: {a} of a Seleucus, to proclaim that the king's pleasure is the only law; {b} as if it were not enough to be above men, but above mankind: as those princes would be, saith our English chronicler, {c} that would have their will to be law. Melancthon tells us of a certain prince in those parts, that extorted money from his miserable subjects, by knocking out their teeth. First he knocked out one tooth, {d} threatening to do so by the rest, unless they brought him in such a sum, by such a time, as he demanded. The same author elsewhere {d} relates, that he was at a sermon on the birthday of our Saviour. The preacher took his text out of #Lu 2:1, "There went out a decree from Caesar Augustus, that all the world should be taxed." And whereas the audience expected that the preacher should have discoursed of Christ's nativity, of the hypostatical union, &c., he spent his whole hour (the weather being extremely cold) in this subject, that obedience must be yielded to the higher powers; that they must have as much money given them as they call for; with a great deal of such like stuff, little to the purpose, but much to the pleasure of some princes then and there present. Such court parasites many times do much mischief in a state; as well by seducing good princes, qui essent alii, si essent apud alios, as by stickling against them, when the world doth not favour them. When Edward II, surnamed Carnarvan, was pursued by his Queen and son, the Bishop of Hereford being to preach before her at Oxford, and to deliver the cause of her proceeding, took for his text, "My head acheth, my head acheth"; {#2Ki 4:19} and concluded most undivinely, that an aching and sick head of a kingdom, was, of necessity, to be taken off, and no otherwise cured. {f}

Ver. 35. And let them gather all the food.] This text warranteth providence in laying up for a rainy day. Solomon sends us to school to the ant to learn this lesson. {#Pr 6:6} And it is well observed, that our Saviour had a purse for common store for himself and those about him. Neither was this a penny pouch, but a bag so big as needed a bearer. God would have us to be good husbands, and see that

Condu be fortior promo, our comings in more than our layings out. "Parents" must "lay up for their children," {#2Co 12:14} yea, "leave inheritance to children's children," {#Pr 13:22} playing the good husbands abroad and at home. {#Pr 27:26,27}

Ver. 36. For store.] He not only foretelleth Egypt's misery, but showeth the means to mitigate it. This is the right method, and must be made use of.

Ver. 37. And the thing was good in the eyes of Pharaoh.] The devil, no doubt, by the magicians and politicians of those times, did his utmost to hinder the king's purpose of preferring Joseph; as he did here for Cromwell, that great reformer, whom King Henry VIII, of a smith's son, made Earl of Essex. {a} But "there is neither counsel nor wisdom against the Lord." {#Pr 21:30}

Ver. 38. And Pharaoh said unto his servants.] He would resolve nothing without the advice of his Council. He was not like the Persian monarchs, who gave their peers no freedom nor liberty of advice; {a} nor that wilful King James of Scotland, that reigned in our Edward IV's time, that would seldom ask counsel, but never follow any: so wedded he was to his own opinion, saith the historian, that he could not endure any man's advice, how good soever, that he fancied not. {b} Pharaoh heard what his servants could say to it; who all at length consented when the ill-affected saw it was no profit to dissent.

Can we find such a man as this?] Hence some collect that Joseph preached many more things to the king, of God, his power, providence, goodness, &c., than are here recorded; and was therefore so admired, and advanced to the office of teaching his senators wisdom. "To bind his princes to his soul, and make wise his elders," {#Ps 105:22} as the original hath it.

Ver. 39. Forasmuch as God hath showed thee all this.] Pharaoh at first took him for no other than a cunning soothsayer and conjecturer of dreams. Now he finds better worth in him, a spirit of wisdom and discretion: he took him to be a man spiritually rational, and rationally spiritual; one that seemed to see the insides of nature and grace, and the world and heaven, by those perfect anatomies he had made of them all. Briefly, such a heart so well headed, nor such a head better hearted, he had never met with. Wherefore he resolves to set him at the head of the state; there being not anything that makes a man so good a patriot, as true religion; which admits not of that distinction between a good man and a good citizen.

Ver. 40. Thou shalt be over my house, &c.] Pharaoh prefers him, because he found good parts in him. They that bestow places of charge in church or commonwealth upon undeserving persons, for by-consideration, shall have Pharaoh to rise up in judgment against them. In King Edward VI's minority, dignity waited upon desert, saith the historian, which caused it again to be waited upon by respect {a} Order also was taken that no man should have any benefice from the king, but first he should preach before him. Tamerlane never bestowed his preferments upon such as ambitiously sought them; as deeming them, in so doing, unworthy thereof: but upon such as whose modesty or desert he thought worthy of those his great favours {b}

Ver. 42. And Pharaoh took off his ring.] Pliny therefore is mistaken, who thinks the use of rings came not up before the Trojan war. How happy had he been, that was so great a book devourer, {a} had he lit upon the Bible. He was insighted in all the secrets of nature, as appears by his works, which is non minus varium quam ipsa return natura, saith Erasmus: he never read anything but he excerpted it; neither in his library only, but in his couch: and while he was on horseback, he either wrote or dictated somewhat to be written. {b} When he saw his nephew walk out some hours without studying, he said to him, Poteras has horas non perdere. He lived in the days of Vespasian, and was a great dealer under him. What pity it was that neither by Jews nor Christians he came to the knowledge of the Scriptures, where he might have met with many antiquities, as this of the use of the ring, an ornament of honour, not elsewhere to be read of. But God had "hid these things from the wise and prudent, because it so seemed good in his sight." {#Mt 11:25,26}

And put a gold chain about his neck.] Behold, saith a learned interpreter, {c} one hour hath changed his fetters into a chain of gold, his rags into robes, his stocks into a chariot, his jail into a palace; Potiphar's captive to his master's lord; the noise of his chains into Abrech. God commonly exalts his people to the contrary good to that evil he had cast them into; as Joseph here, of a slave to be a ruler; Christ judged, to be Judge of all. So Gaius, so soon as he came to the empire, the first thing he did was to prefer Agrippa, who had suffered imprisonment for wishing him emperor: he made him king of Judea (this was that Herod that was eaten with worms, #Ac 12:23), and gave him a chain of gold, as heavy as the chain of iron that was upon him in prison.

A high style; so the Greeks, when Flaminius, who had freed them from bondage, came among them, called him Saviour, Saviour, with such a courage, that the birds that flew over their heads, amazed at the noise, fell to the ground. Hunniades, having overthrown Mesites, the Turks' general, at his return into the camp a wonderful number of the poor captives came, and falling at his feet and kissing them, gave God thanks for their deliverance by him. Some called him father, some the defender of his country; the soldiers, their invincible general; the captives, their saviour; the women, their protector; the young men and children, their tender father. He again, with tears standing in his eyes, courteously embraced them, rejoicing at the public good; and himself giving most hearty thanks unto God, commanded the like to be done in all the churches of that province. {a}

The daughter of Potipherah priest of On.] Called Aven, #Eze 30:17, that is, "wickedness," because there they sacrificed to the sun; whence it was called Heliopolis. The chief ruler here under Pharaoh was Priest of the Sun: belike, priests were no small men in those days among the Eygyptians. Among the Ethiopians, their neighbours, the priests of Jupiter were grown to that height of insolency, and had so bewitched the people with their superstitions, that they would sometimes take upon them to depose and kill their kings. This had been often done there; till at length, when they attempted the same upon Erganes, king of that country, he slew them all, and took away their priesthood. {b} Oh that God would once put into the hearts of Christian kings to deal so by that high priest of Rome, who hath so long usurped authority to depose and abuse them at his pleasure!

Ver. 46. And Joseph was thirty years old.] This is mentioned, to show what wonderful graces he had attained at those years; what rare endowments both of piety and policy. Julius Caesar beholding the picture of Alexander in Hercules's temple at Gades, wept, that he had done no worthy act at those years, wherein Alexander had conquered the whole world. Behold, Joseph, at thirty, showed more wisdom and virtue than either of them; as Parerius, on this text, well observeth: and hath for his thirteen years' service and imprisonment, fourscore years' liberty, prosperity, and honour. God is a liberal paymaster.

Ver. 47. By handfuls.] Manipulatim. Every grain of corn yields a handful of increase. {a} Thus God "filled their hearts with food and gladness"; {#Ac 14:17} and so "left not himself without witness" amongst those infidels.

Ver. 48. And laid up the food in the cities.] He provided storehouses for every city; so they needed not to travel far. They will run to hell as fast as they can; and if God cannot catch them they care not, they will not return.

Ver. 49. And Joseph gathered corn.] Against the future famine; mentioned also by Justin, lib. xxxvi., out of Trogus Pompeius. It happened, as Orosius computeth it, in the year before Rome was built, 1048. Ussher dates this about 1715 BC.

Or lastly, because he that selleth it breaks the heap and gives part to the buyer.

Why look ye one upon another?] As hopeless and helpless; or, as at your wits' ends, and not knowing whither to turn you. Youth is one while witless, another while shiftless. Let days speak, and multitude of years teach wisdom. {#Job 32:7} As at feasts, so at other meetings, old men should be vowels, young men mutes; or at most, but semivowels. {a}

Ver. 2. Get you down thither,] Here the divine decree of Israel's sojourning and suffering in Egypt begins to be fulfilled, by a wonderful providence. The ruinous of Joseph's barns invites Jacob, first to send, and then to go thither himself for relief. Shall not the fulness that is in Christ {#Joh 1:16} incite and entice us to come to him; as bees to a meadow full of flowers; as merchants to the Indies full of spices and othex riches; as the Queen of Sheba to Solomon full of wisdom; as Jacob's sons to Egypt full of corn, in that extreme famine; that we may return full fraught with treasures of truth and grace? "It pleased God, that in him should all fulness dwell." {#Col 1:19} And his fulnees is not only repletive, but diffusive; a fuiness of plenty and abundance, but of bounty also and redundance. He was "anointed with the oil of gladness," not only "above," but for "his fellows." {#Heb 1:9}

That we may live, and not die.] Saints have their share in common calamities. Jacob tasted of the famine, as well as his neighbors the Canaanites; so had Abraham and Isaac done before him. Both the good figs and bad figs were carried captive; {#Jer 24:5} the corn as well as the weeds is cut down at harvest, &c.

Ver. 3. And Joseph's ten brethren went.] Forty or fifty miles an end: Austin saith three hundred. Should we think much to go a few steps, say it be miles, to get food for our souls? Beware of that famine. {#Am 8:11,12} The seven churches of Asia, Bohemia, the Palatinate, and many other parts of Germany, are under it already. So is the large region of Nubia in Africa, which had from the apostles' time, as it is thought, professed the Christian faith, but now embraced Mohammedanism through lack of ministers. For, as Alvarez ^{a} hath recorded, at his being in the king of Habasaia's court, there were ambassadors out of Nubia to entreat him for a supply of ministers, to instruct their nation, and repair Christianity, gone to ruin among them; but were rejected. Oh, fearful!

^{a} Alvar., Hist. Aethiopic., cap. 137.

Ver. 4. But Benjamin Jacob sent not.] Because best beloved; as last born, and likeliest to live longest; and the least, and least able to shift for himself; and all that was left of his dearest Rachel; his only darling that had been always at hand, and in the father's eye.

Ver. 5. And the sons of Israel came.] God could have fed them by a miracle, as he did Elijah by the ravens; and Israel in the wilderness, where he rained them down manna, and set the flint abroad; ^{a} and Merlin, hid in a hay mow in the massacre of Paris, by a hen that came thither, and laid an egg by him every morning. ^{b} But he worketh ordinarily by means, and will have them used, but not trusted to.

^{b} Dike's Mich. and the Drag.

Ver. 6. And Joseph was the governor.] Of the Hebrew word here used, is made in Arabic the title Sultan, given at this day to the great Turk by his subjects; among whom the Arabic is now the learned language. Their Koran is written in it, and prohibited to be translated; which both preserves the tongue, they say, and conceals religion.

And Joseph's brethren came, and bowed.] This those mockers little thought ever to have done to that dreamer. But the will of the Lord, that shall stand.

Ver. 7. Spake roughly unto them.] To bring them the sooner to a sight of their sin. God also, for like purpose, writes bitter things against his people, stands afar off, hides his love, as Joseph, out of increasement of love; fights against them with his own hand, as he threw his brethren into prison; -than the which there is no greater affliction, saith Luther; and all to show them their sin, and to bring them home to himself by repentance. {a}

Ver. 8. But they knew not him.] As being now altered in stature, voice, visage, his present pomp, and haply also, by his former imprisonment and affliction. We read of a young man, that being condemned to die, was turned gray-headed in one night, through forethought and fear of death, and was thereupon spared.

Ver. 9. And Joseph remembered the dreams.] Event is the best interpreter of divine oracles The disciples understood not many things at first that our Saviour said to them; as that. #Joh 2:22 12:16 So John Baptist's preaching wrought not for some years after it was delivered, and then it did. {#Joh 10:41,42} The spouse either heard not, or heeded not that speech of her beloved, "Open unto me, my sister, my spouse," till some while after he was gone. {#So 5:2-6}

Ye are spies.] This, Joseph speaks not, assertive, but tentative; not seriously, but by a covert counsel; not as himself thought, but as the Egyptians suspected; or not absolutely, but conditionally; "ye are spies," unless you prove what ye have spoken. {a}

Ver. 10. Nay, my lord.] The world is well changed since they said one to another, "Behold, this dreamer cometh." Then they could not find in their hearts to call him brother; now they call him "lord." God, when he pleaseth, can change the note of our worst enemies to us. There is a promise, that "they shall bow down to thee with their faces toward the earth, and lick up the dust of thy feet." {#Isa 49:23}

Ver. 11. We are all one man's sons.] Therefore no spies; for what one man would hazard all his sons at once upon so dangerous a design?

We are true men.] Heb., Recti. The Popish doctors reject those ancient authors that are alleged against them, with Non sunt Recti in Curia. Bellarmine saith, To Irenaeus, Tertullian, Eusebius, and Luther, I answer, Omnes manifesti haeretici sunt; when anything in the decrees likes not the Pope, he sets Palea upon it, &c. {a}

{a} De Christo, lib. i. cap. 4.

Ver. 12. Nay, but to see the nakedness.] That is, the weakness, and where we may be best invaded; as #Nu 13:19. By this wile he gets out of them that which he much longed to hear of; his father and brother Benjamin's health and welfare. {#Ge 42:9}

Ver. 13. And one is not.] They tell Joseph that Joseph is not. When God holds men's eyes, they see not the truth that lies before them; "Who is blind as my servant?" {#Isa 42:19}

Ver. 14. That is it that I spake unto you.] He lays it hard to them still: as who should say, The longer I hear you, the worse I like you; ere while ye said, ye were ten brethren of you: now you acknowledge two more: liars had need to have good memories, &c. {a} Be we as jealous of Satan, and as watchful against his wiles, when he comes to set out the nakedness of our souls; that where the hedge is lowest, this beast may leap over; watch him, I say, and "learn out his haunts," for we have heard and felt that he is very subtle; as Saul said of David, #1Sa 23:22.

Ver. 15. By the life of Pharaoh.] Joseph, that he might seem enough an Egyptian, swears heathenishly; Egyptians, partly of flattery, and partly of superstition, used to swear by the life, or, as the Greek here hath it, by the health of their king. The Spaniards, in the pride of their monarchy, are grown also now to swear by the life of their king. {a} The Hebrews write, to this day, that he which falsely swears by the king's head, in a money matter, shall be put to death; as Pererius upon this text tells us. This grew, doubtless, of that cursed custom of deifying their kings; as Antiochus surnamed Θεός; and Caligula would be styled Dominus Deus: as at this day the Pope's parasites call him Dominum Deum nostrum papam. To be sworn by, is an honour peculiar to God. {#Isa 65:16 Jer 4:2} That of Paul {#1Co 15:31} is not an oath, but an obtestation; or, a taking of his afflictions for Christ to witness. That of the spouse {#So 3:5} is not an oath, but an adjuration: for he chargeth his church's enemies not to trouble her; and if they do, roes and hinds shall testify against them; which would not do so had they but reason. This of Joseph, likewise, is by some said to be not an oath, but an earnest asseveration: {b} as who should say, As true as Pharaoh liveth; or, So Pharaoh live. Be it what it will, Joseph cannot altogether be excused for conforming himself to the Egyptians. The place had somewhat tainted him; and he might well take up that of the prophet Isaiah, "Woe is me! for I am a man of unclean lips"; and why? "for I dwell amidst a people of unclean lips." {#Isa 6:5} Courts and great places are ill air for zeal to breathe in: it is hard for such not to remit somewhat of their former fervour, and contract filth of sin, which is as catching as the plague. As sheep among thorns lose part of their fleece; so do the saints part of their goodness among the wicked.

Ver. 16. By the life of Pharaoh surely, &c.] See how easily sin entereth twice, where it had once entered. "Be not overcome of evil." {#Ro 12:21} Some swear, and find it not; they would be sorry their excrements should pass from them, and they feel it not. Oh, cross this ill custom; and though ye cannot so soon turn the stream, yet swim against it. It is the devil that saith unto thee, as those Jews did to Pilate; "Do as thou hast ever done." {#Mr 15:8} God also will answer such, when they plead for their swearing, that they have got a custom, and cannot leave it; as the judge did that thief that desired him to spare him, for stealing had been his custom from his youth. The judge replied, it was also his custom to give judgment against such malefactors, therefore he must be condemned, {a} "Swear neither by heaven, nor by earth, lest ye fall into condemnation," saith St James {#Jas 5:12} to the converted Jews. This they had learned of the Pharisees, to whom it was familiar to swear by creatures. {#Mt 5:34} And though now converted, they could not leave it: but they must, or be damned for it, choose them which, as the apostle there assures them. {b} And whereas such kind of oaths are now grown a piece of gallantry, and such as cannot swear them are thought to want the tropes and figures befitting a gentleman, God will deal with such as that judge did with one that pleaded for his life that he might not be hanged, because he was a gentleman; he told him, that therefore he should have the gallows made higher for him: so shall these have a deeper damnation, because better bred, and should have kept a better watch; as that martyr told the swearing Bishop Bonner.

Ver. 17. And he put them all together into ward three days.] Not into close prison, but into some chamber, or private room, where they might have opportunity of reflecting upon themselves, and repenting. {a} I have heard of a grave divine, lately living, that did much good upon many that came to him to crave alms, by shutting them up in a room by themselves, having first taken great pains with them by way of direction what to do to be saved, joining in prayer, setting them in a course of better living, and then providing for them fit services. {b}

Ver. 18. And Joseph said unto them the third day.] So God, "after two days, will receive his; in the third day he will raise them up, and they shall live in his sight." {#Ho 6:2} "The rod of the wicked shall not rest on the lot of the righteous, lest they put forth their hands to folly"; {#Ps 125:3} lest their "spirits fail" before him. For others he cares not so much, as for the choice spirits of his faithful people. When we beat ordinary spices, we care not for every dust, but let some fly out, and fall on the ground; but if Bezoar stone, or some such precious stuff, every little is looked to. So here.

For I fear God.] Deum illum, saith Junias, that true God, the proper object of fear; and therefore you need not doubt of fair dealing. {See Trapp on "Ge 20:11"} Learn here, that confession of our faith is to be made as oft as thereby God may be glorified and our brethren edified.

Ver. 19. Let one of your brethren be bound.] By binding Simeon, he brought down Benjamin to himself. So doth God, by chastening our bodies, save our souls.

Ver. 20. But bring your youngest brother unto me.] So saith God to all his worshippers, See that you bring your hearts with you, whatever you leave behind you. And as David sent to Abner, "Thou shalt not see my face, except thou bring Michal, Saul's daughter": {#2Sa 3:13} so here. The poor widow's heart's being put to her mite, gave it weight above the greater but heartless largesses of the Pharisees.

Ver. 21. We are verily guilty, &c.] See here the force of conscience and fruit of affliction to bring old sins to a new reckoning. Conscience, though for a while still, and seemingly asleep, yet is faithful in recording, and fearful in accusing. It writes bitter things, and will article against the sinner in the evil day. Therefore, as Bishop Latimer took special heed to the placing of his words, in his examination before Bonner, when he heard the pen walking in the chimney behind the cloth, and describing whatsoever he said; {a} so should we; since conscience is not only God's spy, but notary: and albeit it doth not always execute the acts of accusing, yet hath always the habit of it. And that we shall know when trouble overtakes us; then shall we feel those darts of the Almighty, dagging at the heart, and those arrows of his, drinking up the spirit. Daniel chose rather to be cast into the den of lions than to carry about a lion in his bosom—an enraged conscience.

Ver. 22. Spake not I unto you, &c.] Fellows in sin oft fall out, and then all comes to light. Mohammed the great Turk had, with great rewards, procured two Turks to undertake to kill Scanderbeg. These traitors came to Seanderbeg, making such a show of the detestation, both of Mohammed's tyrannical government and vain superstition, that they were, both of Scanderbeg and others, reputed to be indeed the men they desired to be accounted: and so, after they had learned the principles of the Christian religion, were, by their own desire, baptized. But so it happened by God's good providence, that these false traitors, expecting nothing but opportunity to perform their devilish device upon some occasion, fell at variance between themselves, and in their heat let some such words fall, as being taken up by some there present, drew them both into suspicion. And thereupon, being straitly examined, it was at last by them confessed that they were sent for such a purpose; for which they were both presently executed, as they had well deserved. {a} Evil men are as glass that is soldered together; as soon as the solder is melted, the glass falls in pieces, and all is discovered.

Ver. 23. Understood them.] Heb., Heard them. See #1Co 14:2, marg. So #Isa 36:11. So a hearing heart is put for "an understanding heart," {#IKi 3:9} which many of our common hearers want; and therefore hear to no purpose. {#Isa 6:9}

Ver. 24. And wept; and returned, &c.] The better any one is, the more inclined to weeping; as David, than Jonathan. {#ISa 20:41}

Paulus non tam atramento quam lachrymis chartas inficiebat, saith Lorinus.

And took from them Simeon, and bound him.] He is thought to have been the chief doer in the sale of Joseph; and is therefore singled out for punishment. Judas Iscariot is said to come of his tribe. Of a turbulent and restless spirit Joseph knew him to be; and therefore detained him, saith Musculus, lest he should have hindered the motion of bringing down Benjamin.

Ver. 25. Then Joseph commanded to fill their sacks.] This was the revenge he took upon them for their many misusages. So Joshua marched all night, and fought all day for the Gibeonites that had deceived him. So Elisha set bread and water before the Syrians that came to surprise him. So St Paul bids, "If thine enemy hunger, feed him," &c. Injuries are more bravely overcome with benefits than recompensed with the pertinacy of a mutual hatred, said a very heathen. {a}

Ver. 27. To give his ass provender in the inn.] Their inns then were not so well furnished as ours are; but they were forced to carry their provender, which was a trouble.

Ver. 28. My money is restored.] Joseph had stolen this benefit upon them, which they misinterpret, their own misgiving hearts telling them that God's just hand was in it for their harm. Conscience, being now awakened, meets them at every turn, till they were soundly humbled, and had made their peace. Better a sore than a seared conscience; as, better a tormentful strangury than a senseless lethargy. Bee masters tell us that those are the best hives that make the greatest noise.

Ver. 29. And they came to Jacob.] Who had looked many a long look for them, no doubt, and was now glad to see their faces and full sacks. But this joy lasted but a little while; for no sooner had he heard them speak, but he was thunderstruck, as it were: so little stability is there in any worldly felicity. The saints have all here their back burdens of afflictions; yet some have more than others; as Jacob, who was seldom without: God not only gave him a draught of them, but made him a diet drink. Look how your refiners of sugar, taking sugar out of the same chest, some thereof they melt but once; other, again and again: not that it hath more dross in it, but because they would have it more refined: so is it here.

Ver. 35. And it came to pass as they emptied.] Calvin's note on this text is, that Joseph was misunderstood, and ill-advised; for that intending to help his father, by sending back his money, he grieved and frightened him. But this might be Jacob's fault more than Joseph's. We many times mistake God himself, through self-guiltiness, as if he meant to kill us with kindness, which is a great unthankfulness. See my "Love Tokens," p. 32.

Ver. 36. Simeon is not.] That is, As good he were not; for ye have left him prisoner, and unless ye return the sooner with Benjamin, which I cannot yield to, is like to be put to death as a spy. See here the pangs and passions of a parent, and how love descends!

Ver. 37. Slay my two sons.] A simple and sinful offer. Reuben was the oldest, but not the wisest. Age is no just measure of wisdom. Howbeit, of him we may learn, in our parents' fear, to be hardy and hearty; in our brethren's distress, to be eager and earnest.

Ver. 38. Then shall ye bring down my gray hairs, &c.] To the state of the dead; not to hell, or Limbus Patrum. Many of the ancients erroneously held that men's souls were not judged till the last day; nor rewarded or punished, but reserved in some secret receptacles unto the general judgment. Bellarmine would hence prove Purgatory. {a} Luther also seems to approve of that figment of the fathers; for in his notes upon this text, he will have "Sheol" here translated "the grave," to be an underground receptacle of all souls, where they rest and sleep till the coming of Christ. But gray hairs descend not farther than the grave. And Luther somewhere entreats his readers, that if they find anything in his books that smelleth of the old cask, they should consider he was not only a man, but some time had been a poor monk, &c.

Ver. 2. Buy us a little food.] They had learned to live with a little, which is a great skill; nature is content with a little, grace with less. Epicurus himself was wont to say, if he might have but aquam et offam, a draught of water, and a morsel of meat, he could live happily. {a}

Ver. 3. Ye shall not see my face, &c.] No acceptance without Benjamin, that son of sorrow: so, neither with God, without sound repentance. This is the rainbow, which if God sees shining in our hearts, he will never drown our souls.

Ver. 4. And buy thee food,] q.d., Thou art as much concerned as any of us, and more; because thou art master of the family.

Ver. 6. And Israel said, &c.] Here he begins to outwrestle his fears, by resting upon God; and is therefore called Israel.

Ver. 7. Could we certainly know, &c.] Inferences many times axe made upon what we say or do, such as we never thought of, Arbitror nonnullos in quibusdam locis librorum meorum opinatuos, me sensisse quod non sensi, aut non sensisse quod sensi, saith Augustine. {a} And it fell out accordingly. For, as Baronius witnesseth, after St Austin's death, there arose up divisions, who, out of his writings, wrested and misconstrued, brought in many errors; which they endeavoured to maintain by the name and authority of St Augustine. {b} And the like may be said of Luther.

Ver. 9. I will be surety for him.] Herein he was a type of Christ, that came of him, who is both our surety to God, for the discharge of our debt and duty, and God's surety to us, for the performance of his promises. {#Heb 7:22}

Ver. 10. For except we had lingered, &c.] In the words of God there is not any hyperbole to be found. In the words of men, related by the Scripture, if we meet with such kind of expressions as this and that in #Joh 21:25, it nothing derogates from the authority of the Scripture, as Pareus here noteth.

Ver. 11. If it must be so now, &c.] Perplexity is blind and untractable. Let the mind but settle, and it will soon yield to a reasonable motion, if seasonable, especially, as this of Judah was: for, besides the weightiness of his words, necessity now spake for him, that most powerful orator.

Take of the best fruits.] De laudatissimis rebus, saith Juulus. Of the verse or melody, saith the original; {a} that is, of the most praiseworthy fruits; such as deserve to be commended in verse, and sung of, to the praise of God the giver.

A little balm, and a little honey.] Great men regard not the worth of the gift, but the will of the giver. If I had had more, I would have given more, said that Greek to Augustus, {b} and it was accepted. The poor Persian that met Artaxerxes with a handful of water, out of the river Cyprus, went away well rewarded. So did the gardener that presented the Duke of Burgundy with a rape root; which, when the master of his house observed, he presented his lord with a brave small saddle horse, looking for like liberality, but was disappointed.

Ver. 13. Take also your brother.] Since there is no other remedy. But if I could otherwise do, he should never go. God doeth us good sometimes against our wills, and crosseth us with a blessing. The heathens could pray thus—“Great God, the good thou hast to give,

Whether we will't or no,
Let's still receive: no mischief thrive
To work our overthrow.”

Ver. 14. And God Almighty give you mercy.] Heb., Give you bowels, the seat of mercy. Here God not only grants Jacob's prayer, but fulfils his counsel, gives him the very particular he prays for. {#Ge 43:30} Joseph's "bowels yearned upon Benjamin."

If I be bereaved, I am bereaved.] This is like that of Esther, committing herself and her attempt to God, "If I perish, I perish"; {#Es 4:16} and like that of those saints in the Acts, "The will of the Lord be done"; which is, saith one, Vox vere Christianorum. Jacob prays for Benjamin's safety, but will be content his own will be crossed, so that God's will may be accomplished. This is the right way of praying; this is to "draw near with a true heart." {#Heb 10:22} Hypocrites seek God only out of self-love; which is as little pleasing to him, as if a woman should strive to content her husband, not out of love to him, but to another.

Ver. 15. Double money in their hand.] Both that they met with in their sacks' mouths, and new money to buy more.

Ver. 16. Slay, and make ready.] Heb., Slay a slaughter of beasts, as at feasts is usual. Quaere nunc cur subito moriamur? saith Seneca; quia mortibus vivimus; What wonder we die suddenly, that live by the death of others?

Ver. 17. And the man did as Joseph bade.] Things then go well within doors, when the hands take counsel of the head, the servants of their master, and are active to execute.

Ver. 18. And the men were afraid.] Where no fear was; but that an ill conscience haunted them, and so "the sound of a shaken leaf" {#Le 26:36} put them into a fright. As every body hath its shadow, so hath every sin its fear; and fear torment. {#1Jo 4:18}

Ver. 19. And they came near.] {See Trapp on "Ge 43:20"}

Ver. 20. O sir, we came indeed, &c.] We must not lie wretchlessly under suspicion of dishonesty; but carefully clear ourselves, as there is opportunity.

Ver. 21. Every man's money.] This made their hearts even ready to go out of their mouths, as the Heb. hath it. {#Ge 42:35}

Ver. 22. We cannot tell.]

Ver. 23. Peace be to you, fear not.] "The feeble minded" must be "comforted"; {#1Th 5:14} not crushed, or cashiered, as the wounded deer is by the whole herd. David, in the spirit of prophecy, pronounceth a bitter curse upon those that "persecuted him whom God hath smitten, and talked to the grief of those whom he had wounded." {#Ps 69:26} Joseph's steward had learned better things of his master.

Ver. 24. Washed their feet.] {See Trapp on "Ge 18:4"}

Ver. 25. And they made ready the present.] For, "a man's gift makes room for him, and bringeth him before great men." {#Pr 18:16} So it doth also before God, who looks for "a present," {#Ps 72:10} and loves to hear from us. "Praise waiteth for thee, O God, in Sion, and unto thee shall the vow be performed." {#Ps 65:1}

Ver. 26. And bowed themselves to him.] In their father's name, as well as their own. {#Ge 43:28} And here Joseph's dream {#Ge 37:9} was accomplished.

Ver. 27. And he asked them of their welfare.] Heb., Of their peace; which is a comprehensive, voluminous mercy.

Ver. 28. {See Trapp on "Ge 43:26"}

Ver. 29. God be gracious unto thee, my son.] Governors should temper clemency with severity, so as to be at once loved and feared. Mercy is the brightest star in the sphere of majesty. Queen Elizabeth, next to the Bible, took special delight in Seneca's tract, "De Clementia."

Ver. 30. And Joseph made haste, &c.] He hid his affection, as a wise and valiant man, till he had once more beaten vehemently upon their guilty consciences; and so brought them to a more sound and serious sight of their sin, that they might repent and make sure work for their souls.

Ver. 31. Set on bread.] Which the Latins call panis of παν, either because all covet it, or because whatever else the cheer be, men always set on bread. {a}

Ver. 32. Because the Egyptians might not eat, &c.] Such was their pride and superstition. Such was the hatred between the Jews and Samaritans: as is little less at this day between Papists and Protestants. If a Protestant give thanks at his food, though this chaseth not a Catholic from his dinner, which were to his loss, yet he must forbear to say Amen to it. As on the other side, some Roman Catholics will not say grace, though it be at their own table, when a Protestant is present; thinking it better to leave God unserved, than that a Protestant join in serving him. {a} They hold us no better than dogs, worse than Turks or Jews, damned heretics, cursed captives, unworthy to live on God's ground, fit for nothing but fire and fagot. Certain it is, that whosoever in this new faith and service hath ended this life, is in hell most certainly, saith Bristow, in his 36th Motive. It cannot be that a Lutheran so dying can escape the damnation of hell, saith Coster the Jesuit; if I lie, let me be damned with Lucifer. {b} Are not God's Hebrews an utter abomination now to these Romish Egyptians?

Ver 33. And they sat before him, &c.] He marshalled them in their right rank and degree; and this amazed them. He made them an absolute feast, such as Varro describes with these conditions; Si belli convenient homines, si temporis sit habita ratio, si locus sit non ingratus, si non negligens apparatus. {a} This feast is of that sort in use among the Romans, that were called χαριστια, to which were invited none but kinsfolks, to continue love and seek reconciliation where had been any breach. {b}

Ver. 34. And he took and sent messes.] So did Cyrus in Xenophon, to such as he favoured.

Ver. 1. And he commanded the steward.] Peccata extrinsecus radere, et non intrinsecus eradicare, fictio est, saith Bernard. Humiliation for sin must be sound and soaking, or else it is to no purpose. Hypocrites "hang down their heads as a bulrush," {#Isa 58:5} while some storm of trouble is upon them; but in a fair sunshine day, they lift up their heads as upright as ever. Something they do about sin, but nothing against it. As artificial jugglers seem to wound, but do not; or as players seem to thrust themselves through their bodies, but the sword passeth only through their clothes. This Joseph well knew; and therefore, that his brethren might make sure work, and have their hearts leavened and soured (as David's was, #Ps 73:21) with the greatness of godly sorrow; that they might mourn as men do in the death of their dearest friends; {#Zec 12:10} that their sorrow might be "according to God" (η κατα Θεον λυπη, #2Co 7:10), deep and daily, like that sorrow, #2Sa 13:36; that waters of Marah might flow from their eyes, and their hearts fall asunder in their bosoms like drops of water; he puts them to one more grievous fright and agony before he makes himself known unto them. And this was a high point of heavenly wisdom in him. For had he presently entertained and embraced them as his brethren, they would sooner have gloried of their wickedness than repented of it. Neither would a little repentance serve for a sin so ingrained, and such a long time lain in. Their hearts were woefully hardened by the deceitfulness of sin, their consciences festered: and had it been fit for him to break their bones before they were set; and lap up their sores before they were searched? "Repent ye," saith St Peter to those that had crucified Christ, and were now "pricked in their hearts." {#Ac 2:37,38} He saith not, "Be of good cheer, your sins are forgiven," now that you feel some remorse for them; but, Stay a while upon the work of repentance, and be thorough in it; leave not circumcising your hearts, till you find them as sore as the Shechemites felt their bodies the third day. And this the apostle said to such as already felt the nails wherewith they had crucified Christ sticking fast in their own hearts and piercing them with horror. Take we heed of laying cordials upon full and foul stomachs: "the feeble minded" only are to be "comforted," such as are in danger to be swallowed up with grief. But some men's stains are so inveterate, that they will hardly be got out till the cloth be almost rubbed to pieces.

Put every man's money in his sack's mouth.] Should they not have been content that their sacks were filled with corn, though there had not been money in the mouth of them? And should not we also rest satisfied with our many mercies? &c.

Ver. 2. He did according to the word.] Servus est nomen officii. A servant is not αυτοματος, one that moveth absolutely of himself, saith Aristotle; but the master's instrument, and ολωσ εκεινου, wholly his. Such was this servant of Joseph; and such should we all be to God.

Ver. 3. The men were sent away.] This was no small courtesy to them, that were so willing of their way.

Ver. 4. Wherefore have ye rewarded evil for good?] This, blind nature saw to be the sum of all sins. Ingratum dixeris, omnia dixeris. Some vices are such as nature smiles upon, though frowned at by divine justice; not so this. Hercules is much condemned by the heathens for killing his schoolmaster Linus; Alexander, for doing the like by his friend Clitus; Nero, by his tutor Seneca: Muleasses, king of Tunis, is cried out on, for torturing to death the Manifet and Mesnar, by whose means especially he had aspired to the kingdom. {a} Philip, king of Macedonia, caused a soldier of his, that had offered unkindness to one that had kindly entertained him, to be branded in the forehead, with these two words; Hospes ingratus. Unthankfulness is a monster in nature, a solecism in manners, a paradox in divinity, a parching wind to dry up the fountain of further favour. Benjamin's five fold mess was no small aggravation to the theft here laid to his charge. {b}

Ver. 5. And whereby indeed he divineth.] Junius reads it thus— Et nonne ipse experimento certo didicerit per illum, quales sitis? q.d., Hath he not by this fact of yours, found out your fraud and false dealing; whereby ye have hitherto sought to delude him? Is it not plain ye are spies and naughty-packs? The Jerusalem Targum seemeth to tax Joseph here for a soothsayer; or, at least, a seeker to such; which God forbade. {#De 18:10} Calvin also thinks he did grievously offend in pretending to be such a one; and did impiously profane the gift of the Spirit in professing himself a magician. But, pace tanti viri, this is too heavy a censure, and a forcing of the text, saith Junius. All that Joseph did was to sift his brethren, and to try their affection to Benjamin. And if he took upon him to be a diviner, he did it not seriously; but made use of that conceit the vulgar had of him: like as St Paul made use of that superstitious custom among the Corinthians, of baptizing over the dead, to prove the resurrection. {a}

Ver. 6. And he spake.] {See Trapp on "Ge 44:2"} {See Trapp on "Ge 43:17"}

Ver. 7. God forbid that thy servants should do.] Rapine and robbery was ever condemned amongst very heathens, and severely punished. Tamerlane, in his expedition against Bajazet, took such order with his soldiers that none were injured; insomuch, that if a soldier had but taken an apple, or other thing of like value from any man, he died for it. One of his soldiers having taken a little milk from a country woman, and she thereof complaining, he ripped up his stomach; where when he found the milk, he contented the woman and sent her away, who had otherwise died for her false accusation. {a}

{a} Turk. Hist., fol. 213.

Ver. 8. Behold, the money.] Those that from a right principle can find in their hearts to make restitution, may be safely trusted as to wronging others, either by covin or ravin. (agreement or robbery)

Ver. 9. With whomsoever it be found, &c.] Innocency is bold, but withal had need to be wise, for fear of further inconvenience. {See Trapp on "Ge 31:32"}

Ver. 10. Shall be my servant,] i.e., Mine, in my master's name and behalf.

Ver. 12. And he searched, and began at the eldest.] The better to avoid suspicion, for he knew well enough where to find the cup. So Jonadab, Amnon's carnal friend but spiritual enemy, could tell David that not all the king's sons, as the report ran, but Amnon only was slain by Absalom. The devil also when he hath conveyed his cups into our sacks, his goods into our houses, -as the Russians use to deal by their enemies, and then accuse them of theft, -his {a} injections into our hearts, if we fancy them never so little, will accuse us to God, and claim both them and us too for his own.

And the cup was found in Benjamin's sack.] Sacco soluto apparuit argentum, saith Ambrose. When God comes to turn the bottom of the bag upward, all will out. Sin not, therefore, in hope of secrecy; on the fair day, at the last day, all packs shall be opened.

{a} Heyl., Geog., p. 243.

Ver. 13. Then they rent their clothes.] In token of the rending of their hearts for their sins, which now had found them out, and they their sins: for misery is the best art of memory; being like to that helve Elisha cast into the waters, which fetched up the iron in the bottom. Conscience is like a looking glass, which while it lieth all covered with dust, showeth not a man his natural visage: but when it is wiped, then it makes the least blemish appear. Never till now could we hear these men confess. Now, what shall we say unto my lord? what shall we speak? saith Judah, the Confessor—so his name signifieth. Or how shall we clear ourselves? God hath found out the iniquity of thy servants. Not this, that they were now charged with

(for why should they be false to their own innocency?); but their cruelty to Joseph, and other like foul offences; for the which God in his just judgment had now brought them to condign punishment. How could Joseph hold, when he heard all this; and not cry out, as Paul did, in a like case, to his disconsolate Corinthians:

“Though I made you sorry with a letter" (with a cup), "I do not repent, though I did repent: for I perceive that this same epistle" (cup) "hath made you sorry, though it were but for a season. Now I rejoyce, not that ye were made sorry, but that ye sorrowed to repentance: for ye were made sorry after a godly manner, that ye might receive damage by us in nothing... For behold this self-same thing, that ye sorrowed after a godly sort, what carefulness it hath wrought in you, yea, what apology, {a} yea, what indignation, yea, what fear, yea, what vehement desire, yea, what zeal, yea, what revenge! In all things ye have approved yourselves to be clear in this matter.” {#2Co 7:8-11}

{a} Απολογιστον, Satisfaction, saith the old interpreter. It may be he meant a new life, to make amends thereby to the congregation offended, saith Bradford.—Serm. of Repent., 14.

Ver. 14. They fell before him on the ground.] Humble submission, they knew, if anything, would make their peace, and procure their pardon—

“Sic ventos vincit, dumse submittit arundo.”

It is no hoisting up sail in a storm, no standing before a lion, &c. William the Conqueror often pardoned rebels, and received them into favour; as he held submission satisfactory for the greatest offences, and sought not to defeat them, but their enterprises. {a}

{a} Dan., Hist., fol. 51.

Ver. 15. What deed is this that ye have done?] As Joseph here, so Christ sometimes impersonates an adversary, when he intends most love.

Wot ye not that such a man as I, &c.] If that be true that some conceive of Joseph, that he, here and at #Ge 44:5, made himself a soothsayer, he was certainly to blame. "The lip of excellency becometh not a fool," saith Solomon, but "much less do lying lips a prince." {#Pr 17:7, marg.} That is, it is naught when wicked men will be using gracious words, to seem religious. But it is far worse, when good men will use the fashion of the wicked, that they may seem impious.

Ver. 16. What shall we say, &c.] An ingenuous and penitent confession, joined with self-loathing and self-judging; teaching us how to confess to God.

“Sit simplex, humilis, confessio, pura, fidelis,
Atque frequens, nuda, et discreta, lubeas, verecunda,
Integra, secreta et lachrymabilis, accelerata,
Fortis, et accusans, et se punire parata.”

These sixteen conditions were composed in these verses by the Schoolmen. And such a confession is the sponge that wipes away all the blots and blurs of our lives. {#1Jo 1:7} Never any confessed his sin in this sort to God, but went away with his pardon. Wot ye what, -quoth King Henry VIII. to the Duke of Suffolk, concerning Stephen Gardiner, when he confessed his Popery, for which he should have been, the morrow after, sent to the Tower, -he hath confessed himself as guilty in this matter, as his man; and hath, with much sorrow and pensiveness, sued for my pardon: and you know what my nature and custom hath been in such matters, evermore to pardon them that will not dissemble, but confess their fault. {a} How much more will God!

{a} Act. and Mon., fol. 1175.

Ver. 17. But the man in whose hand, &c.] This was the heat that Joseph shot at in all this interdealing with them, -to try the truth of their love to Benjamin, and whether they would stick to him in his utmost peril God hath like ends in afflicting his children. "The king of Babylon stood at the parting way, at the head of the two ways, to use divination." {#Eze 21:21} So doth God. He knows that the best divining of men is at the parting way; there every dog will show to what master he belongs. God shoots at his servants for trial, as men shoot bullets against armour of proof, not to hurt it, but to praise it.

Ver. 18. For thou art even as Pharaoh.] This he saith the better to insinuate; for great men love to hear of their honour, and are tickled with their great titles. Paulus Jovius, writing of Pompey Colomia, Bishop of Reatino, saith, that when the said bishop, by the means of many great personages, was reconciled again, and brought into favour with the Pope, whom he had formerly offended; and that when they signified so much unto him in a short letter, in whose superscription, Bishop of Reatino, by chance, was left out; he receiving the letter, threw it away, and bade the messenger go seek some other Pompeio, to whom the letter was directed.

Ver. 19. Have yea father?] This we read not of till now, as we do of all the rest, in the next following verses.

Ver. 20. {See Trapp on "Ge 44:19"}

Ver. 21. {See Trapp on "Ge 44:19"}

Ver. 22. {See Trapp on "Ge 44:19"}

Ver. 26. We cannot go down,] sc., Without breach of our promises, and danger of our lives. Before he had said, "We will not." {#Ge 43:5} Now he mends that expression.

Ver. 30. Seeing that his life is bound up.] God loved his Son Jesus infinitely more than Jacob did Benjamin; he exalts his love far above that of any earthly parent; which is but a spark of his flame, a drop of his ocean. And yet be freely parted with him, to certain and shameful death, for our sakes. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son," &c. This is a Sic without a Sicut; there is nothing in nature whereby to resemble it.

Ver. 31. That he will die.] For, so great is the love, {a}

“ Corporibus binis spiritus unus inest.”

Ver. 32. For thy servant became surety.] So did Christ for us; and therefore he must acquit us of all our sins, ere he could go to his Father. Lo, herein lies the strength of that reason, "He shall convince the world of righteousness, because I go to my Father." {#Joh 16:10}

Ver. 34. For how shall I go up, &c.] Here love ascends, as fit it should. Judah, a man wise and well spoken, prefers his father's life before his own liberty. He could not live to see the death of his aged father. A certain citizen of Toledo being condemned to die, his son ceased not with prayers and tears to entreat that he might be put to death instead of his father. This he obtained after much suit, and most gladly died for him. {a} At Gaunt in Flanders, when a father and his son were condemned to die together, the earl, desirous to make trial whether of the two were more loving, granted that he should live that would cut off the other's head. And after much ado between them, the father, by many arguments, persuaded his son to be his executioner. {b}

Ver. 1. Then Joseph could not refrain.] No more can Jesus, in the extreme afflictions of his brethren, {#Isa 42:14} he must cry like a travailing woman; which, though she bite in her pain for a while, cannot long contain. As Croesus's dumb son burst forth into, "Kill not King Croesus." {a} So when the Church is overlaid by Satan or his instruments, his bowels work, he can hold no longer, but cries, "Save my child, Do the young man Absalom no harm." "I was but a little displeased, and they have helped forward the affliction. Therefore thus saith the Lord; I am returned to Jerusalem with mercies," or bowels. {#Zec 1:15,16} Their groans and moans, as every word of Judah's pathetic speech to Joseph, are as so many darts and daggers at his heart; he must take course for their relief and rescue. For he is a very tender-hearted Joseph, said that martyr, {b} and though he speak roughly to his brethren, and handle them hardly, yea, and threaten grievous bondage to his best beloved Benjamin, yet can he not contain himself from weeping with us, and upon us, with falling on our necks, and sweetly kissing us, &c.; -as he sweetly goes on in a letter to his wife, Pray, pray for us, everybody; we be shortly to be despatched hence to our good Christ. Amen, Amen.

Cause every man to go out from me.] That he might weep his fill, and not reveal his brethren's faults to strangers. It is wisdom in plastering the wounds of others, to clap our hand on the place, that the world may be never the wiser. Mercer thinks that Joseph concealed from his very father the hard dealings of his brethren with him; for if he had known, he would likely have set some note upon them for their cruelty, as he did upon Simeon and Levi for their bloody butchering of the Shechemites.

Ver. 2. He wept aloud.] And so gave vent to his passion, which else would have burst him. As hinds by calving, so men by weeping, "cast out their sorrows." {#Job 39:3}

Ver. 3. I am Joseph.] What a word was that! At the hearing thereof, what a strange conflict of contrary passions fell out in the hearts of the patriarchs! Wonder, doubt, reverence, fear, hope, guiltiness, joy, grief, struck them at once. Shall it not be so with the Jews at their glorious conversion, when they shall hear, "I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom ye have persecuted and pierced?" {#Zec 12:10 Re 1:7} {See Trapp on "Ge 38:27"}

Ver. 4. I am Joseph your brother.] Therefore you are to expect no hard sentence from a brother's mouth. Christ "is not ashamed," nor will be at the last day, "to call us brethren," He that was willingly judged for me, said that good woman, {a} will surely give no hard sentence against me. We may say boldly to him, as Ruth did to Boaz, "Spread thy skirt over me, for thou art a near kinsman" {#Ru 3:9}

Ver. 5. Now therefore be not grieved, &c.] See here a lively image of Christ's love toward his enemies, for whom he prayed and died, "to give them repentance and remission." {#Ac 5:31} This Angel of the Covenant first troubles the waters, and then cures those cripples that step in. This Sun of Righteousness first draws up vapours of godly grief, and then dispels them. "A bruised reed shall he not break, and smoking flax shall he not quench, till he bring forth judgment to victory"; {#Mt 12:20 Isa 42:3} that is, weak grace to perfection.

To preserve life.] Animantis euiusque vita in fuga est, saith the philosopher, and must be maintained by means. Hence it is called "the life of our hands," {#Isa 57:10} because upheld by the labour of our hands.

Ver. 6. {See Trapp on "Ge 41:54"}

Ver. 7. God sent me before you.] He it is that by a powerful providence orders all the disorders of the world, by a certain counsel, to his own ends, and at length to his own glory. The hands that nailed Christ to the cross were "wicked hands." {#Ac 2:23} And Judas was sent to "his own place," for being "guide to them that took Jesus." {#Ac 1:16} And yet they did no more than what "God's hand and counsel determined before to be done" {#Ac 4:28} for his glory, and the salvation of his elect. This Pliny derides as a strange doctrine, {a} but Plato hammers at it, when he saith, that God doth always φεωμετρειν. Indeed he doth all, in number, weight, and measure, as the wise man saith. He alters the property of his people's afflictions, and by an almighty alchemy turns dross to gold, &c. As a skilful apothecary, he makes of a poisoness viper a wholesome antidote.

Ver. 8. It was not you that sent me.] Joseph makes the best of an ill matter, that they may not be overwhelmed with grief, and so made a prey to the devil. {#2Co 2:11} "After I was made known to myself," saith Ephraim, "I repented." {a} Get thee, saith Mr Bradford, {b} God's law as a glass, to look in; so shalt thou see thy face foul arrayed, and so shameful, saucy, mangy, pocky, and scabbed, that thou canst not but be sorry at the contemplation thereof, &c. Especially if thou look to the tag tied to God's law, the malediction, which is such as cannot but make us to cast our currish tails between our legs, if we believe it. But here, to clear our eyesight, and keep us upright, we must anoint our eyes with Christ's eyesalve. {#Re 3:17,18} We read of a sensible eyesalve made of Christ's spittle and clay. {#Joh 9:6} As it were, of the knowledge of Christ by his word which proceedeth out of his mouth, as also of the knowledge of ourselves; who being made of earth, do savour nothing else but earth. {c} Both of these two knowledges are to be joined and beaten together in a lump; else they help not. For our misery acknowledged, without Christ, breedeth desperation: and Christ, without sense of our vileness, presumption.

Ver. 9. Come down unto me, tarry not.] Christ seems to send from heaven, and say unto us in like sort, God hath made me Lord of all; come up unto me, tarry not. Should the king call us to court, upon no other condition than to have and enjoy the pleasures and treasures there to be had, old Jacob never went so willingly into Egypt, as we should gladly accept and embrace such a motion.

Ver. 10 Thou shalt be near unto me.] So sweet a comfort to friends, that death itself is called but a departure. This the heathen persecutors knew, and therefore banished the Christian confessors far asunder {a} One man may be by his counsel an angel to another; {#Ezr 10:3} as Bradford was to Dr Taylor in prison. Communion with such is the "being bound up in the bundle of life," {#ISA 25:29} which was the blessing of Abigail upon David. St John trusted to come unto the elect lady, and "speak face to face, that their joy might be full." {#2Jo 1:12} When one desired to see Alexander's treasure, he bid one of his servants show him, not ἀργυριου ταλαντα, but τους φίλους; not his wealth, but his friends. {b} What an honour is that, that Christ should say to us, "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you!" {#Joh 15:14} And should say to his Father, "Father, I will that they also, whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory, which thou hast given me!" {#Joh 17:24} What could Joseph say more for his father and brethren?

Ver. 11. And there will I nourish thee.] To requite parents is "good and acceptable before God." {#1Ti 5:4} At Athens, {a} it was death not to be kind to parents and cherish them. The stork nourisheth her old sire and dam with admirable piety, saith Pliny; {b} and is therefore called by the Hebrews Chasidah, or Merciful: and by the Latins Pietatis-cultrix. The cuckoo, on the other side, is worthily hated, for that she cruelly devoureth her own dam, the hedge sparrow, saith Melancthon. {c} Mice are said to nourish their old ones that cannot shift for themselves, insigni pietate, {d} Cornelius, among the Romans, got the name of Scipio, by his kindness to his blind father, to whom he was the staff of his old age; as Macrobius relateth. {e} And Aristotle {f} tells a strange story, how that, when from the hill Etna there ran down a torrent of fire that consumed all the houses thereabouts, in the midst of those fearful flames, God's special care of the godly shined most brightly. For the river of fire parted itself, and made a kind of lane for those who ventured to rescue their aged parents, and pluck them out of the jaws of death. Our Saviour much distasted and detested that damnable doctrine of the Pharisees, teaching children to starve their parents, under pretence of devotion. {#Mt 15:4-6} And what would he have said to the Popish Pharisees, that say, that a monk may not leave his cloister to relieve his father, but rather let him die for hunger in the streets? Christ upon his cross, though as full of sorrow as heart could hold, commended his mother to be kept by the disciple whom he loved, with Ἰδοῦ ἡ μητῆρ σου. {#Joh 19:27} Agreeable whereunto was that speech of the Samians, "I give thee this woman for a mother," {g} when to the richer of the citizens the mothers of those who died in the wars were given to be maintained by them.

Ver. 13. And ye shall tell my father.] So the Lord Christ bade Mary Magdalene tell his "disciples and Peter," because he was most dejected for denying his Master, and in his dumps he must know with the first, "I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God, and your God." {#Joh 20:17}

Ver. 14. And he fell upon his brother, &c.] God's people are not senseless stoics or flinty Nabals; but have natural affections in them, as others; yea, above others, that have banished good nature, and can weep as little as witches. Courtiers are their prince's looking glasses; if he laugh, so do they; where he loves, they love, in pretence, at least; for all is but counterfeit. And here, Potest Augur Augurem videre, et non ridere? saith Cato, in Cicero. {a} The senate gave public thanks to the gods for all that Nero did, even when he had killed his mother, though they never so much abhorred it. When he sang at any time, though it were never so ill, for he had a small harsh voice, his courtiers would soothe him up with, Quam pulcher Caesar, Apollo, Augustus, εἰς ὡς πῦθιος, μα σε Καίσαρ οὐδεις σε νικᾷ, &c. {b} And because he hated the senate, notwithstanding all their flatteries, Vatinius was greatly in favour with him, for saying, *Odi te Caesar, quod Senator es. O the misery of those that be without Christ in the world!

Ver. 18. Come unto me: and I will give your, &c.] So saith Christ, "Come unto me, and ye shall find rest to your souls," {#Mt 11:28} health to your bones, all the blessings of this life and a better. Say, you meet with some trouble by the way, as haply Jacob had foul weather ere he came down to Egypt. Non sunt condignae passiones ad praeteritam culpam quae remittitur, ad praesentis consolationes gratium, quae immittitur, ad futuram gloriam, quae promittitur, saith Bernard, sweetly. What is a drop of vinegar put into an ocean of wine? No country hath more venomous creatures than Egypt, none more antidotes. So godliness, saith one, hath many troubles, and as many helps against trouble.

Ver. 19. Take you wagons out of the land of Egypt.] Christ also will send his wagons for us, his cherubims, and clouds to fetch us up to heaven, at the last day, {#1Th 4:15} as they did Moses and Elias. {#Mt 17:3} This David foresaw, and therefore envied not the pomp and state of those men of God's hand, that are whirled here up and down in wagons and chariots, &c. {#Ps 17:14,15}

Ver. 20. Also regard not your stuff.] The same saith God to his; Care not for your lumber and trumpery; suffer with joy the loss of your goods: Come, come away in your affections; I have far better things for you above: the good of all the land of the living is yours, &c. And should we not cheerfully follow the divine call? Many play loath to depart, because they have treasure in the world, as those ten men had in the field. {#Jer 12:8} But all that this world affords is but trash to the truly religious. Alexander, hearing of the riches of the Indies, divided his kingdom of Macedon among his captains and soldiers. And being asked what he had left for himself; he answered, Hope. And should not the hope of heaven make us slight all earthly vanities? Spes in terrenis, incerti nomen boni: spes in divinis, nomen est certissimi. #Heb 11:1.

Ver. 21. And gave them provision for the way.] So doth God give all his; meat that the world knows not of; joy that the natural heart never tasted of; the white stone; the hidden manna; the continual feast; the foretaste of eternal life, to hold up their hearts till they come home to heaven. On the cares of a good conscience, he goes on feeding, as Samson did on his honeycomb, till he came to his parents; as Joseph's brethren here did on their venison, till they came to their father Jacob.

Ver. 22. But to Benjamin he gave, &c.] God gives his best blessings to his Benjamins. "He is the Saviour of all men, but specially of them that believe." {#1Ti 4:10} "The Lord openeth the eyes of the blind, the Lord raiseth them that are bowed down";—these are common favours: but behold a better thing;—"the Lord loveth the righteous." {#Ps 146:8} This is more than all the rest. Outward things God gives to the wicked also, but as Joseph put his cup into their sack to pick a quarrel with them; or at best, as he gave them here change of raiment, to show his general love to them: but three hundred silverlings and five suits none but a Benjamin shall have the honour and favour of. Artabazus, in Xenophon, complained, when Cyrus had given him a cup of gold, and Chrysantas a kiss, in token of his special respect and love, saying, that the cup that he gave him was not so good gold as the kiss that he gave Chrysantas. When David said to Ziba, "All is thine that pertained to Mephibosheth"; Ziba answereth, "I humbly beseech thee that I may find grace in thy sight." {#2Sa 16:4} As who should say, I had rather have the king's favour than the lands. Valde protestatus sum, said Luther, me nolle sic ab eo satiari. He would not be put off with lands and large offers. And Moses would not hear of an angel to go along with them. He would have God himself, or none. {#Ex 33:12-17} The blessings that come "out of Sion," are choice, peculiar, even above any that come out of "heaven and earth." {#Ps 134:3}

Ver. 23. After this manner.] Not the same that he gave Benjamin, as some sense it; but as followeth in the text.

Ver. 24. Fall not out by the way.] Such a charge layeth Christ upon all his, to love one another, and to "keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." Si collidimur; frangimur; If we clash, we are broken; according to the old fable of the two earthen pots swimming in the sea. The daughter of dissension is dissolution, said Nazianzen. And every subdivision in point of religion is a strong weapon in the hand of the contrary party, as he upon the Council of Trent wisely observed. {a} Castor and Pollux, if they appear not together, it presages a storm.

{a} Hist. of Coun. of Trent, fol. 49.

Ver. 25. They came unto Jacob their father.] Who had looked many a long look for them: and now had far more joy of their return than before. {#Ge 42:29}

Ver. 26. Joseph is yet alive.] This was the most joyful news that ever Jacob heard, and the sincerest pleasure that ever he had; which therefore God reserves for his age. How did his good heart, after he had recollected himself, dance Levaltoes in his bosom, to hear of Joseph's honour, but especially of his life! What shall ours do, when we see Christ in his kingdom!

Jacob's heart fainted, for he believed them not.] They had told him a tale before; and he that once hath cracked his credit is hardly, after, believed. Besides, he thought the news was too good to be true. Tarda solet magnis rebus inesse fides. The joy of heaven is so great, that we must "enter into it"; it cannot enter into us. "Enter into the joy of thy Lord." {#Mt 25:21}

Ver. 27. When he saw the wagons.] Such assurance have deeds above words, {a} Nos non eloquitour magna, sed vivimus, said those primitive Christians. And no Christian is an ill-lived man, unless he be a pretender only to that religion, saith Athenagoras, in his apology for them. {b} For as one said of David's words in the 119th Psalm, that they are verba vivenda non legenda; so is religion to be credited, by the power and practice of it. Christians should lead convincing lives: and, by their piety and patience, muzzle the malevolent, throttle envy itself. I have read {c} of a woman, who, living in professed doubt of the Godhead, after better illumination and repentance, did often protest that the vicious life of knowing man in that town did conjure up those damnable doubts in her soul. The difference between divinity and other sciences is, that it is not enough to know, but you must do it; as lessons of music must be practised, and a copy not read only, but acted.

The spirit of Jacob their father revived.] How will our spirits exult and triumph when we shall hear the last trump, see the messengers and wagons sent for us! Consider the crowns, sceptres, kingdoms, glories, beauties, angelical entertainments, beatifical visions, sweetest varieties, felicities, eternities, that we are now to be possessed of! Surely, as Aeneas and his company, when they came within view of Italy, after long tossing in the Mediterranean and Aegean seas, joyfully cried out—

Italiam socii laeto clamore salutant.”—Virg.

And as when Godfrey of Bulloin and his company went to Jerusalem, as soon as they saw the high turrets they gave a mighty shout, that the earth rang. So when we shall see the battlements of the New Jerusalem, what acclamations will it ring of!

Ver. 28. It is enough; Joseph my son is yet alive.] Jacob rejoiceth more for his life than his honour. "Why is living man sorrowful?" {#La 3:39} Yet he is alive; that is a mercy, amidst all his miseries.

Before I die.] This he speaks after the manner of old men, whose song is, "My breath is corrupt, my days are extinct, the graves are ready for me." {#Job 17:1}

Chapter 46

Ver. 1. And came to Beersheba.] A place, (1.) Consecrated to God's worship; (2.) Where he and his fathers had met God, and received many mercies; (3.) That lay in his way from Hebron to Egypt. But say it had been out of his way; yet it had been nothing out of his way to go thither and seek God. A whet is no let; a bait by the way no hindrance; the oiling of the wheel furthers the journey. As it is, Tithe, and be rich; so, Pray, and be prosperous. But say it should be some prejudice; Is it not wisdom to make God's service costly to us? Cannot he make us amends? "give us much more than the hundred talents?" (#2Ch 25:9) Is anything lost by his service? Prayer furthers thrift. The night of Popery will shame many of us; who in their superstitious zeal had this proverb, Mass and meat hindereth no man's thrift. The very heathen offered sacrifices when they took journeys, as Festus witnesseth. {a}

Ver. 2. Here am I.] Josephus tells us, {a} he said, Who is there? He seems never seriously to have read the Bible; but only in transcurso, et quasi aliud agens. Is not that then a proper excuse for the Church of Rome's sacrilege, in robbing the common people of the Holy Scriptures, that she allows them to read Josephus, where they may find the history of the Old Testament more plainly and plentifully set forth than in the Bible! But Barclay, {b} that made this apology, was of the mind, belike, of Walter Mapes, sometime archdeacon of Oxford, who, relating the gross simony (traffic in sacred things) of the Pope, for confirming the election of Reginald, bastard son to Jocelin, bishop of Sarum into the see of Bath, concludes his narration thus: Sit tamen domina materque nostra Roma baculus in aqua fractus, et absit credere quae vidimus; {c} howbeit, far be it from us to believe our own eyes.

{c} Dr Sanderson.

Ver. 3. Fear not to go down into Egypt.] Cause of fear he might see sufficient; but God would have him not to look downward on the rushing and roaring streams of miseries that ran so swiftly under him and his posterity, but steadfastly fasten on his power and providence, who was his God, and the God of his father. He loves to perfect his strength in our weakness; as Elijah would have the sacrifice covered with water, that God's power might the more appear in the fire from heaven.

Ver. 4. I will go down with thee.] That was as good security as could be. For if Caesar could say to the fearful ferryman, in a terrible storm, Be of good cheer, thou carriest Caesar, and therefore canst not miscarry; {a} how much more may he presume to be safe that hath God in his company! A child in the dark fears nothing while he hath his father by the hand.

And I will also surely bring thee up again.] So saith God to his dying people when they are to enter into the grave. He will surely bring them back from the jaws of death to the joys of eternal life. Yea, by rotting, he will refine their frail bodies; as the goldsmith melts a picture of gold, or bruised piece of plate that is out of fashion, to make it up better.

And Joseph shall put his hand upon thine eyes.] An ancient and an honourable custom, in use among the Romans also, as Pliny tells us. The eyes are commonly open, lift up to heaven, when men are dying; unless they be such as that pope was, who, breathing out his last, said, Now I shall know whether the soul be immortal, or not. {b} Or that desperate advocate in the court of Rome, mentioned by Bellarmine, who, dying, used these words, Ego propero ad inferos, neque est, ut aliquid pro me agat Deus. But Jacob had hope in his death; and Joseph had the honour of closing up those eyes, that shall shortly "see God" again "in the flesh." {#Job 19:26}

Ver. 5. And Jacob rose up from Beersheba.] The word "rose up" is emphatical, and imports that his heart was lightened, and his joints oiled and nimbled, as it were, with the heavenly vision. As when he had seen God at Bethel, he "lift up his feet," and went on his way lustily; {#Ge 29:1} so here, as fast as his old legs would carry him; as Father Latimer said to Ridley, when they were going to the stake. {a} And as it is recorded of good old Rawlins White, martyr; that whereas before he was wont to go stooping, or rather crooked, through infirmity of age, having a sad countenance and very feeble complexion, and, with it, very soft in speech and gesture; now he went and stretched up himself, not only bolt upright, as he went to the stake, but also bare, with it, a most pleasant and comfortable countenance, not without great courage and audacity, both in speech and behaviour. {b} In like sort, Jacob here, having sought God, and received a gracious promise of his presence and protection, rose up merrily from Beersheba, and doubts not to follow God whithersoever he shall lead him.

{b} Ibidem, fol. 1415.

Ver. 6. And they took their cattle, and their goods.] Though Pharaoh sent to them they should not, yet, not willing to be much chargeable, they brought that they had. It is a happiness so to live with others as not to be much beholden; but rather helpful, than burdensome. He that receives a courtesy, we say, sells his liberty: and "the borrower is servant to the lender." {#Pr 22:7} St Paul glories in this to the liberal Corinthians, that when he was present with them he was "chargeable to no man." {#2Co 11:9} Οὐ κατεναρκησα ουδενος; {a} dunned no man, I was no man's parasite. He was not of those that "served not the Lord Jesus Christ, but their own bellies." {#Ro 16:18} The Duke of Bavaria's house is so pestered with friars and Jesuits that, notwithstanding the greatness of his revenue, he is very poor; as spending all his estate upon these Popish parasites. Such among the Turks are the Dervislars and Imailers, that under pretence of religion, live, like body lice, upon other men's sweat and labours. {b}

{b} Turk. Hist., fol. 477, 950. Heyl., Geog., p. 291.

Ver. 7. His daughters, and his sons' daughters.] That is, by a synecdoche, integri; his niece Serah, and his daughter Dinah, who came down with the rest into Egypt; and therefore was not Job's wife, as the Jews would persuade us.

Ver. 12. And the sons of Pharez were Hezron.] Hezron and Hamul, not yet born, are reckoned instead of Er and Onan, who were dead before the descent into Egypt. See Funccius's Chronolog. Comment., A.M. 2273.

Ver. 26. Which came out of his loins.] Heb., e femore eius. A modest description of generation, by the instrumental and material cause thereof. And because it is said, that so many souls came out of Jacob's body, Augustine ^{a} moves the question here, whether souls also are not begotten, as well as bodies? And when the learned father demurred, and would not presently determine the point, a rash young man, one Vincentius Victor, as Chemnitius relates it, boldly censured the father's unresolv'dness, and vaunted that he would undertake to prove by demonstration that souls are created, de novo, by God; for which peremptory rashness the father returned the young man a sober reprehension. But souls are doubtless here put for persons, which the Latins call capita.

Ver. 27. Threescore and ten.] St Stephen reckons seventy-five. ^{#Ac 7:14} And so the Greek translateth here, which Stephen seemeth to follow; as doth likewise St Luke for Cainan; ^{#Lu 3:36} that translation being then received, and they not willing to alter it. The Jews say, that these seventy souls were as much as all the seventy nations of the world. And Moses tells them, that whereas their fathers went down into Egypt with seventy souls, now Jehovah had made them "as the stars of heaven for multitude." ^{#De 10:22}

Ver. 28. And he sent Judah before him.] "A good man guides his affairs with discretion"; ^{#Ps 112:5} doth all things decently, and in order. It was great "joy" to the apostle to behold the Colossians' "order." ^{#Col 2:5}

Ver. 29. Presented himself unto him.] Joseph, a prince, was no whit ashamed of the poor old shepherd his father, before so many his peers, and other courtiers, that accompanied him and loathed such kind of persons. Colonel Edmonds is much commended for his ingenuous reply to a countryman of his, recently come to him, into the Low Countries, out of Scotland. This fellow desiring entertainment of him, told him, my lord his father, and such knights and gentlemen his cousins and kinsmen, were in good health. Quoth Colonel Edmonds, Gentlemen (to his friends by), believe not one word he says; my father is but a poor baker; whom this knave would make a lord, to curry favour with me, and make you believe I am a great man born. {a} {See Trapp on "Ge 22:10"}

And he fell on his neck, and wept, &c.] For exceeding joy. What then shall be the meeting of saints in heaven! Christ shall say, "Come, ye blessed of my Father." As if he should say, Where have ye been all this while, my dear brethren? It was a part of his joy, when he was on earth, "that we should be with him where he is, to behold his glory." {#Joh 17:24} And this he now prays not, but, "Father I will that they be with me"; as that which he had merited for them. And now, what joy will there be, to see them and suaviate them, for whose sake he shed his most precious blood; through which they may safely sail into the bosom of the Father! Surely, if Plotinus the philosopher could say, Let us make haste to our heavenly country; there is our Father, there are all our friends; {b} how much more triumphantly may Christians say so! If Cicero could say, O praeclarum diem, cure ad illum animorum concilium caetumque proficiscar! &c.; Oh, what a brave day will that be, when I shall go to that council and company of happy souls! to my Cato, and other Roman worthies, dead before me; -how {c} much more may Christians exult, to think of that glorious "nightless day" (ανεσπερον ημεραν), as Nazianzen calls it, when they shall be admitted into the congregation house (πανηγυριον) of the firstborn, {#Heb 12:23} as the apostle calls heaven; and joyfully welcomed by Abraham, David, Paul, &c., who shall be no less glad of their, than of their own happiness! Who can conceive the comfort of Jacob and Joseph, -or of those two cousins, Mary and Elizabeth, -at their first meeting? But for the joys of heaven, it is as impossible to comprehend them, as to compass heaven itself with a span, or contain the ocean in a nut shell. They are such, saith Augustine, ut quicquid homo dixerit, quasi gutta de mari, quasi scintilla de foco. {d} If the presence of Christ, though but in the womb, made John to spring, and dance a galliard, as the word imports (εσκιρτησεν εν αγαλλιασει, #Lu 1:44); what shall it do when we come to heaven! Sermo non valet exprimere experimento opus est, saith Chrysostom. It is more fit to be believed, than possible to be discoursed, saith Prosper. Nec Christus nec caelum patitur hyperbolen, saith another. The apostle, after he had spoken of glorification, breaks forth by way of admiration, into these words; "What shall we say to these things?," {#Ro 8:31} these "wordless words!" as he phraseth it (αρηρηστα ρηματα, #2Co 12:4); and ever uttereth himself, in a transcendent expression, as #2Co 4:17, where he calleth it "a weight of glory"; such as, if the body were not by the power of God upheld, it were not able to bear. Jacob could hardly hear the news of Joseph, and live: but when once he saw him; "Now let me die," saith he.

Ver. 30. Vow let me die.] What would this good old man have said, had he seen Christ in the flesh, which was one of Augustine's three wishes? {a} How merrily would he have sung out his soul, as Simeon did, {#Lu 2:29,30} who had long looked for the consolation of Israel; and having now laid in his heart what he lapt in his arms, cries, "Nunc dimittis Domine": I fear no sin, I dread no death (as one Englisheth it): I have lived enough, I have my life: I have longed enough, I have my love: I have seen enough, I have my light: I have served enough, I have my saint: I have sorrowed enough, I have my joy. Sweet babe! let this song serve for a lullaby to thee, and a funeral for me. Oh, sleep in my arms; and let me sleep in thy peace.

Because thou art yet alive.] If this were so great a matter to Jacob, what should it be to us, that Christ was dead, and is alive; yea, that he ever lives to make request for us; and that he stands at the right hand of his Father, when any Stephen of his is stoned, {#Ac 7:56} as ready prest to interpose between them and any harm that may thereby come unto them! If Seneca could say to his Polybius, Fas tibi non est, salvo Caesare de fortuna tun queri; how much less cause have we to complain, so long as Christ is alive! Can our hearts die within us, while our head is the Lord of life, yea, "our life," as St Paul calls him? {#Col 3:4}

Ver. 32. The men are shepherds.] The truly virtuous or valorous are no whit ashamed of their lowly parentage, but rather glory in themselves, that their merit hath advanced them above so many thousands far better descended. Dr Cox, almoner, and Sir John Cheek, tutor, to King Edward VI, were men of lowly birth, but so well esteemed, saith the historian, {a} for virtue and learning, that they might well be said to be born of themselves. So were Iphicrates, that brave Athenian, the son of a cobbler; Eumenes, one of Alexander's best captains, the son of a carter; Agathocles king of Sicily, of a potter, &c. And these would many times freely discourse of their beginning, and plainly relate their bringing up, and what their parents were.

And they have brought their flocks.] As choosing rather a poor shepherd's life in God's service, than to ruffle it as courtiers, out of the Church. So did Moses afterwards; and David; {#Ps 84:10} and the poor prophet that died so deep in debt; and Micaiah; and those that "wandered about in sheep skins and goat skins," {#Heb 11:37} who haply might have rustled in silks and velvets, if they would have strained their consciences. Origen was contented to be a poor catechist at Alexandria, every day in fear of death, when he might have been with his fellow pupil Plotinus, in great authority and favour, if not a Christian. Luther was offered a cardinalship, to have held his tongue; Galeacius Caracciohs, a great sum of gold, to have returned to his marquesdom in Italy, &c. God takes it kindly when men will go "after him in the wilderness, in a land not sown"; {#Jer 2:2} that is, choose him and his ways in affliction, and with self-denial.

Ver. 33. When Pharaoh shall call you.] At Athens every man gave a yearly account to the magistrate, by what trade, or course of life, he maintained himself; which if he could not do, he was banished. {a} By the law, Mahomet, the great Turk, himself is bound to exercise some manual trade or occupation, for none must be idle: as Solyman the Magnificent's trade was making of arrow heads; Achmat the Last's, horn rings for archers, &c.

Ver. 34. Thy servants' trade hath been, &c.] They were not ashamed of their trade, though low and despicable. Malo miserandum quam erubescendum, saith Tertullian. {a} No lawful calling, but hath an honour put upon it by God; unlawful only are shameful. Ask a poor scavenger what his occupation is, he will answer, I am a scavenger; water bearer, &c. Ask a usurer, gamester, &c., that question; and he will not say, I am a usurer, &c.

That ye may dwell in the land of Goshen.] Which, as it was next to the land of Canaan, so it was most fat, fertile, and fit for their cattle. Sumen totius regionis, the like to Egypt, that Campania was to Italy; of which Florus thus writeth: Nihil mollius caelo, nihil uberius solo, nihil hospitalius mari, &c. Liberi, Cererisque certamen dicitur. {b}

For every shepherd is an abomination, &c.] An Israelite is still an abomination to an Egyptian, the righteous to the wicked, {#Pr 29:27} and will be to the world's end. And there is no love lost between them. The shepherds of Israel especially, are by profane great ones thought scarce worthy to wait upon their trenchers; the baser sort make songs of them, and the abjects vilify them. Papists make more of hedge priests, than most among us do of powerful preachers: a sad forerunner of the departure of the gospel. If dishonour kept Christ from Nazareth, {#Joh 4:44} much more will it drive him thence when he is come.

Ver. 1. Then Joseph came and told Pharaoh.] This was great wisdom in him, to do nothing for his friends, though he were so great a favourite, without the king's privity and approbation. There wanted not those that waited for his halting; envy attends upon honour, {a} and always aimeth at the highest; as the tallest trees are weakest at the tops. Melancthon tells us he once saw a certain ancient piece of coin, having on the one side Zopyrus, on the other Zoilus. It was an emblem of kings' courts, saith he; {b} where calumnies accompany the well-deserving, as they did Daniel, Datames, Hannibal, {c} &c. Difficillimum inter mortales est gloria invidiam vincere, saith Sallust. {d} How potent that quick-sighted and sharp-fanged malignity is, we may guess by that question, #Pr 27:4.

Ver. 2. Even five men.] R. Solomon telleth us (but who told him?) which five they were; sc., Reuben, Simeon, Levi, Issachar, and Benjamin.

Ver. 3. What is your occupation?] That they had an occupation Pharaoh took for granted. God made Leviathan to play in the sea; {#Ps 104:26} but none to do so upon earth. Turks and Pagans will rise up in judgment against the idle. {See Trapp on "Ge 46:33"} Periander made a law at Corinth, that whosoever could not prove that he lived by his honest labour, he should suffer as a thief. The apostle bids "him that stole steal no more, but labour with his hands the thing that is good," &c. {#Eph 4:28} Not to labour, then, with hand, or head, or both, is to steal. Every one must bring some honey into the common hive, unless he will be cast out as a drone. {a} "Thou idle and evil servant," saith our Saviour. {#Mt 25:26} To be idle, then, is to be evil; and he shall not but do naughtily that does nothing. God wills that men should earn their bread afore they eat it, {#2Th 3:12} neither may they make religion a mask for idleness. {#Ge 47:11}

Ver. 4. For to sojourn in the land are we come.] And had they returned home again after the death of Joseph, they had taken a right course for themselves. But as God had otherwise decreed it, so they thought it best being there; and, therefore, not without their own fault, they fell into servitude.

Ver. 5. And Pharaoh spake unto Joseph.] Kind he was, and constant, to so good a servant; as Darius likewise was to his Zopyrus, whom he preferred before the taking of twenty Babylons; {a} the King of Poland to his noble servant Zelislaus, to whom he sent a golden hand, instead of that hand he lost in his wars {b}

Ver. 6. If thou knowest any men of activity.] Or ability of body and mind; such as "Jeroboam, a mighty man of valour," {#IKi 11:28} and fit for the work; prudent and diligent, ingenious and industrious, that hath a dexterity and handiness to the business. Such St Paul would have all Christians to be. {#Tit 3:8,14} "Let them that have believed in God," saith he, "be careful to maintain good works," or profess honest trades, "for necessary uses," and that therein they be their crafts masters, and excel others, Αιεν αριστευειν και υπειροχον εμμεναι αλλων. This was Cicero's posy from his youth, as himself witnesseth. And Plutarch tells us that all his strife and drift was, all his life long, to leave others behind him, and to be the best at anything he ever undertook. {a} This should he every man's endeavour in his place and station, as that which is "good before God, and profitable unto men," as the apostle there subjoineth. Solomon also assures us that such shall "stand before kings," and not live long in a low place. {#Pr 22:29}

Ver. 7. Jacob blessed Pharaoh.] That is, he prayed God to bless him, both at meeting and parting. To salute is comely: but see that ye be hearty, not frothy; prayerful, not complimentary. We are heirs of blessing, and must therefore be free of it. {#1Pe 3:9}

Ver. 8. And Pharaoh said unto Jacob.] This king took not pleasure, as those Persian kings did, in a wild retiredness, or stern austerity, but in a mild affableness, and heart attracting courtesy, He shows not himself strange or stoical, but sweet and sociable. So Atticus seemed in his carriage, cornraunls infimis, par principibus. Adrian, the Emperor, would most courteously confer with the lowest. Vespasian was wont, not only to greet the chief senators, but even private persons; inviting them many times to his table; himself again going to their houses, especially if he found them learned and virtuous. {a} Pharaoh might find Jacob both these; and so make very good use of him, as his faithful counsellor. Princes had learned men ever with them, called monitors or remembrancers (μνημονες): as Dio had his Plato; Scipio, his Polybius, &c. Abimelech made much of Abraham, and afterwards of Isaac; some think it was for their skill in physic and astronomy. {b} Why might not Pharaoh find and favour the same worth in Jacob, and learn the same wisdom from him, that his senators, by his appointment, did of his son Joseph?

Ver. 9. The days of the years of my pilgrimage.] All saints here are sojourners, all good people "pilgrims and strangers." {#1Pe 2:11 Heb 11:13,14} Far they are from home, and meet with hard measure; as Israel did in Egypt; as those three worthies in Babylon. {#Da 3:23} Their manners are of another manner: hence the world owns them not. {#Joh 15:19} But God both owns and honours them; he knows their whole way; {#Ps 1:6} "leads them in his hand"; {#Isa 63:13} "guides them with his eye"; {#Ps 32:8} "bears them in his bosom," {#Isa 40:11} when ways are rough and rugged; provides "mansions" {#Joh 14:2,3} for them, where they shall "rest in their beds," {#Isa 57:2} feast "with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob," {#Mt 8:11} walk arm in arm with angels, {#Zec 3:7} be "gathered to their people," {#Ge 25:8 Heb 12:23} to their God, to their Christ," &c.—Provided that, in the meanwhile, they "set their faces towards Sion, inquiring the way"; {#Jer 50:4,5} that they walk therein "from strength to strength"; {#Ps 84:7} that they take in good part any kindness, as Ruth did; {#Ru 2:10} that they put up any unkindness, as Paul did; {#Ga 4:12} that they make much of any company; {#Ps 119:63} send home by any hand; {#Ne 2:5} "abstain from fleshly lusts"; {#1Pe 2:11} and have "their conversation in heaven"; {#Php 3:20} eating, drinking, and sleeping eternal life; so wishing to be at home, yet waiting the Father's call; sighing out, when moved to be merry, -as the French king did, when prisoner here in England, in the days of King Edward III, -"How can we sing songs in a strange land?" {#Ps 137:4}

Ver. 11. In the land of Rameses.] That is, in the whole territory where Rameses was afterwards built. {#Ex 1:11}

Ver. 12. And Joseph nourished his father.] For which end he was "sent before" {#Ps 105:17} by God: and for whose sake so many thousands were preserved, that else would have perished. What fools, then, are they that hunt out the saints, their only safeguard! and hate them to whom they owe all the good they have! This is, with the foolish deer, to eat up the leaves that hide them from the hunter.

Ver. 13. The famine was very sore.] Of this famine mention is made by Justin, lib. i., and Orosius, lib. i., cap. 8.

So that the land of Egypt fainted.] Furebat, saith Junius. The Egyptians in the fifth year of the famine began to rage, if they could have told at what; and were well-nigh mad. Our Saviour's friends "went out to lay hold of him: for they said, He is beside himself." ^{a} ^{#Mr 3:21} Or, as some render it, he will faint: for, #Mr 3:20, "The multitude came so together, that they could not so much as eat bread." These Egyptians, whether they fainted or fretted, it was for want of bread. Joseph had foretold them of this seven years' famine; but saturity and security had so besotted them, that they feared nothing, till they felt it. Fulness bred forgetfulness; and now they are ready to let fly at others, because pinched with that penury that they might have prevented. "The wickedness of a man perverts his way, and his heart frets against the Lord." ^{#Pr 19:3} See it in that furious king, #2Ki 6:33.

Ver. 14. And Joseph gathered up all the money.] There is something, then, besides grace, that is better than money: though misers will as easily part with their blood, ^{a} as with their good. Constantinople was lost through the citizens' covetousness. The like is reported of Heidelberg. Worthy they were, in this name, to have been served as the great Caliph of Babylon was by the great Cham of Tartary. He was set in the midst of those infinite treasures which he and his predecessors had most covetously amassed; and bidden to eat of that gold, silver, and precious stones, what he pleased, and make no spare. In which order, the covetous catiff kept for certain days, miserably died for hunger. ^{b} Money is a baser thing than "food and raiment": these if we have, "let us be content." ^{#1Ti 6:8}

Ver. 15. Why should we die in thy presence?] When it is in thy power to save us alive in this our extreme indigency? Qui non cum potest, iuvat, occidit, saith the proverb. And, "Is it lawful on the Sabbath to do good, or to do evil? to save, or to destroy a life?" ^{#Mr 3:4} -intimating that not to save when we may, is to destroy. The Egyptians, therefore, put Joseph to it. Money they had none, but must have answered, if now it had been required of them, as those inhabitants of Andros did Themistocles. He being sent by the Athenians for tribute money, told them that he came on that errand accompanied with two goddesses; eloquence to persuade, and violence to enforce them. Whereunto the Andraeans made this answer; that they had on their side, also, two goddesses as strong; necessity, {a} they had it not, and impossibility, whereby they could not part with that which they possessed not. {b}

Ver. 18. We will not hide it from my lord.] Confess we our pitiful indigence also to God, and he will furnish us with food and seed. Say with learned Pomeran, Etiamsi non sum dignus, nihilo minus tamen sum indigens.

Ver. 19. Buy us and our land for bread.] It was their own desire, therefore no injury. Nay, it was charity in Joseph, in remitting their services, and taking only their lands: yea, liberality, in reserving the fifth part only to the king; when husbandmen usually till for half the increase. And this the Egyptians thankfully acknowledge, #Ge 47:25.

Ver. 20. So the land became Pharaoh's.] Regi acquisivit imperium despoticum. This the Egyptians would never have yielded unto, but that stark hunger drove the wolf out of the wood, as the proverb is. Philo Judaeus reports of a heathenish people who in their wars used only this expression, to put spirit into their soldiers; estote viri, libertas agitur. The contention was hot in this land between prince and people for fourscore years together, about liberty and property; and ceased not till the great charter, made to keep the beam right between sovereignty and subjection, was in the maturity of a judicial prince, Edward I, freely ratified. {a}

Ver. 21. And as for the people, he removed them.] So to alter tim propriety of their land, and to settle it upon Pharaoh; who with his own money had bought it. See his prudence and policy for his lord and master. So Daniel, though sick, did the king's business with all his might. These were, as the philosopher saith, πεπραγωνοι ολοκληροι; few such now-a-days. Great need we have all to flee to Christ who "dwells with prudence"; {#Pr 8:12} as Agur did, when he found his own foolishness. It was he that made Aholiab wise-hearted.

Ver. 22. Only the land of the priests bought he not.] Ministers' maintenance, we see, is of the law of nature. Jezebel provided for her priests; Micah for his Levite. "Do ye not know," saith that great apostle, "that they which minister about holy things, live of the things of the temple? and they which wait at the altar, are partakers with the altar?" {#ICo 9:13} Where, by "holy things," St Ambrose understands the law of the Gentiles by "the altar," the law of the Jews. Before them both, Melchizedek, δεδεκατωκε, tithed Abraham; by the same right, whereby he blessed him. {#Heb 7:6} As after them, the apostle rightly infers, "Even so hath the Lord ordained, that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel." {#ICo 9:14} But where hath the Lord ordained it? "The workman is worthy of his meat," saith Matthew; {#Mt 10:10} "of his hire," saith Luke: {#Lu 10:7} of both, no doubt; as the labourers in harvest, who have better fare provided than ordinary, and larger wages. See Nehemiah's zeal for church maintenance, #Ne 13:10,14. He knew well that a scant offering makes a cold altar; and that, ad tenuitatem beneficiorum necessario sequitur ignorantia sacerdotum; as in Ireland, where, in former time, some of the bishops had no more revenue than the pasture of two milk cows, &c. In the whole province of Connaught the stipend of the incumbent is not above forty shillings; in some places but sixteen shillings. {a} Melancthon {b} complains of his Germany, that the ministers for most part were ready to say with him in Plautus: Ego non servio libenter: herus meus me non habet libenter, tamen utitur me ut lippls oculis. Such use Micah made of his Levite; more fit to have made a Gibeonite, to cleave wood, than to divide the word; and yet he maintained him; and doubted not, thereupon, to promise himself God's blessing. He is a niggard to himself, that scants his beneficence to a prophet; {#Mt 10:41} whose very cold water shall not go unrewarded. Many rich refuse to give anything to the minister's maintenance; {c} because they cannot be tithed. But "be not deceived; God is not mocked," saith the apostle in this very case. "Let him that is taught in the word, communicate unto him that teacheth in all his goods." {#Ga 6:6,7} Such tribes as had more cities in their inheritance were to part with more to the priests: such as had fewer, with less. {#Nu 35:8} The equity of which proportion is still in force. The Jews, {d} at this day, though not in their own country, nor having a Levitical priesthood, yet those who will be reputed religious among them do distribute, in lieu of tithes, the tenth of their increase unto the poor: being persuaded that God doth bless their increase the more; according to that proverb of theirs, Tithe and be rich. But how is both the word and the world now altered among us? All is thought by the most to be well saved that is kept from the minister; whom to deceive is held neither sin nor pity. Fisco potius apud multos consulitur quam Christo, ac tonsioni potius gregis quam attentioni; as one complaineth, {e} Covetous patrons care not to sauce their meat with the blood of souls; while by them, et succus pecori, lac et subducitur agnis, {f} Besides, they bestow their benefices, non ubi optima, sed ubi quaestuosissime; being herein worse than these Egyptians, shall I say? nay, than the traitor Judas. He sold the head, they the members: he the shepherd, they the sheep; he but the body, they the souls; like that Romish strumpet, {#Re 18:13} of whom they have learned it. But let them look to it, lest they ruin their wages of wickedness, with Judas. In the meanwhile, let them give us a just commentary upon that in #Pr 20:25, and tell us who hath authority to take that, from a church, shall I say? nay, from God, that hath been once given him? We can tell them a sad story, of five servants of Cardinal Wolsey's, employed by him, in tot piorum hominum donariis intervertendis, saith the annalist, {g} and came all to fearful ends. Two of them disagreed; and, challenging the field, one killed the other, and was hanged for it. A third drowned himself in a well. The fourth, from great riches, fell to extreme beggary and was starved with hunger. The last, one Dr Alan, being Archbishop of Dublin, was there cruelly murdered by his enemies. Now, if divine justice so severely and exemplarily pursued and punished these that converted those abused goods of the Church to better uses without question, though they looked not at that, but at the satisfying of their own greedy lusts, what will be the end of such sacrilegious persons as enrich themselves with that which should be their minister's maintenance? Sacrum, sacrove commendatum qui clepserit rapseritque, parricida esto, said the Roman law. {h} It is not only sacrilege, but parricide, to rob the Church.

Ver. 25. Let us find grace.] That is, Do us the favour to intercede for us to Pharaoh, that we may be his perpetual farmers, and hold of him. It seems that Pharaoh was no proper name, but common to the kings of Egypt; as Caesar, to the emperors of Rome; a title of honour, as His Majesty amongst us. Otherwise these poor people had been too bold with his name.

Ver. 26. Except the land of the priests only.] {See Trapp on "Ge 47:22"}

Ver. 27. Grew and multiplied exceedingly.] Here that promise in #Ge 46:3 began to be accomplished. God dies not in any man's debt.

Ver. 28. Jacob lived in the land of Egypt seventeen years.] So long he had nourished Joseph; and so long Joseph nourished him; paying his ἀντιθροπηρία to the utmost penny. These were the sweetest days that ever Jacob saw. God reserved his best to the last. "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for," be his beginning and his middle never so troublesome, "the end of that man is peace." {#Ps 37:37} A Goshen he shall have, either here or in heaven.

Ver. 29. Bury me not, I pray thee, in Egypt.] This he requested, partly to testify his faith concerning the Promised Land, heaven, and the resurrection; partly to confirm his family in the same faith; and that they might not be glued to the pleasures of Egypt, but wait for their return to Canaan; and partly also to declare his love to his ancestors, together with the felicity he took in the communion of saints.

Ver. 30. Bury me in their burying place.] That he might keep possession, at least by his dead body, of the Promised Land. There they would be buried, not pompously, but reverently, that they might rise again with Christ. Some of the fathers think that these patriarchs were those that rose corporally with him. {#Mt 27:53}

Ver. 31. And Israel bowed himself.] In way of thankfulness to God, framing himself to the lowliest gesture he was able; rearing himself up upon his pillow, "leaning" also "upon" his third leg, "his staff." {#Heb 11:21} In effaeta senecta, fides non effaeta.

Ver. 1. Behold, thy father is sick.] And yet it was "Jacob have I loved." So, "Behold, he whom thou lovest is sick." {#Joh 11:3} Si amatur, quomodo infirmatur? saith a father. Very well, may we say. The best, before they come to the very gates of death, pass oft through a very strait, long, heavy lane of sickness; and this in mercy, that they may learn more of God and depart with more ease out of the world. Such as must have a member cut off, willingly yield to have it bound, though it be painful; because, when it is mortified and deadened with strait binding, they shall the better endure the cutting of it off: so here, when the body is weakened and wasted with much sickness, that it cannot so bustle, we die more easily. Happy is he, saith a reverend writer, {a} that after due preparation is passed through the gates of death ere he be aware; happy is he that, by the holy use of long sickness, is taught to see the gates of death afar off, and addresseth for a resolute passage. The one dies like Enoch and Elijah; the other like Jacob and Elisha; both blessedly.

Ver. 2. And Israel strengthened himself.] Ipse aspectus viri boni delectat, saith Seneca; sure it is that the sight of a dear friend reviveth the sick. One man, for comfort and counsel, may be an angel to another; nay, as God himself. Such was Nathan to David; Bishop Ridley to King Edward VI; and that poor priest to Edward III, who, when all the king's friends and favourites forsook him in his last agony, leaving his chamber quite empty, called upon him to remember his Saviour, and to ask mercy for his sins. This none before him would do, every one putting him still in hope of life, though they knew death was upon him. But now, stirred up by the voice of this priest, he showed all signs of contrition; and, at his last breath, expresses the name of Jesus. {a}

Ver. 3. God Almighty appeared unto me at Luz.] The truly thankful keep calendars and catalogues of God's gracious dealings with them, and delight, to their last, to recount and reckon them up; not in the lump only, and by wholesale, as it were, but by particular enumeration upon every good occasion; setting them forth one by one, as here, and ciphering them up, as David's word is. { דב7, #Ps 9:1 } We should be like civet boxes, which still retain the scent when the civet is taken out of them. See #Ps 145:1,2 Ex 18:8.

Ver. 4. For an everlasting possession.] This is fully made good to the Israel of God, those heirs of heaven.

Ver. 5. As Reuben and Simeon, they shall be mine.] God hath in like sort adopted us for his dear children; saying, "I will be a Father unto them, and they shall be my sons and my daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." {#2Co 6:18} This St John calls a royalty or prerogative, {εξουσια, #Joh 1:12} such as he elsewhere stands amazed at. {#1Jo 3:1} And well he may; for all God's children are "firstborn," and so "higher than all the kings of the earth." {#Ps 89:27} They "in the fulness of their sufficiency are in straits." {#Job 20:22} Whereas the saints, in the fulness of their straits, are in an all-sufficiency.

Ver. 6. After the name of their brethren.] That is, of Ephraim and Manasseh; as if they were not their brethren, but their sons. Thus Jacob transfers the birthright from Reuben to Joseph. {#1Ch 5:1,2}

Ver. 7. And I buried her there.] He could not carry her to the cave of Machpelah; and he would not bury her at Bethdehem among infidels. This he tells Joseph, to teach him and the rest not to set up their rest anywhere but in the land of Canaan.

Ver. 8. Who are these?] Here Jacob, seeing Joseph's two sons, and now first understanding who they were, breaks off his speech to Joseph, till the two last verses of the chapter, and starts blessing his sons; teaching us to be "ready to every good word and work," {#Tit 3:1} laying hold of every hint that God puts into our hands, accounting it a mercy that we may have opportunity.

Ver. 9. They are my sons, whom God, &c.] The Lord Christ in like sort presents us to his heavenly Father with, "Here am I, and the children whom thou hast given me." {#Heb 2:13} Whereunto the Father replies, as Jacob here, Bring them now unto me, and I will bless them.

Ver. 11. I had not thought to see thy face.] God delights to outbid the hopes of his people, and to be better to them than their deserts, than their desires, yea, than their faith. {#Isa 54:2,3,12,14} As it is storied of a certain emperor, that he delighted in no undertakings so much as in those that his counsellors and captains held impossible: and he seldom miscarried. So God, #Ex 15:11.

Ver. 12. From between his knees.] That is, From between his father's knees, that he might place them right to receive the blessing, presenting them again according to their age. This he did for the best; but "God only wise" had otherwise ordered it. We many times think we do well, when it proves much otherwise. "Lean not therefore to thine own understanding," saith the wise man; {#Pr 3:5} but make out to him that "dwells with prudence." {#Pr 8:12}

Ver. 13. Both, Ephraim in his right hand.] The right hand hath the pre-eminence of the left among most people: yet not so among the Turks; their soldiery especially. The right hand they hold uppermost ibr the clergy, and the left for a soldier: because it gives a man possession of his companion's sword. Thus do both orders converse without the depression of either, saith mine author. {a}

Ver. 14. Guiding his hands wittingly.] Cognoscebat palpando manibus suis, saith Junius: Intelligere fecit manus, saith Patens. An emphatical metaphor; as if he should say, Jacob with his eyes could not distinguish them, but his hands shall therefore do the office of his eyes. Bartolus {a} writes of Dr Gabriel Nele, that by the motion of the lips only, without any utterance, he understood all men; perceived and read in every man's countenance what was his conceit. But that is far more credible, and no less admirable, that Jerome reports of Didymus of Alexandria; that though he had been blind of a little child, yet he was excellently skilled in all the liberal arts, and had written Commentaries upon the Psalms and Gospels, being at this time, saith he, eighty-three years of age. {b}

Ver. 15. God, beforewhom my fathers did walk.] This is the highest praise that can be given to ancestors; this is the crown of all commendation, to have walked with God as a man walketh with his friend. This is better than a thousand escutcheons.

The God which fed me all my life long.] As a shepherd tends and feeds his sheep. {#Ps 23:1 80:1} Jacob looks beyond all second causes, and sees, as once at Bethel, God on the top of the ladder. {#Ge 28:12-15}

Ver. 16. The Angel which redeemed me.] Christ, the Angel of the Covenant, the Mediator of the New Testament, the Redeemer, the Lamb slain from the beginning of the world. "For we were not redeemed with silver and gold, but with the blood of Christ, as of a lamb undefiled." {#1Pe 1:19} Paul by that "freedom" {#Ac 22:28} escaped whipping: we, by this, the pain of eternal torment.

And let my name be named on them.] Lest any should think it to be some prejudice to them that they were born in Egypt, and of an Egyptian mother, he adopts them for his own.

Ver. 17. And when Joseph saw that, &c.] So great a prophet and diviner as Joseph was, in this was out in his judgment. He seeth not that man's dignity is "not by works," or nature, but grace and "election." {#Ro 9:7,8,11,12}

Ver. 18. Not so, my father, &c.] Here are a couple of holy prophets differing in their judgments; yet not about the substance of the blessing, but the circumstance of it. Wonder not though such things still fall out in the true Church, and the doctors be likewise divided in points less material, and that touch not the foundation. Luther interprets those words of Christ, "This is my body," synecdochically; Calvin, metonymically. Hence the Jesuits straight cry out: The Spirit of God dissents not from itself; but these interpretations dissent one from another, therefore they are not of the Spirit. {a} Now it were easy to stop their foul mouths, by telling them of their own far worse differences. But is it not a doleful thing that we should, with those birds, agnoscere in nostris vulneribus nostras pennas? "Brother goeth to law with brother, and that before infidels." {#1Co 6:6} This is the devil's malice, to sow tares, &c. Christ came to destroy his works; yet never were so many possessed as about that time.

{a} See The Peace of Rome.

Ver. 19. And his father refused, and said.] Here are father and son divided in matter of ceremony, as Bishop Babington observeth. This hath been an ancient quarrel, from the very cradle of the Christian Church. The Jewish converts stood hard for a mixture of Christ and Moses. Their rites they called "the rudiments of the world"; {#Col 2:8} because they held them as needful as the four elements of the world; or as the first letters of the book, to school God's people. Soon after, what a dispute was there among the primitive Christians, even unto blows and bloodshed, about the time of keeping Easter, and other like trifles and niceties! St Augustine complains, that in his time the Church, which the mercy of God would have to be at liberty, was woefully oppressed with many burdens and bondages this way; so that the condition of the Jews was in this respect more tolerable, for that they were held under by legal injunctions, and not by human presumptions. {a} What would this father have said to the following times, under the rise and reign of Antichrist? wherein the formality of God's worship had utterly eaten up the reality of it, as Pharaoh's lean kine did the fatter; and gotten out the very heart of it, as the ivy dealeth by the oak it grows on. Our heroic reformers, Luther, Zuinglius, &c., pruned and pared off these luxuriances for the most part; which caused John Hunt, a Roman Catholic, in his humble appeal to King James, thus to blaspheme:—The God of the Protestants is the most uncivil and ill-mannered God of all those who have borne the name of gods upon the earth; yea, worse than Pan, god of the clowns, which can endure no ceremonies, nor good manners at all. {b} But yet, what a grievous stir was there, about these indifferents, between Luther and Carolostadius, at Wittenberg; between the doctors of Magdeburg and Leipsic, Anno Dom. 1549; {c} and between Calvin {d} and his auditors of Geneva, about wafer cakes at the communion; insomuch as he was compelled to depart the city till he had yielded they should be used, though he never liked them, but could have wished it otherwise. Who knows not what jars and heart burnings were here between Ridley and Hooper, two godly bishops, in King Edward VI's time, about cap and surplice. They could never agree till they met in prison; and then misery bred unity; then they could heartily bewail their former dissensions about matters of no more moment. Peter Martyr commends it to the care of Queen Elizabeth, {e} that church governors endeavour not to carry the gospel into England upon the cart of needless ceremonies. By his advice, among others, in King Edward VI's days, some people contending for one image, some for another, the king took down all those Balaam's blocks. And the very self-same day and hour wherein the Reformation enjoined by Parliament was put in execution at London by burning of idolatrous images, the English put to flight their enemies in Musselburgh field, as Mr Fox hath well observed. {f}

Ver. 20. And he set Ephraim before.] God many times sets the younger before the elder; makes the last to be first, and the first last; to show the freedom of his grace, and that "he seeth not as man seeth." {#1Sa 16:7} The maids were first purified and performed, before Ahasuerus chose one. Ver. 21. Behold, I die.] This was a speech of faith, uttered without the least fear, consternation, or dismayment. As it was no more betwixt God and Moses, but "Go up and die"; so betwixt God and Jacob, but "Behold, I die." Death, he knew, to him should neither be total, but of the body only; nor perpetual of the body, but for a season only. See both these set forth by the apostle, #Ro 8:10,11. The Chaldee Paraphrast on this text hath: Behold, I die; and the word of the Lord, i.e., Christ, shall be your help.

Ver. 22. I have given thee one portion.] Joseph had the double portion, as Judah the dignity, from Reuben; who had forfeited both by his incest. And here it appeareth that the right of the firstborn to a double portion was in force and in use before that law; {#De 21:17} as was also the Sabbath, circumcision, and the raising up seed to a deceased brother.

With my sword and with my bow.] That is, With the warlike weapons of my sons, Simeon and Levi, whose victory he ascribeth to himself; not as it was wickedly got by his sons, for so he disavows and detests it, {#Ge 49:5} but as by a miracle from heaven, the Canaanites were held in from revenging that slaughter, and made to fear his force and valour. The Chaldee Paraphrast expounds it metaphorically; I took it with my sword and my bow; hoc est, oratione et deprecatione mea, saith he; by my prayer and supplication. Prayers, indeed, are bornbardae et instrumenta bellica Christianorum, saith Luther; a Christian's best arms and ammunition. The Jesuits pretend and protest that they have no other weapons or ways to work, but preces et lachrymas. Whereas it is too well known that they are the greatest incendiaries and boutefeux of Christendom, and their faction a most agile sharp sword, whose blade is sheathed at pleasure in the bowels of every commonwealth; but the handle reacheth to Rome and Spain.

Ver. 1. Gather yourselves together.] This is Jacob's swan-like song, {a} his last bequeath, his farewell to the world; and it is a most heavenly one. The wine of God's Spirit is usually strongest and best at last in the hearts of his people: his motions, quickest when natural motions are slowest; most sensible when the body begins to be senseless most lively when holy men are dying. Look how the sun shines most amiably toward the descent and rivers, the nearer they draw to the sea, the sooner they are met by the tide: so it is with the saints when nigh to death; when grace is changing into glory, they deliver themselves usually to the standers-by most sweetly. So, besides Jacob, did Moses, Joshua, Paul, and he in whose one example is a globe of precepts, our Lord Jesus Christ, in that last heavenly sermon and prayer of his, #Joh 14:1-17:26 Whereunto let me add that faithful martyr, John Diazius, who was cruelly butchered by his own brother Alphonsus Diazius, and that merely for his religion. {See Trapp on "Ge 4:8"} I remember, saith Senarclaeus, his friend and bedfellow, who wrote the history of his death, when he and I were at Newburg, the very night before he was murdered, he prayed before he went to bed more ardently than ordinary, and for a longer time together. After which he spent a good part of the night in discoursing of the great works of God, and exhorting me to the practice of true piety. And truly I felt myself so inflamed and quickened by his words, that when I heard him discoursing, I thought I heard the Spirit of God speaking unto me. This, and much more, Senarclaeus writes to Bucer, {b} who at that time had employed Diazius to overlook the correct printing of a book of his that was then in the press.

That I may tell you that which shall befall you.] But how knew Moses this last speech of Jacob, being born so long after? Partly by revelation, and partly also by tradition. For the words of dying men are living oracles, and their last speeches are long remembered. And the accomplishment of all these prophecies in their due time, as the following scriptures show, adds much to the authority of Moses's writings, and confirms them to be "faithful and true," as he saith, #Joh 21:24.

Ver. 2. Hear, ye sons of Jacob; and hearken.] Draw up the ears of your souls to the ears of your bodies, that one sound may pierce both at once. "Let him that hath an ear to hear, hear": not only with that outward gristle that grows upon his head, but with his utmost intention of mind, attention of body, and retention of memory, and of practice also, He that hears the word of God, must hear as ff he did, for so he doth, hear for life and death; he must, as Jacob bids his sons, "hear and hearken."

Ver. 3. My might, and beginning of my strength.] Nate meae vires... The word here used signifieth the straining of the body forcibly to effect a thing much desired: such as was that of St Paul, {επεκτεινωμενος, #Php 3:14} and that of Elijah, {#1Ki 18:42} when he prayed and prayed, as St James hath it, that is, with utmost intention of affection (προσευχη προσνυξατο, #Jas 5:17).

The excellency of dignity, and the excellency of power.] That is, saith the Chaldee Paraphrast, Excellens principatu et sacerdotio. Both these he forfeited and fell from; so cannot Christians. {#Re 1:6}

Ver. 4. Unstable as water.] Easily drawn to sin, and suddenly down from his dignity. Reuben, for a short sinful pleasure, lost great privileges and blessings. So do all epicures that lose heaven for a base lust, their souls for their sin. As Ambrose reports of one Theotinus, that having a diseased body, and told by the physician that unless he lived temperately he would lose his eyes; Vale lumen amicum, said he; if my eyes will not away with my lusts, they are no eyes for me. So here; men will have their swing in sin, whatever come of it. They may so, and for a time, hear no more of it; as Reuben did not for almost forty years after his incest was committed. But, quod defertur non statim aufertur. The heathen historian could see, and say, That, sooner or later, great sins will have great punishments from God. ^{a} Deus horrenda peccata horrendis poenis immutabiliter vindicat, saith Pareus on this text.

He went up to my couch.] The fact was so odious to Jacob, that, "abhorring" ^{#Ro 12:9, αποστουγουντες} the very thought of it, he turneth his speech from Reuben to the rest. Hate as hell that which is evil, saith Paul. And, as for "fornication, and all uncleanness, let it not be once named amongst you." ^{#Eph 5:3} Spit it out of your mouths, as the devil's drivell.

Ver. 5. Simeon and Levi are brethren.] Nobile par fratrum ^{a} not more in nature than in iniquity. Here Moses blancheth not over the blemishes of his progenitors, but wrote as he was inspired by the impartial Spirit of truth. If it could be said of Suetonius, ^{b} that in writing the lives of the twelve Caesars, he took the same liberty to set down their faults that they took to commit them; how much more truly may this be said of the holy penmen, they spared not themselves, much less their friends. See my "True Treasure," page 21.

Instruments of cruelty are in their habitations.] Or, Are their swords. ^{c} Barbarous and brutish persons they were; skilful to destroy. ^{#Eze 21:31} Such a one was Drusus, the son of Tiberius the Emperor; so set upon bloodshed that the sharpest swords were from him called in Rome, Drusians. ^{d} The Spaniards are said to try the goodness of their swords upon the bodies of the poor Indians: and they suppose, saith Sir Francis Drake, ^{e} that they show the wretches great favour, when they do not, for their pleasure, whip them with cords; and day by day drop their naked bodies with burning bacon, which is one of their least cruelties.

Ver. 6. O my soul, come not thou, &c.] Jacob here meaneth that neither should any, neither would he approve of their perfidy, saith an interpreter. And yet Thuanus writes that the Pope caused the massacre of Paris to be painted in his palace. Another of them highly extolled in his consistory the noble act of Clement the monk, that killed the king of France, comparing it with the work of creation, incarnation, &c. Friar Garnet, our chief gunpowder plotter, had his picture set among the rest of their saints, in the Jesuits' Church at Rome. And Cornel. a Lapide, upon Apoc. vii. 3, crowns this traitor with fresh encomiastics. {a}

In their anger they slew a man.] Yea, many innocents; and then cried out, O rem regiam! as Valesius did when he had slain three hundred. O pulchrum spectaculum! as Hannibal, when he saw a pit full of man's blood. Quam bonus est odor hostis mortui! as Charles IX, in the massacre of Paris; where they poisoned the Queen of Navarre; pistoled the Prince of Conde; murdered the most part of the peerless peers of France, their wives and children; with a great sort of the common people, in various parts of the realm, -thirty thousand in one month, three hundred thousand in the space of a year! Mohammed I, Emperor of the Turks, was thought, in his time, to have been the death of eighty thousand men. Selymus II, in revenge of the loss he had received at the battle of Lepanto, would have put to death all the Christians in his dominion, in number infinite. Mithridates, king of Pontus, with one letter, slew eighty thousand citizens of Rome in Asia, that were scattered up and down the country for traffic's sake. It was the cruel manner of Uladus, prince of Wallachia, together with the offenders, to execute the whole family; yea, sometimes the whole kindred. {b} Did not these two brethren in sin do so, and worse?

Ver. 7. Cursed be their anger.] Of the mischief of rash anger, and means to repress it. {See Trapp on "Ge 34:7"} See my "Commonplace of Anger."

I will divide them in Jacob.] A punishment suitable to their sin: they conspired to do mischief, and are therefore divided in Jacob. Of Simeon, Judas Iscariot is said to have come; who tumbled as a stone till he came to his place. Levi had his habitation among the other tribes; and this curse was afterwards turned to a blessing, when they were consecrated as priests, to preserve and present knowledge to their brethren, to "teach Jacob God's judgments, and Israel his laws." {#De 33:9,10}

Ver. 8. Judah, thou art he whom thy brethren.] All this is chiefly verified in Christ, and of him to be understood. In him is beauty, bounty, goodness, greatness, and whatsoever else is praiseworthy. He goeth forth riding on his white horse, "conquering and to conquer." {#Re 6:2} St Paul, his chief herald, proclaims his victory with a world of solemnity and triumph, {#ICo 15:55-57} and calls upon all his brethren to bow down before him, {#Php 2:10} as they do, {#Re 12:10} casting down their crowns at his feet, {#Re 4:10} and setting the crown upon his head, -as the manner was among the Romans, that the saved should crown their saviours, and honour them as their fathers all their lives long, being wholly at their service. {a} It was not without mystery that David did reverence to his son Solomon, when he was newly crowned; what would he have done, think we, to his Lord, as he calls Christ, {#Ps 110:1} had he been there in his royalty?

Ver. 9. Judah is a lion's whelp.] Many lionlike Lysimachus came of this tribe, that, as Samson and David, first fought with lions, and then with their enemies; all which were types of that "Lion of the tribe of Judah," #Re 5:5. The devil is a roaring lion, Leo ορυομενος, lies in wait {a} for the Church: but Christ, her invincible champion, is ever at hand for her help, {b} who is also Leo ο ρυομενος, as St Paul hath it, the Lion of the tribe of Judah, "that delivereth us from the wrath to come." {#1Th 1:10} And when this lion roareth, all creatures tremble. {#Am 3:8} St Ambrose tells us that when the lion puts forth his voice, many creatures that could outrun him are so astonished at the terror of his roars, that they are not able to stir from the place. And Isidore writeth, that the lion's whelp, for the first three days after it comes into the world, lieth as it were asleep, and is afterwards roused and raised by the old lions' roaring, which makes the very den to shake. Christ, at the last day, shall come with the voice of the archangel, and trump of God, &c. And then shall they "that sleep in the dust of death awake, some to everlasting life, and some to everlasting horror and amazement." {#Da 12:2}

Ver. 10. Until Shiloh come.] Shiloh is by some expounded, the son of his secundines. {a} The Hebrew word implies His son, and, Her son; that is, the son of the Virgin, that came of the line Judah. Secundines are proper to women. He therefore, whom Secundines alone brought forth, without help of man, is Christ alone, the promised seed. Others render Shiloh, Tranquillator, Salvator, the Safe maker, the Peace maker, the Prosperer. {b} This Prince of Peace was born in a time of peace, {c} not long after that Pompey had subdued Judea to the Roman government, and reduced it into a province. Then was the sceptre newly departed from Judah; and Herod, an Edomite, made king of the country.

And unto him shall the gathering of the people be.] As unto the standard bearer, {#So 5:10, marg.} the carcass, {#Mt 24:28} the desire of all nations (#Hag 2:7, with #Heb 12:25). Totus ipse desideria, saith the Church. {#So 5:16} And, "When I am lifted up," saith he, "I will draw all men after me." {#Joh 12:32} They follow the Lamb wheresoever he goeth; as the hop and the heliotrope do the sun.

Ver. 11. Binding his foal unto the vine.] Vines shall be so plentiful, that as countrymen tie their asses to briers and shrubs, so shall Judah to the vines, that shall grow thick everywhere. Where Christ is set up in the power and purity of his ordinances, there is usually a confluence of all inward and outward comforts and contentments. He is the Cornucopia of both to his Church and chosen.

Ver. 12. His eyes shall be red, &c.] Wine and milk are used to signify plenty of spiritual blessings in heavenly things. {#Isa 55:1 25:6}

Ver. 13. Zebulun shall dwell, &c.] It is God that "appoints us the bounds of our habitations." {#Ac 17:26} Be content therefore; and although we have not all things to our minds, yet having God for our portion, let us cry out with David, "The lines are fallen unto me in a fair place," &c. Zebulun is placed by the sea side. Now shoremen are said to be horridi, immanes, latrociniis dediti, omnium denique pessimi. Hence the proverb, Maritimi mores. And hence, haply, that rash and harsh character, that Scaliger {a} gives of us, Angli perfidi, inflati, feri, contemptores, stolidi, amentes, inertes, inhospitales, immanes. His bolt, you see, saith one, {b} is soon shot; and so you may haply guess at the quality of the archer. Be it that our ancestors were such, yet the gospel hath civilised us at least, whatever the more be. Christ left Nazareth, and came and dwelt at Capernaum, which is upon the sea coast, in the borders of Zebulun and Naphtali. Ever since which, "the people which sat in darkness have seen a great light," &c. {#Mt 4:13,16} And when "Gilead abode beyond Jordan," and "came not to the help of the Lord against the mighty," Reuben was busy about his sheep, Dan about his "ships," Asher about "his breaches," &c. Zebulun and Naphtali are much commended for "a people that jeopardated their lives unto the death in the high places of the field," {#Jud 5:16-18} that studied and promoted the public, more than their own particular interests. Oh, it is a brave thing to be of a public spirit, and to study God's ends more than our own. Surely if God saw us to be such, we might have what we would, and God even think himself beholden to us. Shall a heathen say, Non nobis solum nati sumus? &c. {c} And again, Mihi non minoris curae est, qualis resp. post meam mortem futura sit, quam qualis hodie sit? And shall Christians be all for themselves, looking only to their own things, and not to the things of one another, the common good of all especially? St Chrysostom upon those words "Not seeking mine own profit," &c., {#1Co 10:33} saith, that to seek the public good of the Church, and to prefer the salvation of others before his own safety and commodity, is the most perfect canon of Christianity, the highest pitch of perfection, the very top gallant of religion. {d} And, I could not but love the man, saith Theodosius the Emperor concerning Ambrose, who, when he died, Magis de Ecclesiarum statu, quam de suis periculis angebater; was more troubled for the Church's troubles than for his own dangers. This made the same good emperor say that he knew none that deserved to be called a bishop but Ambrose. {e} He was called "the walls of Italy," whilst he lived: as when he died, Stilico the earl said, that his death did threaten the destruction of that whole country.

At the haven of the sea.] Zebulun and Issachar dwelling so conveniently for the purpose, and being for a haven of ships, as it here followeth, did "call the people" (foreigners) "to the mountain" of God. {#De 33:18,19} So, one of the Sibyls, Augustine {f} hopeth, might belong to the city of God: and so might direct others thither.

Ver. 14. Issachar is a strong ass, &c.] He so commends his strength, that, with it, he condemns his dulness. This Christ can so little abide, that he said even to Judas, "That thou doest, do quickly." God utterly refused an ass in sacrifice. The firstling of an ass must either be redeemed, or have his neck broke. Bellarmine gives the reason, and it is a very good one, quia tardum et pigrum animal, because it is a slow sluggish creature, segnis quasi seignls, without fire; slow to action, which God, who is himself a pure act spirit?, cannot abide.

Ver. 15. And he saw that rest was good.] He submitted to any burdens and hard conditions for a quiet life. This was a low poor spirit; and his posterity were, for the general, very unworthy and vile. For Issachar's lot fell in Galilee. {#Jos 19:18, &c.} Now, doth "any good come out of Galilee?" The best that we read of them was that they "had understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do," {#1Ch 12:32} and were therefore in great account with David. But for action, it seems they were heavy-spirited, dull-mettled men; much like those "potters," mentioned in #1Ch 4:23, "that dwelt among plants and hedges"; the base brood of their degenerated forefathers in Babylon. "He, he, come forth, and flee from the land of the north," said the Lord unto them. {#Zec 2:6} Cyrus also had proclaimed liberty to all that would, to return to Jerusalem. But these dull drones, because they got a poor living by making pots for the king of Babylon, thought themselves well as they were, and chose rather to stay under the hedges of Babylon. These are res obsoletae, so Junius renders the text there; things worn out and forgotten; and indeed they deserve to be forgotten.

Ver. 16. Dan shall judge.] Here is an allusion to his name in the original; q.d., the Judger shall judge. This is a high honour, to sit in the seat of judicature, and no less a burden: Fructus honos oneris, fructus honoris onus. They that are called to this office must neither spare the great for might, nor the mean for misery; as they must have nothing to lose, so nothing to get neither; they must be above all price or sale; and straining out all self-affections, see to it that "justice, justice"—as Moses speaks, #De 16:20, marg.; that is, pure justice, without mud—run down as a mighty torrent.

Ver. 17. Dan shall be a serpent by the way.] He shall subtly set upon his enemies, and suddenly surprise them: as they did the men of Laish; and as Samson, of this tribe, did the Philistines. Moses saith, "Dan is a lion's whelp." {#De 33:22} But when his lion's hide would not serve his turn, he could piece it out with his fox skin or serpent's slough; {a} he could, if not outfight his enemies, outwit them: and—“... dolus, an virtus, quis in hoste requirat?”—Virg.

Of Decebalus, king of Dacians, it is reported, to his singular commendation, that he could, optime insidias facere, proelium committere, optime uti victoria, et acceptam cladem ferre moderate. {b} All which were the parts and points of an excellent warrior.

Ver. 18. I have waited for thy salvation.] A sudden and sweet ejaculation; either, as, feeling himself faint and spent with speaking, he desires to be dissolved, and so to be freed from all infirmities; or else, foreseeing the defection of this tribe to idolatry, and their many miseries thereupon, he darts up this holy desire to God for them, and himself in them. Good Nehemiah is much in these heavenly ejaculation: and the ancient Christians of Egypt were wont to use very short and frequent prayers, saith Augustine; {a} lest, in longer, their fervour of affection should suffer diminution. "Why criest thou unto me?" saith God to Moses. {#Ex 14:15} This was but a sudden desire darted up.

Ver. 19. Gad, a troop shall overcome him: but.] This is every good Christian's case in the spiritual warfare; he conquers, {#Joh 16:33} but comes to it through many conflicts and counter buffs. He "made war upon the saints, and overcame them": {#Re 13:7} for a season it may be, according to human conceit howsoever. But "they conquered and overcame him," according to the truth of the thing, "by the blood of the Lamb," {#Re 12:11} in whom they do overcome, and "are more than conquerors." {#Ro 8:37} This was fulfilled in the tribe of Gad. {#1Ch 5:18-20}

Ver. 20. Out of Asher his bread shall be fat.] The "heart of the wheat," as the psalmist hath it. {#Ps 81:16} Or, choicest bread corn. Moses expoundeth this; Asher shall "dip his foot in oil." {#De 33:24} That is, he shall dwell in "the horn of the son of oil," as the expression is. {#Isa 5:1, marg.} Or in a very fruitful corn country, which was a singular blessing, according to his name, which signifieth bliss and happiness.

He shall yield dainties for a king.] Kings use to feed of the finest. {a} Yet of Augustus we read, that he was never elaborate in his diet; but content with ordinary and common food. He never drank but thrice at one meal, and lived near fourscore years. Queen Elizabeth of England did seldom eat but one sort of meat, rose ever with an appetite, and lived about seventy years: King Edward VI called her by no other name than his "sweet sister Temperance." Contrarily, Sulla the Roman dictator, by surfeiting and banqueting, at last got a most miserable disease, and died full of lice. Surfeiters either dig their graves with their own teeth (the Grecians called the intemperate, ασωτους quasi ασωστους, as wanting health), or else they come to some untimely end, by the just judgment of God; as those monstrous epicures, Caligula, Heliogabalus, Geta the Emperor, who was served in with dainties by the alphabet. One while he would have anserem, anatem, aprum; another time he would have phasianum, farra, ficus; sometime again, pullum, pavonem, perdicem, porcellum, piscem, perham, & c. This was one of those Caesars who got nothing by their honour, but ut citius interficerentur.

Ver. 21. Naphtali is a hind let loose.] Swift of foot; and which, when it flieth, looketh behind it, saith the Chaldee Paraphrast on #So 8:14. This was fulfilled in Barak of this tribe, who "went up on his feet" against Sisera's iron chariots, {#Jud 4:6,10,15,16} which were first a terror, and afterwards a scorn, as Vegetius {a} saith of chariots, armed with scythes and hooks. Origen observes, that in all the victories God gave his people in Canaan, he never used the help of horses. The adversaries, both Egyptians and Canaanites, had chariots and horses: not so Israel. A horse is a warlike creature, full of terror, {#Job 39:19 Pr 21:31} so swift, that the Persians, as Pausanias {b} hath it, dedicates him to their god the sun; as the swiftest creature, to the swiftest god. But what saith David? "A horse is a vain thing for safety." {#Ps 33:17} And to the same purpose, Solomon: "A horse is prepared for the day of battle; but," when all is done, "salvation is of the Lord." {#Pr 21:31} This, Barak, with his friend Deborah, found, and celebrated in that famous song. {#Jud 5}

He giveth goodly words.] In the aforesaid song, Christ also began to utter his words of grace in the land of Naphtali. {#Mt 4:13} And this is the reason, that as, of the children by Leah's side, Judah obtained the first place among those that were sealed, {#Re 7:5} because Christ sprang of him; so, of those on Rachel's side, Naphtali is first named, because there he dwelt at Capernaum where he had hired a house and preached, ut ubique superemineat Christi praerogativa, saith a learned interpreter, {c} Compare with this text #De 33:23, and then observe, that good words do ingratiate with God and men.

Ver. 23. The archers have sorely grieved him.] These were his barbarous brethren, that sold him; his adulterous mistress, that, harlot-like, hunted for his precious life; his injurious master, that, without any desert of his, imprisoned him; the tumultuating Egyptians, that, pined with hunger, perhaps, "spoke of stoning him," as #1Sa 30:6; and the envious courtiers and enchanters, that spoke evil of him before Pharaoh, to bring him out of favour, as the Jerusalemy Targum addeth. All these "arrow masters," as the Hebrew here hath it, set against Joseph, and shot at him as their buttmark; willing to have abused him, but that God's grace, providence, and unchangeable decree (called here Joseph's "bow" and "strength," #Ge 49:24) would not permit them; as those cruel Turks did one John de Chabas, a Frenchman, at the taking of Tripolis in Barbary. They brought him into the town; and when they had cut off his hands and nose, put him alive into the ground, up to the waist, and there, for their pleasure, shot at him with their arrows, and afterwards cut his throat. {a}

Hang heavy weights upon rotten boughs, they presently break. But Joseph's were green, and had sap.

By the hands of the mighty God of Jacob.] It was said of Achilles, that he was Styge armatus; but Joseph was Deo forti armatus, and thence his safety. He used Ifis bow against his adversaries, as David did his sling against Goliath. He slung, saith Bucholcer, perinde ac si fundae suae tunicis non lapillum, sed Deum ipsum induisset ac implicuisset, as if he had wrapped up God in his sling.

Ver. 25. Who shall help thee.] God hath, God shall, -is an ordinary way of arguing; it is a demonstration of Scripture logic, as #Ps 85:1-4 2Co 1:10. Every former favour is a pledge of a future.

With blessings of heaven above, &c.] God "shall hear the heaven, the heaven shall hear the earth; and the earth shall hear the corn, wine, and oil": the genealogy of all which is resolved into God. {#Ho 2:21,22}

With blessings of the breasts, and of the womb.] Yet rather than "Ephraim shall bring forth children to the murderer," the prophet prays God to give them, as a blessing, as some think, "a miscarrying womb, and dry breasts." {#Ho 9:13,14} And our Saviour saith, "Woe be to such as are with child, and give suck in those days" of war and trouble. {#Mt 24:19}

Ver. 26. Above the blessings of my progenitors.] Chiefly because Jacob pointed them out the particular tribe whereof, and the very time wherein, Shiloh should come. This mystery was made known to the Church, not all at once, but by degrees. Adam was told "the seed of the woman should break," &c.; but whether Jew or Gentile, he heard not a word. Abraham, the Hebrew, long after was certified that "in his seed all nations should be blessed"; but of what tribe Christ should come, till now, the world never heard. After this, David was made to know that Christ should be a male; but that he should be born of a virgin was not known till Isaiah's time. Thus God crumbles his mercies to mankind; and we have his blessings by retail, saith one, to maintain trading and communion betwixt him and us. So the cloud empties not itself at a sudden burst, but dissolves upon the earth, drop after drop.

Unto the utmost bound of the everlasting hills.] "Spiritual blessings in heavenly things," {#Eph 1:3} whereof those temporals afore promised were but types and pledges. Whence David doubts not to argue from temporals to spirituals. {#Ps 23:5,6} God in the Church's infancy fed them and led them along by earthly to heavenly blessing, speaking unto them as they could hear.

Ver. 27. Benjamin shall ravin as a wolf.] There are that think that this ought to be applied to St Paul the Benjamite; {a} who while he was Saul, not content to consent to St Stephen's death, -though it be all one to hold the sack, and to fill it; to do evil, and to consent unto it, -"he made havoc of the Church," like a ravening wolf; "entering into houses also, and haling men and women to prison." Yea, he lies "breathing out threatenings and slaughter," {#Ac 9:1} panting and windless, as a tired wolf: and, having recovered himself, is marching toward Damascus for more prey, but, met by the chief Shepherd, of a wolf, he is made a lamb, {#Isa 11:6} not once opening his mouth, unless it were to crave direction; "What wilt thou have me to do Lord?" After which time, he never persecuted the saints so fast, as now he pursues and "presses" hard {διωκω, #Php 3:14} "toward the high prize"; and as mad every whit he is thought to be for Christ, as ever he was against him. {#2Co 5:13 Ac 26:11} The Papists, some of them, have censured him for a hot-headed person, and said that there was no great reckoning to be made of his assertions. Is this blasphemy in the first or second table, say you? Porphyry, the philosopher, could say, that it was pity such a man as Paul was cast away upon our religion. And the monarch of Morocco told the English ambassador in King John's time, that he had lately read Paul's Epistles, which he liked so well, that were he now to choose his religion, he would, before any other, embrace Christianity. But every one ought, said he, to die in his own religion: and the leaving of the faith wherein he was born, was the only thing that he disliked in that apostle. {b}

Ver. 28. Blessed them; every one according, &c.] These hard blessings, to some of them especially, hindered not the covenant. Still they were patriarchs, and heirs of the promises. Afflictions, how sharp soever, show us not to be castaways. If a man should be baited, and used as a dog or a bear, yet so long as he hath human shape and a reasonable soul, he will not believe he is either dog or bear. Let not crosses cause us to take up hard thoughts of God, or heavy thoughts of ourselves, as if out of his favour; but account it a mercy rather, that we may scape so; and be "judged" here "of the Lord, that we may not be condemned with the world." {#1Co 11:32} Jacob is here said to have blessed all his sons. He rather seemed to curse some of them. And for his well-beloved Benjamin, Parum auspicata et honorifica videtur haec prophetia, saith Pareus. But because they were not rejected from being among God's people, -as Ishmael and Esau were, for less faults perhaps, -though they were to undergo great and sore afflictions, they are said to be blessed, yea, and they shall be blessed, as Isaac said to his whining son, Esau.

Ver. 29. I am to be gathered, &c.] That is, I am now going to heaven; whereof being so well assured, what wonder though he were so willing to die? "I know that my Redeemer liveth," saith Job; "I know whom I have trusted," saith Paul. And what shall become of my soul when I die, let him see to it, who laid down his life for it, saith Luther. {a} Death may kill me, but cannot hurt me, said another. {b} This assurance of heaven is, as Mr Latimer calls it, the deserts of the feast of a good conscience. There are other dainty dishes in this feast, but this is the banquet.

Ver. 30. In the cave that is in the field of Machpelah.] Mercer thinketh that this cave is here so copiously described by Jacob, lest, after so many years' absence in Egypt, any of them should have forgotten it. As also, lest they should doubt or fear that any one would claim it from them, or not permit them quiet possession thereof.

Ver. 31. There they buried Abraham and Sarah, &c.] It is observed by an interpreter, that these here mentioned, and Jacob himself the sixth, buried in one grove, the first letters of all their names are contained in that one name, Israel. Whether these here buried were those that rose with our Saviour Christ, were seen in the holy city, and accompanied him to heaven at his ascension, I have not to say, though some have held it.

Ver. 32. The purchase of the field, &c.] {See Trapp on "Ge 49:30"}

Ver. 33. He gathered up his feet.] He quietly composed himself, as it were, to sleep in Jesus. He had stretched out himself before, saith Musculus, as well as he could, for reverence to the word of God, which he delivered, &c.

And was gathered unto his people.] To "the general assembly and Church of the firstborn, whose names are written in heaven." {#Heb 12:23} In Jerusalem, records were kept of the names of all the citizens. {#Ps 87:5} So is it in heaven, where Jacob is now a denizen.

Ver. 1. And Joseph fell upon his father's face.] As willing to have wept him alive again, if possible; yet more moderate than his father had been in the supposed death of him by an evil beast devouring him. But of mourning for the dead. {See Trapp on "Ge 23:9"}

Ver. 2. And Joseph commanded his servants the physicians.] Physicians, {a} it seems, were formerly of no great esteem; perhaps it was because, through ignorance, they many times officiously killed their patients. We know who it was that cried out upon his death bed, Many physicians have killed the emperor. {b} And it is grown to a proverb, No physician can be his craftsman, till he have been the death of thirty men. {c} The Egyptians, to prevent this mischief, appointed for every ordinary disease, a several physician; enjoining them to study the cure of that only. And till then, the fashion was to lay the sick man at his door, where every passenger was bound to inquire the nature of his disease; that if either himself or any within his knowledge had recovered of the like, he might tell by what means, or stay to make trial of that skill he had upon the patient. {d} Physic is, without question, the ordinance of God. {#Ex 21:19} He styles himself, "Jehovah Rophe," {#Ex 15:26} the Lord the physician. And a physician is more worth than many others, saith the heathen poet. {e} Use them we must, when there is need, {#Mr 2:17 1Ti 4:4} but not idolise them, as #2Ch 16:12.

And the physicians embalmed Israel.] According to the custom of that country; concerning which, he that will see more, may read in Herodotus and Pliny. {f} This custom continued also in after ages, as well among Jews as Gentiles. But the devil turned it, in time, into most vain superstition, both among the Greeks, whom Lucian frequently jeers for it, and among the Latins; witness that of Ennius, Tavquinii corpus bona faemina lavit, et unxit. Joseph embalmed his father's corpse, partly to honour {#2Ch 16:14 21:19} him with this solemnity; and partly to preserve him for so long a journey; but principally to testify his faith of the resurrection, and that incorruption he hoped for at the last day. Some think the apostle hath relation to this, in that #1Co 15:29, and they read it thus; "Why do they then wash—βαπτίζονται, voce media — over the dead?" Compare #Ac 9:37.

Ver. 3. And the Egyptians mourned for him seventy days.] Longer than Joseph mourned; they did it through "ignorance," and as men "without hope"; for both which, see #1Th 4:13. Joseph could look through his own loss, and see his father's gain beyond it. Besides, he could say, as Jerome {a} in like case, Tulisti, Domine, patrem, quem ipse dederas: Non coutristor quid recepisti; ago gratias, quod dedisti. And if epicures could comfort themselves in their greatest dejections, ex praeteritarum voluptatum recordatione; {b} how much more could Joseph now; not only by calling to mind this last seventeen years' enjoyment of his dear father, beyond all hope and expectation; but chiefly, that happy change his father had made, from darkness to light, from death to life, from sorrow to solace; from a factious world, to a heavenly habitation, where he drinks of that torrent of pleasure, without let or loathing.

Ver. 4. Speak, I pray you, in the ears of Pharaoh.] He spake not to the king himself, but set others to work. Not because he was fallen out of favour, for he had the happiness to be favourite to five kings, {a} Onus, Amasis, Chebron, Amenophes, and Mephris, in the eleventh year of whose reign he died, -but because he was now a mourner; and such were not wont to come before kings, {#Es 4:2} though none but such as mourn are suffered to come before God. {#Mt 5:4}

{a} Pareus.

Ver. 5. In my grave which I have digged for me.] A usual thing of old. {#2Ch 16:14 Mt 27:60} {See Trapp on "Ge 23:9"} Quintillus Plautianus, an ancient senator of Rome, in the days of Severus the Emperor, being wrongfully accused and condemned to die, desired before his death to see those things that he had long since laid by for his burial; {a} which when he saw to be little worth with long lying, Quid hoc rei est? inquit; itane cunctati sumus? What a thing is this? said he. Have we made no more haste to die than so? {b}

Ver. 6. As he made thee swear.] Oaths must be religiously kept, even those that are private, betwixt friend and friend. For, although whatsoever is more than yea and nay, in our ordinary communication, is evil, {#Mt 5:37} yet a private oath, as betwixt Boaz and Ruth, so it be sparingly and warily used, is not unlawful. For in serious and weighty affairs, if it be lawful in private to admit God as a judge, why may he not as well be called to witness and to avenge? But this only in case of necessity, when yea and nay will not be taken.

Ver. 7. And with him went up all the servants.] That is, most of them, as #Mt 3:5. In doing the patriarch this honour, they stand renowned for thankful men; and such, saith one, are worth their weight in gold. "Blessed be he of the Lord, who leaveth not off his kindness to the living and to the dead." {#Ru 2:20} But how base was Bonner, that railed so bitterly against his patron Cromwell, whose creature he had been, after his death; calling him the rankest heretic that ever lived, and that it had been good he had been despatched long ago! {a} And Cardinal Pool played the unworthy man, in having an intent to take up King Henry VIII's body at Windsor, and to have burned it. {b} This the Papists did to Paulus Phagius, a learned German, that died at Cambridge, being sent for over by King Edward VI. And although they never heard him speak—for he died soon after his coming into the realm, having not time either to dispute or preach here—yet they unburied him, and burnt his bones.

{c} Of all birds, we most hate and detest crows; and of all beasts, those called jackals, a kind of foxes in Barbary: because the one digs up the graves and devours the flesh; the other picks out the eyes of the dead. {d}

Ver. 8. Only their little ones.] And some to look to them.

Ver. 9. A very great company.] This was for the honour of Jacob at his death, whose greatest care had been to honour God in his whole life.

Ver. 10. And he made a mourning for his father.] Not seventy days, as those infidels did, #Ge 50:3. But why mourned he at all, since God had signified his will? So far forth as something concurs with God's will that is grievous to us, we may mourn moderately without offence.

Ver. 11. Abelmizraim, which is beyond Jordan.] A gracious providence of God, as Piscator well observeth, that for the confirmation of the Israelites' faith, when they were to pass over Jordan, and afterwards, there should be a standing monument there of the transportation of Jacob's body out of Egypt into Canaan, for burial's sake. Thus, "all things work together for good to God's beloved." {#Ro 8:28}

Ver. 15. Joseph will peradventure hate us.] An ill conscience, we are sure, still haunts them as a hell-hag, and fills them with unquestionable conviction and horror. Better be langold tied to a lion than to an unquiet conscience. {See Trapp on "Ge 4:14"} {See Trapp on "Ge 42:21"} Such take no more rest than one upon a rack or bed of thorns. There were not many to kill Cain besides his father and his mother, and yet he cries, "Every one that finds me," &c.

Ver. 16. Thy father did command, &c.] It is a just question, whether there were ever a true word of all this. For Jacob, probably, never knew how ill they had used Joseph, as is above said. But if this had been his command howsoever, as they pretend, would not Jacob have spoken himself for them to Joseph before he died? "Fear of man" causeth lying, {#Zep 3:13} and so "brings a snare to the soul."

{#Pr 29:25}

Ver. 17. Forgive, I pray thee now.] In this case a man is bound, not only to let fall all wrath and desire of revenge, but to make a solemn profession of hearty forgiveness. {#Lu 17:4} If the wrongdoer say, "I repent," you must say, "I forgive," as ever you hope to be forgiven of God. Our Saviour {#Lu 11:4} seems to make our forgiving our trespassers the intervenient cause—that which they call, sine qua non -of God's forgiving us. Mark this, lest we be constrained to do, as Latimer reports of some in his days, that being not willing to forgive their enemies, would not say their pater noster, lest they should therein curse themselves, but instead thereof, took their lady psalter in hand, because they were persuaded that, by that they might obtain forgiveness of favour ex gratis without the putting of so hard a condition as forgiveness of their enemies.

For they did unto thee evil.] Joseph had long ago seen their sorrow; never, till now, heard their confession, and is abundantly satisfied. Think the same of God. Do but confess, and he must forgive, upon his faithfulness. {#1Jo 1:9} In the courts of men, it is the safest plea, saith Quintilian, to cry, Non feci; not so here. "Take away the iniquity of thy servant," saith David and to prove himself so, he adds, "For I have done foolishly." {#2Sa 24:10} Acknowledge the debt, and God will forthwith cross the book.

Forgive the trespass of the servants of the God, &c.] Nothing should more persuade to unity than religion. {#Eph 4:3-5} Others may cleave together, as the clay in Nebuchadnezzar's image, but the saints only incorporate into each other.

Ver. 18. Behold, we be thy servants.] Oh that God might hear such words fall from us, prostrate at his feet! How soon would he take us up and embrace us! Deus redire nos sibi, non perire, desiderat, saith Chrysologus; φοβειθαι βουλευεται ου φονευσαι, saith Basil; suffundere sanguinem quam effundere, saith Tertullian. I agnized my sin, and the amends was soon made, saith David. {#Ps 32:5}

Ver. 19. Am I in the place of God?] q.d., Can I hurt you when God intends good to you? Is it for me to cross his decree?

Ver. 20. But God meant it unto good.] God altereth the property, as of his people's sufferings, which in themselves are the fruit of sin and a piece of the curse, so of their misdoings, which also he turns to the best unto them and others; according to that sweetest text, #Ro 8:28.

Ver. 21. I will nourish you.] To requite your kindness, that consulted to starve me in the waterless pit. This was a noble way of revenging; this was heroical, and fit for Christian imitation. "If thine enemy hunger, feed him." {#Ro 12:20}

Ver. 22. And Joseph lived an hundred and ten years.] Fourscore of these he lived in great wealth, and all of them, perhaps, in very good health; as Pliny {a} reports of one Xenophilus, that he lived a hundred and five years without sickness, which yet was a rare thing, and few men's happiness.

{a} Plin., lib. vii. cap. 5.

Ver. 24. And Joseph said unto his brethren, I die.] A sad saying to them, poor souls. For now began their misery and slavery in Egypt. When Epaminondas died, his whole country died with him; the Thebans were never after known by their victories, but by their overthrows. When Augustus died, the sun seemed to the Romans to fall from heaven: such an alteration presently followed in that state. When Louis XII departed this world, saith Budaeus, {a} he that erewhile seemed to touch heaven with his finger, lay grovelling, as if he had been thunderstruck. All Israel's prosperity died with Josiah; and so did their liberty and worldly felicity with Joseph. His nephews, the Ephraimites, attempted, before the time, their own deliverance, not long after Joseph's death, even while their father Ephraim was yet alive, but with ill success, to his great grief and regret. {#1Ch 7:22 Ps 78:9} Hasty work seldom ends well: how this of mine will do, I know not, made up, as it might be, in little more than four month's space, amidst manifold fears and distractions, at spare hours; and bearing date from mine enlargement, July the 11th, Anno Dom. 1643, that happy day that saw me both a prisoner and a free man, by the good hand of my God upon me; to whom be glory and praise for ever. As for this my book, made ^{b} purposely to testify my thankfulness to God, mine Almighty Deliverer, and to those whom he was pleased to use as instruments of my much endeared liberty; such as it is, Εχετε, κτηνατε; as he said of his rhetoric: and, if I shall cast in my verdict,

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. Now these are.] Heb., And these are, &c. For this book is a continuation of the former history, and this verse a repetition of what was before recorded in #Ge 46:8, The whole law, say the Schoolmen, is but one copulative. The whole Scripture but Cor et anima Dei, saith a father, {a} the heart and soul of God, uttered "by the mouth of the holy prophets, which have been since the world began." {#Lu 1:70}

Ver. 5. And all the souls.] That is, persons; for souls are not begotten, but infused, being divinae particulae aerae. {#Ec 12:7} Aristotle himself saw and acknowledged as much. {a}

Were seventy souls.] More worth than the seventy nations of the whole world, say the Jews: God reckons of men by their righteousness.

{a} λειπεται, τον νουν μονον θυραθεν επειστεναι και θειον ειναι.—De Gene. Ar., lib. ii. cap. 9.

Ver. 6. And all that generation,] Ea enim lege nati sumus ut moriamur: God also maketh haste to have the number of his elect fulfilled; and, therefore, despatcheth away the generations.

Ver. 7. Increased abundantly.] Heb., Spawned, and bred swiftly, as fishes. Trogus author a firmat in Aegypto septenos uno utero simul gigni. Egypt is a fruitful country: it is ordinary there, saith Trogus, to have seven children at a birth. Solinus gives the reason, quod faetifero potu Nilus, non tantum terrarum, sed etiam hominum faecundat arva; - the river Nile, whereof they drink, makes men as well as fields fruitful. But this increase of the Israelites was also by the extraordinary blessing of God, that they might "become a mighty and populous nation." {#De 26:5}

Ver. 8. A new king.] Called Busiris, a most savage tyrant, as heathen histories report him.

Who knew not.] Nothing sooner perisheth than the remembrance of a good turn. The Egyptians are renowned in histories for a thankful people; but it ill appeared in their dealing here with Joseph; who, had he now been alive, might well have said to them, as Themistocles once did to his Athenians, Are ye weary of receiving so many benefits by one man? ^{a} But herein was fulfilled that of the wise man, #Ec 9:15.

^{a} Diod. Sicul., lib. ii.

Ver. 9. More and mightier.] He speaks as if he had looked through a multiplying glass. ^{See Trapp on "Ge 31:1"}

Ver. 10. Come on, let us deal wisely.] So as the world's wizards use to do: but God taketh—δρασσομενος—these foxes in their own craft. ^{#1Co 3:19} Your labouring men have the most and lustiest children. Every "oppressor" is a fool. ^{#Pr 28:16}

Lest, when there falleth out any war.] It may seem—by #1Ch 7:21,22, compared with #Ps 77:9—that the Ephraimites, weary of the Egyptian bondage, and too hasty to enjoy the Promised Land, invaded the Philistines and plundered them; but were pursued and slain by the men of Gath, to the great grief of their father Ephraim, and to the further exasperating of the Egyptians against all the children of Israel; which might occasion also this cruel edict and proceeding against them. It is a singular skill to bear bondage or any other burden wisely and moderately. They that break prison before God's time, get nothing but more irons laid upon them.

Ver. 11. To afflict them.] Because they would not "serve God with gladness of heart." ^{#De 28:47,48} For now they began to go awhoring after the idols of Egypt. ^{#Eze 23:8 20:5,7,8}

And they built for Pharaoh treasure cities.] They built also those famous pyramids, as some think, ^{a} of which it is reported, that for the great height of them, a man cannot shoot an arrow so high as the midst of the lower tower, whereon the spire stands. ^{b}

Ver. 12. The more they multiplied.] As the ground is most fruitful that is most harrowed; and as the walnut tree bears best when most beaten. Fish thrive better in cold and salt waters, than in warm and fresh.

And they were grieved.] Or, irked, as Moab likewise was because of Israel: they did fret and vex at them. {#Nu 22:3,4} Yet they were allied, and passed by them in peace: no other reason but the old enmity, #Ge 3:15, and that utter antipathy, #Pr 29:27.

Ver. 14. Bitter with hard bondage.] Did we but live a while, saith one, {a} in Turkey, Persia, yea, or but in France, a dram of that liberty we yet enjoy would be as precious to us as a drop of cold water would have been to the rich man in hell, when he was so grievously tormented in those flames.

{a} Mercer.

Ver. 15. To the Hebrew midwives.] In Egypt and Greece the midwives of old had their schools; and some of them were great writers. I know not whether the priests were then so officious to them as many are now among the Papists; who say they therefore study Albertus Magnus de secrelis mulierum, that they may advise the midwives: but I doubt it is for a worse purpose; to gratify and greaten those abominable lusts wherewith they are scalded.

{εξέκαυθησαν, #Ro 1:27}

Ver. 16. Then ye shall kill him.] No greater argument of an ill cause than a bloody persecution. George Tankerfield, the martyr, was in King Edward's days a very Papist, till the time Queen Mary came in; and then, perceiving the great cruelty used on the Pope's side, was brought into a misdoubt of their doing, and began, as he said, in his heart to abhor them. {a} So did Julius Palmer, a martyr in Queen Mary's days, who had been a stiff Papist all King Edward VI's days, and was therefore expelled out of Magdalen College, whereof he had been Fellow; till beholding the martyrdom of the three bishops burnt in Oxford, he said to his friends, "Oh, raging cruelty! Oh, tyranny tragical, and more than barbarous!" and so became a zealous Protestant.

{a} Act. and Mon., fol. 1535.

Ver. 17. And did not as the king, &c.] Wherein they did no more, though out of a better principle, than nature itself dictateth. Antigona saith thus in Sophocles, Magis obtemperandum est Diis apud quos diutius manendum erit, quam hominibus quibuscum admodum brevi tempore vivendum est. {See Trapp on "Ac 4:19"} "We must rather obey God than men."

Ver. 18. Why have ye done this thing?] They might well have answered, as she did in Euripides, Obediemus Atridis honesta mandantibus: Sin vero inhonesta mandabut, non obediemus. If you command things honest we will obey you; not else. Or as that brave woman upon the rack, Non ideo negare vole, ne peream: sed ideo mentiri nolo, ne peccem. {a}

Ver. 19. For they are lively.] By that "voice of the Lord which maketh the hinds to calve." {#Ps 29:9} Lady Faith was their midwife: and she hath delivered the graves of their dead; {#Heb 11:35} how much more wombs of their quick children! But we need the less wonder at the matter here reported, if that were true which Varro writeth of the Illyrian women; who, being at harvest work in the field, when they were near their time, would but step aside, and return again, bringing a child with them, as if they had found it behind the hedge.

{a} Var., De Agric., lib. ii. cap. 10.

Ver. 20. Dealt well with the midwives.] God is a liberal paymaster: and his retributions are more than bountiful. "Be ye therefore steadfast and unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord." {#1Co 15:58}

And the people multiplied.] Sic divinum consilium dum devitatur, impletur: humana sapientia, dum reluctatur, comprehenditur; as Gregory hath it. {a} "There are many devices in the heart of a man: but the counsel of the Lord, that shall stand." {#Pr 19:21} Among the Romans, the more children any man had, the more he was freed from public burdens. And of Adrian the Emperor it is storied, that when those that had many children were accused of any crime, he mitigated their punishment according to the number of their children. {b} But these poor Israelites were otherwise used.

{a} Greg., Moral.

{b} Dio, in Adriano.

Ver. 21. Because the midwives feared God.] There is no necessity of granting that the midwives told the king a lie. {see #Ex 1:19} But if they did, St Austin saith well, Non remunerata fuit iis fallacia, sed benevolentia; benignitas mentis, non iniquitas mentientis. Their lie was not rewarded, but their kind heartedness.

That he made them houses,] i.e., He gave them posterity. Thus he built David a house. {#2Sa 7:18,19} And thus Rachel and Leah are said to have "built the house of Israel." {#Ru 4:11} The parents are, as it were, the foundation of the house; the children as so many lively stones in the building. Hence the Hebrews call a son Ben, of Banah to build, quid sit edificium et structura parentum, quoad generationem et educationem.

Ver. 22. And Pharaoh charged.] Imperio non tam duro quam diro. This was a most bloody edict: therefore, when God came to make inquisition for blood, he gave them blood again to drink, for they were worthy. The like he did to Nero— qui orientem fidem primus Romae cruentavit -to {a} Julian, Valens, Valerian, Attilas, Girzerichus, Charles IX of France, and many other bloody persecutors. {See Trapp on "Re 16:6"}

Chapter 2

Ver. 1. And took to wife.] His own aunt. {#Ex 6:20 Nu 26:59} The law against incest {#Le 18:12} was not yet given, nor the state of Israel settled. But what excuse can there be for that abominable incest of the house of Austria by Papal dispensation? King Philip of Spain was uncle to himself, first cousin to his father, husband to his sister, and father to his wife! {a} And what shall we say of our modern sectaries, whose practising of incest is now avowed publicly in print? They shame not to affirm that those marriages are most lawful that are between persons nearest in blood, brother and sister, father and daughter, mother and son, uncle and niece. The prohibition of degrees in Leviticus is to be understood, say they, of fornication, not of marriage {b} Tamar did not doubt to be her brother Amnon's wife, but detested the act of fornication, &c. Lo, here, what noonday devils do now, in this unhappy time, walk with open face among us! {c}

{c} Little Nonsuch, pp. 5-7.

Ver. 2. A goodly child.] "Fair to God" {a} {#Ac 7:20} See the note there. Art thou fair? be not like an Egyptian temple, where some beast is worshipped. Art thou foul? let thy soul be like a rich pearl in a rude shell.

{a} Ασταιας το Θεω.

Ver. 3. And she laid it in the flags.] This she did by the force of her faith; {#Heb 11:23} casting the child upon God, and "against hope believing in hope."

Ver. 4. And his sister.] By a singular instinct of the Holy Spirit, as appears by the event. "The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord." {#Ps 37:23} "He keepeth the feet of his saints." {#1Sa 2:9}

Ver. 5. And the daughter of Pharaoh.] She was brought hither at this time by a special providence, to do that which she little dreamed of. So when Heidelberg was taken by the Imperialists, the copy of Ursinus's Catechism enlarged by Pareus was among many other papers carried away by a plundering soldier; but happily dropped in the streets, and found the next day by a young student, who, knowing his master's hand, restored it to his son Philip Pareus, who afterwards published that golden book, to the great glory of God, who had so graciously preserved it. {a}

Ver. 6. One of the Hebrews' children.] So called of Heber. {See Trapp on "Ge 13:14"}

Ver. 7. A nurse of the Hebrew women.] God's providence excludeth not man's prudence. Here is a concurrence of both, for the preservation of the child.

Ver. 8. The child's mother.] None to her: as David said of Goliath's sword, "None to that."

Ver. 9. And I will give thee thy wages.] The nurse expects not her pay from the child, but from the parents. Ministers, in case their people prove unkind or unthankful, must look up.

Ver. 10. She called his name Moses.] He was also by the Egyptians called MOneves, as Diodorus Siculus relateth; and Monies, as Aben Ezra. Musaeus calleth him υδρογενης, Water sprung, because "drawn," as David was afterwards, "out of many waters." {#Ps 18:16} Clement of Alexandra saith, that at his circumcision, Moses was called Melchi; others say Joachim: but that is as uncertain as that he was the same with Mercurius Trismegistus.

Ver. 11. When Moses was grown.] In stature and authority, being "mighty in words and deeds," {#Ac 7:22} being a great orator, a great warrior. {See Trapp on "Heb 11:24"} He was, as Pliny saith of Cato Censorius, optimus Orator, optimus Imperator, optimus Senator, omniumque bonarum artium magister, a man every way accomplished.

That he went out unto his brethren.] Associating himself to them, though afflicted, and refusing the pleasures and "treasures of Egypt: for he had respect to the recompense of reward"—he {απεβλεπε, #Heb 11:26} cast an eye, he stole a look from glory, when he was on his journey, and so got fresh encouragement.

Ver. 12. He slew the Egyptian.] This deed of his was heroic and extraordinary, and therefore not to be imitated by every Birchet, who, by this example of Moses and that other of Ehud, persuaded himself it was lawful to kill such as oppose the truth of the gospel: whereupon he wounded Hawkins, slew his keeper, and thought he had a calling to kill a great personage in this kingdom, whom he took to be God's enemy. The like madness is reported of the Monasterian Anabaptists. {a}

Ver. 13. Behold, two men of the Hebrews strove.] What pity was it that brethren should strive, and one Hebrew smite another, as if blows enough were not dealt them by the Egyptians! Still Satan is thus busy, and Christians are thus malicious. Thus we have seen doves beat, and sheep butt one another. Jonathan and Rab. Solomon boldly say that these two striving Hebrews were Dathan and Abiram; and that the other Hebrew smitten by the Egyptian {#Ex 2:11} was the husband of Salomith the daughter of Dabri!

Ver. 14. And he said.] Yea, "he thrust Moses away." {#Ac 7:27} Doing wickedly "with both hands earnestly." {#Mic 7:3} This act of his is imputed to the whole people, who therefore were deprived of Moses for forty years. So true is that of the wise man, "One sinner destroyeth much good." {#Ec 9:18}

Ver. 15. But Moses fled.] God, by forty years' exile, fitted Moses for further light and advancement. Much he had learned in Egypt, {#Ac 7:22} but more in Midian. Mr Ascham was a good schoolmaster to Queen Elizabeth, but affliction was a better. Men commonly beat and bruise their links before they light them, to make them burn the brighter. Moses had neither been so illuminate a doctor, nor so excellent a ruler, if not first humbled, as here.

Ver. 16. Now the priest.] Or, Prince. The old Egyptians chose their kings from among the priests. Samuel was both a priest and a judge in Israel. The Emperor of Rome had for one of his titles Pontifex Maximus, the high priest. Among the Turks, the judges at this day are ever ecclesiastical persons, whereby both orders joined give reputation to one another, and maintenance. {a}

And they came and drew water.] They were not so delicately bred as our dainty dames are now-a-days, but did earn before they eat.

{a} Blunt's Voyage, p. 89.

Ver. 17. And drove them away.] From the water that they had drawn, and so had most right unto. Sic cedit viribus aequum. Might oft overcomes right. See here what we owe to good laws well executed; no man else should enjoy so much as his own water.

Ver. 18. To Reuel their father.] Indeed, their grandfather. {#Nu 10:29} Old men are usually about home, and can do little else but see to things, and advise.

Ver. 19. Delivered us out of the hand,] Moses, if he may not in Egypt, will be doing justice in Midian. Christ went about doing good. The place is the better wherever a good man cometh: his trade, saith one, is a compound of charity and justice.

Ver. 20. Call him, that he may eat bread.] If the watering of a sheep were thus rewarded, how shall God recompense a cup of cold water given to those of his little flock?

Ver. 21. Zipporah his daughter.] A peevish piece; a cold armful. {a} He had better, haply, have been married to a quartan ague. Sulla felix si non hobuisset uxorem, & c. It is not ill to marry, but good to be wary, lest we make shipwreck in the haven.

{a} ψυχρον παρακαλισμα.—Lycophron.

Ver. 22. I have been a stranger.] So we are all, while here. Our own place is paradise; haste to it.

Ver. 23. Sighed by reason of the bondage.] They had changed their masters, but not their miseries; αι το παρον βαρυ, but seldom comes a better. Job's "stroke was heavier than his groaning." {#Job 23:2}

Ver. 24. God heard their groaning.] Yea, their breathing. {#La 3:56} Men's very misery cries to God, as Hagar's did.

Ver. 25. Had respect.] Heb., Knew them. He knew their souls in adversity. {#Ps 31:7}

Chapter 3

Ver. 1. To the backside of the desert,] Here it was that Moses wrote the book of Genesis, and that of Job too, as some conceive, {a} for the comfort of his poor oppressed countrymen in Egypt, that they might lean upon, and live by faith in, the promises made to the fathers.

{a} Alsted., Chron.

Ver. 2. And the Angel of the Lord.] Christ, that Angel of the Covenant, and of the great council.

And the bush was not consumed.] No more is the Church, whereof this is an excellent emblem, by the fire of tribulation, {#Isa 43:2} because of "the goodwill of him that dwelt in the bush." {#De 33:16}

Ver. 3. I will now turn aside, and see.] Moses came out of curiosity, but was called by God: so do many to the ordinances for novelty, as the Jews did to John Baptist; or for some other minister respect; to catch, it may be, and are caught, as those in #Joh 7:46. Or as Austin, who coming to Ambrose to have his ears tickled, had his heart touched. It is good to hear, howsoever. Come, said Latimer, to the public meetings, though thou comest to sleep; it may be, God may take thee napping. Absence is without hope. What a deal lost Thomas by being but once absent!

This great vision.] Great indeed. There was a flame of fire, else how was the bush burning? There was light, else how did Moses see it? There was no heat, else how was not the bush consumed? Yet in every of God's afflicted, saith one, you may see this great vision. The voice of the Lord in his affliction, as in this fire, divideth the heat from the light, so that he is not consumed by the heat—nay, rather his infirmities and carnal concupiscences are consumed thereby—but only illuminated by the light. {See Trapp on "Ex 2:15"}

Ver. 4. And when the Lord saw, &c.] God "meeteth him that rejoiceth and worketh righteousness." {#Isa 64:5} Acti; agimus. The miller cannot command a wind; yet he will spread his sails, be in the way to have it, if it come. As our liberty, in external acts, is still some—as to come to church, to hear, to repeat, &c.—so must our endeavours be answerable.

Ver. 5. Draw not nigh.] Be not rash, but reverent. Heathens could say, Non loquendum de Deo sine lumine. God will be sanctified of all that draw nigh unto him. {#Le 10:2}

Put off thy shoes.] Of sensuality and other sins. Quid pedes, saith Erasmus, nisi affectus? Quid pedes calceamentorum onere liberi nisi animus nullis terrenis cupiditatibus oneratus? Affections are the feet of the soul; keep them unclogged.

Ver. 6. Hid his face.] So did the seraphims, with a double scarf, as it were. {#Isa 6:2} Let a man but see God, and his plumes will soon fall.

For he was afraid.] Yea, he "trembled, and durst not behold." {#Ac 7:32} This was his first meeting with God: when better acquainted, he grew more bold.

Ver. 7. For I know their sorrows.] That is a sweet support to a sinking soul, that God knows all, and bears a part. "Your heavenly Father knows," &c. {#Mt 6:32} That is enough.

Ver. 8. I am come down.] Humanitus dictum, as in #Ge 11:7 18:21. {See Trapp on "Ge 11:7"} {See Trapp on "Ge 18:21"}

Milk and honey.] Plenty and dainties; all things both for necessity and delight.

Ver. 9. The oppression wherewith.] We are oft more beholden to our enemies' insolency than to any innocency of our own. {#De 32:27}

Ver. 10. That thou mayest bring forth.] Which, though as unlikely to be done as to remove a rock with his shoulder, yet, setting upon it in God's strength, he effecteth it. Tantum velis, et Deus tibi praeoccurrent. {a} Howbeit, let a man do what he can naturally, and God will meet him graciously; -there is no truth in such an assertion.

{a} Chrysostom.

Ver. 11. Who am I?] Worth is modest: the proud man asketh, Who am I not? παντα ποιειν εδωαμτω, Curi Maioris sepulchro inscriptum refert Arrianus. Worth with modesty is καλον καλωσ; nothing is so amiable.

Ver. 12. This shall be a token unto thee.] So he had a double sign, for his fuller and further confirmation: that of the burning bush, for the present; this of serving God at Horeb, for the future.

Ver. 13. What is his name?] God is above all name, all notion. When Manoah inquired after his name, "It is wonderful," said he: that is, I am called as I am called, but such is thy weakness that it surpasseth thy conception. {a} Afri vocant Deum ignotum Amon, id est, Hens tu, quis es? {b}

{a} Bede. Victorinus.

{b} Plutarch, De Isid. et Osiride.

Ver. 14. I AM THAT I AM.] Heb., I will be that I will be. The Septuagint render it Εγω ειμι ο ων, I am He that is. Agreeably hereunto, Plato calleth God το ον and το ον οντως. This name of God is fully opened in #Re 16:5. It imports two of God's incommunicable attributes: (1.) His eternity, when he saith, I will be; (2.) His immutability, when he saith, That I will be. As Pilate said, "What I have written, I have written"; I will not alter it. But how far out was Paulus Burgensis in denying Ehich to be any of God's names? {a} Whether Aph-hu {#2Ki 2:14} be one, is far more questionable.

{a} Weems.

Ver. 15. Unto all generations.] The Jews, to countenance their conceit of the ineffability of the name of Jehovah, did corrupt this text: and for This is my name, Legnolam, for ever, they read, This is my name, Legnalam, to be concealed. {a}

{a} Galatinus.

Ver. 16. The God of Abraham, &c.] His friends, with whom he had all things common. This was a greater honour done to these patriarchs than if God had written their names in the visible heavens, to be read of all men.

Ver. 17. I have said, I will bring you up.] And now I am come to do it. This is some part of the import of "I am that I am," "the same yesterday, today, and for ever." {#Heb 13:8} Ero qui eram, I will be the same to you in my performances that I was to your fathers in my prraises.

A land flowing with milk.] Sumen totius orbis, as one calleth it, where the hard rocks did sweat out oil and honey. {#De 32:13} See #Ex 3:8.

Ver. 18. Hath met with us.] Of his own accord, and without our seeking. Nolentem praevenit Deus ut velit, volentem subsequitur ne frustra velit. {a} "I am found of those that sought me not." {#Isa 65:1}

{a} Aug., Enchir., cap. 32.

Ver. 19. Will not let you go.] A sturdy rebel he was; but God tamed him, and took him down by those ten plagues, comprised in these four verses—

“Fit cruor ex undis, conspurcant omnia ranae;

Dat pulvis cimices, postea musca venit.

Dein pestis, post ulcera, grando, locusta, tenebrae:

Tandem prototocos ultima plaga necat.”

Ver. 20. And after that he will let you go.] When he dare hold you no longer; when I have sufficiently tamed him and taught him, as Gideon "taught the men of Succoth with thorns and briers of the wilderness." {#Jud 8:16}

Ver. 21. I will give this people favour.] It is God that fashioneth men's spirits, and speaketh oftentimes for them in the hearts of their greatest enemies.

Ver. 22. Ye shall spoil the Egyptians.] By a special dispensation, which none could grant but the law maker. So #Eze 39:10. These jewels did afterwards become a snare to the Israelites in the matter of the golden calf.

Chapter 4

Ver. 1. They will not believe me.] They had formerly refused him, "and thrust him away." {#Ex 2:14 Ac 7:27} And so they might again, if he had not somewhat to show for his extraordinary calling. {a} In the year 434, the Jews of Crete were shamefully seduced by a pseudo-Moses, who promised to divide the sea for them to bring them back to their own country. {b} Those that will not receive the love of the truth, are justly given up to the efficacy of error. {#2Th 2:10,11}

{b} Funccius, in Comm. Chron.

Ver. 2. A rod.] Heb., Matte, in answer to Maze, What is that? an elegant antonomasia in the original. This is ordinary in both Testaments; the penmen whereof, many of them, were, as Cicero saith of Demetrius Phalereus, oratores parum vehementes, dulces tamen, soft, but sweet orators.

Ver. 3. And it became a serpent.] So doth the word to those that cast away the care of it; it stings them with unquestionable conviction and horror. With this rod Moses should guide the Israelites, sting the Egyptians. {#Isa 14:29 Jer 8:17}

And Moses fled from before it,] First fly from sin as from a serpent, saith one. But if thou hast taken this serpent into thy hand, rest not, till, like Moses's serpent, it be turned into a rod again to scourge thy soul. Be either innocent or penitent.

Ver. 4. Take it by the tail.] Which was dreadful to be done, because of the antipathy and likely danger; but faith fortifies the heart against the fear of the creature, and carries a man through the difficulty of duty.

Ver. 5. That they may believe.] Miracles are sufficient testimonies of an extraordinary calling from God, provided that they be true miracles (not such as #De 13:1-3), to confirm a calling that is agreeable to God's holy word, as here.

Ver. 6. Put now thine hand.] Here was sign upon sign, as #Ex 3:12. So low stoops the Most High to our meanness. And doth he not the same favour for us by the often administration of the Lord's supper?

Doth he not seal again and again, &c.?

Was leprous as snow.] Let us but lay our hands upon our hearts, thrust them into our bosoms to rifle there, and we shall be sure to take them out leprous, all of a tetter. {tetter: A general term for any pustular herpetiform eruption of the skin, as eczema, herpes, impetigo, ringworm, etc.}

Ver. 7. As his other flesh.] To show him that God, by small means, could bring about great matters, and that in a moment. See #Isa 66:7,8. Which yet was ill applied by Cardinal Pool to this revolting nation in Queen Mary's days.

Ver. 8. The voice of the first sign.] God's signs have a voice, and words. {#Ps 105:27} They speak not only to our eyes, but ears; as those many prodigies did before the last desolation of Jerusalem; as the terrible tempest at Rome in 1516, -the same year that Luther began to stir, -that so struck the church where Pope Leo was creating his cardinals, that it removed the child Jesus out of the lap of his mother, and the keys out of St Peter's hand. So the two suns seen in London at the coming in of King Philip on Feb. 15, 1553: the new star in Cassiopeia in 1572: the prodigious comet {a} in 1618, &c.

{a} Ουδεις κωμητης οστις ου κακον φερει.

Ver. 9. Shall become blood.] In the year 874, in Brixia in Italy, it rained blood for three days and three nights. In 1505, there appeared in Germany, upon the garments of men and women various prints and tokens of the nails, of the sponge, of the spear, of the Lord's coat, and of bloody crosses. Maximilian, the Emperor, had, and showed the same to Francis Mirandula, who thereupon wrote his "Staurestichon," and therein thus—

“Non ignota cane, Caesar monstravit, et ipsi

Vidimus; innumeros prompsit Germania testes.” {a}

In the third year of Queen Mary, William Pikes being at liberty after imprisonment, and going into his garden, took with him a Bible: where sitting and reading, there suddenly fell down upon his book four drops of fresh blood, and he knew not from whence it came. Whereat he being sore astonished, and wiping out one of the drops with his finger, called his wife and said, In the virtue of God, wife, what meaneth this? Will the Lord have four sacrifices? I see well enough the Lord will have blood; his will be done, and give me grace to abide the trial, &c.

{a} Baleus Centur., 8. Func., Chronol. Act. and Mon., fol. 769, 1853.

Ver. 10. I am not eloquent.] Heb., A man of words, a master of speech—ηγουμενος λογου—as Paul was. {#Ac 14:12} He had not that first, second, and third of an orator, -elocution, or pronunciation. And yet God made choice of him rather than of eloquent Aaron to pray. {#Ex 17:12} Not gifts but graces prevail in prayer.

Slow of speech.] Of a letsom delivery; wordbound.

Ver. 11. Who hath made man's mouth?] There is no mouth into which God cannot put fit words. Balaam's ass was enabled by God to convince his master. Whereas by a man, never so full and fluent, he cannot bring forth his conceptions, without the obstetrication of God's assistance. {#Pr 16:1}

Ver. 12. I will be with thy mouth.] {See Trapp on "Mt 10:19"}

Ver. 13. By the hand of him whom thou wilt.] Or, shouldst send: by that excellent speaker the Messiah, cuius dicere est facere. Thus when God had answered all Moses's objections, he frowardly denies to go notwithstanding, and bids him send by his son, as one that was better fitted for the service. That which made Moses so unwilling, was, whatever he pretended, the fear of his life: which rub when God had once removed, he went on his journey. {#Ex 4:19,20}

Ver. 14. And the anger of the Lord.] And no wonder: Patientia laesa fit furor: Where God commandeth, there to ask a reason is presumption; but to oppose reason, is a kind of rebellion.

I know that he can speak well.] The gift of utterance is a high favour, a piece of a Christian's riches. {#1Co 1:5} {See Trapp on "1Co 1:5"} Aaron, as Cicero saith of Aristotle, had aureum flumen orationis, a golden gift of speech.

Ver. 15. Will teach you.] {See Trapp on "Ex 4:11"} {See Trapp on "Ex 4:12"}

Ver. 16. And he shall be thy spokesman.] God hath made me ill-favoured in this world, and without grace in the sight of men, said Tindal to Frith, {a} speechless and rude, dull and slow witted: your part shall be to supply that which lacketh in me: remembering, that as lowliness of heart shall make you high with God, even so meekness of words shall make you sink into the hearts of men.

Instead of God.] To dictate unto him my mind and counsel. Such a god to every Christian is his sanctified conscience.

{a} Act. and Mon., fol. 988.

Ver. 17. Wherewith thou shalt do signs.] God, of his freewill, joining his operation thereunto; as likewise he doth to the outward signs in the two sacraments: and hence their energy, which else would be none.

Ver. 18. Whether they be yet alive.] Which if they be, though in a low condition, both they and I shall see cause to be thankful. {#La 3:39

Ec 9:4}

Ver. 19. For all the men are dead.] Here the Lord lays his finger upon the sore. This was that pad in the straw, the thing that made Moses hang off as he did; however he pretended the people's incredulity, his own inability, and this and that, neither did he altogether dissemble: but self-love needs not be taught to tell her tale.

Ver. 20. Upon an ass.] This may argue his poverty, as #Zec 9:9. Especially if he had but one ass for the whole family.

Ver. 21. But I will harden his heart.] With a judiciary penal hardness. And thus God is in this book eight times said to have hardened Pharaoh's heart: thrice it is said that he hardened his own heart, and five times his heart is said to have been hardened—viz., by the devil, through the just judgment of God.

Ver. 22. Even my firstborn.] And so "higher than the kings of the earth." {#Ps 89:27}

Ver. 23. Let my son go.] God commanding Pharaoh to let go his people, and yet hardening his heart that he would not let them go, is not contrary to himself. For by so commanding him, he requireth his obedience; and by so hardening him, he punisheth his disobedience.

Ver. 24. And sought to kill him.] To do justice upon him, according to #Ge 17:14, and as upon one that was an unfit man to take care of the Church, having no better ordered his own house. {#1Ti 3:5} God passeth not by the sins of his best children without a sensible check, especially if scandalous and committed against conscience. He hath much ado to forbear killing us in such cases: he is even ready to have a blow at us, and cries like a travailing woman, who bites in her pain while she can, to be delivered of his judgments. {#Isa 42:14}

Ver. 25. Surely a bloody husband.] A peevish wife, whose frowardness is either tollenda or toleranda, cured or carried patiently, ne coniugium fiat coniurgium. She was not so hot, but Moses was as meek.

Ver. 26. A bloody husband thou art.] This peal she rings oft in his ears, and so taught him patience.

“Coniugium humanae divina Academia vitae.”

Certain it is that we are a bloody spouse to Christ: the Church is Aceldama, a field of blood.

Ver. 27. And the Lord said unto Aaron.] To this religious family rather than to any other, God appeareth: which mercy is remembered, #1Sa 2:27.

Met him in the mount of God.] His wife either had left him, or was sent back by him to her father. God supplies that comfort by the coming of Aaron.

Ver. 28. And Moses told Aaron.] So clouds, when full, pour down, and the spouts run, and the eaves shed, and the presses overflow. Aromatical trees sweat out their precious oils: and as ambergris is nothing so sweet in itself as when compounded with other things; so good men are great gainers by communicating with each other.

Ver. 29. And Moses and Aaron.] So Zerubbabel and Jehoshua; Paul and Barnabas; the other disciples "by two and two"; {#Mr 6:7} the two faithful witnesses; {#Re 11:3} both for more authority, and for mutual help and comfort.

Ver. 30. And did the signs.] Moses did; or Aaron, by his command and appointment.

Ver. 31. They bowed their heads.] An ordinary gesture among the Jews then: as at this day, the reverence they show is in standing up, and the gesture of adoration in the bowing forward of their bodies: for, kneeling they use none, neither stir they their bonnets in their synagogues to any man, but remain still covered. {a}

Ver. 1. That they may hold a feast.] "That they may serve me." {#Ex 4:23} "Let us keep the feast," {εορταζομεν, #1Co 5:8} which is the same with "Let us serve God acceptably." {#Heb 12:28} It is a feast, and better, for a good soul to converse with God. {#Ps 63:5 Isa 25:6}

Ver. 2. Who is the Lord?] God's attributes either show what he is, or who he is. To the question of Moses—What he is?—God gave a short answer, "I am." To this second by Pharaoh, Who he is?—God made a large reply, till Pharaoh was compelled to answer himself, "The Lord is righteous."

Ver. 3. Three days' journey,] viz., to mount Horeb. They made it three months' journey ere they came there. {#Ex 13:17,18} God leads his people oft not the nearest, but the safest way to their journey's end.

Ver 4. Let the people from their works.] Moses talks of sacrifice; Pharaoh of work. Anything seems due work to a carnal mind, saving God's service; nothing superfluous but religious duties. {a} Seneca saith the Jews cast away a seventh part of their time upon a weekly Sabbath. "To what end is this loss?" said Judas.

{a} Aug., De Civit. Dei.

Ver. 5. The people of the land now are many.] Et nihil agendo male agere discent. Iphicrates never suffered his soldiers to be out of employment; but, if out of military services, he set them to dig or lop trees or carry burdens, &c., to keep them from rebelling or worse doing. {a}

{a} η ορυττειν, η ταφρευειν, η δενδρα κοπτειν, &c.—Polym. Stratag., lib. iii.

Ver. 6. And Pharaoh commanded.] He raged the more for the message of dismissal: so, wholesome admonitions make ill men worse. Corruptions increase and get bigger by the law. {#Ro 7:8}

Ver. 7. Ye shall no more give the people straw.] Speculum tyrannidis semper augetentis atque invalescentis. "The matter mends with us," said those martyrs in prison, "as sour ale doth in summer." {a}

{a} Act. and Mon.

Ver. 8. For they be idle.] I heard a great man once say, saith Luther, Necesse est otiosos esse homilies qui ista negotia religionis curant.

They must needs be idle fellows that are so much taken up about the business of religion. {See Trapp on "Ex 5:4"}

Ver. 9. And not regard vain words.] Vain lying words. So this profane prince calleth and counteth the word of God. "What is truth?" saith Pilate, scoffingly.

Ver. 10. I will not give you straw.] Cold comfort! Things commonly go backward with the saints before they come forward, as the corn groweth downward ere it grow upward. Hold out faith and patience; deliverance is at next door by. Cum duplicantur lateres, venit Moyses. When things are at worst, they will mend.

Ver. 11. Yet not aught.] Such hard service puts Satan his slaves to, and yet they rejoice in their bondage.

Ver. 12. So the people were scattered.] So are most people now-a-days busied about trash and trifles, neglecting the one thing necessary. In the enthronisation of the Pope before he puts on his triple crown, a wad of straw is set on fire before him, and one appointed to say, Sic transit gloria round, the glory of this world is but a blaze of straw or stubble, soon extinct. They that highly esteem it rejoice in a thing of nought, feed upon ashes, &c. {#Am 6:13}

Ver. 13. And the taskmasters.] Who were Egyptians, as the officers under them were Israelities, and beaten. {#Ex 5:14}

Ver. 14. Were beaten.] It is the misery of those that are trusted with authority that their inferiors' faults are beaten upon their backs.

Ver. 15. Came and cried unto Pharaoh.] They did not rail upon him to his face, as the Janizaries did {a} in an uproar upon Bajazet II, their prince, saying that they would by and by teach him, as a drunkard, a beast, and a rascal, to use his great place and calling with more sobriety and discretion. Neither did they go behind his back and call him, as Sanders did Queen Elizabeth, his natural sovereign, Lupam Anglicanam, the English wolf, or as Rhiston calleth her, leoenam, omnes Athalias, Macchas, Iezabeles, Herodiades, &c., superantem, a lioness worse than any Athalia, Maacha, Jezabel. A foul-mouthed Jesuit made this false anagram of her, Elizabeth, Jezabel. T is omitted; the presage of the gallows—whereon this anagrammatist was afterwards justly executed. Aretine, by a longer custom of libellous and contumelious speaking against princes, had got such a habit, that at last he came to diminish and disesteem God himself. {b}

{b} Rivetti Jesuita Vapulans, p. 263. Fuller's Holy State, fol. 317.

Ver. 16. But the fault is in thine own people.] Effugiunt corvi, vexat censura columbas. As a man is friended, so is his matter ended. And where the hedge is low, a man may lightly make large leaps. Or, as the Frenchman saith, Qui son chien vult tuer, la rage luy met sus, He that hath a mind to kill a dog, gives out that he is mad. It was fault enough in God's Israel, that they would not be miserable.

Ver. 17. Ye are idle.] {See Trapp on "Ex 5:4"} {See Trapp on "Ex 5:8"}

Ver. 18. Yet shall ye deliver the tale of bricks.] Or be miserably beaten, if but one be missing. The Spaniards, besides other intolerable burdens and bondages that they lay upon the poor Indians, suppose they show the wretches great favour when they do not, for their pleasure, whip them with cords, and day by day drop their naked bodies with burning bacon. {a} Regimen without righteousness turns into tyranny.

{a} Sir Francis Drake's World Encompas., p. 53.

Ver. 19. In evil case.] For their evil courses. {#Eze 23:8 20:5,7,8 Jos 24:14} It is written as a heavy curse of God, {#Le 26:17} "If ye still trespass against me, I will set princes over you that shall hate you": Mischievous, odious princes; odious to God, malignant to the people.

Ver. 20. And they met Moses.] How ready are we to mistake the grounds of our afflictions, and to cast them upon false causes! The Sareptan told the prophet that he had killed her son. {#1Ki 17:18}

Ver. 21. The Lord look upon you.] Thus we have seen dogs in a chase bark at their best friends.

Ver. 22. And Moses returned unto the Lord.] He turned aside, as it were to speak with a friend, and to disburden himself in God's bosom. This is the saints' privilege. {See Trapp on "Mt 11:25"}

Ver. 23. Neither hast thou delivered.] Here Moses himself was too short spirited. He considered not, belike, that God's promises do many times bear a long date, neither is it fit to set him a time, or to awaken him whom our soul loveth, until he please. Do but "wait," saith the Lord. {#Hab 2:3} You shall be delivered, you shall be delivered, you shall be delivered; you shall, you shall. So much that text in effect soundeth and assureth.

Chapter 6

Ver. 1. Then the Lord said unto Moses.] Pardoning the faults of his prayer, God grants him a gracious answer. So he dealt with David, "For I said in my haste, I am cut off from before thine eyes: nevertheless thou heartiest the voice of my supplication when I cried unto thee." {#Ps 31:22}

Ver. 2. I am Jehovah.] ΑΥΤΑΥΤΟΣ (Scaliger's {a} word); that do Press {b} (Gregory's word); that have being of myself, give being to all things else, and in special to my promises, to "perform with my hand" what I have "spoken with my mouth"; {#1Ki 8:15} only God expects that men put his promises in suit by their prayers, as here, and burden him with them, as that martyr said.

{a} Scalig., De Subtilit.

{b} Sic.—? Peresse; qui est per se.

Ver. 3. By the name of God Almighty.] {See Trapp on "Ge 17:1"} The sense is this, saith Cameron, {a} Quantum illis sufficiebat tantum indulsit, non indulsit quod erat summum. He gave them enough, but not the main.

But by my name JEHOVAH.] That is, by the import of this his name, the full performance of his promises. God was known to the patriarchs by this name Jehovah, quoad esse De, but not quoad esse rei.

{a} Camer., De Eccles.

Ver. 4. To give them the land of Canaan.] And a better thing with it, the kingdom of heaven. {#Heb 11:10,16}

Ver. 5. I have also heard the groaning.] He heareth "the young ravens that cry" {#Ps 147:9} unto him but by implication only, and with a hoarse voice unfit to move pity (whence also they have their name in the Hebrew—בְּרַעַע). How much more his own covenanters!

Ver. 6. And I will bring you out.] A great deliverance; but nothing to that which Christ hath wrought for us from the tyranny of sin and terror of hell.

Ver. 7. And I will be to you a God.] This is the top of any man's happiness, to have God for his God. What can such a man want? {#Ps 23:1} As he in Plutarch said of the Egyptians, that though they had no music nor vines among them, yet they had gods. {a}

{a} Plut., Συμπος.

Ver. 8. And I will bring you.] {See Trapp on "Ex 5:4"}

Ver. 9. But they hearkened not.] The ear, which tastes words as the mouth doth meat, was so filled with choler, that they could relish no comfort. It is ill sowing in a storm, giving physic in a fever fit. The easiest medicines or waters are troublesome to sore eyes: so here. Quicquid recipitur, recipitur ad modum recipientis.

Ver. 10. And the Lord.] Whose "soul was now grieved for the misery of Israel," as #Jud 10:16. {See Trapp on "Jud 10:16"}

Ver. 11. Go in, speak unto Pharaoh.] "Whether he will hear, or whether he will forbear." {#Eze 2:5} Speak when God bids us, though it may seem to little purpose: we have lost many a worse labour. The man of God "must be patient"—ανεξικακον, tolerant—"to all," yea, to "those that oppose," proving "if at any time God will give them repentance," &c. {#2Ti 2:25}

Ver. 13. And the Lord spake unto Moses.] Notwithstanding his former equivocation, and the people's peevishness. Men's wickedness cannot interrupt the course of God's goodness.

Ver. 14. These be the heads.] This is a digression, to show the descent of Moses and Aaron. Digressions in divine discourses are not always and absolutely unlawful. God's Spirit sometimes draws aside the doctrine, to satisfy some soul which the preacher knows not: and sparingly used, it quickeneth attention.

Ver. 15. The son of a Canaanitish woman,] Whom it was not lawful for him to marry; but he was a headlong and headstrong, bold and fierce fellow; {#Ge 34:25 49:7} bound by Joseph {#Ge 42:24} as one that had been most forward to sell him to the Midianitish merchants. Simeon also is left out in Moses's blessing. {#De 33}

Ver. 16. Of the sons of Levi.] Upon this family he insists, and therefore hastens to it. Speak ever to the purpose.

Ver. 20. Jochebed his father's sister.] See #Ex 2:1.

Ver. 21. Korah.] That ringleader of rebels, #Nu 16:1. Moses and he were first cousins.

Ver. 23. Elisheba.] Or, Elizabeth, a prince's sister. {#Nu 2:3} Our English Elizabeth was by a French duchess said to be the most glorious and most happy woman that ever swayed sceptre.

Ver. 24. And the sons of Korah.] There were of his sons, that died not, {#Nu 16:11} departing, as it seems, from their father's tents, as all were counselled. {#Nu 16:24-26} Of them came Samuel the prophet, Heman the music master, and other the sons of Korah so oft mentioned in the titles of Psalms.

Ver. 25. These are the heads of the fathers of the Levites.] And particularly of Moses, concerning whose original, heathen writers, but especially Tacitus—whom therefore Tertullian calleth, mendsdorum loquacissimum, a loud and lewd liar—telleth many untruths. This "the Scripture foresaw," as #Ga 3:8.

Ver. 26, 27. These are that Aaron and Moses: And again, These are that Moses and Aaron.] That famous couple. This is better than "This is that Dathan," {#Nu 26:9} and "This is that Ahaz." {#2Ch 28:22} They are stigmatised with a mark of infamy: these are eternised for good, to all posterity.

Ver. 27. These are that Moses and Aaron.] Before it was Aaron and Moses. It made no matter which was first set: they had their several precellencies; but were so well agreed, that there was no striving for the pre-eminence. {See Trapp on "Ex 6:26"}

Ver. 29. That the Lord spake unto Moses.] Here, after the digression, as touching his own genealogy, Moses returns to the story left off at #Ex 6:13, as Rab. Solomon noteth.

Ver. 30. Of uncircumcised.] See #Ex 6:12".

Chapter 7

Ver. 1. And the Lord said unto Moses.] In answer to his last exception, which yet he had answered before. {#Ex 4:16} God bears with our infirmities.

A god to Pharaoh.] Armed with mine authority; a vice-god.

Shall be thy prophet,] i.e., Thy spokesman, and interpreter. Aben-Ezra saith that Aaron, as he was Moses's eldest brother, so he prophesied to the people before Moses showed himself; and hence he is sometimes set before Moses.

Ver. 2. Thou shalt speak.] God's word must be spoken, however it be taken.

Ver. 3. And I will harden.] {See Trapp on "Ex 4:21"} The Dutch have a proverb, Quem Deus excaecaturus est, huic primum oculos claudit. When God will blind a man, he first closeth up his eyes.

Ver. 4. And Pharaoh shall not hearken.] This judgment God layeth upon many of our hearers at this day of whom, after much painstaking, we may well complain, as the herdsman did in the poet:

“Heu mihi! quam pingui macer est mihi taurus in arvo.”

Ver. 5. And the Egyptians shall know.] To their cost, when the Lord's hand, that is lifted up in threatening, shall fall down in punishing. "Lord," saith the prophet, "when thy hand is lifted up, they will not see, but they shall see," &c. {#Isa 26:11} God will unseal their heavy eyes with scorching plagues, and rouse them with horror enough.

Ver. 6. Did as the Lord commanded them.] Mallem obedire, quam miracula facere, saith Luther. Their obedience yielded them more comfort than their working of wonders.

Ver. 7. Fourscore years old.] And so might say to his countrymen and others, as old Augustus did to his mutinous soldiers, Audite senem iuvenes, quem iuvenem senes audierunt.

Ver. 9. Show a miracle for you.] A persuading wonder, an admirable work, above the power of nature, as being a kind of creation, and such as requires omnipotency. But Pharaoh's heart was such a nether millstone, as neither miracle, nor ministry, nor misery, nor mercy could possibly mollify. At the burning of Bainham the martyr, when his arms and legs were half consumed, he cried out to the bystanders and said, O ye Papists, behold you look for miracles! here now you may see a miracle: for in this fire I feel no more pain than if I were in a bed of down, or of roses. {a} Thus he: sed surdis fabulam.

Ver. 10. And it became a serpent.] Or a dragon, in token of desolation, if they disobeyed; and that their country should become a den of dragons. {#Isa 13:22}

Ver. 11. The wise men and the sorcerers.] Magic is either pure and natural, or impure and diabolical, which implieth a compact with the devil; either overt or covert. The chief of these jugglers here were Jannes and Jambres, {#2Ti 3:8} whose names are also mentioned in the Talmud; Tract. de Oblat., cap. 9. Numenius also, the Pythagorean philosopher, speaketh of them.

Ver. 12. And they became serpents.] Not really such, but in appearance only. The devil's miracles are mere impostures, phantasms, delusions. And this was the first plague that God inflicted upon Pharaoh.

Swallowed up their rods.] That is, their dragons. So hath Christ, who is life essential, swallowed up death in victory. {#1Co 15:55}

Ver. 13. And he hardened Pharaoh's heart.] Not by bare prescience, or permission only, but by withdrawing his grace, directing the tyrant's actions to his own glory, irritating his corruptions by oracles and miracles, and delivering him up to Satan to be further hardened.

Ver. 14. Pharaoh's heart is hardened.] Heb., Heavy; clogged with corruption, and held down by the devil: as, on the contrary, Jehoshaphat's "heart was light, and lifted up in the ways of the Lord." {#2Ch 17:6} So were Dr Taylor's and George Roper's, the martyrs: the former fetched a frisk, the latter a great leap, when they came to the stake. {a}

{a} Ibid., fol. 1386, 1629.

Ver. 15. In the morning.] It was in the night then that God appeared to Moses. But afterwards "mouth to mouth," "apparently," by special privilege, {#Nu 12:6,8 Ex 33:11} "as a man speaketh with his friend."

Ver. 16. Hitherto thou wouldest not hear.] Indeed, he could not hear; as little as those Jews could believe Christ's miracles, #Joh 12:37. "Therefore they could not believe," saith the text, "because that Isaiah had said, He hath blinded their eyes, and hardened their hearts," &c.

Ver. 17. In this thou shalt know,] q.d., I shall really answer thee to that stomachful question of thine. {#Ex 5:2} {See Trapp on "Ex 5:2"}

Ver. 18. Shall loathe to drink of the river.] Nile. God will confute them in their confidences. The Egyptians used to brag of their river, and in mockery to tell the Grecians that if God should forget to rain, they might chance to perish for it. The rain, they thought, was of God, but not the river. He therefore threateneth to dry it up, and here to bereave them of all comfortable use of it. {#Eze 29:3,9 Isa 19:5,6}

Ver. 19, Upon their ponds.] Fish ponds are in Hebrew called Berechoth, Blessings. But how soon can God "curse our blessings," {#Mat 2:2} and destroy us, "after that he hath done us good!" {#Jos 24:20}

Ver. 20. Were turned into blood.] To show them, as in a mirror, their blood guiltiness. These bloody and deceitful men had "blood to drink, for they were worthy." {#Re 16:6} {See Trapp on "Re 16:6"}

Ver. 21. And the fish.] That was their common food. {#Nu 11:5} The flesh of many beasts, they, through superstition, would not eat of, as one well noteth from #Ex 8:26.

Ver. 22. Did so with their enchantments.] With their secret sleights and jugglings, they seemed to do so. See #Ex 7:12, for Pharaoh's hardening.

Ver. 23. Neither did he set his heart.] But to his "iron sinews" he added "brows of brass." {#Isa 48:4} To his natural and hereditary hardness, adventitious and habitual.

Ver. 24. Digged round about.] If by drawing the waters they might purify them. But "they looked not to the Maker thereof"; they "returned not to him that smote them." {#Isa 22:11,9:13}

Ver. 25. And seven days were fulfilled.] So long the plague continued; that they might be sensible of it; and not do as the dog, who getting out of the water, shakes his ears, and there is an end. Surely if these Egyptians had believed the prediction of this plague, they would have done as Pliny saith camels do— Implentur cameli, cum bibendi est occasio et in praeteritum et in futurum. They would have drunk for hereafter also. {a}

{a} Plin., lib. viii. cap. 18.

Chapter 8

Ver. 1. That they may serve me.] Eventus platarum est alius per accidens, ut simulata emendatio Pharaonis; alius per se, ut dimissio populi. {a}

{a} Alsted.

Ver. 2. Behold, I will smite.] God usually, not always, warns before he wounds. Ideoque minatur, ut non puniat; and therefore threateneth, that he may not punish his creature.

Ver. 3. And the river shall bring forth frogs.] Instead of fishes. Thus the first and this second plague are about the water; the third and fourth about the earth; the five next about the air; and the last about man.

Ver. 4. And the frogs shall come up.] Neither walls nor weapons could keep off the frogs from Pharaoh and his people. As neither could Hatto, archbishop of Mentz, be possibly rid of that army of mice that God sent out against him for his cruelty to some of his poor subjects till they had devoured him. {a}

{a} A muribus in Rheno confectus periit (anno 923).

Ver. 5. And the Lord spake unto Moses.] By secret inspiration; for it was in Pharaoh's presence.

Ver. 6. And the frogs came up.] With their hateful hearing of "Brekekekex coax, coax." {a}

{a} Aristoph., in Ranis.

Ver. 7. And the magicians did so.] {See Trapp on "Ex 7:22"}

Ver. 8. Intreat the Lord.] In extremity a hypocrite will cry for help, as a pig under the knife, as a prisoner at the bar, as a drowning man will catch at that twig which erst standing on the bank he despised. Joab in distress runs to the horns of the altar. "Lord, in trouble have they visited thee, they poured forth a charm when thy chastening was upon them," saith the prophet of those hypocrites that yet "brought forth" no better than "wind." {#Isa 26:16,18} But "will the hypocrite pray always?." {#Job 27:10} "Did they at all fast unto me, even to me?." {#Zec 7:5}

I will let the people.] For the present, it may be, he purposed so to do. Good thoughts make but a thoroughfare of carnal hearts: they cannot settle there. "Thy goodness is as the morning dew," &c. {#Ho 6:4}

Ver. 9. Glory over me.] Or, Jeer me, andreject me, as thou hast done heretofore: but when thou hast so done, thou must be beholden to me for my prayers, or thou art like to lie under the plague, for aught that thy wizards can do to relieve and release thee.

In the river only.] For a memento, that thou flinch not, nor forget thy promise. Quo teneam vultus, &c. {a}

Ver. 10. To morrow.] Cras vat corvina. "Today, if ye will hear his voice." Now is the day of grace, &c.; procrastination is perilous. Hannibal, when he could have taken Rome, would not: when he would, could not. So, εἰς αὐριον τα σπουδαια, said that fool. Let serious matters alone till tomorrow; but he was slain that night. {a}

“ Nemo tam divos habuit faventes, Crastinum ut possit sibi policeri. ”

{a} Plutarch.

Ver. 11. In the river only.] {See Trapp on "Ex 8:9"}

Ver. 12. And Moses cried unto the Lord.] Not for Pharaoh's conversion; for he knew he was past cure; but for his deliverance from the present plague, that the power of God might be the more manifested, and the tyrant's conscience the more convinced.

Ver. 13. According to the word.] Iste vir potuit apud Deum quod voluit. Moses might do what he would with God, as one said of Luther.

Ver. 14. And the land stank.] As once this land also did by those unclean frogs that came out of the Pope's mouth. {#Re 16:3} But England is now no more a babe, said King Henry VIII, in his protestation against the Pope: {a} there is no man here but now he knows that they do foolishly that give gold for lead, &c. Surely, except God take away our right wits, not only the Pope's authority shall be driven out for ever, but his name also shall shortly be forgotten in England, &c. Thus he, and much more to like purpose. God hath promised to take away the unclean spirit out of the land. {#Zec 13:2} Fiat, fiat. Surely the society of ungodly men, whether Papists or atheists, is unsavoury and tedious, like the slime and filth that is congealed, when frogs and toads and other vermin join together.

{a} Act. and Mon., fol. 990.

Ver. 15. But when Pharaoh saw that there was respite.] Heb., A breathing, or respiration. So fulfilling that of the prophet Isaiah, #Isa 26:10. In like sort William Rufus, being dangerously sick at Gloucester, in the sixth year of his reign, vowed, upon his recovery, to see all vacancies in the Church furnished: which he did, but with so much ado, as showed, that having escaped the danger, he would gladly have deceived the saint; {a} like the man in Erasmus's Naufragium, who in a storm promised the Virgin a picture of wax as big as St Christopher: but when he came to shore would not give a tallow candle! Thus, in the sweating sickness ministers were sent for, and large promises made of amendment: but no sooner were they recovered, but they returned to their old courses, as Mr Bradford complaineth: whence Pliny, in one of his epistles to one who desired rules from him how to order his life aright, I will, saith he, give you one rule, that shall be instead of a thousand, Ut tales esse perseveremus sani, quales nos futuros esse profiteamur infirmi: That we go on to be such when well, as we promised to be when sick. Men roar when upon the rack: but once got off, they think they may do as they wish.

Ver. 16. Stretch out thy rod.] Here is no warning given; which shows great wrath. Impenitency makes God "weary of repenting." {#Jer 15:6} Absolute in his threatenings, if any; resolute in his executions, as #De 29:19,20.

Ver. 17. All the dust of the land became lice.] Or, gnats. Quid cniphe villus? saith Philo; what so base and vile a creature as a louse, a gnat? And yet by this poor vermin God so plagued all Egypt, that fainting under it, they were forced to cry out, "This is the very finger of God." Ciniphes sunt muscae minutissimae, aculeis permolestae, saith Rupert. Others say, that here are meant pediculi inguinales, crab lice; Honos set auribus.

Ver. 18. But they could not.] Though they endeavoured it, as did the juggler of Antwerp, who, being required by the English merchants there to play his feats and show his cunning, after much sweating and toil, when he saw that nothing could go forward, but that all his enchantments were void, was compelled openly to confess that there was some man there at supper which disturbed and hindered all his doings. This was Mr Tindal the martyr, who, hearing of this juggler, had desired certain of the merchants that he might be present to see him play, {a} &c.

{a} Act. and Mon., fol. 985.

Ver. 19. This is the finger of God.] An act of omnipotency, as #Lu 11:20 Ps 8:3. "The heavens are the work of God's fingers." Deus disponit membra pulicis et culicis, saith Augustine.

And he hearkened not to them.] Neither to Moses, nor to his own magicians, being akin to the catadupes that dwell at the fall of his river Nile, and are deaf.

Ver. 20. Rise up early in the morning.] Sanctificat, sanat, ditat quoque surgere mane. Early rising is good for health, wealth, and godliness. David "prevented the dawning of the morning," &c. {#Ps 119:147}; Christ "rose up a great while before day." {#Mr 1:35} {See Trapp on "Mr 1:35"}

Ver. 21. Shall be full of swarms of flies.] Of all the ten plagues this was the most troublesome; for that they never suffered men to rest: so worldly cares; nocte ac die non dabunt requiem, as those tyrants in #Jer 16.

Ver. 22. And I will sever.] Heb., Marvellously separate, by setting upon them my signum salutare. {#Eze 9:4} So that the worst that are "shall return and discern betwixt the righteous and the wicked." {#Mat 3:18} See #Ex 33:16.

In the midst of the earth.] Not in heaven only, whereunto Aristotle and other atheists would confine his providence. {a} Lysippus made Alexander's picture with this poesy:—

“Iupiter asserui terram mihi, tu asserere coelum.”

Ver. 23. And I will put a division.] Heb., A redemption; so #Lu 1:68. Aristotle reporteth that, when from the hill Etna there ran down a torrent of fire that consumed all the houses thereabouts, in the midst of those fearful flames the river of fire parted itself, and made a kind of lane for those who ventured to rescue their aged parents. This extorted from him an acknowledgment of God's good providence for the godly here on earth. {a}

Ver. 24. A grievous swarm of flies,] i.e., Numerous and pernicious; yet not so bad as those many noisome thoughts that swarm daily in men's hearts. There is that Leviathan; there are also creeping things innumerable. And these many times mar and corrupt our prayers, so as that they stink in the nostrils of God.

Ver. 25. Sacrifice to your God in the land.] Persecutors, when they cannot conquer, would compound.

Ver. 26. Will they not stone us?] Superstition is cruel; witness the Popish Inquisition to Lithgow, who, in ten hours, received seventy various torments. And the massacre of Paris, wherein they poisoned the Queen of Navarre, murdered the most part of the peerless nobility in France, their wives and children, with a great sort of the common people, a hundred thousand in one year in various parts of the realm; some say three hundred thousand! The bloody and barbarous persecutions of the religious abroad in Bohemia, the Valtoline, Piedmont, and Netherlands; the Marian dog-days here at home; are better known than I need to mention them.

Ver. 27. As he shall command us.] Manner as well as matter, circumstance as well as substance, to be heeded in God's service; else there may be malum opus in bona materia, as one saith, -an evil work in a good matter.

Ver. 28. Only ye shall not go very far.] So loath was he to lose his hold. So is the devil. {a} The Pope made large offers to Queen Elizabeth, as also to our king, when in Spain.

Intreat for me.] So Simon Magus, in a fright, begs Peter's prayers. So Maximinus, the persecuting emperor, sent to the Church for prayers, when God had laid upon him a grievous disease. So #Ezr 6:10, "Pray for the king's life, and for his sons."

{a} Euseb.

Ver. 29. Deal deceitfully any more.] Some are so slippery, there is no believing of them. Egesippus saith of Pilate, that he was vir nequam, et parvifaciens mendacium, a naughty man, and one that made no conscience of a lie. No more did Pharaoh.

Ver. 30. Intreated the Lord.] {See Trapp on "Ex 8:12"}

Ver. 31. There remained not one.] Prayer makes clean work; it can do wonders in heaven and earth. Say thou with David, "Cleanse thou me from secret faults," {#Ps 19:12} those that are of daily and hourly incursion. Prayer will scour the coast, clear the conscience of dead works. {#Ac 8:22}

Ver. 32. And Pharaoh hardened.] All blows and pressures were so far from mollifying him, that he hardened and emmarbled more and more.

Chapter 9

Ver. 1. Let my people go.] The very same message to a word, as before often. Austin persuades God's messengers so long to insist upon the same point, beating and repeating of it in the same words, till they perceive by the gesture and countenance of the hearers that they understand and embrace it. {a} Chrysostom at Antioch preached many sermons against swearing; and told the people, that seemed to be weary of that subject, that till they stopped their swearing, he would never stop preaching against that sin; ου μονον ταυτα αλλα και περι ταυτων, said Socrates.

{a} De Doctrina Christiana.

Ver. 2. And wilt hold them still.] Being wedded to thy will, which will prove thy hell. {a}

Ver. 3. Is upon thy cattle.] Both those ad esum and those ad usum. Men sin, these suffer, and therefore groan. {#Ro 8:22}

Ver. 4. And there shall nothing die.] It is fair weather oft with the saints when it is foulest with the wicked. God hideth his in the hollow of his hand, {#Ps 91} till the indignation be overpast. {#Isa 26:20} He gives the like charge of them as David did of Absalom. {#2Sa 18:5}

Ver. 6. And all the cattle.] That is, A great sort of them, not all. {a} {#Ex 9:19,25} And this was the fifth of those ten plagues, a number of perfection; to note that God therein did most perfectly administer and execute his judgments.

{a} Non universaliter, sed communiter.

Ver. 7. And the heart of Pharaoh was hardened.] Like a smith's anvil, he grew harder for hammering. There was little need to say to Pharaoh, as the smith did to the Landgrave of Thuring, Durescite, durescite, O in felix Lantgravi. {a} He hardened fast enough.

{a} Pet. Nicol. Gelstronp.

Ver. 8. Sprinkle it toward the heaven.] In token that this plague should, in a special manner, be inflicted from heaven. The Philistines, by their golden emerods, acknowledged that the emerods in their flesh were from God. Hippocrates called the pestilence to $\theta\epsilon\iota\omicron\nu$, the divine disease, as we call the spots thereof God's marks. The falling sickness was anciently called morbus sacer as an immediate hand of God. And what can we conceive less of the sweating sickness, with which no stranger in England was touched? And yet the English were chased therewith, not only in England, but in other countries abroad; which made them, like tyrants, both feared and avoided wherever they came. {a}

{a} Life of King Edward VI, by Sir John Heywood, p. 127.

Ver. 9. A boil breaking forth.] This Moses threateneth to all disobedient persons {#De 28:27} Job's boils were rather probational than penal. So were Munster's ulcers (medicinal they were, howsoever), which he showed to his friend, and said, Hae sunt gemmae et pretiosa ornamenta Dei, quibus Deus amicos suos ornat, ut eos ad se attrahat. These be those gems and jewels wherewith God adorneth his best friends, that he may bring them nearer to himself.

Ver. 10. And they took ashes of the furnace.] Whereby, being cast up towards heaven, was sent up, as it were, a complaint to God against the oppression of the Israelites in the furnace of the brick kilns, -see #De 4:20, -which came down with a vengeance upon man and beast.

Ver. 11. For the boil was upon the magicians.] Who were convicted, but not converted. {#Ex 8:19} They stood still to withstand Moses: as Balaam, against the light of his own conscience, was resolved to curse, howsoever; and therefore went not aside as at other times to speak with God, but set his face toward the wilderness; like a headstrong horse that gets the bit in his teeth, and runs away with his rider.

Ver. 12. And the Lord hardened.] See #Ex 9:7 4:21, &c.

Ver. 13. Let my people go.] See #Ex 9:1.

Ver. 14. All my plagues upon thine heart.] Heart plagues are the worst plagues of all. A hard heart is in some respects worse than hell: since one of the greatest sins is greater in evil, than any of the greatest punishments.

Ver. 15. For now I will stretch out.] His former preservation was but a reservation: and he hath hitherto escaped with his life; not for any love that God bare to him, but "to show his power on him." Wicked men may have common mercies and deliverances, but "the Lord loveth the righteous." {#Ps 146:8}

Ver. 16. Have I raised thee up.] Heb., I have constituted and set thee up as a butt mark: that I may let fly at thee and follow thee close with plague upon plague, till I have beaten the very breath out of thy body. See #Pr 16:4 Ro 9:17.

Ver. 17. As yet exaltest thou thgself?] q.d., No amendment yet? A sore sign of a vessel of wrath fitted to destruction. It is ill with the body when physic will either not enter or not stay with us.

Ver. 18. Such as hath not been in Egypt.] Dio maketh mention of a shower of blood and of water, that fell in Egypt a little before it was subjected by Augustus, in quae loca ne stilla quidem aquae ante ceciderat, saith he; where never any drop of water, much less of blood, ever fell before. {a}

{a} Dio, in Aug.

Ver. 19. Send therefore now.] Here "(mercy rejoiceth against judgment," {#Jas 2:13} if by any means he might be wrought upon. Sed Rhinoceros interimi potest, capi non potest. It was past time of day to do Pharaoh good.

Ver. 20. He that feared the word of the Lord.] As few will do till they feel his hand. But they that tremble not in hearing shall be crushed to pieces in feeling, said that martyr. {a}

{a} Bradford.

Ver. 21. And he that regarded not.] This was, doubtless, the greater number; Qualis Rex, talis grex. This was a just presage and desert of ruin, not to be warned.

Ver. 22. Stretch forth thine hand,] i.e., Thy rod in thine hand. {#Ex 9:23}

Ver. 23. And the fire ran along upon the ground.] Such "hailstones and coals of fire" we also read of in #Ps 18:13-15 Isa

30:30,31; and in the Roman history, when Marcus Antonius the philosopher fought with the Quades, and by the prayers of the thundering legion—κεραυνοβολος, as they were afterwards called—of the Christians, rain was obtained to the refreshing of the Roman army, ingens grando compluraque fulmina in hostes ceciderunt: Itaque licebat videre in eodem loco aquam ignemque simul de coelo cadere, atque ob eam causam, Romanos valere ac bibere. Quados exuri et penitus interire. i.e., A huge hail and many lightening bolts fell upon the enemy; fire and water fell at once from heaven; the Romans drank of the water and were relieved; the Quades were burnt by the fire, and perished. {a}

{a} Dio, in Vita M. Ant. Phil.

Ver. 24e. So there was hail, and fire mingled.] A strange mixture; a miracle within a miracle, saith Rub. Solomon. Fire and water made a peace betwixt themselves, that they might obey the will of their Creator.

Ver. 25. And break every tree of the field.] Here was strages et clades horrenda; yet Pharaoh's heart is not broken, but remains obdurate. Perdidistis fructum afflictionis, was a heavy charge. {a} Ducklings stoop and dive at any little stone thrown by a man at them; yet shrink not at the heaven's great thunder.

{a} August.

Ver. 26. Only in the land of Goshen.] {See Trapp on "Ex 8:23"} Dio reports further of the fire forementioned, {#Ex 8:23} that that fire from heaven either fell not at all upon the Romans; or, if it did, it was presently quenched: neither did the waters help the Quades, but inflamed them, as if it had been oil, so that they called for water to cool them, when the rain fell upon them; and wounded their own bodies to quench the fire with their blood. {a}

{a} Dio, ubi supra.

Ver. 27. The Lord is righteous.] {See Trapp on "Ex 5:2"}

Ver. 28. I will let you go.] But though he speak thus fair, believe him not: "for there are seven abominations in his heart." {#Pr 26:25} No sooner was Pharaoh off the rack, but he bites in his confession, and retracts his promise.

Ver. 29. I will spread abroad my hands,] viz., In prayer; holding up and out the palms of the hand, as those do that expect to receive an alms, in a having manner: so did Solomon, #2Ch 6:13 Ps 143:6 Ezr 9:5.

That the earth is the Lord's.] {See Trapp on "Ex 9:14"}

Ver. 30. That ye will not yet fear.] Howbeit I will pray for you, and you shall feel the fruit of it. Thus God is good to "the just and the unjust." {#Mt 5:45}

Ver. 31, 32. And the flax and the barley.] We need not wonder that in Egypt their barley harvest was so long before their wheat harvest; since, from the overflow of the Nile, and the difference of the climate, it must, needs be otherwise with them than with other countries.

Ver. 32. {See Trapp on "Ex 9:31"}

Ver. 33. Went out of the city.] For privacy sake.

Spread abroad his hands.] {See Trapp on "Ex 9:29"}

Ver. 34. But sinned yet more.] As iron is very soft and malleable while in the fire, but soon after returns to its former hardness: so here.

Ver. 35. And the heart of Pharaoh was hardened.] Judicially; and penally, after that he had first hardened his own heart. {#Ex 9:34}

Chapter 10

Ver. 1. For I have hardened his heart.] As he that brings in a light blinds an owl; or as he that pours on water kindles the lime whereupon it is poured: so the Lord by publishing his commands, and by doing his miracles, hardened the heart of Pharaoh; who, for his wilful rebellion, was justly forsaken of God, and delivered up to his own heart which is somewhat worse than to be delivered up to the devil.

Ver. 2. And that thou mayest tell.] The memory of God's magnalia, his great works, must be transmitted to posterity—that later ages may hear and fear this great God. See #1Sa 4:8.

Ver 3. How long wilt thou refuse?] God thinks long of the time that men misspend and waste in wicked courses. {#Jer 4:14,13:27} It is a savoury saying of Bernard, Totum vitae meae tempus perdidit, quia perdit vixi: the time of my looseness I have utterly lost.

Ver. 4. Else, if thou refuse.] Men should look up with David, and see the punishing angel over their heads with a drawn sword, and submit. And if not, Balaam's ass shall condemn them for their desperate lewdness: for he fell down before the angel.

I will bring the locusts.] God hath treasuries of plagues for the obstinate; neither can he be, as the poet feared of his Jupiter, {a} possibly exhausted.

Ver. 5. And they shall cover.] For "they go forth by heaps," {#Pr 30:27} and huge multitudes. {#Jud 6:5}

And shall eat every tree.] See #Joe 1:7, Plin., lib. xi. cap.

Ver. 6. And he turned himself.] No man may turn himself to go out of the great Turk's presence, but must go backward till he be out of the room. {a} Dissension falling out between Queen Elizabeth and the Earl of Essex about a fit man for the government of Ireland, he uncivilly turned his back, as it were in contempt with a scornful look: she, waxing impatient, gave him a cuff on the ear, bidding him come again when she sent for him, {b} &c. But Moses may not be imagined to have so turned himself.

{b} Camden's Elis., fol. 494.

Ver. 7. And Pharaoh's servants said unto him.] They were convinced and mollified, though he was not. "Whom he will God hardeneth." {#Ro 9:18}

How long shall this man be a snare unto us?] He was not the "snare," but their own sin. {#Pr 29:6} Howbeit he must bear the blame. As if some fond people should accuse the herald or the trumpet as the cause of their war: or, as if some ignorant peasant, when he sees his fowls bathing in his pond, should cry out of them as the causes of foul weather.

Ver. 8. And Moses and Aaron were brought, &c.] Something the tyrant would seem to yield to his counsellors, and not to deal by them as the Persian monarchs, who were wont to advise with their peers: but if any of them delivered that which was contrary to the king's mind, flagris caedebantur; they were whipped: which is a punishment also usually inflicted at this day by the great Turk, even upon the greatest Bashaws of the court, upon the least displeasure.

{a}

{a} Keckerman. Turk. Hist.

Ver. 9. For we must hold a feast.] {See Trapp on "Ex 5:1"}

Ver. 10. Let the Lord be so with you.] In cursing them, he unwittingly blessed them. {#Ex 12:30,31 13:21,22} Cursing men are cursed men. But God's people fare the better for being cursed. "Let them curse, but do thou bless," {#Ps 109:28} is not more a prayer than a prophecy.

Ver. 11. Not so,] q.d., I will watch you for that what should children do sacrificing? Them I will retain, as pledges of your return.

Ver. 12. Even all that the hail hath left.] How easily can God straiten, yea, starve us all, if he but send forth his foraging armies!

{#Joe 1:6}

Ver. 13. An east wind.] The proper and ordinary office whereof is to purge the air.

Ver. 14. And the locusts went up.] As a formidable army. See a graphical description of a like plague threatened in #Joe 2:4-11.

Ver. 15. So that the land was darkened.] So many of them flying together, as a cloud. The like was seen in Poland and Silesia in 1575 and 1542. {a}

{a} Bucholc., Chronol.

Ver. 16. I have sinned against the Lord.] A fair confession, but forced and extorted. Thus the toad, if beaten on the belly, will vomit up his venom, and the malefactor on the rack will utter all. But as water heated, if taken off the fire will soon return to its natural coldness, yea, become colder after heating than before; {a} so hypocrites' heats are not kindly, from the Spirit, but violent, from the outward fire of God's judgments: therefore when that is out, these are gone.

{a} Aristot., Meteor., i. 12.

Ver. 17. Now therefore forgive.] Moses must forgive his sin: God is not in all his thoughts. David cries, Peccavi; Pharaoh, Perii: David, "Against thee, thee only, have I sinned"; Pharaoh cries to Moses to pardon his sin. Man may forgive the trespass, but God only the transgression.

Ver. 18. And he went out.] The wisdom from above is "gentle, easy to be intreated," ready to every good work. {#Jas 3:17} The devils are called Shegnirim, rough and rugged.

Ver. 19. A mighty strong west wind.] Rupertus calls the winds mundi scopas, the besoms wherewith God sweeps his great house of this world. Like as his spiritual house—the hearts of his people—he sweeps off all foul lusts, those hellish locusts, with that rushing mighty wind spoken of in #Ac 2:2.

Ver. 20. But the Lord hardened.] {See Trapp on "Ex 10:1"}

Ver. 21. Stretch out thine hand.] Here was no warning. See #Ex 8:16. As good, the more unexpected, is the more welcome; so evil, the more sudden, the more terrible.

Ver. 22. Thick darkness.] It was thick indeed, that might be felt: {a} so thick and foggy were the vapours that caused it.

{a} ψηλαφητον ακοτος.—Sept.

Ver. 23. They saw not one another.] That they might know the worth of light, by the want of it. One being asked whether light was pleasant, answered, τυφλου το ερωτημα, That is a blind man's question. Little do we prize this excellent creature.

Ver. 24. Called unto Moses,] viz., When the darkness was over: though some think that, even during the darkness, Pharaoh—such was his madness—raged against God, and menaced Moses.

Ver. 25. Thou must give us also sacrifices.] God gave Noah of every clean beast seven, for sacrifice likely, but of every unclean two only. {#Ge 7:2}

Ver. 26. Not a hoof.] God's law must be kept as the apple of our eye. {#Pr 7:2} A dispensatory conscience is an evil conscience. Repentance makes clean work: as the flood drowned all, even Noah's friends also.

Ver. 28. Get thee from me.] Evermore when God's messengers are abandoned, destruction is at next door by. "I know that the Lord hath a purpose to destroy thee." {#2Ch 25:16 36:16}

Ver. 29. Thou hast spoken well,] q.d., When I see thee next, do thy pleasure by me. {a} This was an act of faith in him, whereby he "feared not the wrath of the king." {#Heb 11:27} So when Valens, the Arian Emperor, threatened Basil with bonds and banishment, Pueris illa terriculamenta proponat, said he; Let him threaten boys with those tortures. The emperor may take away my life, but not my faith; my head, but not my crown.

{a} εἰθε γενοιτο μοι τουτο.

Chapter 11

Ver. 1. One plague more upon Pharaoh.] Who, after the hardness of his impenitent heart, treasured up to himself wrath. {#Ro 2:5} God strikes still "upon the thick bosses of his buckler." {#Job 15:26} When men are no whit better by afflictions, and worse with admonitions, God finds it time to strike home.

Ver. 2. Borrow of his neighbour.] This was an extraordinary command, and may not be made a precedent but in the same case, and upon the same warrant. The Lawgiver only can dispense with his own law. Ordinarily it is "the wicked" that "borroweth, and payeth not again." {#Ps 37:21}

Ver. 3. Was very great in the land of Egypt.] Great he was both in gifts and authority; so that for his sake the Israelites might have what they would of the Egyptians. It was not here as once at Rome, Calamitas nostra Magnus est. Sic Mimus olim de Pompeio, plaudente populo Romano tam eleganti soloecismo.

Ver. 4. And Moses said,] sc., Before he went out of Pharaoh's presence: for afterwards he saw his face no more. {#Ex 10:29}

Ver. 5. That sitteth upon his throne.] As co-partner in the kingdom. Our Henry II crowned his eldest son Henry while he was yet alive. But this young king, through discontent, fell into a fever, whereof he died before his father; who cast him away first by his indulgence, and after by his rigour, not suffering him to be what himself had made him. Mr Knox, in his "History of Scotland," reporteth of one Sir John Hamilton, murdered by the king's means, that he appeared to him in a vision with a naked sword drawn, and struck off both his arms with these words, Take this before thou receive a final payment for all thine impieties; and within twenty-four hours two of the king's sons died.

That is behind the mill.] The hand mill which they drove before them. {#Jud 16:21 Isa 47:2 Mt 24:41}

Ver. 6. A great cry.] Because in every house there shall be a dead corpse, and so a Conclamatum est. They had made Israel cry: and God usually retaliates spoil to spoil, {#Eze 39:10} number to number, {#Isa 65:11,12} choice to choice, {#Isa 66:3,4} cry to cry, {#Jas 5:1,4} &c.

Ver. 7. Shall not a dog move his tongue.] And yet how many dead dogs do now-a-days bark and snarl {a} at the Israel of God! Which, nevertheless, is not without God, {#2Sa 16:9,10} who will one day make iniquity to stop her mouth, {#Job 5:16} Why should this dead dog curse? said Abishai.

Ver. 8. In a great anger.] Heb., In heat of anger; wherewith in the cause of God he was blessedly blown up. Meekness here had been but mopishness.

Ver. 9. That my wonders.] {See Trapp on "Ro 9:17"}

Ver. 10. Did all these wonders.] But all was worse than spilt upon him: he was even set in sin, and resolved never to remove. God had a hand in it.

Chapter 12

Ver. 1. And the Lord spake] Befoere the slaughter of the firstborn, yea, before that plague was threatened. See Mr Torshel's design for harmonising the Bible.

Ver. 2. This month.] Called Abib in #Ex 13:4; with us called March or April; when the day lengthening, and the sun ascending, each thing begins to revive. To show, saith one, that by the true Passover, Christ Jesus, not only is our time and all other things sanctified, but also that we should in recent remembrance of that benefit of our redemption, all our days and years be thankful to our gracious Redeemer, and that by his death, true life and reviving came unto mankind.

It shall be the first month,] viz., In respect of sacred, not civil affairs, as Junius here proveth out of Josephus. {a} The jubilees began in September. {#Le 25:8 Ex 23:16} The creation of the world began then, as some will have it: but Luther and others think it was in the spring rather.

{a} Antiq., lib. i. cap. 4.

Ver. 3. In the tenth day.] The paschal lamb was taken up the tenth day, but not sacrificed till the fourteenth, that they might "so kill the passover" as first to "sanctify themselves and prepare their brethren." {#2Ch 35:6} For which cause also it was a received tradition among the Jews, that during those four days the lamb was tied to their bedposts. {a}

{a} Hospin., De Orig. Fest., cap. 5.

Ver. 4. Shall make your count,] sc., Of communicants; that the whole may be eaten up, and every one have enough. Spiritual blessing may be divided in solidum: one may have as much as another, and all alike. The Gentiles also are called to fruition and feeding on the Lamb.

Ver. 5. Without blemish.] Christ, that immaculate Lamb of God, was hereby typified, {#1Pe 1:19} {See Trapp on "1Pe 1:19"}

From the sheep, or from the goats.] A lamb; to show Christ's innocency, meekness, patience, profitableness. Or a kid; to show that he was a sinner; (1.) By imputation, for "the Lord made our sins to meet upon him"; {#Isa 53:6} (2.) By reputation, for "he made his grave with the wicked." {#Isa 53:9}

Ver. 6. Until the fourteenth day.] {See Trapp on "Ex 12:3"}

In the evening.] Christ came in the evening of the world; {#Heb 1:2} in "the last hour" (εσχατη ωρα, #1Jo 2:11); when all lay buried in darkness; in the eventide of our sin and death.

Ver. 7. And strike it on the two sideposts.] Not on the threshold. We may not "tread under foot the Son of God, or count the blood of the covenant an unholy thing," {#Heb 10:29} but get "our hearts sprinkled" therewith by the hyssop branch of faith "from an evil conscience, that we may serve the living God." {#Heb 9:14}

Ver. 8. In that night.] By candle light. So must we feed upon Christ, lumine supernaturali. "By his knowledge doth God's righteous servant justify many." {#Isa 53:11}

Roast with fire.] Not raw: we may not grossly conceive of Christ, nor rashly receive him. Not boiled, but roast: to show that Christ was roasted in the fire of his Father's wrath: et sicut tostis cibariis non adhibentur alia, ut in elixis fieri consuevit: ira solum Christum debemus apprehendere fide, saith an interpreter. {a}

And unleavened bread,] { See Trapp on "1Co 5:7" } { See Trapp on "1Co 5:8" }

And with bitter herbs.] To teach that, "looking upon Christ whom they have pierced," men must be "in bitterness," {#Zec 12:10} and feel what "an evil and bitter thing sin is," {#Jer 2:19} being ready to suffer hardship with Christ, though he should feed us to the full with bitter herbs, and "make us drunken with wormwood." {#La 3:15}

{a} Alsted.

[Ver. 9. His head with his legs.] To let us see our need of whole Christ, and our most perfect communion with him.

Ver. 10. And ye shall let nothing of it remain.] We may not presume to sin in hope of pardon. Christ will not stand us for a sinning stock.

Ver. 11. With your loins girded.] As pressed and intent to the service. So we should be at all times, but especially when to depart out of the Egypt of this life, and to take heaven by force. Then, if ever, we should hoc agere, "gird up the loins of our minds," &c. {#1Pe 1:13}

And ye shall eat it in haste.] As not doubting of deliverance, and waiting a call out of life.

It is the Lord's Passover.] A sacramental expression, like that of our Saviour, "This is my body". {#Mt 26:26} { See Trapp on "Mt 26:26" } The sacraments of the Old Testament were both sacraments and types: but those of the New, are sacraments only.

Ver. 12. And I will smite all the firstborn.] This crosseth not that in #Eze 18:20, "The son shall not bear the iniquity of his father"; for God never punisheth the innocent, because all are guilty before him. These Egyptians had slain Israel, God's firstborn. And it is the observation of Theodoret, that when God smote Pharaoh's firstborn, he drew blood of the arm for the cure of the head: which, because it mended not thereupon, came also to confusion.

And against all the gods of Egypt.] As he did here upon the Popish idols in the beginning of the Reformation, by detecting their vanity, and laying their honour in the dust.

Ver. 13. I will pass over you.] Or, overlook you. So he dealeth oft by his, who should therefore keep a passover for our safety.

Ver 14. By an ordinance for ever.] Till "Christ our passover" should be "sacrificed for us"; {#1Co 5:7} and then the Christian passover was to succeed.

Ver. 15. Ye shall put away leaven.] All unsoundness in point of faith, and insincerity in point of practice. {See Trapp on "1Co 5:7"} The Jews, at this day, on the night before their passover, search and sweep every mouse hole for crumbs of leaven with wax candles. If they find none, they purposely fling down some, that they might not seem to have prayed and laboured in vain.

Ver. 16. A holy convocation.] This same word, in the Hebrew, signifieth the Holy Scripture; to teach us, saith one, that the Scriptures ought to be read in the congregation and holy assemblies.

{#Ne 8:9}

Ver. 17. In this selfsame day.] Heb., In the body, or strength, of this day: so the midday is called. Art thou delivered, helped? write up the time and place.

Ver. 18. Until the one and twentieth day.] As Augustine said of the feast of pentecost, might these of the passover, may we of the Gun Powder Plot; Gaudet produci haec solemnitas. It were well if this holiday were a double day.

Ver. 19. No leaven found.] {See Trapp on "Ex 12:15"}

Shall be cut off.] For a small fault, as it may seem to some: but the less the matter the greater is the contempt in denying to do it. Keep therefore God's commandment as the sight of thine eye. Look to those minutula legis, that ye may live.

Ver. 20. Ye shall eat nothing leavened.] Watch carefully against corruption in life and doctrine: be punctual in your preparation to and participation of the Christian passover.

Ver. 21. All the elders of Israel.] The masters of families, who in this family service were to kill and eat, and set before the rest of the household, as priests at home; and to show them the meaning of that mystery.

Ver. 22. A bunch of hyssop.] A herb of a purging property. See #1Co 6:11.

The blood that is in the bason.] The remembrance of Christ's bloody passion must be kept fresh in our hearts. {a}

Strike the lintel.] Profess Christ crucified; honour him by a holy conversation; mind trim in your outgoings and incomings.

None of you shall go out.] Be not "of those that withdraw to perdition, but of them that believe to the salvation of the soul." {#Heb 10:39} Mingle no more with the Egyptians.

Ver. 24. For ever.] {See Trapp on "Ex 12:15"}

Ver. 25. Ye shall keep this service.] Yet with some variation of circumstance.

Ver. 26. When your children.] Children are to be carefully catechised and informed. {#Eph 6:4} {See Trapp on "Eph 6:4"} Luther scorned not to profess himself discipulura catechism, a catechism scholar.

Ver. 27. Bowed the head.] In token of submission to the command, and thankfulness for such a salvation.

Ver. 28. Went away, and did, &c.] They that will not timeously obey God's sweet precepts, shall one day have no other command to obey but that bitter, Ite maledicti, "Go, ye cursed," &c.

Ver. 29. From the firstborn of Pharaoh.] See #Ex 12:12.

Ver. 30. For there was not a house.] Neither is there a house amongst us, hardly, where not one but many are "dead in trespasses and sins." Our land even stinks again with such, as Egypt did with the frogs.

Ver. 31. And he called for Moses.] That is, He sent them to be packing. See #Ex 10:29.

Ver. 32. Bless me also.] So Maximinus, the persecutor, being sorely diseased, sent to beg the prayers of the Church. "In their month you shall find" these wild asses. {#Jer 2:24}

Ver. 33. We be all dead men.] Quis autem vult mori? prorsus nemo. Everything makes much of life, from the highest angel to the lowest worm. {a}

Ver. 34. Took their dough, &c., upon their shoulders.] Not upon their camels, which, saith Aben Erza, were laden with the precious things borrowed of the Egyptians. Rab. Solomon saith, it was to show their cheerfulness in obeying the command of God. See a better reason afterwards, in #Ex 12:39.

Ver. 35. And they borrowed.] For their use at that solemn feast they were to keep in the wilderness. The Egyptians denied them nothing; as willing to be rid of them upon any terms. {a}

{a} Pons aureus fugienti hosti extruendus

Ver. 36. Spoiled the Egyptians.] {See Trapp on "Ex 8:2"}

Ver. 39. And they baked unleavened cakes.] A memorial of which sweet mercy they kept on foot by that yearly feast of unleavened cakes. {#De 16:3}

Ver. 40. Was four hundred and thirty years,] sc., From the time that Abraham began to sojourn in the land of Canaan, and to pass into Egypt. {#Ge 12:10} See #Ga 3:17, {See Trapp on "Gal 3:17"}

Ver. 41. Even the selfsame day.] God, saith one, had well nigh forfeited his bond; but ere the sun went down he payed the debt. His premises are good surehold. At midnight the firstborn were slain, because then exactly the four hundred and thirty years were expired.

Ver. 42. This is that night.] That, with an accent. God expects our returns should be answerable to our receipts. God's blessings are binders; and of all things he can least abide to be forgotten.

Ver. 43. There shall no stranger, &c.] Strangers are excluded; to show that the faithful only have fellowship with Christ; contra quam Lutherani ineptiunt, saith one.

Ver. 44. When thou hast circumcised him.] And so adinitted him into the fellowship of the faithful. A man must live before he can be nourished; bred before he can be fed.

Ver. 45. A foreigner.] Unless a proselyte.

Ver. 46. In one house.] To teach them unity; which, indeed, is not anywhere found but in the Church. "My dove is but ore." {#So 6:9}

Ver. 47. Shall keep it.] Or perish for their neglect. Aut faciendum, aut patiendum; either men must do it, or die for it.

Ver. 48. No uncircumcised person shall eat thereof.] The Chaldee hath it, No profane person. So God saith, "No stranger uncircumcised in heart, nor uncircumcised in flesh, shall enter into my sanctuary." {#Eze 44:9}

Ver. 49. And unto the stranger.] The proselyte, who is Peregrinus iustitiae, non solum peregrinus portae, as the Rabbins distinguish,

Ver. 50. So did they.] Very submissive they were at first; but it lasted not long, as the story showeth and the psalmist oft complaineth.

Ver. 51. The selfsame day.] See on #Ex 12:41 God is very precise and punctual. We have a saying much like ourselves, A day breaks no square. But it is not so with God.

Chapter 13

Ver. 1. And the Lord spake.] God hath a saying to such as he hath saved: and what it is, see #Ex 13:2.

Ver. 2. It is mine.] By right of redemption also. He that is saved is "not his own"; {#1Co 6:19} but his that saved him. Servati sumus ut serviamus. {#Lu 1:74} God hath sworn we shall do so, {#Lu 1:73} or else never come to his kingdom. {#Ps 95:11}

Ver. 7. {See Trapp on "Ex 12:19"} {See Trapp on "Ex 12:20"}

Ver. 8. And thou shalt show.] {See Trapp on "Ex 12:26"}

Ver. 9. And for a memorial] {See Trapp on "Mt 23:5"}

Ver. 10. From year to year.] The Chaldee hath it, From time to time. We have the Lord's Supper, that sweet ordinance wherein Christ "kisseth us with the kisses of his lips," and giveth us a privy seal of his love, much oftener: yet not so oft as the primitive Christians, who had it weekly: whence it was called Panis hebdomadarias. Yea, Basil tells us, that they ate the Lord's Supper three or four times a week—viz., on Wednesdays, Fridays, and Lord's-days: but that was a time of persecution.

Ver. 11. Land of the Canaanites.] A general name to all those seven accursed nations.

Ver. 12. The males shall be the Lord's.] This God did, that with the firstborn son, commonly best beloved, he might draw all the love to himself.

Ver. 13. And every firstling of an ass.] This God would not have paid him in kind, eo quod asinus tardum et pigrum animal, as Bellarmine gives the reason. The zealous God hates dulness. Tardis mentibus virtus non facile committitur. {a}

{a} Tusc. Quaest., lib. v.

Ver. 14. That thou shalt say unto him.] Plantas tenellas frequentius adaguaré proderit, young plants must be often watered.

Ver. 15. Would hardly let us go.] Heb., Was hard to send us away, He had as leave have been knocked on the head almost as have done it. It was morely extorted, as sour juice is wrung out of a crab apple. It was an honest prayer of an ancient, Domine duc me quo non volo.

Ver. 16. Frontlets.] Phylacteries. See on #Mt 23:5,6. The right use of them was memorative: the superstitious use, preservative against the power of sin.

Ver. 17. That God led them not.] He carefully chose their way out of Egypt; not the nearer, but the safer. He tempts not above what we are able: but so orders the matter, that evils are not ready for us till we for them.

Ver. 18. God led the people about.] Philo writeth, that it was not much above three days' journey from Egypt to Canaan the other way: Sed Dei voluntas est summa necessitas. {a}

Ver. 22. He took not away.] This is reckoned, as well it might, for a great mercy, by those holy Levites in #Ne 9:19. The Romans' Vibilia was but an imaginary deity; and her help in this kind a mere fancy.

Chapter 14

Ver. 1. And the Lord spake.] It was of God, then, that the people fell into such straits: that where human help failed, divine might come in. {a}

{a} Necesse est adesse divinum, ubi humanum cessat auxilium. -Philo Jud.

Ver. 2. That they turn,] i.e., Return. In passing the Red Sea, the Israelites made a semicircle. Compare #Ex 13:20 Nu 33:8. God must be followed, though he lead us through a maze or labyrinth.

Ver. 3. They are entangled.] Perplexed; intricated; they know not what to do, or which way to turn. Enemies watch opportunities, but oft miss of their meaning.

Ver. 4. And I will be honoured.] By subduing this sturdy rebel, and bringing "his violent dealing upon his own pate." {#Ps 7:16} When the prophet cried to Jeroboam's altar, it clave presently asunder. {#1Ki 13:2,3} But the mighty "hammer" of "God's word," {#Jer 23:29} with ten miracles, gave ten mighty strokes at Pharaoh's heart, and yet could find no entrance. God will therefore now take another course with him.

Ver. 5. That the people fled,] i.e., Ran quite away, without any resolution ever to return. This troubled the tyrant. Crowns have their cares. Little David likes his hook the better ever since he saw the court.

Ver. 6. Made ready his chariot.] To meet his destruction.

Ver. 7. Six hundred chosen chariots.] They fought of old out of chariots armed with scythes and hooks; which at first were a terror, and after a scorn. {a}

Ver. 9. But the Egyptians pursued.] And God made fair way before them, till they came into the Red Sea.

Ver. 10. And they were sore afraid.] Because sorely distressed. They saw no way to escape, unless they could have gone up to heaven: which because they could not, heaven came down to them, though unworthy, that God might get him a name. {#Isa 63:12,14} The Israelites herein were far more happy than those ancient Britons, who, being greatly distressed by their northern enemies in the time of Valentinian III, implored the aid of Aetius, the Roman prefect of Gaul, using these words: "To Aetius, thrice consul, the sighs of the Britons": and after thus they complain, "The barbarous enemy beats us to the sea; the sea beats us back to the enemy: between these two kinds of deaths, we are either murdered or drowned." {a} But their implorations prevailed not. Neither found they any other remedy than what the Prince of Orange showed to his soldiers at the battle of Newport; when they had the sea on one side and the Spaniards on the other. If, saith he, you will live, you must either eat up these Spaniards, or drink up this sea. {b}

{a} Daniel's Chronicle.

Ver. 12. Is not this the word?] Invalidum omne natura querulum.
{a} Weak spirits are ever quarrelling and contending.

{a} Seneca.

Ver. 13. Stand still, and see the salvation.] Thus God "heard their cry at the Red Sea," {#Ne 9:9} though it were not the cry of faith, but of fright and perturbation. So he "heard the voice of the lad." {#Ge 21:17}

Ver. 14. Ye shall hold your peace,] i.e., Ye shall neither say nor do.

Ver. 15. Wherefore criest thou unto me?] so., With inward groanings, without any audible voice. Moses egit vocis silentio, ut corde clamaret. And God was readier to answer than he to ask.

That they go forward.] Though upon a manifest danger. This is an act of strong faith, pure obedience.

{a} August.

Ver. 16. But lift thou up thy rod.] This rod God makes use of, fo: the greater manifestation of his own power, and the gracing of his servant Moses.

Ver. 17. I will harden.] See on #Ex 9:35.

Ver. 18. When I have gotten me honour.] Made me "a name as at this day." {#Ne 9:10} For this he was famous in far countries. Jethro, the first proselyte to the Jewish Church, was hereby converted, say the Rabbins. And the Philistines cry, "Woe unto us! these are the gods that smote the Egyptians with all the plagues in the wilderness." {#Isa 4:8}

Ver. 19. And the Angel of God.] Christ, the Angel of God's presence. See #Ex 13:21 23:23.

And the waters were divided.] So was that torrent of fire, if Aristotle {a} may be believed, that ran from Etna, consuming the country, and yet parted itself; making a kind of a lane for those that ventured to rescue their aged parents.

{a} De Mundo, cap. 6.

Ver. 22. Were a wall unto them.] Every main affliction is our Red Sea, saith one, which, while it threatens to swallow, preserves us.

Ver. 23. And the Egyptians pursued.] God permitting it, and making fair weather before them, they also blustering, and "breathing out threatenings," saying, "I will pursue, I will overtake, I will divide the spoil," &c., till anon "they sank as lead in the mighty waters." {#Ex 15:9,10}

Ver. 24. In the morning watch.] God "watcheth upon the evil to bring it" upon his enemies then when he may do them a greatest mischief. {#Da 9:14} He picketh his times for vengeance: "Now will I rise, saith the Lord; now will I be exalted; now will I lift up myself." {#Isa 33:10}

The Lord looked unto the host.] He set his eyes upon them; as Paul did upon Elymus the sorcerer; with highest offence, and utmost indignation. After which lightning follows that terrible thunderclap, wherewith he troubled them and took off their wheels. See #Ps 77:18,19,18:15.

Ver. 26. That the waters may come again.] By wind that God sent. {#Ex 15:10} "The winds blow, the waters flow." {#Ps 147:18}

Ver. 28. There remained not so much as one of them.] No more doth there of our subdued iniquities. {#Mic 7:10} Peccata non redeunt. We shall see them no more, any otherwise than these Israelites did their enemies, dead upon the shore.

Ver. 29. But the children of Israel walked upon dry land.] This is applied as a type of Christ, {#1Co 10:2} to show that Christ is present with his people, to save them in all troubles and afflictions, {#Isa 43:2} and from all their spiritual enemies and sins, both by justification and sanctification, {#Mic 7:19} through faith in him, {#Heb 11:29} and will in the end give them songs of victory and triumph. {#Ex 15:1 Re 15:3}

Ver. 30, 31. Thus the Lord.] A mercy never enough memorised. What, then, is our redemption from sin, death, and hell

Ver. 31. {See Trapp on "Ex 14:30"}

Chapter 15

Ver. 1. Then sang Moses.] Presently upon the deliverance, while their hearts were hot, and the mercy fresh. No part of the thank offering might be kept unspent till the third day. Benefits soon grow stale, and putrify, as fish.

Ver. 2. I will prepare him a habitation.] Or, I will adorn him i I will give him ornaments and trimmings. Such God accounts our poor praises.

Ver. 3. The Lord is a man of war.] Yea, he alone is a whole army of men, van and rear both. {#Isa 52:12} He sends the sword; {#Eze 14:17} musters the men; {#Isa 13:4} orders the ammunitiion; {#Jer 50:25} gives the victory: whence he is here stiled by the Chaldee, The Lord and Victor of wars.

Ver. 8. And with the blast.] In celebrating God's favours, we must be punctual and particular.

Ver. 9. The enemy said, I will.] They made account all was their own, but were soon confuted, as were likewise Sisera and Sennacherib. Where the beginning of a business is confidence, the end is confusion.

Ver. 10. Thou didst blow, &c.] Here it was that the arm of the Lord put on strength to cut Rahab, and wound the dragon. {#Isa 51:9}

Ver. 11. Who is like unto thee?] One of the most stately descriptions of God that is found in Holy Writ. God is to be magnified: we must make room for him. This chapter #Ex 15 and #Jud 5 are rightly called by one, "monumental chapters."

Ver. 12. The earth swallowed them,] That is, the sea, which compasseth the earth about as a girdle: God having set the solid earth upon the liquid waters. See #Jon 2:6 Ps 24:2.

Ver. 13. Unto thy holy habitation.] Canaan, where God chose to dwell. This he is said already to have done, because he would certainly do it. God's promises are his performances, and every former mercy a pledge of a future.

Ver. 14. So, now shall take hold.] So it did. {#Isa 4:8}

Ver. 18. The Lord shall reign.] Gaudeo quod Christus Dominus est; alioqui totus desperassem, writes Miconius to Calvin, upon the view of the Church's enemies. The Lord Christ reigneth: or else I had been out of all hope of better.

Ver. 19. For the horse of Pharaoh.] A good soul is altogether unsatisfiable in sanctifying God's name, and setting forth his goodness. Should I do nothing else all the days of my life, said that martyr, yea, as long as the days of heaven shall last, but kneel on my knees and repeat David's Psalms; yet should I fall infinitely short of what I owe to God. {a}

{a} Act. and Mon.

{a} Seneca.

Ver. 25. Showed him a tree.] A type of Christ's sweet cross, and easy yoke, that sweeteneth and facilitateth all our light afflictions. The Jewish doctors tell us that this tree was bitter, and give us this note; It is the manner of the blessed God to sweeten that which is bitter by that which is bitter. {a}

{a} In Tanct. sive Ilmedenu.

Ver. 26. And said, If thou, &c.] This God premiseth as a preface to the law, to be shortly after given in Sinai.

I am the Lord that healeth thee.] Both on the inside, by "forgiving all thine iniquities," and on the outside, by "healing all thy diseases." {#Ps 103:3} I am Jehovah the physician. And Omnipotentii medico nullus insanabilis occurrit morbus. {a} To an almighty physician no disease is incurable.

{a} Isidor.

Ver. 27. And they came to Elim.] The heathens slandered the Jews, that they found these fountains by the means of certain asses that guided them. Whence they are called Asinari by Melon and Appion of Alexandria; who affirmed that for this cause the Jews worshipped the golden head of an ass, &c. {a}

{a} Corn. Tacit., Annul., lib. xii.

Chapter 16

Ver. 1. Unto the wilderness of Sin.] So called because it bordered upon the city of Sin, whereof see #Eze 30:15,16 20:35,36. Or, of the many brambles that grew therein.

Ver. 2. And the whole congregation.] The most part of the people. Diaconos paucitas honorabiles fecit, saith Jerome: sic et veros Israelitas.

Ver. 3. To kill this whole assembly.] Thus discontent will say anything: neither careth it how true the charge be, but how stinging and stabbing.

Ver. 4. I will rain bread from heaven.] Not hell from heaven, as once he did upon Sodom. "If thine enemy hunger, feed him," as God here doth.

Ver. 5. On the sixth dug they shall prepare.] The Jews' preparation for the Sabbath began at three o'clock in the afternoon. The best and wealthiest of them, even those that had many servants, did with their own hands further the preparation. So that sometimes the masters themselves would chop herbs, sweep the house, cleave wood, kindle the fire, &c. {a}

{a} Buxtorf., Synagog.

Ver. 6. That the Lord.] And not we without his authority: so that in murmuring against us, ye have set your mouths against heaven. Caveant μεμψυχοιροι: "Grudge not: behold, the Judge standeth before the door." {#Jas 5:9}

Ver. 7. Ye shall see the glory of the Lord.] Shining in that wonderful work of his, the bread from heaven. Compare #Nu 14:21 Joh 11:40.

Ver. 12. And in the morning.] They have their flesh at even, and bread in the morning. God will be waited on, and give the consummation of his blessings at his leisure. The cloud empties not itself at a sudden burst, but dissolves upon the earth drop after drop.

Ver. 13. The dew lay round,] i.e., The manna that came down in the dew; as Christ the bread of life doth in the ministry of the word. See #De 32:2. Josephus writeth, that as Moses was lifting up his hands in prayer, there fell upon them a dew from heaven, and crusted. This when he had tasted, it proved very sweet; and the nature of this manna, saith he, was such, that he who had it would desire no other meat.

Ver. 14. The dew that lay.] And covered the manna: whence that promise of hidden manna in #Re 2:17.

Ver. 15. It is manna,] i.e., What shall I call? Herba Anonymus non inveniendo nomen, invenit, saith Pliny; ^{a} so manna. Others interpret manna, a portion, an admirable gift, or meat prepared.

^{a} Lib. xxvi. cap. 14.

Ver. 20. Left of it until, &c.] Either through distrust or curiosity.

Ver. 21. It melted.] Or, Putrified, faded, dissolved. Some Papists derive their Mass from this root: and well it may; nam per eam omnis pietas linquefacta est et dissoluta, saith Rivet: for it is the utter bane of all good, as being a mass or heap of abominations.

Ver. 22. And told Moses.] As fearing that the people had not done so well, as indeed they did: or, as desirous of further direction.

Ver. 23. Lay up for you, &c.] This is no plea for the Popish keeping of their bready god in a pyx; for here was a command so to do, lest the Sabbath should be profaned: but for the other there is none.

Ver. 24. Till the morning.] The Sabbath morning, wherein it putrified not, but continued sound and savoury by the special hand of God; that they might keep the Sabbath, as it appears here they did before the law given at Sinai. Papists press the sanctification of the Sabbath as a mere human institution in religious worship. Our anti-Sabbatarians took this text for an anticipation only, and made little account of the fourth commandment, which Spalato had taught them was done away, &c.

Ver. 25. Eat that to day.] So shall those that labour in the Lord rest and feast in heaven. Thus the Rabbis moralise it.

Ver. 26. {See Trapp on "Ex 16:30"}

Ver. 27. And it came to pass.] {See Trapp on "Ex 16:20"} Some unruly beasts, masterless monsters, will be breaking over the hedge: but the law will hamper them.

Ver. 28. How long refuse ye.] The rulers are disgraced for the people's unruliness.

To keep my commandments?] For in breaking that one of the Sabbath they had broken all: the whole law is but one copulative. See #Jas 2:10.

Ver. 29. Hath given you the Sabbath.] And a great gift it was. {#Ne 9:14} Were it not for the weekly Sabbath we should all run wild.

Abide ye every man in his place.] Sabbath, coming from Shabath, to cease or rest, hath some affinity with Jashabh, to sit still, and with Shabach, to worship and give praise; to show that this rest must be sanctified: for else it is but asinorum sabbatum, as one saith, the Sabbath of the ox and ass; for these also must rest.

Ver. 30. So the people rested.] According to their custom, though probably intermitted for a season in Egypt, during their hard servitude. Sed rationem reddat qui potest, aith a learned doctor; {a} are, ante legem promulgatam, in die septimo cessavit manna, nisi quia, ad exemplum Domini, ab ipsius mundi primordi invaluisset sabbati observatio. This ceasing of manna on the seventh day shows that the Sabbath was kept from the beginning.

{a} Dr Prideaux.

Ver. 31. And the taste of it.] It had not all manner of good tastes, according to every man's appetite, {#Nu 11:8} else why should the people lust and murmur as there they did? {#Ex 16:4,5}

Ver. 32. Fill an omer.] Monuments and memorials of God's great mercies are to be set up, lest, as it fares with children, eaten bread be soon forgotten.

Ver. 33. Take a pot.] A golden pot. {#Heb 9:4} Strabo {a} writeth, that the Metapontini, after a plentiful harvest which had much enriched them, dedicated to Apollo at Delphi χρυσου θερως, a harvest of gold.

{a} Geog.

Ver. 34. To be kept.] For the use of succeeding ages in the most holy places. So Christ, glorified in his humanity, abides for ever.

{#Heb 7:24}

Ver. 35. Until they came.] So, till we come to heaven shall we have need of ordinances.

Ver. 36. Of an ephah.] Or, Of a bushel: a plentiful allowance. {See Trapp on "Joh 2:7"}

Chapter 17

Ver. 1. After their journeys,] i.e., After they had first been at Dophkah, and at Alush. {#Nu 33:12-14}

There was no water.] Bread they had from heaven, but wanted water. Our condition here is a condition of singular indigency: we are ever wanting somewhat or other.

Ver. 2. The people did chide with Moses.] As they did before for bread. And as thirst is the more eager appetite, so they are more eager and earnest for water than they were for bread.

Wherefore do ye tempt the Lord?] viz., Whether he be amongst you and be able by miracle to relieve you.

Ver. 3. Murmured against Moses.] Magistrates have many times a weary life with the mutinous multitude. Seneca observeth of Egypt, -it proved true of this people newly come out of Egypt, -that it was loquax et ingeniosa in contumeliam praefectorum provincia: in qua, qui vitaverit culpam, non effugit infamiam; That it was a province apt to prate against their governors, and to cast a slur upon them, though never so well deserving.

Ver. 4. Ready to stone me.] Well might he ask with our Saviour, "For which of my good works do ye stone me?" {#Joh 10:32} But the belly hath no ears.

Ver. 5. Take with thee of the elders.] As witnesses of this great work of God; which the people for their unbelief might not behold. God puts up with their rebellion, and satisfies their thirst: but yet intimates his just displeasure, by denying them this privilege of seeing the rock smitten.

Ver. 6. Upon the rock.] If God had not stood upon the rock, in vain had Moses struck it. Means must be used, but God only depended upon for success. It is he alone that sets the rock abroaeh.

Thou shalt smite the rock.] Herein a type of Christ "stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted." {#Isa 53:4 1Co 10:4}

And there shall come water out of it.] Not fire—that had not been so miraculous—but water. This "cleaving the" hard "rock," {#Ps 78:15} this "turning of the flint into a fountain," {#Ps 114:8} was a work of Omnipotency, and is therefore much celebrated. {#De 8:15 Ps 105:41 Ne 9:15} Dioseorides tells us of the stone Galactites, quod succum emittat lacteum, that it yields a kind of moisture like milk: which, if it "be true, is very strange.

That the people may drink.] And so be cooled and comforted in their weariness and wanderings. "Ho, every one that thirsteth," &c. {#Isa 55:1}

Ver. 7. Is the Lord among us?] As if that could not be, and they athirst. But he is most present when he afflicts. "He knows our souls in adversity." {#Ps 31:7}

Ver. 8. Then came Amalek.] Not having the fear of God before his eyes, {#De 25:18} but carried on by the ancient enmity: for Amalek was Esau's grandchild.

Ver. 9. I will stand on the top.] Where the people might see him with that ensign in his hand, and be encouraged. Xerxes used to pitch his tent on high, and stand looking on his army when in fight, for their encouragement.

Ver. 10. Aaron, and Hur.] This Hur, saith Josephus, was husband to Miriam, and Moses's deputy. {#Ex 24:14}

Went up to the top of a hill.] To pray together. In the congregation where the saints are praying, there the arrow, shield, and spear are broken. {#Ps 76:3} From thence shalt thou help us, said the people to David; {#2Sa 18:3} that is, thy prayers shall prevail with God for our assistance. Non tam praeliando quam precando. The king of Sweden, as soon as he set foot in Germany, fell down to prayer, and he proved very victorious.

Ver. 11. When Moses held up his hand.] The push of Moses's prayers did more than the pikes of all Israel besides. Moses orat et vincit, cessat et vincitur; saith one. Great is the power of prayers. Henricus Anceps, the Emperor of Germany, slew and put to flight a huge army of the Hungarians, his soldiers all crying out with a loud voice, Kyrie eleison; Kyrie eleison!—i.e., Lord, have mercy upon us; Lord, have mercy upon us! This was done before the city of Mersburg. {a}

{a} Bucholz., Chronol.

Ver. 12. But Moses's hands were heavy.] It is a praise proper to God, that "his hand is stretched out still": as for men, even the best, though "the spirit" in them be "willing, yet the flesh is weak," {#Mt 26:41} and will not suffer any long intention.

And Aaron and Hur stayed up his hands.] Neither did they only raise up their hands, but their minds with his. There are that here observe, that upon the fortieth day after their coming out of Egypt, Moses, Aaron, and Hur went up into the mount, where Moses's hands are thus supported, while Amalek is discomfited; and that Moses the prophet, Hur the prince, and Aaron the priest, all put together, were a type of Christ; who on the fortieth day after his resurrection ascended into the mount of heaven; where, as our prophet, priest, and prince, he holds up the hands of his intercession for his Church militant, while she fights with spiritual Amalek, sin, Satan, Antichrist, world, flesh, &c.

Ver. 13. And Joshua discomfited.] How should he do otherwise when he fought with such weapons Prayers are the bombardae et instrumenta bellica Christianorum, saith Luther i the great guns and warlike weapons of the saints. The Romans in a great distress were driven to take the weapons out of the temples of their gods, and overcame.

Ver. 14. In a book.] Or, In the book that thou art now in writing, viz., the Pentateuch, the most ancient book that is extant.

I will utterly put out, &c.] The portion of wicked men is to be "forgotten in the city where they had so done." {#Ec 8:10} Their memory dies with them: or, if it be preserved, it stinks in keeping, and remains as a curse and perpetual disgrace.

Ver. 15. And Moses built an altar.] As a lasting monument of God's great mercy in that first victory. The Romans had a custom, that the conqueror in his triumphant chariot rode to the capitol, and offered a white ox to Jupiter. {a}

{a} Liv., lib. vi. decad. 3.

Ver. 16. Because the Lord, &c.] Heb., The hand upon the throne of the Lord. God's hand is laid upon his own throne, as swearing to root out Amalek. Or Amalek's hand is lifted up against God's throne—that is, the Church; called God's throne of glory, {#Jer 3:17} and crown of glory; {#Isa 62:3} therefore he will have perpetual war with him. Tua causa erit mea causa, said the Emperor Charles V to Julius Pflugius, who, being his agent, had received wrong by the Duke of Saxony. So saith God to all that belong to him.

Chapter 18

Ver. 1. Heard of all.] And thereby was converted, say the Rabbis, being the first proselyte to the Jewish Church that we read of in the Scripture.

Ver. 2. After he had sent her back.] Because she was troublesome with her peevishness, and a hindrance to the good work in hand. {#Ex 4:25,26} Sulla felix fuisset ni uxorem duxisset; Adrianus ni imperitasset; Moses, both.

Ver. 3. In a strange land.] {See Trapp on "Ex 2:22"}

Ver. 4. Eliezer.] Or, Lazarus. We should write God's mercies upon the names of our children, or some other ways perpetuate the memory of them.

Ver. 5. At the mount of God.] Horeb; whither they were removed from Rephidim, though the remove be not mentioned.

Ver. 6. And he said.] That is, Sent him word. So God's messages to us are to be received as his own immediate words; "He that heareth you, heareth me."

Ver. 7. And did obeisance.] Sir Thomas More, Lord Chancellor, would, in Westminster Hall, beg his father's blessing on his knees.

Ver. 8. All that the Lord had done.] It is not enough to relate God's mercies to us in the lump, and by wholesale; but we must instance the particulars both to God and men.

That had come upon them.] Heb., Had found them; yet not without a providence. {#Job 5:6} God cuts us out our various conditions: it is his hand that finds us when we suffer aught.

Ver. 9. And Jethro rejoiced.] So must all Sion's sons. {#Isa 66:10}

Ver. 10. And Jethro said, &c.] Cheerfulness makes thankfulness. {#Lu 1:46 Jas 5:13}

Ver. 11. Now I know.] {See Trapp on "Ex 18:1"} So the people knew that Jehovah was God. {#1Ki 18:37} See #2Ch 33:13.

He was above them.] God sits in the heavens, {#Ps 2:4} where he sees that their day is coming; {#Ps 37:13} and meanwhile scorneth these scorers; {#Pr 3:34} frights them, as he did those Syrians; {#2Ki 7:6} overawes them, as he did Laban; diverts them, as he did Saul, Sennacherib, &c., or otherwise defeats them, as he did Benhadad, disclosing their counsels, blasting their designs, &c.

Ver. 12. Before God,] i.e., As in his presence, with reverence and godly fear. "To feed without fear" is a foul fault. {#Jude 1:12} See my "Commonplace of Abstinence."

Ver. 13. And the people stood by Moses.] Being haply, as the French are said to be, very litigious; and thereunto abusing Moses's lenity: whereas had they been soundly whipped, -as among Mohammedans they are, that go to law for light matters, -there would have been but few and short suits amongst them. Sure it is, that if men's hearts were not bigger than their suits, there would not be half so many.

Ver. 14. What is this thing?] A man by good counsel may become an angel; nay, a god to another. Alexander, being requested by some ambassadors to show them his treasures, showed them his faithful counsellors.

Ver. 15. To inquire of God.] For a divine sentence is in the mouth of the Judge: therefore also the place of judicature is called the holy place. {#Ec 8:10} Let those that go to law inquire of God, and rest in his will.

Ver. 16. When they have a matter.] In our ordinary suits there is, for the most part, more malice than matter. The late Judge Dier, if there came any such trifling controversies to be tried before him, would usually say, that either the parties are wilful, or their neighbours without charity; because their suits were not quietly compromised.

Ver. 17. Is not good.] We commonly say, He that receives a courtesy, sells his liberty. But so did not Jethro.

Ver. 18. Thou wilt surely wear away.] Heb., Fading, thou wilt fade; as a leaf that wanteth moisture. Melancthon was wont to say, that none laboured so hard as travailing women, magistrates, and ministers. Politici et Ecelesiastici labores maximi sunt, saith Luther. Atterunt enim corpus, et tanquam ex imis medullis exhauriunt succum.

Ver. 19. I will give thee counsel.] A Midianite counsels Moses: God hereby teacheth him humility.

Ver. 20. And thou shalt teach them ordinances.] This alone will be work enough for thee, if done as it ought to be.

And shalt show them the way wherein they must walk.] The Chaldee Paraphrast hath it thus, And shalt show them the prayer which they shall pray in their synagogues.

Ver. 21. Out of all the people.] Magistrates must be drained from the dregs, sifted from the bran of the ordinary sort of people.

Able men.] Able and active; strong and stouthearted; wealthy also, and well grounded. See Jethro's Justice of Peace, -a sermon by Mr Sam. Ward.

Ver. 22. So shall it be easier, &c.] How thankless is their labour that do wilfully overspend themselves in their ordinary vocations!

Ver. 23. To their place.] To the Promised Land, or to their own homes, well apaid, and with good content.

Ver. 24. So Moses hearkened.] Of a meek man it is said that a child shall lead him: {#Isa 11:6} how much more so grave a counsellor as Jethro! Augustus, ταϊς παρρησιαϊς των φιλων υπερεχαιρε, was overjoyed with the plain dealings of his friends and counsellors; as of Mecaenas. {a}

{a} Dio, in Augusto.

Ver. 25. And Moses chose.] Not without the people's consent. {#De 1:13,14}

Ver. 27. Into his own land.] An honest man's heart is the place where his calling is: such a one when he is abroad is like a fish in the air; whereinto if it leap for recreation or necessity, yet it soon returns to its own element.

Chapter 19

Ver. 1. Into the wilderness of Sinai.] A place where were many bushes and briars. Here they received the law, which, like briars and brambles, pricketh and pierceth the consciences of evil men. And this happened four hundred and thirty years after the promise made to Abraham; not to disannul the promise, {#Ga 3:17} but to advance it; and, that guilt being discovered, and "every mouth stopped," {#Ro 3:19} we might acknowledge the riches of free grace and mercy.

Ver. 2. For they were departed.] {See Trapp on "Ex 18:5"}

Ver. 3. And Moses went up.] {See Trapp on "Ex 3:12"}

Ver. 4. On eagles' wings.] The eagle beats her young ones out of their sluggish nest, that they may learn to fly: there was somewhat to do to bring Israel out of Egypt. The eagle carries her young upon her wings—and not between her talons, as other birds do—openly, safely, speedily: so did God his Israel, being choice and chary of them all the way; securing them also from their enemies, who could do them as little harm as any can do the eagle's young, which cannot be shot but through the body of the old one. {a} Some by eagles here understand Moses and Aaron, who are so called, say they, propter acumen intelligentiae et altitudinem vitae, for the sharpness of their understanding and the loftiness of their lives. {See Trapp on "De 32:11"}

{a} Munster, in Schol. in #De 32:11, ex R. Solomon.

Ver. 5. If ye will obey my voice indeed.] As I am good to you in deed, and not in pretence or profession only. Nathanael was "an Israelite indeed." {#Joh 1:47} And Caleb fulfilled after God, or fully followed him; so did not Solomon. {#IKi 11:6}

Ver. 6. A kingdom of priests.] A holy state, such as shall be all satiated with fatness. {#Jer 31:14} {See Trapp on "1Pe 2:9"} {See Trapp on "Re 1:6"}

Ver. 7. Laid before their faces.] Or, Plainly proposed the mind of God. So did Paul. {παράθεμενος, #Ac 17:3} So must ministers.

Ver. 8. All that the Lord hath spoken.] Sed, quid dignum tanto feret hic promissor hiatu! How easily over estimate we our own abilities! Pollicitis dives quilibet esse potest. Words are good cheap.

Ver. 9. And believe thee.] Without suspicion of an imposture; such as was that of Mohammed.

Ver. 10. Sanctify them to day and to morrow.] Men must come before God with the best preparation they can get. He will be sanctified in all them that draw nigh unto him. This the blind heathens saw, and therefore said, Ουκ εκ παροδου προσκυνειν αλλ οικοθεν παρασκευασμενοι, worship not God by the by, but with all possible preparation. {a} Hence they had their caena pura before their solemn sacrifices. {b} Numa nihil rerum sacrarum cives voluit neglectim agere. Hinc solenne illud, Hoc agite. The ministers likewise in the primitive Church prepared the people's minds by saying Sursum corda, Lift up your hearts; and the deacons used to call upon the people in these words, Oremus, attendamus: Let us pray, let us attend. {c}

Ver. 11. Against the third day.] That is, three days hence, on the day of Pentecost.

Ver. 12. That ye go not up into the mount.] God loves at once familiarity and fear, saith a learned divine; {a} familiarity with him in our conversation, and fear of him in his commands. He loves to be acquainted with men in the walks of their obedience, yet he takes state upon him in his ordinances, and will be trembled at in his word and judgments.

{a} Dr Hall.

Ver. 13. They shall come up to the mount,] i.e., To the bottom of the mount, to the foot thereof. {#Ex 19:17} {See Trapp on "Heb 12:20"} "The way of life is above to the wise," saith Solomon. {#Pr 15:24} As Moses was with God in the mount, when the people were below in the valley.

Ver. 14. And they washed their clothes.] In token of washing their hearts, and "cleansing themselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit." The Gentiles also washed, that they might go to sacrifice: and the primitive Christians before prayer. {a}

{a} Plaut., in Alul., act. iii. scen. 6. Tertul., De Orat., cap. 11.

Ver. 15. Be ready against the third day.] If the word of a command expected such readiness, what shall the word of promise? &c.

Come not at your wives.] For the legal uncleanness that was in it, {#Le 15:18 Isa 21:4} figuring the filth of original sin.

Ver. 16. There were thunders and lightnings.] The law was delivered in this terrible manner; partly to procure reverence to the doctrine of it, and partly to set forth the nature and office of it; which is to terrify and thunder struck offenders.

Ver. 17. To meet with God.] Who "came with ten thousands of his saints," as Moses, that climbed up that hill, and alone saw it, says. {#De 33:2} And if he thus gave the law, how shall he require it at the last day

Ver. 18. The Lord descended upon it in fire.] This fire wherein the law was given, is still in it, and will never out. {#De 33:2}

Ver. 19. Moses spake.] Yet not without horror. {#Heb 12:21}

Ver. 20. And Moses went up.] As a mediator between God and his people. {#Ga 3:19 Ac 7:38} A mediator Moses was, not of redemption, as Christ that "Mediator of the new covenant" and "surety of a better testament," {#Heb 7:22 9:15} but of receiving the law, and delivering it to the people, for which end here he went up.

Ver. 21. And many of them perish.] As the men of Bethshemesh did for prying into the ark. {#Isa 6:19} Arcana Dei, sunt Arca Dei: God's secrets are his ark. Eorum quae scire nec datur, nec fas est, docta est ignorantia; scientiae appetentia, insaniae species. {a} Not to know what is not fit to know, is a learned ignorance; to desire to know in that case is a kind of madness. He that curiously searcheth into God's majesty, shall be oppressed of his glory.

{a} Calvin.

Ver. 22. And let the priests.] The firstborn of the family, which before the Levitical law had the priesthood.

Sanctify themselves.] With a singular care, above that of the rest of the people. Much is required of ministers.

Ver. 23. The people cannot come up,] i.e., Siquid ego aut capio, aut apio, they cannot: that which I know not teach thou me.

Ver. 24. Away, get thee down.] Abundans cautela non nocet. It is fit that men should know and keep their distance.

Thou, and Aaron with thee.] These only, who were types of Christ's princely and priestly office, might come up unto the Lord.

Chapter 20

Ver. 1. God spake all, &c.] All the ten are of divine authority. Papists disannulling the second, that yet they may retain the number of ten words, so loath are heretics to have their asses' ears seen, divide the last, which yet is called "the commandment," not the commandments. {#Ro 7:7} Vasques, not able to answer our argument, saith that the second commandment belonged to the Jews only. {See Trapp (for summary of Law) on "Ex 20:17"}

Ver. 2. Which have brought thee.] God's blessings are binders; and every deliverance a tie to obedience. {See Trapp (for summary of Law) on "Ex 20:17"}

Ver. 3. Thou shalt have.] This "thou" reacheth every man. Xenophon saith of Cyrus, that when he gave anything in command, he never said, Let some one do this; but, Do thou this. {a}

No other gods before me.] But "know" and "serve" me alone "with a perfect heart, and with a willing mind." {#1Ch 28:9} Hoc primo praecepto reliquorum omnium observantia praecipitur; saith Luther. In this first commandment the keeping of all the other nine is commanded. {See Trapp (for summary of Law) on "Ex 20:17"}

Ver. 4. Thou shalt not make unto thee, / i.e., For religious use; for civil they may be made. {#Mt 22:20} Howbeit the Turks will not endure any image, no not upon their coins, because of this second commandment. The Papists by their sacrilegious practices, have taken away this commandment out of their vulgar catechism. This is a great stumbling block to the Jews, and a let to their conversion: for ever since their return from Babylon, they do infinitely abhor idolatry. And for their coming to Christian sermons, they say, that as long as they shall see the preacher direct his speech and prayer to that little wooden crucifix that stands on the pulpit by him, to call it his Lord and Saviour to kneel to it, to embrace it, to kiss it, to weep upon it, as is the fashion of Italy, this is preaching sufficient for them, and persuades them more with the very sight of it, to hate Christian religion, than any reason that the world can allege to love it. {a} {See Trapp (for summary of Law) on "Ex 20:17"}

Ver. 5. Thou shalt not bow down.] Images came first from Babylon. For Ninus having made an image of his father Belus, all that came to see it were pardoned for their former offences: whence in time that image came to be worshipped, through the instigation of the devil, who is, saith Synesius, εἰδωλοχαρης; one that rejoiceth in images.

Am a jealous God.] Be the gods of the heathens good fellows, saith one: the true God is a jealous God, and will not share his glory with another, nor be served by any but in his own way. They that wit-wanton it with God, may look to case worse than that citizen in King Edward IV's days did; who was executed in Cheapside as a traitor, for saying he would make his son heir of the crown: though he only meant his own house, having a crown for the sign. {a}

Visiting the iniquity.] This second commandment is the first with punishment: because men do commonly punish such as worship God in spirit and in truth. As therefore one fire, so one fear should drive out another i the fear of God, the fear of men. {See Trapp (for summary of Law) on "Ex 20:17"}

{a} Speed's Chro.

Ver. 6. Unto thousands.] Of succeeding generations. Personal goodness is profitable to posterity. And this promise, though made to all, yet is more specially annexed to this second commandment; to teach, saith one, that parents should chiefly labour to plant piety in their families, as they would have God's blessing entailed upon their issue. {See Trapp (for summary of Law) on "Ex 20:17"}

Ver. 7. The Name of the Lord.] That "holy and reverend" Name; {#Ps 111:9} that Nomen Maiestativum, as Tertullian callth it; "dreadful among the heathen." {#Mat 1:14} The very Turks at this day chastise the Christians that live amongst them for their oaths and blasphemies darted up against God and Christ. The Jews also are much offended thereat, and it should be no small grief to us to hear it. When one of Darius's eunuchs saw Alexander the Great setting his feet upon a low table that had been highly esteemed by his master, he wept. Being asked the reason by Alexander, he said, it was to see the thing that his master so highly esteemed, to be now contemned, and made his footstool. {a} {See Trapp (for summary of Law) on "Ex 20:17"}

{a} Diod. Sic., lib. xvii.

Ver. 8. Remember the Sabbath day.] He saith not, The seventh day from the creation, but the day of religious rest; such is now our Christian Sabbath, called a "Sabbath day" by our Saviour, {#Mt 24:20} who is "Lord of this Sabbath," called therefore the Lord's day, {#Re 1:10} as one of our sacraments is called "the Lord's supper," {#1Co 11:20} and "the table of the Lord," {#1Co 10:21} because instituted by him. Pope Sylvester presumed to alter the Christian Sabbath, decreeing that Thursday should be kept through the whole year; because on that day Christ ascended, and on that instituted the blessed sacrament of his body and blood. {a} And generally Papists press the sanctification of the Sabbath as a mere human institution in religious worship; an ordinance of the Church; and do in their celebration more solemnly observe the festivals of the saints, than the Lord's Sabbaths, making it as Bacchus's orgies, &c., that, according to what their practice is, it may more fitly be styled, Dies daemoniacus quam Dominicus, the devil's day than God's.

To keep it holy.] Let every one of us keep the Sabbath spiritually, saith Ignatius, -μελετη {β} νομου χαιρων ου σωματος ανεσει, -rejoicing in the meditation of Christ's law, more than in the rest of our bodies. The ox and ass must rest; we must consecrate a rest: as God on the seventh day rested not from his works of preservation.

Ver. 9. Six shalt thou labour.] God hath reserved but one day in seven, as he reserved the tree of knowledge of good and evil; {#Ge 2:2,3} yet wretched men must needs clip the Lord's coin. In many places God's Sabbaths are made the voider and dunghill for all refuse businesses. The Sabbath of the Lord, the sanctified day of his rest, saith one, is shamelessly troubled and disquieted. The world is now grown perfectly profane, saith another, and can play on the Lord's day without concern. {a} {See Trapp (for summary of Law) on "Ex 20:17"}

{a} Bishop King, On John, lect. vii.

Ver. 10. But the seventh day.] Or, A seventh day. Not only Hebrews, but also Greeks and Barbarians, did rest from work on the seventh day: witness Josephus, Clemens Alexand., and Eusebius. That which they tell us of the river Sabbatius, its resting, and not running on that day, I look upon as fabulous.

Thou shalt not do any work.] Only works of piety, of charity, and of necessity may be done on the Sabbath day. He that but gathered sticks was paid home with stones. The first blow given the German Churches was upon the Sabbath day, which they carelessly observed. Prague was lost upon that day. {a}

Thou, nor thy son, &c.] Every mother's child. The baser sort of people in Sweden do always break the Sabbath, saying, that it is for gentlemen to keep that day. {b}

{c} Sir H. Spelman, in Concil.

Ver. 11. For in six days.] God took six days to make the world in, to the end that we might be in a muse when we think of it; and think on his works in that order that he made them.

And rested the seventh day.] Not as tired out—for he made all without either tool or toil; his Fiat only did the deed—but to give us example, as #Joh 13:15.

Wherefore the Lord blessed, &c.] How God esteemeth the strict observation of the Sabbath day, may appear by the exact delivery of it. For he hath fenced it about, like mount Sinai, with marks and bounds, that profaneness might not approach it: (1.) By his watchword, "Remember"; (2.) By his bounty, "Six days," &c.; (3.) By his sovereignty, "It is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God"; (4.) By the latitude, "Thou, nor thy son," &c.; (5.) By his own example, "And he rested the seventh day"; (6.) By his benediction, as here, "He blessed it," and ordained it to be a means of much blessing to those that observe it. Add hereunto, that God hath placed this command in the midst of the Decalogue, betwixt the two tables; as much conducing to the keeping of both. It stands like the sensus communis, between the inward and outward senses, being serviceable to both. {a}

And hallowed it.] Diem septimam opifex, ut mundi natalem, sibi SACRAVIT. {See Trapp (for summary of Law) on "Ex 20:17"}

Ver. 12. Honour thy father, &c.] Philo well! observeth, that this fifth commandment, which therefore he maketh a branch of the first table, and so divides the tables equally, is a mixed commandment, εντολη μικτη; and differs somewhat from the rest of those in the second table. They consider man as our neighbour, in nature like us: this, as God's deputy, by him set over us, and in his name, and by his authority, performing offices about us.

That thy days may be long.] A good child lengtheneth his father's days; therefore God promiseth to lengthen his. Ill children, as they bring their parents' "gray hairs with sorrow to the grave"; so they are many times cut off in the midst of their days, as Abimelech was: God rendering upon him the evil that he did to his father. {#Jud 9:56} Besides the punishment they have in their posterity, to whom they have been peremptores potius quam parentes. {a} One complained, that never father had so undutiful a child as he had: yes, said his son, with less grace than truth, my grandfather had. {See Trapp (for summary of Law) on "Ex 20:17"}

Ver. 13. Thou shalt not kill.] A crying sin. {#Ge 4:8-12 23,24} For the which God makes inquisition, {#Ps 9:12} and strangely brings it to light. It was a saying of King James, that if God did allow him to kill a man, he would think God did not love him. {See Trapp (for summary of Law) on "Ex 20:17"}

Ver. 14. Thou shalt not commit adultery.] Adultery only is named; because bestiality, sodomy, and other unclcannesses, though more heinous, yet they do not directly fight against the purity of posterity and human society, which the law mainly respects. {See Trapp (for summary of Law) on "Ex 20:17"}

Ver. 15. Thou shalt not steal,] i.e., Not rob or wrong another, either by force or fraud {a} {#1Th 4:6} {See Trapp on "1Th 4:6"} Basil chargeth the devil as a thief of the truth, in that he had decked his crows with her feathers. And it was of the devil surely that she had learned her answer, who, being charged by her mistress for stealing her linens, and other things which she found in her trunk, said, that she stole them not: and when she was asked, How came they to be laid and locked up there? did not you do this? No, said she, it was not I, but sin that dwelleth in me. {b} {See Trapp (for summary of Law) on "Ex 20:17"}

Ver. 16. Thou shalt not bear false witness.] Neither bear it, nor hear it; raise, nor receive wrong reports of another; {#De 19:16} make a lie, nor love it when it is made. {#Re 22:15} The truth must be spoken, and that in love. Doeg had a false tongue, though he spoke nothing but truth against David. {#Ps 120:3} {See Trapp (for summary of Law) on "Ex 20:17"}

Ver. 17. Thou shalt not covet.] {See Trapp on "Ro 7:7"} {See Trapp on "Heb 13:5"} One observeth that the word Concupisco, here used, is inceptive; to show that the very first motion is sin, though no consent be yielded.

Thy neighbour's house.] House is here first set, as that which holds and harbours all the rest. Neither will a wise man take a wife before he hath a house. Birds will not couple till their nest be ready.

To these ten words, written by God himself in the day of the assembly, divines have reduced those other laws, moral, judicial, and ceremonial, written by Moses. {#Ex 34:27,28 De 10:4} And herein Alstedius, that excellent methodist, hath, in his "Harmonia Mosaica," as in all those brief but pithy notes upon the Pentateuch, done the Church of Christ singular good service; whom therefore—for a preface to that which follows in the opening of this and the three next books, and for the use of my English reader—I have abridged, translated and the same here inserted.

SECTION I.

Of reducing all the Moral Laws to the Decalogue.

To the first commandment belong laws that concern faith, hope, and love to God.

First, Faith: as, that there is but one God, and three Persons, Jehovah Elohim; that he will send them a Prophet greater than Moses; {#De 18:15} that he is to be honoured with our confidence, patience, and inward worship, Next, Hope: of favour, grace, and glory.

Thirdly, Love to God with the whole heart; filial fear, humble prayer, holy vows, constant care to avoid idolising the creature, seeking to the devil, tempting of God, listening to seducers, &c.

To the second commandment belong laws made against gross idolatry, will worship, &c., and for right worship.

To the third pertain laws for prayer, thanksgiving, oaths, lots, blasphemies, worthy walking, &c.

To the fourth, all laws of sanctifying the Sabbath.

To the fifth, of honouring and reverencing parents, princes, elders, &c., and of punishing rebellious children.

To the sixth may be reduced all laws concerning murder, revenge, rancour, smiting, fighting, cursing the deaf, laying a block before the blind, &c.

To the seventh, all that is said against fornication, adultery, sodomy, incest, wearing the apparel of the other sex.

To the eighth, laws against robbery, rapine, usury, sacrilege, detaining wages or pledges, removing landmarks, accepting of persons, taking of gifts, false weights, &c.

To the ninth belong laws against backbiting, tale bearing, false witnessing, judging, not admonishing, &c.

To the tenth no laws are referred: because it is wholly spiritual, and hath no visible violations.

SECTION II.

Of reducing Judicial Laws to the Decalogue.

To the first commandment: It was death, (1.) To deny obedience to the priest, who was a type of Christ; (2.) To persuade apostasy from the true God; (3.) To seek to witches and wizards.

It was likewise unlawful to make a covenant with the Canaanites, whom God had cursed: to make mixtures of divers kinds of creatures, &c.: whereby they are taught sincerity in religion and conversation.

To the second commandment: God commanded to abolish images, pictures, idolatrous temples, altars, groves, &c., and forbade them, upon pain of death, to bow to sun, moon, or any other strange gods; because Moses's polity could not consist of true worshippers and professed idolaters.

To the third commandment: There were two kinds of blasphemy or cursing of God; whether it were mediate or immediate, direct or indirect; one proceeding of infirmity and impatience, the other of malice and obstinacy. This latter was to be punished with stoning:

that former with some corporeal punishment; as beating, boring the tongue, &c.

To the fourth commandment: The wilful profanation of the Sabbath was punished with death. Tithes, offerings, firstfruits, firstlings, and the like, were commanded by God, as part of the priests' maintenance, due to them by the very law of nature. And the same custom is at this day commendably kept up, there not being a more equal and easy way of maintaining the ministers of the Church, and so of upholding the Church's ministry.

To the fifth commandment: Wrong done to a parent, whether by striking or cursing, is parricide, and to be punished with death: so is wrong offered to the chief magistrate; this is treason. Parents had power to command and correct their children, yea, in some cases, to sell them to their brethren the Israelites, and to sue out a writ of execution against them, if uncounselable and incorrigible.

The privilege of primogeniture made for the honour of the family, and prefigured Christ.

The chief magistrate is both ordained and ordered by God. {#De 17:15} Inferior magistrates must neither be strangers, nor eunuchs, nor bastards, nor Ammonites, nor Moabites. {#De 23:1-3} But they must be men of courage, fearing God, &c.

To the sixth commandment: Four sorts of capital punishments were in use among God's people; viz., stoning, burning, beheading, and strangling. Execution was done either by the whole people, or else some deputed thereunto.

Man slaughter was committed either by man or beast. If by a man, either it was voluntary, and that was punished with death: or involuntary, and in that case they had their cities of refuge: these prefigured Christ, our sole sanctuary of safety. But if by a beast, the beast was stoned, as also the master of the beast, if done by his default.

Blows that caused loss of limbs were punished with the like loss; or if not, with a reasonable recompense.

Violence offered to a woman pregnant with child, so as she lost her fruit, was death: but if she were not pregnant, it was only a money fine.

God straitly charged them to abstain from the use of beasts' blood; that they might learn to abstain much more from shedding man's blood.

Lepers were to live apart, lest the sound should be infected: and to intimate the contagiousness of sin. #Ex 20:17

A Jewish servant, if he should not go free at the year of jubilee, was to be bored in the ear with an awl, and to live and die with his master.

Hereto also pertain their laws for war: as, that newly married men, timorous persons, and ploughmen should be excused; that a soldier should be twenty years of age at least; that the general should desire passage through his brother's country; that he should send forth spies; offer peace; lead on his soldiers; use stratagems; spare fruit trees; equally divide the spoil; reserve a part thereof for God; see that the camp be kept clean from sin, &c.

To the seventh commandment: Adultery was death: and, in the high priest's daughter, fornication was burning; because he was a special type of Christ, and therefore his family should be without blame or blemish.

Sodomy and bestiality were likewise death: so was the deflouring of an espoused virgin, and a rape. The priest might not marry any but a virgin. The price of a harlot might not be brought into the sanctuary. Polygamy and divorce were permitted only, and not commanded.

Marrying with the brother's widow was peculiar to the Old Testament.

They were to marry within their own tribes; because our Lord was to spring of the tribe of Judah.

He that defiled a virgin, was both to marry her, and to endow her, so that he had her parents' consent thereunto.

The prohibited degrees both of consanguinity and affinity are moral, and grounded upon very good reason. {#Le 16 Le 20}

To the eighth commandment: Kidnapping, sacrilege, and compound theft were punished with death. Usury is condemned by the law of God.

The law for things borrowed, deposited, intrusted, lent, or found, is grounded upon this rule. He that marreth another man's goods robbeth him.

God would not have any poor—that is, sturdy beggars—amongst his people.

To the ninth commandment: Hereunto belong the laws for ecclesiastical and civil judgments.

SECTION III.

Of the Signification of the Ceremonial Laws; and first, for Holy Places.

These laws concern either holy places, times, things, or persons.

The general law for holy places was, that in that place only that God should choose, holy services should be performed. And this signified, (1.) That through Christ alone we must go to God in every divine duty; (2.) That the time shall come when we shall enjoy the immediate presence of God in heaven.

The special law was, as touching the tabernacle, a lively type of Christ, and of the Church, and of each Christian.

Now in the tabernacle are considerable, (1.) The causes, and (2.) The parts thereof. The causes that concurred to the making of it up, are,

1. The matter; which was various, voluntary, and sufficient. This figured that freewill offering wherewith every man ought to honour God, by trading with his talent, and by doing what he is able for the maintenance of the ministry, and relief of the needy.
2. The form: and so the tabernacle was to be made according to the pattern received in the mount. To teach us, that God will be served according to his own prescript only, and not after man's inventions.
3. The efficient, was every skilful workman, and by name Bezaleel and Aholiab. These latter figured out the Church's chieftains and master builders; as those former, all gifted ministers.

These were the causes of the tabernacle: the parts thereof, as well containing as contained, follow. These all were so framed as that they might easily be set up or taken down, and so transported from place to place: whereby was signified, that while we are in this tabernacle of the body—which shall be taken down by death, and set up again by the resurrection—we are absent from the Lord; and that the whole Church not only is a stranger upon earth, but also moveth from one place to another, as God disposeth it.

The covering of the tabernacle set forth that the Church and her members do ever sit safe under God's protection.

The court made up of various pillars, signified that the Church, in regard of the ministry therein, is the pillar of truth; and that the offices and abilities of the several members ought to be as props to the whole body.

The holy instruments and implements served to set forth all the precious gifts and ordinances of the Church; such as are the word, sacraments, faith, holiness, &c.

The taches, whereby the curtains were knit together, signified that the various members of the Church militant and triumphant are but one tabernacle.

The covering of the tabernacle was twofold, inward and outward; whereby was signified the internal and external estate of the Church.

The glorious gate signified the hearts of God's people made glorious by faith, whereby we entertain Christ.

The tabernacle fitly knit together by its joints, and rightly erected, signified the Church of Christ fitly compacted by that which every joint supplieth, and making increase with the increase of God. {#Eph 4:16 Col 2:19}

The veil signified the flesh of Christ, whereby his deity was covered, and a way paved for us to heaven.

The veil was filled with cherubims: to show how serviceable the angels are to Christ and his people.

The Holy of Holies shadowed out the third heaven, into the which Christ only entered and we by him.

The ark of the covenant covered with gold, figured Christ, in whom the Godhead dwelleth bodily; and in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom, &c.

The testimony laid up in the ark signified Christ, the end of the law; which also hath its testimony from him.

The golden censer signified that all our services must be perfumed, and perfected by Christ, before they can be accepted.

The golden pot of manna in the side of the ark was a sacrament of that eternal life that is laid up for us in Christ. {#Col 3:3}

Aaron's rod blossoming was a sign of God's fatherly affection, whereby it comes to pass that we bloom and flourish under the cross.

The sanctuary, or tabernacle of the congregation, was the way into the Holy of Holies; and signified the Church militant, through which we enter into heaven.

The brazen altar for burnt offerings shadowed out the humanity of Christ, which is sanctified by his deity, and supported under all his sufferings for us.

The altar of incense signified that Christ appeareth for us before his Father, and maketh all our services accepted by the sacrifice of himself, once offered for sin.

The table furnished with so many loaves as there were tribes in Israel, signified that God keeps a constant table in his Church for all believers.

The golden candlestick with its seven lamps, figured the glorious light of the gospel, whereby "God hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." {#2Co 4:6}

The laver wherein the priests washed themselves before they ministered in the tabernacle, signified that we cannot draw nigh to God in his services without due preparation.

The outer court signified the visible Church, wherein hypocrites also partake of external privileges.

Lo, these are the things typed out by the tabernacle: and they cannot be better understood than by God's own interpretation of them, when he saith, "Let them make me a sanctuary, that may dwell in the midst of them." {#Ex 25:8} For in those words, as learned Junius observeth, is contained an explication of all the above said ceremonies.

SECTION IV.

Treating of Holy Times.

Concerning holy times, the law is either general or special.

The general law is, partly concerning the most strict rest from all servile works; and partly concerning the sacrifices which were on those holy days to be offered. The former figured that rest where unto God in his due time will bring us.

The latter served not only to exercise the Jews, prone to excess, with the hard yoke of great expense; but also, by the great charge they were at, to shadow out the great worth of Christ, far beyond all worldly treasures.

The special law concerned, (1.) Holy days; (2.) Holy years. Holy days were either daily portion, or solemn. And these latter were partly the new moons, partly the Sabbaths, and partly the feasts; which feasts were either more solemn, as the passover, pentecost, and feast of tabernacles; or less solemn, as the feast of trumpets, and the feast of atonement.

Holy years were, (1.) The Sabbatical or seventh year; or, (2.) The jubilee or fiftieth year. The explication of all these is as followeth:—
1. The continual sacrifice was offered twice every day, that the people might, every morning and evening, be admonished of their sin guiltiness: and, with it, might be exercised in the remembrance and belief of the continual sacrifice of Christ for their sin. It signified also our daily service, or continual sacrifice of praise and holiness, offered up to God in the name of Christ.

2. The new moon sacrifice served to set forth that all our time, and actions done therein, are sanctified unto us by Christ.

3. The Sabbath was a memorial of the creation: it was also a type partly of Christ's resting in the grave, and partly of our rest in Christ; the beginning whereof we have here, the perfection of it in heaven. And whereas special order was taken that no fire should be kindled on that day; it was to signify that Christ's rest, and ours in him, was, and should be, free from the fire of affliction.
4. The holy feasts were, in general, appointed for these ends and uses, (1.) To distinguish the people of God from other nations; (2.) To keep afoot the remembrance of benefits already received; (3.) To be a type and figure of benefits yet further to be conferred upon them by Christ; (4.) To unite God's people in holy worships; (5.) To preserve purity in holy worships prescribed by God.
5. The passover of those that were clean, celebrated in the beginning of the year, figured out the time, manner, and fruit of Christ's passion. The passover kept by those that had been unclean, signified that Christ profiteth not sinners as long as they persist in their uncleanness; and so it figured out the time of repentance.
6. At the feast of pentecost there was a day of waving and of offering the firstfruits. The former signified that the handful of our fruits—that is, our faith and good works—are not accepted of God, unless they be waved by Christ our High Priest. The latter, that God's blessings are to be joyfully and thankfully received and remembered.
7. The feast of tabernacles, besides that it brought to mind the Israelites' wandering in the wilderness, did notably set forth the Church's pilgrimage in this present world; which yet is so to be thought on, as that, with greatest spiritual joy, we remember and celebrate our redemption by Christ's death.
8. The feast of trumpets signified that continual cause of cheerfulness and thankfulness that the saints should have by Christ's death.
9. The feast of atonement signified that the sins of God's people in their holy meetings and daily services should be expiated by Christ. Moreover, atonement was also made for the most holy place and for the sanctuary. That signified that the visible heaven also was defiled by our sin, and need he purged by Christ's blood. This, that the Catholic Church is, by the same blood of Christ, made alone acceptable to God. By the application that was made for several persons was set forth the applicatory force of faith. Furthermore, that application and expiation was made by a live and a slain goat. Upon the live goat, called the scapegoat, were put the offences of the children of Israel, and the goat thus ceremonially laden, was let go into the wilderness: the other goat was set apart for a whole burnt-offering. The former ceremony signified that the Son of God came down from heaven into the wilderness of this world, that he might take away the sins of the world. The latter shadowed out the blood of Christ, which alone cleanseth us from all sin.

10. The seventh-year Sabbath had both an ecclesiastical and a civil use. For, (1.) It did set forth and commend to the people the spiritual Sabbath, which beginneth in the expiation wrought by Christ; (2.) It distinguished this nation from others; (3.) It exercised the people in confidence of God's providence; (4.) It much conduced to the fruitfulness of the fields, which, if exhausted with continual tillage, would have grown barren, and so an evil report would have passed of the Holy Land.
11. The years of jubilee had their ecclesiastical, political, and chronological use. For, (1.) They signified the jubilee of grace and glory; both which Christ doth both proclaim and confer upon his people; (2.) They were a great help to the poor; (3.) They preserved the distinction of tribes; (4.) They served to distinguish the times thenceforth, from the division of the land, in the year of the world 2559 (1445 BC), to the destruction of Jerusalem; (5.) They figured the rest that the land should have by the just judgments of God for the sins of the people.

SECTION V.

Treating of Holy Things.

Holy things were either common, as oil; or proper: and these again were either principal, or less principal. The principal things were sacrifices; the requisites whereof were three—viz., fire, salt, and fat. The kinds of sacrifices were six—viz., (1.) A whole burnt-offering; (2.) An oblation or meatoffering; (3.) A peace-offering; (4.) A sacrifice for sin of ignorance or error; (5.) A sacrifice for wilful I wickedness; (6.) A sacrifice of consecration. The less principal things pertained either to all in general, as first-fruits, tenths, vows, &c.; or to the priest peculiarly, as incense, holy water, trumpets. The application of these is thus:—

1. Oil is said to be a most holy thing, because use was made of it in the consecration of the tabernacles, priests, and people. It figured out the oil of gladness—that is, the gifts of the Holy Ghost which Christ received without measure, and after that, by him, all the parts of the Church, both pastors and all Christians; for all and only such are anointed with the oil of gladness. Now this oil was so made up of most precious things, and the confection thereof by none to be imitated, as might best set forth that reprobates are not consecrated with the anointing of God's children.
2. The fire that came down from heaven, and was to be continually kept alive, signified four things:—(1.) The fire of God's wrath kindled and kept in by our sins; (2.) The fire of God's favour, whereby our sins are consumed in Christ; (3) The fire of the Holy Spirit's operation upon all believers, but especially upon the apostles and their successors; (4.) Lastly, the fire of tribulation, which causeth us to aspire towards heaven.
3. The salt of the covenant was a symbol of incorruption—that is, of perpetual continuance in the covenant of God. And so it signified that every faithful Christian is so confirmed in the covenant of God by faith, that, by the salt of affliction, he is preserved against temptations and assaults of all sorts.
4. The fat of the sacrifices was holy to God alone: and hereby was signified that we ought to consecrate our choicest things to God; that so we may obtain the fatness and sweetness both of grace and gloW laid up for us in Christ.

5. A right common to all sacrifices offered up of living creatures, was the sprinkling of the blood by the priest upon the altar. Hereby was signified the blood of Christ, who is at once our priest, altar, and sacrifice. Those great drops of his blood, I say, are hereby signified, wherewith believers' hearts, which also are so many altars, are sprinkled.
6. The whole burnt sacrifice was an offering whereby the sacrificer testified that he gave himself up wholly to Christ; and that he believed that Christ was his with all his benefits; as also that he was all a-light with the flame of the fire of charity.
7. In the meat-offering it was not lawful to offer leaven, or anything that leaveneth, as honey: whereby was signified that corruption, at once in doctrine, life, and discipline, is to be put far away, if we 'would offer up ourselves to God.
8. In peace-offerings, leavened bread also was made use of: that, together with our cheerful praising of God, we may remember our afflictions, the property whereof is to leaven the heart. {#Ps 73:21}
9. The waving of some part of the sacrifice in meat-offerings and peace-offerings, signified the continual motion of our lips in prayers and praises.
10. The sacrifice for errors and infirmities, signified that all our sins are mortal, and cannot be pardoned but through Christ alone..
11. The sacrifice of consecration showed the difference between the Levitical priests and Christ—viz., that they had need to offer for their own sins; but he for the sins of his people only.

And these are the ceremonial sacrifices: all which signified the sacrifice of Christ, and the sacrifices of Christians; such as are all their moral works proceeding from faith—viz., a contrite spirit, alms, prayer, &c. And lastly, that offering up of the Gentiles mentioned by the apostle in #Ro 15:16.

Furthermore, in all sacrifices, clean things only were to be offered: whereby was signified the purity of Christ and of all his members. Like as the offering of doves signified that dove-like simplicity of Christ and his people: which simplicity proceedeth from the Holy Ghost, who is also represented by the dove.

12. Firstfruits were holy to God: and thereby all a man's substance also was made holy. This signified, (1.) That the holiness of Christ was the holiness of the whole Church; (2.) That the children of believing parents are holy.
13. Tithes, by divine ceremonial right, belonged to the priests for their maintenance: but by moral right they were holy to God; who by this means required to be acknowledged the Owner and Giver of all good things. In the New Testament, tithes, though they be not of necessity, yet are they of perpetual equity, as to the maintenance of the ministry.
14. The tenth of the tithes, which the Levites out of their tithes offered to the high priest, signified the prerogative of Christi in whom we are all tithed.
15. The ceremonial vow, and the redemption thereof, was part of the worship of God: yet without opinion of satisfaction and merit: this then makes nothing at all for those that now-a-days impose upon the people laws of vows, and redemption of vows, with an opinion of necessity, satisfaction, and merit. Vows are a service pleasing to God, so they be made and used freely; as exercises of piety, and as helps thereunto. The same may be said of things devoted.
16. Novals were the fruits of trees, which for the three first years being accounted as uncircumcised, were in the fourth year offered up to the Lord; to teach us that all our food is uncircumcised unto us by reason of sin, but is circumcised by faith in Christ; being received with praying and thanksgiving.

17. The holy perfume figured the grace of the Holy Ghost, wherewith the services of the saints are sanctified.
18. The holy water of atonement was a figure of that blessed fountain of Christ's blood, ever running for the washing away of the filth of sin.
19. The burning of the sacrifices signified Christ burnt in the fire of his Father's wrath for our sins: but the burning of the garbage and excrements shadowed out the crucifying of the old man. Lastly, those things that were not to be burnt noted the victory of Christ and of our faith.
20. The two trumpets of silver were used by the priest for causes ecclesiastical and civil. As to the former, they blew to call an assembly, and to rejoice spiritually; and this they did without an alarm. As to the latter, they sounded to go forward, or to go forth to battle; and this was done with an alarm. By all which was signified the glorious instancy and efficacy of God's faithful ministers in reprovng sin, in preaching the glad tidings of salvation, and in stirring up men to the spiritual warfare.

SECTION VI.

Of Holy Persons.

Holy persons are considered either in general or more particularly.

That which is to be taken notice of in the general is, that God would not approve of any work but what was done by a sacred person. To teach us that good works please not God, unless the man that doeth them be first justified.

More particularly, holy persons were either those that served at the altar, or other holy ones. Those that served at the altar were the high priest, the rest of the priests, and the Levites. Those other holy ones were the Nazarites, and clean persons. Let us view them severally.

1. The office of the priest was to offer sacrifice, and to pray for the people: hereby was signified the merit and intercession of Jesus Christ.
2. The consecration of the priests, and their freedom from all bodily blemish, signified the holiness of Christ, both habitual and actual.
3. The holy garments, and their stately bravery, signified the beauty and bravery of Christ and his Church. {#Ps 45}
4. The anointing of the high priest signified the anointing and appointing of Christ to his office of Mediator.
5. The holy abstinence of the priests signified the actual holiness of Christ.
6. The high priest was a lively type of Jesus Christ, as the apostle excellently sets forth in his Epistle to the Hebrews. The other priests represented our dignity in Christ, and our duty toward him. {#1Pe 2:5 Re 1:5,6} The high priest shadowed out both the person and the office of Christ. His person, as he was a man like unto other men, and yet superior to them in office and ornaments: which ornaments did thus represent the threefold office of Christ. The bells and pomegranates hanging at the hem of his garment, signified the prophetic office of Christ. The plate of gold, whereupon was engraven HOLINESS TO THE LORD, signified his priestly office. The bonnet, mitre, upon the high priest's head, typified his kingly office. Other ornaments, common to the high priest with the rest of the priests, signified partly the gifts of grace, and partly the Christian armour, which the apostle describeth {#Eph 6:11-17} as consisting in the girdle of truth, the breastplate of righteousness, &c.
7. Those twelve precious stones in the breastplate were a type of the old and new Church; that consisting of twelve tribes, and this collected by twelve apostles. Those two precious stones in the shoulderpiece, figured likewise those two Churches, as they have the two Testaments. Those two precious stones in the breastplate of judgment, the Urim and Thummim, were a type of Christ, who is our only light and perfection.

8. There was but one high priest: there is but "One Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus." {#1Ti 2:5}
9. The priests only did partake of the sacrifices; so Christians only have communion with Christ.
10. Aaron bore the names of the children of Israel before the Lord. So doth Christ his Church, and all the members thereof; for whom he continually appears in heaven.
11. The binding of woven work strengthened the robe that it might not be rent. This signified the righteousness and strength of Christ for the salvation of his people, and subversion of his enemies.
12. When Aaron entered into the holy places, his bells gave a sound. Hereby was signified Christ's intercession for us, the Spirit's making request in us, and the duty and property of all faithful pastors.
13. The high priest might not marry any but a virgin from among his own people. This figured that the Church was to be presented unto Christ as a pure virgin.
14. The high priest was forbidden to lament or to rend his garments: so Christ after his resurrection obtained glory and joy, without any mixture of grief or ignominy.
15. The priests and Levites that served at the tabernacle figured the ecclesiastical hierarchy, as it admits of divers orders and degrees.
16. The Nazarite's vow was to separate himself unto the Lord by a special holiness. Hereby was signified the purity of Christ, and withal his country of Nazareth, by an illusion of name.

17. Those that were legally unclean, either by meats, or carcasses of men, or leprosy, were first separated, and then cleansed. In like sort, all our sins, of what size soever, do separate us from God, and some of them from his Church also; being all expiated in and by Christ alone.
18. The uncleanness of childbearing women set forth the filth of natural corruption.
19. The casting of lepers out of the camp was a figure of excommunication.
20. The house and all the goods of lepers were unclean, and therefore either burnt or destroyed: to teach us to abolish all instruments of idolatry.
21. Lepers, after they were cleansed, showed themselves to the priest, who was to pronounce them clean. This was a type of church absolution.
22. The leper being cleansed, was to offer two little birds; whereof the one was killed, the other was let go free. Hereby was figured the death of Christ, and the power of his Godhead in his resurrection and ascension.
23. Unclean meats were a part of the Jewish pedagogy, and signified that there is a mixture of clean and unclean persons in the Church. It further figured that distinction of Jews from Gentiles—which distinction is now taken away by Christ. {#Ac 10} Hitherto Alstedius. Now let us proceed, and go on where we left, in explaining the text.

Ver. 18. They removed, &c.,] viz., From the hill foot, where they stood and trembled. {#De 4:11} They feared and fled. Man is ζῶον φιλοζῶον, {a} a creature that would fain live.

{a} Aristot.

Ver. 19. Speak thou with us.] See here what a mercy it is to have the mind of God made known by men like ourselves; that may say unto us, as Elihu did to Job, "Behold, I am according to thy wish in God's stead: I also am cut out of the clay. Behold, my terror shall not make thee afraid, neither shall my hand be heavy upon thee." {#Job 33:6,7}

Ver. 20. Fear not.] And yet fear. Fear not this glorious appearance so much: but let it bring your cogitations to his future fearful appearance.

Ver. 21. Stood afar off.] Yea, God, tendering their infirmity, gave them leave to go home to their tents. {#De 5:30,31}

Ver. 22. From heaven.] For wheresoever God is, heaven is: as where the king is, there is the court.

Ver. 23. Ye shall not male with me gods.] Say we of such petty deities as that heathen did, Contemno minutulos istos deos, modo Iovem (Iehovam) mihi propitium habeam. I slight them all.

Ver. 24. An altar of earth.] In opposition to the costly shrines and services of those dunghill deities. God cares not for outward pomp: Popery is all for it, and scoffs at our simplicity. The God of the Protestants, saith a blasphemous popeling, is the most uncivil and unmannered God of all those that have borne the names of gods upon earth; yea, worse than Pan, the god of the clowns, which can endure no ceremonies, nor good manners at all. {a}

{a} John Hunt, in his Appeal to King James, cap. 6.

Ver. 25. Thou hast polluted.] Not polished it. So in preaching. {#1Co 2:4,5} Epistolae ornamentum est ornamentis carere: Plainness commends an epistle. {a} Nimio mundo studentes, ab immundo propius absunt. {b} Some mar all by over doing it.

{a} Politian.

{b} Colerus.

Ver. 26. That thy nakedness.] We blush when taken naked, as if the blood would run forth to cover us. What beasts, then, were those priests of Priapus, and those base Bacchanalists, that ran up and down naked!

Chapter 21

Ver. 1. Now these are the judgments,] i.e., The judicial laws, fitly annexed to the Decalogue, whereof the civil magistrate is the lord-keeper. It was written upon the sword of Charles the Great, Decem praeceptorum custos Carolus.

Ver. 2. In the seventh year.] No longer might they serve, because they were God's servants; {#Le 25:42} whose privilege, see in #Isa 65:13,14 Christ's "freemen." {#1Co 7:22}

Ver. 3. If he came in by himself,] Without a second-self, a yoke fellow, standing on even ground with himself, though drawing on the left side.

Ver. 4. Have given him a wife,] viz., One of his heathen handmaids, whom to part with was no great punishment, because an unlawful couple.

Ver. 5. I love my master.] A little better than he in Plautus, that said, Ego non servio libenter; herus meus me non habet libenter, tamen utitur me ut lippis oculis.

Ver. 6. And he shall serve him.] Being υπερετης και οργανον και ολως εκεινου, as Aristotle hath it; the master's instrument, underling, and wholly his. He doeth his own, and not his master's will, that doeth no more than himself will: this is a holiday servant, as they say.

Ver. 7. She shall not go out.] But upon better terms. He that was to come "in the form of a servant," {#Php 2:7} see what care he takes of poor servants' welfare. Lawyers seldom speak but for great men, or when they may have great gifts. Christ is not of that humour.

Ver. 8. He hath dealt deceitfully with her.] By not answering her expectation. This God tolerated for the hardness of their hearts, but approved not.

Ver. 9. After the manner of daughters.] Not put her off, as they say they do their daughters in Hungary, without a portion, only with a new coat at their wedding: much less set her to sale, as the Thracians did their young brides; quae non moribus nubebant, sed praemiis.

{a} Solin, cap. 15.

Ver. 10. Her duty of marriage.] See #1Co 7:5, {See Trapp on "1Co 7:5"}

Ver. 11. And if he do not these three unto her.] Picus est imago ingrati mariti, quia sub autumnum eiecit coniugem, ne cogatur per hyemem nutrire: postea sub vernum tempus eam ad se blande revocat, ac in consortium recipit. {a}

{a} Melancthon.

Ver. 12. Shall be surely put to death.] {See Trapp on "Ge 9:6"}

Ver. 13. But God deliver him.] Who is the Lord of our lives, and to whom we have frequently forfeited them; so that it is his mercy that we are not consumed; {#La 3:22} that we are not cut off from the land of the living.

Ver. 14, Thou shalt take him, &c.] "A man that doeth violence to the blood of any person shall flee to the pit; let none stay him"; -where {#Pr 28:17} the word Adam, rendered man, hath in the original a little d, to show that a murderer is not worthy to be called a man; -he is to be drawn from the altar to the slaughter. {Hebrew Text Note}

Ver. 15. He that smiteth.] By the law of God, of nature, and of nations, such a man should die. And herein, I think, our laws are defective: albeit, I am not of Carolostadius's mind, who, if Melancthon misreport him not, held that these judicial laws set down by Moses should be still of force, and these only, in Christian commonwealths, and all other civil and municipal laws abolished. Our English Alfred I cannot but commend for his piety, in that he began his common laws with the ten commandments. {a}

{a} Lombard.

Ver. 16. He that stealeth a man.] Akin to these are they that steal other men's books, and father them, setting them out in their own names. Diagoras was so served by a plagiary, which, when he saw, and that the thief was not presently struck with a thunderbolt, he, out of stomach, turned atheist. Thus, of late, Fabricius stole Tremelius's Syriac translation. Villavincencius stole Hyperius's treatise, "De Ratione Studii Theologici." And Possevinus stole Dr James's "Cyprianus Redivivus."

Ver. 17. And he that curseth.] {See Trapp on "Ex 21:15"} {See Trapp on "Mt 15:4"}

Ver. 18. If men strive together.] This is counted manhood, when indeed it is doghood rather: heathens condemned it; {a} and yet Navarrus, a Popish casuist, Caedem recte admitti putat, ut alapa vitetur, et ad honorem recuperandum.

{a} Qui ulciscitur, excusatus peccat. -Ibid.

Ver. 19. Upon his staff.] See #2Sa 3:29 Zec 8:4.

Ver. 20. He shall be surely punished.] At the discretion of the magistrate, who is the "revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil." {#Ro 13:4}

Ver. 21. For he is his money.] And therefore he hath power over his flesh. {#Col 3:22} Yet "hide not thine eyes from thine own flesh," saith the prophet. {#Isa 58:7}

Ver. 22. And yet no mischief follow,] i.e., No life be lost. There is a time, then, when the embryo is not alive; therefore the soul is not begotten, but infused after a time by God. Infundendo creatur, et creando infunditur, saith Augustine, who at first doubted, till overcome by Jerome's arguments.

Ver. 23. And if any mischief follow.] Either by death or maim, either of mother or child.

Ver. 24. Eye for eye.] How the Pharisees had wrested that text. {See Trapp on "Mt 5:39"} This kind of law, in use among heathens also, Aristotle calls το αντιπεπονθος and was given against private revenge.

Ver. 26. And if a man smite the eye of his servant.] Think the same, saith Aben Ezra, of the other principal members, which the Jews call capita membrorum: these are the ten fingers, the ten toes, the two ears, the nose, and the yard.

Ver. 28. Then the ox shall be surely stoned.] God requiring man's blood even of beasts. {#Ge 9:5} {See Trapp on "Ge 9:5"}

Ver. 29. That he hath killed a man, &c.] Since the fall, all creatures are armed against us; as that sword which Hector gave Ajax: which so long as he used against men, his enemies, served for help and defence: but after he began to abuse it to the hurt of hurtless beasts, it turned into his own bowels.

Ver. 30. Sum of money.] Taxed upon him by the next of kin, or, if he be unreasonable, by the judge. {#Ex 21:22}

Ver. 31. A son or a daughter.] A little one, and in his minority, as Puerilitas est periculorum pelagus.

Ver. 32. Thirty shekels.] This same was that "goodly price" that our Lord Christ was valued at by the vile Jews. {#Zec 11:12,13 Mt 26:15}

Ver. 33. And an ox or an ass.] We can hardly open the deep pit of God's bottomless, boundless mercy, but some silly beast will be falling thereinto; "stumbling at the word, being disobedient, whereunto also they were appointed." {#1Pe 2:8}

Ver. 34. The owner of the pit shall make it good.] Think the same of other cattle also, good vel ad usum, vel ad esum, as horse, ass, sheep, &c.: a parte, tolum intelligendum, saith Augustine here; by a part it is to be understood the whole.

Ver. 36. Ox for ox.] These were those "right judgments, true laws, good statutes, and commandments." {#Ne 9:13}

Chapter 22

Ver. 1. If a man shall steal, &c.] The Persians at this day punish theft and manslaughter so severely, that in an age a man shall hardly hear either of the one or the other. The Turk's justice will rather cut off two innocent men than let one thief escape. {a}

{a} The Preacher's Travels, by J. Cartwright.

Ver. 2. If a thief be found.] So, if an adulteress be taken, -as she was in #Joh 8:4, -επαυτοφωρω, in the very act.

lllVer. 3. If the sun be risen.] Chaldee hath it, If the eye of witnesses: if he can raise the town, and call in aid.

Ver. 4. He shall restore double.] In Solomon's time it was sevenfold. {#Pr 6:31}

Ver. 5. To be eaten.] By unadvised turning in of his cattle, through mistake or neglect.

Ver. 6. Or the field.] The stubble.

Ver. 7. Or stuff.] Heb., Vessels, instruments, ornaments, apparel, furniture, weapons, &c.

Ver. 8. To see whether,] sc., By putting him to his oath. {#Ex 22:11} Some think that a private oath may be in such a case as this lawfully taken for the satisfaction of another, if he will not otherwise be satisfied.

Ver. 9. Before the judges.] Heb., The gods: so judges are called, if good especially. {#Ps 82:6} And the seat of judicature is called the holy place. {#Ec 8:10}

Ver. 10. Or any beast, to keep.] As Jacob kept Laban's cattle. {#Ge 31:39}

Ver. 11. An oath of the Lord.] Who is called in as a witness and as an avenger. How hateful, then, is that Popish proverb and practice, Mercatorum est, non regum, stare iuramentis.

Ver. 12. If it be stolen, / sc., Through his carelessness. Poor Jacob had hard law. {#Ge 31:39}

Ver. 13. Let him bring it.] A leg, or a limb of it, as #Am 3:12.

Ver. 14. And if a man borrow.] God hath so ordered human condition, that one man must be beholden to another.

Ver. 15. It came for his hire,] q.d., He shall pay the hire only, and no more, though the owner be not by when it miscarrieth.

Ver. 16. Entice a maid.] Heb., persuade with her by fair words, which make fools fain.

Ver. 17. He shall pay.] No fine is laid upon her, because she had nothing of her own; and she had lost her honour in losing her virginity. {#1Th 4:4} {See Trapp on "1Th 4:4"}

Ver. 18. A witch.] An enchantress, sorceress, whose help was sometimes sought in enticing young maids to folly. {a} The wizzard also is here meant, but the woman witch mentioned; both because women are more inclinable to that sin; and also because the weaker sex is not to be spared for this fault. {b}

{a} Vatab.

{b} Junius.

Ver. 19. Be put to death.] Heb., Put him to die. Gr., Kill him with death; as God threateneth to do Jezebel's children. {#Re 2:23}

Ver. 20. He shall be utterly destroyed.] As an execrable and accursed creature.

Ver. 21. Theft shalt not vex a stranger.] The right of strangers is so holy, saith one, that there was never nation so barbarous that would violate the same. When Stephen Gardner had in his power the renowned divine Peter Martyr, then teaching at Oxford, he would not keep him to punish him; but when he should go his way, gave him wherewith to bear his charges. {a}

{a} Act. and Mon., fol. 1783.

Ver. 22. Or fatherless child.] With God "the fatherless findeth mercy." {#Ho 14:3} Widows and orphans are God's clients, taken into his protection.

Ver. 23. And they cry at all unto me.] A vine whose root is uncovered thrives not: so a widow, whose covering of eyes is taken away, joys not. In Hebrew she is called Almanach, from Alam, to be dumb; because she hath none to speak for her, {a} But if she call and cry to God, he will speak for her in the hearts of her oppressors.

{a} Mercer, in Proverb.

Ver. 24. Your wives shall be widows.] God delights to punish cruelty in kind, as he did in Agag. {#ISa 15:33}

Ver. 25. Thou shalt not be to him as a usurer.] Heb., As an exacting creditor, Qui nullum diem gratis occidere creditori permittit. The usurer's money is to necessity, like cold water to a hot ague, that for a time refresheth, but prolongeth the disease.

Lay upon him usury.] Heb., Biting usury. Usurer's are men eaters. {#Ps 14:4} Like pickrels in a pond, or sharks in the sea, that devour the lesser fishes. These ostriches can digest any metal, especially money. Aristotle in one page condemneth the usurer and the dicer; {a} and yet some Christians blush at neither.

{a} Arist., Ethic, lib. iv. cap. 1.

Ver. 26, 27. Thy neighbour's raiment.] Meant only of his bedclothes, tegumentum nocturnum; without which he cannot comfortably rest in the night.

Ver. 27. {See Trapp on "Ex 22:26"}

Ver. 28. Thou shalt not revile the gods.] Blaspheme dignities. {#Jude 1:8} This is blasphemy is the second table.

Ver. 29. Theft shalt not delay.] True obedience is prompt and present, ready and speedy, without demurs and consults. "Wings, and wind in their wings." {#Zec 5:9}

Ver. 30. On the eighth day.] When a Sabbath had once gone over it, say the Hebrews.

Ver. 31. Holy men.] Heb., Men of holiness, which should run through our whole lives, as the woof doth through the web.

Chapter 23

Ver. 1. Thou shalt not raise.] Neither raise nor receive it; neither be the tale bearer nor talehearer: the one carries the devil in his tongue, the other in his ear. Not only those that "make a lie," but those that "love" it when it is made to their hands, are shut out of heaven. {#Re 22:15} Solomon makes it an ill sign of a graceless man to be apt to believe scandalous reports of godly persons. {#Pr 17:4}

Ver. 2. Thou shalt not follow a multitude.] The way to hell is broad and well beaten. Per viam publicam ne ingredi, was one of Pythagoras's precepts. Do not as the most do, lest thou be undone for ever. Argumentum turpissimum est turba, saith Seneca. To live "according to the course of the world" is to be acted by the devil.

Ver. 3. Neither shalt thou countenance.] Spare not the great for their might, nor the mean for their misery.

Ver. 4. Ox or his ass going astray.] How much more his soul. {See Trapp on "Jas 5:20"} {See Trapp on "Jude 1:22"} {See Trapp on "Jude 1:23"}

Ver. 5. Thou shalt surely help with him.] So the Spirit helps with us; or lifts over against us. {ουναντιλαμβανεται, #Ro 8:26} He looks ut acti agamus.

Ver. 6. The judgment of thy poor.] I have seen, saith one, {a} the king of Persia many times to alight from his horse, only to do justice to a poor body. Causes are to be heard, and not persons: the Athenian judges passed sentence in the dark.

{a} The Preacher's Travels, by J. Cartwright.

Ver. 7. Keep thee far from a false matter.] Stand aloof off; keep at a distance. See #Isa 33:15. A public man should be above all price or sale: and every man should carefully keep himself from the occasions of sin. A good man dare not come near the train, though he be far off the blow.

Ver. 8. And thou shalt take no gift.] Rain is good, and ground is good; yet Ex eorum coniunctione fit lutum, saith Stapleton. So giving is kind, and taking is courteous, yet the mixing of them makes the smooth paths of justice foul and uneven.

Ver. 9. Thou shalt not oppress, &c.] {See Trapp on "Ex 22:21"}

Ver. 10. Thou shalt sow thy land.] Here the wise man's counsel would be remembered, Laudato ingentia rura, exiguum colito. To be called a good husbandman, was of old a high praise.

Ver. 11. But the seventh year.] That they might learn to live by faith, and be at good leisure to wait upon God. {#De 31:10-12} Let every one of us keep a spiritual Sabbath, saith Ignatius, {a} Μελετη νομου χαιρων, ου σωματος ανεσει, Better apaid of the meditation of the law, than of the relaxation and rest from labour.

{a} Ep. iii. ad Magnes.

Ver. 12. Six days.] {See Trapp on "Ex 20:8"}

Ver. 13. Be circumspect.] Or wary; keep you close to the rule, and up to your principles. {See Trapp on "Eph 5:15"}

Of the name of other gods, J sc., Without dislike. The primitive Christians would not call their days of the week, Dies Martis, Mercurii, &c., as Mercurius Trismegistus had named them; but the first, second, third, &c., day of the week, Deastrorum nomina ne nota quidem esse voluerunt inter Christi cultores, saith one. They desired that Christians should spit out of their mouths those dunghill deities with utmost contempt; as David did. {#Ps 16:4}

Ver. 14. Three times.] See #De 16:16. The Hebrew hath it three feet, because the most went up to those three feasts every year afoot, saith Aben Ezra.

Ver. 15. Thou shalt keep the feast.] Let us also keep the feast, or holy day. {#1Co 5:8} {See Trapp on "1Co 5:8"}

Ver. 16. And the feast of harvest.] Pentecost, when their wheat harvest came in.

In the end of the year.] See the reason of this law in #De 11:12. It was "a land which the Lord cared for: the eyes of the Lord were always upon it from the beginning of the year even unto the end of the year."

Ver. 17. All thy males.] The females are not required to appear, because they were weak, and not so fit for travel. They were also the housekeepers, and sanctified in their husbands. Howbeit many of them came up to these feasts, as Hannah, {#1Sa 2:19} and the Virgin Mary. {#Lu 2:41} And this was well accepted as a freewill offering.

Ver. 18. Of my sacrifice.] Especially of the passover. See #Ex 34:25 Le 2:1-3.

Ver. 19. The first of the firstfruits.] The best of the best is not to be held too good for God. His "soul hath desired the first ripe fruits." {#Mic 7:1}

Thou shalt not see the a kid.] Hereby seemeth to be forbidden either cruelty, or curiosity to please the palate. See my "Commonplace of Abstinence." The Jews at this day, in reference to this law, may not eat flesh and cheese or milk meats together.

Ver. 20. Behold, I send an Angel,] i.e., Christ. Immediately after God had given the law, -by the rule and threats whereof God the Father in his government was to proceed, saith a divine, -and {a} after they had transgressed it, {#Ex 33:2-4} he could not go along with them, for he should destroy them: but his Angel, that is, his Son, he would send with them; who also would destroy them, if they turned not, nor repented according to the rules of his law, the gospel.

{a} Mr Thomas Goodwin.

Ver. 21. My name is in him,] i.e., He is of the same nature with myself. See #Php 2:6 Heb 1:3. {See Trapp on "Php 2:6"} {See Trapp on "Heb 1:3"}

Ver. 22. An enemy unto thine enemies.] There is a covenant offensive and defensive betwixt God and his people. Tua causa erit mea causa, said that emperor to his wronged friend: so saith God to his.

Ver. 23. For mine angel.] Heb., Malachi; which is by transposition of letters Michael, as some Rabbis have observed.

Ver. 24. Thou shalt utterly overthrow them.] As Henry VIII began here to do in demolishing the monasteries, and saying, Corvorum nidos esse penitus disturbandos ne iterum ad habitandum convolent. This Saunders relates and discusses. {a}

{a} Schism. Angl., lib. i.

Ver. 25. Bless thy bread.] God's blessing is the staff of bread, and strength of water. {See Trapp on "Mt 4:4"}

Ver. 26. The number of thy days.] Thou shalt die, as Abraham did, with a good hoary head; be satur dierum, as Job; fall as a full ripe apple into the hands of God, the gatherer.

Ver. 27. My fear before thee.] Strike a panic fear into the hearts of thine enemies, so that they shall flee at the noise of a driven leaf; they shall be made & corde suo fugitivi, as Tertullian hath it.

Ver. 28. Hornets before thee.] Understand it either literally, as in #Jos 24:12; or figuratively, of the stinging terrors of their self-condemning consciences.

Ver. 29. In one year.] God's time is best: and to prescribe to him is to set the sun by our dial. His help seems long, because we are short. Wait upon him, who waits to show us mercy. {#Isa 30:18}

Ver. 30. By little and little] God crumbles his mercies to us; we have his blessings by retail. So the cloud empties not itself at a sudden burst, but dissolves upon the earth drop after drop.

Ver. 31. The sea of the Philistines,] i.e., The Mediterranean.

Ver. 32. No covenant with them.] Because devoted to destruction; and they will be drawing thee to idolatry, as it also happened in #Jud 1 Jud 2.

Ver. 33. A snare.] See #De 7:16 Jos 23:13 Jud 2:3.

Chapter 24

Ver. 1. Worship ye afar off.] Thus under the law; but now by grace we draw nigh with boldness, and "have access with confidence by the faith of Christ." {#Eph 3:12} {See Trapp on "Eph 3:12"}

Ver. 2. But they shall not come nigh.] But half-way only. {#Ex 24:2} {See Trapp on "Ex 19:12"}

Ver. 3. And told the people,] So he became a Mediator {#Ga 3:19} — non redemptionis sed relationis.

Will we do.] God's people are "willing." {#Ps 110:3} But "weak through the flesh." {#Ro 8:3} {See Trapp on "Heb 13:18"}

Ver. 4. An altar.] Representing God on the one party, as the twelve pillars did the people on the other party. So here was a formal covenant.

Ver. 5. Young men.] The firstborn of the families. {#Ex 13:2}

Ver. 6. Half of the blood.] Having mingled it first with water {#Heb 9:19} See #1Jo 5:6, {See Trapp on "1Jo 5:6"}

Ver. 7. Will we do, and be obedient.] Christ will enjoy his spouse's love by a willing contract, not by a ravishment.

Ver. 8. On the people.] The representative people, the elders: or, as others will, the twelve pillars. {See Trapp on "Ex 24:4"}

Ver. 9. And seventy of the elders.] {See Trapp on "Ex 24:2"}

Ver. 10. And they saw the God of Israel.] A glimpse of his glory. {See Trapp on "1Ti 6:16"}

As it were a paved work of sapphire stone.] To show that God had now changed their condition, their bricks, made in their bondage, to sapphire. Compare #Isa 54:11.

Ver. 11. He laid not his hand,] i.e., They came off without hurt; which is reckoned as a great mercy: since no man, ordinarily, can see God and live: besides the infinite distance that is betwixt God and the greatest nobles.

And did eat and drink,] i.e., They were much cheered, and made merry in the Lord. Others sense it thus:—Though they had seen God, yet they turned again to temporal pleasures; they soon after ate and drank at that idolatrous feast of the golden calf, and rose up to play. It is set as an aggravation of Solomon's sin, that he departed from God "that appeared unto him twice." {#1Ki 11:9}

Ver. 12. Tables of stone.] To show, (1.) The stony hardness of the people's hearts; (2.) The lastingness of the law.

Ver. 13. And Moses went up.] Joshua stayed the while in some convenient place.

Ver. 14. And Hur.] {See Trapp on "Ex 17:10"}

Ver. 15. And Moses went up into the mount.] But he went not yet into the cloud, as #Ex 24:18, till the seventh day, that he might, by degrees, be heavenlised, and edged with an earnest expectation of beholding God's glory, and understanding his will. This was heaven beforehand.

Ver. 16. Six days.] The people had but three days of preparation to receive the law; Moses hath six. Singular holiness is required of ministers: the measures of the sanctuary were double to the ordinary, as the shekel, cubit, &c. Ministers had need wish, as Elisha did, a doubled and trebled spirit, that they may save themselves and those that hear them. {#1Ti 4:16}

Ver. 17. Was like devouring fire.] So it is still; {#Heb 12:29} which so terrifieth the sinners in Zion, that they run away with these words in their mouths, "Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?" {#Isa 33:14}

Ver. 18. Forty days.] All which time he never ate nor drank, {#De 9:9} and so better merited the surname of Nesteutes, the faster; than that proud prelate John, Bishop of Constantinople.

Ver. 8. That I may dwell among them.] "But will God in very deed dwell with men upon earth?" {#2Ch 6:18} What can he do more to make them happy? As he in Plutarch said of the Scythians, that although they had no music nor vines among them, yet, as a better thing, they had gods: and as the philosopher, having little else in his house, yet could say of it, εἰθὰ δε οἱ Θεοὶ εἰσὶν, Here be gods: so may every good man boast of his house and of his heart, This is the habitation of the Most High. {#Heb 3:6 2Co 6:16} As for the public assembly of saints, "This is the house of God, this is the gate of heaven." {#Ge 28:17}

Two cubits and a half, &c.] Just so big every way as the ark. {#Ex 25:10} Get into covenant with God, saith one, for as the mercy seat was no larger than the ark, so neither is the grace of God than the covenant. And as the ark and mercy seat were not asunder; so God is near to all that call upon him in truth.

Ver. 18. And thou shalt make two cherubims.] Golden winged images, made by God's special appointment, and set out of sight. Hence then is no warrant for the use of images in churches. Ver. 19. Even of the mercy seat.] Of the matter of it: to show that the very angels have their establishment in and by Christ: and that, if they need mercy, how much more do we. Angels also are under Christ as a head of government, of influence, of confirmation, though not of redemption.

Ver. 20. Toward the mercy seat shall the faces, &c.] Angels in the Syriac are called ܦܢܝܢܐ, of the face; because they look ever on the face of God, waiting his commands.

Ver. 21. Above upon the ark.] The ark covering the law within it, the mercy seat upon it, and over them two cherubims covering one another, did typify Christ covering the curses of the law, in whom is the ground of all mercy; "which things the angels desire to pry into," {#1Pe 1:12} as into the pattern of God's deep wisdoms. {#Eph 3:10}

Ver. 7. Of goats' hair.] The tabernacle was goats' hair without, and gold within. God hid his Son under the carpenter's son. "The king's daughter is all glorious within." {#Ps 45:13} And all her sons are princes in all lands. {#Ps 45:16} Howbeit, they must be content to pass to heaven as Christ their Head did, as concealed men. Ver. 3. That they may make, &c] Vides, in sacerdotibus nil plebeium reperiri, nil populare, saith Ambrose. Nothing in the priests but what was above the ordinary. The very workmen are to be filled with the Spirit of wisdom, to make their attire.

Ver. 17. Four rows of stones.] According to the number and order of the twelve tribes encamping about God's tabernacle. In all which rows, a very reverend writer ^{a} hath well observed eight things:— (1.) The shining of the stones; pointing to the purity of Christ and his Church: (2.) Their price; of great value and worth; signifying what a price Christ valued his Church at: (3.) Their place or situation; they are set in the heart, and Aaron must carry them on his heart, signifying that Christ hath as much care of his Church, as if it were enclosed in his heart, -lets out his blood to make room in his heart for them: (4.) Their number; twelve; noting, that with Christ is plentiful redemption: (5.) Their order; they stood in a comely quadrangle; Christ hath stablished a comely order in his Church; and we must keep our ranks: (6.) The figure; the four square; signifying the stability and firmness of the Church; Satan and all deceivers shall not pick one stone out of Christ's heart: (7.) Their use; that Aaron must bear them on his heart; signifying Christ's ardent affection to his, and constant intercession for them: (8.) The quantity; as all the names of Israel were gathered into a narrow compass, so Christ shall "gather together into one all the dispersed sons of God," and present them before God as the most beautiful and precious parts of the world. ^{#Joh 11:52}

^{a} Dr Taylor.

Ver. 30. The Urim and the Thummim.] A distinct thing from the stones and chains; made it was not by the artificers, but given by God to Moses, as were the two tables, and by him put into the breastplate. The very names of Urim and Thummim, -lights and perfections, -lead us to Christ, in whom is all fulness. In imitation of this Urim and Thummim, the high priest among the Egyptians is reported by Aelian to have worn about his neck a sapphire stone, which was called ἀληθεια, truth. {a}

Ver. 36. HOLINESS TO THE LORD.] Hence it was not lawful for the high priest, say the Jews, to put off his bonnet to whomsoever he met, were he never so great a man; lest the name and glory of God, whose person he sustained, should seem to submit to any man.

Chapter 31

Ver. 1. And the Lord spake unto Moses.] At "sundry times," during those forty days, and not all at once, were these directions delivered to Moses.

Ver. 2. The son of Hur.] Of that Hur mentioned in #Ex 17:12 24:14.

Ver. 3. And I have filled him.] God gifts whomsoever he calls to any employment.

Ver. 4. To devise cunning works.] All skill in lawful callings, whether manual or mental, is of God. {#Isa 28:26}

Ver. 5. And in cutting of stones.] Moses might well doubt where he should find fit workmen among those brick makers for Egypt.

Ver. 6. I have given with him.] Two is better than one; four eyes see more than two: God usually therefore coupleth his agents. {See Trapp on "Mt 10:2"} {See Trapp on "Mt 10:3"} {See Trapp on "Lu 10:1"}

Ver. 12. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying.] See on #Ex 31:1.

Ver. 13. Verily my Sabbaths ye shall keep,] q.d., Though this sanctuary work is to be done, yet it shall be no Sabbath day's work. The good women in the Gospel forbore on the Sabbath to anoint the dead body of our Saviour, "resting according to the commandment."

{#Lu 23:56}

For it is a sign.] And with it an effectual means to convey holiness into the heart.

Ver. 14.: For it is holy unto you.] Hence the Hebrews gather, but falsely, that only Israel was charged with the Sabbath day, and not the nations of the world: but the Sabbath was kept before Israel was born.

Ver. 15. Whosoever doeth any work.] A certain Indian that had been taught by the English, coming by, and seeing one of the English profaning the Lord's day by felling of a tree, said to him, Do you not know that this is the Lord's day in Massachusetts (one of the English plantations), much machete man that is, very wicked man; -why break you God's day? {a}

{a} New England's Firstfruits.

Ver. 16. For a perpetual covenant.] So the Sabbath is called by way of eminency; as if nothing of God's covenant were kept, if this were not Philo Judaeus saith, The fourth commandment is a famous precept, and profitable to excite all kind of virtue and piety.

Ver. 17. He rested, and was refreshed.] This is spoken to our apprehensions, and for our imitation.

Ver. 18. Written with the finger of God.] Of the Decalogue, above all other Holy Writ, God seems to say, as Paul, {#Phm 1:19} "Behold, I have written it with mine own hand"; i.e., By mine own power and operation.

Chapter 32

Ver. 1. Up, make us gods.] Aaron might make a calf, but the people made it a god, by adoring it.

“Qui fingit sacros auro vel marmore vultus,
Non facit ille Deos; qui rogat, iste facit.”—Martial.

Ver. "2. Brake off the golden ear-rings.] Hereby he hoped to break their design; but all in vain for they were "mad upon their idols."

{#Jer 50:38}

Ver. 3. Brake off the golden ear-rings.] Which they had got of the Egyptians. {#Ex 12:35} To make use of heathen authors for ostentation, is to make a calf of the treasure gotten out of Egypt.

Ver. 4. A molten calf.] In imitation of the Egyptian idol Apis, a pied-bull. A man may pass through Ethiopia unchanged; but he cannot dwell there, and not be discoloured. How oft, alas, have we abused God's mercy; taking his jewels, and making a golden calf of them!

Ver. 5. A feast to Jehovah.] Whom these idolators pretended to worship in the golden calf; as did also Jehu, {#2Ki 10:16,29 2Ch 11:15} and as the Papists at this day. But with what face can some of their Rabbis excuse this people from idolatry? or the Jesuits their image worshippers?

Ver. 6. Rose up to play.] To dance about the calf. Now, if they were so cheered and strengthened by those baneful bits, those murdering morsels; should not we much more by God's spiritual provisions, to dance as David did, to do his work with all our might

Ver. 7. For thy people, which thou broughtest.] God will own them no longer; they are now discovenanted. The saints by gross sins may lose their ius aptitudinale, non ius haereditarium, their fitness for God's kingdom; they may sin away all their comfortables.

Ver. 8. They have turned aside quickly.] Moses's back was but newly turned, as it were. "I marvel that you are so soon removed," &c. {#Ga 1:6} {See Trapp on "Ga 1:6"} When we have spent all our wind on our people, their hearts will be still apt to be "carried away with every wind of doctrine,"—in our absence especially.

“Mures, fele absente, choreas ducunt.”—Suidas.

Ver. 9. A stiffnecked people.] And so they are still to this very day. Jerome {a} complains that in his time they thrice a day curse {a} Christ in their synagogue, and closed up their prayers with Maledic, Domine, Nazaraeis. They are thought to advise most of that mischief which the Turk puts in execution against Christians. They counterfeit Christianity in Portugal even to the degree of priesthood, and think they may do it, either for the avoiding of danger, or increasing their substance. There are very few of them that turn Christians in good earnest: Adeo in cordibus eorum radices fixit pertinacitas. {b} So stubborn they are to this day, and stiffnecked, their necks are wholly possessed with an iron sinew.

{a} Jerome, in Isa., lib. xii. cap. 49, tom. 5, et lib. xiv. cap. 42.

{b} Rivet., Jesuita Vapul., 322.

Ver. 10. Let me alone.] God is fain to bespeak his own freedom: as if Moses's devotion were stronger than God's indignation. Great is the power of prayer; able, after a sort, to transfuse a dead palsy into the hand of Omnipotency. For, Let me alone, the Chaldee hath, Leave off thy prayer: but Moses would not. If he get but his head above water, the Lord shall hear of David. {#Ps 69:1-3}

Ver. 11. Lord, why doth thy wrath.] God offered Moses a great fortune. {#Ex 32:10} He tendering God's glory refused, and makes request for the people. It is the ingenuity of saints to study God's ends more than their own, and drown all self-respects in his glory. Good servants, such as were Bacon and Burleigh to Queen Elizabeth should consult their master's praise, rather than their own profit. "Moses was faithful in all God's house as a servant." {#Heb 3:2,5}

Ver. 12. Repent of this evil.] God's repenting is mutatio rei, non Dei; effectus, non affectus; facti, non consilii; not a change of his will, but of his work.

Ver. 13. Remember Abraham.] Here Moses neither invocateth the patriarchs, nor allegeth their merits, but reminds God of his promise to them, and presseth the performance. In the want of other rhetoric, let Christians in their prayers urge this with repetition. Lord, thou hast promised, thou hast promised. Put the promises into suit, and you have anything. God cannot deny himself.

Ver. 14. And the Lord repented.] See #Ex 32:12. Moses here had a hard pull, but he carried it.

Ver. 15. Written on both their sides.] See the like in other mystical books. {#Eze 2:10 Re 5:1}

Ver. 16. The work of God.] The greater was the people's loss, brought upon them by their sin.

Ver. 17. And when Joshua.] Who had waited, in some part of the mount, the return of his master.

Ver. 18. It is not the voice of them that shout for mastery.] As Joshua, a man of a warlike spirit, was ready to imagine. Non est vox clamoris fortitudinis, vel clamandi fortitudinem: so the original hath it.

Ver. 19. And Moses's anger waxed hot.] Meekness in this case had been no better than mopishness. How blessedly blown up was Moses here! So, Cranmer the martyr, though in his own cause so meek and mild, that it was grown to a proverb, "Do my Lord of Canterbury a shrewd turn, and you shall be sure to have him your friend for ever after," yet in the truth's cause, opposed by any man, no general in battle ever showed greater courage and constancy than he, saith our Churchantiquary. {a}

He saw the calf, and the dancing.] One calf about another. It was a custom among Papists, that men should run to the image of St Virus, and there they should dance all day, usque ad animae deliquium, till they fainted and fell into a swoon. {b}

{a} Antiq. Eccl. Brit., p. 341

{b} Joh. Maulii, loc. com., 187.

Ver. 20. And he took the calf.] We may all wish still as Ferus did, that we had some Moses to take away the evils of our times: Nam non unum tantum vitulum, sed multos habemus, We have not one, but many such calves.

Ver. 21. What did this people unto thee?] The people sinned by precipitancy; Aaron by popularity.

Ver. 22. That they are set on mischief.] The whole world is so. {#1Jo 2:16 5:19} Quomodo Plautus, "In fermento toto iacet uxor."

Ver. 23. We wot not what, &c.] See the danger of nonresidency.

Ver. 24. There came out this calf.] A very poor excuse. Something he would have said, if he had known what. Here he "hid his sin as Adam," {#Job 31:33} being too much his child.

Ver. 25. Aaron had made them naked.] As Aaron's engraving instrument writes down his sin: so the confession of other more ingenuous Jews proclaims the Israelites, saying that, No punishment befalleth thee, O Israel, in which there is not an ounce of this calf. {a}

{a} Mos. Gerund.

Ver. 26. Let him come.] This word through haste and earnestness Moses omitteth. The Chaldee and Greek version supply it.

Ver. 27. Slay every man his brother.] Not all that they met with, for so they might have slain the innocent; but all that were chief in the transgression. In the war against the Waldenses in France, the Pope's great army took one populous city and put to the sword sixty thousand, among whom were many of their own Catholics. For Arnoldus the Cistercian Abbot, being the Pope's Legate in this great war, commanded the soldiers saying, Caedite eos: novit enim Dominus qui sunt eius: Kill them one with another: for the Lord knoweth who are his. {a} This was fine Popish justice.

{a} Caesar Heisterbuchensis, Hist., lib. v. cap. 21.

Ver. 28. About three thousand.] Chieftains and ringleaders.

Ver. 29. Consecrate yourselves.] Regain that blessing which your father Levi lost. {#Ge 49:5,7}

Ver. 30. And now I will go up unto the Lord.] As angry as he was, he could pray for them: as when our children, through their own fault have got some sickness, for all our angry speeches we go to the physician for them.

Ver. 31. Made them gods of gold.] Sin must not be confessed in the lump only, and by wholesale, but we must instance the particulars.

Ver. 32. Blot me, I pray thee.] God never revealed his love to Moses more than when he thus earnestly prayed for God's people. Joab never pleased David better than when he made intercession for Absalom.

Ver. 33. Blot out.] Cut him out of the roll of the living.

Ver. 34. I will visit.] I will pay them home for the new and the old.

Ver. 35. They made.] {See Trapp on "Ex 32:1"}

Chapter 33

Ver. 1. Which thou hast brought.] {See Trapp on "Ex 33:7"}

Ver. 2. An angel before thee.] A created angel to conduct thee. But Moses would none of that; he would not be so put off. {#Ex 34:9} Low things satisfy not a high spirit.

Ver. 3. I will not go up,] sc., By those visible signs of my gracious presence as heretofore.

Ver. 4. They mourned.] As good cause they had: for "woe be unto thee when I depart from thee." {#Ho 9:12}

Ver. 5. And consume thee.] God's threatenings are cordial, but conditional. Minatur Deus ut non puniat. "Fury is not in me." {#Isa 27:4} He punisheth not "till there be no other remedy," {#2Ch 36:16} as the bee stings not till provoked.

Ver. 6. Stripped themselves.] As in a day of restraint.

Ver. 7. Afar off from the camp.] In token of God's deep displeasure and departure from them.

Ver. 8. And looked after Moses.] To see what success, what acceptance: as David looked up after his prayer to see how it sped. {#Ps 5:3}

Ver. 9. And the Lord talked with Moses.] Out of the cloudy pillar: which was a sign of favour. {#Ps 99:7} The Turks honour Moses, and call him the talker with God.

Ver. 10. Rose up and worshipped.] Though obnoxious, they would not despair of mercy. See #1Sa 12:20-22.

Ver. 11. Face to face.] Friendly and familiarly, as #Nu 12:8. And perhaps in human shape, as he spake with Abraham his friend. #Ge 18:16-33

Ver. 12. See, thou sayest unto me.] See, saith one, {a} how Moses here encroacheth upon God. God had done much for him, he must have more. {#Ex 33:13} "Show me now thy way," &c. This God grants him. {#Ex 33:14} This serves not the turn; he must have more yet. {#Ex 33:16} Well, he hath it. {#Ex 33:17} Is he satisfied? No, he must yet have more. {#Ex 33:18} "I beseech thee show me thy glory." It is done. {#Ex 33:19} Is he satisfied yet? No. {#Ex 34:9} God must pardon the sin of his people too; and take them and him for his inheritance: this fruit of his favour he must needs be entreated to add to the rest.

{a} Mr Bur. ?Burroughs.

Ver. 13. That I may know thee.] Moses knew more of God than any man; he was but newly come down from the mount, and at the tabernacle door God spake with Moses "face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend." {#Ex 33:11} The more a man knows of God, the more desirous he is to know him.

Ver. 14. I will give thee rest.] Full content of mind, in the sense of my presence and light of my countenance.

Ver. 15. If thy presence go not with me.] What is it to have the air without light? What was all Mordecai's honour to him when the king frowned upon him?

Ver. 16. So shall we be separated.] Heb., Marvellously separated. The separation of the saints is a wonderful separation. See #De 4:7; also #Isa 20:6, where Judea is for this cause called an "isle."

Ver. 17. I know thee by name.] As princes do their favourites, who easily forget others, as Saul did David. {#1Sa 17:55}

Ver. 18. Show me thy glory.] None ever knew God's glory; our cockle shell can never comprehend this sea: yet it may be apprehended that it is incomprehensible.

Ver. 19. I will make all my goodness.] My glorious goodness. Thus Moses may have what he will of God. "The king is not he that can do anything against you," said Zedekiah to his courtiers. {#Jer 38:5}

Ver. 20. Thou canst not see my face.] Otherwise than in his words and works. {#Ro 1:20} As we cannot see the sun in rota, in the circle, but in the beams. Some have seen Mercabah velo harocheb, as the Hebrews speak, {a} the chariot in which God rode, but not the rider in it: they saw some created image, or glory, whereby he testified his more immediate presence, but not himself.

No man shall see me, and live.] But be oppressed and swallowed up with majesty: as the sight of the eye is dazzled with the sun; or a crystal glass broken with the fire.

{a} Rab. Maimon.

Chapter 34

Ver. 1. Which thou brakest.] Not without a tincture of passionate infirmity, as some conceive. He that was the meekest upon earth, saith one, {a} in a sudden indignation abandons that which he would in cold blood have held faster than his life. But Augustine cries out, O ira Prophetica, et animus non perturbatus, sed illuminatus!

{a} Dr Hall.

Ver. 2. In the morning.] A sign of mercy. {#Ps 90:14 30:5 5:3}

Ver. 3. Neither let any man be seen.] {See Trapp on "Ex 19:12"}

Neither let the flocks.] Moses comes alone to God, and leaves the flocks. Jacob ferrieth over all belonging to him on the other side of the river, before he wrestleth with God. Abraham leaveth the servant and asses at the foot of the hill, &c. Men must lay aside all, and prepare, before they draw nigh to God in holy duties.

Ver. 4. And he hewed two tables.] Moses hewed them. The first tables were hewn out of the sapphire of the throne of God's glory, say the Jewish doctors.

Ver. 5. And proclaimed the name of the Lord.] In answer to Moses's prayer. {#Ex 33:18,19}

Ver. 6. The Lord, The Lord God. &c.] These glorious titles and attributes are those back parts of God. {#Ex 33:23} None can see more than these and live: and we need see no more than these that we may live.

Longsuffering.] Heb., Wide of nostrils; not apt to snuff at small matters, but bearing with men's evil manners. This Averroes, the atheist, made use as an argument against the providence of God, and to prove that he meddled with nothing below the moon, because of his slowness to anger.

In goodness and truth.] God's goodness, though great, yet here and elsewhere it goes bounded with his truth.

Ver. 7. Forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin,] i.e., All sorts of sin. It is natural to him as here. None like him for this. {#Mic 7:18} It is the comfort of saints, that they have to do with a forgiving God, {#Ne 9:31} that can multiply pardons, as they multiply sins. {#Isa 55:7}

Keeping mercy for thousands.] The Hebrew word here rendered Keeping, is written with a greater letter {a} than ordinary, to note the extraordinary greatness of God's promise to his people and their posterity. {#Ps 25:10} {Hebrew Text Note} God is here said to keep mercy, to forgive sins of all sorts: as if his mercy were kept on purpose for pardoning poor sinners.

Clear the guilty.] This last letter in God's name must still be remembered. So must all the rest: since there is enough in this sweetest text to answer all our objections. It is said of Leonard Lessius, that, a little before his death, he finished his treatise concerning the fifty names or attributes of God: and that he oft affirmed, that he found more spiritual light and delight in that last little work of his—at such time as he was grievously tortured with the stone, whereof also he died—than in all his large Commentaries upon Thomas Aquinas's Sums.

Ver. 8. And Moses made haste.] It was time for him. The more any man sees of God, the lower he falls in his own eyes: as he that hath looked intently upon the sun, sees little when he looks down again.

Ver. 9. Let my lord, I pray thee.] {See Trapp on "Ex 33:12"}

Ver. 10. Behold, I make a covenant,] i.e., I re-establish it with this backsliding people. God receiveth returning sinners with much sweetness "He retaineth not his anger for ever, because he delighteth in mercy." His mercy, to us, is greater than his justice, though in themselves they are equal, yea, the same.

I will do marvels.] See this fulfilled and recorded in #Jos 10:12,13.

Ver. 11. Observe thou.] This is the condition of the covenant on man's part to be performed. With others God makes a single covenant only, that they shall observe that which he commands them: but with his elect he makes a double covenant; to perform both parts, to "work all their works in them," and for them, to "put his fear into their hearts, and to cause them to keep his commandments." {#Isa 26:12 Jer 32:40}

Ver. 12. With the inhabitants.] They were devoted to destruction, as having filled the land from one end to another with their uncleanness. {#Ezr 9:11}

Ver. 13. Break their images.] The Popish historians have blurred and blasted those zealous emperors, Zeno and others, that were Iconomachi and Iconoclastai, as sacrilegious. Berne was the first town that, after the Reformation, was purged of images; which Augustine saith cannot be placed in churches, Sine praesentissimo idololatrioe periculo, { a } without extreme danger of idolatry. Epiphanius saith, It is utterly unlawful and abominable to set up images in the churches of Christians. Irenaeus reproveth the Gnostics, for that they carried about the picture of Christ in Pilate's time, after his own proportion: using also, for declaration of their affection toward it, to set garlands upon the head of it.

{a} Aug., in Psalm cxiv.

Ver. 14. No other god.] In the Hebrew word Acher, rendered Other, there is a large R, to show the greatness of the sin of serving any other God. {Hebrew Text Note}

Ver. 15. And one call thee.] Any one of the idolatrous rout, if he do but hold up his finger to thee, thou wilt easily follow him. Cereus in vitium flecti. {a}

{a} Horat.

Ver. 16. And make thy sons.] Satan still works upon Adam by Eve. Omnes haereses ex gyneceis. It is the guise of heretics to abuse the help of women to spread their poisonous opinions. Satan per costam, tanquam per scalam ad cor ascendit. Satan climbs up by the rib to the heart. {a}

{a} Greg.

Ver. 17. No molten gods.] As the golden calf was. Goodly gods that are molten! Olim truncus eram. {a}

{a} Horat.

Ver. 18. In the month Abib.] So called from the new fruits, or ears of corn, then first appearing. See #Ex 12:1 13:4. God here repeateth divers laws. It was a token of reconciliation to the people after their apostasy, in that he treats with them again, after their repentance, about his solemn worships. So, for a testimony of his reconciliation to Peter after his foul fall, he sets him to work in the ministry. {#Joh 21:15} So he commendeth his spouse afresh, after her drowsy decays, every whir as amiable as she was before her fall. {#So 6:5 5:10,11-16}

Ver. 19, 20. See on #Ex 13:12,13.

Ver. 20. {See Trapp on "Ex 34:19"}

Ver. 21. In earing time and in harvest.] Though most busy times, you may not make bold with God.

Ver. 22. And thou shalt observe.] See #Ex 23:16.

Ver. 23. Thrice in the year.] See #Ex 23:14,17.

Ver. 24. Neither shall any man desire.] A wonderful providence, since Judea was compassed about with such warlike adversaries, that they should not watch and catch at such opportunities. Pompey besieging Jerusalem, made his strongest batteries on the Sabbath day, whereon he knew the superstitious Jews would not make their defence—and took it. {a}

{a} Dio Cass.

Ver. 25. Thou shalt not offer.] See #Ex 23:18,19,

Ver. 26. In his mother's milk.] See on #Ex 23:19.

Ver. 27. I have made a covenant.] We also have the covenant, the seals, ministers, &c. But, alas! are not these blessings amongst us as the ark was amongst the Philistines, rather as prisoners than as privileges? Rather in testimonium et ruinam quam in salutem? Rather for our ruin than reformation?

Ver. 28. Forty days and forty nights.] Moses, Elias, and Christ—those three great fathers met glorious in mount Tabor. Abstinence merits not, but prepares the best for good duties.

He wrote.] That is, God wrote, as some will have it. {a}

{a} Weems. Exer.

Ver. 29. The skin of his face shone.] God hereby assuring the people that he had inwardly enlightened him for their better instruction.

Ver. 30. And they were afraid.] This was another manner of brightness and majesty than that which piercing gaze from the eyes of Augustus and Tamerlane; whose eyes so shone, as that a man could hardly endure to behold them without closing of his own: and many in talking with them, and often beholding of them, became dumb: which caused them oftentimes with a comely modesty to abstain from looking too earnestly upon such as spake unto them, or discoursed with them. {a}

{a} Turk. Hist., fol. 236.

Ver. 31. And Moses called unto them.] Having first veiled his face, as in #Ex 34:33.

Ver. 32. And he gave them in commandment.] Rabbi Menahem telleth us, that the former ancients of Israel, at the reading of the book of the law, covered their faces and said, "He that heareth from the mouth of the reader is as he that heareth from the mouth of Moses." The Jews at this day, in their synagogues, put on each man his Taleth or square vestment, turning it back about their necks, that so they may hear and pray with more attention and reverence. {a}

{a} Leo. Modena.

Ver. 33. He put a vail on his face.] And had more glory by his vail than by his face. How far are those spirits from this Christian modesty, which care only to be seen and wish only to dazzle others' eyes with admiration, not caring for unknown riches! This vail signifieth the law's obscurity and our infidelity.

Ver. 34. But when Moses went in.] Hypocrites on the contrary show their best to men, their worst to God; God sees both their vail and their face; and I know not whether he hates more their vail of dissimulation or face of wickedness.

Chapter 35

Ver. 1. And said unto them, These, &c.] He often goes over the same things, as the knife doth the whetstone. Good things must be repeated, sicut in acuendo. It is Moses's own metaphor. {#De 6:7}

Ver. 2. Six days shall work be done.] This duty is so oft inculcated, to show the necessity, excellency, difficulty of well doing it.

Ver. 3. Ye shall kindle no fire,] sc., For the furtherance of the work of the tabernacle: or, at least, that is not of absolute necessity. It might also signify that in the kingdom of heaven we shall be set free from all the fire and scorching heat of affliction.

Ver. 4-7, &c. Much of this chapter is to be read in the twenty-fifth, and elsewhere. See the notes there.

Ver. 5. {See Trapp on "Ex 35:4"}

Ver. 6. {See Trapp on "Ex 35:4"}

Ver. 7. {See Trapp on "Ex 35:4"}

Ver. 22. And brought bracelets.] Glad they had anything of price to dedicate to God and to seal up their thankfulness for this readmittance into his love and favour. {See Trapp on "Mt 9:10"} Nazianzen put this price upon his Athenian learning, wherein he was very famous, that he had something of value to part with for Christ. These in the text, in token of their true repentance, brought their bracelets and other ornaments, as freely for the service of the tabernacle, as erst they had done to the making of the golden calf.

Ver. 32. And to devise curious works.] "This also cometh forth from the Lord of hosts, who is wonderful in counsel, and excellent in working." {#Isa 28:29} Pliny {a} makes mention of some famous painters, whose rare pieces were Oppidorum opibus venditae: sold for so many towns' wealth. A certain craftsman set a watch clock upon a ring that Charles V wore upon his finger. ^{b} King Ferdinand sent to Solyman the Turk, for a present, a wonderful globe of silver of most rare and curious device; daily expressing the hourly passing of the time, the motions of the planets, the change and full of the moon; lively expressing the wonderful conversions of the celestial frame. ^{c} To which I may well add that admirable invention of printing, a special blessing of God to mankind.

^{a} Lib. xxiii.

^{b} Sphinx Philos., p. 90.

^{c} Turk. Hist., fol. 713.

Chapter 36

Ver. 2. And Moses called Bezaleel.] God qualified them, Moses called them. See #Ac 13:1-3. Ministers also must have an outward calling too, ^{#Heb 5:4} and be sent ere they preach. ^{#Ro 10:15} And whereas in #1Co 14:31 it is said, "Ye may all prophecy," the meaning is, All ye that are prophets, may. "But are all prophets?." ^{#1Co 12:29}

Ver. 7. And too much.] Thus in outward ordinances of service, and for the making of "a worldly sanctuary," ^{#Heb 9:1} they could do and over do. So, #Joh 6:28, "They said unto him, What shall we do that we may work the works of God?" Men would fain have heaven as a purchase. I would swim through a sea of brimstone, said one, that I might come to heaven at last. But what said our Saviour to those questionists in #Joh 6:29? "This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent." And what said Luther? Walk in the heaven of the promise, but in the earth of the law; that in respect of believing, this of working. Many poor souls can think of nothing but working themselves to life. We must do all righteousness, but rest in none but Christ's.

Ver. 8. And every wise-hearted man.] Let no man look upon this and the following chapter as an idle repetition; nor say, as one said once, Did we not know that all Scripture was divinely inspired, we should be ready to say, Quandoque bonus dormitat Homerus. But know that here is set forth a table, index, or inventory, of what Moses and the workmen did in obedience to God's command, for every particular about the sanctuary. This inventory was taken by Ithamar, at the commandment of Moses, Et sic in archivum

Ecclesiae relatum, and so laid up in the charter house of the Church for the use of posterity. See the notes on Exod 36, and consider that saying of an ancient, Necessarium et utile est etiam quae scripta sunt scribere, ne leve existimetur quod non frequenter arguitur. {a}

Ver. 8. Looking glasses.] Or, Brazen-glasses. These devout women that used to assemble by troops at the door of the tabernacle to pray and serve God, -see #Lu 2:37 1Ti 5:5, -frankly gave the instruments whereby they dressed their bodies, to make the instrument whereby, through faith, they might sanctify their souls. Let those who view themselves oft in their looking glasses take his counsel who said, "Art thou fair? be not like an Egyptian temple, varnish without and vermin within. Art thou foul? let thy soul be like a rich pearl in a rude shell." Some such advice as this Pythagoras gave his scholars. St James would have men "look" often "into the perfect law of liberty," that crystal glass, "and continue therein." {#Jas 1:25} David did so, and got much good by it. {#Ps 119:59} I considered my ways: Heb., I viewed my ways on both sides. The curious works of the sanctuary were wrought on both sides, therefore called works with two faces. Common works are wrought only on one side, on the other full of ends and shreds. The prophet here strives to walk curiously, precisely, accurately, to turn his feet to God's testimonies: and hence he is so exact in his self-searching.

Chapter 39

Ver. 43. And Moses blessed them.] He highly commended them, praised God for them, and prayed heartily for them, as afterwards David did, "The Lord, that made heaven and earth, bless thee out of Zion."

Chapter 40

Ver. 36. The children of Israel went.] The Jews conceive that this cloud that led Israel through the wilderness, levelled mountains, raised valleys, and laid all aflat: that it burnt up bushes, and smoothed rocks, and made all plain, &c. See #Lu 3:5 Isa 4:5

Leviticus

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. And the Lord called.] A continuation of the former history, from the rearing of the tabernacle to the numbering of the people; being the history of one month only.

Ver. 2. Bring an offering.] Whereby they were led to Christ; as the apostle showeth in that excellent Epistle to the Hebrews, which is a just commentary upon this book.

Ver. 3. Burnt sacrifice.] A whole burnt offering, {#Heb 10:6} purporting whole Christ suffering for us, {#Isa 53:12} and our sacrificing our whole selves to him as a "reasonable service." {#Ro 12:1}

Ver. 4. And he shall put his hand.] As acknowledging his own guilt, and transferring the same upon Christ, resting upon him with full assurance of faith, handfasting us unto him.

Ver. 5. And he shall kill the bullock.] The priest shall kill it: for it was death for any man to offer his own sacrifice. So it is still for any to come to God, otherwise than in and by Christ.

Ver. 6. And he shall flay the burnt offering.] To show the grievousness of our Saviour's sufferings; the cruel usage of his suffering saints; {#Mic 3:3 Heb 11:35} and the duty of all that have benefit by him, to flay off the old man with his deceitful lusts, {#Eph 4:22} dealing thereby as the Turk dealt by him that betrayed the Rhodes. He presented unto him his promised wife and portion; but with it told him that he would not have a Christian to be his son-in-law; and therefore caused his baptized skin, as he called it, to be flayed off, and him to be cast into a bed strawed with salt, that he might get a new skin. {a} See #Mr 9:49.

{a} Leunclavius.

Ver. 7. Fire upon the altar.] That fire from heaven {#Le 9:24} -which the heathens apishly imitated in their vestal fire—typing either the scorching wrath of God seizing upon Christ, or the ardent love of Christ to his, and their zeal for him.

Ver. 8. In order upon the wood.] Showing that ministers must rightly divide, and dispose the word of God, {#2Ti 2:15} and evidently set forth Christ crucified. {#Ga 3:1}

Ver. 9. Shall he wash.] Shadowing Christ's perfect purity {#Heb 7:26} and our entire sanctification. {#Eze 26:19 Heb 10:22}

Of a sweet savour unto the Lord.] The burning and broiling of the beasts could yield no sweet savour; but thereto was added wine, oil, and incense, by God's appointment, and then there was a savour of rest in it. Our prayers, as from us, would never please; but as indited by the Spirit, and presented by Christ, they are highly accepted in heaven.

Ver. 10. A male without blemish.] But "cursed be the deceiver that hath in his flock a male, and voweth and sacrificeth unto God a corrupt thing." {#Mat 1:14}

Ver. 11. On the side of the altar northward.] Not eastward, as the heathen sacrifices: or to note the obscurity of the legal ceremonies.

Ver. 12. In order.] {See Trapp on "Le 1:8"}

Ver. 13. He shall wash.] {See Trapp on "Le 1:9"}

Ver. 14. Turtle doves, or young pigeons.] Old turtles and young pigeons are the best: God must have the very best of the best, as being best worthy.

Ver. 15. Wring off his head.] Or, Pinch it with his nail, that the blood might go out, without separating it from the rest of the body. This prefigured the death of Christ without either breaking a bone or dividing the Godhead from the manhood; as also the skill that should be in ministers, to cut or divide aright the word of truth.

Ver. 16. His crop with his feathers.] Or, The maw with the filth thereof—that is, the guts which receive the filth sent unto them from the maw—was plucked out, and the blood strained at the side of the altar. This signified those clots of blood wrung from our Saviour before his oblation upon the cross.

Ver. 17. And he shall cleave it.] That the inward part might be laid on the fire. See #Ps 51:18,19 Mr 12:33.

Chapter 2

Ver. 1. Of fine flour.] No quantity is here prescribed, because it was a freewill offering: only it must be fine, no bran in it: to show the purity of Christ's sacrifice, {#Heb 7:26} and of our services through him, {#Mat 3:11} by means of the oil of his Spirit and incense of his intercession.

Ver. 2. Shall burn the memorial of it.] Whereby God was reminded, as it were, of the party offering, and acknowledging all his store to be from God.

Ver. 3. Shall be Aaron's and his sons'.] As meat for them. Hence it was called a meat offering; and sent them to Christ, the meat that endureth unto life everlasting. {#Joh 6:27}

Ver. 4. Unleavened cake of fine flour mingled with oil.] Sincerity is the mother of serenity; truth, of tranquillity.

Ver. 5. Baken in a pan.] Afterwards parted in pieces, and oil poured upon it: signifying the graces of God's Spirit wherewith Christ was fully anointed within and without, {#Ps 45:8} and wherewith we should be tempered and anointed. {#1Jo 2:27 2Co 1:21}

Ver. 6. And pour oil thereon.] Jacob was the first we read of that consecrated his offerings with oil. {#Ge 28:18} Probably he had it from his predecessors.

Ver. 7. Baken in the frying pan.] So, My heart is frying of a good matter, saith David. {#Ps 45:1}

Ver. 8. He shall bring it unto the altar.] God would have all their offerings brought to one altar; both to figure out the one only all sufficient sacrifice of Christ, and to teach all the faithful to consent in one and the same truth of the gospel.

Ver. 9. A memorial thereof.] Signifying the perpetual benefit of Christ's death to all believers.

Ver. 10. Shall be Aaron's and his sons'.] Ministers' maintenance.

Ver. 11. Nor any honey.] Which hath a leavening virtue in it. Sweet sins are to be abandoned there will be bitterness in the end. {#Pr 26:26,27}

Ver. 12. Ye shall offer them,] i.e., With the firstfruits ye shall offer both leaven {#Le 23:17} and honey. {#2Ch 31:5} Both which are sometimes taken in the better part. {#Mt 13:33 So 4:11}

Ver. 13. Shalt thou season with salt.] Called here the salt of God's covenant; as signifying the covenant of God made with us in Christ, who seasoneth us, and makes all our services savoury. See the note on #Mr 9:49,50.

Ver. 14. Green ears of corn.] To signify that God should be served with the firstfruits of our age, the primrose of our childhood.

Ver. 15. And thou shalt put oil upon it.] Signifying the graces of God in Christ and his members, and the sweet odour of his oblation for us.

Ver. 16. The memorial of it,] i.e., The thing offered for a memorial.

Chapter 3

Ver. 1. Whether it be a male or female.] In Christ there is neither male nor female, but all one. {#Ga 3:28} Souls have no sexes. In thank offerings, the female also might pass: to teach that God looks not so much to the worth of the gift as the honesty of the heart that offers it. Leavened bread also in this case was accepted. {#Le 7:13}

Ver. 2. Upon the altar round about.] This signified that "plenteous redemption" by "the blood of sprinkling."

Ver. 3. The fat that covereth the inwards.] Hearty thanks must be given to God; such as cometh not from the roof of the mouth, but the root of the heart. An airy "God be thanked" profiteth not. "Sing with grace in your hearts," is the best tune to any psalm. The voice which is made in the mouth is nothing so sweet as that which comes from the depth of the breast.

Ver. 4. With the kidneys.] Those seats of lust. Earthly members must be mortified by the thankful.

Ver. 5. Upon the burnt sacrifice.] Which was first offered, to teach us that sin must be pardoned ere our thank offerings can be accepted. It is, therefore, ordinarily, best to begin our prayers with confession of sin, and petitions for pardon through Christ.

Ver. 6. Male or female.] See on #Le 3:1.

Ver. 7. Shall he offer it before the Lord.] Yet shall but part of it be burnt.

Ver. 8. Lay his hand.] {See Trapp on "Le 1:4"}

Ver. 9. The whole rump.] Which in those country sheep is very large: yet not so large as those in America, mentioned by Sir Francis Drake, {a} as large as cattle, and supplying in the stead of horses for burden or travel.

{a} The World Encompassed.

Ver. 10. And the two kidneys.] The inwards must be consecrated to God. "The hidden man of the heart" is his.

Ver. 11. It is the food.] That whereupon God himself seemeth to feed. {#Ps 50:13}

Ver. 17. That ye neither eat fat nor blood.] Neither be carnal nor cruel; but let your souls delight in the fatness and sweetness of God's ordinances.

Chapter 4

Ver. 1. And the Lord spake.] At another time belike.

Ver. 2. Shall sin through ignorance.] Or, infirmity; being suddenly surprised, preoccupied. {#Ga 6:1 Heb 5:2} {See Trapp on "Ga 6:1"} {See Trapp on "Heb 5:2"}

Ver. 3. A young bullock.] The same sacrifice that should be offered for the sin of the whole people, {#Le 4:14} to note the heinousness of the priest's sin above others. The sins of teachers are the teachers of sins.

Ver. 4. Shall lay his hand.] Confessing his sin, {#Le 5:5} and professing his faith in Christ, the true sin offering. {#2Co 5:21}

Ver. 5. Shall take of the bullock's blood.] See #Heb 5:2,3 7:26-28. {See Trapp on "Heb 5:2"} {See Trapp on "Heb 5:3"} {See Trapp on "Heb 7:26"} {See Trapp on "Heb 7:27"} {See Trapp on "Heb 7:28"}

Ver. 6. Seven times before the Lord.] Because in this case there was need of much and great purgation.

Ver. 7. Upon the horns of the altar.] To signify, saith one, that the preaching of the gospel concerning the blood of Christ, should be published and proclaimed to the four corners of the earth. To show, saith another, that by faith in the blood of Christ, our prayers are acceptable unto God, and our infirmities pardoned and purged.

Ver. 8. All the fat.] Because, among other things, it signified hard heartedness and insensibleness of sin and danger. {#Ps 119:70} Dionysius the Heracleot felt not needles thrust into his fat belly, saith the history.

Ver. 9. With the kidneys.] See #Le 3:4.

Ver. 11. And the skin, &c.] {See Trapp on "Le 1:9"}

Ver. 12. Shall he carry forth,] #Heb 13:11,12. {See Trapp on "Heb 13:11"} {See Trapp on "Heb 13:12"}

Ver. 13. And if the whole congregation.] Particular congregations, then, may err for a season; though not finally, fundamentally, if they be "the congregation of saints," {#Ps 89:5} and not "the congregation of hypocrites," {#Job 15:34} the Church malignant.

And they have done somewhat.] Either by transgression or disobedience, {#Heb 2:2} omission or commission.

Ver. 14. When the sin is known.] Sin may sleep a long time like a sleeping debt, not called for of many years. But, Nullum tempus occurrit regi. God may send out a summons for sleepers, and punish our bygone or secret sins.

Ver. 15. And the elders.] These, as the representative congregation, took upon them the guilt of their common errors, as those did in #2Ch 29:23.

Ver. 16. And the priest that is anointed,] i.e., The high priest; a type of Christ, who was anointed, not with material oil, as they, but with the Spirit, that oil of gladness, both above and for his fellow brethren. {#Ps 45 Heb 1:9} See #1Jo 2:27 2Co 1:21,22. Howbeit his oil shines brightest, and swims aloft above all others.

Ver. 17. Seven times.] A number of perfection; to note the most absolute sufficiency of Christ's death to purge and reconcile us to God; and that he is able to save such to the uttermost (εις το παντελες) that come unto God by him. {#Heb 7:25}

Ver. 18. Upon the horns.] {See Trapp on "Le 4:7"}

At the bottom of the altar.] To set forth the plenty and sufficiency of grace and merit in Christ's death, for many more than are actually saved by it.

Ver. 19. And he shall take all his fat.] Christ offered himself and the best parts he had, suffering in soul and body.

Ver. 20. As he did with the bullock.] For even ignorance and infirmities are deadly sins, direct fruits of the flesh, {#Joh 3:6} and such as for which Christ laid down his life, even "for the errors (αγνοηματα) of the people." {#Heb 9:7}

Ver. 21. Without the camp.] Pointing to Christ, who carried our sins out of God's sight. See #Heb 13:12. {See Trapp on "Heb 13:12"}

Ver. 22. When a ruler hath sinned.] Great men's sins do more hurt, (1.) By imitation; for, Vita principis censura est, imo Cynosura; according to these glasses most men dress themselves: (2.) By imputation; for, plectuntur achivi; the poor people pay for it; as they did for David's, whether ignorance or infirmity, in omitting that duty enjoined; {#Ex 30:12-15} thence the plague. {#2Sa 24:13-17}

Ver. 23. Come to his knowledge.] As David's did, {#2Sa 24:11} who saw such volumes of infirmities, and so many erratas in all that he did, that he once cried out, "Who knoweth the errors of his life? Oh, cleanse me from secret sins." {#Ps 19:12} This he knew was the import of all these Levitical cleansings.

Ver. 24. Lay his hand.] {See Trapp on "Le 4:4"}

Ver. 25. At the bottom.] See #Le 4:18.

Ver. 26. All his fat.] See #Le 4:19. The fat was burnt, saith one, because, among other things, it signified duricordium, hard heartedness. {#Ps 119:70}

Ver. 27. And if any soul sin.] As there is none that liveth and sinneth not. {#1Ki 8:46} Triste mortalitatis privilegium est licere aliquando peccare. {a}

{a} Ephor. Augusta nimis res est, et nulli mortalium concessa nusquam errare. -Amama.

Ver. 28. Come to his knowledge.] By the check of his own conscience, awakened by the word or rod of God.

Ver. 29. And slay the sin offering.] That is, the priest shall: for no man might offer his own sacrifice upon pain of death; as is afore noted.

Ver. 30. And the priest shall take of the blood thereof with his finger.] See on #Le 4:18.

Ver. 31. For a sweet savour.] {See Trapp on "Le 1:9"} The death of Christ is ever in the sight of his heavenly Father: and hence it was that those typical sacrifices and all our performances are still accepted.

Ver. 32. And if he bring a lamb.] This sacrifice hath not wholly the same fat as that of a goat, and therefore is spoken of apart.

Ver. 33. And he shall lay his hand.] He that bringeth it shall: see #Le 4:4.

And he shall offer it.] The priest shall.

Ver. 34. And the priest shall take.] See upon #Le 4:18.

Ver. 35. According to the offerings.] Or, Upon the offerings; or, Besides the burnt offerings daily offered to the Lord.

Chapter 5

Ver. 1. He shall bear his iniquity,] i.e., He shall suffer for his sinful silence; because he could, but would not, help the truth in necessity, but stand as if he were gagged by Satan, -possessed with a dumb devil.

Ver. 2. And if it be hidden from him.] Debt is debt, whether a man know of it or not.

Ver. 3. Then he shall be guilty.] Guilty he was before, {#Le 5:2} but now shall see himself so, and be ready to say, as #Pr 5:14, "I was almost in all evil in the midst of the congregation and the assembly." "By the law is the knowledge of sin." {#Ro 3:20}

Ver. 4. To do evil.] As David did to slay Nabal. {#Isa 25:22}

Or to do good.] As the same David did to do good to Mephibosheth, and yet he was not so good as his oath.

And it be hid from him.] As is usual with your common swearers, who will swear that they swear not. If men had such distempers of body, as their excrements come from them when they knew not of it, it would trouble them; but they swear, and let go much filth, and it is hid from them.

Ver. 5. He shall confess.] Homo agnoscit, Deus ignoscit, Man confesseth, and God pardoneth. In the courts of men it is the safest plea to say, Non feci, quoth Quintilian; "I am not guilty": not so here; but ego feci, miserere, "I did it; have mercy upon me."

“ Per miserere mei tollitur ira Dei.”

Ver. 6. For his sin which he hath sinned.] Bending his thoughts upon that particular sin. It is charged upon Israel, that they "remembered not that they lay in their blood." {#Eze 16:22}

Ver. 7. Two turtle doves.] {See Trapp on "Le 1:14"}

Ver. 8. For the sin offering first.] For till sin be expiated, no sacrifice or service can be accepted. Therefore "Wash you, cleanse you," and then, "Come, and let us reason." {#Isa 1:16-18}

Ver. 9. Upon the side of the altar.] The north side, and not upon the east: (1.) that Israel might not symbolise with the heathens, who worshipped toward the east; (2.) To signify that they had no more under the law than dark "shadows of good things to come," {#Heb 10:1} "until the time of reformation." {#Heb 9:10}

Ver. 10. According to the manner.] That is, the forms and rites prescribed. So, {#Am 8:14} "The manner of Beersheba," i.e, the forms and rites of worshipping in Beersheba, as the Chaldee paraphraseth it.

Ver. 11. But if he be not able.] So low doth the Most High stoop to man's meanness, that he will accept of a very small present from him that would bring a better, if it were in the power of his hand. Lycurgus enjoined his Lacedemonians to offer small sacrifices; for God, said he, respecteth more the internal devotion, than the external oblation.

Ver. 12. Even a memorial.] This is spoken after the manner of men who have need of remembrancers. God sometimes seems to lose his mercy, and then we must find it for him, as they in #Isa 63:15; sometimes to forget, sleep, delay, &c., and then we must in mind, awaken, quicken him. {#Isa 62:7}

Ver. 13. And it shall be forgiven him.] See a like promise made to our ministry, #Jas 5:15.

Ver. 15. In the holy things of the Lord.] Things consecrate to him, by robbing and wronging of God and his priests; be it but through ignorance or error. For to do such a thing presumptuously was death, {#Nu 15:30} and by the laws of the twelve tables in Rome, such were to be punished as parricides. {a}

{a} Sacrum qui cleperit, rapseritve, parricida esto.

Ver. 16. And he shall make amends.] No remission without restitution. God abhors holocaustum ex rapina. And if ye make no restitution, ye shall cough in hell, said Father Latimer. {a}

{a} Latimer's Sermons.

Ver. 17. Though he wist it not.] Ignorance, though invincible and unavoidable, well may excuse a tanto, but not a toto {#Lu 12:48}

Ver. 18. Shall make an atonement.] {See Trapp on "Le 4:20"}

Ver. 19. It is a trespass offering.] "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin." {#1Jo 1:7 Heb 10:10,11}

Chapter 6

Ver. 1. And the Lord spake unto Moses.] See on #Le 4:1.

Ver. 2. Against the Lord.] As David in defiling his neighbour's wife, and afterwards killing him, is said to have "despised the commandment of the Lord, and to have done evil in his sight," {#2Sa

12:9) which also he penitently acknowledgeth. {#Ps 51:4} Sin is properly against none but God, being a transgression of his law. Hence the manslayer was confined to the city of refuge as to a prison, during the life of the high priest; as being, saith one, {a} the chief god on earth. That was a true position of the Pelagians, Omne peccatum est contemptus Dei, that every sin is a contempt of God. {#Pr 18:3}

In fellowship.] Heb., In putting of the hand. {b} It is said in Job, {#Job 8:20, marg.} that "God will not take a wicked man by the hand," i.e., he will have no fellowship with him.

{a} Godw., Heb. Antiq., p. 98.

{b} Dextram coniungere dextrae.

Ver. 3. And lieth concerning it, and sweareth falsely.] Through inordinate love of money, that "root of all evil"; {a} but such money shall perish with them. {#Zec 5:3}

{a} Quid non mortalia pectora cogit auri sacra fames? ηη φιλοχρηματιη μητηρ κακοτητος απασης.

Ver. 4. And is guilty.] Found guilty by a self-condemning conscience; which now, like Samson's wife, conceals not the riddle, but tells all; as she said of our Saviour in #Joh 4:29.

Ver. 5. In the day of his trespass offering.] Before he compass God's altar. See #Mt 5:23, {See Trapp on "Mt 5:23"}

Ver. 6. With thy estimation,] i.e. As thou shalt value it. Moses did the priest's office for present. He was likewise a prophet, {#De 18:15} and king in Jeshurun, {#De 33:5} and so became a type of Christ, that true Trismegist, the Priest, Prophet, and Prince. {#Da 9:25}

Ver. 7. Shall make an atonement.] Through the sacrifice of Christ. {#Heb 10:1,4,10,14}

Ver. 9. All night unto the morning.] God must be thought upon in the night season. {#Ps 4:4} David willingly brake his sleep to do it. {#Ps 119:62} "The day is thine, the night also is thine," saith he. {#Ps 74:16}

Ver. 10. Beside the altar.] On the east side farthest from the sanctuary, {#Le 1:16} in reverence of the Divine Majesty.

Ver. 11. Unto a clean place.] Because they came from the Lord's holy house. See the contrary commanded concerning the stones and dust of a leprous house. {#Le 14:40}

Ver. 12. It shall not be put out.] No more should our faith, love, zeal (that flame of God, as Solomon calls it, #So 8:9), that should never go out; the waters should not quench it, nor the ashes cover it.

{#So 8:10 2Ti 1:6}

Ver. 13. The fire shall ever be burning.] The Gentiles, by an apish imitation hereof, had their vestal fire, salted meal, and many other sacred rites. Basil chargeth the devil as "a thief of the truth," in that he had decked his crows with her feathers.

Ver. 14. The law of the meat offering.] Besides what is set down in #Le 2:1,2. Thus one text explains another; as the diamond is brightened with its own dust.

Ver. 15. Even the memorial.] {See Trapp on "Le 2:2"}

Ver. 16. Shall Aaron and his sons eat.] See #1Co 9:13,14. {See Trapp on "1Co 9:13"} {See Trapp on "1Co 9:14"}

Ver. 17. It shall not be baken with leaven.] Which is, (1.) souring; (2.) swelling; (3.) spreading; (4.) impuring.

Ver. 18. Shall be holy.] God "will be sanctified in all that draw near unto him."

“... Procul hinc, procul este profani.”

Ver. 20. When he is anointed,] i.e., When any high priest: for he only was anointed, {#Ex 29:7} on the head at least.

Ver. 21. In a pan.] Figuring out the sufferings of Christ, who was so parched with the fire of afflictions for our sins.

Ver. 22. Of his sons,] i.e., The eldest, if he have no deformity or impediment, to make him incapable of the priesthood.

Ver. 23. It shall not be eaten.] To teach the high priest to look for salvation out of himself.

Ver. 25. In the place,] i.e., At the north side of the altar. And why {See Trapp on "Le 5:9"}

Ver. 26. Shall eat it.] Except in that case, #Le 6:30.

Ver. 27. Shall be holy.] This taught a holy use of the mystery of our redemption: for the sin offering in special sort figured Christ.

Ver. 28. But the earthen vessel.] So contagious a thing is sin, that it defileth the very visible heaven and earth: which therefore must be likewise purged by the last fire, as the earthen pot which held the sin offering was broken, and the brazen scoured and rinsed in water.

Ver. 29. It is most holy.] Heb., Holy of holies. The Greek addeth, unto the Lord.

Ver. 30. And no sin offerlng.] Here the ordinary gloss makes this observation, Remissionem dare, Dei solius est, qui per ignem significatur. That to pardon sin belongs to God alone, who is a consuming fire. The Rhemists {a} tell us of a man that could remove mountains: of which they may as soon persuade us, as that their priests have as full power to pardon sins as Christ had. One of their priests meeting with a man troubled in mind, told him that their religion afforded more comfort to the conscience than ours; and that because it had, and exercised a power to pardon sin, which our ministers neither did nor durst assume to themselves. {b}

{b} Ley's Pattern of Piety, p. 145.

Chapter 7

Ver. 1. Of the trespass offering.] Heb., Asham, Piaculum, quo peccatum expiatur. How it differed from the sin offering is hard to determine.

Ver. 2. In the place.] {See Trapp on "Le 1:11"}

Ver. 3. That covereth the inwards.] "My son, give me thy heart." See #Ps 51:6 Jer 4:14.

Ver. 4. And the two kidneys.] {See Trapp on "Le 3:4"}

Ver. 5. It is a trespass offering.] And, as in the sin offering, the priest was to have the remainder. They had many a good morsel besides their tithes and lands.

Ver. 7. As the sin offering is.] They were distinct then. See #Le 7:1.

Ver. 8. The priest shall have to himself.] It is a sign of gasping devotion when men are so straitanded to their ministers, who should have part of all. {#Ga 6:6}

Ver. 9. And all the meat offering.] Which seems to be so called, partly because it went as meat unto the priest—the labourer is surely worthy of his meat, -but {#Mt 10:10} principally as leading to Christ, whose "flesh is meat indeed." {#Joh 6:55}

Ver. 10. Have, one as much as another.] In their father's house was bread enough. "Put me, I pray thee, into one of the priest's offices, that I may eat a piece of bread." {#ISA 2:36} This the Tirshatha would not suffer those turn-coats to do. {#Ezr 2:63} But how hard put to it was that poor priest that answered young Pareus, asking him an alms, according to the custom of those times, Nos pauperi fratres, nos nihil habemus, an piscis, an caro, an panis, an misericordia habemus? {a}

Ver. 11. Sacrifice of peace offerings.] Or, pay offering. See #Ps 116:14. "I will pay," or, I will perfect. Fitly; for a vow, till paid, is an imperfect thing.

Ver. 12. Unleavened cakes.] There must be sincerity in all our services; for else God will not once look at them.

Ver. 13. Leavened bread.] Lo, leavened bread will pass in a peace offering: God for Christ's sake rejects not the services of his saints, though tainted with corruption. Peccata nobis non nocent, si non placent. {a} Wine is not thrown away for the dregs, nor gold for the dirt that cleaves unto it.

{a} August.

Ver. 14. For a heave offering.] So called, because it was heaved and lifted up before the Lord, in token that they received all from him, and did acknowledge all to be due to him.

Ver. 15. Eaten the same day.] Thanks must be returned while mercies are fresh; lest, as fish, they putrify with keeping. Eaten bread is soon forgotten. Hezekiah wrote his song the third day after his recovery. Jehoshaphat gave thanks first upon the ground where he had the victory, calling it Berachah; and three days after again at Jerusalem. {#2Ch 20:25,26} See David's Now, now, now, -"I will pay my VOWS." {#Ps 116:14,15}

Ver. 16. And on the morrow also.] This was not allowed in a thank offering. {#Le 7:15} Hereby God would teach them, that he must be worshipped as himself appointeth, and not as they in their reason should think fit.

Ver. 17. On the third day.] Foreshadowing the resurrection of Christ on the third day, whereby all legal ceremonies were abolished, and had no use in the Church, but by accident; as he who buildeth a vault, letteth the centrals stand till he put in the keystone, and then pulleth them away.

Ver. 18. It shall be an abomination.] Kept beyond the time; and so uneatable, unsacrificeable, profane, stinking.

Ver. 19. Shall not be eaten.] Because not fit to represent Christ.

Ver. 20. Having his uncleanness upon him.] To the unclean all things are unclean, &c. {#Tit 1:15} {See Trapp on "Tit 1:15"}

Ver. 21. Cut off from his people.] Compare #1Co 11:27-29.

Ver. 22. And the Lord spake unto Moses.] This is oft repeated to draw attention and get authority. See #1Th 2:13.

Ver. 23. No manner of fat.] {See Trapp on "Le 3:12"}

Ver. 24. Used in any other use.] Though not in sacrifice. Mud walls may be made up of any refuse matter: not so the walls of a church or palace.

Ver. 25. Shall be cut off, / i.e., Shall be liable to God's judgments.

Ver. 26. Ye shall eat no manner of blood.] This signified, (1.) That we should learn to honour holy things, and not to make a mock of them by employing them to common use; (2.) That we should be most careful not to shed man's blood for the satisfying of our lust. See #Le 17:11,12 Ge 9:4,5 De 12:13.

Ver. 27. Whatsoever soul it be.] One would think this to be but a peccadillo: yet how fearfully is it threatened! No sin can be little, because there is no little God to sin against.

Ver. 29. Unto the Lord.] Not kill it in the camp, though there they might eat it.

Ver. 30. His own hands.] Teaching them that they must live by their own faith. {#Hab 2:5}

May be waved.] Or, Shaken to and fro; which signified the shaking of our lips in giving thanks to God, {#Ho 14:2 Heb 13:15,16} which yet must be fetched lower than the lips, even from the bottom of the heart; the deeper the sweeter. The voice that is made in the mouth is nothing so sweet, as that which comes from the depth of the breast.

Ver. 31,32. The breast shall be Aaron's and his sons'. And the right shoulder.] To note that men must give their breasts and shoulders, affections and actions, even their whole selves; first to the Lord, and then to us ministers by the will of God, as those famous Macedonians did in #2Co 8:5; that so they may be sani in doctrina et sancti in vita, sound in doctrine, and holy in life.

Ver. 32. See note in previous verse.

Ver. 33. He among the sons of Aaron.] The breast belonged to the high priest and his family; but the right shoulder was for the priest that did officiate, or do the office of a priest, for that turn.

Ver. 34. For the wave-breast, and the heaveshoulder.] This might further signify, saith one, that Christ Jesus heaved up for us both breast and shoulder—that is, wisdom and strength to all his elect priesthood, whose portion he is. {#1Co 1:30} Or it might note, saith another, that ministers should both take care (figured by the breast) and pains (signified by the shoulder). And therefore the high priest did to that end wear the names of the tribes upon his shoulders and upon his breast.

Ver. 35. This is the portion of the anointing.] That is, Of the anointed priests; and that because they were anointed to the office. Here Origen, according to his manner, turns all into allegories and mysteries, and tells us of a threefold sense of Scripture, (1.) Literal; (2.) Moral; (3.) Mystical: comparing them to the gridiron, frying pan, and oven, used in dressing the meat offering. #Le 7:9 But this itch of allegorising dark and difficult texts hath no small danger in it. And I may doubt of Origen, as one doth of Jerome, Utrum plus boni peritia linguarum, qua excelluit, an mali suis allegoriis, in quibus dominatus fuit, ecclesiae Dei attulerit; whether he did more harm or good to the Church. {a}

Ver. 1. And the Lord spake.] {See Trapp on "Le 7:22"} And for the rest of the chapter, read the notes on Exod. 28-30. {See Trapp on "Ex 28:1"}

Ver. 3. And gather thou all the congregation.] Ministers are to be ordained in the public assembly, {#Ac 14:22} that the people may show their approbation, profess their purpose of obedience, and pray for God's Spirit to be poured upon them.

Ver. 6. And Moses brought Aaron.] They did not intrude themselves. {See Trapp on "Heb 5:4"}

Ver. 8. He put in the breastplate the Urim, &c.] Hence, it may be, God appointed the breastplate to be made double, that the Urim and Thummim might be put within, and lie hid on every side. This Urim and Thummim signified, saith one, that in Christ are hidden all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, {#Col 2:3} and that he hath all secret things most perfectly known and numbered out before him, which he revealeth continually to his Church and chosen, as need requireth, by such means as himself hath sanctified. {#Ps 25:14 Joh 14:21,26 17:14,17,26}

Ver. 36. No note on this verse

Chapter 9

Ver. 1. On the eighth day.] The very next day after the priest's consecration, that no time might be lost. "I made haste and delayed not," &c. {#Ps 119:16} "Then said I, Lo I come: in the volume of the book it is written of me," &c. {#Ps 40:7} Live, live, live, saith one, quickly, much, long: let no water go by, no day be lost, &c. Preach, preach, be instant, quick at work, &c.

“ Praecipitat tempus, mors atra impendet agenti.”

Ver. 2. Take thee a young calf] In remembrance, and for the remission of Aaron's sin about the golden calf; as some Hebrews are of opinion.

Ver. 3. Take ye a kid of the goats for a sin offering.] Quia gravis odor peccati. The smell of sin is grievous; it offendeth all God's senses, yea, his very soul. {#Isa 1:12,13, &c.}

Ver. 4. For today the Lord will appear unto you.] And he may not find you empty handed, unprepared. {See Trapp on "Ex 19:10"}

Ver. 6. And the glory of the Lord shall appear unto you.] So shall it one day to us: yea, we shall be like him, and appear with him in glory; and must therefore purify ourselves, as God is pure. {#1Jo 3:2,3}

Ver. 7. Make an atonement for thyself] See #Heb 5:3 7:27,28. {See Trapp on "Heb 5:3"} {See Trapp on "Heb 7:27"} {See Trapp on "Heb 7:28"}

Ver. 8. Went unto the altar,] i.e., The brazen altar; for he had not yet access to the altar of incense. We must slay our corruptions before we present our supplications, wash our hearts from wickedness, and then compass God's altar.

Ver. 22. Lifted up his hand.] He put the blessing upon them. A type of Christ. {#Lu 24:50 Ac 3:26 Eph 1:3}

Ver. 24. They shouted, and fell on their faces.] The consideration of God's gracious acceptation of us in Christ should make us to lift many a humble, joyful, and thankful heart to God.

Chapter 10

Ver. 1. And Nadab and Abihu.] These jolly young priests, overjoyed haply of their new employment and overwarmed with wine, as some gather out of #Le 10:9, over did themselves the very day of their service, {#Le 10:19} and are suddenly surprised by a doleful death. So was that inconsiderate priest of Naples, Anno Dom. 1457, of whom Wolphius {a} reports, that when the hill Vesuvius had sent huge flames, and done great spoil, he, to make proof of his piety, read a mass, and would needs go up the hill to find out the cause of such a calamity. But for a reward of his foolhardiness, he perished in the flames, and was never heard of any more.

{a} Wolph., Memorab. Lect., cent. 15.

Ver. 2. And there went out fire.] By fire they sinned, and by fire they perished.

“ *Per quod quis peccat, per idem punitur et ipse:
Nestorii lingua vermibus exesa est.* ”—Evag., lib. i.

So Archbishop Arundel’s tongue rotted in his head. The Archbishop of Tours in France made suit for the erection of a court called Chambre Ardent, wherein to condemn the Protestants to the fire. He was afterwards stricken with a disease called the fire of God, which began at his feet and so ascended upward, that he caused one member after another to be cut off, and so he died miserably. {a}

{a} Act. and Mon., fol. 1911.

Ver. 3. This is it that the Lord spake.] Where? and when? #Le 8:35 Ex 19:22. Or perhaps nowhere written, but at some other time spoken by God. Moses might but set down the short notes of his discourses, as the prophets used to do.

I will be sanctified.] Either actively or passively, Aut a nobis, aut in nos, either in us, or upon us; sure it is, that he will be no loser by us. Sanctified he will be, either in the sincerity of men’s conversation, or else in the severity of their condemnation. Singular things are expected of all that draw nigh to God in any duty, but especially in the office of the ministry. Those that stand in the presence of princes must be exact in their carriages. God appointed both the weights and measures of the sanctuary to be twice as large as those of the commonwealth; to show, that he expects much more of those that serve him there, than he doth of others. The souls of priests must be purer than the sunbeams, saith Chrysostom.

And Aaron held his peace.] He bridled his passions, and submitted to the divine justice. The like did David, {#Ps 39:9} which words were taken up by Duplessis in the loss of his only son. {a}

{a} Dr Hakw., on Psalm ci

Ver. 4. And Moses called Mishael, &c.] Aaron's first cousins were called, to carry these two unhappy brethren out for burial: their brethren the priests might not leave their ministry to do it. Accordingly we read of one Pulvillus, a heathen, that he was about to consecrate a temple to Jupiter, and when news was brought him of the death of his son, he would not desist from his enterprise; but with much composure of mind gave order for decent burial.

Ver. 5. In their coats.] These were not burnt, as neither were their bodies: the fire, being of a celestial and subtile nature, might pierce their inward parts, not touching their outward; as lightning kills by piercing, not by burning. {a}

{a} Tostat.

Ver. 6. And Moses said unto Aaron.] Philo reporteth that the high priest of the Jews, to keep always his soul pure, never saw any mournful object. Tiberius, counterfeiting grief at the funeral of Drusus, had a vail laid betwixt the dead and him, that he might not see the body, because he was, as the rest of the emperors also were, pontifex maximus, or the high priest; and therefore a sacred person. Mourning in Aaron might have seemed murmuring; he is therefore forbidden it, and accordingly he forbears. So did Luther when he buried his daughter; he was not seen to shed a tear. {a} No more did Rev. William Whately, late pastor of Banbury, when, after he had preached his own child's funeral upon this text, "The will of the Lord be done," he and his wife laid the child in the grave with their own hands.

Bewail the burning.] It is fit enough, ordinarily, that the body, when sown in corruption, be watered by the tears of those that plant it in the earth.

{a} Manlii, loc. com., p. 215.

Ver. 7. For the anointing oil of the Lord is upon you.] This is every true Christian's case, who should therefore carry himself accordingly. There is a το πρεπον, a seemly carriage, belongs to every calling. "You have an unction," &c. {#1Jo 2:20}

Ver. 9. Do not drink wine, nor strong drink.] As some are of opinion Nadab and Abihu had done; which miscarriage of theirs occasioned this precept. {a} The perpetual equity whereof is, that ministers be no wine bibbers or tipplers or drunken sots. {#1Ti 3:3} Why should it be said as of old, "They have erred because of wine, and have gone out of the way because of strong drink, even the priest and the prophet?" {#Isa 28:7} Drunkenness is a crime in all, but it is a kind of sacrilege in ministers. And if other drunkards deserve double punishments for their misdemeanours, as Aristotle {b} judgeth, first for their drunkenness, and then for the sin committed in and by their drunkenness what do drunken priests? {#Isa 56:12}

{a} Ex malis moribus bonae leges.

{b} διπλα τα επιτιμια.—Arist., Ethic., lib. iii. cap. 5.

Ver. 10. And that ye may put difference.] Drunkenness takes away the heart, {#Ho 4:11} besots and infatuates; robs a man of himself, and lays a beast in his place.

Ver. 11. And that ye may teach.] The priest's lips should both preserve knowledge and present it to the people; even all the counsel of God. {#Mat 2:7 Ac 20:27} "To give the knowledge of salvation by the remission of sins." {#Lu 1:77}

Ver. 12. Take the meat offering, J q.d., Think not that God hath cashiered you because he hath corrected you; neither refuse your meat out of a sullen sourness; but fall to your meat offering, and take better heed another time. Only "eat before the Lord." {#De 12:18}

Ver. 13. See #Le 6:26.

Ver. 14. And the wave breast, and heave shoulder.] These were the priests' due: teaching them to set breast and shoulder to God's work: and minding them, that a minister should be both a breast to love, and a shoulder to support the people in their troubles and burdens.

Ver. 15. The heave shoulder.] See on #Ex 29:24.

Ver. 16. And, behold, it was burnt.] Passion for their dead friends had so transported the priests, that they knew not well what they did. We use to say, Res est ingeniosa dolor: but then it must not be excessive as here, and as #2Sa 18:33.

Ver. 17. To bear the iniquity.] This the sinner doth subjectively, the priest typically, the Lord Christ really.

Ver. 18. Ye should indeed have eaten it.] Thus, by misreckoning a point, ye have missed the haven, and hazarded yourselves to the rocks of the divine displeasure, against which your brethren so lately split. God is usually most angry when he is about a reformation; as here against Nadab and Abihu: so afterwards against Uzzah, Ananias and Sapphira, &c.

Ver. 19. Should it have been accepted.] God loves a cheerful server. {#De 12:7 26:14} Mourners' bread is polluted bread, {#Ho 9:4} and those unkind husbands are blamed for causing their wives, when they should have been cheerful in God's service, to cover the Lord's altar with tears, with weeping and with crying out, so that he regarded not the offering any more. {#Mal 2:13} This Aaron knew, and allegeth for himself.

Ver. 20. He was content.] For that time at least. It is not good sowing in a high wind. To choose a fit time to admonish an offender, is a singular skill, and a very great advantage. The mildest medicine is troublesome to an eye that is inflamed.

Chapter 11

Ver. 1. Unto Moses and to Aaron.] Magistrate and minister must jointly see that God's laws be duly executed. Queen Elizabeth once in her progress visiting the county of Suffolk, all the justices of peace in that county met her majesty; having every one his minister next to his body; which the queen took special notice of, and thereupon uttered this speech, that she had often demanded of her Privy Council why her county of Suffolk was better governed than any other county, and could never understand the reason thereof, but now she herself perceived the reason. It must needs be so, said she, where Moses and Aaron, the word and the sword, go together.

Ver. 2. These are the beasts which ye shall eat.] These, and these only; (1.) That ye may be at mine appointment for your very meat, as who am chief Lord of all; (2.) That there may be a difference betwixt you and all other people; (3.) That ye may be taught to study purity, and know that the very creatures are defiled by man's sin; (4.) That ye may have these things as "a shadow of things to come." {#Col 2:16,17}

Ver. 3. Whatsoever parteth the hoof, and cheweth the cud.] To teach them to think upon God's commandments to do them, {#Ps 103:18} cleansing themselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit. {#2Co 7:1} Moreover clean Christians, typed by those clean beasts, must rightly part the hoof; that is, rightly divide their time; giving a due share thereof to either of their callings.

Ver. 4. The camel.] The foolish Jews when they saw Mohammed arising in such power, were immediately ready to cry him up for their Messiah. But when they saw him eat of a camel, saith mine author, {a} they were as blank as when they saw the hoped issue of their late Jewish virgin turned to a daughter.

{a} Dr Hall's Peacemaker.

Ver. 5. And the coney.] Which hath his name in Hebrew from hiding himself in holes. A weak, but a wise creature. {#Pr 30:26} And wisdom is better than strength. {#Ec 9:15} The hare that trusts to the swiftness of her legs, is at length taken and torn in pieces; when the coney that flees to the rocks, doth easily avoid the dogs that pursue her. See #Isa 40:30,31.

Ver. 6. Because he cheweth the cud, but divideth not.] Meditation must end in practice: as lessons of music must be practised, and a copy not read only, but written after.

Ver. 7. And the swine.] Anima sui data pro sale, ne carnes putrescant, said Cleanthes. The swine hath his soul for salt only; so hath the drunkard.

Ver. 8. Of their flesh shall ye not eat.] Not above the quantity of an olive, say the Jew doctors, who will needs be mending magnificat, adding to the law.

Ver. 9. Whatsoever hath fins and scales.] The fins of the fish are for steering of their motion, the scales for smoothness of passage, for safeguard, for ornament. Those only are clean in the sight of God, Qui squamas et loricam habent patientiae, et pinnulas hilaritatis, saith Bernard. {a}

{a} Sermon I. in Die oct. And.

Ver. 10. Of all that move in the waters.] And yet swim also in the air. Like to these is the temporary believer: for that seeming to mount up in spiritual joys, yet he withal swimmeth, yea, batheth himself in the waters of sensual delights.

Ver. 11. They shall be even an abomination.] To teach us, that nothing is lawful, no not for our common use, unless it be "sanctified by the word of God and prayer." {#1Ti 4:5 Ac 10:35}

Ver. 12. Whatsoever hath no fins nor scales.] These are little in motion or action, and so not so wholesome as eels and lampreys, that lie lazily in the mud.

Ver. 13. The eagle.] Which yet is counted and called the king of birds, and delights in high flying. That which is highly "esteemed amongst men is abomination before God." {#Lu 16:15}

Ver. 14. And the vulture, and the kite.] That feed upon carrion and dead carcasses, and are emblems of greedy gripers and oppressors.

Ver. 15. Every raven.] Unnatural to his young, whom God himself heareth and feedeth, {#Ps 147:9} though they cry with a harsh note, and cry to God by implication only; and though the raven be an inauspicate bird, and a sign both of man's punishment and God's curse. {#Isa 34:11}

Ver. 16. And the owl, and the night hawk.] Night birds that hate the light, or fly against it, as bats do, are an abomination. Deeds of darkness are out of date, now in the days of the gospel especially.

{#Ro 13:12,13}

Ver. 17. And the cormorant.] An unsatisfiable bird, that fitly resembleth the devil, who daily devours souls, and yet enlargeth his desires as hell.

Ver. 18. And the swan.] Whose white feathers, but black skin under them, might serve to set forth the hatefulness of hypocrisy.

Ver. 19. And the stork.] Which builds high, {#Ps 104:17} but feeds low on fishes, frogs, and snakes; and so might be the rather rejected as unfit for food.

And the lapwing.] Which is worthily made a hieroglyphic of infelicity; because it hath as a coronet upon the head, and yet feeds upon the worst of excrements. It is pity that the saints, that are brought up in scarlet, should embrace the dunghill; {#La 4:5} that any one that is washed in Christ's blood, should bedabble his robe in the stinking puddle of the world.

And the bat.] Cast away either thy wings or thy teeth, saith one {a} to a neuter, and loathing this batlike nature, be what thou art, either a bird or a beast.

Ver. 20. All fowls that creep.] So all mongrels in religion, that, like the planet Mercury, can be good in conjunction with good, and bad with bad; that have religionem ephemeram, fidem menstruam. {a}

{a} Hilar.

Ver. 21. Which have legs above their feet,] i.e., Which have the hinder feet longer, whereby they may leap. Whereas those that have all four feet equal, as #Le 11:23, may not be eaten.

Ver. 22. The locust, &c.] All creeping fowls that go upon all four might not be beaten, except Arbe, Soleam, Chargol, and Chargah, names to us unknown.

Ver. 23. Which have four feet.] See on #Le 11:21.

Ver. 24. Whosoever toucheth the carcass.] This and the like signified that all, even the least sins, are to be purged through Christ, and carefully cast away.

Ver. 25. Beareth aught, &c.] In his clothes, though he do not touch them with his flesh.

Shall wash his clothes.] This was a type of the defiling property of sin: as also of our cleansing by repentance, and faith in Christ's blood.

Ver. 26. Not cloven footed.] See on #Le 11:5.

Ver. 27. Paws.] As wolves, lions, bears, dogs, cats, apes, &c.

Ver. 28. Shall wash his clothes.] As having committed a greater sin than he that toucheth a carcass only. All sin defileth not alike.

Ver. 29. And the tortoise.] Which hath its name in Hebrew of a coach or wagon. The thick shell wherewith it is covered is said to be so hard, that a loaded wagon may go over it and not break it. And such is a hard heart, that cannot repent, or relent never so little.

Ver. 30. The chameleon.] A very fearful creature, and therefore easily turning himself into sundry colours. Carnal fear puts men upon unwarrantable shifts. See #Zep 3:13.

Ver. 31. Touch them, when they be dead.] There is no kind of living creature that is defiled while it is alive, or that defileth while it is alive, save man only, saith Maimony. Others note that there were more remarkable expressions of God's anger upon man's sin in the dead body of a man than of a beast. The one made unclean but till evening: the other seven days.

Ver. 32. It shall be unclean.] With a ceremonial uncleanness only, and not moral: howbeit, the disobedience, even in such a small matter, brought a guilt upon the soul, which did defile, while the prohibition was in force; as one well observeth.

Ver. 33. Ye shall break it.] So shall reprobates be broken in pieces, like a potter's vessel. {#Ps 2:9, Jer 9:11}

Ver. 34. Such water.] Coming out of such an unclean place, or vessel.

Ver. 35. Whether it be oven, or ranges for pots.] All this, to teach them how strict they were to be, in avoiding the least pollution of sin.

Ver. 36. Nevertheless a fountain.] Because it would cleanse itself, and work out the uncleanness. So will faith.

Ver. 37. It shall be clean.] Because of necessity.

Ver. 38. It shall be unclean.] And therefore not to be eaten, but given to beasts.

Ver. 39. Of which ye may.] Compare #Ps 49:12, pecoribus morticinis. -Tremel.

Ver. 40. Shall wash his clothes.] To teach them to "hate even the garment spotted by the flesh," {#Jude 1:23} all provocations and instruments of sin.

Ver. 41,42. And every creeping thing.] Whether it goeth upon the belly, as snakes, worms; or crawls upon all fours, as toads, scorpions; or hath any feet to creep withal, as caterpillars, Millepedae, & c.

Ver. 42. {See Trapp on "Le 11:41"}

Ver. 43. Ye shall not make yourselves.] Heb., Your souls. See on #Le 11:32.

Ver. 44. Ye shall be holy; for I am holy.] Great men look to be served like themselves: so the great God.

Ver. 45. That bringeth you up.] This is often inculcated. God's blessings are binders; and every new deliverance calls for new obedience.

Ver. 46. This is the law of the beasts.] Grounded upon right reason, however it may seem otherwise, as is also every other law of God.

Ver. 47. To make a difference.] Ministers also in their discourses should put a difference, and take out "the precious from the vile," {#Jer 15:19} as did Zuinglius; who, when he inveighed most vehemently against sin, would usually come in with this clause, Probe vir, haec nihil ad te, This is not intended to thee, thou godly man.

Chapter 12

Ver. 2. If a woman have conceived seed.] Or yielded seed, as #Ge 1:11. Urgendum hoc adversus Anabaptistas; qui, ut suos de humanae Christi naturae origine errores stabiliant, faeminas semen habere praefracte negant. {a} Hebraeorum magistri, ex eodem loco, {#Ge 1:11,12} colligunt marem edi quoties mulier semen mittere prior coeperit; foeminam, ubi vir. {b}

Then she shall be unclean.] This signified that corruption of man's nature wherein he is conceived, {#Ps 51:5} being condemned as soon as conceived, Damnatus antequam natus, {c} and the remedy we have in Christ.

{a} Amama, Antibarbar, 575.

{c} Augustine.

Ver. 3. And in the eighth day.] {See Trapp on "Ge 17:13"} {See Trapp on "Ge 17:14"}

Ver. 4. She shall touch no hallowed thing.] Preparation must go before participation of holy ordinances. {#Hag 2:13}

Ver. 5. But if she bear a maid child.] To intimate, it may be, the woman's being first in the transgression. {#1Ti 2:14}

Ver. 6. And when the days of her purifying.] The Virgin Mary also observed this law, {#Lu 2:21} not in conscience of any particular sin, which in the conception of our Saviour she was free from; nor in show, to satisfy the law, much less upon hypocrisy; but in conscience of her natural corruption, which by this oblation, according to the law, she did confess holily and religiously before God and his congregation, as one well observeth.

Ver. 7. And make an atonement.] Whereby her faith was confirmed, that by Christ her sin was remitted and the curse removed. {#1Ti 2:15}

Ver. 8. And if she be not able.] As the blessed Virgin was not. {#Lu 2:22,24} Who now can despise any one for want, when the mother of our Lord was not rich enough to bring a lamb for her purification? We may be as happy in russet {a}, as in tissue.

{a} A coarse homespun woollen cloth of a reddish-brown, grey or neutral colour, formerly used for the dress of peasants and country folk

Chapter 13

Ver. 1. And the Lord spake.] {See Trapp on "Le 7:22"}

Ver. 2. Like the plague of leprosy.] Leprosy is both an effect and type of sin; which is such a sickness of the soul, as those are of the body, which physicians say are corruptio totius substantiae, universal diseases tending to the issues of death. It dries up and draws out the very vital blood and life of the soul.

Ver. 3. The plague in the skin of the flesh.] That is, the white bright spot. {#Le 13:2} Compare #Ex 4:6 Nu 12:10.

Is turned white.] This might note such as have continued long and are aged in any wickedness.

Be deeper than the skin of his flesh.] Compare #Nu 12:12 2Ki 5:14. Such are they whose wickedness is not only acted by their hands, but seated in their hearts and sunk into their spirits: like the spots of the leopard, which no art can cure, no water wash off, because they are not in the skin, but in the flesh and bones, in the sinews and most inner parts. Ingrained diseases are not easily stirred, much less destroyed.

Ver. 4. Shall shut up him.] For further trial of truth, that daughter of time. We may not precipitate a censure, but be slow to speak, slow to wrath. The leper must be shut up from week to week, till the thing were certain: so till men's perverseness be made "manifest," {#2Ti 3:9} we must suspend our censures. Many are like candles whose tallow is mixed with brine; no sooner lighted, but they spit up and down the room.

Ver. 5. Spread not in the skin.] So if men mend by admonition, and take up in time; if they refuse not to be reformed, hate not to be healed, as Babylon, {#Jer 51:9}; as Ephraim. {#Ho 7:1} "When I would have healed Ephraim, then the iniquity of Ephraim was discovered," or brake out as a leprosy in his forehead. See #Eze 24:13.

Ver. 6. It is but a scab.] Such as may be "the spot of God's children." {#De 32:5} Sin makes wicked men the object of God's hatred, the saints of his pity; as we hate poison in a toad, but we pity it in a man.

And he shall wash his clothes.] The best cannot wash in innocency; he must therefore wash in tears. {#Isa 1:16} God also will set in and wash such with the blood of his Son.

Ver. 7. But if the scab spread.] So if sin be gaining and growing still upon the sinner, even after admonition, or is scattered and spread to the infecting of others, it is a very ill sign.

Ver. 8. The scab spreadeth.] This signifieth that there was yet more corruption within the body, and the inward parts were not sound. Think the same of the reign of sin in our mortal bodies. {#Ro 6:12,14,20}

Ver. 9. He shall be brought unto the priest.] Who was to discern it by the law of leprosy: so must we find out our sins by the moral law. {#Ro 3:20 7:7} "The works of the flesh are manifest." {#Ga 5:19} Neither need we half so much caution or curiosity to be persuaded of our spiritual leprosy, which is too apparent: only those many ceremonies, as one well noteth, may put us in mind how much more exquisite our diligence ought to be in finding and ferreting out our special sins.

Ver. 10. And there be quick raw flesh.] It is one of the most remarkable things in all this law, saith a learned divine, that quick or sound flesh in the sore should be judged leprosy, and the man unclean: whereas if the leprosy covered all his flesh, he was pronounced clean. {#Le 13:13} Hereby may be meant, (1.) Such as justify themselves and their wickedness, as Jonah did his anger; whereas he who judged himself, is like him who had the leprosy all over, and might be declared clean: or, (2.) Such who sin against the light of knowledge, and the quickening, yea, rawness of a galled conscience.

Ver. 11. It is an old leprosy.] So habituated sinners, that are crooked and aged with good opinions of themselves, these are seldom or never set straight again.

Ver. 12. And if a leprosy.] So called, because so counted at first: but it proves no more than a kind of scurf or scab.

Ver. 13. He shall pronounce him clean, / i.e., Not infectiously or incurably unclean.

Ver. 14. But when raw flesh.] Because it showed that there were still corrupt and poisoned humours in the body, not easy to be expelled till death.

Ver. 15. It is a leprosy.] Properly so called; a fretting soreness or scabbedness. The Greeks call it Elephas, or Elephantiasis, when the skin grows hard as the elephant's skin. This the Israelites brought, likely, out of Egypt; for it was bred only about the Nile, and is therefore called the botch of Egypt. {#De 28:27}

Ver. 16. Turn again,] viz., To be white like the rest of the body: so if a sinner stop or step back, &c.

Ver. 17. He is clean, / i.e., He will be so shortly: for why? the venom of the plague is coming forth apace.

Ver. 18. Was a boil, and is healed.] Seemed to be healed, as apostates to have escaped the pollutions of the world through the knowledge of Christ, {#2Pe 2:20} and to have known the way of righteousness, {#2Pe 2:21} and yet the latter end is worse with them than the beginning. They become altogether filthy. {#Ps 53:3} Forsakers of the covenant, yea, wicked doers against the covenant. {#Da 11:30,32} These sin not common sins, as Core and his company died not common deaths. {#Jude 1:11}

Ver. 22. And if it spread much abroad.] So, if sin reign, there is no pardon: rebel it may, reign must not.

Ver. 23. But if the bright spot stay.] Sin, if it reign not, is not imputed; for "we are not under the law, but under grace." {#Ro 6:12,14}

Ver. 25. A leprosy broken out of the burning.] Seldom do passions burn, but there is a leprosy breaking out of that burning; such as causeth the climate where such lepers live to be like the torrid zone, too hot for any to live near them.

Ver. 30. A yellow thin hair.] Which is a true sign of a scall.

Ver. 34. He shall wash his clothes.] {See Trapp on "Le 13:6"}

Ver. 35. After his cleansing.] {See Trapp on "Le 13:18"}

Ver. 37. Black hair.] A sign of soundness. Quod sanitas in corpore, id sanctitas in corde, saith Bernard.

Ver. 39. A freckled spot.] Or white leprous eruption. This made not a man unclean: no more do mere infirmities make God abhor us.

Ver. 44. His plague is in his head.] Such a leper is every ignorant man; how much more the man that is a heretic! whom therefore after the first and second admonition we must reject, {#Tit 3:10} yea from such stand off. {#1Ti 6:5} Keep aloof as from lepers, their very breath is infectious; and like the dogs of Congo, they bite, though they bark not. {a}

{a} Purchas's Pilg.

Ver. 45. His clothes shall be rent.] To show his sorrow for sin, the cause of his calamity.

And his head bare.] That men might not mistake him; and further to show his humility, whereof this also was a ceremony.

A covering upon his upper lip.] His moustaches that by his breath he might not infect others: and to show that God will not hear a good motion from an ill mouth.

Unclean, unclean.] Say we the same in our humblest acknowledgments; but withal add that of the leper in the Gospel, yet "Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean." {#Mt 8:2}

Ver. 46. Without the camp.] And that utterly, if incurable, as Uzzias. A lively type of excommunication, which the apostle describeth in #2Co 5:11,12, and our Saviour in #Mt 18:17.

Ver. 47. The garment also.] A plague not anywhere else read or heard of: being nothing like clothes now-a-days infected with the plague, but far more strange and dangerous; whether it did spread or fret inward, the garment was to be burnt with fire. This signified that all instruments of idolatry, or of any other sin, are to be destroyed and made away. As the law commandeth, "The graven images of their gods shall ye burn with fire." {#De 7:25,26} And Jude alludeth to it, when he biddeth us "save some with fear, pulling them out of the fire, hating even the garment spotted by the flesh." {#Jude 1:23} See #Isa 30:22 Ac 19:19. Justiciaries also shall one day find, that though to the world-ward they "wash themselves with snow water, and make their hands never so clean; yet God will plunge them in the ditch, and their own clothes shall make them to be abhorred." {#Job 9:30,31}

Ver. 59. This is the law of the plague.] A plague ordinary among the Jews, not so among Christians, who should therein see great cause of thankfulness. It is observed to have most infested the Jews upon their revoltings from religion, and that Christians took the infection of it from their country, when they went thither to recover it, out of the hands of the Turks. But what a lewd liar was that Egyptian mentioned by Phagius, who said, that both Jews and Christians were a foul discharge of most base and beastly people, followed with a foul disease, that forced them to rest one day in seven. A blister on that foul tongue, may it well be said. From Miriam's example, {#Nu 12:10-15} the Jewish doctors gather that leprosy is a punishment for an evil tongue.

Chapter 14

Ver. 1. And the Lord spake unto Moses.] And to Aaron also, though not here mentioned, as he is, #Le 14:33.

Ver. 2. He shall be brought unto the priest.] To teach us to go to Jesus Christ the High Priest of our profession, who healeth all our diseases. {#Ps 103:3} He cured the leprosy, to others altogether incurable, by a touch of his hand only. {#Mr 1:41} Yea, "he sent his word and healed them," {#Ps 107:20} and so he doth the souls of sinners that come unto him.

Ver. 3. If the plague of leprosy be healed.] As it was in Simon the leper that entertained Christ. Jealousy, frenzy, and heresy are counted incurable diseases: not so leprosy; though the most carried it to their death, as Gehazi, Azariah, &c.

Ver. 4. Command to take.] That the leper might show his thankfulness to Jehovah his physician, as he is called. {#Ex 15:26} See #Mt 8:4. Men pray and pay physicians of their bodies, who yet do but officiose occidere many times. And shall God have nothing? Must he ask as once, Where are the other nine? Shall we not turn again with Naaman now cleansed, and offer our service, renounce our idols, dedicate all we are and have to the God of Israel?

Two birds.] Or sparrows, whereof two were sold for a farthing: to show how lightly set by Christ is in the world, whose blood nevertheless is more worth than a thousand worlds.

Ver. 5. Over running water.] Heb., Living water. Life consists in motion, in action: hence waters that spring and run, are, for their continual motion, called living waters. O Lord, saith Hezekiah, "By these things men live, and in all these things is the life of my spirit."

{#Isa 38:16}

Ver. 6. That was killed over the running water.] Pointing at Christ, who "came not by water only, but by water and blood." {#1Jo 5:6} {See Trapp on "1Jo 5:6"} {See Trapp on "1Co 6:11"}

Ver. 7. And he shall sprinkle.] This led them to that blood of sprinkling, {#Heb 12:23,24} applied unto them by that hyssop branch of faith, whereby the heart is purified.

And shall let the living bird loose.] This figured, say some, that neither Christ's deity without the shedding of his blood, nor Christ's blood, but for the quickening life of the Godhead personally dwelling in him, could have been available for the purging of sin. Both which himself declareth. {#Joh 6:53,63} And hither belongeth #2Co 5:19 Ac 20:28. Moreover it figured, that Christ by his death conquered him that had the power of death, {#Heb 2:15} whilst he fled as a bird to the everlasting mountains, from the jaws of death to the joys of heaven. {#Heb 7:26}

Ver. 8. Shall wash his clothes, and shave.] This the leper was to do the first day of his cleansing; to teach men to be thorough in the practice of mortification, at the first conversion: "laying a good foundation for the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life." {#1Ti 6:19}

And shall tarry abroad.] Men must not be too hasty at first to catch at comfort; but let humiliation have her perfect work, and our sorrows be suitable to our sins.

Ver. 9. Even all his hair he shall shave off.] To show that repentance and mortification is not the work of a day, as he said in another case, {#Ezr 10:13} but of a man's whole life. There must be a daily shaving and paring of lusts and superfluities; which are to the soul as excrements are to the body. Yea, the more a sinner is exercised in mortification, the more he searcheth out his corruptions.

Now he shaveth off the hair not of his head only, but of his beard and eyebrows.

Ver. 10. He shall take two he lambs.] That by these sacrifices he might be taught to seek for the cleansing of his soul, together with the healing of his body; that there might be mens sana in corpore sano, a cure done on both inside and outside too.

Ver. 11. At the door of the tabernacle.] There God is to be found, viz., in the public assemblies, and that we are indeed, saith one, which we are at the door of the tabernacle.

Ver. 12. And wave them.] This may note, (1.) Christ's extreme sufferings; (2.) The waving of Christ in the preaching of the gospel; (3.) The motion of the sinner's lips in confession and supplication.

Ver. 13. It is most holy.] The way of holiness in and by Christ is an absolute way as ever was devised.

Ver. 14. Upon the tip of the right ear.] To signify that all Christ's sanctified ones have a hearing ear, an active hand, a nimble foot to walk in the way that is called holy.

Ver. 15. Some of the log of oil.] Christ's comforts must be warily propounded to men, and with good discretion.

Ver. 16. Seven times.] This might note the perfection of the joys God hath for his, and our imperfection in believing it, in that it was so many times sprinkled.

Ver. 17. Upon the tip of the right ear.] To assure him of comfort, in hearing, doing, persevering.

Ver. 18. Upon the head.] Everlasting joy shall be upon the heads of Christ's ransomed ones. {#Isa 35:10}

Ver. 19. And afterward he shall kill the burnt offering.] We must be reconciled by Christ, our sin offering, before the sacrificing of ourselves—which is our reasonable service—can be accepted.

Ver. 20. And the meat offering.] The meat offering annexed to the burnt offering shows, saith one, {a} either that Christians grow marvellously in this life, after they have full assurance of pardon of sin: or else that Christ will be their eternal food in heaven.

{a} Bifield, on #1Pe 1:22.

Ver. 21. And if he be poor.] there is a proviso for poor people: God makes no difference, but accepts of a little where much is to be had.

Ver. 32. Whose hand is not able to get.] This is often urged, to show that the best that can be got must not be thought too good for

God: and that if through carelessness or niggardice men do not their utmost, that is a just exception.

Ver. 34. Plague of leprosy in a house.] Such is the contagion of sin, that it will infect the very house we dwell in, the garments we wear, even all the creatures we use, so as all things are to us impure; {#Tir 1:13} even the house of God also, {#Le 16:16} and his holy ordinances. The Canaanites had defiled the land from one end to another with their uncleannesses, {#Ezr 9:11} and so infected the air. This law taught men, (1.) Upon all occasions to show their utter detestation of sin, but especially of idolatry; (2.) To take heed of despising admonition, lest they be utterly ruined, "and that without remedy." {#Pr 29:1}

Ver. 35. As it were a plague.] He might not flatly say, it was the leprosy, till the priest had so pronounced it.

Ver. 36. That all that is in the house be not made unclean.] As it will be when once the priest hath been there and pronounced it unclean. Learn here, saith a good interpreter, to prevent God's last judgment, by sequestering ourselves betimes, from the contagion of sinners.

Chapter 15

Ver. 2. A running issue.] An involuntary flux of semin, such as David imprecath upon Joab. {#2Sa 3:29}

Ver. 3. It is his uncleanness.] Hereby they were taught the turpitude of sin, of original sin especially, that peccatum peccans, as the Schools call it; that sinful sin, as St Paul, {#Ro 7:13} for so filthy it is, that he can call it no worse than by its own name, as wanting a fitter epithet.

Ver. 4. Every bed.] Sin is more catching than any plague, and more defiling than any out house; {#Mr 7:23} Paul found it as noisome to his soul as a dead body to his sense, {#Ro 7:24} or as the sanies; {a} of a plague sore to a rich robe. Job abhors himself for it in dust and ashes. {#Job 40:4} And Isaiah looks upon himself as an undone man by reason of it. {#Isa 6:5}

{a} A thin fetid pus mixed with serum or blood, secreted by a wound or ulcer.

Ver. 8. Spit upon him.] Noting the pollution that comes to men's souls by those that spit heresies and belch out blasphemies.

Ver. 13. Bathe his flesh.] This taught them to run to that open fountain, that kings' bath. {#Zec 13:1 Eze 36:29}

Ver. 15. And the priest shall offer them.] This priest and these sacrifices led them to Christ, who bore our sicknesses and expiated our sins. Seest thou then the bloody issue of thy corruptions always running, and gushing out at thine eyes, ears, mouth, flesh? the issue of blood and water opened in Christ's side runs alway for washing it away.

Ver. 16. Go out from him.] By nocturnal pollutions, filthy dreams, &c.

Ver. 18. With seed of copulation.] Though lawful in itself, as being the ordinance of God. {#Ge 2:24} Sin is like copperas, {a} which will turn wine or milk into ink; or leaven, which turns a very passover into pollution.

{a} A name given from early times to the protosulphates of copper, iron, and zinc (distinguished as blue, green, and white copperas respectively); etymologically it belonged properly to the copper salt; but in English use, when undistinguished by attribute or context, it has always been most commonly, and is now exclusively, applied to green copperas, the proto-sulphate of iron or ferrous sulphate (Fe SO₄), also called green vitriol, used in dyeing, tanning, and making ink.

Ver. 24. And if any man lie with her.] Unawares, or secretly. For to do it presumptuously, and upon public notice, it was death. {#Le 20:18 Eze 22:10} And God often punisheth such unclean copulations now-a-days, with monstrous, deformed, or diseased births.

Ver. 25. Have an issue.] As she had in #Mr 5:25.

Ver. 31. That they die not.] Which is worse than to die in a ditch.

Chapter 16

Ver. 1. After the death.] That others might be warned. Lege historiam, ne fias historia, saith one.

When they offered before the Lord.] A little strange fire might seem a small matter in the eyes of indifferency: and yet it was such a sin as made all Israel guilty, as appears by the sacrifices offered for that sin, set down in this chapter.

Ver. 2. that he come not at all times.] Whensoever he pleaseth, but when I appoint him, i.e., once a year only, {#Ex 30:10} and then also with reverence and godly fear. God, as he loves to be acquainted with men in the walks of their obedience, so he takes state upon him in his ordinances, and will be trembled at in his judgments.

Ver. 3. For a sin offering,] viz., For himself and his family. {#Le 6 Le 11} {See Trapp on "Le 14:3"}

Ver. 4. Therefore shall he wash.] As we must be always holy, so then most when we present ourselves to the holy eyes of our Creator. We wash our hands every day; but when we are to sit with some great person, we scour them with balls. See #Le 16:24.

Ver. 5. Two kids of the goats.] Both of them types of Christ: who though he died not for wicked goats, yet he seemed rejected of God, and was reckoned among malefactors. {#Isa 53:9}

Ver. 6. And for his house.] Whereof a minister must be mainly careful, {#1Ti 3:4} lest, as Augustus doing justice on others, he be hit in the teeth with his own disordered family. Aaron had lately smarted in his two eldest.

Ver. 7. The two goats.] See on #Le 16:5.

Ver. 8. Shall cast lots.] To show that nothing was done for us by Christ but what God's hand and his counsel determined. {#Ac 4:28 1Pe 1:20} {See Trapp on "Ac 4:28"} {See Trapp on "1Pe 1:20"}

For the scape-goat.] Which being a piacular or purging oblation, carried the people's curse with it: as did likewise those Obominales among the Grecians; who, from this custom of the Hebrews, borrowed their yearly expiation of their cities: the manner whereof, somewhat like unto this. {See Trapp on "1Co 4:13"}

Ver. 9. The goat.] A type of Christ's mortal humanity, say some, as the scape goat of his immortal deity: or the one of his death, the other of his resurrection. Others are of the opinion that hereby was signified that the deity of Christ dwelling in light inaccessible gave to his humanity sufficient strength for the enduring of those things, which no other creature could have come near, for the full expiating of our sins. So he telleth the Jews first, and afterwards his disciples, "Whither I go ye cannot come." {#Joh 8:22,13:36}

Ver. 11. An atonement for himself.] That having first made his own peace, he may be in case to atone for the people. This was David's method. {#Ps 25 Ps 51}

Ver. 12. And bring it within the vail.] So to prepare the way into the holy place. This incense small beaten might prefigure Christ in his agony, praying more earnestly, before he entered with his own blood into the most holy place of heaven.

Ver. 13. May cover the mercy seat.] And so be as a screen betwixt the priest and those everlasting burnings: or as a cloud to darken the glory of their shining, for the high priest's safety.

Ver. 14. Upon the mercy seat eastward.] This and the following verses signify, saith one, that even heaven itself is defiled unto us by our sins; until it be made clean by the blood and obedience of Christ, who is entered thither, "not by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood," and thereby hath "purified the heavenly things themselves." {#Heb 9:12,23}

Ver. 16. In the midst of their uncleanness.] Which did cleave to the tabernacle, as the sins of spiritual Babylon are said to be glued (εκολληθησαν) to heaven. {#Re 18:5}

Ver. 17. And there shall be no man.] Christ will have no partner, and he needs no assistant. {#Heb 7:25 Isa 63:3}

Ver. 18. And he shall go out unto the altar.] This signified, saith one, that every church assembly is acceptable to God, only through the blood of Christ, by the remission of all their sins.

Ver. 19. From the uncleanness, / i.e., The defects and imperfections of their holiest performances.

Ver. 20. Reconciling the holy place.] Defiled in some sort by the sins of the people, in whose behalf the priests there performed their service.

Ver. 21. All their transgressions in all their sins, / i.e., In their several circumstances and aggravations: laying open how many transgressions were wrapped up in their several sins. This was to bring out their sins, as they took the vessels of the temple, {#Ezr 8:34} "by number and by weight."

Ver. 22. Shall let go the goat.] The Hebrews say, that he was to throw it down the rock, and so it died. The Grecians had a like custom {a} in their solemn expiations of their cities. They tumbled the persons devoted from some rock into the sea; sacrificing them to Neptune, saying, Be thou a propitiation for us. {b}

{a} Aemulus Dei diabolus.

{b} Suidas.

Ver. 23. Shall leave them there.] As afterwards the priests did, in some of the holy chambers about the sanctuary. {#Eze 44:16}

Ver. 24. He shall wash his flesh.] See what this taught them and us. {#Heb 10:22} That Epistle to the Hebrews is an excellent commentary upon this Book of Leviticus.

Ver. 25. Upon the altar.] The brazen altar in the outer court.

Ver. 26. Shall wash his clothes.] To show, (1.) That it was for our sins that Christ suffered; (2.) That all that partake of his benefits must wash their hearts from wickedness. {#Jer 4:14 2Co 5:15 7:1}

Ver. 27. Without the camp.] See #Heb 13:11,14.

Ver. 28. He that burneth.] Whoever he be whom the priests shall appoint to do it.

Ver. 29. Ye shall afflict your souls.] With voluntary sorrows for your sins, -as David did, {#Ps 35:13} and Daniel, {#Da 10:3,12} -and so dispose yourselves to obtain pardon and reconciliation. The Lord's supper is with us a day of atonement; at which time both the scape goat was let go, and affliction of soul was called for. This passover must be eaten with sour herbs.

Ver. 30. That ye may be clean from all your sins.] And so God may turn your fasting into feasting, as #Zec 8:19. The joyful jubilee was begun and proclaimed in this same tenth day. {#Le 25:8,9}

Ver. 31. It shall be a Sabbath of rest.] An exact and careful rest, such as is described in #Isa 58:13, which place of the prophet some understand of this day of atonement, and yearly fast, spoken of in the beginning of that chapter.

Ver. 32. Whom he shall consecrate, / i.e., God: or the present high priest, the chief God on earth. See on #Le 6:2.

Ver. 33. For the holy sanctuary.] For all the sins of your holy services, it being the manner that either makes or mars an action.

Ver. 34. For all their sins once a year.] For whereas in their private sacrifices they durst not confess their capital sins for fear of death, due to them by the law, God graciously provided and instituted this yearly sacrifice of atonement for the sins of the whole people, without particular acknowledgment of any. There are of good note who think, {a} that this anniversary fast, called "the fast" by a specialty, {#Ac 27:9} was instituted in reference unto, and solemn remembrance of, the fall of Adam; which happened, say they, on the tenth day of the world, answering to the first of November. But how strangely are the Jews at this day besotted, if that be true of them that some {b} report, viz., that at this their feast of reconciliation, they use to bribe Satan, that he may not accuse them for their sins; and that this is one thing for which they do yearly afflict their souls, namely, the translation of the Bible out of Hebrew into Greek, by the Septuagint!

Chapter 17

Ver. 2. This is the thing which the Lord.] Who must be readily obeyed without evasion, or questioning.

Ver. 3. What man soever.] Whether Israelite or proselyte, {#Le 17:8} unless by special dispensation from the lawgiver, as #1Sa 7:9,11:15 2Sa 24:18 1Ki 18:22; and then they were to offer upon altars of earth, or rough stone, that might be soon and easily thrown down.

{#Ex 20:24,25}

Ver. 4. And bringeth it not unto the door.] To teach, that in the Church alone, and by Christ alone, that is, by faith in him, acceptable service can be performed to God. Christ is the door of the sheep, {#Joh 10:7,9} by whom we come to the Father, {#Joh 14:6} and may everywhere lift up pure hands, without wrath, without doubting.

Ver. 5. Unto the priest.] No man might offer his own sacrifice, though never so good, but must bring it to the priest; and the priest was to offer as well the poor man's lamb, as the rich man's ox.

Ver. 6. Shall sprinkle the blood.] See #Le 1:9.

Ver. 7. Unto devils.] {a} As they had done in Egypt. {#Eze 23:8 De 32:17} And as both Pagans and Papagans do. {#1Co 10:20 Re 9:20} The Americans in Canada worship the devil; who, when he is offended with them, flings dust in their eyes. At Calecutta, the chief city of Malabar, they worship Satan with flowers on his altars, and sacrifices of cocks. The Brahmins, or priests, wash his image, sitting in a fiery throne with three crowns and four horns, with sweet water every morning. The king of Calecutta eats no meat till it be first offered by his priests to this idol. When a man lies a dying, they show him the picture of the devil, that he may be the better acquainted with him in the other world. The word here rendered devils signifieth rough ones, satyrs. {#Isa 34:14} Satan is a rough, rugged, harsh spirit: and such also are his imps, as Esau, Ismael, &c.

{a} Synesius saith, the devil is εἰδολοχαρής, an idol lover.

Ver. 8. That offereth a burnt offering.] They were strictly tied to one place, that they might be kept all in one uniform way of God's worship appointed by himself.

Ver. 9. Shall be cut off, / i.e., Destroyed; not excommunicated only, as some do sense it.

Ver. 10. That eateth any manner of blood.] {See Trapp on "Ge 9:4"}

Ver. 11. And I have given it to you.] I have set it apart for a sacred use: therefore you may not make food of that which is a figure of Christ.

Ver. 12. No soul of you shall eat blood.] Haply because the Magi or wise men of Chaldea did use to eat blood when they conversed with devils; and, by them, foretold things to come. {a}

{a} Maimonides.

Ver. 13. Which hunteth.] Though he be as hungry as a hunter. See #1Sa 14:32-34.

Ver. 14. Is the blood, / i.e., Is in the blood, and goeth out together with it.

Ver. 15. And every soul that eateth.] Ignorantly eateth.

Ver. 16. Shall bear his iniquity, / i.e., The punishment of it: they are so near akin, that one name serves for both.

Chapter 18

Ver. 1. And the Lord spake.] {See Trapp on "Le 7:22"}

Ver. 2. I am the Lord your God.] Your Maker and Master.

Ver. 3. After the doings of the land of Egypt.] Where, and in Canaan, these heinous sins are counted peccadillos; as at this day also they are in Spain, Italy, Turkey, where their catamites are their serious loves; sodomy is hardly held a vice; bestiality was boasted of by Mohammed their prophet.

In their ordinances.] The Egyptians made it lawful, so did the Persians, for brother and sister to couple together in marriage. Of this and the like ordinances it might be rightly said, as once it was of the ceremonial law, that they were statutes that were not good, and judgments whereby they should not live. {#Eze 20:25}

Ver. 4. To walk therein.] Not to halt therein, nor to take a turn or two, or for a while, as Samson went with his parents till he met with a honeycomb; but indesinenter ambulabo, as David saith, {#Ps 116:9} "Walk, and not be weary; run, and not faint," as those in #Isa 40:31. "So run, that ye may obtain," saith the apostle. {#1Co 9:24}

Ver. 5. He shall live in them.] As the flame lives in the oil, as the creature by his food, so the spiritual life is maintained by an evangelical keeping of God's commandments. As on the contrary, every motion of the soul out of this way, tends to death; being as the motion of the fish out of his element.

Ver. 6. None of you shall approach,] viz., To couple carnally with them. {#Eze 18:6 Isa 8:3} Yea, though it be under a pretext of marriage: for by marriage they seem to justify their incest, which makes it the worse, saith Tostatus, whose reason here I like better than that of Cardinal Campeius, though it sound somewhat like. If comparison should be made, said this carnal cardinal, much greater offence it is for a priest to have a wife than to have and keep at home many harlots. For they that keep harlots, said he, {a} as it is naught that they do, so do they acknowledge their sin; the other persuade themselves they do well, and so persist without repentance or conscience of their fact.

{a} Act. and Mon., fol. 790.

Ver. 7. She is thy mother.] And so it is against nature to lie carnally with her. Aristotle {a} tells of a camel that killed his keeper for causing him to cover his dam, and of a horse that cast himself down headlong after he had done the like.

{a} Hist. Animal., lib. ix. cap. 47.

Ver. 8. It is thy father's nakedness.] For "the wife hath not power over her own body, but the husband": {#1Co 7:4} and when her chastity is assaulted, she should say, saith Chrysostom, Non est corpus meum, sed mariti, My body is not mine, but my husband's.

Ver. 9. Or born abroad,] i.e., Base born, which our English laws call natural children. The Hebrews call them brambles, and Mamzerim, spots abroad, and Shatukim, such as must say nothing when others are praising their parents. The Greeks call bastards, ὑβριδες, because they are their fathers' reproach, and are subject to contempt and contumelies of others.

Ver. 10. For theirs is thine own nakedness.] Children are but the father multiplied; the father of another edition.

Ver. 11. Thou shalt not uncover.] This verse is added for an exposition of #Le 18:9.

Ver. 12. She is thy father's near kins woman.] As near as may be: and therefore nature abhorreth any such copulation.

Ver. 13. {See Trapp on "Le 18:12"}

Ver. 14. Of thy father's brother.] The nakedness of whose wife is called his nakedness, because man and wife are one flesh. {#Mt 19:6} {See Trapp on "Mt 19:6"}

Ver. 15. Son's wife.] Whether he be dead or alive.

Ver. 16. Brother's wife.] Except in that special case. {#De 25:5} This was Herod's sin {#Mt 14:4} and our Henry VIII's; whereupon was the divorce.

Ver. 17. It is wickedness.] Wickedness with a witness; and yet avowed for lawful by some odious upstart sectaries, who teach that those marriages are most laudable that are betwixt persons nearest in blood, brother and sister, father and daughter, mother and son, &c. This they shame not to set forth in print. {a}

{a} Hist. Davidis Georg., pp. 28, 29; Little Non-such, pp. 5-7.

Ver. 18. A wife to her sister,] i.e., Any two women together: compare #Eze 1:9. Here polygamy is flatly forbidden. In which sin many of the patriarchs lived and died; not through any impiety, the Lord testifying that their hearts were upright, but merely through the mistaking of this text, as it may seem, taking the word "sister," for one so by blood, which was spoken of a sister by nation, as those clauses, "to vex her," and "during her life," do evince.

Ver. 19. Unto a woman.] {See Trapp on "Le 15:24"}

Ver. 20. To defile thyself.] As David, how did he embroil himself with Bathsheba, and chased away that pure Spirit. {#Ps 51:10-12} Casta Deus mens est.

Ver. 21. Pass through the fire.] Either to be burnt to death in honour of that abominable idol; or to be consecrated thereto, by passing between two fires, which scorched them. {See Trapp on "Mt 5:22"}

Neither shalt thou profane the name,] i.e., Cause it to be profaned and blasphemed by others, as in #Pr 30:9 1Ti 1:20. {See Trapp on "1Ti 1:20"}

Ver. 22. Thou shalt not lie with mankind.] The Sodomites' sin. {#Ge 19:5} {See Trapp on "Ge 19:5"} This, say the Hebrews, was Ishmael's sporting with Isaac: and this, say others, was the sin of Joseph's brethren, the evil report whereof he brought to his father. A sad report it was surely to our King Henry I, that was brought him concerning his eldest son, William, who, crossing the seas from France to England, was with many other gallants cast away by shipwreck, being Sodomitica labe infecti fere omnes, saith Guliel. Parisiensis, almost all of them infected with this abomination of going after strange flesh. {#Jude 1:7,8}

Ver. 23. Neither shalt thou lie with any beast.] See what a foul sink of sin man's nature is! Who would think that any such surpassing wickedness—so {a} Aristotle calls bestiality—should ever enter into man's heart? But "there, as in the sea, is that Leviathan," the devil, and there are "creeping things," abominable and ugly lusts, "innumerable." {b}

{a} υπερβαλλουσα τις κακια η θηριστης.

{b} 2. Mag. Mor., cap. 5.

Ver. 24. The nations are defiled.] And yet are not the Scriptures defiled, by providing against such filthinesses, no more than the sunbeams are by shining upon a stinking lake.

Ver. 25. And the land is defiled.] From one end thereof to the other; {#Ezr 9:11} as the face of the old world was grown so foul, that God was fain to wash it with a flood.

Ver. 26. Ye shall therefore keep.] Unless ye be ambitious of a like destruction. {#Lu 13:3}

Ye shall therefore keep my statutes.] Or else, it will be a horrible shame to you to live in my good land, and not to live by my good laws.

Ver. 27. Which were before you.] But had not your helps.

Ver. 28. That the land spue not you out.] It is wisely said by Herodotus, That the destruction of Troy is a fit example of the rule, that great sins bring great plagues.

Ver. 29. The souls.] That is, the persons. The soul is the man.

Ver. 30. These abominable customs.] Heb., Statutes of abominations. Their evil customs became as laws: that tyrant of three letters, Mos, had made them so.

Chapter 19

Ver. 2. Ye shall be holy.] Ritually and really. {See Trapp on "Le 11:44"} {See Trapp on "Mt 5:48"} {See Trapp on "1Pe 1:16"} {See Trapp on "1Jo 3:3"}

Ver. 3. Ye shall fear every man his mother.] The mother is set first, because usually most slighted. The days of mourning for my father are at hand, then will I slay my brother Jacob, said that profane profligate. {#Ge 27:41} As for his mother, he makes no reckoning of her, he cared not to grieve her.

And keep my Sabbaths.] To the which the honouring of good governors, who are to see the Sabbath sanctified by all under their roof, doth very much conduce.

Ver. 4. Turn ye not unto idols.] Heb., Elilim; deunculi, deastri; Petty gods, dunghill deities; of all which we should say, as he did once, Contemno minutulos istos deos, modo Iovem (Iehovam) mihi propitium habeam, I care for the favour of no god, but of the great God of gods.

Ver. 5. At your own will.] Or, for your favourable acceptance, that God may graciously accept you.

Ver. 6. It shall be eaten the same day.] {See Trapp on "Le 7:15"} {See Trapp on "Le 7:17"} {See Trapp on "Le 7:18"} {See Trapp on "Le 7:19"}

Ver. 7. It is abominable.] A thing to be rejected (απιβλητον), saith Aquila, who is thought by some to be the same with Onkelos, the Chaldee paraphrast, who lived ninety years after Christ, and translated the Old Testament into Greek.

Ver. 8. Shall bear his iniquity.] See on #Le 17:16.

Ver. 9. And when ye reap.] See what provision the Lord maketh for his poor, commanding that the fuller cups of the richer sort may overflow into their empty dishes: besides that πτωχοδεκατη, as Jerome calls it, that poor man's tithe appointed in #De 14:28,29 15:11. James V of Scotland was, for his charity, called the poor man's king; much more may God.

Ver. 10. I am the Lord.] The chief owner of all thou hast.

Your God.] Whom thou oughtest to honour with thy substance. {#Pr 3:9}

Ver. 11. Ye shall not steal] {See Trapp on "Eph 4:28"} {See Trapp on "Eph 4:25"} {See Trapp on "Ex 20:15"} {See Trapp on "Le 6:3"}

Ver. 12. Neither shalt thou profane the name.] By presuming rashly and lightly to blurt out this reverend name in an oath, or otherwise. The Grecians, as Suidas observes, when they would swear by Jupiter, out of the mere dread and reverence of his name forbear to mention him, breaking off their oath with a ὡς τοῦ, as those that only dare to owe the rest to their thoughts. And Clinias the Pythagorean, out of this regard, would rather undergo a fine of three talents than swear.

Ver. 13. The wages of him that is hired.] This is a crying sin, {#Jas 5:3} condemned by the very light of nature. Plato {a} would have him double paid that is not paid in due time.

{a} De Legibus, lib. x.

Ver. 14. Thou shalt not curse the deaf.] So by analogy, the absent that cannot speak for themselves, or the dead. Of all fowl we most hate and detest the crows; and of all beasts the jackals, a kind of foxes in Barbary; because the one digs up the graves and devours the flesh, the other picks out the eyes of the dead.

But shalt fear thy God.] Who both hears and sees all thy miscarriages, and will reckon with thee for all. Deo obscura clarent, muta respondent, silentium confitetur; saith an ancient. Night will convert itself into noon before God, and silence prove a speaking evidence.

Ver. 15. Thou shalt not respect.] Spare not the great for their might, nor the mean for their misery. Causes must be heard, and not persons.

Ver. 16. Up and down as a talebearer.] Heb., As a pedlar, that first fills his pack with reports and rumours, and then goes peddling up and down, dropping a tale here and another there, to the taking away of the good name, and sometimes of the life of another. Hence it follows here, "Neither shalt thou stand against the life of thy brother." And agreeable hereunto is that of #Eze 22:9, "In thee are men that carry tales to shed blood." Such a wretched pedlar was Doeg: and such is that backbiter spoken of in #Ps 15:3. The word there used doth in the Hebrew properly signify such a one as footeth and trotteth it up and down, prying, and spying, and carrying tales and rumours. {#2Sa 19:21}

Ver. 17. Thou shalt not hate thy brother.] Most unkindnesses that fall out among friends grow upon mistakes and misunderstandings. Now, a friendly reasoning the case, or, if need be, a godly reproof, cures both the reprover and the reprovèd; whereas the neglect of this duty breeds dwelling suspicions; suspicions breed a very habit of misinterpretation; this breeds a loathness to come to the light, to show the reasons af our dislike; this loathness begets a very separation in heart, which at length turns to downright hatred in heart. All which might have been better prevented by a seasonable venting our minds in a reproof or admonition.

Thou shalt in any wise rebuke thy neighbour.] Neither is this any argument of hatred, but an office of love. Friends, as bees, are killed with the honey of flattery, but quickened with the vinegar of reproof. The eagle, though she loveth her young ones dearly, yet she pricketh and beateth them out of the nest.

And not suffer sin upon him.] But save him "with fear, pulling him out of the fire." {#Jude 1:23} Out of the fire of hell, as Jerome {a} interprets it, which sin suffered will bring him unto. Others read it thus: Lest thou suffer for his sin; which, by not opposing, thou makest to become thine own. To withstand evil in thy brother, is the best way to do him good, and thyself too. Others render it thus: Thou shalt not lift up his sin over him, as an ensign, by babbling or blazing it abroad to his just grief and disgrace; but clap a plaster of reproof upon the sore, and then, as surgeons use to do, cover it with thy hand, that the world may be never the wiser.

Ver. 18. Nor bear any grudge.] Heb., Nor keep. There is nothing that a man is more ready to keep than his wrath. Therefore the Hebrews both here and #Jer 3:5 Ps 103:9, put servare for servare iram. But we must neither revenge nor remember; we must not throw away the dagger, and keep the sheath, but both forgive and forget.

But thou shalt love thy neighbour.] {See Trapp on "Mt 22:37"} {See Trapp on "Mt 22:38"} {See Trapp on "Mt 22:39"} {See Trapp on "Mt 22:40"} {See Trapp on "Ro 13:9"}

Ver. 19. Ye shall keep my statutes.] Even these next following, though they may seem to be but minutula legis, not worth keeping.

Thou shalt not let thy cattle.] The doctors of Douay, upon this text, Here all participation, say they, with heretics and schismatics is forbidden. Philip of Spain said he had rather have no subjects, than subjects of a diverse religion. Our King Edward VI told the Popish rebels of Devonshire, who fought for liberty of conscience, as they call it, that rather than he would yield to them, he would spend his own royal person, his crown, treasure, realm, and whole estate; whereof we assure you, said he, of our high honour. {a} But now, alas! what secret and subtle projects and practices are there amongst us of this nation to bring in a universal, boundless, lawless, abominable and intolerable toleration, which—as the London ministers affirm in their "Testimony to the Truth of Jesus Christ," now newly published to the singular praise of their exemplary and seasonable zeal for God will prove a hideous and complexive evil of most dangerous and mischievous consequence, if ever, which God forbid, it shall be consented to by authority. England shall be swallowed up with sects, schisms, divisions, disorders, contentions, and confusions, and become an odious sink and common receptacle of all the prodigious errors, lies, heresies, blasphemies, libertinism, and profanenesses in the world: so that Rome itself shall not be a more odious puddle and cage of all abomination and uncleanness. The godly shall sit down and lament us. The wicked shall rise up and insult over us. All the nations about us shall be amazed at us. All the reformed Churches shall be ashamed to own us. Thus, and much more to this purpose, write those worthy zealots, whose testimonial to the truth, coming by a providence to my hand, even whilst I was writing upon this chapter, I could not but here set my seal to it, and here insert this part of it, the whole being such as deserves to be written in letters of gold upon a table of marble, for the use of all posterity {b}

Neither shall a garment.] Hence the Jews at this day sow not a woollen garment with a linen thread: nor contrariwise. {c}

Ver. 21. His trespass offering. Whereof see #Le 5.

Ver. 22. Shall be forgiven,] sc., By faith in Christ, whom these sacrifices did shadow and set forth.

Ver. 23. Three years shall it be as uncircumcised.] And so to be cast away, as the foreskin of the flesh was. The fourth year it was to be separate, to be offered to the Lord in sign of thanksgiving. And then in the fifth year to be eaten. This was to show that the very fruits of the earth are, after a sort, polluted by man's sin, till purged by a new kind of blessing. {#1Ti 4:5} Hereby also God would separate his own people from other nations: and show that they might with a better conscience feed upon the fruits of the earth than others could. There are that set this mystical sense upon the text. Christ, for three years' space, planted the gospel in Judea; but the foreskins were cast away for that time—that is, the gospel was not preached yet to the uncircumcised Gentiles. In the fourth year these fruits were consecrated to God—that is, Christ in the fourth year of his ministry died for the sins of the world, rose again, ascended, and sent down the Holy Ghost, whereby the apostles and others were sanctified, being, as it were, the first fruits of the Promised Land. In the fifth year, the fruits of the gospel, planted by Christ, began to be common, preached to the Gentiles, believed in the world. {#1Ti 3:16}

Ver. 24. Shall be holy,] i.e., They shall be given the priests as firstfruits.

Ver. 25. That it may yield unto you the increase thereof,] i.e., Abundantly in recompense of those four former years. In doing of God's will there is great reward.

Ver. 26. Neither shall ye use enchantment.] Or, observe fortunes, conjecture by signs of good or evil luck, as some render it.

Ver. 27. Ye shall not round.] Because the Arabians their neighbours did so, and they should not be conformed to idolaters. {a} Oleaster, a Popish interpreter, understandeth such a shaving here, as their priest use to bear. But shaving is so bald a ceremony, that some priests in France are ashamed of the mark, and few of them have it that can handsomely avoid it.

{a} Consol., ad Apol.

Ver. 29. Do not prostitute thy daughter.] As some of the heathens did in honour of their gods. As the papists do at this day, in their stews and brothel houses. {a} Their casuists complain of some harlots there so boldly lascivious, as to solicit others, so as to prostitute themselves to all comers; yea, in some Spanish stews to an unnatural filthiness. But what a shameful thing is that which Espencaeus, a Papist, reports with detestation, that in Rome a Jewish maid might not be admitted into the stews of whoredom, unless she would be first baptized. Dici nequit, saith he, {b} quam incredibili Christianorum tum pudore, tum etiam eorum, qui vere tales sunt, cordollo, ut Iudae filiae scortari non liceat, Dei filiae liceat: What a shameful and sad thing is this, that a Jewess, unless she turn Christian, &c.

Ver. 30. Ye shall keep my Sabbaths.] Twice in this chapter is this commanded, that it may be the better remembered: and that men may know that it is not enough to rest on that day, but that rest must be sanctified by a reverent resorting to the sanctuary, and not profaned by running into whorehouses and tippling houses, as in Germany; where Alfred {a} complains and says, that if the Sabbath day should be named according to many men's observing of it, Daemoniacus potius quam Dominicus vocaretur.

And reverence my sanctuary.] Come we must into the places of God's worship, with an inward awe and fear of his presence, and not as into a dancing school as some do. "How fearful is this place," saith Jacob. It is the place of angels and archangels, the kingdom of God, it is heaven itself, saith Chrysostom. {b} Away then with all careless negligence and carnal security.

Ver. 2. That giveth any of his seed unto Moloch.] {See Trapp on "Le 18:21"} Lactantius reports out of "Pescennius Festus," that the Carthaginians being overcome by Agathocles king of Sicily, and fearing lest their slackness in the service of Saturn—who is thought to be the same with Moloch—was the cause, offered unto him for a sacrifice no fewer than four hundred young gentlemen at once.

Ver. 3. To defile my sanctuary.] Great sins do greatly pollute. See #Le 18:21.

Ver. 4. Hide their eyes, / i.e., Be negligent or ignorant.

Ver. 5. I will set my face against that man.] See the reason in #Eze 16:20,21, "Is this of thy whoredoms a small matter, that thou hast slain my children, and delivered them to pass through the fire for them?" This was an enraging sin; such as God is absolute in threatening, and will be as resolute in punishing.

Ver. 17. And see her nakedness.] In the Pope's war against the Albigenses, those ancient French Protestants, when the bishops had taken a great town yielded to them, they commanded the inhabitants, both men and women, to depart stark naked, Partibus illis, quae honeste nominari non possunt, sanctorum illorum cruciatorum oculis expositis, saith Rivet, {a} not suffering them to hide from the impure eyes of those pope holy fathers those parts that nature would have covered. David that had faulted in looking lustfully on bathing Bathsheba, prays hard, after he had smarted for it, "Turn away mine eyes from beholding vanity," &c. {#Ps 119:37}

Solomon had many concubines, yet but one son and two daughters. So had our Henry VIII. He had uncovered his brother's nakedness, and was well-nigh childless by her. Afterwards he married many wives, and was blameworthy for women, but left no more children than Solomon did. More happy he was in them than Solomon; for he had Rehoboam, a man neither wise nor fortunate, as they call it: his daughters but obscure, and both of them subjects. But Henry had a peerless prince to his son, viz., Edward VI, and his two daughters were both sovereigns of an imperial crown.

Ver. 1. There shall none be defiled for the dead.] This holy abstinence of the priests in matter of mourning, marriage, &c., figured the transcendent holiness of Christ: the devils could call him that Holy One of God. {#Mr 1:24} It taught also both ministers and people, who are "a kingdom of priests"; (1.) Well to govern their passions, and to be patterns of patience; (2.) Ever to keep such a Sabbath of spirit, that by no dead works, or persons dead in trespasses and sins, they be hindered in the discharge of their duties of either calling.

Ver. 2. And for his brother.] The high priest might not for any of these, {#Le 21:10,11} nor might Eleazar and Ithamar for their dead brethren Nadab and Abihu, {#Le 10:6} because in that case, mourning might have seemed murmuring.

Ver. 3. And for his sister.] What! and not for his wife? Yes surely, though she be not mentioned, because she is nearer than either daughter or sister. See #Eze 24:16. He was a priest, but that was an exempt case, an exception from what was ordinarily done.

Ver. 4. Being a chief man.] A vir gregis; all whose actions were exemplary, and have not an impulsive only, but a compulsive power and property. "Why compellest thou the Gentiles?" {#Ga 2:14} His example was a compulsion.

Ver. 5. They shall not make baldness, &c.] So #Le 19:27. Howbeit in humiliation for sin the Lord God of hosts called them all, both priests and people, to weeping and mourning, {#Joe 2:17} yea to baldness and sackcloth. {#Isa 22:12} Here we cannot easily overdo.

Ver. 6. They shall be holy.] Heb., Holiness, i.e. all holy, even as holiness itself, merely spiritual.

Not profane the name of their God.] Not do anything unworthy the majesty of the ministry: but suffer the dead to bury their dead.

{#Mt 8:22}

Ver. 7. They shall not take a wife.] Lest their function be disgraced. That which Hosea was commanded to do against this prohibition {#Ho 1:2} was but visional.

Or profane.] Deflowered, ravished.

Put away from her husband.] Because of evil report.

Ver. 8. Thou shalt sanctify him.] i.e., Thou, Moses, shalt command him to be sanctified, as #Ex 19:10.

Ver. 9. She shall be burnt with fire.] A peculiar plague, to show the hatefulness of the sin.

Ver. 10. Shall not uncover his head.] So neither doth the Mufti among the Turks, nor the Pope of Rome uncover to any man: but this is their pride and stateliness.

Ver. 11. Nor defile himself.] But appear impassionate, as it were, and more than a man.

Ver. 12. For the crown of the anointing.] Noting thereby that Christ, now risen, is crowned with glory and honour; {#Heb 2:7 Zec 6:12} and so shall we with him. {#Heb 2:9,10 1Co 15:47-49}

Ver. 13. In her virginity.] Such is Christ's wife, {#2Co 11:2 Re 14:4 Mt 25:1-13} not giving her love, or his worship to any other.

Ver. 14. Of his own people.] A Jewess of any tribe. {#Eze 44:22 2Ch 22:11}

Ver. 15. Profane his seed.] Disable them for the priesthood by marrying such a wife as was forbidden him.

Ver. 17. That hath any blemish.] Christ was without blemish: so should all the saints be, but especially ministers, of whom it should be said as of Absalom, that from top to toe there was no blemish in him. {#2Sa 14:25}

Ver. 18. He shall not approach.] Lest his ministry be slighted for his personal defects and deformities: how much more for his ignorance, envy, indirect aims, uneven walking, injudiciousness, unheavenly mindedness, &c., purported by these bodily imperfections?

Ver. 19. Or broken handed.] In the hands, the Hebrews say, there might be seven blemishes.

Ver. 20. A blemish in his eye.] By a mixture of the humours there, or otherwise; when that little man {a} in the eye, as the Hebrews call the apple thereof, acteth not his part aright.

{a} Ishon

Ver. 22. He shall eat the bread.] So might not the unclean priests. {#Le 22:3} Our involuntary weaknesses shall not debar us from benefit by Christ.

Ver. 23. For I the Lord do sanctify them.] By my presence, and services there performed.

Ver. 24. And to all the children of Israel.] Who were to see that these things were thus done.

Chapter 22

Ver. 2. That they separate.] Though priests, yet they may not hold themselves privileged above others to commit sin, but are the rather obliged to duty. Why should any Chrysostom have cause to say, Non arbitror inter sacerdotes multos esse qui salvi fiant, I do not think that many of our ministers can be saved, it is well if any? or any Campian to exclaim, Ministris eorum nihil vilias?

Ver. 3. Cut off from my presence.] Who am omnipresent: Postea nullus erit. Where shall the ungodly and the wicked appear? Surely, nowhere.

Ver. 4. Or hath a running issue.] Seminifluus: especially if it come by contemning that counsel of the wise man. {#Pr 31:3}

Ver. 5. Or a man.] Whether a leper, or a dead man.

Ver. 6. Unless he wash his face with water.] Whereby he was led to the laver of Christ's blood, which is opposed to legal washings. {#Heb 9:9} Run we to that open fountain, {#Zec 13:1} and be every day washing and cleansing ourselves therein from all filthiness of flesh and spirit. Every Jew had his water pots for daily purification. {#Joh 2:6} We have a far better bath.

Ver. 7. ; Because it is his food.] Animantis cuiusque vita in fuga est, and must be preserved by food.

Ver. 8. See on #Le 17:15 Ex 22:31.

Ver. 9. And die therefore.] It is no dallying with God. Either do it we must, or die for it.

Ver. 10. There shall no stranger.] The equity of all this was, that ministers should have a comfortable subsistence for them and theirs; and that the things that are appointed to that purpose should not be converted to other uses. {#1Co 9:13} It is certainly a sad complaint that Luther {a} makes: Nisi superisset spoliium Aegypti quod rapuimus Papae, omnibus ministris verbi fame pereundum esset, &c. Were it not for such spoils of Egypt as we have won from the Pope, God's ministers might starve and perish. And if ever it come to that, that they must be maintained by the people's benevolence, a miserable maintenance they are like to have of it. That little that we have now, diripitur a magistratu, is got from us by the great ones who rob our churches and schools, as if they meant to make an end of us with hard hunger. Thus he. See #Hag 2:14. All the water in Jordan, and the ceremonies in Leviticus, cannot cleanse a man so long as the polluted thing remains in his hand.

{a} Luther, in Gen. xlvii.

Ver. 11. He shall eat.] As being a menial servant to the priest.

Ver. 12. Unto a stranger.] That is not a priest, or of the family of the priests.

Ver. 13. And have no child.] Nor is with child.

Ver. 14. {See Trapp on "Le 22:10"}

Ver. 15. Profane.] By suffering the holy things to be eaten of strangers.

Ver. 16. Or suffer them.] From my "other men's sins," good Lord deliver me, said one: have we not enough of our own to answer for? See #1Ti 5:22, {See Trapp on "1Ti 5:22"} That cannot be wholesome meat that is sauced with the blood of souls, and spiced with the wrath of God.

Ver. 19. At your own will.] Yet observing strictly the law in that case provided, with all the rites appointed. Such will worship is very acceptable.

Ver. 20. It shall not be acceptable.] Nay, it shall be abominable. {#Mal 1:7} God requires the best of the best, fine flour without bran, {#Le 2:1, &c.} and curseth that cheat, that having a sound or a fat male in his flock, bringeth to him a corrupt carrion, or a lean starveling, for sacrifice. {#Mal 1:14}

Ver. 21. It shall be perfect to be accepted.] Saints also are perfect in God's acceptation, if harmless and blameless.

Ver. 23. That mayest thou offer.] Though it have some kind of defect, yet, in free will offerings, it might pass. This was to signify that our imperfect obedience after that we are once in Christ, is accepted by Christ, who is without all blame and blemish.

Ver. 24. Neither shall you make any offering.] No, not a freewill offering. Religion loves to lie clean. God will take up with a poor, but it must be a pure sacrifice.

Ver. 25. Their corruption is in them.] As not having their hearts purified by faith; and therefore not in case to please God.

Ver. 27. It shall be seven days.] As not being man's meat, till then: but legally impure, and in their blood, as were likewise infants.

Ver. 28. Ye shall not kill it and her young.] Because it bears a show of cruelty, and of adding affliction to the afflicted. See #Ge 32:11
Ho 10:14.

Ver. 29. Offer it at your own will.] God strains upon no man.
Virtus nolentium nulla est.

Ver. 30. On the same day.] {See Trapp on "Le 7:15"}

Ver. 31. I am the Lord.] Your rightful Lord, and my reward is with me, to give unto every man according to his works.

Ver. 32. My holy name.] "Holy, and" therefore "reverend." {#Ps 111:9} Holiness hath honour.

Chapter 23

Ver. 1. And the Lord spake.] {See Trapp on "Le 7:22"}

Ver. 2. To be holy convocations.] Not bare rests, as Plato said, that the gods, pitying men's labour, appointed their festivals to be a remission of their labour. {a} {See Trapp on "Ex 20:8"} {See Trapp on "Ex 20:9"} {See Trapp on "Ex 20:10"} {See Trapp on "Ex 20:11"}

{a} Αναπαυλας των πονων.—2. De Legib.

Ver. 3. Ye shall do no work therein.] Save only works of piety, charity, and necessity. These are allowed by our Saviour. {#Mr 2:23-28 3:4} The Jews superstitiously hold, {a} that it is not lawful for a blind man to lean upon a staff on a Sabbath day, as the lame may: that if a flea bite a man on that day, he may take it, but not kill it. That if a thorn prick him in the foot on that day, he may not pull it out. That a tailor may not carry a needle, much less a sword; that a man may not spit, {b} or be taken out of a jakes, as that Jew of Tewkesbury, who said, “Sabbata santa colo, de stercore {c} surgere nolo.”

Whereunto the Earl of Gloucester replied,

“"Sabbata nostra quidem (Solomon) celebrabis ibidem."”

“(Sir, reverence {d} of the Sabbath keeps me here:
And you, sir, reverence {e} shall our Sabbath there.)”

In all your dwellings.] Where you are to sanctify this rest, and to repair to your synagogues. {#Ac 15:21}

Ver. 4. In their seasons, / i.e., Once a year.

Ver. 5. In the fourteenth day.] {See Trapp on "Ex 12:18"}

Ver. 6. Eat unleavened bread.] To teach us to eat the Christian passover, not with the "old leaven of malice and wickedness, but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth." {#1Co 5:8}

Ver. 7. No servile work.] But that about victuals. {#Ex 12:26}

Ver. 8. But ye shall offer an offering.] What these offerings must be, see #Nu 28:18,24.

Ver. 10. And shall reap the harvest.] Barley harvest; for that was first.

Ver. 11. And he shall wave the sheaf.] This signified that they and theirs were accepted of God through Christ.

On the morrow after the Sabbath.] Here the Lord's day was prefigured, saith one, therefore prescribed, and instituted of God. This shake day sheaf was a pregnant type of Christ's rising again, the firstfruits from the dead. It was fulfilled in Christ's resurrection, the day after the Sabbath. And because this Sabbath was chiefly meant of the Passover (which was a high Sabbath) it was a double Sabbath wherein Christ rested in the grave. The very next morning was Christ waved before the Lord, when, in the earthquake, he rose from the dead "the firstfruits of them that sleep," and there hence entered the everlasting gates as a King of glory, {#Ps 24:7} which psalm is in the Greek called A psalm of David of the first day of the week.

Ver. 12. A he lamb.] Prefiguring Christ, by whom those first fruits were sanctified.

Ver. 13. Two tenth deals.] This was double to the ordinary proportion, {#Nu 15:4} because on such an occasion.

Ver. 14. And ye shall eat neither bread.] It was fit that God the giver should have the first.

Ver. 15. Seven Sabbaths.] That is, seven weeks. The Sabbath is queen of all the days of the week; and therefore carries the name of the whole week.

Ver. 16. Shall ye number fifty days.] And then keep the feast of Pentecost or of weeks, so called because it was seven weeks after the passover.

Ver. 17. Out of your habitations.] That is, Out of the new corn (growing of the same land which God gave them to inherit) not foreign.

The firstfruits,] viz., Of their wheat harvest, as the shake sheaf {#Le 23:10} was of their barley harvest. Thus were they to express their thankfulness to God for those precious fruits of the earth. {#Jas 5:7}

Ver. 18. Seven lambs.] Besides which, they had other oblations at the feast of Pentecost. {#Nu 28:27} The service of God was heretofore very costly.

Ver. 20. Wave them.] See on #Ex 29:24.

Holy to the Lord.] And wholly to the priest.

Ver. 21. A holy convocation.] The feast day of Pentecost, kept in testimony of their thankfulness for the land's fruitfulness, their deliverance from Egypt, {#De 16:10,12} and the receiving of the law at that time of the year. {#Ex 19:11}

Ver. 22. And when ye reap.] See #Le 19:9. In these we entertain Christum convivam, Christ a guest, saith Jerome.

Ver. 24. Of blowing of trumpets.] This feast signified the spiritual joy and gladness of the saints that are redeemed by Christ, all their life long. {#Isa 23:10}

Ver. 25. See on #Le 16:30, &c.

Ver. 26. See on #Le 16:30, &c.

Ver. 27. Also on the tenth day.] {See Trapp on "Le 16:31"} Thus they were kept in sorrow five days, before they might keep their feast of joy. {#Le 23:34}

Ver. 34. The feast of tabernacles.] It signified, the prophet Zechariah being interpreter, {#Le 14:16-19} that the remembrance of our redemption by Christ should be perpetuated with all spiritual gladness.

Ver. 42. Ye shall dwell in booths.] The siege of Jerusalem by the Romans lasted six months. It began at the passover, and ended at this feast of tabernacles. Ita festum illud fuit finis istius politiae.

Ver. 43. That your generations may know.] For which purpose also they had at this feast the law read unto them. {#Ne 8:18 De 31:10,13}

Chapter 24

Ver. 2. Beaten for the light.] Ministers must beat their brains, and bend their utmost endeavours to "give light to them that sit in darkness, and in the shadow of death, and to guide their feet into the way of peace": as that "burning and shining light," the Baptist, did.

{#Lu 1:79}

Ver. 3. From the evening unto the morning.] In the morning it went out. {#1Sa 3:3}

Ver. 4. Upon the pure candlestick.] Pure, because daily purified by the priests: so must our consciences be from dead works by daily repentance.

Ver. 5. Twelve cakes.] {See Trapp on "Mt 12:4"}

Ver. 6. Six on a row.] One by another, not one upon another, as they are commonly painted.

Ver. 7. On the bread.] Or, Instead of the bread.

Ver. 8. Every Sabbath.] So must the bread of life be every Sabbath at least set before the saints.

Ver. 9. Made by fire.] The frankincense laid upon them, was.

Ver. 10. Whose father was an Egyptian.] His mother taught him to speak, his father to blaspheme.

Strove together.] In the heat of contention, what will not men say or do?

"... qui non moderabitur irae, Indictum velit esse, dolor quod suaserit, et mens."

Ver. 11. Blasphemed the name, &c.] Heb., Bored it through; gored it; pierced it; as did those Syrians, slain by the fall of the wall of Aphek; Rabshakeh that dead dog; {#Isa 36:4-6} Julian the apostate, Chosroes the Persian, the raging Turk at the siege of Scodra; {a} that foul mouthed Papist that dared say, The God of the Protestants is worse than Pan, god of clowns, which can endure no ceremonies nor good manners at all. {b} To these add Paul Best, who hath lately published blasphemous verses against the Trinity. See the "London Ministers' Testimonial to the Truth of Jesus Christ."

{a} Turk. Hist., 423.

{b} Sheldon's Mark of the Beast, epis. dedic.

Ver. 12. That the mind.] God had not yet made a particular law against blasphemy. Solon made no law against parricide, Lycurgus none against ingratitude; because they thought no such offence would be committed.

Ver. 14. And let all that heard him.] The Jews at this day abhor the blasphemies of Christians, so openly and ordinarily darted up with hellish mouths against God. The Turks punish their prisoners sorely, when as, through impatience or desperateness, they break out into them. {a}

{a} Spec. Europ.

Ver. 15. Curseth his God.] This is worse than blaspheming, as implying a deep and desperate malignity. There is a negative cursing of God, concerning which see #Job 1:5. {See Trapp on "Job 1:5"}

Ver. 16. And he that blasphemeth.] Swearers and blasphemers toss God's name to and fro with such impiety and profaneness, as if their speech could have no grace but in his disgrace: as if Augustus Caesar were dealing with some god Neptune; or the three sons trying their archery at their father's heart, to see who can shoot nearest. {a}

Shall surely be put to death.] Though he be never so much provoked by others, as this blasphemer was; that shall no whit excuse him.

{a} Lonicer, Theat. Hist.

Ver. 17. And he that killeth any man.] Though in hot blood; Scripture makes no difference between murder and man slaughter. {See Trapp on "Ge 9:6"}

Ver. 19. As he hath done.] God loves to retaliate; it is his usual manner of proceeding in punishing.

Chapter 25

Ver. 1. And the Lord spake unto Moses in Mount Sinai.] Posthuman, returning from the eastern parts, is, by Sulpitius, {a} brought in thus speaking: I saw the Red Sea, I went up Mount Sinai, the very top whereof, reaching up almost to heaven, cannot be come at.

{a} Sulp., Dial i., cap. 2.

Ver. 2. Then shall the land keep a Sabbath.] By their weekly Sabbath they professed that themselves belonged to God, though Seneca jeers them for it, as those that cast away the seventh part of their time. By this seventh year Sabbath, they professed that their land belonged to God, and that they were only his hinds, his tenants, and tithemen. Hence it is called the Lord's land, {#Ho 9:3} and Immanuel's. {#Isa 8:8}

Ver. 3. Six years.] Beginning at September, according to the Jews' civil account.

Ver. 4. A Sabbath of rest unto the land.] This and the jubilee year shadowed our eternal rest. {#Col 2:16,17 Heb 4:9} (1.) Every seventh day they rested from their labours. (2.) Every seventh year the ground rested. (3.) Every seventh seventh (as some reckon it) was the jubilean Sabbath: at which time all debts were remitted, prisoners released, mortgages restored to the right inheritors. The great and eternal Sabbath comprehends all these. How then should we breathe after it, and even go forth to meet it, as the Jews do their weekly Sabbath, beginning it an hour sooner than the law required? and this they called their Sabbatum, or little Sabbath.

Ver. 5. Thou shalt not reap, J sc., All at once, as other years: but now some, and then some, for thy necessary food. {a}

{a} Maimon., in Jobel.

Ver. 6. Shall be meat for you.] Thus God taught and inured them to depend upon his providence, and to feed on faith, as some read that text. {#Ps 37:3} For though the owner of the field might gather, even on that year, for the maintenance of himself and family, yet he was neither to sow his field, thereby to increase his harvest, nor to hedge his field, or lock up his vineyard, &c.

Ver. 8. Seven Sabbaths of years.] See on #Le 25:4.

Ver. 9. In the day of atonement.] Here began the jubilee: this feast was founded in a fast. "They that sow in tears, shall reap in joy": neither is there any such comfort as theirs that have soundly soaked themselves in godly sorrow. Pardon of sin is the only foundation of all jubilees: and when God hath pardoned us, our hearts are in fittest frame to pardon others.

Ver. 10. And proclaim liberty.] See this expounded by the prophet Isaiah. {#Isa 61:1,2 Lu 4:21} A most joyful jubilee indeed. In the year of Christ, 1617, the Pope proclaimed a jubilee for the peace of Italy and Austria. The Protestants also of Germany did the like, in honour of God, and for joy of the Reformation begun by Luther in Germany, a just {a} hundred of years before.

{a} Exactly a hundred years before.

Ver. 11. A jubilee shall that fiftieth year be.] Or, That jubilee shall be unto you the year of fifty years. This first Mosaical jubilee was in 1396 BC.

Ver. 12. Out of the field.] {See Trapp on "Le 25:6"}

Ver. 13. Ye shall return every man unto his possession.] So shall all saints to the paradise of God, at the sound of the last trumpet.

Ver. 14. Ye shall not oppress.] But proceed by that golden rule, "Whatever ye would that men should do to you, even so do ye to them."

Ver. 15. Years of the fruits.] The land was not properly sold, but the fruits and revenues thereof.

Ver. 17. But thou shalt fear thy God.] And so depart from this evil also. {#Ge 42:18} Joseph said to his brethren, who feared he would roll himself upon them, "This do and live, for I fear God," q.d., I dare do you no hurt, though ye be fallen into my danger. So his grandfather Isaac, seeing that he had done unwilling justice, durst not reverse the blessing, though he had some mind to it, for God had overawed him. {#Ge 27:33} And "ought ye not to have walked in the fear of the Lord?" said good Nehemiah to those merciless griping usurers. {#Ne 5:10}

Ver. 18. Ye shall do my statutes.] Ye shall do them, and do them: that is, ye shall do them diligently, {as #Ps 119:4} and then ye shall dwell in the land in safety; yea, ye shall dwell there in safety: that is, ye shall assuredly; take my word for it.

Ver. 20. And if ye shall say.] A clear answer to a carnal objection. Usually God conceals the objection in Scripture, and meets it with an answer, which is an act of grace.

Ver. 21. Command my blessing.] Now if God send his mandamus, who shall gainstand it?

Ver. 22. Ye shall eat of the old store.] Leave that care to me, who will cause you to have "all sufficiency in all things, that ye may abound to every good work." {#2Co 9:8,10}

Ver. 23. The land is mine.] See #Le 25:2.

Ver. 24. Ye shall grant a redemption, / i.e., Yield to it.

Ver. 25. And if any of his kin.] Christ is our near kinsman, and so by propinquity, as man, had the right of redemption. {#Ru 2:20 3:9,11,13}

Ver. 28. And he shall return unto his possession.] So do all God's Israel to their heavenly inheritance. {#Col 1:12-14 Eph 1:10,11,18 1Pe 1:4}

Ver. 30. And if it be not redeemed.] This would make the owners the better husbands, and keep the houses in better repair.

Ver. 31. They may be redeemed.] Lands and homestall had need go together.

Ver. 32. May the Levites redeem at any time.] They were ever counted privileged persons: and it was but reason. See #Le 25:33,34.

Ver. 33. See previous verse.

Ver. 34. May not be sold.] This law lasted but during the paedagogy: for Joses, a Levite, sold his land, and brought the money, and laid it at the apostles' feet. {#Ac 4:36,37}

Ver. 35. That he may live with thee, / i.e., Live in good fashion; for a necessitous life is a lifeless life. Thus shall ye say to him that liveth. {#ISa 25:6} So #Joh 4:50, "Thy son liveth."

Ver. 36. Take thou no usury.] God dispenseth with no usury, but condemns both Neshec the biting, and Tarbith the toothless. In Rome at this day, all usurers are excommunicated monthly. The Jews indeed are permitted to strain up their usury to 18 per cent upon the Christian, for among themselves they nowhere use it, which causeth many of the unconscionable Christians to use these Jews underhandly in improving their unlawful rents to the utmost proportion.

Ver. 38. I am the Lord your God.] Freely you have received, freely lend. You have had me your benefactor, you shall have me your debtor.

Ver. 39. Thou shalt not compel him.] To serve for ever, nor use him basely and hardly meanwhile.

Ver. 41. And then shall he depart from thee.] Yea, and though he had been bored through the ear, in token of perpetual servitude. {#Ex 21:2,6}

Ver. 43. Rule over him with rigour.] As the Egyptians did over the Israelites. {#Ex 1:13} Thy servant is made of the same earth with thee, and hath right to the same heaven with thee. See #Ga 3:28. The servant paid the half shekel as well as the master. Stand not therefore on terms of inequality, but know that yourselves also have a Master in heaven. Do therefore to them "that which is right and equal." {#Col 4:1}

Ver. 44. Both thy bondmen.] Reprobates might be hereby figured.

Ver. 46. But over your brethren the children of Israel.] Tacitus observed of the Jews in his time, that to their own countrymen they were very kind: but toward all others, cursed and cruel.

Chapter 26

Ver. 1. Ye shall make you no idols.] {See Trapp on "Ex 20:4"} {See Trapp on "Ex 20:5"} God knew the people's proneness to idolatry.

Ver. 2. Ye shall keep.] {See Trapp on "Le 19:30"}

Ver. 3. If ye walk in my statutes.] God's promises are with a condition, which is as an oar in a boat, or stern of a ship, and turns the promise another way.

Ver. 4. Rain in due season.] The best almanac we should rely upon for seasonable weather is our obedience to God, love to our neighbour, care of ourselves.

Ver. 5. Dwell in your land safely.] Confidently, fiducially, as boldly relying upon God's protection.

Ver. 6. Neither shall the sword.] To devour and desolate it, to eat flesh and drink blood, without measure or safety. A fire it is that feeds upon the people, {#Isa 9:19} a hungry wolf that snatcheth on both hands. {#Isa 9:20}

Ver. 7. And ye shall chase your enemies.] If foreigners invade you, you shall be able to quell and quiet them quickly.

Ver. 8. And five of you.] God strengthens or weakens the arm of either party, {#Eze 30:24} strikes a panic terror oft, as into those Aramites that heard a hurry noise in the air, made by the angels likely, and fled.

Ver. 9. And establish my covenant with you.] This is more than all the rest. So #Ge 17:20,21, "I have blessed Ishmael; twelve princes shall he beget, but my covenant will I establish with Isaac."

Ver. 10. Because of the new.] Which shall sufficiently secure you from want, though the old were spent.

Ver. 11. I will set my tabernacle.] The philosopher could comfort himself, that though he had little else to trust to, yet ενθα και οι Θεοι ιεσιν, Here are the gods with me, meaning his household gods. And he in Plutarch said of the Scythians, That though they had no music, nor vines amongst them, yet they had gods. How much more may the saints glory in God's presence! Habent omnia qui habent habentem omnia. {a}

{a} August.

Ver. 12. And I will walk.] {See Trapp on "2Co 6:16"}

Ver. 13. Which brought you forth.] This they often hear of, not by way of exprobration, {#Jas 1:5} but to incite them to thankful obedience. {#De 8:11 Jos 24} Servati sumus, ut serviamus.

Ver. 14. But if ye will not hearken.] Here we may observe twice so many threatenings as promises; which serves to set forth the baseness of our natures, that will do more for fear than love.

Ver. 15. Or if your soul abhor my judgments.] As, so it may prove; such is the vile canker of your corrupt natures.

Ver. 16. I will even appoint.] Put them in commission; send them with such authority as shall be irresistible.

Terror, consumption, and the burning ague,] i.e., Terrible sicknesses of all sorts, such as was the sweating sickness, called Sudor Anglicus, quia Anglis perpetuum malum. {a} It reigned {b} here some forty years together, and slew so many, that strangers wondered how this island could be so populous to bear and bury such incredible multitudes. No stranger in England was touched with this disease, and yet the English were chased therewith, not only in England, but in other countries abroad: which made them like tyrants, both feared and avoided, wherever they came. {c}

Ver. 17. They that hate you.] A heavy curse to any people, to have mischievous, malicious princes set over them: odious to God, malignant to the people.

Ver. 18. Seven times more.] God will have the better of us, and good reason: for is it fit that he should cast down the bucklers first? Illud quidem sic habeto, said the orator, {a} nisi sanatus animus sit, quod sine philosophia fieri non potest, finem miseriarum nullum fore, Be sure of this; if thy mind mend not, there will be no end of thy misery.

Ver. 20. Your land shall not yield.] See this fulfilled. {#Jer 14:1,2, &c., and #Joe 1:12 Jer 8:13} And yet their country was called Sumen totius orbis. Cornelius Tacitus yields it to be a fruitful country. So did Rabshakeh long before. {#2Ki 18:32}

Ver. 21. Contrary unto me.] Or, Carelessly before me; as our ungirt Christians, profligate professors do.

Seven times more Plagues.] God cannot be exhausted, neither need we fear, as he did of his Jupiter.

“ Si quoties peccent homines, sua fulmina mittat

Jupiter, exiguo tempore inermis erit.”

Ver. 22. I will also send wild beasts.] As he did. {#Nu 21:6,2Ki 17:25,2:24 Isa 13:21 Jer 5:6}

Ver. 23. Ye. will not be reformed.] Or chastised. God will master us; but the wicked refuse to receive corrections: like naughty boys they prove more stubborn or more stupid: they stout it out, and will not stoop. When God's "hand is lifted up they will not see; but they shall see and be ashamed." {#Isa 26:11}

Ver. 24. Then will I also walk contrary.] God will be as froward as they for the hearts of them. {#Ps 18:20} He will wry with them; neither may they look to get anything of him by wriggling and wrestling.

Ver. 25. I will bring a sword.] God "makes peace and creates evil," i.e., war. called evil per antonomasiam. Whencesoever the sword comes, it is "bathed in heaven." {#Isa 34:5}

The quarrel of my covenant.] For breach whereof Jerusalem is long since laid waste, those seven golden candlesticks are broken in pieces. Bohemia lies still a bleeding, which was the seat of the first open and authorised Reformation. And what may we think will become of us all, who, "like men have transgressed the covenant," {#Ho 6:7} or as Junius reads it, not tanquam homines, but tanquam hominis, &c. We have made no more of breaking covenant, than if therein we had had to do with dust and ashes like ourselves, and not with the great God; who is therefore whetting his sword, and furbishing it for slaughter. Quod Deus avertat!

Ver. 26. And not be satisfied.] As sick of a bulimy, or dog-like appetite, common in times of famine, such as was that of Samaria, Saguntum, Jerusalem, Sancerra, &c.

Ver. 27. But walk contrary unto me.] Or, At all adventures with me.

Ver. 28. Seven times for your sins.] God will not cease pursuing till Sheba's head be thrown over the wall. Three times in this chapter God raiseth his note of threatening, and he raiseth it by sevens, and those are discords in music. Such sayings will be heavy songs, and their execution heavy pangs to the wicked. In musical notes there are but eight degrees; and then the same returns again. Philosophers, when they distinguish degrees in qualities, do usually make the eighth degree to be the highest. But in the wrath of God against impenitents here in this chapter, #Le 26:18,21,24,28, there are no fewer than twenty-eight degrees threatened, as is well observed. {a}

Ver. 29. And ye shall eat.] As they did. {#2Ki 6:29 La 4:19} Pone pretium humanae corni, was once heard openly proclaimed at Rome in the reign of Honorius the Emperor. A hard case indeed. Here in England, in Edward II's time, anno 1316, there was so terrible a famine, that horses, dogs, yea, men and children, were stolen for food, and the thieves newly brought into the jail were torn in pieces, and eaten presently half alive, by such as had been longer there. {a}

Ver. 30. Upon the carcasses.] Or, Stumps and shivers of your idols overturned. {#Jer 16:18 Eze 4:3-7} Thus in Ket's conspiracy, those rebels of Norfolk, that brought with them into the field the pyx under his canopy in a cart, not without masses, crosses, banners, candlesticks, &c., all which trumpery, together with their breaden god, was tumbled in the dirt, amidst the carcasses of their late idolatrous worshippers. {a}

{a} Act. and Mon., fol. 1190.

Ver. 31. I will not smell.] I will show myself implacable, inexorable.

Ver. 32. Which dwell therein.] After that you shall be driven out of it.

Ver. 33. And I will scatter you.] As chaff. Compare #Ps 44:11 Zec 7:14. Therefore "fan you, fan you, O nation, not to be desired before the day pass as the chaff," &c. {#Zep 2:1,2} {See Trapp on "Zep 2:1"} {See Trapp on "Zep 2:2"}

Ver. 34. Then shall the land rest, and enjoy her Sabbaths.] Rest from your disquietments, whilst ye sinned upon it; and gat out the heart of it to spend it on your lusts. Compare #2Ch 36:21. Where there is not a resting from sin, the Sabbaths are not truly kept.

Ver. 35. {See Trapp on "Le 26:34"}

Ver. 36. I will send a faintness.] See this explained in #Job 15:21,22.

Ver. 37. And they shall fall.] Through feebleness or predestination.

Ver. 39. Shall pine away in their iniquity, / i.e., saith Diodate, Forsake their hardness of heart, and humble themselves with tears and repentance. But I rather adhere to those who take the words for a dreadful threatening worse than all the rest, viz., that after all their losses, captivities, &c., they that were left should swelter and pine away in their iniquities, as if nothing could awake them.

Ver. 40. A special text touching the rejection and conversion of the Jews.

Ver. 41. Accept of the punishment of their iniquity.] Taking all in good part, as less than their deserts; yea, taking God's part against themselves, humbly submitting to his justice, and imploring his mercy.

Ver. 43. They shall accept, / q.d., I will give them to do what I require of them. See #Le 26:41.

Chapter 27

Ver. 1. And the Lord spake.] This is oft premised and prefaced for authority's sake, and that we may learn to resolve all divine doctrines into Deus dixit.

Ver. 2. When a man shall make a singular vow.] Votum eximium, as Vatablus renders it, a personal, particular, voluntary vow; which, drawn by some peculiar reason, a man promiseth to God of his own accord. It is a binding of one's self to God by a holy and religious promise, to do or not to do something lawful, possible, useful for our increase in godliness. As here of persons, afterwards of things: all which might be redeemed, under such exception as the law provideth, by the estimation of the priest for certain shekels of silver, after the shekel of the sanctuary: this was double to the ordinary shekel. The aim and intent of these personal vows was, say some, that the price of their redemption might be employed either for the maintenance of the priests, {#Nu 18:14} or for the repair of the sanctuary. {#2Ki 12:4,5} Neither by such vows do we cast any new snares upon ourselves, but rather a new tie to the payment of an old debt.

Ver. 3. Fifty shekels of silver.] This was the greatest rate, because people are then in their prime; and yet no very great one, lest they should think much to vow, or perform to the Lord their God.

Ver. 4. And if it be a female.] She is set at a lower valuation than the male, because less able for any laborious or rational employment.

Ver. 5. From five years old.] Childhood and youth is vanity. There is a bundle of folly in a child's heart. {#Pr 22:15} The same Greek word νηπιος, signifieth a fool, and a child. And the Hebrew word used to signify youth, {#Ec 11:10} signifieth blackness or darkness, to note, that youth is a dark and dangerous age. Few Macariuses to be found, who, for his gravity in youth, was surnamed παιδαριογερων, the old young man. {a}

{a} Niceph.

Ver. 6. From a month old.] If his parents have made a vow concerning him.

Ver. 7. And if it be from sixty years.] The rate of old age is less than of youth, and more than of childhood.

Ver. 8. But if he be poorer.] Indulged he shall be, but not exempted. Vows, in things lawful and possible, must be performed, as we can at least. If rashly made, that rashness must be repented of, but the vow, if otherwise lawful, must be kept, without delay or diminution, to the utmost of our power. Men may not play with vows, {#Ec 5:3,4 Ps 76:11} as monkeys with their collars, which they can slip at pleasure. To vow is voluntary, to pay is necessary. And yet what more common in the world than shipmen's vows? As he in Erasmus, {a} who in a storm promised his saint a picture of wax as big as St Christopher, but when he came to shore, would not give a tallow candle.

{a} Erasm. Colloq.

Ver. 9. Giveth,] i.e., Consecrateth unto God by his vow; and so, giveth him of his own. {#1Ch 29:14}

Ver. 10. Then it and the exchange thereof.] For a punishment of his instability and lightness.

Ver. 11. Any unclean beast.] Unless the dog were excepted. {#De 23:18} {See Trapp on "De 23:18"}

Ver. 12. So shall it be.] What the priest doeth, God ratifieth.

Ver. 13. Then he shall add.] The owner, if he repent of his vow, shall pay for his levity. See #Ec 5:2,4,5.

Ver. 14. Sanctify his house.] Consecrate it, or any thing in it, by vow to the Lord. #Le 27:15,13

Ver. 20. Or if he have sold the field.] And so, sacrilegiously robbed God.

Ver. 22. Of his possession,] i.e., Not his patrimony, but his purchase.

Ver. 26. No man shall sanctify.] Because they were due unto the Lord before.

Ver. 28. Notwithstanding no devoted.] Hitherto of things consecrate; now of things execrate, whereof see a command, {#De 13:15,17} an example. {#Nu 21:2} These could not be sold, nor redeemed, but must remain with the priest: if it were a beast, then to be put to death.

No devoted thing.] No anathema: so the offerings of the temple were called. {#Lu 21:5}

Ver. 29. None devoted, J sc., To destruction: as were the Amalekites; {#1Sa 15:3} Canaanites; {#Nu 21:2} Jerichuntines. {#Jos 6:17}

Ver. 30. And all the tithe.] See here in this chapter what a liberal maintenance God allowed the priests: (1.) Various votive oblations, or their redemptions; (2.) All the firstborn, or their redemptions; (3.) Every devoted thing, unless devoted to some particular use; (4.) All the tithes of what kind soever: besides firstfruits, oblations, portions of sacrifices, &c. And I see not, saith a reverend man, {a} but that tithes at least, or some better thing, should be due to the ministers of the gospel by Divine ordinance: and that those that take them from us should give us a better thing, as those here that had a mind to redeem their tithe, were bound by the law to add to the price every fifth penny above the true value.

{a} Mr Wilkinson's Debt Book.

Ver. 32. Passeth under the rod.] Coloured at the end with red, to mark out the tenth, as they passed out. See #Jer 33:13.

Numbers

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. In the wilderness of Sinai.] Here God held his people well nigh a year. Here they received the law, both moral and ceremonial: the moral drove them to the ceremonial, which was then Christ in figure; as it doth now drive us to Christ in truth. The ceremonial law, saith one, was their gospel. We must also pass by Sinai to Sion, unless we like rather to be carnally secured than soundly comforted.

{See Trapp on "Ex 19:1"}

Ver. 2. Take ye the sum.] Hence this book is named in the Greek, Numbers.

Ver. 3. All that are able.] The people perceiving how many hundred thousand strong they were, might go on with more courage against their enemies. It is an ancient custom in Scotland, in cases of importance, to command the fire cross to be carried; that is, two fire brands to be set in fashion of a cross, and pitched upon the point of a spear, and proclamation is thereupon made, that all men, above sixteen years of age and under sixty, shall come into the field to advance against the common enemy. {a}

Ver. 4. A man of every tribe.] These were men of renown. {#Nu 1:16} To "do worthily in Ephrata," is the way to be "famous in Bethlehem." {#Ru 4:11} It is said of a great statesman, in Queen Elizabeth's days, that he was in the number of those few that both lived and died with glory. {a}

{a} Camden's Elisab.

Ver. 16. Princes of the tribes.] These were those officers over them in Egypt, saith a Hebrew doctor, that had been beaten for them. {#Ex 5:14} Now they are raised to great preferment. Sic per angusta ad augustum, per spinas ad rosas, per motum ad quietem, per crucem ad coelum contendimus.

Ver. 17. Which are expressed by their names.] And they are all excellent good names and very significant; hereby is testified to posterity that they forgot not the name of their God when they were in the iron furnace, but could say, as #Ps 44:17, "All this is come upon us, yet have we not forgotten thee; though thou hast sore broken us, in the place of dragons," &c.

Ver. 18. And they declared their pedigrees.] Which those that could not do, {#Ezr 2:62} were cut out of the roll, capite diminuti, cashiered.

Ver. 19. So he numbered them.] {See Trapp on "Ex 30:12"} At every general muster they paid poll money. {#Ex 30:16} Such a taxation was first granted in this kingdom to Edward III; but in the next reign proved of ill consequence; the exactors receiving from the people no less sums of curses than of coin; whereupon, also, followed the first and greatest popular insurrection that ever was seen in this kingdom. {a}

{a} Daniel's Hist.

Ver. 47. Were not numbered.] Because, by special privilege exempted from secular and military employments, that they may wholly devote themselves to the service of the sanctuary. Peter, in like sort, must put up his sword; and Timothy "not entangle himself with the affairs of this life, that he may please Him who hath chosen him to be a soldier" of another nature. {#2Ti 2:4} But Timotheus Herulus, that warlike bishop of Alexandria, A.D. 467, was a gallant fellow in his generation. And some of Peter's pretended successors were virii biliosi et bellicosi; cast the keys into Tiber, and took up St Paul's sword, {a} and the imperial clothes. So have various of their dear sons done; as Philip, bishop of Beauvieu, in France, who, being taken in battle by our Richard I, in a skirmish, had his armour he was taken in sent to the Pope, with these words engraven thereon, Vide utrum filii tui tunica sit, vel non, See whether this be thy son's coat or not.

{a} Theophilus Alexandriae Episcopus, primus inter Christiani nominis episcopos, arma tractavit. -Socrat.

Ver. 53. Shall pitch round about.] As the living creatures (the ministers) are between the four and twenty eiders, the congregation of the faithful, and the throne. {#Re 4:4}

Chapter 2

Ver. 1. And the Lord spake.] He being the Lord of these hosts of Israel, {#Ex 12:41} gives order for the marshalling of them in such good array, and all comely equipage, as made them as a city that is compact together; both "beautiful as the moon, and terrible as an army with banners." {#Ps 122:3 So 6:10} This Balaam beheld with admiration. {#Nu 24:5,6}

Ver. 2. Far off about the tabernacle.] About it: the emperor's tent is among his soldiers. Xerxes pitched his tent not only among, but above his soldiers, that he might look on them, when in fight, for their encouragement. So the Lord, who, as he "is round about his people": {#Ps 125:2} so they are "round about the Lord." {#Ps 76:12} "A people near unto him." {#Ps 148:14} Yet not so near, but they must know, and keep their just distance; as here they pitched far off, about the tabernacle, a mile off, as is gathered from #Jos 3:4. God, though he loves to be acquainted with men in the walks of their obedience, yet he takes state upon him in his ordinances, and will be trembled at in our addresses to his Majesty.

Ver. 3. And on the east side.] Judah encamped foremost. It was fit the lion should lead the way. Better an army of harts, with a lion to lead them on, &c. This order in their march showed the principality that should continue in this tribe till Shiloh came. Judah herein also was a type of Christ, who is "the Captain of the Lord's host," {#Jos 5:14} and "of our salvation," {#Heb 2:10} and goeth before his heavenly armies. {#Re 12:7}

Ver. 10. And on the south side.] The order proceeded from east to south, and so to the west and north; according to the course of the sun, and climates of the world, saith one. I may add, according to the course and progress of the gospel; which went out of Judea, lying east, into Greece, which lieth south; and from thence passed to the western parts, the Latin Church, and so to us of the north: and because

Extingui lucem nec patiare tuam. ”*

Chapter 3

Ver. 1. Of Aaron and Moses.] Of Aaron by nature, of Moses by education and instruction. See #1Co 4:15 Ga 4:12, {See Trapp on "1Co 4:15"} {See Trapp on "Ga 4:12"} So the Jesuits call themselves padres, and require of their novices blind obedience, which is more than ever Moses did.

Ver. 3. Which were anointed.] And so should have walked, as became God's anointed; leaving a sweet smell behind them everywhere; but they went out in a stench; they fell, as if they had not been anointed with oil. {#2Sa 1:21}

Ver. 4. And Nadab and Abihu.] Such a cross had David in his two eldest, Amnon and Absalom. {See Trapp on "Le 10:1"} {See Trapp on "Le 10:2"}

Ver. 9. They are wholly given unto him.] Heb. They are given, they are given. So the ministers of the gospel are called "gifts"; {#Eph 4:8,11} honoraries; such as Christ bestowed upon his Church at the day of his coronation, and solemn inauguration into his throne, at his wonderful ascension.

Ver. 10. And the stranger.] Though a Levite, yet if not of Aaron's seed. {#Nu 18:3 Heb 5:4} Let this be thought upon by our too bold intruders into the work of the ministry.

Ver. 13. Because all the firstborn.] So they were from the beginning: but here is noted a continuance of this ordinance, when it is said that he sanctified the first born to himself, what time he smote every firstborn in Egypt. Now the firstborn are said to be God's by a singular right, {#Ex 13:2} and so they were types, (1.) Of Christ, {#Ro 8:29} to whom therefore we must give the honour of his first birthright; all our sheaves must vail and bow to his sheaf: (2.) Of Christians; those "firstborn whose names are written in heaven," {#Heb 12:23} who are dear to God, as his firstborn, {#Ex 4:22} and so "higher than the kings of the earth," {#Ps 89:27} for they are "kings and priests unto God," {#Re 1:6} to "serve him day and night in his temple." {#Re 7:15}

Ver. 2. Of the of Kohath.] Kohath was not Levi's firstborn, but Gershom: and yet he hath the pre-eminence, and chief charge, as of the ark, tables, candlestick, altars, &c., {#Nu 3:31} perhaps because Moses and Aaron were of that family.

Ver. 3. To do the work.] The work of the ministry is not an idle man's occupation, but a labouring even to lassitude; compared therefore to harvest work, and to that of cleaving wood, digging in mine pits, rowing with oars, &c. All the comfort is, that God that helped the Levites to bear the ark of the covenant, {#1Ch 15:26} will not be wanting to his weak, but willing servants, "that labour in the word and doctrine." {#1Ti 5:17}

Ver. 5. And when the camp setteth forward.] Which was not till the cloud was taken up from off the tabernacle, by the Lord, {#Nu

10:11,12} who went before them. Semper memento illud Pythagoricum, Επον θεω, {a} Let God lead us, and we cannot miscarry.

{a} Boetius.

Ver. 8. And cover the same.] It is well observed, that only the ark (representing Christ), and the table with show bread, (representing the Church), had three coverings; all the other holy things had but two, for "a covert from storm and from rain." Thus, "upon all the glory shall be a defence." {#Isa 4:5,6}

Ver. 13. The ashes from the altar.] The fire from heaven was also carefully kept alive, {#Le 6:12} though nothing be here said of it.

Ver. 15. Lest they die.] As UZZah did. {#1Ch 13:10}

The burden of the sons of Kohath.] Who, as they had the honos, so the onus See #Nu 4:1.

“Fructus honos oneris, fructus honoris onus.”

Ver. 16. And to the office of Eleazar.] Called therefore prince of the princes of the Levites. {#Nu 3:32}

Ver. 18. Cut ye not off, / i.e., Cause them not, by your default, to be cut off. Heed must be taken, that we neither give offence carelessly, nor take offence causelessly.

Ver. 20. But they shall not go in to see.] The men of Bethshemesh paid for their peeping. {#Isa 6:9} Search not into God's secrets: hic oportet mirari, non rimari {#De 29:29} Remember that saying of Xenocrates the philosopher: Nihil interesse, pedesne quisquam, an oculos in aliena domo ponat, {a} It is as great unmannerliness to pry into another man's house as to press into it.

{a} Plutarch, De Curiosit.

Ver. 30. From thirty years.] The Greek hath it, from twenty-five years: for then they began to be learners and probationers; and at thirty, they set upon the service. See #Nu 8:24. In their old age they had leave to retire.

Ver. 32. By name ye shall reckon.] That all might be ready and forthcoming, when the sanctuary was set up again. Christ "knoweth" and "calleth" all his "by name," {#Joh 10:3} not the meanest of them is missing. {#Joh 17:12}

Ver. 44. Three thousand and two hundred.] By this diversity of number among the Levite families, God showeth his wisdom, saith an interpreter, in fitting men for the work, whereunto he hath appointed them, whether it requireth multitude or gifts. "For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit, &c., dividing to every man severally as he will." {#1Co 12:8,12} It is reported, that in Luther's house was found written, Res et verba Philippus, res sine verbis Lutherus, verba sine re Erasmus, Melancthon hath both matter and words; Luther hath matter, but wants words; Erasmus hath words, but wants matter. Every one hath his own share: all are not alike gifted.

Ver. 48. Eight thousand, &c.] What a poor few were these to the other tribes! God's portion is ever the least.

Chapter 5

Ver. 2. Put out of the camp.] To show, that sin unrepented of, throws us out of the communion of faith and saints; shuts us out of the congregation of God in earth and heaven. No fellowship, place, or reward with them. See #Re 21:27. {See Trapp on "Re 21:27"}

Defiled by the dead.] Heb., Defiled by a soul. The Hebrews call a dead corpse Nephesh here, and elsewhere; that is, a soul, to note that it shall live again, and that the soul shall return to it. The heathene also (saith a grave interpreter) called a dead body a soul: possibly from some glimpse of the resurrection.

Ver. 3. Without the camp shall ye put them.] Evildoers are to be suspended, excommunicated, {#1Co 5:13} which text showeth plainly the truth of this ceremony.

Ver. 6. Any sin that men commit.] For what man is he that liveth and sinneth not? I am a man a sinner, {a} saith Peter, {#Lu 5:8} not more a man than a sinner. Our lives are fuller of sin, than the firmament of stars, or the furnace of sparks: we can as little cease to sin, as the hart to pant, pulse to beat, &c. The devil, when he speaks lies, speaks of his own, {#Joh 8:44} so when we do evil, we work of our own, we "walk as men." {#1Co 3:3} Sins are here called human sins, as the Greek hath it.

{a} ανηρ αμαρταλος

Ver. 7. Then they shall confess their sin.] So they were bound to do, all their sins. {#Pr 28:13 Job 33:27,28} Confessio peccati est medicina peccati, saith Nazianzen; a sin acknowledged is half amended.

And he shall recompense his trespass.] Restitution must be made of goods unjustly detained, or else you shall cough in hell, said Mr Latimer. Our King Henry VII, in his last will and testament, after the disposing of his soul and body, he devised and willed restitution should be made, of all such moneys as had unjustly been levied by his officers. {a} So did Selymus the great Turk give orders at his death for the restoring and recompensing of the great treasure he had taken from the Persian merchants. {b}

{a} Speed's Hist., fol. 995.

{b} Turk. Hist., fol. 767.

Ver. 8. Unto the Lord, even to the priest.] The priest is the Lord's receiver. {a} {So #Heb 7:6-9} Tithes are due to the ministers of Christ "that liveth," because due to him, and they are in his stead. {#2Co 5:20}

{a} Sacerdos est vicarius et quasi haeres. -Dio.

Ver. 9. And every offering.] So liberally doth the Lord provide for his priests. {See Trapp on "Le 27:30"} And is not the right of livelihood as equal and due to the ministers of the gospel, whose ministry is far more glorious, {#2Co 3:8,9} even greater than that of John Baptist? {#Mt 11:11}

Ver. 12. If any man's wife go aside.] Ad alterum, vel ad alterius torum; unde dicitur adulterium. If, as a naughty woman, she want one, when she hath her own. But how naughty are the Lithuanians, who give way to their wives to have their gallants, if Maginus belie them not, and call such connubii adiutores, prizing them far above all their acquaintances!

Ver. 13. And it be hid from the eyes] As #Pr 30:20. Such a privy whore was Livia, the wife of Augustus Caesar, who, though otherwise very observant of her husband, yet lived in adultery with Eudemus her physician: qui specie artis frequens secretis, saith Tæitus; who, under a show of curing her, corrupted her. So do the Jesuits many dames at this day; being, as one saith of them, Connubi sanctifugae, clam meretricitegae. The friars are said to send men whose wives are barren, in pilgrimage to St. Joyce the patroness of fruitfulness, and meanwhile to lie with their wives.

Ver. 14. And the spirit of jealousy come upon him.] In the baths at Upper Baden in Helvetia, cernunt viri uxores tractari, cernunt cum alienis loqui, et quidem solam cum solo, saith Munster, and yet are not jealous. But the Italians are so jealous, that how many husbands, so many jailers. And the Turks as far exceed the Italians herein, as the Italians do us. Therefore their women go muffled, all but the eyes: nor are they suffered to go to church, or so much as look out at their own windows. {a} In Barbary it is death for any man to see one of the Shereef's concubines: and for them too, if, when they see a man, though but through a casement, they do not suddenly scream out.

{a} Blunt's Voyage into Levant.

Ver. 15. Barley meal.] Barley, not wheat. She hath done the act of a beast, and her oblation is the meat of a beast, as Sal. Zarchi here noteth.

Ver. 16. Set her before the Lord.] Whose the judgment was; that, if guilty, she might be scared from submitting herself to this trial; since God knows all our thefts.

Ver. 17. Holy water,] i.e., Water taken out of the holy laver: no warrant for Popish lustral water, and sprinkling of sepulchres: for the ground whereof Cardinal Baronius fairly refers us to Juvenal's sixth Satire. {a}

{a} Annal. ad Annum 44.

Ver. 18. Uncover the woman's head.] Because she stood now upon her justification, and thereupon laid aside, for present, this sign of subjection to the man. {#1Co 11:7}

The offering of memorial.] Brought by her husband, {#Nu 5:15} who was now sick of one of those three diseases, that they say are hardly cured, jealousy, frenzy, and heresy.

Ver. 19. Causeth the curse.] The divine justice caused it; the water discovered it.

Ver. 21. Thy thigh to rot, and thy belly to swell.] God takes notice of the offending member; as he did in those blasphemers, who gnawed their tongues; {#Re 16:10} Absalom's hair; Jeroboam's hand; the adulterer's loins; {#Pr 5:11} Zimri and Cozbi, thrust through the belly. {#Nu 25:8} Charles II, King of Navarre, Joan, Queen of Naples, &c., suffered as they sinned.

Ver. 22. Amen, amen.] Twice; to show the fervency of her zeal, the innocency of her cause, the uprightness of her conscience, and the purity of her heart.

Ver. 23. Shall write these curses in a book.] To show, that the word written should cause the water thus to work, according to the cleanness or uncleanness of the party. See #2Co 2:16. {See Trapp on "2Co 2:16"}

Ver. 27. And her belly shall swell.] This was a usual miracle among the Jews; and showed that their religion was of God.

Chapter 6

Ver. 1. And the Lord spake.] Est Venus in vinis: therefore after the law for the privy harlot, here is a law given for abstinence from wine and strong drink, which some have called lac veneris. The whore cometh forth with a cup, {#Re 17:4} as with a fit instrument.

Ver. 2. To vow a vow.] A voluntary vow, a religious promise made in prayer; hence ευχη, a vow, προσευχη, a prayer.

To separate themselves unto the Lord.] As mirrors of singular sobriety and sanctimony, {#La 4:7} especially required in such as are "separated unto the gospel of God," {#Ro 1:1} and as types of Christ, that great votary, true Nazarite, holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners, {#Heb 7:26} that holy thing, {#Mt 1:20} that holy of holies, or most holy. {#Da 9:24}

Ver. 3. He shall separate himself from wine.] Lest he should drink and forget the law, {#Pr 31:5} which he was to study diligently: but loaden bellies make leaden wits: intemperance takes away the heart, {#Ho 4:11} overchargeth it. {#Lu 21:34}

Moist grapes or dried.] Dried as raisins, currants, or grapes of Corinth, whence they come, and are called.

Ver. 4. From the kernels even to the tusk.] Nothing that might occasion, or tempt him to break his vow. All shadows and shows of evil must be shunned: Quicquid fuerit male coloratum, as Bernard hath it; whatsoever looks but ill-favoured. {#1Th 5:22 Jude 1:23} He that would not eat the meat, must not meddle with the broth. He that would not toll the bell, must not tuggle with the rope. He that would shun the blow, must keep aloof from the train.

Ver. 5. There shall no razor.] In opposition to heathens, votaries who nourished their hair to offer to their gods. The popish priests also cut and shave their hair, that they may still look neat and effeminate; which God allowed not in his Nazarites. {#Am 2:11}

Ver. 6. At no dead body.] Christ was never defiled by any person dead in sin, nor by any dead work; no more must we.

Ver. 7. He shall not make himself unclean.] In all changes he must be unchangeable; so was Christ, so must we.

Ver. 8. He is holy unto the Lord.] With an inward holiness, else all his outward observations were to no purpose.

Ver. 9. And If any man die.] A figure of the involuntary and unavoidable infirmity of the saints, which must be bewailed, as direct fruits of the flesh; and for which there is, through Christ, a pardon of course.

Ver. 10. Two turtles.] See #Le 15:14, & c. It is the same expiation with those that had unclean issues.

Ver. 11. For that he sinned by the dead.] Heb., By a soul. See on #Nu 5:2.

Ver. 12. And he shall consecrate.] He shall begin the world anew: so must we, after some foul fall especially: "Repent and do thy first works," {#Re 2:5} as the Shulamite did. {#So 5:2, &c.}

Ver. 13. And this is the law of the Nazarite.] The third part of it, to teach him thankfulness, that most needful, but much neglected duty.

Ver. 14. And he shall offer his offering.] Though he had fulfilled his vow in the best manner, yet he must come with his sin offering, &c., leading him to Christ, for pardon of failings in the manner; and with his thank offering, for what he had been enabled to do, before he could be released of his Nazariteship.

Ver. 16. And shall offer his sin offering.] Acknowledging thereby, that he had sinned in the most sanctified time and actions of his life; and needed therefore a Saviour.

Ver. 18. And put it in the fire.] To teach us, that the Lord so loveth his children, that he esteemeth the least hair of their head as a precious gift.

Ver. 19. The sodden shoulder, / i.e., The left shoulder; for the right was due unto him raw. {#Le 7:32} This taught the Nazarite special thankfulness: dignity requires duty.

Ver. 20. The Nazarite may drink wine.] The Popish votaries will needs fetch colour and approbation for their superstitious vows, from this order of Nazarites. But the abolishing of this ordinance is declared in #Ac 21:25, and they are so far from the abstinence of Nazarites, that they eat of the best, and drink of the sweetest: the most generous wine in Louvain and Paris is known by the name of Vinum Theologicum, the divines, those Sorbonists, do so whiff it off.

Ver. 21. Besides that that his hand,] i.e., Beside his voluntary devotion, according to his ability. This he may do; but that he must do, be he poor or rich.

Ver. 23. Ye shall bless the children of Israel.] Praying for them with hands first stretched out to heaven, {#Le 9:22} and then laid upon the people; so putting the blessing of God upon them. So Christ did upon his apostles, which was his last action upon earth, {#Lu 24:50} and so must all pastors do, that would do good on it, -pray down a blessing on their people.

Ver. 24. The Lord bless thee.] Here some observe the mystery of the holy Trinity. See it explained in #2Co 13:14.

Chapter 7

Ver. 2. The princes of Israel offered.] So they did at the making of the tabernacle, and at the building of the temple, {#Ex 35:27 1Ch 29:6-8} which was but to give God of his own; as David acknowledged with all thankfulness, {#1Ch 29:14} τα σα εκ των σων σοι προσφερομεν. {a} Of thine own we offer unto thee, said Justinian, when he had offered up, in the temple of Sophia, at Constantinople, a communion table that had in it, saith the author, all the riches of land and sea.

{a} Cedrenus.

Ver. 8. And four waggons and eight oxen.] Double the number of what the Gershonites had, because their carriage was heavier; God proportions the burden to the back: none of his shall be oppressed, though "pressed out of measure above strength," {#2Co 1:8} as Joseph was, whom the archers hated, and shot at: "But his bow abode in strength, and the arms of his hands were made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob," ever reserved for a dead lift. {#Ge 49:23,24 Mt 8:17} {See Trapp on "Ge 49:23"} {See Trapp on "Ge 49:24"} {See Trapp on "Mt 8:17"}

Ver. 9. Bear upon their shoulders.] Therefore when David carted the ark, as the Philistines had done before, God was angry, and made a breach upon Uzza, because they sought him not in due order. {#1Ch 15:13}

Ver. 11. For the dedicating of the altar.] No warrant at all for Popish dedications of altars, churches, religious houses built for superstitious uses, as appears in stories: {a} as pro remissione et redemptione peccatorum; pro remedio et liberatione animae; pro amore caelestis patriae; pro salute regnorum; in honorem gloriosae virginis, &c.

{a} Act. and Mon.

Ver. 12. Of the tribe of Judah.] Ut ubique superemineat praerogativa Christi a Iuda oriundi.

Ver. 17. And for peace offerings.] Sacrifices of all sorts they brought, whereby, having made their peace, they kept a feast with joy before the Lord, for his mercy to them through the merits of his Son.

Ver. 18. On the second day.] Their offerings are severally and largely described; to show how highly accepted in heaven.

Ver. 19. And when Moses was gone into, &c.] Scipio Africanus was wont, before day, to go into the Capitol, in cellam Iovis, and there to stay a great while, quasi consultans de Rep. cum Iove, as if he had advised with his god about the public businesses. {a}

{a} Gell., lib. vii., cap. 1.

Chapter 8

Ver. 3. He lighted the lamps.] This candlestick, on the south side of the tabernacle, over against the table, figured the law of God shining in his Church; {#Pr 6:23 2Pe 1:19} and the lighting of one lamp from another, showed the opening of one text by another. The Rabbins have a saying, Nulla est obiectio in lege quae non habet solutionem in latere; i.e., there is not any doubt in the law, but may be resolved in the context.

Ver. 4. Beaten work.] To show that ministers must beat their brains to beat out the sense of the Scriptures, as the fowl beats the shell, to get out the fish, with great vehemency. {a}

{a} Κοπιαν, παρα το κοπτειν.

Ver. 7. Sprinkle water of purifying, &c.] This taught that none were meet for the holy ministry, but by the free favour of Christ, and by the sanctification of his Spirit. {#2Co 2:16 Ga 1:15} Ministers are fullones animarum, their office is to whiten others; themselves therefore should be as those Nazarites {#La 4:7} "whiter than snow."

Shave all their flesh.] As the lepers did; Levites are by nature no better than lepers: ministers, men subject to like passions as others, and liable to more temptations.

Ver. 9. The whole assembly.] By their representatives the elders, or the firstborn; figuring the Church of Christ, those "firstborn which are written in heaven." {#Heb 12:23}

Ver. 10. Shall put their hands.] Imposition of hands is an ancient rite at the ordination of ministers.

Ver. 11. And Aaron shall offer the Levites.] Heb., Wave the Levites; which might figure, ministers' miseries and afflictions, by Satan's sifting them, and wicked men's turmoiling them, as Jeremiah, that "man of contentions." {#Jer 15:12}

Ver. 12. The one for a sin offering.] The sin offering for actual sin; the burnt offering for original.

Ver. 19. As a gift to Aaron.]

“ Clarissima semper

Munera sunt, Author quae pretiosa facit. ”

Ministers also are given as an honorary to the Church. {#Eph 4:11}

Ver. 24. From twenty-five years.] {See Trapp on "Nu 4:30"}

Chapter 9

Ver. 2. Keep the passover.] This passover; for they kept no more but this, till they came into the land of Canaan, {#Jos 5:10 Ex 12:25} because of their often and uncertain removes. The feast of tabernacles likewise was for many ages omitted; or at least not in due manner observed, as by dwelling in booths, reading the book of the law, &c., {#Ne 8:16-18} which a man would wonder at. But Vexatio dat intellectum: those Jews were newly returned from captivity.

Ver. 3. According to all the rites.] It was a true saying of Socrates in Xenophon, Deum eo cultus genere coli velle, quem ipse instituerit that God must be worshipped in his own way only. Whereunto agreeth that of Cicero, Deum non superstitione coli velle, sed pietate.

Ver. 5. And they kept the passover.] [See Trapp on "Ex 12:1"] &c

Ver. 6. They could not keep the passover.] Because they were to be unclean seven days. {#Nu 19:11} Now, among the very heathen, the sacrificers were to purify themselves some days before; they had their caena pura the night before, &c., {a} and having expiated the company, they cried, τις τηδε; who is here? to which they made reply, πολλοι κα γαθοι γε παρεισιν, Many and good are here. {b}

{a} Demosth.

{b} Aristoph.

Ver. 7. And those men said unto him.] Moses they knew was a meet man to resolve this case of conscience. He was a messenger, an interpreter, "one among a thousand, to show unto man his uprightness," {#Job 33:23} a merchant to sell oil and balm from Gilead, to cure consciences. {#Mt 25:9} Others may write cases, that is, covers of conscience; but resolve none. Conscience is a diamond, and will be wrought on by nothing but dust of diamond, such as contrition hath ground it to.

Ver. 8. Stand still and I will hear.] Moses was but the echo of God's voice; John Baptist, "the voice of one crying in the wilderness": St Paul "received of the Lord" what he delivered to the Church, {#1Co 11:23} and took care that the faith of his hearers "might not be in the wisdom of man, but in the power of God." {#1Co 2:4,5} Unwarranted doctrines come not cum gratia et privilegio.

Ver. 10. Or be in a journey afar off.] This rendered a man unfit to partake; because either his head would be so taken up about his business then, or his mind so set upon home, that he would have little leisure or liberty to prepare for the passover.

Ver. 11. With unleavened bread.] Teaching them to "purge out the old leaven," that fusty, swelling, souring, spreading, corruption of nature and practice.

And bitter herbs.] Directing them to true humiliation and bitterness for sin; without which there can be no sweetness in the blood of Christ.

Ver. 12. They shall leave none.] The Lord in his infinite wisdom would hereby prevent all occasions of idolatry, which is easily admitted in the reservations of holy things, as in Popery at this day.

Ver. 17. And when the cloud.] This visible sign they had of God's presence, for their motion or station by night or by day, through all their pilgrimage. "In all thy ways acknowledge God, and he shall direct thy paths." {#Pr 3:6} "When thou sittest in darkness, the Lord shall give thee light." {#Mic 7:8}

Ver. 19. Kept the charge of the Lord.] Or, His watch—viz., to be ready at any hour to remove. So must we always watch and be in readiness, as not knowing whether at even, or at midnight, or cock crowing, or in the dawning, Christ will come. {#Mr 13:35}

Ver. 22. When it was taken up they journeyed.] In that wilderness of Arabia there were no beaten paths, no footsteps of passengers appeared; wherefore travellers there used to steer their course, as mariners at sea do, by a mathematical chart. But these Israelites went by a better direction. So do all saints. {#Heb 11:16}

Ver. 23. At the commandment of the Lord.] This signified that the saints are to rest, or go on, at the voice of Christ, {#Joh 10:3,4} and that "whatsoever they do in word or deed, to do all in the name of the Lord Jesus," {#Col 3:17} to seek and find all their perfection and defence in him alone.

Chapter 10

Ver. 2. Two trumpets of silver.] Signifying the voice of the law and gospel in the mouths of God's ministers, who must "lift up the voice like a trumpet," {#Isa 58:1} with fervour, zeal, and courage; {a} (1.) To gather the people, and assemble the elders; {#Joe 2:16} (2.) To put them upon their marchings and motions towards the heavenly Canaan; and here to blow an alarm—

“ Sic clames ut Stentora vincere possis—”

as that famous Farellus did, when the friars, to drown his voice in the pulpit, rang their greatest bells, but he drowned them out; (3.) To get them upon their battlements, and there hence to blow an alarm likewise, upon the approach of spiritual enemies; taking the same liberty to cry down sin, that men take to commit it; {b} and to descry the devil's stratagems that are so destructive to men's souls. They must cast away the inverse trumpets of Furius Fulvius, which sounded a retreat when they should have sounded an alarm; they must faithfully show God's "people their transgressions, and the house of Jacob their sins," {#Isa 58:1} yea, "all their transgressions in all their sins." {#Le 16:21} Lastly, as the priests were to sound the silver trumpets at their solemn feasts, {#Ps 81:3} for a monument of spiritual gladness before the Lord; so must ministers of the gospel publish the glad tidings of the gospel; "Speak to the heart of Jerusalem, and cry unto her, that her warfare is accomplished, her sin is pardoned"; {#Isa 40:2} make the people hear the joyful sound, that they may walk in the sense of God's presence, and in the light of his countenance; yea, "rejoice in his name all the day long." {#Ps 89:15,16}

Ver. 7. But when the congregation.] Cenalis, bishop of Avranche, {a} was hard driven, when to prove the Church of Rome a true church, he makes no mention at all of ministers, or ordinances, but allegeth that the Catholics had bells to assemble them together, whereas the Lutherans met by the clap of harquebuses {b} and pistols. And so he goes on to triumph in a long antithesis. The bells, saith he, do sound, the harquebuses crack. The bells give a sweet and melodious tune, but the harquebuses a foul and terrible noise. Bells open heaven; the other hell. Bells chase away clouds and thunder; the other, gender clouds and counterfeit thunder, &c. Oh, the profound arguments of these doting doctors!

But you shall not sound an alarm.] Or, A broken sound; but a continued equal sound, as fittest for their quiet assembling, to the service of God, and hearing of the law. The sound of God's word must not be broken or quavering— pompalis, Tertullian calleth it— but downright and simple. Non oratorum filii sumus, sed piscatorum: nec verborum υπεροχη, sed Spiritus επιδειξει, {c} &c. {#1Co 2:1,4}

{a} Act. and Mon., fol. 838.

{b} The early type of portable gun, varying in size from a small cannon to a musket, which on account of its weight was, when used in the field, supported upon a tripod, trestle, or other 'carriage', and afterwards upon a forked 'rest'.

{c} Nazianz., ad Libanum.

Ver. 8. Shall blow with the trumpets.] A trumpeter, as one observeth, winds his trumpet with his mouth, and holds it up with his hand: so should a minister both preach and practise; vivere concionibus, concionari moribus.

Ver. 9. Ye shall be remembered before the Lord.] Who will arise, as it were, awakened by this sound of the trumpet. See #2Ch 13:12 Isa 51:9. That is, by the prayer of faith; such as were the prayers of the ministers of Angrogna, in France, wherewith their enemies cried out, they were so bewitched that they could not fight. It was the custom of these poor persecuted Protestants, so soon as they saw the enemy approach, to cry all together for aid and help to the Lord: and when the combat was ended, constantly to give him thanks for the good success he had sent them. {a} So, at the siege of Montauban, the people of God, using daily humiliation, as their service would permit, did sing a psalm after it, immediately before their sallying forth: with this practice the enemy coming acquainted, ever upon the singing of the psalm, after which they expected a sally, they would so quake and tremble, saying, They come, they come, as though the wrath of God had been breaking out upon them.

{a} Act. and Mon., fol. 883.

Ver. 10. For a memorial.] Or, A sacred sign, to mind and assure them that God will hear their suits, and accept of their services thus performed with joy of faith.

Ver. 12. Out of the wilderness of Sinai.] Where they had dwelt long enough. {#De 1:6-8} It being a place of bondage, by reason of the law there given. {#Ga 4:24,25} The law is a yoke of bondage, as Jerome calls it; and they who look for righteousness from thence, are like oxen, who toil and draw, and when they have done their labour, are fatted for slaughter.

Ver. 25. The rearward of all the camp.] Called the gathering host. {#Jos 6:9} Because to their charge was committed the care of gathering together the lame, faint, and feeble, and to look that nothing was lost, or left behind. And to this David seems to allude. {#Ps 27:10} Compare #Isa 58:8 52:12.

Ver. 29. And Moses said.] Or, Moses had said, viz., in #Ex 18:1,2.

Unto Hobab the son of Raguel.] Rabbi Solomon telleth us, that Jethro, Moses' father-in-law, had seven names, viz., Ruguel, Jether, Jethro, Hobab, Heber, Cinaeus, and Phutiel.

For the Lord hath spoken good.] And God's promises he knew to be good surehold.

Ver. 30. To mine own land.] Patriam quisque amat, non quia pulchram sed quia suam. {a}

“Nescio qua natale solum dulcedine cunctos

Ducit, et immemores non sinit esse sui.”—Ovid.

{a} Seneca.

Ver. 31. Instead of eyes.] To descry unto us the commodities and discommodities of the country, which is well known to thee. Herein thou mayest be of singular use unto us, though we have God going visibly before us. The Jews had a kind of officers at their feasts, called οφθαλμοι, the eyes of the feast, et praefecti morum. {a}

{a} Gaudentius. Casaubon.

Ver. 33. Three days' journey.] Three days together without resting: this made them murmur. {#Nu 11:1}

Went before them.] And, as the Jews conceive, for the facilitating of their march the cloud levelled mountains, raised valleys, and laid all of a flat; that is, burnt up bushes, smoothed rocks, and made all plain, &c. {a}

{a} Non quia dura sed quia molles patimur.—Sen.

Ver. 35. Rise up, Lord.] Commanders must pray, as well as lead on their forces, as did Charles the Great, and that late brave King of Sweden, more addict to prayer than to fight.

Flee before thee.] Heb., Before thy face. The ark is called God's face. {#Ps 105:4} Yea, even God himself. {#Ps 132:5}

Chapter 11

Ver. 1. And when the people complained.] Or, Were as it were complainers: they did inwardly and secretly repine and mutter at their three days' march, without intermission; like those horses that digest their choler by biting their bridle.

Consumed them that were in the uttermost parts.] There, it seems, the sin began amongst those that were faint and weary with travel, as #De 25:18.

Ver. 2. And the people cried to Moses.] That lord chancellor of heaven, as one calleth him, that could rule with God, and overrule. Of Moses it might be said, as once of Luther, Iste vir potuit apud Deum quod voluit, He might have whatsoever he would of God.

Ver. 3. The name of the place Taberah.] So to perpetuate the memory of the people's sin, and God's judgment. Alterius perditio, tua sit cautio.

Ver. 4. And the mixed multitude.] {See Trapp on "Ex 12:38"} Observe the danger of ill company. Fish retain their sweetness in the salt sea. The river Dee in Merionethshire, running through Pimblemere, remains entire, and mingles not her streams with the waters of the lake. The rivers of Peru, after they have run some miles into the sea, retain their sweetness, as writers report. But to converse with the ungodly, and not to learn their manners, is marvellously rare and difficult. A man may pass through Ethiopia unchanged; but he cannot dwell there and not be discoloured.

The children of Israel wept again.] And were punished again. Herein they were like froward children, that, while crying for an apple that is in the father's hand, will fling away the cake that is in their own; and so get a whipping rather than a pippin, as we say; a lashing rather than their longing.

Ver. 5. We remember the fish.] They forgot their servitude. Discontent is ever harping upon wants, and enjoys nothing: no more than Haman did his honour, or Ahab his kingdom, when he longed for a salad out of Naboth's garden.

Ver. 6. There is nothing at all besides.] The wheat of heaven was held a light meat, because lightly come by; Cito parta vilescunt. How are many queasy stomachs even nauseated with the bread of life! it makes not to their dainty palates; plain preaching is disrelished.

Ver. 7. And the manna.] {See Trapp on "Ex 16:14"} {See Trapp on "Ex 16:31"} There was therefore no such cause they should so loathe it.

Was as coriander seed.] Small, but full of sweetness and nourishment. This might be some cause of Moses' undecayedness.

{#De 34:7}

As the colour of bdellium.] A kind of transparent and precious gum.

Ver. 8. And the people went about.] Or, "Went to and fro," as men ought still to "increase knowledge," {#Da 12:4}; "labouring for the meat that endureth to eternal life." {#Joh 6:27} God might have saved them this labour, by raining manna into their mouths; but he would not, for the trial of their diligence; and that they might not think that worth nothing, that cost them nothing.

And ground it in mills.] So was Jesus Christ ground and pounded with passion, baked and dried up in the oven of his Father's displeasure, before he became fit food, and a Saviour to his Church.

As the taste of fresh oil.] Or, Wafers baked with honey. {#Ex 16:31} The sweet promises of grace are sweeter than honey. {#Ps 19:10} No fresh and sweet oil can so cherish the face, as they do the heart of a believer.

Ver. 9. And when the dew fell.] As manna fell in the dew, so doth the Spirit descend in and by the word preached. {#Ga 3:2}

In the night.] Figuring that hidden manna, laid up and prepared for the saints. {#Re 2:17}

Ver. 10. Weep throughout their families.] Generally and openly they rebelled and murmured, though so lately they had smarted at Taberah. And this they did, not once or twice, but ten times over; whereby it appears that God chose this unthankful people, not for their merits, sed ex mera et mira misericordia. He chose them for his love, and loved them for his choice.

Ver. 11. Wherefore hast thou afflicted thy servant.] Antoninus the Emperor said often, Imperium oceanum esse malorum, that to be a governor of others is to be plunged into an ocean of miseries. Pope Adrian caused to be engraven upon his own tomb, Faelix si non imperitasset. Melancthon said, the three sorest labours of all were, Docentis, imperantis, parturientis, the labours of ministers, magistrates, and of travailing women.

Ver. 12. As a nursing father beareth, &c.] Lovingly, mildly, gently. A magistrate should carry himself as a pater patriae. Queen Elizabeth would many times say, That she could believe nothing of her people that parents would not believe of their children. {a}

{a} Camden's Elisab.

Ver. 13. Whence should I have flesh.] Lust is unsatisfiable; to go about it, is to go about an endless piece of work; it is to cast oil into the fire to quench it.

Ver. 14. It is too heavy for me.] Crowns have their cares; high seats are uneasy, many a cumber attends honour. Beatus ille qui procul negotiis. {a}

{a} Horat.

Ver. 15. And if thou deal thus with me.] Here the word Thou, spoken to God, is of the feminine gender. At, for Atta, -ex magna perturbatione, saith a Rabbin. Moses was so exceedingly moved with anger and grief, these passions did so overcarry him, that he could not complere vocem, utter his whole speech; as he that groaneth or gapeth in the beginning of his sentence cannot make up his breath to speak what he intended.

Ver. 16. Gather unto me seventy men.] Here, say some, began the Sanhedrim, that is, the great council of the Jews, consisting of seventy seniors and one president. It continued till the time of Herod the Great, who took it away, and changed the form of it.

Ver. 17. And I will take of the spirit,] i.e., I will bestow the same spirit upon them as upon thee; and this shall be nothing at all to thy loss or disadvantage. Habet Hispania montem ex sale magnum, de quo quantum demas, tantum accrescit.

Shall bear the burden of the people.] Who are in nothing more a burden than in this, that with them $\alpha\epsilon\iota$ το παρον βαρυ, {a} Praesens imperium semper grave, They are ever grumbling at the present government, though never so gentle. Alleva iugum, Ease the yoke that thy father put upon us, said they to Rehoboam, forgetting the golden age they had lived in under his father Solomon. {#1Ki 12:4}

{a} Thucyd.

Ver. 18. Sanctify yourselves.] Ironice dictum; or, Sanctify; that is, Prepare yourselves for the day of slaughter, as in #Jer 12:3.

For ye have wept in the ears.] Tears, of what sort soever, have a voice in them, {#Ps 39:12} as blood hath. {#Ge 4:10}

For it was well with us in Egypt.] Such is the murmuring of those malcontents, that say, It was a merry world before there was so much preaching and teaching.

And ye shall eat.] Flesh with a vengeance; which ye shall eat on earth, but digest in hell. {a}

{a} In terris manducant quod apud inferos digerant. -August.

Ver. 20. But even a whole month.] Deus saepe dat iratus quod negat propitius. Patientia Dei quo diuturnior, eo minacior—

“ Poena venit gravior quo magis sera venit.”

God's forbearance is no quittance: fatted beasts are but fitted for the slaughter: wicked men are killed with kindnesses: "Ease slayeth the fool." {#Pr 1:32}

Ver. 21. Six hundred thousand footmen.] In the conquest of Canaan, there is no mention of horsemen. The adversaries, both Egyptians and Canaanites, had horses and chariots; not so this people of Israel. See #Ps 33:17.

Ver. 22. Or shall all the fish of the sea.] Moses forgat, belike, the fowls of the air, but God sent them such a drift of quails, as Moses dreamed not of: he fed them with meat of kings, bread of angels.

Ver. 23. And the Lord said unto Moses.] God bears with Moses here; which afterwards he did not, {#Nu 20:12} because then he showed his distrust before the people. God will not pass by the scandalous practices of his own people without a sensible check.

Is the Lord's hand shortened.] Moses thought God had made an unadvised promise, and prays him to consider, that the people were so many thousand, and that the flocks and herds would not suffice them. But God answers here, that he is never nonplussed.

Ver. 24. And set them roundabout the tabernacle.] That the fear of the Lord might be upon them, &c., {#2Ch 19:6,7} and that they might carry themselves worthy of God, who had set them in places of judicature. To the company of the Areopagites (judges in Athens) none were admitted, but wise, wealthy, and noble men, famous for good life and innocency. Nay, men whose behaviour was intolerable, after they were chosen into the college of the Areopagites, abhorring and blushing at their former disposition, changed their natures and embraced virtue. {a}

{a} δκνουντες τη φυσει χρησθαι.

Ver. 25. Took of the spirit.] {See Trapp on "Nu 11:17"}

They prophesied.] Nec praedicendo, nec praedicando; but by uttering grave and wise sentences, apothegms, or counsels, as Moses did, concerning the public affairs of Israel; by political and prudential speaking of things appertaining to government.

Ver. 26. But there remained two of the men.] Being stayed by some lawful occasion, as in #1Sa 20:26 Jer 36:5, or haply out of sense of their own insufficiency, as in #1Sa 10:22. Howsoever, hereby it appeared to all the people that these seventy seniors were set apart by God for the service.

And they prophesied in the camp.] Hermas, in his book called "Pastor" (chap. ii.), mentioneth a book of their prophesy, and citeth these words, "The Lord is near to all those that turn unto him, as it is written in Eldad and Medad, who prophesied in the wilderness to the people." But this book of Hermas is of small credit.

Ver. 27. And there ran a young man.] Three manner of persons, said Mr Latimer, can make no credible information: (1.) Adversaries and enemies; (2.) Ignorant persons and without judgment; (3.) Whisperers and blowers in men's ears, that will utter in secret more than they dare avow openly.

Ver. 28. My lord Moses, forbid.] Thus, "the spirit that is in us lusteth to envy." {#Jas 4:5} Nero omnium erat aemulus, qui quoquo mode animum vulgi moverint, Nero envied every man that excelled. Ver. 29. That all the Lord's people.] This is not meant of a sacrificially teaching others, but a political discoursing unto others.

{See Trapp on "Nu 11:25"}

Ver. 32. And they spread them.] They fed without fear, {#Jude 1:12} though foretold they should pay dear for these murdering morsels; {#Nu 11:20} that which they ate being sauced, and that which they drank being spiced, with the bitter wrath of God. {#Job 20:23}

They gathered the quails.] Which they might the more easily do, if that be true which some {a} write, that the Arabian Gulf breedeth great store of quails, which fly low usually, so as they may easily be taken up with one's hand.

{a} Drusius.

Ver. 34. They buried the people.] Who, by a hasty testament, bequeathed this new name to the place they lay buried in.

Chapter 12

Ver. 1. And Miriam and Aaron spake.] She is set first, because chief in the transgression. Her discontent might arise from this, that, being a prophetess, she was not one of those seventy that were chosen to be helps in government. {#Nu 11:24} According to her name, Miriam would be exalted: ambition rides without reins.

Because of the Ethiopian woman.] Zipporah the Midianitess, {see #Hab 3:7} to whom he had been married many years before; but they were resolved to pick a hole in Moses' coat. An ungodly man diggeth up evil, {#Pr 16:27} but for Moses to be thus used by his brother and sister, was some trial to his patience. To be derided by Egyptians, is threatened as a misery, {#Ho 7:16} but to be reproached by professors, is very grievous. Zedekiah feared more to be mocked by the Jews, than by the Chaldees. {#Jer 38:19}

For he had married an Ethiopian.] That was an old fault, if any; and should have been buried in oblivion. Luther married a wife unseasonably, when all Germany was now embroiled, and embrewed in the blood of the Bores; and when all Saxony was in heaviness for the death of their good Prince Elector Frederick. This, his best friends disliked and bewailed. As for Melancthon, Quoniam vero, inquit, ipsum Lutherum quodammodo tristiozem esse cerno, et perturbatum ob vitae mutationem, omni studio et benevolentia consolari eum conor. {a} Because I see him somewhat cast down, saith he, at the late change of his condition, I strive all I can to comfort him.

Ver. 2. Hath the Lord spoken only by Moses.] Every man would be something at home; and many care not to raise themselves upon other men's ruins. Self-love teacheth such to turn the glass, to see themselves bigger, others lesser than they are. That man hath true light that can be content to be a candle before the sun of others.

And the Lord heard it.] Without any delation of Moses. But while Moses is dumb, God speaks; while he is deaf, God hears and stirs. The more silent the patient is, the more shrill his wrong will be.

Ver. 3. Now the man Moses was very meek.] So free from passions, if Josephus may be believed, that he knew no such thing in his own soul; he only knew the names of such things, and saw them in others, rather than in himself. Of Beza it is said, Quod sine felle vixerit, that he was without gall or guile, and he lived to a great age as Moses did, and as Mr Dod did. Their meekness preserved them.

Above all the men.] And yet Moses could be angry enough when there was cause. {#Ex 11:8,16:20 Le 10:16 Nu 16:15, &c.} Yea, how blessedly blown up was he with a zeal for God, {#Ex 32:19} and what a stomach shows he in that case! Nazianzen saith of Athanasius, that he was magnes et adamas, a loadstone in his sweet gentle drawing nature, and yet an adamant in his resolute stout carriage against those that were evil. Some {a} are of opinion that this verse was added by Joshua or Esdras, as also those three verses. {#Nu 21:14,15,27}

{a} Weems.

Ver. 4. And the Lord spake suddenly.] God takes his part ever that fights not for himself. Christ that said, "I seek not mine own glory," adds, "But there is one that seeks it, and judgeth." Here he appears as "a swift witness," {#Mal 3:5, &c.} a sharp revenger of his servant's injuries. The rule is, Iniuria illata legato redundat in legantem, Wrong done to a messenger reflects on him that sent him.

Ver. 5. Out of the cloud.] As from the throne of his glory.

Ver. 6. In a vision.] To those awake.

In a dream.] To those asleep: but dreams and visions do soon vanish and fly away. {#Job 20:8}

Ver. 7. My servant Moses is not so.] God had never so much magnified Moses to them, but for their envy. We cannot devise to pleasure God's servants so much as by despiting them. Quisquis volens detrahit famae meae, nolens addit mercedi meae, saith Augustine; He that willingly detracteth from mine honour, doth, though against his will, add to my reward.

Ver. 8. And the similitude.] {See Trapp on "Ex 33:20"}

Ver. 9. And he departed.] Yea, woe also to them when I depart from them; {#Ho 9:12} then all evils come in as by a sluice. The final absence of God is hell itself.

Ver. 10. Miriam became leprous.] How escaped Aaron? for the dignity of the priesthood he was spared, saith Chrysostom. {a} Rather he met God by repentance, and so disarmed his indignation, and redeemed his own sorrow.

{a} Διδ το της ιεποσυνης αξιωμα—Hom. 3, ad Coloss.

Ver. 11. And Aaron said unto Moses.] His late sin had choked him, as it were, -as David in like case felt his mouth stopped, {#Ps 51:15}— and therefore he requesteth Moses to mediate for Miriam. Our own key may be rusty sometimes, and we glad to make use of another's key, to open the cabinet of God's grace, that therehence we may take out mercy for ourselves and others.

Ver. 12. As one dead.] As "free among the dead," free of that company.

Ver. 13. And Moses cried.] Passing by all the unkindness, he prayed earnestly for her. This was a noble kind of revenge. David was much in it.

Ver. 14. Let her be shut out.] That her sorrow for her sin may be sound and soaking, deep and downright.

Ver. 15. And the people journeyed not.] But stayed for her restoration. She had once stayed for Moses, saith Jarchi, when he was cast into the river, {#Ex 2:4} therefore the people stay for her. There is a memorandum set upon this leprosy of Miriam, {#De 24:9} like as afterwards was upon Lot's wife's transformation. {#Lu 17:32}

Ver. 16. Wilderness of Paran.] At a place called Rithmah, {#Nu 33:18} and Kadeshbarnea. {#Nu 13:3,26}

Chapter 13

Ver. 1. And the Lord spake.] Yielding to the people's importunity, and winking at their infidelity; for he had before spied out the land for them, {#Eze 20:6} and searched it out, {#De 1:33} but that satisfied them not; seeing was, with them, believing. See #De 1:22.

Ver. 2. Every one a ruler amongst them.] That might be, as Uriah and Zachariah, {#Isa 8:2} faithful witnesses; for lying lips become not a prince. {#Pr 17:7}

Ver. 3. By the commandment of the Lord.] That is, by his permission; {See Trapp on "Nu 13:1"} God's command was, that they should forthwith, without any further search, go up and possess the land. {#De 1:21} Now wicked men are esteemed unjust, because they act against God's command, though according to his decree; like as believers are esteemed just, not because they obey God's decree, but his command.

Ver. 6. Caleb.] A hearty man, according to his name; as Bishop Hooper, martyr, was called hearty Hooper; and as one of our Richards was called Coeur-de-lion. It is now but two days since, from a sweet friend, {a} living at Hartford in New England, I received a loving letter, dated Sept. 12, 1659, and therein this following passage, "Old Mr John Wilson, pastor at Boston, {b} is in very good health, a hearty old good man still." A hearty good man indeed; I have for forty years almost known him to be a cordial Caleb, one who from his youth up, hath "fulfilled after God—followed him fully," and been of "another spirit" than the most are found to be. And to hear that the Lord still lengtheneth out his life, and keepeth up his young zeal with his old discretion, which was Mr Greenham's great desire to his last, as it is no small comfort unto me; so, for the good respect I do deservedly bear to that good old man, I could not but here tell my reader so. Oh how well may he, with a very little variation, take up Caleb's words to Joshua, hic fidus Achates, and say, "Forty years old was I" when many worthy zealots of old England "sent me to espy out this good land, and I brought them word again, as it was in my heart. Nevertheless my brethren that went up with me, made the heart of the people melt; but I wholly followed the Lord my God. And now behold the Lord hath kept me alive these forty and five years. And now, lo, I am well toward fourscore year old: As yet I am as strong this day as I was many years since: as my strength was then, even so is my strength now for the Lord's wars, both to go out and to come in." {#Jos 14:7,8,10,11} I add no more but, Go forth in this thy might, thou valiant man: and do thou still "worthily in Ephrata," and be "famous in Bethlehem." Serus in coelum redeas, Iohannes; come thou to thy grave in a lusty old age, {c} "like as a shock of corn cometh in his season." {#Job 5:26}

{a} That religious matron Mrs Mary Willis, of Hertford, in Connecticut. This was written Nov. 25, 1659.

{b} Mr Wilson was one of the first that went over to plant there. At his return he encouraged and drew over not a few.

{c} εν ευγηρια.

Ver. 16. And Moses called Oshea the son of Nun Jehoshua.] His name was now changed from Save us O God, to God shall save us. Under the law which brings us, as it were, into a wilderness, we may desire, wish, and pray that there were a Saviour: but under the gospel, we are sure of salvation, and that our Jehoshua hath bound himself "to fulfil all righteousness" for us.

Ver. 17. Go up into the mountain.] This was the great mountain of Seir, which encloseth Palestine on that side.

Ver. 18. See the land.] Two and two likely he sent them, and by several ways: as our Lord also did his seventy disciples.

Ver. 22. Was built seven years before Zoan.] And so was one of the ancientest cities of the world, seeing it did contend with the ancientest and chiefest city of Egypt. {#Isa 19:11} Hebron signifies an association: there lay buried those three reverend couples, Abraham and Sarah, Isaac and Rebecca, Jacob and Leah. {#Ge 23:19 35:27-29} Here David began his reign over Israel, {#2Sa 2:1} and hither came Mary to visit Elizabeth. {#Lu 1:39}

Ver. 23. And they bare it between two.] Christum utrique portamus, ut botrum Israelitae, tum illi qui adventum Christi antecesserunt, tum nos, &c. So Christ is borne between the believers of both Testaments.

Ver. 27. And this is the fruit of it.] Plutarch ^{a} tells of the Gauls, that after they had once a taste of the sweet wine of the grapes that grew in Italy, they inquired in what country such sweet wine was: and after they had understood where such grapes grew, they would never be at rest, till they had got that country. Sextus Rufus, writing of Cyprus, saith, Cyprus famosa divitiis, paupertatem populi Rom. ut occuparetur, sollicitavit, Cyprus by her wealth tempted the Romans to seize it into their hands. The pearls usually cast out with the flood, and gathered with the ebb, drew Caesar's affection for the conquest of Britain, as Suetonius ^{b} saith: God hath given us here a grape of the heavenly Canaan, to edge our desires.

^{a} In Vita Camilli.

^{b} In Vita Caesar.

Ver. 28. Nevertheless the people be strong.] Thus many amongst us wish very well to heaven, speak glorious things of it, and could gladly go to it; but there is a lion in the way: they complain, with these malcontents, of the strength of the Anakims, and the impossibility of the conquest. It is a hard thing doubtless, to watch continually against a spiritual enemy, to keep up the banks against the sea of lusts and passions; to bear daily crosses without stooping; to carry the cup of prosperity without spilling; to climb the hill of good duties without fainting; to go against the crowd without sweating; to bear the reproach of Christ without buckling, &c. But hard though it be, should we be discouraged? The sweetness of the honey makes the bears break in upon the hives, contemning the stings. The merchant refuseth no adventure for hope of gain: the hunter shrinketh at no weather for love of game: the soldier declineth no danger for desire of spoil. The sweetness of God's face, though to be seen only in the dark glass of the ceremonies, cheered up those good souls, in their hard and tedious travel to Zion. ^{#Ps 84:6, &c.}

Chapter 14

Ver. 1. And the people wept that night.] As being too light of belief: the lies of the spies they took for oracles.

Ver. 2. Would God that we had died.] Words of deep discontent, despair, and unthankfulness.

Ver. 3. Were it not better for us to return into Egypt.] How could that be better? It is our wisest way, to crush the very first insurrections of unruly passions (do not great storms rise out of little gusts?); to smother the smoke thereof, which else will fume up into the head, and gather into so thick a cloud, as we shall soon lose the sight of ourselves, and what is best to be done.

Ver. 4. Let us make a captain.] Thus they proceeded from bad to worse. Passions, like heavy bodies down steep hills, once in motion move themselves, and know no ground but the bottom. Whether this people did make them such a captain, for such a purpose, is uncertain; but howsoever their very intention of doing it, is charged upon them, as if they had done it. {#Ne 9:16,17}

Ver. 5. Before all the assembly.] What they said unto them see #De 1:29,30. See also on #Nu 16:15.

Ver. 6. Rent their clothes.] And wept, saith Sulpitius.

Ver. 9. They are bread for us,] q.d., We shall make but a breakfast of them. So that valiant Prince of Orange told his soldiers at the battle of Newport, when they had the sea on the one side, and the Spaniards on the other, that they must either eat up those Spaniards, or drink up that sea.

Ver. 10. But all the congregation bade stone them.] This is merces mundi, this is the fruit of ochlocratie, that rule of rascality, as one calls it.

Ver. 11. Ere they believe me.] Unbelief is the root of rebellion and apostasy. {#Heb 3:12}

Ver. 12. And I will make of thee a greater nation.] Here God offered Moses a private fortune, which he prudently refuseth, because God should be a loser by it. And surely, saith a divine, as God was displeas'd with Balsam for going, though he bade him go: so the Lord would not have taken it so kindly of Moses if he had taken him upon the offer he made in a time of his heat, against his people.

Ver. 13. Then the Egyptians shall hear it.] And they will soon make comedies out of the Church's tragedies.

Ver. 14. And they will tell it.] The proverb is, Oculus et fama non patiuntur iocos, A man's eye and his good name can bear no jests. And he {a} was no fool that said, Negligere quid de se quisque dicat, non solum arrogantis est, sed et dissolati, He shall pass for a proud fool that makes no matter what men say of him. God is most tender of his glory; and we must take heed how we cast any slur upon it; for we quarter arms, as it were, with God.

{a} Cicero.

Ver. 15. Kill all this people as one man.] As he can quickly do, with a turn of his hand, with a nod of his head, {#Ps 80:16} with a breath of his nostrils. {#Job 4:9} He can as soon do it, as bid it be done, "whether it be done against a nation, or against a man only." {#Job 34:29}

Ver. 17. Let the power of my Lord be great.] In multiplying pardons, {#Isa 55:8} in passing by the many and bony, or "mighty sins of" {a} this people, such sins as none else could or would pardon: "For who is a God like unto thee, that pardoneth such iniquity?" &c. {#Mic 7:18} Hebricians have observed, that in the word jidgal here used in the original text, there is a great jod, which in numbering is ten, to show, that if the people should murmur ten times more against God than they had done, yet out of tender respect to his own great name, which would otherwise be basely blasphemed, he should pardon and spare them. {Hebrew Text Note}

{a} #Am 5:12. Heb., Bony sins, fortia peccata.

Ver. 18. And by no means clearing the guilty.] This last letter in God's dreadful name ought much to be marked. God may pardon men's sins, and yet lay it on their skin, to humble themselves, and to warn others. "Thou forgavest them, though thou tookest vengeance of their inventions." {#Ps 99:8}

Ver. 19. According to the greatness of thy mercy.] God's power pleaded, {#Nu 14:17} and his mercy here are the Jachin and the Boaz whereon faith resteth.

Ver. 20. I have pardoned them,] viz., So as not utterly, and at once, to extirpate them. I will be "as a moth" unto them, and not as a devouring lion. {#Ho 5:12,14}

Ver. 21. But as truly as I live.] This is an oath, as appears by comparing herewith #Ps 95:11. To blame therefore are they that use it so often.

All the earth shall be filled.] I will make me a great name abroad; and even of those maidservants, the heathens, which thou hast spoken of, shall I be had in honour, as he said in another case. {#2Sa 6:22}

Ver. 24. Because he had another spirit.] Let us go up and possess it, saith he. {#Nu 13:30} As if it were no more than to go and see and conquer. {a} A free spirit is enkindled with that which quencheth others: as when a bowl runs downhill, every bounce quickens it, whereas if uphill, it would slug it.

And hath followed me fully.] Heb., Hath fulfilled after me. {b} A metaphor from a ship under sail, carried strongly with the wind, as fearing neither rocks nor sands.

And his seed.] Personal goodness is profitable to posterity. Who would not serve such a Lord?

{a} Veni, Vidi, Vici. I came, I saw, I conquered!

{a} Implevit post me.

Ver. 25. Now the Amalekites.] There was but a mountain between: so they were close by the Promised Land, and yet could not enter because of unbelief. Thou art not far from God's kingdom? the greater is thine unhappiness, that fallest from so high hopes.

By the way of the Red Sea.] Since you have such a mind to it, you shall have enough of it. "The backslider in heart shall be filled with his own ways." {#Pr 14:14}

Ver. 28. So will I do to you.] God took them at their words: so he may well do our desperate swearers, since the mercy they desire God to show is to damn them. This self-cursing seldom escapeth God's visible vengeance: witness those Jews of old, who cried, "His blood be on us," &c., besides many others of late that might be instanced. Mr Perkins tells of certain English soldiers in King Edward VI's time, who were cast upon the French shore by a storm, in which stress they went to prayer, that they might be delivered; but one soldier among the rest, instead of praying, cried out, Gallows take thy right, or claim thy due: when he came home he was hanged indeed. So was Sir Gervaise Ellowayes, Lieutenant of the Tower in King James' time, whose usual word at his playing at cards and dice had been, as he sorrowfully confessed at the gallows, I would I might be hanged if it be not so or so. {a}

Ver. 29. Your carcasses shall fall.] Cadaver a cadendo; πρωμα παρα το πιπτειν. Who knows whether God purpose not to wear out this generation, that hath been defiled with the superstitions of the land we live in, that we may not see the good that he will bring upon this Church!

Ver. 34. My breach of promise,] i.e., Ye shall find to your cost, what it is to charge me with breach of promise, through unbelief.

Ver. 39. Mourned greatly.] God gave them somewhat to cry for.

Ver. 40. We have sinned.] Here was confession of sin, without confusion for sin. So was that of Saul. {#1Sa 15:30}

Ver. 45. And smote them.] To be out of God's precincts, is to be out of his protection.

Chapter 15

Ver. 2. When ye be come into the land.] God, who in the midst of judgment remembereth mercy, and suffereth not his whole wrath to arise, seals up his love again to these recent revolters: and although he led them in and out, backward and forward, in that terrible wilderness, as if he had been treading a maze; yet he here gives them new directions what to do, when they, that is their children, came into the land of Canaan. Yea, he further tells them that he will smell a sweet savour of the herd, and of the flock; and is pleased to enlarge and explain some laws formerly delivered, in token of his reconciliation to them. So he renewed his favour to his relapsed spouse, now returning unto him, {#So 5:3,6:4,5, &c.} and to his disciples, that had basely forsaken him, by giving them a new commission to execute the ministerial function. {#Joh 20:21}

Ver. 4. Bring a meat offering.] As an appendix to the other sacrifices. These following laws were given likely during their so long station at Kadesh. {a}

{a} Abulens.

Ver. 5. For a drink offering.] These drink offerings of wine signified that the saints must be most ready and cheerful to offer themselves up to God in martyrdom, as a drink offering, for the testimony of their faith, and for the service and ministry of the Church, as Paul, {#Php 2:17 2Ti 4:6} and many martyrs, who went as willingly to die as to dine. One of them called it his wedding day, and invited his friends thereunto: others, filled with the Holy Ghost, so rejoiced, that they were misjudged by their adversaries to be drunk with wine, wherein is excess, as Morgan falsely objected to Mr Philpot in a conference. {a}

{a} Act. and Mon., fol. 1653.

Ver. 20. Ye shall offer up a cake.] As a homage penny, as acknowledging God the chief Lord of all; and as craving his leave to partake of his creatures.

Ver. 22. And if ye hath erred and not observed.] Not serving of God, not sacrificing, is a sin. {#Mal 3:8 Ec 9:2} Not robbing only, but the not relieving of the poor, was the rich man's ruin. {#Lu 16:21} Omission of diet breeds diseases, so doth omission of duty; and makes work for hell, or for the physician of our souls.

Ver. 24. By ignorance.] Or, Infirmitiy; incogitancy; inadvertency. For such there is a pardon, of course, ready sealed by God in Christ: else we might die in our sins, while the pardon is providing.

Ver. 30. But the soul that doeth aught presumptuously.] When the heart at any time deliberates, saith a learned divine, {a} and yet that word is not sufficient to express it; but when the heart works according to its own proper inclination, and then wilfully disobeys the Lord in any commandment, certainly then it casts God away. And this is that "great transgression." {#Ps 19:11}

The same reproacheth the Lord.] As if he wanted either wisdom to observe, or power to punish, such as take themselves to be out of the reach of his rod. See #Eze 20:27.

{a} Dr Preston, Of God's All-suff.

Ver. 31. That gathered sticks upon the Sabbath day.] This he did with a high hand, as #Nu 15:30, in contempt of God and his law. The baser sort of people in Sweden do always break the Sabbath day, saying, that it is only for gentlemen to keep that day. {a} How much better that poor Indian in New England, who, coming by, and seeing one of the English profaning of the Lord's day, by felling of a tree, said unto him, Do you not know that this is the Lord's day? Much machet man, i.e., very wicked man, what! break you God's day? {b} The best and wealthiest of the Jews, to prevent servile work on the Sabbath day, with their own hands chop the herbs, sweep the house, cleave wood, kindle the fire, &c., on the day before. {c}

Ver. 38. That they may make them fringes.] {See Trapp on "Mt 23:5"}

A ribband of blue.] This sky coloured ribbon taught them, that though their commoration was on earth, their conversation should be in heaven. {#Php 3:20}

Ver. 40. That ye may remember.] Our memories are like strainers, nets, grates, that let the pure water run away, but retain mud, trash, &c. It is with us as with those in #Ps 106:13, "they soon forgot his works," &c., and therefore we have need of all good helps.

Chapter 16

Ver. 1. The son of Izhar.] And so first cousin to Moses and Aaron; for Izhar was brother to Amram their father. {#Ex 6:18}

Sons of Reuben.] Who, being next neighbours to Korah in the camp, were the sooner corrupted by him.

Ver. 2. Princes of the assembly.] A very dangerous conspiracy: for as in a beast the body follows the head, so in that bellua multorum capitum, the multitude. Great men are the looking glasses of the country, according to which most men dress themselves: their sins do as seldom go unattended as their persons: height of place ever adds two wings to sin, example and scandal, whereby it soars higher, and flies much further.

Ver. 3. Against Moses and against Aaron.] They were against both magistracy and ministry, as our late levellers, and would have brought in anarchy, that every man might offer his own sacrifice, and do that which is good in his own eyes: Regnum Cyclopicum.

Ver. 4. He fell upon his face.] As a suppliant to them, not to proceed in their rebellion; or rather to God, not to proceed against them for their sin.

Ver. 5. And he spake unto Korah.] By the instinct of the Spirit, who had given into his heart a present answer to his prayer, and furnished him with this answer.

Ver. 7. Ye take too much upon you.] He retorts that upon them, that they had falsely charged upon him and Aaron. So doth Elias upon Ahab. {#1Ki 18:17,18} So do we worthily upon Popery, the charge of novelty. When a Papist tauntingly demanded of a Protestant, Where was your religion before Luther? he was answered, In the Bible, where yours never was. Scaliger truly and trimly told the Jesuits, Nos non sumus novatores, sed vos estis veteratores, We are not novellers, but you old cheaters.

Ver. 8. Ye sons of Levi.] He took these to task apart; as hoping, haply, to withdraw them from their purpose, and to hide pride from them, {#Job 33:17} but they proved uncounsellable, incorrigible.

Ver. 9. Seemeth it but a small thing.] While these ambitious Levites would be looking up to the priests, Moses sends down their eyes to the people. The way not to repine at those above us, is to look at those below us.

Ver. 10. And seek ye the priesthood also.] Ambition is restless and unsatisfiable; for, like the crocodile, it grows as long as it lives.

Ver. 11. And what is Aaron?] q.d., Is it not God whom ye wound through Aaron's sides? "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" {#Ac 9:4}

Ver 12. We will not come up.] Sturdy rebels, ripe for destruction. See #Pr 29:1. {See Trapp on "Pr 29:1"} One perhaps had knocked off, and is therefore no more mentioned. Satius est recurrere, quam male currere, as that emperor said, Better stop or step back, than run on to utter ruin.

Ver. 13. That floweth with milk and honey.] So they falsely and maliciously speak of the land of Egypt, in derision of the land of Canaan, whereunto that praise properly belonged. Those that were born in hell know no other heaven.

Altogether a prince over us.] So their quarrel was against Moses' principality, though they pretended the priesthood only at first. If the ministry once be taken away, let the magistrate see to himself; he is next.

Ver. 14. We will not come up,] sc., To the place of judgment. So they add rebellion to sin, and justify their treasonful practices; as did Ravalliac, Fawks, Saunders, others.

Ver. 15. And Moses was very wroth.] Or, Very sore grieved. He might have said, as one once did, Felix essem si non imperitasset, Happy had I been if I had never been in place of authority. Egypt is said by Seneca to have been loquax et ingeniosa in contumeliam praefectorum provincia, in qua qui vitaverit culpam non effugit infamiam, A province apt to find fault with, and to speak hardly of their rulers, though never so innocent. These rebels had haply learned those Egyptian manners, by living so long amongst them.

I have not taken one ass from them.] Moses was not of them that follow the administration of justice as a trade only, with an unquenchable and unconscionable desire of gain. This is but robbery with authority, and justifies the common resemblance of the courts of justice to the bush, where to while the sheep flees for defence in weather, he is sure to lose part of his fleece.

Ver. 16. Thy company.] Or, Thy congregation, thy faction, or Church malignant, as #Ps 26:5 Ac 19:32,40.

Ver. 17. And take every man his censer.] Which they had ready provided, when first they combined to thrust themselves into the priests' office.

Ver. 18. And stood in the door.] Such an impudency had sin oaded in their faces, that they stood stouting it out before the Lord, and made open profession of their wickedness: there was no need to dig to find it out, {#Jer 2:34} for they set it, as it were, upon the cliff of the rock. {#Eze 24:7}

Ver. 19. All the congregation.] Not his own company only: for the whole multitude was too ready to favour his attempt, as he persuaded them God also would, his design being to introduce an equal popularity.

And the glory of the Lord.] Shining in the cloud over the sanctuary as at other times in like cases. {#Nu 16:42 Nu 14:10 Ex 40:34}

Ver. 21. Separate yourselves.] Good men are taken away from the evil to come. When God pulls away the pillars, what will become of the building? Lot was no sooner taken out of Sodom, but Sodom was taken out of the world.

Ver. 22. The God of the spirits.] The Former and Father of spirits, {#Zec 12:1 Heb 12:9} "that giveth to all ζωνν και πνοην, life and breath," {#Ac 17:25} in whose hand is the soul of all living, and the spirit of all flesh. {#Job 12:10}

Ver. 24. Get you up from about.] "Save yourselves from this untoward generation"; {#Ac 2:40} force yourselves from them, stave them off, as the word signifies (στελλεσθαι παραγγελλομεν, #2Th 3:6), and we charge you, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, to do so. Ut scias quam aegre divellimur; saith one.

Ver. 26. Lest ye be consumed.] See #Nu 16:24, {See Trapp on "Re 18:4"} Hamath fares the worse for lying so near Damascus. {#Zec 9:2} St John sprang out of the bath, where he found Cerinthus the heretic.

Ver. 27. Came out and stood.] As out facing Moses, and scorning the judgment threatened. Deus quem destruit dementat. Hardened sinners make no more of God's dreadful threatenings, than behemoth doth of iron weapons, which he esteemeth as straws.

Ver. 28. Hereby ye shall know.] Thus he engageth the truth and honour of his office upon a miracle. But now he that expects a miracle, is himself a miracle, saith Augustine. Let Papists brag of their lying wonders. {#2Th 2:9} We dislike not altogether that observation of Gretser the Jesuit, Tam sterilis et deserta est Lutherana et Calviniana secta, ut diabolus ne dignetur quidem per eam aliquid fallacium et umbratilium prodigiorum aggredi, saltem frequenter et palam. So dull and dry is the Lutheran and Calvinian sect, that the devil deigns not to work any, or not many miracles, among them, as he doth among the Catholics.

Ver. 29. The common death of all men.] Ne quisquam sua morte defunctus est, said Suetonius of Caesar's murderers. So may we say of our gun powder plotters; Your sin will find you out.

Ver. 30. Quick unto the pit.] Not into hell, as the Papists conclude from this text; for how could their houses and goods go down to hell? {#Nu 16:32} and who would not hope that some of them were innocent, some penitent? The punishment they suffered in being buried alive was very miserable; and so accounted by the heathens, who served their vestal virgins in this sort that had been deflowered.

Ver. 31. As he had made an end of speaking.] Dictum factum; so it is still. {#Joh 20:23} Vengeance is every whit as ready in God's hands, as in his ministers' mouths. {#2Co 10:6}

Ver. 32. And the earth opened her mouth and swallowed them up.] So it did a great part of Antioch, by a horrible earthquake, anno 527, for their horrible heresies and blasphemies there broached by the bishops, and defended by the people. So lately Pleurs in Italy.

Ver. 33. And they perished from among.] So the gun powder plotters here; and before them the northern rebels. That rebellion, saith one, like the bubbles, which children blow up into the air, was no sooner blown up than blown out, and fell into the eyes of those who with blasts of ambition and superstition held it up.

Ver. 34. Lest the earth swallow us up also.] Let the destruction of others be a terror to us, that we may wash our feet in the blood of the wicked. {#Ps 52:6} But he that is swallowed up with earth, as Korah, his ears stopped, his heart stuffed with earth, shall have earth enough when he dies, but of heaven little enough.

Ver. 35. And there came out a fire.] By fire they sinned, and by a fire they suffer:—

“ Per quod quis peccat, per idem punitur ipse.”

Ver. 37. For they are hallowed.] And therefore may not be turned to any other use.

Ver. 38. These sinners against their own souls.] So are all such as spend the span of this transitory life, after the ways of their own hearts, and thereby perish for ever. Sin is the soul's poison; yet how heartily do men feed upon it, as Tartars do upon dead horses; as the maid in Pliny did upon spiders; as the Turkish galley slaves do upon opium, an ounce whereof they will eat at once as if it were bread!

Ver. 40. To be a memorial.] God cannot abide to be forgotten; and they are worthily made examples that will not take them; as that second captain in #2Ki 1:11,12

Ver. 41. But on the morrow.] That after conviction they should so soon again rebel, and run away with the bit in their mouths, was prodigious contumacy.

Ver. 42. And behold the cloud.] Deus εκ μηχανης. God, as out of an engine, appears for his distressed servants.

Ver. 46. For there is wrath.] Moses is quick sighted, and spies it at first setting out. By how much more faithful and familiar men are with God, so much earlier do they discern his wrath.

Ver. 47. The plague.] Which ran as a fire in a grain field.

Ver. 48. And he stood between.] A clear type of Christ.

Chapter 17

Ver. 2. Take of every one of them a rod.] Or, Staff; the ensign of their honour, {#Nu 21:18} and of their civil authority; {#Ps 110:2 Jer 48:16,17} a sufficient witness against them, that the priesthood belonged not to them. Uzziah smarted for invading it. George, prince of Anhalt, was a singular example, qui primus et unus ex omni Principum Germanorum numero, subditos suos ipse et viva voce et scriptis editis de via salutis erudiret, who was the first, and the only German prince, that both by preaching and writing taught his subjects. {a}

{a} Melch. Adam.

Ver. 5. And I will make to cease.] But then he must do more than work miracles. For such is the habitual hardness of men's hearts, as neither ministry, nor misery, nor miracle, nor mercy, can possibly mollify. Nothing can do it, but an extraordinary touch from the hand of Heaven.

Ver. 8. And bloomed blossoms.] (1.) For a testimony of Aaron's calling from God, to the honour of the priesthood; (2) For a type of Christ, the branch growing out of the stem of Jesse; {#Isa 11:1} (3) For a figure of the ministry of the gospel, which although to profane persons it seem a dry, barren, and vanishing voice, yet it bloometh and flourisheth in the hearts of God's elect; -and surely fruitfulness is the best argument of our election, and that we are called of God, for not only all the plants of his setting, but the very boughs cut off from the body of them will flourish; (4.) For a lively representation of a glorious resurrection. At the French massacre, Aug. 25, 1572, in the churchyard of St Innocent at Paris, a certain bush suddenly bloomed about the middle time of that bloody day, at an unusual time of the year. {a} The Papists boasted, that God by that miracle showed his good liking of that massacre they had made. But the Protestants took it for a confirmation of their religion, and a testimony of their innocence.

{a} Epitome Hist. Gallicae, p. 149.

Ver. 10. And thou shalt quite take away their murmurinus.] Which yet would hardly be done. See on #Nu 17:5. Many men's lips, like rusty hinges, for want of the oil of grace and gladness, move not without murmuring and complaining.

Ver. 13. Whosoever cometh anything near.] Let them keep further off then who have no sufficient warrant. Why should they meddle with that belongs not to them? Why should they touch the tabernacle? as the Greek here hath it. The fingers of many triflers itch at this day, to be tampering with that tremendous function, the ministry: which if they forbear to touch, it is but as once Mercury is fain to spare Jupiter's thunderbolts, which he durst not steal, lest they should roar too loud, or at least burn his fingers.

Chapter 18

Ver. 1. Shall bear the iniquity,] i.e., The punishment of whatsoever iniquity is done in the sanctuary. Sin and punishment come under one name, as being tied together with chains of adamant: where the one dines, the other will sup; where the one is in the saddle, the other will be upon the crupper. Nemo crimen gerit in pectore qui non idem Nemesin in tergo. Sin doth as naturally draw and suck judgments to it, as the loadstone doth iron, or turpentine fire.

The iniquity of your priesthood.] Priests then are not angels, free from sin, as that Popish expositures dreamed, and drew from #Ex 30:31,32. Cajetan confesseth of the Popish prelates, that whereas by their places they should have been the salt of the earth, they had lost their savour, and were good for little else but looking after the rites and revenues of the Church. {a} John Huss complains of the priests of his age, that Multa quae illi ordinem dicunt, omnium rerum in Christianismo confusionem pariunt, {b} Many things that they call order, bring all into confusion. Non arbitror inter sacerdotes multos esse qui salvi fiant, I believe few of our priests will be saved, saith Chrysostom, {c} of those of his time. And "from the prophets of Jerusalem is profaneness gone forth into all the land"; saith Jeremiah. {#Jer 23:15}

{b} Bellum Hussiticum, p. 9.

{c} Hom., 3. in Act.

Ver. 3. And you also die.] For your 'other men's sins' which you have not prevented or prohibited. Qui non, cum potest, prohibet, iubet.

Ver. 7. As a service of gift.] So our Saviour counts and calls his work a gift; "I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do." {#Joh 17:4} Any employment for, and about God, is a special favour, a high honour.

Ver. 9. Which they shall render unto me.] As a recompense for some trespass against me. {#Nu 5:8 Le 6:6}

Ver. 10. In the most holy place,] i.e., In the priest s' court.

Ver. 12. All the best of the oil.] Heb., The fat. God can afford the ministers the best of the best, though the most now-a-days think the worst too good for them.

Which they shall offer.] Not appointing them how much, but leaving that to the people's liberality. And what that was, let Philo {a} the Jew speak, who well knew the customs of his own nation, and tells us, that all things due to the priests were paid very freely, and most cheerfully. At haec gens debitam pecuniam lubens gaudensque depromit, saith he; This people willingly, and with rejoicing, draw out their money for the priests, not as if they gave, but received rather, adding happy forebodings and gratulations.

{a} Philo, De Sacerdot. Honor.

Ver. 13. And whatsoever is first ripe.] See what an honourable maintenance, and liberal entertainment God himself assigneth to the Levitical priesthood. And shall the ministers of the gospel be held to hard allowance? {#Ga 6:6 1Co 9:7,9} Ad tenuitatem beneficiorum necessario sequitur ignorantia sacerdotum. {a}

{a} Panormit.

Ver. 14. Every thing devoted.] Unless devoted to some particular use. {#Le 27:28,29}

Ver. 18. And the flesh of them shall be thine.] And besides these here touched, they had other revenues of no small value, as their cities, suburbs, lands, {#Nu 35} that they might be encouraged in the law of the Lord. {#2Ch 31:9}

Ver. 19. It is a covenant of salt.] So #2Ch 13:5; that is, Inviolable, incorruptible; non computrescens vetustate, saith Flaccius. Pierius also tells us, that amity and friendship was symbolised by salt—Corpora enim solidiora facit, et diutissime conservat -for its consolidating and conserving property.

Ver. 21. For their service which they serve.] No man did so much as shut the doors of God's sanctuary, or kindle a fire on his altar for nought. {#Mal 1:10}

Ver. 22. Neither must the children.] But only God's kinsmen, the priests and Levites, as they are called, {#Le 10:3} according to some translations, or his nigh ones. So in the New Testament, others are called God's children, God's servants, God's people: ministers only are called God's men. {#1Ti 6:11 2Ti 3:17}

Ver. 31. For it is your reward.] Or, wages, which you dearly earn, and may justly call for. So #Lu 10:7.

Chapter 19

Ver. 2. This is the ordinance of the law, which.] An ordinance, a law, a commanded law: all this to show the peremptoriness of the Lord in this point, that unless we lay hold upon the blood of Christ, prefigured by this red heifer, we cannot escape the damnation of hell.

That they bring thee.] At a common charge, because for a common good. All the congregation must get them a bloody Saviour.

A red heifer.] Typing out Christum cruentatum, Christ covered with his own blood: {see #Isa 63:1,2} white and ruddy, as the Church says of him: {#So 5:10} Tam recens mihi Christus crucifixus, ac si iam fudisset sanguinem. {a} The pressure of his sufferings made him sweat great drops, or rather clods of blood, in a cold night, besides what afterwards issued from his many wounds in his head and body.

Never came yoke.] Christ never bore the yoke either of sin or servitude. He laid down his life of himself. {#Joh 10:17,18} See #Heb 9:13,14. He was not subject to any command of man. {#Lu 2:44 Joh 2:4}

{a} Luther.

Ver. 3. To Eleazar the priest.] To assure him of the succession of the priesthood. Besides, it was fitter he should be defiled than his father. {#Nu 19:7} Hereby also might haply be foretold, that the priests should kill Christ; but they were but our workmen, we should "look upon him whom we have pierced, and mourn over him," {#Zec 12:10} that the fountain opened for sin, and for separation from uncleanness, {see #Nu 19:9} may be free to us, the king's bath of Christ's blood. {#Zec 13:1}

Without the camp.] Signifying, that Christ should be taken from all earthly comforts, and crucified "without the gate." {#Heb 13:12}

Before his face.] So was Christ before God's face; yea, his Father laid upon him with his own hand, and let loose all the powers of darkness at him.

Ver. 4. Shall take of the blood with his finger.] Not with his whole hand. Christ's blood must be touched or applied with great discretion and reverence; our practice also must be dyed in Christ's blood.

Ver. 5. Shall he burn.] To set forth Christ's ardent love and bitter sufferings. Love itself is a passion, and delights to express itself by suffering for the party beloved.

Ver. 6. Cedar wood, and hyssop, and scarlet.] Hereby was signified, that Christ, howsoever in respect of our sins he was burnt up with the fire of his Father's wrath; yet by the everlasting Spirit, whereby he offered up himself without spot to God, and by the gifts and graces of it, he was a full sacrifice of a sweet smelling savour to God to purge offences. {#Heb 9:14 Ps 51:9 Eph 5:2}

Ver. 7. The priest shall wash his clothes.] To show the contagion and pollution of sin, {#2Co 7:1} and imperfection of the legal priesthood.

Unclean until the evening.] So #Nu 19:8,10. We had need take time till the evening, to humble our souls, and bewail our unworthiness of the blood of Christ.

Ver. 8. {See Trapp on "Nu 19:7"}

Ver. 9. And a man that is clean.] Hereby is meant the Gentile purified by faith, as one well observeth. The gathering of the ashes, is the applying of the merits of Christ, and laying hold of the mystery of his kingdom. The laying up of the ashes imports that the Christian accounts Christ's merits his chief treasure. The clean place is the clean heart. Without the camp, notes, that the Gentiles were strangers from the commonwealth of Israel, &c. These ashes kept for the congregation, show the fulness of Christ's merits for all his people. When he saith, it is to make a water of separation, it notes that our sins separate betwixt us and our God. But "now in Christ Jesus, we who sometimes were far off, are made nigh by his blood."

{#Eph 2:13}

Ver. 10. Shall wash his clothes.] To note, that even the nearer a Christian comes to the merits of Christ, the more he is affected with the sense of his own uncleanness; yea, he retains it till even, that is, till death.

Ver. 11. He that toucheth.] To teach them to observe God's curse in death, and to avoid the society of sinful men.

Ver. 16. Shall be unclean seven days.] {See Trapp on "Le 11:31"}

Ver. 17. And running water.] Signifying the ashes of Christ's merit, and the water of his Spirit. See #1Co 6:11 Joh 7:38,39.

Ver. 18. Shall take hyssop.] No benefit by Christ, without mortification of sin.

Chapter 20

Ver. 1. In the first month.] To wit, of their fortieth year, after they came out of Egypt. For from this chapter to the end of Deuteronomy, are described the passages of the last year only, of their journeying in the wilderness; little being recorded of the thirty-eight years, since the spies' report.

And Miriam died there.] A good woman, and of great use to the people in their travels. {#Mic 6:4} But once she raised a great storm against her brother's wife, {#Nu 12:1} about precedency probably: as did likewise in this kingdom Anne Starthope, Duchess of Somerset, against Katherine Parr, Queen Dowager, wife to her husband's brother, the Lord Admiral, in the days of King Edward VI. This Anne died A.D. 1587, being ninety-nine years of age. {a} Miriam could be no less likely than 130, taking her to be same that was set to watch what would become of Moses, when he was laid out in an ark of bulrushes. {#Ex 2:4}

{a} Life of Edw. VI, p. 81. Camd., Elis., fol. 356.

Ver. 3. And the people chode.] Wanting both water and patience, they broke the peace with their superiors. {See Trapp on "Nu 14:15"}

Ver. 4. And why have ye brought up.] See how this new generation doth patrissare This is but the old coccysmus of those ancient malcontents; {#Ex 17:2} so much the worse in these, because they made no better use of God's dealing with their fathers. {#Da 5:22}

Ver. 5. Neither is there any water to drink.] Thirst, a most eager appetite, enrageth their affections, and makes them thus hot with Moses.

Ver. 8. Take the rod.] God puts off their rebellion, and satisfies their thirst by a miracle.

Speak unto the rock.] He is not bidden now to smite it; as once in #Ex 17:6, which because he did unbidden, God was deeply displeased, as some are of opinion.

Ver. 9. And Moses took the rod.] The same rod that once smote the river, to destroy the Egyptians. The same word is a savour of life to believers, and of death to unbelievers. {#2Co 2:16}

Ver. 10. Hear now, ye rebels.] They could hardly hear, for the belly hath no ears, and their tongues scarce knew to utter any language but that of Samson, "Give me water, or I die." {#Jud 15:18} But why did Moses speak to them, when he should have spoken to the rock only? {#Nu 20:8} This was ill; but worse to speak so unadvisedly. He struck at the rock, and as ready almost to split against it, he makes two arguments against it. (1.) Hear now, ye rebels, q.d., Will the Lord ever give water to such rebels? (2.) Shall we give you water out of the rock? Will that ever be done To fetch fire out of a flinty rock is far more likely; but to distil water out of it, how can that be done? Lo, Moses is staggered, and now at a stand. Adeo nihil est in nobis magnum, quod non queat minui: {a} the strongest faith much assailed, may flag and hang the wing. The best carry their treasure but in earthen vessels, which, dashing against the rock of unbelief, miseras rimas ducunt, &c., leak pitifully.

{a} Bucolch.

Ver. 11. He smote the rock twice.] In a great heat and pang of passion.

“ *Qui non moderabitur irae,
Infectum velit esse dolor quod suaserit, et mens.* ”—Horat.

Sometimes both grace and wit are asleep in the holiest and wariest breasts. The best may be miscarried by their passions to their cost.

Ira comes of Ire, say grammarians: because an angry man goes out of himself, off from his reason; and when he is pacified, he is said redire ad se, to come again to himself.

And the water came out abundantly.] This cleaving of the hard rock was a work of omnipotency. {#Ps 78:15} The works of God are in contrariis medias. {a} This rock was Christ, {#1Co 10:4} fitly compared to a rock; (1.) For despicable appearance; {#Isa 53:2,3} (2.) For exaltation and advancement; (3.) For firmness and stability; {#Mt 16:18} (4.) For scandal and offence to the wicked; {#Ro 9:33} (5.) For weight and danger. {#Mt 21:44}

And their beasts also.] The wicked, in like sort, coming to the Lord's supper, do receive there panem Domini, not panem Dominum.

{a} Luther.

Ver. 12. Because ye believed me not.] Ye could not conceive, and were not very willing, that I should show such favour to so undeserving a people: so measuring my thoughts by your thoughts, and my ways by your ways; {#Isa 55:8} casting me into a dishonourable mould, as it were; and this publicly, before all the people.

Therefore ye shall not bring.] So God was unto them "a God that forgiveth, and taketh vengeance of their practices," as the psalmist saith. {#Ps 99:8} Repentance may come too late in regard of temporal chastisement, as here it did. {#De 3:24-26}

Ver. 13. And he was sanctified in them.] By overcoming their evil with good; striking the rock for them, when he might justly have stricken them with utter destruction. Man's badness interrupteth not the course of God's goodness; "his unbelief maketh not the faith of God without effect." {#Ro 3:3}

Ver. 14. Thus saith thy brother.] "A brother is born for adversity"; {#Pr 17:17} and good blood will not belie itself. But "a brother offended is harder to be won than a strong city; and their contentions are like the bars of a castle." {#Pr 18:19}

Ver. 16. Sent an angel.] This was Christ; or, as some would have it, Moses; like as Phineas is thought to be that angel at Bochim. {#Jud 2:1}

Ver. 17. We will not pass.] So should a Christian bespeak the world. Let us pass through thy country; we will neither touch nor taste of thy cares, but go by the king's highway, that good old way that God hath scored out unto us, until we arrive at the key of Canaan, at the kingdom of heaven.

Ver. 18. Thou shalt not pass.] As fearing what so great an army once got in might do; they are not usually so easily removed. It was therefore great injustice in Pope Julius, to excommunicate and depose John, king of Navarre, as a heretic, and public enemy to the see apostolic, because being himself a peer of the realm of France, and having a great part of his patrimony in that country, he would not suffer the Spaniard, the Pope's champion, to lead an army through his country against the French, his liege lord, and deliver to him three of the strongest castles he had in his kingdom. {a}

{a} Guicciard., lib. ii.

Ver. 24. Ye rebelled.] In that ye smote the rock, and smote it twice: he spoke bitterly also to the people, calling them rebels, and slighting them. This is called rebellion here. Every man's heel hath some iniquity, as dirt, cleaving to it: and the greatest lamps have needed snuffers.

Chapter 21

Ver. 1. And took some of them prisoners.] A sore affliction, worse than any of those outward crosses that Job suffered, whose captivity therefore, as that which comprehended all the rest, God is said to have turned, {#Job 42:10} Barbarossa, the Turkish general, returned from Tunis towards Constantinople with such a multitude of poor Christian captives, shut up so close under hatches among the excrements of nature, that all the way as he went, almost every hour, some of them were cast dead overboard. {a} The late Duke of Alva, governor of Flanders, roasted some of his prisoners to death, starved others, and that even after quarter; saying, though he promised to give them their lives, he did not promise to find them meat. {b}

{a} Turk. Hist., fol. 750.

{b} Grimst., Hist. of Netherl.

Ver. 2. And Israel vowed a vow.] This is the way to prevail with God, as Jacob found it, {#Ge 28:20} who is therefore called, the father of vows. Concerning VOWS, {See Trapp on "Ge 28:20".}

Ver. 3. Delivered up the Canaanites.] This King Arad, heartened with his former success, might—as Guicciardini saith of Charles VIII of France, in his expedition against Naples—come into the field like thunder and lightning, but go out like a snuff; more than a man at first, less than a woman at last.

Ver. 4. Discouraged because of the way.] So are many in their voyage towards heaven, which is an afflicted way, τεθλιμμενη η οδος, {#Mt 7:14} strawed with crosses. {#Ac 14:22} Indeed, if men could go to heaven in a feather bed, or pass e coeno in coelum, a deliciis ad delicias, feed on manchet, tread on roses, fly to heaven with pleasant wings, none should be so forward as they. But to go "through fire and through water," {#Ps 66:12} to "run with patience the race that is set before them," {#Heb 12:1} and "through many tribulations to enter into heaven," this they like not. Theotimus in Ambrose, would rather lose his sight than his sin: Vale lumen amicum, said he, when forbidden wine, as naught for his eyes. Beetles love dunghills better than ointments, and swine love mud better than a garden; so do swinish epicures prefer earth to heaven, &c.

Ver. 5. This light bread.] {See Trapp on "Nu 11:6"}

Ver. 6. Fiery serpents.] Heb., Seraphim; from their burning heat, whereby these ungrateful Israelites, that causelessly cried out of thirst, had somewhat given them to cry for. Their tongues, so full of deadly poison, and set on fire from hell, are now parched and scorched with venomous heat and torments, the likest hell of any other. These serpents are here called seraphims: that old serpent the devil can transform himself into an angel of light.

Ver. 7. Pray unto the Lord.] Prayer is the best lever at a dead lift.

Make thee a fiery serpent, / i.e., The similitude of such a one; an unlikely means to effect such a cure. Yea, some write, that it is deadly for those that are stung with a serpent to look upon brass. Certain it is, that this cure was not wrought by anything in the nature of the brazen serpent, but by the institution and ordination of God, to be also a type of Christ; a noble and notable figure of Christ lifted up on the cross, {#Joh 3:14} or rather in his ordinances. {#Ga 3:1} They that looked upon their sores, and not upon the sign, died for it; as those that looked on the sign, though but with one eye, though with but a squint eye, or but with half an eye, they were healed presently. So they that fix their eyes upon their sins only, and not upon their Saviour, despair and die; but those that look to Christ, being faithful in weakness, though weak in faith, are sure to be saved. It is but look up and live. Only look up, as they did that were wounded, weepingly, wishfully, pitifully, cravingly. See and sigh, look upon him whom you have pierced; let your sins be as so many Hazael's to you, and your hearts as so many Hadadrimmons. {#Zec 12:10,11}

Ver. 14. In the book of the wars of the Lord.] This book here cited by Moses, is now either lost, or at least latent. It was not any part of the Canon, -for God hath provided, that not one hair of that sacred head is diminished, -but as the chronicles of England, or some famous poem.

Ver. 16. And I will give them water.] Now that they murmured not, they might have anything. {#Ps 34:10} Only we must be content to wait God's time (is it fit to send for the prince by a post?), or to want that particular mercy, if God see it meet, being content that God be glorified, though we be not gratified. Surely if God saw us thus studying his share more than our own, we might have what we would, and God even think himself beholden to us, as one phraseth it.

Ver. 17. Then Israel sang this song.] A sign of that Christian joy. {#Isa 12:3,4}

Ver. 18. The princes digged the well.] Called therehence Beerelim, i.e., the well of the mighty ones. {#Isa 15:8} Nunquam vilior erat annona Romae, quam cum terram colerent iidem qui remp. regerent: quasi gauderet terra laureato vomere scilicet, et aratore triumphali. {a}

With their staves.] Those ensigns of their honour they made to be instruments of the common good. See the Epist. Dedicat. set before my notes upon John.

{a} Plin.

Ver. 22. Let me pass.] {See Trapp on "Nu 20:17"}

Ver. 23. And Sihon would not.] He durst not trust them: men muse as they use: God had also hardened his heart, that he might come forth to fetch his own destruction. {#De 2:30} Judgment need not go to find wicked men out; they run to meet their bane.

Ver. 27. Wherefore they that speak in proverbs.] Or, Bywords; by way of derision, as #De 28:17 Hab 2:5. Ballad makers, petty poets, that penned popular songs, such as this was.

Ver. 30. We have shot at them.] Great swelling words of vanity, uttered by the conquering Amorites. How much better our Henry V, who, after his victory at Agincourt, gave strait order, that no ballad or song should be made or sung, more than of thanksgiving to God for his happy victory; and that nothing that might tend to ostentation or boasting of the valiant, or cowardly act of any, should be set forth.

Chapter 22

Ver. 1. In the plains of Moab.] Once of Moab, then of the Amorites, now of the Israelites. Lands and lordships often change masters; Adeo nihil certi est in rebus humanis, &c. In the greatness of the Turkish empire is at this day swallowed up the name and empire of the Saracens, the most glorious empire of the Greeks, the renowned kingdoms of Macedonia, Peloponnesus, Epirus, Bulgaria, Servia, Bosnia, Armenia, Cyprus, Syria, Egypt, Judea, Tunis, Algiers, Media, Mesopotamia, with a great part of Hungary, as also of the Persian kingdom, and, besides all those famous Churches spoken of in Scripture, so much in Christendom, as far exceedeth that which is thereof at this day left; yet, no doubt, time shall triumph over this so great a monarchy, when it shall but then live by fame as others now do. {a} It laboureth with nothing more already than with the weightiness of itself.

{a} Turk. Hist., Preface.

Ver. 3. And Moab was distressed.] Or, Was irked, fretted, vexed. And yet Moab was allied to Israel, eased by them of a troublesome encroaching neighbour Sihon, and assured by them, that they would not meddle or molest them. But being of a different religion, they were carried with satanical malice against God's people, and sought their ruin. This is the guise of graceless and absurd men, acted and agitated by the devil.

Ver. 4. Unto the elders of Midian.] Their neighbours and confederates. These are called the dukes of Sihon, as having been subdued by his tyranny, whereof Israel had now freed them, and meant them no hurt. {#Nu 31:8 Jos 13:21}

And Balak the son of Zippor.] A politic and potent prince, {#Mic 6:5} not more valiant than vigilant, ingeniose nequam, wittily wicked.

Ver. 5. Balaam, the son of Beor.] The devil's spelman, as one calls him, a soothsayer, or sorcerer, called a prophet, {#2Pe 2:16} as false prophets are called diviners {#Jer 27:9}

Ver. 6. Peradventure I shall prevail.] Hence he is said to have warred against Israel. {#Jos 24:9} He did not, because he durst not. Sed fieri dicitur, quod tentatur, aut intenditur; saith Ribera on #Am 9:5.

Ver. 7. With the rewards of divination.] Which Jude calls the wages of wickedness. {#Jude 1:11 2Pe 2:15} The Athenians complained, that Philip by his gold had corrupted the oracle of Apollo, which now did φιλιππιζειν.

Ver. 8. As the Lord shall speak unto me.] Good words and wishes may be found in hell's mouth; as wholesome sugar may be found in a poisoned cane, and a stone of great virtue in the head of a toad. The French have a berry which they name Uve de spine, the grape of a thorn.

Ver. 9. And God came to Balaam.] So he came to Abimelech, to Laban, &c. He never credited his word to these, as he did to the holy prophets, of whom it is said, "The word of the Lord came to them."

Ver. 13. For the Lord refuseth.] Like a mercenary, and one that had a month's mind to the money, he hides from them that part of the answer that might have kept them off from coming again to him, viz., Thou shalt not curse the people, for they are blessed, Auri sacra fames, &c.

Ver. 15. And Balak sent yet again.] So unwearable are wicked men in pursuing and practising their evil designs. This is check to our dulness for the good of our souls. Oh, how soon said and sated are we! Felix trembles, and yet at the same instant covets and expects a bribe from Paul, who had some occasion to expect repentance of Felix.

Ver. 17. For I will promote thee.] Thus Satan tempted our Saviour, {#Mt 4:8,9} and the Pope Luther, offering him a Cardinalship to hold his tongue, and proposing unto him the example of Aeneas Sylvius, who casting away his opinions, became Pope; and of Bessarion of Nice, who of a poor Calover of Trebizond, became a great renowned Cardinal, and wanted not much of being Pope. {a} But Luther answered the messenger, Contemptus est a me Romanus et favor et furor, I care not for the Pope's proffers of any preferment. And when one counselled to try him with money, another more wise answered, Hem, Germana illa bestia non curat aurum, That Dutch beast cares not for gold. But Balaam was not a man of Luther's make.

{a} Hist. of Coun. of Trent.

Ver. 18. I cannot go beyond.] Intus Nero, foris Cato; loquitur hic ut Piso, vivit ut Gallonius: Audi, nemo melius; specta, nemo peius. A preacher, as Quintilian saith of an orator, should be Vir bonus dicendi peritus, A well-spoken and well-deeded person.

Ver. 19. Tarry also now this night, &c.] Very loath he was to forego so fat a morsel. His mouth even watered, his fingers itched to be dealing with Balak. He therefore detains the messengers, and will try again what may be done for them.

Ver. 20. Rise up and go.] God answers him according to the idols of his heart; bids him go, since he was set upon it, but at his utmost peril; like as Solomon bids the young man "walk in the ways of his own heart"; {#Ec 11:9} but then follows that stinging but.

Ver. 21. And saddled his ass.] Which never runs fast enough after preferment, till horse and man and all to the devil.

Ver. 22. And God's anger.] Deus saepe dat iratus quod negat propitius.

And his two servants were with him.] This false prophet rides not without two men. God's Levite had one man. {#Jud 19:11} Oh let not ministers of the gospel be slaves to others, servants to themselves!

Ver. 23. And the ass saw the angel.] Which Balaam saw not; his eyes were put out with the dust of covetousness, or dazzled at least with the glittering of the promised promotions.

Ver. 24. But the angel] If an angel stand in the way of a sorcerer's sin, how much more ready are all those heavenly spirits to stop the miscarriages of God's dear children! Surely as our good endeavours are oft hindered by Satan, so are our evil by good angels; else were not our protection equal to our danger, and we could neither stand nor rise.

Ver. 27. She fell down under Balaam.] And so "condemned" her master's "madness." {#2Pe 2:16} Polybius in his history saith, Whereas man is held the wisest of all sublunary creatures, to me he seemeth the most foolish of all. For whereas other creatures, when they have once smarted, will come no more there, -as the fox returns not rashly to the snare, the wolf to the pitfall, the dog to the club, the horse to the hole where he hath been stalked, &c., — solus homo ab aevo ad aevum peccat fere in iisdem; man only falls into the same offence and mischief from day to day, and will not be warned till he be utterly ruined, as it befell Balaam.

Ver. 28. And the Lord opened the mouth of the ass.] Fear not, therefore, thine own inability and rudeness to reply in a good cause. There is no mouth into which God cannot put words; and how oft doth he choose the weak to confound the wise

And she said unto Balaam.] The angel, some think, did speak in the ass, as the devil had done to Eve in the serpent.

Ver. 29. I would there were a sword.] Pity but a madman should have a sword! How much fitter for him were that rod that Solomon speaks of. {#Pr 26:3}

Ver. 32. Because thy way is perverse.] Thou art resolved to curse howsoever, and not to lose so fair a preferment, which he must needs buy at a dear rate that pays his honesty for it. Better a great deal lie in the dust, than rise by such ill principles. I shall shut up with that excellent prayer of Zuinglius: {a} Deum Opt. Max. precor, ut vias nostras dirigat: ac sicubi simus Bileami in morem, veritati pertinaciter obluclaturi, angelum suum opponat, qui machaerae suae minis hunc asinum, inscitiam et audaciam dico nostram sic ad maceriam affigat, ut fractum pedem, hoc est, impurum illicitumque carnis sensum auferamus, nec ultra blasphememus nomen Domini Dei nostri.

{a} Zuing., Epist., lib. tertio.

Ver. 33. I had slain thee.] As thou wouldst have slain thine ass, for a less fault.

Ver. 37. To promote thee to honour.] But what is such honour more than a magnum nihil, nay a great mischief? Like the wings of a butterfly curiously painted; but they foul the fingers of those that catch it.

Chapter 23

Ver. 1. Build me here seven altars.] Here, in Baal's high places. {#Nu 22:41} A sinful mixture, such as was that of those mongrels {#2Ki 17:28,29} and their natural nephews, the Samaritans, {#Joh 4:5} Ambidexters in their religion, which being grosser at first, was afterward refined by Manasseh a Jewish priest—such another as Balaam—that in Alexander's time made a defection to them, and brought many Jews with him. Of Constantinus Copronymus it is said, how truly I know not, that he was neither Jew, heathen, nor Christian, sed colluviem quandam impietatis, but a hodge podge of wickedness. And of Redwald, king of the East Saxons, the first that was baptized, Camden reports, that he had in the same Church one altar for Christian religion and another for sacrificing to devils. And a loaf of the same leaven was that resolute Rufus, that painted God on the one side of his shield, and the devil on the other, with this desperate inscription, In utrumque paratus, Ready for either, catch as catch may.

Ver. 2. And Balak did.] Ready to conform to any religion, so he might obtain his purposes. God abhors these lukewarm neuter passives, that are inter coelum terramque penduli, that halt between two, that commit idolatry between the porch and the altar, with those five and twenty miscreants. {#Eze 8:16}

Ver. 3. Stand by thy burnt offering.] Or, Present thyself, to see if God will accept thy person.

Ver. 4. I have prepared seven altars.] He boasts of his devotions, and so thinks to demerit God's favour. So those hypocrites in Isaiah. {#Isa 58:3} Non sic deos coluimus, ut ille nos vinceret, We have not so served the gods, as that the enemy should have the better of us, said the Emperor Antonius, the philosopher.

Ver. 5. And the Lord put a word in Balaam's mouth.] The words thus put into his mouth, do but pass from him; they are not polluted by him, because they are not his! as the trunk through which a man speaks is not more eloquent for the speech uttered through it. Balaam did not "eat" God's word as Jeremiah did, {#Jer 15:16} nor believe what he had spoken, as David, and after him St Paul did. {#Ps 116:10 2Co 4:13} No more did Plato, Seneca, and other heathens, in their divine sentences.

Ver. 7. And he took up his parable.] Or, Pithy and powerful speech, uttered in numerous and sententious terms, and taken among the heathen for prophecies or oracles: poemata pro vaticiniis, &c. Poets were taken for prophets, {#Tit 1:12} and poems for prophecies. Hence their στοιχομαντεια, wherein opening a book of Homer, Hesiod, &c., they took upon them, by the first verse they lighted upon, to divine. Tragedians also, for their parables, or master sentences, were highly esteemed of old, insomuch as, after the discomfit of the Athenians in Sicily, they were relieved who could repeat somewhat of Euripides.

Out of Aram.] Aram Naharim, or Mesopotamia, so called, because it is situated between those two rivers of Paradise, Tigris and Euphrates. This was Abraham's country, where, while he was in it, he "served strange gods." {#Jos 24:2}

Ver. 8. How shall I curse?] He had a good mind to it, but did not, because he durst not: God stood over him with a whip, as it were; the angel with a sword in his hand could not be forgotten by him. Virtus nolentium nulla est.

How shall I defy?] How easy a thing is it to wag a wicked tongue? to find good words in mouth of hell?

Ver. 9. From the top of the rocks I see him.] And have no power to hurt him. She heard me without daunting; I departed not without terror, when I opened the conspiracy against her life; howbeit, clothed with the best art I could; -said Parry the traitor concerning Queen Elizabeth. {a} Achilles was said to be Styge armatus, but Israel was Deo armatus, and therefore extra iactum.

Lo, the people shall dwell alone.] That they might have no meddling with the heathen. God would not have them lie near the sea coasts, for the Philistines lay between them and the sea, lest they should by commerce wax prouder, as Tyre did, {#Eze 27:3} and learn foreign fashions. See #Es 3:8. Hence Judea, though part of the continent, is called an "island." {#Isa 20:6}

{a} Camden's Elisab.

Ver. 10. Let me die the death.] But he was so far from living the life of the righteous, that he gave pestilent counsel against the lives of God's Israel: and though here, in a fit of compunction, he seem a friend, yet he was afterward slain by the sword of Israel, whose happiness he admireth, and desires to share in. {#Nu 31:8} Carnales non curant quaerere, quem tamen desiderant invenire; cupientes consequi, sed non et sequi, { a} Carnal men care not to seek that which they would gladly find, &c. Some faint desires, and short-winded wishes, may be sometimes found in them, but the mischief is, they would break God's chain, sunder happiness from holiness, salvation from sanctification, the end from the means; they would dance with the devil all day, and then sup with Christ at night; live all their lives long in Delilah's lap, and then go to Abraham's bosom when they die. The Papists have a saying that a man would desire to live in Italy, a place of great pleasure, but to die in Spain, because there the Catholic religion, as they call it, is so sincerely professed. And a heathen being asked, whether he would rather be Socrates, a painful philosopher, or Croesus, a wealthy king; answered, that for this life he would be Croesus, but for the life to come Socrates. Thus all men wish well to heaven's happiness; but bad men find no more comfort of it, than a man doth of the sun when it shines not in his own horizon. Balaam might here be compared to a stranger, that travelling a far country, seeth the state and magnificence of the court, and is admitted into the presence chamber, which greatly doth affect him, though himself have no part or interest in the king. {See Trapp on "Nu 24:5"}

{a} Bern.

Ver. 11. What hast thou done unto me.] Hereby it appears that Balak, in serving of God by building altars and offering sacrifices, did but serve himself upon God; as Ephraim bore "fruit to himself"; {#Ho 10:1} and "Did ye fast to me, even to me?" {#Zec 7:5}

Ver. 12. Must I not take heed to speak.] See how those hypocrites mock one with another. Potest augur augurem videre, et non ridere? {a} said Cato.

{a} Cic., De Divinat., lib. ii.

Ver. 13. From whence thou mayest see them.] And over-look them, as they say witches do, Βασκαινειν quasi φαεισι καινειν; Nescio quis teneros, &c. In Hebrew the same word signifies both an eye and a fountain; to show, that from the eye, as a fountain, flows both sin and misery.

Ver. 16. Put a word.] {See Trapp on "Nu 23:5"}

Ver. 18. Rise up, Balak.] The greatest potentate must reverently attend to the word of God. Ehud, though a fat unwieldy man, stood up to hear a message from God. {#Jud 3:20} So did Constantine the Great, {a} and our Edward VI, hear sermons standing, and usually uncovered. {b}

{a} Euseb.

{b} Act. and Mon.

Ver. 19. That he should repent.] When at any time God is said to repent, it is Mutatio rei, non Dei; effectus non affectus; facti non consilii: it is not a change of his will, but of his work.

Ver. 20. Behold, I have, &c.] A bad man may bless by command from God, and he say Amen to it. The precious stone Lyncuris may issue out of the body of the lynx, an unclean and spotted beast.

Ver. 21. He hath not beheld iniquity.] Of this place of Scripture we may say as we did of another, This verse had been easy, had not commentators made it so knotty. The sense I like best is, that at this time, when Balak hired Balaam, there was no peccatum flagrans, no foul sin of that people, flaming in the eyes of God, or stinking in his nostrils; and therefore there could be no enchantment against them. {#Nu 23:23} Whence that devilish counsel of his to Balak, to set fair women afore them, to entice them to adultery and idolatry, and so to put them under God's displeasure. But what strange inferences are those from this text, that God sees no sin in his elect, that the very being of their sins is abolished out of his sight; that God is never displeased with his people, though they fall into adultery or the like sin, no not with a fatherly displeasure! &c.

Ver. 23. Surely there is no enchantment.] No looking for signs of good luck, as #Nu 24:1. The gates of hell shall not prevail against them.

Ver. 24. Behold the people.] This is chiefly true of God's peculiar people, subduing their spiritual enemies, {#Mic 5:8,9} being bold as lions.

Ver. 25. Nor bless them at all.] But they are blessed, and they shall be blessed, the one cursing the malice of earth and of hell.

Ver. 26. That I must do.] Though with no goodwill. Devils and wicked men do God's will; but oft full sore against their own.

Ver. 27. Peradventure it will please God.] Heb., It will be right in the eyes of God. Never think it, man. "He is not a God that hath pleasure in wickedness." {#Ps 5:4}

Ver. 28. Unto the top of Peor.] An idolatrous and therefore most unlikely place. {#De 3:29}

Ver. 30. And Balak did.] How unwearable are wicked men in their ways!

Chapter 24

Ver. 1. He went not as at other times.] As being resolved to curse howsoever, and without God's leave; yea, al despito di Dio, as that mouth of blasphemy, Pope Julius III, once said in another case; {a} to take his own course whatever came of it.

He set his face.] As fully bent to do it, and nothing should hinder him. So our Saviour Christ "steadfastly set (εστηριξε) his face to go to Jerusalem." {#Lu 9:51} He steeled his forehead against all oppositions.

{a} Act. and Mon., fol. 1417.

Ver. 2. And the spirit of God came upon him.] A common spirit, a spirit of prophecy: "Have not we prophesied in thy name?," {#Mt 7:22} said those castaways. In impiis quandoque sunt dona Dei, sine Deo. God gives gifts to men, "yea to the rebellious," {#Ps 68:18} for the use of his Church. A blind man may bear a torch in his hand, whereby others may receive benefit, though himself receive none; so here.

Ver. 3. Whose eyes are open.] And therefore can speak it of a certainty: for what is more sure than sight? q.d., Israel shall be blessed, and I will stand to it. He is blessed, "yea, and he shall be blessed." {#Ge 27:33}

Ver. 4. Falling into a trance.] As was usual with the prophets; {#Ge 15:12 Da 8:17-19 2Pe 1:21} {See Trapp on "1Pe 1:21"} They were carried out of and beyond themselves. And still—

“Amor Dei est ecstaticus, neque iuris

Se sinit esse sui—”

Ver. 5. How goodly are thy tents.] It fareth with a hypocrite, as with a surveyor of lands, that taketh an exact compass of other men’s grounds, of which he shall never enjoy a foot. See #Nu 23:10.

Ver. 6. As the trees of lign aloes.] An odoriferous sweet smelling tree, growing in Arabia, which is said to be a country so sweet that swine cannot live in it.

Ver. 7. His seed shall be in many waters.] He shall sow in locis irriguis; as men are bid to cast their bread, their alms, upon the waters, upon the poor; as upon a well-watered soil. {#Ec 11:1} Such is the land of Egypt, watered by Nile; which makes the ground so fruitful, that they do but throw in the seed, and have four rich harvests in less than four months, -saith one that had been there. {a}

He shall be higher than Agag.] King of the Amalekites, who was then the greatest monarch of those parts, and did haply think as highly of himself as that proud prince of Tyre, {#Eze 28:2-6} or as the great Cham of Cataia, of whom it is reported that every day, after he had dined, he caused the trumpets to be sounded, by that sign giving leave to other princes of the earth to go to dinner.

{a} Blunt’s Voyage into Levant.

Ver. 8. God brought him forth out of Egypt.] This he tells Balak, in answer to that complaint of his. {#Nu 20:5} Behold, there is a people come out of Egypt, q.d., Come they are indeed, but not of themselves, but by God, who said, "Out of Egypt have I called my son."

Ver. 9. He lay down as a lion.] {See Trapp on "Ge 49:9"}

And cursed is he.] Here the sorcerer pronounceth a curse upon himself; for he desired to curse Israel, and therefore in God’s account he did it.

“ Qui, quia non licuit, non facit, ille facit. ”—Ovid.

Ver. 10. And he smote his hands together.] So doth God at the covetous person, such as Balaam was. "Behold, I have smitten my hands at thy dishonest gain which thou hast made," &c. {#Eze 22:13}

Ver. 13. I cannot go beyond.] Here was coloured covetousness, or "a cloak of covetousness." {#1Th 2:5} {See Trapp on "1Th 2:5"} God lets out the tedder to wicked men for a time, and then calls them back with shame enough to their task; lets them have the ball on the foot till they come almost to the goal, and then defeats them of their great hopes; as he did this sinful couple. Balak had not his will, nor Balaam his wages; God fooled them both, pulling the morsel out of their mouths, that they had well-nigh devoured.

Ver. 14. I will advertise thee,] viz., What to do; as he did. {#Nu 31:16} Parasites propound to princes, suavia potius quam sana consilia, pleasing but pestilent counsel, and so do officiously mischief them; as the dragon is said to bite the elephant's ear, and there hence to suck his blood, that being the only place that he cannot reach with his trunk to defend.

Ver. 16. And knew the knowledge of the Most High.] The eye may be clear while the hand is palsied. Baalam's great knowledge was but intuitiva, standing in speculation; it was not directiva vitae: he knew but by hearsay, as a blind man knows colours; his light served but to light him into utter darkness. Neronis Quantus artifex pereo, quadrabit in te peritum, et periturum.

Ver. 17. I shall see him.] So shall "every eye, and those also that pierced him," {#Re 1:7} but not as "Abraham saw him, and rejoiced"; nor as Job. {#Job 19:25,27} "The pure in heart" only "shall see him" to their comfort, as pure glass or crystal lets in the light of the sun. Some wicked men have greater common gifts than the godly; as many metals are brighter and more orient than the heavens. Yet as those metals are not so fit, either to receive or convey the light of the sun, so neither are the wicked so fit, either to take or give to others, "the knowledge of salvation by the remission of their sins."

A Star out of Jacob.] Jesus Christ the true Morning Star. {#Re 22:16 Joh 1:9} That those wise men {#Mt 2:1} had heard of, probably, either from the Chaldean sybils, or from the Jews in the Babylonish captivity, or from this prophecy of Balaam; for he was an east countryman, and uttereth here a very clear and comfortable prophecy of the Messiah, by whom himself received no benefit. Thus the Church, Christ's "garden enclosed," {#So 4:12} may be watered through a wooden gutter; the sun give comfortable light through a sluttish window; the field may be well sowed with a dirty hand; the bell calls us to the church, though it never enter itself but by the sound; the well may yield excellent water, though it have much mud, &c.

And destroy all the children of Seth.] Heb., Unwall; that is, conquer and subdue. Christ by those ram's horns, by the foolishness of preaching, pulls down strongholds. {#2Co 10:4,5}

Ver. 18. And Edom shall be a possession.] This was literally fulfilled in David, {#1Ch 18:13 Ps 60:8} but spiritually, and especially in Christ, {#Isa 63:1,2, &c.} who shall shortly subdue the Romish Edomite. {#2Th 2:8}

Ver. 19. And shall destroy him.] David in the history, {#1Ki 11:15,16} Christ in the mystery, {#Ob 1:18} even all the antichristian rout and rabble. {#Re 19:21}

Ver. 20. First of the nations.] Or, Principal See #Nu 24:7.

Ver. 21. The Kenites,] i.e., The Midianites, {#Jud 1:16 4:11} mingled among the Amalekites, {#1Sa 15:6} for whom they are, and fare the worse, as Hamath did for Damascus. {#Zec 9:2}

Ver. 22. Until Ashur.] Who, together with the Jews, carried captive all the neighbouring nations. {#Jer 25:9}

Ver. 23. Who shall live when, &c.] The Assyrian, that rod of God's wrath, that overflowing scourge, shall take all afore him, shall bereave millions of their lives, as Caesar is said to have done; and of Mohammed, the first Emperor of the Turks, it is storied that he had been in his time the death of eight hundred thousand men {a}

{a} Turk. Hist.

Ver. 24. From the coast of Chittim.] Greece and Italy. These four great monarchs had their times and their turns, their ruins as well as their rise.

Ver. 25. Returned to his place.] Homewards he went, but stayed amongst the Midianites, and soon after came back to them, to receive money of them, saith Chazkuni, when he heard say of the plague which had been in Israel by his counsel: but as Shimei sought his servants, and lost his life, so Balaam.

Chapter 25

Ver. 1. To commit whoredom.] By the wicked counsel of Balaam, who knew well, that no one means hath more enriched hell than beautiful faces, and therefore taught Balak to lay this stumblingblock before the children of Israel; and is therein held by some to have sinned against the Holy Ghost. Howsoever he goes out in a stench, as it is usually said of his master the devil.

Ver. 2. Unto the sacrifices of their gods.] Unto their idol feasts; for Sine cerere et libero friget Venus. Gluttony is the gallery that lechery walketh through.

And bowed down to their gods.] Nemo repente fit turpissimus: by degrees they were drawn to open idolatry. If a man's foot slip into the mouth of hell, it is a miracle if he stop ere he come to the bottom. Principiis obsta. Dally not with the devil; sin is very insinuating; and the old serpent, if he once get in his head, will quickly wind in his whole body.

Ver. 3. Joined himself to Baalpeor.] Separated himself to that shame, {#Ho 9:10} that abominable and shameless service of Priapus, as Jerome and Isidore understand it, as Maachah the mother of Asa seems to have done, {#1Ki 15:13} and other filthy persons, whose fashion was, as soon as their sacrifice was ended, to step aside into the grove of their god, and there, like brute beasts, promiscuously to satisfy their lusts, &c. Vah scelus infandum!

Ver. 4. Take all the heads.] The chieftains: their greatness might not bear them out. Potentes potenter torquebuntur. Hell is paved, said one of old, with the bald pates of shavellings, and with the crests of great commanders, who had ever opposed with crest and breast whatsoever stood in the way of their sins and lusts.

Ver. 5. Unto the judges of Israel.] Those of them that had not defiled themselves; else with what face could they punish others? or look upon those, that before their faces had been hanged up against the sun, whose destruction was for ever to be remembered? {#Mic 6:5}

Ver. 6. In the sight of Moses.] This man's face was hatched over with detestable impudence; he thought, it may be, that being so great a man, none durst meddle with him. Pliny {a} reports of Proculus Caesar, that by him, viginti virgines intra dies quindecim faetum conceperunt. Louis II of France inviting our Edward IV to the French court, Recte erit cognate, saith he, iucundi vivemus et suaviter; teque oblectabis cum lectissimis faeminis, &c. -he should have added, "But know, that for all these things thou must come to judgment": {#Ec 11:9} that would have haply allayed his lust, cooled his courage, and not have come in with his— Adhibebo tibi Cardinalem Borbonium; is, quicquid peccaris, pro ea quam habet potestate, facile expiabit. Thou shalt take thy full pleasure, and then my cardinal shall give thee full pardon. {b}

{a} Plin, lib. vii.

{b} Comineus, lib. vi.

Ver. 7. He rose up.] A heroical act, by an extraordinary motion: as was also that of Ehud; and therefore is not to be made a rule of practice, as Burchet conceited, when by this example he held himself warranted to kill a great personage in this kingdom, whom he took to be a vicious man, and God's enemy.

Ver. 8. And thrust both of them through.] So they died in the flagrancy of their lust; as did likewise one of the Popes, taken in the act, and slain together with his harlot, by the husband of the adulteress. Mention is likewise made by William Malmesbury, of one Walter, bishop of Hereford, A. D. 1060, his offering to force his seamstress; she resisted what she might, but finding him too strong for her, thrust her shears into his belly, and gave him his deathly wound. {a}

{a} Godw., Catal.

Ver. 9. Twenty and four thousand.] Twenty and three thousand, saith St Paul, {#1Co 10:8} insisting only in the special punishment of the people, who were provoked to sin by that other thousand, their princes, {#Nu 25:4} and all to show, quam frigida et ieiuna sit eorum defensio, &c., saith Junius, {a} how poorly they plead for themselves, that think to excuse their sins by alleging the examples of their superiors.

{a} Jun., Parallel.

Ver. 13. Because he was zealous for his God.] Enraged, as a jealous man, with a holy hatred of sin, and inflamed with love to God, Quem aliter amare non didicerat, as Chrysostom speaks of Basil. Non amat, qui non zelat, saith Augustine. {a} He is no friend to God that is not zealous for him. To one that desired to know what kind of man Basil was, there was presented in a dream, saith the history, a pillar of fire, with this motto, Talis est Basilius, Basil is such a one, all on a light fire for God.

{a} Contra Adamant., cap. 13.

Ver. 14. A prince of a chief house.] Whom yet Phineas spared not; as neither did John Baptist spare Herod; nor Nathan David; nor Bishop Lambert King Pippin, whom he freely reprov'd to his face for his adultery, A.D. 798, though he were afterwards therefore slain by the harlot's brother. {a} Odo Severus, the twenty-second Archbishop of Canterbury, A.D. 934, dealt like plainly with King Edwin, excommunicated his concubines, and caused one of them, on whom the king doted unreasonably, to be fetch'd out of the court by violence, burnt her in the forehead with a hot iron, and banished her into Ireland. {b}

{a} Epitome Hist. Gall., p. 30.

{b} Godw., Catal.

Ver. 17. Vex the Midianites.] As more malicious and mischievous than the Moabites; as appears, (1.) By their detaining of Balaam, when the Moabites dismissed him in great displeasure; (2.) By the wickedness of their women, who by Cozbi may seem to have been meretrices meretricissimae, such as afterwards was Julia, Messalina, and that Romish Lucretia, concubine to Pope Alexander VI., of whom Pontanus, {a}

“ Hoc tumulto dormit Lucretia nomine, sed re

Thais, Alexandri filia, sponsa, nurus. ”

{a} Lib. ii. tum.

Ver. 18. For they vex you with their wiles.] Not with their wars; they outwit you, out smart by counterfeit courtesy, cut-throat kindness; they have deceived you into those sister sins, fornication and idolatry, which God hath so severely punished.

Chapter 26

Ver. 2. From twenty.] {See Trapp on "Nu 1:3"}

Ver. 9. Which were famous.] But for no goodness. Tubulus, who was the Roman praetor a little afore Cicero's time, was homo tam proiecte improbus, ut eius nomen non hominis sed vitii esse videretur; so wicked a wretch, that he seem'd to be wickedness itself. {a} Portius Latro calleth Catiline, sacrarium libidinum, portentum scelerum, gurgitem et sentinam flagitiorum, &c., a sink of sinfulness. And Josephus saith of Antipater, that his life was no better than a mystery of iniquity. These men were famous, or rather infamous, for their flagitious practices; notoriously naught; signally sinful.

{a} Lips., Antiq. Lection.

Ver. 10. And they became a sign.] An example of that rule, that great sins bring great plagues, as Herodotus hath it, speaking of the destruction of Troy. Aliorum perditio, tua sit cautio, Enjoy other men's madness, &c. Discite iustitiam moniti, &c. Let all that behold me beware; this was written upon the statue of Sennacherib, saith Herodotus.

Ver. 11. The children of Korah died not.] As being either innocent or penitent; for Aut paenitendum, aut pereundum {#Lu 13:3}

Ver. 44. The family of the Jesuites.] Serrarius will needs derive the name Jesuites from #Nu 26:24; it is wonder how he missed of this plainer text. Jesuites quasi Jashubites: like as Erasmus found friars in St Paul's time, inter falsos fratres, amongst the false brethren. In Salamanca a friar would prove that the name of the Virgin Mary was spoken of in #Ge 1. God called the gathering together of the waters Maria {a} Dr Poynes {b} writes, that it was foretold in the Old Testament that the Protestants were a malignant Church, alleging, {#2Ch 24:19} Mittebatque prophetas ut reverterentur ad Dominum, quos protestantes illi audire nolebant. We may, with far more show of reason, fetch the name of Protestants (retained also in their Douay translation) from that text than they can from this, the name of Jesuites alias Jebusites.

{b} Preface to his book Of the Sacrament.

Chapter 27

Ver. 3. But died in his own sin.] i.e., By a natural and an ordinary death; not by a special plague, as that arch-rebel Korah. Death is the just hire of the least sin. {#Ro 6:23} But some evildoers God doth not only put to death, but also hangs them up in gibbets, as it were, for public notice and admonition.

Ver. 4. Give unto us, therefore, a possession.] This plea for a part in a land not yet conquered is a proof of their faith, and could not but encourage others. Such a masculine faith was that of Mrs. Anne Askew, martyr, who thus subscribed her confession: Written by me, Anne Askew, that neither wisheth for death, nor feareth his might; and as merry as one that is bound for heaven. {a} I will not bid you good night—said Helen Stirk, a Scotchwoman, to her husband, at the place where they both suffered martyrdom—for we shall suddenly meet in the heavenly Canaan. {b} And was it not by the force of her faith, -that "substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen," {#Heb 11:1} -that Crispina gaudebat, cum tenebatur, cum audiebatur, cum damnabatur, cum ducibatur. {c}

{a} Act. and Mon., fol. 1128.

{b} Ibid., 1154.

{c} Aug., in Psal. cxxxvi.

Ver. 7. And thou shalt cause the inheritance.] Let the French defend their Salic law as they can. It was a witty essay of him who styled women the second edition of the epitome of the whole world; witness Artemisia, Zenobia, Blandina, the Lady Jane Gray (whose excellent beauty, adorned with all variety of virtues, as a clear sky with stars, as a princely diadem with jewels, gave her the style of Eruditionis, pietatis, et modestiae delictum), and Queen Elizabeth, in whom, besides her sex, there was nothing womanlike or weak: as if (what philosophy saith) the souls of those noble creatures had followed the temperament of their bodies, which consist of a frame of rarer rooms, of a more exact composition than man's cloth; and, if place be any privilege, we find theirs built in paradise, when man's was made out of it. Besides, "in Christ Jesus there is neither male nor female," but all are one, souls having no sexes, and whosoever are "Christ's, are Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." {#Ga 3:28,29}

Ver. 11. A statute of judgment.] A standing law; a standard for all cases of like kind in that policy at least. For we cannot consent to Carolostadius, who contended, in foro ius ex Mose descendum esse, that all other national and municipal laws were to be abolished; and that all courts were now to pass sentence according to Moses' laws. Hic non intellexit vim et naturam Christianae libertatis, This man knew not the extent of Christian liberty, saith Melancthon.

Ver. 12. See the land.] It was somewhat to see; but oh how fain would he have entered the land, and could not! We shall have in heaven not only vision, but fruition; we have it already in capitatenure, in Christ our head and husband, who will not be long without us, it being part of his heaven, that we shall be where he is, {#Joh 17:24} and enjoy God, which is heaven itself; whence in Scripture God is called Heaven, "I have sinned against Heaven." And I had rather be in hell and have God present, than in heaven and God absent, saith Luther. {a}

{a} Malim praesente Deo esse in inferno, quam absente Deo in coelo. -Luth., in Gen. xxx.

Ver. 13. Gathered unto thy people.] To that great panegyris, "the general assembly and church of the firstborn in heaven"; {#Heb 12:23} to that glorious amphitheatre, where the saints shall see and say, Ἰδου ο Πητρος, και ο Παυλος, &c., as Chrysostom hath it; Look, yonder is Peter, and that is Paul, &c.; we shall "sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob"; have communion with them, not only as godly men, but as Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

Ver. 14. For ye rebelled.] Sin may rebel in the saints, but not reign; neither is it they that rebel, "but sin that dwelleth in" them; dwelleth, but not domineereth.

Ver. 16. The God of the spirits of all flesh.] "Thou, Lord, that knowest the hearts of all men." {#Ac 1:24} {See Trapp on "Ac 1:24"} Artificers know well the nature and properties of their own work. Deus intimior nobis intimo nostro.

Chapter 28

Ver. 2. My offering.] He is owner of all; and of his own we give him. Τα σα εκ των σων, said that great emperor.

And my bread.] Called their bread for their souls; that is, the bread for their natural sustenance, common bread, when not rightly offered. So #Jer 7:21. God in scorn calls their sacrifice flesh, ordinary flesh, such as is sold in the shambles. So at the Lord's Supper impenitent communicants receive no more than the bare elements; panem Domini, but not panem Dominum. {a}

In their due season.] Which for eight and thirty years they had intermitted. Get a settlement, or Sabbath of spirit, or else God shall be but ill, if at all, served.

{a} August.

Ver. 3. This is the offering.] {See Trapp on "Ex 29:38"} {See Trapp on "Ex 29:39"}

Ver. 9. And on the Sabbath day.] Every day should be a Sabbath to the saints, in regard of ceasing to do evil, learning to do well; but on the seventh day Sabbath our devotion should be doubled. Debet totus dies festivus a Christiano expendi in operibus sanctis, said Robert Grossthead, Bishop of Lincoln, long since. {a} The whole Sabbath should be spent in God's service. #Ps 92:1, titled, A Psalm for the Sabbath, mentions morning and evening performances. {#Ps 92:2} Variety of duties may very well take up the whole day with delight. Besides, God gives us six whole days. Now, to sell by one measure and buy by another, is the way to a curse.

{a} In Decalog. Praecep., 30.

Ver. 11. And in the beginning of your months.] Thus they had their daily, weekly, monthly, yearly addresses unto God, that they might ever be in communion with him, and conformity unto him, by this continual intercourse. On the new moons they rested, {#Am 8:5} feasted, {#Isa 20:5} heard the word, &c.

Ver. 17. {See Trapp on "Ex 12:18"} {See Trapp on "Le 23:7"}

Ver. 18. {See Trapp on "Ex 12:18"} {See Trapp on "Le 23:7"}

Ver. 19. {See Trapp on "Ex 12:18"} {See Trapp on "Le 23:7"}

Chapter 29

Ver. 1. And in the seventh month.] This Sabbath month, as it were, had as many feasts in it as were celebrated in all the year besides. So that as the Sabbath is the queen of days, so was this of months.

It is a day of blowing.] {See Trapp on "Le 23:24"}

Ver. 7. And ye shall have.] See #Le 16:19, {See Trapp on "Le 16:19"}

Ver. 12. And on the fifteenth.] See #Le 23:34,35, &c., {See Trapp on "Le 23:34"} &c There the feasts were prescribed, and here the sacrifices belonging to them are described.

Ver. 17. And on the second day ye shall offer twelve, &c.] In every of these seven days sacrifices, one bullock is abated: hereby the Holy Ghost might teach them their duty, to grow in grace and increase in sanctification, that their sins decreasing, the number of their sacrifices, whereby atonement was made for their sins, should also decrease daily. Or it might signify a diminishing and wearing away of the legal offerings, &c., as one well observeth; Hac caeremonia significabat Deus gratiam suam de die in diem crescere, ita nempe ut minuatur vetus homo, et novus augeatur, &c., saith Alsted, -till the very ruins of Satan's castles be, as most of our old castles are, almost brought to ruin.

Ver. 18. After the manner.] That is, in manner and form aforesaid. The manner is that which makes or mars the action; as a good suit may be marred in the making, so a good duty: there may be malum opus in bona materia. Jehu's zeal was rewarded as an act of justice, quoad substantiam operis; and punished as an act of policy, quoad modum agendi, for the perverse end. Yea, David, for failing in a ceremony only, though with an honest heart, suffered a breach instead of a blessing. {#1Ch 15:13} Idolaters also went on in their own manner as their idol priests prescribed. "The manner of Beersheba liveth"; {#Am 8:14} that is, the form of rites of the worshipping in Beersheba, as the Chaldee paraphraseth.

Chapter 30

Ver. 1. And Moses spake unto the heads.] Because they were in place of judicature, and had power either to bind men to their vows or set them at liberty.

Ver. 2. If a man vow a vow unto the Lord.] God is the proper object of a vow. {#Ps 76:11} Papists vow to saints, both themselves, as to Francis, Austin, Dominick, &c., and other things, as pilgrimages, oblations, &c. Our Lady, as they call her, of Loretto, hath her churches so stuffed with vowed presents and memories, as they are fain to hang their cloisters and churchyards with them. {a} This is sacrilege; yea, it is idolatry.

To bind his soul with a bond.] Which none ought to do, but such as (1.) are free, or have the consent of their governors; (2.) Such as have knowledge and judgment to discern of a vow or oath; {#Ec 5:3,5} (3.) Are conscientious, as Jacob, Hannah, &c. Not such votaries as Herod, {#Mt 14:7} those assassins, {#Ac 23:14} those idolaters. {#Jer 44:27}

He shall not break his word.] If he do, he will make a great breach in his conscience and crack his comfort exceedingly. "Better not vow than not pay." {#Ec 5:4} It is a sin as bad or worse than perjury, and God takes it heavily at men's hands. {#Jer 34:10,11}

{a} Sandys's Relation of West. Relig., sect. 4.

Ver. 4. And her father shall hold his peace.] Qui tacet, consentire videtur, a rule in civil law; silence is a kind of consent.

Then all her vows shall stand.] Provided that she vow, (1,) Such things as are lawful and warrantable by the word; for to vow to do evil is an utter abomination; {as #Ac 23:14 De 23:18} (2,) Such things as are possible and in her power, either naturally or by the assistance of God's grace promised to her: such is not the Popish vowing of virginity, since omnes non capiant hoc, all men cannot contain. Their vows of continency breed all manner of incontinency in their clergy.

Ver. 5. But if her father disallow her.] Those that vow monastical obedience renounce all duty to their parents and service to their country. Parents are our Θεοι εφεστιοι, as a heathen said, our household gods, as it were; and have power to disannul or ratify the vows of their children: but the Papists are true heirs to the Pharisees, who taught not to honour father or mother, {#Mt 15:6} and so do "make the commandment of God of none effect by their tradition." "Full well" have they done it. {#Mr 7:9} But what cannot they do? The Pope, saith Cardinal Bellarmine, {a} potest de iniustitia facere iustitiam, ex nihilo aliquid, ex virtute vitium; he can make righteousness of unrighteousness, something of nothing, vice of virtue; and it seems so indeed by his practice. For when the cardinals meet to choose a Pope, they make a vow, whosoever is chosen, he shall swear to such articles as they make. And Sleidan saith, {b} the Pope is no sooner chosen, but he breaks them all, and checks their insolencies, as if they went about to limit his power, to whom all power is given both in heaven and earth.

Ver. 6. And if she had at all a husband.] Hannah's vow {#ISa 1:11} was made either by the consent of her husband, or else by peculiar instinct from God.

Ver. 13. To afflict her soul.] This is one instance of what she may vow. She may curb wanton flesh from the use of things lawful in themselves, but harmful to her, and that by a vow, as did the Rechabites, {#Jer 35:8-10} which the devil seeing will despair; for vows are as exorcisms to allay our rebellious spirits, and as cords to hamper our treacherous hearts, when they would slip the collar, and decline the yoke. In short, a man may lawfully vow a thing that is either a part of God's worship—as to fast once a month before the sacrament, to pray so many times a day, &c.—or a furtherance thereof, -as to found a lecture, build a college, school, almshouse, give so much weekly to the poor, &c.

Chapter 31

Ver. 2. Avenge the children of Israel.] This is called the vengeance of Jehovah. {#Nu 31:3} The righteous Judge will not fail to avenge our unrighteous vexations, if we "commit ourselves to him in well doing." {#1Pe 4:19}

Ver. 3. Arm some of yourselves unto the war.] Lactantius {a} being, according to his name, a mild and gentle man, abhorred bloodshed, thought it not lawful for a just man to be a warrior, whose justice was his warfare. But this was his error; Patres legendi sunt cum venia; God bids here, Arm yourselves, &c. Indeed it is utterly unlawful for men wilfully to thrust themselves into unnecessary wars: and it is reported in the life of Augustine, that he would never pray for such. But when God sounds the alarm, as here, "Cursed is he that doeth this work of the Lord negligently: Cursed is he that keepeth back his sword from blood." {#Jer 48:10}

{a} Instit., lib. vi. cap. 20.

Ver. 5. Twelve thousand.] This was no great army, but they were Deo armati, with whom "there is no restraint to save by many or by few." {#1Sa 14:6} How wondrously did God work by that handful of Hussites in Bohemia, when all Germany was up in arms against them by the Pope's instigation! And may it not be said of that small remnant, that now fighteth the Lord's battles in Ireland, "The Lord hath done great things for them, whereof we are glad?" Have they not been "helped with a little help indeed?" {#Da 11:34} The more is our shame, that send them no more.

Ver. 6. Them and Phinehas.] Not without Joshua, the general (though not here mentioned), the mighty conqueror of all Israel's enemies that rose up and resisted them: famous is he for his faithfulness and fortitude, In cognoscendis rebus bellicis perspicax, in agendo solers: noverat optime insidias facere, proelium committere, victoria uti, &c., as Dio saith {a} of Decebalus, king of the Daci, in Domitian's days: i.e., Well skilled in warlike businesses, and diligent in despatching them; He knew well how to lay an ambush, worst an enemy, use a victory, &c.

{a} Dio, in Domitiano.

Ver. 8. And Zur.] The father of Cozbi, that noble harlot. Dignitas in indigno est ornamentum in luto. Sedes prima, et vita ima, is but golden rubbish, eminent infamy, noble dishonour.

Balaam, also, the son of Beor.] {See Trapp on "Nu 24:25"} Oh that God would cause the false prophets, and the unclean spirit (for whom they act, and by whom they are acted) to pass out of our land, according to his promise! {#Zec 13:2}

Ver. 9. Took all the women.] The Jews are a nation, to this day noted for effeminate; and yet they hold that women are of a lower creation, made for the propagation and pleasure of man; and, therefore, they suffer them not to enter their synagogues but appoint them a gallery without. {a}

{a} Blunt's Voyage.

Ver. 10. And they burnt all their cities.] For the same reason, perhaps, that our Henry VIII demolished so many monasteries, saying, Corvorum nidos esse penitus disturbandos, ne iterunt ad cohibendum convolent, That the crows' nests were to be utterly, destroyed, lest they should make further use of them again another time. {a} Or rather, lest sloth or covetousness should draw any of the Israelites to hide themselves in these nests, and neglect the Promised Land. See #Jud 6:1.

{a} Diruendi sunt etiam ipsi ciconiarum nidi ne redeant, - said Zisca Lavat. in Deuter. Sander: Schism.

Anglic., lib. i.

Ver. 13. Went forth to meet them.] As Melchisedec went forth to meet Abraham returning with victory; {#Ge 14:18} as Archbishop

Hubert met our Richard I returning from the Holy Land, (as they called it,) both of them first falling to the earth, rose again and ran into each other's arms, comforting themselves with mutual embraces, and weeping with joy. {a}

{a} Speed, Hist., fol. 540.

Ver. 14. And Moses was wroth.] For all the joy he could not but be zealous for the Lord of hosts, when he saw the train. Zeal is the cream of all the affections.

Ver. 15. Have ye saved all the women alive.] By whom ye have so lately sinned, and so lately suffered! "Keep thee far from an evil matter," {#Ex 23:7} Circa serpentis antrum positus, non eris diu illaesus, saith Isidore. We should take heed how we play about the hole of the asp, or near the den of the cockatrice. {#Isa 11:8} Sin and temptation come both under one name in the Lord's Prayer. To pray, "Lead us not into temptation," and yet to run upon the occasion of sin, is to thrust a finger into the fire, and then pray not to be burnt. These Israelites should have said to those Midianitish housewives, as those in Isaiah did to their idols, "Get you hence," Avaunt; they should have here been as cautious as they were in other cases. For being forbidden to make covenants with the Gentiles, they also abstained from drinking with them, because that was a ceremony used in striking of covenants, and so it might have drawn them on thereunto. Our dallying with the occasions of sin, doth usually tempt the devil to tempt us.

Ver. 18. That have not known a man.] As far as they could conjecture by their age. But the way of a man with a maid, is one of Solomon's secrets. {#Pr 30:19} Of Rebecca it is noted, that she went for a maid, and she was so. {#Ge 24:16} But Quartilla, the strumpet in Petronius, was not ashamed to say, Iunonem meam iratam habeam, si unquam me meminerim virginem fuisse, {a} That she could not remember that ever she was a maid. And what a base slander was that cast upon our religion by an impudent Jesuit, Sylvester Petrasancta, Puellas plerumque corruptas nuptui dari in reformato Evangelio, {b} That few maids amongst us come clear to marriage.

{a} Petron., Satyr.

Ver. 19. Whosoever hath killed any person.] War, though never so just, is the slaughter house of mankind, and the hell of this world. Homer brings in Mars, the god of battle, as most hated of Jupiter. Bellum per antlphrasin, quia minime bellum. "For every battle of the warrior is with confused noise, and garments rolled in blood." {#Isa 9:5} What a strange man then was Pyrrhus, King of the Epirotes, of whom Justin reports, that he took more pleasure in fighting than in reigning! And what a hard heart had Hannibal, who, when he saw a pit full of man's blood which he had spilt, cried out, O formosum spectaculum! O brave sight! So, O rem regiam, said Valesus, i.e., O kingly act! when he had slain three hundred persons. And what a strange hell-hag was that queen, who, when she saw some of her Protestant subjects lying dead and stripped upon the earth, cried out, The goodliest tapestry that ever she beheld! God, that he might teach his people not to have "feet swift to shed blood," tells them here of a ceremonial uncleanness, contracted by killing, though an enemy, devoted by him to destruction.

Ver. 23. And all that abideth not the fire.] We must deal with every man, saith one from this text, according to his temper; indulge them what lawfully you may. Quod tamen accipiendum est cum grano salis.

Ver. 49. And there lacketh not one man of us.] A wonderful work of God; a whole nation cut off with no loss at all. "This was the Lord's own doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes." {#Ps 118:23} Surely, if the Grecians so thankfully acknowledged to their Jupiter that overthrow they gave to the Persians, by Themistocles, and called him Ελευθεριος, their deliverer, how much more might these Israelites celebrate the unparalleled goodness of their gracious God in this so unbloody a victory!

Ver. 53. For the men of war had taken spoil.] And kept what they caught to themselves. The Turks, when they had taken Constantinople, wondered at the wealth thereof—which the citizens would not be drawn to part with for their own preservation—and were so enriched therewith, that it is a proverb amongst them at this day, if any grow suddenly rich, to say, "He hath been at the sacking of Constantinople." {a}

Ver. 1. A place for cattle.] Fat, and fit for the purpose; like those pastures in Ireland, so fertile and abounding with sweet grass, that the people are forced to drive their cattle to some other more barren grounds, at some time of the day, lest they should over eat. See #Mic 7:14 Jer 50:19.

Ver. 5. Let this land be given unto thy servants.] An unsavoury and unseasonable motion this might seem at first, and did, even to Moses himself, as appears in the next verse. And surely it is probable that they were too much set upon that portion of earth, as Lot was upon the plain of Sodom, {#Ge 13:10} and was therefore soon after carried captive by the four kings, as these in the text are noted to be the first that were carried captives out of their land. {#1Ch 5:25,26} Strong affections cause strong afflictions; when God seeth people set upon it to have this or that, have it they may, but with an after-clap that shall dissweeten it. How was David crossed in his Absalom, Absalom in his kingdom, Amnon in his Tamar, Elkanah in his Hannah! {#1Sa 1:5} He loved her, and the Lord made her barren.

Ver. 11. They have not.] {See Trapp on "Nu 14:24"}

Ver. 14. An increase of sinful men.] A race of rebels; neither good egg nor bird; sin runs in a blood many times; ye seed of serpents, "ye generation of vipers, ye fill up the measure of your fathers' sins" {#Mt 23:32} Domitius, the father of Nero, foretold the wickedness of his son; for it cannot be, said he, that of me and my wife, Agrippina, any good man should be born. {a} When one complained that never father had so undutiful a child, Yes, said his son, with less grace than truth, my grandfather had.

Ver. 16. We will build sheep folds.] This was their intent at first, though Moses mistook them. There may be gross mistakes, and thereupon grievous unkindnesses, betwixt dearest friends. Cyril, and John, bishop of Antioch, objected heresy one to another, and proceeded as far as excommunication; postea comperti idem sentire: so did Cyril and Theodoret.

Ver. 23. Be sure your sin will find you out.] The guilt will haunt you at heels, as a bloodhound, and the punishment will overtake you, as it did that Popish priest in Lancashire, who being followed by one that found his glove, with a desire to restore it him, but pursued inwardly with a guilty conscience, leapt over a hedge, plunged into a mirey pit behind it, unseen and unthought of, wherein he was drowned. Or as it did that other priest, who, having escaped the fall of Blackfriars, A.D. 1623, where two of his fellow shavelings, {a} with about a hundred more, perished, and taking water, with purpose to sail into Flanders, was cast away, with some others, under London Bridge, the boat being overturned. {b}

{a} A contemptuous epithet for a tonsured ecclesiastic.

{b} Jac. Rev., De Vit. Pontific., 312.

Ver. 38. Their names being changed.] Out of detestation of those idols, Baal, Nebo, &c. {see #Ex 23:13 Ps 16:4 Isa 46:1} Absit ut de ore Christiano sonet Iupiter omnipotens, et Mehercule, et Mecastor, et caetera, magis portenta quam nuraina, saith Jerome. Heathenish gods should not be so far honoured as to be heard of out of Christian mouths, nor Popish idols neither. I myself, saith Latimer, {a} have used in mine earnest matters, to say, Yea, by the rood, by the mass, by St Mary, which indeed is naught. Some simple folk say, they may swear by the mass, because there is no such thing; and by our lady, because she is gone out of the country.

{a} Sermon in Third Sunday in Advent.

Chapter 33

Ver. 2. And Moses wrote.] Moses was primus in historia, as Martial saith of Salust.

Ver. 4. For the Egyptians buried.] As iron is very soft and malleable while in the fire, but soon after returns to its former hardness, so was it with these Egyptians. Affliction meekeneth men: hence affliction and meekness grow upon the same Hebrew root.

Ver. 29. From Mitheah.] Which signifies sweetness.

And pitched in Chasmonah.] Which signifies swiftness. We must also, when we have tasted of God's sweetness, use all possible swiftness in the ways of holiness; as Jacob, when he had seen visions of God at Bethel, "lifted up his feet," {#Ge 29:1, marg.} and went on his way lustily, like a generous horse after a bait, or a giant after his wine. "The joy of the Lord is your strength." {#Ne 8:10}

Ver. 38. And died there in the fortieth year.]

“ Nec te tua plurima Pentheu

Labentem textit pietas. ”

*The righteous die as well as the wicked, yea, the righteous oft before the wicked: Ωκυμοροι οι θεοφιλεις. God sends his servants to bed when they have done their work, as here he did Aaron; and as within these few days he hath done, to mine unspeakable loss and grief, my dearest brother and most faithful friend, Mr Thomas Jackson, that able and active instrument of God’s glory, while he lived, in the work of the ministry at Gloucester; the sad report of whose death, received whilst I was writing these things, made the pen, almost, fall out of my fingers, not for my own sake so much as for my country, whereof he was, I may truly say, the bulwark and the beauty, as Ambrose is said to have been "the walls of Italy": {a} Αμβροσιον οίδα μονον Επισκοπον αξιωσ καλουμενον, said Theodosius; Ambrose, whilst alive, was the only minister, to speak of, that I knew in the whole country. And dilexi virum, qui cum corpore solveretur, magis de ecclesiarum statu, quam de suis periculis angebatur; said the same emperor of the same Ambrose; I could not but love the man, for that when he died, his care was more for the churches’ welfare than for his own. I can safely say the same of the man in speech, without offence to any be it spoken; and I greatly fear lest, as the death of Ambrose forebode the ruin of Italy, so that it bodes no good to us, that God pulls such props and pillars out of our building. But this by way of digression, to satisfy my great grief for so dear a friend deceased, as David did for his brother Jonathan, and made him an epitaph. {#2Sa 1:17}*

{a} Paulin. Nolan., in Vita Ambros.

Ver. 41. Pitched in Zalmonah.] Of Zelem; signifying an image; so called because there the people, stung by fiery serpents, not by little dragons sprung out of their own bodies, as Fontunius Licetus {a} will have it, looked up to the brazen serpent, by God’s command, and were healed. {#Nu 21:5,9 Joh 3:16 1Co 10:9}

{a} De Spontan. Vivent. Ortu., lib. iii. cap. 51.

Ver. 52. Destroy all the pictures.] Those Balaam’s blocks, those excellent instruments of idolatry; such as was the cross of Hailes, and Cockram cross, which, if it would not serve to make a god, yet with a pair of horns clapped on his head, might make an excellent devil, as the mayor of Doncaster persuaded the men of Cockram, who came to him to complain of the joiner that made it, and refused to pay him his money for the making of it. {a}

{a} Act. and Mon., 1340.

Ver. 55. Shall be pricks in your eyes.] The eye is the tenderest part, and soon vexed with the least mote that falls into it. These Jebusites preserved, should be notorious mischiefs to them; as the Jesuits at this day are to those Christian states that harbour them. Shall we suffer those vipers to lodge in our bosoms till they eat out our hearts? Sic notus Ulysses? Jesuits, like bells, will never be well tuned till well hanged. Among much change of houses in foreign parts, they have in France two famous for the accordance of their names, the one called the Bow at Nola, the other the Arrow, la Fleche, given them by Henry IV, whom afterwards they villanously stabbed to death. Their apostate Ferrier played upon them in this distich:—

“Arcum Nola dedit, dedit illis alma sagttram

Gallia; quis funem, quem meruere, dabit!”

“*Nola the bow, and France the shaft did bring;
But who shall help them to a hempen string?*”

Chapter 34

Ver. 2. This is the land that shall fall.] It is God that assigns us our quarters, and cuts us out our several conditions, "appointing the bounds of our habitation." {#Ac 17:26} This should make us rest contented with our lot, and, having God our portion, say howsoever, as David did, "The lines are fallen to me in pleasant places." {#Ps 16:6} It is what our Father sees fit for us.

Ver. 3. Then your south quarter shall be.] Judea was not above two hundred miles long, and fifty miles broad; not near the half of England by much, but far more fertile, called, therefore, Sumen totius orbis. And yet England is, for good cause, counted the western granary; the garden of God, whose valleys are like Eden, whose hills are as Lebanon, whose springs are as Pishgah, whose rivers are as

Jordan, whose walls is the ocean, whose defence is the Lord Jehovah. {a}

{a} Speed's Hist.

Ver. 6. The great sea.] Commonly called the Mediterranean Sea, betwixt which and the Jews lay the Philistines; as now betwixt the Church and the Turk lies the Pope and his followers, Italy being the mark that the Turk shoots at. Lo, a sweet providence of God!

Ver. 8. Unto the entrance of Hamath.] Called Hamath the great, {#Am 6:2} affecting haply to be held the greatest village, as the Hague in Holland doth, and remains therefore unwall'd.

Ver. 12. It shall be at the salt sea.] That is, the Lake of Sodom, called also Asphaltites, and the Dead Sea. Josephus saith, that an ox, having all his legs bound, will not sink into the water of this sea, it is so dense.

Ver. 17. Eleazar the priest.] Pointing to the High Priest of the new covenant, by whom we have entrance into the promised inheritance, whither he is gone before to prepare a place for us, and hath told us, that in his "Father's house are many mansions," room enough.

Chapter 35

Ver. 2. Suburbs.] These were for pasture, pleasure, and other country commodities, not for tillage; for the Levites were to have no such employment. {#Nu 18:20,24}

Ver. 6. That he may flee thither.] All sins then are not equal, as the Stoics held; neither are all to be alike punished, as by Draco's laws they were, in a manner. Those laws were said to be written, not with black, but with blood, because they punished every peccadillo almost with death, as idleness, stealing of pot herbs, &c. Aristotle gives them this small commendation, that they are not worth remembrance, but only for their great severity.

Ver. 7, Shall be forty and eight cities.] Thus the Levites were dispersed throughout the land for instruction of the people; so ought ministers of the gospel, who are fitly called the salt of the earth, that being sprinkled up and down, may keep the rest (as flesh) from rotting and putrifying.

Ver. 8. From them that have many ye shall give.] By the equity of this proportion, the richer are bound to give more to the minister's maintenance than the poorer. Let this be noted by those that refuse to give anything to their ministers, because they have not those things, the tithes whereof the law requires for this purpose. See #Ga 6:6,

{See Trapp on "Ga 6:6"}

Ver. 15. Shall be a refuge.] Christ is our asylum, to whom running for refuge, when pursued by the guilt of an evil conscience, we are safe; none can take us out of his hands; if we be in Christ the Rock, temptations and oppositions, as waves, dash upon us, but break themselves.

Ver. 16. So that he die.] Though he had no intent to kill, yet because he should have looked better to it, he is a murderer; he smote him purposely and presumptuously, and the man dies of it. King James was wont to say, that if God did leave him to kill a man (though beside his intention), he should think God did not love him.

Ver. 18. The murderer shall surely be put to death.] This is ius gentium. The Turks' justice in this case will rather cut off two innocent men, than let one offender escape. The Persians punish theft and manslaughter so severely, that in an age a man shall hardly hear either of the one or the other. {a} A severity fit for Italy, where they blaspheme oftener than swear, and murder more than revile or slander {b} (like the dogs of Congo, which, they say, {c} bite, but bark not): and no less fit for France, where within ten years six thousand gentlemen have been slain, as it appears by the king's pardons. {d} Byron, Lord high-Marshal of France, and Governor of Burgundy, slew a certain judge for putting to death a malefactor, whom he had commanded to be spared; for this he sued a pardon, and had it: but not long after he turned traitor to his prince that had pardoned him, and was justly executed. {e}

Ver. 21. He shall surely be put to death.] And yet the Papists allow wilful murderers also to take sanctuary; who should, as Joab was, be taken from the altar to the slaughter. Their hatred to Protestants is so deadly, that they hold us unworthy to live on God's ground, fit for nothing but fire and faggot; yea, they send us to hell without bail or surety, as worse than Turks or Jews. They tell the people, that

Geneva is a professed sanctuary of all roguery; that in England the people are grown barbarous, and eat young children, that they are as black as devils, &c.

Ver. 23. Or with any stone.] As at the funeral solemnities of Queen Anne, a scholar was slain by the fall of a letter of stone, thrust down from the battlements of the Earl of Northampton's house, by one that was a spectator.

Ver. 25. Unto the death of the high priest.] Because he was amongst men, the chief god on earth, and so the offence did most directly strike against him. Or rather, because the high priest was a type of Christ: and so this release was a shadow of our freedom and redemption by the death of Christ.

Chapter 36

Ver. 1. And spake before Moses.] Who was their common oracle to inquire of in all doubtful cases. Like as at Rome, C. Scipio Nasica, whom the senate, by way of honour, called Optimus, had a house in the high street assigned him at the public charge, Quo faeilus consuli posset, that any man might go to him for counsel. And surely, as the Roman general never miscarried so long as he followed the advice of Polybius, his historian; so neither did or could this people do amiss, if ruled by Moses, who was the mouth of God. {#Nu 36:5}

Ver. 6. To whom they think best.] See #Ge 24:57,58, {See Trapp on "Ge 24:57"} {See Trapp on "Ge 24:58"}

Ver. 7. Shall keep himself to the inheritance.] This was an excellent law to cut off quarrels, strifes, and law suits, and to frustrate those qui latrocinia intra moenia exercent, as Columella said of the lawyers of his time.

Ver. 11. For Mahlah, Tirzah, and Hoglah, &c.] The name of these virgins, as one interpreter ^{a} elsewhere observeth, seem to be not without mystery. For Zelophehad, by interpretation, signifieth the shadow of fear or of dread: his first daughter, Mahlah, infirmity; the second, Noah, wandering; the third, Hoglah, turning about for joy, or dancing; the fourth, Milcah, a queen; the fifth, Tirzah, well-pleasing, or acceptable. By these names we may observe the degrees of our reviving by grace in Christ; for we all are born, as of the shadow of fear, being brought forth in sin, and "for fear of death were all our lifetime subject to bondage." {#Heb 2:15} This begetteth infirmity, or sickness, grief of heart for our estate. After which, wandering abroad for help and comfort, we find it in Christ, by whom our "sorrow is turned into joy." He communicates to us of his royalty, making us "kings and priests unto God his Father"; and we shall be presented unto him glorious, "and without blemish." {#Eph 5:27} So the Church is beautiful as Tirzah. {#So 6:4}

Deuteronomy

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. These be the words which Moses spake.] And surely he spake much, if he spake, as some cast it up, this whole Book in less than ten days' space. Certain it is that he spake here, as ever, most divinely, and like himself, or rather beyond himself—the end of a thing being better, if better may be, than the beginning thereof, {#Ec 7:8} as good wine is best at last; and as the sun shines most amiably when it is going down. This book of the law it was that the king was to write out with his own hand, {#De 17:18,19} that it might serve as his manual, and attend him in his running library. This was that happy book that good Josiah lighting upon, after it had long laid hid in the temple, melted at the menaces thereof, and obtained of God to die in peace, though he were slain in battle. This only book was that silver brook, that precious purling current, out of which the Lord Christ, our Champion, chose all those three smooth stones, wherewith he prostrated the Goliath of hell in that sharp encounter. {#Mt 4:4,7,10} And surely, if Cicero could call Aristotle's "Politics," for the elegance of the style, and for the excellency of the matter, aureum flumen orationis; and if the same author durst say that the law of the twelve tables did exceed all the libraries of philosophers, both in weight and worth; how much rather is all this true of this second edition of God's law, with an addition.

Ver. 2. There are eleven days' journey.] So many days' march for a foot army. But Philo the Jew saith a horseman might despatch it in three days. {a}

{a} Triduo confici potuit.

Ver. 3. In the eleventh month.] And in the twelfth month of this same year he died; so that this was his swan song: Sic, ubi fata vocant, &c.

Ver. 4. After he had slain Sihon.] If Samson had not turned aside to see the lion, that not long before he had slain, he had not found the honey in the carcass. {#Jud 14:8} So, if we recognise not our dangers, deliverances, and achievements, we shall neither taste how sweet the Lord is, nor return him his due praises. To true thankfulness is required, (1.) Recognition; (2.) Estimation; (3.) Retribution. See them all in #Ps 116:3,7,12.

Ver. 5. Began Moses to declare.] And he was not long about it. {See Trapp on "De 1:1"} A ready heart makes riddance of God's work; for being oiled with the Spirit, it becomes lithe and nimble, quick of despatch.

Ver. 6. Long enough.] The law is not for men to continue under, but for a time till they be fitted for Christ. {#Ga 3:16-25} Humbled they must be, and hammered for a season; sense of misery goes before sense of mercy.

Ver. 7. Unto the great river Euphrates.] Here are the bounds of the Promised Land; all which if they enjoy not, the fault was merely in themselves. Joshua chideth them for their slackness and dastardliness.

Ver. 8. Go in and possess it.] God was ready, but they were not ripe for such a mercy. So {#2Ch 20:33} the high places were not taken away; for the people had not yet prepared their hearts for such a reformation: the work was ensnarled and retarded by their unfitness. See #Isa 59:2.

Ver. 9. I am not able.] Politici et ecclesiastici labores maximi sunt, saith Luther. None have so hard a tug of it as magistrates and ministers. Ισοθεοι ημεν, ει μη και πραγατα και φροντιδας και φοβους υπερ παντας τους ιδιοτευοντας ειχομεν, said Augustus to his Livia. Had we not businesses, and cares, and fears, above any private person, we should be equal to the gods. {a}

{a} Dio Cass.

Ver. 11. The Lord God of your fathers.] Such holy ejaculations, such sallies of soul, and egression of affection to God and his people, are frequently found in heavenly minded men.

Ver. 12. Hear your cumbrance.] A prince's temples are not so compassed with a crown, as his mind besieged with cares; nor is he so lifted up with the splendour of his train, as cast down with the multitude of his fears. {See Trapp on "De 1:9"} St Paul also had the "cumber {a} of the churches." {#2Co 11:28} All care cumbered and mustered together, and that with anxiety; with the same solicitude that a man hath about his own most important business.

{a} επιστασις, μεριμνα

Ver. 15. And officers among your tribes.] That might put the laws in execution; which is the same to the law that the clapper is to the bell. There were in good Josiah's days' horrible abominations. And why? By the slackness of under offices. {#Zep 3:3}

Ver. 16. Hear the causes, &c.] Hear them out. In the Forum of Rome the accuser had six hours allotted him to accuse, the accused had nine hours to make his answer {a}

And judge righteously.] So upright was the sentence of the Areopagites in Athens, that none could ever say he was unjustly condemned; nay, both parties, as well those that are cast as they that cast, are alike contented. {b}

{a} Ulpian., in Orat. Demosth. de fal legat.

{b} ηπιπομενοι σπεργουσιν ομοιος τοιν κεκρατηκοσι.

Ver. 17. Ye shall not respect persons.] God will surely reprove you, saith Job, if you secretly accept persons. {#Job 13:10} Aequum me utrique parti tam in disceptandis controversiis, quam in tuenda disciplina, praebebo, said Justinian: I will hear causes without prejudicate impiety, judiciously examine them without sinister obliquity, and sincerely judge them without unjust partiality. It was the oath of the heathen judges, as the orator relates, Audiam accusatorem et reum sine affectibus et personarum respectione: I will hear the plaintiff and defendant with an equal mind, without affection and respect of persons. And agreeable hereunto is the oath taken by our circuit judge, as it is recorded in the Statute of the 18 of Edward III.

You shall not be afraid.] For, Facile a iustitia deviat, qui in causis non Deum sed homines pertimescit, saith Chrysostom: A faint hearted judge doth easily pervert justice. A man of courage he must be, a Coeur-de-lion, another Cato, a quo nemo unquam rem iniustam petere audebat, of whom no man ever durst desire anything unjust. This Solomon symbolised by the steps of his throne adorned with lions; the Athenian judges, by sitting in Mars Street.

For the judgment is God's.] Whose person ye bear, and in whose seat ye sit; and should therefore sit in as great, though not so slavish a fear of offending, as Olanes, in the history, sat upon the flayed skin of his father Silannes, nailed by Cambyses on the tribunal; or, as a Russian judge that fears the boiling caldron; or the Turkish senate, when they think the great Turk to stand behind the Arras, at the dangerous door. Cave, spectat Cato; take heed, Cato seeth you, -was an ancient watchword among the Romans, and a great retentive from evil. How much more amongst us should Cave, spectat Dominus; Take heed, the Lord looks on.

Ver. 19. That great and terrible wilderness.] Abounding with want of all necessities, {#Jer 2:6} and surrounded with many, mighty, and malicious enemies. Such is this present evil world to those that are bound for the heavenly Canaan. Many miseries and molestations, both Satanical and secular, they are sure to meet with, this world being a place of that nature, that, as it is reported of the Straits of Magellan, {a} which way soever a man bend his course, if homeward, he is sure to have the wind against him.

{a} Heyl., Geog., p. 802.

Ver. 21. Behold the Lord.] {See Trapp on "De 1:8"}

Ver. 22. We will send men before us.] Thus empty man will be wiser than God, though "man be born like a wild ass-colt." {#Job 11:12} It was unbelief that prompted them to this practice: for "they could not enter because of unbelief." Carnal policy serves the worldling, as the ostrich's wings, to make him outrun others upon earth, but helps him never a whit towards heaven.

Ver. 23. Pleased me well.] Seeing you were set upon it, and it would be no better.

Ver. 25. And brought us word again.] Joshua and Caleb did; for the rest are not here reckoned of; God counts of men by the goodness that is in them.

Ver. 27. Because the Lord hated us.] A gross mistake. Why should it then so greatly grieve us. that our good intentions are so much misconstrued? That is here complained of, as an argument of God's hatred, that he intended for an instance of his love. {#De 4:37 7:8} In quo dilexisti nos? "wherein hast thou loved us?" said those malcontents in Malachi, {#Mal 1:2} that cast the helve after the hatchet, as the proverb is, and like children, because they might not have what they would, grew sullen, and would have nothing.

Ver. 31. As a man doth bear his son.] Charily and tenderly, as his own heart; not hating them, as they desperately belied the Lord. {#De

1:27} "For if a man find his enemy, will he let him go well away?"
{#Isa 24:19} Will he accommodate him as God did these murmurers?
Never was any prince served in such state as they were.

Ver. 32. Ye did not believe.] Sic surdo plerunque fabulam: there was none within to make answer. "Who hath believed our report?" &c. We cannot get men to credit us.

Ver. 37. The Lord was angry with me.] The saint's afflictions proceed oft from love displeased, from love offended. "Fury is not in God." {#Isa 27:4}

Ver. 41. We have sinned, we will go up.] Temporaries are set upon sin in the very confession thereof. Unless to the confession of sin we add confusion of sin, we do nothing. {#Pr 28:13} Yet "honour me before the people," said Saul: Give me a bribe, said trembling Felix.

Ver. 46. So ye abode in Kadesh many days.] Many indeed; yea, many years. And here it was, or hereabouts, that they received those laws which are recorded, {#Nu 15} as also that they stoned him that gathered sticks on the Sabbath day; that Korah and his accomplices perished; that fourteen thousand seven hundred died of the plague; that Aaron's rod flourished; that Moses, seeing the people fall so fast in the wilderness, wrote #Ps 90, -where he telleth us that the ordinary term of man's life was reduced to seventy or eighty years, and so made shorter by half than before. All which things are thought to have happened in the last six months of the second year after their coming out of Egypt: the history of those two years only, and of the last of the forty are set forth by Moses: the intercurrent thirty seven years with their events, save only the bare names of their various stations, {#Nu 33} being passed over in silence. If men will take liberty to commit sin against God, he will make but a short story of them and their works: Lot, for instance. {#Ge 19:36}

Ver. 1. Then we turned,] viz., When we had bought our wit, and had paid for our learning, by our late discomfiture.

Ver. 3. Turn you northward.] Thus God's word was their director unto all places, and in all actions. In which respect these histories of holy Scripture excel all human histories in the world, as is well observed. That which they tell us of their Dea vivilia, guiding passengers, &c., is a mere fiction.

Ver. 4. Which dwell in Seir.] To distinguish them from the Amalekites, Esau's seed too, but devoted to destruction.

And they shall be afraid of you.] Though worse afraid than hurt.

" Hic rogo, non furor est, ne moriari, mori?"

We read of some Jews, that at the sack of Jerusalem killed themselves lest they should be taken by the enemy.

Ver. 5. Because I have given mount Seir.] Thus the Most High divided to the nations their inheritance. {#De 32:8} And a man must needs have some right to his inheritance, to his portion. {#Ps 17:14} What Ananias had was his own whilst he had it, as Peter tells him; {#Ac 5:4} yet Satan had filled his heart. It is therefore a rigour to say, the wicked are usurpers of what they have, and shall be called to account for it. When the king gives a traitor his life, he gives him meat and drink that may maintain his life. That Duke of Alva is worthily taxed for a tyrant, that starved his prisoners, even after quarter; saying, though he promised to give them their lives, he did not promise to find them meat. {a} Wicked men have both a civil title to that they have, and a title before God, who will call them to account indeed at the last day, not for possessing what they had, but for abusing that possession.

{a} Grimston's Hist. of Netherlands.

Ver. 6. Buy meat of them for money.] "Money answereth all things," saith Solomon. {#Ec 10:19} Money is the monarch of the world, saith another, and bears most mastery. But that covetous Caliph of Babylon, taken by Haalon, brother to Mango the great Cham of Tartary, and commanded to eat his fill of that great wealth that he had heaped up together, found ere he died, that one mouthful of meat was more worth than a whole houseful of money. {a}

{a} Turk. Hist., fol. 113.

Ver. 7. For the Lord thy God hath blessed thee,] viz., With money, to fetch thee in other commodities. It is the blessing of God, when all is done, that maketh rich; without this men do but labour in the fire, labour all night and take nothing, trouble themselves to no purpose; all their endeavours are but Arena sine calce, sand without lime, they will not hold together, but, like untempered mortar, fall asunder; there being a curse upon unlawful practices, though men be never so industrious: as you may see in Jehoiachim. {#Jer 22:18,19}

Ver. 9. Because I have given Ar.] The royal city, set upon a hill. {#Nu 21:15,28} God, as a liberal Lord, gives not some small cottage or annuity, for life, to his elder servants, as great men use to do, but bountifully provides for them and theirs to many generations. Who would not serve thee then, O king of nations!

Ver. 10. Many and tall are the Anakims.] And if God cast out those Emims, or terrible ones, before the Moabites, will he not much more cast out these Anakims before the Israelites? Nihil unquam ei negasse credendum est, quem ad vituli hortatur esum. {a}

{a} Jerome.

Ver. 12. As Israel did unto the land.] This and some other parcels, scattered here and there, seem to have been added to Moses's words, whether by Joshua or Ezra, or some other prophet, it much matters not, after the conquest of the land of Canaan.

Ver. 14. As the Lord sware.] His menaces also, as well as his promises, are confirmed by oath. Let no man, therefore, think that they are spoken in terrorem only; but read #Zep 3:5.

Ver. 19. Because I have given it.] {See Trapp on "De 2:5"}

Ver. 20. Zamzummims.] Big and boisterous, bearing down all before them; presumptuous wicked ones they were, and yet they called themselves Rephaims, that is, physicians or preservers: such, indeed, rulers ought to be. {#Isa 3:7} The Greeks, therefore, call a king Αναξ, ab ακος, medela, because he is to be ligator vulnerum, chirurgus, et Reip. medicus -the commonwealth's surgeon and physician. {a} But such were not these Zamzummims, more than in name: το μεν ονομα βιος, &c., as he said of his bow, Thy name is life, but thy use is present death.

{a} Cornel. a Lapid., in #Isa 3:7.

Ver. 23. And the Avims, which dwelt in Hazeroth.] These are ancient things, as it is said in another case, {#1Ch 4:22} such, as whereof there is no record but this extant in the world. Well might that Egyptian priest say to Solon, that wise man of Greece, You Greeks are very babies—γερων δε ελληνην ουκ εστι—neither is there an ancient writer amongst you. {a}

{a} Diod. Sic.

Ver. 26. With words of peace.] So the Romans, by their heralds, sent to those that opposed or wronged them, caduceum et hastam, a proffer of peace first: For if we princes, said our Henry VII, should take every occasion that is offered, the world should never be quiet, but wearied with continual wars.

“ Cuncta prius tentanda, etc.

Truncatur et artus, —

Ut liceat reliquis securum vivere membris.”

Ver. 30. Had hardened his spirit.] Deus quem destruit, dementat. God makes fools of those whom he intends to destroy.

Ver. 37. Only unto the land.] This kindness these Ammonites, in after ages, very evil requited, {#Am 1:13 Jer 49:1} dealing by them as that monster Michael Balbus dealt by the Emperor Leo Armenius, whom he slew the same night that this prince had pardoned and released him.

Chapter 3

Ver. 1. Then we turned.] How pleasant must the continuation of this holy history needs be to every good heart, out of the mouth of Moses! Methinks I see the people’s ears linked to his tongue with golden chains, as the heathens fable of their Hercules. And surely, if King Alphonsus and some others, of whom the physicians despaired, did recover health beyond all expectation, only by reading Livy, Curtius, Aventinus, &c., {a} what may we think may be done by these wholesome words, {b} these healing histories, if rightly regarded.

{a} Joh. Bodin., De Utilita. Histor.

Ver. 2. Fear him not.] Though of a formidable stature. {#De 3:11} The lion is not so fierce as he is painted, saith the Spanish proverb. God will crack the hairy scalp of his enemies. {#Ps 68:21}

Ver. 5. All those cities.] And they were threescore. How well might Moses have been styled πολιπορθης? or, as King Demetrius was, Poliorcetes, the city taker?

Ver. 6. The men, women, and children.] The Hebrew word מֵיָהִם, here rendered men, written with tsere, signifieth dead men: Surely every man in his best estate, or when best underlaid, is altogether vanity, Selah. {#Ps 39:5}

Ver. 11. Og, {a} king of Bashan, remained, / sc., In Bashan; and he seems to have been of the remnant of those Rephaims, whom Chedorlaomer and his company smote in Ashteroth. {#Ge 14:5 Jos 13:12}

Is it not in Rabbath?] Kept for a monument of so mighty and massy a man.

{a} The Jews fable that he escaped in the flood by riding astride on the ark!

Ver. 13. Land of giants.] Such as are said to be in another land, in another life. For "he knoweth not that the giants are there, and that her guests are in the depths of hell." {#Pr 9:18}

Ver. 16. Unto the river Jabbok.] Famous for Jacob's wrestling with God near unto it. {#Ge 32:22}

Ver. 21. So shall the Lord.] God hath, and, therefore, God will, is a strong medium of hope, if not a demonstration of Scripture logic.

Ver. 24. What god is there?] Whether deputed or reputed?

Ver. 25. The good land.] The "glory of all lands." {#Eze 20:6}

Goodly mountain.] Moriah likely, whereon the temple afterwards stood.

Ver. 26. Speak no more.] Christians must be sober in prayer. {#1Pe 4:7} Socrates, a heathen, could say, We should pray for no more but this, that good things may be given us of God, who best knoweth what is best for us to receive.

Chapter 4

Ver. 1. The statutes and the judgments.] By "statutes" we may understand the moral law, by "judgments" the judicial, which was fitted to the Jews: Like, as Solon being asked whether he had given the best laws to the Athenians, answered, The best that they could suffer. As for the ceremonial law, it is called "statutes that were not good," because they commanded neither virtue nor vice in themselves, as one {a} gives the reason.

{a} Mr Weems.

Ver. 2. Ye shall not add.] The Jews have added their deuteroiseis; the Turks their alfurta; the Papists their unwritten verities, which they equalise, at least, to the Holy Scriptures; and so argue them of insufficiency and imperfection. {a}

{a} Οι σοφοι ημων δευτερωσι, Our wise men teach tradition See #1Co 1:20.

Ver. 3. Destroyed them.] Hanging them up in gibbets, as it were, before your eyes, to warn you.

Ver. 4. Are alive.] Your innocency prevailed for your safety, as it usually doth in a common defection.

Ver. 6. For this is your wisdom.] Omnis sapientia hominis in hoc uno est, saith Lactantius, {a} ut Deum cognoscat et colat: hoc nostrum dogma, hac sententia est: To know and do the will of God, this is the whole of man's wisdom. "The heart of the wise man is at his right hand," {#Ec 10:2} as teaching it to put things in practice, and to "prove by experience what that good, and holy, and acceptable will of God is." {#Ro 12:2}

A wise and understanding people.] The Spaniards are said to seem wise and are fools; the French to seem fools and are wise; the Portuguese neither to be wise, nor so much as to seem so; the Italians both to seem wise and to be so. But may not that of the prophet be fitly applied to them all, "Behold, they have rejected the Word of the Lord, and what wisdom is in them?" {#Jer 8:9}

{a} Lactan., Inst., lib. iii, cap. 30.

Ver. 7. Who hath God so nigh unto them.] Yea, this was it that made them so great a nation, who otherwise were but methemisar, few in number. This made Moses so passionately cry out, "Happy art thou, O Israel! who is like unto thee, O people, saved by the Lord!" {#De 33:29}

Ver. 8. So righteous.] {See Trapp on "De 1:1"}

Ver. 9. Only take heed.] Cavebis autem, si pavebis.

Lest thou forget.] Eaten bread is soon forgotten.

Teach them thy sons.] A special help against forgetfulness; yea, this is the best art of memory. Of all things God cannot abide to be forgotten.

Ver. 10. Specially the day.] A high favour, and most honourably mentioned. {#Ne 9:13}

Ver. 12. Ye saw no similitude.] Numa the Roman lawgiver would not permit any image, whether painted or carved, to be placed in their temples, eo quod nefas duceret praestantiora deterioribus adsimulare, because he held it unlawful to set forth a better thing by a worse, &c. Hence it was that the Roman temples had no pictures in them for a hundred and seventy years after the building of that city. Irenaeus reproves the heretics called Gnostici, for that they carried about the image of Christ, made in Pilate's time, after his own proportion; for "to whom will ye liken God? or what likeness will ye compare unto him?" {#Isa 40:18}

Ver. 14. Statutes and judgments.] {See Trapp on "De 1:1"}

Ver. 15. Take ye therefore good heed.] These many cautions note our proneness to this evil above others. This appeareth somewhat in children so delighted with pictures, and in that idolomania of these Jews, of the eastern churches, and of the synagogue of Rome.

Ver. 16. The likeness of male or female.] As the blind Ethnics did, concluding their petitions with that general, Dii, Deaeque omnes. {a}

{a} Servius.

Ver. 17. The likeness of any beast.] Which was a piece of the Egyptian madness. Israel, by being there, had learned to set up one calf, Jeroboam two.

Ver. 18. The likeness of any fish.] As was Dagon, the god of the Philistines, whence he had his name.

Ver. 19. All the host of heaven.] Called the queen of heaven. {#Jer 7:18}

Should be driven.] Or, Drawn by the enticement of the devil, who is ειδωλοχαρης, saith Synisius, a great imagemonger; or by the seduction of others, or of thine own evil heart; for nemo sibi de suo palpet: quisque sibi Satan est, saith a father.

Which the Lord thy God hath divided.] And shall we fight against God, as Jehu did against Jehoram, with his own servants, nay, with those things which he hath given us for common servants to us all?

Ver. 20. But the Lord.] Deliverance commands obedience: Servati sumus ut serviamus, Ver. 21. And swore that I should not.] So that you have a privilege above me; only beware how you provoke him, as I did, through unbelief.

Ver. 22. But I must die.] This was a sore affliction to this good man, and is therefore so often mentioned. Cato Major also died three years before the destruction of Carthage, which he had so vehemently urged, and would so gladly have outlived. {a}

{a} Plut.

Ver. 24. For the Lord thy God.] And should therefore be served truly, that there be no halting; and totally, that there be no halving.

{#Heb 12:28,29}

Ver. 25. And shalt have remained long.] So that thou thinkest there is no removing thee, thou art so rooted and riveted. Nicephorus Phocas having built a mighty wall, heard from heaven, Though thou built as high as heaven, ενδον το κακον, ευαλωτος η πολις, Sin is within, all will be lost.

Ver. 28. And there ye shall serve gods.] As ye have made a match with mischief, so ye shall have enough of it. Ephraim is joined to idols, &c. See #Ac 7:42.

Ver. 29. But if from thence.] Sweet and sour make the best sauce. Promises and menaces mixed, soonest operate upon the heart. The Sun of Righteousness loves not to set in a cloud; nor the God of consolation to leave his children comfortless.

Ver. 30. Even in the latter days.] This is by some understood of the Messiah's days, which are the latter times of the world; {#Ho 3:5 1Co 10:11} and they believe that here is pointed at the great and last conversion of the Jews.

Ver. 32. For ask now of the days.] Historiae sunt fidae monitricae; great good use is to be made of history, -this holy history especially, whereof every word is pure, precious, and profitable.

Ver. 37. Therefore he chose.] He chose for his love, and then loved for his choice: after God's example, deligas quem diligas.

Ver. 39. That the Lord he is God in heaven.] A philosopher {a} could say, that God is a circle, whose centre is everywhere, whose circumference is nowhere; ubi est Deus? quid dixi miser? sed ubi non est? Where is God? or rather, where is not God? He is higher than heaven, lower than hell, broader than the sea, longer than the earth. Nusquam est et ubique est, quia nec abest ulli, nec ullo capitur loco. {b} He is nowhere, and yet everywhere; far from no place, and yet not contained in any place.

{a} Empedocles.

{b} Bernard.

Ver. 42. That thou mayest prolong thy days.] Hence some Lutherans {a} have gathered that God hath not determined the set period of man's days, but that it is in men's power to lengthen or shorten them. But this is against #Job 7:1 14:14 Ec 2:3 Isa 38:5,15. Stat sua cuique dies. Our hairs are numbered, much more our days.

That the slayer.] {See Trapp on "Nu 35:6"} {See Trapp on "Nu 35:7"} &c.

{a} Heming et alii.

Ver. 44. And this is the law.] That is, This that followeth in the next chapter, whereunto these verses serve for a preface.

Chapter 5

Ver. 1. And keep, and do them.] The difference between divinity and other sciences, is, that it is not enough to learn, but we must keep and do it; as lessons of music must be practised, and a copy not read only, but acted. "Man goeth forth to his work and to his labour until the evening." {#Ps 104:23} He must arise from the bed of sin, and go forth out of himself, as out of his house to his work and to his labour; "working out his salvation with fear and trembling," {#Php 2:12} until the evening, till the sun of his life be set.

Ver. 2. God made a covenant with us.] We also have the covenant, the seals, minister, &c. But, alas, are not these blessings amongst us, as the ark was among the Philistines, rather as prisoners than as privileges, rather in testimonium et ruinam quam salutem?

Ver. 3. With our fathers, / i.e., With our fathers only. Or if it be understood of all the foregoing patriarchs, then it is to be expounded by #Ga 3:17.

Ver. 4. Face to face, / i.e., Openly, and immediately, by himself, and not by a messenger or mediator. Prosper's conceit was, that the Israelites were called Iudaei, because they received ius Dei.

Ver. 5. I stood between the Lord, / sc., After the decalogue delivered by God himself out of the fire. For of that he might say, as once Joseph did to his brethren, "Behold, your eyes see that it is my mouth that speaketh unto you." {#Ge 45:12} And as Paul did to Philemon, {#Phm 1:19} "I Paul," &c., so I the Lord "have written it with mine hand, I will" require "it."

Ver. 6. I am the Lord, &c. {See Trapp on "Ex 20:1"} &c It is well observed by a reverend writer, {a} that the two tables of the law are in their object answerable to the two natures of Christ. For God is the object of the one, man of the other: and as they meet together in the person of Christ, so must they be united in the affections of a Christian.

{a} Mr Ley's Pattern of Piety.

Ver. 12. Keep the Sabbath day.] In this repetition of the law some things are transposed, and some words changed, haply to confute that superstitious opinion of the Jews, who were ready to dream of miraculous mysteries in every letter.

Ver. 15. And remember that thou.] It being a figure of our redemption by Christ, and so a fit subject for Sabbath meditations.

Ver. 18. Neither shalt thou commit.] Or, And thou shalt not commit, &c., and so in the following laws; to teach us that the law is but one copulative, {a} as the schools speak. For the sanction indeed, it is disjunctive; but for the injunction, it is copulative. The sanction is, Either do this, or die: but the injunction is not, Either do this or that, but Do this and that too. See #Mt 23:2,3 Eze 18:10,11,13 Jas 2:10. Do everything, as well as anything: to leave one sin and not another, is, with Benhadad, to recover of one disease, and to die of another.

{a} Lex tota est una copulativa.

Ver. 22. These words the Lord spake.] If human laws are εὐρημάτων θεῶν, the invention of the gods, as Demosthenes calls them, how much rather this perfect law of God that needs no alteration or addition?

Ver. 23. Even all the heads of your tribes.] These are called "all Israel," {#De 5:1} as being their representatives.

Ver. 25. Why should we die?] But why should they fear to die, since they had seen that day, that God doth talk with man, and he liveth? It is answered, that they looked upon their present safety as a wonder, but feared what would follow upon such an interview, if continued. And indeed it is still the work of the law to scare men, and to drive them to seek for a Mediator.

We shall die.] If God himself should speak to us, and from heaven, his stillest rhetoric would be too loud for us.

Ver. 27. We will hear it and do it.] This is well said if as well done. Many can think of nothing but working themselves to life, spinning a thread of their own to climb up to heaven by. But that will never be.

Chapter 6

Ver. 1. Now these are the commandments.] Moses having repeated the decalogue, begins here to explain it: and first, the first of the ten, in this present chapter: that first commandment being such, as that therein the keeping of all the other nine is enjoined, as Luther rightly observeth. {a}

{a} Primo praecepto reliquorum omnium observantia praecipitur. — Luth.

Ver. 2. That thou mightest fear the Lord.] "Fear God and keep his commandments." {#Ec 12:13} "Fear the Lord and depart from evil," {#Pr 16:6} "this is the beginning," {#Pr 1:7} and "end of all" {#Ec 12:13} This is the whole of man, or as some read it, This is the whole man {a} (ibidem). It is a problem in Aristotle, Why men are credited more than any other creatures? The answer is, Man alone reverenceth God. {b} Deum si quis parum metuit, valde contemnit: huius qui non memorat beueficientiam, auget iniuriam: Not to fear God is to slight him; as not to praise him is to wrong him, saith an ancient.

{a} Hoc est enim totus homo.

{b} οπι θεους νομιζει μονον.—Fulgentius.

Ver. 3. That it may be well with thee.] Respect may be had to the recompense of reward. We may make it our scope, our aim, {σκοπουντων, #2Co 4:18} though not our highest aim; Moses cast an eye when he was on his journey, {απεβλεπε, #Heb 11:26} he stole a look from glory, and got fresh encouragement.

Ver. 4. The Lord our God is one Lord.] One in Three, and Three in One. Here are three words answering the three persons; and the middle word, Our God, deciphering fitly the second, who assumed our nature, as Galatinus well observeth. Echad, One, may show the unity of essence in this plurality of persons. Others take notice that the last letter of this first word, "hear," is extraordinarily great in the Hebrew, as calling for utmost heed and attention: and so is the last letter in the word rendered "One." {See Trapp on "Ex 34:14"} This last letter, daleth, which usually stands for four, signifieth, say the Hebrews, that this one God shall be worshipped in the four corners of the earth. Therefore whensoever, in their synagogues, they sing or say these word of Moses, they turn their heads to the four corners of the world.

Ver. 5. And thou shalt love.] {See Trapp on "Mt 22:37"} This shows the impossibility of keeping the law perfectly: Ita ut frustra sint sophistae, &c. The true Christian counts all that he can do for God but a little of that much he owes him, and that he could gladly betem him. But what a wretched monk was that that died with these words in his mouth, Redde mihi aeternam vitam quam debes; Lord, pay me heaven, for thou owest it!

Ver. 6. Shall be in thy heart.] A Bible men should get stamped in their heads, and another in their hearts, as David had. {#Ps 119:11} Knowledge that swims in the head only, and sinks not down into the heart, does no more good than rain in the middle region doth; or than the unicorn's horn in the unicorn's head.

Ver. 7. And thou shalt teach them diligently.] Heb., Thou shalt whet or sharpen them, as one would sharpen a stake when he drives it into the ground: or as one would set an edge upon a knife, by oft going over the whetstone. A learned Hebrician observes a near affinity between the word here used and another word that signifies to repeat, and inculcate the same thing. {a} Innuit studium et diligentiam, qua pueris praecepta Dei ineulari debent, saith Vatablus. Children should be taught the principles that they understand not: (1.) That they might have occasion much to think of the things that are so much and commonly urged; (2.) That if any extremity should come, they might have certain seeds of comfort and direction to guide and support them; (3.) That their condemnation might be more just, if having these so much in their mouths, they should not get something of them into their hearts.

{a} Shanan, acuere, et Shanah, repetere, affines sunt.

Ver. 8. And thou shalt bind them.] {See Trapp on "Mt 23:5"}

Ver. 9. And on thy gates.] In a foolish imitation whereof, the English Jesuits beyond sea have written on their church and college doors in great golden letters, Iesu, Iesu, converte Angliam. Fiat, Fiat. Habent et vespae favos; Wasps also have their honeycombs. There was within a mile of Prague a famous monastery, in the walls whereof the whole Bible was most exquisitely written in letters of gold.

Ver. 11. When thou shalt have eaten and be full.] Saturity oft breeds security; fulness, forgetfulness. The best, when full fed, are apt to wax wanton and will be dipping their fingers sometimes in the devil's sauce: Ipsis opibus lascivire coepit ecclesia. {a} The moon never suffers eclipse but at the full, and that by the earth's interposition. The young mules, when they have sucked, turn up their heels and kick at the dam.

{a} Platina.

Ver. 12. Lest thou forget the Lord.] Should we, with the fed hawk, forget our master? Or being full with God's benefits, like the moon, be then most removed from the sun, from whom she hath all her light? See #Pr 30:8,9. Postquam locupletati sumus, saith Luther, hanc odiosam particulam addimus, Ego feci; We are no sooner grown rich, but we are apt to utter that ugly word, This I may thank myself for.

Ver. 13. And shalt swear by his name.] An oath rightly taken, is a piece of our holy service to God, and may well be reckoned amongst our prayers and other pious performances.

Ver. 14. Thou shalt not go] {See Trapp on "Ex 34:14"}

Ver. 15. A jealous God amongst you.] Let the gods of the heathens be good fellows, our God will endure no co-rivals. He is both a jealous God, and is ever amongst us, so that our faults, our furtas, cannot be hid from his eyes. Now he that dares sin, though he know God looks on, is more impudent in sinning than was Absalom, when he spread a tent upon the top of the house, and went in to his father's concubines in the sight of all Israel and of the sun.

Ver. 16. Ye shall not tempt the Lord.] By prescribing to God, and "limiting the Holy One of Israel," as these men did at Massah. {#Ps 78:41} {See Trapp on "Mt 4:7"} {See Trapp on "Ac 5:9"} {See Trapp on "Ex 17:2"}

Ver. 17. Ye shall diligently keep.] So #Ps 119:4. Howbeit the most that David could do towards it, was to wish well to it. {#De 6:5}

Ver. 20. What mean the testimonies?] Here we have a brief catechism, which is a course and practice of singular profit. Luther scorned not to profess himself discipulum catechismi: and the Jesuits, by the example of our churches, do catechise their novices.

Chapter 7

Ver. 1. And hast cast out many nations.] God did all: "He cast out the heathen before them, and divided them an inheritance by line," &c. {#Ps 78:55} Hence Josephus calls the commonwealth of Israel Θεοκρατειαν. Sic, Regnum Angliae, Regnum Dei. {a}

{a} Polydor. Virgil.

Ver. 2. Nor show mercy unto them.] Their iniquity was now full; {#Ge 15:16} they filled the land with filthiness, from corner to corner; {#Ezr 9:11} they were ripe for the sickle, ready for the vintage of God's wrath, which now came upon them to the utmost.

Ver. 3. Neither shalt thou make marriages with them.] As neither with any other that were idolatots. {#Ezr 9:1,2}

Ver. 4. For they will turn away thy son.] As the foreign women did Solomon. {#1Ki 11:2-4} What is the reason the Pope will not dispense in Spain or Italy, if a Papist marry a Protestant, yet here they will, but in hope to draw more to them? The tyrant Mezentius tied the living bodies of his captives to the dead; but the dead did not revive by the living, the living rather putrified by the dead. {a}

{a} Corpora corporibus iungebat mortua vivis. -Virgil.

Ver. 5. And break down their images.] Cromwell did notable service here in Henry VIII's time, by discovering the knavery of Popish priests, and pulling down those images and monuments of idolatry, the rood of grace, the blood of Hales, &c. And in Edward VI's days, the same day the Popish pictures were publicly burnt at Paul's Cross, the great victory was gotten by the English at Musselburgh field in Scotland. {a}

{a} Act. and Mon.

Ver. 6. For thou art a holy people.] viz., With a federal holiness; which yet without an inherent holiness in the heart and life, will profit a man no more than it did Dives in the flames that Abraham called him son; or Judas, that Christ called him friend. An empty title yields but an empty comfort at last.

Ver. 8. But because he loved you.] Lo, he loved you, because he loved you. This may seem idem per idem, a woman's reason. But it excellently shows the ground of God's love to be wholly in himself.

Ver. 9. The faithful God.] The God of Amen. {#Ps 31:6} "The Amen, the faithful and true witness," {#Re 3:14} that "will not suffer his faithfulness to fail, nor alter the thing that is gone out of his lips," {#Ps 89:33} all his precepts, predictions, promises, menaces, being the issue of a most faithful and righteous will, void of the least insincerity or falsehood. "Thou spakest also with thy mouth, and hast fulfilled it with thy hand, as it is this day," saith Solomon in his prayer. {#IKi 8:24} Neither could ever any day or age produce one instance to the contrary. The promises are ancient, {#Tit 1:1,2} and yet they never failed; nor the menaces. {#Zep 3:5}

Ver. 10. He will not be slack.] Slow he may be, but sure he will be. Supplicii tarditatem gravitate compensat; {a} The higher he holds his hand, the heavier he will strike. Aries quo altius erigitur, hoc figit fortius. Arcus quo retrahitur longius, hoc iaculatur ulterius. Aqua quae aegre calefit, aegre denus frigescit, &c.

{a} Val, Max.

Ver. 13. And he will love thee.] So he did before, {#De 7:8} but so he will continue to do. See a like expression in #1Jo 5:13, "These things write I unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God, that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God."

Ver. 14. Thou shalt be blessed.] There is a μυριομακαριστης in godliness. {#1Ti 6:6} {See Trapp on "1Ti 6:6"}

Ver. 15. And the Lord.] Health is a sweet mercy; Non est vivere, sed valere vita, {a} A sickly life is a lifeless life. A healthy body is the reward of piety. {#Pr 3:8}

{a} Martial.

Ver. 20. Send the hornet.] {See Trapp on "Ex 23:28"}

Ver. 21. For the Lord thy God is amongst you.] And how many do you reckon him for? as Antigonus said once to his soldiers, when they feared their enemies as more in number.

Ver. 24. Thou shalt destroy their name.] It shall be either buried in oblivion, or if mentioned, it shall be but as the stirring of a sepulchre, which thereby stinketh the more. Solomon reckoneth it for a mercy to a wicked man, when he is buried, to be forgotten in his city. {#Ec 8:10}

Ver. 25. Lest thou be snared.] Lest it prove as the gold of Toulouse, {a} baneful to all that fingered it; or the sepulchre of Semiramis, which they that rifled, expecting to find treasure, met with a deadly poison.

{a} Aurum Tolosanum.

Chapter 8

Ver. 1. All the commandments.] "All" is but a little word, but of large extent. There are magnalia legis, and minutula legis; Look to both the greater and the lesser things of the law. {#Mt 23:23}

Ver. 2. To know what was, / i.e., To discover and make known to thyself and others. {a} When fire is put to green wood, there comes out abundance of watery stuff that before appeared not. When the pond is empty, the mud, filth, and toads come to light. The snow drift covers many a muckhill; so doth prosperity many a rotten heart. It is easy to wade in a warm bath; and every bird can sing in a sunshine day, &c. Hard weather tries what health, afflictions try what sap we have, what solidity. Withered leaves soon fall off in windy weather; rotten boughs quickly break with heavy weights, &c.

{a} Tentat ut sciat, i.e., ut scire nos faciat. — Aug.

Ver. 3. And he humbled thee.] Humbled they were, many of them, but not humble: low, but not lowly. Perdiderunt fructum afflictionum, &c. {a}

That he might make thee know.] We never know so well, how good, sweet, and seasonable the Lord is, as when under the cross. Vexatio dat intellecture.

That man cloth not live.] {See Trapp on "Mt 4:4"}

{a} August.

Ver. 4. Thy raiment weaved not old.] It was not the worse for wearing, but grew as their bodies did, as some are of opinion. They needed not to trouble themselves with those anxious thoughts of heathens, what they should eat, drink, or put on. Never was prince served and supplied in such state as these Israelites were.

Ver. 5. That as a man chasteneth his son.] This is reckoned here as a high favour. So Job accounts it, {#Job 7:17,18} and Paul describes it, {#Heb 12:7,8} and Jeremiah prays for it. {#Jer 10:24}

Ver. 6. Therefore thou shalt keep.] As good children are the better for beating, and do gather under the wing of a frowning father.

Ver. 7. That spring out of valleys.] Quantum miraculi sit in admiranda illa fontium perennitate, nemo, credo, Philosophorum satis explicare hactenus potuit. The perennity of springs is a just wonder, and not far from a miracle.

Ver. 8. A land of wheat and barley.] Sumen totius orbis. Strabo basely slandereth this fat and fertile country as dry and barren; but Rabshakeh {#2Ki 18:32} and Tacitus tell us otherwise. The testimony here given of it is above all exception.

Ver. 9. Thou shalt not lack anything in it.] Of the Island of Cyprus it is said, that it sendeth forth great abundance of commodities to other countries, of whom it craveth no help again. {a} It was anciently called Macaria, the Blessed. Marcellinus, to show the fertility of it, saith that Cyprus aboundeth with such plenty of all things, that without the help of any other foreign country, it is, of itself, able to build a tall ship from the keel to the topsail, and so put it to sea, furnished of all things needful. Of Egypt also it is reported, that it is so fruitful a country, Ut cunctos mortales pascere, deos ipsos excipere hospitio salva re posse gloriaretur. It was anciently called publicum orbis horreum, the world's great barn; as some foreign writers have termed our country the court of Queen Ceres, the granary of the western world, the Fortunate Island, the Paradise of Pleasure, and Garden of God. The worst is, that as Aristotle was wont to tax his Athenians, that whereas they were famous for two things, the best land, and the best laws, frumentis uterentur, legibus nequaquam, they abused their plenty, and lived lawlessly; {b} so it may be said of us, that we live in God's good land, but not by God's good laws.

{a} Turk. Hist.

{b} Laert, lib. v. cap. 1.

Ver. 10. Then thou shalt bless.]

“ Rarm fumaut foelicibus arm.”

Solomon's wealth did him more harm than ever his wisdom did him good. But that should not have been. Solomon's altar was four times as large as Moses's, {#Ex 27:1} to teach us, that as our peace and prosperity is more than others, so should our service in a due proportion.

Ver. 11. Beware that thou forget not the Lord.] By casting his words behind thee, {#Ps 50:17} and not considering the operation of his hands. {#Isa 5:12} Fulness breeds this forgetfulness, laden bodies leaden minds.

Ver. 12. And hast built goodly houses.] Haec sunt quae nos invitos faciunt mori. These are the things that make us loath to die, said the Emperor Charles V, to the Duke of Venice, who had showed him the stateliness of his palace and princely furniture.

Ver. 13. When thy silver and thy gold.] Which what is it else but white and red mould, the guts and garbage of the earth? Wonder it is surely, that treading upon it we should so much esteem it. Well, if silver and gold be our happiness, then it is in the earth, and so, which is strange, nearer hell, which the Scripture placeth in the deep, than heaven, which all know to be aloft; and so nearer the devil than God.

Ver. 14. Then thy heart be lifted up.] The devil will easily blow up this blab in the rich man's heart, whose usual diseases are earthly mindedness and high mindedness. Prosperity makes men proud, secure, impatient. {#Jer 22:21} In rest they contract much rust.

Ver. 15. Who led thee through, &c.] Good turns aggravate unkindnesses, and our offences are increased by our obligations.

Ver. 16. Who fed thee.] God will give his people Pluviam escatilem, et petram aquatilem. {a} He will set the flint abroad, and rain corn from heaven, rather than they shall pine and perish. {#Ps 78:20,24}

{a} Tertul., De Patient.

Ver. 17. My power.] As that great dragon of Egypt, lying at ease in the swollen waters of his Nile, saith, "My river is mine own, and I have made it for myself." {#Eze 29:3 Hab 1:16}

Ver. 19. Ye shall surely perish.] Idolatry is a land desolating sin. {#Jud 5:8}

Chapter 9

Ver. 1. Hear, O Israel.] It was all their business at present to hear, and yet he excites them so to do by an Oyez, as it were. He knew their dulness, and the din that corruption maketh in the best hearts; how soon sated men are with divine discourses, and how little heed they give to the most wholesome exhortations. Let a child be never so busy about his lesson, if but a bird fly by, he must needs look where he lights; so, &c.

Ver. 2. The children of Anak.] Hence seems to come the Greek word, Αναξ, for a king; for these great men were looked upon as so many little kings. {See Trapp on "Ge 6:4"}

Ver. 3. As a consuming fire.] The force whereof is violent and irresistible. "Who is able to stand before this holy Lord God? Woe unto us! who shall deliver us?" &c., said those crest-fallen Philistines at the sight of the ark. {#Isa 4:8} So, "The sinners in Zion are afraid; fearfulness hath surprised the hypocrites: who among us," say they, "shall dwell with this devouring fire?"—meaning God; -"who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?" {#Isa 33:14}

Ver. 4. For my righteousness.] We are all apt to weave a web of righteousness of our own, to spin a thread of our own to climb up to heaven by, to set a price upon ourselves above the market, to think great thoughts of ourselves, and to seek great things for ourselves. Caelum gratis non accipiam, saith one merit monger, I will not have heaven for nothing; and, Redde mihi aeternam vitam quam debes, saith another; Give me heaven, for thou owest it me. How blasphemous is that direction of the Papists to dying men, Coniunge, Domine, obsequium meum cum omnibus quae Christus passus est prome: Join, Lord, my righteousness with Christ's righteousness! How much better was it with those ancient Papists here in England, to whom, upon their deathbeds, the ordinary instruction appointed to be given was, that they should look to come to glory, not by their own merits, but alone by the virtue and merit of the passion of our Lord Jesus Christ; that they should place their whole confidence in his death only, and in no other thing! ^{a} &c. Those justiciaries, that seek to be saved by their works, Luther fitly calls the devil's martyrs; they suffer much, and take much pains to go to hell, and by their much boasting, Haec ego feci, haec ego feci, they become no better than Faeces, saith he wittily. It is a good observation of a reverend divine, ^{b} that the Church in the Canticles is nowhere described by the beauty of her hands or fingers. Christ concealeth the mention of her hands—that is, of her works—(1.) Because he had rather his Church should abound in good works in silence, than boast of them, especially when they are wanting, as Rome doth; (2.) Because it is he alone that "worketh all our works for us." ^{#Isa 26:12 Ho 14:8}

^{a} Dr Ussher, Ser. on #Eph 4:13.

^{b} Mr Cotton, on Cantic., p. 217.

Ver. 6. Understand therefore.] We are wondrous apt to wind ourselves into the fool's paradise of a sublime dotage, upon our own worth and righteousness; otherwise, what need so many words here to one and the same purpose? The Scripture doth not use to kill flies with beetles, to cleave straws with wedges of iron, to spend many words where is no need.

Ver. 7. Ye have been rebellious against the Lord.] Nothing is so hard as to be humbled; for man is a proud, cross creature, that would be something at home, whatever he is abroad; and comes not down without a great deal of difficulty. Hence it is, that Moses so sets it on here, and with one knock after another drives this nail home to the head, that he might cripple their iron sinews, bring their stiff necks to the yoke of God's obedience, and make them know that he was Jehovah, when he had "wrought with them for his name's sake, not according to their wicked ways, nor according to their corrupt doings." {#Eze 20:43,44,36:31,32}

Ver. 8. The Lord was angry.] God is said to be angry when he doeth as an angry man useth to do: viz., (1.) Chide; (2.) Smite: revenge being the next effect of anger.

Ver. 9. When I was gone up into the mount.] Sins are much aggravated by the circumstances; and every sin should swell as a toad in our eyes: we should bring them out, as they took the vessels of the temple, {#Ezr 8:34} "by number and by weight." See #Le 16:21; "all their transgressions in all their sins."

Ver. 10. {See Trapp on "Ex 31:18"}

Ver. 12. Arise] From off thy knees; the petitioner's posture. St James, they say, {a} had knees as hard as camels' knees, with continual kneeling: and Hilarion was found dead in his oratory with knees bent, eyes and hands lifted up. {b} Father Latimer, during his imprisonment, was so constant and instant in prayer, that oftentimes he was not able to rise without help. {c}

{a} Euseb.

{b} Jerome.

{c} Act. and Mon., fol. 1579.

Ver. 14. Let me alone.] {See Trapp on "Ex 32:10"}

Ver. 15. So I returned.] Yet not till he had first prayed and prevailed. {#Ex 32:1,14}

Ver. 16. Ye had turned aside quickly.] Levitare prorsus desultoria. Apostates have religionem ephemeram, being constant in nothing but in their inconstancy.

Ver. 17. And cast them.] {See Trapp on "Ex 32:19"}

Ver. 18. Forty days and forty nights.] This some understand of a second fasting so long together, after the people had set up the golden calf. See #De 9:25.

Ver. 19. For I was afraid.] Moses was more troubled for the people than the people were for themselves; so was Daniel for Nebuchadnezzar, {#Da 4:10} and Nahum for the Chaldeans. {#Na 3:16}

Ver. 22. And at Taberah.] Catalogues should be kept of our sins, and oft perused, yea, though they be pardoned, that we may renew our repentance, and keep our souls humble, supple, and soluble.

Ver. 24. You have been rebellious.] Here he repeats the former charge, {#De 9:7} which now he had sufficiently proved against them: we must object no more against any man than we are able to make good. If Erasmus had lived to these days, very shame would have crammed those words of his down his throat: Ubicunque regnat Lutherus, ibi literature est interitus: duo tantum quaerunt, censure et uxorem. {a} Wheresoever Luther's doctrine takes place, learning is little set by; all the care is for a wife, and for wealth. Os durum!

{a} Erasmus, Ep. ad Bilibald.

Ver. 25. Thus I fell down.] The three former verses come in by a parenthesis. Here he returns again to the history of his interceding for them the second time.

Ver. 26. I prayed.] And he had a hard tug of it; but prayer is the best lever at a dead lift.

Ver. 29. Yet they are thy people.] In praying to God we must "fill our mouths with arguments," and urge them lustily.

Chapter 10

Ver. 1. Like unto the first.] Which Moses had broken; to show how we in our nature had broken the law, and could not be saved by the keeping of it. This Christ, our true Moses, repairs again, writing the law, not in tables of stone, but in the heart of believers, and enabling them in some good measure to keep it, {#Joh 1:17} walking, as Luther phraseth it, in the heaven of the promise, but in the earth of the law; that in respect of believing, this of obeying.

Ver. 2. Which thou brakest.] {See Trapp on "Ex 34:1"}

Ver. 3. And I made an ark.] In its use far beyond that Persian casket embroidered with gold and pearl, which Alexander reserved for Homer's Iliad.

Ver. 4. Out of the midst of the fire.] The law was given in fire; it is "a law of fire," {#De 33:2} given by God, who is "a consuming fire," {#Heb 12:29} and hath a tribunal of fire, {#Eze 1:27} and shall plead with transgressors in flames of fire; {#Isa 66:15,16} the trial of our works shall be by fire. {#1Co 3:13} "Let us therefore have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably, with reverence and godly fear." It is the apostle's use. {#Heb 12:28}

Ver. 5. And put the tables in the ark.] Which was thenceforth called "the ark of the testimony."

Ver. 6. And the children of Israel.] Here are some seeming contradictions betwixt this place and that of #Nu 33:31,32. But though they seem to be, as the accusers of Christ, never a one speaking like the other, yet, if we well observe the text, and consult with interpreters, we shall find them, like Nathan and Bathsheba, both speaking the same things.

Ver. 7. A land of rivers of water.] A rare thing in a dry desert. Lysimachus sold his crown for a less matter.

Ver. 8. At that time,] viz., While they were yet at Mount Sinai; for the two former verses are inserted by a parenthesis.

The Lord separated the tribe of Levi.] This setting up of the ministry amongst them is reckoned as a sign of God's singular love to them. And so it is to us, no doubt, albeit a late pamphleteer {a} makes that sacred and tremendous function of the ministry to be as mere an imposture, as very a mystery of iniquity, as arrant a juggle, as the Papacy itself. Now the Lord rebuke thee, Satan.

To stand before the Lord.] As also the angels do. {#Lu 1:19}

{a} The Compassionate Samaritan.

Ver. 12. What doth the Lord thy God require of thee?] Beneficium postulat officium; mercy calls for duty.

Require of thee.] Or, as some render it, Request of thee; the word here used signifieth, petere more mendicorum, to crave as beggars do; and so it is used in #Ps 109:10.

But to fear the Lord.] This is the totum hominis {#Ec 12:13} the bonum hominis {#Mic 6:8} the unum necessarium {#Lu 10:42} the primum quaerendum {#Mt 6:33}

Ver. 14. Behold the heaven and the heaven of heavens.] Not the air and sky only, the visible heaven, but the third heaven, whereof no natural knowledge can be had, nor any help by human arts, geometry, optics, &c. For it is neither aspectable nor movable.

The earth also.] So that there was no necessity of pitching upon thee for his peculiar, since he had choice enough before him.

Ver. 15. To love them.] Because he loved them, as #De 7:7,8. {See Trapp on "De 7:8"}

Ver. 16. Circumcise therefore.] Deus iubendo iuvat. Set about this work in God's strength, and pray that the heaven may answer the earth. {#Ho 2:21} For it is a work that must be done "without hands." {#Col 2:11} Beg of God to thrust his holy hand into our bosom, and to pull off that filthy foreskin; urge him with his promise; {#De 30:6} doubt not of his power: lex iubet, gratia iuvat, {a} &c.

{a} August, in Exod., quaest. 55.

Ver. 17. Is God of gods.] And will be served like himself.

Ver. 19. Love ye therefore the stranger.] And to show yourselves the friends of God. For idem velle et idem nolle, ea demum vera amictia est. {a} Friends are like-minded.

{a} Cicero.

Ver. 20. To him shalt thou cleave, and swear by his name.] Cleaving will call for swearing. {#Ac 11:23} Broken bones must have strong bands to close them fast again. A crazy piece of building must be cramped with iron bars, to keep it up from tottering.

Ver. 21. He is thy praise.] Thy praised One, {#Ps 18:3} or, Thy praiseworthy One. He is also thy chief glory and praise amongst all nations, who shall admire thy happiness in such a God.

Chapter 11

Ver. 1. Therefore thou shalt love the Lord.] Cos amoris amor. Ara amorem illius, saith Bernard. Not to love them that so loved us, is to be worse than a publican, more hard-hearted than a Jew. {#Mt 5:46} That the three children burned not in the furnace was a miracle, {#Da 3:25} so it is that men so favoured love not God.

Ver. 2. And which have not seen.]

“ Segnius irritant animos demissa per aures, Quam quae sunt oculis commissa fidelibus”—
Horat.

He speaks unto them as to eye-witnesses; and those that have such evidence and self-experience are usually more affected than those that have things by hearsay only. "Mine eye affects my heart." {#La 3:51}

Ver. 4. Hath destroyed them unto this day,] i.e., Hath so destroyed and dismayed them, that to this day we hear no more of them: as the Romans so quailed and quelled King Attalus, that he made a law that none of his successors should make war with that state for ever.

Ver. 5. And what he did unto you.] A diary should be diligently kept of what God does for us, {#Ps 102:18} for the help of our slippery memories, and the stirring up of our dull hearts to a contention in godliness.

Ver. 6. Dathan and Abiram.] Who were Reubenites; and therefore discontented, say the Jewish doctors, because the birthright was taken from Reuben, for his incest, and given to Judah and Joseph. Korah is here, though not mentioned yet, neither excluded nor excused.

Ver. 9. And that ye may prolong.] {See Trapp on "De 4:40"}

Ver. 10. And wateredst it with thy foot.] Fetching and carrying water, called therefore the water of their feet, as our life is called, "the life of our hands," {#Isa 57:10} because maintained with the labour of our hands.

Ver. 11. And drinketh water of the rain of heaven.] God crowning the year with his goodness, and his paths dropping fatness. {#Ps 65:10-12} In the Hebrew it is, Thy chariot-wheel tracks; for the clouds are God's chariots, {#Ps 104:3} in which water is bound. {#Job 26:8} How they are upheld, and why they fall here and now, we know not, and wonder. The Egyptians used in a profane mockery to tell other nations, that if God should forget to rain, they might chance to starve for it; they thought the rain was of God, but not their river Nile. See #Eze 29:3,9 Isa 19:5,6.

Ver. 12. Which the Lord thy God careth for.] Deus sic curat universa, quasi singula; sic singula, quasi sola. {a}

From the beginning of the year.] How easy were it for God to starve us all, by denying us a harvest or two!

{a} August.

Ver. 13. And it shall come to pass.] This passage of Scripture following, the Jews read daily in their families, as Maimonides reporteth.

Ver. 14. That I will give you the rain.] Rain God gives to all by a providence, {#Ac 14:17 Job 38:26} but to his Israel by virtue of a promise, whereby they might "live, not as by bread only, but as by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

Ver. 16. That your heart be not deceived.] Having first deceived itself; for "the heart is deceitful above all things," {#Jer 17:9} and may say to many, as the heart of Apollonius the tyrant seemed to say to him, who dreamed one night, that he was flayed by the Scythians, and boiled in a caldron, and that his heart spake to him out of the kettle and said, Εγω σοι τουτων αιτια, It is I that have drawn thee to all this. {a} Those in hell cry so.

{a} Plut.

Ver. 17. And he shut up the heaven.] The keys of heaven, of the heart, of the womb, and of the grave, God keeps and carries under his own belt, as we may say.

Ver. 18. In your heart.] Yea, upon your heart, {#Isa 47:7 57:11} so as they may sink thereinto, {#Lu 9:44} as the best balm cast into water sinks to the bottom.

Ver. 19. Teach them your children.] {See Trapp on "De 6:7"}

Ver. 21. As the days of heaven,] i.e., As long as the world standeth. Hence haply we may conceive hope of the repentance of the Jews, and their re-establishment in this Promised Land.

Ver. 26. A blessing and a curse.] With the way to either, that if ye miscarry ye may have none to blame but yourselves. For oft it falls out, that whereas "the foolishness of man perverteth his way, his heart fretteth against the Lord." {#Pr 19:3}

Ver. 29. Put the blessing upon mount Gerizim.] That is, Pronounce it there. See #Jos 8:33. Hence the Samaritans built their temple on this mount as a blessed place, and there worshipped they knew not what {#Joh 4:20,22} calling themselves, Those that belong to the blessed mount.

Chapter 12

Ver. 1. These are the statutes.] Here Moses begins to comment upon the second commandment of the law. {See Trapp on "De 6:1"}

Ver. 2. Ye shall utterly destroy.] This clause of this law is judicial, peculiar only to the Jews, saith a grave interpreter; as being chiefly intended to prevent their worshipping God in any other place than that one that he had appointed, to which we in the days of the gospel are not tied. See #De 12:5,6. It was a temporary ordinance, saith another, and a part of Moses's polity, now abrogate.

Ver. 3. And ye shall hew down.] As was here done notably in King Edward VI's days, notwithstanding the withstandings of the rude rabble, which more regarded commotioners than commissioners, and were more guided by rage than by right, &c. {a} So that as one Mr Body, a commissioner, was pulling down images in Cornwall, he was suddenly stabbed into the body, by a priest, with a knife.

{a} Life of Edward VI, by Sir John Heywood.

Ver. 4. Ye shall not do so.] As wicked Ahaz did, {#2Ch 28:24} by the advice and help of Uriah, that turn-coat, {#2Ki 16:10-12} who had once passed for a faithful witness, {#Isa 7:2} but afterwards proved a factor for the devil.

Ver. 5. And thither shalt thou come.] In token of a holy communion with God.

Ver. 6. Heave offerings of your hands.] For none might appear empty handed before the Lord.

Ver. 7. And there ye shall eat before the Lord.] Lo, this ye shall have of God's hand, as a recompense of all your charge and pains, ye shall feast before him with joy. This made those good souls go bodily on "from strength to strength"; though they took many a weary step, yet their comfort was, that they should "every one of them in Zion appear before the Lord." {#Ps 84:7} This was the sweetmeats of that feast; other dainty dishes there might be, but this was the banquet.

Ver. 9. For ye are not as yet come to the rest.] No more are any of us indeed, till we come to that "rest which remaineth for the people of God." {#Heb 4:3,8-10} The ark was transportative till settled in Solomon's temple; so till we come to heaven, are we in continual unrest.

Ver. 10. So that ye dwell in safety.] Having peace both external and internal, of country and of conscience. {a}

{a} Regionis et religionis,

Ver. 11. Your choice vows.] Your voluntary vows, and of your choicest commodities, the very best of the best.

Ver. 12. And ye shall rejoice.] No one duty is more pressed in both the Testaments, than this of rejoicing in the Lord always, but specially in his immediate services. And the contrary is complained of in #Mal 2:13, and sorely threatened in #De 28:47.

Ver. 13. Take heed.] See #De 11:16 Le 17:4.

Ver. 14. But in the place.] This taught them unity and uniformity in divine worship; as also that there was but one only way to obtain pardon of their sin, and acceptance of their services, viz., by Jesus Christ, of whom their tabernacle and temple was a type.

Ver. 15. According to the blessing.] God allows his not only a sufficiency, but an honest affluency, so they keep within the bounds of their ability.

Ver. 16. Only ye shall not eat.] {See Trapp on "Ge 9:4"}

Ver. 19. That thou forsake not the Levite.] But look to his livelihood; since, Ad tenuitatem beneficiorum necessario sequitur ignorantia sacerdotum; small allowances make either ignorant or negligent ministers. {a}

{a} Panormitan.

Ver. 20. Thou mayest eat flesh.] Only it is noted as a fault to "feed without fear." {#Jude 1:12} And flesh mongers are taxed by Solomon. Nos etiam animas incarnavimus, saith an ancient, complaining of the arrogance of his times.

Ver. 22. Even as the roebuck,] i.e., As common and profane meats; for these creatures were rejected for sacrifice.

Ver. 25. Thou shalt not eat it.] Who can ever think any commandment of God to be light or little, when this of not eating the blood is charged with so much strictness? The minutula of the law, as well as the magnalia, must be carefully heeded and practised.

Ver. 26. Go unto the place.] Far off though it be, yet go thou must thither with thy sacrifices; though at home thou mayest kill and eat for thine own repast and refreshing.

Ver. 28. And with thy children after thee.] Whose comfort they that seek not, are peremptores potius quam parentes, rather parricides than parents. {a}

{a} Bern., Epist., i. 1.

Ver. 32. Thou shalt not add thereto.] To add anything to the Word of God, saith Theodoret, is bold madness; but to open those things by the Word, that in the Word are more darkly delivered, is both lawful and laudable.

Chapter 13

Ver. 1. If there arise among you a prophet.] A public deceiver, that shall boldly obtrude upon you his erroneous opinions for divine oracles, seeking to drag disciples after him, {#Ac 20:29} such as of late times were Servetus, Socinus, Arminius, Vorstius, Pelargus the first Anabaptist, Istolius Agricola the first Antinomian; H. N., that is, Henry Nicolas of Leyden, the first Familist. Howbeit Gerson tells us of a woman, one Maria de Valentiana, that had lately, before his relation, written a book with incredible subtlety, concerning the prerogative and eminence of divine love, to the which whatever soul had attained, is, according to her, let loose from all the law of God's commandments.

Ver. 2. And the sign or the wonder come to pass.] For so it may happen by divine permission, for the exposing and shame of hypocrites; as when Jannes and Jambres turned water into blood, or at least seemed to do so. {#Ex 7:22}

Ver. 3. Thou shalt not hearken.] Heretics have their pythanology, their good words and fair speeches, wherein they can vent a spittle of diseased opinions, and whereby they deceive the hearts of the simple. {#Ro 16:18} It is not safe, therefore, to hear them, or hold discourse with such, lest they insinuate and infect us, as the Montanists did Tertullian; as the Valentinians did various well-affected Christians; as Acacius the heretic did Anastasius, second Bishop of Rome, A.D., 497, who sought to rectify him. It is reported of Placilla the good Empress, that when Theodosius, senior, desired to confer with Eunomius, she dissuaded her husband very earnestly, lest being perverted by his speeches he might fall into heresy {a} "Keep thee far from an evil matter," saith Solomon. "Mark those that make divisions, and avoid them," saith Paul. {#Ro 16:17} And again, "There are many unruly and vain talkers and deceivers, ..., whose mouths must be stopped," &c. {#Tit 1:11}

{a} Sozomen, lib. vii. cap. 7.

Ver. 4. Ye shall walk after the Lord.] A special antidote against apostasy from the truth, {#2Pe 3:17,18} whereas those that have "put away a good conscience, do, as concerning faith, easily make shipwreck." {#1Ti 1:19}

Ver. 5. Shall be put to death.] This power is still in the Christian magistrate, to inflict capital punishment on gross heretics; such as was Servetus at Geneva, and Campian here, who spider-like was swept down by the hand of justice, and drew his last thread in the triangle of Tyburn, as the historian wittily phraseth it. {a} Quid Imperatori cum ecclesia? was a question moved by the old Donatists. Libertas prophetandi, is much challenged by the Arminians, and other sectaries. But if in matter of religion every man should think what he lists, and utter what he thinks, and defend what he utters, and publish what he defends, and gather disciples to what he publisheth, this liberty, or licentiousness rather, would soon be the bane of any church.

{a} Speed's Hist of Eng., 1176.

Ver. 6. Thy friend, which is as thine own soul.] Amicitia fit tantum inter binos qui sunt veri, et bonos qui sunt pauci.

Entice thee secretly, saying.] Christ found the devil in Peter, persuading him to spare himself. Cassianus reports of a young man that had given himself up to a Christian life, and his parents, misliking that way, wrote letters to him to dissuade him, which when he knew, he would not once open them, but threw them in the fire. Mention is also made in ecclesiastical history, of one Phileas, a nobleman and constant martyr, who going to execution, seemed as one deaf at the persuasions, and blind at the tears of his dearest friends: as the waters use to break themselves on a rock, so was he inflexible.

Ver. 9. Kill him, / i.e., Deliver him up to the magistrate to be killed; for he bears not the sword in vain, like St Paul in a glass window, or George on a signpost.

Ver. 10. To thrust thee away.] By force, not of arms, but of arguments; as the Valentinians, Qui prius persuadebant quam docebant. {a} Thus Jeroboam is said to have driven Israel from following the Lord. {#1Ki 14:16}

{a} Tertull.

Ver. 12. If thou shalt hear say.] Rumours are not always to be credited, nor always to be contemned.

Ver. 13. Children of Belial.] Renegade are the worst of men. See #1Jo 2:19. Rabshakeh is held such a one; so Bertius, Tilenus, Staphilus, &c.

Chapter 14

Ver. 1. Ye are the children of the Lord.] Ye should therefore do nothing unworthy of such a Father. Antigonus being invited to a place where a notable harlot was to be present, asked counsel of Menedemus what he should do? He bade him only remember that he was a king's son, and do accordingly. {a}

Ye shall not cut. {See Trapp on "Le 19:28"}

{a} Plut.

Ver. 2. For thou art.] {See Trapp on "De 7:6"}

And the Lord hath chosen thee.] Hence all thy holiness. The maids were first purified, before Ahasuerus chose one; but here it is otherwise. {#Eph 5:25,26}

Ver. 3. Thou shalt not eat any abominable.] {See Trapp on "Le 11:1"} &c. This law taught them to abstain from communion with wicked men, in whom are found the malignities and evil properties of all other creatures. {#Ac 10:13,17,20,28} They feed hard on sin, the devil's excrement; as the Tartars eat the carrion, carcasses of horses, camels, asses, cats, dogs, yea, when they stink and are full of maggots, and hold them as dainty as we do venison.

Ver. 5. The hart and the roebuck.] These were dainties fit for a king. {#IKi 4:23} Rice and mutton is the cheer wherewith the great Turk entertaineth foreign ambassadors, and that so plainly and sparingly dressed, as if they would give check to our gormandise and excess.

And the wild ox.] Pliny saith, {a} that there are wild creatures answerable to all that are tame: like as others say there is no living creature on earth, but there are fishes of the same sort found in the sea, and those all harmless.

{a} Plin., lib. viii. cap. 53.

Ver. 6. That parteth the hoof.] {See Trapp on "Le 11:3"}

Ver. 21. Thou shalt not seethe,] { See Trapp on "Ex 23:19"}

Ver. 22. Thou shalt truly tith.] He seems to mean that second tith, wherewith they were to feast before the Lord, and not the tith given to the Levites. {#Nu 18:24}

Ver. 23. That thou mayest learn,] A man cannot converse with God, but he shall learn something. Semper a te doctior redeo, said he to his friend. Moses came from the mount with his face shining. Compare #Ec 8:1.

Ver. 29. That the Lord thy God, &c.] Not getting, but giving, is the way to thrive in the world.

Chapter 15

Ver. 1. At the end of every.] This Sabbatical year signified the year of grace, the kingdom of Christ, wherein all Israelites indeed are discharged of their debts. {#Mt 6:12} {See Trapp on "Mt 6:12"}

Ver. 2. He shall not exact it.] For that seventh year at least, because there was neither sowing nor reaping that year; how then could the poor pay their debts? We must all "put on bowels of mercy, forbearing one another, and forgiving one another," &c. {#Col 3:12,13}

Ver. 3. Of a foreigner.] To show that none that are alienated from the life of God, or a godly life, have remission of sin by Christ: "he sanctifies all whom he justifies." Compare #Ro 11:26 Isa 59:20.

Ver. 4. Save when there shall be no poor.] Here, as in sundry other places of the new translation, the margin is better than the text, as giving a good reason of the former law, To the end that there be no poor amongst you, that is, extreme poor by your exactions. Of a cruel creditor it is said, {#Ps 10:9} that "he lieth in wait to catch the poor; he doth catch the poor when he draws him into his net," that is, into bonds, debts, mortgages, as Chrysostom expounds it.

Ver. 7. Thou shalt not harden thy heart.] But "draw out thy soul to the hungry." {#Isa 58:10} Many have iron bowels and withered hands. See my "Commonplace of Alms."

Ver. 8. Thou shalt surely lend him.] {See Trapp on "Mt 5:42"}

Ver. 9. And he cried unto the Lord.] Who is the poor man's king, as James V of Scotland was termed for his charity.

Ver. 10. Thine heart shall not be grieved.] {See Trapp on "2Co 9:7"}

The Lord thy God shall bless thee.] See #Pr 19:17; and "Alms," ubi supra.

Ver. 11. For the poor.] {See Trapp on "Mt 26:11"} Aged and impotent poor, whose misery moves compassion without an orator; called here our poor, as well as our brethren.

Ver. 12. In the seventh year,] viz., Since he was sold unto thee.

Ver. 16. Then thou shalt take an awl.] Ut si non horreret servitudinem, horreret saltem ignominiam publicam: If we can bear reproach for Christ, it is an argument we mean to stick to him, as this bored servant to his master.

Chapter 16

Ver. 1. And keep the passover.] Every man that seeth another stricken and himself spared is still to keep a passover for himself.

Ver. 3. Even the bread of affliction.] Or, Of poverty; as who should say, poor folk's bread, illeavened, ill-prepared.

Ver. 4. And there shall be.] {See Trapp on "Ex 12:1"} &c

Ver. 10. With a tribute of a free will offering.] Over and besides the sacrifice appointed for the feast day, {#Nu 18:27,31} and the two loaves with their sacrifices commanded. {#Le 23:17,20} So good cheap is God's service to us, over what it was to them.

Ver. 12. And thou shalt remember.] It is very good to look back and recognise our former worse condition. Agathocles, king of Sicily, being a potter's son, would be served only in earthen vessels. Willigis, archbishop of Ments, a wheelwright's son, hung wheels, and the tools wherewith they were made, around his bedchamber, and had these words written upon the walls in very fair characters, Willigis, Willigis, recole unclē veneris, Remember whence thou camest.

Ver. 13. Thou shalt observe.] {See Trapp on "Ex 23:16"}

Ver. 15. Thou shalt surely rejoice.] {See Trapp on "De 12:12"}

Ver. 18. With just judgment.] Heb., With judgment of justice. Ut fiat iustitia, runt coelum. Let heaven and earth be blended together, rather than magistrates be drawn to deal basely. It is reported by a late traveller, that in Zante, over the place of judgment, these two Latin verses are written on the wall in letters of gold:—

" Hic locus odit, amat, punit, conservat, honorat, Nequitiam, pacem, crimina, iura, bonos. "

Ver. 19. Neither take a gift.] Rain is good, and ground is good; yet, ex eorum coniunctione fit luturn, by the mixture of those two is made dirt: so giving is kind, and taking is courteous; yet the mixing of them makes the smooth paths of justice foul and uneven.

Ver. 20. That which is altogether just.] Heb., Justice, justice; that is, let pure justice, without mud, run down; let all selfish affections be strained out.

Chapter 17

Ver. 1. Thou shalt not sacrifice.] {See Trapp on "Le 22:20"}

Ver. 2. That hath wrought wickedness.] Idolatry is wickedness with a witness. Such was the venom of the Israelitish idolatry, that the brazen serpent stung worse than the fiery. Oh that the Lord, as he hath "revealed" that wicked one, so that he would at length "consume him with the spirit of his mouth," {#27h 2:8} and dung his vineyard with the dead carcass of that wild boar of the forest! He can as easily blast an oak as trample a mushroom. Fiat, fiat.

Ver. 4. And it be told thee.] {See Trapp on "De 13:12"}

And inquired diligently.] Men must be "swift to hear, slow to speak," that is, to censure, or pass sentence. Amongst the Athenians an indictment of any crime was but αἰτία: the evidence and conviction made it ελεγχος: the sentence ἀδικημα. Athanasius passeth for a sacrilegious person, a profane wretch, a bloody persecutor, a blasphemer of God, &c., and was so condemned before he was heard by fourscore bishops in that Pseudosynodus Sardicensis. Sunt quidem in Ecclesia Catholica plurimi mali; sed ex haereticis, nullus est bonus, says Bellarmine: There be many bad men Papists, but not one good to be found among Protestants. The Catholics follow the Bible, saith Hill {a} in his "Quartern of Reasons," but the Protestants force the Bible to follow them; yea, their condemnation is so expressly set down in their own Bibles, saith another Popeling, and is so clear to all the world, that nothing more needs hereto, than that they know to read, and have their eyes in their heads at the opening of their Bible. {b} By the shooting of which bolt, you may easily guess at the archer.

{a} Reas. viii. p. 41.

{b} Gagge, Of the New Gospel: Pref. to Reader.

Ver. 7. Thou shalt put the evil.] Both person and thing. {#1Co 5:13}

Ver. 8. Too hard for thee in judgment,] i.e., For thee, O judge, who art thereupon to consult with the priests, and by them to be informed of the true sense and meaning of God's law. For apices iuris non sunt ius. And the Rabbins have a saying, Nulla est obiectio in Lege, quae non habet solutionem in latere. Now the priest's lips should preserve knowledge, and the law should be sought at his mouth; the high priest also, in some cases, was to inquire, and answer after the judgment of Urim, before the Lord. {#Nu 27:21} This the Pope cannot do, and therefore cannot claim the final determination of all causes and controversies, though his parasites tell him,

" *Oraclis vocis mundi moderaris habenas:
Et meritb in terris diceris esse Deus.*"

Ver. 9. And unto the judge,] i.e., The council of judges, the Synedrion, {#2Ch 19:8} consisting partly of priests and partly of civil magistrates. Amongst the Turks at this day their judges are ever ecclesiastical persons; whereby both orders joined, give reputation one to another and maintenance; for these places of judicature are the only preferment of the priesthood. {a}

{a} Blunt's Voyage, p. 89.

Ver. 10. According to all that they inform thee,] viz., Agreeable to the sentence of the law. {#De 17:11} The Jews from this text foolishly seek footing for their traditions, which they so much magnify. {#Mt 15:1,2}

Ver. 14. And shalt say, I will set a king.] A king then they might choose, so they did it orderly. Zuinglius in ea fuit sententia, regna omnia esse electiva, nulla propre successiva et haereditaria. In quo non negamus eum errasse in facto, ut loquuntur. {a}

{a} Rivet. Jesuita Vap.

Ver. 15. Whom the Lord shall choose.] As he did Saul, but especially David and his progeny, types of Christ. {#Ps 2:6}

Ver. 16. He shall not multiply horses.] Lest he be held as our Henry III was, Regni dilapidator; the royal spendthrift.

The Lord hath said.] Not in so many words, but by consequence, when he showed his displeasure against such as would have made them a captain to go back to Egypt. {#Nu 14:4,11}

Ver. 17. Silver and gold.] Lest his exactors receive from his subjects no less sums of curses than of coin; and lest he gather money, the sinews of war, but lose the people's affection, the joints of peace, as our King John did.

Ver. 18. He shall write him a copy.] The Jews say, that if printing had been found out then, yet was the king bound to write two copies of the law with his own hand, one to keep in the treasury, and another to carry about him. This book of God was David's delight. {#Ps 119:70} Alphonsus, king of Aragon, is reported to have read over the Bible fourteen times, with Lyra's notes upon it. Charles the Wise, of France, not only caused the Bible to be translated into French, as our King Alfred translated the Psalter himself into his Saxon tongue, but was also very studious in the Holy Scripture. And that peerless princess, Queen Elizabeth, as she passed in triumphal state through the streets of London after her coronation, when the Bible was presented to her at the little conduit in Cheapside, received the same with both her hands, and kissing it, laid it to her breasts, saying, that the same had ever been her chiefest delight, and should be the rule whereby she meant to frame her government. {a}

{a} Speed's Hist.

Ver. 19. And it shall be with him.] As his Vade-mecum, his manual, his running library, the man of his counsel. Luther said, he would not live in Paradise without the Bible, as with it he could easily live in hell itself. {a}

{a} Tom. 4, Oper. Latin., p. 424.

Ver. 20. That his heart be not lifted up.] That his good and his blood rise not together as that king of Tyre's did, {#Eze 28:2} and that Lucifer, son of the morning. {#Isa 14:12,13} See my "Commonplace of Arrogancy." Of Caligula it is said, that there never was a better servant, or a worse lord. Vespasian is said to be the only man that became better by the empire. The most of the emperors grew so insolent, that they got nothing by their preferment, nisi ut citius interficerentur, but to be sooner slain.

Chapter 18

Ver. 1. And his inheritance,] i.e., Whatsoever by the law belonged to the Lord, as decimae Deo sacrae, &c.

Ver. 4. The firstfruits also.] Pliny tells us, {a} that among the Romans also no man might taste of his own corn, wine, or other fruits, priusquam Sacerdotes primitias libassent, till the priests had offered the firstfruits, and made their use of them.

{a} Plin., Hist., lib. xviii.

Ver. 6. With all the desire of his mind.] To do God better service. A good heart holds the best he can do, but a little of that much that he could gladly give the Lord, and is still devising what to do more. {#Ps 116:12}

Ver. 8. Besides that.] He shall not maintain himself of his own private stock, but live of the holy things of the temple.

Ver. 10. That maketh his son.] {See Trapp on "Le 18:21"}

Ver. 11. Or a necromancer.] Bellarmine and other Papists play the necromancers, when they would prove a Purgatory from the apparitions of spirits, that tell of themselves or others there tormented.

Ver. 13. Thou shalt be perfect.] {See Trapp on "Mt 5:48"} In the original there is a bigger tau than ordinary in the word Tamim, rendered perfect, to show, say Hebricians, that we must keep the whole law of God from the first letter thereof to the last—tau is the last letter of the alphabet—and this we must do constantly to the very last, and with the whole man. But how can this be done otherwise than by running to Christ, and in an evangelical way? In sincerity and integrity we must hate such wicked persons, even as God also hateth them. {#Ps 139:21-24} {Hebrew Text Note}

Ver. 14. Hath not suffered thee so to do.] He hath showed thee a more excellent way, and kept thee from these devoratory evils, as Tertullian calleth them; so ordering the matter, that "that evil one toucheth them not" with any deadly touch. {#1Jo 5:18} For either he suffers not his to be tempted above strength, {#1Co 10:13} or else he withholdeth the occasion, when temptation hath prevailed to procure consent and purpose, &c.

Ver. 15. Like unto me.] Both in the participation of nature and of office: a true man, and a true Mediator. Similes they are, but not pares: Christ being "worthy of more glory than Moses," and why, see #Heb 3:3-6 7:22 9:15.

Ver. 18. And he shall speak unto them.] Christ is that palmoni hamedabbar {#Da 10:5,6} that excellent speaker that spake with authority, and so as never man spake, being "mighty in word and deed." See my "True Treasure," p. 1.

Ver. 22. Thou shalt not be afraid.] Though he speak "great swelling words of vanity," {#2Pe 2:18} millstones and thunderbolts, as Hacket here did. {a}

{a} Camden's Elisab., fol. 403.

Chapter 19

Ver. 3. Thou shalt prepare thee a way.] A direct, plain, fair highway: such a way must ministers prepare and pave for their people to Christ, the true asylum, by giving them "the knowledge of salvation by the remission of their sins." {#Lu 1:76,77}

Ver. 4. Whom he hated not in time past.] There is, first, a passion of hatred. This is a kind of aversion and rising of the heart against a man, when one sees him, so that he cannot away with him, nor speak to him, nor look courteously or peaceably upon him, and by his goodwill he would have nothing to do with him. Secondly, there is a habit of hatred, when the heart is so settled in this alienation and estrangement, that it grows to wish, and desire, and seek his hurt. Both these must be mortified.

Ver. 5. And live.] So he keep within his city of refuge till the death of the high priest. {See Trapp on "Nu 35:25"}

Ver. 6. While his heart is hot.] As Nebuchadnezzar's oven—viz., with anger and grief, and such like passions; which, like heavy bodies down steep hills, once in motion move themselves, and know no ground but the bottom.

Ver. 8. And give thee all the land.] From Nile to Euphrates; {#Ge 15:18} which by reason of their sins he never did. Pray we with Jabez, {#1Ch 4:10} "Oh that thou wouldest bless me indeed, and enlarge my coast (my heart), and that thine hand might be with me," &c. "When thou shalt have enlarged mine heart," saith David, "then will I run the way of thy commandments." {#Ps 119:32}

Ver. 11. But if any man hate his neighbour.] As Cain did Abel, as Esau Jacob, as Absalom Amnon; as Dr Story did Queen Elizabeth, whom he cursed daily in his grace at board; {a} as Tyrone did the English, strangling some of his own men for no other reason but because they fed on English bread; howbeit he never spake of the queen but with honour; yea, the profane wretch styled himself cousin to God, enemy to all the world, and friend to the Queen of England. {b}

{b} Speed.

Ver. 12. And fetch him thence.] From the altar to the halter, from the palace to the gallows. {#Pr 28:17}

Ver. 14. Thy neighbour's landmark, which they of old, &c.] Erasmus met with an adversary so silly, as to object unto him this text against the new translation of the New Testament: Quasi per terminos, voces intellexisset Spiritus Sanctus atque huius legis violatae illi postulari possent, qui mutant rerum vocabula, { a} Whereas by terms or "landmarks" here are clearly meant bounds, borders, limits, whereby every man's inheritance was severed.

{a} Erasm., in Apologiis, p. 637.

Ver. 15. One witness shall not rise up.] Yet, if this one be a faithful witness, Μαρτυς δε πιστος, και εις χρησιμος, saith Aristotle; {a} one faithful witness in some case may suffice, in private offences howsoever: and that our Saviour speaketh of such, {#Mt 18:19} Basil and others are of opinion; if thy brother, a Jew, shall trespass against thee, being a Jew, right thyself by degrees. (1.) Deal with him fraternally, "tell him his fault betwixt thee and him alone"; {#Mt 18:15} (2.) Deal with him legally, "take with thee one or two more"; {#De 19:15} (3.) Deal with him Jewishly; "tell the Church," {#De 19:17} complain to the Sanhedrim; (4.) If he shall neglect to hear them, deal with him heathenishly, i.e., "let him be unto thee as a heathen and a publican"; make benefit of Roman sovereignty, let Caesar's justice end the difference between you. {b}

{a} Arist., Rhetor., lib. ii.

{b} Mr Lightfoot's Harmony, p. 143.

Ver. 20. Shall hear and fear.] Others' woes should be our warnings, others' sufferings our sermons, yea, standing sermons. {#ICo 10:5-12} God's house of correction is the school of instruction.

Ver. 21. Eye for eye, tooth for tooth.] {See Trapp on "Mt 5:38"}

Chapter 20

Ver. 1. When thou goest out to battle.] It is not unlawful, therefore, to go to war, as Lactantius and some others held; whether it be pro religione vel pro regione: only because it is easier to stir strife than to stop and stint it, — non enim in eiusdem potestate est initium belli, eiusque finis, {a} -war is not rashly to be undertaken, lest it befall men as in the battle between the dragon and the elephant. The dragon sucketh out the blood of the elephant, and the weight of the falling elephant oppresseth the dragon, and so both perish. {b} St Augustine would never pray for such as had willfully and voluntarily thrust themselves into unnecessary wars. {c}

For the Lord thy God is with thee.] And how many reckonest thou him for?—as Antigonus said to his discouraged soldiers. "The Lord is a man of war"; {#Ex 15:3} or, as the Chaldee there expresseth it, "a victor of wars." {#2Ch 32:8} Si Deus pro nobis, &c. {#Ro 8:31}

{a} Salust., in Jugurth.

{b} Plin., lib. viii. cap. 12.

{c} Possid., in Vit. Aug.

Ver. 2. That the priest shall approach.] For some priests ordinarily went along with the army; not to be Tuba rebellionis, as the Papists said of Zuinglius, nor evangelium flammeum praedicare, as they said of Beza, as a common firebrand or fomentor of discord; but to blow the holy trumpets, "that the people might be remembered before the Lord, and saved from their enemies"; {#Nu 10:8,9 2Ch 13:12} and to say unto them, as in #2Ch 19:11, "Deal courageously, and the Lord shall be with the good." The valour of the Gauls was admired by the Romans. It proceeded from that instruction of the Druids, their priests, concerning the immortality of the soul, &c.

Ver. 4. For the Lord your God is he.] Quid metuit homo in sinu Dei positus, Deo armatus? Creatures of an inferior nature will be courageous in the presence of their masters: and shall not men, when they have God with them? Xerxes was wont to pitch his tent on high, and stand looking on his army when in fight, to encourage them. So God.

Ver. 5. And hath not dedicated it.] By prayers, hymns, and other holy solemnities then usual; {#Ne 12:27 Ps 30:1 title} that "the house of David might be as God, as the Angel of the Lord before them." {#Zec 12:8}

Ver. 6. That hath planted a vineyard.] This privilege might encourage men to build and plant, which is good and profitable for the commonwealth, as the apostle speaketh in a like case. {#Tit 3:8}

Ver. 7. That hath betrothed a wife.] A commendable custom, even among heathens also: Placuit, despondi; nuptiis hic dictus est dies, said he in Terence.

Ver. 8. That is fearful and faint hearted.] This cowardly passion dispirits a man, expectorates his manliness, and exposeth him to the cruel mercy of an enemy. Better be temerarious than timorous! "Ye fugitives of Ephraim," is no small brand of dishonour; {#Jud 12:4} besides that melting and trying judgments follow such at heels as account one pair of heels worth two pair of hands. {#Jer 9:3-7} The French fled so fast before the English at the battle of Terwin, that it was called the battle of Spurs. {a}

Lest his brethren's hearts.] Cowardice is catching, and shows that men, like stags, have great horns, but want hearts.

{a} Paul Jovius.

Ver. 9. Captains of the armies to lead the people.] As Hannibal did, of whom Livy {a} reports, that Princeps proelium inibat, ultimus, conserto proelio, excedebat; he was first in the battle, and last out. And the same is storied of Albert, marquess of Brandenburg: In congressibus prior pugnam iniit, victor h proelio excessit ultimus. {b}

{a} Decad. iii. lib. i.

{b} Bucholc.

Ver. 10. Then proclaim peace unto it.] Heb., Shall call unto it for peace. This hath been the practice of most nations. The Romans sent their caduceum et hastam. The herald was commanded to throw his weapons on the enemy's ground, with this speech: Ego populusque Rom. hominibus Hermundulis bellum dico facioque: I and the people of Rome bid battle to the Hermunduli. {a} Alexander the Great, when he besieged any city, would send his herald into it with a burning torch in his hand, to proclaim, that if any man would repair and submit himself unto him while that torch continued burning, he should be safe; otherwise they should expect nothing but fire and sword. Tamerlane, when he came against any place, first he hung out a white flag of grace, then a red, and lastly a black flag, to show that now there was no hope of mercy for them. {b} φιλει ο Θεος προσημαινειν; God loves to give warning, saith Herodotus, a heathen. And the Turks are of opinion that God would not prosper them in their assaults, except they first make to their enemies some offer of peace, how unreasonable soever, it forceth not. So they did at the last fatal siege of Constantinople. {c}

Ver. 11. And open unto thee.] As Tournay in France did to our Henry VIII, with ten thousand pound sterling for the citizens' redemption; yet was it ever till then counted so invincible, that this sentence was engraven over one of the gates, Iannes ton me a perda ton pucelage, thou hast never lost thy maidenhead. {a}

{a} Speed's Hist of Engl., 1001.

Ver. 13. Thou shalt smite every male thereof.] Let them pay for their perversity. So Caesar answered the Adviatiki, that he would have spared their city if they had yielded before he had assaulted. {a} And so the Duke of Alva much blamed Prosper Columnus, for receiving a castle upon condition after he had beaten it with the cannon. {b} Howbeit in the Lord Protector's expedition into Scotland in the reign of Edward VI, one castle, when they understood they were not able to hold out, and that their obstinacy had excluded all hope of pardon, they made petition that they might not presently be slain, but have some time to recommend their souls to God, and afterwards be hanged. This respite being first obtained, their pardon did the more easily ensue. {c}

Ver. 17. The Hivites and the Jebusites.] The Girgashites are not reckoned among the rest, as neither are they in #Jos 9:1, haply because they accepted of conditions of peace.

Ver. 19. Thou shalt not cut them down.] Fruit trees might not be destroyed. Doth God take care for trees? It was to teach us, that if we bring forth fruit fit for God's taste and relish, sanctifying God and Christ in our hearts, we shall not be destroyed. Oaks bring forth apples, such as they are, and acorns, but not fit for meat.

Chapter 21

Ver. 1. In the field.] Or elsewhere; the field is instanced, because in places more frequented, murders are not so easily concealed, or so commonly committed.

Ver. 2. Then thy elders.] Some of the Sanhedrim.

Ver. 3. Shall take a heifer.] Signifying Christ, who is the propitiation for his people's sins, {#1Jo 2:2}

Ver. 4. Which is neither eared nor sown.] That is, that afterwards should neither be tilled nor sown, for horror and hatred of the innocent blood there spilled. So the mountains of Gilboah. {#2Sa 1:6}

Ver. 5. And by their word,] i.e., According to that exposition that they shall give of God's Word, and not by any absolute or arbitrary power of their own.

Ver. 6. Shall wash their hands.] An old ceremony, used in this case by the Gentiles also, as the Scholiast upon Sophocles showeth. {See Trapp on "Mt 27:24"}

Ver. 7. And they shall answer.] To the priest's examining them, and in God's name making inquisition for blood.

Ver. 8. And the blood shall be forgiven.] The fault of not well watching and guarding the place where the murder was committed. Our King Alfred was the first that divided this kingdom into shires: he ordained also that his subjects should be divided into tens or tithings, every of which severally should give bond for the good abearing of each other. By this course men were not only careful of their own actions, but each had an eye to all the nine, for which he stood bound, as the nine had over him: insomuch that a poor girl might travel safely with a bag of gold in her hand, and none durst meddle with her. The ancientest of these men were called the tithing men.

Ver. 11. And hast a desire unto her.] This was permitted them, as divorce was, ob duricordium. But that is a base passage in the Turk's Koran, that God did not give men such appetites to have them frustrate, but enjoyed, as made for the gust of man, not for his torment, wherein his Creator delights not; and therefore they hold it lawful for a man to marry as many wives as he is able to maintain.

Ver. 12. And she shall shave her head.] In token that she must renounce her heathenism, and lead a new and holy life. And if she thus consented to marry, she saved her life by it; so do those their souls that consent to Christ, casting away their transgressions, and paring off their superfluities, by the constant practice of mortification.

Ver. 13. A full month.] Worldly sorrow, like a land flood, is for the present impetuous and violent, but time wears it out, not so godly sorrow.

Ver. 14. Because thou hast humbled her.] This expression shows, that God approved not of his fact, which yet he tolerated. By "humbling" her is meant the taking away her honour of chastity; her credit was now gone. The body as a vessel should be "possessed in sanctification and honour." {#1Th 4:4}

Ver. 15. And another hated, / i.e., Less loved, as #Ge 29:31. {See Trapp on "Ge 29:31"}

Ver. 17. A double portion.] According to this phrase, Elisha {#2Ki 2:9} doth not desire a greater measure of the spirit than rested upon his master; but only to excel the other children of the prophets by a right of the firstborn.

Ver. 20. He is a glutton.] The same word is used for a vile person in #Jer 15:19. And indeed belly-gods {#Php 3:19} are dungy-gods. {#Hab 2:18 Eze 4:12,13} A scavenger, whose office is to empty, is to be preferred before him that liveth but to fill, privies.

Ver. 21. Shall hear and fear.] {See Trapp on "De 19:20"}

Ver. 23. For he that is hanged.] {See Trapp on "Ga 3:13"}

Chapter 22

Ver. 1. Thou shalt not see thy brothers.] No not thine enemies; {#Ex 23:4} for, have we not all one father? {#Mal 2:10} {See Trapp on "Mt 5:44"}

Ver. 5. The woman shall not wear.] Because it is against both natural and civil honesty.

Neither shall a man put on] That is, say stage players and those that plead for them, a man shall not wear women's apparel ordinarily and daily, so as women used to do. But the word is, Put on, and so they do: the same word is used of David's putting on Saul's armour, which yet he put off again presently. So full, saith one hereupon, are our hearts of distinctions and shifts, odia restringere, ampliare favores, to restrain hatreds, as they call them—that is, the commandments that make against them.

Ver. 7. And that thou mayest prolong, &c.] They were commanded to spare the dam, because she represented the parents in bringing up of her young ones; and if their days should be for that prolonged, much more for this. The Hebrews reckon this commandment for the least of all in Moses's law; and yet such a promise is annexed thereunto.

Ver. 9. And the fruit of thy vineyard be defiled.] Heb., Be sanctified, per antiphrasin, as, auri sacra fames; and Anthony's fire is ignis sacer. So a whore is called in Hebrew, Kedasha, of kadash, i.e., holiness, {#De 23:17} by a contrary meaning, as most unholy and unchaste.

Ver. 10. Thou shalt not plough.] These laws were made to set forth how God abhorreth all mixtures in religion, and how carefully men should keep their minds from being "corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ." {#2Co 11:3}

Ver. 12. Wherewith thou coverest thyself.] Ne in motu aliquid indecorum appareat; Lust and malice are sharp sighted. {#2Sa 11:2 6:20}

Ver. 14. I found her not a maid.] Silvester Petra-sancta Iesuita calumniatur puellas plerunque corruptas nuptui dari in Reformato Evangelio: Quod de Evangelio Romano (ait Rivettus noster) potius dici posset; postquam puellae dementarunt a vobis seductae, et sub vestibus cordulis nodosis spurcis vestris manibus fuerunt ligatae. {a} Papists falsely affirm that few maids amongst us come clear to marriage: cuius contrarium verum est.

{a} Jesuita Vapulans, p. 146.

Ver. 15. Then shall the father of the damsel.] Whose house hereby was dishonored, and by whom his daughter's honour was to be defended, especially since children's miscarriages reflect upon the parents, and the daughters sin is the father's shame.

Ver. 16. And he hateth her.] Which is a monster in nature. {#Eph 5:28,29}

Ver. 17. These are the tokens.] Which in those countries seldom or never failed.

Ver. 19. He hath brought up an evil name.] Which is a kind of murder. {#Eze 22:9} God shall clear the innocency of his slandered servants. {#Ps 37:6 Isa 54:17} As the eclipsed moon, by keeping her motion, wades out of the shadow and recovers her splendour, so shall it be with such.

Ver. 20. And the tokens.] Nor any natural impediment can be proved, as the Hebrews explain it.

Ver. 22. With a woman married.] Adultery was punished with death; because society and the purity of posterity could not otherwise continue amongst men.

Ver. 24. Humbled his neighbour's wife.] So called, because betrothed, Quia nuptias facit consensus, non concubitus, as the lawyers determine it.

Ver. 25. And the man force her, and lie with her.] It was a speech of Charles V, emperor, If that impure fellow, Farnesius, who being the Pope's general, had forced many fair ladies, were here present, I would kill him with mine own hand. Nec vocem iracundio rem unquam ex Carolo auditam ferunt. {a} Never was he heard to speak so angrily. The Lacedemonian commonwealth was utterly ruined by a rape committed on the two daughters of Scedasus at Leuctra.

{a} Parei, Hist. Prof. Medulla.

Ver. 29. She shall be his wife.] Howbeit he must be humbled before the Lord, for entering into his ordinance through the devil's portal.

Chapter 23

Ver. 1. Or hath his privy member cut off.] As it is a barbarous custom at this day among the Turks, to deprive various Christian children of their privities, supplying the uses of nature with a silver quill. This was first brought in among them by Selymus II, out of jealousy lest his eunuchs were not so chaste as they should have been, in keeping their ladies' beds. {a} Such are usually effeminate, and unfit to bear office.

Shall not enter into the congregation, / i.e., Shall not go in and out before the people as a public officer. Since such should be drained from the dregs, and sifted from the brans of the vulgar: they should be eminent and eximious persons, higher than the rest, as Saul, by the head and shoulders.

{a} Turk. Hist.

Ver. 2. A bastard shall not enter.] Lest the reproach of his birth render him contemptible, or less courageous; {a} lest some son of Belial set upon him, as Saul did upon his son Jonathan, and say, "Thou son of the perverse rebellious woman." So of the base and beastly woman, "Do not I know that thou hast done this to the confusion of thy mother's nakedness?" {#1Sa 20:30} The mutinous Janizaries called their Emperor Bajizet II, drunkard, beast, rascal, bastard, bengi, that is, bachelor, or scholar; and told him, moreover, that they would teach him to use his great place and calling with more sobriety and discretion. {b} The English slighted and scorned their William the Conqueror, because a bastard; in spite also to whom, and disgrace to his mother Arlet, they called all whores harlots. The Jews at this day, amongst other opprobrious words, wherewith they spitefully load us, call all Christians Mamzer Gel, that is, heathen bastards. Our Saviour, upon better grounds, called them long since, a bastardly brood. {#Mt 12:39} And their own prophet Isaiah did the same thing long before, {#Isa 57:3,4} and that, for their profane scoffing at the truth and the professors thereof. Yet who so forward as they, to say, "We are not born of fornication," no bastards? {#Joh 8:41}

{b} Turk. Hist.

Ver. 3. For ever,] i.e., This law is perpetual and indispensable; so highly displeasing are many mere omissions of duty. Omission of diet breeds diseases, brings death; so here.

Ver. 4. Because they met you not.] As God takes notice of the least courtesy showed to his people, even to a cup of cold water, to requite it, so he doth of the least discourtesy, even to a frown or a frump {See Trapp on "Ge 4:6"} to revenge it.

And because they hired, &c.] {See Trapp on "Nu 22:3"} {See Trapp on "Nu 22:6"}

Ver. 5. Nevertheless the Lord, &c.,] q.d., No thanks to the wicked Moabites, that Balaam blasted thee not; as neither to Balaam, whose tongue was merely overruled by the Almighty, and made to bless those whom he would gladly have cursed. And thus still the Lord orders the world's disorders, turning dross into gold by a stupendous alchymy, and directing men's evil actions to a good end. Hence it is that they fulfil—though they intend no such thing, but the satisfying of their own lusts—neither {#Isa 10:5-7} more nor less than "what the hand and counsel of God hath determined." {#Ac 4:28,13:27} Howbeit the hands that nailed Christ to the cross were "wicked hands." {#Ac 2:23} And Judas the traitor received strangling and shedding of bowels, as a "reward of his iniquity, for being guide to them that took Jesus." {#Ac 1:16-18} It was not without God that the kingdom was rent from Rehoboam, {#2Ki 12:19,20} and yet he flatly renounceth it, as well he might, all the evil that was in it. {#Ho 8:4}

Ver. 6. Thou shalt not seek their peace.] Or, Enter into confederacy with them; which when David did, {#2Sa 10:1,2} he was basely abused in his ambassadors. Hannibal's hatred to the Romans is well known.

Tyrone, 1567, so boiled in hatred against the English, that he named a castle that he built, Feoghnegal, that is, "the hatred of the English." {a} Among those wild Irish, the fathers are said to inflict a heavy curse on all their posterity, if ever they should sow corn, build houses, or learn the English tongue.

{a} Camden's Elisab.

Ver. 7. For he is thy brother.] And therefore to be borne with, though unkind and injurious. Howbeit, Fratrum concordia rara est: "A brother offended is harder to be won," saith the wise man, "than a strong city, and their contentions are like the bars of a castle." {#Pr 18:19} The dissension between England and Scotland consumed more Christian blood, wrought more spoil and destruction, and continued longer than ever quarrel we read of did between any two peoples of the world. {a} The God of Peace prevent the like bloody dissensions again, now mightily endeavoured by the boutefeaus of both nations. Si collidimur, frangimur; If we clash, we perish: dissension is the mother of dissolution, of desolation.

Thou shalt not abhor an Egyptian.] But learn of him to return one good turn for another. Egyptii dicuntur, praeter alias nationes, erga bene meritos de se grati; Existimant enim magnum vitae subsidium esse, gratiae retributionem, saith Diodorus. {b} The Egyptians are said to be, above all others, a thankful people, and to look upon thankfulness as a main support of man's life.

Because thou wast a stranger in his land.] Where, though thou meetest with much hardship, yet thou hadst kind entertainment at first, and after that a subsistence, such as it was. Our Henry VI is said to have been of that happy memory, that he never forgot anything but injuries. Elisha, by a noble revenge, bade set bread and water before the Syrians that came to surprise him.

{a} Daniel's Hist., 191.

{b} Diod. Sic., lib. i.

Ver. 8. In their third generation.] The Edomites for their consanguinity, -it is some privilege to be allied to the saints, to be "sister's son to Barnabas," -the {#Col 4:10} Egyptians for their hospitality to God's firstborn Israel. "God is not unrighteous," &c. {#Heb 6:10} {See Trapp on "Heb 6:10"}

Ver. 9. Then keep thee from every wicked thing.] Walk accurately, as carrying thy life in thy hand; for "the sword devoureth one as well as another," {#2Sa 11:25} it spares neither lord nor losel, as they say. Every soldier therefore should be a saint, ready pressed to meet the Lord, who hath said, "I will be sanctified in all them that draw near unto me." {#Le 10:3}

Ver. 10, Then shall he go abroad.] Go voluntarily, though he be not excluded, as lepers and the like were, Arcta nimis obedientia est, ad legem solummodo iustum esse, saith one: God likes a freewill offering.

Ver. 11. He shall wash himself with water.] See #Le 15 {See Trapp on "Le 15:2"} &c. The Turks at this day pertinaciously and superstitiously retain this ceremony. Before prayers they wash both face and hands, sometimes the head and other parts. Yea, some report of them, that every time they make water, or other unclean exercise of nature, they wash, little regarding who stands by. If a dog do but chance to touch their hands, they wash presently, &c. {a}

{a} Blunt's Voyage.

Ver. 12. And shalt turn back and cover.] How much more curious should they be of soul defilements? Sin is the soul's excrements, and defiles a man worse than any excrement. {#Mt 7:15,20,23}

Ver. 13. Thy God walketh in the midst of thy camp.] Where he is both van and rear. {#Isa 52:12}

And to give up thine enemies.] Hence the Philistines were so frightened at the sight of the ark. "Let us flee from the face of Israel, for the Lord fighteth for them," said those Egyptians. {#Ex 14:25}

That he see no unclean thing.] Hereby God taught his people holy conversation, that they should keep themselves from their iniquity, as David did {#Ps 18:23} -that is, from such sins as either by their constitution, calling, company, or custom, they are most prone to.

Ver. 15. The servant that is escaped.] A heathen servant that flees for religion, and desires to "join himself to the Lord, to serve him, and to love the name of the Lord, to be his servant," such must have no cause given them to say, "The Lord hath utterly separated me from his people." {#Isa 56:2,6}

Ver. 17. There shall be no whore.] And what a stinking shame is that, that stews and brothel houses are licensed by the Pope, who reaps no small profit by them? The Papists themselves write with detestation, that at Rome a Jewish maid might not be admitted into the stews of whoredom, unless she would be first baptized; Ut Iudae filiae scortari non liceat, Dei filiae liceat: Imo Israelis filia meretricari non aliter arte possit quam facta per baptismum sanctum Christi sorer et filia. {a}

Nor a Sodomite of the sons of Israel.] {See Trapp on "Ge 19:5"} Pythagoras's precept, πων κυαμων απεχεσθαι, was intended against this kind of horrid and unnatural uncleanness, κυαμοι, signifying somewhat else besides beans. But what a beast was Pope Sixtus Quintus, qui lupanar utriusque Veneris Romoe condidit, as Agrippa reporteth?

{a} Espincaeus, De Contin., lib. iii. cap. 4.

Ver. 18. Nor the price of a dog.] Plutarch tells us that it was not permitted to a dog to enter into the chief tower or temple at Athens, for his heat in venery and ill savour. {a} The Hebrews understand this text literally, according to #Isa 66:3. Others metaphorically, as #Re 22:15, either of impudent cynics, such as Antisthenes, that shame not to commit uncleanness in the sight of others; these are worse than Absalom. {#2Sa 16:22} Or else of Sodomites, buggerers, Meritorii, as they call them, men that have put off all manhood, and are become dogs, worse than dogs. "Am I a dog's head?" said Abner to Ishbosheth {#2Sa 3:8} -that is, shamelessly lecherous.

{a} δια του ακολαστου και δυσωδους,—Plut. Ελληνικ.

Ver. 19. Thou shalt not lend upon usury.] Heb., Upon biting usury. It must needs bite at length that licks so clean. Amalek, the licking people, I mean the nation of usurers and their factors, as cormorants, fall upon the poor borrower, and with open mouth devour him.

"Εστι τοκος προ τοκοιο, τοκος γε μεν εστι και αλλος."

Faenus a multiplici foetu, ut τΟΚΟϢ α ΤΟΚΤΩ. In the year 1235, there were spread through England certain Roman usurers, called Coursini, quasi capientes Ursi; {a} devouring bears, saith Matthew Paris. These bite to purpose. Others are more cunning and close in their conveyance; like serpents, they can sting without hissing; like dog fish, suck your blood only with licking, and in the end kill you, and cut your throats without biting. "For as much as all usury, being forbidden by the law of God, is a sin, and detestable," &c., saith the statute, 13 Eliz., cap. 8. And "Verily so many as increase themselves by usury, &c., they have their goods of the devil's gift" (Homil. of the Church of England, vol. ii. hom. 17, p. 2). Aristotle, {b} by the dim light of nature, saw the evil of it, condemning in one page the usurer and the dicer. And Agis, General of the Athenians, so hated usury, that he made a bonfire of all the usurer's bills and bonds in the market place, and then said that he never saw a finer fire than that in all his life. {c}

{a} Speed.

{b} Arist., Eth., lib. iv. cap. 1.

{c} Plut., in Solone.

Ver. 20. Unto a stranger thou mayest.] And they do it to purpose at this day in foreign parts where they live, straining up their usury to eighteen in the hundred upon the Christian. This is their chief trade, and this is yielded by some as a reason why the Jews do so stink, Quod plerique omnes mensarii sint, faeneratoriam exercentes, et ita nullis exercitati laboribus, i.e., Because most of them are usurers, lead sedentary lives, and use no bodily exercise. It was the saying of a merry fellow, that in Christendom there were neither scholars enough, gentlemen enough, nor Jews enough. If the first, so many would not be pluralists; if the second, so many peasants would not be reckoned among the gentry; if the third, not so many usurers. {a}

{a} Heyl, Geog.

Ver. 21. Thou shalt not slack to pray.] Come off with it round and readily, as those {#Zec 5:9} that had "wings," and "wind in their wings," Habent aulae suum cito, cito God loves a cheerful giver.

Ver. 22. It shall be no sin in thee, / i.e., No such great sin; as #Joh 9:41, so #Joh 15:22,24 Jas 4:17. See #Ec 5:5. Vovere nusquam est praeceptum, saith Bellarmine: We are nowhere in Scripture commanded to vow. And Fateor quod Deus non praecipit, sed tantum consulit nobis ut aliquid illi voveamus, saith another Popish writer. {a} I confess God nowhere commandeth, but only counselleth us to make vows. But what will they say to #Ps 76:11; -"Vow and perform to the Lord your God, bring presents" &c.? And are not the nine lepers condemned by Christ for their negligence and unthankfulness? {#Lu 17:17,18}

{a} Alphons. de Castro., De Monach, lib. ii. cap. 16.

Ver. 24. When thou comest, &c.] As a passenger; {#Mt 12:1,2} how much more as a labourer; {#1Co 9:7} thou mayest take what thou wilt for necessity, but not for superfluity.

Ver. 25. But thou shalt not move a sickle.] Here God reserveth the right and property of the owner, which no man might invade or infringe.

Chapter 24

Ver. 1. Because he hath found some uncleanness.] He is displeas'd with some defect which he hath found either in her body or behaviour: as our Henry VIII pretended at least to do in his Anne of Cleve, sister to William, duke of Cleve, whose other sister Frederick, duke of Saxony, Luther's patron and protector, had espoused. This lady being sent into England, against Frederick's liking, and married to King Henry, seem'd nothing pleasing in his eye, and was therefore (sed quo iure?) soon after divorced. This Stephen Gardiner thought a fit subject for him to work upon against the Lord Cromwell, who had made the match, and now oppos'd the divorce, and was therefore put to death, which he suffered right Christianly and cheerfully. {a}

Let him write her a bill of divorcement.] Heb., He shall write her a bill of divorcement. God permitteth, he commandeth not the Jews thus to do, as they mistook the matter, {#Mt 19:7} and were better informed by our Saviour. {#Mt 19:8} {See Trapp on "Mt 19:8"}

{a} Speed's Hist., fol. 1042.

Ver. 3. And if the latter husband hate her.] As many Nabals now-a-days do. Job was not more weary of his boils, than they are of their bedfellows, cursing their weddingday as much as he did his birthday, and thirsting after a divorce as he did after death: which, because it cannot be had, their lives prove like the sojourning of Israel in Marah, where almost nothing could be heard but mourning, conjuring, and complaining.

Ver. 4. After that she is defiled.] Or, Caused to be defiled, to wit, by her husband, who put her away first, he being her only lawful husband. {#Mt 5:32}

Ver. 5. Shall cheer up his wife.] For the better knitting of their affections; which, if well done at first, will continue the more firm ever after; as a broken bone well set, or as two boards well glued together, will sooner break in a new place than there.

Ver. 6. A man's life.] That is, his livelihood. A poor man in his house is like a snail in his shell, crush that and you kill him. See #Lu 8:43 Mr 12:44. All her life, ολον του βιον, that is, all her living.

Ver. 7. And maketh merchandise of him.] What then shall be done to those seducers, that "creeping," or shooting themselves into houses, "lead captive silly women," {#2Ti 3:6} and simple men, {#Ro 16:18} take them prisoners, and then make price of them? {#2Pe 2:3} Of which sort of soul merchants, there are now-a-days found not a few. See #Re 18:13.

Ver. 8. The Levites shall teach you.] Not the history only, but the mystery too. {See Trapp on "Le 13:2"} &c.

Ver. 9. Did unto Miriam.] When he spat in her face, and spared her not, though a prophetess, and a conductress of God's people to Canaan. {#Mic 6:4} God will not pass by the sins of his saints, if scandalous especially, without a sensible check.

Ver. 10. To fetch his pledge.] To see, Quam sit eurta supellex, and to pick and choose what pledge thou pleasest.

Ver. 12. Thou shalt not sleep with his pledge.] As those cruel crafties did, {#Am 2:8} that "sold the righteous for silver, and the poor for a pair of shoes." {#Am 2:6}

Ver. 13. May bless thee.] Saying, as St Paul brings in the relieved poor Christian, {#2Co 9:15} "Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift." God will surely bless thee for such a blessing.

And it shall be righteousness unto thee.] God will reckon it for a good work, and graciously reward it, he will turn paymaster to thee; thy righteousness, and thy riches too, shall endure for ever. {#Ps 112:3}

Chapter 25

Ver. 1. If there be a controversy.] Among the Mohammedans there are very few law suits, and the reason is given, Quod temere litigantes publice flagellis caeduntur, because they that sue others without just cause are whipped publicly. Once it was counted ominous to commence actions and follow suits. Of our common barristers we may well say, as the historian doth of mathematicians, Genus hominum quod in rep. nostra et vetabitur semper et retinebitur. {a}

{a} Caesar. Com. Tac., lib. i. cap. 7.

Ver. 2. To be beaten before his face.] The Turks, when cruelly lashed, are compelled to return to the judge that commanded it, to kiss his hand, to give him thanks, and to pay the officer that whipped them.

Ver. 3. Should seem vile unto thee.] There is an honour due to all men, {#1Pe 2:17} and though we must hate the sin, yet not the sinner.

Ver. 4. That treadeth out the corn.] Which was the manner of that country: whereunto also the prophet alludeth, {#Ho 10:11} "Ephraim is a heifer, that loveth to tread out the corn" (because while it treads, it feeds on the corn), but not to plough, because no refreshing till the work was done.

Ver. 5. Her husband's brother.] This was a special exception from that general law, {#Le 18:16} but yet gave no liberty under this pretext, to have more wives than one at once. {See Trapp on "Mt 22:23"}

Ver. 6. The first born.] Provided that he be a son; as appears by the reason here given, that his name be not put out of Israel. It signified the birthright of Christ that should never die. "He shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days." {#Isa 53:10} Filiabitur nomen eius {#Ps 72:17} The name of Christ shall endure for ever; it shall be begotten as one generation is begotten of another; there shall be a succession of Christ's name.

Ver. 9. And loose his shoe.] To show that he was worthy to go barefoot, and had no right howsoever to tread upon that ground, as any part of his estate. See #Ru 4:7. The Turks have a ceremony somewhat like this; {a} the woman may sue a divorce, when her husband would abuse her against nature: which she doth by taking off his or her shoe before the judge, and holding it the sole upward, but speaking nothing, for the uncleanness of the fact.

And spit in his face.] As unworthy to show his face amongst his brethren. See #Nu 12:14 Isa 50:6.

That will not build up his brother's house.] {See Trapp on "Ex 1:21"}

{a} Blunt's Voyage.

Ver. 12. Cut off her hand.] The instrument of her sin. Thus Cranmer thrust his hand, wherewith he had subscribed a recantation, first into the fire, crying out, "Thou unworthy right hand." An Act of Parliament was here made, in the reign of Philip and Mary, that the authors and sowers of seditious writings should lose their right hands. By virtue whereof John Stubbs and William Page had their right hands cut off, with a cleaver driven through the wrist with the force of a beetle, in the days of Queen Elizabeth, for a book written against the marriage with the Duke of Anjou, entitled, "The Gulf wherein England will be Swallowed up by the French Marriage," &c., which most men presaged would, if it had gone on, have been the ruin of religion. {a}

{a} Camden's Elisab., fol. 239.

Ver. 13. Divers weights, a great and a small.] As they have that weigh not out a whole seventh day to God, who hath given men six whole days to labour in; these sell by one measure and buy by another. It was an error, doubtless, for want of due light and better information, in that pious prince, Edward VI, to give order to his council, that upon Sundays they should attend public affairs of the realm, despatch answers to letters, and make full despatches of all things concluded in the week before; provided that they be present at common prayer. {a}

{a} Life of Edw. VI, by Sir J. Heywood, p. 147.

Ver. 18. How he met thee by the way.] Not with bread and water, but with fire and sword. See #Ex 17:8.

And he feared not God.] Who had so powerfully brought his Israel out of Egypt. See #Job 6:14 Ge 20:11. {See Trapp on "Job 6:14"} {See Trapp on "Ge 20:11"}

Ver. 19. Thou shalt not forget it.] Neither did they. Saul should have utterly destroyed them, {#Isa 15:18,19} but wherein he failed, God stirred up the Simeonites in Hezekiah's days to smite the rest of the Amalekites that were escaped. {#1Ch 4:42,43} It is ill angering the Ancient of days. His wrath lasts longer than hot coals of juniper, {#Ps 120:4} his judgments are severe and durable: as we use to say of winter frosts, they never rot in the sky, but shall fall, if late, yet surely, yet seasonably. God's forbearance is no quittance.

Chapter 26

Ver. 2. Thou shalt take of the first, &c.] In token of homage, or as a chief rent due to God the true proprietary, of whom they held all.

Ver. 5. A Syrian ready to perish.] Jacob, whose original was from Haran in Syria, {#Ge 11:31} and whose abode had been with Laban the Syrian, in much poverty, affliction, and misery. {#Ho 12:12} How low and mean were we of this nation at first! Brith signifies blue-coloured, sc., with woad: hence we were called Britons. Instead of fine clothes our ancestors dyed their skins, and painted upon them sundry sorts of birds and beasts: for food they had barks of trees, &c. This should never be forgotten.

And became there a nation.] Consider we likewise what we were by nature, and should have been; what we are by grace, and shall be; and then take we up that most modest speech of that noble Athenian captain, Iphicrates, in the midst of all his glory, εἰς οὐρανὸν εἰς οὐρανὸν; {a} from how great baseness and misery, to what great blessedness and glory are we advanced; being "raised up together, and made to sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus" {#Eph 2:9,11-13} {See Trapp on "Eph

2:11"} {See Trapp on "Eph 2:12"} {See Trapp on "Eph 2:13"} What was there in us, said Tamerlane to Bajazet the great Turk, now his prisoner, that God should set us over two great empires of Turks and Tartars, to command many more worthy than ourselves, you being blind of one eye, and I lame of a leg, &c.? {b} Peter Martyr told Queen Elizabeth in an epistle, that princes must be doubly thankful to God: (1.) As men; (2.) As eminent men, exalted above others. So must all God's servants, who being his firstborn, are in that respect "higher than the kings of the earth," {#Ps 89:27} and being "the firstfruits of his revenue," are therefore "holiness to the Lord." {#Jer 2:3}

{a} Arist., Rhetor., lib, v. cap. 9.

{b} Leonclav., Annal. Turc.

Ver. 12. The stranger, the fatherless.] Thus God doth not only plead the poor man's cause; {#De 15:10,11} but he allots a portion of the third year's tithe, not only to the Levite, who is never excluded, but to the stranger, fatherless, and widow, as Jerome observeth and calleth it πρωκοδεκαδη, the poor man's tithe.

Ver. 13. I have not transgressed.] This is spoken, not by way of Pharisaiical boasting or opinion of merit, but public testification of entire obedience.

Ver. 14. I have not eaten thereof in my mourn, ing.] All God's worships were to be celebrated with joy. {#De 12:7} Sacrifices offered with mourning were abominated, {#Ho 9:4} yea, accursed. {#De 28:47} None might come to the court of Persia in mourning weeds. {#Es 4:2}

For any unclean use.] Or, Common profane use. Common and unclean is one and the same in sundry languages; to teach us, that it is hard to deal in common businesses, and not defile ourselves, and that those that come to holy things with common affections and carriages profane them.

Nor given ought thereof for the dead.] To bury them, or buy provision for the funeral feast. {#Jer 16:7 Eze 24:7 Ho 9:4}

Ye have done according, &c.] It is a witty expression of Luther; By men's boasting of what they have done, says he, Haec ego feci, haec ego feci, they become nothing else but faeces, dregs. But so did not these. {See Trapp on "De 26:13"}

Ver. 17. Thou hast avouched.] This we do, when with highest estimation, most vigorous affections, and utmost endeavours we bestow ourselves upon God, giving up our names and hearts to the profession of truth. And this our choosing God for our God, {#Ps 73:25} is a sign he first chose us. {#1Jo 4:19} Mary answers not "Rabboni," till Christ hath said "Mary" to her. It is he that brings us into the bonds of the covenant. {#Eze 20:37} He first cries out, Who is on my side? who? and then gives us to answer, {as #Isa 44:5} "One says, I am the Lord's; another calls himself by the name of Jacob; another subscribes," &c.

Ver. 19. And to make thee high.] "Assyria is the work of God's hand," but "Israel is his inheritance." {#Isa 19:25 43:3}

Ver. 2. And plaster them with plaster.] That they might have it in white and black.

Ver. 4. In mount Ebal.] Where the curse was denounced, {#De 27:13} to signify, that those that sought salvation in the law, must needs be left under the curse. The law is a yoke of bondage, as Jerome calls it; and they who look for righteousness from thence are like oxen, who toil and draw, and when they have done their labour, are fatted for slaughter.

Ver. 5. Thou shalt build an altar.] For burnt offerings, &c. {#De 27:6,7} God teacheth them thereby, that righteousness, impossible to the law, was to be sought in Christ, figured by that altar and those sacrifices. Thus the moral law drove the Jews to the ceremonial, which was their gospel, as it doth now drive us to Christ, who is indeed "the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth." {#Ro 10:4}

Ver. 8. All the words of this law very plainly.] Therefore it could not be all Deuteronomy, much less all Moses's books, as some have thought; for what stones could suffice for such a work? Unless they could write as close, -but how then could it be very plainly?—as he did who set forth the whole history of our Saviour's passion very lively, both things, and acts, and persons, on the nails of his own hands, as Maeiolus reporteth. {a}

{a} In Canicular. Colloq.

Ver. 15. Cursed be he, &c.] The blessings are not mentioned by Moses; that we might learn to look for them by the Messiah only.

{#Ac 3:26}

Ver. 16. That setteth light.] That despises, undervalues, not only that curses, as #Ex 21:17.

Ver. 24. That smiteth.] Either with violent hand or virulent tongue.

{#Jer 28:16,17}

Ver. 25. Cursed be he that taketh reward.] Among the Romans, by the law of the twelve tables, it was death without any deliverance. The psalmist doometh this sin with exclusion out of heaven. {#Ps 15:5} That king of this land that was called St Edmund, was wont oft to say, There is not much difference betwixt those two words, prendere and pendere, to take gifts and to hang, and that the latter was the desert of the former. A bribing judge wants but a hurdle, a horse, and a halter, to do him right; as Belknap once said in another case.

Ver. 26. Cursed.] Aut faciendum, aut patiendum. Men must either have the direction of the law, or the correction.

Chapter 28

Ver. 1. If thou shalt hearken diligently.] Heb., If hearkening thou shalt hearken; if when God speaks once, thou shalt hear it twice; as David did, {#Ps 62:11} by a blessed rebound of meditation and practice.

Will set thee on high.] "Thou shalt ride upon the high places of the earth." {#Isa 58:14} There thou shalt have thy commoration, but in heaven thy conversation {a} {#Php 3:20} being a high and holy people, {#De 26:19} high in worth, and humble in heart, as one saith of Athanasius.

{a} υψηλος τοις εργασις, ταπεινος δε τω φρονηματι—Nazian

Ver. 2. And overtake thee.] Unexpectedly befall thee. "Surely goodness and mercy shall follow thee," {#Ps 23:6} as the evening sunbeams follow the passenger, as the rock water followed the Israelites in the wilderness, and overtook them at their stations. {#1Co

10:4} "O continue," or draw out to the length, "thy lovingkindness unto them that know thee." {#Ps 36:10} There will be a continued series, a connection between them, to all such.

Ver. 3. Blessed shalt thou be.] What blessedness is, {See Trapp on "Mt 5:3"}

Ver. 4. The fruit of thy body.] Which is thy chief possession; but without my blessing will be bitter sweets, {a} "Blessed is the man that hath his quiver full of such as are the arrows of a strong man," {#Ps 128:3,4} the knottiness of whose nature is refined and reformed, and made smooth by grace. Arrows be not arrows by growth, but by art: what can better preserve Jacob from confusion, or his face from waxing pale, than when he shall see his children, the work of God's hands, framed and fitted by the word in regeneration, and the duties of new obedience? This will make him to sanctify God, even to sanctify the Holy One, and with singular encouragement from the God of Israel. {#Isa 29:22,23}

Ver. 5. Blessed shall be thy basket and thy store.] Or, Thy dough trough. The Greek hath it, Thy barns and thy remainders. The meaning is, Thou shalt know no want. Cicero {a} saith, One friend should wish to another three things only, to enjoy health, to possess honour, and not suffer necessity. He that observeth God's commands to do them, as #De 28:1, shall have all these and more.

Ver. 6. Blessed shalt thou be when thou comest in.] "Surely goodness and mercy shall follow thee all the days of thy life"; {#Ps 23:6} thou shalt have a confluence of all, both inward and outward, comforts and contentments.

Ver. 7. The Lord shall cause thine enemies.] Mr Fox observes, {a} that in King Edward VI's time, the English put to flight their enemies in Musselburgh field, the selfsame day and hour wherein the reformation enjoined by parliament was put in execution at London, by burning of idolatrous images. Such a dependence hath our success upon our obedience.

And flee before thee seven ways.] In the forementioned fight many so strained themselves in their race that they fell down breathless and dead, whereby they seemed in running from their deaths to run to it: two thousand, lying all day as dead, got away in the night. The Irish were so galled or scared with the English ordinance, that they had neither good hearts to go forward, nor good liking to stand still, nor good assurance to run away, saith the historian. {b}

{a} Act. and Mon.

{b} Life of Ed. VI., by Sir J. Heywood.

Ver. 8. The Lord shall command the blessing.] Now if he send his Mandamus, who shall withstand it?

Ver. 9. The Lord shall establish thee a holy people unto himself.] This is more and better than all the former: he shall "bless thee with all spiritual blessings, in heavenly things, in Christ Jesus." {#Eph 1:3} He is rich, not that hath the world, but that can contemn it.

Ver. 10. And they shall be afraid of thee.] Natural conscience cannot but do homage to the image of God stamped upon the natures and works of the godly. When they see in them that which is above the ordinary nature of men, or their expectation, they are afraid of the name of God, whereby they are called; their very hearts ache and quake within them; as is to be seen in Nebuchadnezzar, Darius, Herod, Dioclesian, who was so amazed at the singular piety and invincible patience of the primitive Christians, that he laid down the empire in a humour, Quod Christi nomen se deleturum, uti cupiverat, desperasset, {a} because that when he sought to root out religion, he saw he could do no good on it.

Ver. 12. And thou shalt lend.] This was our condition in the happy days of that incomparable Elizabeth, not to be passed over slightly without one sigh breathed forth, now after forty years, in her sacred memory. What a deal both of men and moneys did she lend the French, the Hollanders, &c.

Ver. 13. And the Lord shall make thee.] See a parallel place. {#Ho 13:1} "When Ephraim spake, there was trembling; he exalted himself in Israel; but when he offended in Baal, he died." Before, none durst budge against the name of Ephraim; but after he offended in Baal, every paltry adversary trampled upon him as a dead man.

Ver. 14. And thou shalt not go aside.] But keep my commandments curiously, even "as the apple of thine eye," {#Pr 7:2} with all chariness and circumspection, since the least deviation is dangerous, yea, destructive.

Ver. 15. All these curses shall come.] Far more curses are mentioned than blessings. Such is the baseness of our natures, that we are sooner terrified with menaces than moved with mercies. See we may here how the curse of God haunts the wicked, as it were a fury, in all his ways. In the city it attends him, in the country it hovers over him; coming in it accompanies him, going forth it follows him, and in travel it is his comrade: if it distaste not his dough, or empty his basket, yet will it fill his store with strife, or mingle the wrath of God with his sweetest morsels. It is a moth in his wardrobe, murrain among his cattle, mildew in his field, rot among his sheep, and oftentimes makes the fruit of his loins his greatest heartbreak, so that he is ready to wish with Augustus, Utinam aut caelebs vivissem, aut orbis periissem; Oh that I had either never married, or died childless!

Ver. 21. The Lord shall make the pestilence.] Which Hippocrates calls To θειον, as the falling sickness is called Morbus sacer, as more immediately sent of God.

Ver. 22. The Lord shall smite thee, &c.] {See Trapp on "Le 26:16"}

Ver. 23. See on #Le 26:19.

Ver. 24. Powder and dust.] Which the wind and other things raise in times of drought.

Ver. 25. The Lord shall cause thee to be smitten.] David well understood the heaviness of this stroke, and therefore chose rather to fall into God's hands another way, {#2Sa 24:14} since "the tender mercies of the wicked are cruelties":—

“ Una salus victis nullam sperare salutem.”

Ver. 26. And thy carcass shall be meat.] Thou shalt want the honour of honest burial; which the Jews accounted worse than death, {#Ec 6:3} and the Gentiles extreme misery.

Ver. 27. With the botch of Egypt,] i.e., With the leprosy called Elephantiasis, when the skin grows hard as the elephant's skin. This, saith one, was bred only about Nile, the river of Egypt.

Ver. 28. With madness and blindness.] Spiritual, especially; such as befell the Jews of old, {#Ro 11:18 2Co 3:14} the chief priests and scribes especially, who, being questioned by Herod about the King of the Jews, {#Mt 2:4,5} could answer directly out of the Scriptures, and give such signs of the Messiah as did evidently agree to Jesus Christ. And yet because they discerned not their day of grace, but winked hard with their eyes, and shut the windows, lest the light should come in, they were by a special judgment so besotted and infatuated, that when God shows them the man, to whom their own signs agree, they cannot allow of him, nor will yield to be saved by him upon any terms. How shamefully they were deluded by Barchocab, is notoriously known. And after this, when they saw Mohammed arising in such power, they were straight ready to cry him up for their Messiah. But when they saw him eat of a camel, they were as blank as when they saw the hoped issue of their late Jewish virgin turned to a daughter. They are generally light, aerial, and fanatical brains, apt to work themselves into the fool's paradise of a sublime dotage. Howbeit God, we trust, will at length cure them of this spiritual ophthalmy {disordered mental vision} and frenzy. Their dispersion for this one thousand six hundred years is such, as that one of their own Rabbins concludes from thence that their Messiah must needs be come, and they must needs suffer so much for killing him. "Oh that the salvation of Israel were once come out of Zion! When the Lord bringeth back the captivity of his people, then shall Jacob rejoice and Israel be glad." {#Ps 14:7}

Ver. 29. And thou shalt be only oppressed.] As the Thebans, ever till then victorious, were, after the death of Epaminondas, famous only for their overthrows: as Rome, since Antichristian, was never besieged by an enemy, but it was taken and plundered: as the Jews since Christ's death never attempted anything but miscarried. An evil, an only evil, &c. {#Eze 7:5}

Ver. 30. Thou shalt built a house, &c.] A great aggravation of a man's misery it is, to fall from high hopes, to fail of large expectations, as Haman did, and Absalom, and Alexander the Great, and Tamerlane, who preparing to perfect his conquest of the Greek Empire, and having given a good beginning thereunto, in the midst of his high hopes and greatest power, died of an ague, Jan. 27, 1462. {a} Many men spend their strength and waste their wits in getting these outward things, and in learning how to put them to their delightfulest use: and then, when to possess them might seem a happiness, either they die or are otherwise deprived of all the sweet they have laboured for.

{a} Turk. Hist.

Ver. 31. Thine ox shall be slain, &c.] Thou shalt be plundered of all, that is, deplumed, thy feathers plucked from thee to the very bare skin; -as plundering signifies in Dutch; and from the Dutch wars we first had the word plunder.

Ver. 32. And thine eyes shall look.] A sad sight to see our children butchered before our eyes, as Mauricius the Emperor did; or otherwise misused by a merciless enemy. Doves sometimes sit in their dove-cotes and see their nests destroyed, their young ones taken away and killed before their eyes, neither do they ever offer to rescue or revenge, as all other creatures either do or desire to do.

And fail with looking.] As Sisera's mother's did. {#Jud 5:28}

Ver. 33. The fruit of thy land, &c.] So #Eze 25:4. They shall eat thy fruit, and they shall drink thy milk. See #Jer 5:17,1:7.

Ver. 34. So that thou shalt be mad, &c.] As Bajazet was in his iron cage; as Pope Boniface VIII was the time when shut up in St. Angelo by Sara Columnus, his mortal enemy, renting himself with his teeth, and devouring his own fingers. {a} Philip, the Spanish king, is said to have borne patiently the defeat given to his invincible armada in the year 1588, but ten years after he died of a very loathsome and incurable disease, a sore botch that seized upon him from the sole of his foot unto the top of his head; as is to be seen set down by Carol. Ver. 37. And thou shalt become.] See on #Ps 44:14.

Ver. 38. For the locust shall consume it.] See this fulfilled in #Joe 1:4 Am 4:9 7:1,2 Hag 1:6,11.

Ver. 41. Thou shalt not enjoy them.] Heb., They shall not be thine; thou shalt be least master of them.

Ver. 42. The locusts.] All sorts of vermin.

Ver. 43. The stranger.] The Lurdaines, as once here the Lord Danes.

Ver. 45. Pursue thee and overtake thee.] Though thou shuffle, as Balaam's ass once did before the angel, from side to side, and strive to shift them; though thou wriggle and writhe, after the manner of wrestlers, to avoid the foil; I will wry with thee, as in #Ps 18:26, and my hand shall meet thee at every turn.

Ver. 46. For a sign.] Of God's heavy displeasure.

Ver. 47. For the abundance all things.] Aristotle was wont to tax his Athenians, Quod cum duas res invenissent, frumenta ac leges, frumentis ut erentur, legibus nequaquam; imo moribus suis quam legibus uti mallent, as Valerius Maximus addeth, {a} Sure it is, that as these Jews of old, so we to this day are much to be blamed, for that we live in God's good land, but not by God's good laws.

{a} Laert., lib. v. cap. 1.

Ver. 48. In want of all things.] The want whereof shall teach thee the worth of them. Blessings are fairest on the back side. {a}

{a} Bona a tergo formosissima.

Ver. 49. As the eagle fleeth.] Swiftly, strongly, greedily, the Vulturine eagle especially.

Ver. 50. A nation of fierce countenance.] Heb., Strong of face, i.e., bold, fierce, cruel, impudent; as was Antiochus Epiphanes. {#Da 8:23} See there.

Ver. 51. Fruit of thy cattle.] See on #De 28:31.

Ver. 54. His eye shall be evil, / i.e., Envious and grutchful.

Ver. 56. The tender and delicate.] These threatenings were tanquam in speculo conspicuae, literally and punctually fulfilled upon the Jews at the last destruction of Jerusalem, at which time wrath came upon them to the utmost. {#2Th 2:6-13}

Ver. 57. And toward her young one.] Heb., Her after birth, which she shall devour, and the child together with it.

Ver. 58. This glorious and fearful name.] That Nomen maiestativum, as Bernard calleth it. The wiser sort of heathens acknowledged, Augustius esse de Deo sentiendum, quam ut nomen et imaginem eius passim ac temere usurpemus, that higher thoughts must be taken of God, than lightly and profanely to make use of his name, which no man may presume in a sudden unmannerliness to blurt out. {a} When they would swear by their Jupiter, they would break off their oath with a Μα τον, as those that only durst to owe the rest to their thoughts. The Greeks and Romans both worshipped the same Jupiter, but the Romans are therefore better thought of, because they ever thought and spake more reverently of him than the Greeks; as may be seen in Homer and Virgil. The Egyptians so honoured their Mercurius Trismegistus, that they held it not lawful to pronounce his name commonly and rashly. Tat, the son of this Trismegist, flourished in Egypt about the time that Moses wrote his Deuteronomy, as saith Eusebius.

{a} Hinc Pythagoricum illud, εν δακτυλιω Θεον εικονα μη περιφερεια—Suidas.

Ver. 59. And of long continuance.] So that thy living shall be no better than to lie a-dying.

Ver. 60. All the diseases of Egypt.] Which what they were, see #Ex 8:2,16,21 9:3,9,15,18 10:4 21 11:5

Ver. 61. Which is not written.] God hath treasures of plagues, such as were never yet read of. Few years but bring forth new diseases, such as puzzle the best physicians.

Ver. 62. And ye shall be left few in number.] And so "shall know my breach of covenant," because ye broke first.

Ver. 63. So the Lord will rejoice over you.] See here the venomous nature of sin, so far forth offensive to Almighty God, as to cause him, who otherwise afflicts not willingly, {#La 3:33} but delights in mercy, {#Mic 7:18} to rejoice in the ruin of his creatures, as here, to laugh at their destruction, and mock when their fear cometh, {#Pr 1:26} to take as much pleasure therein as a man would do in a cup of generous wine, {#Re 16:19} and to be as much eased thereby, as one over-gorged would be in ridding his stomach of that which oppressed it. {#Re 3:16}

Ver. 64. And the Lord shall scatter thee.] The Jews are to this day a miserable, dejected, and dispersed people, abhorred of God and men, and exiled out of the world, as it were, by a common consent of nations.

Ver. 65. A trembling heart.] Juvenal by a jeer calls them Iudaeos trementes, trembling Jews (Sat. vi.). It seems they had Cain's curse upon them.

Ver. 66. And thy life shall hang in doubt.] Semper et indesinenter desperabis de vita; thou shalt live in continual expectation of death: as Tiberius caused such to do as he most hated, for a singular punishment.

Ver. 67. Would God it were even.] A graphical description of misery. Compare #Job 7:3,4.

Ver. 68. And the Lord shall bring thee into Egypt.] This is the last and greatest curse here threatened. Oh pray, pray, said that Dutch divine upon his deathbed, Pontifex enim Romanus, et Concilium Tridentinum mira moliuntur, for the Pope and his council are seeking to bring us all back into spiritual Egypt.

Chapter 29

Ver. 1. Beside the covenant.] Which yet was also a covenant of grace, and the same with this in substance; only that at Horeb was made and delivered in a more legal manner, this in a more evangelical, as appears in the following chapter.

Ver. 2. Moses called.] At several times it is like, these things were delivered, and not at once.

Ver. 3. The signs and those great miracles.] None of all which wrought kindly upon them to effectual conversion, because God denied concurrence and influence of his grace. Jeroboam had as great a miracle wrought before him in the drying up of his hand as St Paul at his conversion, yet was he not wrought upon, because the Spirit did not set it on.

Ver. 4. Yet the Lord hath not given you.] Nor is he bound to do, "but on whom he will he showeth mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth," i.e., he softeneth not. Till when, a man stands in the midst of means, as a stake in the midst of streams, unmoveable: yea, the more God forbids a sin, the more he bids for it. {#Ro 7:8} {See Trapp on "Mt 13:11"} {See Trapp on "Mt 13:13"} {See Trapp on "Mt 13:14"}

Ver. 5. Your clothes.] {See Trapp on "De 8:4"}

Ver. 6. Ye have not eaten bread,] viz., Ordinary, {see #De 2:6} but manna; et benefieium postulat officium.

Ver. 9. That ye may prosper.] Piety is the right and ready way to prosperity. Sulla, surnamed Felix, accounted it not the least part of his happiness that Metellus, surnamed Pius, was his friend. Godliness is the best friend to happiness.

Ver. 10. Before the Lord.] Who seeth your inside also, and is intimo vestro vobis intimior.

Ver. 11. From the hewer of thy wood.] The meanest amongst you, such as afterwards were the Gibeonites, who also by faith became covenanters, and are called Nethinims in Ezra and Nehemiah. They were made drawers of water to the temple, as a kind of punishment: God made it a mercy; for the nearer they were to the Church, the nearer they came to God.

Ver. 16. How we have dwelt.] And how hard is it to pass through Ethiopia, how much more to dwell there, and not to be discoloured! Sin is catching, and by the senses, those five ports of the soul, that old serpent oft winds himself into the heart. Ye have seen their abominations; oh that you would say, Satis est vidisse, &c. Now therefore, lest there should be, &c., #De 29:18.

Ver. 17. A root that beareth gall] An evil heart of unbelief, {#Heb 3:12} a deceitful and deceived heart, {#Jer 17:9 Isa 44:20} that is ever either weaving spiders' webs—i.e., loving vanity, seeking after leasing {#Ps 4:2}—or hatching cockatrice' eggs, that is, acting mischief. {#Isa 59:5} As in that first chaos were the seeds of all creatures; so in man's heart, here therefore fitly called, a root of rottenness, of all sins. {a} Holy Bradford would never look upon any one's lewd life with one eye, but presently reflect upon himself with the other, and say, In this my vile heart remains that sin, which without God's special grace I should have committed as well as he.

Ver. 19. When he heareth the words.] But feareth them no more than Behemoth doth the iron weapons, which are esteemed by him as straws. The presumptuous sinner, saith one, makes God a God of clouts, -one that, howsoever he speaks heavy words, will not do as he saith. Words are but wind, say they in Jeremiah. {#Jer 5:13} "God forbid," say they in the Gospel. {#Lu 20:16} These things are but spoken in terrorem, thinks the practical atheist; bugbear words, devised on purpose to frighten silly people, &c. Ahab, after he was threatened with utter rooting out, begat fifty sons, as it were to cross God, and to try it out with him. So Thrasonical Lamech brags, and goes on to outdare God himself; "If Cain be avenged," &c. {#Ge 4:24} The old Italians were wont, in time of thunder, to shoot off their greatest ordinance, and to ring their greatest bells, to drown the noise of the heavens: like unto these are many frontless and flagitious persons. "But shall they escape by iniquity? In thine anger"—it is not more a prayer than a prophecy—"cast down the people, O God." {#Ps 56:7}

To add drunkenness to thirst.] To "add rebellion to sin." {#Job 34:37} "To drink iniquity like water." {#Job 34:7} His sin and his repentance run in a circle, as drunkenness and thirst do. He sins and cries God mercy, and says he will sin no more, and yet does it again the next day, till his heart be so hardened by the deceitfulness of sin, that at length he loseth all passive power of "recovering himself out of the snare of the devil, by whom he is taken alive at his pleasure." {#2Ti 2:26}

Ver. 20. The Lord will not spare him.] God cannot satisfy himself in threatening this heinous sin, as if the very naming of it had enraged his jealousy. Yea, when he threateneth it, he useth here no qualifications, as he doth in other cases, but is absolute in threatening, to show that he will be resolute in punishing. See the like in #Isa 22:12-14 Eze 24:13. It is better, therefore, to have a sore than a seared conscience; as a burning fever is more hopeful than a lethargy.

Ver. 21. And the Lord shall separate him unto evil.] Shall single him out as an object of his wrath; as the huntsman severeth out from the rest a stag to hunt for that day.

Ver. 22. When they see the plagues.] A presumptuous offender is a traitor to the state; "and one sinner destroyeth much good." {#Ec 9:18}

Ver. 23. And beareth not any grass.] As they say no ground doth where the great Turk hath once set his foot; such waste he makes, and such desolation he leaves behind him.

Like the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah.] {See Trapp on "Ge 19:24"}
{See Trapp on "Ge 19:25"}

Admah and Zeboim.] Which two cities, bordering on Sodom and Gomorrah, were the worse, and fared the worse, for their neighbourhood, as Hamath did for Damascus. {#Zec 9:2} God overthrew them, and repented not. {#Jer 20:16}

And that the whole land thereof is brimstone and salt.] In the fire that consumed Sodom there was, it seemeth, admixed salt, to make the land barren, and to pickle up the people; brimstone also to keep down with its weight the fire, which of itself was light, and tended upwards.

Ver. 26. And whom he had not given unto them.] Or, Who had not given to them any portion. For "Can the vanities of the Gentiles give rain? or can the heavens give showers?" {#Jer 14:22} As Saul said, "Can the son of Jesse give you vineyards and olive-yards?" &c. {#1Sa 22:7} So may God say to apostates, Can the world do for you as I can?

Ver. 27. All the curses.] This was accomplished, as is by Daniel acknowledged. {#Da 9:11, &c.}

Ver. 28. And cast them into another land.] Cast them with a violence, with a vengeance; -in the Hebrew the word cast hath an extraordinary large letter ל; -"sling them out as out of a sling." {#1Sa 25:29} {Hebrew Text Note}

Ver. 29. The secret things belong.] This is one of those sixteen places which in the Hebrew are marked with a special note of regard. Eorum quae scire nec datur, nec fas est, licita est ignorantia. Scientiae appetentia, insaniae species, saith Calvin, out of Augustine.

Chapter 30

Ver. 1. The blessing and the curse.] When thou hast made trial of both, and hath bought thy wit, as feeling by woeful experience what an evil and a bitter thing sin is, and how easily thou mightest have redeemed thine own sorrows by better obedience.

Ver. 2. And shalt return to the Lord.] By sin we run away from God; by repentance we return to him.

Ver. 3. That then the Lord thy God.] Conversio Iudaeorum magnifice hic promittitur, saith one. Here is a stately promise of the conversion of the Jews, concerning which, {See Trapp on "Ro 11:25"} &c.

Ver. 4. If any of thine be driven.] The Jews have been, for this sixteen hundred years and upwards, a dejected and despised people, hated and cast out by a common consent of all nations, for their unexpiable guilt in murdering the Messiah, which they now begin to be somewhat sensible of, and will be so more and more. {See Trapp on "De 28:28"}

Ver. 6. And the Lord thy God.] See #De 10:16.

Ver. 7. Will put all these curses upon thine enemies.] God will recompense "tribulation to them that have troubled you"; {#2Th 1:6} he will "spoil the spoilers"; {#Isa 33:1} "deliver the just out of trouble, and the wicked shall come in his stead." {#Pr 11:8 Isa 65:13,14} It seemeth to the Church's enemies an incredible paradox, and a news by far more admirable than acceptable, that there should be such a transmutation of conditions on both sides to contraries; but so it will be, as sure as the coat is on their backs, or the heart in their bodies. See #La 4:21.

Ver. 8. And thou shalt return.] Come again to thyself, as the prodigal, who had been for some while beside himself.

Ver. 9. And in the fruit of thy land for good.] God will provide that thou shalt not be the worse for thine outward abundance; that fulness shall not breed forgetfulness. It is as hard to bear prosperity, as to drink much wine and not be giddy, or as to drink strong waters and not weaken the brain thereby. The parable of the sun and wind is well known. Some of those in Queen Mary's days, who kept their garments close about them, wore them afterwards more loosely, when they came to prosperity and preferment. It is a marvellous great mercy to have outward comforts and contentments for good. Bonus Deus Constantinum Magnum tantis terrenis implevit muneribus, quanta optare nullus auderet, saith Augustine, {a} God of his goodness heaped all good things upon Constantine.

{a} De Civ. Dei, lib. v. cap. 25.

Ver. 11. For this commandment.] This word of faith, {#Ro 10:8} that teacheth the righteousness of faith, {#Ro 10:6} and speaketh on this wise, the doctrine of salvation by faith that works by love, this is clearly enough revealed in both Testaments, so that none can reasonably plead ignorance, and think to be excused by it.

Ver. 12. Who shall go up for us to heaven?] And yet to know heavenly things, is to ascend into heaven. {#Pr 30:4}

Ver. 13. Neither is it beyond the sea.] Beyond the sea it was to us, till blessed Luther's books were brought hither, together with Tyndale's translation and other good men's writings. Some Papists jeer us, and say that turkeys, hops, and heresy came into this kingdom in one bottom. Howbeit, long before this the Lady Anne, wife to king Richard II, sister to Wincseslaus king of Bohemia, by living here was made acquainted with the gospel; whence also many Bohemians coming hither conveyed Wickliffe's books into Bohemia, whereby a good foundation was laid for the ensuing Reformation, A.D. 1417, by the help of another good queen there, called Sophia. The writings also of John Huss, brought thence, wrought much good in this kingdom, a hundred years before Luther's time.

Ver. 14. Very nigh.] Nigher than the skin is to the flesh, or the flesh to the bones; it is within thy nature, and shall be in thy heart, λογος εμφοτος, an inbred or indwelling word. {#Jas 1:21}

That thou mayest do it,] sc., By believing in Christ, {#Joh 6:24} and yielding the obedience of faith. {#Heb 8:10}

Ver. 15. See, I have set before thee.] Matters of great importance must be set on with greatest vehemency.

Ver. 16. To love the Lord.] God must be obeyed out of love, or all is lost.

Ver. 17. But if thine heart turn away.] This is that death and evil. {#De 30:15}

Ver. 18. I denounce unto you.] See on #De 30:15.

Ver. 19. Life and death, blessing and cursing.] Of God it may be more truly affirmed, than ever it was of Charles V, Emperor,

“ Una gerit bellum, monstrat manus altera pacem. ”

Therefore choose life.] Which yet man, of himself, can as little do as a dead carcass can fly aloft. It was therefore an unsound and unsavoury speech of him that said, Quod vivamus, Dei munus est; quod bene vivamus, nostrum: That we live, it is of God; but that we live well, it is of ourselves. See the contrary in #Isa 11:12 Ho 14:8 Joh 15:5.

Ver. 20. For he is thy life.] He in whom thou livest, as the fish doth in the water, the lamp in the oil, &c. He is the author of life natural, spiritual, and eternal to his obedient servants.

Chapter 31

Ver. 1. Went and spake, / i.e., Went on to speak, setting things in order before his death.

Ver. 2. I am a hundred and twenty, &c.] And so might well bespeak them, as Augustus once did his army, and pacified them thereby when they were in a mutiny; Audite senem iuvenes, quem iuvenem senes audierunt. {a}

{a} Suetonius.

Ver. 3. And Joshua.] Called Jesus. {#Heb 4:8} A clear type of Jesus Christ. What Moses could not do because of the people's unbelief—viz., to bring them to Canaan, Joshua did. So what Moses's law could not do—viz., to bring us to heaven, because of the infirmity of our flesh, Christ by his gospel hath done for us. {#Ro 8:3}

Ver. 4. And the Lord shall do unto them.] Every former mercy is a pledge of a future.

Ver. 5. According to all the command,] sc., To root them out utterly. {#De 20:16,17}

Ver. 6. He will not fail thee.] Five times in holy Scriptures is this precious promise repeated; and in #Heb 13:5, made common to all believers, with a very deep asseveration.

Ver. 7. For thou must go with this people.] As a worthy guide, to lead them to their rest temporal; so doth Christ all his to their rest eternal.

Ver. 8. He will not fail thee.] See on #De 31:6.

Ver. 9. Unto the priests.] God's library-keepers, his depositaries.

Unto all the elders of Israel.] As to the keepers of both tables.

Ver. 11. Thou shalt read this law.] Which was nevertheless "read in their synagogues every Sabbath day." {#Ac 15:21} And by this reading, at the feast of Tabernacles, every seventh year, the original copy written by Moses, they might perceive that those copies that they had amongst them were right and authentic. It was ill ordered in our English Bibles of the new translation, that between the printers' haste and correctors' oversight, such foul errors have been lately committed, as Judas printed for Jesus in the great Bible. The Turkish Koran is written and to be read in Arabic, under pain of death not to mistake a letter, {a} which is as easily done in this tongue as in any.

{a} Lightfoot's Miscellanies.

Ver. 13. That they may hear, and that they may learn.] Hearing and seeing are by the philosopher called the learned senses. Faith also comes by hearing, {#Ro 10:17} and the Spirit. {#Ga 3:2}

Ver. 14. In the tabernacle,] i.e., Before the door of it; and this was before the Lord himself. {#De 31:11}

Ver. 17. And many evils and troubles.] As it befell Samson and Saul, when God was gone; πovος πovω πovov φερει, all miseries came trooping and treading one in the heels of another. So #Eze 9:10,11. God makes many moves, and as he goes out, some judgment comes in upon the land.

Ver. 18. Hide my face,] i.e., Withdraw my favour, and therewith all good.

Ver. 19. Put it in their mouths.] That out of their own mouths I may judge them; things made up in metre are better remembered. Before the knowledge of letters and writing, among the ancients it was a custom to sing their laws, lest they might forget them; used in the days of Aristotle, by the Agathyrsi, a people near to the Scythians.

Ver. 20. Then they will turn to other gods.] A bee is quickly drowned if she gets into a pot of honey. "Prosperity slayeth the foolish."

Ver. 21. For I know their imagination.] As a man that knows what roots he hath in his garden; though there be not a flower appears, yet he can say, when the spring comes, this and this will come up, because he knows the garden, and knows what roots are there: so the Lord knows our thoughts afar off, because he knows the principles that are within, and knows what they will do when occasion serves; he is privy to that root that beareth gall and wormwood. {#De 29:18}

Ver. 22. And taught it the children.]

" Metra parant animos, pristina cornmemorant."

Ver. 23. I will be with thee.] This must needs put mettle into him; for "if God be with us, who can be against us?" {#Ro 8:31} {See Trapp on "Ro 8:31"}

Ver. 26. In the side of the ark.] That it might be heard and regarded as the very law of God, though penned by Moses. And indeed the Jews at this day show exceeding great respect to the law; no man may touch it but with the right hand, and without a kiss of reverence, nor carry it behind him, but lay it next to his heart in his travel; if it but fall to the ground, they institute a fast for it, &c. The very Turks have so high an esteem of Moses, that if they find any piece of his writings, be it but a torn paper, lying on the ground, they presently take it up and kiss it. {a}

That it may be therefor a witness.] Hence haply the ark was called "the ark of the testimony." The law might be called the Doomsday Book; such a book there is in our common law, so called, saith Matthew Paris, because it spares no man.

{a} Schicard. Weemse. Pareus, Prol. in Genes.

Ver. 29. To provoke him to anger.] Which is the greatest folly that can be; for are we stronger than he? Can we imagine to make our party good with him? Surely as Ulysses's companions told him, when he would needs provoke Polydamus,

Σχετλιε, πιπτ εθελεις ερεθιζεμεν αγριον ανδρα;

May not we much more say so to them that will needs provoke the Lord, It is good for men to meddle with their equals, and not contend with him that is mightier than they?

Chapter 32

Ver. 1. Give ear, O ye heavens,] q.d., Such is this people's stupidity and obstinacy, that I may as soon gain audience of these inanimate creatures as of them. See #Isa 1:2 Jos 24:27 Jer 22:29. We may cry till we are hoarse; speak till we spit forth our lungs, and to no more purpose than Bede did, when he preached to a heap of stones. Holy Melancthon, being himself newly converted, thought it impossible for his hearers to withstand the evidence of the gospel. But after he had been a preacher a while, it is said he complained, that "old Adam was too hard for young Melancthon."

Ver. 2. My doctrine.] Heb., My taking or winning doctrine: according to that in #Pr 11:30. "He that winneth" (Heb., taketh) "souls"—as fowlers do birds—"is wise."

Shall drop as the rain.] Drop; not dash: and as the rain, not as the storm, or as the spout, as they call it at sea. Evangelizatum, non maledictum missus es, said Oecolampadins to Farellus, an excellent, but a too earnest preacher. And such a one, say some, was Mr Perkins in his younger time, able almost to make his hearers' hearts fall down, and their hairs to stand upright. The word damn he would pronounce with such an emphasis, as left a doleful echo in his auditors' ears a good while after. True it is, that preachers should take the same liberty to cry down sins that men take to commit them. Peccata tanta severitate arguebat, saith one of Chrysostom, acsi ipse etiam per iniuriam laesus esset: but yet moderation must be used, and instruction drop meal distilled, that it may soak and sink, and so soften the heart that all grace may abound, &c. Such sweet droppers were Mr Bradford, Mr Dod, Dr Sibbs, Ου και απο γλωττης μελιτος γλυκιων ρεεν αυδη.

Ver. 3. Ascribe ye greatness,] i.e., Tremble at his word, and take it to heart. See #1Th 2:13.

Ver. 4. He is the rock.] A firm and everlasting refuge, a "Rock of Ages." {#Isa 26:4} One age passeth away, and another, and a third, &c., but the rock remains. "The name of the Lord is a strong tower"; {#Pr 18:10} "munition of rocks"; {#Isa 33:16} rocks so deep, no pioneer can undermine them; so thick, no cannon can pierce them; so high, no ladder can scale them.

Ver. 5. Their spot is not the spot.] Saints also have their spots, but not ingrained; not leopards' spots, that are not in the skin only, but the flesh and bones, in the sinews, and the most inner parts, and so cannot be cured by any art, or washed away with any water. It is of incogitancy that the saints fall; put them in mind, and they mend all: it is of passion, and passions last not long. They are preoccupied, taken at unawares, &c. {#Ga 6:1} They have ever God for their chief end, and will not forego him upon any terms: only they err in the way, as thinking they may fulfil such a lust, and God keep too; but there is no way of wickedness found in them. Though shaken, yet they are rooted as trees, and though they wag up and down, yet they remove not, -as a ship at anchor. Sin stings the wicked, as the fiery serpents did the Israelites: the sins of the saints are but like the viper on Paul's hand, that hurt him not. Sin makes wicked men the object of God's hatred, the saints of his pity: as we hate poison in a toad, but we pity it in a man; in the one it is their nature, in the other their disease.

Perverse and crooked.] They wriggle and writhe after the manner of wrestlers, that wave up and down, and wind the other way: so the Hebrew word signifieth.

Ver. 6. Do ye thus requite the Lord?] Good turns aggravate unkindnesses, and our guilt is increased by our obligations. Solomon's idolatry was far worse than that of his wives; he had been better bred, and God had appeared to him twice. It is the ingratitude that makes the godly man's sin so heinous, which otherwise would be far less than other men's, since his temptations are stronger, and his resistance greater. Hebricians observe, that in Halaihovah there is in the text one $\bar{\eta}$ greater than ordinary; to show that the wonder was the greater, that they should so evil requite such a Lord, Father, Redeemer, Maker, and Governor, by being so corrupt, perverse, crooked, foolish, and unwise; five opposed to five; ̄ being used for the number of five. {Hebrew Text Note}

Ver. 7. And they will tell thee.] And so they did. {Jud 6:13 Ps 44:1,2}

Ver. 8. He set the bounds of the people.] Of the seventy nations reckoned, {Ge 10} and the seventy souls of Israel. {Ge 46:27 De 10:22} The Jews have a saying, that those seventy souls were as much as all the seventy nations of the world, as being the Lord's portion, for whom he espied out the land of Canaan, which is "the glory of all lands." {Eze 20:6}

Ver. 9. For the Lord's portion.] Dear to God, though despised of the world. They are the Lord's "inheritance," {Isa 19:25} "peculiar" ones, {Ex 19:5} the people of his purchase, that comprehended all his gettings, {1Pe 2:9} his "glory," {Isa 46:13} his "ornament," {Eze 7:20} his "throne," {Jer 4:17} his "diadem," {Isa 62:3} "heirs of the kingdom," saith St James, {Jas 2:5} heads destined to the diadem, saith Tertullian.

Ver. 10. And in the waste howling wilderness.] A figure of the cries of a thirsty and troubled conscience, and of infernal horrors. See #Eze 16:4, &c.

He instructed him.] Both by his word and works, both of mercy and justice; for God's rods also are vocal. {Mic 6:9} His house of correction is his school of instruction.

He kept him as the apple of his eye.] The tenderest piece of the tenderest part. The crystal humour, as the philosophers call it. Heb., Ishon, of Ish, as Pupilla of Pupa, because therein appears the likeness of a little man; or because a man is to be prized above all other creatures: so God esteemeth his people above all the world.

Ver. 11. As an eagle stirreth up her nest.] So doth God stir up his people by his word of promise.

Fluttereth over them.] By the motions of his Spirit, as #Ge 1:2.

Spreadeth abroad her wings.] Hovereth and covereth them with his protection. {#Mt 23:37}

Taketh them.] With much tenderness, but nothing comparable to that of God.

Beareth them on her wings.] Aquilae pullos suos in alis portant, alites reliqui inter pedes, saith Munster here, out of Rabbi Solomon.

{See Trapp on "Ex 19:4"}

Ver. 12. And there was no strange god with him.] Why, then, should any share with him in his service? Be the gods of the heathen good fellows? saith one. The true God will endure no co-rival.

Ver. 13. To suck honey out of the rock.] Water as sweet as honey in that necessity; so doth every worthy receiver by faith at the sacrament; whereas whoso comes thereunto without faith, is like a man, saith Mr Tindal, that thinks to quench his thirst by sucking the ale bowl.

Ver. 14. With the fat of kidneys of wheat.] With the very best of the best; figuring heavenly dainties, that full feast. {#Isa 25:6} Judea, for its admirable fertility, is called, Sumen totius orbis: how basely soever Strabo speaks of it, as of a dry barren country, wherein he shows less ingenuity than railing Rabshakeh did.

Ver. 15. But Jeshurun waxed fat, and kicked.] Jeshurun, hoc est Integellus, saith one, as Shimshon, or Samson, Solilus, a little sun, but a type of the Sun of Righteousness that hath health in his wings—that is, in his beams. Israel should have been Jeshurun—that is, righteous, or upright before the Lord, Israelites indeed; but were nothing less. If ever they had been better in the time of "their espousals, when they went after God in the wilderness, in a land that was not sown," {#Jer 2:2} yet now that they were full fed, they kicked as young mules when they have sucked, matrem calcibus petunt, kick the dams' dugs. Fulness breeds forgetfulness, and the best are but too prone to surfeit of things of this life, which by our corruption oftentimes prove a snare to our souls. "I will lay a stumbling block." {#Eze 3:20} Vatablus's note there is, Faciam, ut omnia habeant prospera; calamitatibus eum a peccato non revocabo; I will prosper him in all things, and not by affliction restrain him from sin. The most poisonous flies are bred in the sweetest fruit trees. How apt are the holiest to be proud and secure! even as worms and wasps eat the sweetest apples and fruits, Repugnante contra temet ipsam tua faelicitate, saith Salvian: {a} to the Church in his time; thy prosperity is thy bane. And Cum ipsis opibus lascivere coepit ecclesia, saith Platina; {b} The Church began to be rich and wanton at once. Religio peperit divitias, et filia devoravit matrem: Religion brought forth riches, and the daughter soon devoured the mother, saith Augustine. The much wool on the sheep's back is oftentimes his ruin, he is caught in the thorns and famished. The fatter the ox, the sooner to the slaughter. When the Protestants of France began to grow wanton of their prosperity, and to affect a vain frothy way of preaching, then came the cruel massacre upon them. Should we with the fed hawk forget our master? Or being full with God's benefits, like the full moon, then get farthest off from the sun, and by an interposition of earthly desires become dark? The cords of love are called "the cords of a man." {#Ho 11:4} To sin against mercy is to sin against humanity; it is bestial, nay, it is worse. To render good for evil is divine; to render good for good is humane; to render evil for evil is brutish; but to render evil for good is devilish; as a reverend man hath well observed.

Then he forsook God.] Here Moses, weary of speaking any longer to a gainsaying and disobedient people, turneth his speech to the heaven and earth, whom he had called in to bear witness. {#De 32:1} So, when a certain people of Italy had commanded the Roman ambassador, Ad quercum dicere, se interim alia acturos, to deliver his embassy to the great oak, for they had somewhat else to do than to give him audience: he answered, Et haec sacrata quercus audiat faedus esse a vobis violatum, {c} I will indeed direct my speech to the oak, and tell it in your hearing, that you have basely broken covenant, and shall dearly answer it.

Ver. 16. They provoked him to jealousy.] {See Trapp on "De 31:29"}

To new gods that came newly up.] Such as are all Popish he-saints and she-saints; concerning whom Bellarmine himself cannot but yield, that Cum scriberentur Scripturae, nondum coeperat usus vovendi Sanctis. {a} There was no vowing, or bowing either, to saints departed, when the Scriptures were written. And a loaf of the like leaven are those new lights, and all subtleties, whereby our sectaries would distinguish themselves from Brownists. Are they not all, or most of them, borrowed out of Mr H. Jacob's books, who was but of yesterday? The Antinomians usually call upon their hearers to mark; it may be they shall hear some new truth that they never heard before; when the thing is either false, or, if true, no more than ordinarily is taught by others.

{a} Bellarm. de cultu sanct., cap. 5.

Ver. 18. And hast forgotten God that formed thee.] Or, That brought thee forth. Here God is compared to a mother, as in the former clause to a father. So #Jas 1:18, "Of his own will begat he us,"—απεκυνησε, He brought us forth, and did the office of a mother to us; which doth notably set forth his love and the work of his grace.

Ver. 19. Of his sons and of his daughters.] Titular at least; wherefore their sin was the greater. "What? Thou, my son Brutus?" {a} This cut Caesar to the heart.

Ver. 20. I will see what their end shall be.] This is spoken after the manner of men; as likewise that in #De 32:27.

In whom is no faith,] i.e., Fidelity; as #Mt 23:23; there is no trusting them, or taking their words.

Ver. 21. And I will move them to jealousy.] Thus God delights to retaliate and proportion jealousy to jealousy, provocation to provocation; so frowardness to frowardness, {#Ps 18:26} contrariety to contrariety. {#De 28:18,21, &c.}

With a foolish nation.] With the conversion of the Gentiles, {#Ro 10:19} which the good Jews could not easily yield to at first. {#Ac 11:2,3} And the rest could never endure to hear of it. See #1Th 2:15,16. At this day they solemnly curse the Christians thrice a day in their synagogues, with a Maledic, Domine, Nazarais. They have a saying in their Talmud, Optimus qui inter gentes est, dignus cui caput conteratur tanquam serpenti; The best among the Gentiles is worthy to have his head broke as the serpent had. Yea, they think they may kill any idolater. Therefore Tacitus saith of them, There was Misericordia in promptu apud suos, sed contra omnes alios hostile odium, mercy enough toward their own, but against all others they bare a deadly hatred.

Ver. 22. For a fire.] {See Trapp on "De 10:4"}

Ver. 23. I will spend mine arrows.] Which yet cannot be all spent up, as he feared of his Jupiter, Si quoties peccent heroines, &c.

Ver. 24. Burnt with hunger.] Which makes men's visages blacker than a coal. {#La 4:8}

With burning heat, / i.e., With the burning carbuncle, or plague sore. See #Hab 3:5.

Ver. 25. And terror within.] Warring times are terrible times. By the civil dissensions here in King John's time, all the kingdom became like a general shambles, or place of infernal terrors and tortures. War, saith one, is a misery which all words, how wide soever, want compass to express. It is, saith another, the slaughter house of mankind, and the hell of this present world. {See Trapp on "Ge 14:2"}

Ver. 26. I said I will scatter them.] See a like text, #Eze 20:8,9. We are sometimes safe by our enemies' insolences, and as much beholden to their blasphemies as to our own prayers.

Ver. 27. Were it not that I feared.] See #De 32:20.

Lest their adversaries.] This is that, likely, that moves the Lord hitherto to spare England. God hath dealt with us, not according to his ordinary rule, but according to his prerogative. England, if it may be so spoke with reverence, is a paradox to the Bible. Pererius, the Jesuit, commenting upon #Ge 15:16, If any marvel, saith he, why England continueth to flourish, notwithstanding the cruel persecution—just execution, he should have said—of Catholics there; I answer, Because their sin is not yet full: Sed veniet tandem iniquitatiscom plementum, &c. We hope better, though we deserve the worst that can be. But somewhat God will do for his own great name; and lest the enemy exalt himself, {#Ps 140:8} and say, "Our hand is high, the Lord hath not done this."

Ver. 28. For they are a nation.] {See Trapp on "De 4:6"} was Chrysippus that offered that strict and tetrical division to the world, Aut mentem aut restim comparandum.

Ver. 29. Oh that this people were wise.] Sapiens est, cui res sapiunt prout sunt, saith Bernard.

That they would consider their latter end.] This is a high point of heavenly wisdom. Moses himself desires to learn it. {#Ps 90:12} David also would fain be taught it. {#Ps 39:4} Solomon sets a "better" upon it. {#Ec 7:2} "Jerusalem's filthiness was in her skirts, because she remembered not her latter end; therefore also she came down wonderfully." {#La 1:9} The kite by the turning of his tail directs and winds about all his body. Consideratio finis tanquam caudae, ad vitam optime regendam confert, saith Berchorins. I meet with a story of one that gave a prodigal a ring with a death's head, with this condition, that he should one hour daily, for seven days together, look and think upon it, which bred a strange alteration in his life; like that of Thesposius in Plutarch; or that more remarkable of Waldus the rich merchant of Lyons, &c. {a}

{a} Mr Ward's Sermons

Ver. 30. How should one chase a thousand?] i.e., How should one of the enemies chase a thousand Israelites, who had a promise of better things, {#Le 26:8} but that having first sold themselves for nought, {#Isa 52:3} they were now sold by God, who would own them no longer? {#Ps 31:7,8}

Ver. 31. For their rock is not as our rock.] We may well say, Who is a God like unto thee? {#Mic 7:18} Contemno minutulos istos deos, mode Iovem (Iehovam) mihi propitium habeam; I care not for those dunghill deities, so I may have the true God to favour me.

Even our enemies.] #Ex 14:25 Nu 23:8,12 1Sa 4:8.

Ver. 32. For their vine is of the vine.] Vitis non vinifera, sed venenifera. The vine is the wicked nature, the grapes are the evil works. So #Isa 59:5; -"They hatch cockatrice' eggs, and weave the spider's web"; vanity or villainy is their whole trade; "he that eateth of their eggs dieth," &c. Look how the bird that sitteth on the serpent's eggs, by breaking and hatching them, brings forth a perilous brood to her own destruction: so do those that are yet in the state of nature, being the heirs of original and the fathers of actual sins, which "when they are finished bring forth death." {#Jas 1:15}

Ver. 33. Their wine,] i.e., Their works, yea, their best works, prove pernicious to them; not their own table only, but God's table becomes a snare to the unprepared communicant; he sucks there the poison of asps, &c., {#Job 20:16} he eats his bane and drinks his poison: as Henry VII, Emperor, was poisoned in the sacramental bread by a monk; Pope Victor II, by his sub-deacon in his chalice; and one of our Bishops of York, by poison put into the wine at the eucharist.

Ver. 34. Is not this laid up in store?] To wit, for just punishment, though for a while I forbear them. The wicked man is like a thief, which having stolen a horse, rides away well mounted, till, overtaken by hue and cry, he is apprehended, sentenced, and executed. "Your sin will find you out" as a bloodhound; Et patientia Dei erga impios quo diuturnior, eo minacior. Morae dispendium faenoris duplo pensatur; the longer God forbears, the heavier he punishes. {a}

{a} Jerome, in Jerem,

Ver. 35. To me belongeth vengeance and recompense.] The Hebrew word for vengeance, נָקָם, signifies comfort also; for God will be comforted in the execution of his wrath. {#Eze 5:13} {See Trapp on "De 28:63"} He shows such severity sometimes as if he had blotted that out of his title, {#Ex 34:6} and now took up that Emperor's motto, Fiat iustitia, pereat mundus.

Their foot shall slide in due time.] "They are set in slippery places"; {#Ps 73:18} they ever walk as upon a mine of gunpowder ready to be blown up: Nemo crimen gerit in pectore, qui non idem Nemesin in tergo. Nemesis dicitur Αδραστεια, quod ουκ αν τις αυτην αποδρασαιτο. God's wrath is such, as none can avert or avoid.

Ver. 36. And repent himself for his servants.] Thus God mingleth and allayeth the rigour of his justice with the vigour of his mercy.

Ver. 37. And he shall say,] i.e., He shall upbraid them with the inability of their idols to do for them.

Ver. 38. Which did eat.] Put them to a great deal of charge, but for no profit.

Ver. 39. I, even I am he.] I is emphatical and exclusive.

Ver. 40. And say, I live forever.] God can swear by no greater than himself. {#Heb 6:13}

Ver. 41. If I whet my glittering sword.] God first whets, before he smites; and first takes hold on judgment, before his judgments take hold on men. Est piger ad poenas, ad praemia velox. See the like, #Ps 7:12. God was but six days in making the whole world, yet was he seven days in destroying that one city of Jericho, as Chrysostom observeth. "Fury is not in me." {#Isa 27:4} As a bee stings not till provoked, so God punisheth not "till there be no other remedy." {#2Ch 36:16}

Ver. 42. From the beginning of revenges.] I will begin my revenges at the beginning of theirs. Esau began early with his brother Jacob, even in the very womb, and so held on; but God was even with him.

Ver. 43. Rejoice, O ye nations.] Give God the glory of his just severity, which is no less commendable in a judge than seasonable clemency.

Ver. 44. Of this song.] The Seventy render it, Of this law, as in #De 32:46. So Asaph called his song "a law." {#Ps 78:1}

Ver. 45. And Moses made an end.] He did, and yet he did not, for he had yet still something more to say to them out of his great desire to speak home to their hearts. So the apostle, in #2Co 13:11, and elsewhere, comes in with his το λοιπον, Finally, or, Yet one word more ere we part.

Ver. 46. Set your hearts.] And pray God to fix your quicksilver, to put his holy finger upon the hole that is in the bottom of your memories.

Ver. 47. For it is not a vain thing.] God's favour is no empty favour, it is not like the winter sun, that casts a goodly countenance when it shines, but gives little comfort and heat.

For it is not a vain thing for you.] You shall not lose your labour; it is sure you have lost many a worse in pursuing after lying vanities, toilsome toys.

Chapter 33

Ver. 1. Before his death.] The words of dying men are living oracles, they should therefore be pious and ponderous.

Ver. 2. Went a fiery law for them.] This fire wherein the law was given, and shall be required, is still in it, and will never out; hence are those terrors which it flasheth in every conscience that hath felt remorse of sin. Every man's heart is a Sinai, and resembles to him both heaven and hell. "The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law." {#1Co 15:56}

Ver. 3. Yea, he loved the people.] With a general love, with a common philanthropy. But the love of God in Christ is that we must all labour after; such a love as doth better for a man than restore him to sight, or raise him when bowed down. {#Ps 146:8}

Are in thy hand.] And so in a safe hand. {#Joh 10:29}

And they sat down at thy feet.] As attentive and tractable disciples. See #Ac 22:3 Lu 10:39 2Ki 2:5. "Knowest thou not that the Lord will take thy master from thy head?" A phrase taken from their manner of sitting at the feet of their teachers.

Ver. 4. Moses commanded us a law.] These are the words of those saints above mentioned, expressing their good affection to the law and to Moses, by whose mediation they received it.

Even the inheritance.] For perpetual use to us and our posterity. Indeed, the law lies not upon the righteous, {ου κειται, #1Ti 1:9} NOR urgeth them, as it doth upon the wicked. To these the law is as chains and shackles; to those as belts and garters, which gird up their loins, and expedite their course the better. It confines them to live in that element where they would live, as if one should be confined to Paradise, where he would be, though there were no such law.

Ver. 5. And he was king in Jeshurun.] A heroic king, reigning by virtue and justice only, not by force and violence: one that said not, εξεστι, but καηκει; This I can do, but this is fit for me to do.

When the heads of the people, and the tribes.]

Here was a government made up of king, lords, and commons. The best of governments, doubtless, so that the beam be kept right between sovereignty and subjection. The contention between prince and people, about command and obedience, ceased not till the Magna Charta, first obtained of King John, after of his son Henry III, though observed truly of neither, was in the maturity of a judicial prince, Edward I, freely ratified after fourscore years.

Ver. 6. Let Reuben live, and not die.] Let him have a nail and a name in God's house, notwithstanding the heinousness of his sin, and the severity of Jacob's sentence. {#Ge 49:4} {See Trapp on "Ge 49:4"}

Ver. 7. And this is the blessing.] Simeon is not mentioned, but implied in Judah's blessing, in the midst of whose inheritance lay his portion. {#Jos 19:1} Besides, that tribe was exceedingly defiled with fornication, spiritual and corporal, and by that means much decayed and diminished. {#Nu 26:14}

Hear, Lord, the voice of Judah.] Putting thy promises {#Ge 8:9-11} into suit by his prayers, and pressing thee for a performance.

Let his hands be sufficient for him, and be thou a help to him, &c.] Moses first prays for Judah, that "his hands may be sufficient for him": and then addeth, as there was need, "And be thou a help to him": for all "our sufficiency is of God," and that man is sure to come down that standeth on his own legs. Ithiel and Ucal are twins.

Ver. 8. Let thy Thummin and thy Urim.] Sincerity of life and soundness of doctrine. {See Trapp on "Ex 28:30"} There is great cause that ministers, of all men, should be much prayed for.

Ver. 9. Who said unto his father.] In that heroical fact, {#Ex 32:26,29} in that terrible crisis about the golden calf. Not to be wryed or biased by respect to carnal friends, is a high and hard point of self-denial. Mark was Barnabas's sister's son; hence he stood so stiff for him against Paul, his faithful fellow traveller. {#Ac 15:37 Col 4:10} Moses, to please Zipporah, displeased God, and it went hard with him. {#Ex 4:24} Eli was too indulgent to his wicked sons; and so perhaps was Samuel too. {#ISa 8:1,3} How many of the holy martyrs denied themselves utterly in their dearest wives and children, either at the stake, or going thither! It is well observed, that the married martyrs, parents of many children, as Rogers, Watts, Guest, Rawlins, suffered with most alacrity.

Ver. 10. They shall teach Jacob.] Apt and able to teach must all ministers be, as Paul. {#Ac 20:18-35} Praedicationis officium suscipit, quisquis ad sacerdotium accedit, saith Gregory: He is no minister that is no teacher. Aidanus, the first bishop of Durham, A.D. 636, neglected no duty of a good pastor, travelling up and down the country, even on foot, to preach the gospel, giving whatsoever he could get unto the poor, and by the example of his own virtues instructing, as well as by word and doctrine. {a} Amongst the Greeks, tragedians and comedians were said, εις διδασχην ων προσηκεν εργαζομενοι, to labour in teaching the people. What should ministers then do?

They shall put incense before thee,] i.e., Pray for the people, as well as preach to them. So #Ac 6:4. Augustine's wish was, that Christ, when he came, might find him aut precantem aut praedicantem, praying or preaching. Bene orasse est bene studuisse, saith Luther.

{a} Godwin's Catalog.

Ver. 11 And of them that hate him.] Ministers shall be sure of many enemies: they hate him that reproveth in the gate. Veritas odium parit; praedieare nihil aliud est quam derivare in se furorem mundi, said Luther: to preach is to get the world's ill-will. "Ye are the light," saith our Saviour, which is offensive to sore eyes; "ye are the salt of the earth," which is bitter to wounds, and causeth pain to ulcerated parts.

Ver. 12. The beloved of the Lord.] The Lord's corculum, deliciae, darling; as their father Benjamin was old Jacob's. {#Ge 42:4}

And he shall dwell between his shoulders.] These shoulders are those two holy hills, Moriah and Zion, whereon the Temple was built, four hundred and forty years after this prophecy.

Ver. 13. And of Joseph.] {See Trapp on "Ge 49:2"}

Ver. 14. And for the precious fruits.] So St James calleth them, "The precious fruits of the earth." {#Jas 5:7} Diogenes justly taxed the folly of his countrymen, Quod res pretiosas minimo emerent, venderentque vilissimas plurimo, because they bought precious things, as grain, very cheap, but sold the basest things, as pictures, statues, &c., extremely dear, fifty pounds or more a-piece; though the life of man had no need of a statue, but could not subsist without grain. May not we more justly tax men for undervaluing the bread of life, and "spending money for that which is not bread?" {#Isa 4:1}

Ver. 15. And for the chief things.] Metals and minerals usually dug out of mountains, which are here called ancient and lasting, because they have been from the beginning, and were not first cast up, as some have held, by Noah's flood. {#Ps 90:2}

Ver. 16. And for the good will of him, &c.] {See Trapp on "Ex 33:2"} The burning bush—the persecuted Church—was not consumed, because the good will of God, whereof David speaks, {#Ps 106:4} was in the bush. So it is still with his in the fiery trial, in any affliction. {#Isa 43:1}

That was separated from his brethren.] To be a choice and chief man amongst them. Nobilis fuit inter fratres, saith Augustine, {a} vel in malis quae pendit, vel in bonis quae rependit.

{a} De Doct. Christ., lib. iv. cap. 6.

Ver. 17. His horns are like the horns of unicorns.] Justin Martyr {a} and some other of the ancients {b} have strangely racked and wrested this text, to wring out of it the sign of the cross, resembled and represented by the horn of a unicorn. At nihil hic de Christo, nihil de cruce.

He shall push the people together.] As General Joshua, of this tribe, did notably; so that Phoenicians ran away into a far country, and renowned his valour by a monument set up in Africa. Howbeit, Gratius ei fuit nomen pietatis, quam potestatis, as Tertullian saith of Augustus: He is more famous for his piety than for his prowess.

Ver. 18. In thy going out.] To trade and traffic by sea. {#Ge 49:13} Peterent coelum navibus Belgoe, si navibus peti posset, saith one.

The lowcountry men are said to grow rich by war; it is sure they do by trade at sea.

And, Issachar, in thy tents,] i.e., In thy quiet life and country employments.

“ O fortunatos nimium, &c.
Regain aequabat opes animis, seraque reversus Nocta domum, dapibus mensas onerabit

saith the poet, of a well contented countryman.

Ver. 19. They shall call the people to the mount,] i.e., To God’s house, situate on mount Zion. Though they be Littorales, men dwelling by the sea shore, which are noted to be Duri, horridi, immanes, omnium denique pessimi, the worst kind of people; and though they dwell farther from the Temple, yet are they not farthest from God, but ready with their sacrifice of righteousness, as those that have sucked of the abundance of the sea, and of treasures hid in the sand, which, though of itself it yield no crop, yet brings in great revenues, by reason of sea trading.

Ver. 20. He dwelleth as a lion.] That should make his party good with the enemy, upon whom he bordereth, and by whom he is often invaded. See #Ge 49:19 Jud 11:5,13 1Ch 12:8.

Ver. 21. In a portion of the lawgiver.] That portion that Moses the lawgiver assigned him on the other side Jordan. {#Nu 32:33}

He executed the justice of the Lord,] viz., Upon the Canaanites; which is so noble an act that even the good angels refuse not to be executioners of God’s judgments upon obstinate malefactors.

Ver. 22. He shall leap from Bashan,] i.e., He shall suddenly set upon his enemies; as Ahithophel counselled Absalom, {#2Sa 17:1,2} and this is called "good counsel"; {#2Sa 17:14} and as Caesar served Pompey, “... Caesar in omnia praeceps,

Nil actum credens, dum quid superesset
agendum,

Fertur atro...”—Lucan.

Ver. 23. Satisfied with favour, and full, &c.] Fulness of blessing is then only a mercy, when the soul of a man is satisfied with favour: when from a full table and a cup running over, a man can comfortably infer with David, "Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life, and I shall dwell in the house of the Lord for ever." {#Ps 23:6} One may have outward things by God's providence, and not out of his favour. Esau had the like blessing as Jacob, but not with a "God give thee the dew of heaven," as he. {#Ge 27:28} Or, God may give temporals to wicked men, to furnish their indictment out of them; as Joseph put his cup into their sack to pick a quarrel with them, and to lay theft to them.

Ver. 24. Let Asher be blessed with children.] Let his wife be as the vine, and his children as olive plants, two of the best fruits; {#Ps 128:3} the one for cheering the heart, the other for clearing the face; {#Ps 104:15} the one for sweetness, the other for fatness. {#Jud 9:9,13}

Let him dip his foot in oil.] Like that of Job. {#Job 29:6} Compare #Ge 49:20. {See Trapp on "Ge 49:20"}

Ver. 25. Thy shoes.] Thou shalt have store of mines.

And as thy days shall thy strength be,] i.e., Thou shalt {as Eliphaz speaketh, #Job 5:26} come in a lusty old age to the grave. This the Greeks call εὐγηρία. And the Hebrews made a feast when they were past sixty, if any whit healthy.

Ver. 26. Who rideth upon the heaven.] Having the celestial creatures for his cavalry, and the terrestrial for his infantry; how then can his want help?

Ver. 27. The eternal God.] Heb., The God of antiquity, that "Ancient of days," that "Rock of ages," "who is before all things, and by whom all things consist," {#Col 1:17} who is "the first and the last, and besides whom there is no God." {#Isa 44:6}

And underneath are the everlasting arms.] A saint cannot fall so far as to fall beneath the supporting arms of God: {#So 2:6} his hand is reserved for a dead lift.

Ver. 28. Israel then shall dwell, &c.] {See Trapp on "Nu 23:9"}

The fountain of Jacob.] Or as some read it, The eye of Jacob. The same word signifies both an eye and a fountain. He that, with Mary Magdalen, can make his eye a fountain to wash Christ's feet in, shall be sure to have that fountain of Christ's blood opened to wash his soul in. {#Zec 13:1}

Ver. 29. Happy art thou, O Israel.] Or, Oh the happinesses of thee, O Israel! the μυριομακαριοτης, the heaped up happiness!

Who is like unto thee!] The saints are the world's paragons, yea, such as the world is not worthy of; {#Heb 11} that is, saith Chrysostom, Take all the men of the world, they are not worth one of the people of God, though never so mean in regard of outwards.

Shall be found liars.] Shall feign to be friends for fear, and shall yield a forced obedience. See #Ps 18:45.

Chapter 34

Ver. 1. And Moses went up.] With as good a will to die, as ever he did to dine; for it was but (as that martyr said) winking a little, and he was in heaven immediately.

Ver. 2. Unto the utmost sea.] The Mediterranean.

Ver. 3. The city of palm trees.] So called even by heathen authors also.

Ver. 4. I have caused thee to see it.] By an extraordinary power, for in an ordinary way Moses could never have taken so large a prospect at once. Faith puts a man's head into heaven, and gives him a view of far better things; neither vision only, but fruition also, which Moses had not.

Ver. 5. So Moses the servant of the Lord died.] It was no more between God and Moses, but Go up and die; he changed indeed his place, but not his company; death was to him but the daybreak of eternal brightness.

According to the word of the Lord.] Heb., Upon the mouth of the Lord. Hence Cornelius a Lapide saith he heard one preach, that Moses died kissed by God. The Jewish doctors so expound this text, as though God did indeed take away his soul with a kiss (the loving mother we have seen kiss the child, and then lay it down to sleep); and so of their 903 kinds of death, this they say is the easiest. {a} God bade Moses go lie down and sleep, {#De 31:16} and he accordingly went to bed, when his Father bade.

{a} Maimonid.

Ver. 6. And he buried him.] Either the Lord or Michael. {#Jude 1:9} There lies the body of Moses as in a chamber of rest, or bed of down. {#Isa 57:2} His very dust being precious; for Christ is not perfect without it. {#Eph 1:23}

But no man knoweth of his sepulchre.] Though the devil made much ado about it, {#Jude 1:9} as desirous thereby to set up himself in the hearts of the living. So Chrysostom, Theodoret, Procopius, and others think: howbeit we find not anywhere that the Jews were addicted to this kind of idolatry, viz., of worshipping the relics of saints departed. {a} But of Michael's dispute with the devil, about the body of Moses, we read in Origen {b} and others, {c} that (besides what Jude hath) there was in the primitive times a certain Apocryphal book, called Μωυσεως Αναληψις, the Assumption of Moses, wherein it was recorded, and where hence haply Jude had it.

Ver. 8. And the children of Israel wept.] And were ready to wish, likely, as the Romans did for Augustus, that either he had never been born, or never died.

Thirty days.] As before they had done for Aaron. {#Nu 20:29} The Jewish doctors tell us that Moses was born on the seventh day of the month Adar (which answereth to our February), and that on the seventh day of the same month Adar he was taken out of the world, being exactly 120 years old. One third part of his days he spent in Egypt, another in Midian, and the last in conducting this people to the borders of Canaan, as Josephus ^{a} well observeth. The Jews to this day keep a solemn fast on the seventh of Adar, in remembrance of his death.

Ver. 10. And there arose not.] This testimony, and indeed this whole chapter, is thought to have been added by Joshua or Eleazar, being divinely inspired, for the completing of the history, famous throughout the world; approved and expounded by all the holy prophets and apostles, who out of this fountain, or rather ocean of divinity, ^{a} as Theodoret calleth Moses, have watered their various gardens; yea, in pressing moral duties, what do they else but explain the Pentateuch? What do they but unfold and draw out that arras ^{a} rich tapestry fabric which was folded together before? Surely the Pentateuch may well claim the title, De Originibus, above all other writings. And of Moses, the penman thereof, it may far better be said, than it was once of heathen Homer, that neither before him was there any whom he might imitate, nor after him any that could imitate him. ^{b} But what a notoriously arrogant fool was Henry Nicholas, the founder of the Familists (if that were true of him, which is reported by a writer of good note) ^{c} viz., that he boasted among his followers in Holland, that himself ought to be preferred before both Moses and Christ; because Moses taught hope, Christ faith, but he taught love, which was the greatest of those three graces. He said, moreover, that Moses stood in the outer court, Christ entered into the holy place, but that himself was entered into the holy of holies; yea, he blasphemously gave out that he did partake with God of his deity, and God with him of his humanity.

Joshua

The Book of Joshua] Who was a book man as well as a sword man: {a} and might well give for his motto, Ex utroque Caesar. Julius Caesar wrote his own acts; witness his learned Commentaries—for so he called them, in modesty, rather than histories; and the like did his successors, Augustus Caesar, in four books, and Adrian the Emperor, with great diligence. That Joshua himself was penman of this book, or of most part of it, is probably gathered from #Jos 24:26, and that he wrote also the end of Deuteronomy—viz., from the death of his master Moses—may be gathered from the copulative and, wherewith this book beginneth—And it came to pass, &c.; so the original hath it. See the like in #Jud 1:1 Ru 1:1 1Sa 1:1 2Sa 1:1, &c. Indeed, the whole law—so the whole Scripture—is but one copulative, say the schoolmen; and "God spake by the mouth"—not mouths—"of his holy prophets which have been since the world began." {#Lu 1:1-4} Joshua is here set forth both as a pattern to princes—far beyond Xenophon's Cyrus or Machiavel's Borgia—and as a type of Christ, the great Conqueror. {#Re 6:2} He had his name changed, when he was sent as a spy into Canaan, {#Nu 13:16} from Oshea to Joshua; from Let God save, to God shall save. Under the Law, which bringeth us as it were into a wilderness, we may desire and pray that there were a Saviour: but under the Gospel we are sure of salvation; and that our Jehoshua hath bound himself to fulfil all righteousness, and to land us safe at the key of Canaan, at the kingdom of heaven.

Ver. 1. Now after the death of Moses.]

“Sic uno avulso non deficit alter Aureus.”—Virgil.

The Church shall never want a champion of Christ's own providing; but Moses shall revive in Joshua, and there shall be a succession of godly governors, till the headstone be laid with, "Grace, grace unto it." {#Zec 4:7}

That the Lord spake unto Joshua.] Not immediately, as to Moses, but some other way, {#Nu 12:7,8} probably by Urim and Thummin, as in #Nu 27:18,21. Not so to Saul {#ISa 28:6} — for the high priest Abiathar was fled from him to David, with an ephod in his hand. {#ISa 23:6} Similarly, Christ answered nothing to Herod, {#Lu 23:9} who had cut off the head of the Baptist, that was vox clamantis, the voice whereby he had cried.

Ver. 2. Moses my servant.] My menial servant, faithful in all my house. This was a higher title than that of king in Jeshurun. {#De 33:5} {See Trapp on "Ps 36:1"}

Now therefore arise, go.] Up, and act vigorously: surge, age, summe Pater; said Mantuan to the Bishop of Rome, stirring him up to withstand the Turk.

Go over this Jordan.] A famous river rising from a double fountain, Jor and Dan, say some, {a} and falling into the Dead Sea, with which it mingleth. Whereas some rivers will not do so: as the Danube and Sava in Hungary, whose waters meeting mingle no more than water and oil, as an eye-witness affirmeth: so the river Dee, in Merionethshire in Wales, running through Pimblemeer remaineth entire, and mingleth not her streams with the waters of the lake. {b}

{a} Sir Henry Blunt's Voyage into the Levant, p. 10.

{b} Mr Fuller's Holy State, p. 162.

Ver. 3. Every place that the sale, &c.] I, who am the true proprietary and lord paramount, {#Ps 24:1} do give you this land, but yet you must fight for it: and so must the saints for the heavenly Canaan.

“Nunquam bella bonis, nunquam diserimina desunt.”

Ver. 4. From the wilderness.] Here we have the topography of the promised land, as it hath the wilderness of Arabia on the south, Mount Lebanon on the north, the Mediterranean Sea on the west, and Euphrates on the east.

All the land of the Hittites.] Those sturdiest of all the Canaanites.

Ver. 5. I will not fail thee.] This promise is five times, at least, found in Scriptures, and in #Heb 13:6, applied to all true believers. As for others, let them read that terrible text, #Eze 22:20 29:5; -"I will gather you in mine anger and in my fury, and I will leave you there." Lord, "leave us not," saith the Church, {#Jer 14:9}; and, "Let him not leave us, nor forsake us," saith Solomon in his prayer. {#1Ki 8:57}. The promises must be sued out. {See Trapp on "Heb 13:6"}

Ver. 6. Be strong and of a good courage.] This is often charged upon Joshua, though he were very valiant, and of the best mettle; because he was sure to be put to it. {a} Stand fast, for ye shall be shaken, said that prophetic Simeon in the ecclesiastical history, to the pillars which he whipped before the earthquake.

{a} "Acer et ad palmas per se cursurus honores, Si tamen hortaris, fortior ibit equus."—Ovid.

Ver. 7. Only be thou strong.] {See Trapp on "Jos 1:6"}

That thou mayest observe to do.] Heb., To observe in doing; {a} as minding the manner, which either maketh or marreth any action.

According to all the law.] Integrity is the best ground of fortitude. "The spirit of power and of a sound mind," are fitly joined together by the apostle. {#2Ti 1:7}. A rotten rag hath no strength; a corrupt conscience no true courage. See #Pr 28:1.

That thou mayest prosper.] Or, Do wisely; {b} for a good man ordereth his affairs with discretion, {#Ps 112:5}; and speedeth accordingly for most part. Gaius's prosperity he is sure of. The prudent person cannot be unprosperous. Of Cato, Censorius Paternus saith, {c} that being homo virtuti simillimus semper fortunam in sua potestate habuit, a very virtuous man, he had what fortune soever he pleased. Scipio Africanus was wont before day to go into the capitol in cellam Iovis, and there to stay a great while, as it were to consult with Jupiter, concerning the government of the commonwealth: whence his deeds were placiturae admiranda, saith Gellius, most of them very admirable and successful. {d}

{c} Lib. ii.

{d} Gell., lib. vii. cap. 1.

Ver. 8. This book of the law shall not depart.] Lex sola omnis sapientiae fons est. The Scripture is the only fountain of all wisdom, saith Luther: {a} who in the same place affirmeth, that he hated his own writings, and wished they were all burnt, because he feared that the reading of them kept men from reading the Bible, that book of books, in comparison whereof all other books are but as waste paper. Charles V, emperor, liked to read three books especially, -Polybius's history, Machiavel's Prince, and Castalian's Courtier. He took such delight in the mathematics, that even in the midst of his whole army, in his tent, he stayed close at this study; having for that purpose, as his instructor, Turrianus of Cremona evermore with him. How well versed he was in the Scriptures, I know not, but at his baptism, among other great gifts bestowed upon him by his father's friends—as a golden sword, a silver head piece, a charger of gold filled with pearls, &c.—the Abbot of Gaunt, where he was born, gave him a fair Bible with this inscription, scrutamini Scripturas, search the Scriptures. {b} Queen Elizabeth, soon after her coronation, being presented by the Londoners in Cheapside with a Bible, received it with both her hands; and kissing it, laid it to her breast, saying, that the same had ever been her chiefest delight, and should be the rule by which she meant to frame her government. {c} Alphonsus, king of Arragon, is said to have read over the Bible fourteen times with Lyra's notes. And Charles the Wise of France, not only caused the Bible to be translated into French, but was himself very studious in "the holy Scriptures, which are able to make" a man "wise to salvation."

For then thou shalt make thy way prosperous.] Piety hath prosperity. {See Trapp on "Jos 1:7"}

{a} Luth., in Genes.

{c} Speed's Chron.

Ver. 9. Be strong and of a good courage.] Joshua was not faint hearted, but lowly minded: and hence he is so often cheered up and encouraged to the work. See on #Jos 1:6.

Ver. 10. Then Joshua.] After the spies were returned. {#Jos 2:23}

Ver. 11. Prepare you victuals.] Beside the manna, that cibus praeparatus, {a} as the word man signifieth; food prepared for them by God. See #De 2:6.

{a} Paratum aliquid ad edendum. -Martinius, in Lexico.

Ver. 12. And to the Reubenites,] i.e., To the rulers of their tribes, who were their representatives.

Ver. 13. Remember the word.] Your engagement to Moses, #Nu 32:17,22.

“Pollicitis dives quilibet est potest.”

Ver. 14. All the mighty men of valour.] All beside a necessary guard for your country and families. See #Nu 32:2.

Ver. 15. Until the Lord have given your brethren rest.] Whose welfare you are to tender no less than your own.

“Et toti genitos vos credere genti.”

Ver. 16. And they answered.] Not the two tribes and half only, but the whole people promise homage and fidelity to Joshua, and wish well to his government.

All that thou commandest us.] A promise as large as that of Laelius in Lucan made to Caesar, “Iussa sequi tam velle mihi quam posse necesse est.”

Ver. 17. Only the Lord thy God be with thee.] For else we shall stand thee and our brethren but in small stead.

As he was with Moses.] Who never miscarried in any enterprise.

Ver. 18. Only be strong and of a good courage.] Here Vox populi accordeth Vox Dei: this was a further confirmation. See #Jos 1:6.

Chapter 2

Ver. 1. And Joshua the son of Nun sent out of Shittim.] Where the people then encamped, {#Nu 33:49} and where the Midianites sometime, by the counsel of Balaam, Satan's spell man, outwitted the Israelites by setting fair women before them, who soon drew them into those two sister sins, idolatry and adultery. {#Nu 25:1,2,18}

Two men.] Not twelve, as #Nu 13:2,3, for those were too many by ten; and did much harm among the people.

To spy secretly.] Heb., Silently. Silence is oft no small virtue; and he is a rare man who can both keep and give counsel.

Go view the land.] Of which though God had promised to possess them, yet Joshua knew that means was to be used. So #2Sa 5:24. David had a promise of victory over the Philistines; but yet so as that he must fetch a compass behind them; and when he heard "the sound of a going in the tops of the mulberries," then he was to bestir himself.

Into a harlot's house.] Or, Hostess, as some render it; but such as stuck not familiarly to entertain strangers. {#Heb 11:31 Jas 2:25} Upon her conversion she was advanced to become grandmother to Jesus Christ; who by his purity washeth off all our spots; like as the sun washeth and wipeth away all the ill vapours of the earth and air.

Ver. 2. And it was told the king of Jericho.] Kings have long ears; their ωτακουσται, informers and intelligencers, are in all places, but especially when Hannibal est ad portas, the enemy is at hand, as now he was.

To search out the country.] As we have cause to conceive. Optimus in dubiis agur timor.

Ver. 3. For they be come to search out all the country.] "To see the nakedness of the land," as #Ge 42:9. {See Trapp on "Jos 2:2"}

Ver. 4. And the woman took the two men, and hid them.] This was an act of her praiseworthy faith. See #Heb 11:31, where it is honourably mentioned, but nothing is said of the lie she told. God layeth the finger of mercy on the scars of our sins; as that painter in the story.

But I wist not whence they were.] This was no better than an officious lie: yea, four lies she here uttereth together in a breath, -as Jacob also did three, {#Ge 27:19-24}—neither can she be excused. That was a worthy speech of a good woman on the rack, as Jerome relateth it, Non ideo negare volo ne peream: sed ideo mentiri nolo, ne peccem. But Rahab was yet but a new convert.

Ver. 5. And it came to pass.] See #Jos 2:4.

Ver. 6. But she had brought them up to the roof of the house.] {a} Which was built flat in those parts, as they are also at this day in Italy.

Which she had laid in order upon the roof.] That it might be fully dried, as {#Na 1:10} the wicked are, that they may burn the better: like grapes, they ripen in the sunshine, for the winepress of God's wrath. {#Re 14:19}

{a} Septuag., δομα: ut et #1Sa 9:25.

Ver. 7. And the men pursued.] Not once searching the house. Thus God "maketh the wisdom of the wise to perish." {#Isa 29:14} See #Mt 2:8. Herod went not himself, or sent some assassin to despatch the child Jesus; but sent the wise men to Bethlehem with charge to search, and bring him word. The Dutch have a proverb, Where God intendeth to blind any man, he first closeth up his eyes.

Ver. 8. And before they were laid down,] so., To take their rest, which in this fright they had little list to. "Sleep on now, take your rest," saith our Saviour by an irony to his drowsy disciples; q.d., Do so, if you can at least, now, with so many swords and halberds about your ears. {#Mr 14:41}

Ver. 9. I know that the Lord hath given you the land.] She had a full assurance both of knowledge, {as #Lu 1:1} and of faith, {as #Heb 6:10 11:31} when many Israelites staggered and distrusted the promise. "God hath mercy on whom he will have mercy," &c. {#Ro 9:15,18}

Ver. 10. For we have heard.] Historiae fidae monitricae. Succurrat illud...Mutato nomine de te fabula narratur.

Ver. 11. For the Lord your God, he is God.] As for our idols, they are very vanities, and cannot deliver us. The Tyrians, afraid their Apollo should forsake them at that time when Alexander besieged their city, chained and nailed that idol to a post, that they might be sure of it; but all would not do.

Ver. 12. And give me a true token.] Συσσημον, as #Mr 14:44. Signum consignans, de composito datum. As for the familiar conference that here passed betwixt these spies and Rahab, we need not question how they could so easily understand one another, being of two several nations. For, first, the language of the Canaanites, Phoenicians, Philistines, differed not much from the Hebrew, which Jerome ^{a} rightly calleth Omnium linguarum matricem, the mother tongue. See Plautus in "Paenulo," act v. And then, it is not unlikely that these spies had learned the language of Canaan, by conversing with those conquered Amorites on this side Jordan.

^{a} In cap. iii. Sophontae.

Ver. 13. And that ye will save alive.] Man is ζῶον φιλοζῶον, a creature that would fain live, said Aesop. Quis vitam non vult? said Augustine. The Gibeonites were desirous to live upon any terms. ^{#Jos 9:3-14} Rahab's greatest care was for her kindred, because unconverted. Augustine professeth that he would not for the gain of a million of worlds be an atheist for half an hour: because he knew not but God might in that time call him to account.

Ver. 14. If ye utter not this our business.] On this condition we assure thee of safety. God's promises also are with a condition, which is as an oar in a boat, or stern of a ship, and turneth the promise another way.

Ver. 15. For her house was upon the town wall.] In an obscure nook, among the poorer sort of people: for this harlot Rahab had not got such an estate as Phryne had, who offered at her own charge to repair the ruined walls of Thebes, if these words only might have been inscribed on them, "Alexander overturned these walls, and Phryne set them up again." ^{a}

And she dwelt upon the wall.] Where Providence had placed her for such a purpose as this: for it is God that appointeth the bounds of men's habitations. ^{#Ac 17:26}

^{a} Ο μὲν Αλεξανδρος κατεσκαψε, ἡ δὲ φρυνη ἀνωκοδο μῆσεν.

Ver. 16. Get you to the mountain.] This, say some, was spoken after the men were down, in the still of the night, without the wall. ^{#Jos 2:18} But what a fool was he who said, Μίσω σοφὴν γυναῖκα, I hate a discreet woman!

Ver. 17. We will be blameless of this thine oath, / q.d. Great haste though we have, yet will we clear up the terms whereunto we have sworn, to prevent the danger or rebut the suspicion of perjury. An oath is not to be taken but with a great deal of caution and circumspection, ^{#Ge 24:3-5} not in jest, but in judgment, ^{#Jer 4:2 Isa 48:1} not rashly and unadvisedly, ^{#Le 5:4 Isa 14:39,44} as those that swear in heat and choler, when they should with fear, {#De 10:20} discerning the nature of an oath, the necessity, the conditions and circumstances.

Ver. 18. And thou shalt bring thy father, &c.] Who, if not there found when we storm the town, shall perish at their own peril. So shall all not found to be of the family of faith, and within God's doors. The devil sweeps all that are out of the covenant.

Chapter 3

Ver. 1. And Joshua rose early in the morning,] viz., Of the ninth day of the first month, called Abib; as on the tenth day {#Jos 4:19} -which was the day wherein the paschal lamb was set apart—the Israelites entered the land of Canaan under the command and conduct of Joshua, who was a type of Jesus Christ, by whom we have "the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory." {#Eph 1:14}

Removed from Shittim.] In the plains of Moab. See #Jos 2:1.

Ver. 2. After three days,] i.e., Three days after that they were commanded to provide victuals. {a} {#Jos 1:11}

Ver. 3. When ye see the ark of the covenant.] Which represented that angel of the covenant, Christ Jesus.

And the priests the Levites bearing it.] The Koathites properly and ordinarily did this office, {#Nu 3:31} which as it had more honour, so more burden and danger. {#Nu 4:15}

“Fructus honos oneris, fructus honoris onus.”

And go after it.] God must and may be followed without peril. Magnus est animus qui se Deo tradidit, saith Seneca.

Ver. 4. Yet there shall be a space.] That you may know the distance, and show your reverence. See #Ex 19:12. As also,

That you may know the way by which you must go,] i.e., Ut ignari vice tuto vado transire possitis, that ye may have a sure and safe passage through the river discovered unto you.

Ver. 5. Sanctify yourselves.] By ceremonial and spiritual purifications, doing your utmost to bring your hearts to a holy temper, that ye may make the best of the ensuing miracle.
