

ANNOTATIONS UPON THE HOLY BIBLE;

BY MATTHEW POOLE

Genesis to Esther

THE MORE DIFFICULT TERMS IN EACH VERSE ARE EXPLAINED, SEEMING CONTRADICTIONS RECONCILED, QUESTIONS AND DOUBTS
RESOLVED, AND THE WHOLE TEXT OPENED.

They read in the book in the law of God distinctly, and gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading – Neh. viii. 8.

Understandest thou what thou readest? How can I, except some man should guide me? – Acts viii. 30,31.

MATTHEW POOLE

Matthew Poole was born in York in 1624. He graduated from Emmanuel College in Cambridge in 1645, and succeeded Anthony Tuckney in pasturing at St. Michael-le-Querne church. It was the only pastorate Poole ever held. A strict Presbyterian, he resigned his living rather than conform to the Act of Uniformity. At the suggestion of William Lloyd, who was to become Bishop of Worcester, Poole undertook his life's work, his Synopsis, which we know as his Commentary on the Holy Bible. He began this work in 1666 and labored at it for ten years.

Matthew Poole completed his Synopsis Criticorum (Synopsis of Interpreters) on the entire Bible in Latin. But he felt the need to supplement his magnum opus with a commentary on the Bible for English readers. He wrote his English Annotations on the Bible through Isaiah 58 before he died in Amsterdam. His friends decided to take up the remainder of the work and complete the English Annotations through Revelation. Following is a list of continuators.

John Collinges (1623-1691) [Isaiah 61-66; Jeremiah; Lamentations; Gospels; 1 and 2 Corinthians; Galatians; 1 and 2 Timothy; Titus; Philemon; Revelation]

Henry Hurst (1629-1690) [Ezekiel; Minor Prophets]

William Cooper [Daniel]

Peter Vinke (d. 1702) [Acts]

Richard Mayo (d. 1695) [Romans]

Edward Veale (d. 1708) [Ephesians; James; 1 and 2 Peter; Jude]

Richard Adams (c. 1626-1698) [Philippians; Colossians]

Matthew Barker (d. 1698) [1 and 2 Thessalonians]

Obadiah Hughes (d. 1704) [Hebrews]

John Howe (1630-1705) [1, 2, and 3 John]

PREFACE TO FIRST EDITION of COMMENTARY

by MATTHEW POOLE

The same reason which teacheth us to conclude that there is a First Being, and must be a First Cause and Mover, (whom we call God,) that it is he who hath made us, and not we ourselves," and that "we are his people, and the sheep of his pasture," will also oblige us "to enter into his gates with thanksgiving, and into his courts with praise," and to "be thankful unto him" by fulfilling his will; which we cannot do without some revelation of it to us. God therefore having ceased to speak to men face to face, as to Abraham, and Moses, &c., (which he never ordinarily did but to some particular favourites,) we are by reason enforced to conclude that there are some books in the world in which this revelation is to be found. The church of God (the mother of us all) hath constantly held forth the books of the Old and New Testament (which we have in our Bibles) for this sacred revelation, which hath justly obliged all her children to look upon them as hung out to them for that use upon that noble pillar, the church, looking into them upon the church's notice, (as the child does upon the mother's telling it, That is the sun,) every reasonable man finds them of so venerable antiquity, and discerneth in them such stamps of divinity, in the majesty of their style, the purity of the matter, the sublimeness and spirituality of the propositions contained in them, the self-denial of the penmen, the heavenliness of the scope and end of those sacred writings, the harmony of the parts, the seal of miracles, and principally in the mighty power and efficacy of them upon the souls and consciences of multitudes, both for conviction, and for support and consolation, that he easily concludes, This is the voice of God, and not of man; and looks back upon his mother the church, (as a child upon his nurse,) thanking her for showing him such a treasure, and saying, as the Samaritans to their countrywomen, Joh_4:42, Now we believe these books are the word of God, not because of thy saying so, but because we have looked upon them ourselves, and find them of a different style, nature and matter, to have a different scope, end, power and efficacy of them upon the souls of men, from what any other writings in the world have. Though the truth is, that until a man comes to be fully persuaded of the truth of them from the same Spirit that dictated them, every soul will be as apt to waver in his faith, concerning their being the word of God, as he in Tully, who only believed in the immortality of the soul from the reading of Plato's book, which (if I remember right) the Roman orator expresseth in words to this sense: I have read over Plato's book again and again; but I know not how it comes to pass, so long as I am reading I agree with it; but no sooner is the book out of my hands but de immortalitate animae dubitare caepi, I begin to doubt whether the soul be immortal, yea or no. But, however, in one degree or other every Christian makes that the principle of his religion, that the Holy Scripyures of the Old and New Testament are the word of God. Some believe it more faintly and uncertainly, some more fixedly and firmly; and accordingly the faith of persons, as to them, is more or less operative.

This revelation of the Divine will was made perfect gradually, (as it pleased God in succeeding times to reveal what was his secret will before, but hid from ages,) so as (if chronologers compute right) there were more than fifteen hundred years passed betwixt the writing of the first book of Genesis by Moses, and the Revelation (which was the last) by John; and divines generally judge that he sealed up the book by those words , Rev 22:18-19 . So that, as to things to be believed or done, we are to expect no further revelation.

When "the mighty God, even the Lord," had thus spoken, and God had thus "shined out of Zion, the perfection of beauty," it was but reasonable that his people should come to the knowledge of what he had said, that they might answer the end of the revelation both by believing and obeying.

The Old Testament being written in the Hebrew tongue, when great numbers of the Hebrews or Jews, by their captivity in Babylon, had much forgotten or corrupted their own language, it was thought reasonable there should be a Chaldaic paraphrase; and the wisdom of Divine Providence provided a Septuagint version, as for the benefit of others, so possibly of the Jews themselves, the most of whom, before Christ's time, were more Grecians than Hebricians; and it is generally thought that all the books of the New Testament were written in the Grecian language.

When it pleased God that the gospel should be preached to all nations, and the sound of it go to the ends of the earth, he so ordered it also, that soon after true religion came into any place, some were stirred up to translate those holy books into the language of that country; and he so far assisted them, that though in many lesser things they failed through want of a knowledge of the just propriety of some words in Hebrew or Greek, or the use of particle in those languages, yet they faile not in anything whereby the reader might be led into any pernicious error touching his salvation. And we shall observe the penmen of the New Testament giving such a deference to the commonly received version in their times, that although the Septuagint version which we have appears to us more dissonant from the Hebrew than any other, yet most of the quotations of the Old Testament which we have in the New are apparently from that version; which teacheth us, that it is not every private minister's work to make a new version of the Scripture, but he ought to acquiesce in the version which God hath provided for the church wherein he lives, and not ordinarily, or upon light grounds, to enter into a dissent to it; and if in any thing he sees it necessary to do it, yet not to do it (as to a particular text) without great modesty, and a preface of reverence.

This translation of the Scriptures into a language understood by all people in that country into which the church came was looked upon so reasonable and necessary, as it was opposed by none till the papists had patched up a religion, for the upholding of which it was necessary for them to maintain, that ignorance was the mother of devotion; after which it was very difficult in any places where these spiritual tyrants had a dominion to get the Scriptures translated into the language of that country. Not to instance in other places, we shall give some short account of England. Our records tell us of a translation of some part of them into the Saxon language (which was then a great part of ours) within seven hundred years after Christ, and of the translation of the whole into the same language by Beda within forty years after. Beda was himself a papist, but the mystery of iniquity grew up gradually to its height. Soon after, bibles which the people could understand were very scarce commodities in England, and thus it continued for six hundred years. Wickliff, who lived in the time of Richard II., and died in 1384, being the first we know of afterward who translated the Scriptures into a language understood by any who were not skilled in some or other of three learned languages. That great man easily understood, that without the Scriptures in their own language the people must take all for the will of God that their priests told them was so, and that the popish priests were generally persons of ignorance, and impudence enough to entitle God to any of their own blasphemies and superstitions. But within thirty years after the death of Wickliff, viz. anno 1414, the council (of conventicle rather) of Constance decreed all Wickliff's books to the fire; and though some were spared, yet the battle was so hard that there were very few that escaped. This was out state till the year 1527, (in all which year the poor people of the land of our nativity were without a teaching Bible, (as to the common people,) and indeed without a teaching priest,) yea, and for some time after this, as we shall hear.

In the year 1527 God put it into the heart of Mr. Tindall to translate the New Testament into English; as also the five books of Moses (he being then an exile in Germany for his religion). Be he lost all his papers by a shipwreck in his passage to Hamburgh, and had his work to begin again; which yet that faithful and most unwearied servant of God did accomplish, adding some prefaces to the several books, and some notes to the particular chapters and verses; the publishing of which much nettled the popish bishops in England, and all means were then used to suppress it. Amongst others, the then bishop of London advised with one Packington a merchant of that city concerning the most accommodte mean to that design. The merchant could think of none so probable, as with a sum of money to buy up the whole impression. The bishop approving it, furnished him with a round sum for that purpose; which the merchant (being more a friend to Mr. Tindall than the bishop knew) sent to Mr. Tindal, and had the impression sent him

(some few copies being (as we must imagine) first sold off). With this money Mr. Tindall supported himself in his exile, and was also enabled to go on with his translation of the other part of the Bible, and to prepare a perfect English Bible. Sculteri Annales in anno 1532. In the meantime, a passage happened so pleasant, that I shall think it worth the while here to relate it: Sir Thomas More being lord chancellor, and having several persons accused for heresy, and ready for execution, offered to compound with one of them for his life, upon the easy terms of his discovery to him who they were in London that maintained Tindall beyond sea. After that the poor man had got as good a security for his life as the honour and truth of the chancellor could give him, he told him it was the bishop of London maintained him, by sending him a sum of money to buy up the impression of his Testaments. The chancellor smiled, saying that he believed he said true. George Constantine. Thus was the poor confessor's life saved. But to return to our story. In the year 1536 Mr. Tindall was martyred at Villefort in Flanders, for translating into English the New Testament and part of the Old (saith Sir Richard Baker). But his great adversary, Sir Thomas More, was the year before gone to his own place, being executed for treason. Mr. Tindall and Mr. Coverdale, (as Mr. Fox telleth us,) before Mr. Tindall's death, had translated the whole Bible. Baker's Chronicle, p. 282. But it came not out till after his death, under the name of Thomas Matthews (with the addition of the Apocrypha, translated by John Rogers). The Lord Cromwell, with Archbishop Crammer, presented it to the king, and obtained an order from his majesty for leave for any of his subjects to read it; but this was not with the great regret of the bishops.

1540 About thirteen years after this (or not so much) the Lord Cromwell obtained letters from King Henry VIII for a subject of his reprint at Paris the Bible in English; the king also wrote a letter to Bonner (at that time his ambassador in France) to further it. Fraughton and Whitchurch undertook the work, upon what seeming encouragement from Bonner may be read in Mr. Fox's 2nd vol of his Martyrology, pref. 1641, p. 515, 516. But how it came to pass I cannot tell, (though Bonner's treachery was suspected in the case,) when it was upon the point finished, the copies were seized, and ordered to be burnt, and the work had wholly ceased but for the covetousness of the officer, who sold four great dry fats filled with them to a haberdasher to lay caps in. By this means having recovered some copies, they came to London, and there made a new impression.

But after this, my Lord Cromwell being put to death, the bishops and popish party made so great complaint to the king, (whose warmth for the Reformation much abated in the latter part of his life,) that the sale of the English bible was again prohibited, and the printer imprisoned; and although the bishops promised the king they would make a more correct translation, yet it was never done during that king's reign.

But in the year of our Lord 1577, which was the nineteenth or twentieth of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, some bishops published a new translation; but till that time the bibles used in churches were Tindall's and Coverdale's, being allowed by the public authority of King Edward VI., 1549-1552. And to this day the Psalms in our Service Book are according to Tindall's and Coverdales's Bibles; which should make us wary in our censures of that translation, though we see reason in many things to dissent from it. Only we having a more correct translation established by authority, why (for the avoiding the offence of the less knowing people) we have not made use of that, but retained a translation not undertaken by any public authority, and confessed to be more imperfect, is what I cannot, nor count myself obliged to account for. Possibly God for the honour of his martyr hath so ordered it.

After this, King James coming to the crown, being a prince of great learning and judgment, and observing the different usage of some words in his age from the usage of then in King Henry VIII or in Queen Elizabeth's time, and also the several mistakes (though of a minute nature) in those more ancient versions, was pleased to employ divers learned men in making a new translation, which is that which at this day is generally used. With what reverence to former translators, what labor, and care, and pains they accomplished their work, the reader may see at large in their preface prefixed to those copies that are printed in folio, and in their epistle to King James in our Bibles of a lesser form; of which translation (though it may not be with its more minute error) yet I think it may be said that it is hardly exceeded by that of any other church.

By this history (reader) thou mayst understand the mighty workings of Divine Providence, and wonderful goodness of God to this nation in the plenty we have of Bible, and that of a very correct translation (though possibly not in every little thing perfect). Mr. Fox (if we remember right) tells us a story of two maids in Lincolnshire, that in Queen Mary's time parted with a considerable part of their estate for a few leaves of the bible. How good is God to us, that we for a few shillings can have the whole revelation of the Divine will! upon which account we offer it to the consideration of any thinking English man or woman, what he or she will answer for his or her ignorance in the Holy Scriptures, or for the ignorance of his or her children, if (having so much means as we have to learn to read) and shall neglect the teaching of their children to read it, or learning themselves, in case their parents have neglected then; or, being able to read, shall neglect the practice of it, in exercising himself in the law of the Lord day and night, and living up to the rule of it. The English bible is come to us at the price of the blood of one martyr, and the unwearied labour of a multitude of holy and learned men, succeeding one another for more than sixty years, before we had the translation so perfect as now it is in all hands.

Poor Christians in popish countries either have not this pot of spiritual food, or must cry out, "Death is in the pot." Our English translators in their preface observe, that of late the church or Rome would seem to bear something of a monthly affection to her children, and allow them the Scriptures in the mother tongue, but it is indeed a gift not worthy of its name. They must first get a licence in writing before they use them, and, to get that, they must approve themselves to their confessors to be such as are, if not frozen in dregs, yet soured with the leaven, of their superstition. Yet this seemed toom much to Clement the Eighth, who therefore frustrated the grant of Pius the Fourth. They will allow none to be read but the Doway bibles, and the Rhemish Testaments, (the corruptions of which have been sufficiently manifested by many learned men,) now will they trust their people with these without the licence of their own bishops and inquistors. This is the liberty they boast of giving to any of their religion to read the Scriptures in English; what it is worth let any man judge.

In the mean time, those who are not affected with the mercy of God to us in this particular, must declare themselves neither to have any just valaue for God in the mighty workings of his providence to bring this about; nor yet for the blood of holy Mr. Tindall, who died in his testimony to this truth, that no people ought to be deprived of so great a good; nor for the labours and pains of those many servants of God who travailed in this great work, and thought no labour in it too much; nor indeed for their own souls, to the slavation ow which, if the Holy Scriptures in our language doth not highly contribute, we must lay the blame upon ourselves.

But although we have the Bible in a language we understand, yet we may see reason to cry out as Bernard does with reference to the Song of Solomon, Here is an excellent nut, but who shall crack it? heavenly bread, but who shall break it? For though the papists and such as have ill will to the good of souls make too great an improvement of the difficulties in holy writ, in making them an argument against the people's having them in a language which they can understand; (for Augustine said true when he said, There are fords in them wherein lambs may wade, as well as depths in which elephants may swim;) and what others observe is as true, that things necessary to be believed or done in order to salvation, lied plain and obvious in holy writ: yet it is as true, that there is much of holy writ of which the generality of people must say as the eunuch, "How can I understand, except some man should guide me!" Act_8:31; hard to say what book of Scripture is so plain that every one who runneth can read it with understanding (such a vast difference there is betwixt the capacities of those who yet have the same honest hearts). This hath made wise and learned men not only see a need of larger commentaries, but also of shorter notes, annotations, and paraphrses, &c. Nor is this a late discovery. It is upward of three hundred years since Lyra wrote his short notes upon the whole Bible. What Vatablus and Erasmus (though all of them papists) have done since is sufficiently known, to say nothing of many others of that religion. Amongst the Reformed churches, there hath been a learned Piscator in Germany, Junius and Tremellius elsewhere, who did the same things; but all these wrote their notes in Latin, not in the peculiar language of any country. The ancientest notes we have in English were those ordinarily known by the name of the Geneva Notes, after two years labour finished 1560, by those good men who, flying from Queen Mary's persecution, took sanctuary there. A work so acceptable to protestants in the beginning of our Reformation, that their Bible with with those Notes annexed was (as is observed by the authors of our Late English Annotations) printed above thirty times over by Queen Elizabeth's printers and their heirs and successors. There wanted not one indeed who fifty years after boldly reflected on that excellent work in the most public pulpit of our University of Oxford; but how grateful his reflections were to the University at that time may be read in the preface to the English Annotations: he was in the same pulpit checked and confuted by the doctor of the chair, and suspended by the governors of the University. The labours of Erasmus in his Paraphrase on the New Testament were so acceptable, that by public order they were to be in every church exposed to public view and use, and (if we mistake not) ought to be so still. After these, were published Diodate's Notes written in Italian, since translated into English. About the year 1640 some deliberations were taken for the composing and printing other English notes (the old Geneva Notes not so well fitting our new and more correct translation of the bible). These were at first intended to be so short, that they might be printed together with our bibles in folio or quarto. But those divines who were engaged in it found this would not answer their end; it being not possible by so short notes to give people any tolerable light into the whole text; yet we cannot say it gave so general a satisfaction (by reason of the shortness of it) as was desired and expected. So as upon the second edition it came forth quite a new thing, making just two just volumes. This was so acceptable to the world, that within sixteen years it was ready for a third edition, with some further enlargements; before which also were published the Dutch Annotations translated into our language.

So that at this day (besides the shorter Geneva Notes) we have three sorts of annotations in our own language; those of famous Diodate, the Dutch Annotations, and those of our own divines (originally so wrote). After which, new annotations may seem superfluous. It seems therefore reasonable that we should give our readers some short account of our undertaking. We dare say nothing could be farther from the thoughts of our reverend brother (now at rest with God) who at first began this work, than to reflect any dishonour upon those eminent persons who laboured before in works of this nature, nor is any thing further from our thoughts. (They all of them did famously in their generations.) And if it should appear to any of our readers that any of us have seen further into any particular texts than those did who went before us, yet we hope all our readers will understand there is little honour due to us upon that account, because we had all their shoulders to stand upon.

The pains which our reverend brother ( o makapithv ) took in his Synopsis Criticorum is such, as not only will make his name live in the churches of Christ, but also eminently fitted him for giving the sense of the whole Scripture in Annotations of this nature, which he undertook and carried on by his own hand to the 58th of Isaiah, designing that two volumes should comprehend the whole, and that the first should determine with his notes upon the Song of Solomon. What occasioned his first thoughts and undertaking himself tells us in his paper of proposals published with reference tot hat work, in these words: "But although there are many excellent comments upon divers parts of the Scripture, and some entire comments, or large annotations, upon the whole, in the English tonguel yet because of the too much brevity of some, and the unequal composure of others, as being done by divers hands, and the prolixity of those that have been written upon particular books, it hath been often and earnestly wished that there were some short and full comment, wherein all those passages which need the help of an interpretoer might be sufficiently cleared," &c. As the first edition of our English Annotations, after which followed the translation of those of the learned Diodate into our language, and then those of the Low Country divines of Holland, (though all of them deservedly valuable,) seemed much too short to satisfy the thirst of many pious souls after the fuller knowledge of the Scriptures; so the larger edition of our English Annotations seems capable of some amendments, by which they might be made more serviceable to those that use them, especially in these particulars.

1. The whole text is not printed in them, so as those who will use them must make use of a Bible also for the understanding of them. Our reverend brother (with whom also we concur) rightly judged that it would be of more advantage to have the entire text in the reader's eye while he is seeking the sense of any particular place, and while he reads a chapter to have a commentary under his eyes in which he might find the sense of any part or it, and satisfy himself as to any difficulty occurring it it.

2. As some (very eminently learned men) had been too large in those Annotations, (saying almost all that hath been said by any upon the texts they handled,) so others had been as much too short, and that especially in the New Testament (which seems to Christians to need the fullest explication); and others, from their variety of learning, had mixed several quotations out of the fathers, and critical and philological notions, possibly not so proper for the end for which such annotations are designed, which is to give the unlearned Christians the true sense of the Holy Scriptures, that those who can, might read and understand the will of God.

That our reader may not mistake our design or undertaking, we desire that he should know, that we do not pretend (as some have vainly fancied) to translate Mr. Pool's Synopsis Criticorum; that would have asked six volumes instead of two; and when it had been done, would have signified very little, unless for thos who (being learned men) needed no such translation: possibly in a whole leaf of that book six lines would not serve our purpose. Nor have we had any ambition either to say something that none had said before us, (we have observed that those who have had such an itch have for the most part happened to say what those who came after then would not subscribe,) nor yet to say all that we hinted the senses which in our judgment have seemed fairest, and least constrained, and shortly showed the consonancy of them to other scriptures. We have avoided all polemical discourses, as no way proper to our design, and very rarely hinted those practical conclusions which have arose from the text when opened (the most we have done of that nature is in our discourses upon the parables).

Our reverend brother (designing but two volumes, and the first to end with the Song of Solomon, though since it hath been determined to conclude it with the prophet Isaiah, that all which he lived to finish might be comprehended in one volume) had a hard task to contract his discourses so as to bring them within that compass, and thereby was necessitated not to give the entire sense of each verse in his notes, but only of those words or terms in the verse which he conceived to stand in need of explication, referring by letters in the text to the parts of the commentary. This was not necessary in such parts of the Scripture where the entire sense of the whole text is given; nor indeed as to some parts is it possible (such we mean as are opened harmonically); of which nature are the three first evangelists. It is confessed by all, that the evangelists make up but one entire history, though some of them have some things which the others have not, and they seldom agree in the phrases and circumstances of any one piece of history. This made it reasonable that, with the interpretation of one evangelist, should be joined what the others had with reference to the same piece of history; which method hath been accordingly pursued (being the same in which the most judicious Mr. Calvin and others have gone before us); not indeed could any other course have been taken without a needless writing the same things over and over again; so as that in our notes upon Mark we have only enlarged in the explication of what he hath which we did not meet with before in Matthew; and in the explication of Luke, we have only opened what he hath which was not in Matthew or Mark. Where they all three concurred, or but two of them concurred, in any story, we have opened what they all or both say in our notes upon the first of them; and when we have come to it again in one or both the other, we have only referred to our former notes. John (having little which the other evangelists have) we have considered by himself mostly, yet sometimes taking in something from him, where we found it compleatory of any thing related by the other evangelists.

In magnis voluisse sat est. We cannot say that we have left no room for others to come after us, and add to or correct what we have said. But this we can say in truth, that we have not willingly balked any obvious difficulty, and have designed a just satisfaction to all our readers; and if any knot remain yet untied, we have told our readers what hath been most probably said for their satisfaction in the untying of it.

If it had pleased God to have lent a little longer life to our reverend brother, the work had very probably been done to greater advantage, and more general satisfaction. We are but entered upon his harvest, and have wanted his sickle; we cannot pretend to any double portion of his spirit. His mantle dropped from him before he was translated (we mean his Synopsis). We have taken that up; out of that great work of his we have taken so much as we judged proper for his design in this work, and made use of great number of other authors, some of which he left out, or very little considered, in his Synopsis, upon design to make a further use of them in this English work, as thinking their labours more proper for this than his other work.

Our design, good reader, was not to tell thee how the fathers interpreted texts, (Aquinas, Justinianus, and others have done that work,) nor yet to tell thee any grammatical niceties, or what learned men have critically noted upon terms or phrases, (that is done in the Synopsis Criticorum,) nor yet to tell thee what conclusions of truth may be raised from the verses, (that hath been done profitably upon many books of Scripture by Mr. Dickson, Hutchinson, Fergusson, Guild, Durham, and some others,) much less to handle the controversies that have risen from any portion of Scripture. Our work hath been only to give thee the plain sense of the Scripture, and to reconcile seeming contradictions where they occurred, and as far as we were able to open scripture by scripture, which is its own best interpreter, comparing things spiritual with spiritual, "that thy faith might not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the wisdom and power of God." If we have reached this end, it is all we aimed at; if thou gettest any good by what we have done, remember thy sacrifice is due at another altar, even His who "ministreth seed to the sower," who both watereth the furrows of the field, and blesseth the springing of the corn; let Him have the praise, and we only thy prayers, that we may live a useful life, and die a happy death, and "attain to the resurrection of the dead," in which we shall all see and understand more perfectly than we yet do.

Genesis 1:1

In the beginning, to wit, of time and things, in the first place, before things were distinguished and perfected in manner hereafter expressed. Or the sense is this, The beginning of the world was thus. And this phrase further informeth us, that the world, and all things in it, had a beginning, and were not from eternity, as some philosophers dreamed.

God created the heaven and the earth; made out of nothing, either,

1. The heaven and earth as now they are with their inhabitants. So this verse is a summary or brief of what is particularly declared in the rest of this chapter. Or,

2. The substance and common matter of heaven and earth. Which seems more probably by comparing this verse with the next, where the earth here mentioned is declared to be without form, and the heavens without light; as also with Gen_2:1, where the heavens and the earth, here only said to be created, are said to be finished or perfected. Yet I conceive the third heaven to be included under the title of the heaven, and to have been created and perfected the first day, together with its blessed inhabitants the holy angels, as may be collected from Job_33:6-7. But the Scripture being written for men, and not for angels, the Holy Ghost thought it sufficient to comprehend them and their dwelling-place under that general term of the heavens, and proceedeth to give a more particular account of the visible heavens and earth, which were created for the use of man. In the Hebrew it is, the heavens and the earth. For there are three heavens mentioned in Scripture: the aerial; the place of birds, clouds, and meteors, Mat_26:64 Rev_19:17 Rev_20:9. The starry; the region of the sun, the moon, and stars, Gen_22:17. The highest or third heaven, 2Co_12:2; the dwelling of the blessed angels.

Genesis 1:2

The same confused mass or heap is here called both earth, from its most solid and substantial part; and the deep, from its vast bulk and depth; and waters, from its outward face and covering. See Psa_104:6 2Pe_3:5.

Without form and void; without order and beauty, and without furniture and use.

Upon the face, the surface or uppermost part of it, upon which the light afterward shone. Thus not the earth only, but also the heaven above it, was without light, as is manifest from the following verses.

The Spirit of God; not the wind, which was not yet created, as is manifest, because the air, the matter or subject of it, was not yet produced; but the Third Person of the glorious Trinity, called the Holy Ghost, to whom the work of creation is attributed, Job_26:13, as it is ascribed to the Second Person, the Son, Joh_1:3 Col_1:16-17 Heb_1:3, and to the First Person, the Father, every where.

Upon the face of the waters, i.e. upon the waters, to cherish, quicken, and dispose them to the production of the things after mentioned. It is a metaphor from birds hovering and fluttering over, and sitting upon their eggs and young ones, to cherish, warm, and quicken them.

Genesis 1:3

He commanded, not by such a word or speech as we use, which agreeth not with the spiritual nature of God; but either by an act of his powerful will, called the word of his power, Heb_1:3 or, by his substantial Word, his Son, by whom he made the worlds, Heb_1:2 Psa_33:6, who is called: The Word, partly, if not principally, for this reason, Joh_1:1-3, Joh_1:10.

There was light; which was some bright and lucid body, peradventure like the fiery cloud in the wilderness, giving a small and imperfect light, successively moving over the several parts of the earth; and afterwards condensed, increased, perfected, and gathered together in the sun.

Genesis 1:4

He observed with approbation that it was pleasant and amiable, agreeable to God's purpose and man's use; and made a distinction or separation between them in place, time, and use, that the one should succeed and shut out the other, and so by their vicissitudes make the day and the night.

Genesis 1:5

It is acknowledged by all, that the evening and the morning are not here to be understood according to our common usage, but are put by a synecdoche each of them for one whole part of the natural day. But because it may be doubted which part each of them signifies, some understand by evening, the foregoing day; and by the morning, the foregoing night; and so the natural day begins with the morning or the light, as it did with the ancient Chaldeans. Others by evening understand the first night or darkness which was upon the face of the earth, Gen_1:2, which probably continued for the space of about twelve hours, the beginning whereof might fitly be called evening; and by morning the succeeding light or day, which may reasonably be supposed to continue the other twelve hours, or thereabouts. And this seems the truer opinion,

1. Because the darkness was before the light, as the evening is put before the morning, Gen_1:5, Gen_1:8, and afterwards.

2. Because this best agrees both with the vulgar and with the Scripture use of the terms of evening and morning.

3. Because the Jews, who had the best opportunity of knowing the mind of God in this matter by Moses and other succeeding prophets, begun both their common and sacred days with the evening, as is confessed, and may be gathered from Lev_23:32.

Were the first day; did constitute or make up the first day; day of being taken largely for the natural day, consisting of twenty-four hours: these were the parts the first day; and the like is to be understood of the succeeding days. Moreover, God, who could have made all things at once, was pleased to divide his work into six days, partly to give us occasion more distinctly and seriously to consider God's works, and principally to lay the foundation for the weekly sabbath, as is clearly intimated, Gen_2:2-3 Exo_20:9-11.

Genesis 1:6

A firmament; or, an extension, or a space or place extended or stretched out, and spread abroad like a tent or curtain, between the waters, though not exactly in the middle place; as Tyrus is said to sit, or be situated in the midst of the seas, Eze_28:2, though it was but a little space within the sea. But of these things see more in Gen_1:7.

Genesis 1:7

The firmament here is either,

1. The starry heaven; so called, not from its solidity, but from its fixed, durable, and, in a sort, incorruptible and unchangeable nature. Or,
2. The air; called here, the expansion, or extension, because it is extended far and wide, even from the earth to the third heaven; called also the firmament, because it is fixed in its proper place, from whence it cannot be moved, unless by force.

The waters under the firmament are seas, rivers, lakes, fountains, and other waters in the bowels of the earth.

The waters above the firmament, or above the heavens, as they are called, Psa_148:4, are either,

1. A collection or sea of waters placed by God above all the visible heavens, and there reserved for ends known to himself. Or rather,
2. The waters in the clouds; for the clouds are called waters, Psa_18:11 Psa_104:3, and are said to be in heaven, 2Sa_21:10 Mat_24:30, and the production thereof is mentioned as an eminent work of God's creation, Job_35:5 Job_36:29 Psa_147:8 Pro_8:28; which therefore it is not credible that Moses in his history of the creation would admit, which he doth, if they be not here meant; and these are rightly said to be above the firmament, i.e. the air, because they are above a considerable part of it. As God commanded and ordered it, so it was done and settled.

Genesis 1:9

The waters under the heaven; both the great abyss, or deep of water which is shut up in the bowels of the earth, Gen_7:11 Psa_24:2 Psa_33:7 Psa_136:6; as also the sea and rivers, all which are here said to be gathered together into one place, because of their communication and mixture one with another.

Let the dry land appear; for hitherto it was covered with water, Gen_1:2 2Pe_3:5.

Genesis 1:10

He called them not sea , but seas; because of the differing quantity and nature both of several seas, and of the rivers, and other lesser collections of waters, all which the Hebrews call seas.

The separation of the waters was begun on the second day, Gen_1:6, &c., but not perfected till this third day; therefore God's approbation of that work is not mentioned there, but here only.

Genesis 1:11

Let the earth bring forth; the sense is: For the present let it afford matter, out of which I will make grass (as man's rib afforded matter, out of which God made woman); and for the future let it receive virtue or power of producing it out of that matter which I have made, and suited to that end.

Grass; that which groweth of itself without seed or manuring, and is the food of beasts.

The herb yielding seed, for the propagation of their several kinds, to wit, mature and perfect herbs, which alone yield seed. So afterwards God made man, not in the state of children, but of grown and perfect age.

After his kind, i.e. according to the several kinds of fruits.

Whose seed is in itself; now is by my constitution, and shall be for the future. In some part of itself, either in the root, or branch, or leaf, or bud, or fruit. The sense is, which is sufficient of itself for the propagation of its kind, without any conjunction of male and female.

Genesis 1:12

This clause is so often added, to show that all the disorders, evil and hurtful qualities, that now are in the creatures, are not to be imputed to God, who made all of them good; but to man's sin, which hath corrupted their nature, and perverted their use.

Genesis 1:14

Let there be lights; to wit, more glorious lights than that created the first day, which probably was now condensed and reduced into these lights; which are higher for place, more illustrious for light, and more powerful for influence, than that was. Note here, that herbs and trees were created before the sun, whose influence now is necessary for their production, to show that God doth not depend upon the means or upon the help of the creatures in his operations.

The day, i.e. the artificial day, reaching from sun-rising to sunseting.

Let them be for signs; for the designation and distincton of times, as months, weeks, &c.; as also for the signification of the quality of the weather or season, by the manner of their rising and setting, Mat_16:2; by their eclipses, conjunctions, &c. And for the discovery of supernatural and miraculous effects; of which see Jos_10:13 Isa_38:8 Luk_21:25-26 Act_2:19-20.

And for seasons, and for days, and years:

1. By their motions and influences to produce and distinguish the four seasons of the year, mentioned Gen_8:22. And to show as well the fit times and seasons for sowing, planting, reaping, navigation, &c., as for the observation of set and solemn feasts, or other times for the ordering of ecclesiastical or civil affairs.

2. By their diurnal and swift motion to make the days, and by their nearer approaches to us, or further distances from us, to make the days or nights either longer, or shorter, or equal. He speaks here of natural days, consisting of twenty-four hours.

3. By their annual and slower motion to make years.

Genesis 1:16

Two great lights, or, enlighteners, as the word properly signifies. The sun, which is really and considerably greater than the moon, or any of the stars, or the whole earth. And the moon, called here the lesser light, is greater than any of the stars, not really, but in appearance, and in clearness and light, in respect of which it is called great in this place, and both are much greater in efficacy and use than any of the stars.

To rule the day; either,

1. To influence the earth and its fruits with heat or moisture, and to govern men's actions and affairs, which commonly are transacted by day; for the word day is sometimes put metonymically for the events of the day, as Pro_27:1 1Co_3:13. Or,

2. To regulate and manage the day; by its rise to begin it, by its gradual progress to carry it on, even to the mid-day, and by its declination and setting to impair and end it. Which seems most probable, because the moon is in like manner said to rule the night, which is meant of the time, and not of the actions or events of the night.

Genesis 1:18

This clause was omitted in the first day's work, but is added here, because the light was then but glimmering and imperfect, which now was made more clear and complete.

Genesis 1:20

The moving creature, or, creeping thing. A word which belongs to all those living creatures who move with their bellies close to the element they move in. Hence it is used both of birds which fly in the air, Lev_11:20, and of things creeping upon the earth, as Gen_1:24, and of fishes that swim in the sea, as here.

And fowl that may fly above the earth. The particle that or which is oft wanting, and to be understood in the Hebrew language, as Gen_39:4 Job_41:1 Isa_6:6: according to this translation the fowl have their matter from the water as well as the fishes; which seem most probable, as from this, so also from the following verses, in which they are both mentioned together, as made of the same materials, and as works of the same day, and both are blessed together, and both are distinguished and separated from the production of the earth, which were the works of the sixth day, Gen_1:24, &c. And whereas it is said, Gen_2:19, Out of the ground the Lord God formed every beast of the field, and every fowl of the air; it may be answered, That the word ground or earth may be there understood more largely, as it is confessedly in some other places of Scripture, for the lower part of the world, consisting of earth and water. For it is most reasonable to expound that short and general passage from the foregoing chapter, wherein the original both of beasts and fowls are largely and distinctly described. Moreover, the fowl seem to have been made of both these elements, viz. of soft and moist earth, possibly taken from the bottom of the water, in which case they were brought forth by the water, as is said here, and formed out of the ground, as there. As Eve is said to be made of Adam's bone and rib, Gen_2:21; and of his flesh Gen_1:23. Which shows that with the rib flesh was taken from Adam, though it be not said so, Gen_1:21. So here, the fowl were made both of water and earth, as their temper and constitution shows, though but one of them be here expressed. But these words are by some translated thus, and let the fowl fly. But according to that translation, the mention of the fowl, both here and in Gen_1:21, seems to be very improper and forced. For it is preposterous, and contrary to the method constantly used in this whole chapter, to speak of the motion of any living creature, and the place thereof, before its original and production be mentioned. Besides, either the original of the fowls is described here, or it is wholly omitted in this chapter, which is not credible.

God created, i.e. produced out of most unfit matter, as if a man should out of a stone make bread, which requires as great a power as that which is properly called creation.

Great whales; those vast sea monsters known by that name, though elsewhere this word be applied to great dragons of the earth.

After his kind; in such manner as is declared in the first note upon Gen_1:20. See Poole on "Gen_1:20".

Genesis 1:22

He gave them power of procreation and fruitfulness, which is justly mentioned as a great blessing, Psa_128:3-4.

Fill the waters in the seas; and consequently in the rivers, which come from the sea, and return into it.

Let fowl multiply in the earth, where they shall commonly have their habitation, though they had their original from the waters; of which see Poole on "Gen_1:20".

Genesis 1:24

1. Those living creatures hereafter mentioned, whose original is from the earth, and whose habitation is in it.
2. Those tame beasts which are most familiar with and useful to men for food, clothing, or other service.
3. Creeping thing; to wit, of the earth, of a differing kind from those creeping things of the water, Gen_1:20.
4. The wild beast, as the Hebrew word commonly signifies, and as appears further, because they are distinguished from the tame beasts, here called cattle.

Genesis 1:26

God had now prepared all things necessary for man's use and comfort. The plurals us and our afford an evident proof of a plurality of persons in the Godhead. It is plain from many other texts, as well as from the nature and reason of the thing, that God alone is man's Creator: the angels rejoiced at the work of creation, but only God wrought it, Job_38:4-7. And it is no less plain from this text, and from divers other places, that man had more Creators than one person: see Job_35:10 Joh_1:2-3, &c.; Heb_1:3. And as other texts assure us that there is but one God, so this shows that there are more persons in the Godhead; nor can that seeming contradiction of one and more being in the Godhead be otherwise reconciled, than by acknowledging a plurality of persons in the unity of essence. It is pretended that God here speaks after the manner of princes, in the plural number, who use to say: We will and require, or, It is our pleasure. But this is only the invention and practice of latter times, and no way agreeable to the simplicity, either of the first ages of the world, or of the Hebrew style. The kings of Israel used to speak of themselves in the singular number, 2Sa_3:28, 1Ch_21:17, 1Ch_29:14, 2Ch_2:6. And so did the eastern monarchs too, yea, even in their decrees and orders, which now run in the plural number, as Ezr_6:8, I (Darius) make a decree; Ezr_7:21, I, even I Artaxerxes the king, do make a decree. Nor do I remember one example in Scripture to the contrary. It is therefore a rash and presumptuous attempt, without any warrant, to thrust the usages of modern style into the sacred Scripture. Besides, the Lord doth generally speak of himself in the singular number, some few places excepted, wherein the plural number is used for the signification of this mystery. Moreover, this device is utterly overthrown by comparing this text with Gen_3:22:

The Lord God said, Behold, the man is become as one of us. Therefore there are more persons than one in the Godhead. How many they are other texts plainly inform us, as we shall see in their proper places. And whereas he saith not now as he did before: Let the earth or waters bring forth, but, Let us make; this change of the phrase and manner of expression shows that man was, as the last, so the most perfect and the chief of the ways and works of God in this lower world.

After our likeness. Image and likeness are two words noting the same thing, even exact likeness. For both of them are used of Adam, Gen_5:3:

He begat a son in his own likeness, after his image; and they are separately and indifferently used in the same sense, man being said to be made in the likeness of God, Gen_5:1, and in the image of God, Gen_9:6.

Quest. Wherein doth the image of God in man consist?

Answ. 1. It is in the whole man, both in the blessedness of his estate, and in his dominion over the rest of the creatures.

2. It shines forth even in the body, in the majesty of man's countenance, and height of his stature, which is set towards heaven, when other creatures by their down-looks show the lowness and meanness of their nature, as even heathens have observed.

3. It principally consists and most eminently appears in man's soul.

1. In its nature and substance, as it is, like God, spiritual, invisible, immortal, &c.

2. In its powers and faculties, reason or understanding, and freedom in its choice and actions.

3. In the singular endowments wherewith God hath adorned it, as knowledge, righteousness, and true holiness, in which St. Paul chiefly placeth this image, Eph_4:24 Col_3:10.

The male and female are both comprehended in the word man, as is expressed, Gen_1:27, together with their posterity.

Over the cattle; by which he understands either,

1. Both tame and wild beasts, the same word being used here in a differing sense from what it hath Gen_1:25, as is frequent in Scripture. Or,

2. Tame beasts, which are particularly mentioned, because they are more under man's dominion than the wild beasts, and more fitted for man's use and benefit, though the other be not excluded, but comprehended under the former, as the more famous kind, as is usual in Scriptures and other authors.

Over all the earth; over all other creatures and productions of the earth, and over the earth itself, to manage it as they see fit for their own comfort and advantage.

Genesis 1:27

Not both together, as some of the Jews have fabled, but successively, the woman after and out of the man, as is more particularly related, Gen_2:21, &c., which is here mentioned by anticipation. Albeit the woman also seems to have been made upon the sixth day, as is here related, and as the following blessing showeth, which is common to both of them, though the particular history of it is brought in afterwards, Gen_2:1-25, by way of recapitulation or repetition.

Genesis 1:28

Having blessed them with excellent natures, and heavenly gifts and graces, he further blesseth them with a special and temporal blessing expressed in the following words.

Replenish the earth, with inhabitants to be begotten by you.

Question. Whether this be a command obliging all men to marriage and procreation? So the Hebrew doctors think. It may be thus resolved:

1. It is a command obliging all men so far as not to suffer the extinction of mankind: thus it did absolutely bind Adam and Eve, as also Noah, and his sons and their wives, after the Flood.
2. It doth not oblige every particular person to marry, as appears both from the example of the Lord Jesus, who lived and died in an unmarried state, and from his commendation of those who made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of God, Mat_19:12; and from St. Paul's approbation of virginity, 1Co_7:1, 1Co_7:8, 1Co_7:26-27, 1Co_7:32, &c.
3. It is here rather a promise or benediction than a command, as appears both from Gen_2:22, where the same words are applied to the brute beasts, who are not subject to a command; and because if this were a command, it would equally oblige every man to exercise dominion over fishes and fowls, &c., which is absurd. It is therefore a permission rather than a command, though it be expressed in the form of a command, as other permissions frequently are, as Gen_2:16 Deu_14:4.

Genesis 1:29

It is neither affirmed nor denied that flesh also was granted to the first men for food, and therefore we may safely be ignorant of it. It is sufficient for us that it was expressly allowed, Gen_9:3.

Genesis 2:1

All the creatures in heaven and earth are called their hosts, for their multitude, variety, order, power, and subjection to the Lord of hosts. Particularly the host of heaven in Scripture (which is its own best interpreter) signifies both the stars, as Deu_4:19, Deu_17:3, Isa_34:4; and the angels, as 1Ki_22:19 2Ch_18:18 Luk_2:13; who from these words appear to have been created within the compass of the first six days, which also is probable from Col_1:16-17. But it is no wonder that the Scripture saith so little concerning angels, because it was written for the use of men, not of angels; and God would hereby take us off from curious and impertinent speculations, and teach us to employ our thoughts about necessary and useful things.

Genesis 2:2

God ended his work, or rather had ended or finished, for so the Hebrew word may be rendered, as all the learned know, and so it must be rendered, else it doth not agree with the former chapter, which expressly saith that all these works were done within six days.

He rested, not for his own need and refreshment, for he is never weary, Isa_40:28; but for our example and instruction, that we might keep that day as a day of religious rest.

Genesis 2:3

God blessed the seventh day, by conferring special honours and privileges upon it above all other days, that it should be a day of solemn rest and rejoicing and celebration of God and his works, and a day of God's bestowing singular and the best blessings upon his servants and worshippers. He separated it from common use and worldly employments, and consecrated it to the worship of God, that it should be accounted a holy day, and spent in holy works and solemn exercises of religion. Some conceive that the sabbath was not actually blessed and sanctified at and from this time, but only in the days of Moses, which they pretend to be here related by way of anticipation. But this opinion hath no foundation in the text or context, but rather is confuted from them; for as soon as the sacred penman had said that God had ended his work and rested, & c., he adds immediately in words of the same tense, that God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it. And if we compare this place with Exo_20:8-11, we shall find that Moses there speaks of God's blessing and sanctifying of the sabbath, not as an action then first done, but as that which God had done formerly upon the creation of the world, to the end that men might celebrate the praises of God for that glorious work, which as it was agreeable to the state of innocency, so was it no less proper and necessary a duty for the first ages of the world after the fall, than it was for the days of Moses, and for the succeeding generations. Because he would have the memory of that glorious work of creation, from which he then rested, preserved through all generations.

Which God created and made; either,

1. Created in making, i.e. made by way of creation; or rather,
2. Created out of nothing, and afterwards out of that created matter made or formed divers things, as the beasts out of the earth, the fishes out of the water. He useth these two words possibly to show that God's wisdom, power, and goodness was manifest, not only in that which he brought out of mere nothing, but also in those things which he wrought out of matter altogether unfit for so great works.

i.e. These things mentioned in Gen 1 are a true and full relation of their generations, i.e. of their original or beginnings.

In the day; not strictly so called, but largely taken for the time, as it is Gen_2:17 Rth_4:5 Luk_19:42 2Co_6:2.

Genesis 2:5

Before it was in the earth, i.e. when as yet there were no plants, nor so much as seeds of them, there.

Before it grew, to wit, out of the earth, as afterwards they did by God's appointment.

The two great means of the growth of plants and herbs, viz. rain from heaven, and the labour of man, were both lacking, to show that they were now brought forth by God's almighty power and word.

Genesis 2:6

There went up, from time to time, by God's appointment, a vapour, or cloud, which going up into the air, was turned into rain, and fell down again to the earth from whence it arose; whereby the earth was softened, and disposed both to the nourishment of those plants or trees that were created, and to the production of new plants in a natural and ordinary way. But these words may be otherwise understood, the copulative and, here rendered but, being put for the disjunctive or, as it is Exo_21:15, Exo_21:17, Job_6:22, Job_8:3, and in other places. Or, the negative particle not may be understood out of the foregoing clause, as it is usual in the Hebrew language, as Psa_1:5, Psa_9:17, Psa_44:19, Psa_50:8, Isa_28:27-28. And so these words may be joined with the foregoing, and both translated in this manner,

There was no rain, nor a man to till the ground, or (or nor , for both come to one thing) so much as a mist which went up from the earth, and watered (as afterwards was usual and natural) the whole face of the ground.

Genesis 2:7

Into his nostrils, and by that door into the head and whole man. This is an emphatical phrase, sufficiently implying that the soul of man was of a quite differing nature and higher extraction and original than the souls of beasts, which together with their bodies are said to be brought forth by the earth, Gen_1:24.

The breath of life, Heb. of lives; either to show the continuance of this breath or soul, both in this life and in the life to come; or to note the various degrees or kinds of life which this one breath worketh in us; the life of plants, in growth and nourishment; the life of beasts, in sense and motion; and the life of a man, in reason and understanding.

Man, who before this was but a dull lump of clay, or a comely statue, became a living soul, i.e. a living man: the soul being oft put for the whole man, as Gen_12:5, Gen_12:13, Gen_46:15 Gen_46:18, 1Pe_3:20, &c.

Genesis 2:8

He had planted, viz. on the third day, when he made the plants and trees to grow out of the ground, a place of the choicest plants and fruits, most beautiful and pleasant.

Eastward, from the place where Moses writ, and the Israelites afterwards dwelt.

Eden here is the name of a place, not that Eden near Damascus in Syria, of which see Amo_1:5; but another Eden in Mesopotamia or Chaldea, of which see Gen_4:16 2Ki_19:12 Isa_37:12 Eze_27:23. There are many and tedious disputes about the place of this Paradise; of which he that listeth may see my Latin Synopsis. It may suffice to know that which is evident, that it was in or near to Mesopotamia, in the confluence of Euphrates and Tigris.

There he put the man whom he had formed, to wit, in another place.

Genesis 2:9

The tree of life; so called, either symbolically, and sacramentally, because it was a sign and seal of that life which man had received from God, and of his continual enjoyment of it upon condition of his obedience; or, effectively, because God had planted in it a singular virtue for the support of nature, prolongation of life, and the prevention of all diseases, infirmities, and decays through age.

In the midst of the garden, or, within the garden, as Tyrus said to be in the midst of the seas, Eze_28:2, though it was but just within it.

The tree of knowledge of good and evil; so called with respect, either,

1. To God, who thereby would prove and make known man's good or evil, his obedience and happiness, or his rebellion and misery; or rather,
2. To man, who by the use of it would know, to his cost, how great and good things he did enjoy, and might have kept by his obedience, and how evil and bitter the fruits of his disobedience were to himself and all his posterity. So it seems to be an ironical denomination: q.d. You thirsted after more knowledge, which also the devil promised you; and you have got what you desired, more knowledge, even dear-bought experience.

Genesis 2:10

A river, or, rivers, by a common enallage.

Eden, the country in which Paradise was; where those rivers either arose from one spring, or met together in one channel.

From the garden, it was divided into four principal rivers, concerning which there are now many disputes. But it is no wonder if the rise and situation of these rivers be not now certainly known, because of the great changes, which in so long time might happen in this as well as in other rivers, partly by earthquakes, and principally by the general deluge. And yet Euphrates and Tigris, the chief of these rivers, whereof the other two are branches, are discovered by some learned men to have one and the same original or spring, and that in a most pleasant part of Armenia, where they conceive Paradise was. See my Latin Synopsis.

Genesis 2:11

Pison, an eminent branch of the river Tigris, probably that called by others Pasi-tigris, or Piso-tigris.

That is it which compasseth, i.e. with many windings and turnings passed through; as this word is used, Jos_15:3 Mat_23:15.

This whole land of Havilah; either that which is in those parts of Arabia which is towards Mesopotamia, so called from Havilah the issue of Cham, Gen_10:7; or that which is nigh Persia, and in the borders of India, so called from another Havilah of the posterity of Shem, Gen_10:29. To either of these following the description agrees well.

Good, i.e. better than ordinary.

Bdellium, which signifies either a precious gum, of which see Num_11:7, or gems and pearls. Once for all observe, that many of the Hebrew words or names of stones, trees, birds, and beasts, are even to the Hebrew doctors and others, both ancient and modern interpreters, of uncertain signification, and that without any considerable inconvenience to us, who are free from the obligations which the Jews were formerly under of procuring such stones, and abstaining in their diet from such beasts and birds as then were sufficiently known to them; and if any were doubtful, they had one safe course, to abstain from them.

The onyx stone, a kind of precious stone, of which see Exo_25:7, Exo_28:9, Exo_28:20.

Genesis 2:13

Gihon; not that river in the land of Israel, so called, 1Ki_1:33 2Ch_32:30; but another of the same name, which in Hebrew signifies, the branch of a greater river: here it is a branch either of Euphrates, as most think, or of Tigris, as some late writers conceive.

Ethiopia; not that country in Africa above Egypt, commonly so called; but either Arabia, which in Scripture is frequently called

Cush or Ethiopia; of which, see Poole on "2Ki_19:9", see Poole on "Job_28:19", see Poole on "Eze_29:10", see Poole on "Eze_30:8", see Poole on "Eze_30:9", see Poole on "Hab_3:7".

Or rather a country adjoining to India and Persia, with which Cush is joined, Eze_38:5; see also Isa_11:11 Eze_27:10; and about which place the Ethiopians are seated by Herod. 1. 7, Homer, Hesiod, and others. Of which see my Latin Synopsis.

Genesis 2:14

Hiddekel, i.e. Tigris, or an eminent branch of it. See Dan_10:4.

Genesis 2:15

Put him, i.e. commanded and inclined him to go. To prune, dress, and order the trees and herbs of the garden, and to keep it from the annoyance of beasts, which being unreasonable creatures, and allowed the use of herbs, might easily spoil the beauty of it.

Genesis 2:16

God commanded the woman too, (as appears both from the permission for eating herbs and fruits given to her, together with her husband, Gen_1:28-29, and from Gen_3:1-3, and from Eve's punishment), and that either immediately, or by Adam, whom God enjoined to inform her thereof.

Thou mayest freely eat; without offence to me, or hurt to thyself. The words in Hebrew have the form of a command, but are only a permission or indulgence, as 1Co_10:25-27.

Genesis 2:17

With a threefold death.

1. Spiritual, by the guilt and power of sin: at that instant thou shalt be dead in trespasses and sins, Eph_2:1.

2. Temporal, or the death of the body, which shall then begin in thee, by decays, infirmities, terrors, dangers, and other harbingers of death.

3. Eternal, which shall immediately succeed the other.

Genesis 2:18

The Lord God said, or, had said, to wit, upon the sixth day, on which the woman was made, Gen_1:27-28.

Not good; not convenient either for my purpose of the increase of mankind, or for man's personal comfort, or for the propagation of his kind.

Meet for him; a most emphatical phrase, signifying thus much, one correspondent to him, suitable both to his nature and necessity, one altogether like to him in shape and constitution, disposition and affection; a second self; or one to be at hand and near to him, to stand continually before him, familiarly to converse with him, to be always ready to succour, serve, and comfort him; or one whose eye, respect, and care, as well as desire, Gen_3:16, should be to him, whose business it shall be to please and help him.

Brought them unto Adam, either by winds, or angels, or by their own secret instinct, by which storks, and cranes, and swallows change their places with the season; partly to own their subjection to him; partly that man, being re-created with their prospect, might adore and praise the Maker of them, and withal be sensible of his want of a meet companion, and so the better prepared to receive God's mercy therein; and partly for the reason here following.

To see, or, make a discovery; not to God, who knew it already, but to all future generations, who would hereby understand the deep wisdom and knowledge of their first parent.

That was the name thereof, to wit, in the primitive or Hebrew language. And this was done for the manifestation both of man's dominion over the creatures, and of the largeness of his understanding; it being an act of authority to give names, and an effect of vast knowledge to give convenient names to all the creatures, which supposeth an exact acquaintance with their natures.

Genesis 2:20

But though, in giving them names, he considered their several natures and perfections, it was evident to himself, as well as to the Lord, that none of them was an help meet for him.

Genesis 2:21

1. God caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam, that he, who was without sin, might feel no pain in the taking away of his rib. And in this sleep some think Adam was in an ecstasy, wherein he saw what was done, together with the reason and mystery of it.

2. He took one of his ribs, together with the flesh upon it, Gen_2:23; or, one of his sides, for the Hebrew word signifieth a side as well as a rib, which may be taken synecdochically, for a part of one of his sides, viz. a rib and the flesh upon it; or, for one part out of each of his sides; as if the two ribs clothed with flesh were taken out of the man, because he saith, Gen_2:23,

This is bone of my bones, not, of my bone. The woman was taken out of this part, not out of the higher or lower parts, to show that she is neither to be her husband's mistress, to usurp authority over him, 1Ti_2:12; nor yet to be his slave, to be abused, despised, or trampled under his feet; but to be kindly treated, and used like a companion, with moderation, respect, and affection.

Quest. How could a rib be taken from Adam, but it must be either superfluous in Adam, while it was in him, or defective afterwards, both which reflect upon the Creator?

Ans. 1. It was no superfluity, but a conveniency, if Adam had at first one rib extraordinary put into him for this purpose.

2. If Adam lost a rib upon so glorious an occasion, it was but a scar or badge of honour, and no disparagement either to him or to his Creator.

3. Either God created him a new rib, or hardened the flesh to the nature and use of a rib, and so there was no defect in him.

3. He closed up the flesh, together with another bone or rib, instead of that rib and flesh which he took away from him, which was easy for God to do.

Genesis 2:22

From some place at a little distance, whither he first carried her, that for the decency of the action he might bring her thence; a bride to a bridegroom to be married to him: the great God being pleased to act the part of a father to give his daughter and workmanship to him, thereby both teaching parents their duty of providing marriages for their children, and children their duty of expecting their parents' consent in marriage.

Genesis 2:23

And Adam said.

Quest. How knew he this?

Answ. Either,

1. By his own observation; for though it be said that he was asleep till the rib was taken out and restored, yet he might awake as soon as ever that was done, the reason of his sleep ceasing, and so might see the making of the woman. Or,

2. By the revelation of God, who put these words into Adam's mouth, to whom therefore these words of Adam are ascribed, Mat_19:5.

This is now; or, for this time the woman is made of my bones, &c.; but for the time to come the woman as well as the man shall be produced another way, to wit, by generation. Made of my rib and flesh; i.e. God hath provided me a meet help and wife, not out of the brute creatures, but nearer hand, a part of my own body, and of the same nature with myself.

These are the words of Moses by Divine instinct, or his inference from Adam's words.

Shall a man leave his father and his mother; in regard of habitation and society, but not as to natural duty and affection; and in conjugal relation and highest affection, even above what they owe to their parents, they two (as it is in the Samaritan, Syriac, and Arabic translations, and Mat_19:5) shall be esteemed by themselves and others to be as entirely and inseparably united, and shall have as intimate and universal communion, as if they were one person, one soul, one body. And this first institution shows the sinfulness of divorces, and polygamy, however God might upon a particular reason for a time dispense with his own institution, or remit the punishment due to the violators of it.

To wit, of their nakedness, as having no guilt, nor cause of shame, no filthy or evil inclinations in their bodies, no sinful concupiscence or impure motions in their souls, but spotless innocency and perfection, which must needs exclude shame.

Genesis 3:1

The serpent; or rather, this or that serpent; for here is an emphatical article, of which more by and by.

The serpent's eminent subtlety is noted both in sacred Scripture, Gen_49:17 Psa_58:5 Mat_10:16 2Co_11:3, and by heathen authors, whereof these instances are given; that when it is assaulted, it secures its head; that it stops its ear at the charmer's voice; and the like. If it be yet said that some beasts are more subtle, and therefore this is not true; it may be replied,

1. It is no wonder if the serpent for its instrumentality in man's sin hath lost the greatest part of its original subtlety, even as man's sin was punished with a great decay both of the natural endowments of his mind, wisdom, and knowledge, and of the beauty and glory of his body, the instrument of his sin. But this text may, and seems to be understood, not of the whole kind of serpents, but of this individual or particular serpent; for it is in the Hebrew Hannachash that serpent, or this serpent, to signify that this was not only an ordinary serpent, but was acted and assisted by the devil, who is therefore called that old serpent, Rev_12:9. And this seems most probable, partly from the following discourse, which is added as a proof of that which is here said concerning the serpent's subtlety; and that surely was not the discourse of a beast but of a devil; and partly from 2Co_11:3, which hath a manifest reference to this place, where the apostle affirmeth that the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtlety; not surely through that subtlety which is common to all serpents, but through that subtlety which was peculiar to this, as it was possessed and acted by the devil. There seems indeed to be an allusion here to the natural subtlety of all serpents; and the sense of the sacred penman may seem to be this, as if he said: The serpent indeed in itself is a subtle creature, and thought to be more subtle than any beast of the field; but howsoever this be in other serpents, it is certain that this serpent was more subtle than any beast of the field, as will appear by the following words. If it be said, the particle this, or that, is relative to something going before, whereas there is not a word about it in the foregoing words; it may be replied, that relative particles are often put without any antecedents, and the antecedents are left to be gathered not only out of the foregoing, but sometimes also out of the following passages, as is apparent from Exo_14:29 Num_7:19 Num_24:17 Psa_87:1, Psa_105:19, Psa_114:2, Pro_7:8, Pro_14:26. So here, that serpent, that of which I am now to speak, whose discourse with the woman here followeth.

Quest. How the serpent could speak, and what the woman conceived of his speech, and why she was not affrighted, but continued the discourse with it? There be two satisfactory answers may be given to these questions.

1. The woman knew that there were spirits, and did freely and frequently converse with spirits or angels, who also did appear in some visible shape to her, which seems very credible; because in the following ages not only the angels, but even the blessed God himself, did in that manner converse with men. And as they afterwards used to appear in the shape of men, why might not one of them now appear to her, and converse with her, in the shape of a beautiful serpent? And why might she not freely and securely discourse with this which she thought to be one of those good angels, to whose care and tuition both she and her husband were committed? For I suppose the fall of the angels was yet unknown to her; and she thought this to be a good spirit, otherwise she would have declined all conversation with an apostate spirit.

2. A late ingenious and learned writer represents the matter thus, in which there is nothing absurd or incredible: The serpent makes his address to the woman with a short speech, and salutes her as the empress of the world, &c. She is not affrighted, because there was as yet no cause of fear, no sin, and therefore no danger, but wonders and inquires what this meant, and whether he was not a brute creature, and how he came to have speech and understanding? The serpent replies, that he was no better than a brute, and did indeed want both these gifts, but by eating of a certain fruit in this garden he got both. She asked what fruit and tree that was? Which when he showed her, she replied: This, no doubt, is an excellent fruit, and likely to make the eater of it wise; but God hath forbidden us this fruit. To which the serpent replies, as it here follows in the text. It is true, this discourse is not in the text; but it is confessed by Jewish and other expositors, that these words:

Yea, hath God said, & c., are a short and abrupt sentence, and that they were but the close of a foregoing discourse; which might well enough be either this now mentioned, or some other of a like nature. And that expression which follows, Gen_3:6, when the woman saw, i.e. understood that it was a tree to be desired to make one wise, may seem to imply, both that the serpent told her, and that she believed, that the speech and understanding of the serpent was the effect of the eating of that fruit; and therefore that if it raised him from a brute beast to the degree of a reasonable creature, it would elevate her from the human to a kind of Divine nature or condition.

He said unto the woman, who had upon some occasion retired from her husband for a season (an advantage which the crafty serpent quickly espieth, and greedily embraceth, and assaulteth her when she wanteth the help of her husband).

Yea, or, why, or, is it so, or, indeed, or, of a truth. It is scarce credible that God, who is so bountiful, and the sovereign good, and so abhorring from all parsimony and envy, should forbid you the enjoyment of any part of those provisions which he hath made for your use and comfort.

Of every tree, or, of any; for the word is ambiguous, which therefore the cunning adversary useth to hide the snare which he was laying for her.

To wit, in order to the eating of it. Or the touch might be simply forbidden, or she might reasonably understand it to be forbidden in and by the prohibition of eating, because it was an occasion of sin, and therefore to be avoided. For it is not probable that the woman, being not yet corrupted, should knowingly add to God's word, or maliciously insinuate the harshness of the precept. Others read, lest peradventure ye die, as if she doubted of the truth of the threatening; which seems not probable, the woman yet continuing in the state of innocency, and such doubting being evidently sinful; and the Hebrew particle

Pen doth not always imply a doubt, as appears from Psa_2:12 Isa_27:3 36:18, compared with 2Ki_18:3.

Genesis 3:4

It is not so certain as you imagine, that you shall die. God did say so indeed for your terror, and to keep you in awe; or, he had some mystical meaning in those words; but do not entertain such hard and unworthy thoughts of that God who is infinitely kind and gracious, that he will, for such a trifle as the eating of a little fruit, undo you and all your posterity, and so suddenly destroy the most excellent work of his own hands.

Genesis 3:5

If you would have the whole truth of the matter, and God's design in that prohibition, it is only this, He knoweth that you shall be so far from dying, that ye shall certainly be entered into a new and more noble kind of life; and the eyes of your minds, which are now shut as to the knowledge of a world of things, shall then be opened, and see things more fully and distinctly.

Ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil, or, as God, like unto God himself in the largeness of your knowledge; the very name that God hath put upon the tree may teach you. But this is a privilege, of which, for divers causes best known to himself, some of which your own reason will easily guess at, he would not have you partake of.

The woman saw; by curious and accurate observation, and gazing upon it, or perceiving it by the serpent's discourse, as was observed on Gen_3:3.

Pleasant to the eyes, to wit, in an eminent degree; for otherwise so were all the rest.

To make one wise, which she might know by the serpent's information. See Poole on "Gen_3:1".

Gave also unto her husband with her, who by this time was returned to her, and who now was with her; or, that he might eat with her, and take his part of that fruit.

And he did eat, by her persuasion and instigation. See 1Ti_2:14.

Genesis 3:7

The eyes of them both. The eyes of their minds and conscience, which hitherto had been closed and blinded by the arts of the devil, were opened, as the devil had promised them, though in a far differing and sadder sense.

They knew that they were naked. They knew it before, when it was their glory, but now they know it with grief and shame, from a sense both of their guilt for the sin newly past, and of that sinful concupiscence which they now found working in them.

They tied, twisted, or fastened, the lesser branches or twigs, upon which were also the leaves of a fig tree, which peradventure was then near them, and which because of its broad leaves was most fit for that use.

Made themselves aprons, to cover their nakedness.

Genesis 3:8

The voice of the Lord God, mentioned Gen_3:9, or rather the sound, as the word voice is often taken in Scripture, as Psa_93:3 Rev_10:3, Rev_19:6. Either God the Father, or rather God the Son, appeared in the shape of a man, as afterwards he frequently did, to give a foretaste of his incarnation. About evening, the time when men use to walk abroad to recreate themselves, when there was a cool and refreshing wind, whereby also the voice of the Lord was more speedily and effectually conveyed to Adam and his wife.

Adam and his wife hid themselves: being sensible of God's approach, and filled with shame and conscience of their own guilt, and dread of judgment, instead of flying to God for mercy, they foolishly attempted to run away from him, whom it was impossible to avoid.

Genesis 3:9

The Lord God called with a loud voice: Thou whom I have so highly obliged, whither and wherefore dost thou run away from me, thy Friend and Father, whose presence was lately so sweet and acceptable to thee? In what place, or rather in what condition, art thou? What is the cause of this sudden and wonderful change? This he asks, not that he was ignorant of it, but to make way for the following sentence, and to set a pattern for all judges, that they should examine the offender, and inquire into the offence, before they proceed to punishment.

Genesis 3:10

He confesseth his nakedness, which was evident, but saith nothing of his sin; which, if possible, he would have hid: see Job_31:33. And is grieved for the shameful effects of his sin, but not yet sincerely penitent for his sin.

I hid myself, out of reverence to thy glorious majesty.

Genesis 3:11

That thou wast naked; or, that thy nakedness, which lately was thy glory, was now become matter of shame.

Whereof I commanded thee; concerning which I gave thee so severe a charge upon pain of death.

Genesis 3:12

I have eaten, not by my own choice and inclination, but by the persuasion of this woman, whom thou gavest to be with me, as a meet help, a faithful friend, and constant companion, supposing that it was not good for me to be alone, which the event shows would have been much better for me. Thus Adam excuseth himself, and chargeth God foolishly with his sin.

I did eat, out of complacency to her, not from any evil design against thee.

Genesis 3:13

How heinous a crime hast thou committed! What a world of mischief hast thou by this one act brought upon thyself and all thy posterity? Or, why hast thou done this? What causes or motives couldst thou have for so wicked an action? What need hadst thou of meddling with this forbidden fruit, when I had given thee so large and liberal an allowance?

And the woman said, The serpent, a creature which thou hast made, and that assisted by a higher power, by an evil angel, for such I now perceive by sad experience there are,

beguiled me, a weak and foolish woman, whose seduction calls for thy pity, not thine anger; and I did eat, being surprised and over-persuaded against my own judgment and resolution.

Genesis 3:14

Unto the serpent; or rather, this or that serpent, which, as was said before on Gen_3:1, was no ordinary serpent, but a serpent acted and assisted by the devil; and therefore this sentence or curse is pronounced against both of them:

1. Against the serpent itself, which though an unreasonable creature, and therefore not subject to a law, and consequently not capable of guilt or sin, Rom_4:15, yet, being the instrument of the devil's malice, is rightly punished; as other beasts being abused by man's sin did suffer together with him, Exo_32:20 Lev_20:15-16, not for their crime, but partly for the punishment, and partly for the benefit of man, who is their lord and owner, Psa_8:6; for whose sake seeing they were made, it is not strange if they be punished for his use, that in their punishment man might have a demonstration of God's anger against sin, and a motive to repentance. See Poole on "Gen_6:1", and following verses to Gen_6:22. See Poole on "Gen_7:1", and following verses to Gen_7:24.

2. Against the devil, who is here principally intended, though as he lay hid in the body of the serpent which he possessed and used, so his curse is here mentioned under the cover of the serpent's curse, and under the disguise of such terms as properly and literally agree to the serpent, but are also mystically to be understood concerning the devil; with whom the Lord entertaineth no conference, as he did with Adam and Eve, whose sin was less than his, and whom God meant to bring to repentance; but immediately denounceth the curse against him, as one that sinned against much greater knowledge, and from far worse principles, not from mistake or misinformation, but from choice and rebellion, from hatred of God, and from mere envy and implacable malice against men.

Because thou hast done this, deceived the woman, and tempted her to this sin, thou art cursed; or, shalt be from henceforth, both really and in the opinion of all mankind: or, be thou.

Every beast of the field; as in other respects, so particularly in that which here follows;

upon thy belly shalt thou go. If the serpent did so before the fall, what then was natural, is now become painful and shameful to it, as nakedness and some other things were to man. But it seems more probable that this serpent before the fall either had feet, or rather did go with its breast erect, as the basilisk at this day doth; God peradventure so ordering it as a testimony that some other serpents did once go so. And so the sense of the curse being applied to this particular serpent, and to its kind, may be this: Whereas thou hadst a privilege above other kinds of serpents, whereby thou didst go with erected breast, and didst feed upon the fruits of trees and other plants; now thou shalt be brought down to the same mean and vile estate with them, upon thy belly (or rather, breast, as the word also signifies) shalt thou go, & c. as they do;

and dust shalt thou eat. Dust is the food, as of earthworms, scorpions, and some other creatures, so also of some serpents, as appears both from Isa_65:25 Mic_7:17, and from the testimony of Nicander, Theriac, ver. 372, and Philo, an Arabic writer. Or, the dust is the serpent's sauce rather than his meat; whilst creeping and grovelling upon the earth, and taking his food from thence, he must necessarily take in dust and filth together with it. These two clauses being applied to the devil, signify his fall from his noble state and place to earth and hell; the baseness of his nature and of his food, his delight being in the vilest of men and things, it being now his meat and drink to dishonour God and destroy mankind, and promote the esteem and love of earthly things.

Though now ye be sworn friends, leagued together against me,

I will put enmity between thee and the woman; and the man too, but the woman alone is mentioned, for the devil's greater confusion.

1. The woman, whom, as the weaker vessel, thou didst seduce, shall be the great occasion of thy overthrow.

2. Because the Son of God, who conquered this great dragon and old serpent , Rev_12:9, who came to destroy the works of the devil, 1Jo_3:8, was made of a woman , Gal_4:4, without the help of man, Isa_7:14 Luk_1:34-35.

Thy seed; literally, this serpent, and, for his sake, the whole seed or race of serpents, which of all creatures are most loathsome and terrible to mankind, and especially to women. Mystically, that evil spirit which seduced her, and with him the whole society of devils, (who are generally hated and dreaded by all men, even by those that serve and obey them, but much more by good men), and all wicked men; who, with regard to this text, are called devils, and the children or seed of the devil , Joh_6:70, Joh_8:44, Act_13:10 1Jo_3:8.

And her seed, her offspring; first and principally, the Lord Christ, who with respect to this text and promise is called, by way of eminency, the seed , Gal_3:16, Gal_3:19; whose alone work it is to break the serpent's head, i.e. to destroy the devil, Heb_2:14. Compare Joh_12:31 Rom_16:20.

Secondly, and by way of participation, all the members of Christ, all believers and holy men, who are called the children of Christ, Heb_2:13, and of the heavenly Jerusalem, Gal_4:26. All the members whereof are the seed of this woman; and all these are the implacable enemies of the devil, whom also by Christ's merit and strength they do overcome.

The head is the principal instrument both of the serpent's fury and mischief, and of his defence, and the principal seat of the serpent's life, which therefore men chiefly strike at; and which being upon him ground, a man may conveniently tread upon, and crush it to pieces. In the devil this notes his power and authority over men; the strength whereof consists in death, which Christ, the blessed Seed of the woman, overthroweth by taking away the sting of death, which is sin , 1Co_15:55-56;

and destroying him that had the power of death , that is, the devil, Heb_2:14.

The heel is the part which is most within the serpent's reach, and wherewith it was bruised, and thereby provoked to fix his venomous teeth there; but a part remote from the head and heart, and therefore its wounds, though painful, are not deadly, nor dangerous, if they be observed in time. If it be applied to the Seed of the woman, Christ, his heel may note either his humanity, whereby he trod upon the earth, which indeed the devil, by God's permission, and the hands of wicked men, did bruise and kill; or his saints and members upon the earth, whom the devil doth in diverse manners bruise, and vex, and afflict, while he cannot reach their Head, Christ, in heaven, nor those of his members who are or shall be advanced thither.

I will greatly multiply, or certainly, as the repetition of the same word implies.

And thy conception, in diverse pains and infirmities peculiar to thy sex; i.e. Thou shalt have many, and those oftentimes, false and fruitless conceptions, and abortive births; and whereas thou mightest commonly have had many children at one conception, as some few women yet have, now thou shalt ordinarily undergo all the troubles and pains of conception, breeding, and birth, for every child which thou hast. Or, thy sorrows and thy conception, by a figure called hendiaduo, are put for thy sorrows in conception, or rather in child-bearing, which the Hebrew word here used signifies, Gen_16:4, Jdg_13:3. Aristotle, in his Histor. Animal. 7, 9, observes, that women bring forth young with more pain than any other creatures.

Bring forth children, or bear, for the word notes all the pains and troubles which women have, both in the time of child-bearing, and in the act of bringing forth.

Sons, and daughters too, both being comprehended in the Hebrew word Sons, as Exo_22:24 Psa_128:6.

Thy desire shall be to thy husband; thy desires shall be referred or submitted to thy husband's will and pleasure to grant or deny them, as he sees fit. Which sense is confirmed from Gen_4:7, where the same phrase is used in the same sense. And this punishment was both very proper for her that committed so great an error, as the eating of the forbidden fruit was, in compliance with her own desire, without asking her husband's advice or consent, as in all reason she should have done in so weighty and doubtful a matter; and very grievous to her, because women's affections use to be vehement, and it is irksome to them to have them restrained or denied. Seeing, for want of thy husband's rule and conduct, thou wast seduced by the serpent, and didst abuse that power I gave thee together with thy husband to draw him to sin, thou shalt now be brought down to a lower degree, for he shall rule thee; not with that sweet and gentle hand which he formerly used, as a guide and counsellor only, but by a higher and harder hand, as a lord and governor, to whom I have now given a greater power and authority over thee than he had before, (which through thy pride and corruption will be far more uneasy unto thee than his former empire was), and who will usurp a further power than I have given him, and will, by my permission, for thy punishment, rule thee many times with rigour, tyranny, and cruelty, which thou wilt groan under, but shalt not be able to deliver thyself from it. See 1Co_14:34 1Ti_2:11-12 1Pe_3:6.

Hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, i.e. obeyed the word and counsel, contrary to my express command.

Cursed is the ground, which shall now yield both fewer and worse fruits, and those too with more trouble of men's minds, and labour of their bodies;

for thy sake, i.e. because of thy sin; or, to thy use; or, as far as concerns thee.

In sorrow; or, with toil, or, grief.

Genesis 3:18

Thorns also and thistles, and other unuseful and hurtful plants, synecdochically contained under these, shall it bring forth to thee, of its own accord, not to thy benefit, but to thy grief and punishment; and thou shalt eat the herb of the field, instead of those generous and delicious fruits of Paradise, which because thou didst despise, thou shalt no more taste of. See Gen_1:29.

Genesis 3:19

In the sweat of thy face, i.e. of thy body: he mentions the face, because there the sweat appears first and most. Or, with labour of body or brain, Ecc_1:13, and vexation of mind, shalt thou get thy food and livelihood:

bread being put for all nourishment, as Gen_18:5, Gen_28:20.

Dust thou art, as to the constitution and original of thy body. See Gen_18:27 Job_1:21 Psa_103:14. Though upon thy obedience I would have preserved thy body no less than thy soul from all mortality; yet now, having sinned, thou shalt return unto dust in thy body, whilst the immortal spirit shall return unto God who gave it, Ecc_12:7. Thus thy end shall be as base as thy beginning.

Genesis 3:20

The word signifies either a living, or, the giver or preserver of life. Though for her sin justly sentenced to a present death, yet by God's infinite mercy, and by virtue of the promised Seed, she was both continued in life herself, and was made the mother of all living men and women that should be after her upon the earth; who though in and with their mother they were condemned to speedy death, yet shall be brought forth into the state and land of the living, and into the hopes of a blessed and eternal life by the Redeemer, whose mother or progenitor she was.

Genesis 3:21

The Lord God, either by his own word, or by the ministry of angels, made coats of skins, of beasts slain either for sacrifice to God, or for the use of man, their lord and owner;

and clothed them, partly to defend them from excessive heats and colds, or other injuries of the air, to which they were now exposed; partly to mind them of their sin, which made their nakedness, which before was innocent and honourable, now to be an occasion of sin and shame, and therefore to need covering; and partly to show his care even of fallen man, and to encourage his hopes of God's mercy through the blessed Seed, and thereby to invite him to repentance.

The Lord God said, either within himself, or to the other persons of the Godhead, Adam and Eve both are become such according to the devil's promise, and their own expectation. This is a holy irony, or sarcasm, like those, 1Ki_18:27 Ecc_11:9: q.d. Behold! O all ye angels, and all the future generations of men, how the first man hath overreached and conquered us, and got the Divinity which he affected; and how happy he hath made himself by his rebellion! But this bitter scorn God uttereth not to insult over man's misery, but to convince him of his sin, folly, danger, and calamity, and to oblige him both to a diligent seeking after, and a greedy embracing the remedy of the promised Seed which God offered him, and to a greater watchfulness over himself, and respect to all God's commands for the time to come.

As one of us, i.e. as one of the Divine persons, of infinite wisdom and capacity. Here is an evident proof of a plurality of persons in the Godhead; compare Gen_1:26, and Gen_11:7. If it be said, God speaks this of himself and the angels; besides that as yet not one word hath been spoken concerning the angels, it is an absurd and unreasonable conceit that the great God should level himself with the angels, and give them a kind of equality with himself, as this expression intimates. To know all things, both good and evil.

Lest he put forth his hand: the speech is defective, and to be supplied thus, or some such way. But now care must be taken, or man must be banished hence, lest he take also of the tree of life, as he did take of the tree of knowledge, and thereby profane that sacrament of eternal life, and fondly persuade himself that he shall live for ever. This is another scoff or irony, whereby God upbraideth man's presumption, and those vain hopes wherewith he did still feed himself.

Genesis 3:23

For prevention thereof, the Lord God sent him forth, or expelled him with shame and violence, and so as never to restore him thither; for it is the same word which is used concerning divorced wives.

To till, to wit, with toil and sweat, as was threatened, Gen_3:17, the ground without Paradise; for he was made without Paradise, and then put into it, as was noted before.

Genesis 3:24

The east of the garden, where the entrance into it was, the other sides of it being enclosed or secured by God to preserve it from the entrance and annoyance of wild beasts. Or, before the garden, i.e. near to the garden; before any man could come at the garden any way.

Cherubims, i.e. angels, so called from their exquisite knowledge, and therefore fitly here used for the punishment of man, who sinned by affecting Divine knowledge.

And a flaming sword in the cherubims' hands, as it was upon other occasions, Num_22:23 Jos_5:13 1Ch_21:16, 1Ch_21:27. And this was either a material sword, bright, and being brandished, shining and glittering like a flame of fire; or flaming fire, in the shape of a sword. Or, flaming swords, because there were divers cherubims, and each of them had a sword; the singular number for the plural. Or, a two-edged sword , which turned every way, was brandished and nimbly whirled about by the cherubims; which posture was fittest for the present service, to keep the way that leads to Paradise, and so to the tree of life, that man might be deterred and kept from coming thither.

Genesis 4:1

This modest expression is used both in Scripture and other authors, to signify the conjugal act or carnal knowledge. So Gen_19:8, Gen_24:16, Num_31:17 Mat_1:25 Luk_1:34.

Cain, whose name signifies a possession. A man, a male child, as Gen_7:2, which was most welcome.

From the Lord; or, by or with the Lord, i.e. by virtue of his first blessing, Gen_1:28, and special favour. Or, a man the Lord, as the words properly signify: q.d. God-man, or the Messiah, hoping that this was the promised Seed.

Genesis 4:2

Abel signifies vanity, a vain, mortal, miserable man, whereas she thought Cain to be more than an ordinary man; or this name might prophetically design his miserable life, and untimely and unnatural death. To till the ground was esteemed a more honourable calling than that of a shepherd, and therefore either chosen by the elder brother, or allotted to him by his father.

Genesis 4:3

Either,

1. In general, at the return of the set time then appointed, and used for the solemn service of God. Or,
2. At the end of the year, when there might be now, as there was afterward among the Jews, more solemn worship and sacrifices; the word days being often put for a year, as Lev_25:29 1Sa_1:3, 1Sa_27:7. Or,
3. More probably at the end of the days of the week, or upon the seventh and last day of the week, Saturday, which then was the sabbath day, which before this time was blessed and sanctified, Gen_2:3.

Cain brought an offering, either to the place appointed for the solemn worship of God, or to his father, who at that time was both king, and prophet, and priest. Or brought, i.e. offered.

Genesis 4:4

The firstlings; either,

1. The first-born, which God reserved to himself, both at this time, and afterwards by an express law, Exo_13:2 Num_3:13. Or,
2. The choicest and most eminent of the flock; for the best of any kind are oft called first-born, as Job_18:13 Jer_31:19 Heb_12:23.

The fat thereof was either,

1. Properly, the fat being properly now required by God, as afterwards was expressed, Exo_29:13, Exo_29:22, Lev_3:3. Or,
2. The best of them, as the word fat is often used, as Gen_45:18, Gen_49:20, Num_18:12 Neh_8:10 Psa_147:14.

The Lord had respect, or, looked to him with a gracious eye, kindly accepted and owned him and his sacrifice, and testified this { Heb_11:4} to Cain and all there present, either by express word, or by some visible sign; probably by consuming his sacrifice by fire from heaven, as the fathers generally think; whereby also God did afterwards frequently signify, his acceptance of sacrifices, as Lev_9:24, Jdg_6:21, 1Ki_18:38 1Ch_21:26 2Ch_7:1. Unto Abel's person, who was a truly good man; and then to his sacrifice, which was offered with faith in God's mercy and in the promised Mediator, Heb_11:4.

Genesis 4:5

Cain was very wroth; partly with God, who, had cast so public a disgrace upon him, and given the preference to his younger brother; and partly with Abel, because he had received more honour from God, and therefore was likely to have more respect and privilege from his parents than himself.

His countenance fell; whereas before it was lifted up and cheerful, now it fell down through sense of guilt, disappointment of his hope, shame and grief, and envy at his brother.

Genesis 4:6

The Lord spoke unto Cain, that he might bring him to repentance, and the knowledge of his sin.

Why is thy countenance fallen? The cause of this dejectedness is not from me, but from thyself.

Genesis 4:7

If thou doest well, or, for the future shalt do well, i.e. repent of thy sin, amend thy life, offer thy offerings with a willing and cheerful mind and honest heart, in faith and love, as Abel did, shalt thou not be accepted? Or, pardoned, received into favour? Or, exalted, and either preserved in or restored unto those rights of the first-born, which thou art conscious to thyself that thou hast forfeited? Or, elevated in thy looks, i.e. would not, or should not, thy countenance have been upright and pleasant, which now is sad and dejected?

Sin is here taken, either,

1. Properly; so the sense is: Sin will be growing upon thee; one sin will bring in another, and that malice and purpose of revenge against thy brother, which now lies hid in the secret chamber of thy mind and heart, lies at the door ready to break forth into the view of the world in open murder. Or,

2. For the punishment of sin, as it is taken Gen_19:15 Lev_5:1 Lev 20:20 Num_18:1 2Ki_7:9 Zec_14:19: so the sense is, If thou wilt go on in sin, and execute thy wicked purpose, which I perceive lies working in thy heart, be sure thy sin will find thee out, as it is said Num_32:23. Thou shalt not long enjoy the fruits of thy wickedness, but a dreadful judgment shall tread upon the heels of thy sin, and lie like a furious mastiff dog at the very door of thy house, to seize upon thee at thy first coming in or going out. For that person or thing which is very near to us, or at hand, is said to be at the doors, Mat_24:33 Jam_5:9.

Unto thee shall be his desire, and thou shalt rule over him.
Those two clauses may relate either,

1. To sin, which may be here spoken of as a person, as it is Rom_7:8-11, &c. So the place may be rendered and expounded thus, The desire of sin is to thee, i.e. to assault, seduce, conquer, and destroy thee; as it is said, Luk_22:31, Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you, & c. Or thus, its desire, objectively, not subjectively taken, i.e. thy desire, intention, or resolution of sinning, that evil motion of thy heart against thy brother, shall be against (as the Hebrew particle el oft signifies) thee, i.e. howsoever at present it pleaseth thee, yet it is really not only against him, but against thyself, and will certainly turn to thy own ruin; but (for so the particle and is commonly taken) if thou be wise, give no place to it, but resist it, do thou rule (for the future tense is oft put imperatively, as in the ten commandments, and it frequently signifies not what a man can or shall do, but his duty or what he ought to do, as is evident from Gen_20:9 Mal_1:6 Luk_3:14) over it, i.e. conquer and subdue it, which is thy duty; or, thou shalt rule over it, i.e. by my grace assisting thy endeavours, thou shalt be enabled to subdue thy evil concupiscences and passions, and so overrule, prevent, or remove those punishments which otherwise sin will infallibly bring upon thee. Or,

2. To Abel, and so the sense is, and (as for thy brother Abel, to whose faith and piety I have given this public and honourable testimony, which thy naughty heart makes an occasion of envy and malice, and intention of murder, that thou mayst not by a mistake be led to the perpetration of so horrid a crime, know that this favour of mine concerns only his spiritual privilege, and the happiness of the life to come, which thou despisest; but it makes no change in civil rights, nor doth it transfer the dominion from thee, whose it is by birth, unto him; nor doth he so understand it; for notwithstanding this) unto thee shall be his desire, subject, i.e. he shall and will nevertheless yield to thee as his superior, and thou, according to thy own heart's desire, shalt rule over him. If it be said the name of Abel is not here mentioned, it may be answered, that this is sufficiently included in the pronouns his and him, and it is not unusual to put those relative pronouns alone, the antecedent being not expressed, but to be gathered either from the foregoing or following words; of which see Poole on "Gen_3:1".

Genesis 4:8

Cain talked with Abel, either,

1. Familiarly and friendly, as he used to do, thereby to make him secure and careless; or by way of expostulation and contention;

in the field, into which Abel was led, either by his own employment, or,

2. By Cain's persuasion; this being a fit place for the execution of his wicked purpose.

Slew him, possibly with stone or club, or with some iron tool belonging to husbandry.

Genesis 4:9

Where is Abel? Not that God was ignorant where he was, but partly to convince him of his sin, and to lead him to repentance, and partly to instruct judges to inquire into causes, and hear the accused speak for themselves, before they pass sentence.

Thy brother, whom nature and near relation obliged thee to love and preserve.

Am I my brother's keeper? Why dost thou inquire of me concerning him who is of age to look to himself? Is he such a stripling that he needs a guardian? Or didst thou ever make me his guardian?

Genesis 4:10

I hear thy words, but what say thy actions? What a hideous crime hast thou committed! In vain dost thou endeavour to hide it or deny it. In the Hebrew it is bloods, either to aggravate the crime, or to show the plenty of the blood split, or to charge him with the murder of all those that might naturally have come out of Abel's loins; which was a far greater crime in the nonage of the world, when the world greatly wanted people.

From the ground, upon which it was spilt by thy bloody hands.

Genesis 4:11

As the earth was cursed for thy father's sake, so now art thou cursed in thy own person;

from the earth, or, in regard of the earth, which shall grudge thee both its fruits and a certain dwelling-place, and which had more humanity to thy brother than thou hadst; for it kindly received and covered that blood which thou didst cruelly and unnaturally shed upon it.

Genesis 4:12

Or, that ground, which doth or shall fall to thy share, besides the first and general curse inflicted upon the whole earth, shall have this peculiar curse added to it, it shall not henceforth yield unto thee her strength, i.e. its virtue and fruit, in such proportion as it hath hitherto done.

A vagabond shalt thou be, banished from thy own land and kindred, and father's house, and from the whole society of the faithful, and wandering hither and thither. Others render the words mourning and trembling; or, trembling and wandering. These two words note both the unquietness and horror of his mind and conscience, and the unsettledness of his habitation and condition, and, as some add, the trembling of his body.

Genesis 4:13

Hebrew, My sin; but sin seems here to be put for punishment, as before, Gen_4:7 Gen_19:15 Lev_5:1 Psa_69:27 Pro_12:21; for Cain was not so sensible of his sin as of the ill effects of it, as himself shows, Gen_4:14.

Genesis 4:14

Consider how severely thou usest me; thou hast driven me out, with public infamy, as the word signifies,

from the face of the earth, or, this earth, my native land, and from thy face, i.e. favour and protection, as the public enemy of mankind, and as one devoted by thee to destruction.

Quest. Whom did Cain fear, when it appears not that there were any but his father and mother?

Answ. So ignorant people conceive; but it is a fond conceit to think that there were no more men than are expressed in this book, where God never intended to give a catalogue of all men, but only of the church, or those who had some relation to or concern with it. Nay, that there were very many thousands of men now in being, is very credible upon these rational grounds and suppositions.

1. That Adam and Eve did, according to God's precept and blessing, Gen_1:26, procreate children presently after the fall, and God's gracious reconciliation to them; and consequently their children did so, when they came to competent age.

2. That those first men and women were endowed by God with extraordinary fruitfulness, and might have two, three, four, or more at a time, (as divers persons long after had), which was then expedient for the replenishing of the world; and the like may be judged of their children during the world's infancy.

3. That this murder was committed but a little before the hundred and thirtieth year of Adam's age, which appears by comparing Gen_4:25 and Gen_5:3. Before which time, how vast and numerous an offspring might have come from Adam, none can be ignorant that can and shall make a rational computation.

Genesis 4:15

Therefore; or, assuredly, as the word signifies, Jer_2:32, Jer_5:2, Zec_11:17; that thou mayst see how I hate murder, and how impartially I shall punish all murderers; and that thou mayst be unhappily free from this fear, that thou mayst live for an example to mankind, for a terror to thyself and others.

Sevenfold, i.e. abundantly; he shall be plagued with many and grievous punishments, as the phrase is used, Lev_26:28 Psa_12:7, Psa_79:12, and in many other places.

A mark upon Cain. What this was, whether a trembling of his body, or a ghastliness of his countenance, or what other visible token of the Divine displeasure, God hath not revealed, nor doth it concern us to know.

Genesis 4:16

i.e. He was banished from the place of God's special presence and habitation, from the society of his father, and of the only church which God had upon earth;

and dwelt in the land of Nod, in the land which was afterwards called Nod, from Cain's unsettled condition, because he continued wandering hither and thither in it.

Cain knew his wife; of which phrase see Poole on "Gen_4:1".

He built a city; partly to divert his troubled mind with business and pleasure, and partly for his own security against the enemies and evils which his guilty conscience made him fear, notwithstanding the assurance which God had given him. And this he did as soon as he was in capacity for it, either by the increase of his own posterity, or by the accession of other degenerate sons of Adam to him, who either being banished, or having departed from the church, willingly associated themselves with their brethren in iniquity.

After the name of his son, Enoch; not after his own name, which he knew to be infamous and hateful.

Genesis 4:19

Lamech, the wicked branch of that cursed root of Cain, took unto him two wives, against God's first institution, Gen_2:24 Mal_2:15, and without God's leave.

Genesis 4:20

He taught shepherds to dwell in tents, and to remove them from place to place, for conveniency of pasture. The first authors or inventors of any thing are commonly called its fathers. And he was the inventor of the art of keeping and managing cattle.

Genesis 4:21

Or, the lovely instrument; but what kind of instrument this was, even the Jews do not understand. The meaning is, he was the inventor of music and musical instruments.

Genesis 4:22

Tubal-cain, whom (as the learned conceive, and the agreement of the name and function makes probable) the heathens worshipped by the name of Vulcan, the god of smiths; and his sister Naamah, by the name of Venus. He first taught men how to make arms, and other instruments of iron.

Naamah; so called from her beauty, which her name signifies.

Genesis 4:23

Adah and Zillah, observing his fierceness and cruelty, feared that the vengeance of God or men would fall upon him, and upon them for his sake.

Be it so that I have slain a man, and that a young man, why do you concern yourselves in it? It is

wounding and hurt, not to yours; I must suffer for it, not you. Some take this to be a sorrowful confession of his bloody crime: q.d. I have murdered a man, to my wounding, &c. i.e. to my utter ruin, or to the wounding and grief of my heart and conscience. But this seems not to agree either with the quality of Cain's family, or with the temper of Lamech's person, or with the scope of the Holy Ghost in this place; which is to describe, not the virtues, but the crimes of that wicked race. According to the marginal translation, the sense may be this, Fear not for me; for if any man, though in his youth and strength, should assault me, and give me the first wound, he should pay dearly for it; and though I were wounded and weakened, the remainders of my strength would be sufficient to give him his death's wound. The words also may be otherwise rendered; the particle chi being taken interrogatively, as it is Isa_29:6, Isa_36:19, and elsewhere: Have I slain a man to my wounding, and or, or a young man to my hurt? i.e. that thereby I should deserve such a mortal wound or hurt to be inflicted upon me by way of retaliation? You have therefore no cause of fear, either for my sake or for your own.

If the slaughter of Cain shall be punished in him that shall kill him, whosoever he be, my death shall be much more certainly and severely revenged by God upon any man that shall murder me. These words may be either,

1. A profane scoff: q.d. Since Cain, my father and pattern in murder, was so far from being punished by the hand of God, that he had a special protection from him that no man should dare to touch him, I (whose murder is not so heinous as his was) shall not fare worse than he, and therefore have no reason to fear either God or men. Or,

2. An argument or ground of his security: q.d. I am not only secured by my own puissance, but by God's providence; which certainly will be more watchful over me, who have not committed any such horrid crime, than over him that killed his own innocent brother.

Genesis 4:25

She gave the name, but not without Adam's consent, Gen_5:3. She spoke by Divine inspiration.

Note that the word

seed is used of one single person here, and Gen_21:13, Gen_38:8; which confirms the apostle's argument, Gal_3:16.

Instead of Abel; to succeed his father Adam, as Abel should have done in the priesthood, and administration and care of holy things in the church of God.

Genesis 4:26

Enos properly signifies a miserable man, to note the great wickedness and wretchedness of that generation, which the Hebrew writers generally observe.

To call upon the name of the Lord; to pray unto God, to worship God in a more public and solemn manner; praying being here put for the whole worship of God, as Gen_12:8, Gen_26:25, and in many other places. According to the marginal version, the sense is this: Then when the world was universally corrupt, and had forsaken God and his service, good men grew more valiant and zealous for God, and did more publicly and avowedly own God, and began to distinguish and separate themselves from the ungodly world, and to call themselves and one another by the name of God, i.e. the sons, servants, or worshippers of God as they are expressly called; and that, as it seems, upon this occasion, Gen_6:2. And in this sense this phrase is elsewhere taken, as Isa_43:7, Isa_44:5, Isa_65:1. Some render the place thus, Then began men to profane the name, i.e. the worship, of the Lord, by idolatry or superstition. But this seems neither to agree with the Hebrew phrase, nor to suit with this place, where he speaks of the posterity of Seth; who were the holy seed, and the only church of God then in the world.

This is the book, i.e. the list or catalogue, as this word is taken, Neh_7:5 Mat_1:1, as it is also put for any short writing, as for a bill of divorce, as Deu_24:1-2.

The generations of Adam, i.e. his posterity begotten by him; the word being passively used. But he doth not here give a complete list of all Adam's children, but only of his godly seed, which preserved true religion and the worship of God from Adam to the Flood, and from whose loins Christ came, Luk_3:1-38.

God created man. This is here repeated to note the different way of the production of Adam, and of his posterity; his was by creation from God, theirs by generation from their parents. See Gen_1:26.

Genesis 5:2

See Gen_1:26 Mat_19:4 Mar_10:6. He blessed them with power to propagate their kind, and with other blessings. See Gen_1:28.

Called their name Adam; which name is given both to every man, as Gen_9:6 Psa_49:20, and to the first man, as Gen_2:23, and to the whole kind, both the man and the woman, who are called by one name, to show their intimate union and communion in all things.

Genesis 5:3

Adam lived an hundred and thirty years after he was created, in which time he begat other sons and daughters, as appears from what was said before.

After his image; either,

1. In regard of the natural frame of his body and soul; but this was so evident of itself, that the mention of it had been frivolous. Nor is there any reason why that should be said of Seth, rather than of Cain or Abel. Or,

2. In regard of his corruption, q.d. a weak, sinful, mortal man, like himself; for Adam's image is here plainly opposed to the likeness of God, wherein Adam is said to be created, Gen_5:1. And this is fitly said of Seth to signify, that although he was a worthy and good man, and, Adam excepted, the most eminent person of the whole church of God; yet he, no less than wicked Cain, was begotten and born in sin; and that all the difference which was between him, and consequently between other good men, and the wicked progeny of Cain, was not from the nature which they received from Adam, but from the grace infused into them by God.

Genesis 5:4

Whose names and numbers are here passed over in silence, as not belonging to the genealogy of Christ, nor to the following history.

Genesis 5:5

The long lives of men in ancient times, here noted, are also mentioned by heathen authors; and it was wisely so ordered by God, both for the more plentiful increase of mankind in the first age of the world, and for the more effectual propagation of true religion and other useful knowledge to the world. And many natural reasons might be given why their lives were then longer than afterwards.

Genesis 5:21

Whose name is thought by some learned men to contain a prophecy of the flood, which was to come a thousand years after; for it signifies: He dies, and the dart or arrow of God's vengeance comes; or, He dies, and the sending forth of the waters comes.

i.e. He lived as one whose eye was continually upon God; whose care and constant course and business it was to please God, and to imitate him, and to maintain acquaintance and communion with him; as one devoted to God's service, and wholly governed by his will. He walked not with the men of that wicked age, or as they walked, but being a prophet and preacher, as may be gathered from Jud_1:14-15, with great zeal and courage he protested and preached against their evil practices, and boldly owned God and his ways in the midst of them. Compare Gen_6:6 Jer_12:3 Mic_6:8.

Begat sons and daughter's; hence it is undeniably evident that the state and use of matrimony doth very well agree with the severest course of holiness, and with the office of a prophet or preacher.

i.e. He appeared not any longer upon earth, or amongst mortal men. The same phrase is in Gen_42:36 Jer_31:15.

For God took him out of this sinful and miserable world unto himself, and to his heavenly habitation: see Luk_23:43. And he took either his soul, of which alone this phrase is used, Eze_24:16; or rather both soul and body, as he took Elias, 2Ki_2:11, because he so took him that he did not see death, Heb_11:5.

Genesis 5:27

This was the longest time that any man lived. But it is observable that neither his nor any of the patriarch's lives reached to a thousand years, which number hath some shadow of perfection.

He died but a little before the flood came, being taken away from the evil to come.

Genesis 5:28

Not that wicked Lamech mentioned Gen_4:18-24, for he was of the family of Cain, but this was descended from Seth.

Genesis 5:29

And he called his name Noah, which signifies rest, saying, by the Spirit of prophecy:

This same shall comfort us, concerning the hard labour and manifold troubles to which we are sentenced, Gen_3:19.

And this he did either,

1. By the invention of instruments of husbandry, whereby tillage was made more easy. Or,

2. By removing in some part the curse inflicted upon the earth, and reconciling God unto mankind. Possibly he might suppose that this was the Messiah, or promised Seed, and the Saviour of the undone world; as it was frequent with the ancient fathers, through their earnest desire of the Messiah, to expect him long before he came, and to mistake other persons for him. Or,

3. By preserving a remnant of mankind from that deluge which he by the Spirit foresaw would come, and repeopling the emptied earth with a new generation of men, and by restoring and improving the art of husbandry: see Gen_9:20.

Genesis 5:32

i.e. He began to beget; God in mercy denying him children till that time, that he might not beget them to the destroyer, that he might have no more than should be saved in the ark; or, having before that time begotten others who were now dead, and having the approaching flood in his view, he began again to beget a seminary for the world.

Of these three sons here following, the eldest seems to be

Japheth, Gen_10:21. The second was

Shem, as appears because he was but an hundred years old two years after the flood, Gen_11:11. The youngest

Ham, Gen_9:24. But Shem is first named in order of dignity, as being the progenitor of the church, and of Jesus Christ; and because he and his progeny is the principal subject of this whole history.

Genesis 6:1

Men, i.e. wicked men, the posterity of Cain, as appears from Gen_6:2; who are here called men, and the sons of men, by way of contempt, and of distinction; mere men, such as had only the natures and qualities of corrupt men, without the image of God.

Began to multiply, to wit, more than ordinarily; or more than the sons of God, because they practised polygamy, after the example of their predecessor, the ungodly Lamech, Gen_4:19.

Daughters were born unto them; so doubtless were sons also; but their daughters are here mentioned as one principal occasion of the sin noted in Gen_6:2, and of the following deluge.

The sons of God; either,

1. Persons of greatest eminency for place and power, for such are called gods, and children of the Most High, Psa_82:6; where also they are opposed to men, Gen_6:7, i.e. to meaner men. And the most eminent things in their kinds are attributed to God, as cedars of God, all of God, & c. But it is not probable that the princes and nobles should generally take wives or women of the meaner rank, nor would the marriages of such persons be simply condemned, or at least it would not be mentioned as a crying sin, and a great cause of the deluge. Or rather,

2. The children of Seth and Enos, the professors of the true religion. For,

1. Such, and only such, in the common use of Scripture, are called the sons and children of God, as Deu_14:1, Deu_32:19, Isa_1:2, Isa_45:11, Hos_11:1, Luk_17:27, &c.

2. This title manifestly relates to Gen_4:26, where the same persons are said to be called by the name of the Lord, i.e. to be the sons and servants of God.

3. They are opposed to the daughters of men, the word men being here taken in an ill sense, for such as had nothing in them but the nature of men, which is corrupt and abominable, and were not sons of God, but foreigners and strangers to him, and apostates from him.

4. These unequal matches with persons of a false religion are every where condemned in Scripture as sinful and pernicious, as Gen_26:35 Exo_34:16 1Ki_11:2-3, Ezra 9:12, Neh_13:23, &c.; Mal_2:11 1Co_7:39 2Co_6:14, and therefore are fitly spoken of here as one of the sins which brought the flood upon the ungodly world.

Saw, i.e. gazed upon and observed curiously and lustfully, as the sequel sheweth, the daughters of men, of that ungodly and accursed race of Cain.

They were fair, i.e. beautiful, and set off their beauty with all the allurements of ornaments and carriage; herein using greater liberty than the sons and daughters of God did or durst take, 1Pe_3:3; and therefore were more enticing and prevalent with fleshly-minded men. Either,

1. By force and violence, as the word sometimes signifies. Or rather,

2. By consent; for the sons of God were so few, in comparison of the wicked world, that they durst not take away their daughters by force; which also proves that they did not take them for harlots, but for wives.

They took them wives, possibly more than one for each of them, after the example of those wicked families into which they were matched; of all which they chose, i.e. loved and liked, as the word choosing is taken, Psa_25:12, Psa_119:173, Isa_1:29, Isa_42:1, compared with Mat_12:28. This is noted as the first error, that they did promiscuously choose wives, without any regard to their sobriety and religion, minding only the pleasing of their own fancies and lusts, not the pleasing and serving of their Lord and Maker, nor the obtaining of a godly seed, which was God's end in the institution of marriage, Mal_2:15, and therefore should have been theirs too.

The Lord said; either,

1. To the men of that age by the mouth of Noah; or,
2. Within himself; (see Psa_14:1) he determined.

Strive with man, or, contend, or, debate in or against men, as it hath hitherto done, by inward motions and suggestions in the minds and consciences of wicked men, or by the mouths and ministry of that small remnant of holy men, and particularly of Noah, who protested against and contended with the world of the ungodly, and by their doctrines, admonitions, threatenings, and examples, endeavoured to bring them to repentance: 1Pe_3:19; or dispute with, or concerning, or because of men, i.e. whether I should destroy or save him, as God disputes with or about Ephraim, Hos_11:8.

For that he also, i.e. even the seed of Seth, or the sons of God also, no less than the offspring of Cain; the pronoun being here put for the foregoing noun, and the singular number put for the plural, he, i.e. they, to wit, the sons of God. Both which figures are frequent in the use of Scripture. Or, he, i.e. man, all mankind, the sons of God not excepted, is flesh; not only fleshly in part, or in some actions, but altogether, in regard of soul as well as body, minding nothing but making provision for the flesh to fulfil its lusts, Rom_13:14.

Not having the Spirit, Jud_1:19, nor heeding its good motions, but suppressing and resisting them.

Flesh not only in the condition of their nature, but in the baseness and corruption of their hearts and lives; as the word flesh is commonly used when it is opposed to the Spirit, as Joh_3:6 Rom_7:18, Rom_8:5, Rom_8:7, Gal_5:17.

Yet, though he deserve a speedy destruction, his days, i.e. the time allowed him for repentance, and the prevention of his ruin, shall be an hundred and twenty years. During which time Noah was preaching; and, to assure them of the truth of his doctrine, preparing the ark. See 1Pe_3:20 2Pe_2:5.

Quest. How did God perform this promise, when there were but a hundred years between this time and the flood, by comparing Gen_5:32, with Gen_7:11?

Answ.

1. The increasing wickedness of mankind might justly hasten their ruin, and forfeit the benefit of this indulgence.

2. This promise, though mentioned after that, Gen_5:32, yet seems to have been made twenty years before it; for that verse is added there out of its proper place only to complete the genealogy; and therefore, after this narration, it is repeated here in its due order, Gen_6:10. And such hysteron proterons are frequently noted in Scripture.

Genesis 6:4

Giants; men so called, partly from their high stature, but principally for their great strength and force, whereby they oppressed and tyrannized over others: for this is mentioned as another sin, and cause of the flood; and therefore they seem to be here noted, not for the height of their stature, which is no crime, but for their violence, which also is expressed beneath, Gen_6:11, Gen_6:13.

After that time there arose a new generation or succession of that sort of men, when the sons of God came in, were united and incorporated with them. A modest expression of the conjugal state and act, as Gen_16:2, Gen_35:3, Jdg_15:2.

Which were of old, which were proper to the first ages of the world; for the succeeding generations were generally less in stature and strength of body, and therefore not so famous for personal exploits. Or these words may be thus joined with the following, which were of old, i.e. among the men of that first and wicked world, men of renown, i.e. famous in their generations; when indeed they should have been infamous for the abuse of their stature and strength to tyranny and cruelty.

Genesis 6:5

To the heart the Scripture commonly ascribes all men's actual wickedness, as Psa_41:6 Pro_4:23, Pro_6:14, Pro_6:18, Jer_17:9, Mat_15:19 Rom_3:10, &c.; thereby leading us from acts of sin to the original corruption of nature, as the cause and source of them.

Evil continually, i.e. that man was perpetually either doing or contriving wickedness; that not only his actions were vile, but his principles also; his very soul, yea, the noblest part of it, which might seem most free from the contagion; his mind and thoughts were corrupt and abominable, and so there was no hope of amendment.

Genesis 6:6

Properly God cannot repent, Num_23:19 1Sa_15:11, 1Sa_15:29, because he is unchangeable in his nature and counsels, Mal_3:6 Jam_1:17, and perfectly wise, and constantly happy, and therefore not liable to any grief or disappointment. But this is spoken of God after the manner of man, by a common figure called anthropopathia, whereby also eyes, ears, hands, nose, &c. are ascribed to God; and it signifies an alienation of God's heart and affections from men for their wickedness, whereby God carries himself towards them like one that is truly penitent and grieved, destroying the work of his own hands.

It grieved him at his heart, or, at his very soul, i.e. exceedingly.

Genesis 6:7

Both man and beast; for as the beasts were made for man's use and service, so they are destroyed for man's punishment, and to discover the malignity of sin, and God's deep abhorrency thereof, by destroying those innocent creatures that had been made instrumental to it.

Genesis 6:8

i.e. Obtained mercy and favour; which is noted to show that Noah was so far guilty of the common corruption of human nature, that he needed God's grace and mercy to pardon and preserve him from the common destruction.

Genesis 6:9

The generations of Noah; either,

1. Properly the posterity of Noah, as the word is commonly used, and as it is explained Gen_6:10. So the rest of this verse comes in by way of parenthesis, which is frequent. Or,

2. The events or occurrences which befell Noah and his family, as the word is taken, Gen_37:2 Pro_27:1.

A just man, and perfect. These words are to be taken either,

1. Jointly, q.d. he was righteous, not only in appearance, or in part, but perfectly, in all respects, towards God and men; or sincerely and truly. Or,

2. Distinctly, q.d. he was for his state and condition just before God, which was by faith, Heb_11:7, by which every just man lives, Rom_1:17, and perfect, i.e. upright and unblamable in the course of his life among the men of his age, as it follows;

in his generations. This is spoken either,

1. Diminutively; he was so comparatively to the men that then lived, who were very bad; though otherwise even Noah had many infirmities, so that he also had not been saved but for God's grace and mercy, Gen_6:8. Or,

2. By way of amplification and commendation; he was good in bad times, in spite of all evil counsels or examples. He saith generations, in the plural number, to show that as he lived in two generations, one before the flood, and another after it, so he continued uncorrupted in both of them.

Noah walked with God.

See Poole on "Gen_5:22".

The earth is here put for its inhabitants, as 1Ki_10:24 Eze_14:13.

Before God, or, before the face of God; q.d. in despite and contempt of God, and of his presence and justice. Compare Gen_10:9, and Gen_13:13: q. d. They sinned openly and impudently without shame, boldly and resolutely without any fear of God.

In the latter part of the verse, the earth is put for the place, or the inhabited parts of it. So the same word is twice used in a differing sense in one and the same verse. See the like Mat_8:22.

Violence, or, injustice, fraud, rapine, oppression; for all these this word signifies. Some conceive that these two branches note the universal corruption of mankind, in reference to all their duties.

1. Towards God and his worship, which they corrupted by horrible superstition, and by idolatry, which is called corruption, Exo_32:7 Deu_32:5, Jdg_2:19.

2. Towards men, in the duties of righteousness.

Genesis 6:12

All men, as the word flesh is taken, Psa_78:39 Isa_40:5, and oft elsewhere,

had corrupted his way; either,

1. God's way, his precepts concerning religion and righteousness; or,

2. Their own way or manner of living.

Genesis 6:13

i.e. The time of ruin, as this word is used, Eze_7:2-3, Eze_7:6, Amos 8:2, of all flesh, to all men, as Gen_6:12, though the beasts also were involved in the same destruction, is come, i.e. is approaching, and at the very door, and shall as certainly come as if it were actually come.

Before me, i.e. in my purpose and decree, howsoever vain men flatter themselves with hopes of longer impunity.

Through them, i.e. By their means; so that the earth even groans under them.

With the earth, i.e. with the fruits and beauty, though not the substance of the earth. Or, from the earth, as Gen_6:7; the Hebrew eth being oft put for min or meeth, as Gen_44:4 Deu_34:1 1Ki_8:43, compared with 2Ch_6:33.

Genesis 6:14

An ark; a little ship made in the form of an ark or chest, but probably sloping at the bottom for the convenience of navigation, as it was for another reason sloping at the top.

Gopher wood: this word is but once used in Scripture, and therefore it is diversely rendered by the learned; by some pine, by many cedar, but by others cypress, a tree very proper and usual for ships, and of a firm and durable substance, and much abounding in those parts; all which appears from ancient authors.

With pitch; or rather, with some kind of bitumen, of the same nature and use with pitch, to cement the parts of the ark together, and to preserve it from the injuries of the sun, and water, and worms; but more odoriferous, to correct the unpleasant scent of some of the creatures.

Genesis 6:15

This is the fashion, or, this is the measure, or the manner according to which thou shalt make it; and it was a just and regular proportion, the length being six times more than the breadth, and ten times more than the height. There is no need to understand this of geometrical cubits, which are said to have contained nine ordinary cubits; nor of sacred cubits, which were a hand's breadth longer than the ordinary, Eze_43:13; nor to suppose the stature of men at that time to have been generally larger, and consequently their cubit much longer. For the ordinary cubit consisting of a common foot and a half, is sufficient for the containing of all the kinds of living creatures and their provisions, which was to be put into the ark, as hath been at large demonstrated by learned men. Nor is there any considerable difficulty in the point, but what is made by the ignorance of infidels, and aggravated by their malice against the Holy Scriptures; especially if these things be considered:

1. That the differing kinds of beasts and birds, which unlearned men fancy to be innumerable, are observed by the learned, who have particularly searched into them, and written of them, to be little above three hundred, whereof the far greatest part are but small; and many of these which now are thought to differ in kind, in their first original were but of one sort, though now they be so greatly altered in their shape and qualities, which might easily arise from the diversity of their climate and food, and other circumstances, and from the promiscuous conjunctions of those lawless creatures.

2. That the brute creatures, when they were enclosed in the ark, where they were idle, and constantly under a kind of horror and amazement, would be contented with far less provisions, and those of another sort than they were accustomed to, and such as might lie in less room, as hay, and the fruits of the earth. God also, who altered their natures, and made the savage creatures mild and gentle, might by the same powerful providence moderate their appetites, or, if he pleased, have increased their provision whilst they did eat it, as afterwards Christ did by the loaves. So vain and idle are the cavils of wanton wits concerning the incapacity of the ark for the food of so many beasts.

3. That supposing the ravenous creatures did feed upon flesh, here is also space enough and to spare for a sufficient number of sheep, for their food for a whole year, as upon computation will easily appear; there being not two thousand sheep necessary for them, and the ark containing no less than four hundred and fifty thousand cubits in it. But of this matter more may be seen in my Latin Synopsis.

Genesis 6:16

A window, or a light; or lights, or windows; the singular number being put for the plural, which is most frequent: or it might be one great light or lantern, by which light might be derived and distributed into several rooms.

Shalt thou finish it above, i.e. either,

1. The window, which was to be a cubit square. Or rather,

2. The ark; as appears,

1. From the gender of the Hebrew affix, which is feminine, and therefore agrees with the ark, which in the Hebrew is of the feminine gender, not with the window, which is masculine.

2. From the nature of the thing, the ark requiring a roof, and that sloping, that the rain might slide off from it, and not sink into it; for which end the roof in the middle was to be higher than the ark by a cubit. And as the other parts of the ark were made with exquisite contrivance, so doubtless this was not defective therein.

The highest story was for men and birds; the second for provision for the brute creatures; the lowest for the beasts, under which was the sink of the ark, which most probably was made sloping at the bottom, as all ships and boats are, where serpents and such like creatures might be put, with their proper provisions.

Genesis 6:17

I, even I, which is thus emphatically repeated, to signify that this flood did not proceed from natural causes, but from the immediate hand and judgment of God,

do bring, i.e. will assuredly and speedily bring,

all flesh, i.e. all men, birds, and beasts.

Every thing that is in the earth. This limitation is added to show, that the fishes are not included in the threatened destruction, either because they did not live in the same element wherein men lived and sinned; or because they were not so instrumental in men's sins as the beasts might be; or because man had a greater command over the beasts than over the fishes, and greater service and benefit from them; and therefore the destruction of the former was a greater and more proper punishment to man than the latter.

Either,

1. My promise to preserve thee and thine, both till the flood and in it, notwithstanding all the scoffs and threats of the wicked world against thee all the time of thy preaching and building of the ark.
The word

covenant being here understood, not of a mutual compact or agreement, but of a single and gracious promise, as it is also used Num_18:19, Num_25:12, and in other places. Which promise, though only here mentioned, was doubtless made before, as may easily be gathered, both from these words and some foregoing passages, and from the need which Noah had of such a support and encouragement during all the time of his ministry. Or,

2. My covenant concerning the sending of the promised Seed, and the redemption of mankind by the Messiah, who shall come out of thy loins, and therefore thou shalt be preserved.

Genesis 6:19

Of all flesh two; i.e. either,

1. By couples, or male and female; but this is mentioned as a distinct thing in the close of the verse. Or rather,

2. Two at least of every sort, even of the unclean; but of the clean more, as is noted Gen_7:2.

Genesis 6:20

After their kind, i.e. according to their several kinds. They shall come unto thee of their own accord, by my impulse, or by the conduct of angels, as Gen_2:19.

Genesis 6:21

See Gen_1:29-30.

Genesis 6:22

Both for the matter and the manner of it, although the work of building the ark was laborious, costly, tedious, dangerous, and seemingly foolish and ridiculous; especially when all things continued in the same posture and safety for so many scores of years together; whereby Noah, without doubt, was all that while the song of the drunkards, and the sport of the wits of that age. So that it is not strange that this is mentioned as an heroic act of faith in Noah, Heb_11:7, whereby he surmounted all these difficulties.

Genesis 7:1

When the ark was finished and furnished, and the time of God's patience expired, Gen_6:3, he said unto Noah, Come, i.e. prepare to enter, thou and all thy family; which consisted only of eight persons, 1Pe_3:20, to wit, Noah and his three sons, and their four wives, Gen_6:18. Whereby it appears that each had but one wife, and consequently it is more than probable that polygamy, as it began in the posterity of wicked Cain, Gen_4:19, so it was confined to them, and had not as yet got footing amongst the sons of God. For if ever polygamy had been allowable, it must have been now, for the re-peopling of the perishing world.

For thee have I seen righteous, with the righteousness of faith, as it is explained, Heb_11:7, evidenced by all the fruits of righteousness and true holiness, not only before men, and seemingly, but really, and to my all-seeing eye, in this generation; of which expression, see Poole on "Gen_6:9".

Genesis 7:2

Obj. The distinction of clean and unclean beasts was not before the law.

Answ. Some legal things were prescribed and used before the law, as abstinence from the eating of blood, Gen_9:4, and, among other things, sacrifices, as learned men have sufficiently proved; and consequently the distinction of beasts to be sacrificed was then, in some measure, understood, which afterwards was expressed, Lev_1:1-17, &c. Nor is this a good argument, This was not written before, therefore it was not commanded and practised before, especially concerning a time when no commands of God were written, but only delivered by tradition.

By sevens; either,

1. Seven single, as most think. Or rather,

2. Seven couples, as may be gathered,

1. From the duplication of the word in Hebrew. If it be said seven seven signifies only seven of every kind, then it would have been said concerning the unclean beasts two two, i.e. two of each sort: whereas now there is an apparent difference; there it is said only by two, but here, by sevens, or seven seven, which difference of the phrase suggest a difference in the things. 2. By the following words, the male and his female, which being indifferently applied to the clean and unclean, plainly shows that none of them entered into the ark single, and therefore there was no odd seventh among them, but all went in by couples, which was most convenient in all for the propagation of their kind, and in the clean for other uses also; as for sacrifices to God, if not for the sustentation of men in the ark, and after they came out of it. Which gives us the reason why God would have more of the clean than of the unclean put into the ark, because they were more serviceable both to God and men.

Of clean fowls, which he leaves to be understood out of the foregoing verse, by sevens; and of the unclean, by two; as before of the beasts, to keep seed alive, i.e. the issue or breed of them.

Genesis 7:4

Yet seven days, or, after seven days, the Hebrew Lamed being put for after, as it is Exo_16:1 Psa_19:3 Jer_41:4. Or, within seven days, which time God allowed to the world as a further space of repentance, whereof therefore it is probable Noah gave them notice; and it is not unlikely that many of them who slighted the threatening when it was at one hundred and twenty years distance, now hearing a second threatening, and considering the nearness of their danger, might be more affected and brought to true repentance; who though destroyed in their bodies by the flood for their former and long impenitency, which God would not so far pardon, yet might be saved in their spirits. See 1Pe_4:6. And as some preserved in the ark were damned, so others drowned in the deluge might be eternally saved.

And every living substance, all that hath in it the breath of life, as was said Gen_6:17.

Genesis 7:5

Which was said Gen_6:22, and is here repeated, because this was an eminent instance of his faith and obedience.

Genesis 7:7

Or, for fear of; for fear is ascribed to and commended in Noah, Heb_11:7. Or, from the face of.

Genesis 7:9

They went by the secret impulse of their great Creator and Governor, (see Gen_2:19 Gen_6:20)

two and two; of which see above, Gen_4:20.

Genesis 7:11

In the six hundredth year; either complete, or rather current or begun; otherwise he had lived three hundred and fifty one years after the flood, not three hundred and fifty only, as it is written, Gen_9:29.

In the second month; either,

1. Of that year of Noah's life; or,

2. Of the year. Now as the year among the Hebrews was twofold; the one sacred, for the celebration of feasts, beginning in March, of which see Exo_12:2; the other civil, for the better ordering of men's political or civil affairs, which began in September. Accordingly this second month is thought, by some, to be part of April and part of May, the most pleasant part of the year, when the flood was least expected or feared; by others, part of October and part of November, a little after Noah had gathered the fruits of the earth, and laid them up in the ark. So the flood came in with the winter, and was by degrees dried up by the heat of the following summer. And this opinion seems the more probable, because the most ancient and first beginning of the year was in September; and the other beginning of the year in March was but a later institution among the Jews, with respect to their feasts and sacred affairs only, which are not at all concerned here.

The fountains of the great deep, i.e. of the sea, called the deep, Job_38:16, Job_38:30, Job_41:31, Psa_106:9; and also of that great abyss, or sea of waters, which is contained in the bowels of the earth. For that there are vast quantities of waters there, is implied both here and in other scriptures, as Psa_33:7 2Pe_3:5; and is affirmed by Plato in his Phaedrus, and by Seneca in his Natural Questions, 3.19, and is evident from springs and rivers which have their rise from thence; and some of them have no other place into which they issue themselves, as appears from the Caspian Sea, into which divers rivers do empty themselves, and especially that great river Volga, in such abundance, that it would certainly drown all those parts of the earth, if there were not a vent for them under ground; for other vent above ground out of that great lake or sea they have none. Out of this deep therefore, and out of the sea together, it was very easy for God to bring such a quantity of waters, as might overwhelm the earth without any production of new waters, which yet he with one word could have created. So vain are the cavils of atheistical antiscriturists in this.

The fountains are said to be broken up here, also Psa_74:15, by a metonymy, because the earth and other obstructions were broken up, and so a passage opened for the fountains; as bread is said to be bruised, Isa_28:28, and meal to be ground, Isa_47:2, because the corn, of which the meal and bread were made, was bruised and ground.

The windows of heaven were opened; which some understand of the waters, which, from Gen_1:7, they suppose were placed by God above the visible heavens, and reserved and kept, as it were, in prison for this very purpose; and now the prison-doors were opened, and they let loose and sent down for the destruction of the world. But others more fitly understand it of the clouds, which are called the windows of heaven, Mal_3:10; so 2Ki_7:2, 2Ki_7:19, Psa_78:23, Isa_24:18, which then grew thicker and bigger with waters; nor is there any inconvenience in it, if we say that God created a great quantity of waters for this end, which afterwards he annihilated.

Genesis 7:12

God by this gradual proceeding both awakened to repentance, and gave them space for it.

Genesis 7:13

In the selfsame day on which the flood began by that terrible shower. Heb. In the body, or essence, or strength of the day, as Gen_17:26 Lev_23:14 Jos_10:27: q. d. Not in the dark or twilight, like one ashamed of his action, or afraid of the people, but when it was clear day, or about noon-tide, in the public view of the world.

Genesis 7:14

Every bird. The first word signifies the greater, the second the less sort of birds, as appears from Gen_15:9-10, Lev_14:4, Psa_104:17.

Of every sort; Heb. Of every kind of wing, whether feathered, as it is in most birds, or skinny and gristly, as in bats.

Genesis 7:15

See Poole on "Gen_7:9". i.e. All living creatures forementioned, Gen_7:14.

Genesis 7:16

Or, shut the door after him, or upon him, or for him, i.e. his good and safety, against the fury either of the waters or of the people. This God did in some extraordinary manner.

Genesis 7:17

The flood; or, that flood of waters which was poured down in that shower mentioned Gen_7:12; otherwise the flood was one hundred and fifty days upon the earth, Gen_7:24.

The waters increased, by the accession of more waters from above and beneath.

Genesis 7:18

The waters were increased greatly upon the earth; overthrowing men, and houses, and trees, where possibly they did or thought to secure themselves.

Genesis 7:19

Profane wits pretend this to be impossible, because of the vast height of divers mountains. But,

1. This cannot be thought impossible by any man that believeth a God; to whom it was as easy to bring forth a sufficiency of water, for this end, as to speak a word. And if we acknowledge a miracle of the Divine power and providence here, it is no more than even heathens have confessed in other cases.

2. Peradventure this flood might not be simply universal over the whole earth, but only over all the habitable world, where either men or beasts lived; which was as much as either the meritorious cause of the flood, men's sins, or the end of it, the destruction of all men and beasts, required. And the or that whole heaven may be understood of that which was over all the habitable parts of it. And whereas our modern heathens, that miscall themselves Christians, laugh at the history of this flood upon this and the like occasions, as if it were an idle romance; they may please to note, that their predecessors, the ancient and wiser heathens, have divers of them acknowledged the truth of it, though they also mixed it with their fables, which was neither strange nor unusual for them to do. Lactantius appeals to the heathens of his age concerning it. Nay, there is not only mention of the flood in general, but also of the dove sent out of the ark, in Plutarch, and Berosus, and Abydenus. And the memory of this general flood is preserved to this day among the poor ignorant Indians, who asked the Christians who invaded their land, whether they ever heard of such a thing, and whether another flood was to be expected? And the Chinese writers relate, that but one person, whom they call Puoncuus, with his family, were saved in the flood, and all the rest perished.

Fifteen cubits were sufficient for the destruction of the highest men, or other creatures, though placed upon the highest mountains.

Genesis 7:21

All flesh that moved, i.e. lived; for motion is a sign of life.

Genesis 7:22

Whether men or beasts, &c., all that breathed the same air with man, all that lived in the same element which man by his sins had infected; whereby the fishes are excepted, as living in another element.

See Poole on "Gen_2:7".

Genesis 7:23

This is so often repeated, that it may be more deeply ingrafted into the dull minds and hard hearts of men, to teach men that they ought again and again to consider this dreadful instance of God's justice against sin and incorrigible sinners.

Genesis 7:24

The waters prevailed, i.e. either grew higher and higher, or rather continued to prevail, and did not decrease.

An hundred and fifty days in all, whereof one part was the forty days mentioned Gen_7:17, as appears from Gen_8:4.

Genesis 8:1

God remembered Noah, i.e. he showed by his actions that he minded and cared for him, or pitied and succoured him. God is said to remember his people, when after some delays or suspensions of his favour he returns and shows kindness to them, as Gen_19:29, Gen_30:22, Exo_32:13 Job_14:13 Psa_132:1. As God punished the beasts for man's sin, so now he favours them for man's sake.

God made a wind to pass; a drying or burning wind, like that of Exo_14:21, which had a natural power to dry up the waters; but that was heightened by the assistance of a higher and miraculous operation of God.

Genesis 8:4

In the seventh month, from the beginning, not of the flood, but of the year, as appears by comparing Gen_7:11, and Gen_8:13-14, the ark rested upon one of the mountains of Ararat; by a frequent enallage of the number, as Jud_12:7 Mat_21:5. And by Ararat is here commonly and rightly understood Armenia, as appears both by comparing Isa_37:38 Jer_51:27, and by the testimony of ancient writers, produced by Josephus and others to this purpose; and by the great height of those mountains, and by its nearness to the place where the first men lived; this great vessel not being fitted for sailing to remote places, but only for the receipt and preservation of men and other creatures in it.

Genesis 8:7

He sent forth a raven; a fit messenger for that purpose, because it smells dead carcasses at a great distance, and flies far, and then returneth to its former habitation with something in its bill.

To and fro; Heb. going and returning; i.e. went forth hither and thither; now forward, then backward; sometimes going from the ark, and sometimes returning to the ark, though never entering into it again. Not as if she returned afterwards; the phrase implies that she never returned. And so the word until is often used, as 2Sa_6:23, Michal had no child until the day of her death, i.e. never had a child. See also Psa_110:1 Mat_1:25.

Genesis 8:8

The dove flies lower and longer than the raven, and is more sociable and familiar with man, and more constant to its accustomed dwelling, and more loving and faithful to its mate, and therefore more likely to return with some discovery.

Genesis 8:9

The dove found no rest for the sole of her foot; because the tops of the hills which then appeared were either muddy and dirty, or unobserved by the dove, as not soaring so high; whence the doves are emphatically called the doves of the valleys, Eze_7:16.

He took her, and pulled her in; her former acquaintance with Noah, and her present necessity, making her more tractable.

Genesis 8:11

The dove came in to him in the evening, as the manner of doves is, partly for better accommodation, both for food and lodging, than yet she could meet with abroad; and partly from her love to her mate.

In her mouth was an olive leaf.

Quest. Whence was this leaf, when trees had been so generally overthrown and rooted up by the deluge?

Answ.

1. Many trees might be preserved by an advantageous situation, between the rocks or hills which broke the force of the waters.
2. It is probable that God, by his powerful providence, preserved the plants and trees for future ages; and therefore there is no mention of any of their roots or seeds preserved in the ark.
3. The olive-tree especially will not only stand, but live and flourish under the waters, as Pliny, 1. 13. c. 25, and 16. 20, and Theophrastus, 4. 8, observe. Add, that the word here rendered leaf signifies also a tender branch.

Genesis 8:12

Finding convenient food and resting place upon the earth, and preferring her freedom before her mate: possibly she might lose the sight of the ark, and forget or mistake the way to it.

Genesis 8:13

The words month and day are oftentimes, for brevity sake, omitted by the Hebrews, as being easily understood. Thus the first of the feast, Mat_26:17, is the first day of the feast, Mar_14:12.

Genesis 8:14

Not only from water, as it was Gen_8:13, but from mud and dirt also. So the flood continued ten days more than a year, by comparing this with Gen_7:11.

Genesis 8:16

As Noah expected the command of God for his going into the ark, Gen_7:1-2, so for his coming forth of it.

Genesis 8:17

Quest. How could these creatures which came out of the ark in Asia get thence to America, or to the islands remote from the continent?

Answ. 1. As for America, it is thought by divers learned men, that it is either joined to this continent, or separated from it only by a narrow sea, which divers living creatures could easily swim over.

2. Many living creatures are, and always were, transported by men in their vessels, either for their supply, or profit, or diversion, or other ends, and thence might easily be propagated there.

3. The same God who made all these creatures, and caused them to come first to Adam, and afterwards to Noah, could afterwards both incline and empower them to go whither he pleased, without the advice of these vain men, who will believe nothing of God which themselves either do not see or cannot do.

Genesis 8:20

This is the first altar we read of, but not the first which was built; for the sacrifices which were offered before, Gen_4:3-4, presuppose an altar. Therefore it is no sufficient evidence that such things were not done because they are not said to be done in Scripture; which will be a useful consideration for the understanding of many passages in Scripture hereafter.

The first thing Noah doth, is to pay his debt of justice and gratitude to that God which had so miraculously preserved him, and restored him to his ancient and proper habitation. God expects to be served in the first place. What beasts were clean and what unclean, see Gen_7:2 Lev_11:2, &c.

Genesis 8:21

The Lord smelled a sweet savour, i.e. graciously accepted the person and faith and praise offering of Noah, and was as well pleased therewith as men use to be with a sweet smell;

and the Lord said in his heart, i.e. determined within himself, and expressed so much to Noah. The Hebrew preposition el sometimes signifies in, as Gen_21:6 1Sa_27:1. Others, said to his heart, i.e. spoke to the heart of Noah, who is mentioned, Gen_8:20.

To speak to the heart, in Scripture use, signifies to comfort.

Will not again curse the ground, i.e. the whole earth, with this kind of curse, with another deluge. Otherwise God doth not hereby tie his hands, that he may not either destroy a particular land by a deluge, which hath been done since, or destroy the world by fire when he sees fit, as he hath declared he will do.

For the imagination of man's heart is evil. The reason contained in these words is this: Since all men's hearts are naturally corrupt, and from that filthy spring wicked actions will be continually flowing forth into the world; and consequently, if I should be severe to punish men according to their sins, I should do nothing but send one deluge after another. Or these words may be joined with the former, and the sense may be this: I will not again destroy the earth with a deluge for man's sake, or for man's sin, or because of the imagination, & c., i.e. because his heart is corrupt, and his actions are agreeable to it, which was the cause of the last deluge. Or the particle chi may be rendered although, as it is frequently taken, as Exo_5:11, Exo_13:17, Exo_34:9, Jos_17:13 Psa_25:11, Psa_41:5; and so the sense is plain, I will not again destroy the earth, although the imagination, & c., i.e. although I have just cause to do so. Or, from his very childhood and infancy, as the Chaldee and Greek interpreters translate it.

Neither will I again smite, i.e. kill or destroy, as the word smiting is taken, Exo_21:18 Num_14:12, Num_35:16, Deu_28:22, Deu_28:27, Amos 4:9.

Genesis 8:22

While the earth remaineth, viz. in this estate; for though it seems probable that the substance of the earth will abide for ever, after the dissolution of the world by fire; yet that will be in another manner, and for other purposes, and then there will be no need of

seed-time, or harvest, & c.

Day and night. This distinction in a manner ceased in the ark, the heavens being covered, and all its lights eclipsed by such thick and black clouds, as never were before nor since.

Genesis 9:1

God renewed the old blessing and grant made Gen_1:28, which might seem to be forfeited and made void by man's sin, and by God's judgment consequent upon it.

Genesis 9:2

Before they loved and revered you as lords and friends, now they shall dread you as enemies and tyrants.

Into your hand are they delivered, for your use and service. I restore you in part to that dominion over them which you for your sins have forfeited.

Genesis 9:3

Every moving thing which is wholesome and fit for food, and clean; an exception to be gathered both from the nature of the thing, and from the distinction of clean and unclean beasts, mentioned before and afterwards.

That liveth. This is added to exclude the use of those creatures which either died of themselves, or were killed by wild beasts, which is here forbidden implicitly, and afterwards expressly. See Exo_22:31 Lev_22:8.

Shall be meat for you: it is not a command that we must, but a permission that we may eat of them. A grant possibly given before the flood, but now expressed, either because the former allowance might seem to be forfeited, or because as men now grew more infirm and needed better nourishment, so the earth was grown more feeble by the flood, and its fruits yielded less and worse nourishment.

I have given you all things: understand this with the limitation above-mentioned. The green herbs were given before, Gen_1:29.

Genesis 9:4

With the life thereof, i.e. whilst it lives, or taken from the creature before it be quite dead; which was an ancient practice, and an effect either of luxury or cruelty.

Which is the blood thereof, i.e. which life or soul hath its seat in and its support from the blood, and the spirits contained in it. It is certain blood is the thing which is here principally minded and forbidden, and so the words may be thus translated and understood:

But flesh, i.e. the flesh of living creatures hereby allowed you, with the life thereof, that is to say, with the blood thereof, wherein its life consists; or, flesh whilst it hath in it its life or soul, or, which is all one, its blood, shall you not eat. God thought fit to forbid this, partly that by this respect shown to the blood of beasts it might appear how sacred a thing the blood of man was, and how much God abhorred the sin of murder; and principally because the blood was reserved and consecrated to God, and was the means of atonement for man, (which reason God himself gives, Lev_17:11-12), and did in a special manner represent the blood of Christ, which was to be shed for the redemption of mankind.

And; or, for, as the particle is oft taken; this being the reason of the foregoing prohibition.

Of your lives; or, of your souls, i.e. of your persons; the word soul being oft put for person. Or, your blood, which is for your lives, i.e. which by the spirits it generates is the great preserver and instrument of your lives, and of all your vital actions, and the great bond which ties your souls and bodies together. The sense of the place is: If I am thus careful for the blood of beasts, be assured I will be much more solicitous for the blood of men, when it shall be shed by unjust and violent hands. I will make inquisition for the author of such bloodshed, as I did after Cain, and consequently punish him; for this phrase of requiring implies punishment. See Gen_42:22 Deu_18:19, compared with Act_3:23 Psa_9:13. If magistrates neglect this duty, I myself will avenge it by my own hand.

At the hand of every beast will I require it; not for the punishment of the beast, which being under no law is not capable of sin nor punishment; but for caution to men, for whose use seeing they were made, it is no abuse of them if they be destroyed for man's benefit. Compare Exo_21:28 Lev_20:15.

At the hand of every man's brother. This is added, either,

1. As an aggravation of the crime, because the man slain was the brother of the murderer; all men being made of one blood, Act_17:26. And having one Father, even God, Mal_2:10, and Adam too. Upon which account all men are frequently called one another's brethren, as is manifest from Gen_26:31, Gen_29:4, Lev_19:17, Lev_25:14, Lev_26:37, and from many other places of Scripture. Or.

2. As an assurance of the punishment of the murderer, without any exception of the nearest relation; which, though it makes the sin greater, yet many times is a security against punishment, the murderer easily finding favour and pardon from his parents and dear friends. But the former sense seems the better.

Genesis 9:6

Whoso sheddeth man's blood, wilfully and unwarrantably. For there is a double exception to this law:

1. Of casual murder, expressed Num_35:31 Deu_19:4.

2. Of death inflicted by the hand of the magistrate for crimes deserving it, mentioned in the following words, and elsewhere.

By man, i.e. by the hand of man, namely, the magistrate, Rom_13:4; who is hereby empowered and required, upon pain of my highest displeasure, to inflict this punishment. See Exo_21:12 Lev_24:17 Mat_26:57. Or, for that man, i.e. for that man's sake, whose blood he hath shed, which cries for vengeance.

In the image of God made he man; so that murder is not only an offence against man, but also an injury to God, and a contempt of that image of God which all men are obliged to reverence and maintain, and especially magistrates, who being my vicegerents and servants, are therefore under a particular obligation to punish those who deface and destroy it.

Genesis 9:7

i.e. As for you, I do not repent of that former blessing I gave to your parents, Gen_1:28, but do hereby renew it to you, and your seed after you.

Genesis 9:9

i.e. My promise, for the beasts included in this covenant, Gen_9:10, are not capable of a covenant properly so called. And the word covenant is oft used for a simple promise, as we shall see hereafter.

With your seed, i.e. your posterity, as that word is frequently taken, as Gen_12:7 Exo_28:43, &c.

Genesis 9:10

To wit, which shall hereafter be in the earth. So they are distinguished from those which were now with them.

Genesis 9:11

i.e. A universal deluge; for particular inundations there have been, whereby towns and countries have been overwhelmed with all their inhabitants.

Genesis 9:12

This is the token, i.e. the bow mentioned in Gen_9:13, I appoint to you for a sensible sign and evidence, to assure you that I shall perform this covenant or promise.

Genesis 9:13

I do set my bow; Heb. I have given, i.e. I will from time to time give and place. God calleth it his bow, partly because it was his workmanship, and chiefly because it was his pledge, and the seal of his promise.

In the cloud, a proper seat for it; that they might now fetch an argument of faith from thence, whence before they had matter of just fear; and that which naturally was and is a sign of rain, might by this new appointment of God be turned into an assurance that there should be no such overflowing rain as now had been.

Genesis 9:14

Not always, but very frequently, which is sufficient for this purpose.

Genesis 9:16

i.e. This covenant made with all succeeding generations of men and beasts. This and the like speeches are oft ascribed to God after the manner of men, who being forgetful, need helps for their memory.

Genesis 9:17

The same thing is so oft repeated for the strengthening of the faith of all men, and especially of Noah and his sons, whom the remembrance of that dreadful deluge, which they had experience of, had made exceeding prone to fears of the like for time to come.

Genesis 9:18

Which is here mentioned to make way for the following relation.

Genesis 9:19

A truth which the old heathens were not ignorant of, though they changed the names, and mixed their fables with it; for they tell us that Saturn and his three sons divided the world among themselves. And it is apparent that their Saturn was no other than our Noah, because they tell us he was the common parent and prince of all mankind, also a husbandman and vinedresser, all which Noah was. They say he was born of the sea, because Noah came out of the waters; that he devoured all his children except three, because Noah condemned and foretold the destruction of all the rest of the world.

Genesis 9:20

i.e. Was a husbandman, as he had been before. The verb to begin doth oft abound, and is applied to him that continueth or repeateth an action begun before. Thus Christ is said to begin to cast out, Mar_11:15, and to begin to speak, Luk_12:1; for which in the parallel places he is said only to cast out, Mat_21:12, and to speak, Mat_16:6.

Genesis 9:21

Either through ignorance and inexperience of the nature and strength of that liquor, or through the infirmity of the flesh, which was tempted by its great and, to him, new pleasantness, and by the refreshment he found in it under the weary labours of his body, and the sad thoughts of his mind, for the desolate condition of the world.

He was uncovered, either to relieve himself against the heat of the climate and season, or from his negligence and carelessness; which might easily happen, because men's garments at that time were loose, as they were in the following ages, when breeches were not in common use, and therefore were peculiarly prescribed to the priests, Exo_28:42 Eze_44:18-19.

Genesis 9:22

The grown age of Ham was a great aggravation of this sin.

The father of Canaan: this is here added as a reason of Canaan's curse, Gen_9:25.

The nakedness, i.e. the secret parts, oft so called, as Lev_18:1-30, and elsewhere, and told his two brethren without, who were then without the house or room where their father lay in that posture, whom he invited to that prospect.

Genesis 9:24

Noah awoke from his wine, from his drunkenness, or from his sleep, the effect of it, and knew, either by the information of his sons, or by Divine inspiration, what his younger son had done unto him; or, his little son, either Ham, mentioned Gen_9:22, or Canaan, mentioned in Gen_9:25; by comparing of which places it may be gathered that Canaan first saw it, and told his father Ham of it, and he told it to his brethren. The latter seems here principally intended,

1. Because the curse following is appropriated to him.

2. Because of the title of younger or little son, which seems not to be so properly added if Ham was meant; both because it doth not appear that he was the youngest, for wheresoever these three brethren are mentioned he is always put in the middle place, and because that addition seems to be unnecessary and impertinent to the present business, which if Canaan be intended, is proper and pertinent, by way of distinction, to show that he spake of his grandson, or his son's son.

Object. He calleth him his son.

Answ. Grandchildren are frequently called their grandfather's sons in Scripture, as Gen_29:5 2Sa_19:24 1Ch_1:17.

Genesis 9:25

And he said, not from the passion of revenge, but by Divine inspiration, and the Spirit of prophecy,

Cursed be Canaan; hateful to God, abhorred by men, miserable in his person and posterity.

Quest. Seeing Ham committed the crime, why is the curse inflicted upon his son Canaan?

Answ.

1. When Canaan is mentioned, Ham is not exempted from the curse, but rather more deeply plunged into it, whilst he is pronounced accursed, not only in his person, (which is manifestly supposed by his commission of that sin for which the curse was inflicted), but also in his posterity, which doubtless was a great aggravation of his grief; as on the contrary Joseph is said to be blessed when his children are blessed, Gen_48:15-16.

2. It seems therefore very probable from these words, and the Hebrew doctors and others affirm it, that Canaan did partake with his father in the sin, yea, that he was the first discoverer of his father's shame.

3. Canaan is particularly mentioned by the Spirit of prophecy, in regard of the future extirpation of that people; and this is here remembered for the encouragement of the Israelites, who were now in their expedition against them.

4. This may be an ellipsis, or defect of the word father; for such relative words are oftentimes omitted and understood in Scripture, as Mat_4:21, James of Zebedee, for the son of Zebedee; Joh_19:25, Mary of Cleopas, for the wife of Cleopas; Act_7:16, Emmor of Sychem, for the father of Sychem, as our English translation rightly supplies it from Gen_33:19. Thus Goliath is put for Goliath's brother, as is evident by comparing 2Sa_21:19, with 1Ch_20:5. So here Canaan may be put for the father of Canaan, as the Arabic translation hath it, that is, Ham, as the Seventy here render it. And though Ham had more sons, yet he may be here described by his relation to Canaan, because in him the curse was more fixed and dreadful, reaching to his utter extirpation, whilst the rest of Ham's posterity in after-ages were blessed with the saving knowledge of the gospel.

A servant of servants, i.e. the vilest and worst of servants; as vanity of vanities is the greatest vanity, Ecc_1:2; and great wickedness, Hos_10:15, is in the Hebrew wickedness of wickedness; and King of kings is put for the chief of kings.

Genesis 9:26

Blessed be the Lord God of Shem.

Quest. What is this to Shem? For it is not Shem, but God who is here blessed.

Answ.

1. Shem also is here blessed, and that in the highest degree, because the Lord hath here declared himself to be Shem's God. Now for God to be said to be any man's God, is every where mentioned as the height of blessedness: see Gen_17:7 Psa_144:15 Jer_31:33 Mat_22:32. But the phrase is here justly varied. The curse is fixed upon Ham, because man alone is the author of his own sin, and the cause of his ruin; but because God is the author and fountain of all the good that man either doth or receiveth, therefore the blessing is emphatically given to God, who only doth the work, and of right is to receive all the glory, yet so as it redounds to Shem also. And Shem is here peculiarly mentioned, not Japheth, both for the comfort of the Israelites, whose progenitor he was, and because this blessing was first seated and long continued in Shem's posterity alone, Japheth's posterity being for a long time excluded from it; and because the Lord Christ, who is often called the Lord and God in Scripture, did take flesh from Shem; and so the incarnation of Christ may be here foretold, and Shem highly honoured and blessed in this, that he should be the father of Christ according to the flesh, Rom_9:5.

Answ. 2. This may be a short and abrupt manner of speech, which is frequent in the Hebrew tongue; and it may signify that Shem should be so eminently blessed, that men beholding it should be rapt up into admiration, and break forth into the praises of that God who gave such gifts unto men, and did so great things for Shem.

Answ. 3. The words may be otherwise rendered, either thus, Blessed, O Lord God, let Shem be, i.e. Do thou bless him. So it is only the construct from Elohe, for the absolute Elohim, which is not unusual in Scripture. Or thus, Blessed of the Lord God be Shem, or shall Shem be. So here is only a defect of the Hebrew particle min, which is oft wanting.

Genesis 9:27

God shall enlarge Japheth; or, enlarge to Japheth. Understand here his place, as Gen_26:22 Psa_4:1, or his border; which was very literally made good to him, because he had a very numerous posterity; and by them he possessed the largest part of the world, even all Europe, a great part of Asia, and it is probable America also. Or, God shall persuade Japheth to do what follows, to dwell in Shem's tents, where God dwelleth; and so to be reunited to his brother Shem both in affection and in religion, in both which the Gentiles, the greatest part of whom were Japheth's posterity, were for a long time at an irreconcilable distance from the Jews.

He shall dwell in the tents of Shem, i.e. shall be of the same church with Shem, i.e. of the church, which is called in Scripture the tents or tabernacles of Judah, or of Jacob, or in general of the saints, Zec_12:7 Mal_2:12 Rev_20:9, and here of Shem, in whose posterity the church was first and longest settled. And to dwell with another notes friendly association and communion with him, as when God is said to dwell with men; and when the wolf is said to dwell with the lamb, Isa_11:6. Possibly this may note Japheth's succession into Shem's tents, or coming into their place and stead, or the calling of the Gentiles, together with the rejection of the Jews; as the Reubenites are said to  dwell in the tabernacles of the Hagarite, whom they subdued and expelled, 1Ch_5:10.

Canaan shall be his servant. This was eminently accomplished; for though Shem and Japheth, in their posterity, did successively conquer and rule one over the other, yet none of Ham's posterity did ever bear rule over Japheth; but Ham, though for a time he bore sway in his son Nimrod, yet that dominion soon expired, and the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Grecians, and Romans ruled the world for a succession of many ages, and Ham's people were constantly their servants and subjects.

Genesis 9:28

Which reacheth to the fifty-eighth year of Abraham's age, as the Jews note. And so we have a manifest account of the propagation of religion, from the beginning of the world to this day. Noah received it from his parents, who had the account of it from their first father Adam's own mouth, and transmitted it to Abraham; and its descent from him to the Jews, and by the Jews to others, is sufficiently known. Within this time also Noah saw the building of Babel's tower, the horrid wickedness and idolatry of his children, and the bloody wars which even then arose between some of them.

Genesis 9:29

Here is an omission of that solemn clause used in all the preceding generations, and he begat sons and daughters; which implies that Noah had no more than these three sons, which also appears from Gen_9:19.

Genesis 10:1

1. In the search of these genealogies we must avoid both carelessness, for the reasons now mentioned, and excessive curiosity about every particular person here named, and the people sprung from him; which is neither necessary nor profitable, nor indeed possible now to find out, by reason of the great changes of names, through length of time, loss of ancient records, differences of languages, extinction of families, conquest and destruction of nations, and other causes. It may suffice that divers of them, and those the most eminent, are evident and discernible at this day, as will appear in the progress, by which we may and ought to presume the truth of the rest, whose names are lost in the public confusions of the world in former ages, of whom I shall therefore be silent, and only speak of the principal persons, and that briefly.

2. The same people which were originally seated in one place did oftentimes shift their places, or at least sent forth colonies; and that sometimes into places far distant from their brethren, as appears from the ancient and famous expeditions mentioned in sacred and profane story. So you must not wonder if you meet with the same people in divers countries.

3. In general, the world was divided into three parts, whereof the more eastern parts were allotted to Shem and his issue, the more southern parts to Ham, and the more northern parts of it to Japheth.

Genesis 10:2

Japheth's portion was at first Asia the Less, and afterwards by degrees all Europe, and the northern parts of Asia. This is he so much celebrated among the Greeks by the name of Japetus.

Gomer's posterity are reckoned among the northern people, Eze_38:6, and were seated in the northern parts of the Lesser Asia, and afterwards about Thracia; and from him were called Gomari, and by an easy change Cimbri, or Cimmerii.

Magog was the father of the Scythians, as may be gathered from Eze_38:2-3, Eze_38:15, Eze_39:3, Eze_39:6.

The posterity of

Madai, wheresoever they were first placed, in Macedonia or elsewhere, afterward were fixed in Media, and were called Medes, and in the Hebrew by the name of their father Madai, as appears from 2Ki_17:6 Isa_13:17 Jer_25:25, Jer_51:11, Dan_5:28, Dan_6:8.

From

Javan came the Grecians, who are called by themselves Iaones, or Iones, and in the Hebrew Jevanim, and their country Greece, Javan. See Isa_66:19 Eze_27:13, Eze_27:19, Dan_8:21, Dan_10:20.

Of

Tubal came the Iberi, anciently called Thobeli, a people of Asia, near the Euxine Sea. See Eze_27:3, Eze_32:26, Eze_38:2-3.

Meshech was father of the Moschi, i.e. the Muscovites, or rather, as others think, the Cappadocians, who were anciently called Meschini, and Moschi, and their chief city Maraca.

And

Tiras was father of the Thracians; amongst whom is a river and haven called Athyras, and who worshipped their god Mars under the name of Thuras.

Genesis 10:3

Ashkenaz, whose seed possessed Pontus and Bithynia, and the neighbouring parts, from whom they took the names of the lake and haven called Ascanius, and the sea called Axenus, or Euxinus.

Riphath is called Diphath, 1Ch_1:6; the letters Daleth and Resh being oft interchanged, as we shall see in other instances. His posterity dwelled in or near Pontus and Bithynia, where Mela and Pliny and Solinus place the Riphæi, or Riphaces, and the Paphlagonians, who were anciently called Piphataei.

Togarmah, whose posterity are joined with Gomer's; see Eze_27:14, Eze_38:6; and were, as some think, the Phrygians and Galatians, and of them the Gauls and Germans; or, as others, the Armenians, and of them the Turks.

Genesis 10:4

Elishah, the father of the Grecians properly so called, who have preserved his name and remembrance in the cities Elis and Elisuss, in a tract of ground called Elias, and in the Elysian fields. And from these came the Æolians, a people of the Lesser Asia, where many of the Grecian colonies were seated.

Tarshish was father of the Cilicians, from whom their chief city Tarsus, in Hebrew Tarshish, took its name; see Eze_27:12 Jon_1:3 Act_22:3; and from whom the whole Mediterranean Sea is called Tarshish, because the Cilicians were in a great degree masters of that sea.

Kittim, or, Chittim, the father of the Macedonians, and Italians too, as may be gathered from hence, because both their countries are called by the name of Chittim; Macedonia, /APC 1Ma 1:1 /APC 1Ma 8:5, and Italy, Num_24:24 Dan_11:30. See also Isa_23:1 Jer_2:10. Besides that there are other evidences in profane writers that the Italians came from the Grecians.

Dodanim is called also Rodanim, 1Ch_1:7. See Riphath in. (Gen_10:3) His posterity is uncertain. Most probably he was seated near his brethren in some part of Greece. And the Greeks seem to have worshipped him under the name of Jupiter Dodonaeus, whose famous oracle was in the city Dodona.

The isles of the Gentiles; not isles properly so called; for why should they, having their choice, forsake the continent for islands, and thereby cut off themselves from their brethren? And where had they ships to transport them? But the word isles here and elsewhere signifies all those countries that had the sea between them and Judea, as it doth Isa_11:10-11, Isa_40:15, Jer_2:10, Jer_25:22, Eze_27:3, Zep_2:11. And isles are here put for the inhabitants, as the words earth and land are commonly used. This division of the world among them being a work of great weight, was doubtless managed with great care and consultation, and the advice of their heads and governors, and above all by the wise and special providence of God, which at this time did particularly determine the bounds of their several habitations, as it is recorded Act_17:26.

Every one after his tongue, i.e. according to their several languages, into which they were divided at Babel. By which it appears that this division, though mentioned before, was not executed till after the confusion of languages at Babel.

After their families. Here observe the wise and gracious providence of God mixed with this judgment, that God distributed the languages according to the difference of families and nations, that each several nation, and all the families or branches of that nation, should have one and the same language; whereby both union and love were preserved among themselves, and the several nations were distinguished one from another, which was very fit and necessary for many reasons as that the church of God, which was confined to the Hebrew nation, might neither be mixed with nor infected by the idolatrous nations; and that it might be evident to the world, that the Messias was born of the seed of Abraham according to God's promise, &c.

The posterity of

Ham were disposed into the parts south from Babel, both in Asia and Africa. See 1Ch_4:40 Psa_105:27.

Cush was father both of the Ethiopians and the Arabians; who, as it seems, sent forth a colony from themselves more eastward, even near to India. See Gen_2:13 2Ki_19:9 Job_28:19 Jer_13:23, Jer_46:9.

Mizraim was father of the Egyptians, who are generally known in Scripture by that name.

Of

Phut sprung the Libyans, among whom is the river Put, and the Moors. See Jer_46:9 Eze_27:10, Eze_30:5, Nah_3:9.

Canaan was the cursed parent of that accursed race of the Canaanites, well known in Scripture, Gen_10:15.

Genesis 10:7

Seba; or, Saba, or Sheba, whose seed were the Sabeans in Arabia the Desert; see Psa_72:10 Isa_43:3; and, as some think, the Abyssines in Africa.

Havilah, the father of the inhabitants of the land of Havilah, mentioned Gen_2:11; a land in the most eastern part of Arabia, this being opposed to Shur, a desert near Egypt, as the two remotest bounds of Arabia, Gen_25:18 1Sa_15:7.

Sabtah was father of those people who were seated in the lower part of Arabia the Happy, near the Persian Gulf, who also sent forth a colony into Persia. For in those parts we meet with the Sabateni in Josephus, the Stabaei and Messabathi in Ptolemy and Pliny.

Raamah, from whom descended another people dwelling in the same Arabia. See Eze_27:22.

Sabtechah, the father of another people adjoining to them.

Sheba was father either of that people which inhabited Ethiopia, who were known by that name; see 1Ki 10:1, 1Ki 10:4, Eze 27:22, Mat_12:42 Act_8:27; or rather of another people in Arabia. So the several sons of Cush are conveniently seated one near another. And those Ethiopians in Africa might be a colony either of these, or rather of the posterity of the former Seba.

Dedan; of whose posterity see Eze_27:15, Eze_38:13.

Genesis 10:8

Whom he placeth last of all his sons, because he was to say more of him.

Genesis 10:9

He was a mighty hunter, first of beasts, and by that occasion of men. For when men were few, and lived dispersedly, and wild beasts abounded, and most of all in those parts, by hunting and destroying of those beasts he got much reputation and favour with men, who thereby were secured in their dwellings. In confidence hereof, and having this occasion to gather great companies of the youngest and strongest men together to himself, by their help he established a tyranny and absolute power over men, insnaring, hunting after, and destroying like beasts all those men who opposed his dominion. Tyrants and persecutors are oft in Scripture called fowlers and hunters, as Psa_91:3 Jer_16:16 Lam_3:52, Lam_4:18.

Before the Lord; an aggravation of his crime, that it was done in of God's presence, impudently and in contempt both God, who had so lately manifested his detestation of this sin, by the destruction of the world, amongst other sins, for this very sin of violence, Gen_6:13, and of his great-grandfather Noah, then living and preaching, who probably did admonish him of the wickedness and danger of this practice. Thus he showed that he neither feared God nor revered man, if they withstood him in his usurpation of dominion. It became a proverb, when any man was haughty, and cruel, and tyrannical, and that joined with impudence and obstinacy, That he was another Nimrod.

The beginning of his kingdom, i.e. either his chief and royal city, or the place where his dominion began, and from whence it was extended to other parts.

Babel; which being not built till the confusion of languages, Gen_11:4, showeth that this, though here mentioned upon occasion of the genealogy, was not executed till afterward; it being very usual in Scripture to neglect the order of time in historical relations.

Calneh, called Calno, Isa_10:9; and Canneh, Eze_27:23; and as it is here, Cabneh, Amo_6:2; where it is mentioned amongst the eminent cities.

The land of Shinar, i.e. in Mesopotamia. This clause belongs to all the cities here named; and is added for distinction sake, because there is a Babylon in the land of Egypt, and there might be other cities of the same name with the rest in other countries.

Asshur; a man so called: either,

1. Asshur the son of Shem, who forsook the land, either being forced by or weary of Nimrod's tyranny and impiety, and erected another kingdom. But it is not probable either that Moses would here relate an exploit of a man whose birth is not mentioned till Gen_10:22, or that one single son of Shem would be here disorderly placed among the sons of Ham. Or,

2. Another Asshur of Ham's race. But it seems most likely that Asshur is the name of a place or country, even of Assyria, which in the Hebrew is called Asshur; and that the words should be thus rendered, he, i.e. Nimrod, went forth out of his own land to Asshur, to war against it, and add it to his empire; for to go forth is commonly ascribed to those that go to war or to battle, as Jdg_2:15, Jdg_11:3, 2Sa_11:1 Psa_60:10; and the particle to is here understood as it is 2Sa_6:10, 2Sa_10:2, compared with 1Ch_13:13, 1Ch_19:2.

Nineveh, a famous and vast city near the river Tigris, but so ruined by time, that the learned are not agreed about the place where it was situate.

Of Rehoboth, see Gen_36:37 1Ch_1:48.

Genesis 10:12

Either,

1. Nineveh, which is called a great city, Jon_3:3, Jon_4:11; and indeed was so, being sixty miles in compass. Thus it is a trajection, and the relative is referred to the remoter noun, as sometimes is done, though this seems to be a little forced. Or,

2. Resen; so the meaning is, though this city be much inferior to Nineveh, yet this also, if compared with most others, is a great city.

Genesis 10:13

Of

Ludim and the following names here and Gen_10:14, observe two things:

1. They are not the names of persons, but of people or nations; and the word father is here understood; Ludim, for the father of the people called Ludim, and so the rest.

2. That they are the several nations dwelling in Africa, springing from the Egyptians, which, as they multiplied, went further and further westward and southward from Egypt.

Genesis 10:14

Pathrusim, the inhabitants of Pathros; of which see Isa_11:11 Jer_44:1, Jer_44:15, Eze_29:14.

Out of whom came Philistim: the meaning is, they came out of his loins, or were his offspring, which might be true; though afterwards we find them seated amongst the offspring of Canaan, having driven out the former inhabitants, as was usual in those ancient times.

Object.

The Philistines are elsewhere said to come from Caphtorim: see Jer_47:4.

Answ. Therefore some make a trajection here, which is not unusual; and read the words thus, and Casluhim, and Caphtorim, out of whom me Philistim. But this seems forced, nor is it necessary; for the place may be thus read without any parenthesis, and Casluhim, out of whom came the Philistim and Caphtorim, which two latter were brethren, both the sons of Casluhim; and so might at first dwell together, whence their names are promiscuously used one for another; and the Caphtorims are said to dwell in Azzah, or Gaza, the known seat of the Philistines, Deu_2:23. Afterwards they might be divided, first in their dwellings, then in their affections, and war one against another; and the Caphtorims seem to have subdued and enslaved the Philistines, and carried them into their country, whom therefore God is said to bring and deliver from Caphtor, Amo_9:9; and the Caphtorims either then or afterward might be destroyed and extirpated by the hand of God or men, whence the Philistines, in after-times, are called The remnant of the country of Caphtor, Jer_47:4.

Genesis 10:15

Sidon his first-born, the father of the people, and builder of the city of Sidon, Jos_11:8 Jos 19:28.

Of Heth came the Hittites, Jos_1:4 Jos 9:1, &c.

Genesis 10:16

Of these and the other people following, see Jos_18:22 Jos 18:28
2Ch_13:4 Isa_49:12 Eze_27:8 Eze_27:11 Amo 6:2 Amo 6:14, &c.

Genesis 10:18

Dispersed in the several quarters of the land, who, before they grew so numerous, dwelt together in the same place.

Genesis 10:19

From Sidon, i.e. the city and country of Sidon, on the north-west.

Unto Gaza, on the south-west.

Zeboim, on the south and south-east.

Lasha, on the north-east.

Genesis 10:21

Of all the children of Eber, i.e. of the Hebrews, the only church and people of God when Moses wrote, who are called

Eber, Num_24:24, as here, the children of Eber. And he is here called the father of them peculiarly, though he had other children, because he was their father not only by natural generation, but also in respect of the promise of God, which was conveyed to them through Shem's hands, and of that faith and holiness wherein he was their predecessor and eminent pattern; even as Ham, though he had other sons, is specially called the father of Canaan, Gen_9:22, because his father's curse rested upon him, Gen_10:25.

Object. Eber had many other children here recorded, and therefore in that sense Shem was not the father of all the children of Eber.

Answ. Though Eber had other children, yet none are called in Scripture the children of Eber, or, which is all one, the Hebrews, but Abraham's posterity; even as though Abraham had divers other children, yet the Israelites are in many places peculiarly called the children of Abraham. And the ungodly Jews, when they degenerate from God and godliness, God takes away their name, and denieth them to be Jews, Rom_2:28, and calls them Sodomites, Isa_1:10. And therefore no wonder if Joktan and his posterity, having, as it is probable, forsaken their father's God, and turned idolaters, be here disowned as bastards, and blotted out of the honourable catalogue of the children of Eber: see Rom_9:8.

Japheth alone is here mentioned as his brother, and not Ham, because he was deservedly shut out from Shem's blessing pronounced by Noah, and was accursed of God, whereas Japheth was partaker with Shem, both in the piety exercised towards their father, and the blessing thereupon pronounced; the word brother being often applied to persons alike in condition, disposition, or manners: see Gen_49:5.

The elder. Though the words in Hebrew may seem ambiguous, yet other texts make it probable that Japheth was the elder. For Noah began to beget children in his five hundredth year, Gen_5:32. And Shem was but a hundred years old two years after the flood, Gen_11:10. Therefore he was not the eldest. And Ham is concluded not to be the eldest, from Gen_9:24; of which see Poole "Gen_9:24"; if so, Japheth must be the eldest. And Shem is generally named first, not because he was the first-born, but because he had the privileges of the first-born, and was chief in dignity and authority in the church of God.

Genesis 10:22

Of Elam came the Elamites or Persians: see Gen_14:9 Isa_21:2 Jer_49:34 Dan_8:2 Act_2:9.

Asshur was father of the Assyrians: see Gen_10:11.

Of Arphaxad the Chaldeans, as many conceive; or, as others, the inhabitants of that part of Assyria, from him called Arphaxitis, which Ptolemy corruptly calls Arrapachitis.

Lud was father of the Lydians, a well-known people in Asia the Less.

Of Aram the Syrians, known by the name of Aramites, both in sacred and other authors: compare with this Gen_22:21.

Genesis 10:25

In his days; either,

1. In the time of his birth, whence he was so called. Or,

2. Afterwards in the time of life. So his father gave him this name by the Spirit of prophecy, foreseeing this great event, and the time of it; this being no unusual thing in Scripture, as we shall hereafter see, to give prophetic names to children. And thus there is a longer and more convenient space left for the peopling of the world, and ripening of things for the general dispersion and habitation of the earth.

The earth was divided, first in language, and then in habitations.

Genesis 10:26

From

Almodad and the rest of Joktan 's sons here mentioned, come either,

1. The various nations of India, as most think; or rather,

2. The several people that live in the innermost parts of Arabia, who profess themselves the posterity of Joktan, and have a city near Mecca called Jectan. And the Homerites, one sort of them, are deduced from him by divers writers.

Genesis 10:28

A different person from him Gen_10:7, and the father of another people, having only the same name with him.

Genesis 10:29

Ophir; either that in India, of which see 1Ki_9:28 1Ki 10:11 1Ki 22:48; or the other in Arabia, of which see Job_22:24 Job 28:16. See also Psa_45:9 Isa_13:12.

Havilah, a distinct person from him Gen_10:7.

Genesis 10:30

These places were either,

1. In India, where there are places called by Ptolemy and Pliny, Maesae, and Saparum, and Sabara. Or rather,

2. In Arabia, where there was a noted port called Musa; and near it, and eastward from it, a people called Sapharitae, and a royal city called Saphar; from whence this famous and long mountain doth here receive its name. If it be said Arabia is not east but south from Judea, it may be answered,

1. That Arabia, as it is not east in respect of Egypt, where the Jews long dwelt, and part of it is so to Judea also; so it is not seldom in Scripture reckoned as a part of the east country, as appears from Gen_25:6 Gen 25:18 Jdg 6:3 1Ki_4:30 Job_1:3 Isa_11:14 Jer_49:28. And Tacitus describing Judea, saith: It is bounded on the east by Arabia.

2. That this mountain is said to be easterly, not simply, but in respect of the city Mesha, on the east whereof Ptolemy placeth this mountain, though he call it by another name, Climax; add to this, that Moses speaks of these places as known to the Jews, and therefore not so far distant from them as India, a place wholly unknown to them, and wherewith, as yet, they had no communication. If it be further objected, that if these people had been so near and well known to the Jews, we should have had more mention of them in Scripture; I answer, there is mention of some of them; and for others, it is no wonder if by the following wars among nations, and mixtures and confusions of people, some of them were extirpated, and others lost their names, though not their beings, as oft happened.

Earth is oft put for its inhabitants, as Gen_6:21 1Ch_16:23 Psa_33:8.

Of one speech, which even heathen writers acknowledge; and that probably was the Hebrew tongue.

Genesis 11:2

As they journeyed from the east, i.e. Nimrod and the rest of his confederates of Ham's posterity; not from Armenia, where the ark rested, which was north from Babel, and is called north in Scripture, as Jer_25:9, Jer_25:26, &c.; but from Assyria, into which they had before come from the mountains of Ararat for more convenient habitation. It may be rendered to the east; but that manner of translation is neither usual nor necessary here.

The land of Shinar, where Babel was, Gen_10:10.

Let us make brick, for in that low and fat soil they had no quarries of stones. The heathen writers agree that Babylon's walls were made of brick.

The slime was a kind of clay called bitumen, which, as Pliny testifieth, is liquid and glutinous, and fit to be used in brick buildings, as Strabo, Dion, and others note. And that Babylon was built with this, as is here said, we have the joint and express testimony of Berosus, Ctesias, Dion, Curtius, and many others.

Genesis 11:4

Whose top may reach unto heaven, i.e. a very high tower; a usual hyperbole, both in Scripture, as Deu_1:28 Deu 9:1, and in other authors. This tower and its vast height is noted by Herodotus, Diodorus, and others.

Let us make us a name, i.e. a great name, as the phrase is elsewhere used. Compare also 2Sa_7:9, with 1Ch_17:8. See also Isa_63:12 Isa 63:14 Dan 9:15. They take no care for God's name, and the defence and propagation of the true religion, as duty bound them, but merely out of pride and vain-glory labour to erect an everlasting monument of their wit, and wealth, and magnificence to all posterity.

Their design was not to secure themselves against a flood, which they well knew brick buildings were no fence against; nor would they then have built this tower in a plain, but upon some high mountain; but rather to prevent a total and irrecoverable dispersion. They sought therefore to bind themselves together in one glorious empire, and to make this glorious city the capital seat of it, and the place of refuge and resort upon any considerable occasion.

Genesis 11:5

Not by local descent, for he is every where; but by the manifestation of his presence and the effects of his power in that place.

To see the city and the tower, i.e. to know the truth of the fact, thereby setting a pattern for judges to examine causes before they pass sentence; otherwise God saw this in heaven; but in these expressions he condescends to the capacity of men.

The children of men, so called emphatically,

1. For distinction of them from the sons of God, or the race of Shem, who were not guilty of the sin, and therefore did not partake in the curse, the confusion of their language, but retained their ancient tongue uncorrupted for a good while.

2. To note their rashness and folly, who being but weak and silly men, durst oppose themselves to the infinitely wise and powerful God, who did (as they might easily gather both from his words and works) intend to disperse and separate them, that so by degrees they might possess the whole earth, which God had made for that purpose.

Genesis 11:6

The Lord said this in way of holy scorn and derision. Compare Gen_3:22.

Genesis 11:7

Let us, i.e. the blessed Trinity. See Gen_1:26.

Confound their language, by making them forget their former language, and by putting into their minds several languages; not a distinct language into each person, but into each family, or rather into each nation; that thereby they may be disenabled from that mutual commerce which was altogether necessary for the carrying on of that work.

Genesis 11:8

Thus they brought upon themselves the very thing they feared, and that more speedily and more mischievously to themselves; for now they were not only divided in place, but in language too, and so were unfitted for those confederacies and correspondences which they mainly designed, and for the mutual comfort and help of one another, which otherwise they might in good measure have enjoyed.

Genesis 11:10

Not all the generations of Shem, as appears both from Gen_11:11, and from the former chapter; but of those who were the seminary of the church, and the progenitors of Christ.

Genesis 11:11

So that he lived almost all the time of Abraham; which was a singular blessing, both to himself, who hereby saw his children of the tenth generation; and to the church of God, which by this means enjoyed the counsel and conduct of so great a patriarch.

Genesis 11:17

So that he was the longest lived of all the patriarchs which were born after the flood.

Genesis 11:24

Nahor was the first patriarch who fell to idolatry.

Genesis 11:26

i.e. Began to beget, as Gen_5:32.

Abram, who is first named in order of dignity, (for which cause Shem is put before Ham and Japheth, and Moses before Aaron), not in order of time, which seems to be this: Haran probably was the eldest, because Nahor married his daughter; Nahor the second; and Abram certainly was the youngest, because Terah, Abram's father, lived two hundred and five years, Gen_11:32, and Abram after his father's death, Act_7:4, went out of Haran, when he was seventy-five years old, Gen 12:4-5; therefore he was not begotten in Terah's seventieth year, when Terah began to beget his sons, as here is said, but in his one hundred and thirtieth year, and so there remains seventy-five years precisely to Abram's departure. And Sarai, Haran's daughter, was but ten years younger than Abram, Gen_17:17; and therefore Haran was Abram's elder brother.

Genesis 11:28

i.e. In the presence and during the life of his father.

Genesis 11:29

Such marriages of uncles and nieces being permitted then, Exo_6:20, (as in the beginning of the world the marriages of brethren and sisters were), though afterwards, the church being very much enlarged, they were severely forbidden, Lev_18:12 Lev 18:14.

Iscah is either Sarai, as the Jews and many others think, or rather another person. For,

1. Why should Moses express Sarai thus darkly and doubtfully? Had he meant her, he would have added after Iscah, this is Sarai, according to his manner in like cases, Gen_14:2 Gen 14:7 Gen 35:6.

2. He elsewhere calleth her, the daughter, not of his brother, as he should have done, had she been Iscah, but of his father, by another mother.

Genesis 11:30

See Gen_16:1-2 Gen 18:11-12.

Genesis 11:31

See Jos_24:2 Neh_9:7 1Ch_1:26. Being informed by his son of the command of God,

Terah did not despise it, because it came to him by the hands of his inferior, but cheerfully obeyeth it; and therefore he is so honourably mentioned as the head and governor of the action.

Terah and Abram went with Lot and Sarai, as their heads and guides.

Haran is called Charran, Act_7:4, and by the Romans Carrae, a place in Mesopotamia strictly so called, in the way to Canaan, and near to it, well known by Crassus' defeat there: see Gen_24:10 Gen 28:10 Gen 29:4.

Dwelt there; or, rested or abode, being detained there for a season; peradventure by Terah's disease, which begun there, for Gen_11:32 tells us of his death.

Genesis 12:1

The Lord had said, to wit, in Ur of the Chaldees, by comparing Gen_11:31, with Act_7:2-4; or, did say, again, i.e. renewed the command in Haran, whilst Abram might possibly linger there, as afterwards Lot did in Sodom, longer than he should. But the former interpretation is more probable, because Moses speaks here of that command of God which came to Abram before he was gone from his father's house, and therefore before he came to Haran. And this command was given to Abram either immediately, or by Shem, then the governor of God's church.

kindred and

From thy father's house; from the family of Nachor, which was now become idolatrous, Gen_31:30 Jos_24:2; and consequently their society was dangerous and pernicious; and therefore God mercifully snatcheth him as a brand out of the fire.

A land that I will show thee; which as yet he nameth not, for the greater trial and exercise of Abram's faith and patience: compare Isa_41:2 Heb_11:8.

Genesis 12:2

I will bless thee with all my blessings, spiritual, temporal, and eternal; (see Deu_7:13 Deu_28:2, &c.; Eph_1:3)

and thou shalt be, both a pattern and instrument of blessedness to others; to thy posterity, who shall be blessed for thy sake; to thy servants and friends, who shall be blessed by thy instruction and help; and to all the world, as it follows.

Genesis 12:3

Those that are friends or enemies to thee shall be the same to me; a marvellous condescension and privilege.

In thee, i.e. in thy Seed, as it is explained Gen_22:18 Gen_26:4 Gen_28:14, i.e. in and through Christ, Act_3:25 Gal_3:9, Gal_3:16, Gal_3:28-29; or, for thee, as the Chaldee hath it, i.e. for thy sake; or, by thee, i.e. by thy means; or, with thee, by comparing this with Gal_3:8-9, i.e. in the same way and manner in which thou art blessed, that is, by a fruitful faith: compare Rom_4:11-12, Rom_4:16.

All families of the earth, i.e. all nations; which is to be limited to the believers of all nations, by the whole current of the Scriptures. All that shall be blessed shall be blessed by this means, and no other way.

Genesis 12:4

Abram departed, first from Ur, and after his father's death, from Haran.

Genesis 12:5

The souls, i.e. the persons, as the word souls is oft used, as Gen_14:21 Gen 17:14 Exo_12:15 Lev_5:1 Num_23:10 Deu_24:7 Mar_3:4, &c.

That they had gotten; Heb. made, i.e. either.

1. Begotten; for though Abram had yet no children, Lot had, and both their servants had children by their fellow servants born in their house, which might well be numbered among Abram's and Lot's persons, because they had an absolute dominion over them. Or,

2. Instructed, i.e. turned from idolatry, and taught in the true religion, as the Chaldee expounds it; for such were most proper for Abram to take along with him out of his father's house in this expedition. Or,

3. Gotten, i.e. procured either by conquest or purchase, or any other lawful and usual way.

Genesis 12:6

Sichem; Heb. Sechem, a place afterwards so called in the mountains of Ephraim, Jos_21:21 Jud_8:31, and here so called by anticipation.

The Canaanite is properly so called; that cursed, cruel, impious, and idolatrous nation: see Zec_14:21. This is added as an aggravation of Abram's faith and obedience, that he durst and did profess the true religion in the midst of such a people, which could not be without great danger both of his estate and life.

Was then in the land, as a settled inhabitant to continue there for a long time; whereas now in Moses's time he was forthwith to be expelled out of it.

Genesis 12:7

The Lord appeared unto Abram, to encourage and comfort him against his wicked neighbours: see Gen_13:15 Gen 15:18 Gen 17:8 Gen 24:7 Deu_34:4.

There built he an altar, a place for sacrifice, and other parts of Divine worship, erected by him both to keep his family in the true religion, and to separate himself and them from that idolatrous neighbourhood.

Genesis 12:8

Beth-el, a known place, which afterwards was called Beth-el, but now Luz, Gen_28:19; a usual prolepsis, or anticipation, as before, Gen_12:6.

On the west; or, on the sea; which is all one, because the sea was on the west part of the land: see Gen_13:14 Gen 28:14 Num_3:23 Deu_3:27.

Hai, or Ai, as it is called, Jos_7:2 Jer_49:3 Isa_10:28.

Genesis 12:9

Removing from place to place, still hoping to meet with better neighbours, and to free himself from that perpetual vexation which he had in beholding their wickedness.

Toward the south, i.e. the southern part of the land of Canaan towards Egypt.

Genesis 12:10

There was a famine in the land, or, in that land of Canaan, a land eminently fruitful, Deu_8:7-8. This was partly to punish that people's sins, Psa_107:34, partly to try Abram's faith.

Genesis 12:11

Quest. How could she be so fair, when she was above sixty years old?

Answ. She was so both comparatively to the Egyptians, and simply in herself, and that might be from divers causes:

1. From the greater vigour of nature in that age of the world.
2. Because her beauty was not diminished by child-bearing.
3. From God's singular providence, ordering it thus for Abram's trial, and for the manifestation of his special providence watching over him and his.

Genesis 12:12

The Egyptians were a very lustful people, which made Abram more cautious.

Genesis 12:13

Say thou art my sister: so she was, either,

1. More generally, as his niece; for nephews and nieces are in Scripture called brethren and sisters, as Gen_13:8. Or rather,
2. Properly, i.e. by the father's side, Gen_20:12. So this expression was true, but ambiguous, and intended to deceive the Egyptians, and therefore unwarrantable. And here Abram, the father of the faithful, elsewhere celebrated for the strength of his faith, betrays his infirmity and distrust of God's providence and promise, and this fact was not without great danger both to himself and Sarai.

Genesis 12:15

The princes also of Pharaoh, i.e. the officers and courtiers; whose great design was to gain their prince's favour by gratifying his lusts.

Pharaoh was a name common to all the kings of Egypt now, and for many ages after.

The woman was taken into Pharaoh's house, i.e. taken and brought, one word for two. So the word take is used Gen_15:9-10 Exo 18:2 Exo 27:20, &c. Not to his bed, but the house of his women, where they were purified and prepared for the king's presence and society, as Est_2:8-9, that in due time she might be his concubine or wife. Thus even the ceremonies of courts serve the providence of God, and give opportunity for working her deliverance.

Genesis 12:16

To wit, by Pharaoh's gift, over and above his own; else it had been impertinent to mention it in this place.

Genesis 12:17

Most probably with some notable distemper of his body, which did both chastise him for and hinder him in the execution of his lust.

His house, i.e. his servants, who being some one way, some another, partners of his sin, are justly made partners in his plagues. And if any were innocent in this matter, they were obnoxious to God for other sins. Besides, as they were punished upon the occasion of Pharaoh's sin, so Pharaoh was punished in their punishments.

Because of Sarai, i.e.

1. For the act of violence towards her; for the word taken, Gen_12:15, implies that it was by constraint, and not with Abram's and with her consent, which it is not probable that either of them would give in that case.

2. For an intention of uncleanness. For God, who is the Searcher and Judge of men's hearts, may justly, and doth often, punish men for their evil purposes. Compare Gen_20:3-4.

Genesis 12:18

How great an injury hast thou done to me in concealing this from me, that she was thy wife!

Ques. How knew Pharaoh this?

Answ.

1. He guessed it from the quality of his plague, which also awakened his conscience.
2. Upon a serious inquiry into the cause of this plague, he understood it either by Divine instinct, as Gen_20:3, or by Sarai's confession, whom doubtless he severely examined about it. And she, being awakened by this warning, durst no longer conceal herself, and thought she might securely make herself known.

Genesis 12:19

I might have taken her to me to wife; though he had another before; polygamy being then commonly practised.

Genesis 12:20

Pharaoh gave them a charge concerning him for his safe conduct whither he pleased.

Genesis 13:1

i.e. Into the southern part of Canaan, from whence he came, Gen_12:9, and which in Scripture is called simply the south, Jos_10:40 Jos_11:16. Otherwise he went rather into the north: but the Scripture being written for the Jews, doth frequently accommodate the names of the quarters of the world to them.

Genesis 13:3

He went on his journey, or rather, according to his journeys, which he took as he came, going in the same road, and resting in the same place, of which he had experience.

Genesis 13:4

Unto the place of the altar, i.e. where the altar was; for the altar itself was either fallen down, as being probably built of earth, as afterwards, Exo_20:24, or overthrown by the wicked Canaanites. He worshipped God by prayer, and preaching to his family, Gen_18:19, and offering sacrifices. See Gen_4:26 Gen_12:8.

Genesis 13:7

The Canaanite, i.e. the Canaanites, as Gen_12:6, the singular number for the plural, as Psa_78:45 Psa 105:33 Psa 105:40.

Dwelt then in the land, i.e. were the lords and owners of it; and therefore Abram and Lot could not take what pastures they pleased, but such as the others left them, which was not sufficient for their conveniency. It may also be added as a reason of Abram's following motion, because that idolatrous people were present, and diligently observed all their contentions and other miscarriages; and would, doubtless, take occasion thence to disparage the true religion. And it must be remembered, that these are the words not of Abram, but of Moses; who, knowing that the Canaanites were then speedily to be turned out of the land, intimates that the case was otherwise in Abram's days, when the Canaanites were possessed, and were likely to continue the possessors and lords of the land.

Genesis 13:8

Abram said unto Lot. The elder, and wiser, and worthier person relinquisheth his own right to his inferior for peace sake, leaving us a noble example for our imitation.

Between me and thee, and between; or, or between, & c., and for or, as Exo_21:17 Psa_8:4, compared with Mat_15:14 Heb_2:6, for there was no strife between Abram and Lot, though he feared it might pass from the feet to the head.

For we be brethren, i.e. both by nature near kinsmen, as the word brother is oft used, and in the faith and religion too, amongst whom contentions are very indecent and scandalous.

Genesis 13:9

Is not the whole land before thee? i.e. open to thy view, and free to choose which part thou pleasest, as thou canst agree with the owners: I give thee full power to choose before me. See a like phrase, Gen_20:15 Gen 34:10 Gen 34:21 Gen 47:6.

Thou wilt take: this and the following supplement are easily gathered both from the words of this and Gen_13:11, and from the nature of the thing. And the Hebrew language being a concise or short language, such supplements are frequently necessary, and very usual. Compare 2Ch_10:11, with 1Ki_12:11 2Sa_23:8, with 1Ch_11:11.

Genesis 13:10

The plain of Jordan, a great plain so called, because there the pleasant river Jordan divided itself into divers little streams or rivulets, which having no visible outlet into the sea, by degrees, and in several places, insinuated themselves into the earth, which made it very fruitful and excellent for Lot's purpose. But this lovely plain was afterwards transformed by Divine vengeance into a filthy lake or dead sea, Gen_19:24.

Even as the garden of the Lord; i.e. either,

1. Like that famous garden of Eden which God himself planted, Gen_2:8. The like comparison we meet with Isa_51:3 Eze_28:13 Eze_31:8. Or,

2. Like some excellent garden; for excellent things are thus expressed, as, the host of God, 1Ch_12:22, i.e. a great host; cedars of God, Psa_80:10.

Like the land of Egypt, a land of eminent fertility by the influence of that great river Nilus, anciently celebrated as the granary of other countries. See Eze_31:1-18.

Unto Zoar, i.e. to Bela, Gen_14:2, afterwards called Zoar, Gen_19:22, and here so called by a prolepsis. But these words are not to be joined with the words immediately going before, as if Egypt was commended for its fertility in that part of it from which men go to Zoar, but with the more remote words, and the sense is, as the words of the text are transplaced and rendered by some, that the plain of Jordan was (before the Lord destroyed it and its cities Sodom and Gomorrah) watered every where, even to Zoar; or, even until thou comest, i.e. till a man come, to Zoar, i.e. all the way which leads from the place where Abram then was to Zoar. And such transpositions are not unusual, as we shall see hereafter.

Genesis 13:11

Lot journeyed east; Heb. from the east, or eastward, as the Hebrew particle min is sometimes used: see Gen_2:8 2Sa_2:2, compared with 1Ch_13:6.

Genesis 13:13

Eminent, noted, and impudent sinners; see Gen_18:20 Eze_16:49; which is here added as a secret reproof to Lot, who was either careless in his inquiry into the dispositions and manners of those among whom he intended to fix his abode, which for many reasons he should have searched out; or he was willing to expose himself to all the hazards which he might incur by their neighbourhood and familiarity, for the sweetness and fertility of the soil; an error which is frequently committed by men in the choice of their habitations, and which oft costs them dear, as it did Lot in the following story.

Genesis 13:14

The Lord said this unto Abram, to comfort him now when he was alone, and in a worse soil than Lot had chosen.

Genesis 13:15

Object. Abram could see but a little part of the land.

Answ.

1. He might now possibly be upon a mountain, from whence he might have a large prospect every way.
2. He gave him all that he saw, but not only that, but also the rest of the land, and therefore he bids him walk through and view the whole land, Gen_13:17.

Quest. How was the land given to Abram, when it is expressly said: He, i.e. God, gave him none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on, Act_7:5.

Answ.

1. God gave Abram the right to it, though not the actual possession of it, until the time that God appointed; as God gave the right of the kingdom to David, but not the possession till Saul's death.
2. God explains himself, To thee and to thy seed, i.e. to thee, that is, to thy seed, and that for thy sake; the particle and being put off for that is, as 1Ch_21:12, compared with 2Sa_24:13 Eph_1:3, and in many other plaecs, as we shall see.

Quest. How was this for ever, when after some hundreds of years they were turned out of it?

Answer.

1. This promise was made to them upon condition of their obedience, which is oft expressed in other places, as Lev_18:26 Deu_4:25-26 Isa 48:18-19.

2. The word olam, rendered for ever, doth not always signify eternity, but a long continuance, as is evident from Gen_17:13 Gen 48:4 Exo_21:6 Psa_132:14, and many other places of Scripture; and in particular, when it is applied to the Jewish rites and privileges, it commonly signifies no more than during the standing of that commonwealth, or until the coming of the Messias; and so it may here be understood.

Genesis 13:18

Mamre was an Amorite of great note, from whom the city Hebron was called Mamre, Gen_23:19, a friend and confederate of Abram, Gen_14:13, by whom it is thought he was brought to the knowledge and worship of the true God.

In Hebron; or, near Hebron; for so the Hebrew Beth is sometimes taken.

Genesis 14:1

i.e. Of a people which came to him out of several nations, (being allured possibly by his fame, or by promises and privileges granted to them), and put themselves under his government. Or Goiim is the name of a certain place or country, so called from the confluence of divers people or nations thither, as Tyrus is called the mart of nations, Isa_23:3, upon the same account.

Genesis 14:2

Once for all, observe that the name of kings is here and elsewhere given by Moses to the chief governors of cities or little provinces. Compare Jos_12:9, &c.

Genesis 14:3

Which now is, though when this battle was fought it was not so.

Genesis 14:4

He was their lord, either,

1. By inheritance, as the issue of Elam, Shem's son, Gen_10:22.

Or,

2. By conquest, having subdued those people in a former war, which Josephus speaks of.

Genesis 14:5

The kings that were with him, i.e. confederate with him for the recovery of his right, expecting the same assistance from him upon the like occasion.

The Rephaims, a fierce and warlike people of Canaan. See Gen_15:20. Or the giants, as this word is taken Deu_2:11.

Ashteroth Karnaim, a place in Basan called Ashteroth, Deu_1:4 Jos_9:10 Jos 13:31. It is surnamed Carnaim, q.d.

Two-horned, like a half moon, either from the situation and form of the place, or from the goddess Diana, or the moon, which usually was painted with two horns, whom they worshipped.

The Emims, a people in Canaan of giant-like stature, Deu_2:10-11.

Shaveh Kiriathaim; Kiriathaim is a noted city in Gilead, and Shaveh may be either the ancient name of that city, or the present name of the country adjoining and belonging to it.

Genesis 14:6

The Horites, the ancient inhabitants of Seir, of whom see Gen_36:20 Deu_2:12. El signifies a plain, and Paran is the name of a known city and mountain. See Num_13:3 Deu_33:2 1Sa_25:1, &c.

Genesis 14:7

Which is Kadesh, i.e. which after that time was called Kadesh, of which see Num_20:1 Num 20:14, &c.

The country of the Amalekites, i.e. which afterwards was possessed by the Amalekites, Gen_36:12. A known figure called prolepsis.

Genesis 14:10

The vale of Siddim was chosen by those five kings for the place of battle, that their adversaries being ignorant of the place might unawares fall into those pits, which they by their knowledge of it thought to escape.

Kings of Sodom and Gomorrah, i.e. their armies; a figurative speech, frequent in Scripture and other authors; for their persons escaped: see Gen_14:17. They either,

1. Fell into the pits which they designed for others; or rather,
2. Were slain, as this word is oft used, as Jos_8:24-25 Jdg 8:10 Jdg 12:6; and here too; for those that fell are here opposed to those that remained.

Genesis 14:12

Lot now suffered for his cohabitation with bad neighbours.

Genesis 14:13

Abram the Hebrew; so called, either,

1. From his great and good predecessor Eber, Gen_10:24 Gen 11:14, in and by whom the primitive language and true religion were preserved; and therefore though Abram had five other progenitors between Eber and him, which were persons of less note, he is rightly denominated from Eber, the Hebrew, because he was the first that revived the memory and the work of Eber, that kept up the same language, and eminently propagated the same true religion. Or,

2. As others think, from his passing over the river Euphrates, from beyond which he came into Canaan.

These were confederate with Abram, i.e. had entered into a league for their mutual defence against common enemies. Whence we learn that it is not simply and universally unlawful to make a league with persons of a false religion.

Genesis 14:14

He armed his trained servants, whom he had disciplined and instructed both in religion and in the military art too, both which were necessary to make them good soldiers, that they might both fight with skill and courage, and also rely upon God, and engage his assistance; which was now especially necessary, when so small a party were to engage against so numerous an army.

Dan is commonly thought to be a town then called Leshem, Jos_19:47, or Laish, Jdg 18:7, and afterwards Dan; see Jdg 18:7 Jdg 18:29; so it is an anticipation. But it may be doubted whether this was a city; or if it were, whether it were not another town called by the same name, which was frequent in those parts. And some think this is not a town, but the very fountain of Dan, whence Jordan had its name.

Genesis 14:15

He divided himself, i.e. his forces into several parties, that coming upon them from several quarters he might strike them with greater terror, whilst they thought his army far more numerous than it was.

Genesis 14:16

He brought back all the goods which the victorious kings had taken from the princes and people mentioned before in this chapter.

Genesis 14:17

So called either upon this occasion of the meeting of divers kings here; or because king Melchizedek either had his habitation, or was much delighted with it, and conversant in it. See 2Sa_18:18.

Genesis 14:18

Quest. Who was this?

Answ.

1. Shem, as the Jews and many others think, who probably was alive at this time, and, no doubt, a great prince. But neither is it probable that Shem should be a king among the cursed race of Ham; nor will this agree with the apostle's description of Melchizedek, Heb_7:3, without father and mother, & c. Whereas Shem's parents, and the beginning and end of his days, are as expressly mentioned by Moses as any other.

2. A Canaanitish king, by the Divine Providence made both a king over men, and priest unto the true God, brought in here in this unusual manner, without any mention of his parents, birth, or death, for this end, that he might be an illustrious type of Christ. Of this matter see more upon Heb_7:3.

King of Salem, i.e. of Jerusalem, called elsewhere Jebus, and Salem, Psa_76:2.

Bread and wine; not for sacrifice to God; for then he had brought forth beasts to be slain, which were the usual and best sacrifices: but partly to show the respect which he bore to Abram, and principally to refresh his weary and hungry army, according to the manner of those times. See Deu_23:3-4 Deu 25:18 Jdg 8:5-6 Jdg 8:15 1Sa_17:17.

He was the priest of the most high God: thus in succeeding ages the same persons were often both kings and priests, as the learned note out of Virgil and other authors. And this clause is here added, as the cause and reason, not for his bringing forth or offering bread and wine, as some would have it, (for that is ascribed to him as a king, as an act of royal munificence), but of the following benediction and decimation. In those times God had his remnant scattered here and there even in the worst places and nations.

Genesis 14:19

And, or therefore, ( as the particle is oft taken, i.e. because he was a priest of God),

he (i.e. Melchizedek )

blessed him, ( Abram,) which was one act of the priestly office. See Poole on "Heb_7:6" and "Heb_7:7". So it is a prayer for him, that God would confirm and increase the blessing which he had given him. Or, blessed is; so it is an acknowledgment of God's blessing conferred upon Abram both formerly, and in this late and great victory. Or, blessed shall be; so it is a prediction concerning his future and further blessedness, whereof this was only an earnest.

Genesis 14:20

Not Melchizedek gave to Abram, as some Jews foolishly understand it; for Abram swears that he would not keep nor take any of the recovered goods of the kings of Sodom, or his brethren, Gen_14:23. But Abram gave to Melchizedek, as appears both from Heb_4:7, and from the nature of the thing, for the tithes confessedly belong to the priest, such as Melchizedek, and not Abram, is here described to be.

All, not of all the recovered goods, but of all the spoils taken from the enemies.

Genesis 14:22

This was the ancient manner of swearing. See Exo_6:8 Num_14:30 Deu_32:40 Eze_20:5,6.

Genesis 14:23

That I will not take; Heb. If I shall take. Understand, God do so and so to me, which is expressed 1Sa_14:44. A defective manner of swearing used amongst the Hebrews, either to maintain the reverence of oaths, and the dread of perjury, seeing they were afraid so much as to mention the curse which they meant; or to show that they were willing to submit to any punishment which God should inflict upon them, without exception, if they violated their oaths.

Even to a shoe-latchet, i.e. any thing, though never so small or mean, lest thou shouldst claim a share with God in the honour due to him, to whose blessing alone I do and I will owe my riches. Or, lest thou shouldst say, Abram is enriched with my spoils; and however he pretended kindness and charity, yet indeed it was his covetousness that put him upon this work.

Genesis 14:24

For as Abram had a right to spoils, so had they, whether they joined with him in the battle, as it is conceived they did, or only abode by the stuff, 1Sa_30:24; and therefore though he might and did give away his own right, he could not give away other men's.

Genesis 15:1

God anciently revealed himself to men two ways; either,

1. When the man was asleep, in a dream; or,
2. In a vision, Num_12:6, when he was awake: and this either,
  1. When he was rapt into an ecstasy, wherein his senses are idle, but his mind is active and elevated to the contemplation and understanding of what God reveals. See Num_12:6-8 Num_24:4 Isa_1:1 Act_10:10-11. Or,
  2. When the thing was manifested by an external representation. So here, God seems to have appeared to Abram in the shape of a man, as he did Gen_18:1-33, as may be gathered from Gen_15:5, Gen_15:10.

Fear not, Abram; neither the return of those enemies whom thou hast smitten and provoked, nor the envy of thy neighbours for this glorious victory, nor for thy own desolate condition. Seeing thou didst trust to my protection, I will be a shield or a protector to thee; and seeing thou didst so honourably and for my sake reject other rewards, taken by thyself, and offered by the king of Sodom, thou shalt be no loser by it; I will abundantly recompense all thy piety to me, and charity to thy afflicted kinsman Lot, and thy liberality towards others: I will bless thee with all sorts of good things, as well as defend thee from all evil; which two things make a man completely happy.

Genesis 15:2

What pleasure can I take in any other gifts, so long as thou dost withhold from me that great and promised gift of that blessed and blessing Seed, in the giving of whom thy honour and the world's happiness is so highly concerned? Gen_12:3.

Seeing I go childless; either,

1. I pass the time of my life, going on and growing in years, and hastening to my long home. Or,

2. I die, i.e. am about to die, or likely to die.

Going is oftentimes put for dying, as 1Ch_17:11, compared with 2Sa_7:12 Job_10:21 Job_14:20 Mat_26:24. What good will the world do me, if I have no heir to possess it? If God lose the glory of his truth in making good his promise, and I lose the comfort of my long hoped-for child, and that such a child the effect of a Divine promise, one out of whose loins he must come, in whom all nations shall be blessed?

The steward of my house; Heb. The son of the care, or government, or management of my house, i.e. he who manageth the affairs of my house. A usual Hebraism, as captives are called children of captivity, Ezr_4:1, and afflicted persons, children of affliction, Pro_31:5. Others read the verse thus,

And the steward of my house, this Eliezer of Damascus, understand, shall be my heir; which words may easily be supplied out of Gen_15:3. And such supplements of a word or short sentence out of a member or verse either foregoing or following, are frequent in Scripture, as Num_24:22 Zec_14:18 Neh_5:2 Hab_2:3 Eph_2:1.

Damascus may be the name either of a man, or of a place so called.

Genesis 15:3

Of such see Gen_14:14 Ecc_2:7. And these are opposed to them that are born of a man's body, Job_19:17 Pro_31:2 Jer_2:14.

Mine heir; either,

1. By nearness of relation, being, as some conceive, descended from Aram the eldest son of Shem. Or,

2. For a recompence of his fidelity: compare Pro_17:2. Or,

3. because he only had the exact knowledge and absolute power of all his master's estate, Gen_24:10, and therefore could easily keep all after his master's death. All which reasons concurring might give occasion for this speech.

Genesis 15:4

i.e. Out of thy own body: see Gen_35:11 2Sa_7:12 2Ch_6:9.

Genesis 15:5

Quest. Seeing the sun was not yet going down, Gen_15:12, how could he see the stars?

Answ.

1. He might see them by representation in a vision, or by a Divine power strengthening his eyes to behold them.

2. It was not necessary he should then actually see them. He bids him make trial when he pleased, if he could number the stars which were now present to his mind, and would shortly be present and visible to his bodily eye. This he was not able to do; for though astronomers have presumed to give us the number of those stars which are distinctly visible to the eye, wherein yet they vary one from another, yet there are other stars innumerable, appear confusedly to the eye, and evidently by the help of glasses.

Genesis 15:6

He believed in the Lord, i.e. he was fully persuaded that God was able to fulfil, and would certainly fulfil, the promise made to him concerning a child, and especially concerning the Messiah, who should come out of his loins by that child, and that both himself and all people should be justified and blessed in and through him.

He counted it to him, or reckoned, or imputed, as this word is translated, Rom_4:10 Rom 4:22, for righteousness, i.e. for a righteous and worthy action, as Psa_106:31; and further, in respect of this action and grace of faith, whereby he relied upon God for the promised Seed, and upon the promised Seed too, he pronounced him a just and righteous person notwithstanding his failings, which even this history acquaints us with, and graciously accepted him as such; which sense is easily gathered from St. Paul's explication and accommodation of this passage, Rom_4:9 Rom 4:18 Rom 4:22.

Genesis 15:8

He asks a sign, not out of distrust of God's promise, for he was strong in faith, Rom_4:20, but for further assurance and confirmation of it. And such an asking of a sign was not an unusual practice with good men, as Jdg 6:37 2Ki_20:8, not are they reprov'd for it; but on the contrary, Ahaz was commanded to ask a sign, and reprov'd for not asking it, Isa_7:1-25.

Genesis 15:9

Take and offer at my command, and for my service, an heifer of three years old, at which time it is perfect in stature and strength, and therefore fittest for God's service. This and the other creatures here following, and sacrifices, are the same which afterwards were prescribed in the Levitical law.

Genesis 15:10

And he, i.e. Abram, who by Divine instinct and precept did all this which here follows, divided them in the midst, into two equal parts. This was done for two reasons.

1. To represent the torn and distracted condition in which his seed was to lie for a season.

2. To ratify God's covenant with Abram and his seed; for this was a rite used in making covenants, as appears both from Scripture, Jer_34:18, and other authors.

Laid each piece one against another, partly to encourage hope, that God would in his time put those parts together, and unite those dry bones, (to which the Israelites are compared, Eze_37:1-28), and clothe them with flesh; and partly that the persons entering into covenant might pass between those parts, and so testify their union and conjunction in one and the same sacrifice.

The birds divided he not, either because there were two birds, and the one was laid against the other, which answered to the division of the larger creatures; or because they belonged not to the ceremony of the covenant, but were for the use of sacrifice, wherein they were to be offered whole, as afterwards was prescribed, Lev_1:15 Lev 1:17.

Genesis 15:11

The fowls came to devour them; whereby is signified, either,

1. The disturbance and distraction which good men are exposed to in the service of God from evil spirits and men; or rather,

2. The great peril of Abram's posterity, who were not only torn in pieces like these sacrifices, but even the remainder of them were likely to be devoured by the Egyptians, whose king is compared to an eagle, the chief of the birds of prey, Eze_17:1-24.

Abram drove them away by the blast of his mouth, as the Hebrew word signifies; representing Abram's conquest over all his enemies by faith and prayer, whereby he engaged God to be the Preserver and Deliverer of his people.

Genesis 15:12

A deep sleep fell upon Abram; partly natural, from his labour in killing and sacrificing those creatures; and partly sent upon him from God, to make way for the following representation. He seemed to be covered with a dreadful darkness, which was either,

1. A token of God's special presence: compare 1Ki_8:12. Or,
2. A signification of the distressed and doleful condition of Abram's seed; for darkness in Scripture is frequently mentioned as an emblem or sign of great misery, as Psa_88:6 Psa 107:14, &c.

Genesis 15:13

In a land that is not theirs, i.e. in Canaan and Egypt; for though Canaan was theirs by promise, to be fulfilled in after-times, yet it was not theirs by actual donation and possession; but they were strangers in it, Gen_17:8 Psa_105:11-12.

Four hundred years, exactly four hundred and five years; but a small sum is commonly neglected in a great number, both in sacred and profane writers. There were four hundred and thirty years between the first promise, or between the renewing and confirming of the promise by the gift of Isaac, and Israel's going out of Egypt, or God's giving of the law, Exo_12:40 Gal_3:17; but part of this time Abraham with his son Isaac lived in much honour and comfort; but after Isaac grew up, the affliction here mentioned began with Isaac in Canaan, and continued to him and his posterity in Egypt till this time was expired.

Genesis 15:14

That nation whom they shall serve, i.e. Egypt, the principal seat of their servitude, and the instrument of their sorest bondage, will I judge, i.e. punish, as that word is used, Psa_51:4 Oba_1:21, and elsewhere.

With great substance; the accomplishment of this, see Exo_3:22
Exo 11:2 Exo 12:35 Exo 12:37.

Genesis 15:15

To thy fathers, i.e. either,

1. Into heaven, where thy godly progenitors are gone; or,

2. Into the state of the dead, where all thy fathers are gone before thee. This may seem more probable, at least in this place, partly, because this or the like phrase is indifferently used concerning good and bad men; see Gen_25:8 Psa_49:19; partly, because this phrase is so expounded, Act_13:36, He, i.e. David, was laid to his fathers, and (for that is ) saw corruption; partly, because some of Abraham's fathers, and particularly Nahor, his grandfather, who lived and died an idolater, cannot with any warrant from Scripture be presumed to be gone to the place of blessedness in their souls. Free from those afflictions which shall come upon thy posterity after thy decease.

Genesis 15:16

In the fourth generation; in the end of the four hundred years mentioned Gen_15:13, a generation being at that time reckoned at one hundred years, or thereabouts. Or, in the fourth generation numbered from their going into Egypt, or from their leaving Canaan; which may possibly be implied by these words, they shall come hither. So Caleb was the fourth from Judah, and Moses the fourth from Levi, and so doubtless many others.

The iniquity of the Amorites, i.e. of the people inhabiting Canaan. And the Amorites, one of those people, Gen_15:21, are here put for all the rest, as Gen_48:22 1Ki_21:26 2Ki_21:2 Amo_2:10, either because they were the greatest and stoutest of all, Amo_2:9, or because Abram dwelt among that people, Gen_13:18 Gen 14:13. All men's sins are kept by God as in a book of remembrance, not one of them is lost; and as God exactly observes the number and measure of men's sins, so he determines within himself how far and how long he will bear with sinful men or nations, and what shall be the period of his patience; and when that comes, their measure is full, and their destruction infallibly comes. See Jer_51:13 Mat_23:32 1Th_2:16.

Genesis 15:17

By which symbol God designed to represent, either,

1. The future state of Abram's seed; the smoking furnace signifying Israel's misery in the iron furnace of Egypt, as it is called, Jer_11:4; and the burning lamp noting their deliverance, or light shining out of darkness. Or,

2. His own presence; for God is called a consuming fire, Heb_12:29; and both smoke and fire are elsewhere mentioned as the signs and means of God's appearance. See Exo_3:2 Exo 19:9 Exo 19:16 Exo 19:18 Exo 20:18. And this sense seems to be favoured by the following words, it being the custom of persons entering into covenant to pass between such pieces as hath been said; and because God hath no body which could visibly do so, therefore he doth it in this type or shadow.

Genesis 15:18

Unto thy seed have I given this land, i.e. decreed and promised in due time to give, which makes it as sure as if it were actually given to them. Or,

I will give; words of the past time being oft put for the future, especially in prophecies.

The river of Egypt; not Nilus, which elsewhere is so called, but a less river, as is sufficiently implied, because this is opposed to the great river here following; but a river called Sihor, which divides Egypt from Canaan. See Num_34:5 Jos_13:3 1Ch_13:5. The accomplishment hereof, see 2Sa_8:3 1Ki_4:21 9:21.

Genesis 15:19

The Kenites are supposed the same with the Midianites, by comparing Exo_3:1, with Jdg 1:16. See also Num_24:21 1Sa_15:6.

The Kenizzites, thought to be the Idumeans, who sprung from Kenaz of Esau's race. But this seems not to agree with Deu_2:5, where God expressly saith to the Israelites concerning the Idumeans,

I will give you none of their lands, & c.

The Kadmonites, i.e. the eastern people, as the word signifies, elsewhere called the Hivites, Jos_9:1, who lived near the Mount Hermon, Jos_11:3, which was in the east part of Canaan. See Psa_89:12.

Genesis 16:1

Genesis 16:2

She reckons the children of her bond-woman (as Hagar was, Gal_4:22) would be accounted her children. See Gen_30:3 Exo_21:4 2Sa_21:8 Est_2:7.

Abram hearkened to the voice of Sarai; supposing that God would accomplish his promise of a seed to come out of his loins by this way; and knowing that Sarai was not yet mentioned in the promise, as the person by whom he should have that seed; and not consulting with God, which he should have done.

Genesis 16:3

i.e. His concubine, or secondary wife. Polygamy, though it was forbidden by God's first institution, Gen_2:24, compared with Mat_19:5, and brought into the world by wicked Lamech, yet it was sometimes practised by the patriarchs, either by God's permission, who could rightly dispense with his own laws when and where he pleased; or by their mistake about the lawfulness of it. As for the present case, it is most evident this action was not the effect of an inordinate lust, but of an earnest desire of having children, and especially of obtaining the blessed and promised Seed.

Genesis 16:4

For barrenness in itself was a reproach, and especially to Sarai, who seemed to be a person rejected by God, as one whom he would not honour with being the mother of that Seed; and Hagar being suddenly made Sarai's partner in the privilege of Abram's bed, and superior to her in respect of that great blessing of child-bearing, it is no wonder if she grew insolent upon it, especially being advanced so highly from so low a condition.

Genesis 16:5

i.e. The injury done to me by Hagar, who thus wickedly requites my kindness to her, be upon thee. i.e. is to be imputed to thee; thou art the cause of it, because thou dost not maintain my reputation, and repress her arrogancy.

The Lord give forth a righteous sentence between us, and deal with each of us according to our guilt or innocency in this matter. Compare 1Sa_24:12 1Sa 24:15.

Genesis 16:6

Thy maid is in thine hand, i.e. subject to thy power and authority, as the phrase is taken, Gen_24:10 Gen 39:4 Gen 39:6 Gen 39:8 Num 31:49. For though she be my concubine, yet she is thy inferior; and therefore if she exalt herself above her measure, I give thee power to exercise thy authority over her. But whether this was not one of Abram's infirmities, to give up his second wife into the hands of the first, may well be questioned. Use whatsoever power God hath given thee over her; for we must not think that Abram gave her power of life and death over her, especially now when she was with child. Therefore here, as often elsewhere, the general words must be limited from the nature of the thing, and from other texts of Scripture, which forbid cruelty even to our servants.

And when Sarai dealt hardly with her, either by imposing labours upon her above her strength, or by grievous stripes which she could not bear, she fled from her face, contrary to God's command, Ecc_10:4, and to the laws of justice, because both her person and the fruit of her body were not her own, but Abram's right in possession.

Genesis 16:7

The Son of God, who oft appeared in man's shape, before he took man's nature, is called an Angel or Messenger, because he was the Angel of the covenant, Mal_3:1, and was sent upon divers messages to men in the Old Testament, and at last was to be sent in the flesh as God's great Ambassador, or Messenger of peace and reconciliation.

Shur, a place near Egypt, Gen_25:18 1Sa_15:7 Exo_15:22, being her native country.

Genesis 16:8

By this title he admonisheth her, that though she was Abram's wife, yet she was Sarai's maid, to whom she owed subjection and service, from which she could not lawfully withdraw herself. Consider with thyself what thou art doing: what a sad exchange thou art making. Thou forsakest not only an excellent master and husband, but also me and my worship, which thou wilt not find in any other family, and so castest thyself out of the true church, and art running headlong into a place of all idolatry and impiety, to thy utter undoing; and this merely through pride and impatience.

Genesis 16:11

Hath heard thy cry in thy affliction.

Genesis 16:12

He will be a wild man; Heb. A wild-ass man, i.e. a man like a wild ass, fierce and untamed, and unsettled in his habitation; or as that creature is, Job_39:5 Job 39:8 Jer 2:24 Hos 8:9, living in deserts and mountains, warlike and violent, exercising himself continually in hunting beasts, and oppressing men. See Gen_21:20. He will provoke and injure all that converse with him, and thereby will multiply his enemies; which is to be understood not only of him, but also of his posterity.

And he shall dwell in the borders of the other sons and kindred of Abram and Isaac, who though they shall be vexed and annoyed with his neighbourhood, yet shall not be able to make him quit his habitation. See Gen_25:18.

Genesis 16:13

Thou God seest me; thou hast been pleased to take notice and care of me, and graciously to manifest thyself unto me.

After him that seeth me, i.e. after that God whose eye is upon me for good. So she chides herself for her neglect of God, and of his providence, and that not only in her master's house, but even here in the wilderness, where her desolate and miserable condition should have made her look after and call upon God for help. Or rather, these are words of admiration: q.d. Have I also here, i.e. in this desolate wilderness, looked after him that seeth me, i.e. seen the face of my gracious God! That God should appear to me in my master's house, where he used to manifest himself, was not strange; but that I should have such a favour here, that God should not only look upon me, but admit me to look upon him, and visibly appear to me after I had run away from him, and from my godly master, this was more than I could hope or expect! Others thus, Have I here seen after him that sees me? i.e. after the vision of him that hath appeared to me? i.e. Do I yet see and live after I have seen God? She wonders at it, because it was then the common opinion that an appearance of God to any person was a forerunner of death. See Gen_32:30 Exo_33:20 Jdg 6:22 Jdg 13:22. And seeing is here put for living, one function of life for life itself, as Exo_24:11 Ecc_11:7-8. But the word seeing put by itself, as here it is, is neither in those places, nor elsewhere, used for living. And had that been her meaning, she would have expressed it plainly, as they do in the places alleged, and not have used so dark and dubious a metaphor, nor would have said, after him that sees me, but rather, after I have seen him.

Genesis 16:14

This name may have respect, either,

1. To God, The well of him that liveth (i.e. of the true and living God) and seeth me, i.e. taketh care of me. Or,
2. To Hagar, The well of her that liveth, i.e. who though she gave up herself for dead and lost, yet now is likely to live, both in her person and in her posterity, and seeth, or did see, namely, God present with her.

Genesis 16:15

Hagar bare Abram a son, to wit, after her return and submission to her mistress, which is evident from the following history.

Genesis 17:1

I am the Almighty God, who can do all that I have promised, or shall promise to time, and whatsoever pleaseth me; and therefore do thou firmly believe all my words.

Walk before me as becomes one in the presence of thy Lord, and Judge, and Rewarder, being careful to please and obey me in all things, and depending upon me for thy well-doing and well-being. See the same phrase, Gen_48:15 1Ki_8:25 Psa_116:9.

And be thou perfect, i.e. sincere, universal, and constant in my belief of my promises, and obedience to my commands. See Gen_6:9.

Genesis 17:2

I am come to renew, establish, and enlarge that covenant which I formerly made with thee.

Genesis 17:3

Abram fell on his face, partly in self-abasement, and a humble sense of his own undeservedness of such favours; and partly in reverence and worship to God, and a thankful acknowledgment of his marvellous kindness. Compare Lev_9:24 Eze_43:3.

Genesis 17:4

Both literally, or after the flesh, of the Israelites, Ishmaelites, Edomites, &c., and spiritually, of all believers of all nations, to whom Abram hath in some sort the place of a father, Rom_4:12, Rom_4:17. Not only as he was the great example and teacher of that faith by which they are all saved, (as the instructors of others are called their fathers, both in Scripture, as Gen 4:20-21, and in profane authors,) but as he was made by God the head of the covenant, by or through whom the covenant right was conveyed to all his natural seed, and afterwards to the spiritual seed, all Gentile believers.

Genesis 17:5

Abraham, i.e. the father of a multitude; Ham in the Hebrew being put for Hamon, which signifies a multitude, by a figure called apocope, which is usual in proper names.

Genesis 17:6

So did the kings of Israel and Judah, of Edom, of the Saracens, and the Messias, who is King of kings, and Lord of lords.

Genesis 17:7

i.e. Whatsoever I am or have, all that shall be thine, and shall be employed for thy protection, consolation, and salvation. This phrase contains in it the confluence of all blessing, temporal, spiritual, and eternal. See Lev_26:12 Psa_33:12 144:15 Jer_31:33.

Genesis 17:8

And to thy seed; unto thee, not in thy own person, but in thy seed. See Gen_13:15,17.

For an everlasting possession; upon condition of their obedience to God, as is oft expressed; wherein seeing they so notoriously failed, it is no wonder if they possessed it but a little while, as the prophet complains, Isa_63:18.

Genesis 17:9

The agreement is mutual: my part was expressed before; now follows thy part, and the condition to which my promise and blessing is annexed.

Genesis 17:10

Circumcision is here called the covenant by a usual metonymy, because it is the condition, sign, and seal of the covenant, the pledge of God's promise and man's duty. And upon the same grounds the cup, i.e. the wine, is called the new testament in Christ's blood, Luk_22:20; or, which is all one, Christ's blood in the new testament, Mat_26:28.

It is evident that women as well as men were comprehended in this covenant, from Gen_34:14 Exo_12:3,4 Joe 2:15,16. Yet circumcision is given only to the males, partly, because it could not, at least not conveniently, be administered to females; partly, because man is the principal cause of the propagation of children, and consequently of the propagation of that original corruption which cleaves to them; partly, to signify that all persons begotten by man should be polluted by sin, though not all conceived by a woman, as Christ was; and partly, because man is the head of the woman, and of the family, upon whom all their concerns are devolved, and from whom the distinction of families and people comes.

The flesh of your foreskin, i.e. by a usual hypallage, the foreskin of your flesh; and the word flesh is here put for the genital part, as it is Lev_15:2,19 Eze 16:26 23:20, and elsewhere. This part God singled out for this ordinance, because it is and was a great instrument both in the commission of actual sins, and in the propagation of original sin; and therefore it was very proper to apply to it the seal of God's gracious covenant for the remission of sins past, and the extirpation of sin for the future.

It shall be a token of the covenant, i.e. a sign, evidence, and assurance, both of the blessing promised by that God who appointed this ordinance, and of man's obligation to the duties required, which is signified by his acceptance of and submission to this ordinance. And here we have the nature and definition of a sacrament, viz. that it is a figure or token of God's covenant.

Genesis 17:12

Eight days; not before that time, because of the child's weakness and imperfection, and impurity too, Exo_22:30 Lev_12:3, for which reason also beasts were not to be offered to God before the eighth day, Exo_22:30.

Every man-child in your generations, successively, until the Messias come, who shall circumcise your hearts, and change this ordinance for another.

Bought with money of any stranger: these were of two sorts.

1. Children, who being entirely his possession, and having not understanding to discern, nor will to choose or refuse, were to be circumcised.

2. Grown persons, who were not to be compelled to be circumcised, but if they refused it, were not to be permitted to dwell in his family, lest they should infect others, but were to be sold to strangers, as the Hebrew doctors teach. But as for Abraham's servants here, they were thoroughly instructed in religion, Gen_18:19, and doubtless did willingly embrace it, and submit to this sacrament.

Genesis 17:13

So it was, and is properly in regard of the thing signified to all true believers; and for the sign, it is so called because it was to endure through all generations till the coming of the Messias; the word olam, here and elsewhere rendered everlasting, or for ever, being oft used to express not only simple eternity, but any long continuance, for many ages, yea, sometimes for a man's life. See Exo_21:6 Deu_15:17 1Ki_9:3.

Genesis 17:14

And the uncircumcised man-child; or rather, and as for the uncircumcised man-child. So the nominative is put absolutely, as is frequent in the Hebrew tongue.

Whose flesh of his foreskin is not circumcised, or, who shall not circumcise the flesh of his foreskin; for the Hebrew verb may be rendered actively, which seems best here; because the punishment seems more justly to belong to the parent, who was guilty of this neglect; than to the child, who was not capable of this precept, and therefore not guilty of the violation of it. And this may further appear from Exo_4:24,25, where God seeks to kill, not the child, but the father, Moses, for this sin. And the flesh of the child's foreskin is rightly called the flesh of his, i.e. the parent's, foreskin, because the child is a part and the possession of his parent. So that this threatening concerns only grown persons, and of them only such as shall wilfully and unnecessarily neglect this duty; for otherwise it was neglected by the Israelites for forty years together in the wilderness, Jos_5:7, without any token of God's displeasure for it.

That soul shall be cut off from his people. This phrase denotes either,

1. An exclusion from fellowship with God's people, and from all the promises, privileges, and blessings belonging to them, either in this life or that to come. Or rather,

2. An untimely and violent death, as may be gathered from Exo_31:14, to be inflicted by the magistrate, to whom God committed the execution of this as well as other laws; and in case of his neglect and default, or the secrecy of the fact, by the extraordinary hand of God, who sometimes ascribes this act to himself, as Lev_17:10 20:6.

He hath broken my covenant, that sacred bond which tied him and me together; and by his neglect and contempt of the condition required on his part, he hath forfeited the blessing promised on my part.

Genesis 17:15

Sarai signifies my lady, or my princess, which confines her dominion to one family; but

Sarah signifies either a lady or princess, simply and absolutely without restriction, or the princess of a multitude, the Hebrew letter he being taken out of Hamon, and added to her name, as it was to Abram's name.

Genesis 17:17

He

laughed, through admiration and holy rejoicing at so great a blessing, not through unbelief, as Sarah did, Gen_18:12,13, as appears from Rom_4:19,20. And though the outward act was the same in both, yet God discerned their differing dispositions and intentions therein.

Genesis 17:18

Grant, O Lord, that the giving of one son may not be joined with the taking away of another; that Ishmael may faithfully serve thee, and may have a share in thy favour and gracious covenant. For this seems to be the meaning of this phrase of living before God, or in God's presence, by comparing a parallel phrase, of walking before God, Gen_17:1, and elsewhere, and an opposite phrase, from thy face shall I be hid, Gen_4:14.

Genesis 17:19

Isaac signifies laughter, not from Sarah's laughter, which as yet had not happened, but from Abraham's past laughter, Gen_17:17, and future joy in his son.

Genesis 17:20

Have heard thee, to wit, in part, or so far as is here expressed; and probably, as to the chief blessing of the covenant, to wit, the forgiveness of his sins, and eternal life, as the Hebrew doctors and some others collect from Gen_25:17, and from other considerations.

Genesis 17:21

The covenant of the promised Seed to come out of his loins, and of life and salvation to accrue to himself and to his posterity by virtue of that Seed; in comparison whereof God speaks slightly of all the temporal blessings conferred upon Ishmael, though in themselves they were great and glorious. By which it may sufficiently appear that Abraham's faith, whereby he is said to be justified, Rom_4:1-25, had a further reach in it than to his own immediate child, even to the Messiah, whose day therefore Abraham is said to have seen, Joh_8:56.

Genesis 17:22

To heaven in a visible manner, as it seems he conversed with him in some visible shape. Compare Gen_35:13 Jud_13:20.

Genesis 17:23

Circumcised the flesh of their foreskin; partly by his own hand, and partly by the help of others, whom he by Divine instinct called to and directed in that work;

in the self-same day, in which God appeared to him and gave the command. So he made haste and delayed not to execute God's command. And his servants also yielded a ready and cheerful obedience to this severe and painful precept, being moved thereunto by Abraham's example and sovereign authority, by God's powerful presence some way or other manifested to them, and by the prospect and hope of God's blessing to accompany and follow his own ordinance.

Genesis 18:1

Waiting for strangers which might pass that way; for whom no public places being provided in those times and places, virtuous persons used to entertain them in their houses. See Heb_13:2.

In the heat of the day, the time when travellers, especially in those hot contries, used to divert and refresh themselves.

Genesis 18:2

Three men, as they seemed to be, though indeed they were angels in men's shape.

Bowed himself toward the ground; a respect usually paid to persons of quality, such as these seemed to be.

Genesis 18:3

He directeth his speech to one, who, by the majesty of his countenance, and the respect which the other two showed him, seemed to be the chief of them.

Genesis 18:4

A practice usual in those parts, Gen_19:2 Gen_24:32 Gen_43:24 Joh 13:4-5 1Ti_5:10, because they used to travel either bare-footed, or only with sandals to cover and secure the bottom of their feet.

Genesis 18:5

Therefore are ye come to your servant; not that he saith or thought that this was their design, but an effect of Divine Providence. The meaning is, Therefore hath God directed you this way, that I might have an occasion of performing my duty to you, which I cheerfully embrace.

Genesis 18:6

Three measures, containing each the third part of an ephah. See Exo_16:36.

Upon the hearth; upon the coals, or in the warm cinders, or in an oven. He had doubtless other bread ready, but he would have new bread for them, which he thought most grateful.

Genesis 18:8

The calf, to wit, the choicest parts of the calf.

He stood by them, to wait upon them, as the word standing is used, Neh_12:44 Jer_52:12.

They did eat; either seemingly, as the Scripture oft speaks of things according to appearance; or really, they received the meat into the bodies which they assumed, where it was consumed by a Divine power.

Genesis 18:9

They said unto him, i.e. one of them, in the name of all, said; which he did not for his own satisfaction, for he who knew her name knew also where she was, but to give occasion for the following discourse.

In the tent; in her tent; for men and women had then their several tents or apartments.

Genesis 18:10

I will certainly return unto thee, not in a visible shape, but with my powerful and effectual presence, to fulfil my promise.

According to the time of life: this time may respect, either,

1. Abraham and Sarah, in the time of life, i.e. when you shall be both alive and in health. But if it belonged to them, it might seem better to understand it thus; in the time when God shall restore life, i.e. vigour and activity to you; for till then both Abraham's body and Sarah's womb are expressly said to be dead, Rom_4:19, to which deadness this life may be opposite; and the time of restoring this lost power of generation may well be called a time of life, it being a kind of life from the dead, and an empowering of him for a vital action from which he was before disenabled, and for the conveying of life to a child, and perpetuating his own life in him. Or,

2. To the child, according to the time of life, i.e. in the time which is usual for the conception, quickening, and bringing forth of a living child. Which interpretation receiveth some countenance from 2Ki_4:16, where we have the same phrase. Or,

3. To the year, according to the time, or this time of life, or living time, i.e. when this time or season of the year shall revive, i.e. return or be restored; as cities and buildings are said to be revived, when they are repaired or rebuilt, as 1Ch_11:8 Neh_4:2. And this season might more properly be said to revive, and be called the time of life, because it may be gathered from the heat, Gen_18:1, and their refreshing themselves under the shadow of a tree, that it was the spring time, when herbs and plants and trees, which seem to be dead in the winter, recover and show forth their life and vigour: and so the sense may be this, according to this time, which is a time of life, or reviving, wherein as the beauty and fruits of the earth will be renewed and revived, so thou and Sarah shall be revived, or receive, as it were, a new life in the son that shall be born to you. This sense seems more probable than either of the former, because he speaks of a certain set or appointed time, Gen_18:14 Rom_9:9 Gen_21:2, and that time was about a year after this, as may appear by comparing Gen_17:24, and Gen_21:5.

In the tent door which was behind him, i.e. at the back of the angel that spoke with him; which is here added, to show that he knew her laughter, not by the sight of his eyes, but by his all-seeing knowledge.

Genesis 18:11

As to those monthly effluvioms peculiar to her sex, which are necessary to conception, compare Gen_31:35.

Genesis 18:12

Sarah laughed within herself; not from joy and admiration, but from distrust and contempt, as if it were incredible. Heb. In her heart, i.e. she secretly derided it, though none but herself, as she thought, knew it.

Shall I have pleasure? Not so much in the conception, as in the education and fruition of a child.

Genesis 18:14

Is any thing too hard for the Lord? Heb. Hid from God? So the sense is: Though she laughed only in her heart, it is not unknown to me. Or rather, too wonderful for God to effect? Which best suits with the following words.

Genesis 18:15

Sarah denied, from the sense of guilt, and the discovery of her shame, and the expectation of a sharp rebuke, both from this person, and from her husband.

Genesis 18:16

A civility usual then and afterwards. See Act_20:38 21:5 Rom_15:24 1Co_16:11.

Genesis 18:17

q.d. I will not, cannot hide it; it is against the laws of friendship to conceal my secrets from him. The interrogation here is in effect a negation, as elsewhere. Compare 2Sa_7:5, with 1Ch_17:4; and Mat_7:16, with Luk_6:43. See also Amo_3:7.

Genesis 18:18

q.d. Seeing I have done greater things for him, how can I deny him the less? Compare the argument, Rom_8:32. God's ways are not like men's ways. Former favours to men are arguments why they should do no more, but to God they are motives for the adding of new ones.

Genesis 18:19

For I know him; I know him to be such a one as I am now describing; or I know this concerning him which now follows. Others, I love him, and therefore cannot conceal this from him. Words of knowledge being oft put for love, as Jer_1:5 24:5 Hos_13:5 Amo_3:2.

That he will command, or instruct, as the word is used, Lev_14:5 Deu_20:18 27:4. It will not be in vain that I tell him this, and give him occasion to pray and to taste my goodness in answering prayers, because he will not smother these things in his own breast, but manifest them to others, and teach them how good God is, who so readily complies with the desires and prayers of men, and how terrible he is to incorrigible sinners, and how evil and bitter a thing it is to sin against God. And so I shall get the end I aim at in all my works, which is, that they may be known for the good of others; that they may learn by such examples.

His children and his household, who will live when he is dead. He will so diligently imprint these things in their minds, that they shall never forget them.

They shall keep the way of the Lord, i.e. observe and walk in the way of God's precepts: q.d. He shall not lose his design or labour; for what he teacheth they shall learn and practise. See Psa_51:15, &c.

To do justice and judgement, i.e. to do all things that are good, and right, and just, both to God and men: compare Psa_119:121. That Abraham and his posterity, keeping the conditions of the covenant required on their part, God may without any blemish to his honour or justice give all those good things which he hath promised to them.

Genesis 18:20

Sins are said to cry when they are gross, and manifest, and impudent, and such as highly provoke God to anger. He names only these two cities, as being the most eminent in state, and exemplary in wickedness; but under them he includes the rest, as appears by the story.

Genesis 18:21

i.e. I will inquire into the truth of the thing. God here speaks after the manner of men, and for the example and instruction of judges to search into causes ere they pass sentence.

Whether they have done altogether; Heb.

Whether they have made a consummation or accomplishment; i.e. whether they have filled up the measure of their sins. Compare Gen_15:16 Mat_23:32 Jam_1:15.

Genesis 18:22

And the men, i.e. two of them; for the third staid with Abraham, as it here follows.

Before the Lord, the third of these persons, whom now he perceived to be the Lord himself, who had assumed a human shape.

Genesis 18:23

i.e. He approached unto God to inquire of him, and to pray unto him; for so the phrase of drawing near to God is used, 1Sa_14:36 Psa_73:28 Isa_29:13 Heb_10:22.

Genesis 18:24

Within the city, i.e. in the cities concerned, as appears by Gen_18:20, and Gen_19:25; the singular number for the plural, as is frequent, as Gen_3:22 1Ch_10:1, compared with 1Sa_31:1, and oft elsewhere. Or the city Sodom alone is mentioned, but the rest are comprehended under it, either because of its eminency, or because they were subject or subordinate to it, as may seem probable from the history, Gen_14:1-24.

Genesis 18:25

Now he clearly perceiveth that this person was no less than the Creator, Governor, and

Judge of the world, even the second person in the blessed Trinity, to whom that title and work is ascribed, as Joh_5:22,27 Ac 10:42 17:31. He speaks not this as if it were simply unjust for God to involve the righteous in the same temporal destruction with the wicked; for he knew very well, and by his own experience, that there was not a just man upon earth, that did good and sinned not, Ecc_7:20, and therefore no such just man who did not for his own sin deserve that death and destruction which is the proper wages of sin, Rom_6:23. But he speaks not here of strict and rigorous justice, but of that moderate and equitable way which God is pleased to use with the sons of men, and of that right to temporal deliverances which by virtue of God's gracious covenant and promise did accrue to pious and virtuous persons, especially in the times of the Old Testament, when temporal promises were more expressly and particularly made to good men.

Genesis 18:27

In regard of the composition of my body, which was taken out of the dust, and shall return into it again. See Gen_3:19 Job_4:19 Ecc_12:7 1Co_15:47,48.

Genesis 18:28

Lack of five, Heb. for five, or because of five, to wit, which are lacking or wanting. The same supplement we have also Psa_119:24 Lam_4:9.

Genesis 18:32

Abraham in modesty could proceed no further; and being a good man himself, he had a charitable opinion of others, and thought there certainly were so many good men in all those cities, especially including Lot and his family. No doubt Abraham remembered Lot in his prayers; but that large and generous soul could not content himself with Lot's preservation, but aims at the saving of the whole cities, which when he saw was doubtful and unlikely, he prayed for his deliverance out of that common destruction, as may be gathered from Gen_19:29.

Genesis 19:1

And there came two angels, even those two which departed from Abraham, Gen_18:22, and now were come to Lot, the third yet staying and communing with Abraham. Angels they truly were, though they be called men, Gen_18:1-33.

At even of the same day on which they departed from Abraham.

In the gate of Sodom, where he sat either to observe the administration or corruption of justice there; for the seats of judicature were in the gates: or rather to wait for strangers, to whom he might exercise kindness and hospitality.

Genesis 19:2

Go on your ways, and so this will be no hinderance to your occasions.

We will abide in the street all night: this was no untruth, but really intended by them in the present state of things, and upon supposition that Lot should press them no further; but they also intended, if Lot was earnest with them, to comply with him. The first denial was but decent, and an act of civility, and in them it was a design to discover Lot's piety and hospitality, and to manifest the great difference between him and the barbarous Sodomites, and the reason and justice of Lot's deliverance, and their destruction.

Genesis 19:3

He did bake unleavened bread, because that was sooner prepared, that so they might eat it, and after that go to bed in due time.

Genesis 19:4

Before they lay down to sleep, of which this word is used, Gen_28:13 Lev_14:47 Lev_26:6.

All the people from every quarter; some to exercise villany, and some to please themselves with the contemplation of it, and some out of curiosity, &c. This is added to show how universally corrupt they were, and that there were not ten righteous men there.

Genesis 19:5

Either know who they are; or rather abuse them, as Lot's answer explains it, and so that word is used, Gen_4:1 Num_31:17 Jud_19:22. And for the sin here committed, see Lev_18:22 20:13 Rom_1:26, 27 1Co_6:9 Jud_1:7. They openly and impudently profess their wicked intention, for which they are branded, Isa_3:9; and this intention of theirs is the more probable, because of the great beauty which it is likely was in those bodies which the angels assumed, whereby their lust was more inflamed.

Genesis 19:7

They were brethren by community of nature and habitation; see Gen_9:5 29:4 Lev_19:17; and so he calls them, if possibly he might sweeten and restrain them.

Genesis 19:8

Which have not known man, to wit, carnally. See Gen_24:16 Num_31:18 Jud_11:39.

Do ye to them as is good in your eyes, whatsoever your purpose or pleasure is. See the same phrase Gen_20:15 41:37 Num_24:1, &c. A most imprudent and sinful motion, whereby he yielded to one sin to prevent another, contrary to Rom_3:8, and exposed his daughters' chastity, which he was obliged to preserve, and which indeed he had no power to expose, especially seeing they were betrothed to other men, Gen_19:14. But it is some extenuation of his sin that it proceeded from his great charity and kindness to strangers, and that he was at this time under a great perturbation and discomposure of mind.

For therefore, that they might be preserved from such outrages. This was the design of the thing, though not of those persons. See Poole on "Gen_18:5".

Under the shadow of my roof, i.e. under the protection of my house. Shadow is oft put for protection or defence, as Jud_9:15 Psa_36:7 Jer_48:45.

Genesis 19:9

Stand back, or, go further off, i.e. out of our way; stand not between us and the door; or, come hither, that so they might seize him, and proceed in the designed wickedness.

This one fellow came in to sojourn, and he will needs be a judge: q.d. One man, and he too but a stranger, presumeth to oppose the whole society of the native citizens. Heb. In judging he will judge. This busybody, if not restrained in time, will take authority to himself to censure, reprove, and condemn us from time to time.

Genesis 19:11

They smote the men, Heb. with blindness, i.e. with a blindness both of body and mind. It was not a total blindness, as if they quite lost the use of their eyes, for they saw the house, though not the door, but it was a great dimness and confusion of their sight, and a disturbance in their common sense, by which they were made unable to distinguish between differing persons or places; as it was also with the Syrians, 2Ki_6:18; as it is in some measure with some drunkards, who, though their eyes be open, cannot distinguish between things that differ. And this was very easy for angels to do by a small alteration either in their sight, or in the air, whereby either the door might appear like the solid wall, or the several parts of the wall like so many doors.

Genesis 19:14

Which married his daughters; Heb. took, or were taking, or about to take, to wit, either to espouse, or to marry. Compare Gen_6:2 24:3 28:6 Deu_7:3. Anciently persons were first espoused, and after some time the marriage was consummated.

Genesis 19:15

Which are here; Heb. which are found; i.e. which are present with thee, as this word is used, 1Ch_29:17 2Ch_5:11 30:21 31:1. Whence some gather that he had two other daughters married to two Sodomitish men, who by their husbands' persuasion and example staid and perished in those flames. But this is not necessary; for this phrase may be applied to the daughters by way of distinction from their spouses or husbands: q.d. Tarry no longer in expectation of thy sons-in-law, who are absent, and must be given up for lost, but take thy daughters which are found and present with thee, and go thy way.

Genesis 19:16

He lingered, either through lothness to part with all his estate, or to lose his sons-in-law; or through astonishment and distraction of mind, which made him both listless and impotent.

Genesis 19:17

Either one of the angels said this, or the third person, the Lord himself, who having parted from Abraham, after some time came to Lot, as appears both by the change of the number; for before this he speaks of them in the plural number, but from hence in the singular number, as Gen_19:19,21,22; and by the variation of the phrase, for the other two speak with submission, and as servants, Gen_19:13,

The Lord hath sent us, & c.; but this speaks with more authority, as is evident from Gen_19:21,22.

Escape for thy life, i.e. as thou lovest thy life. See Deu_4:15 Jos_23:11 Jer_17:21. Or, escape with thy life, for the Hebrew particle al is sometimes taken for with, as Exo_35:23 Lev_2:2 14:31 Deu_22:6. So the sense is, Stand not lingering in hopes to save thy goods, them thou shalt lose as a punishment of thy sin and folly in choosing to dwell with so wicked a people; and be thankful that thou hast thy life given thee for a prey, as it is expressed, Jer_38:2.

Look not behind thee, like one that grieves either for the loss of thy pleasant habitation or vast estate, or for those cursed miscreants justly devoted to this destruction. And this command, though given to Lot alone, yet was directed also to his companions, to whom doubtless he imparted it, as is evident both from all the other commands, which equally concern all, and from the following event. See Mat_24:18 Luk_9:62.

Genesis 19:18

i.e. Unto one of them, as is manifest from the following words.

Genesis 19:19

I cannot escape to the mountain, because of the infirmity of my age, and the fainting of my spirits. Thus he showeth an unworthy and unreasonable distrust of God's power and goodness, which he had now experienced and acknowledged.

Genesis 19:20

And it is a little one; therefore as its inhabitants, so its sins are fewer, and it will not be an eminent example of thy vengeance, as the other places will be.

Genesis 19:21

I have accepted thee; Heb. I have lift up thy countenance, i.e. granted thy request. The manner of the expression possibly may be taken from the custom of the eastern parts; where petitioners used not to fall upon their knees as we do, but to prostrate themselves with their face to the ground; and the person to whom they addressed themselves, in token of his favourable acceptance of their petitions, commanded them to be lifted up.

Genesis 19:22

I cannot do any thing till thou be come thither, because of God's decree and promise to save thee from the general destruction.

Genesis 19:23

This phrase may note, either the time of the day when this was done; or rather the nature and quality of the day, that the sun appeared and shone forth that morning in great lustre and glory; which is well noted as a very considerable circumstance of the history, and a great aggravation of the ruin, which came when they least expected it.

Genesis 19:24

And the neighbouring cities, Admah and Zeboim, as appears from Deu_29:23 Jer_49:18 Hos_11:8.

Brimstone is added to the fire, either to convey and carry down the fire, which in itself is light and apt to ascend; or to increase it, Isa_30:33; or to represent the noisomeness of their lusts.

From the Lord, i.e. from himself; the noun put for the pronoun, as Gen_1:27 2Ch_7:2. But here it is emphatically so expressed, either,

1. To signify that it proceeded not from natural causes, but from the immediate hand of God. Or,

2. To note the plurality of persons in the Godhead, God the Son, who now appeared upon the earth, rained from God his Father in heaven, both concurring in this act, as indeed all outward actions are common to all the persons of the Trinity.

Genesis 19:25

All the plain, to wit, where these cities and their territories lay, called the plain of Jordan, Gen_13:10; all which then became, and to this day continues, to be a filthy lake, called the Dead Sea, because no fish lives in it.

Genesis 19:26

His wife looked back, through curiosity, or unbelief, or desire of what she left, or from all these causes; from behind her husband, whom she followed. Which circumstance seems to be mentioned as the reason of this presumption, because she could do it without her husband's observation or reproof, to which she had a greater regard than to the all-seeing eye of God.

And she, i.e. her body, by a very common synecdoche, became a pillar of salt; either metaphorically, i.e. a perpetual durable pillar, as an everlasting covenant is called a covenant of salt, Num_18:19; or properly, for there is a kind of metallic salt which resists the rain, and is hard enough for buildings, as Pliny, Solinus, and others witness. And that salt was here mixed with brimstone, may be gathered from Deu_29:23. Add to this, that Josephus, Antiq. i. 12, affirms that this pillar remained in his time. And the like is witnessed by others after him.

Genesis 19:29

God remembered Abraham; either,

1. The promise made to Abraham, Gen_12:3. Or,

2. The prayer made by Abraham, Gen_18:23-32, who doubtless in his prayers for Sodom would not forget Lot, though his prayer for him be not there mentioned. And hereby it is insinuated, that Lot, though he was a righteous man, and should be saved eternally, yet deserved to perish temporarily with those wicked people, to whom he associated himself merely for worldly advantages, and should have done so, if Abraham had not hindered it by his prayers.

Genesis 19:30

He feared to dwell in Zoar, lest he should either suffer from them or with them; perceiving now that though it was a little city, yet there was more wickedness in it than he imagined.

Genesis 19:31

In the earth; either,

1. In the whole earth; for they thought the same deluge of fire which destroyed the four cities had by this time extended itself to Zoar, and all other places, knowing that the whole world did lie in wickedness, and having possibly heard from their father, that the world, as it was once destroyed by water, so it should afterwards be consumed by fire, which they might think was now executed, and that God had secured Abraham from it by taking him to himself. Or,

2. In that land, as the word may be rendered. And her meaning might not be this, that there was no man at all, but not a man with whom they might or durst marry; for though they knew they left many men in Zoar, yet the sad experience of the dreadful ruin wherein their brethren-in-law were involved, made them abhor the thoughts of any conjunction with them.

After the manner of all the earth, i.e. of all the inhabitants of the earth. Compare Gen_18:11.

Genesis 19:32

Wine they carried with them, amongst other necessary provisions, either from Sodom or Zoar.

This, though an incestuous and abominable action, yet they thought was made lawful by the supposed necessity, as in the beginning of the world the marriage of brethren and sisters was lawful because necessary; and when it ceased to be necessary, because of the increase of mankind, it became incestuous.

Genesis 19:33

They made their father drink wine, to wit, in excess, so as to deprive him of the use of his reason and grace, which was likely to frustrate their project: this was a great sin, not only in them, but also in Lot himself, not to be excused by ignorance of the virtue of wine, which being known to both the daughters, certainly their father could not be ignorant of it. Thus he who kept his integrity in the midst of all the temptations of Sodom, falls into a grievous sin in a place where he might seem most remote from all temptations; God permitting this, to teach all following ages how weak even the best men are when they are left to themselves, and what absolute need they have of Divine assistance.

He perceived not; wherein there is nothing strange, it being usual with drunken men to do many things in that condition, which, when they come to themselves, they perfectly forget. And so might Lot, when under the power of wine, forget that his wife was turned into a pillar of salt, and might mistake his daughter for his wife.

Genesis 19:36

Which they might possibly imagine to be an evidence of Divine approbation of their fact; whereas, indeed, it was a design of God to make a lasting monument of their sin and shame.

Called his name Moab, i.e. of my father, begotten upon me by my father. So she had learned from her neighbours to declare her sin as Sodom, Isa_3:9.

The Moabites were a mischievous and infamous people, branded, as their brethren also the Ammonites were, with characters of God's displeasure.

Genesis 19:38

Called his name Ben-ammi, i.e. the son of my people, or kindred, not of the cursed race of the Sodomites, where I was to be married. This is something more modest than the other in the name she gives, but both impudently glorying in their sin and shame, of which they should have bitterly repented.

Genesis 20:1

From thence; from the plain of Mamre, Gen_18:1, where he had long dwelt; and whence he removed, either because of its nearness to that filthy lake, which now was in the place of that late fruitful plain; or for other reasons and conveniences needless to be here inquired or determined.

Towards the south country, yet more towards the southern part of Canaan.

Genesis 20:2

Abraham said this lest they should slay him for his beautiful wife's sake, as himself tells us, Gen_20:11. For though Sarah was ninety years old, yet she retained her beauty in good measure, partly, because she had not been broken by bearing and nursing of children; partly, because in that age of the world men and women, as they lived longer, so they did not so soon begin to decay, as now they do; and partly, because of God's especial blessing upon her.

Abimelech took Sarah, not without violence, for it is not to be thought that either Abraham or Sarah would consent to it.

Genesis 20:3

God then used to manifest his mind in dreams, not only to his people, but even to heathens for their sakes, or in things wherein they were concerned.

Thou art but a dead man, thou deservest a present and untimely death; and if thou proceedest in thy intended wickedness, it shall be inflicted upon thee, both for thy injustice in taking her away by force, and for thy intentions to abuse her, though not yet executed.

Genesis 20:4

Abimelech had not come near her, i.e. had not yet lain with her. A modest expression, like that of knowing a woman, Gen_4:1, or going in to her, Gen_6:4, or touching her, Pro_6:29 1Co_7:1, by which we are taught to use modesty in our speeches, and not, with the rude cynics, to express all things by their proper names. This clause and history was necessary to be added here for Sarah's vindication, and especially for the demonstration of Isaac's original from Abraham and Sarah, according to God's promise.

Wilt thou slay also a righteous nation? i.e. innocent as to this matter. Compare 2Sa_4:11. He knew it was just and usual for God to punish a nation for their king's sins; and therefore, as became a good prince, he is solicitous, and prays for the safety of his nation: or else by nation he may mean his family, for some of them were not involved in the guilt of this fact.

Genesis 20:5

Without any adulterous design in my heart, or outward actions tending to it, being wholly ignorant of what thou now informest me.

Genesis 20:6

I know that thou didst not this knowingly and maliciously, but imprudently and inconsiderately, which is indeed an extenuation of thy sin, though not a total excuse. Compare 1Ki_9:4 1Ch_29:1.

I also withheld thee, partly by my restraining grace, and partly by my powerful providence, and the plague mentioned Gen_20:17. Which plainly shows that ignorance is not always an excuse for sin. See Luk_12:48. This sin, though directly committed against Abraham and Sarah only, is said to be against God, as other such sins are, Gen_39:9 Psa_51:4, because it was against God's command written in men's minds, though not yet published by express word or writing; and against God's honour; and that here in a particular manner, because it would have rendered Isaac's original, and thereby God's promise, doubtful.

Genesis 20:7

He is a prophet, a person very dear to me, and familiarly acquainted with me, and therefore the injuries done to him I take as done to myself. See Psa_105:15.

He shall pray for thee, which is one part of a prophet's work, Jer_14:11 15:1.

Thou shalt surely die, thou, and all that are thine; which was not unjust, because they all had sins of their own, for which they deserved death whensoever God thought fit to inflict it; and God might take this occasion to do it, that in punishing them he might also punish the king, whose subjects they were.

Genesis 20:8

His servants; his counsellors and principal officers, as that word is used, 1Ki_1:2 10:13.

Genesis 20:9

What hast thou done unto us? How great a danger hast thou exposed us to!

A great sin: even the heathens, who thought fornication harmless, judge adultery to be a very great and heinous crime. See Gen_38:24 Lev_20:10 Eze_16:38 23:45,47. Or, a great punishment, as this word is oft used; which seems better to answer to his offending Abraham now mentioned.

Genesis 20:10

What levity or miscarriage didst thou discern in us which moved thee to deal thus with us?

Genesis 20:11

The fear of God is not in this place, i.e. true piety, or the knowledge of the true God, which is the only effectual restraint from the grossest wickedness.

Genesis 20:12

She is my sister, my near kinswoman; even as Lot upon the same account is called Abraham's brother, Gen_13:8.

She is the daughter of my father, i.e. the granddaughter; for grandchildren are commonly called the sons and daughters of their grandparents, as Gen_31:28 Exo_2:18. And besides, her father Haran dying before her grandfather, she was left more immediately under his care and education, and therefore was more peculiarly reputed Terah's daughter, and Abraham's sister. See Gen_11:29.

But not the daughter of my mother, because Haran was Abraham's brother only by the father's side; for Terah had Haran by another wife.

How could Abraham marry one so near of kin to him?

Answ. There were larger allowances for marriages in those times, as it was convenient there should be; neither had God as yet given those prohibitions, Lev_18:1-30. Besides, among all nations, the mother's side was more regarded than the father's in all prohibitions of marriage.

Genesis 20:13

To wander. This word he useth because God did not direct him to any certain place, but sent him out he knew not whither, Heb_11:8. And being to travel and sojourn amongst persons of divers tempers and manners, and all pagans, he thought this equivocal expression convenient for his security.

Genesis 20:15

My land is before thee, i.e. free for thy view and choice, as Gen_13:9.

Genesis 20:16

Thy brother; a sharp rebuke and irony: q.d. he whom thou didst miscall thy brother.

A thousand pieces of silver, to wit, shekels, which is commonly understood when a sum of silver or gold is indefinitely mentioned, as Num_7:13,85 2Sa_18:12 2Ki_6:25.

He is to thee a covering of the eyes, i.e. a protection to thee from the wanton eyes and attempts of others, whilst they know thee to be the wife of another man, and he such a one whom they reverence and fear; and therefore thou didst take a very wrong course to disown him, whereby thou didst expose thyself to great danger. Or, this is to thee, & c., i.e. this I give to thee to buy thee a veil, wherewith thou mayst cover thy face, as it is fit and usual for married persons to do. Compare Gen_24:65 1Co_11:3,6,7,10.

Unto all that are with thee; unto all that here live with thee, or near thee, and with all men whomsoever.

Thus she was reproved, or admonished to be more circumspect for the future; or, and be thou admonished; for they may be the words of Abimelech.

Genesis 20:18

This phrase elsewhere notes barrenness, as 1Sa_1:5,6, and so many understand it here. Against which some learned men object that that could not so soon be discovered, for all this happened between the conception and birth of Isaac. Which objection may seem not valid, because the evidences of women's being with child go so long before the birth of the child, and those evidences not appearing in any of their women, who before that time were generally fruitful and child bearing, they might discern God's hand in it, especially upon God's admonition to their king. But because this history seems to have been done in a far less space of time, it not being probable either that God would suffer Sarah to be long with Abimelech ere he warned him, or that he being warned, and so severely threatened, and actually punished, would delay the execution of God's command, or that upon his obedience to God the mercy and deliverance promised would be delayed by God; that seems more probable which others think, that this was an indisposition, or plague, or sore in the secret parts, by which they were hindered from cohabitation and mutual converse, and consequently from hopes of conception and child-bearing; upon the removal whereof, it is said that they bare children, where, as oftentimes in Scripture, the last and consummating act is put for all the preceding acts: q.d. and they were restored to the conjugal use, and conception, and, in due time, to child-bearing.

Genesis 21:1

The Lord visited Sarah, i.e. performed his gracious promise of giving her strength to conceive and bear a child. God's visitation of a person in Scripture use, is the manifestation and execution of his purpose or word towards that person, and that either for evil, and so it is an inflicting of evils threatened, as the word visiting is used, Exo_20:5 Psa_59:5; or for good, and so it is used for the actual giving of mercies promised, as here, and Gen_50:24 Exo_4:31 Rth_1:6.

Genesis 21:2

In his old age, or, for his old age, i.e. for the comfort of his old age.

Genesis 21:6

Before, my own distrustful heart made me to laugh, now God makes me laugh, not through diffidence and irreverence, as before, Gen_18:12, but through excess of holy joy.

All that hear will laugh with me; or, at me; some through sympathy rejoicing with me and for me, laughter being oft put for joy, as Isa_54:1 Gal_4:27, &c.; other's through scorn and derision, as at a thing which well may seem incredible to them, because it did so to me. See Gen_17:17 18:12,13,15.

Genesis 21:7

What man or woman could believe so improbable a thing? Or, who but a God could have foreseen and foretold it? She saith children, though she had but one child, either by a usual enallage of the plural number for the singular, whereby the word sons or daughters is used when there was but one, as Gen_36:25 46:23 Num_26:8; or presaging, that having received from God a new strength, she might have more children. By her expression she showeth all mothers what their duty is, viz. to give their children suck when they are able to do it; and that neither greatness of quality, nor multitude of business, nor other difficulties and inconveniences, will be a sufficient excuse to those that neglect it.

Genesis 21:8

It doth not appear how old Isaac was, because the time for the weaning of children is very various, according to the differing tempers and necessities of children, or inclination of parents; and in those times, when men's lives were longer than now they are, proportionably the time was longer ere children were weaned.

Genesis 21:9

Signifying either by words or gestures his contempt of Isaac, and his derision of all that magnificence then showed towards his younger brother. And this carriage proceeding from a most envious and malicious disposition, and being a sufficient indication of further mischief intended to him, if ever he should have opportunity, it is no wonder it is called persecution, Gal_4:29, although the Hebrew word may be rendered beating him, as it is used 2Sa_2:14.

Genesis 21:10

1892 She was enraged by this fact, and perceived it was but a beginning and earnest of greater evil designed by him against her beloved Isaac; being also guided by the wise counsel and providence of God, as appears from Gen_21:12. Though the fact was done by Ishmael, yet Sarah plainly saw that this and other like carriages were from his mother's instigation and encouragement, who being of an imperious and petulant disposition, as appears from Gen_16:4,9, in all probability comforted herself, and animated her son, by that right he had to his father's inheritance as he was his first-born, as may be gathered both from the custom of women in such cases, and from the last words of this verse. Besides, if the mother had been continued, she would easily have prevailed with Abraham to fetch the child back again.

Genesis 21:11

Because of his tender affection to him, and God's promise concerning him. See Gen_17:18,20. He who cheerfully parted with Isaac, was hardly brought to part with Ishmael, because the former was done by God's command, which he was obliged to obey; the latter by the passion of an enraged woman, wherewith he thought not fit to comply; and probably he had denied her desire if God had not interposed in it. He doth not say because of his wife; from whence may be gathered, either that Hagar was not properly his wife, or that this was another of Abraham's infirmities, that he had not that affection for her which he should have had. Whereby we may also see the excellency of God's institutions, who appointed but one woman for one man, that each might have the entire interest in the other's affections; and the danger of men's inventions, which brought polygamy into the world, whereby a man's affections are divided into several, and sometimes contrary streams.

Genesis 21:12

Thus Abraham had better authority for his divorce from Hagar than he had for his marriage with her, Gen_16:2.

Thy seed, to wit, the promised Seed, the heir of thy estate, covenant, and promises, the progenitor of my church and people, and particularly of the Messias.

Called, i.e. reputed and valued, both by me and other men. The words may be thus rendered, by Isaac shall thy seed be; for to be called is oftentimes put for to be, as Isa_1:26 47:1,5 Mt 5:9,19.

Genesis 21:14

He who before doubted and lingered to do it when Sarah's passion suggested it, when once he understands it to be God's will, he makes haste to execute it. An excellent example of prudence and piety.

Bread, by which may be here understood all necessaries, as Mal_1:7,12 Mt 6:11 14:15, compared with Mar_6:36 Luk_14:1.

Quest. How is it likely that so rich and liberal a person as Abraham would send away such near and dear relations with so mean accommodations?

Answ.

1. This might be done by particular command from God to Abraham, though it be not here expressed, as many things were said by God, and done by men, which are not mentioned in Scripture, as is evident from Joh_20:30,31 21:25, and many other places. And God might order it thus, partly, to chastise Abraham's irregular marriage with Hagar; partly, to correct and tame the haughty and rugged temper of the bond-woman and her son, and to prepare them for the receiving of God's help and mercy; and partly, that he might more eminently show his care and kindness to Abraham, in providing for such forlorn and neglected creatures, because they belonged to him.

2. It cannot be reasonably doubted that Abraham gave her these provisions only for the present, and intended to send further and better afterward to a place appointed by him, which also he did.

But she missed her way, as well she might, in the wilderness, and thereby came into these straits designed by God for the signification of greater mysteries, as may be gathered from Gal_4:1-31.

Beer-sheba, a place near Gerar, so called here by a prolepsis. See Gen_21:31.

Genesis 21:15

Not as if she carried him in her arms, or upon her shoulders, for he was now about eighteen years old; but being weak and faint, and no doubt much dejected in spirit upon the prospect of his desolate and distressed condition, she was forced to support and lead him by the hand; but now, despairing of his life, she lays him down under a shrub.

Genesis 21:16

Who wept? Either Hagar, for the verb is of the feminine gender; or the lad, as the words following seem to intimate. And for the change of the genders, that is not unfrequent in Scripture use.

Genesis 21:17

God heard his cries, though not flowing from true repentance, but extorted from him by his pressing calamity. Though he be in a vast and desolate wilderness, yet my eye is upon him, and I will take care of him.

Genesis 21:18

i.e. Support or sustain thy languishing child with thy hand; for I will bless him, and thy care shall not be in vain.

Genesis 21:19

Not that her eyes were shut or blind before, but she saw not the well before; either because it was at some distance, or because her eyes were full of tears, and her mind distracted and heedless through excessive grief and fear; or because God withheld her eyes that she might not see it without his information. Compare Num_22:31 Luk_24:16.

Genesis 21:20

i.e. A skilful hunter of beasts, and warrior with men too, according to the prediction, Gen_16:12. For the bow was a principal instrument in war, as well as in hunting, Gen_48:22 49:23,24. And these two professions oft went together. See Gen_10:9.

Genesis 21:21

In the wilderness of Paran; in the borders of that wilderness, by comparing Gen_14:6, for the innermost parts of it were uninhabitable by men or beasts, as ancient writers note.

His mother took him a wife; by which we see both the obligation that lies upon parents, and the right that is invested in them, to dispose of their children in marriage in convenient time. Compare Gen_24:4 28:2 Jud_14:2.

Out of the land of Egypt, rather than out of Canaan, concerning whose accursed state and future destruction she had been informed in Abraham's house.

Genesis 21:22

We plainly see that God blesseth and prospereth thee in all thy undertakings.

Of Abimelech, see Gen_20:2.

Genesis 21:23

That thou wilt not deal falsely with me; that thou wilt not do me any hurt or injury; Heb. That thou wilt not lie unto me; i.e. as thou hast formerly professed kindness and friendship to me, give me thy oath to assure me that thou wilt be true and constant to thy own professions.

Genesis 21:24

Quest. How could Abraham lawfully swear this, when Canaan was given by God to him and his seed for ever?

Answ. Neither Abraham nor his seed had any present and actual right to the possession of the land, but only the promise of a right in it, and possession of it after some hundreds of years, and therefore he gave away none of his right by this oath. For this oath did only oblige Abraham, and not his posterity; and Abimelech extended that obligation no further than to his son's son.

Genesis 21:25

That the foundation of true friendship might be firmly laid, and the peace inviolably observed, he removes an impediment to it, an occasion of quarrel and just exception on Abraham's part.

A well of water in those hot and dry countries was of great esteem and necessity. Compare Gen_26:19-21 Jud_1:15. Besides, a well may be put for wells, as the Greeks render it, and as may seem probable by comparing this with Gen_26:15,18; it being an ordinary thing to use the singular number for the plural, as hath been showed. See Gen_3:2 4:20.

Genesis 21:26

By which he wisely and truly suggests, that Abraham should not have smothered the grudge in his mind so long time, but should instantly have reproved him for it, and endeavoured a speedy redress, which hereby he intimates that he was ready to give.

Genesis 21:27

Abraham gave them unto Abimelech; partly, as an acknowledgment to him for his former favour and friendship; partly, as an assurance of his sincere friendship, both present and for the future, of his acquiescence in his answer about the well; and partly, for sacrifice, and for the usual rite in making covenants, which was, that the persons covenanting might pass through the parts of the slain beasts. See Gen_15:17.

Genesis 21:30

That this care of Abraham's was not superfluous may appear from Gen_26:15.

Genesis 21:31

Which name was communicated unto a city adjoining: of which see Gen_26:23 Jos_15:28 2Sa_17:11 24:2.

Genesis 21:32

1891 i.e. Into their part of that land, to wit, Gerar, which was not far from this place. It is a usual synecdoche, whereby the whole land is put for a part of it; otherwise they were at this time in that land.

Genesis 21:33

Abraham planted a grove, not so much for shade, which yet was pleasant and necessary in these hot regions, as for religious use, that he might retire thither from the noise of worldly business, and freely converse with his Maker. Which practice of his was afterwards abused to superstition and idolatry, for which reason groves were commanded to be cut down. See Deu_12:3 16:21.

Called there on the name of the Lord. He thankfully acknowledging God's great goodness in giving him the favour and friendship of so great and worthy a prince and neighbour.

Genesis 22:1

After the accomplishment of God's promises made to Abraham, and especially of that promise concerning the blessed Seed, when now he seemed to be in a most prosperous and secure condition, he meets with a severe exercise from God,

God did tempt Abraham. The word tempt is ambiguous, and signifies either,

1. To entice to sin, in which sense devils and wicked men are said to tempt others, but God tempts no man, Jam_1:13. Or,

2. To prove or try, and in this sense God is said to tempt men. See Deu_8:2 Deu_13:3 Jud_2:22. Thus God tempted Abraham, i.e. he tried the sincerity and strength of his faith, the universality and constancy of his obedience, and this for God's great honour, and Abraham's great glory and comfort, and for the church's benefit in all following ages.

Beheld, here I am; an expression signifying a man's attentive hearing what is said to him, and his readiness to execute it, as Gen_22:7, Gen_22:11 Gen_27:1 1Sa 3:4-6.

Genesis 22:2

Not a word here but might pierce a heart of stone, much more so tender a father as Abraham was.

Take now, without demurring or delay, I allow thee no time for thy consideration, own proper son; not a beast, not an enemy, not a stranger, though that had been very difficult to one so kind to all strangers; not a dear servant, not a friend or familiar:

thine only son, not by birth, for so he had another, Ishmael; but this was his only son by Sarah, his first and legitimate wife; who only had the right of succession both to his inheritance, and to his covenant and promises; and this only was now left to him, for Ishmael was abandoned and gone from him: and this must be such a son as Isaac, once matter of laughter and great joy, now cause of inexpressible sorrow; thy Benoni; a son of the promise, of so great hopes, and such pregnant virtue and piety as this story shows;

whom thou lovest, peculiarly and superlatively, even as thy own soul:

and get thee into the land of Moriah; a place at a great distance, and to which thou shalt go but leisurely, Gen_22:4, that thou mayst have thy mind all that while fixed upon that bloody act, which other men's minds can scarce once think of without horror; and so thou mayst offer him in a sort ten thousand times over before thou givest the fatal blow;

and offer him there with thine own hands, and cruelly take away the life which thou hast in some sort given him;

for a burnt-offering, wherein by the law of the burnt-offering then known to Abraham, afterwards published to all Israel, his throat was to be cut, his body dissected into quarters, his bowels taken out, as if he had been some notorious traitor, and vile malefactor and miscreant, and afterwards he was to be burnt to ashes, that if possible there might be nothing left of him: and this must be done upon one of the mountains, which I shall tell thee of; not secretly in a corner, as if it were a work of darkness, and thou wert ashamed or afraid to own it; but in a public and open place, in the view of heaven, earth, God, angels, and men. Which horrid and stupendous act it may be easily conjectured what reproach and blasphemy it would have occasioned against the name and worship of God and the true religion, and what shame and torment to Abraham, from his own self-accusing mind, from the clamours of his wife, and all his friends and allies, and what a dangerous and mischievous example this would have been to all future generations. That faith that could surmount these and many more difficulties, and could readily and cheerfully rest upon God in the discharge of such a duty, no wonder it is so honoured by God, and celebrated by all men, yea, even by the heathens, who have translated this history into their fables. Moriah signifies the vision of God, the place where God would be seen and manifested. And so it is here called by way of anticipation, because it was so called afterwards, Gen_22:14, in regard of God's eminent appearance there for Isaac's deliverance; though it may also have a further respect unto Christ, because in that place God was manifested in the flesh. There were divers mountains there, as is evident from Psa_125:2; and particularly there were two eminent hills, or rather tops or parts of the same mountain; Sion, where David's palace was; and Moriah, where the temple was built, and whence the adjoining country afterwards received its name.

Which I will tell thee of, by some visible sign, or secret admonition which I shall give thee.

Genesis 22:3

Abraham rose up early in the morning, that he might execute God's command without doubt or delay;

and saddled his ass, for greater expedition, not waiting for his servant to do it.

Genesis 22:4

Probably on the beginning of the third day. It is true, Moriah was not three days' journey from Beer-sheba. But it must be considered that the ass, upon which he rode, is a dull and slow creature, and that Abraham went no faster than the rest of his company, who, for aught appears, were on foot; and that the provisions which they carried along with them, both for their own and the ass's subsistence, and for sacrifice, must needs retard them.

Genesis 22:5

Abraham said this, lest they should hinder him in the execution of his design.

I and the lad will come again to you; for he knew that God both could and would for his promise sake, either preserve Isaac from being sacrificed, or afterward raise him from the dead, as it is intimated, Heb_11:19.

Genesis 22:6

Isaac, though called a lad, Gen_22:5, was now a grown man, at least five and twenty years old, and therefore well able to bear that burden; and in this act he was an eminent type of Christ, who carried that wood upon which he was crucified.

Genesis 22:7

My father; a compellation which might both wound Abraham's heart, and admonish him how unbecoming to a father that action was which he was going about.

Here am I, my son; which expression showed that he had not put off fatherly affection to him, and that his intention did not arise from any unnatural and barbarous disposition, nor from any decay of love to him, but from a higher cause, even the declared will of God.

Genesis 22:8

God will provide himself a lamb; either,

1. Literally, though I know not how; for his wisdom and power are infinite: or,
2. Mystically, as Christ, whose type Isaac was, is called a Lamb. Thus Abraham prudently reveals the matter to him by degrees, not all at once.

Genesis 22:9

Abraham built an altar, made of earth slightly put together, as God afterwards prescribed, Exo_20:24;

and bound Isaac his son, partly, because burnt-offerings were to be bound to the altar; of which see Poole on "Psa_118:27"; partly, to represent Christ, who was bound to the cross. And that Isaac might be the more exact type of Christ, he was bound by his own consent, otherwise his age and strength seem sufficient to have made an effectual resistance. It is therefore highly reasonable to think that Abraham, having in the whole journey prepared Isaac for such a work by general but pertinent discourses, did upon the mount particularly instruct him concerning the plain and peremptory command of God, the absolute necessity of complying with it, the glorious reward of his obedience, and the dismal consequences of his disobedience; the power and faithfulness of God either to prevent the fatal blow, or to restore his life lost with infinite advantage. Upon these, and such-like reasons, doubtless he readily laid himself down at his father's feet, and yielded up himself to the Divine will.

Genesis 22:11

The angel of the Lord, i.e. Christ the Angel of the covenant, as appears from Gen_22:12,16. He repeats his name to prevent Abraham, whom he knew to be most expeditious in God's service, and just ready to give the deadly blow.

Genesis 22:12

God knew the sincerity and resolvedness of Abraham's faith and obedience before and without this evidence, and from eternity foresaw this fact and all its circumstances; and therefore you must not think that God had now made any new discovery: but this is spoken here, as in many other places, of God after the manner of men, who is then said to know a thing, when it is notorious and evident to a man's self and others by some remarkable effect. Thus David prayed that God would search and know his heart, and his thoughts, Psa_139:23, though he had before professed that God understood his thought afar off, Gen_22:2. This therefore is the sense:

Now I know, i.e. Now I have what I designed and desired; now I have made thee and others to know. As the Spirit of God and of Christ is said to cry Abba, Father, Gal_4:6, when it makes us to cry so, Rom_8:15.

Thou hast not withheld thy son from me, for my service and sacrifice; or for me, i.e. for my sake; i.e. thou hast preferred mine authority and honour before the life of thy dear son. By which words it appears that God himself speaks these words.

Genesis 22:13

Behind him; which way he looked, either because the voice came that way, or because he heard the noise made by the motion of the ram in the thicket, which had gone astray from the rest of the flock, and whose errors were directed hither by God's wise and powerful providence; and being young, though horned, it might be called either lamb, as Gen_22:7, or ram, as it is here. There needs no curious inquiry how he could offer up that to God which was not his own, both because it was found in a public place, and in all probability utterly lost to its owner, and because he had no doubt a warrant and inspiration for it from the great Lord and supreme Owner of all things.

Genesis 22:14

Jehovah-jireh. The same Hebrew letters differently pointed make the sense either active, the Lord will see, i.e. provide or take care of those that commit themselves and their affairs to him; or passive, the Lord will be seen, i.e. will appear and show himself in the behalf of all those that love him.

As it is said to this day, wherein Moses wrote this book: this is still used as a proverb.

In the mount of the Lord, i.e. in greatest extremities and distresses, as we say, at the pit 's brink, it shall be seen, or, the Lord shall be seen or manifested. And although these words are used by way of remembrance of this great deliverance, and by way of accommodation to such-like eminent preservations from great dangers; yet they may have a further respect, and may signify, that this was but an earnest of further and greater blessings to be expected in this place, where the temple was built, and the Lord Christ was manifested in the flesh.

By myself have I sworn: so the Lord swears by his name, Jer_44:26; by his soul, in the Hebrew text, Jer_51:14; by his holiness, Amo_4:2; which is the same with by himself here. Hence also it appears that the Angel who speaks here is Christ and God, because this is God's prerogative to swear by himself, as appears from Heb_6:13.

Because thou hast done this thing; not that Abraham by this act did properly merit or purchase the following promises, as plainly appears, because the same things for substance had been freely promised to Abraham long before this time and action, Gen_12:2 13:16, only what before was promised is now confirmed by an oath, as a testimony of that singular respect which God had to Abraham, and to this heroic instance of faith and obedience.

Genesis 22:17

i.e. The city, by a usual synecdoche, as Deu_12:15 18:6, all the cities, and consequently the country adjacent; gate for gates. The sense is, they shall subdue their enemies. For the gates of cities were the places both of jurisdiction or judicature, Deu_21:19 22:15 Amo_5:12, 15 Zec 8:16; and of fortification and chief strength in war, Jud_5:8 Psa_147:13 Isa_22:7 Eze_21:22. And this promise was fulfilled both literally in Israel's conquest of Canaan, in David, Solomon, &c., and spiritually in Christ, Psa_110:1-3.

Genesis 22:20

This narration and genealogy is added for Rebekah's sake, and to make way for the following relation.

Genesis 22:21

From

Buz descended, as some conceive, Elihu the Buzite, Job_32:2.

Aram was so called, possibly because he dwelt among the Syrians, as Jacob, for the same reason, was called a Syrian, Deu_26:5. But there was another more ancient Aram, from whom the Syrians descended, Gen_10:22.

Genesis 22:23

Rebekah was afterwards Isaac's wife, Gen_24:1-67.

Genesis 22:24

A concubine was an inferior kind of wife, taken according to the common practice of those times, subject to the authority of the principal wife, and whose children had no right of inheritance, but were endowed with gifts. See Gen_21:14 25:6.

Maachah, a name common both to man, as 2Sa_10:6, and woman, as 1Ki_15:13.

Genesis 23:1

This is the peculiar honour of Sarah the mother of the faithful, 1Pe_3:6, to have the years of her life numbered in Scripture.

Genesis 23:2

Kirjath-arba, or, the city of Arba; so called probably from a giant or great man called Arba, who lived and ruled in those parts. See Jos_14:15 Jos_15:13. It is objected against this scripture, that this city was not called Hebron till Joshua's time, Jos_14:15; but this is a mistake, Joshua doth not say so, but only that the name of Hebron before, ( or in old time ), as this very particule is rendered, Deu_2:20, and elsewhere. So the sense is, the most ancient name of it was Kirjath-arba. Nor doth Joshua there give any account or reason of this change of the name at that time, or upon that occasion, as the sacred writers used to do in such cases, but rather supposeth that Hebron was the name of it before he came thither; and how long before that time he doth not express.

Abraham came into Sarah's tent, (see Gen_18:6-9) to weep for her, according to the laudable custom of all ages and nations, to manifest their sense of God's hand upon them, and of their own loss. See Gen_50:3 Deu_34:8, &c.

Genesis 23:3

To show his moderation in sorrow, and to take care for her burial, according to his duty.

Genesis 23:4

The privilege of burial hath been always sought and prized by all nations, whom nature and humanity teacheth to preserve the bodies of men, which have been the temples of reasonable and immortal souls, from contempt and violation; so especially by Christians, as a testimony and pledge of their future resurrection. See Num_33:4 Deu_31:23 Job_5:26. For which cause Abraham desires a distinct burying-place separated from the pagan people.

With you, in Canaan. There he, and after him other patriarchs, earnestly desired to be buried, upon this account, that it might confirm their own and their children's faith in God's promise, and animate their children in due time to take possession of the land. See Gen_25:9 Gen_47:29-30 Gen_50:13, Gen_50:25 Exo_13:19 Heb_11:22.

That I may bury my dead out of my sight; so she that before was the desire of his eyes, Eze_24:16, is now, being dead, become their torment.

Genesis 23:6

Hear us, my lord: here is a conjunction of the plural and singular number, because though but one person spake, yet he spake in the name of the whole community.

A mighty prince; Heb. a prince of God. Great and excellent persons or things are oft expressed by adding the name of God. See Gen_13:10. Or, by prince of God, they understand a prince favoured and beloved of God.

In the choice of our sepulchres; for each family had a distinct sepulchre.

Genesis 23:7

i.e. Showed a civil respect to them in testimony of his thankfulness. Religion allows and requires civility, and those gestures which express it.

To the people of the land; to the governors of the people, who managed all public affairs in the people's name and stead, and for their good.

The children of Heth, so called from Heth the son of Canaan, Gen_10:15.

Genesis 23:8

Heb. If it be with, i.e. agreeable to, your soul, that is, your will, or good pleasure; for so the soul is sometimes taken, as Deu_23:24 Psa_27:12 41:2.

Genesis 23:9

Machpelah, which seems to be the proper name of the place, Gen_23:17,19, so called from its duplicity, because the cave was double, either one for men, and another for women; or the one served only for an entrance into the other, which was the burying-place.

For as much money as it is worth; Heb. for full money, 1Ch_21:22,24; i.e. for money of full weight, answerable to its worth.

Genesis 23:10

Ephron dwelt, Heb. did sit, to wit, at that time, as one of the chief or rulers of the people; for so the word sitting is oft used, as we shall see hereafter.

His city; either where he was born, or at least where he lived.

Genesis 23:13

But if thou wilt give it; it is a short speech, and something must be supplied; either if thou wilt give or resign it to me; or, if thou be the man of whom I speak; for though Abraham knew his name, he might not know him by face, nor that he was then present. He prudently chose rather to buy it than to receive it as a gift, partly because it would be the surer to him and his, Gen_23:17,20, and partly because he would not have too great obligations to his pagan neighbours.

Genesis 23:15

He speaks of the common shekel, which many value at fifteen pence of English money; but others, more probably, at two shillings and sixpence, rightly, as I conceive, supposing that this was of the same weight and value with the shekel of the sanctuary, which was so called, not as if that were double to the former, but only because all shekels were to be examined by that standard which was kept in the sanctuary.

What is that betwixt me and thee? both friends, and rich men; it is not worth any words or trouble between us.

Genesis 23:16

In those times silver was paid by weight, Gen_43:21 Jer_32:10.

Current money with the merchant, i.e. right for quality as well as weight in the judgment of merchants, whose frequent dealing in it makes them more able to judge of it.

Genesis 24:1

He was one hundred and forty years old, comparing Gen_21:5, with Gen_25:20.

Genesis 24:2

His eldest servant of his house; viz. Eliezer, Gen_15:2. This ceremony was used in swearing, as now, so anciently in the eastern parts, as Gen_47:29, either as a testimony of subjection, and promise of faithful service, for this rite was used only by inferiors towards superiors; or, as some think, with respect to the blessed Seed, Christ, who was to come out of Abraham's thigh, as the phrase is, Gen_46:26, because this rite was used only to believers.

i.e. Not persuade nor engage my son to take; for Isaac, though forty years old, was not only willing to be governed by his father in this affair, but also to hearken to the counsel of this wise and faithful servant, of whom both his father and himself had such long and large experience. He knew that the Canaanites were not only gross idolaters and heinous sinners, for so many others were; but that they were a people under God's peculiar curse, Gen_9:25, and devoted to extirpation and utter destruction, which was to be inflicted upon them by Abraham's posterity; and therefore to marry his son to such persons had been a high degree of self-murder, whereby the holy and blessed seed had been in danger of great infection from them, and utter ruin with them. And Abraham's practice was afterwards justified by God, who hath oft showed his dislike of such unequal matches of his people with those infidels and idolaters, by severe prohibitions and sharp censures. See Exo_34:16 Deu_7:3 Jos_23:12 Ezr_9:1-3 Neh_13:23-25 2Co_6:14-15.

My country, i.e. Mesopotomia, Gen_24:10, which being largely taken for the country between those two famous rivers Euphrates and Tigris, from which situation it hath that name; so Chaldea, whence Abraham came, Gen_11:31 Gen_12:1, was a part of it.

My kindred, the family of Nahor, concerning the increase whereof he had received information, Gen_22:20, &c., which he justly preferred before the Canaanites, partly because though they were idolaters, as appears from Gen_31:19, Gen_31:30-35 Jos_24:2, yet they did worship the true God together with idols, as may be gathered from Gen_24:31, Gen_24:50, and from other places; and therefore there was more hopes of the conversion of one of that family; and partly because they lived at a great distance from the place where Abraham and his posterity did and should live, and therefore one of that stock would be more easily disentangled from her superstition and idolatry, because she was removed from the influences of the evil counsels and examples of her nearest relations, and partly because they were of the race of blessed Shem, and not of cursed Canaan.

Note here the prudence and piety of this good man, who, before he would take an oath, doth diligently inquire into the nature and conditions of it, and expressly mentioneth that exception which might seem to be of course supposed in it.

Genesis 24:6

In case she will not come hither, do not thou engage that he shall go thither. Why so?

1. Because there was more danger of infection from his wife and her kindred, because of their friendly, and familiar, and constant converse with him, than from the Canaanites, who were strangers to him, and lived separately from him, and had but little conversation with him.

2. Because the command of God to Abraham to come out of Chaldea, and into Canaan, did extend to his posterity also, whom God would oblige to dwell there as long as they could, that they might live in constant faith and expectation of the performance of God's promise in giving this land unto them.

Quest. How could he bring Isaac thither again, where he never was?

Answ.

1. Isaac might be said to be there before virtually, or in the loins of his father, as Levi is said to pay tithes to Melchizedek by Abraham in whose loins he was.

2. This again may be referred to the servant, that when he returned again he would not carry Isaac along with them.

3. He might reasonably suppose that Isaac must go once thither to fetch his wife; (for her coming so suddenly to him was an unexpected thing); but he would not have him promise, that when he had done so once, he should go thither again to live there with her.

He shall send his angel before thee, to direct and succeed thee in this enterprise. Compare Exo_14:19 23:20.

Thou shalt take a wife unto my son from thence; I doubt not of the success. He might say so, either by rational conjecture, both from the nature of the thing, and from the constant course of God's providence blessing him in all his concerns; or by particular assurance and inspiration from God.

Genesis 24:8

Thou shalt be clear from the obligation of this oath, and from the penalties of the violation of it.

Genesis 24:10

The goods of his master were in his hand, i.e. in his power to take, without particular orders, what he thought fit and necessary, either for his own use, or for the promotion of the present business.

The city of Nahor was Haran, by comparing Gen_28:10 29:4.

Genesis 24:12

Or, mercy. He makes no mention of himself, nor of the merits of his master, but he ascribes even temporal blessings, and much more eternal salvation, merely to God's mercy.

Genesis 24:14

That this was not a rash and vain fancy, but a special expectation and confidence wrought in him by God's Spirit, appears both by the eminent prudence and godliness of this person, and by the exact correspondency of the event with his prayer, and by parallel examples, as Jud_6:36 1Sa_6:7 14:8.

She that thou hast appointed; Heb. evidently pointed out; or, exactly searched out, as a person meet for him.

Genesis 24:15

According to the manner of the first and purest ages of the world, wherein humility and diligence, not, as in this degeneration of the world, pomp and idleness, were the ornaments of that sex and age. See Gen_18:6 29:9,18,20 Exo 2:16 Pro_31:27.

Genesis 24:16

She was a virgin not only in title and show, but in truth, for no man had known her, i.e. corrupted her.

Genesis 24:18

She said, Drink, my lord; for his retinue showed him to be a person of more than ordinary quality.

Genesis 24:21

The man wondered at her, i.e. at the wonderful providence of God, and the eminent answer of his prayer.

Genesis 24:22

The man took, i.e. gave to her, (as that word of taking, or receiving, is oft used, as Gen_12:19 Exo_18:12 29:25 Psa_68:18, compared with Eph_4:8), a golden earring; so the word signifies, Gen_35:4 Exo_32:2,3. Or, jewels for the forehead, which hung down from the forehead to the nose, or between the eyes. So the word is used, Gen_24:47 Eze_16:12.

Genesis 24:23

And said, or, for he had said; for it is probable he inquired who she was before he gave her those presents.

Genesis 24:24

So she signifies that she was Nahor's daughter, not by his concubine, but by his lawful and principal wife.

Genesis 24:26

Giving thanks to God for his marvellous assistance hitherto, and begging the continuance of his presence and blessing.

Genesis 24:27

His mercy and his truth, i.e. who hath showed his mercy in promising all manner of blessings, and his truth in performing his promises at this day. Or, it is a figure called hendyadis, for true mercy: q. d. he hath not only been kind to him in show, and in words, but in real and considerable effects.

My master's brethren, i.e. near kinsmen, as that word is commonly used, as Gen_24:48 Gen_13:8 Mar_3:31, 32.

Genesis 24:28

Not

of her father's house; either because her father was now dead, and Bethuel, who is hereafter mentioned, was not Laban's father, but his brother so called; or because the women had distinct apartments in the houses, and she went first thither according to her custom.

Genesis 24:31

Come in, thou blessed of the Lord, i.e. whom God hath so eminently favoured and blessed.

Genesis 24:32

Of which custom, see Gen_18:4.

Genesis 24:36

i.e. Hath purposed and promised, and doth by me engage that he will give. Things are oft said to be done, in Scripture language, when they will certainly and shortly be done.

Genesis 24:40

Before whom I walk, in obedience to all his commands, and in hearty trust in his promises and gracious providence towards me and mine.

Genesis 24:41

Clear from this my oath; Heb. from my curse, denounced against thee if thou shouldst violate thine oath. The words oath and curse are oftentimes indifferently used, because they commonly go together, and sometimes they are both expressed, as Num_5:21.

Genesis 24:42

i.e. The design or course in which I am engaged, as the word way is frequently used.

Genesis 24:47

First he asks who she was, then he gives the gifts to her; which is the right order, and is here observed in the repetition; which was inverted in the first relation, Gen_24:22,23.

Genesis 24:49

If you will show true kindness and real friendship to him in giving your daughter to his son, tell me; and if not, tell me, that I may look out a wife for him elsewhere. It is a proverbial expression, Num_20:17 22:26 Deu_2:27.

Genesis 24:50

Laban is put first, either because this Bethuel was not his father, but his younger brother, as Josephus thinks; or because Laban was the chief manager of this business, to whom his father seems to have committed the care of his family, being himself unfit for it through age or infirmity.

The thing proceedeth from the Lord, from God's counsel and special providence. Hereby it appears they had the knowledge and worship of the true God among them, though they added idols to him. We cannot without opposing God speak or act any thing which may hinder thy design, or thwart thy desire. Compare Gen_31:24,29 2Sa_13:22.

Genesis 24:51

Rebekah is before thee, i.e. in thy power and disposal; as this phrase is taken, Gen_20:15, and elsewhere.

Genesis 24:53

The precious fruits of the land from which he came; see Deu_33:13, &c.; or in general, other rare and excellent things. In those days men gave portions for their wives, as now they have portions with them.

Genesis 24:55

Others thus, a year, or at the least ten months, the word days being put for a year, as elsewhere. But it is very improbable that they would demand or expect such a thing from this man, whom they saw bent so much upon expedition.

Genesis 24:57

i.e. Understand her mind by her words, not so much concerning the marriage itself, in which she resigned up herself to the disposal of her parents and friends, and to which she had given an implicit consent by her acceptance of those presents which were made to her for that end, as concerning the hastiness of her departure.

Genesis 24:59

Her nurse was Deborah, by comparing Gen_35:8. In this corrupt family, the mother and the nurse are two distinct persons; but in Abraham's pious family there was no such principle or practice. See Gen_21:7.

Genesis 24:60

Thou art our sister, i.e. our near kinswoman; distance of place shall not alienate our affections from thee, but we shall still own thee as our sister, and, as far as we can, be ready to perform all the duties of brethren to thee.

Genesis 24:62

In the southern parts of Canaan, as Gen_12:9, at Beer-sheba, whither it seems, Abraham returned after Sarah's death.

Genesis 24:63

To meditate; to converse with God, and with himself, by pious and profitable thoughts and ejaculations, and fervent prayers, as for other things, so particularly for God's blessing upon this great affair, and so his prayers are eminently answered. He chooseth a solitary place, wherein he might more freely attend upon God without any interruption or distraction, in the field at the eventide; that as he had begun the day with God, so he might close it with him, and commit himself to his protection. Compare Psa_55:17.

Genesis 24:64

As a testimony of her respect to him, whom by the servant she understood to be her lord and husband. Compare Jos_15:18 1Sa_25:23.

Genesis 24:65

In token of modesty, reverence, and subjection. See Gen_20:16 1Co_11:10.

Genesis 24:67

Isaac brought her into his mother Sarah's tent, partly to give her possession of it, and partly to consummate the marriage. Women then had their tents apart from men. See Gen_18:10 24:67 31:33.

Isaac was comforted after his mother's death; a sorrowful sense whereof he yet had retained, though she died three years before this time.

Genesis 25:1

After Sarah's death and Isaac's marriage Abraham took a wife, ( a secondary wife, or a concubine, as she is called, Gen_25:6, and 1Ch_1:32), not from any inordinate lust, which his age and eminent grace may sufficiently evince, but from a desire of more children, and of accomplishing God's promise concerning the great multiplication of his seed.

Keturah was a distinct person from Hagar, as appears from Gen_25:6, and Gen_25:12, and, as it seems, of better quality, and younger, for Hagar was now eighty years old, and not likely to be a mother of six children.

Genesis 25:2

Quest. How could Abraham, being now about one hundred and forty years old, have so many children, when his body was dead in his hundredth year?

Answ. Because that renewed strength which was miraculously conferred upon him, did still in a great measure remain in him, being not a temporary action, but a durable habit or power.

These persons were the heads of several people dwelling in Arabia and Syria, where we shall find evident footsteps of their names amongst ancient geographers, only a little changed, which could not be avoided in their translation into another language.

Midian, the father of those Midianites, of whom we read Gen_36:35 Jud_6:2 Isa_10:26. From Shuah Bildad seems to be descended, Job_2:11.

Genesis 25:4

Ephah; of whom see Isa_60:6. From Epher some think Africa received its name.

Genesis 25:5

Which before he purposed and promised to give, Gen_24:36, and now actually gave; except that which is excepted in Gen_25:6, and except the use and enjoyment of his estate during his own life.

Genesis 25:6

The concubines, Hagar and Keturah. Concubines are sometimes called wives, as Gen_16:3 Jud_19:1-3, 29, but their children had no right to the inheritance. For though the children of Jacob's concubines did equally partake of the inheritance with the other children, that was done by Divine appointment, and Jacob's voluntary act, and upon special reason, because of the vast inheritance promised, and afterwards given to them, which made it no loss, but a great convenience and advantage to the children of the chief wives to have their half-brethren, the sons of the concubines, seated so near to them.

Sent them away from Isaac; partly, that the entire possession of that land might be reserved to the children of Isaac; and partly, lest nearness of relation joined with cohabitation or neighbourhood should beget a great familiarity between them, whereby Isaac's seed were likely to be infected by their brethren, whose degeneration and apostacy Abraham might easily foresee from the evil inclinations of their own hearts, and God's exclusion of them from that covenant of grace and life, which was the only effectual remedy against that powerful and universal corruption.

Eastward, unto the east country; into Arabia, and other parts of Asia the Greater, which were situate eastward from the southern part of Canaan where Abraham now was, whence these people are oft called the children of the east, as Jud_6:3 7:12 Job_1:3.

Genesis 25:8

His soul was not required of him, as it was of that fool, Luk_12:20; not forced from him by sharp and violent diseases, but was quietly, easily, and cheerfully yielded up by him into the hands of his merciful God and Father, as the word intimates, in a good old age; good, both graciously, his hoary head being found in the way of righteousness; and naturally, free from the manifold infirmities and calamities of old age. Of which see Ecc_12:1, &c.

Full of years; in the Hebrew it is only full, or satisfied; but you must understand, with days or years, as the phrase is fully expressed, Gen_35:29 1Ch_23:1 29:28 Job_42:17 Jer_6:11. When he had lived as long as he desired, being in some sort weary of life, and desirous to be dissolved; or full of all good, as the Chaldee renders it; satisfied, as it is said of Naphtali, Deu_33:23, with favour, and full with the blessing of the Lord upon himself, and upon his children; he was gathered to his people; to his godly progenitors, the former patriarchs, the congregation of the just in heaven, Heb_12:23; in regard of his soul: for it cannot be meant of his body, which was not joined with them in the place of burial, as the phrase is, Isa_14:20, but buried in a strange land, where only Sarah's body lay. And it is observed, that this phrase is used of none but good men, of which the Jews were so fully persuaded, that from this very expression used concerning Ishmael here below, Gen_25:17, they infer his repentance and salvation. See this phrase, Gen_15:15 49:29 Num_20:24 27:13 Jud_2:10.

Genesis 25:9

Ishmael, though banished from his father's house, lived in a place not very far from him; and as no doubt he received many favours from his father after his departure, which is implied here, Gen_25:6, though it be not mentioned elsewhere; so it is probable that he had a true respect and affection to his father, which he here expresseth.

Genesis 25:12

They are here recorded as an evidence of God's faithfulness in fulfilling his promise made to Abraham, Gen_16:10 17:20. cir. 1800

Genesis 25:13

Nebajoth; of whom see Isa_60:7. From whom part of Arabia was called Nabathaea.

Of

Kedar, see Psa_120:5 Isa_21:16 Jer_49:28; the father of those called Cedraei, or Cedareni, in Arabia.

Genesis 25:14

Dumah; from him Dumah, Isa_21:11, or Dumatha, a place in Arabia, seems to have received its name. Others make him the father of the Idumeans.

Genesis 25:15

Tema gave his name to the city and country of Tema, or Teman, Job_2:11 6:19 Jer_25:23.

Jetur, the father of the Itureans, as may be gathered from 1Ch_5:19.

Genesis 25:18

Before Egypt, as thou goest toward Assyria, i.e. on that part or side of Egypt which leads to Assyria.

He died in the presence of all his brethren; his brethren surviving him, and being his neighbours, and therefore as they had conversation with him in the time of his life, so now they did him honour at his death. But this translation and interpretation may seem improbable,

1. Because his death was related, Gen_25:17, and would not be so presently repeated.

2. Because the foregoing words in this verse speak not of his death, but of his dwelling, to which these words do very well agree. For what we translated and he died, is commonly rendered and he fell, or it fell, and is most commonly used concerning a lot whereby men's portions are designed and divided, as Lev_16:9,10 Num 33:54 Jos_16:1; and so the sense may be, it fell, i.e. that country fell to him or his; or he lay, or was stretched out, or posted himself, as the Hebrew word is used, Jud_7:12, i.e. he dwelt in the presence of all his brethren; and so indeed his country lay between the children of Keturah on the east, and the children of Isaac and Israel on the west.

Genesis 25:20

Bethuel the Syrian of Padan-aram; either of the country of Syria, as it is called, Hos_12:12; or rather, Padan of Syria; or, as the Septuagint and Chaldee render it, Mesopotamia of Syria. For that Parian is the proper name of a place, may be gathered from Gen_48:7, and it is so called from its situation between two rivers, for Padan signifies a pair or two.

1857

He prayed, as the Hebrew word signifies, instantly or fervently, frequently and continually, for near twenty years together; for so long, it was between their marriage and the first child. He was so much concerned, because not only his comfort, but the truth of God's promise, depended upon this mercy; and he knew very well that God's purpose and promise did not exclude, but require the use of all convenient means for their accomplishment.

For his wife; or, in the presence of his wife; signifying that, besides their more secret devotions, they did oftentimes in a more solemn manner, and with united force, pray for this mercy wherein they were both equally concerned. Or, over against his wife, noting that each of them did severally and apart entreat God for this mercy, so that there was a concurrence, if not in place, yet in design and action.

She was barren, as divers of those holy women that were progenitors of Christ have long been, that it might appear that that sacred stock was propagated more by the virtue of God's grace and promise than by the power of nature.

Genesis 25:22

The children struggled, in a violent and extraordinary manner, which was likely to cause both pain and fear in her. The sense may be either,

1. If it be

thus with me, that there be two children contending and fighting within me, likely to destroy one the other, and both threatening my death, why did I desire and pray for this as a great mercy? Or, why is it thus with me? Why hath God dealt thus with me, to continue my life till it be a burden to me, and to give me conception which is so painful and hazardous? Or rather,

2. If God hath granted me my desire in the conception of a child, what means this disturbance and conflict within me, which threatens me with loss of the mercy before I enjoy it? For she seems not so much to murmur at it, as to wonder and to inquire about it, as it here follows.

She went to inquire of the Lord; either immediately, by ardent prayers to God that he would reveal his mind to her herein; or mediately, by her father Abraham, who lived fifteen years after this time, Gen_25:7, or by some other godly patriarch yet surviving, by whom God used to manifest his will and counsels to others, when he thought fit.

Genesis 25:23

The Lord spoke, either by inward inspiration, in a dream or vision; or by the ministry of an angel or prophet.

Two nations, i.e. the roots, heads, or parents of two distinct nations, one opposite to the other; the one blessed, the other cursed, namely, the Israelites and Edomites.

Shall be separated; not only separated from thee, but one separated or greatly differing from the other in their frame of body, temper of mind, course of life, profession and practice of religion.

The elder, or, the greater, namely Esau, who was, as older, so of a stronger constitution of body, and of greater power and dignity in the world than Jacob; and Esau's posterity were great princes for a long time, when Jacob's seed were strangers in Canaan, slaves in Egypt, and poor afflicted wanderers in the wilderness. But, saith he, Esau and his shall not always be stronger and mightier than Jacob and his posterity, the tables shall be turned, and the children of Israel shall be uppermost and subdue the Edomites, which was literally accomplished in David's time, 2Sa_8:14; and afterwards, 2Ch_25:11,12; and after that by the Maccabees; but much more eminently in a spiritual sense under the gospel, when one of Jacob's children, even Jesus Christ, shall obtain the dominion, and shall rule the Edomites no less than other heathen nations with his iron rod, and make them serviceable one way or other to his glory, and to the felicity of his true Israel.

Genesis 25:25

Red; with red hair upon all the parts of his body. From him the Red Sea is supposed to receive its name, it being so called, as the heathen writers tell us, from one who reigned in those parts, and was called Erythras, or Erythrus, which signifies red, the same with Edom or Esau.

Esau, i.e. made or perfect; not properly a child, but rather a man as soon as he was born, having that hair upon him which in others was an evidence of manhood.

Genesis 25:26

1837 Jacob, i.e. supplanter, or one that taketh hold of or trippeth up his brother's heels. See Gen_27:36.

Isaac was threescore years old. Thus God exercised his faith and patience twenty years, by comparing this with Gen_25:20, ere he gave him the promised blessing.

Genesis 25:27

Esau was a hunter of wild beasts, and afterwards an oppressor of men. Compare Gen_10:9. This course of life was most agreeable to his complexion, fierce and violent.

A man of the field; one that delighted more in conversing abroad than at home, whose employment it was to pursue the beasts through fields, and woods, and mountains, who therefore chose a habitation fit for his purpose in Mount Seir.

A plain man, a sincere, honest, and plain-hearted man; or a just and perfect man, as the word is used, Gen_6:9; dwelling in tents, quietly minding the management of his own domestic affairs, his lands and cattle, and giving no disturbance either to wild beasts or men.

Genesis 25:28

Isaac loved Esau, not simply nor chiefly because he pleased his palate, but because this was an evidence of his son's great respect and affection to him, that he would take such pains and incur such hazards to which that course of life exposed him, that he might please and serve his father.

But Rebekah loved Jacob upon better grounds, both because of his more pious and meek temper, and because of the oracle and promise of God.

Genesis 25:30

Red pottage; red by the infusion of lentiles, or saffron, or some other things of that colour. The word is doubled in the Hebrew text, to show how vehemently he desired it.

Edom, which signifies red; as he was at first so called from the colour of his hair, so now that name was confirmed and given to him afresh upon this occasion: q.d. He was rightly called Edom, or red, not only historically for his colour, but prophetically for this accident.

i.e. Speedily, without delay. So this Hebrew word is used 1Sa_2:16 9:13,27 2Ch_18:4. The birthright then had divers singular privileges; as,

1. Dignity and authority over his brethren, Gen_4:7 27:29,37 49:3.
2. A double portion, Deu_21:17 1Ch_5:1.
3. A special blessing from his father, Gen_27:4.
4. The priesthood and chief government of the affairs of the church in his father's absence, or sickness, and after his death, Num_8:16,17, &c.
5. The first-born was a special type, both of Christ, who was to be a first-born; and of the church, which is called God's first-born, as Exo_4:22; and of the great privileges of the church, particularly of adoption and eternal life. See Heb_12:23. And therefore he is justly called profane, Heb_12:16, for slighting so sacred and glorious a privilege.

Quest.

1. Could the birthright be lost?

Answ. Yes. See Gen_4:7 1Ch_5:1.

Quest.

2. Did Jacob well in this matter?

Answ. No; because he tempted his brother to an act of profaneness and folly, and so was guilty of his sin. And though God had designed and promised this privilege to him, yet he should have waited till God had executed his promise in his own way, as David did till God gave him possession of Saul's kingdom; and not have anticipated God, and snatched it by an irregular act of his own, as Jeroboam did the kingdom from Rehoboam.

Genesis 25:32

I am at the point to die; not with famine, which could not consist with Isaac's plentiful estate and house, but by the perpetual hazards to which his course of life exposed him in the pursuit of wild beasts, and contending with other men.

What profit shall this birthright do to me? by which he plainly showeth that his care and affections reached no further than the present life.

Genesis 25:33

Jacob acted subtly in this affair; he knew that delays were dangerous; and Esau's consideration, or second thoughts, might have spoiled his bargain, and therefore he requires haste, as in the sale, so in his oath; wherein he addeth another sin, in hurrying his brother into an oath by precipitation, which neither his brother should have taken, nor Jacob should have advised him to take, without mature advice.

Genesis 25:34

Secure and impenitent, without any remorse for his ingratitude to God, or the injury which he had done to himself and to all his posterity, he went his way, despising his birthright, preferring the present and momentary satisfaction of his lust and appetite before God's and his father's blessing, and all the glorious privileges of the birthright.

Genesis 26:1

Abimelech is not he mentioned Gen_20:2, but most probably his son and successor, called by his father's name.

Genesis 26:2

To Egypt it seems Isaac intended to go, it being a very fruitful place, and being encouraged to do so by his father's example upon the same occasion. But God saw good reasons to forbid Isaac to go thither, which it is needless to inquire, and not difficult to conjecture.

Genesis 26:3

Unto thee, and unto thy seed; to thee to enjoy for thy present comfort, and to them to possess as an inheritance. See Poole on "Gen_13:15", see Poole on "Gen_15:18".

I will perform the oath, i.e. the promises confirmed by oath, Gen_22:16, &c.

Genesis 26:5

Here was a covenant made between God and Abraham; and as, if Abraham had broken the condition of walking before God required on his part, God had been discharged from the promise made on his part; so contrarily, because Abraham performed his condition, God engageth himself to perform his promise to him, and to his seed. But as that promise and covenant was made by God of mere grace, as is evident and confessed; so the mercies promised and performed to him and his are so great and vast, that it is an idle thing to think they could be merited by so mean a compensation as Abraham's obedience, which was a debt that he owed to God, had there been no such covenant or promise made by God, and which also was an effect of God's graces to him and in him.

Genesis 26:8

Using more free and familiar carriage than became a brother and sister, but such as was allowable between husband and wife. See Deu_24:5 Pro_5:18,19. But that this was not the conjugal act, may easily be gathered from the circumstances of the time and place; which was open to Abimelech's view; and therefore that was not consistent either with Isaac's modesty or with his prudence, because he would not have her thought to be his wife.

Genesis 26:10

The heathens esteemed fornication either no sin, or a very little one; but adultery was heinous and formidable even among the heathens, and especially here, because it was fresh in memory how sorely God had punished Abimelech, and all his family, only for an intention of adultery, Gen_20:1-18. Note here, they take it for granted that their ignorance had not been a sufficient excuse for their sin.

Genesis 26:11

He that hurteth or injureth. So that word is used, Gen_26:29 Jos_9:19 Psa_105:15 Zec_2:8; and being applied to a woman, it is used for the defiling or humbling of her, as Gen_20:6 Pro_6:29.

Genesis 26:12

Isaac sowed in that land; either in the grounds which he had hired of the right owners, or in some grounds which lay neglected, and therefore were free to the first occupier; which was not strange in that age of the world, when the inhabitants of countries were not so numerous as afterward.

An hundredfold, i.e. a hundred times as much as he sowed. The same degree of increase is intimated Mat_13:8, and affirmed sometimes of other places by heathen writers; but then it was in a better soil and season than this was, for this was a time of famine or scarcity.

Genesis 26:14

Great store of servants; or rather, of husbandry, as this word is elsewhere used; of corn-fields, vineyards, &c.; for he is describing his riches, which then consisted in the two things here expressed, cattle and lands, which he diligently and successfully managed, Gen_26:12.

Genesis 26:16

Which breeds envy, and jealousy, and fear among my subjects, and may occasion greater mischiefs; and therefore it is better that we should part friends, than by continuing together be turned into enemies.

Genesis 26:18

Though there might be a brook there, probably it was but little, and soon dried up.

And Isaac digged those rather than new ones, partly to keep up his father's memory, and partly because he had most right to them, and others less cause of quarrel with him about them.

Genesis 26:20

The water is ours, because digged in our soil; which was no good argument, because he digged it by their consent or permission at his own charge, and for his own use.

Genesis 26:23

Where he lived before the famine drove him thence.

Genesis 26:26

Phichol may be either,

1. The title of an office; for the word signifies, the mouth of all, or he by whom all the people were to present their addresses to the king, and receive the king's commands. Or,
2. The name of a man; and then this might be the son of him mentioned Gen_21:32, called by his father's name, as Abimelech also was.

Genesis 26:29

We have not touched thee, to wit, so as to injure or hurt thee, as above, Gen_26:11.

Thou art now the blessed of the Lord; or, O thou who art now the with blessed of the Lord, whom God hath enriched great and manifold blessings, which we did not take away from thee, as we could easily have done, but thou dost still enjoy them; and now art, as thou wert amongst us, the blessed of the Lord. Or, Seeing God hath blessed thee, it will not become thee to curse us, or to bear any grudge against us for that little unkindness which we expressed to thee. Or it may be a wish: If thou makest this covenant with us, be thou now the blessed of the Lord, we heartily wish thy blessings and prosperity may increase.

Genesis 26:31

They rose up betimes; partly for the despatch of their journey and business, and partly because then their minds were most vigorous, and sober, and fit to perform so sacred an action as an oath was.

Genesis 26:33

This name had been given before, either to this or a neighbouring place, by Abraham, Gen_21:31; but was now buried in oblivion, as his wells were; and the wells being revived, he revives and renews the name, which proved now a lasting name, unto this day, as here follows, which is not added Gen_21:31, because then the name, though given by Abraham, was soon forgotten and neglected by others.

Genesis 26:34

Both Hittites, the worst of the Canaanites, Eze_16:3; which, from his grandfather Abraham's severe charge, Gen_24:3, he must needs know would be highly displeasing both to God and to his parents. And as Esau had several names, being called also Edom and Seir; so it seems these women and their parents had, by comparing this with Gen_36:2, which was usual in those times and places. Or Esau had more wives than these.

Genesis 26:35

Because to their idolatry and other wickedness they added obstinacy and incorrigibleness, despising their persons and godly counsels, whereby they invited them to repentance.

Genesis 27:1

Isaac was about one hundred and thirty-seven years old.

He could not see; which was ordered by God's wise providence, not only for the exercise of Isaac's patience, but also as a means to transfer Esau's right to Jacob.

Genesis 27:3

Thy quiver, or, as the Chaldee and Hebrew doctors render it, thy sword; a weapon no less necessary for a hunter of beasts than a bow.

Genesis 27:4

Quest. Why doth he require that he may eat before he bless him?

Answ.

1. That being refreshed and delighted therewith, his spirit might be more cheerful, and so the fitter for the giving of this prophetical benediction; for which reason also the prophet Elisha called for a minstrel ere he could utter his prophecy, 2Ki_3:15.

2. By the special direction of Divine Providence, that Esau's absence might give Jacob the advantage of getting the blessing. He speaks not here of a common and customary blessing, which parents may bestow upon any of their children as and when they please; but of the last, solemn, extraordinary, and prophetical benediction, whereby these holy patriarchs did by God's appointment, and with his concurrence, constitute one of their sons heir, not only of their inheritance, but of Abraham's covenant, and all the promises, both temporal and spiritual, belonging to it. As for the oracle delivered to Rebekah, which transferred this blessing upon Jacob, Gen_25:23, either Isaac knew not of it, not being sufficiently informed thereof by Rebekah; or he did not thoroughly understand it; or he might apprehend that it was to be accomplished not in the persons of Esau and Jacob, but in their posterity; or at this time it was quite out of his mind; or he was induced to neglect it through his passionate affection to his son Esau.

Genesis 27:7

Before the Lord; solemnly, as in God's presence, in his name, and by his authority, and with his leave and favour, which I shall heartily pray for thee. So he signifies that this was more than an ordinary blessing which he now intended to give him.

Genesis 27:9

It is observable, that as Jacob deceived his father by a kid, so his sons deceived him by the same creature, Gen_37:31-33.

I will make them savoury meat, out of their most tender and delicate parts; wherewith it was not difficult to deceive Isaac, partly because of the likeness of the flesh, especially being altered by convenient sauce; and partly because the same old age which had dimmed Isaac's sight had also dulled his other senses.

Genesis 27:12

I shall appear to him to be indeed a deceiver, one that abuseth his age and blindness. The particle as sometimes signifies not the likeness, but the truth of the thing, Joh_1:14 2Co_3:18.

I shall bring a curse upon me, which is due to every one that deceiveth the blind, Deu_27:18, especially his father, and especially in a religious concern, Jer_48:10 Mal_1:14, such as this was.

Genesis 27:13

She saith so out of an assured confidence in the Divine oracle and promise.

Genesis 27:15

Either the sacerdotal garments which the eldest son wore in the administration of that office which belonged to him; or rather some other suit better than ordinary.

Genesis 27:16

Upon the two naked parts of his body, which were most likely to be discovered. As for his face, it is more than probable from his age, which was the same with Esau's, Gen_26:34, that nature had given him a covering like Esau's.

Genesis 27:19

This cannot be excused, for it was a manifest untruth, and no less is all this following relation, though it pleased God graciously to pardon it; and notwithstanding these failings, to confer the blessing promised upon Jacob.

Genesis 27:23

He discerned him not, because all his senses were not only dulled with age and infirmity, but also held by Divine Providence, as theirs, Luk_24:16, for the bringing about his own purpose; so that it is no wonder he was so grossly deceived in the whole business.

Genesis 27:26

Which he did, either that he might more fully satisfy himself concerning the person, or rather as a mark of that special favour and affection wherewith he bestowing the blessing. Compare Gen_48:10.

Genesis 27:27

Which is full of odoriferous herbs, and flowers, and fruits, and spices, with some of which Esau's garments might be perfumed in the chest wherein they were laid, as the manner now is. These garments smell not of the sheepcots and stables, as Jacob's do, but of the fields, in which Esau is conversant.

Genesis 27:28

God give thee, or, will give; for it is both a prayer and a prophecy. He mentions the dew rather than the rain, because it was of more constant use and necessity in those parts than the rain, which fell considerably but twice in a year, the first being called the former, and the other the latter rain. And under this and the following blessings, which are but temporal, are comprehended all manner of blessings, both spiritual, temporal, and eternal, according to the usage of that time and state of the church.

The fatness of the earth; a fat and fruitfull land, which Canaan was, abounding with all sorts of precious fruits. Compare Deu_8:8 32:13,14.

Genesis 27:29

Let thy mother's son bow down to thee. How and when this was fulfilled, see on Gen_25:23.

Genesis 27:31

That Esau did not come to his father till the meat was dressed, may be ascribed partly to his own choice, that he might come with more acceptance; and partly to Rebekah, who could easily hinder his coming sooner by specious pretences and artifices.

Genesis 27:33

Isaac was filled with astonishment and horror in consideration of Jacob's fraud, and the sad disappointment and great misery of his beloved Esau, and his own rashness and folly in suffering his fond affection towards him to carry him headlong into an opposition to the Divine oracle, Gen_25:23, which now came to his remembrance, as appears by his ratification of Jacob's blessing.

Who? where is he? A short speech, proceeding from a discomposed mind.

Yea, and he shall be blessed. This blessing, though otherwise intended by me, and pronounced upon a mistake of the person, shall and must rest upon the head of Jacob; and I neither can nor dare undertake to revoke and contradict God's appointment, which now I more fully discern, and in which both thou and I and all men must fully acquiesce. And now Isaac fixeth the blessing upon Jacob by faith, as it is expressed, Heb_11:20, which before, through misguided fancy and affection, he intended for Esau.

Genesis 27:34

He cried with a great and exceeding bitter cry, not for any sense of his former sin, in despising his birthright, but for grief at his great loss therein, because God would not suffer him to be perjured in keeping that birthright blessing which he had sold and sworn away.

Bless me, even me also, O my father, i.e. Thou art my father no less than his, and therefore, as a child, I claim a share in thy blessing.

Genesis 27:35

Which was thine by the right of nature, and by custom of nations, and by my hearty desire and intention, as well as by thy own expectation and opinion.

Genesis 27:36

He puts a perverse construction upon Jacob's name, as if it belonged not to him so properly, because of the manner of his birth, as because of his falseness and deceitfulness, and his tripping up his brother's heels.

He took away my birthright; a false accusation; Jacob did not take it deceitfully, but Esau sold it profanely.

Genesis 27:37

The blessing of Abraham is not at my disposal, but God's, who hath manifested his mind and will by my error; it cannot be divided into several hands, nor imparted to one, who, though my son, yet hath made himself unworthy of it.

Genesis 27:38

Hast thou but one? By these words Esau manifests his profane and worldly mind, that he esteemed this blessing but as one among many others equal to it, and did not apprehend the true and peculiar excellency and absolute necessity of it, and that it was impossible for him or his posterity to be happy without an interest in this covenant, and continuance in that church to which it was appropriated.

Genesis 27:39

In a country competently fruitful and refreshed with convenient dews and showers.

Object. Thus Esau seems to have the same blessing which was before given to Jacob.

Answ. 1. Though it may seem to be the same as to the fertility of the soil, in which divers other parts of the world did and do equal the land of Canaan; yet there is an observable difference in the manner of Isaac's expression. When he speaks of Esau, he only saith:

Thy dwelling shall be the fatness, & c. But when he speaks to Jacob, he saith: God give thee, or shall give thee of the fatness, &c.; which words being, as it may seem, purposely omitted concerning Esau, and so emphatically expressed concerning Jacob, seem to intimate, especially if compared with many other scriptures where that phrase is applied to good men, that Esau's fat soil was rather taken by himself than given by God; or if given by God to him, it was only by his general providence, by which he giveth food to all creatures; whereas Jacob's fat and fruitful soil was derived to him and his by God's special gift, as a token of his singular kindness, and pledge of greater blessings:

2. This is but one branch of the blessing; the other part, which concerns dignity and superiority, is expressly given to Jacob, Gen_27:29, and denied to Esau, Gen_27:40.

Genesis 27:40

By thy sword shalt thou live; by violence and rapine, in an unquiet and military posture, troubling others, and forced to defend thyself. But this, as also the following clause, though spoken to Esau, was not fulfilled in him, but in his posterity the Edomites, whose history makes good this prophecy. Thus things spoken and promised to Abraham were fulfilled in his posterity, as Gen_12:3 22:18.

When thou shalt have the dominion; when thou shalt grow potent. Some render the words thus, When thou shalt have mourned or groaned, as the same word is used Psa_55:2; when thou hast oppressed as long as I think fit.

Genesis 27:41

Esau hated Jacob; and this hatred was hereditary, extending to their posterity also. See Eze_35:5 Amo_1:11 Oba_1:10.

Esau said in his heart, within himself; although he could not contain it there, but declared his intentions to some of his confidants, by which means it came to Rebekah's ear.

Genesis 27:44

A few days; so she expected and intended, but was greatly disappointed, for he tarried there twenty years.

Genesis 27:45

Of thee by Esau's bloody hands; and of Esau, who was likely to suffer death for his murder, either by the authority of the magistrate, as God commanded, Gen_9:6, or by the hand of God, who oftentimes supplies the magistrate's defects in that particular, and in some extraordinary manner executes this vengeance. See Gen_4:11, 16 Ac 28:4.

Genesis 27:46

The daughters of Heth, Esau's wives, who were Hittites, Gen_26:34. Therefore let us, after the example of Abraham, send him to fetch a wife from his own kindred. This indeed was one reason, but the other she conceals from Isaac; thus prudently alleging several reasons, one to Jacob, and another, as it is probable, to Esau, and each most suitable to the person to whom she speaks.

Genesis 28:1

Blessed him, confirmed his former blessing, being now thoroughly sensible both of God's purpose, and of his own duty, wishing him also a prosperous and successful journey, as the word is used, Jos_22:7.

Genesis 28:2

The house of Bethuel. See Gen_22:22-23 Gen_25:20
Genesis 28:5

Bethuel the Syrian.

Object. He was no Syrian, but a Mesopotamian.

Answ. Syria is sometimes largely taken, and so it comprehends Mesopotamia, or Chaldea, yea, and Assyria, as appears from Isa_36:11 Dan_2:4.

Esau went unto Ishmael; either to his person, or rather to his family, called Ishmael by their father's name, as David is sometimes put for David's posterity; for Ishmael seems to have been dead before this, from Gen_25:17, though that may possibly be a prolepsis, and then this may be Ishmael himself.

Mahalath, called also Bashemath, Gen_36:3. He thought by this means to ingratiate himself with his father, and so to get another and a better blessing; but he takes no care to reconcile himself to God, nor observes his hand in the business. Besides, he mends one fault by committing another, and taking a third wife when he had one too many before, and her too he unwisely fetcheth out of that stock which was begotten to bondage, and was utterly incapable of the inheritance.

Nebajoth was Ishmael's eldest son, Gen_25:13, who alone is here mentioned, either in the name of all the rest, whose sister she is by consequence supposed to be; or because peradventure she and Nebajoth were Ishmael's children by the same mother, and the rest by another.

Genesis 28:10

It is not strange that Jacob went alone, as it appears that he did from Gen_32:10, when his grandfather's servant was attended with a so great retinue, Gen_24:1-67, because attendance was then necessary to procure him reputation, and to obtain the consent of the virgin and her parents to long a journey; but here, as it was unnecessary, so it would have been troublesome and prejudicial, exposing him both to the envy and snares of his brother Esau, which by this private departure he did avoid. Besides, God in his wise providence did so order this, and some other matters of the like nature, for the greater illustration of his care and kindness towards his children. Add to this the great simplicity, humility, and innocency of those times, if compared with ours, which made many things then usual which now would be ridiculous.

Genesis 28:12

This ladder may be considered, either,

1. Literally, and so it represented to Jacob the providence of God, who, though he dwell in heaven, extends his care and government to the earth, and particularly makes use of the angels as ministering spirits for the good of his people. And these angels do not appear idle, or standing still, but always in motion, either ascending to God to receive his commands, or descending to earth for the execution of them. Which was a most seasonable vision for Jacob in his sad and sorrowful condition, that he might see that though he was forsaken and persecuted by men, and forced to flee away secretly for fear of his life, yet he neither was, nor should be, neglected or forsaken by God in this whole journey. Or,

2. Mystically, and so it represents Christ, by whom heaven and earth are united, who is called the way to heaven, which this ladder was, who, as the Head of angels, is perpetually sending them forth either to God or from God to minister to the heirs of salvation, Heb_1:14; and this explication or accommodation of this vision, is warranted by our Saviour himself, Joh_1:51.

Genesis 28:14

i.e. The nations of the earth, as that word is used.

Genesis 28:15

Nor ever after; for so the word until is frequently used, as 2Sa_6:23 Mat_1:25; not so as to exclude the time following, but so as to include all the foregoing time, wherein the thing spoken of might be most suspected or feared; as here the worst and most dangerous state in which Jacob was, or was like to be, was this time of his banishment from his country and kindred, against which he is therefore particularly armed and comforted in these words.

Genesis 28:16

Surely the Lord is in this place, by his special and gracious presence, and the manifestation of his mind and will to me; and I little expected to meet with such a revelation out of my father's house, much less in this desert and doleful state and place, when I thought myself rejected by God, as well as abandoned by men.

Genesis 28:17

How dreadful is this place, or venerable, both for the majesty of the Person present, and for the glorious manner of his discovery of himself!

The house of God; the habitation of God and of his holy angels.

Genesis 28:18

As a monument of God's great kindness and gracious manifestation of himself to him, which might bring this mercy to his remembrance in his return, Gen_31:13. This was an ancient practice among the patriarchs, Gen_35:14; but afterwards, upon the growing abuse of it among the heathens, it was forbidden by God, Lev_26:1 Deu_7:5 12:3. The oil he brought with him either for food or medicine, or for the anointing of himself, as need required;

and poured it upon the top of the stone, as a token of his consecration thereof to this use to be a memorial of God's favour to him. Oil was used in sacrifices, and in the consecration of persons and places, Exo_30:25, 26 40:9.

Genesis 28:19

Either of that city which was nearest to the field in which Jacob lay; or of that city which afterwards was built in or near to this place, and was known by the name of Bethel.

Genesis 28:20

Jacob vowed a vow, i.e. bound himself by a solemn promise or obligation. Compare Gen_14:22 Ecc_5:4.

If God will be with me. He speaks not thus as if he doubted of the truth of God's promises, or would, like a mercenary person, make a bargain with God, but rather supposeth that God will do this for him, as he had in effect promised, Gen_28:15, and thereupon obligeth himself to a grateful return to God for this mercy:

If God will be with me, & c., as he hath just now assured me he will; or, Seeing God will be with me, & c., for the Hebrew im doth not always imply a doubt, but rather a supposition, and is oft rendered seeing that, as Exo_20:25 Num_36:4 1Sa_15:17 Amo_7:2. And so the Greek particle answering to the Hebrew im is used, Mat_6:22 Luk_11:34.

Bread; food convenient, as it is called, Pro_30:8, which is oft signified by the name of bread. See Gen_3:19.

Genesis 28:21

I will publicly own him for my God and the Saviour of men, and will establish his solemn worship, as it follows.

Genesis 28:22

God's house, i.e. a place where I will offer prayers and sacrifices to God; such places being commonly called God's houses, and God is oft said to dwell in them, in regard of his special presence there. See Exo_20:24. Compare Gen_28:17, and Gen_35:1,3,7.

I will surely give the tenth unto thee, to be laid out in thy service, and for sacrifices, and for the use and benefit of those who shall attend upon sacred things; as also for the relief of the poor and needy, whom God hath substituted in his room, and to whom part of the tithes were to be given by a following law, Deu_14:28,29.

Genesis 29:1

Heb. Jacob lift up his feet; which may note either the gesture of his body, that he went on foot; or the temper of his mind, that he went not sadly and unwillingly, drawing his legs after him, as we use to say, but readily and cheerfully, being encouraged by God's word.

The land of the people of the east; which lay eastward from Canaan, as Mesopotamia did.

Genesis 29:2

They, i.e. the people belonging to that place, watered; or, the flocks were watered; it is an impersonal speech.

A great stone was upon the well's mouth, to preserve the water, which was scarce in those parts, and to keep it pure.

Genesis 29:4

He calls them

my brethren, partly in token of respect and affection, and partly because they were of the same nature and employment with himself.

Genesis 29:6

According to the manner of those times, Exo_2:16 Son_1:7,8, when humility, innocency, simplicity, and industry were in fashion, both among men and women of great quality. There are some that quarrel with the Scripture, and question the truth of such relations, because they judge of the state of ancient times and things by the present age, whereby they discover great folly and deep ignorance of the state of former ages.

Genesis 29:7

Neither is it time that the cattle should be taken from their pasture, and brought to be watered.

Genesis 29:10

The vale of Siddim was chosen by those five kings for the place of battle, that their adversaries being ignorant of the place might unawares fall into those pits, which they by their knowledge of it thought to escape.

Kings of Sodom and Gomorrah, i.e. their armies; a figurative speech, frequent in Scripture and other authors; for their persons escaped: see Gen_14:17. They either,

1. Fell into the pits which they designed for others; or rather,
2. Were slain, as this word is oft used, as Jos_8:24,25 Jud 8:10 12:6; and here too; for those that fell are here opposed to those that remained.

Genesis 29:12

Lot now suffered for his cohabitation with bad neighbours.

Genesis 29:13

Abram the Hebrew; so called, either,

1. From his great and good predecessor Eber, Gen_10:24 11:14, in and by whom the primitive language and true religion were preserved; and therefore though Abram had five other progenitors between Eber and him, which were persons of less note, he is rightly denominated from Eber, the Hebrew, because he was the first that revived the memory and the work of Eber, that kept up the same language, and eminently propagated the same true religion. Or,

2. As others think, from his passing over the river Euphrates, from beyond which he came into Canaan.

These were confederate with Abram, i.e. had entered into a league for their mutual defence against common enemies. Whence we learn that it is not simply and universally unlawful to make a league with persons of a false religion.

Genesis 29:14

He armed his trained servants, whom he had disciplined and instructed both in religion and in the military art too, both which were necessary to make them good soldiers, that they might both fight with skill and courage, and also rely upon God, and engage his assistance; which was now especially necessary, when so small a party were to engage against so numerous an army.

Dan is commonly thought to be a town then called Leshem, Jos_19:47, or Laish, Jud_18:7, and afterwards Dan; see Jud_18:7,29; so it is an anticipation. But it may be doubted whether this was a city; or if it were, whether it were not another town called by the same name, which was frequent in those parts. And some think this is not a town, but the very fountain of Dan, whence Jordan had its name.

Genesis 29:15

He divided himself, i.e. his forces into several parties, that coming upon them from several quarters he might strike them with greater terror, whilst they thought his army far more numerous than it was.

Genesis 29:16

He brought back all the goods which the victorious kings had taken from the princes and people mentioned before in this chapter.

Genesis 29:17

So called either upon this occasion of the meeting of divers kings here; or because king Melchizedek either had his habitation, or was much delighted with it, and conversant in it. See 2Sa_18:18.

Genesis 29:18

Quest. Who was this?

Answ.

1. Shem, as the Jews and many others think, who probably was alive at this time, and, no doubt, a great prince. But neither is it probable that Shem should be a king among the cursed race of Ham; nor will this agree with the apostle's description of Melchizedek, Heb_7:3, without father and mother, & c. Whereas Shem's parents, and the beginning and end of his days, are as expressly mentioned by Moses as any other.

2. A Canaanitish king, by the Divine Providence made both a king over men, and priest unto the true God, brought in here in this unusual manner, without any mention of his parents, birth, or death, for this end, that he might be an illustrious type of Christ. Of this matter see more upon Heb_7:3.

King of Salem, i.e. of Jerusalem, called elsewhere Jebus, and Salem, Psa_76:2.

Bread and wine; not for sacrifice to God; for then he had brought forth beasts to be slain, which were the usual and best sacrifices: but partly to show the respect which he bore to Abram, and principally to refresh his weary and hungry army, according to the manner of those times. See Deu_23:3,4 25:18 Jud_8:5,6,15 1Sa_17:17.

He was the priest of the most high God: thus in succeeding ages the same persons were often both kings and priests, as the learned note out of Virgil and other authors. And this clause is here added, as the cause and reason, not for his bringing forth or offering bread and wine, as some would have it, (for that is ascribed to him as a king, as an act of royal munificence), but of the following benediction and decimation. In those times God had his remnant scattered here and there even in the worst places and nations.

Genesis 29:19

And, or therefore, ( as the particle is oft taken, i.e. because he was a priest of God),

he (i.e. Melchizedek )

blessed him, ( Abram,) which was one act of the priestly office. See Poole on "Heb_7:6". See Poole on "Heb_7:7". So it is a prayer for him, that God would confirm and increase the blessing which he had given him. Or, blessed is; so it is an acknowledgment of God's blessing conferred upon Abram both formerly, and in this late and great victory. Or, blessed shall be; so it is a prediction concerning his future and further blessedness, whereof this was only an earnest.

Genesis 29:20

Not Melchizedek gave to Abram, as some Jews foolishly understand it; for Abram swears that he would not keep nor take any of the recovered goods of the kings of Sodom, or his brethren, Gen_14:23. But Abram gave to Melchizedek, as appears both from Heb_4:7, and from the nature of the thing, for the tithes confessedly belong to the priest, such as Melchizedek, and not Abram, is here described to be.

All, not of all the recovered goods, but of all the spoils taken from the enemies.

Genesis 29:22

This was the ancient manner of swearing. See Exo_6:8 Num_14:30 Deu_32:40 Eze_20:5,6.

Genesis 29:23

That I will not take; Heb. If I shall take. Understand, God do so and so to me, which is expressed 1Sa_14:44. A defective manner of swearing used amongst the Hebrews, either to maintain the reverence of oaths, and the dread of perjury, seeing they were afraid so much as to mention the curse which they meant; or to show that they were willing to submit to any punishment which God should inflict upon them, without exception, if they violated their oaths.

Even to a shoe-latchet, i.e. any thing, though never so small or mean, lest thou shouldst claim a share with God in the honour due to him, to whose blessing alone I do and I will owe my riches. Or, lest thou shouldst say, Abram is enriched with my spoils; and however he pretended kindness and charity, yet indeed it was his covetousness that put him upon this work.

Genesis 29:25

Though Laban could not solidly answer the question, yet Jacob could do it, and had just cause to reflect upon his own former action of beguiling his father; for which God had now punished him in the same kind.

Genesis 29:26

This seems to be a false pretence; but if it had been true, custom is to give place to justice, by which he was obliged to perform his contract with him.

Genesis 29:27

Fulfil her week, the seven days usually devoted to the feast and solemnity of marriage, as Jud_14:12,15,17. And this he desired, that a week's cohabitation with Leah might either knit his affections to her, or at least confirm the contract and marriage with her.

Genesis 29:28

It was not so strange that Laban should give, as that Jacob should take, not only two wives, but two sisters to wife, which seems to be against the law of nature, and was expressly forbidden by God afterward, Lev_18:18; though it be also true that God might dispense with his own institution, or permit such things in the patriarchs upon special reasons, which are not to be drawn into example.

Genesis 29:31

Leah was hated comparatively to Rachel, less loved, slighted. So that word is oft used, as Deu_21:15 Mat_6:24 10:37, compared with Luk_14:26 Joh_12:25. Thus variously doth God distribute his favours, that all may be contented and none despised.

Genesis 29:32

The Lord hath looked upon my affliction with an eye of pity and kindness, as that general phrase is oft understood.

Genesis 29:33

The Lord hath heard, i.e. perceived or understood; hearing being oft put for understanding.

Genesis 29:34

This time will my husband be joined unto me in more sincere and fervent affection.

Genesis 29:35

Now will I praise the Lord more solemnly and continually; for otherwise she did praise and acknowledge God for the former mercies. cir. 1749

Genesis 30:1

A speech full of impatience, and bordering upon blasphemy, and striking at God himself through Jacob's sides; for which therefore she afterwards smarted, dying by that very means whereby she hoped to prevent her death, and prolong her life, Gen_35:18.

Genesis 30:2

Jacob's anger was kindled against Rachel for the injury done to himself, and especially for the sin against God, in which case anger is not only lawful, but necessary.

Am I in God's stead? It is God's prerogative to give children. See Gen_16:2 1Sa 2:5-6 Psa_113:9 Psa_127:3.

Genesis 30:3

She shall bear upon my knees; an ellipsis or short speech; She shall bear a child which may be laid upon my knees, or in my lap, which I may adopt and bring up as if it were my own. See Gen_50:23 Isa_66:12.

That I may also have children by her; for as servants, so their work and fruit, were not their own, but their masters'.

Genesis 30:6

God hath judged me, pleaded my cause, or given sentence for me, as this phrase is oft taken.

Genesis 30:8

With great wrestlings, Heb. With wrestlings of God; either with great and hard wrestlings or strivings, or by wrestling with God in fervent prayer, and by God's grace and strength. Cir. 1747

I have prevailed; which was not true; for her sister exceeded her both in the number of her children, and in her propriety in them, being the fruit of her own womb, not of her handmaid's, as Rachel's were. Here is an instance how partial judges most persons are in their own causes and concernments.

Genesis 30:11

A troop cometh, or, good luck cometh; my design hath well succeeded; a happy star hath shone upon me; and such a star in the opinion of astrologers is that of Jupiter, which by the Arabians is called Gad. This may well agree to Leah and her heathenish education, and the manners of the Chaldeans, who were much given to the study of the stars.

Genesis 30:13

The daughters of men, i.e. women, as Pro_31:29 Son_6:9.

Mandrakes: the word is only found here and Son_7:13, whence it appears that it is a plant or fruit of pleasant smell, such as the mandrake is said to be by Dioscorides and Levinus Lemnius, and by St. Austin upon his own experience. If it be said this was too early for mandrakes to be ripe, it being now but wheat-harvest; it may be replied, that fruits ripen much sooner in those hot countries than elsewhere, and that they are not here said to be ripe, but only to be gathered.

Give me, I pray thee, of thy son's mandrakes; which she might desire, either because they were pleasant to the eye or taste, or because they were thought helpful to conception.

Genesis 30:15

Jacob either did equally divide the times between his two wives; or rather, had more estranged himself from Leah, and cohabited principally with Rachel, which occasioned the foregoing expostulation.

Genesis 30:16

He ratified their agreement, that he might preserve peace and love amongst them.

Genesis 30:17

God hearkened unto Leah, notwithstanding her many infirmities. Hence it appears that she was moved herein not by any inordinate lust, but by a desire of children. cir. 1747

Genesis 30:18

Thus she mistakes the answer of her prayers for a recompence of her error.

Genesis 30:23

Barrenness was then accounted a great reproach, especially in that race, because it was a kind of curse, whereby such persons were excluded both from the first and general blessing of fructification given to all mankind, Gen_1:28; and from the special blessing given to Abraham for the multiplication of his seed; and from all hopes of being the progenitors of the blessed Messias.

Genesis 30:25

Canaan, which he calleth his country, in regard both of his former and long habitation in it, and of the right which he had to it by God's promise: see Gen_28:13.

Genesis 30:29

How carefully it was managed, and how greatly improved by my care and industry.

Genesis 30:30

For it was little comparatively to what now it is.

Since my coming; Heb. at my foot, i.e. upon my coming; since my feet entered into thy house: or, by my foot, i.e. by my ministry and labour, as this phrase is used, Deu_11:10.

When shall I provide for mine own house also, according to my duty, which also is thy interest?

Genesis 30:32

Speckled and spotted cattle, which may seem to be thus distinguished; speckled with little spots, and spotted with greater spots or stains, both of diverse colours from the rest of the body. Or, the speckled may be the same with the ring-straked, by comparing this with Gen_30:35.

All the brown cattle; or black, or dark-coloured; for the Hebrew word signifies also great heat which produceth such a colour.

Of such shall be my hire; or, then shall be my hire; and for then, as is frequent in Scripture. The sense is: Then, when the speckled, and spotted, and brown are separated, and none but white remaining, my hire shall be out of those white ones, and that in such manner as is expressed in Gen_30:33, all the white young ones shall be thine, and the speckled, and spotted, and brown which shall be brought forth by those white ones shall be mine.

Genesis 30:33

When the cattle shall, contrary to their natural and usual course, bring forth young ones of a contrary colour to their own, it will hereby be evident that this is the work of God, who hereby pleads my righteous cause against a cruel and unjust master. Or thus, When thou shall accuse me of doing thee injury, I shall have this manifest and undeniable evidence of my righteousness or innocency, that I have no cattle but of that colour which is by agreement appropriated to me.

When it shall come for my hire before thy face. When it, i.e. my righteousness, shall come to, or upon my reward, i.e. when my righteousness shall appear in the very colour of that cattle which is allotted to me for my reward or hire;

before thy face, i.e. thou being present and diligently observing whether I have any cattle of another colour. But the Hebrew word tabo is also of the second person, and so the sense seems to be this, When thou shalt come upon my hire or reward, to wit, to observe and see whether I have any other cattle than what belongs to me. And so these words come in by way of parenthesis; and the following words, before my face, are to be joined to the former words, thus, so shall righteousness answer for me in time to come (when thou shalt come upon my hire) before thy face. This I prefer before the other, because the phrase of coming upon his hire seems more properly to agree to a person than to his righteousness.

Genesis 30:34

Laban trusted to the course of nature, whereby cattle usually bring forth their young of their own colour; and Jacob relied upon the providence of an Almighty God, and his gracious Father.

Genesis 30:35

The he-goats that were ring-straked, which had lines or strakes like bands about them of diverse colours from the rest of their body.

Every one that had some white: this word some is oft understood in other texts of Scripture, and here it is so necessarily; as appears both from the thing itself, as it is related, and from the phrase; for he saith not that was white, but that had white in it, to wit, mixed with other colours.

Genesis 30:36

Three days' journey; understand it of the journeying or travelling of sheep, not of men. He did this lest either Jacob should mingle and exchange the sheep, or the sheep, by the contemplation of the diverse coloured ones, should bring forth others like to them.

Genesis 30:37

Jacob took rods: this he did by Divine appointment, as will appear in the sequel, which is sufficient for Jacob's justification.

Took rods of green poplar, and of the hazel and chesnut tree; either because these trees were next at hand, or because he saw these in the Divine vision afterwards mentioned, and would exactly follow his pattern. He made the white appear, by pilling off the rind which covered it.

Genesis 30:38

When by their refreshment and meeting together, they were most likely to generate and conceive.

Genesis 30:39

The flocks conceived; Heb. were heated, i.e. inflamed or excited, and disposed to conceive, and this in a more than ordinary manner by the Divine disposal. The event hath some foundation in nature, because of the great power of imagination; and there are divers instances in many authors, both of women and of beasts, who either by the strong fancying, or by the actual and frequent contemplation, of some certain objects, have brought forth young ones exactly of the same colour and complexion, as one did an Ethiopian, &c. But the providence of God was the principal cause of this effect, without which the productions of that kind would neither have been so many nor so certain. This policy of Jacob's could scarcely be excused from deceit and injustice, if it were not manifest that it was done by the direction and authority of the sovereign Lord of all estates, Gen_31:9,11, &c., who may take them from one, and give them to another, as it pleaseth him; who also observed Laban's injustice, and gave to Jacob no more than he abundantly deserved from Laban.

Genesis 30:40

Jacob did separate the lambs, such as were ring-straked and brown from the white, as it here follows. He caused the ring-straked and all the brown to go foremost, and the white to follow them, that by the continued beholding of them in the time of their conjunction, they might have their colour more imprinted upon their fancies, and thereby convey it to their young ones. He put them not unto Laban's cattle; which he did upon the same reason, lest the constant beholding of them should make them bring forth the like, i.e. single-coloured ones.

Genesis 30:41

It is known that the cattle in those parts did conceive and bring forth twice in a year, at spring and in autumn; and it is supposed that the stronger here mentioned, are such as joined in the spring, and the feeble they that joined in autumn.

Genesis 31:1

These riches, which are called glory, Gen_45:13 Psa_49:16 Isa_66:12, compared with Isa_60:6, because their possessors use to glory in them, and by them gain glory and esteem from others.

Genesis 31:2

And this change of his countenance argued a change in his mind, and prosaged some evil intentions in him towards Jacob.

Genesis 31:4

Rachel is first named here, as also Rth_4:11, because she was his chief, and, by right, his first and only designed wife. And therefore it is observable, that in the enumeration of Jacob's wives and children, Gen_46:1-34,

Leah is only mentioned by her name, Gen_46:15, but Rachel is called Jacob's wife, Gen_46:19, by way of eminency, and in a peculiar manner. In the field they might more freely discourse of their business, and without fear or interruption.

Genesis 31:5

Either,

1. Hath blessed me; hath stood constantly by me, when your father hath failed and deceived me. Or,

2. Hath appeared unto me, as Gen_31:13.

Genesis 31:6

With all my power, both of my mind and body, as I would have done for myself, as became a faithful servant to do.

Genesis 31:7

Ten times, i.e. oftentimes, as that certain number is commonly used, as Lev_26:26 Num_14:22 1Sa_1:8 Job_19:3, &c.

Genesis 31:8

All the cattle. All is here, as oft elsewhere, put for the greater or the better part, as appears from Gen_31:1,8. Or, for all that Jacob desired to be such.

The ring-straked shall be thy hire; hence it appears that Laban through envy and covetousness did break his agreement made with Jacob, and altered it as he thought meet, and that Jacob patiently yielded to all such changes.

Genesis 31:10

i.e. Were marked with spots, like hail in colour and proportion, as the word signifieth.

Genesis 31:13

Where thou vowedst a vow unto me; of which see Gen_28:19,20. And this God here mentions to show his acceptance of that action of Jacob's, his mindfulness even of the past and forgotten services of his people, and his purpose now to fulfil the promise there made to him.

Genesis 31:14

We can expect no further benefit from him, but deceit, and oppression, and injury, and therefore are willing to leave him. This was the fruit of his unnatural and unworthy carriage to them, that it did eat out their natural affection to him.

Genesis 31:15

Are we not confuted of him strangers? as if we had no more right to his estate than strangers? Instead of a good part of his estate, which by the law of God and nature belongs to us, 2Co_12:14, wherewith he should have endowed us upon our marriage, he hath made sale of us for this fourteen years' hard service, seeking only his own, not our advantage. He hath not only withheld from us, but spent upon himself, that money which he got by thy care and industry, whereof a considerable part was due in equity to us and to our children.

Genesis 31:16

That is ours; not only by God's special gift, but by the natural right which children have to a share in his estate, and upon the account of thy faithful and laborious service.

Genesis 31:19

Quest. 1. What were those teraphim or images?

Answ. They were images made in the shape of men, 1Sa_19:13, 16, which the Gentiles worshipped as subordinate gods, Gen_31:30, 32, to which they committed the protection of their families, 1Sa_19:13, which they used to consult about secret or future things, and from which they received answers about them, Eze_21:21 Zec_10:2. Of these see more Jud_17:5 18:14,17, &c.; Hos_3:4. And these idols Laban worshipped together with the true God.

Quest. 2. Why did Rachel steal them?

Answ. Partly, lest her father by consulting them should discover their flight, and the course which they took; and partly, because she seemed yet to retain a superstitious conceit of them, as may be gathered from Gen_35:2. Others, because they were pretty and precious things, made of silver and gold, which she took as a part of what was due to her, both as his daughter, and for her husband's service. Others, that she might remove so great an occasion of her father's idolatry, and show him the vanity of such gods as might be stolen away.

Genesis 31:20

Heb. Stole away the heart of Laban, to wit, his daughters, his cattle, and his gods, upon which his heart was vehemently set, as Micah's was, Jud_18:24. But if this had been meant, it had been imputed to Rachel, and not to Jacob, who knew nothing of the gods. Or rather, stole away from the heart, & c., the Hebrew eth being put for meeth, as Gen_4:1 49:25 1Ki_8:43, compared with 2Ch_6:33 Mic_3:8, i.e. without the knowledge and consent of Laban, which sense is confirmed by the words next following, and by Gen_31:26,27, and by the like use of the phrase, 2Sa_19:3. Thus he fled, because he knew Laban's selfish, and unrighteous, and cruel disposition, that he would always hinder him from departing, either by fraudulent pretences or by open force, nor suffer so great a diminution in that estate, which he thought one time or other he might in good measure recover to himself.

Genesis 31:21

The river Euphrates, which lay between Mesopotamia and Chaldea, Gen_15:18, which for its largeness and famousness is oft called the river emphatically, as Exo_23:31 Jos_24:2,3, &c.

And set his face, i.e. resolutely directed his course. See Jer_50:5 Luk_9:51,53.

Mount Gilead, a very high and long mountain beyond Jordan, adjoining to the mountain of Lebanon, at the foot of which there was a large and fruitful country, which from the mountain received the name of Gilead, Deu_34:1 Jer_8:22 22:6. This mountain is here called Gilead by anticipation, as appears from Gen_31:48.

Genesis 31:22

That he heard of it no sooner must be ascribed to the great distance which Laban had put between his and Jacob's flocks, Gen_30:36, and to the care and art which Jacob used to prevent a sooner discovery.

Genesis 31:24

Neither persuading him by flattering promises and cunning artifices, nor compelling him by threatenings, to return. For so these general words must be limited, as is evident from God's design in them, and from the following relation. So this is a synecdochical expression.

Genesis 31:26

By force and violence. A false accusation; for they freely consented, Gen_31:14-16.

Genesis 31:28

To kiss my sons and my daughters, as was usual at the parting of friends. See Poole on "Gen_29:11". But indeed Jacob took the wisest course for the security of his person and estate, especially having the direction and protection of God in it.

Genesis 31:29

The God of your father, Isaac or Abraham, by which he disowns him for his God, and tacitly reproacheth him with the novelty of his religion, which was first brought in by his father. Compare Gen_31:53.

Genesis 31:30

Laban could not be so senseless as to take those for true gods which could be stolen away; but he called them gods, because they were the means or representations whereby he worshipped his gods.

Genesis 31:32

Let him not live; I give my consent that he shall die by the hands of justice. A rash and inconsiderate sentence.

Genesis 31:33

The men and women's tents were distinct and separate. See Gen_18:2 24:67.

Genesis 31:35

Quest. How could that occasion hinder her from rising up to her father?

Answ. 1. It might be attended in her, as it was and is in some other women, especially in those hot countries, with a great flux of blood, or with more than ordinary infirmity and sickness; and this Laban might know to be usual with her by former observation or information.

2. She offers this as a reason, not why she could not rise up to show a civility to him, but why she could not rise up from his face, or from before him, as the words in the Hebrew sound, i.e. so as to give way to him that he might come and search there for the images; because menstruous women were anciently esteemed polluted, and to pollute the things which they touched or sat upon, as you may see by Lev_15:19-22; which law, though it were not yet given and written, yet that, as well as divers other ceremonial rites, might be enjoined by God, and observed by sober heathens at that time, especially by such as were akin to Abraham, as Laban and his family were, who by that means might easily come to the knowledge of such matters. Add to this, one of the seven precepts given to the sons of Noah, was that of uncovering nakedness; which both Jewish and Christian writers take to be a very comprehensive expression, and to include all such things as have a natural turpitude in them, among which this is confessed to be one. And the words thus understood contain a solid and satisfactory reason why Laban should not now come near her, nor search the things which she sat upon, which had been an uncivil and immodest thing.

Genesis 31:36

With so much fury and violence.

Genesis 31:38

Thy she-goats have not cast their young, which thou owest in a great measure to my care and diligence in ordering them, and principally to God's blessing given to thee for my sake, by thy own confession, Gen_30:27.

Genesis 31:39

Which was unjust and unreasonable, except where it fell out through the shepherd's default. See Exo_22:13.

Quest. How could Jacob pay these losses, seeing he came empty from his father's house, and got nothing by his service, for the first fourteen years, but his wives?

Answ. Either, 1. He had some supplies sent from his father, though it be not mentioned in this history. Or,

2. He might have some inconsiderable allowances or privileges from Laban, out of which he could easily defray these charges, which because of his great care and watchfulness did but seldom happen. Or,

3. These losses were put to his account, to be satisfied by him as soon as he should be able to do it.

Genesis 31:40

Through my extraordinary thoughtfulness and care about thy cattle, especially in cases of danger.

Genesis 31:42

The fear of Isaac, i.e. the God whom my father Isaac worships with reverence and godly fear, as appears by comparing Gen_31:53. The act is here put for the object, as it frequently is; and particularly God is called our fear, Isa_8:13. And fear is one of God's names amongst the rabbins. He calls him not Isaac's God, but his fear, because Isaac was yet alive, and in the state of probation, and served God with fear and trembling: see Gen_27:33. The Jews observe, that God is not called the God of any particular person, as of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, till after their death.

God hath seen my affliction, with compassion and intention of good to me for it. God's seeing is oft used for his relieving and helping, as Gen_16:13 29:32 Exo_3:7,9. Or, hath showed or proved it, to wit, that he hath seen, & c.: compare Gen_20:16. Either way it is an ellipsis of the pronoun, which is usual, as appears by comparing 1Ki_10:7, with 2Ch_9:6 and Psa_41:9, with Joh_13:18.

Genesis 31:43

He pretends that to be an act of his natural affection and kindness which was indeed the effect of his fear.

Genesis 31:44

Both to our own consciences of our mutual obligations, and to God against either of us who shall break it, that he may severely punish us for it.

Genesis 31:45

In testimony of his compliance with Laban's proposal, and his entering into this covenant. See Exo_24:4.

Genesis 31:46

To wit, afterwards, Gen_31:54, though it be here mentioned by anticipation.

They did eat there upon the heap, or rather by or beside the heap, as the Hebrew particle al is oft understood, as Psa_23:2 81:7.

Genesis 31:47

Both names signify the same thing, a heap of witness; only Laban gives the name in the Syrian language; but Jacob, though he had been long conversant in Syria, and understood that language, yet he chose to give it in Hebrew, which was both a secret renouncing of the Syrian manners and religion, together with their language, and an implicit profession of his conjunction with the Hebrews, as in their tongue, so in their religion.

Genesis 31:50

The curse is here understood, as it commonly is, to maintain a greater reverence for oaths, and to beget a greater dread of the curse belonging to the violaters of it.

No man is with us, i.e. here is now no man with us, who when we are parted can witness and judge between us, and punish the transgressor. Or thus, Though now we have many with us, as witnesses of this agreement, yet shortly, when we shall be parted, no man will be with us, to observe and report our actions to the other, or to do the injured person right.

Genesis 31:53

The God of Nahor, the God of their father. He joins idols with the true God, and secretly chargeth the religion of Jacob and Abraham with novelty, and prefers his own as the most ancient religion. See Jos_24:2. Whence we may learn that antiquity of itself is no certain argument of the true church or religion.

Genesis 31:54

Then Jacob offered sacrifice; either to give God thanks for the great mercies and deliverances vouchsafed to him, or to beg God's blessing upon the present treaty, and upon their whole family. But it is not so probable that Jacob would choose that time for the offering of sacrifices when Laban was present, whom he could neither honestly admit to them, nor conveniently exclude from them. And therefore, seeing the same Hebrew word signifies killing as well as sacrificing, as appears from Num_22:40 1Sa_28:24 1Ki_1:9 2Ch_18:2, &c., I rather understand it of his killing of beasts, in order to a feast which he made for his brethren, whom he called, as it here follows, to eat bread, & c., under which phrase all meats are usually comprehended in Scripture, as hath been already noted, and will appear hereafter. And this practice was usual in those times, to confirm covenants by a feast. See Gen_26:30.

Genesis 32:1

In visible, human, and glorious shape, as they frequently appeared to the patriarchs.

Genesis 32:2

God's host; so the angels are justly called for their great number, Dan_7:10 Luk_2:13, excellent order, mighty power, and for their use and service to God, and to his church, for whose protection they are sent. See 2Ki_6:17 Psa_34:7.

Mahanaim, i.e. two hosts; so called, either because the angels divided themselves into two companies, and placed themselves some before, others behind him, or some on each side of him, for his greater comfort and security; or because the angels made one host, and his family another.

Genesis 32:3

The land of Seir; of which see Gen_14:6 Gen_36:9 Gen_36:20-21; whither Esau had removed his habitation from Canaan, partly out of discontent at his parents; partly as most convenient for his course of life; and principally by direction of Divine Providence, that Canaan might be left free and clear for Jacob and his posterity. The land of Seir, the country of Edom; so that Seir and Edom either are one and the same place; or rather Seir was a part of Edom. Some say both names are put here for distinction. For they make two lands of Edom, the one southward from Canaan, the other eastward, and this latter they understood here, alleging that the other, or southern, was so remote from Mount Gilead, whence Jacob was now descending, that Jacob need not fear Esau at that distance, nor send to him. But as that distinction seems to be without solid ground, so this reason seems to have but little weight in it, both because though this history immediately follows his descent from Mount Gilead, yet it might be done some competent time after it, and because Jacob in his journey to those parts where his father Isaac lived, and whither he was going, was still drawing nearer and nearer to Esau.

Genesis 32:4

My lord Esau; which title being but a civil respect commonly given in Scripture to such persons as have no authority nor superiority over them who use it, as Gen_23:6 Gen_24:18, Jacob doth not hereby renounce his right of primogeniture which was devolved upon him, nor return it to Esau. Nor if he did hereby acknowledge Esau his superior for the present, would this have been injurious to that right, because Jacob was not yet in actual possession of it, for it was not to commence till his father's death; and indeed did more belong to his posterity than to his person; and as to his person, did more respect his spiritual advantages than his worldly greatness. See Gen_27:29.

I have sojourned with Laban, and stayed there until now, as a stranger and exile, and so a more proper object for thy pity than for thy envy.

Genesis 32:5

Yet in my exile God hath blessed me with a competency of worldly goods, and therefore I am not likely to be either a burden to thee, or a disgrace to our family.

And I have sent to tell my lord, to acquaint him with my coming, and with the state of my affairs, that I may obtain pardon for my former errors, and thy favour and friendship for the future.

Genesis 32:6

Esau gave them but an imperfect and a doubtful answer, as appears from Jacob's fear, Gen_32:7. He brought four hundred men with him; either as his usual guard, he being then a great man in those parts; or in ostentation of his power and greatness, in spite of all the injury which his father or brother did him; or because at first he designed mischief to Jacob, as may seem by his dismissing of his messengers without any testimony of his favour, though afterwards, upon Jacob's prayer, God changed his mind.

Genesis 32:7

Notwithstanding the renewed promise of God, and the late apparition of angels,

Jacob was greatly afraid; wherein he showed the weakness of his faith, to which God left him for his trial and exercise, and to quicken him to prayer, that so God might have more glory, and he more comfort in the mercy.

Genesis 32:8

Either by flight, or because he supposed Esau's revenge would be satisfied with the first slaughter.

Genesis 32:9

It is observable, that Jacob directs his prayers to God immediately, and not to the angels, though now, if ever, he had reason and obligation to do so, from their visible apparition to him for his succour and comfort.

Genesis 32:10

The truth, which thou hast showed unto thy servant, in fulfilling thy promises made to me; and much more am I unworthy of those further mercies which I am now about to beg of thee. Having nothing with me but my travelling staff for my support,

I passed over this Jordan; or, that Jordan; either which I now see, as being at this time upon a high hill; or which my mind is set upon, as that river which I am going to repass, that I may go to my father, and to that good land which thou hast given to me and mine for ever;

and now I am become two bands, or two troops, or companies; into which he had now divided his people and cattle, Gen_32:7.

Genesis 32:11

A proverbial speech, noting a total destruction. Compare Deu_22:6 Hos_10:14.

Genesis 32:13

Either that which was in his hand and power; or rather, that which was nearest at hand, and most ready for him, because the approaching night, and his own great fear, gave him not leave to make so scrupulous a choice as otherwise he would have made.

Genesis 32:16

That his gift might be represented to Esau with most advantage, and his mind might by little and little be sweetened towards him.

Genesis 32:18

Coming to see thy face, and beg thy favour.

Genesis 32:20

I will appease him; Heb. appease or allay his anger; for the Hebrew word panim signifies both anger, as Psa_21:9 34:16, and face, as every where, because a man's anger is most discernible in his face or countenance, Pro_21:14.

He will accept of me; Heb. will lift up my face or countenance, which now is dejected with the sense of his displeasure; compare Gen_4:6; or, will accept of my person, as this phrase is oft used.

Genesis 32:22

His eleven sons, and Dinah, though she be not here mentioned; as the women are oft omitted in Scripture, was being comprehended under the men.

Passed over the ford Jabbok, which is here generally related, but the time and manner of it is particularly described in the following verses. Of this ford Jabbok, see Num_21:24 Deu_3:16.

Genesis 32:24

In some private place, it matters not on which side Jabbok, that he might more freely and ardently pour out his soul unto God.

There wrestled a man with him, an angel, yea, the Angel of the covenant, the Son of God, as it is plain from Gen_32:28,30 Ho 12:3,4, who did here, as oft elsewhere, assume the shape and body of a man, that he might do this work; for this wrestling was real and corporeal in its nature, though it was also mystical and spiritual in its signification, as we shall see, and it was accompanied with an inward wrestling by ardent prayers joined with tears, Hos_12:4.

Genesis 32:25

Not through impotency, but in design, the angel suffered himself to be conquered, to encourage Jacob's faith and hope against the approaching danger.

The hollow of his thigh, the joint of his hip-bone, or rather the hollow in which that joint was.

The hollow of Jacob's thigh was out of joint, which was done that Jacob might see that it was not his own strength, but only God's grace, which got him this victory, and could give him the deliverance which he hoped for.

Genesis 32:26

And he said, Let me go: he saith this, partly to show the prevailing power of his prayer with God, and partly to quicken and encourage Jacob to persist in his conflict. Compare Exo_32:10 Deu_9:14.

The day breaketh, and I am not willing that there should be any spectators or witnesses of these things.

Except thou bless me with the blessings which thou hast promised to Abraham and to me, among which one is protection in this hour of my danger. For Jacob now began to think that it was no man, nor ordinary angel, that was with him, but God himself, as he saith, Gen_32:30.

Genesis 32:28

No more Jacob, not Jacob only. See the like manner of expression 1Sa_8:7 Jer_23:7 Joh_7:16 1Co_1:17.

Israel signifies a prince or prevailer with God; or, a prince of God, i.e. a great prince and conqueror. Thou hast in some sort conquered both God in this conflict and men, Laban, Esau, &c., and hast prevailed; or, and shalt prevail over Esau, of whom thou art afraid.

Genesis 32:29

Tell me, I pray thee, thy name, that I may give thee the honour due to it. Art thou a created angel, or art thou the ever-blessed God?

Wherefore dost thou ask after my name? A question which carries in it both a denial of his request, as Jud_13:17,18, and a reproof of his curiosity.

He blessed him there, in an eminent and peculiar manner, which was a real answer to Jacob's question, and gave him to understand both his name and nature.

Genesis 32:30

I have seen God face to face; not in his essence, for so no man ever saw God, Joh_1:18, nor yet in a dream or vision, but in a most evident, sensible, familiar, and friendly manifestation of himself.

My life is preserved; I am now well assured of my safety from Esau, whose approach threatened my life. Or he speaks of it with wonder, as others did, that he should see God, and not be struck dead by the glory of his presence. Compare Gen_16:13 Exo_20:19 Jud_6:22,23 13:22.

Genesis 32:32

Not from any superstitious conceit about it, but only for a memorial of this admirable conflict, the blessed effects whereof even the future generations received.

Genesis 33:1

Genesis 33:2

Placing his best beloved in the last and safest place.

Genesis 33:3

He passed over before them, exposing himself to the first and greatest hazard for the security of his wives and children.

Genesis 33:8

He knew his meaning before from the servants' mouths; but he asks, that he might both be more certainly informed of the truth, and have an occasion for a civil refusal of the gift.

Genesis 33:9

I neither need it for my use, nor desire it as a compensation for thy former injuries.

Genesis 33:10

For therefore I have seen thy face; or, for I therefore tender it unto thee, and humbly beg thy acceptance of it, because; for thus the Hebrew al-cen is used, Num_14:43, and elsewhere.

As though I had seen the face of God. It is in a manner as pleasant a sight to me as the sight of God himself, because in thy reconciled face I see the face and favour of God thus manifested unto me.

Genesis 33:11

Take, I pray thee, my blessing; this gift, which as I received from God's blessing, so I heartily give it to thee with my blessing and prayer, that God would abundantly bless it to thee. Gifts are oft called blessings, as Jos_15:19 1Sa_25:27 30:26.

Genesis 33:12

Or rather, beside thee, so as to keep thee company, or to keep pace with thee.

Genesis 33:13

The children are tender; the eldest of them, Reuben, not being yet fourteen years old.

The flocks and herds with young are with me; or, upon me, i.e. committed to my care, to be managed as their necessities require. See Isa_40:11.

Genesis 33:14

We do not read that Jacob did according to this promise or insinuation go to Seir; either therefore he changed his first intentions for some weighty reasons, or upon warning from God; or he used this only as a pretence, which we should not too easily believe of so good a man, especially after such dangers and deliverances; or rather he did perform this promise, though the Scripture be silent of it, as it is of many other historical passages, and as it is here concerning Jacob's visiting of his father Isaac, which is not mentioned till ten years after this time; and yet it is utterly incredible that Jacob should be so near to his dear and worthy father for so long a time together, and not once give him a visit.

Genesis 33:17

Built him an house, which doubtless was some slight building, because he intended not to stay there.

Genesis 33:18

Shalem; most take it for the proper name of a place belonging to

Shechem, as it here follows, called Salim, Joh_3:23, and Sichem or Sychar, Joh_4:5. But others take it for an appellative noun, and render the place thus, he came safe or whole to the city of Shechem; to note either that he was then cured of the lameness which the angel gave him; or rather, to note the good providence of God that had brought him safe in his person, family, and estate through all his dangers, first from Laban, then from Esau, till he came to this place, where it seems he intended to make his abode for a good while, had not the following miscarriages obliged him to remove.

Before the city, i.e. near to it, but not in it, for the conveniency of his cattle.

Genesis 33:19

He bought a parcel of a field for his present possession and use; for the right which he had to it was only in reversion after the time that God had allotted for it.

The children of Hamor, i.e. subjects, called his children to note the duty which they owed to him, and the care and affection that he owed to them. Compare Num_11:12.

An hundred pieces of money. The word is used only here, and Jos_24:32 Job_42:11, and it may signify either lambs, given in way of exchange for it, or pieces of money, which seems more probable, both by comparing Act_7:16, and because money was come into use in that place and time, Gen_17:12, 13 23:16 47:16, which were called lambs possibly from the figure of a lamb stamped upon it, as the Athenian money was called an ox for the like reason, and as we call a piece of gold a Jacobus, because the picture of that king is upon it.

Genesis 33:20

Or, called upon El-elohe-Israel, the particle lo being redundant, as such pronouns oft are, as Gen_12:1 Jos_20:2.

Genesis 34:1

From her father's house into the city, out of curiosity, there being then, as Josephus reports, a great concourse of people to a feast. Thus she put herself out of her father's protection, and merely out of a vain humour exposed both herself and others to temptation; which was the worse, because it was amongst them that had no fear of God to restrain them from the most enormous crimes. She was now fourteen or fifteen years old.

Genesis 34:3

Perceiving her to be exceedingly enraged and perplexed at this horrid violence, he endeavours to appease and sweeten her, and to get her consent to marry him.

Genesis 34:4

He desires both his father's consent and assistance herein.

Genesis 34:5

Being unable to punish the delinquent, and not knowing what to do, he waits for his sons' coming and advice.

Genesis 34:7

Because he had wrought folly; that is, wickedness; which howsoever vain men many times esteem their wisdom, by the sentence of the all-wise God is accounted and commonly in Scripture called folly, as Deu_22:21 Jos_7:15 Jud_19:23 20:6, &c.

In Israel, or, against Israel; either,

1. Against the person, and in or against the family of Israel, a person near and dear to God, and highly honoured by him, and in covenant with God; who therefore esteems the injuries done to Israel as if they were done to himself. See Gen_12:3 Exo_23:22 Zec_2:8. Or,

2. In or against the church of God, which then was in a manner confined to that family, and which is oft called by the name of Israel. See Deu_22:21 Jos_7:15. And Moses may here vary the phrase from what was used in Jacob's time to what was usual in his time, the sense being in both the same, and therefore not altered by such a change.

Which thing ought not to be done; Heb. shall not be done, i.e. should not, &c. But in the Hebrew language words of the future time oft signify duty and decency, as Mal_1:6 2:7.

Genesis 34:8

Hamor communed with them; with Jacob's sons, to whom Jacob committed the business, being himself oppressed with shame and grief, and fear for his daughter.

Your daughter, the daughter of your family; or he thus speaketh to her brothers, because they transacted all in their father's name.

Genesis 34:10

Before you, i.e. in your power, to dwell where you please, and to have the same rights and privileges in it which we enjoy. See Gen_20:15.

Get you possessions therein; or, take possession in it, i.e. in any vacant part of it; use it for pasture or tillage, as you think good, and take the benefit to yourselves.

Genesis 34:12

Dowry to her for her portion, according to the ancient custom of men's buying their wives; of which see Exo_22:17; and gift to you, either for reparation of the past injury, or in testimony of my respect to you, and desire of her, as Gen_24:53.

Genesis 34:13

Deceitfully; pretending and promising marriages with them upon that condition which they never intended.

Genesis 34:14

There was no such law yet in force, as the examples of Isaac and Jacob show, who married the daughters of uncircumcised persons; and therefore they do not here reject it as simply unlawful, but only as dishonourable and reproachful.

Genesis 34:20

The gate of their city, the place where all public affairs were debated and concluded. See Poole on "Gen_22:17"; see Poole on "Gen_23:10".

Genesis 34:23

Shall not their substance be ours? Either for our use and benefit in the way of commerce and trade; or because they will descend to the issue of our children as well as theirs; or because we being more numerous and potent than they, can easily overrule them, and when we think meet, dispose all things to our own advantage. Thus they cover their private design with the specious show of public good.

Genesis 34:24

They yielded to circumcision, partly in compliance with their young prince, whom they either loved or feared; and partly for the prospect of their own advantage, for which men are frequently willing to expose themselves to great pains and hazards.

All that went out of the gate of his city; all the citizens that went out of the gate, & c., or came in at the gate, as they are described Gen_23:10 Jer_17:20. For when the chief persons had consented, they could easily persuade or overrule others to comply with them.

Genesis 34:25

On the third day, when the pain and grief of wounds is the greatest, as physicians note, when they were sore, and therefore not well able to defend themselves; for circumcision caused great pain in children, which was the ground of that exclamation, Exo_4:25, much more in grown men. See Jos_5:8.

Simeon and Levi: these two only are mentioned, because they were authors of the counsel, and conductors of the rest in the execution; but it is probable, from Gen_34:27, that most of their brethren were confederate with them, and that they had a considerable number of their servants with them, who would be ready enough to revenge their masters' quarrel, and to punish so great a villany; but all that was done is justly ascribed to them two, as it is common for all writers to say this or that was done by such a captain or general, when in truth it was done by his soldiers.

Dinah's brethren; so they were both by the father and mother, which made them more forward and zealous than the rest.

All the males; such of them as were grown up, by comparing Gen_34:29, for these, or some of them, seem to have been the abettors of the injury against their sister and family. Their sin in this act was manifold; that they did it without sufficient authority, and against their father's mind, as appears from Gen_34:30, and Gen_49:6, which they well knew; and without all bounds, rashly, unjustly, and cruelly punished the innocent and the guilty together, and ushered in this fact with horrible deceit and lying, and that under pretence of friendship and show of religion.

Genesis 34:27

They, i.e. one of them, as oftentimes that which is done by one man is imputed to the whole body. See Jos_7:1,11,12 22:20 Mat_2:20. Or they impute Shechem's fact to all, either invidiously and cunningly to take off from themselves the reproach of this cruel action; or because they made themselves guilty of it, either by not discouraging and hindering that filthiness as far as they might, or by their being instrumental in it, or by their approbation of it and complacency in it.

Genesis 34:28

Thus they add to their cruelty theft and robbery, which doubtless Jacob disowned when they brought the spoil home, and returned back both the surviving people and their goods, though it be passed over in silence, as many other things are. See Poole on "Gen_33:14".

Genesis 34:29

Either in the prince's house, or in their several houses; or within doors, as the word signifies.

Genesis 34:30

You have not only discomposed my mind, but perplexed my affairs, and brought me into such troubles and dangers as I am never likely to escape. You have made me odious to the inhabitants of the land, who will impute this perfidious and bloody fact to my contrivance.

Few in number; Heb. men of number, i.e. few; for such can easily be numbered. So this phrase is used Deu_4:27 33:6, opposite to which are men without number, 2Ch_12:3.

They shall slay me: he could expect no other in human reason, and they were hindered from so doing only by the hand of the great God smiting them with terror, Gen_35:5.

Genesis 34:31

Shall we express no more resentment of this abominable abuse of our sister, than if she had been some common harlot, whose abuse no man either regardeth or revengeth? Thus they excuse one fault by committing another, and defend themselves by accusing their father of stupidity, and insensibleness of so great an indignity and injury.

Genesis 35:1

This was a word in season to comfort his disquieted mind, and convey him to a safer place. Understand, and pay thy vows there made in the time of thy distress, but not yet paid; whether it was Jacob's error to forget and neglect his former vows and promises; or whether he waited for a fit time, or an admonition from God concerning the season of paying them.

Genesis 35:2

The strange gods, the idols, which are so called here, and Deu_31:16 Deu_32:12 Jos_24:20, because they were the gods of strange and foreign nations, such as all were accounted who were not Israelites.

Quest. How came these to be and to continue so long in Jacob's house.

Answ. Either,

1. By Rachel's means, who brought them from her father's house, which haply was not discovered till this time. Or,

2. By Leah, and by Jacob's two concubines, who might possibly bring such with them. Or,

3. By the means of Jacob's Gentile servants, who might secretly worship such gods; or having taken them from the She-chemites, they might keep them for their precious matter, as gold and silver, though not for religious use. Like a good man, and a good master of a family, he takes care not only for himself, but for all his family, to keep them from the exercise of a false religion, and to engage them as far as he can in the profession and practice of the true. Compare Gen_18:19 Jos_24:15.

Be clean; cleanse yourselves by outward and ritual washing, as Exo_19:10 Exo_19:14, which even then was in use; and especially by purging your hearts as well as hands from these idols, which I perceive, to my sorrow, some of you have still retained; and from your late detestable cruelty; that you may be fit to approach to that God who hath now summoned me and you to make a solemn appearance before him.

Change your garments, either by putting on new garments, as 2Sa_12:20, or by washing the old ones, as Exo_19:10 Lev_15:13. And these, as well as other ceremonial institutions and practices, were professions of their repentance; which consists in putting off the old man, and putting on the new, Eph_4:22.

Genesis 35:3

He takes God's gracious promise, and the comfortable hope and assurance of God's favour to him, and care of him, impressed by God upon his mind and heart, for an answer to his prayers, though he had then seen no success nor accomplishment of God's word to him.

Genesis 35:4

Either because they had been abused to idolatry and superstition at Shechem, or elsewhere, and therefore were to be destroyed according to God's command, now signified to Jacob, and afterwards delivered to his posterity, Deu_7:5 Deu_12:3; or for fear they should be so abused. For the Scripture seems to insinuate, and other writers expressly affirm, that divers heathen people did wear earrings for the honour of their idols, and with the representations or ensigns of their idols engraven upon them. See Jud_8:24. After he had melted or broken them, (which seems probable from parallel instances, as Exo_32:20 2Ki_18:4),

Jacob hid them under a certain oak, though not known to his family which it was. He chose that place, either as most proper to put monuments of idolatry under those trees which were so much and so generally abused to idolatry, as oaks especially were, Isa_1:29; or as the safest place, where they were likely to remain longest hid, because the heathen had a veneration for oaks, and therefore would not cut them down, nor dig them up, nor do any thing which had a tendency that way.

Genesis 35:5

The terror of God, i.e. a great terror sent from God, as Exo_23:27 Jos_2:9,11 2Ch_14:14 17:10. So we read of a sleep of God, 1Sa_26:12. Nothing less could have secured Jacob, considering the great number, power, and rage of his enemies.

Genesis 35:6

In the land of Canaan, properly so called, or where the Canaanites properly so called dwelt. Thus it is distinguished from another Luz, Jud_1:26.

Genesis 35:7

El-beth-el, i.e. He confirmed the name which he had formerly given to the place.

Genesis 35:8

She came with Rebekah into Canaan, Gen_24:59, and probably tarried with her whilst she lived, and after her death, as it seems; and, upon Jacob's desire, after his return from Haran, came into his family; where, being a person of great prudence and piety, her presence and advice was very useful in his numerous and divided family.

Allon-bachuth, from the great lamentation which they made there for the loss of a person of such singular worth.

Genesis 35:10

Israel shall be thy name. I do not repent of the change which I made of thy name, but I do again confirm it; and as then thou didst prevail over thy brother Esau, so now thou shalt prevail over those of whom thou art afraid.

Genesis 35:11

A company of nations, tribes, for number and power, equal to so many nations, shall come out of thy loins, i.e. shall be begotten by thee, as this phrase is taken also in Gen_46:26 1Ki_8:19 Act_2:30.

Genesis 35:13

God went up from him; either locally and visibly, to wit, in that human shape in which he appeared to him; or by withdrawing the signs of his special presence, as Gen_17:22 Jud_13:20; as on the contrary God is said to come down, not by change of place, but by some signal manifestation of his presence and favour, as Exo_3:8 Num_11:17.

Genesis 35:14

Either he repaired the old pillar set up by him, Gen_28:18, which was ruined by the injury of time, or by the neighbouring idolaters; or rather erected a new one, more stable and durable than he could do in that time, as a monument or witness of God's manifold favours, and of his own gratitude. The drink-offering was of wine, as may be gathered by comparing Exo_29:40 Num_28:14.

Genesis 35:18

In departing; or, in going out; namely, out of the body, as Psa_146:4, which is an argument of the soul's immortality, especially if compared with Ecc_12:7. From which places, laid together, we learn the two terms of the journey, whence it goes, and whither it goes.

Benjamin; either as near and dear and precious to him as his right hand, which is both more useful and more honourable than the left; see Psa_80:17; or instead of his right hand, the staff, stay, and comfort of his old age.

Genesis 35:19

In the way to Ephrath; not in the city, though that was near; for in ancient times their sepulchres were not in the places of resort, but in separated places, and out of cities. See Mat_27:60 Luk_7:12.

Genesis 35:20

Jacob set a pillar, as a monument or memorial of her life and death, and as a testimony of her future resurrection.

Unto this day, i.e. unto the time wherein Moses writ this book, and long after. See 1Sa_10:2 Jer_31:15.

Genesis 35:21

Or, the tower of the flock; a place where were excellent pastures. See Mic_4:8.

Genesis 35:22

This was a horrid incest; for concubines were a sort of wives. See Gen_22:24 25:1.

Israel heard it, and doubtless sadly resented it, both in Reuben, as appears from Gen_49:4 1Ch_5:1,2; and in Bilhah, whose bed without question he forsook upon it, as afterwards David did in the like case. See 2Sa_16:22 20:3. Yet here is no mention of Jacob's reproof of it, nor any censure of Moses added to it; possibly to teach us, that we are not to approve of every fact which is mentioned in Scripture without censure, and that the miscarriages of professors of religion are rather to be silently bewailed than publicly reproached, lest religion should suffer by it.

The sons of Jacob were twelve, which were heads of the twelve tribes; therefore his daughter Dinah is not here mentioned, because she was not the head of a tribe.

Genesis 35:26

All but Benjamin, who must in all reason be supposed to be excepted here, because he is said to be born elsewhere, above, Gen_35:16. But it is a usual synecdoche, whereby that is ascribed to all in gross which belongs to the greatest part. See Gen_15:13 46:15 Exo_12:40 Jud_20:46 Joh_20:24 1Co_15:5.

Genesis 35:27

Jacob came; either with his wives, and children, and estate, to dwell with Isaac; or rather in person, to visit his sick and dying father; for otherwise Jacob having been ten years near his father, no doubt he had oft visited him, and carried his wives and children thither, though Scripture be silent in this particular: but they could not live together because of the greatness of their estates, as it happened with others. See Gen_13:6 36:7.

Was gathered unto his people; either to the society of the dead, or to the congregation of the just. See Gen_15:15 25:8.

Genesis 36:1

They are here mentioned partly to show the effect of his father's blessing, Gen_27:39; partly that the Israelites might be admonished to treat the Edomites like brethren, and not to invade their land. See Deu_23:7.

Genesis 36:2

If this account be compared with that Gen_26:34, we shall find some difficulties, which yet admit of an easy reconciliation, if these things be considered.

1. That it is very usual, and confessed by all, that the same persons are oft called by several names.
2. That the names of some persons are in Scripture given to others, because of a great resemblance between them. Upon which account the parents of the Israelites are called Armorites and Hittites, Eze_16:3; and the governors of Jerusalem are called the rulers of Sodom and Gomorrah, Isa_1:10; and John the Baptist is called Elias, Mat_17:12.
3. That the same men ere oftentimes denominated from several countries, as Christ is noted to have a threefold country in Scripture; Bethlehem by his birth, Nazareth by his education, and Capernaum by his much residence and preaching there.
4. That the same names are sometimes common to men and women.

5. That persons are called the children, not only of their immediate parents, but of their grandparents, and of those who adopted them. These things premised, the seeming contradictions objected by infidels do vanish. She who was properly called Judith, Gen_26:24, is here called Aholibamah, a name which seems to be given her either by Isaac or by Moses, from her settledness in her idolatrous courses. And Adah was also called Bashemath, Gen_26:34; and Mahalath, Ishmael's daughter, was called Bashemath, either because in her principles and manners she resembled Esau's other wife so called, or to show that Ishmael's marriage to a third wife was no less opprobrious to him and displeasing to his parents than the former.

Anah, a man, and the son of Zibeon, as appears from Gen_35:24, called here a Hivite, is called Beeri the Hittite, Gen_26:34, either because those two people were mixed together in habitation and by marriage, or because the one people were larger than the other, and comprehended under their name, or because he was a Hivite by birth, a Hittite by habitation or incorporation with them. Hence also we may learn how Aholibamah here comes to be the daughter both of Anah and of Zibeon; the one being either the natural or proper father, and the other either the grandfather, or father by adoption.

Eliphaz, the progenitor of that Eliphaz, Job_2:11.

Reuel, the father of Jethro. See Exo_2:18 Num_10:29.

Genesis 36:5

He had also daughters, Gen_36:6, though their names be not here mentioned.

Genesis 36:6

1740

Quest.

1. Why went he thither?

Answ. Partly by his own choice, that wild and mountainous country being very commodious for hunting, to which he wholly addicted himself; partly by his wives' persuasions, who were both utterly averse from cohabitation with Isaac or Jacob, and strongly inclined to their own country; but principally from the secret conduct of Divine Providence, thus accomplishing his promises. See Jos_24:4 Mal_1:3.

Quest.

2. When went he thither?

Answ. He went thither before this time in discontent at his parents, and dwelt in Seir before Jacob's return to Canaan, as appears from Gen_32:3 33:14,16; yet so as he came sometimes to Canaan, and to his father's house, and did not quit his interest in his father's estate. But when his father was dead, and Jacob and he agreed about the partition of the estate, he did totally and finally forsake Canaan, partly, for the reason here following; partly, for the other reasons now alleged; and partly, to avoid all occasion both of communication and contention with his brother.

Genesis 36:7

Which words contain the reason why that land which was large and fruitful could not bear them, because they were not entire possessors of it, but only sojourners in it, and therefore must take the owners' leavings, which were not sufficient for both of them and their numerous families.

Genesis 36:8

This seems to be mentioned by the Holy Ghost by way of contempt or reproach; this is he who sold his birthright for a mess of red pottage, and therefore was called

Edom or red.

Genesis 36:15

1715 These were dukes, princes or heads of their several families and little principalities, according to the manner of those times, who ruled their dominions, either severally, each his own, or jointly, by common advice, or it may be under one chief prince, their superior either in title or in power. And in this division Eliphaz, as he was Esau's first-born, so he had more than a double portion, his six sons being made dukes, as Esau's immediate sons were. Compare 1Ch_5:1.

Genesis 36:16

Korah is not mentioned among the sons of Eliphaz, and therefore is thought to be his grandson. There is another Korah, Gen_36:14,18.

Genesis 36:20

1840 The sons of Seir are here mentioned, partly because of their alliance with Esau's family, Gen_35:2,20,22,24,25, and partly because the government was translated from his to Esau's family.

Who inhabited the land, and ruled there, till Esau and his posterity drove them out, Deu_2:12,22.

Genesis 36:24

Mules; so most understand the word Jemim, which is no where else used, and give this sense of it, that he found out the way of the generation of mules by the copulation of a horse and a mare. Others render it waters, that he found out some springs of water, which in those hot countries were rare and precious; or hot waters, some hot and medicinal springs. But the Chaldee renders it giants, and the Samaritan version Emims, a sort of giants mentioned Deu_2:10,11; who also were neighbours to the Horites here spoken of, as appears from Gen_14:5,6; and therefore might, according to the manner of those times, make inroads one upon another. So Jemim is put for Emim, either by an apocope of the first letter, or by the change of the Hebrew letter Jod into Aleph, both which are frequent among the Hebrews. And the sense is, that Anah the Horite found out the Emims; that is, he met with them, or came upon them suddenly, and smote them. In this sense the word finding is oft used, as Jud_1:5 1Sa_31:3 Psa_21:8 Isa_10:10.

Genesis 36:25

The children, Heb. sons, though but one son be mentioned. Either then he had other sons not here expressed; or the plural number is put for the singular, as Gen_21:7.

Genesis 36:30

Among other dukes which were in that country. Or, according to their dukedoms or principalities; the word duke being here put for dukedom as the word king is put for kingdom, Isa_23:15 Dan_7:17.

Genesis 36:31

He speaks of the posterity of Esau, who after they had subdued the Horites, erected a kingdom there.

Here profane wits triumph. How, say they, could Moses write this, when as yet there was no king in Israel?

Answ.

1. The word may be taken for any chief governor, in which sense the title of king is given to Moses, Deu_33:5; and to the judges, Jud_17:6; and to others who were not kings, properly so called, Psa_119:46 Luk_22:25 Act_9:15, &c.

Answ. 2. Moses might well say thus, because he did by the Spirit of prophecy foresee, and therefore could foretell, that the Israelites would have a king, as appears from Deu_17:14,15.

Answ. 3. This, with other clauses of the same nature, might be inserted afterwards by some holy and inspired man of God, as it is confessed that part of the last chapter of Deuteronomy was.

Genesis 36:32

Where he was born or dwelt, and so in the rest. The diversity of their cities makes it probable, that these kings had not their power by succession, but either by election, or by usurpation, according to Isaac's prophecy of them, Gen_27:40: By thy sword thou shalt live.

Genesis 36:34

Of which land, see Jer_49:7,20, so called either from the city Teman, or from Teman the son of Eliphaz, Gen_36:11. Or, of the south country, as the ancient translations render it.

Genesis 36:37

The river; either Euphrates, or a branch of it, called Chabras, by which there is even at this day a city called Rahabath-melic, i.e. King's Rahabath, as the learned observe; or some other river of note in those times and parts.

Genesis 36:39

Either

Matred was the father, and

Mezahab the mother; or

Matred was the mother, and

Mezahab the grandmother.

Genesis 36:40

1496 The names of the dukes, of their persons, and generations, and families. The state of Edom between the times of Esau and Moses seems to have been this; there were first dukes, then kings, and after them dukes again. But if it be objected, that the time was too short for a succession of so many persons, it may be replied, that what is confessed concerning the dukes preceding the kings, might be true also of these succeeding dukes, and that the Edomites either having taken some distaste at kingly government, or differing about the choice of a new king, divided themselves again into several petty principalities or dukedoms; and so several of those were dukes at the same time in divers parts.

Genesis 37:1

Genesis 37:2

The generations, i.e. the events or occurrences which happened to Jacob in his family and issue. So that word is used Gen_6:9 Num_3:1. Or the word these may relate to what is said Gen_35:22, &c. The genealogy of Esau being brought in by way of parenthesis, and that being finished, Moses returns to the generations of Jacob, as his principal business, and proceeds in the history of their concerns.

Jacob placed Joseph with the sons of Bilhah, and with the sons of Zilpah, rather than with the sons of Leah, either to keep Joseph humble; or for Joseph's security, because the other sons retained the old grudge of their mother, and were more like to envy, contemn, hate, and abuse him; or as an observer of their actions, whom he most suspected, as the following words may seem to imply.

Joseph brought unto his father their evil report, acquainted him with their lewd and wicked courses, to the dishonour of God and of their family, that so his father might apply such remedies as he thought meet.

Genesis 37:3

He was the son of his old age, being born when Jacob was ninety-one years old. Such children are commonly best beloved by their parents, either because such are a singular blessing of God, and a more than common testimony of his favour, and a mercy least expected by them, and therefore most prized; or because they have more pleasing conversation with them, and less experience of their misbehaviour, of which the elder ofttimes are guilty, whereby they alienate their parents' affections from them. The ancient translations, Chaldee, Persian, Arabic, and Samaritan, render the words thus, a wise or prudent son; old age being oft mentioned as a token of prudence; one born old, one wise above his years, one that had a grey head, as we say, upon green shoulders. This may seem the more probable, both because Joseph was indeed such a child, and gave good evidence of it in a prudent observation of his brethren's trespasses, and a discreet choice of the fittest remedy for them; and because the reason here alleged seems proper and peculiar to Joseph; whereas in the other sense it belongs more to Benjamin, who was younger than Joseph, and cost his mother dearer, and therefore might upon that account claim a greater interest in his father's afflictions.

A coat of many colours, probably made of threads of divers colours interwoven together. Compare 2Sa_13:18. This he gave him as a token of his special love, and of the rights of the first-born, which being justly taken from Reuben, he conferred upon Joseph, 1Ch_5:1.

Genesis 37:4

Their hatred was so deep and keen, that they could not smother it, as for their own interest they should have done, but discovered it by their churlish words and carriages to him.

Genesis 37:5

The

dream it is probable he did not understand, for then he would never have told it to them, who, as he knew very well, were likely to make an evil construction and use of it.

Genesis 37:7

We were binding sheaves in the field; a secret insinuation of the occasion of Joseph's advancement, which was from his counsel and care about the corn of Egypt.

Your sheaves stood round about; this was a posture of ministry and service, as is manifest both from Scripture and from common usage.

Genesis 37:8

For his relation of his dreams, which they imputed to his arrogancy.

Genesis 37:9

He dreamed another dream, that the repetition of the same thing in another shape might teach them that the thing was both certain and very observable.

The sun and the moon were not mentioned in the first dream, because in the event his brethren only went at first to Egypt and there worshipped him, as afterwards his father went with them.

Object. His father did not worship him in Egypt.

Answ. 1. He did worship him mediately by his sons, who in their father's name and stead bowed before him, and by the presents which he sent as testimonies of that respect which he owed to him.

2. It is probable that Jacob did, before the Egyptians, pay that reverence to his son which all the rest did, and which was due to the dignity of his place. As the Roman consul was commended by his father for requiring him to alight from his horse, as the rest did, when he met him upon the way.

Genesis 37:10

His father rebuked him; not through anger at Joseph, or contempt of his dream, for it follows, he observed it; but partly lest Joseph should be puffed up upon the account of his dreams, and principally to allay the envy and hatred of his brethren.

Thy mother: either,

1. Rachel, who was now dead, and therefore must rise again and worship thee; whence he may seem to infer the idleness of the dream, because the fulfilling it was impossible. Or rather,

2. Leah, his stepmother, one that filled his mother's place, being now Jacob's only wife, and the mother of the family.

Genesis 37:11

The words of Joseph; or the thing, the dream which he told; well knowing that God did frequently at that time signify his mind by dreams, and perceiving something singular and extraordinary in this dream, and especially in the doubling of it.

Genesis 37:12

In the parts adjoining to Shechem, in the lands which he had purchased there, Gen_33:19. Let none think strange that he should send his sheep so far from him, both because that land was his own, and because his sheep being exceeding numerous, and he but a stranger in the land, was likely to be exposed to many such inconveniences. Compare Gen_30:36. One may rather wonder that he durst venture his sons and his cattle there, where that barbarous massacre had been committed, Gen_34:25. But those pastures being his own, and convenient for his use, he did commit himself and them to that same good Providence which watched over him then and ever since, and still kept up that terror which then he sent upon them. Besides Jacob's sons and servants made a considerable company, and the men of Shechem being universally slain, others were not very forward to revenge their quarrel, where there was any hazard to themselves in such an enterprise.

1729 Having kept him for some time at home, and supposing that length of time had cooled their heats, and worn out their hatred, he now sends him to them.

Genesis 37:17

Dothan a place not very far from Shechem, where afterwards a city was built. See 2Ki_6:13.

Genesis 37:19

Heb.

This master of dreams, this crafty dreamer, that covers his own ambitious designs and desires with pretences or fictions of dreams.

Genesis 37:20

Cast him into some pit; partly, as unworthy of burial; partly, to cover their villanous action; and partly, that they might quickly put him out of their sight and minds.

Some evil beast hath devoured him, there being great store of such creatures in those parts. See 1Ki_13:24 2Ki_2:24.

Genesis 37:21

He

delivered him, as to the violent and certain despatch of his life which was intended. Or the act is here put for the purpose and endeavour of doing it, in which sense Balak is said to fight against Israel, Jos_24:9, and Abraham to offer up Isaac, Heb_11:17. So here, he delivered him, i.e. used his utmost power to deliver him, that so he might recover his father's favour lost by his incestuous action.

Genesis 37:25

They sat down to eat bread, to refresh themselves, their consciences being stupified, and their hearts hardened against their brother, notwithstanding all his most passionate entreaties to them, Gen_42:21.

Ishmeelites; the posterity of Ishmael. See Gen_25:18.

Gilead, a famous place for balm, and other excellent commodities, and for the confluence of merchants. See Jer_8:22 22:6.

Balm, or rosin, as the ancient and divers other translators render it.

Genesis 37:26

If we suffer him to perish in the pit, when we may sell him with advantage, and conceal his blood, i.e. his death, as the word blood is often used. See Deu_17:8 2Sa_1:16 3:28.

Genesis 37:28

This story seems a little involved, and the persons to whom he was sold doubtful. Here seem to be two, if not three, sorts of merchants mentioned,

Ishmeelites and

Midianites here, and Medanites, as it is in the Hebrew, Gen_37:36, which were a distinct people from the Midianites, as descended from Medan, when the Midianites descended from Midian, both Abraham's sons, Gen_25:2. The business may be accommodated divers ways; either,

1. The same persons or people are promiscuously called both Ishmeelites and Midianites, as they also are Jud_8:1,24,28; either because they were mixed together in their dwellings, and by marriages; or because they were here joined together, and made one caravan or company of merchants. And the text may be read thus, And the Midianite merchantmen (either the same who were called Ishmeelites, Gen_37:27, or others being in the same company with them) passed by, and they (i.e. not the merchantmen, but Joseph's brethren, spoken of Gen_37:27; the relative being referred to the remoter antecedent, as it is frequently in the Scripture)

lift up Joseph, and sold him to the Ishmeelites or Midianites, &c. Or,

2. The persons may be distinguished, and the story may very well be conceived thus: The Ishmeelites are going to Egypt, and are discerned at some distance by Joseph's brethren, while they were discoursing about their brother. In the time of their discourse, the Midianites, who seem to be coming from Egypt, coming by the pit, and hearing Joseph's cries there, pull him out of the pit, and sell him to the Ishmeelites, who carry him with them into Egypt. There they sell him to the Medanites, though that, as many other historical passages, be omitted in the sacred story. And the Medanites, or Midianites, if you please, only supposing them to be other persons than those mentioned Gen_37:28, which is but a fair and reasonable supposition, sell him to Potiphar.

Genesis 37:29

Reuben returned unto the pit, that, according to his brethren's order, Gen_37:27, he might take him thence and sell him.

He rent his clothes, as the manner was upon doleful occurrences. See below, Gen_37:34 Num_14:6 Ezr_9:3 Job_1:20 2:12.

Genesis 37:30

He calls him

the child comparatively to his brethren, though he was seventeen years old, Gen_37:2.

The child is not, i.e. is not in the land of the living, or is dead, as that phrase is commonly used, as Gen_42:13,36, compared with Gen_44:20 Job_7:21 Jer_31:15 Lam_5:7 Mat_2:18.

I, whither shall I go, either to find the child, or to flee from our father? He is more solicitous than the rest, because he being the eldest brother, his father would require Joseph at his hand; and being so highly incensed against him for his former crime, would be the more apt to suspect him, and deal more severely with him.

Genesis 37:32

They

brought it by a messenger whom they sent: men are commonly said to do what they cause others to do.

Genesis 37:34

Sackcloth, i.e. a coarse and mournful habit. This is the first example of that kind, but afterwards was in common use upon these occasions. See 2Sa_3:31 1Ki_20:31 21:27, &c.

Genesis 37:35

All his daughters; Dinah, and his daughters-in-law, and his sons' daughters.

The grave; this Hebrew word sheol is taken sometimes for hell, as Job_11:8 Pro_15:11, but most commonly for the grave, or the place or state of the dead, as Gen_42:38 44:29,31 Psa 6:5 16:10, &c. And whether of those it signifies, must be determined by the subject and the circumstances of the place. Here it cannot be meant of hell, for Jacob neither could believe that good Joseph was there, nor would have resolved to go thither; but the sense is, I will kill myself with grief, or I will never leave mourning till I die.

Unto my son; or, for my son: so the preposition el is oft used for al, as 1Sa_1:27 4:19,21,22 2Sa_21:2.

Genesis 37:36

Whose office it was to apprehend and punish criminal persons. See Gen_40:3 Jer_39:9 Mar_6:27.

Genesis 38:1

This story is not without difficulty, if we consider how little time is allowed for all the events of this chapter, there being not above twenty-three years between Judah's marriage and the birth of Pharez, yea, and the birth of his sons too, Hezron and Hamul, who are said to go into Egypt with Jacob, Gen_46:12. But there are two ways proposed for the resolution of it, as the phrase, at that time, may be understood two ways; either,

1. More largely, for the time since Jacob's return from Padan to Canaan, and so the history may be conceived thus, Judah was married some years before the selling of Joseph, though it be here mentioned after it, and so out of its place, as being the foundation of all the following events, which are here placed together, because they followed the selling of Joseph. Judah, and Er, and Onan, and afterwards Pharez, are supposed each to marry and have a child at fourteen years old, which, though unusual, wants not examples both in sacred and profane writers. And they that will quarrel with the Scripture, and question its authority for some such uncustomary occurrences which it relates, show more of impiety than wisdom in it, and shall do well to consider, that God might so order things by his providence, and record such things in his word, upon the same account on which he hath put several other difficult passages in Scripture, partly to try and exercise men's faith, humility, and modesty; and partly to punish the evil minds of ungodly men, and for their sins to lay an occasion of stumbling and cavilling at the Scriptures before them that greedily seek and gladly catch at all such occasions. Or,

2. More strictly, for the time following the sale of Joseph, which seems the more probable way, and so the story lies thus, Judah was now about twenty years old when he married, and the three first years he hath three sons, Er, Onan, and Shelah. The two first marry each when they were about seventeen years old. Three years after both their deaths, and when Shelah had been marriageable a year or two, and was not given to Tamar, Judah lies with Tamar and begets upon her Pharez. But as for Hezron and Hamul, they are said to go into Egypt with Jacob, as also Benjamin's ten sons are said to go with him thither, to wit, in their father's loins, because they were begotten by their father in Egypt, whilst Jacob lived there, of which more in its proper place.

Judah went down from his brethren; probably in discontent, upon occasion of quarrels arisen among them about the selling of Joseph, whereof Judah was a great promoter, if not the first mover.

A certain Adullamite, of the city of Adullam; of which see Jos_12:15 Jos_15:35.

Genesis 38:2

He married her against the counsel and example of his parents. But when Judah had committed so great a crime as the selling of his brother, and God had forsaken him, no wonder he adds one sin to another.

Shuah was the name, not of the daughter, but of her father, Gen_38:12.

Genesis 38:5

Chezib; a place near Adullam, called also Achzib, Jos_19:29 Mic_1:14.

Genesis 38:7

Wicked in the sight of the Lord, i.e. notoriously wicked. Compare Gen_10:9 13:13.

The Lord slew him, in some extraordinary and remarkable manner, as Gen_38:10.

Genesis 38:8

This, as also divers other things, was now instituted and observed amongst God's people, and afterwards was expressed in a written law, Deu_25:5,6. See also Num_36:6,7 Rth 1:11 Mat_22:24.

Raise up seed to thy brother; beget a child which may have thy brother's name and inheritance, and may be reputed as his child. So it was with the first child, but the rest were reputed his own.

Genesis 38:9

Two things are here noted:

1. The sin itself, which is here particularly described by the Holy Ghost, that men might be instructed concerning the nature and the great evil of this sin of self-pollution, which is such that it brought upon the actor of it the extraordinary vengeance of God, and which is condemned not only by Scripture, but even by the light of nature, and the judgment of heathens, who have expressly censured it as a great sin, and as a kind of murder. Of which see my Latin Synopsis. Whereby we may sufficiently understand how wicked and abominable a practice this is amongst Christians, and in the light of the gospel, which lays greater and stricter obligations upon us to purity, and severely forbids all pollution both of flesh and spirit.

2. The cause of this wickedness; which seems to have been either hatred of his brother, or envy at his brother's name and honour, springing from the pride of his own heart.

Genesis 38:10

Displeased the Lord; an expression noting a more than ordinary offence against God, as 2Sa_11:27. This just but dreadful severity of God is noted both for the terror of such-like transgressors, and to provoke love and thankfulness to God in those whom he useth more indulgently.

Genesis 38:11

At thy father's house, whither he sent her from his house, that Shelah might not be ensnared by her presence and conversation. So he dismissed her with a pretence of kindness, and a tacit promise of marriage to her, which he never intended to keep, as the following words imply; for he said; or rather, but he said; for the Hebrew chi oft signifies but, as Gen_45:8 Psa_37:20 Ecc_2:10 6:2. So here is an opposition between what he said to Tamar, and what he said to himself, or in his own heart, as that word said is oft used: he intimated to her that he would give Shelah to her, but he meant otherwise, and said in himself, I will not do it, lest peradventure he die also as his brethren did; imputing the death of his two sons either to her fault, or to her unluckiness, rather than to his own or his son's miscarriages.

Genesis 38:12

In process of time, when many days had passed, and Shelah, though grown, was not given to Tamar,

Judah went up unto his sheep-shearers, to feast and rejoice with them at that time, as the manner was then and afterwards. See 1Sa_25:36.

Timnath; a place not far from Adullam; of which see Jos_15:57.

Genesis 38:14

Covered her with a veil, as harlots used to do in those modester ages of the world, when they had not learnt to outface the sun, nor to glory in their villainies.

In an open place, where she might be soonest discovered by passengers. This is noted as the practice of harlots, Pro_7:12 9:14 Jer_3:2 Eze_16:24,25.

Genesis 38:15

And was doubtless careful not to discover herself by her voice.

Genesis 38:18

Thy bracelets, or handkerchief, or girdle, or any other ornament made of twisted thread, which the Hebrew word signifies. God so ordering things by his providence, that his sin might be discovered. And this and other such horrid crimes committed sometimes by the patriarchs, and other eminent persons, it hath pleased God for divers wise and holy reasons to leave upon record, partly, to discover how great and deep the corruption of man's nature is, and that even in the best; partly, to oblige all men to a humble sense of their own infirmity, and to a diligent application of themselves to God for his gracious succours, and to a greater circumspection and watchfulness to prevent those evils in themselves; partly, to encourage even the greatest sinners to repentance and the hope of pardon; and partly, for the just punishment and obduration of incorrigible sinners, who make such sad examples matter of their delight and imitation.

Genesis 38:23

Note, that fornication was esteemed sinful and shameful amongst the heathens.

Genesis 38:24

Bring her forth to the magistrate, from whom she may receive her sentence and deserved punishment. Judah had not the power of life and death, at least not over her, who was a Canaanite, and who was not in his, but in her own father's house. But he being a person of great estate and authority, and, as it seems, of obliging conversation, could do very much to persuade those who then had the power of the sword, either to draw it forth, at least in a just cause, on his behalf, or to sheath it upon his desire and satisfaction.

Let her be burnt, as guilty of adultery, which was punished with death by the laws of God, Deu_22:23,24, and of nations too, Jer_29:22,23. He chargeth her with adultery, because she was betrothed to Shelah. See Deu_22:23. This eagerness of Judah proceeded not from zeal of justice, for then he would not have endeavoured to destroy the innocent child with the guilty mother, against God's law, Deu_24:16 Eze_18:20, but from worldly policy, that he might take her out of the way, which he esteemed a burden and a blot to his family.

His guilty conscience, and the horror of so foul a fact, together with his sudden surprisal, forced him to an ingenuous confession, whereas he might have used many pretences and evasions, which would easily have prevailed with such partial judges.

She hath been more righteous than I. She was more unchaste, because she knowingly committed adultery and incest, when he designed neither; but he was more unjust, because he was the cause of her sin, both by withholding Shelah from her, who was hers both by right and by Judah's promise, and by whom her chastity should have been preserved; and by his solicitation and encouragement of her to the sin.

He knew her again no more; showing the sincerity of his confession by his forsaking of the sin confessed. See Job_34:32.

And it may be probably concluded, that he neither knew her nor any other woman afterward, because there is no mention of any child which he had after this time.

Genesis 38:28

The midwife bound upon his hand a scarlet thread, in token of his being the first-born, which she confidently expected he would be.

This breach be upon thee, be imputed to thee, as the same phrase is taken Gen_16:5.

Genesis 39:1

The Lord was with Joseph, with his gracious presence and blessing, as this phrase is taken here, Gen_39:21 Gen_21:22 Gen_26:24.

He was in the house of his master: he doth not endeavour to make an escape to his father, but demeaned himself patiently and faithfully in the station into which God's providence had brought him.

Genesis 39:3

The heathens owned a supreme God, and his overruling providence in affairs, though they did not glorify him as God, but worshipped the creature with and more than the Creator, Rom_1:25.

In his hand, i.e. under his ministry, as this phrase is used, Exo_4:13 Lev_8:36 Pro_26:6, and oft elsewhere.

Genesis 39:4

He served him, not now as a slave, but in a higher degree.

All that he had he put into his hand, i.e. committed to his care and management, as Gen_16:6.

Object. How could this be, when Joseph understood not the Egyptian tongue?

Ans. Joseph doubtless when he came thither did as much as possibly he could endeavour to get the knowledge of that language, and being a person of excellent parts, would soon obtain it, especially because of the great affinity between that language and his own. Nor must we think that Joseph was thus highly advanced in an instant, but by degrees, step by step, and after some considerable time.

Genesis 39:6

He took care for nothing, but that he might eat, and drink, and fare deliciously. Nor did he indeed take any care for that, it being provided for him by other hands. Others thus, He took care for nothing, but committed all to Joseph, except his bread, which he would not have provided by a Hebrew hand, because the Egyptians might not eat bread with the Hebrews, Gen_43:32. But that was no impediment, for neither did Joseph eat with his master, nor was he the cook to dress it for him. But he might provide food for him, as afterwards he did for all the Egyptians without any scruple on their side.

Genesis 39:7

She

cast her eyes upon Joseph, in a lascivious and unchaste manner. See Job_31:1 Mat_5:28 2Pe_2:14.

Genesis 39:10

He avoided her company and familiar conversation, as evil in itself, the present circumstances considered, and as an occasion of further evil. See Pro_1:15 5:8 1Co_15:33 1Th_5:22 1Ti_5:14.

Genesis 39:11

About this time, or, upon a certain day, which she thought convenient for the reason following.

To do his business, that which belonged to his charge; to cast up his accounts, as the Chaldee renders it, which requiring privacy, gave her this opportunity.

There was none of the men within, to wit, in that part of the house where Joseph was.

Genesis 39:12

He left his garment in her hand, which he would not strive to get from her, partly, for reverence to his mistress; partly, in detestation of her wickedness, whereby even his garment might seem to be infected; and partly, to put himself and her out of the danger of further temptation.

Genesis 39:14

Unto the men of her house; to such as were in other parts of the house, whom she called in as witnesses for her husband's satisfaction.

He, i.e. my husband, whom she would not name, as it were out of disdain and high displeasure for being the occasion of this horrid affront. Thus the pronouns he and they are oft used by way of contempt, as Luk_4:24 19:27 Joh_7:11 8:10.

An Hebrew; so she calls him, to render him hateful and contemptible to the Egyptians.

To mock us; to abuse me; or to vitiate and defile me; for that word is oft used in an obscene sense. She insinuates, that this was not only an indignity to her, but an injury to all the family, which therefore they were obliged to revenge.

Genesis 39:17

So she makes her husband accessory to the crime, that she might provoke him to the sharper revenge.

Genesis 39:18

An improbable story, and an evidence that the violence was on her side; otherwise, if he had attempted violence upon her person, he would not have forborne violence to the recovery of his garment, which he very well knew might be made a pretence against him.

Genesis 39:20

Quest. Why did he not kill him, the crime being capital, and he having so undoubted a power in his hand to do it?

Answ. It is probable he was a little moderated by Joseph's apology, which doubtless he made for himself, though it be not here recorded.

2. This is to be ascribed to the good providence of God, which restrains the waves of the sea, and the passions of men, and sets them their bounds which they shall not pass, which watched over Joseph in a peculiar manner.

The king's prisoners; traitors, or great offenders against the king, whose prison doubtless was none of the easiest and therefore it is called a dungeon, Gen_40:15 41:14; and he endured great hardship in it. See Psa_105:18.

Genesis 39:21

The gaoler, who under Potiphar was the keeper of that particular person.

Genesis 39:22

They did nothing but by Joseph's command or permission.

Genesis 40:1

Genesis 40:2

Genesis 40:3

The captain of the guard, to wit, Potiphar, Gen_37:36, who being informed by his underkeeper of Joseph's great care and faithfulness, began to have a better opinion of him, though for his own quiet, and his wife's reputation, he left him still in the prison.

Where Joseph was bound; was a prisoner, as that word is used, Isa_22:3; for Joseph being now made governor of the prisoners, was doubtless freed from his bonds: or had been bound, and that with irons in a cruel manner, Psa_105:18.

Genesis 40:4

A season, Heb. days, i.e. either many days, or a year, as that word sometimes signifies. See Gen_24:55.

Genesis 40:5

1718 i.e. Not a vain and idle dream, but one that had in it a signification of future things, and needed interpretation; and the several dreams were proper and agreeable to the several events which befell them, and to the several interpretations which Joseph put upon them: the dream and interpretation did fitly answer one to the other.

Genesis 40:6

Perplexed and terrified both, because they perceived the dream was extraordinary and sent from God; compare Gen_41:8 Dan_2:1 Mat_27:19; and because they understood not the meaning of it.

Genesis 40:8

There is no interpreter of it, to wit, with us, or to whom we can now resort; for otherwise there were many in Egypt of that profession, Gen_41:8.

Do not interpretations belong to God? In vain do you expect such things from your wise men, for it is only that God who sends these dreams that can interpret them, and to him you should seek for it.

Tell me, who am the servant of the true God, who useth to communicate his secrets to his people, and who, I doubt not, will hear my prayers for this mercy. This he spoke by special direction and instinct from God, who had given this gift to him.

Genesis 40:12

i.e. Signify

three days. So that word is oft used, as Gen_40:18 41:26,27 Da 2:38 4:22 Mat_13:19,38 26:26,28 Lu 8:11 1Co_10:4. And indeed there is no proper Hebrew word which answers to signify.

Genesis 40:13

Lift up thine head, i.e. advance thee to thy former dignity. So that phrase is used 2Ki_25:27 Psa_110:7. Or, reckon thy head, i.e. thy name or thy person, to wit, among his servants, which is added, Gen_40:20. According to the custom, which was this: at set times governors of families used to take an account of their servants, and to have the names of their servants read to them, and they either left them in the catalogue, or put any of them out, as they saw fit, and inflicted such further punishments upon any of them as they deserved. This seems the truer interpretation, because it is said that Pharaoh lifted up the head of his butler, and of his baker, Gen_40:20, and therefore the phrase must be so expounded, as to agree equally to both.

Genesis 40:14

Though he patiently endures his prison, yet he prudently useth all lawful means to get his freedom.

Genesis 40:15

I was stolen away, taken away by force and fraud, without my own or father's consent, out of the land of Canaan, which he might call the land of the Hebrews, either because they now dwelt in it, or by way of protestation of their right and claim to it by God's gift. Or rather thus, out of that part of Canaan where the Hebrews dwell; for the word land is not only spoken of whole countries, as of the whole land of Canaan, but of any parts or parcels thereof, as Gen_13:6 22:2 23:15 34:1. Observe, that Joseph doth not accuse either his brethren or his mistress, but only asserts his own innocency, which was necessary for his deliverance.

Genesis 40:16

White baskets; so called from the colour, either of the baskets, which were made of pilled, and so white twigs, or of the things contained in them, as white bread, &c.

Genesis 40:19

From off thee. This clause is industriously added here to the former phrase, to show that it was now meant in another sense. He shall indeed lift up thy head, as well as the chief butler's, but in another manner, not for time, but from thee, or so as to take away thy head or thy life (which eminently consists and appears in the head) from thee.

Genesis 40:20

Pharaoh's birthday. Birth-days by persons of eminency then were, and since have usually been, celebrated with feasting and rejoicing.

Genesis 40:23

i.e. Neglected him and his desire; as men in Scripture are oft said to forget God, when they do not remember him so as to love and obey him, as Psa_106:13, 21 Ho 2:13.

Genesis 41:1

Two full years, after the butler's restitution to his place. Heb. Years of days, for full years, as 2Sa_14:28 Jer_28:3; as a month of days is put for a full month, Gen_29:14, which is complete to a day. Nilus is called the river simply, because of its eminency, as Homer or Virgil are called the poet.

Genesis 41:2

This suits well with the nature of the thing, for both the fruitfulness and the barrenness of Egypt depended, under God, upon the increase or diminution of the waters of that river.

Kine, when they appeared in dreams, did portend, in the opinion of the learned Egyptians, the years or times to come, and them either good or bad, according to their quality.

Genesis 41:3

Which shows how sparingly the river overflowed the lands.

Genesis 41:5

Ears of corn are fit and proper resemblances of the thing here intended, both because the fertility of a land doth mainly consist in the abundance and goodness of these; and because ears of corn appearing to any in a dream, did, in the judgment of the Egyptian wise men, signify years, as Josephus notes.

Genesis 41:6

A boisterous wind, and in those parts of the world very pernicious to the fruits of the earth, Eze_17:10 19:12 Hos_13:15.

Genesis 41:7

Not a real thing, as Pharaoh in his sleep imagined it to be. Heb. Behold the dream, i.e. the dream did not vanish, as dreams commonly do, but was fixed in his mind, and he could not shake it off; by which he saw that it was no common or natural, but a Divine and significant dream.

Genesis 41:8

His spirit was troubled, because he understood not the meaning of it, and dreaded the consequences of it. Compare Gen_40:6 Dan_2:1,3 Mt 27:19.

The magicians, whose profession it was to discover secret and future things; which they did either by the observation of the stars, or by other superstitious practices, and the help of evil spirits. See Exo_7:11 8:19 Dan_2:2,10.

The wise men, who were conversant in the study of nature; and by reason of their great sagacity, did oftentimes make happy conjectures.

Pharaoh calls them both one dream, either because they seemed to portend the same thing, or because they were the product of one night, and were divided only by a very little interruption.

Genesis 41:9

Not against Joseph by ingratitude, but against the king; by which expression he both acknowledgeth the king's justice in imprisoning him, and his clemency in pardoning him.

Genesis 41:11

Of which phrase see Poole on "Gen_40:5".

Genesis 41:13

Me he restored; either,

1. Pharaoh. But then he would have mentioned either his name or title, and not have spoken so slightly and indecently of him. Or rather,

2. Joseph, of whom he spake last, and who is here said to restore the one, and to hang the other, because he foretold those events, as Jeremiah is said to pull down and destroy those nations, Jer_1:10, whose destruction he did only foretell.

Genesis 41:14

The dungeon, or prison, by a synecdoche of the part for the whole. For it is not probable that Joseph, who was now so much employed, and intrusted with all the affairs of the prison and prisoners, Gen_39:21-23, should still be kept in the dungeon properly so called.

He shaved himself; for till then he suffered his hair to grow, as the manner was for persons in prison, or under great sorrow, 2Sa_19:24. But to appear in a mournful dress before the king was not convenient, nor usual. Compare Est_4:4.

Genesis 41:16

I cannot do this by any power, or virtue, or art of my own, for I am but a man, as your magicians are, but only by inspiration from the great God. Thus he gives the honour from himself unto God, and leads Pharaoh to the knowledge of the true God. For the phrase compare Mat_10:20 1Co_15:10.

God shall give; or, may God give, & c. It is my desire that God would vouchsafe to Pharaoh a comfortable and happy answer.

Genesis 41:21

They seemed to be neither fatter in the flesh, nor fuller in their bodies. As many times in famine men eat much, but are not satisfied, because God withdraws his blessing from it, by which alone it is that meat nourisheth us.

Genesis 41:25

The dream of Pharaoh is one, to wit, in its design and signification; both dreams portend the same thing.

Genesis 41:30

There shall be no relics of it to keep it in men's minds, which will be so taken up with the contemplation of their present misery and future danger, that they will have neither heart nor leisure to reflect upon their former plenty, the remembrance whereof will but aggravate the present calamity.

Genesis 41:34

Not by force or violence, for Joseph would never be the author of such unrighteous counsels; but by purchase at the common price, which was like to be very low in that case, and therefore might easily be compassed by that rich and mighty prince.

Quest. Why

the fifth part, and not half, seeing the years of famine were as many as the years of plenty?

Answ. Because,

1. Men would and should live more sparingly in times of famine.
2. It was likely that very many men would lay up great quantities of corn in those years, partly because they could not spend it all, and partly in expectation of a scarcer and dearer time, when they might either use it themselves, or sell it to their advantage.
3. The fifth part of those years of great plenty might be more than the half, yea, equal to the whole crop of ordinary years.

Genesis 41:38

Or, of the gods, in his heathen language. One whom God hath endowed with such admirable knowledge and wisdom.

Genesis 41:39

God hath showed thee all this, i.e. hath given thee this extraordinary gift of foreseeing and foretelling things to come, and of giving such sage advice for the future.

Genesis 41:40

According unto thy word, i.e. direction and command, Heb. mouth, which is oft put for command, {as Exo_17:1 38:21 Num_3:16,39 , &c.,} shall all my poeple be ruled, or, be fed; they shall receive their provisions from thy hand, and according to thy disposal. Others, shall kiss, viz. the hand, as inferiors used to do, upon their address to or conference with great persons. See Job_31:27 Hos_13:2. But it was frivolous for Joseph to command them to do that which by the custom of the place they were obliged and wont to do. Some render the word thus, and that agreeable to the Hebrew, at thy mouth shall the people kiss; which may be understood either properly, as inferiors did sometimes kiss their superiors in token of their homage; see 1Sa_10:1; or rather metaphorically, as the same phrase is used Psa_2:12 Pro_24:26, receive all thy commands with reverence and submission.

In the throne, i.e. in sovereign power and dignity.

Genesis 41:42

His ring was both a token of highest dignity, and an instrument of greatest power, by which he had authority to make and sign what decrees he thought fit in the king's name. See Est_3:10 8:2. With fine linen the greatest potentates were arrayed. See Pro_31:22,24 Eze 16:10 Luk_16:19 Rev_19:8.

A gold chain was another badge of great honour. See Pro_1:9 Eze_16:11 Dan_5:7,16,29.

Genesis 41:43

In the second chariot; in the king's second chariot, that he might be known and owned to be the next person to the king in power and dignity. Compare 2Ch_35:24 Est_6:8 10:3 Dan_5:29.

Bow the knee: they commanded all that passed by him, or came to him, to show their reverent respect to him in this manner: compare Est_3:2. Others, tender father, to signify that he was to be owned as the father of the country, because by his prudence and care he had provided for them all, and saved them from utter ruin.

Genesis 41:44

I am Pharaoh, i.e. I only am the king, I reserve to myself the sovereign power over thee, and over all. As the name of Caesar among the Romans was commonly used for the emperor, so the name of Pharaoh for the king. Or thus, I have the supreme power, and therefore as I have authority to give thee the following power, so I will make it good to thee, and oblige all my people to observe and obey thee. No man shall do any thing in the public affairs of the kingdom concerning matters of war or peace without thy commission or licence.

Genesis 41:45

Zaphnath-paaneah, i.e. The revealer of secrets, as the Hebrews generally understand it, and with them most others.

Poti-pherah, not that Potiphar, Gen_39:1; both because he had another title, and dwelt in another place; and because it is not probable Joseph would have married the daughter of so unchaste a mother; but another and a greater person. It is the observation of a late ingenious and learned writer, that among the Egyptians there were three words, or endings of words, near akin, but differing in signification, and in the degree of dignity and authority, to which those names were annexed: Phar, which belonged to inferior officers; and Pherah, which was given to those of greater dignity and power; and Pharaoh, which was appropriated to the king.

Priest, or prince, as the word signifies, Exo_18:1 2Sa_8:18 20:26, and elsewhere. This sense is the more probable, both from Joseph's high quality, and from his holy disposition, whereby he hated idolatry, and would never have married the daughter of an idolatrous priest.

On was a famous city of Egypt, called also Aven, Eze_30:17, and afterwards, as some think, Heliopolis, now Damietta. See Jer_43:13.

Joseph went out over all the land, upon his employment, and to execute the king's command, and his own counsel.

Genesis 41:46

Joseph's age is here noted to teach us,

1. That Joseph's short affliction was recompensed with a much longer prosperity, even for eighty years.

2. That Joseph's excellent wisdom did not proceed from his large and long experience, but from the singular gift of God.

He stood before Pharaoh, as his chief minister: to stand before another is the posture and designation of a servant, as 1Sa_16:21 Dan_1:19.

Went throughout all the land, to provide places for his stores, and to constitute officers for the management of them.

Genesis 41:47

Or, unto handfuls, to wit, growing upon one stalk; or, unto heaps; or, as the ancients render it, for the barns or storehouses; i.e. in such plenty, that all their storehouses were filled with heaps of corn.

Genesis 41:48

All the food; that is, either all sorts of grain which was proper for food; or all which he intended to gather, to wit, the fifth part, Gen_41:34.

Genesis 41:51

i.e. Hath expelled all sorrowful remembrance of it by my present comfort and glory.

All my toil, and all my father's house, i.e. the toil of my father's house, or the toil and misery which for many years I have endured by means of my father's family, and my own brethren, who sold me hither; a figure called hendyadis.

Genesis 41:52

1711 In the land which hitherto hath been to me a land of affliction.

Genesis 41:54

In all lands; in all the neighbouring countries, appears by comparing this with Gen_42:1.

Genesis 41:55

The people cried to Pharaoh, as to their king and common father. Compare 2Ki_6:26.

Genesis 42:1

When Jacob saw, i.e. heard, as the word is used, Exo_20:18; as seeing is put for smelling, Exo_5:21; and for tasting, Psa_34:8; and for touching, Joh_20:29.

Why do ye look one upon another; like lazy, careless, and helpless persons, each one expecting relief from the other, but none offering either counsel or help for all our subsistence?

Genesis 42:2

I have heard: this word explains the word saw, Gen_42:1.

Get you down; for Egypt was lower than Canaan; whence, on the contrary, they are said to go up to Canaan, Gen_45:9.

That we may live, and not die; an emphatical repetition of the same thing, used here to make them more sensible of their danger.

Genesis 42:4

Because he was very young, and now his best beloved son.

Genesis 42:6

He sold to the people; either,

1. By his ministers and commissioners appointed to that end, as men in Scripture and in all authors are said to do that which others do by their authority and command. Or,

2. He himself immediately contracted with the buyers, or at least with such as were foreigners; which he did upon prudential reasons; both because he would not have them to pry into the state of Egypt, Gen_42:12, and because he would by that opportunity understand the state of other lands, and improve that knowledge for his master's service.

Joseph's brethren bowed down themselves before him; thus unwittingly fulfilling Joseph's dream, Gen_37:7.

Genesis 42:7

He spake roughly unto them; partly, to bring their sin to remembrance; partly, to get the knowledge of the true state of his father and family; and partly, to further the following design, and make way for his and their greater happiness.

Genesis 42:8

Because his visage was much altered by his beard, and by other things, it being about twenty years since they saw him; and his Egyptian language, and habit, and carriage, together with the great dignity of his place, prevented all suspicions concerning their brother.

Genesis 42:9

This he saith, not because they were so, or he thought them to be so, but that he might search out the truth of their affair, speaking too much like a courtier or politician.

The nakedness of the land, i.e. the weak parts of it, and where it may be best assaulted or surprised.

Genesis 42:11

We are all one man's sons, and therefore not spies; for it is not likely either that a father would venture so many sons upon so hazardous an employment, or that such a work would have been trusted in the hands of one family only.

We are true men, who honestly and truly mean what we pretend, and have no other design in our coming hither.

Genesis 42:13

i.e. Is dead, as that phrase often signifies both in Scripture, as Gen_37:30 44:20 Jer_31:15 Mat_2:17,18, and in other authors, as Homer, Euripides, &c. They concluded with great probability that he was dead, Gen_44:20, because for twenty years together they had heard nothing, either of him or from him; which may seem strange, considering the nearness of Egypt and Canaan: but this came to pass partly from his own long imprisonment, and afterwards from his great and high employment; partly, from his lothness to bring so much mischief to his father and brethren, as the discovery of his case might have produced; and principally, from the overruling providence of God, which for its own glorious design disposed of Joseph's mind and affairs, so that he either did not send to his father's house, or that the messages were intercepted, there being not then those conveniencies for mutual correspondencies which now there are. And it is not improbable that Joseph might be further acquainted with the mind of God in this matter by dreams, which may seem to have been familiarly afforded to him, together with the interpretation of them. See Gen_40:8 41:16.

Genesis 42:14

This justifies my accusation; for it is not probable that one man should have so many sons, all grown up and living together in one family, and that he should expose them all to the perils of such a journey.

Genesis 42:15

By the life of Pharaoh, as sure as Pharaoh lives. It seems to be the form of an oath in use among the Egyptians, as afterwards the Romans used to swear by the name, genius, health, and life of their emperors. Compare 1Sa_1:26 17:55 2Ki_2:2 Eze_33:11. And it is not strange that Joseph through human infirmity was carried by the stream of the general practice of the court, especially when the law of God was not yet delivered concerning the appropriation of oaths unto God.

Genesis 42:18

I will spare your lives, and not punish you with death as spies, and you shall carry provisions, that your family also may live;

for I fear God, and therefore will not be cruel to you, nor to your brother whom you shall leave with me. This might have raised some suspicion concerning Joseph, but that they knew there were divers among the heathens who did own the true God, though they worshipped idols with him.

Genesis 42:19

Your prison, in which you are now imprisoned, and are still like to be so, if you accept not this condition.

Genesis 42:20

i.e. Resolved and promised to do so. Those things are oft said to be done in Scripture which were sincerely resolved upon, as hath been noted before.

Genesis 42:21

This is the just punishment of that great wickedness, which though we could cover from men, yet we now see and feel was known to God, who is now reckoning with us for it. Thus Divine vengeance overtakes them, and conscience tortures them for a sin committed above twenty years before, and their affliction brings them to repentance.

When he besought us: compare Gen_49:23. Yet this passage is not mentioned in that history, Gen_37:1-36. Learn hence, that the silence of the Scripture is no good argument that such or such a thing was not said or done, except in some special cases.

Therefore is this distress come upon us; he is inexorable to us, as we were to him.

Genesis 42:22

i.e. The punishment of his blood or death occasioned by us.

Genesis 42:24

He turned himself and wept tears, partly of natural affection and compassion towards his brethren, now in great distress and anguish; and partly of joy, to see the happy success of his design and rigorous carriage, in bringing them to the sight of their sins.

He chooseth to punish

Simeon, partly, because next to Reuben he was the eldest, and, as it may be probably gathered from his bloody disposition, Gen_34:25 49:6, the most fierce and forward against Joseph, when Reuben was for milder counsels, as we see here, Gen_42:22 38:29; and partly, because the detainment of one of so perverse and furious a temper would least afflict his father, and most secure Benjamin, who was to come with his brethren. He bound him before their eyes, that it might make deeper impression upon their hard hearts, and make their repentance more effectual.

Genesis 42:27

And after him the rest by his example and information did so, as is affirmed Gen_43:21, and it is not denied here.

Genesis 42:28

They were afraid, lest this should be a design to entrap, and so destroy them. Whoever were the instruments, they knew that God was the chief author of this occurrent, and wisely reflect upon his providence in it, and their own guilt which provoked him against them.

Genesis 42:35

i.e. Their fear returned upon them with more violence, having now more leisure to consider things, and their wise and experienced father suggesting new matters to them, which might more deeply affect them.

Genesis 43:1

Genesis 43:2

He saith a

Genesis 43:3

Ye shall not see my face. See the same expression, 2Sa_14:24 2Sa_14:32 Act_20:25 Act_20:38. Ye shall not be admitted into my presence, nor to the purchasing of any corn here.

Genesis 43:12

Take double money, double to what you carried last, either to procure more corn, which may prevent the frequency of such perilous journeys; or because the continuance and increase of the scarcity had advanced the price.

Genesis 43:32

They set on for him by himself; partly because the dignity of his place, and the custom of princes, required this state; and partly for the reason here following.

That is an abomination unto the Egyptians; not so much from their pride and disdain of other people, as from their superstition and idolatry; partly because they worshipped the creatures which the Hebrews and others did commonly eat; and partly because of some peculiar rites and customs which they had in the dressing and ordering of their diet. Whence Herodotus affirms, that the Egyptians would not use the pots nor knives of the Grecians about their food. Compare Gen_46:34. See there, Exo_8:26.

Genesis 43:33

The youngest according to his youth; being so placed either by Joseph's appointment; or rather by their own choice, and according to their custom; by which the elder, though the handmaidens' children, took place of the younger, who by that order were taught what veneration they owe to the aged, and how great a sin it is, though very customary, in young men to despise those whom they should reverence.

The men, not the Egyptians, but the Hebrews, the men last spoken of, marvelled; either at the matter and manner of the feasts and entertainments of the Egyptians; or rather, at the singular honour which Joseph did to them above all others, the reason whereof they could not conceive, and therefore marvelled at it.

Genesis 43:34

It was the ancient custom of Egypt and other countries in their feasts, that either all the meat, or at least some eminent parts and parcels of it, were not promiscuously set before all the guests, but peculiarly distributed by the master of the feast to the several guests, and that differently, according to his respect and affection to them, or to their several qualities. See 1Sa_1:5 9:22-24.

Five times so much as any of theirs; partly, because of his nearer relation and dearer affection to him; and partly, to observe whether this would raise that envy in them towards him, which was the occasion of their malicious enterprise against himself, that he might accordingly provide for his security.

Amongst the several kinds of divination in use among the Egyptians and other heathens, this was one, to do it by a cup or bason, which they filled with water, and put in them plates of silver, or precious stones, in which certain characters were engraven, by which, and some words they used, they called upon the devil, who gave them answer. Joseph did not use this course, nor was a diviner, but the people thought him such a one, and the steward might represent him as such, for the better covering or carrying on his design. But this sense agrees not with Gen_44:15, Wot you not, & c. Which words show that he speaks of something which they all might easily know; but they did not know that Joseph was a diviner, much less that he divined by that cup, whereas that kind of divination was generally performed by a glass, not by a cup. Others observe, that the Hebrew word oftentimes signifies not to divine, but only to observe and discover a thing, as Gen_30:27 1Ki_20:33, and render the place thus, whereby he will certainly observe or discover, to wit, what you are and do. But this also seems not to consist with Gen_44:15, and the supplement is too large and remote. The true sense then is this, the Hebrew bo is not to be rendered by which, but concerning which, as the particle beth is oft used, and it notes not the instrument whereby, but the object about which, he did divine, and the words must be rendered, concerning which he can or would certainly divine. And this agrees well with Gen_44:15: q.d. Did you think you could deceive my master? Did not you and all others know that he could divine, and discover secret things, whence he had both his name and preferment? And this cup being much prized and used by him, you might easily judge that he would use his art to recover it.

Why would Joseph expose his father to the hazard of his life, in parting with his dear child?

Ans. Joseph supposed that to be but a pretence, and might fear lest his brethren had disposed of Benjamin as they did of him, and therefore could not bring him forth. And as for his father, the experience which he had of his continuance in life and health after the supposed untimely death of Joseph, gave him good assurance that his parting with Benjamin for a season, and that under the care and charge of his brethren, was not likely to make any dangerous impression upon him.

Genesis 45:3

He repeats his former question, Gen_43:27, either because he questioned the truth of their former relation, or would be further satisfied in it, it being usual with men to ask over and over again what they long to know; or because he now desired a more particular relation of his father's condition, and how he did bear up under all his calamities.

They were troubled at his presence, from a sudden and deep sense of their horrid guilt, and their just fear of some dreadful punishment.

Genesis 45:4

Come near to me; be not afraid of me, but come nearer to me with cheerfulness and confidence, that you may be assured that I am he, and that we may more freely and privately discourse together, so as none others may hear. It is probable that Joseph sat in state, and that they hitherto kept a due distance from him.

Sold into Egypt, i.e. sold unto them that brought me into Egypt, and sold me there: see Gen_37:28 Gen_39:1. So they sold him into Egypt occasionally and eventually.

1706 Be not grieved, to wit, immoderately, and for the injury which you did to me, or for the danger which you have brought upon yourselves. Otherwise he doth not dissuade them from a godly sorrow for their offence against God, for the procurement of which he designed and used that strange and rough carriage towards them.

Nor angry with yourselves; neither excessively torment yourselves with the remembrance of the fact, neither break forth into contentions and wrath, and upbraidings of one another; for God by his wise, powerful, and gracious providence overruled your evil intentions to a happy end, to preserve life; not only your lives, for the expression is here indefinite and general, but the lives of all the people in this and the neighbouring countries; which though it doth not lessen your sin, yet ought to qualify your sorrow.

Genesis 45:6

Neither sowing nor reaping, except in a few places near Nilus, because the people could not spare seed-corn, and would not lose it; understanding from Joseph that their cost and labour would be lost, and that the famine would be of long continuance.

Genesis 45:7

And so what was said in the former clause is repeated in this with all emphatical addition.

Genesis 45:8

That I came to this place, and pitch of honour and power, is not to be imputed to your design, which was of another nature, but to God's overruling providence, which ordered the circumstances of your action, so as I should be brought to this place and state. Compare Gen_50:20.

Genesis 45:26

Jacob's heart fainted, or, was weakened, or failed, he fell into a swoon, as it is ordinary, because of the greatness and suddenness of the news, and the conflict of contrary and violent passions, raised hereby; grief at the remembrance of his former loss, and excessive joy for Joseph's recovery and felicity; hope that this might be true, and fear lest it should be but a fiction of theirs: any one of these passions are able to cause a fainting of the spirits, but much more when all meet together, especially in an aged person.

He believed them not; partly because of the greatness, and strangeness, and desirableness of the thing; compare Psa_126:1; and partly because they were by this very relation convicted of one lie about Joseph, in saying that he was dead, and therefore might easily be thought guilty of another.

The God of his father Isaac; whom Isaac honoured and served, and who had constantly protected and provided for Isaac, and confirmed his covenant with him. He mentions Isaac rather than Abraham, partly for Isaac's honour, to show that though Isaac was much inferior to Abraham in gifts and graces, yet God was no less Isaac's than Abraham's God, and therefore would be his God also, notwithstanding his unworthiness; and partly for his own comfort, because Isaac was Jacob's immediate parent, and had transferred the blessing of the covenant from Esau to Jacob, and the validity of that translation depended upon Isaac's interest in God.

Here were many causes of fear; lest he should do evil in forsaking the promised and blessed land, and going to a place which had been incommodious to his grandfather, Gen_12:15, and forbidden to his father, Gen_26:2; lest he should expose his children to manifold perils, as of being infected with the vices, and particularly the idolatry, which reigned there above all other countries, and of being inveigled by the pleasantness and eminent fruitfulness of that soil, to give up themselves to all manner of pleasures, and to settle themselves there, and give over all thoughts of returning to Canaan, and of being brought into that grievous bondage and affliction which was spoken of Gen_15:13; and lest some mischief should befall him or his in so long and dangerous a journey.

And the children may as well be said to come thither in their parents, as their father Jacob is said to return from thence, Gen_46:4, in his children.

Object. If this be the sense, why should these two be mentioned rather than the grandchildren of the other brethren, who came into Egypt in the same manner?

Answ. This may be done either,

1. From some special excellency or eminency in them above the rest, as Hezron was eminent for being the progenitor of the Messiah, and Hamul might be so for some other cause, though unknown to us. Or,

2. Because they were the first grandchildren that were born in Egypt, and it may be all that were born whilst Jacob lived there, and therefore are not unfitly named with Jacob, and allotted to him; as Joseph's two eldest sons, Ephraim and Manasseh, were by Jacob appropriated to himself, and reckoned as his immediate sons, when all the rest of Joseph's sons were excluded from that privilege, Gen_48:5,6. And the like may be said of the other two grandchildren mentioned Gen_46:17.

All the souls of his sons and his daughters, to wit, which came into Egypt as before; so that Er and Onan are excluded, as dying before this journey into Egypt, Gen_46:12.

Daughters is here put for daughter, as Gen_46:7, because Dinah was all the daughters which Jacob had. Heb. all the souls, sons and daughters being reckoned together with their father.

From this eastern manner of speech came that passage in the Greek fables, concerning Bacchus being born out of Jupiter's thigh.

Genesis 46:27

He doth not say,

which came with Jacob into Egypt, because some of them came thither before him, and others with him, some in their persons, and some in their parents. As for the difficulty arising from comparing this place with Act_7:14, it will be more fit to speak of it when we come to that place.

Genesis 46:28

To direct his face unto Goshen; Heb. to prepare, or to teach him, the way before his face, i.e. before his coming to Goshen; i.e. to show him where it was, and into what part of it he should come and settle himself; or to give notice unto Joseph of his approach, before his face or coming into Goshen.

Genesis 46:29

Doubtless Joseph fell down before him with all that reverence which children owe to their parents, and in this posture Jacob falls upon his neck, &c. Of which posture see Gen_33:4 45:14 Luk_15:20 Act_20:37.

Now I expect no greater happiness upon earth, and therefore am content to die. Compare Luk_2:29.

Genesis 46:34

In this design and choice Joseph shows both his prudence and piety. He brings them not to court, where it had been easy for him to have put them all into the best places and offices of the court; and as he is not ashamed to own himself a brother to shepherds, which were contemptible among the Egyptians, so he seeks not to advance them higher, but continues them in their employment, and placeth them in Goshen: whereby,

1. He kept them together, which was very convenient for them in many respects.
2. He secured them both from envy, and, as far as he could, from the corruption of their religion and manners, which was likely to follow their mixture with the Egyptians, and especially their being at the court.
3. He put them into a capacity of returning to Canaan, when God gave them opportunity.

Every shepherd is an abomination unto the Egyptians; either,

1. Because they did both kill and eat those creatures which the Egyptians adored. Or,
2. Because of the fresh remembrance of the horrid cruelties lately committed there by the Phoenician shepherds, who, as some very ancient writers affirm, were seated in Egypt in great numbers, and had arrived to great power, and waged a cruel war with other Egyptians, wherein they wasted divers cities, and burned their temples, and barbarously murdered a multitude of people. And therefore it is no wonder if the calling of shepherds was grown out of use and credit among them. True it is, the Egyptians had some sheep, and other cattle, Gen_47:6,17 Exo 8:26 9:3, which they kept for delight or profit by their milk, wool, &c., or for sale to others, but they did not use them, as other shepherds generally did, kill and eat them. And it is probable that they committed even the keeping of their sheep and cattle to those strangers which were dispersed among them, and looked upon the employment as too vile and mean for any Egyptian. And though Pharaoh offered it to Joseph's brethren as a favour to be rulers over his cattle, Gen_47:6, that might proceed only from hence, because he saw them firmly resolved upon that course of life, and therefore could not bestow any higher preferment upon them.

Genesis 47:1

Either to abide there, or to remove thence to any other place which thou shalt appoint for them.

Genesis 47:2

Some of his brethren, or part, as this Hebrew word is used, Dan_1:2; or the extremity, or end, or tail of them, i.e. the meanest of them for person and presence, as the word is taken 1Ki_12:31, lest if he, had presented the goodliest of them, Pharaoh might have required their attendance upon him, either at court or camp. And for the same reason for which he did industriously represent them to Pharaoh as contemptible in their employment, he might also present those to him who were so in their persons.

Genesis 47:3

This employment is not pretended nor taken up by us in design, or in contempt of thee or thy people, but was handed to us by our fathers, and hath been our business to this day.

Genesis 47:4

To sojourn in the land are we come; not to defraud thy people of their lands and habitations, but only to be here for a season, as strangers and sojourners, till we can conveniently return to our own land.

Canaan being a higher ground than Egypt, and watered in a manner only by rain from heaven, must needs sooner and sorer feel the effects of a drought and scarcity than Egypt, which had relief from Nilus in that kind.

Genesis 47:6

The land of Egypt is before thee, to view it, and take thy choice where thou pleasest, it is in thy power. See Gen_13:9.

Any man of activity, or, of strength, or vigour of body and mind, fit for the employment. By which expression it seems probable that those five presented to Pharaoh were of the meanest sort of them. See Poole on "Gen_47:2".

Genesis 47:7

Not in an authoritative way, as the greater blesseth the less, but in a general manner, i.e. he saluted him, thanked him for all his favours to him and his, and prayed to God to bless and recompense him for it. Thus blessing is put for saluting, 1Sa_13:10 2Ki_4:29; for praying, Num_6:23,24; for thanksgiving, Mat_26:26, compare with Luk_22:19.

Genesis 47:11

The land of Rameses; a part of the land of Goshen, possibly that part where afterwards the city Rameses was built by the Israelites, Exo_1:11 12:37, whence it is so called here by anticipation; for the Israelites were not now numerous enough to possess the whole land of Goshen, which was given to them, but contented themselves with a part of it, leaving the rest to the management of the Egyptians; and therefore when they increased greatly, they were forced to spread their habitations amongst the Egyptians. See Exo_12:7,23,35,37.

Genesis 47:12

Or, according to the mouth of the family; mouth being put for their will or desire, as it is Gen_24:57 Isa_30:2, as much as every one desired, without any restraint; or, according to the manner of a little child, he put their meat into their very mouths; it was brought to them without any more care or pains of theirs than an infant takes for its food.

Genesis 47:13

Quest. Whence came it that the people in this extremity did not take the corn by force out of the several store-houses?

Answ. Besides that singular providence of God which watcheth over kings and rulers, and stilleth the tumults of the people, Joseph had no doubt foreseen this difficulty, and took due care to prevent it, partly, by disposing the stores in strong and well-guarded places; partly, by adding wealth and strength to the king, whereby he might more easily suppress any seditious risings; and principally, by not permitting the people to despair, or come to the utmost extremity, but giving them relief in all their exigences.

Genesis 47:14

Wherein he did no more than any of the subjects might have done; he bought great store of corn in the plentiful years with the king's money, and kept it till a time of famine, and sold it at a rate which was agreeable to the Season.

Genesis 47:18

The second year; not the second from the beginning of the famine, but from their great extremity, the second year after that last mentioned, wherein they had sold their cattle; but this seems to have been the last year of the famine, because he now gives them corn for food and for seed too, Gen_47:23, whereas in the first six years there was no sowing nor reaping, Gen_45:6.

Genesis 47:19

Wherefore shall we die before thine eyes, i.e. whilst thou lookest upon us like an idle spectator, not pitying and relieving us? The land is said to die improperly, when it is desolate and barren, and when the fruits of it die, or, which is equivalent to it, do not live.

We and our land will be servants unto Pharaoh; Pharaoh shall be the sole proprietor, and we are content to be his tenants, to manage it for his use.

Give us seed, because this was the last year of famine, as Joseph informed them, and therefore they tilled and sowed the ground for the following year.

That the land be not desolate, without inhabitants, as it will be if thou sufferest us to die for want of bread.

Genesis 47:20

Genesis 47:21

Under the cities are here comprehended the villages and lands belonging to the territory and government of each city; for the seed which he gave them was not to be sown in cities, but in the country: but the cities only are here mentioned, because they were sent thither first, either for the conveniency of nourishing them during this famine out of the public storehouses which were there; or that they might all profess their subjection to the governments of the several cities, which was convenient for the management of that numerous and tumultuous people; or that the cities might be first and most replenished with inhabitants, as being the principal honour, and strength, and security of a kingdom, and that arts, and trades, and merchandise might flourish, without which the commodities of the country would have been of less price and use. But the cities being first supplied, the residue, which doubtless was vast, were dispersed in the country.

From one end of the borders of Egypt even to the other end thereof; far from their native soil and ancient patrimonies, that none of them might plead prescription, but that all might be forced to acknowledge that they owed their estates not to their own wit and industry, nor to their parents' gift, but wholly to the king's favour; and that the remembrance of their patrimonial lands might be worn out, and therewith the grief which would arise from their resentment of their loss of them, which probably would be matter of tumults and seditions, to which that people were very prone. And it is probable that he so disposed of this affair, that those who were apt, and likely, and used to unite together in seditious insurrections, whether kindred or others, should be separated one from another as far as might be. If any think that Joseph dealt hardly with them, and made an ill use of their necessity, he will see how moderately and mercifully he deals with them, Gen_47:24.

Genesis 47:22

The priests: under this name he understands chiefly those who administered the worship of the gods or idols of Egypt, and withal those who applied themselves to the study of the arts and virtues, called their wise men and magicians; though some understand it of the princes (as that word sometimes signifies) or officers of Pharaoh, who were nourished out of the king's treasures. And possibly the same Hebrew word may here comprehend both, viz. the ministers of the king, and of their idols too, for both enjoyed the same privileges, as Diodorus Siculus relates. And that the priests are included, if not mainly intended here, will be evident enough to any one that considers the state of Egypt, how mad that people universally were upon their idols, how numerous their priests were, and in how great honour and veneration both with prince and people: besides, reason of state obliged Pharaoh to engage and secure to himself that sort of men, which bore so great sway with the old inhabitants of their several places, and were likely to have the same authority with the new inhabitants, to quiet and satisfy them at their first change, which must needs be very ungrateful to them.

Of this immunity of the priests, that ancient writer Diodorus Siculus makes mention. But this is not to be ascribed to Joseph's will or choice; for he who abhorred their idolatry, could not have a kindness for, nor would have given encouragement to, the great upholders and promoters of it; but in this he was overruled either by Pharaoh's express command, (it being not probable that so great an interest as that of the priests should not have friends at court, or that their friends should not plead for them, or that their pleas and desires should not be granted by an idolatrous king,) or by the laws of Egypt, or by their customs and usages in things of a like nature, which would have the force of a law among them.

Genesis 47:23

For this was the last year of the famine, as was noted before.

Genesis 47:24

Whereas he might have reserved four parts to Pharaoh, and have allowed them only the fifth. Herein he showed both his humanity and kindness, in mitigating that hard bargain which themselves had made, and were necessitated to make, and his prudence in composing, sweetening, and winning the hearts of the people to the king, and making them pay their tribute for the future with more cheerfulness.

Genesis 47:25

Without thy care and providence we had all been dead men; and therefore if thou hadst kept us to the first bargain, thou hadst done us more kindness than wrong, much more when thou hast used us with so much equity and clemency. Be thou our friend with Pharaoh in this and upon all other occasions.

We will be Pharaoh's servants, to manage his land for him upon the terms which thou hast proposed.

Genesis 47:26

That Pharaoh should have the fifth part; that the propriety of the land should be Pharaoh's; and that in token thereof the people should pay the fifth part of the products of it to Pharaoh.

Genesis 47:27

They had possessions, i.e. lands, not for the dominion or propriety of them, for that rested in Pharaoh, but for the use and profit of them for their present subsistence.

Genesis 47:29

Put thy hand under my thigh, i.e. swear to me, as Gen_47:31, that thou wilt do what I am now desiring of thee; see Poole on "Gen_24:2". He requires this, not out of any distrust of Joseph's promise, but partly, as a more solemn protestation of his right to and affection for that promised land; partly, as a motive to all his children to have their minds and hearts there, even when their bodies were in Egypt; and partly, to give Joseph an argument and excuse to Pharaoh, that he might more willingly permit Joseph to fulfil his father's desire, because of his own oath.

And deal kindly and truly, or, that thou wilt deal; as the Hebrew vau joined with the future tense is elsewhere used, as Psa_24:7 35:24 51:15. Kindly in promising, and truly in performing thy promise.

Genesis 47:30

I will lie with my fathers, Abraham and Isaac, in Canaan. See Gen_23:19 25:9 35:29. Which he desired not so much for himself, as knowing that wherever he was buried he should rise to glory; as for his children, to show his own, and confirm their faith in God's promise of Canaan; to discover his high valuation of that land, not only for itself, but as it was a type and pledge of the heavenly inheritance; to keep his children's minds and hearts loose from Egypt, a place of so much sin and danger, and fixed upon Canaan, that they might be more willing to go thither when God called them, by virtue of that inclination which is in most persons to be buried with their fathers; and in the mean time to declare his detestation of idolaters, with whom he would have no communion either in life, as far as he could avoid it, or in the place of burial; and on the contrary, to profess his communion with his godly ancestors, by his desire to be joined with them in burial. And for the same reasons Joseph desired the translation of his bones thither, Gen_50:25.

Israel bowed himself, not to Joseph, who being now not upon his throne, nor amongst the Egyptians, but in his father's house, was doubtless more ready to pay that reverence (as he did Gen_48:12) than to receive veneration from him, which he owed to his father; but to God, who is here to be understood, as he is in the same phrase, 1Ki_1:47, whom with this gesture he worshipped and praised, as for the promise of Canaan, and the assurance which he had now received from Joseph of his being buried there, so for all his favours to him and to Joseph, and by him to all his family.

Jacob at this time was bedrid, through age and infirmity; but being now to give God solemn thanks, though the words and manner of it be not here expressed, he raised himself and sat upon the head or uppermost part of his bed, as he did also Gen_48:2, that he might express his reverence to God as much as he could by bowing, when he could not do it as much as he would, being unable to do it kneeling. Others for bed read staff the discussion whereof I refer unto its proper place, Heb_11:21.

Genesis 48:5

Thy two sons are mine, by adoption: I shall own them as if they were my immediate children, and each of them shall have equal share, both in my present estate, and future inheritance of Canaan, with the rest of my children. Thus Jacob transfers the double portion, which was the right of the first-born, from which Reuben by his transgression fell, Gen_49:4, upon Joseph, 1Ch_5:1. He names the two eldest, who, if any, might seem to claim a greater privilege than the rest.

Genesis 48:6

Shall be reputed as thy children, and my grandchildren, and shall not have any distinct share in my present or future inheritance, but shall have a part of their brethren's lot, in such manner and proportion as thou shalt think fit, or as their succeeding parents or governors shall determine. But it doth not appear, nor doth Scripture any where mention, that Joseph had any other sons but these, and therefore it is probable he had no more; only Jacob speaks this upon supposition, in case he should have any other.

Shall be called after the name of their brethren; either Ephraimites or Manassites.

Genesis 48:7

Rachel died by me; or, beside me; near me, before mine eyes, I seeing, but not being able to help her in her extremity; which makes the remembrance of it more grievous to me. This story he here mentions, partly because the sight of Joseph and his children brought his beloved Rachel to his remembrance; partly to give the reason of this action of his to the rest of his children, which was not only because Rachel was his first rightful wife by designation and contract, and therefore the right of the first-born was truly Joseph's; but because by her early death he was cut off from all hopes of having more children by her, and therefore it was but fit he should supply that defect by adopting Joseph's children.

I buried her there, not out of disrespect to her, whose person was, and memory yet is, precious and honourable to me, but either because dying in childbed they could not keep her till they came to the burying-place of the patriarchs at Hebron, Gen_23:19, especially when they were tied to the slow motion of the flocks and herds; or because I would not bury her in the common burying-place with heathens and idolaters, in the city of Ephrath. By which he tacitly implies, that he would not have Joseph joined with the Egyptians in burial.

Genesis 48:8

For Jacob's eyes were dim through age and infirmity, as is observed Gen_48:10, and therefore he could not distinctly discern them.

Genesis 48:9

From between his knees; not his own knees, from which they had been taken before, but Jacob's knees, between which they stood whilst Jacob kissed and embraced them; from which Joseph removed them, partly that they might not be burdensome to their aged and weak grandfather, and principally that he might place them in fit order and reverent posture to receive the blessing for which he longed.

He bowed himself, testifying thereby his reverence to his father, his thankfulness for the favour which he had now showed to him and his, and his humble and earnest request for his blessing upon them.

Genesis 48:14

The

right hand was more honourable both in Scripture account, and amongst the Gentiles.

Laid it upon Ephraim's head; which was a rite used often, and in divers cases, as in the conferring of offices either sacred or civil, as Num_8:10 Deu_34:9 Act_6:6 13:3; and among other things, in giving benedictions, as Mat_19:13.

Guiding his hands wittingly; this proceeded not from chance, or the mistake and weakness of his eyes, but from design, and the wisdom of his hands. Heb. He disposed his hands prudently, or, he dealt wisely with his hands. Here was a double wisdom showed.

1. Human, by which he gathered that Manasseh was the eldest, because Joseph placed him towards his right hand.

2. Divine and prophetic, by which he foresaw Ephraim's advantage above Manasseh, and wisely suited the ceremony to the substance, giving the greater sign of honour to him, to whom God designed the thing.

Genesis 48:15

He blessed Joseph, not now in his person, but in his children, which yet is called here a blessing of Joseph, because they were a part of himself. In which sense, and upon the same ground, the land of Canaan is oftentimes said to be not only promised, but given to Abraham and Isaac, & c., not as if they were in person to possess it, but because it should be given to their children. Thus Ham is said to be cursed when his son is cursed, Gen_9:25.

Which fed me, i.e. protected, sustained, and directed me.

Genesis 48:16

The Angel; not surely a created angel, but Christ Jesus, who is called an Angel, Exo_23:20, and the Angel of the covenant, Mal_3:1, who was the conductor of the Israelites in the wilderness, as plainly appears by comparing of Exo_23:20, 21, with 1Co_10:4, 9. Add hereunto, that this Angel is called Jacob's Redeemer, which is the title appropriated by God to himself, Isa_43:14 47:4, and that from all evil, and therefore from sin, from which no created angel can deliver us, but Christ only, Mat_1:21; and that Jacob worshippeth and prayeth to this Angel no less than to God for the blessing, and that without any note of distinction, the word bless being in the singular number, and equally relating to God and to the Angel; and that the Angel to whom he here ascribes his deliverances from all evil, must in all reason be the same to whom he prayed for these very deliverances which he here commemorates, and that was no other than the very God of Abraham, as is evident from Gen_28:15,20,21 32:9-11 35:3.

Let my name be named on them, i.e. let them be called by my name, owned for my immediate children, and invested with the same privileges with my other children, be the heads of distinct tribes, and as such receive distinct inheritances. And hence they are called the children of Jacob or Israel, no less than the children of Joseph. For the phrase, see Deu_28:10 2Ch_7:14 Isa_4:1 Jer_14:9.

And the name of my fathers; let them be called their children; let them not only have my blessing, but the blessings of Abraham and Isaac; let all meet together upon their heads; and let that gracious covenant of God made with Abraham, and confirmed with Isaac and me, be ratified and made good unto them.

Genesis 48:17

Genesis 48:19

Greater than he; so the tribe of Ephraim was both in number, Num_1:32,33,35 2:19,21 Deu 33:17, and in power and privileges; for that tribe was the seat first of the tabernacle, and afterwards of the kingdom. Whence the name of Ephraim is sometimes put for all the ten tribes, as Isa_7:2, and sometimes for Joseph himself, as Num_1:32 Rev_7:8, which Manasseh never is.

A multitude of nations, i.e. equal to many nations in number and strength; or, from them shall proceed many nations, i.e. many numerous; potent, and flourishing families, whereof each is equivalent to an ordinary nation. For as nations are sometimes called families, as Zec_14:18, so the tribes and families of Israel are called nations or people, as Eze_2:3 Act_4:27.

Genesis 48:20

In thee, i.e. in thy seed, as appears both from the relative them here, and from Gen_48:15, where his blessing of them is called the blessing of Joseph; and from the following words, where this is interpreted of

Ephraim and

Manasseh. And

in thee, or in thy seed, i.e. using their names in the form or words of blessing, as eminent examples of blessedness.

Genesis 48:21

Behold, I die, i.e. I am about to die; the present time for that which will shortly and certainly be, as Gen_19:13 20:3 Joh_14:2.

The land of your fathers, i.e. Canaan; their land,

1. By habitation, as Nazareth is called Christ's country because he dwelt in it.

2. By the donation of God, who had promised, and would in his time give the actual possession of it to them, i.e. to their seed.

Genesis 48:22

i.e. I do now give to thee the right, and I do prophetically give, and God will really and actually give unto thy son Ephraim, or his and posterity, who shall possess this part over above that portion which shall fall to him by lot. This was all the land which Jacob had in Canaan, which he here gives to Joseph, partly, in testimony of his great affection and obligation to him; partly, as a sign that he did confirm the right of the first-born upon him; and partly, for the confirmation of the faith of Joseph and his brethren, and to oblige them to set up their rest no where but in Canaan.

One portion: the Hebrew word is Shechem, which word indeed signifies a shoulder, as Gen_9:23, and is here put for a part of land which is choice and good, as the shoulder is among the parts of the body. See 1Sa_9:24. And he useth this word, that by allusion he might signify what place he speaks of, even Shechem, as may further appear by comparing Jos_24:32 Joh_4:5. Yea, some would have Shechem here to be the proper name of the place, which might be if the word one were not added to it.

This place is understood, either,

1. Of the future conquest of the land of the Amorites or Canaanities by his posterity, which he here ascribes to himself, and speaks of it in the past time, as of a thing already done, as the manner of the prophets is. But Jacob would not attribute that to his sword, which his posterity deny to be done by their sword, Psa_44:3. And it is manifest that Jacob here speaks of that which was his by a special title, and which in a peculiar manner he gave to Joseph. Or,

2. Of the city and territory of Shechem, whose inhabitants were rooted out by Simeon and Levi, and whose land being void was possessed by Jacob. And this is said to be got by Jacob's sword and bow, because it was got with the sword and bow of his sons Simeon and Levi, and a great number of his family, who doubtless were associated with them in this expedition. But it is not likely that he would take to himself that which he declares his utter abhorrence of, Gen_34:30 49:5,6, or that he should call that his sword and his bow here which he calls instruments of cruelty in Simeon's and Levi's hands, Gen_49:5. Or,

3. Which seems the truest, of that land in the territory of Shechem, which Jacob bought of Hamor, Gen_33:19, which is said to be got by his sword and bow, either,

1. Properly, because he did by force of arms expel those Amorites, who upon his retirement from those parts, after the slaughter of the Shechemites, had invaded his lands, though this story be not elsewhere recorded; as many things are mentioned by the by in some one place of Scripture, without any particular account of the circumstances of them, either there or elsewhere, as Gen_36:24 Deu_2:9-11 Jos_24:11. And though Jacob was a man of peace, yet his sons were warriors; and they by his permission might drive out, by their arms, those straggling Canaanites which had taken possession of his purchase, Jacob being the more willing to recover his right herein, because it was an earnest of his future possession of the whole land. And the neighbouring Canaanites would not concern themselves in the defence of the invaders, both because they were convinced of the right of Jacob's cause, and because they were overruled by Divine Providence, in which Jacob trusted, and of which he had ample experience. Or,

2. Metaphorically, i.e. by his money, which he calls his sword and his bow, not only because money is answerable to the sword and the bow, and all other things, Ecc_10:19, and is a defence, Ecc_7:12, and therefore may well be so called, even as prayers and tears are called the arms of the church, because they serve for the same purpose that arms do against their enemies; but also and principally by way of opposition to the sword and bow of his cruel sons. So the sense may be this, I have given to thee one portion, or one Shechem, not the city of Shechem, which Simeon and Levi took from the hand of the Amorite with their sword and their bow, but a part of the territory of Shechem which I took or received from the hand of the Amorite by my sword and my bow, i.e. by my money, whereby I purchased it.

speaks here of things which concern not so much their persons as their posterity.

The beginning of my strength; the first instance or evidence of my might or strength, or of that masculine rigour whereby God enabled me to beget a child. Compare Deu_21:17 Psa_105:36. Or the first of my children, which are the strength, the stays, and supports of a father, and of his family; thence called his arrows, as Psa_127:4, and by other authors, the pillars of the house.

Unstable as water: this may concern either,

1. Something past, or Reuben's fault; and so he is said to have been unstable, or light, and vain, as the word is used, Jud_9:4 Zep_3:4; like water, moved with every little wind of temptation, and unbounded in thy lust; as water of itself hath no bounds, but will scatter itself every way, if it be not kept within banks, or in a vessel: or, hasty, violent, impetuous in thy lust, like water, which either overflows or breaks its banks. Or,

2. Something to come, or Reuben's punishment; and so the meaning is, Thou, i.e. thy posterity, shall be unstable, or unsettled, flitting and vanishing, coming to nothing, or poured forth like water, useless, contemptible, and weak. Such indeed was the state of that tribe, of which we read nothing eminent in Scripture. See Jud_5:15-16. This I prefer before the former,

1. Because it is not probable that his fault should be described here in such general and ambiguous and dark terms, which is described so plainly and particularly in the following words.

2. Because this makes the coherence most plain. Here is a description,

(1.) Of Reuben's excellent state to which he was born, Gen_49:3.

(2.) Of his fall from that state, in these words, and the immediately following, thou shalt not excel .

(3.) Of the reason of this fall, his great sin.

3. Because the similitude of water applied to men in this manner, notes rather their impotency and calamity than their sin, as Jos_7:5 Psa_22:14.

Thou shalt not excel, or, be the most eminent amongst thy brethren; thou hast lost thy pre-eminency due to thee by birthright, both for thyself and for thy posterity, and it shall be given to others; the priesthood to Levi, the dominion to Judah, and the double portion to Joseph.

Then defiledst thou it, by committing incest with Bilhah. He repeats the same thing, and that in an emphatical manner, turning his speech and face from Reuben to his brethren, in a posture of indignation and detestation; which you must not impute to Jacob's passion, he being now a dying man, and this being forty years after the crime committed, but to the Spirit of God guiding his tongue to utter this, not only nor chiefly for the punishment of Reuben, who, as many think, had repented of his sin; but for terror, instruction, and caution to all others, and to assure them that sin, though it may be long dissembled and borne with, yet it will one time or other be sorely punished. But these and the next foregoing words may be thus rendered, Then defiledst thou my bed: he went up to it, or rather, he is gone up, i.e. he is vanished, or perished, or lost; for so this word is oft used, as Job_5:26 Isa_5:24 Jer_48:15. And so here is an elegant figure, called antanaclasis, whereby the same word is repeated in the same verse in a different sense, as Psa_18:26 Mat_8:22. So here,

He went up wickedly to his father's bed to commit a great sin; therefore now he is gone up penally, to receive condign punishment; his excellency is gone up like smoke, which ascendeth and is dispersed in the air. And this may seem to be the truest translation and interpretation, because it keeps close to the Hebrew words and their order; whereas, in our translation, there is both a transplacing of the Hebrew words, and a supplement added unnecessarily.

Genesis 49:5

Simeon and Levi are brethren; not only by nature, but in iniquity; of like cruel and bloody disposition, confederate in the same wicked design, Gen_34:25. So the word brother is elsewhere used, for him that agrees much with another in his temper, or employment, or designs, as Job_30:29 Pro_18:9, &c.

Their bloody swords are yet in their dwellings, to bear witness against them for their barbarous cruelty. But these words may be, and are by some both ancient and later interpreters, rendered otherwise. For the Hebrew word mecheroth, here rendered habitations, is never so used, nor indeed is found elsewhere in Scripture. Nor doth that signification agree with the Hebrew root from whence this comes, which is machar, and signifies to bargain, or sell, or exchange. And accordingly this word is by the Samaritan translator, and by other learned interpreters, rendered, their conventions, or compacts, or civil contracts, or agreements. And, which is more, the Chaldee verb mechar, from whence this word may very well be deduced, signifies to espouse; and the noun mechirah, derived from it, signifies a spouse. And so the words may be rendered thus, their contracts, or agreements, ( or their nuptial contracts, ) were instruments of cruelty. Which translation seems better than the other,

1. Because it keeps closest to the words of the text, and leaves out that particle in, which is not in the Hebrew text, but was added by our translators to complete the sense.

2. Because this best agrees with the history recorded, Gen_34:1-31, where we read that they did cover their bloody design with a pretence of an agreement and nuptial contract with the Shechemites, which was a great aggravation of their villany, that those things which to others are bonds of love and peace, were made by them instruments of cruelty.

Genesis 49:6

Their secret; or, counsel, or company, as the word is used, Psa_64:2 Jer_15:17; i.e. do not partake with them in their secret and wicked designs. Hereby he signifies to all posterity, that that bloody enterprise was undertaken without his consent or approbation, and that he could not think of it without detestation, nor let it pass without a severe censure. Or, O my soul, thou wast not in their secret, as the Chaldee, Syriae, and Arabic take it, by a common enallage of the future tense for the past.

Mine honour; either,

1. Properly so called. So the sense is, Let not my honour or good name be bound up with theirs; they gloried in this wickedness, which I abominate, and which indeed is their shame. Or,

2. Improperly; so he understands either,

1. His soul, which is indeed the glory of a man, though I do not remember any place of Scripture where that word must necessarily be so understood. So this is a repetition of the same thing in other words, which is usual in Scripture. Or rather,

2. His tongue, for which the word honour or glory is commonly put, as Psa_16:9, compared with Act_2:26 Psa_30:12 57:8 108:1, because the tongue or speech is the glory of a man, by which he is distinguished from unreasonable creatures, and, if well used, it brings much honour to God, and to the man that speaks with it. So the sense is, As my soul did not approve of that wicked action, so my tongue never gave consent to it, nor shall it now by silence seem to own it, but shall publicly witness my abhorrence of it.

In their anger they slew a man, i.e. men, the Shechemites, Gen_34:25,26, the singular number for the plural, as Gen_3:2 32:5 1Ch_10:1, compared with 1Sa_31:1. He saith man rather than men, either with respect unto the prince, whose slaughter was principally designed, or to show that they slew them all to a man.

In their self-will: it may note, that this cruelty of theirs was committed,

1. By their own will and choice, not by Jacob's will or consent, which they never asked nor obtained.
2. Without any necessity or sufficient provocation, but merely by their own will and proper motion.
3. Not rashly and hastily, but wilfully and resolvedly, after mature deliberation.
4. Not unwillingly, but cheerfully, and with delight and good will, as that word commonly signifies.

They digged down a wall; not the walls of the city, but of private houses; it may be only of the prince's house, who upon the first noise of the tumult might, and probably did, retire and secure himself in some strong room of the house, whose wall they brake down that they might come at him. For neither were the walls of houses or cities so strong then as now many are; nor were Simeon and Levi destitute of fit instruments to break down a wall, which doubtless they brought with them, as easily foreseeing that difficulty in their enterprise. But because the Hebrew word is not shur, a wall, but schor, an ox, others translate the words thus, they houghed, or killed an ox, or bull, meaning Shechem, so called either from his lust, or from his strength and power, from which princes are oft so called, as Deu_33:17 Psa_22:12 68:30. Or rather thus, they rooted out, or drove away an ox, i.e. the oxen, the singular number for the plural, as before; and under them are comprehended the other cattle of the Shechemites, which they drove away, as we read they did, Gen_34:28. For as the words may bear this sense, so it seems more reasonable to understand them of that which certainly was done by them, than of their breaking a wall, of which we do not read any thing in the history.

Genesis 49:7

Cursed be their anger, or, cursed was. It was execrable and abominable both before God and men; such as deserved and brought the curse of God upon themselves, which I, as God's instrument, am now to pronounce against them.

I do here declare, in the name of God, that they shall be divided and dispersed in Jacob, & c.; that is, among the children or tribes of Jacob or Israel. Prophets are said to do what they foretell that God will do, as Jeremiah is said to root out and pull down kingdoms, Jer_1:10, and Ezekiel to destroy the city, Eze_43:3. Add Hos_6:5. Note here how suitable their punishment was to their crime. They sinned by conspiracy and confederation in the counsel and action, and they are punished with division or separation, not only of the two brethren and their tribes, but of the children and families of the several tribes, one from another. This was eminently fulfilled in the tribe of Levi, which had no proper portion or inheritance, but was scattered among all the tribes, Jos_18:7, though afterwards God turned this curse into a blessing. And for Simeon, he had no part of his own in the division of the land; but the portion of Judah being too large for that tribe, he was taken into that lot, and was as an inmate to them, Jos_19:1,2,9, and afterwards part of them were forced to seek new seats, and so were divided from the rest of their brethren, 1Ch_4:27,39,42. And moreover, the Jewish doctors write, that that tribe was so straitened in their habitations and conveniences, that a very great number of them were forced to scatter themselves amongst the other tribes to get a subsistence by teaching their children.

Genesis 49:8

Or rather,

Thou art

Judah, thy brethren shall praise or celebrate thee. So the expression is like that 1Sa_25:25.

As his name is, so is he; Nabal is his name, and folly is with him, or in him. So here the sense is, As thy name signifies praise, Gen_29:35, so shalt thou have praise or honour from thy brethren. He alludes to his name, and to the occasion of it, but with an elegant variation. Thou art deservedly called Judah, not only because thy mother praised God for thee, but also because thy brethren shall praise and bless thee for the reasons here following. But this, as also the other blessings or predictions, do not so much declare the state of Judah or the rest in their own persons, as in their posterity.

Thy hand shall be in the neck of thine enemies, i.e. thou shalt overthrow and subdue them. This was fulfilled in part, Jud_1:1,2,4 3:9,10; but more fully in David, 2Sa_8:1, and Solomon, 1Ch_12:9; and most eminently, though spiritually, in Christ. The phrase is taken either,

1. From the practice of warriors, who use to assault their enemies in that part, that they may throw them down at their feet; of which see Job_15:26 16:12. Or,

2. from the custom of conquerors, who are said to put the yokes upon the necks of the conquered. See Gen_27:40 Deu_28:48 Isa_10:27 Jer_27:8 28:14.

Thy father's children, i.e. all thy brethren, and my posterity; he saith not thy mother's children, for his sons had divers mothers;

shall bow down before thee, i.e. shall own thee as their superior and lord, upon whom I have devolved this part of the right of the first-born. By this and the following words we plainly see that these blessings and predictions were not distributed according to Jacob's affections and inclinations, (for then Judah should never have been advanced above his worthily beloved Joseph,) but by the direction of God's Spirit.

Genesis 49:9

Judah is as a lion's whelp, or as a young lion, for courage, and strength, and terror to his enemies. The particle as is here wanting, as also Gen_49:14,17,21,22, and in many other places, as Psa_11:1 12:6 22:6, &c. And he is rightly compared first to a lion's whelp, then to an old lion, to signify the growth of that tribe in strength and interest; and that from small beginnings, and a precedency of order only, Jud_1:1,2, it should ascend to the height of honour, and power, and happiness in David, and especially in the Messiah, who should conquer all nations.

From the prey... thou art gone up. Having taken the prey, i.e. conquered thine enemies, thou art gone up in triumph; or gone up, i.e. grown greater and higher after thy victories, as the manner is. Or he alludes to the lions, which usually dwell in mountains, as divers writers observe, and come down to prey in the valleys, and when they have got their prey, they go up to their habitations, and so shall Judah do.

He stooped; a change of the person very frequent in prophetic writings, as we shall oft have occasion to note hereafter.

He couched. When he hath taken the prey, he doth not convey it away to his den with haste and speed for fear the enemy should return and overtake him, but like a lion he stoops down to feed upon his prey, and coucheth or lieth down securely to rest himself after he hath eaten it, without the least fear of any enemy, as it is observed of him, Isa_31:4. Judah's conquests shall not be interrupted or followed with ill successes and defeats or overthrows afterward, as it frequently happens in the course of war, but he quietly possess his spoils, and after the bloody wars, to which he will be forced, shall enjoy a sweet peace and tranquillity, which his posterity did, 1Ki_4:25.

As an old lion, or rather a grown lion, not a decrepit and impotent lion, but one come to his full strength; who shall presume or dare to disturb or provoke him? All shall fear him, and seek peace with him.

Genesis 49:10

The sceptre, i.e. the dominion or government, which is oft expressed by this word, as Num_24:17 Psa_45:6 Isa_14:5 Eze_19:11,14 Am 1:5,8 Zec 10:11, because it is an ensign of government, Est_4:11. So it is a figure called a metonymy of the sign, than which nothing more frequent. The sense is, That superiority or dominion over his brethren, which I said he should obtain Gen_49:8 he shall keep; it shall not depart from him. Others, the tribe, as the word shebet signifies, 1Sa_10:19-21 1Ki_11:32, &c. So the sense is this, Whereas the other tribes shall be captivated, dispersed, and confounded, the tribe of Judah shall be kept entire and distinct until Christ come. This is a great and important truth, and a singular demonstration of the all-disposing providence of God, and of the truth and Divine authority of the Scriptures; but it seems not to be the meaning of this place,

1. Because both the foregoing and following words do evidently speak of Judah's power and greatness, and particularly this shebet, or sceptre, is explained and restrained by the following lawgiver.
2. Because this renders the phrase improper and absurd; for the tribe had not departed from Judah, nor had they ceased to be a tribe, if the other tribes had been mixed with them in their land, as indeed they were sometimes. See 2Ch_11:16.

3. Because this is not peculiar to the tribe of Judah; for in this sense the tribe did not depart from Levi, nay, that tribe was kept more distinct than that of Judah; thus also the tribe did not depart from Benjamin, as appears from Ezr_1:5 10:9 Neh_11:4. Nay, it is questionable whether in this sense the tribe departed from any of the other tribes, not only because there is a distinct mention of the several tribes, Eze_48:1-35, which was written after the dispersion and supposed confusion of the other tribes, and which speaks of the times after the coming of the Messiah, but also because of the great care which the Israelites generally took in distinguishing, not only their tribes, but their several families, in exact genealogies, of which we have many proofs and instances, as 1Ch_4:33 5:1,7,17 7:7,9,40 9:1,22 Ezr 2:62 8:1,3 Ne 7:5,64. The Jews indeed have another device to avoid the force of this text. They say shebet signifies a rod, to wit, a rod of correction, as the word is taken Pro_22:15. And so they say the sense is, The tyrannical sceptre, or the rod of the oppressor, shall not cease or depart from Israel till the Messiah come, who shall save them from all their oppressors and enemies. But this is a vain and frivolous conceit; for,

1. The following sentence, which expounds the former, as it is usual in Scripture, plainly shows that this shebet, or rod, is such as is proper to the lawgiver, and therefore is a rod of authority, or a sceptre, which is called also a rod, Eze_19:14, and not a rod of affliction.

2. This is contrary to the whole context, wherein there is nothing prophesied of Judah, but honour, and dominion, and victory, and safety.

3. There was no reason why the rod of affliction should be appropriated to Judah, which was common to all the tribes, and came sooner, and fell heavier, and abode longer upon the other tribes than upon Judah.

4. This interpretation is confuted by the event or history, both because the rod of correction did depart from Judah, and from them more than from the other tribes, for many generations before the coming of the Messiah; and because that rod is not removed from them, but hath continued longer and more dreadfully upon them since the coming of the Messias than ever before; which one consideration hath been the occasion of the conversion of many Jews.

5. Howsoever the modern Jews pervert this word and text out of enmity to Christ and Christians, it is certain that the ancient Jews, the LXX., and the Chaldee Paraphrast, with many others, take the word as we do, as the learned have proved out of their own writings. See my Latin Synopsis.

A lawgiver; so the Hebrew word signifies, as here, so also Num_21:18 Deu_33:21 Psa_60:7 108:8 Isa_33:22. And the verb from whence this word comes signifies to make laws, as Pro_8:15, &c.; and the Hebrew word chok, which comes from the same root, constantly signifies a law or statute. Some render it the scribe, and that either the civil scribe, who belongs to the ruler; or the ecclesiastical scribe, the interpreter of the law; and so it signifies, that both the civil and the ecclesiastical power should continue in Judah till Christ came, and then should be taken away, both which the event did verify. But indeed the Hebrew word for scribe is sopher, not mechokek, which never is so used in Scripture, but always for a lawgiver, as I have showed; and so Kimchi and Aben Ezra, two late and learned Jews, with others, expound it.

From between his feet; from his posterity, or from those that come from between his feet, i.e. that are begotten and born of that tribe. And thus Kimchi, and the Chaldee Paraphrast, and other ancient Jews, understand this place. And the truth of this interpretation may appear, by comparing this with other texts of Scripture, as Deu_28:57, where the young one is described to be one that cometh from between her (the woman's) feet; and Eze_16:25, and with those places where the word feet is used for the secret parts, as Isa_7:20, the hair of the feet, not properly so called, for hair seldom grows there; and 2Ki_18:27 Isa_36:12, where the water which comes from the secret parts is called the water of the feet. And possibly that phrase of covering the feet, applied to them that eased their bellies, may note so much, because the Jews in that action were not to hide their feet properly so called, but their secret parts, which without due care might be discovered upon that occasion.

Shiloh, i.e. the Messias; which we need not stand to prove, because it is so expounded by all the three Chaldee Paraphrasts, and by the Jewish Talmud, and by divers of the latter Jews themselves. And the word signifies, either a peace-maker, or saviour; or, as others, her son, or one that came out of the woman's womb, or out of that skin in which the child in the womb is wrapped, which this word, or one near akin to it, signifies. So it notes that the Messias should be born of a woman, though without the help of man. Or, as others, the sent, he who was oft promised and to be sent. And this signification may seem to be warranted by comparing Joh_9:7, with those places of the New Testament in which the Messias is described by that periphrasis of one sent, or to be sent, as Joh_3:34, &c. And the phrase here used is remarkable, till the Shiloh come, for the Shiloh, or Messiah, oft goeth under the name of him that was to come, as Mat_21:9 Luk_7:20 13:35. And hence the kingdom of the Messiah is called the world or kingdom to come, i.e. of him who was to come, Heb_2:5 6:5.

Unto him shall the gathering of the people be; they shall be gathered together, or united both among themselves, and with the Jews, under him as their Head. Others, the reverence, obedience, or worship; which comes to the same thing, for they that are gathered to him, do also reverence, obey, and worship him. The Hebrew word is used only here and Pro_30:17.

The people, i.e. the Gentiles, as the Jews themselves understand it. And so it is a plain prophecy of the conversion of the Gentiles by and under the Messiah; signifying, that whereas the ordinances of God, and means of worship and salvation, were confined to the Jews before Christ's coming, Psa_147:19, 20, when the Messiah should come, the pale of the church should be enlarged, the partition-wall between Jews and Gentiles taken down, and the Gentiles should worship the true God and the Messias. And this is no more than is foretold and promised in other prophecies, as we shall see hereafter. The sum of this verse is, The sceptre or dominion shall be seated in the tribe of Judah, though he doth not determine when it shall come thither; but when once it shall come, it shall not depart from thence till the Messiah come; and then Judah shall lose this sceptre and other privileges, and the Gentiles shall come into the stead of the Jews, and shall embrace that Messiah whom they shall reject. So now here is an undeniable argument to prove against the Jews that the Messiah is already come, and that the Lord Jesus Christ is he, because he was to come during the time wherein the sceptre was in the hands of Judah; and about that time when Jesus Christ came the sceptre was taken away from Judah and the Jews, and hath now been lost for sixteen hundred years together. The Jews are mightily perplexed and confounded with this argument; one evidence whereof is their various and contradictory expositions of the place, whilst some of them affirm this Shiloh to be Moses, others Saul, others Jeroboam, others Nebuchadnezzar, which neither need nor deserve confutation; others David; which, though some of the acutest of the Jewish doctors assert, is as contemptible as any of the rest, it being ridiculous to say the sceptre departed from Judah under him by whom it first came into that tribe, having been till David's time in other tribes. But the great difficulty is, how this was accomplished; for if the event fully agrees with this prophecy, the cause of the Jews is lost, and Christ must be owned as the true Messias. The sceptre was for a time in other tribes; as in Moses of the tribe of Levi; in divers of the judges, who were of several tribes; and lastly in the tribe of Benjamin under Saul; but the sceptre departed from all these. But this is prophesied as Judah's privilege, that when once the sceptre or government came into that tribe, which it did in David's time, it should not depart from it till Christ came, and then it should depart. And thus it came to pass. Concerning the time from David unto the captivity of Babylon there is no dispute, there being a constant succession of kings in that tribe all that time. For the time of the Babylonish captivity, wherein there may seem to be more difficulty, it is to be considered,

1. That the sceptre or government was not lost or departed from Judah, but only interrupted, and that but for seventy years at most, which in so long a space of time as above a thousand years is little to be regarded. As none will say the kingdom was departed from the house of David, because of those interreigns or interruptions which sometimes fell out in that family. Add to this, that God hath given them an absolute promise and assured hope of the restoration of Judah's sceptre; so that this was rather a sleep than the death of that government.

2. That within these seventy years there were some remainders and beams of Judah's sovereignty in Jehoiachin, 2Ki_25:27; in Daniel, who was of that tribe, Dan_2:25 5:13, and of the king's seed, Dan_1:3; and in the successive heads or governors of the exiles, of whom the Jewish writers say so much; and they affirm that they were always of the house of David, and were more honourable than the governors of the Jews which were left in the land of Israel.

3. All that was then left of the sceptre of the Jews was in the tribe of Judah; nor was the sceptre departed from Judah to any other tribe; and that is the thing which seems especially to be respected in this prophecy: for Judah is here compared with the rest of the tribes; and it is here signified, that the power and dominion which was in Judah, when once it came thither, should not shift from tribe to tribe, as it had done, but whilst there was any sceptre or supreme government among the Jews, it should be in that tribe, even till the coming of the Messias. But if there should happen any total, but temporary intercision or cessation of the government among all the tribes, which now was the case, that was no prejudice to the truth of this promise, nor to the privilege granted to Judah above the rest of the tribes. After the captivity, the state of the Jews was very various. Sometimes they had governors put in by the Persian king, as Zorobabel, who was also of the tribe of Judah, and, as it is supposed, nephew of Jehoiachin; and Nehemiah, whom Eusebius affirms to have been of the tribe of Judah. And though he may seem to be numbered among the priests, Neh_10:8, yet a diligent reader will find that he is even there distinguished from them by his title the Tirshatha, Gen_49:1, and the word priests, Gen_49:8, relateth only to the rest there mentioned besides him; especially if this be compared with Neh_9:38, where the princes (among whom surely Nehemiah was the chief) are distinguished from the priests. And sometimes the people chose governors, or captain-generals, as the Maccabees, and others. But under all their vicissitudes, after their return from Babylon, the chief government was evidently and unquestionably seated in the great council called Sanhedrim or Synedrium, wherein, though some of the tribe of Levi were mixed with those of the tribe of Judah, yet because they, together with other members of that council, had their power both from that tribe by which they were chosen, and in it, and for it, the sceptre did truly remain in the tribe of Judah; even as it was rightly called the Roman empire, when Trajan a Spaniard, or other foreigners, administered it; or as we call it the kingdom of Poland, when they choose a king of another nation. How great and venerable the authority of this council was among the Jews, may easily be gathered,

1. From the Divine institution of it, Num_11:16, whereby indeed it was at first to consist of persons indifferently chosen out of all the tribes; but now the other tribes being banished and dispersed in unknown places, and Benjamin and Levi being as it were accessions to the tribe of Judah, and in a sort incorporated with it, it now becomes as it were appropriated to the tribe of Judah, as acting in its name, and by its authority; and the whole land is called Judea, and all the people Jews, from the predominancy of that tribe above the rest.

2. From the great power and privileges anciently granted to it, Deu_17:8, &c.; 2Ch_19:8, 11 Psa 122:5.

3. From the testimony of Josephus, and other Jewish writers, which is most considerable in this argument, who largely describe and magnify the power and authority of it; who tell us that the power of their king was subject to that of this council; and therefore one of them addressing his speech to that council, where also the king himself was present, first salutes the senators, and after them the king. They affirm also that the power of making war or peace was vested in that council, and that Herod was tried for his life by it. If it be said that the power of this council was in a great measure taken away, which the Jews confess, Joh_18:31, and that the sceptre of Judea was in the hand of the Romans, and by them given to Herod, who was no Jew, but an Idumean, and this before the coming of the Messias, which is the only remaining difficulty; to this many things may be said:

1. That this happened but a few years before the coming of Christ, when Christ was even at the doors, and about to come, and therefore might well be said to be come; especially in the prophetical style, whereby things are oft said to be done which are near doing.

2. That the Jewish senators did long struggle with Herod about the government, and did not yield it up to him till his last year, when they took an oath of fealty to him, which was after Christ was born. Nor indeed was the sceptre quite gone from them then, for that council still had the power, though not of life and death, yet of civil and ecclesiastical matters. See Joh_18:31. So that if the sceptre was gone, the lawgiver remained there still. Nor was their government and commonwealth quite destroyed until the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus. And therefore some translate the place thus, and that with great probability, The sceptre shall not depart —until the Shiloh come, and until (which word is repeated out of the former member, as it is most usual in the Scripture)

the gathering of the people be to him, i.e. until the Gentiles be converted and brought in to Christ. And this interpretation receiveth countenance from Mat_24:14, The gospel shall be preached in all the world, —and then shall the end come; not the end of the whole world, as it is evident, but the end of the commonwealth and government of the Jews, when the sceptre and lawgiver should be wholly taken away from that tribe and people.

Genesis 49:11

He signifies the plenty of vines in Judah's portion, that they shall be planted every where, even in the commons and highways where men travel, and where upon occasion they use to tie the beasts on which they ride to any tree which is near them. Such shall be the plenty of it, that if it were convenient, men might use wine instead of water to wash their garments.

The blood of grapes; so the wine is called also in Deu_32:14; /APC 1Ma 6:34; and by Pliny, Hesiod, and others. As oil is called the blood of the olive.

Genesis 49:12

Which shows not only the plenty of wine, but also the excellency and strength of it, which, though not drunk in great quantity, or to excess, will make the eyes red. See Pro_23:29.

Genesis 49:13

Acknowledge here and adore the Divine Providence, which directed Jacob thus exactly to foretell the portion of Zebulun, which fell to them two hundred years after this, and that not by choice, or any design of men, but merely by lot. His portion was extended from the sea of Galilee to the great Mediterranean Sea, and to such parts of it where there were convenient havens.

His border shall be unto Zidon; or, his side or coast, to wit, that which is upon the Mediterranean Sea, in near Zidon, understanding not the city, but the territory belonging to it, unto which that tribe reached upon the sea-coast; for though Asher might seem to intercept them, yet he did not reach to the sea. Or, his coast looks towards Zidon, hath it in view, and lies commodiously for commerce with that great city, which then was the mart of the nations.

Genesis 49:14

A strong ass, Heb. an ass of bone, i.e. of great bulk and bones, and strength of body, but of little spirit and courage, couching down between two burdens, which are laid upon his back, and which he is contented to bear. Or, lying down, i.e. enjoying his ease and rest, between the borders, to wit, of the other tribes, with which he was encompassed and secured from foreign enemies, which made him more secure and slothful. Or, between the borders or folds of cattle; as a word very near akin to it, and proceeding from the same root, signifies, Jud_5:16, to the feeding and minding whereof he wholly gave himself, neglecting more generous things.

Genesis 49:15

Rest, or rather, his resting-place, as this very word signifies, Gen_8:9 Psa_116:7 132:8 Isa_11:10, i.e. his portion or habitation, as the Chaldee and Syriac translate it. So this agrees with the following member, where, after the manner of the Hebrews, the same thing is repeated in other words. And if it be objected against this version, that it is not said his rest, but rest in the general, it may be replied, that so it is in the following branch, the land, though it be apparently meant of his land, or portion of land allotted to him. Besides, the pronouns are often omitted, and to be understood in Hebrew text; as may appear by comparing 1Ki_10:7, with 2Ch_9:6; and Psa_41:9, with Joh_13:18; and Mat_3:12, with Luk_3:17.

Became a servant unto tribute; willingly paying whatsoever tributes were imposed upon him, either by the neighbouring tribes, or by foreign powers, rather than to forfeit his pleasant and fruitful country, and his sweet repose.

Genesis 49:16

i.e. Rule and govern them. Though he be the son of my concubine, yet he shall not be subject to any other tribe, but shall have an absolute power within himself. What is said of him is to be understood of the rest of the sons of the concubines, and hereby all difference between the sons of the wives and concubines is taken away. It is said of

Dan, because he is the first mentioned of that sort. As the rest of the tribes do, having distinct governments and governors amongst them. See Num_1:4,16.

Genesis 49:17

An adder in the path, which covereth and hideth itself in the sand or dust of the highway, watching for men or beasts that pass that way. He notes the subtlety of that tribe, which should conquer their enemies more by craft and cmlning, than by strength or force of arms.

Genesis 49:18

I do earnestly wait, and hope, and pray for thy helping hand to save me and my posterity from the manifold temporal calamities which I foresee will come upon them, and especially from spiritual and eternal mischiefs, by that Messiah which thou hast promised. Jacob in the midst of his great work doth take a little breathing, and finding himself weakened by his speech to his children, and drawing nearer death, he opens his arms to receive it, as the thing for which he had long waited, as the only effectual remedy and mean of salvation or deliverance from all his pains and miseries, and particularly from his present horrors, upon the contemplation of the future state of his children. And this pathological exclamation may look either,

1. Backward, to the state of the tribe of Dan, which he foresaw would be deplorable, both for its great straits and pressures, of which see Jos_19:47 Jud_1:34, and especially for that idolatry which that tribe would introduce and promote, Jud_18:30 1Ki_12:29, whereby they would ruin themselves, and most of the other tribes with them. Or,

2. Forward, to the doubtful and miserable condition of Gad.

Genesis 49:19

i.e. Troops of enemies shall frequently invade his country, and for a time conquer and spoil it. And so it came to pass, because the inheritance of that tribe lay beyond Jordan, near to the Ammonites and Moabites, two inveterate enemies of Israel, and to other hostile nations on the east.

But he shall overcome at the last, or, afterward. This was fulfilled, 1Ch_5:18, &c. He shows that the events of the wars should be various, but Gad should one time or other spoil his spoilers. See Deu_33:20.

Genesis 49:20

i.e. Out of the land of

Asher. Or, As for or concerning Asher, his bread-corn shall be fuller and sweeter and better than ordinary; and he shall yield royal dainties; not only oil for ointments, but also delicious and excellent fruits, fit to be presented to a king. See Deu_33:24,25.

Genesis 49:21

A hind let loose; not pursued by hunters, nor shut up in some little enclosure, but wholly left to its own freedom, to feed upon the best pastures: see Deu_33:23. Or, free from the yoke which they, together with the other tribes, did bear in Egypt; free from its former restraints, which make it run away more swiftly. So it may note their nimbleness and expedition, either in encountering enemies, or in avoiding dangers. See Jud_4:6,10 5:18. Or, like a tame hind left to its liberty, in which the owner takes delight, as

than war. And this may note, that his temper and Conversation was civil, obliging, and amiable; which sense the next words favour. His speeches and discourses with others are fair, and friendly, and winning. It is not strange that this tribe was generally of a sweeter disposition than others, seeing it is commonly observed that there is a great difference in the tempers of people of divers provinces or cities bordering one upon another. But this verse may be otherwise rendered according to the opinion of a late learned writer:

Naphtali is a tree (so the Hebrew word signifies, only jod is inserted here, as it is in the same word, Isa_1:29 61:3) shot forth, or spread forth, ( into many branches; for the Hebrew verb shalach is oft used concerning trees, and their shooting forth of branches, as Psa_80:11 Eze_17:6 31:5) sending forth goodly branches; the word imre, which is by others rendered words, here signifying branches, as either the same word, or one coming from the same root, and consisting of the same radical letters, is taken Isa_17:6,9. And it is usual in the Hebrew language for two words coming from the same root to exchange their significations. And this interpretation is favoured by the ancient interpreters, the LXX., and one of the Arabic manuscripts, which make Naphtali here to be compared to a goodly tree bringing forth excellent fruit.

Genesis 49:22

A fruitful bough, in regard of those two numerous tribes which proceeded from his two sons.

By a well, or fountain, or water-course, which situation doth much further the growth of trees. See Psa_1:3 Eze_19:10.

Whose branches run over the wall, i. e. which is planted by a wall, whose heat furthers its growth no less than the moisture of the water doth.

Genesis 49:23

i.e. His adversaries, as well his own brethren as his master and mistress; with their scoffs, and slanders, and injuries, which in the Scripture are oft compared to arrows.

Genesis 49:24

His bow, wherewith he opposed his enemies; which was no military bow, but that which he opposed to all their injuries, to wit, his own virtue, his innocence, his patience, his temperance, his faith and hope in God, whereby he resisted and vanquished all the temptations and difficulties which he met with, so that all his enemies could neither defile nor destroy him.

The mighty God of Jacob, i.e. my God; the noun for the pronoun, which is frequent. When men forsook and persecuted him, my God and his God stood by him. He showed that it was not Joseph's wisdom or courage, but God's gracious assistance, that made him conqueror.

From thence is the shepherd, the stone of Israel; either,

1. From that great deliverance vouchsafed by God to Joseph it is that Israel or Jacob hath a shepherd to feed him, a stone to lay his head upon, as once he did, Gen_28:11, or a rock of refuge to fly to in his great distresses, or a foundation-stone, or corner-stone, or pillar, to sustain or preserve Jacob's house. Or rather,

2. From the hands of the mighty God of Jacob, last mentioned. Or from the God of his father, as it follows Gen_49:25. So the sense is this, Though Joseph was a blessed instrument in this wonderful work, yet the God of Jacob was the chief author of it, by whose wise and merciful providence it was so ordered that Joseph should be first sold, and afterwards advanced, and all in order to this end, that his Israel, with whom he hath been pleased to make a gracious and everlasting covenant, should have a shepherd to feed him in the time of famine, and a stone or rock to support him.

Here he explains and determines that doubtful expression from thence, by adding, even by (or rather from, as this particle mem properly signifies, and was just now used) the God of thy father, i.e. who hath chosen and loved thy father, and made a league with him, and blessed him with all manner of blessings.

Blessings of heaven above, i.e. the sweet and powerful influences of the heavenly bodies, and the dews and rains which fall from heaven, whereby the fruits of the earth are produced in great plenty. See Lev_26:4 Deu_28:12 33:14.

Blessings of the deep, i.e. of that great sea of waters both about the earth, and in the earth, whence come those springs and rivers by which the earth is moistened and made fruitful. See Gen_1:2 7:11 Deu_8:7.

Blessings of the breasts, and of the womb, whereby both men and beasts shall be greatly multiplied, and abundantly supplied with all necessaries.

Genesis 49:25

Here he explains and determines that doubtful expression from these, by adding even by (or rather from as this particle mem properly signifies, and was just now used)

the God of thy Father, i.e. who hath chosen and loved thy father, and made a league with him, and blessed him with all manner of blessings.

Blessings of heaven above, i.e. the sweet and powerful influences of the heavenly bodies, and the dews and rains which fall from heaven, whereby the fruits of the earth are produced in great plenty. See Lev_26:4 Deu_28:12, Deu_33:14.

blessing of the deep, i.e. of the great sea of waters both above the earth, and in the earth, whence come those springs and rivers by which the earth is moistened and made fruitful. See Gen_1:2 7:11, Deu_8:7.

Blessings of the breasts, and of the womb whereby both men and beasts shall be greatly multiplied, and abundantly supplied with all necessaries.

Genesis 49:26

The blessings which I

thy father have conferred upon thee, are much more considerable than those which I received from my father Isaac, or from my grandfather Abraham This was true,

1. In the extent of the blessings; Ishmael was excluded from Abraham's blessing, and my brother excluded from Isaac's blessing, but both Joseph's children are comprehended in Jacob's blessing.

2. In the distinctness and clearness of them; for that land of Canaan which was transmitted to Isaac and to Jacob only in the general, was now in some sort particularly distributed to Joseph, and to the rest of his brethren, as afterwards it was by Joshua.

3. In the nearness of the accomplishment. Now there was a more likely prospect of the multiplication of their seed, than there was to Abraham or Isaac; and in not very many years after this they multiplied to astonishment, and drew nearer to the possession of the promised land.

Unto the utmost bound of the everlasting hills: these words seem to note the duration of Joseph's blessing, that it should continue even to the bounds of the everlasting, or lasting, or ancient hills, i.e. as long as the most solid and stable mountains shall last, i.e. for ever. Perpetuity is described by the continuance of the mountains, as Isa_54:10; or of the sun and moon, as Psa_72:5,7,17; or of the heavens and earth, as Mat_5:18. In the foregoing words of this verse he commends these blessings from their excellency above all former blessings; and here he commends them from their durability.

They shall be; or, let them be; for this may be a prayer to God that these blessings may be constant and perpetual.

Him that was separate from his brethren; so he was, when he was sold into Egypt, and abode there in the court when his brethren were in Goshen. Or, the crowned of, or among his brethren, i.e. who though he was once scorned and trampled upon by his brethren, yet now is highly honoured and advanced above them. Others, the Nazarite of, or among his brethren; as he may be called either for his purity and sanctity, or for his eminency and dignity. But we must remember that the Nazarites were as yet unknown, being instituted long after this time.

Genesis 49:27

He notes the warlike and fierce disposition and carriage of that tribe. Instances whereof we have Jud_3:15 19:1-20:48 1Sa_13:1-15:35. This may be understood, either of the same wolf, which in the morning, being more hungry and greedy, devours his prey alone; but in the evening, being in some measure satisfied, is content that his brethren should share with him. Or rather of several sorts of wolves, whereof some hunt and devour alone, others hunt in couples or troops, and those divide the prey among themselves. He mentions both

morning and evening, because these are the two seasons when the wolves prey, and to note that this would be Benjamin's carriage both in the first and last times of that tribe, as indeed it was.

Genesis 49:28

The twelve tribes, i.e. the heads and parents of the twelve tribes. A metonymy of the effect. The tribes are generally accounted twelve, though they were thirteen, because the land was divided only into twelve parts, Levi having no distinct part of his own.

Every one according to his blessing, i.e. according to that blessing which God in his purpose had allotted to each of them, which also he manifested unto Jacob by his Spirit.

Object. There is no blessing here given to Reuben, Simeon, and Levi, but rather a curse; how then is he said to bless every one of them?

Ans. He blessed them all implicitly and really, though not expressly, or in words, because he gave each of them a part in Canaan; and his taking away from Reuben only the right of the first-born, plainly supposeth that he left him his single portion and inheritance. And he might well be said to bless them all, because he left them all an interest in God's covenant, one article whereof was the giving of Canaan, or part of Canaan, to them, and this was an earnest of the other branches or articles of it; though it is probable he also added some short blessing, or prayer to God for his blessing, upon them all.

Genesis 49:29

In Canaan. Whereby he designed to withdraw their minds from Egypt, and fix them upon Canaan.

Genesis 49:30

He describes it so particularly, both for their direction, because they had been some years absent thence; and to express how much his heart was set upon this matter; and thereby to oblige them to the more careful performance of his command.

Genesis 49:33

Commanding his sons, to wit, concerning the place of his burial. Whilst he was employed in that most solemn and religious work of blessing his children in the name and by the Spirit of God, he used as reverent a posture as his infirm body would permit, and therefore is supposed to sit upon his bedside with his feet hanging downwards. And when he had finished that great work, and wearied himself with so long speech delivered with a most raised and affected mind, he composed himself to rest, and waited for the comfortable approach of his death, which speedily followed it.

Genesis 50:1

And doubtless closed his eyes, as God had promised, Gen_46:4, which may be implied in this general phrase.

Genesis 50:2

The dead corpse of his father with spices, and ointments, and other things necessary for the preservation of the body from putrefaction as long as might be. This Joseph did, partly, because he would comply as far as he could with the Egyptians, whose custom this was, from whom also the Jews took it, 2Ch_16:14 Joh_19:39-40; partly, to do honour and show his affections to his worthy father; and partly, because this was necessary for the keeping of the body so long as the times of mourning and the journey to Canaan required.

Genesis 50:3

For him, i.e. for his embalming; that so the drugs or spices which were applied might more effectually reach to all the parts of the dead body, and keep it from corruption. And the effect of their diligence and so long continuance in this work was, that bodies have been preserved uncorrupt for some thousand of years.

Threescore and ten days, i.e. thirty days, (according to the custom of the Hebrews, Num_20:29 Deu_34:8, to which doubtless the Egyptians in this case did accommodate themselves,) besides the forty days spent in embalming him, which also was a time of mourning. And thus I suppose the Egyptians reckoned those seventy-two days which Diodorus Siculus saith they spent in mourning for their deceased kings.

Genesis 50:4

The house of Pharaoh; the household or family, namely, those of them which were chief in place and favour with the king. Joseph makes use of their intercession, either,

1. Lest he might seem to despise them, or to presume too much upon his own single interest. Or,
2. By engaging them in this matter to stop their mouths, who otherwise might have been ready enough to censure this action, which they would have a fair opportunity to do in Joseph's absence. Or,
3. Because it was the custom here, as it was elsewhere, Est_4:2, that persons in mourning habit might not come into the king's presence, partly because they would not give them any occasion of sadness, and partly because, according to their superstitions conceits, the sight of such a person was judged ominous.

Genesis 50:5

Here is a triple obligation upon Joseph:

1. His duty to fulfil the will of the dead.
2. The obedience which he owed to his father's command.
3. The the of a solemn oath: all which had weight even with the heathens, and were so many arguments to Pharaoh and his courtiers.

In my grave which I have digged for me, according to the manner of those ancient and succeeding times. See 2Ch_16:14 Isa_22:16 Mat_27:60. In that large cave which Abraham bought for a burying-place for his family, Jacob had digged a particular and small cell or repository for himself, as others did after him upon the like occasion. And this reason is prudently added, to show that this desire proceeded not from any contempt of Pharaoh or his land, but from that common and customary desire of persons of all ages and nations to be buried in their fathers' sepulchres.

Genesis 50:6

The heathens by the light of nature discovered the sacredness of an oath, and the wickedness of perjury.

Genesis 50:7

All the servants, i.e. a great number of them, as that word is understood, Mat_3:5, and oft elsewhere. For many of them were aged and infirm, and many could not be spared from their attendance at court, or upon their employments, &c.

The servants of Pharaoh were courtiers of an inferior rank;

the elders of his house, the chief officers, and under him governors of his family and councils, who used to reside at or near the court;

and the elders of the land, the great officers civil and military, whose places of habitation and command were dispersed in the several parts of the land.

Genesis 50:8

And such as were necessary to take care of them, which must needs be understood.

Chariots and horsemen, for their defence, in case of any opposition.

Genesis 50:9

Genesis 50:10

Atad, a man so called; or, of thorn, or thorns, as the word signifies, Jud_9:14 Psa_58:9. So it might be a place either abounding or encompassed with thorns.

Beyond, or on this side; for the word signifies both, and it may be taken either way here; the one in respect of Egypt, the other in regard of the place in which Moses wrote. It is certain they fetched a great compass, whether for the commodiousness of the way for their chariots, and for conveniences for so great a company, or to prevent all jealousies in the people, as if they came thither with ill design, is not material.

There they mourned, because there was the entrance into that country or territory where he was to be buried. Though the Egyptians were not much grieved nor concerned for Jacob's death, yet they used bitter cries and lamentations, which possibly were made or aggravated by persons hired and used upon such occasions. See Jer_9:17.

Seven days, according to the custom. See 1Sa_31:13.

Genesis 50:16

This looks like a lie; for Jacob either did not know this fact, or rather, was so well assured of Joseph's clemency and goodness, that he never feared his revenge. But guilt doth so awaken fear, that it makes a man never to think himself secure.

Genesis 50:17

The God of thy father, for whose sake pardon those that join with thee in his worship.

Joseph wept; partly in compassion to their fear and trouble; and partly because they still retained a diffidence in his kindness, after all his great and real demonstrations of it.

Genesis 50:18

Ready and willing to undergo that servitude into which we so wickedly sold thee.

Genesis 50:19

It is God's prerogative to take vengeance, which I dare not usurp. See Deu_32:35. Or, can I do what I please with you without God's leave? Therefore fear him rather than me, and upon your experience of his wonderful care and kindness to you, believe that God will not, and therefore that I neither can nor will do you any hurt. But it is not unusual to put the Hebrew he for halo, as it is Gen_27:36 1Sa_2:28 2Sa_23:19 1Ki_16:31, &c.; and so the words may be very well rendered, Am not I under God, i.e. subject to his will, a minister of his providence? Dare I destroy those whom God so eminently designed to save? Dare I punish those whom God hath pardoned.

Genesis 50:20

Ye thought evil against me, therefore I do not excuse your guilt, though I comfort you against despondency.

Genesis 50:22

Genesis 50:23

Of the third generation, reckoning from and after Ephraim, i.e., Ephraim's grandchildren's children. So early did Ephraim's privilege above Manasseh appear, and Jacob's blessing { Gen_48:19} take place.

The children of Machir, Heb. sons. For though he had but one son, viz. Gilead, by his first wife, yet he married a second wife, and by her had two other sons, 1Ch_7:16, which Joseph lived long enough to see. Or under the name of children his grandchildren also might be comprehended. So there is no need of that enallage of sons for one son which we meet with in other places.

Were brought up upon Joseph's knees; laid upon Joseph's lap or knees, where parents use oftentimes to take up and repose their infants, to express their love to them, and delight in them. And some observe, that it was an ancient custom in divers nations, that the infant, as soon as it was born, was laid upon the grandfather's knees. So it is an ellipsis, whereby one word is put for two, or under one verb. See more of this phrase on Gen_30:3 48:12.

Genesis 50:24

God will surely visit you, i.e. deliver you out of this place, where I foresee you will be hardly used after my decease; or, fulfil his promised kindness to you, as that word is used, Gen_21:1 Exo_4:31. There is a double visitation oft mentioned in Scripture; the one of grace and mercy, which is here meant; the other of justice and anger, as elsewhere.

Genesis 50:25

Joseph took an oath, for the same reason which moved Jacob to require an oath from him, Gen_47:30,31, of the children of Israel: he saith not, of his brethren, but of Israel 's children; under which his grandchildren are comprehended, and seem principally intended here; either because his brethren were most of them dead, or rather because he knew that they were not to go out of Egypt in his brethren's time, but in their second or third generation.

My bones, i.e. my dead body: but he mentions only his bones, because part of his body was corrupted, and the other part, though preserved from corruption by the embalming, yet was so changed and adulterated with the spices, and other materials which they used, that it looked like another thing: only his bones remained entire and unchanged.

Quest. Why did he not desire to be presently carried thither, and buried there, as his father did?

Answ. 1. Lest he should disoblige the Egyptians, and provoke them against his brethren and children. The removal of his father thither was necessary, and forced from him by an oath, but the order for the removal of himself would have been voluntary and designed, and therefore could not have escaped the censure of an ungrateful contempt of the land of Egypt, which as it was thought good enough for him and his to live in, should have been judged so too for his burial.

2. That by these his remains his memory might be the longer and better preserved, both with the Egyptians, who for his sake might show kindness to his near relations; and with the Israelites, to whom this was a visible pledge of their deliverance, and a help to their faith, and all obligation to them to persist in the true religion.

Genesis 50:26

So for about thirteen years of affliction he enjoyed eighty years of honour, and as much happiness as earth could afford him.

THE SECOND BOOK OF MOSES CALLED EXODUS.

THE ARGUMENT.

AFTER the death of Joseph, who had sent for his father's house into Egypt, the children of Israel exceedingly multiplied, notwithstanding Pharaoh's cruel oppressing of them; from under which God, hearing their cry, brought them with a strong hand. Wherefore this book is called by the Greeks EXODUS, i.e. a going forth; containing an historical account of passages for about one hundred and forty years; with the wonderful raising up of Moses, who, together with Aaron, were to be instruments of their deliverance; and accordingly, after the inflicting ten dreadful plagues upon Pharaoh, brought them into the wilderness through the Red Sea, wherein Pharaoh (his heart being hardened under all these plagues) and all his host pursuing of them were drowned; God having first instituted the passover, as an abiding sacrament to bring to their remembrance in after-times this great deliverance.

In their conduct through the wilderness, God gave them the signal mark of his presence in the pillar of a cloud, and the pillar of fire; who, notwithstanding their great and reiterated murmurings, gave them food, both bread and flesh from heaven, and drink out of the rock; and when they were come to Mount Sinai, he there gave them the moral law, beside other both politic and ecclesiastical ordinances. Afterwards, the breaking of the tables being occasioned by the idolatry of the golden calf, God graciously renewed his covenant with them. There being also a tabernacle, and ark, and other things to be made by God's command, the bounty of the people, in order to the making and furnishing thereof, is here set down; which, being finished, the tabernacle is anointed, and filled with the glory of God.

Exodus 1:1 EXODUS CHAPTER 1

The names and numbers of the children of Israel that came into Egypt, Exo_1:1-5. Joseph, his brethren, and that generation die, Exo_1:6. A new king, who knew not Joseph, Exo_1:8, goeth about by affliction, & c. to suppress the Israelites, Exo_1:9-11. They increase, Exo_1:12. Pharaoh commands the midwives to kill the male children, Exo_1:15,16. They fear God, and obey not the king, Exo_1:17. For this God blesseth the midwives, Exo_1:20. Pharaoh commands all the male children to be drowned, Exo_1:22.

This list is here repeated, that by comparing this small root with so vast a company of branches as grew upon it, we may see the wonderful providence of God in the fulfilling of his promises. And his household, his children and grandchildren, as the word house is taken Rth_4:11 2Sa_7:11 1Ki_21:29.

Exodus 1:7

Here are many words, and some very emphatical, to express their incredible multiplication. They waxed exceeding mighty; which may relate either to their numbers, which greatly added to their strength, or to their constitution, to note that their offspring was strong as well as numerous. Atheistical wits cavil at this story, and pretend it impossible that out of seventy persons should come above six hundred thousand men within two hundred and fifteen years; wherein they betray no less ignorance than impiety. For, to say nothing of the extraordinary fruitfulness of the women in Egypt who oft bring forth four or five children at one birth, as Aristotle notes, Hist. Animal. 7.4, nor of the long lives of the men of that age, nor of the plurality of wives then much in use, nor of the singular blessing of God upon the Hebrews in giving them conceptions and births without abortion, all which are but very reasonable suppositions, the probability of it may plainly appear thus: Suppose there were only two hundred years reckoned, and only fifty persons who did beget children, and these begin not to beget before they be twenty years old, and then each of them beget only three children. Divide this time now into ten times twenty years. In the first time, of 50 come 150. In the second, of 150 come 450. Of them in the third, come 1350. Of them in the fourth, 4050. Of these in the fifth, 12150. Of these in the sixth, 36450. Of them in the seventh, 109350. Of them in the eighth, 328050. Of these in the ninth, 984150. And of them in the tenth, 2952450. If it be objected, that we read nothing of their great multiplication till after Joseph's death, which some say was not above fifty years before their going out of Egypt, it may be easily replied:

1. This is a great mistake, for there were above one hundred and forty, years between Joseph's death and their going out of Egypt, as may appear thus: It is granted that the Israelites were in Egypt about two hundred and ten or two hundred and fifteen years in all. They came not thither till Joseph was near forty years old, as is evident by comparing Gen_41:46 with Gen_45:6. So there rests only seventy years of Joseph's life, which are the first part of the time of Israel's dwelling in Egypt, and there remain one hundred and forty-five years, being the other part of the two hundred and fifteen years.

2. That the Israelites did multiply much before Joseph's death, though Scripture be silent in it, as it is of many other passages confessedly true, cannot be reasonably doubted. But if there was any defect in the numbers proposed in the first fifty-five years, it might be abundantly compensated in the one hundred and forty-five years succeeding. And so the computation remains good.

Exodus 1:8

A new king, i.e. another king; one of another disposition, or interest, or family; for the kingdom of Egypt did oft pass from one family to another, as appears from the history of the Dynastics recorded in ancient writers.

Which knew not Joseph, or, acknowledged not the vast obligations which Joseph had laid not only upon the kingdoms of Egypt, and the king under whom Joseph lived, but upon all his successors, in regard of those vast additions of wealth and power which he had made to that crown. This phrase notes his ungrateful disowning and ill requiting of Joseph's favours. For words of knowledge in Scripture commonly include the affections and actions; as men are oft said not to know God, when they do not love nor serve him; and God is said not to know men, when he doth not love them.

Exodus 1:9

This was not a true, but an invidious representation and aggravation of the matter, the better to justify the sororities which he designed.

Exodus 1:10

War was not unusual in that country. So get them up out of the land, which they might easily learn from some of the Hebrews, that they were in due time to do. And they were very unwilling to pint with them, because of the tribute and service which they did receive and expect from them.

Exodus 1:11

Taskmasters, Heb. masters of tribute , who were to exact from them the tribute required, which was both money and labour; that their purses might be exhausted by the one, their strength by the other, and their spirits by both. To afflict, or, oppress, or humble ; to spend their strength by excessive labours, and so disenable them for the procreation of children.

Treasure cities, where they laid the king's money or corn, which is reckoned among treasures, 2Ch_17:12 32:27, and wherein a great part of the riches of Egypt consisted; for they had corn enough, not only for themselves, but to sell to other countries; so that Egypt was accounted the granary of the Roman empire. Or, defenced cities, in which garrisons were to be placed, which seems best to agree with the place and use of them. For they were in the borders of the land, and among the Israelites, which appears concerning the one from Gen_47:11, (where the land in which they were placed is called Ramases , which in Hebrew consists of the same letters with this Raamses, and seems to be so called then by anticipation from the city of that name now built in it,) and may be reasonably presumed concerning the other; and therefore it is most probable that they were built to keep the Israelites in subjection, and to hinder them from going out of the land.

Exodus 1:12

They multiplied, through God's overruling providence and singular blessing, which God gave them purposely to hasten first their sorer affliction, and next, and by that means, their glorious deliverance.

They were grieved, through envy and fear.

Exodus 1:13

Or, cruelty , or, tyranny ; with hard words and cruel usage, without mercy or mitigation. This God permitted for wise and just reasons.

1. As a punishment of their idolatry, into which divers of them fell there. Jos_24:14 Eze_20:5,7,8 23:8

2. To wean them from the land of Egypt, which otherwise was a plentiful and desirable land, and to quicken their desires after Canaan.

3. To prepare the way for God's glorious works, and Israel's deliverance.

Exodus 1:14

Service in the field was the basest and most laborious of all their services.

Exodus 1:15

The Hebrew midwives; such as not only were employed about the Hebrew women, but were Hebrews themselves, not Egyptians, as some suppose; as may appear,

1. Because they are expressly called, not the midwives of the Hebrews , but the Hebrew midwives.

2. The Egyptian midwives would not willingly employ their time and pains among the meanest and poorest of servants, as these were. And if they were sent in design by the king, he had lost his end, which was to cover his cruelty with cunning, and to persuade the people that their death was not from his intention, but from the ellsarices and dangers of child-bearing.

3. The Hebrew women, as they had doubtless midwives of their own, so they would never have admitted others.

4. They are said to fear God , Exo_2:17,21.

You are not to think that these were the only midwives to so many thousands of Hebrew women, but they were the most eminent among them; and it may be, for their excellency in that profession called to the service of some Egyptian ladies, and by them known to Pharaoh, who might therefore think by their own interest, and by the promise of great rewards, or by severe threatenings, to oblige them to comply with his desires; and if he met with the desired success by them, he meant to proceed further, and to engage the rest in like manner.

Exodus 1:16

The stools; a seat used by women when ready to be delivered, conveniently framed for the midwife's better discharge of her office.

Ye shall kill him, which it was not difficult for them to do without much observation.

If it be a daughter, then she shall live; either,

1. Because he feared not them, but the males only; and some add, that he was advised by one of their magicians, that a male child should be born of the Israelites, who should be a dreadful scourge to the Egyptians. Or,

2. They reserved them for their lust, or for service, or for the increase of their people, and the raising of a fairer breed by them.

Exodus 1:17

They feared God more than the king, and therefore chose to obey God rather than the king, their commands being contrary each to other.

Exodus 1:19

They are lively, or, vigorous and active in promoting the birth of their own children; or, like the beasts, which without any help of others bring forth their young. So the Hebrew word signifies; and so there is only a reference of the particle of similitude, which is frequent, as I have noted before.

This might be no lie, as many suppose, but a truth concerning many of them, and they do not affirm it to be so with all. And so it might be, either because their daily and excessive labours joined with the fears of the execution of the king's command, whereof they seem to have gotten notice, did hasten their birth, as the same causes do commonly in other women; or because they, understanding their danger, would not send for the midwives, but committed themselves to God's providence, and the care of some of their neighbours present with them. So here was nothing but truth, though they did not speak the whole truth, which they were not obliged to do.

Exodus 1:20

Therefore, because they feared God, and spared the children, Exo_1:17, whereby they exposed themselves to the king's displeasure; because they would not offend God by murdering the children, which they might have done many times secretly, and therefore it was only the fear of God which restrained them from it.

Exodus 1:21

i.e. God greatly increased their families both in children and posterity, and in wealth, and other outward blessings. So this phrase is used Gen_30:30 Deu_25:9 1Sa_2:35 1Ki_2:24 11:38

Psa_127:1. As houses are commonly put for families, so building is put for procreating of children, Gen_16:2 30:3.

Exodus 2:1 EXODUS CHAPTER 2

Moses's parentage and birth, Exo_2:1,2. His mother makes an ark, puts him therein, Exo_2:3. Pharaoh's daughter going to wash herself, seeth him, takes him for her own child, and gives him to his mother to nurse, Exo_2:4-9. Moses seeing an Israelite wronged by an Egyptian, kills him, Exo_2:11,12. Pharaoh hearing this, seeks to slay Moses; he flees to Midian, Exo_2:15. There he rescues Reuel's daughters from the violence of the shepherds, Exo_2:17; serves Reuel, and marries his daughter Zipporah, Exo_2:21. She bears him a son, his name, and the reason of it, Exo_2:22. God heareth the cry of the Israelites, Exo_2:23-25.

There went a man, viz. Amram , Exo_6:20 Num_26:58,59 from the place of his abode to another place for the following purpose. A daughter of Levi, namely Jochebed, Num_26:59, called a daughter , not strictly, but more largely, to wit, a grandchild, as the words father and son are oft used for a grandfather and a grandson, as hath been showed before: And so the word sister , Exo_6:20, is to be taken largely, as brother is oft used for a cousin. This seems more probable than that an Israelite should marry his own sister, which even heathens by the light of nature have condemned, especially now when he had such abundant choice elsewhere.

Exodus 2:3

She could not longer hide him, with safety to herself, because they now grew more violent in executing that bloody decree, and the child growing up was more likely to be discovered, especially seeing the Egyptians dwelt among them, Exo_3:22. That boats were made of such materials as bulrushes in those parts, is evident from Isa_18:2, and from the testimonies of Herod, Pliny, and others.

Slime and pitch; slime within, and pitch without.

She hid it in the flags, which grew near the river's side; partly that the vessel might not be carried away, and overturned by the violence of the winds and water, and partly that the child might be sooner discerned, and more easily taken out thence by any kind hand, which she hoped for.

Exodus 2:4

His sister stood afar off, that she might not be thought to have laid the child there, or to be related to it. This she might very probably guess, both from the circumstances in which she found him, and from the singular fairness and beauty of the child, far differing from the Egyptian hue; and she might certainly know it by its circumcision.

Exodus 2:10

He became her son, by adoption, Heb_11:24. For, as Philo reports, she, though long married, had no child of her own; and therefore treated him as her own, and gave him royal education and instruction. See Act_7:21.

Moses; it matters not whether this be an Egyptian name, or a Hebrew name answering to it in signification, seeing the meaning of it is here explained.

Exodus 2:11

In those days, whilst Moses lived at court, and was owned as the son of Pharaoh's daughter, and, as some write, designed to succeed Pharaoh in the throne. Moses was grown to maturity, being forty years old, Act_7:23.

He went out unto his brethren; partly by natural affection and inclination, that he might learn the state of his brethren, and help them, as occasion should offer itself; and partly by Divine instigation, and in design that he might give some manifestation to them that he was raised and sent of God to deliver them; as may be gathered from Act_7:25.

Exodus 2:12

Looked this way and that way; not from conscience of guilt in what he intended, but from human and warrantable prudence.

This action of Moses was extraordinary, and is not to be justified by the common right of defending the oppressed, which belongs not to private persons, Rom_12:19; but only by his Divine and special vocation to be the ruler and deliverer of Israel. Which call of his, howsoever manifested, whether by his father, as Josephus saith, or immediately to himself, was evident to his own conscience, and he gave this as a signal to make it evident to the people.

Exodus 2:13

The next day after that achievement, he returns to execute the office in which God had set him as a judge, whose work it is both to destroy enemies, and to reconcile brethren.

Exodus 2:14

Moses feared, through the weakness of his faith, which afterwards growing stronger, he feared not that which now he did fear, the wrath of the king, Heb_11:27. Distinguish the times, and scriptures agree which seemed to clash together.

Exodus 2:15

He sought to slay Moses; not out of zeal to punish a murderer, but to secure himself from so dangerous a person, probably supposing that this was the man foretold to be the scourge of Egypt, and the deliverer of Israel.

Exodus 2:16

The Priest of Midian; not of idols, for then Moses would not have married into his family; but of the true God; for some such were in those ancient times here and there, as appears by Melchisedek, though his manner of worshipping God might be superstitious and corrupt: or the Hebrew cohen may here signify a prince , or a potentate , as Gen_41:45. Nor doth the employment of his daughters contradict that translation, both because principalities were then many of them very small and mean, and because this employment then was esteemed noble, and worthy of great men's daughters, as appears from Gen_24:15 29:6, &c.

Exodus 2:17

The shepherds drove them away, that they might enjoy the fruit of their labours, and make use of the water which they had drawn for their own cattle.

Moses helped them; either by persuading them with fair words, or by force; for Moses was strong, and full of courage and resolution, wherewith the shepherds were easily daunted.

Exodus 2:18

Their father; either,

1. Strictly, and then he is the same who elsewhere is called Jethro , Exo_3:1 Exo 18$ oft times; and, as some think, Hobab , Jud_4:11. Or,

2. Largely, i.e. their grandfather, for such are oft called fathers , as Gen_31:43 2Ki_14:3 16:2 18:3; so he was the father of Jethro, or Hobab, Num_10:29.

Exodus 2:19

They guessed him to be

Drew water; Heb. in drawing drew , which notes that he drew it very diligently and readily, which caused their quick return.

Exodus 2:20

Exodus 2:21

Moses was content; or, consented to this desire or offer. And so his present and temporary repose there is turned into a settled habitation. Moses married Zipporah not instantly, but after some years of acquaintance with the family, as may probably be gathered from the youngness and uncircumcisedness of one of his sons forty years after this, Exo_4:25. In which time, as Moses would not fail to instruct them in the knowledge of the true God, which he was able excellently to do, so it is likely he had succeeded therein in some measure, and therefore married Zipporah.

The king of Egypt died; and after him one or two more of his sons or successors, and the rest who sought for Moses's life, Exo_4:19.

The children of Israel sighed, because though their great oppressor was dead, yet they found no relief, as they hoped to do.

Exodus 3:1 EXODUS CHAPTER 3

Moses keeping Jethro's flock, cometh to mount Horeb, Exo_3:1. There God appears to him in a burning bush, Exo_3:2. Moses beholds it, Exo_3:3. God calls to him out of the burning bush, Exo_3:4; cautions him what to do, Exo_3:5,6. God seeth their afflictions, Exo_3:7; promises them a happy deliverance, Exo_3:8; sends Moses to Pharaoh, Exo_3:10. He desires to be excused because unworthy, Exo_3:11. God encourages him, Exo_3:12, and directs him what to say to the children of Israel, Exo_3:13,14; makes his name known to Moses, Exo_3:15; commands him to gather the elders of Israel, Exo_3:16; and what he was to say to them, Exo_3:17; likewise to Pharaoh, Exo_3:18. Pharaoh's obstinacy, Exo_3:19. God threatens the Egyptians, Exo_3:20; and tells Moses with what plenty the Israelites should depart, Exo_3:21,22.

1401 Jethro was either the same with Reuel , or his son, who, upon his father's death, succeeded into his office. See Exo_2:18. To the backside of the desert, to its innermost parts, which were behind Jethro's habitation, and the former pastures, whither he went for fresh pastures.

The mountain of God; so called, either as a high or eminent mountain; or from the vision of God here following; see Act_7:30; or by anticipation, from God's glorious appearance there, and giving the law from thence, Exo_18:5 19:3: see also 1Ki_19:8. Horeb, called also Sinai , Exo_19:1 Act_7:30. Or Horeb was the name of the whole tract or row of mountains, and Sinai the name of that particular mountain where this vision happened, and the law was delivered. Or Horeb and Sinai were two several tops of the same mountain.

Exodus 3:2

The angel of the Lord; not a created angel, but the Angel of the covenant, Christ Jesus, who then and ever was God, and was to be man, and to be sent into the world in our flesh, as a messenger from God. And these temporary apparitions of his were presages or forerunners of his more solemn mission and coming, and therefore he is fitly called an Angel. That this Angel was no creature, plainly appears by the whole context, and specially by his saying,

I am the Lord, & c. The angels never speak that language in Scripture, but, I am sent from God , and, I am thy fellow servant , &c. And it is a vain pretence to say that the angel, as God's ambassador, speaks in God's name and person; for what ambassador of any king in the world did ever speak thus, I am the king , &c.? Ministers are God's ambassadors, but if any of them should say, I am the Lord , they would be guilty of blasphemy, and so would any created angel be too, for the same reason. By a flame of fire was fitly represented God's majesty, and purity, and power.

The bush was not consumed; which doubtless represented the condition of the church and people of Israel, who were now in the fire of affliction, yet so as that God was present with them, and that they should not be consumed in it, whereof this vision was a pledge.

Exodus 3:4

He doubles the name, partly to show kindness and familiarity, and principally to make Moses more attentive to the business before him.

Exodus 3:5

Draw not nigh hither; keep thy distance; whereby he checks his curiosity and forwardness, and works him to the greater reverence and humility. Compare Exo_19:12,21 Jos 5:15.

Put off thy shoes: this he requires as an act and token,

1. Of his reverence to the Divine Majesty, then and there eminently present.
2. Of his humiliation for his sins, whereby he was unfit and unworthy to appear before God; for this was a posture of humiliation, 2Sa_15:30 Isa_20:2,4 Eze 24:17,23.
3. Of purification from the filth of his feet, or ways, or conversation, that he might be more fit to approach to God. See Joh_13:10 Heb_10:22.
4. Of this submission and readiness to obey God's will, for which reason slaves used to be bare-footed.

Holy ground; with a relative holiness at this time, because of my special presence in it.

Exodus 3:6

The God of thy fathers, engaged to them by covenant or promise, which I am now come to perform.

He was afraid to look upon God, as other excellent servants of God have been, through the sense of their own meanness and sinfulness, and of God's majesty and holiness. See Gen_16:13 17:3 1Ki_19:13 Isa_6:2,5, &c.

Exodus 3:7

I have surely seen; Heb. In seeing, I have seen , i.e. I have seen and observed it diligently, accurately, and certainly; for so much the doubling of the verb signifies.

Exodus 3:8

I am come down: this word notes God's manifestation of himself and his favour, and giving help from heaven. See Gen_18:21.

It was a good land and a large, not only comparatively to Goshen, where they now dwelt, and to the number of the Israelites at that time; but absolutely, if you take the Land of Promise according to its true, and first, and ancient bounds of it, as you have them described, Gen_15:18 Deu_1:7 11:24, and not according to those narrow limits to which they were afterwards confined for their unbelief, sloth, cowardice, and impiety.

Flowing with milk and honey, i.e. abounding with the choicest fruits, both for necessity and for delight. The excellency and singular fruitfulness of this land, howsoever denied or disputed by some ill-minded persons, is sufficiently evident,

1. From express testimony, not only of Moses, Deu_8:7-9, but also of the spies who were sent to view it, and, though prejudiced against it, yet acknowledged it, Num_13:27; and of the holy prophets that lived long in it, as David, Psa_106:24 Joe_2:3; and Ezekiel, who calls it the glory of all lands , Eze_20:15. Which if it had not been true, it is ridiculous to think that they durst have said and writ so, when the people with whom they contested, and thousands of other persons there and then living, were able to confute them. After them Josephus, and St. Hierom, and others since, who lived long in that land, have highly commended it. And whereas Strabo speaks of the barrenness of the soil about Jerusalem, that is true, but by himself it is limited to the compass of sixty furlongs from Jerusalem. And if at this day the land be now grown barren in a great measure, it is not strange, considering both the great neglect and sloth of the people as to the improvement of it, and the great wickedness of its inhabitants, for which God hath threatened to turn a fruitful land into barrenness, Psa_107:34.

These people are diversely numbered, there are ten sorts reckoned, Gen_15:19-21, and seven, Deu_7:1, and here but six, because some of them were either destroyed or driven out of their land by others; or did by choice and design remove to some other place, as many in those times did, though it be not mentioned in Scripture; or by cohabitation and marriage with some of the other people, did make a coalition, and were incorporated with them, and so their name was swallowed up in the other; or because the names of some of these people, as particularly the Canaanites and the Amorites, were used sometimes more strictly, and sometimes more largely, so as to comprehend under them the other people, as the Girgashites, &c., whence it comes to pass that all the rest go under the names of the Canaanites, Gen_13:7, and of the Amorites in some places of Scripture, as hath been showed.

Exodus 3:9

The cry of the children of Israel; either in prayer, or rather forced by their oppressions, as the next clause explains it.

Exodus 3:10

Exodus 3:11

What a mean, inconsiderable person am I! how unworthy and unfit for that employment! He was more forward in the work forty years ago, by reason of the fervours of his youth, his inexperience in affairs, the advantage of his power and interest in the court, by which he thought he could and should procure their deliverance; but now age had made him cool and considerate; the remembrance of his brethren's rejection of him, when he was a great man at court, took away all probability of prevailing with them to follow him, much more of prevailing with Pharaoh to let them go. Thus Moses falls into that distemper to which most men are prone, of measuring God by himself, and by the probabilities or improbabilities of second causes.

Exodus 3:12

This shall be a token unto thee; either,

1. This vision; or,
2. The fulfilling of this promise, that

I will be with thee by signs and wonders, and a strong hand; or rather,

3. This which here follows, that he and Israel should serve God there. Signs indeed are commonly given from things past or present, but sometimes from things to come, as here, and 1Sa_2:34 Isa_7:13,14 9:6, &c.

Quest. How could Moses be confirmed in his present calling and work by a thing yet to come?

Answer. Such signs, if they were single, and the only evidences of a man's calling, might leave some ground for suspicion; but when they are accompanied with other signs, as it is here and in the other places produced, they are of great use for the corroboration of a man's faith. Moses was otherwise assured of the presence, and power, and faithfulness of that God who spake to him, and was to expect more assurances that God would be with him to help him in and carry him through his work. And as an evidence that this work of bringing Israel out of Egypt should be completed, he gives him a promise that he should serve God in that place; which promise coming from God, he knew to be as infallibly certain, as if it were already come to pass, and therefore this was an apt mean to strengthen his faith in his present undertaking.

Exodus 3:13

Since I must go to them in thy name, and thou hast variety of names and glorious titles, and some of them are ascribed to idols, not only by the Egyptians, but by too many of thy own people; what name shall I use, whereby both thou mayest be distinguished from false gods, and thy people may be encouraged to expect deliverance from thee?

Exodus 3:14

I am that I am; a most comprehensive and significant name, and most proper for the present occasion, It notes,

1. The reality of his being; whereas idols are nothings , 1Co_8:4, all their divinity is only in the fancies and opinions of men.

2. The necessariness, eternity, and unchangeableness of his being; whereas all other beings once were not, and, if he please, they shall be no more; and all their being was derived from him, and wholly depends upon him; and he only is by and from' himself.

3. The constancy and certainty of his nature, and will, and word. The sense is, I am the same that ever I was; the same who made the promises to Abraham, &c., and am now come to perform them; who, as I can do what I please, so I will do what I have said. Heb. I shall be what I shall be . He useth the future tense; either,

1. Because that tense in the use of the Hebrew tongue comprehends all times, past, present, and to come, to signify that all times are alike to God, and all are present to him; and therefore what is here, I shall be , is rendered, I am , by Christ, Joh_8:58. See Psa_90:4 2Pe_3:8. Or,

2. To intimate, though darkly, according to that state and age of the church, the mystery of Christ's incarnation. I shall be what I shall be , i.e. God-man; and I who now come in an invisible, though glorious, manner to deliver you from this temporal bondage, shall in due time come visibly, and by incarnation, to save you and all my people from a far worse slavery and misery, even from your sins, and from wrath to come. Of this name of God, see Rev_1:4,8 16:5.

Exodus 3:15

The Lord, Heb. Jehovah ; a word of the same root and signification with I am . See Exo_6:3. This he adds, because God was best known to the Israelites by that name; and to show, that though he had given himself a new name, yet he was the same God. This is my memorial, by which I will be remembered, owned, and served by my people, and distinguished from all others. See Psa_102:12 135:13.

Exodus 3:16

The elders; either by age, or rather by office and authority. For though they were all slaves to the Egyptians, yet among themselves they retained some order and government, and had doubtless some whom they owned as their teachers and rulers, as heads of tribes and families, &c.

Exodus 3:18

Hath met with us; hath appeared to us, expressing his displeasure for our neglect of him, and declaring his will that we should do what follows.

Three days' journey; to Sinai, which, going the nearest way, was no further from Egypt; for here God had declared he would be served, Exo_3:12.

Quest. Was not this deceitfully and unjustly spoken, when they intended to go quite away from him?

Answ. No; for,

1. Pharaoh had no just right and title to them, to keep them in bondage, seeing they came thither only to sojourn for a time, and by Joseph had abundantly paid for their habitation there, and therefore, they might have demanded a total dismissal.

2. Moses doth not say any thing which is false, but only conceals a part of the truth; and he was not obliged to discover the whole truth to so cruel a tyrant, and so implacable an enemy.

3. Moses cannot be blamed, both because he was none of Pharaoh's subject, and because herein he follows the direction and command of his Master that sent him. And God surely was not obliged to acquaint Pharaoh with all his mind, but only so far as he pleased. And it pleased him for wise and just reasons to propose only this to Pharaoh, that his denial of so modest a request (which God foresaw) might make his tyranny more manifest, and God's vengeance upon him more just and remarkable.

Sacrifice to the Lord our God, which they could not do freely and safely in Egypt, Exo_8:26.

Exodus 3:19

I am sure; I know it infallibly beforehand.

No, not by a mighty hand; though he see and feel the miraculous and dreadful works of a strong, yea, almighty hand, yet he will not consent to your going; which the history makes good. Nor did he let them go till he could hold them no longer, till the fear of his own life, and the clamours of his people, forced him to give way to it. And yet after that he repents of his permission, and laboured to bring them back again. Others, but or except by a strong hand, i.e. except by my almighty power he be forced to it. Both translations come to the same sense.

Exodus 4:1 EXODUS CHAPTER 4

Moses's objection, Exo_4:1. The answer, Exo_4:2. God turns his rod into a serpent, Exo_4:3-5. He adds another sign, Exo_4:6-8. And lest they would not believe, water is turned into blood, Exo_4:9. Moses's objection, Exo_4:10. God argues with him, Exo_4:11. God's command and promise, Exo_4:12. Moses's answer, Exo_4:13. God is angry, and enjoins Aaron to the same employment, Exo_4:14; tells what Aaron should be, and what Moses should do, Exo_4:15-17. Moses returning to Jethro, craves leave to go to Egypt to see his brethren: Jethro's grant, Exo_4:18. Moses having taken the rod of God, departs with his wife and children into Egypt, Exo_4:20. God tells him what he should say to Pharaoh, Exo_4:22,23. God seeketh to kill Moses, Exo_4:24. Zipporah with a sharp knife cuts off her son's foreskin and what she said, Exo_4:25,26. God commands Aaron to meet Moses, Exo_4:27. Moses declares to Aaron both what he had heard and seen, Exo_4:28. They gather together the elders of Israel, Exo_4:29; and Aaron speaks all the words and does all the signs which God commanded, Exo_4:30. The people believe, Exo_4:31.

They will not believe me; which he conjectured both from reason, because the greatness and strangeness of the deliverance made it seem incredible; and their minds were so oppressed with cares and labours, that it was not likely they could raise them up to any such expectation; and from the experience which he had of them forty years before, when their deliverance by his means and interest at court seemed much more credible than now it did.

Exodus 4:3

It became a serpent, i.e. was really changed into a serpent; whereby it was intimated what and how pernicious his rod should be to the Egyptians.

Exodus 4:4

The tail was the dangerous part; whereby God would try Moses's faith, and prepare him for the approaching difficulties.

Exodus 4:5

An imperfect sentence, to be thus completed,

This thou shalt do before them, that they may believe. See the like in 2Sa_5:8, compared with 1Ch_11:6; and Mar_14:49, compared with Mat_26:56.

Exodus 4:6

For whiteness. See Num_12:10. Hereby God would suggest to them how soon he could weaken and destroy the hard and strong hand by which the Egyptians tyrannised over them. It might also be done to keep Moses humble and depending upon God, and to teach him and Israel to ascribe all the future miracles not to the hand of Moses, which was weak and liable to many distempers, but wholly to the Divine power and goodness.

Exodus 4:7

Exodus 4:8

To the voice of the first sign; to the voice or word of God delivered and confirmed by the first sign. For Moses did not make dumb shows before them, but acquainted them with the mind of God therein. Or he saith the voice, to note that God's works have a voice to speak to us, which we must diligently observe. See Mic_6:9.

Exodus 4:9

The river Nile, well known to Moses, and called so by way of eminency, as Euphrates also is. Shall become , Heb. shall be, even shall be , i.e. it shall assuredly be so.

Exodus 4:10

I am not eloquent; not able to deliver thy message acceptably and decently, either to Pharaoh or to the Israelites. Since thy appearance to me, thou hast made some change in my hand, but none in my tongue, but still I am, as I was, most unfit for so high an employment. But indeed he was therefore fit for it, as the unlearned apostles were for the preaching of the gospel, that the honour of their glorious works might be entirely given to God, and not to the instruments which he used.

Exodus 4:12

By my Spirit to direct and assist thee what and how to speak. Whence Moses, though he still seems to have remained slow in speech , yet was in truth mighty in words as well as deeds , Act_7:22. Compare Mat_10:19,20.

Exodus 4:13

By one who is fitter for the work than I am. Heb. Send by the hand of him whom

thou wilt send, i.e. should send; for the future tense oft signifies what one should do. See Gen_20:9 34:7 Mal_1:6 2:7. Thou usest according to thy wisdom to choose fit instruments, and to use none but whom thou dost either find or make fit for their employment, which I am not. Others, Send by the hand of Messias, whom thou wilt certainly send, and canst not send at a fitter time, nor for better work. Moses and the prophets knew that Christ would come, but the particular time of his coming was unknown to them. See 1Pe_1:11.

Exodus 4:14

He cometh forth to meet thee, by my instigation and direction; which, because I see thou art still diffident, I give thee for a new sign to strengthen thy belief that I will carry thee through this hard work.

Exodus 4:15

Put words in his mouth, i.e. instruct him what to speak, and command him freely and faithfully to express it. See Isa_51:16 59:21.

Exodus 4:16

To teach and command him. See Exo_7:1.

Exodus 4:17

Both those which I have already made thee to do, and others as I shall direct and enable thee.

Exodus 4:18

He pretends only a visit, and so indeed it was, and that no very long one neither: he knew that he should certainly return to this place, and there meet with his father-in-law. So that he did not deceive him, nor intended to do so though he thought fit to conceal from him the errand upon which God sent him, lest his father or wife should attempt to hinder or discourage him from so difficult and dangerous an enterprise. Moses shows here a rare example, as well of modesty and humility, that such glorious and familiar converse with God, and the high calling to which God had advanced him, did neither make him forget the civility and duty which he owed to his father, nor make him break forth into public and vain-glorious boasting of such a privilege; as also of his piety and prudence, that he avoided all occasions and temptations to disobedience to God's command.

Exodus 4:19

This seems to have been a second vision, whereby God calls him forth to the present and speedy execution of that command which before was more generally delivered.

Which sought thy life, to wit, to take it away. See the like expression, 1Sa_22:23 1Ki_19:14 Mat_2:20. God knew very well that one great cause of Moses's unwillingness to this undertaking was his carnal fear, though he was ashamed to profess it, and therefore gives him this cordial.

Exodus 4:20

His sons, Gershom, Exo_2:22, and Eliezer, Exo_18:4, whom he intended to carry with him; but afterwards observing that they were like to be impediments to him in his great business, and being well assured that it would not be long ere he returned to them, he sent them back to Jethro, as may seem from Exo_18:5.

Upon an ass: one ass might be sufficient for her and her two children, because one of them was but little, Exo_4:25. Or ass may be put for asses , which changes of the numbers is very frequent in Scripture.

The rod of God; his shepherd's rod so called, partly because it was appropriated to God's special service, to be the instrument in all his glorious works; and partly to show that whatsoever was done by that rod, was not done by any virtue in the rod, or in Moses's hand, but merely by the power of God, who was pleased for the greater confusion of his enemies to use so mean an instrument.

Exodus 4:21

In thine hand, i.e. in thy power or commission, to be clone by thy hand, and the rod in it.

I will harden his heart, that he shall be unmerciful to all the groans and pressures of the Israelites, inexorable to the requests of Moses, unmovable and incorrigible by all my words and works. But God doth not properly and positively make men's hearts hard, but only privatively, either by denying to them, or withdrawing from them, that grace which alone can make men soft, and flexible, and pliable to the Divine will; as the sun hardens the clay by drawing out of it that moisture which made it soft; or by exposing them to those temptations of the world or the devil, which, meeting with a corrupt heart, are apt to harden it.

Exodus 4:22

By my choice and adoption. They are most dear to me, and reserved by me out of all nations to be my peculiar people; and therefore I will no longer suffer thee to invade my right, nor them to live in the neglect of my service.

Exodus 4:23

I say unto thee; I command thee; for saying is put for commanding, Luk_4:3 9:54; and in 1Ch_21:19, compared with 2Sa_24:19.

I will slay thy son; by which plague, coming after the rest, thou wilt be enforced to do what I advise thee now to do upon cheaper terms.

Exodus 4:24

Met him, i.e. appeared to him in some visible shape, and sought to kill him. Whom? Moses, spoken of and to before. He offered and endeavoured to kill him, either by inflicting some sudden and dangerous disease or stroke upon him, or by showing himself in some threatening posture, possibly as the angel did to Balaam, and afterwards to David, with a drawn sword in his hand, ready to give him a deadly blow. The reason of this severity was not Moses's distrust of God, or delay in his journey, nor the bringing of his wife and children along with him, (which it was convenient for him to carry with him, both that his father might not think he intended to desert them, and for the greater assurance and encouragement of the Israelites, when they saw that he exposed his dearest relations to the same hazards with them all,) but the neglect of circumcising his child, which also the Lord some way or other signified to Moses and Zipporah, as plainly appears,

1. From Zipporah's following fact upon that occasion.
2. From the Lord's dismissal of Moses upon the circumcision of the child.
3. From the threatening of death, or cutting off, for this sin, Gen_17:14, which, because there was now no magistrate to do it, God himself offers to execute it, as he sometimes saith he would do that in case. And this was a greater Sin in Moses than in another man, and at this time than it had been before, because he understood the will and law of God about it better than any man, and God had lately minded him of that covenant of his with Abraham, &c., whereof circumcision was a seal; the blessings and benefits of which covenant Moses was now going to procure for himself and for his people, whilst he remained under the guilt of grossly neglecting the condition of it. Besides, what could be more absurd than that he should come to be a lawgiver, who lived in a manifest violation of God's law? or that he should be the chief ruler and instructor of the Israelites, whose duty it was to acquaint them with their duty of circumcising their children, and, as far as he could, to punish the wilful neglect of it, and yet at the same time be guilty of the same sin? or that he should undertake to govern the church of God, that could not well rule his own house? 1Ti_3:5. And this was not only a great sin in itself, but a great scandal to the Israelites, who might by this great example easily be led into the same miscarriage; and moreover might not without colour of probability suspect the call of such a person, and conclude that God would not honour that man who should continue in such a visible contempt of his law. And therefore it is no wonder that God was so angry at Moses for this sin.

Quest. How came Moses to neglect this evident duty?

Answ. From Zipporah's averseness to and dread of that painful and, as she thought, dangerous ordinance of God, which she herself evidently discovers in this place; and the rather because of the experience which she had of it in her eldest son. And as she seems to have been a woman of an eager and passionate temper, so Moses was eminently meek and pliable, and in this matter too indulgent to his wife, especially in her father's house, and therefore he put it off till a more convenient season, when he might either persuade or overrule her therein; which was a great fault, for God had obliged all the children of Abraham not only to the thing, but to the time also, to do it upon the eighth day, which season Moses had grossly, and for some considerable time, slipped, and so had preferred the pleasing of his wife before his obedience to God.

Exodus 4:25

Perceiving the danger of her husband, and the cause of it, and her husband being disenabled from performing that work, whether by some stroke or sickness, or by the terror of so dismal and unexpected an apparition to him, and delays being highly dangerous, she thought it better to do it herself as well as she could, rather than put it off a moment longer; whether because the administration of that sacrament was not confined to any kind or order of persons, or because, if it was so, she did not apprehend it to be so, or because she thought this was the least of two evils, and that it was safer to commit a circumstantial error, than to continue in a substantial fault.

A sharp stone, which she took as next at hand in that stony country. Let none think this strange, for not only this work, but the cutting off of that part, which some used to do, was commonly performed with a flint, or a sharp stone, as is expressly affirmed by Herodotus, 1. 2; Plin. 35. 12. See also Juvenal, Sat. 6. and Martial. Epigram. 3. 18. But the word may be rendered, a sharp knife. See Jos_5:2,3. Cast it at his feet: the words are very short, and therefore ambiguous, and may be rendered, either thus, she cast herself at his feet; either,

1. At the feet of the angel, as a suppliant for her husband's life. But it is most probable that she directs this action and her following speech to the same person. Or,

2. The feet of her husband, to make request to him, that she and her Children might depart from him, and return to her father, which also he granted. But neither was she of so humble a temper, nor at this time in so mild a frame, as to put herself into such a lowly posture to her husband; nor was she likely to present her humble supplication to him, to whom at the same time she showed such scorn and indignation. Or rather thus, she cast it at his, i.e. her husband's, feet: it, either the child; but that being tender, and now in great pain, she would not use it so roughly: or rather the foreskin cut off, or at least the blood which came from it; which she did in spite and anger against her husband, as the cause of so much pain to the child, and grief to herself.

A bloody husband art thou to me: this some think she spake to the child, whom she calls her spouse, as some late rabbins affirm the infant used to be called, when it was circumcised, though they bring no competent proof for this usage; or her son, as the Hebrew word chathan signifies. But indeed that signifies only a son-in-law , as 1Sa_18:18, which is not true nor proper here. Yet some make these to be the form or solemn words used in circumcision, Thou art a spouse , or a son of bloods, to me , i.e. made so to me by the blood of circumcision. But it doth not appear that this was the usual form. Nor was it likely that she, being a Midianitish, not a Hebrew woman, and doing this suddenly, and in a rage, should be so expert to know, and so punctual to use, the right form of words, when she did not use a fit and decent carriage in the action, as appears by her casting it at his feet. It is therefore more probable she spoke thus to her husband. And because she durst not accuse God, the author of this work, she falls foul upon her husband as the occasion of it, and as a costly and bloody husband to her, whose endangered life she was forced to redeem with blood, even the blood of her little child, by which as he received a new life after a sort, so she did anew, and the second time, espouse him; whence she calls him chathah , which properly signifies a spouse , not a husband .

Exodus 4:26

So he let him go; or, he , i.e. God, or the destroying angel sent from God, departed from him , i.e. from Moses, and removed the tokens of God's indignation, the sickness or stroke laid upon him.

Zipporah both repeats and amplifies her former censure, and reproacheth not only her husband, but also God's ordinance; which perverse and obstinate spirit her husband observing in her, and wisely forecasting how much disturbance she might give him in his great and difficult work in Egypt, he thought fit to send her and her children back to her father, as appears from Exo_18:1-3. In the Hebrew it is, because of the circumcisions, to wit, of her two sons, who possibly were both circumcised at this time, though it be not so expressed; but one being mentioned for an example, we are left to suppose the like concerning the other; or the circumcision of this child brings the other to her remembrance, and so she upbraids him with both. Only this doth more provoke her than it seems the other did, because she was forced to do this speedily, and with her own hands, and that to a tender infant; whereas the elder peradventure was circumcised when he was more grown and strong, and able to bear the pain. Let none think it strange that Zipporah should quarrel so much at circumcision, because the Midianites were descended from Abraham, and therefore were circumcised. For if they were so, it was done when they were grown up, about the thirteenth year of their age, from the example of Ishmael, who was circumcised at that age. But indeed it is more likely that those people, being cast out of God's covenant, as to the benefit of it, would, and did in a little time, throw off the sign of it, as having much more of pain and danger in it, than of use and privilege.

Exodus 5:1 EXODUS CHAPTER 5

Moses and Aaron entreateth Pharaoh to let the people go, Exo_5:1. Pharaoh's blasphemous refusal, Exo_5:2. Chides Moses and Aaron for their request, Exo_5:4. Pharaoh, seeing the Israelites to be many, Exo_5:5, commands the task-masters and officers to increase their bondage, Exo_5:6-9. The task-masters go and do as Pharaoh commands, Exo_5:10,11. The scattering of the people throughout Egypt, Exo_5:12. The task-masters' cruelty to the officers of the Israelites, Exo_5:14. The officers' complaint to Pharaoh, Exo_5:15,16. He upbraids them with idleness, Exo_5:17. His harsh answer, Exo_5:18. The officers of the children of Israel meet Moses and Aaron, and blame them, Exo_5:20,21. Moses returns and complains to God, Exo_5:22,23.

Moses and Aaron went in, and with them some of the elders of Israel, as may seem from Exo_3:18, though here only the two chiefs be mentioned. Or, because Moses did not seem to be satisfied with the assistance of the elders before offered him, Exo_3:18, God was pleased to give him a more acceptable assistant in their stead, even Aaron his brother, Exo_4:14. Told Pharaoh: either both successively told him; or Aaron did it immediately, and with his tongue, Moses by his interpreter, and by his command. Or, offer a sacrifice, as they express it, Exo_5:3 and Exo_10:9. For both went together, and a good part of many sacrifices was spent in feasting before the Lord and unto the honour of the Lord. See Deu_12:6,7,11,12.

Exodus 5:2

Exodus 5:3

Hath met with us, i.e. hath appeared to us lately, and laid this command upon us. Others, is called upon us , i.e. his name is called upon us, or we are called by his name. But why should Moses so solemnly tell that to Pharaoh which all the people knew, to wit, that the Hebrews did worship the God of the Hebrews? And our translation is confirmed by comparing this with Exo_3:18, where this very message is prescribed.

Lest he fall upon us; lest he punish, either us, if we disobey his command, or thee, if thou hinderest us from obeying it: but this latter they only imply, as being easily gathered from the former.

Exodus 5:4

Either,

1. Ye, the elders of Israel, who are here come with Moses and Aaron : see Exo_5:1. Or,

2. Ye, Moses and Aaron. So far am I from granting the liberty which you desire for the people, that as a just punishment upon you for your seditious attempt, I command you also to go with the rest, and to take your share in their burdens, and to perform the task which shall be required of you. And that so cruel a tyrant did not proceed further against them, must be ascribed to the mighty power of God, who governs the spirits and restrains the hands of the greatest kings when he pleaseth.

Exodus 5:5

Ver. 5. The Israelites in this land are very numerous, and therefore it were a madness in me to permit them all to meet and go together as you desire, which may tend to the ruin of my whole kingdom, and probably it is designed by you to that purpose. Or, therefore your injury to me is the greater, in attempting to rob me of the benefit of their labours. This I prefer, because it suits best with the following words.

Moses returned unto the Lord, to expostulate with him, and pray to him. To the people he saith nothing, but meekly passeth by their severe censures, as forced from them by intolerable oppression; and because their minds being now imbittered and exasperated, they were incapable of admonition. Wherefore hast thou so evil entreated this people, by giving occasion to their greater bondage? He expostulates the matter with God, not from pride and arrogance, as one that would censure and condemn his actions, but from zeal for God's glory, and his people's happiness, as one that would prevail with God to relieve them; though it must be confessed that Moses exceeded his bounds, being transported with grief and passion, which the gracious God was pleased to pass by.

Exodus 6:14

This genealogy he describes here, to show the lineage of Moses and Aaron, by whom this great work was to be effected. Only he promiseth in brief the genealogy of his two elder brethren. Reuben and Simeon, to make way for the third, which he intended more largely to insist upon. And he mentions them rather than any other, either to advance the favour of God in preferring that tribe before the descendants of their elder brethren; or to show that, although the parents were sharply censured, and rather cursed than blessed by Jacob, Ge 49, yet their posterity was not rejected by God, but received to mercy, and admitted to the same privilege with their brethren.

Amminadab a prince of the tribe of Judah, Num_1:7 Num_2:3. Marriages were not yet confined to their own tribes; and when they were, the Levites seem to have had this privilege, that they might marry a daughter of any other tribe, because indeed the reason of that law did not concern them, there being no danger of confusion or loss of inheritance on their part. And especially there were many marriages made between the tribes of Judah and Levi, to signify that both were united in Christ, who was to be both king and priest. It is observable, that Moses is here silent in his own progeny, but gives a particular account of his brother's, not only from his great humility and modesty, which shines forth in many other passages, but because it was of more concernment; and the honour of priesthood given to Aaron was to be hereditary, and peculiar to his seed, and therefore it was necessary they should be exactly known; whereas Moses's honour and government was only personal, and did not pass to his children.

Exodus 7:1 EXODUS CHAPTER 7

God encourages Moses to speak to Pharaoh, Exo_7:1. God foretells the hardness of, Pharaoh's heart, that he might multiply his wonders in Egypt, Exo_7:3,4 to declare to the Egyptians that he only is the Lord, Exo_7:5. Moses and Aaron obey God's command, Exo_7:6. Their age, Exo_7:7. God commands them to show a miracle for the confirmation of their authority, Exo_7:8,9. Their rod turned into a serpent, Exo_7:10. The magicians do the same, Exo_7:11. Aaron's rod devoureth theirs, Exo_7:12. Pharaoh is hardened, as the Lord had said, Exo_7:13; and refuseth to let the people go, Exo_7:14. God denounces judgments on the Egyptians, Exo_7:17,18. Commands Moses and Aaron to stretch out their hands oven the waters, Exo_7:19. The waters are turned into blood, Exo_7:20. The fish die, and the river stinks, Exo_7:21. The magicians do the same, whereby Pharaoh's heart is hardened, Exo_7:22. The means they used against this plague, Exo_7:24. The continuance of it, Exo_7:25.

To represent my person, to act like God, by requiring his obedience to thy commands, and by punishing his disobedience with such punishments as none but God can inflict, to which end thou shalt have my omnipotent assistance. i.e. Thy interpreter, or spokesman, as Exo_4:16, to deliver thy commands to Pharaoh.

Exodus 7:9

Say unto Aaron, by whose hands this and other miracles were to be done, and not by Moses immediately; partly to take off the some suspicion that these miracles were wrought by magical artifice of Moses; and partly for the greater honour of Moses, that he might be what God had said, Exo_7:1, a god to Pharaoh , who not only could work wonders himself, but also give power to others to do so.

Take thy rod: the same rod is called the rod of God , and of Moses , and of Aaron , here and Exo_7:12, because it was appointed, and as it were consecrated by God, and used both by Moses and Aaron in their great works. And this rod Moses ordinarily held in his hand, and delivered it to Aaron upon occasion for the execution of his commands.

A serpent; Heb. a dragon , which is a great serpent. Others, a crocodile , to whose jaws he had exposed the Israelitish infants.

Exodus 7:11

Under the general title of wise men he seems to comprehend all who were most eminent in any sort of wisdom, either natural, or civil, or divine, who were all called to give their opinion and advice in these matters.

The magicians, the same now called sorcerers, who acted by the power of the devil, whom by certain rites and ceremonies they engaged to their assistance. Of these the two chief were Jannes and Jambres, 2Ti_3:8.

They also did in like manner, in show and appearance, which was not difficult for the devil to do, either by altering the air and the spectators' sight, and by causing their rods both to look and move like serpents; or by a sudden and secret conveyance of real serpents thither, and removing the rods. Nor is it strange that God permitted those delusions, partly because it was a just punishment upon the Egyptians for their horrid and manifold idolatry, and barbarous cruelty towards the Israelites, and their other wickedness; and partly because there was a sufficient difference made between their impostures, and the real miracles wrought by Moses and Aaron, as appears from the next verse, and from Exo_8:18, and from other passages. And this is a great evidence of the truth of Scripture story, and that it was not written by fiction and design. For if Moses had written these books to deceive the world, and to advance his own reputation, (as some have impudently said,) it is ridiculous to think that he would have put in this, and many other passages, which might seem so much to eclipse his honour, and the glory of his works.

Exodus 7:12

They became serpents; either,

1. In appearance. For the Scripture oft speaks of things otherwise than they are, because they seem to be so. And therefore as the devil appearing to Saul in the likeness of Samuel is called Samuel; so may these rods upon the same account be called serpents , because through diabolical illusion they seemed to be so. Or,

2. Really, in manner expressed, Exo_7:11.

Aaron's rod swallowed up their rods; by which it was evident, either that Aaron's rod was turned into a real serpent, because it had the real properties and effects of a serpent, viz. to devour; or, at least, that the God of Israel was infinitely more powerful than the Egyptian idols or devils.

Exodus 7:13

He, the Lord, to whom this act of hardening is frequently ascribed both in this book and elsewhere.

Exodus 7:14

He is obstinate, and resolved in his way, so as neither my word nor my works can make any impression upon him.

Exodus 7:15

He goeth out unto the water, i. e. the Nile, whither he went at that time, either for his recreation, or to pay his morning worship to that river, which the Egyptians had in great veneration, as Plutarch testifies.

Exodus 7:16

No text from Poole on this verse.

Exodus 7:17

Because thou saidst, Who is the Lord? and, I know not the Lord , Exo_5:2, thou shalt know him experimentally, and to thy cost. Behold, I will smite , viz. by Aaron's hand, who shall do it by my command and direction. Thus Pilate is said to give Christ's body to Joseph , Mar_15:45, because he commanded it to be delivered by others to him. The same action is ascribed to the principal and instrumental cause. The river Nile , which was one of their principal gods; and therefore it was inexcusable in them, that they would not renounce those feeble gods, which were unable to help not only their worshippers, but even themselves, nor embrace the service and commands of that God whose almighty power they saw and felt.

They shall be turned to blood, which was a very grievous plague to them; both because it was an eternal dishonour to their religion, and because from hence they had both their drink, Deu_11:10,11 Jer 2:18, and their meat, Num_11:5; for greater and lesser cattle they would not eat, Exo_8:26. And it was a very proper punishment for them, who had made that river an instrument for the execution of their bloody design against the Israelitish infants, Exo_1:22.

Exodus 7:18

Therefore the Israelites were free from this plague, and those branches of Nilus which they used were uncorrupted, when all others were turned into blood.

Shall lothe, or, shall weary themselves , in running hither and thither in hopes of finding water in some parts or branches of the river.

Exodus 7:19

Not that he was to go to every pool to use this ceremony there, but he stretched his hand and rod over some of them in the name of all the rest, which he might signify either by his words, or by the various motions of his rod several ways.

Exodus 7:22

It was not difficult for the devil to convey blood speedily and unperceivably, and that in a great quantity, which might suffice to infect with a bloody colour those small parcels of water which were left for them to show their art in.

Quest. Whence could they have water, when all their waters were turned into blood?

Answ. It might be had, either,

1. By rain, which at that time God was pleased to send down either for this purpose, or to mitigate the extremity of the plague, or for other reasons known to him, though not to us. For that rain sometimes falls in Egypt, though not much nor often, is affirmed by ancient writers and late travellers. Or,

2. From Goshen, which was not far from the court, or from some houses of the Israelites, who dwelt amongst the Egyptians, as appears from many places of this history, and who were free from these plagues. See Exo_8:22 9:26 10:23 12:13 &c. Or,

3. From the pits which they digged, Exo_7:24. Or,

4. From some branch of Nilus, or some vessels in their houses, whose waters were not yet changed; for this change might be wrought not suddenly, (which is not affirmed in this relation,) but by degrees, which God might so order for this very end, that the magicians might have matter for the trial of their experiment.

Exodus 7:23

He did not seriously consider it, nor the causes or cure of this plague, and was not much affected with it, because he saw this fact exceeded not the power of his magicians.

Exodus 7:24

It is not much material to us, whether they lost their labour, and found only blood there, as Josephus affirms; or whether they succeeded and found water there, which seems more probable, because these come not within the compass of Moses's commission, Exo_7:17,19,20, or whether they found the water something purified and less bloody, though mixed with blood. But it is observable, that though the devil could do something which might increase the plague, or imitate it, yet he could do nothing to remove it.

Exodus 7:25

For seven days were fulfilled, ere all the waters of Egypt were perfectly free from this infection.

Quest. How could the Egyptians subsist so long without water?

Answ.

1. Philo tells us that many of them died of this plague.
2. As the plague might come on, so it might go off, by degrees; and so the water, though mixed with blood, might give them some relief.
3. The juices of herbs, and other liquors, which were untouched with this plague, might refresh them.

4. They might have some water, either from their pits, or by rain from heaven, as was said before; or from Goshen; for though it be said that the blood was in all their vessels, Exo_7:19, yet it is not said that all that should afterwards be put into them should be turned into blood.

Exodus 8:1 EXODUS CHAPTER 8

God sends Moses to Pharaoh that he might let the people go, Exo_8:1. He threatens his denial with a judgment of frogs, Exo_8:2-4. Aaron stretching forth his rod, Egypt is covered with frogs, Exo_8:6. The magicians do so, Exo_8:7. Pharaoh calls Moses and Aaron to entreat the Lord to remove the frogs, and promises them to let them go, Exo_8:8. Moses and Aaron cry to the Lord to take away the frogs, Exo_8:12; which he did, Exo_8:13. Pharaoh's heart still hardened, Exo_8:15. Aaron stretching forth his rod smites the dust, which becomes lice, Exo_8:17. The magicians attempt the same, but could not, Exo_8:18; which extorted a confession from them that this is the finger of God, yet Pharaoh is hardened, Exo_8:19. Swarms of flies threatened, Exo_8:20-23. God fulfills his word, Exo_8:24. Pharaoh sends for Moses and Aaron, and permits a sacrifice in Egypt, Exo_8:25. Moses would go three days into the wilderness, Exo_8:27. Pharaoh permits that, but not far, Exo_8:28. The flies are removed, Exo_8:29-31. Pharaoh is hardened, Exo_8:32.

Exodus 8:2

All thy land which is within thy borders; a synecdoche; so that word is used also Exo_10:4,19 1Ki_1:3 Psa_147:14 Jer_15:13. So the gate and the wall are put for the city to which they belong, Gen_22:17 Amo_1:7,10,14.

Exodus 8:3

The river; under which are comprehended all other rivers, streams, and ponds, as appears from Exo_8:5. But the river Nilus is mentioned, because God would make that an instrument of their misery in which they most gloried, Eze_29:3, and to which they gave divine honours, and which was the instrument of their cruelty against the Israelites, Exo_1:22.

Into thy bed-chamber; either because God made the doors and windows to fly open, which it is easy to believe concerning God, seeing that this hath been many times done by evil angels; or because whensoever men entered into any house, or any room of their house, which their occasions would oft force them to do, the frogs, being always at their heels in great numbers, would go in with them. This plague was worse than the former, because it was more constant and more general; for the former was only in the waters, and did only molest them when they went to drink or use the water; but this infected all liquors, and all places, and at all times, and annoyed all their senses with their filthy substance, and shape, and noise, and stink, and mingled themselves with their meats, and sauces, and drinks, and crawling into their beds made them restless. And many of them probably were of a more ugly shape and infectious nature than ordinary.

Exodus 8:4

Not upon the Israelites, whom he hereby exempts from the number of Pharaoh's people and subjects, and owns them for his peculiar people. The frogs did not only invade their houses, but assault their persons, which is not strange, considering that they were armed with a Divine commission and power.

Exodus 8:9

Glory over me: as I have gloried over thee in laying first my commands, and then my plagues upon thee, so now lay thy commands upon me for the time of my praying; and if I do not what thou requirest, I am content thou shouldst insult over me, punish me. Or, glory, or boast thyself of, or concerning me, as one that thy God's power can do that for thee which all thy magicians cannot, of whom therefore thou now seest thou canst not glory nor boast, as thou hast hitherto done.

When shall I entreat for thee? Appoint me what time thou pleasest. Hereby he knew that the hand and glory of God would be more conspicuous in it. And this was no presumption in Moses, because he had a large commission, Exo_7:1; and also had particular direction from God in all that he said or did in these matters.

Exodus 8:10

Why not presently?

Answ. 1. Because he hoped ere that time they might be removed, either by natural causes or by chance, and so he should not need the favour of Moses or his God.

2. Because he thought it a hard and long work to remove so vast a number of frogs, and that Moses might use divers ceremonies, as the magicians did, in his addresses to God, which would require some considerable time.

Exodus 8:11

No text from Poole on this verse.

Exodus 8:12

Or, as the place is fitly rendered by others, because of the word, or matter of, or about the frogs which he had given or propounded to Pharaoh. Because he had given his word both for the thing and the time of it, he prayed more earnestly lest God should be dishonoured, and Pharaoh have occasion of triumph. The Hebrew verbs to put and to give are frequently exchanged, as appears by comparing 1Ki_10:9, with 2Ch_9:8; and Isa_42:1, with Mat_12:18.

Moses cried unto the Lord: though he was assured that the frogs would depart at his word, yet he would use the means appointed by God for the accomplishment of it.

Exodus 8:13

A short speech for they died and were removed out of, &c, as appears from the next verse; it being frequent in the Hebrew tongue under one verb expressed to understand another agreeable to it. See examples in the Hebrew, Gen_43:33,34 Exo 18:12 25:2 Pro_25:22.

Exodus 8:14

Doubtless they cast them into their rivers, or pits, &c., though that be not here mentioned. God would not instantly and wholly take them away, both to convince them of the truth of the miracle, and to make them more sensible of this judgment, and more fearful of bringing another upon themselves.

Exodus 8:15

No text from Poole on this verse.

Exodus 8:16

God, it seems, gave him no warning, because he showed himself in the very last plague to be both perfidious and incorrigible. Others think he was forewarned, though that be not here expressed.

Lice, so the Hebrew word is rendered by all the Jewish and most other interpreters. But it is probable that what is said of the locusts, Exo_10:14, was true of these, that they were much more loathsome and troublesome than ordinary.

Exodus 8:17

The dust was not fit matter to produce lice, and therefore shows this work to be Divine and miraculous.

All the dust of the land, i.e. a great part of it, the word all being commonly so understood in Scripture.

Exodus 8:18

Did so, i.e. endeavoured to do so. Thus to enter, Mat_7:13, is put for striving to enter, Luk_13:24. Thus men are said to deliver, Gen_37:21; to fight, Jos_24:9; to return, Jos_10:15; when they only attempted or endeavoured to do so. And therefore when it is said in any of the plagues that the magicians did so, it is not to be understood that they really did the same thing, but that they endeavoured to do so, and that they did something which looked like it.

It was as easy for them to produce lice as frogs, but God hindered them, partly to confound them and their devilish arts, and to show that what they did before was only by his permission; and partly to convince Pharaoh and the Egyptians of their vanity in trusting to such impotent magicians, and in opposing that God who could control and confound them when he pleased.

Exodus 8:19

The finger is put either synecdochically for the hand, as it is Exo_31:18 Psa_8:3 144:1; or metaphorically for the power or virtue, as Luk_11:20, compared with Mat_12:28.

Of God; of that supreme God, whom both the Egyptians and other heathen idolaters acknowledged as superior to all men, and idols, and devils. This they said, lest they should be thought inferior to Moses and Aaron in magical art. But hereby they own the sovereign God to be on Israel's side; and yet, like the devils, they proceed to fight against him.

He hearkened not unto them; either to his magicians, of whom he last spake; or rather to Moses and Aaron, as the following words show. For relatives oft belong to the remoter antecedents, as Gen_9:13 1Sa_7:17 Mar_2:13.

Exodus 8:20

No text from Poole on this verse.

Exodus 8:21

Swarms of flies; Heb. a mixture of insects or flies, as appears from Psa_78:45, which were of various kinds, as bees, wasps, gnats, hornets, &c, infinite in their numbers, and doubtless larger and more venomous and pernicious than the common ones were.

Exodus 8:22

Either,

1. Of the whole earth, and consequently of Egypt, that I am not only the Lord of Israel, but of thee and thy dominions too. God is here spoken of after the manner of earthly princes, who use to reside in the midst of their kingdoms, that they may more conveniently rule and influence them. Or rather,

2. Of Goshen; the words being properly thus rendered, that I the Lord am in the midst of that land, to wit, the land of Goshen now spoken of, to defend and preserve it. For God is said to be in the midst of them whom he protects, Deu_7:21 23:14 Jos_3:10 Psa_46:5; and not to be in the midst of others whom he forsakes, and designs or threatens to destroy, Num_14:42 Deu_1:42 31:17. Compare Exo_33:3, with Exo_34:9.

Exodus 8:23

A division; Heb. a redemption or deliverance , i.e. a token or mean of deliverance, by a metonymy; a wall of partition, by which I will preserve the Israelites, whilst I destroy the Egyptians.

Tomorrow shall this sign be. This he saith, partly to gain the more belief to himself in what he now did or should timber speak in God's name to them; and partly to warn them of their danger, and make their disobedience more inexcusable.

Exodus 8:24

The Lord did so, immediately by his own word, and not by Moses's rod, lest the Egyptians should think it was a magician's wand, and. that all Moses's works were done by the power of the devil.

A grievous swarm of flies; Heb. a heavy mixture of flies. Heavy , i.e. either great, as this Hebrew word is used, Gen_41:31 Isa_32:2, or mischievous and troublesome; or rather, numerous, as it is taken, Gen_1:9 Num_11:14 1Ki_3:9, compared with 2Ch_1:10.

The land, i.e. either the fruits or products of the land; or rather, the inhabitants of the land, as the word land is taken, Gen_41:36 1Sa_27:9 many of the people were poisoned or stung to death by them, as appears from Psa_78:45. See also /APC Wis_16:9.

Exodus 8:26

It is not meet, Heb. not right , neither in God's eyes, who hath appointed us the place as well as the thing; nor in the Egyptians' eyes, as it follows.

The abomination of the Egyptians; that which the Egyptians abhor to kill, or to see killed; as not only Scripture, but profane authors, as Diodorus, and Tully, and Juvenal, witness, because they worshipped them as gods, as is notoriously known. Their fear was just; for when once a Roman had but killed a cat, though imprudently, the people tumultuously met together, and beset his house, and killed him in spite of the king and his princes, who used their utmost power and diligence to prevent it.

Exodus 9:8

Take to you handfuls of ashes, to mind them of their cruel usage of the Israelites in their furnace, of which see Deu_4:20 Jer_11:4. Exodus 9:9

Exodus 9:11

Could not stand before Moses, as they hitherto had done, both as spies and as adversaries; for though their understandings were convinced of God's hand and infinite power, yet their hearts were not changed; but for their worldly interest they persisted to rebel against their light., and therefore are justly plagued. It was no favour to Pharaoh that the plague was not upon him, but only a reservation to a greater mischief, as it follows.

Exodus 9:12

Exodus 9:14

Upon thine heart, or, into thy heart : thou hast hitherto not felt my plagues upon thy own person or thy body, but I shall shortly reach and wound it, and that not only in the skin, as the magicians and others are now smitten, but even to thy heart, such as shall make thy heart sick , Mic_6:13, such as shall give thee a mortal and irrecoverable wound. Some understand it of inward and spiritual judgments upon Pharaoh's heart, such as hardness of heart; but that plague had been inflicted upon him, and is recorded before this time. And Pharaoh's heart being here opposed to his servants and people , seems rather to denote his person, the heart or soul being often put synecdochically for the whole man.

Exodus 9:15

Pestilence; not properly so called, but largely, as the word is used Hos_13:14, meaning with an utter and irrecoverable destruction. This relates partly to the killing of the first-born, which plague did more immediately and nearly concern both him and his people, and principally to their destruction in the Red Sea .

Exodus 9:16

Raised thee up; so the Hebrew word is translated, Rom_9:17. I have raised thee up out of thy first nothing, into thy being, and life, and kingdom; and upheld thy being and reign even in the midst of thy tyranny. Heb. I have made thee to stand, i.e. to remain alive and untouched, when thy magicians could not stand, Exo_9:11. I have preserved thee in life, not for want of power to destroy thee, as thou mayst fancy, nor for want of provocation from thee, but for my own glory.

To show in thee my power, in those mighty works which have been occasioned by thy rebellion and obstinacy. My name; my being and providence, and my manifold perfections; my patience in bearing thee so long, my justice in punishing thee, my power in conquering thee, my wisdom in overruling thy pride, and tyranny, and cruelty, to thy own destruction, and the redemption of my oppressed people, and my faithfulness in making good my promises to them, and my threatenings to thee.

Exodus 9:17

Against my people, i.e. against me acting for my people. The gracious God takes what is done to or against his people as done to or against himself. See Zec_2:8 Mat_25:40,45 Ac 9:4,5.

Since they were a kingdom or a nation.

Exodus 9:19

This forewarning God gives, partly, to initiate the severity of the judgment; partly, that a considerable number of horses might be reserved for Pharaoh's expedition, Exo 14; partly, to show the justice of God in punishing so wicked and obstinate people, as would take no warning neither from God's words, nor from his former works; and partly, to make a difference between the penitent and the incorrigible Egyptians.

The Hebrew word may be rendered either dark or hid , to wit, under the ground, whereby it was secured from this stroke; or late , as divers of the Hebrews and other interpreters render it. This kind of corn coming later up, was now tender and hidden, either in the ground or in the herb; whereby it was in some measure secured both from the fire by its greenness and moisture, and from the hail by its pliability and yielding to it, whereas the stalks of barley were more dry and stiff, and therefore more liable to the hail and fire.

Exodus 10:9

A feast upon a sacrifice, wherein all are concerned, and therefore all must be present and ready to do what God requires us.

Exodus 10:10

I wish God may be no more ready and willing to be with you, and to do you good, than I am willing to let you go.

Evil is before you; either,

1. Evil of sin. You have some ill design against me, either to stir up sedition or war against me, or utterly to depart out of my kingdom. Or rather,

2. Evil of calamity or mischief.

1. Because it is here said to be before their faces , whereas evil designs are in men's hearts, and the fair pretenses wherewith they cover them are said to be before their faces.

2. The word of caution he gives to them, look to it , or take heed , seems to simply that he speaks not of the evil they designed against Pharaoh, but of that which they would unavoidably bring upon themselves from so potent a king, by the refusal of such fair offers, and continuing in such insolent and unreasonable demands.

Exodus 10:11

For that ye did desire; which was not true, but only was gathered by him out of their declared intention of going to sacrifice, wherein he thought the presence of the women and children wholly unnecessary.

Exodus 10:12

This is no unusual plague in Africa and Arabia, where, when the harvest is ripe, they frequently come in vast numbers, and upon all their corn, and what they do not eat they infect with their touch, and the moisture coming from them, and afterwards dying in great numbers, they poison the air, and cause a pestilence. So that it is no wonder that Pharaoh and his servants were so concerned for this plague, so well known to them, especially considering that this was like to be far worse than all of the same kind which they had either seen or heard of.

Exodus 10:13

Over the land; over divers parts of the land, shaking his rod towards the several quarters of it. An east wind in those parts is a most violent and pernicious wind, Exo_14:21 Num_11:31, and a dry wind, and therefore fit for the engendering of those creatures. This wind brought them from Arabia, where they are in great numbers, as we have seen, Exo_10:12, though God miraculously increased their numbers, and their power of doing mischief.

Exodus 10:14

Quest. How can this be true, when the same words are used of the locusts in Joel's time?

Answ. It might be true of both in divers respects; of these for number and quality, of them for long continuance, for they lasted three or four years, when these were but for a little time; of these for Egypt, of them for Judea, where they were fixed.

Exodus 10:15

The land was darkened; either by their flying in vast numbers, and so darkening the air, as they have oftentimes done; or by covering the green and lightsome herbs and productions of the earth with their dark and direful bodies.

They did eat every herb of the land. How could this be, when the hail had smitten every herb, and broken every tree ? Exo_9:25.

Answ. 1. There seems to have been some distance of time between these two plagues, in which space new productions might be sprouting forth, both out of the ground, and from the trees.

2. The words all and every are commonly understood of the greatest part.

Exodus 10:16

Pharaoh called for them, because this kind of plague in itself was most pernicious, whereby whole countries had been wasted, and grievous famines and pestilences caused, and was mightily aggravated by the vengeance of God, and by the peculiar quality of these locusts, which did not only fall upon their herbs and fruits, as they use to do, but invade their very houses, Exo_10:6, infect their meats, fill their beds, poison them with their stink and with their venomous bitings, whereby they killed many men, as it is written in /APC Wis_16:19.

Against you; by contempt of your great and terrible works, by breach of my promise made to you, and by my denial of your just desires and commands given to me in his name, whom I now find and feel to be the almighty and sovereign God.

Exodus 10:17

I desire no further favour, I will no more offend nor need your pardon.

This death; this deadly plague, compare 2Ki_4:40,2Co_11:23. Besides it did destroy the life of herbs and trees, yea, of beasts and men, either directly, or at least by consequence, in depriving them of the necessary supports of life.

Cast them, as the Hebrew word signifies, with a great noise , and with great force, so as they should never rise again to molest them.

The Red Sea; Heb. the sea of bulrushes , so called from the great number of bulrushes near its shore; or, the sea of bounds or limits , q.d. the narrow sea , whereas they could see no bounds nor shore beyond the Mediterranean Sea. It was called the Arabian Gulf, and by others the Red Sea, either from its red sand, or rather from Esau, called also Edom , which signifies red , Gen_25:30, from whom as the adjoining country was called Edom , or red , so this was called the Red Sea.

Exodus 10:21

It is an hyperbolic expression, such being very frequent both in Scripture and in all authors. For darkness being only a privation, cannot be properly felt, yet it might be felt in its cause, to wit, those thick and gross vapours which filled and infected the air. But the place may be rendered thus, that there may be darkness after that (so the Hebrew vau is sometimes used, as Mic_7:13) the darkness (i.e. the darkness of the night, or the common and daily darkness) is departed or removed , and the time of the day come; for so the root from whence this word may be derived signifies, Exo_13:22. And to this purpose the words are rendered by the Chaldee and Syriac, and some others; and the sense is, that the darkness may continue in the day-time as well as in the night.

Exodus 10:22

No text from Poole on this verse.

Exodus 10:23

They saw not one another, because these gross and moist fogs and vapours did not only quite shut out the light of the heavenly bodies, but also put out their candles, or other artificial lights, or at least so darken them that men could have no benefit by them.

From his place. Place here may be taken, either,

1. More strictly and particularly; so the sense is, The horror of that darkness was so great that they durst not remove at all, but stood or sat where the darkness found them, like men astonished or affrighted, and therefore unmovable, having their minds disturbed, being terrified with their guilty consciences, which most affect men in the dark, and with the dreadful noises which they heard, /APC Wis_17:5, and with the apparitions of evil angels, as may seem from Psa_78:49 where the plague of evil angels is put instead of this plague of darkness, which therefore is omitted in that place where all the rest are reckoned up. Or rather,

2. More largely, for their own houses or dwellings, for so the Hebrew word is certainly used, Exo_16:29. So the sense is, They did not stir abroad out of their houses upon their most necessary occasions.

Object. He saith not that they could not go, but that they could not rise from their place, which may seem to limit this expression to their particular places.

Answ. The word to rise is commonly put for going about any business; and here it is a pregnant word, as they call it, and implies going in it, none arose , viz. to go or remove from his place. And rising cannot be properly taken here for that particular posture, unless we will suppose that this darkness found all men sitting, which is absurd to imagine.

The children of Israel had light in their dwellings, whereby they might have conveyed themselves, and families, and goods away, as afterwards they did in haste; but they waited for Moses's orders, and he for God's command; and God intended to bring them forth, not by stealth, but in a more honourable and public manner, in spite of all opposition.

Exodus 10:24

And Pharaoh, or therefore , or then , to wit, after the darkness was either wholly or in part removed.

Let your flocks and your herds be stayed, either as a pledge of your return after your sacrifice is ended, or as a recompence for the cattle which I have lost by your means. Let your little ones also go with you, and consequently the women, whose help and service was necessary for their little ones in divers regards.

Exodus 10:25

Thou must give us, i.e. suffer us to take of our own stock

Exodus 10:26

Which was not a pretence, but a real truth. For this being a solemn and extraordinary sacrifice by the express and particular appointment of God, they knew not either of what kinds, or in what number or manner their sacrifices must be offered. Exodus 10:29

Thou hast spoken well, Heb. right ; not morally, for so it was very ill said; but logically, that which agrees, though not with thy duty, yet with the event and truth of the thing; for as thou hast warned me to see thee no more, so I in the name of God assure thee that thou shalt see me no more, to beg my prayers, or to be helped out of thy troubles by my means. And therefore that discourse of Moses to Pharaoh, which follows, Exo_11:4, &c., though it be put there out of its order and proper place, as many other passages are, yet was delivered at this time, and upon occasion of these words.

Exodus 11:1 EXODUS CHAPTER 11

God commandeth the Israelites to borrow jewels of the Egyptians, Exo_11:2. God giveth them favour among the Egyptians, Exo_11:3. Moses denounceth the last plague, Exo_11:4,5. A great cry, Exo_11:6. The Israelites' safety, Exo_11:7. The Egyptians thrusting them out, Exo_11:8. God foretells Pharaoh's hardness, Exo_11:9.

The Lord said unto Moses; either,

1. Whilst Moses was not yet gone out of Pharaoh's presence; so God might suggest this to his mind, as he did other things to Micaiah, when he was before Ahab and Jehoshaphat, 1Ki 22. Or rather,

2. Before his last coming to Pharaoh; and the words may be rendered thus, Now the Lord had said unto Moses . And this is here added as the reason why Moses spake so boldly to Pharaoh, because God had assured him of a good issue.

He shall surely thrust you out hence altogether; men, and women, and children, and cattle, and all that they had, which he would never do before.

Exodus 11:2

The Israelites, who at first lived distinctly by when they themselves, were greatly multiplied, and Pharaoh began to cast a jealous eye upon them, and to take cruel counsels against them, were more mixed with the Egyptians, as appears from \Exo_12:12,13, and many other places, either by their own choice, that they might receive protection and sustenance from them; or rather by Pharaoh's design, who planted many of his own people among them to watch and chastise them, Exo_1:11; and, it may be, removed some of them from Goshen to the parts adjoining to it, which were inhabited by his people. Jewels, or vessels, as the Hebrew word properly signifies; for they might more plausibly ask, and the Egyptians would with less suspicion lend them vessels, which might be proper and useful, both for their sacrifices and feasts, than jewels, for which they had no present need or use.

Exodus 11:3

Therefore they complied with their request, not only out of love to the people, but out of fear to Moses, lest he should punish them severely in case of refusal.

Exodus 11:4

Moses said this to Pharaoh before his departure, as appears by comparing Exo_11:8 with Exo_10:29. And therefore the three first verses of this chapter come in by way of parenthesis; and now he returns to the story, and sets down the last words which Moses spake to Pharaoh for a final parting:

God is said to go out, or go forth , or come down , &c., by way of condescension to the custom and capacity of men, when he doth any eminent act of power either in way of justice or mercy.

Exodus 11:5

That sitteth upon his throne; either now actually ruling with his father, as Solomon did even whilst David lived, 1Ki_1:34; or, more probably, he that is to sit , the present time for the future, he whose right this is by the custom of Egypt, and by the law of nations.

The first-born of the maid-servant; the poor captive slave that was in the prison, as it is Exo_12:29, and there did grind at the mill. In those times and places they had divers mills, which were not turned about by wind or water, as ours are, but by the hands of their servants, who for that purpose stood behind the mill, and so with hard labour turned it about. See Jud_16:21 Isa_47:1,2 La 5:13.

Exodus 12:1 EXODUS CHAPTER 12

The month wherein they went out of Egypt to be to them the first month of the year, Exo_12:1,2. God enjoins them to choose a spotless lamb for the passover, Exo_12:3. How they were to eat the same, Exo_12:4. The description of the lamb, Exo_12:5; the time of killing it, Exo_12:6; the manner of sprinkling, Exo_12:7; the time and method of eating it, Exo_12:8-11. God's purpose to smite the first-born, Exo_12:12. The use of the blood upon the doors, Exo_12:13. Seven days of unleavened bread, and the manner of keeping it, Exo_12:15. Moses directeth the elders, both for their present and future safety, Exo_12:21-24. They instruct their children concerning it, Exo_12:26,27. The first-born of all Egypt slain, Exo_12:29. A great cry, Exo_12:30. Pharaoh giveth Israel leave to go, Exo_12:31. The Egyptians thrust them out, Exo_12:33. Their hasty departure, Exo_12:34. They spoil the Egyptians, Exo_12:35,36. Their number, Exo_12:37. Their baking unleavened bread, Exo_12:39. How long they dwelt in Egypt, Exo_12:40. The time of their deliverance, Exo_12:41. Who were to partake of the passover, Exo_12:43-49. The children of Israel did as the Lord commanded, Exo_12:50.

The lord spake; had spoken , before the three days' darkness, as may appear by comparing Exo_12:3,6 of this chapter with Exo_11:4. And the mention of it was put off by him till this place, as well that he might not interrupt the history of all the plagues, as that he might give the whole institution of the passover together.

Exodus 12:2

This month was the first month after the vernal equinox, called Abib , Exo_13:4 23:15 Deu_16:1, and Nissan , Neh_2:1 Est_3:7; containing part of our March , and part of April .

The beginning; Heb. the head ; which, I conceive, notes not so much the order, which is more plainly mentioned in the following words, as the eminency of it, that it shall be accounted the chief and principal of all months; as the sabbath hath been called by some the queen of days . And justly must they prefer this month before the rest, whether they looked back to their prodigious deliverance from Egypt therein, or forward to their spiritual redemption by Christ, and to the acceptable year of the Lord , Luk_4:19; for in this very month our Lord Jesus suffered, Joh_18:28.

It shall be the first month: heretofore your first month for all affairs hath been Tisri , which in part answers to our September , and is the first month after the autumnal equinox; and so it shall be to you still as to civil affairs, as it appears from Exo_23:16 34:22 Lev_25:8-10; but as to sacred and ecclesiastical matters, this shall henceforth be your first month.

Exodus 12:3

In the tenth day; partly, that they might have the lamb ready for the sacrifice, and might not be distracted about procuring it when they should be going to use it; partly, that by the frequent contemplation of the lamb, as a sign appointed by God, they might have their faith strengthened as to their approaching deliverance, and afterwards might have their minds quickened to the more serious consideration of that great deliverance out of Egypt, and of that more glorious deliverance from hell by Christ the true Passover, which should be offered for them; partly, to teach the church in all ages how necessary a thing preparation is to the solemn duties and exercises of religion; and partly, to signify that Christ should be first set apart, and separated to the ministry, which was done three or four prophetic days, i.e. years, before his death, and afterwards offered: most of which reasons being perpetual, it may seem this usage was so too, and not for the first passover only.

They shall take to them, into their houses, where the Jews tell us he was tied to the bed-post.

A lamb, or kid , Exo_12:5, for the same word signifies both, though a lamb was commonly used, and a kid only in case of the want of a lamb; and the Chaldee and LXX. do almost constantly translate the Hebrew word lamb . And Christ is seldom or never typified by a kid , but generally by a lamb , as he is called Joh_1:29, partly for his innocency, meekness, patience, &c., but principally with respect to the paschal lamb, instead whereof he was in due time to be offered; whence he is called our Passover, 1Co_5:7.

A lamb was to be disposed of to every house or family, according to its quantity, or the number of persons in it, as the next verse explains it. The several families are called the houses of their fathers, because they consist of those persons which come from one father or grandfather. The people were divided into tribes, the tribes were subdivided into families, and the families again into houses, which were like sprigs taken from the greater branches, and planted apart, and each of these had their several fathers, from whom they were denominated, as here they are.

Exodus 12:4

Too little for the lamb, i.e. for the eating of the whole lamb at one meal, according to the rule, Exo_12:8,10; if the persons be so few that they cannot eat it up without gluttony.

Take it; or rather thus, word for word, And , or Then he (the master of that family) shall take also his neighbour next unto his house ; he shall take him and his family into society with himself; they shall join together.

To the number of the souls, or persons , i.e. as the two families shall consist of more or fewer persons. I suppose the meaning is, that if his next neighbour's family were of itself sufficient for the eating of the whole lamb, that he should pass over that to the next small family, which being joined with his might make up a fit number, which, as the Hebrew doctors tell us, was ten, besides women and children.

According to his eating, i.e. according to the proportion which he can or commonly doth eat. The meaning is this, The whole lamb being to be eaten at once, and a sufficient number being necessary to that end, and there being great variety in men's stomachs and meals, they were to give allowance for that, and to take either more or fewer persons, as their stomachs were better or worse.

Exodus 12:5

Without blemish; without any deformity or distemper of body. Heb. perfect . Of which see Lev_22:21, &c.; Deu_15:21 17:1. And this the very light of nature taught the heathens to observe in their sacrifices. This property was required both to typify Christ, a Lamb without spot or blemish, Heb_9:14 1Pe_1:19, and to instruct us that all our services to God must be as perfect as possibly may be.

A male, partly because that was better and more perfect than the female, whence a male is opposed to a corrupt thing, Mal_1:14; and partly to typify the man Christ Jesus.

Of the first year, i.e. a year old, when it is in its rigour and perfection, and the fittest type of Christ. Most explain it thus, That it was not to be more than a year old, but it might be much less, seeing it might be offered to God any time after it was eight days old, Exo_22:30 Lev_22:27. But though it was then fit to be offered to God, it was not very fit to be eaten by men. And the Hebrew phrase, the son of a year , seems to require a year's age, as Saul is called the son of one year , 1Sa_13:1, when he had reigned one whole year. And it is remarkable, that he doth not say the son of this or that year, which might agree to one brought forth that year, though it was much younger than a year, but the son of a year , without any restrictive article.

Or from the goats; Heb. and from the goats : if you want a lamb, you shall take a kid of or from the goats. But the particle and is here well rendered or, as it is used Gen_13:8 Exo_21:17, compared with Mat_15:4 Psa_8:4, compared with Heb_2:6.

Exodus 12:6

Ye shall keep it up; separate it from the rest of the flock, and keep it in a safe place; the reasons of which, Exo_12:3.

The whole assembly; or rather, every assembly , to wit, every such society as meet together for eating of the lamb. And the assembly is said to kill it, because one person did it in their name, and by their appointment; in which manner, and upon which reason, the whole congregation is said to stone a man, Lev_24:14,16 Num 15:35 Deu_22:21. It is probable it was killed by the master of the family, who was a priest in his own family, &c.

In the evening; Heb. between the evenings , or the two evenings , i.e. between the beginning and end of the evening. The evening is one third part of the day, and one of the appointed and usual times of devotion, as appears from Psa_55:17 Dan_6:10; and it begun at their ninth or our third hour, as may be gathered from Act_3:1; for then the sun began more sensibly to decline, whence that time is fitly called by the Jews the first evening , and that was the time of the evening sacrifice; the second evening was when the sun was setting or set. Between these it was to be killed. This had a respect both to the time of the world's age when Christ came, which was its evening, or declining time, or end , Heb_1:2 9:26 1Pe_1:20; and the time of the day in which Christ our Passover was killed, Mat_27:46-50 Mar_15:25,33,34.

This was afterwards restrained to the priests, but at this time it was allowed to the masters of families, as their present circumstances required.

They shall strike it; with a bunch of hyssop, Exo_12:22, as a badge of distinction between their houses and the Egyptians; not to direct the destroying angel where they were, who could as well discern the houses as the blood in the night, but to direct their thoughts to Christ, whose blood was hereby evidently typified, by whose merits and mediation they obtained this preservation and deliverance from Egypt, as well as their great deliverance from hell.

Exodus 12:8

In that night, i.e. the night following the fourteenth, and beginning the fifteenth day. The lamb was killed upon the fourteenth day, in the evening or close thereof, but it was eaten upon the fifteenth day, to wit, in the beginning of it; whence the passover is said to be offered sometimes upon the fourteenth, and sometimes upon the fifteenth day, which may serve for the reconciliation of some seemingly contrary scriptures.

Roast with fire; partly for expedition, Exo_12:11; and principally to be a type of the Lamb of God, Christ, and of the sharp and dreadful pains which he suffered, not only from men, but from God too, and from the fire of his sore displeasure against sinners, whose place and person Christ sustained in his sufferings.

Unleavened bread; partly, as a monument of their speedy departure out of Egypt, which gave them not time to leaven their bread, Exo_12:34, which is the reason alleged for it, Deu_16:3; partly, to teach us how men should be qualified that come to the sacrament, they should be purged from error, and pride, and malice, and hypocrisy, which are called and compared to leaven, Mat_16:6,11 Lu 12:1 1Co_5:8; and partly, to signify the singular purity of Christ from all kind of spiritual leaven.

And with bitter herbs; both to remind them of their hard service and bitter usage in Egypt, Exo_1:14, from which God delivered them, Deu_16:3; and to prefigure the further crosses and troubles which they were to expect between their going out of Egypt and coming to Canaan. Or, with bitteresses, i.e. with great bitterness, or with grief of heart, that together with faith in God and in Christ, and hope and joy for their approaching deliverance, they might exercise bitter and hearty repentance for their idolatries, and other sinful practices whereof they were guilty in Egypt. And this instructs us as well as them of the absolute necessity of true and bitter repentance in all those that would profitably feed upon Christ our Passover.

Eat not of it raw, i.e. not thoroughly roasted, for such we also say is raw and so the Hebrew word na is understood by the Jewish and other doctors. It signified that Christ should suffer, as well as save, to the uttermost, all that was done for our sins.

The purtenance; Heb. the inwards , which were to be taken and washed, and then to be roasted together with the rest. So do here except the fat, and caul, and kidneys which were reserved by God for himself, 2Ch_35:12,4. But that exception was not made till after this time, and it seems not certain that that exception extended to the paschal lamb. These and the heads and legs are here mentioned, not to exclude other parts, but because they are not commonly roasted; but God would have the whole lamb roasted and eaten, to signify that we must have either nothing of Christ, or the whole Christ, and all his benefits, his Spirit to sanctify and rule us, as well as his blood to save us.

Exodus 12:10

That which either was not usually eaten, or was more than all of you could conveniently eat, ye shall burn with fire; to prevent either,

1. The superstitious use of the relics of that lamb by the Israelites, who thereby had received a greater benefit than they did afterwards by the brazen serpent, which upon that account they worshipped; or,

2. The profane abuse of that which had been consecrated to God's service. Compare Exo_29:34.

Exodus 12:11

Thus shall ye eat it, to wit, for this time, because their circumstances required it, that they being suddenly to take a great journey, might be in a traveller's habit. But that these, and some other circumstances now enjoined and used, were only temporary, and not perpetual nor obligatory, sufficiently appears from the practice not only of the Jews in following ages, but also of Christ and of his apostles. And in like manner there are some institutions in the New Testament which did only oblige that age, and not all that follow them, as Act_15:28,29.

With your loins girded, like travellers and persons undertaking some difficult service; for such used to gird up their garments, which in those parts were long and troublesome. See 2Ki_4:29 9:1 Luk_12:35.

Shoes on your feet; a badge,

1. Of their readiness for their journey, Isa_5:27 Act_12:8.
2. Of their freedom; for slaves, such as the Israelites now were in Egypt, used to go barefooted.
3. Of joy, as on the contrary going barefoot was a badge of mourning, 2Sa_15:30. Your staff in your hand, like persons upon the point of departing, which was a very comfortable circumstance.

In haste; for so the word signifies, Deu_16:3 Isa_52:12. It is the Lord's passover: this lamb, or your eating of it, is the Lord's passover, i.e. it is a sign of God's passing over you and your houses, when he comes to destroy the Egyptians on every side of you, Exo_12:13,23. It is a metonymy usual in sacramental speeches, as Gen_17:10 Mat_26:26-28.

Exodus 12:12

I will execute judgment; either,

1. By exposing them to shame and contempt, as vain and impotent gods that could not save their worshippers. But that appeared before. Or,

2. By destroying those beasts which they worshipped; and it is not unlikely but those particular beasts, which were their chief idols, as Apis, Mnevis, &c., were first-born, and therefore perished in this plague. Or,

3. By over-throwing their idols, as he afterwards did Dagon. And so some Hebrew writer tells us, that this very night all their idols were broken and thrown down. And there are some footsteps hereof even in heathen authors; of whom some tell us that most of the temples of Egypt at one time fell down by an earthquake; and others affirm, that the Egyptian gods, for fear of one Typho, (by whom it is apparent they meant Moses,) did hide themselves for a season, &c.

Exodus 12:13

A token, both to you, as he now said, a sign and a pledge to confirm your faith in the expectation of the promised deliverance; and to the angel, that he may know and pass over your houses, as the following words intimate. See Poole on "Exo_12:7". This is spoken of God after the manner of men; the sense is, If I find that you keep the condition which I require, you may expect the privilege which I have promised you; otherwise not.

Exodus 12:14

For a memorial, or monument, both of this deliverance from Egypt, and moreover of your redemption by Christ, of which that is a type, as even the ancient Jews understood it, who also noted that Israel was to be redeemed in the days of the Messias upon the same day on which they were delivered from Egypt, to wit, upon the fifteenth day of the month of Nisan. Upon which day our blessed Lord was crucified for the redemption of his people. You shall observe it for a solemn feast or festival time.

For ever, i.e. so long as your state and church continues, or till the coming of the Messias. This word doth not always signify eternity, but any long time, as Pro_29:14 Dan_3:9, and oft elsewhere.

Exodus 12:15

Seven days, besides and after the day of eating the passover, which was a distinct feast, and no part of the feast of unleavened bread, shall ye eat unleavened bread, to remind them of their departure out of Egypt, which was so sudden that they had not leisure to leaven their dough. See Poole on "Exo_12:8".

That soul shall be cut off, either by excommunication, or by death to be inflicted by the magistrate, and, in case of his neglect, by God himself. Nor let any one think that this was too severe a punishment for what may seem no great offence. For this was indeed a very great crime, being a manifest contempt of God, and a rebellion against God's authority and express command, which surely deserves as severe a punishment as is inflicted upon rebels against their prince, especially considering that the Israelites were the people and subjects of God in a peculiar manner. It was also a tacit renunciation of their religion, and of the covenant of God with them, and of their interest both in that past deliverance out of Egypt, and in the future deliverance by the Messias. See Poole on "Gen_17:14".

Exodus 12:16

An holy convocation; a solemn day for the people to assemble together, and to attend upon the public worship and service of God in hearing his word, prayers, praises, and sacrifices.

And in the seventh day, because then Pharaoh and his host were drowned in the sea. As on the first day the first-born were killed; so their deliverance was begun on the first, and completed on the seventh day, and therefore those days deserved a special character of honour. And indeed that there were seven days between those two miracles, the Jews unanimously affirm, and it seems probable from the account of their journeys.

No manner of work, i.e. of servile work, Lev_23:7.

Save that which every man must eat: herein, as many think, these days were inferior to the sabbath, in which that was forbidden. But of this See Poole on "Exo_16:23". See Poole on Exo_35:3.

Exodus 12:17

Your armies, so called, not from their military force or courage, but from their numbers, and the order and manner in which they came forth. See Exo_13:18.

Exodus 12:18

Until the one and twentieth day, inclusively. For otherwise they were obliged to eat unleavened bread eight days, viz. on the day of the passover, Exo_12:8, and seven days after, which is strictly and properly called the feast of unleavened bread, because in them they were tied to that ceremony only, except the two days of a holy convocation.

Exodus 12:19

A stranger, to wit, a proselyte; for strangers unconverted to the Jewish religion were not obliged nor admitted to the celebration of the passover or feast of unleavened bread. Though I see no inconvenience, if all strangers, though heathens, were forbidden to have or use any unleavened bread at that time, lest the Jews who conversed with them might be tempted to desire or partake of it with them.

In the land, to wit, of Canaan, which I have promised to you, and to which I am now leading you, which was so well known to all of them, that it was needless to express it in this place.

Exodus 12:22

A bunch of hyssop; so the Hebrew word is rightly rendered, as appears from Heb_9:19.

The door of his house, i.e. of the house wherein he did eat the passover, which ofttimes was his neighbour's house: see Exo_12:4.

Until the morning; till the beginning of the morning after midnight, and after the slaughter of the Egyptians' first-born; which may reconcile those scriptures that seem to contradict one another, while some affirm they went out of Egypt by night, and others by day, for they went out in the morning very early when it was yet dark , as it is expressed in a like case, Joh_20:1.

Exodus 12:23

Will not suffer, Heb. not give him license or commission.

The destroyer, i.e. the destroying angel, which whether it were a good or bad angel is not agreed, nor is it necessary to determine.

Exodus 12:24

This thing, viz. the substance of the thing, the passover and feast of unleavened bread, though not all the rites and ceremonies, whereof divers were peculiar to the first time.

Exodus 12:25

To the land, viz. of Canaan, as Exo_12:19. For in the wilderness they kept this feast but once, and that by God's particular direction, Num_9:2.

Exodus 12:26

Or, part of Divine worship. God expects this even from the Jewish children, and much more from Christian men, that they should inquire and understand what is said or done in the public worship or service of God, and therefore not to rest in dumb signs, whereof they neither inquire nor know the meaning, or in the service of God in a language which they understand not.

Exodus 12:27

The passover was both a sacrifice, as it was offered to God, as it appears from Exo_23:18 34:25 Num_9:7,13 Deu 16:2,5; and because there was in it the shedding and sprinkling of blood, wherein the essence of a sacrifice consists, 2Ch_30:16 35:11,13; and also a sacrament, as it was received and eaten by men. The people bowed the head, in token of their thankful acknowledgment of God's favours, and of their cheerful submission to God's command and ordinance. See 2Ch_29:30.

Exodus 12:28

They killed and did eat the paschal lamb in such manner as God prescribed.

Exodus 12:29

At midnight; a great aggravation of the plague; for then darkness itself strikes men with horror, and makes any calamity more terrible; then they were. asleep and secure, and least expected such a stroke.

All the first-born, both of man and beast, whether male or female. Some extend it to all that were first-born; and so many persons might be killed in one house, as both father and mother, and several sons, which might be the first-born by several mothers, and sons' sons or daughters, &c. Others confine it to the first-born child in the family. I conceive the heads of the family are not included, for these, though they might be the firstborn children of their parents' families, yet were not, nor ever are called or accounted, the first-born of their own families, but the heads and roots of them: but for all the rest, I conceive they are all included, because all such were really first-born, and did first open their mother's womb; and all such were to be set apart unto the Lord, instead of these first-born of the Egyptians now slain, Exo_13:12,15, and therefore are in both places to be understood in the same latitude.

Exodus 12:30

Not a house, to wit, of those houses which had any first-born in them, for in divers families there might be no first-born. And such restrictions of the universal particles are frequently understood.

Exodus 12:33

They were urgent, not by force, which they durst not now use, but by earnest and importunate entreaties, Exo_11:8. This was the ground of that fable of the heathens mentioned in Tacitus, that the Jews were driven out of Egypt for their scabs; so they falsely and maliciously ascribed their own ulcers and scabs sent upon them by God to the Israelites.

Exodus 12:34

Their kneading-troughs; or, as others rightly render it, their dough lumps , or food , or lumps of paste unleavened.

Exodus 12:35

They borrowed of the Egyptians, either before this time, as they had opportunity, when their hearts were mollified by the foregoing plagues; or even at this time, when the Israelites might well take confidence to borrow, and the Egyptians would be willing to lend them, partly that they might gain their affections and prayers, and partly that they might more readily depart from them.

Jewels, wherewith they used to adorn themselves in the worship of their idols, and therefore supposed the Israelites might use them in the worship of their God. Or, vessels ; of which see on Exo_11:2.

Exodus 12:36

The Lord gave the people favour in the sight of the Egyptians, i.e. inclined their hearts to do it willingly, and not only out of fear.

So that they lent unto him; Heb. and they lent them , to wit, the jewels or vessels mentioned Exo_12:35.

They spoiled the Egyptians, to wit, of their ornaments.

Quest. Was not this unjustly done of the Israelites to borrow these jewels which they never paid again?

Answ. No,

1. Because they did nothing in this matter but by God's appointment, Exo_11:1,2; so that if there be any injustice, it must be in God, in whom there neither can be in any thing, nor is in this thing, the least blot or shadow of injustice, as well because he hath an unquestionable right in and power to dispose of all persons and things, as being the Maker, and Giver, and Lord of all; as because there was great and evident reason both why the Israelites should be recompensed for all their hard labours and sufferings, and why the Egyptians should be spoiled for their idolatry, luxury, and cruelty to the Israelites, and the great benefits which they had received from Joseph, and from the service of the Israelites.

2. Because the supreme Lord of all forbade them to restore what they borrowed, and gave them the entire right and sole propriety therein.

3. Because though there was a form and appearance of borrowing and lending, yet indeed the Israelites did not so much borrow as desire, as the Hebrew word rendered borrow Exo_12:35 signifies; and the Egyptians did not reckon these things; as lent, and to be restored, but as given, and never to be expected again; even as Pharaoh and his people rightly judged, that if the Israelites were once permitted to go out of the land with their whole families and estates, they would never return again, Exo_14:5. And in truth the Egyptians did and might esteem it a good bargain to give these things to redeem their lives, and to engage the Israelites to a speedy departure, knowing that otherwise both their persons and all their estates were in extreme hazard.

4. Because, if these jewels were properly borrowed, yet the Egyptians, by their causeless and hostile pursuit after the Israelites with intent to destroy them, did fully discharge them from all obligations to restitution, and give them a right not only to keep these goods, but to take all other which they could from the Egyptians, according to the known and approved laws of war.

Succoth; a place so called, either because there the Israelites first lodged in booths or tents, whereas before they dwelt in houses; or because there God first spread his cloud of fire over them for a covering. Psa_105:39.

Six hundred thousand, to wit, grown and strong men, and fit for war, among whom there was none feeble or sick, Psa_105:37. Thus the heathen writer Chaeremon, mentioned by Josephus, speaking of this matter, reckons up first two hundred and fifty thousand, and then three hundred and eighty thousand more.

That were men: the Hebrew word properly signifies strong and able men , fit to go on foot in battle-array; so decrepit or weak old men are not comprehended in this number.

Beside children, and women, whose presence and assistance is necessary to them. See Exo_10:24. Some say the Hebrew word taph signifies their households or families , which consist principally of women and children.

Exodus 12:38

A mixed multitude, consisting of Egyptians or other people, who went with them, either because they were their servants, or that by this means they might free themselves from the servitude which they endured under hard masters in Egypt; or because the glorious works which they had seen, had raised their esteem of God and of his people, and made them expect a share in the great felicities which they presumed would be conferred upon a people so highly honoured and beloved of such an almighty and all-sufficient God. And because their hearts were not sincere, nor their ends right, they soon repented of their choice, Num_11:4. Compare Zec_8:23.

Exodus 12:39

It was not leavened; both because leaven was forbidden to them at that time, and because the great haste required gave them not time for leavening it.

They were thrust out of Egypt; not by force, but by importunate requests, as was observed on Exo_12:33. Thus men are said to be driven to worship the sun, moon, &c., when they are persuaded to it, Deu_4:19.

Exodus 12:40

It is plain that those years are to be computed from the first promise made to Abraham, Gen_12:1,2, to the giving of the law, from Gal_3:17, where this is affirmed. And although it doth not plainly appear when that promise was made, because the Scripture mentions not Abraham's age, neither when it was made, nor when Abraham came to Haran with his father, Gen_11:31, but only when he went out of Haran, being seventy-five years old, Gen_12:4; yet a good while after it was made, and, as it may seem more than probable, thirty years afterward, it is manifest there were only four hundred years of this time to come, Gen_15:13. And many more years passed ere there was such a man as Israel or Jacob, and more ere there were any children of Israel , or of Jacob, and yet more ere they came into Egypt. How then can this be true which is here said?

Answ. 1. Some affirm that they were in Egypt four hundred and thirty years, which is sooner said than proved.

2. Some ancient Hebrew copies are said to have had more words than ours now have; for the LXX. and Samaritan interpreters after the words in Egypt , read, and in the land of Canaan . And some other copies after the word who , add, together with their fathers , or, and their fathers . And so rite difficulty vanisheth. And if it should be granted that there were some few such errors in our present copies in matters irately historical or chronological, which God might permit to be there for many wise and holy reasons, yet this is no prejudice to our faith, or to God's providence, which hath been pleased to have so special a care of those texts which concern the essentials of faith and a good life, that all copies are agreed in them.

3. These four hundred and thirty years are not by the text confined to Egypt, but may be extended to any place where they were sojourners; and the Hebrew word asher is not to be rendered which , as relating to the time of their sojourning, but who , as belonging to the persons sojourning, as our translation well renders it; and the sense is, that they were sojourners, or, which is all one, strangers , or dwellers in a land that was not theirs, as it is said Gen_15:13, for four hundred and thirty years. And the emphasis lies in the Hebrew word moshab , which is here fitly rendered sojourning ; as toshab , coming from the same root, is commonly used for a sojourner , or one that lives in a place or land which is not his, as Lev_22:10 25:35,40 Num 35:15 Psa_39:12. There is now but one difficulty remains, How the children of Israel can be said to be sojourners so long, seeing much of this time passed before they were born?

Answ . As Levi is said to pay tithes in Abraham , Heb_7:9, because he was in the loins of Abraham when Abraham paid tithes; with much more reason might the children of Israel be said to sojourn so long, because they sojourned a great part of it in their own persons, and the rest in the loins of their parents. And as oftentimes when the parents only are mentioned, the children are included or intended, as Gen_12:3, in thee , i.e. in thy seed; and Gen_13:17, I will give it (the land) unto thee , i.e. to thy seed; and Jacob is said to be brought up again out of Egypt, Gen_46:4, to wit, in his posterity; and David is oft put for his posterity, as 1Ki_12:16 Eze_34:23 37:24,25; why may not parents also be understood sometimes when the children only are mentioned? But we need not make suppositions, seeing we have examples; the persecution in Egypt, and deliverance out of it, which happened to the parents only, being attributed to their posterity, who neither felt the one, nor saw the other, Deu_26:5, &c. Compare Psa_16:6 Jud_10:11,12. And the souls of the house of Jacob , (i.e. of the children of Israel, for by house it is evident he means only children,) which came with Jacob into Egypt , are said to be threescore and ten souls , Gen_46:26,27. In which number and title Jacob himself is confessedly included. And therefore upon the very same ground, under this title of the children of Israel , we must understand Israel himself, who being the chief author and subject of this sojourning in Egypt, it were unreasonable to exclude him from the number of those sojourners. And this phrase being once extended to their immediate parent, may by a parity of reason be extended to their great grandfather Abraham, as being the first author of that famous peregrination or sojourning, which being begun in Canaan, ended in Egypt. Add to this, that the word Israel, as it is put for the people or children of Israel, is elsewhere used for the whole church of God, as Rom_9:6, and therefore may well include Abraham as the father, and, under God, the founder of it. And the title of the children of Israel might well be given to all that people, and to the family from which they descended, because they were now known by that name. And that this indeed was Moses's meaning, which is here produced, may be further gathered from hence, that otherwise Moses had contradicted himself; for by the years of the lives of Jacob, and Levi, and Kohath, and Amram, and Moses himself, which he precisely sets down, it appears that the sojourning of the children of Israel, strictly so called, in Egypt, was not above two hundred and fifteen years. And it is absurd to think that so wise and learned a man, as all acknowledge Moses to have been, should commit so gross an error, especially seeing that generation could easily have confuted him.

If this be the right translation, the four hundred and thirty years mentioned Gal_3:17 are to be taken in a latitude, for about or near so many years, as is very frequent in Scripture and other authors; else there wants one year of it, because the law was not given till about a year after their coming out of Egypt. Nor was it of any concernment to the apostle's argument there, whether it wanted a year of that number or no, as here it is. But the words may be rendered here, as Gen_7:12, in the body or strength of the day, i.e. when the day-light was full, and clear, and strong, when it was broad day-light, the Egyptians seeing and not being able to hinder them. If it be said they went out by night, Deu_16:1, that is true, in regard of their resolution, and preparation, and the beginning of their journey; but their actual marching forth was by day-light, or in the morning; nor could it be done sooner from the nature of the thing, and the time necessarily required for so great a work.

The selfsame day: this circumstance is noted to set forth the accurateness and infallibility of God's foreknowledge, and the efficacy of his providence in accomplishing all his own counsels in his own appointed time.

This which here followeth is the law or appointment of God concerning the celebration of the passover.

No stranger, or, foreigner, who is so both by nation and religion; for if he were circumcised, he might eat of it, Exo_12:44,48.

Exodus 12:44

When thou hast circumcised him; for the master had a power to circumcise such persons, Gen_17:12. And though it is probable, that by their interest in them, and a diligent instruction of them, they made them willing to receive circumcision, yet it seems they had a power to compel them to it; but then circumcision was not to them a seal of God's covenant, nor of their religion, for that must be matter of choice, but only a civil badge, or a note of that family or people into which they were politically incorporated.

Exodus 12:45

Except he submit to circumcision, as Exo_12:43. See Num_9:14.

Exodus 12:46

Partly, because they were all obliged not to go out of the house till the morning, Exo_12:22, and to leave none of it till that time, Exo_12:10; partly, lest it should be either superstitiously or profanely abused; and partly, to signify that Christ and salvation are not to be had out of God's house or church.

To take out and eat the marrow of it. This was required, partly to mind them of their hasty departure out of Egypt, wherein they had no leisure to break and empty the bones; and principally, that it might be an evident type of the Lord Jesus, in whom this was literally fulfilled, Joh_19:36. The bones were burnt with the other remainders of the lamb.

The celebration of this feast shall be to thee instead of a mark which a man makes, or a ring, or any thing else which he puts upon his hand or arm, to bring any thing to his remembrance; for such things his eye is most frequently fixed upon. Compare Son_8:6 Isa_49:16 Jer_22:24 Hag_2:23.

A memorial between thine eyes; instead of any monument or memorial, which is placed between, and therefore directly before a man's eyes, which he can scarcely overlook, and therefore must needs bring to remembrance the thing which he would not forget. Such proverbial phrases are usual in Scripture, as Deu_6:8 Pro_3:3 6:21 7:3; and are not to be understood literally, as the superstitious Jews understood them, who hence derive their custom of wearing scrolls of parchment upon their foreheads, and arms, and garments, which they call phylacteries, wherein they wrote certain portions of Scripture. But they might as well have added parcels of God's law to be kept in their mouths, because it follows, that the Lord's law may be in thy mouth; from whence we may better infer that neither mouth , nor hand , nor eyes are to be properly understood, for then, it had been an improper method to fasten a parchment between their eyes, that it might be in their mouths; but figuratively, as they are commonly understood in Scripture.

Exodus 13:10

Heb. From days to days . But days in the Hebrew tongue are oft put for a complete year. Of which see Gen_4:3 Lev_25:29 Amo_4:4.

Exodus 13:11

The land of the Canaanites, under which general name all the other nations are contained, as being all the children of Canaan.

Exodus 13:12

Thou shalt set apart, i. e. separate it from the rest, resign thy right in it to God. Heb.

Cause it to pass, not through the fire, as that verb is used, Deu_18:10 2Ki_16:3; but under the rod, as it is used, and more fully expressed, Lev_27:32, which was the rite when any thing was separated and consecrated to God.

The males shall be the Lord's, devoted to him, either to be sacrificed, if it was clean, or to be otherwise destroyed, if it was unclean, as it here follows.

Exodus 13:13

The ass was an unclean creature, and therefore this rule was to be observed in all other unclean creatures, as appears,

1. Because the reason of this law is common to all such.
2. By comparing this place with Num_18:15.
3. Because the first-born of all beasts were appropriated to God; and because many of them were unclean, and so could not be sacrificed, there was no other way of offering them to God, but by redemption, or a price paid for them. And the single exception of the price of a dog in this case, Deu_23:18, doth sufficiently intimate that the price of all other unclean creatures was allowed and required. The ass alone is here named for all the rest, because this creature was most common, and most useful, and yet was not to be spared; whence it was easy to infer, that this course was much rather to be observed in other creatures which were of less use.

Thou shalt break his neck; or, cut off his neck, or head, as the word is used, Deu_21:4 Isa_66:3; because being consecrated. to God, it was not to be applied to any profane or common use.

Exodus 13:14

Which is added to teach parents in all succeeding ages, that it is their duty to instruct their children in the word and works of God, and in the nature and reasons of every particular kind or part of God's worship and service. See Deu_15:5 Psa_66:4 Hos_2:14.

Exodus 13:16

For frontlets; instead of frontlets. The sense is, This practice shall make your deliverance from Egypt as fresh and evident to you, and to your children, as any thing which you see hanged or written upon one another's foreheads. See Eze_9:4. It seems strange to me, that they that understand the sign on the hand , and the memorial between the eyes , Exo_13:9, metaphorically, should understand the frontlets between the eyes in this place properly, seeing the phrase is perfectly the same; only here is a more particular allusion to the custom of the Egyptians, which used to wear some devices upon their foreheads, which probably they called totaphoth , which were memorials of their idols, or of something relating to them. And therefore it seems unlikely that he should here prescribe the use of the same things to the Jews; and the more probable meaning of the phrase is only this, that this practice would be as effectual and useful a remembrancer of this mighty and glorious work of God in bringing them out of Egypt, as those contrivances were to the Egyptians of their idols.

Exodus 13:17

The Philistines, a fierce and warlike people, whereof they had sad and late experience, 1Ch_7:21.

That was near; there being this way but a few days' journey between Egypt and Canaan. Peradventure: God speaks after the manner of men, for nothing was unknown nor uncertain to him. Though the Hebrew particle pen doth not always imply doubting, but oftentimes only signifies lest , as Gen_3:3 38:23 Num_20:18.

When they see war; which they were likely to do, because the war would probably be long and hot, and their bodies were much weakened, and their spirits and courage broken, by a tedious and grievous bondage; and therefore it was fit that before they were called to such sharp conflicts, they should be hardened by the labours of a long and troublesome journey, and their faith should be strengthened by further experience of God's power, and faithfulness, and goodness, and by the glorious appearance of God at Mount Sinai, and those commands, promises, and encouragements there given them. But though this which is here mentioned was one, yet it was not the only reason of his counsel, but there were other causes of it; the Egyptians were to be drowned in the sea, the Israelites to be further tried, Deu_8:2 and full measure to be allowed to the iniquity of the Amorites. And they return to Egypt ; as afterwards they attempted to do, Num 15, upon a like occasion.

Exodus 13:18

Or, armed , or girt with swords and belts about the fifth rib, as the Hebrew word may imply. But it doth not appear how or whence they should get their arms, nor how the Egyptians would permit so numerous a people to have and to keep arms, especially when they had a long time oppressed and exasperated them, and made them desperate. It is true, some few of them might procure arms, but this word is here used concerning the whole body of them. Others render it by fives , five and five in a rank, that is, by a usual synecdoche, in military order, not doubtfully and fearfully, but confidently and courageously; not confusedly, as men that steal or run away, but in good order, so as one might not hinder another. Which interpretation is strengthened by comparing Jos_1:14. It may be rendered girt , to wit, about the fifth rib, as the word implies, the place where men used to gird their garments, this being the usual posture for travellers: he implies that they went out resolved upon and prepared for their journey.

Exodus 13:19

The bones of Joseph, and the other patriarchs, as appears from Act_7:16. The oath was taken only by the parents, but because the matter of it was not personal, and of particular concernment to them, but common to them and their children, therefore it obliged both the parents and their children, as Moses here signifieth.

Exodus 13:21

The Lord, the Son of God, whose presence and conduct the Israelites had in the wilderness, as appears from 1Co_10:4,9; compare Heb_11:26; who is sometimes called the Angel of the Lord , Exo_14:19, because he was and was to be his Father's Angel or Messenger, sent by God unto men to ratify his covenant with them; whence he is called the Angel of the covenant , Mal_3:1, as he is upon another account called the Angel of his presence , Isa_63:9.

Went before them, not by local motion, but by his gracious and powerful operations for and about them. The pillar was but one, Num_9:15,16, having two different appearances and uses, of a cloud by day, to defend them from the heat, Psa_105:39, which in those parts was excessive; and of a fire by night, to illuminate them. It was a cloud erected towards heaven, like a pillar upwards; but downwards flat and broad, spread over the body of the people, and afterwards more eminently over the tabernacle.

To lead them the way, which was altogether necessary in those vast and pathless deserts, Num_10:33 Deu_1:33.

Exodus 13:22

Whilst they continued in the wilderness, and had need of such direction.

Exodus 14:1 EXODUS CHAPTER 14

God commandeth the Israelites to encamp at Pi-hahiroth, Exo_14:1,2; the reason why, Exo_14:3,4. Pharaoh and his servants repent for letting the people go, Exo_14:5; pursue and overtake the Israelites, Exo_14:8,9. The Israelites are afraid, Exo_14:10; and murmur against Moses, Exo_14:11,12. Moses encourages the people with a promise of deliverance, Exo_14:13,14. God encouraging Moses, Exo_14:15, bids the people go forward, Exo_14:16. God defends the Israelites by the pillar of cloud, Exo_14:19,20. Moses dividing the sea, Exo_14:21, the Israelites pass over on dry ground, Exo_14:22. The Egyptians with all their forces pursue them into the sea, Exo_14:23. God commands Moses to cause the waters to return on the Egyptians, Exo_14:26. The waters return, Exo_14:27. The Egyptians drowned, 14:28. Israel's safety, Exo_14:29,30, and faith, Exo_14:31.

Or rather, had spoken, to wit, before they came to Succoth, Exo_12:37. For what was there briefly and generally expressed, is here more largely and particularly declared, together with the occasion of it, which was God's command.

Exodus 14:2

Pi-hahiroth, Heb. the month of Hiroth, i.e. the entrance or straits of Hiroth, two great mountains, between which they marched, and were enclosed on both sides.

Migdol, a city in Egypt, Jer_44:1, wherein it is thought there was a garrison.

Baal-zephon, another place of note, situated in a high place, and having a fair and large prospect, and possibly a garrison too.

Exodus 14:3

There are enclosed with mountains, and garrisons, and deserts.

Exodus 14:4

I will be honoured, by the manifestation of my power and justice. I will be honoured, by the manifestation of my power and justice.

Exodus 14:5

That the people fled; did not only depart for three days to sacrifice at Horeb, as Moses pretended, but designed an escape and flight, as appeared by their speedy march, and other circumstances.

Quest. How. could he use or carry his chariots, when all his horses were killed by that plague? Exo_9:6.

Answ. That plague slew only the horses which were in the field, Exo_9:3, not those kept in houses, as the chariot-horses generally were, and now are.

All the chariots, i.e. a great number; all that could be got together in haste, which the present service required.

Over every one of them; over the men that fought out of every chariot. Or, over all of them ; the command of all these chariots being distributed to several captains or commanders.

Exodus 14:8

2. Their own, not with hands hanging down, a posture betraying weakness and fainting, fear and shame, Heb_12:12, but with hands lifted up; with courage and confidence, not like fugitives, but like valiant and victorious soldiers, openly, boldly, resolvedly; as men are said to sin with a high hand , Num_15:30, that sin in such a manner.

Which is not strange; these being now a people of low spirits, depressed by long and grievous servitude; being also generally unarmed, wearied with their journey, and their fears aggravated by the presence and outcries of their wives and children. They cried out, partly by petition, and partly by complaint and expostulation. Exodus 14:13

Stand still; Heb. make yourselves to stand ; let not and your hearts fail and sink, or stagger through unbelief, but with quiet minds look up to God. It notes the frame of their minds, not the posture of their bodies. Whom ye have seen ; or, as ye have seen them , to wit, alive and armed, ready to devour you; for otherwise they did see them dead, and disarmed, Exo_14:30.

Exodus 14:14

Ye shall contribute nothing to the victory, neither by your words nor by your deeds; for this Hebrew word signifies a cessation not only from speech, but from action too, as 2Sa_19:11 Psa_83:1 Isa_42:14,15. Exodus 14:19

Not changing his place, for he was the omnipresent God, Exo_14:15; but his operation, from leading the Israelites forward in their way, to the protecting of them from their pursuers.

Exodus 14:20

It was a cloud and darkness to the Egyptians, to whom it brought their former horrible darkness to mind, and did both exceedingly affright them, and altogether hinder them from motion or action, as that also did for three days.

But it gave light by night to the Israelites, as the opposition showeth.

Exodus 14:21

A strong east wind; a proper instrument both to divide that sea, which lay north and south, and to dry and harden the mud at the bottom of the sea, that the Israelites might walk upon it. See Gen_8:13 Exo_15:8. Yet the wind could never have done so great a work, especially not so speedily, if there had not been a higher, even a Divine hand to manage and improve it.

The waters were divided, so largely, that a great number of the Israelites might march in one rank, and the whole number might go a good way in it in the time here mentioned.

Exodus 14:22

This was about midnight, as may be gathered from Exo_14:24.

The waters were a wall, both for height, and for their defence.

Exodus 14:23

Exodus 14:24

The night was anciently divided, not by hours, as now it is, but by watches, which sometimes were accounted four, and sometimes but three; howsoever the last of them was called the morning watch. Then when they hoped for most advantage in the pursuit, they met with their greatest disaster.

The Lord; called the Angel of God , Exo_14:19. By which promiscuous use of these titles it sufficiently appears that this was no ordinary angel, but the Son of God.

The Lord looked with an eye of indignation and vengeance, (as that phrase is used, Job_40:12 see also Amo_9:4), and troubled them with most terrible and prodigious winds, and rains, and lightnings, and both claps and bolts of thunder, as may be gathered from Exo_15:10 Psa_77:18,19; and, as some ancient historians relate, with terrors also in their minds, &c.

Exodus 14:25

Took off their chariot wheels; either burning them with lightning, or tearing them in pieces with thunder-bolts, or loosening them, and making them to fall off.

That they drave them heavily; Heb. and he made him , or them , the singular number for the plural, i.e. the Egyptians, or their chariots, to go heavily , hardly and slowly, either for want of wheels, or for breaches in them, or because the rain had softened the bottom of the sea, or because the lightnings and thunders affrighted and dispirited their horses.

For the Lord fighteth for them. Prodigious stupidity! They did not understand and consider this, though it was notorious, to them especially, by many great and fresh instances, till it was too late to prevent it; therein being a type of most sinners, who will not be convinced, nor repent, till they be past all benefit by it.

Exodus 14:27

The sea returned to his strength; to its natural and its ordinary course and motion, which is swift and strong, which had been hitherto restrained by a stronger hand, and rendered in a manner impotent and weak. But now, Samson-like, when its bonds are broken, it puts forth its former and natural strength. But indeed this word may belong to the morning, and so a learned man translates the place, and that very agreeably to the use and order of the Hebrew words, The sea returned, to wit, to its course, when the morning appeared according to, or in his strength, i.e. when it was full and clear morning; as we oft read of the strength of the day. See Gen_7:13 Job_21:23. So the strength of the morning is here opposed to the morning watch.

Against it; against the sea, for which way soever they fled the waters met them, and fought against them.

Exodus 14:28

After them, i.e. after the children of Israel. Note here, the relative is put without an antecedent before it; the antecedent being to be understood and gathered out of the following verse, or out of the course of the story. An observation which is very useful for the understanding of many scriptures. See Poole "Gen_3:1".

Exodus 14:29

Exodus 14:30

Which was done either,

1. By the natural power of the sea, which casteth up its dead bodies after a certain time; till which time God caused the Israelites to abide near the sea, that they might see this for their comfort. Or,

2. By the mighty power of God, which brought them, and their arms too, as many probably conceive, to shore before the usual time.

Quest. How could the Israelites, both they and their cattle, in so little time get over that great sea?

Ans. 1. The Hebrew and some other interpreters deny that they went over, and tell us, they only went into the sea, and fetched a compass in it, that they might allure the Egyptians to follow them, and then by Moses's conduct returned to the Egyptian shore again. The principal ground of which opinion is this, That as they went into the sea out of the wilderness of Etham, Exo_13:20, so they came again out of the sea into the wilderness of Etham, Num_33:8. But the sameness of the name doth not prove that it is the same place, nothing being more frequent in Scripture, than for divers places to be called by one and the same name. And the Israelites might possibly give the name of Etham to this desert on the Arabian side of the Red Sea, either for its great resemblance to that desert so called on the Egyptian side; or to intimate, that God by dividing the sea, had made that and this to be one continued desert. Or the name of Etham might be common to all that desert at the end of the Red Sea, and on both sides of it.

Ans. 2. They might all conveniently pass over the sea to the Arabian shore in the time allowed for it, either by the mighty power of God, which could easily make both men and beasts to do it in much less than ordinary time, or even by the course of nature; for that part of the sea was not above eight or nine miles over, as geographers and others affirm. And the time allotted for their passage seems to be much more than interpreters have assigned for it. For the Egyptians and Israelites were divided one from another by the cloudy pillar all the night, Exo_14:20, and a strong east wind blew all that night, Exo_14:21. The next morning, as I apprehend it, the cloud still keeping between them, and possibly covering the Egyptians with gross and horrible darkness, which hindered their march, the whole body of the Israelites, and their cattle too, are drawn by Moses's direction near the shore, and, it may be, the cattle were put into the sea, all which might well take up most of that day; then towards the evening they enter into the sea, and so proceed; and the cloud withdrawing further from the Egyptians, and following the Israelites, the Egyptians pursue after them, and, as it is very probable from the nature and reason of the thing, stand debating some considerable time, when they came to the shore, whether they should venture to follow them into the sea or no. At last the worst counsel prevails, as it generally happens when a people are under a Divine infatuation, and into the sea they go; and by the beginning of the morning watch they draw near the Israelites, when God seasonably appears for Israel's succour, and puts a stop to the march of the Egyptians. So the morning watch, mentioned Exo_14:24, I take to be, not the morning watch of that night, mentioned Exo_14:20,21, (for all that night, and therefore the morning watch of that night, which was a third, or at least a fourth part of it, was now past and gone,) but the next morning watch after that night and the succeeding day; which seems much more reasonable, than to shrink up the march, first of the Israelites, and then of the Egyptians, into about three hours' time, which is the time between the midnight and the morning watch. Nor is there any thing in the text which in the least contradicts this opinion, but only that this day's interval and work is not mentioned in this story; whereas such omissions are frequent in Scripture relations, in which the substance only is mentioned, and many circumstances omitted, whereof we have seen some instances already, and shall meet with many more hereafter.

Exodus 15:25

The waters were made sweet, not so much by any virtue in that tree, as by the power of God, who used this rather as a sign to the Israelites, than as an instrument to himself in this work.

There he made for them a statute: God, or Moses in God's name, and by his order, constituted and published to them a statute. Which seems to be understood not of any, particular statute or law, as that concerning the sabbath, or their duty to their parents, or the like; for the specifying of their duties is reserved to another time and place; but of a general law or rule formerly given, and now solemnly renewed by Moses at God's command, like that given to Abraham their father, Gen_17:1, Walk before me, and be perfect . God having thus far performed his part of that covenant made with Abraham and his seed, to bring them out of Egypt towards Canaan, tells them that he expects and requires of them their observance of the condition of that covenant, and gives them this indefinite and universal law or precept, that they should obey and fulfil all the commands which God had already laid upon them or their parents, and which he should hereafter reveal to them. This sense may be gathered out of the following verse, wherein he explains what he meant by this statute, even all God's statutes or commandments , which if they would keep, he engageth himself to preserve and deliver them. So it is only a change of the number, the singular, statute, being put for the plural, statutes, which is a figure very frequently used both in Scripture and in other authors. God having now eased them of the hard and iron yoke of the Egyptians, puts his sweet and easy yoke upon them; and having undertaken to be their King, and Protector, and Captain, he claims their subjection to himself, and to his laws or statutes.

He proved them, or, tried them , i.e. the Israelites. There he tried both their faith by the difficulty now mentioned, viz. their want of water, and their future obedience by this general command, which he is about to branch forth into divers particulars.

Exodus 15:26

None of these diseases upon thee, nor other evils or plagues; but, on the contrary, I will bless thee with all manner of blessings. Under one branch or part of the blessings of God's covenant, he includes all the rest by a very common synecdoche.

That healeth thee; or, thy physician , for all thy maladies both of soul and body.

Exodus 15:27

Palm trees were both pleasant for their shade, and refreshing for their sweet fruit. Thus the Israelites are obliged and encouraged to the obedience commanded, by being put into better circumstances than they were under in their last station.

Exodus 16:1 EXODUS CHAPTER 16

The children of Israel sojourn in the wilderness of Sin, Exo_16:1; murmur against Moses, Exo_16:2,3. God promises to supply their wants with bread from heaven, Exo_16:4; and directs about preparing this bread, Exo_16:5. Moses reproves the people for murmuring, Exo_16:7,8; appoints them to come before the Lord, Exo_16:9. God's glory appeareth in the cloud, Exo_16:10. He sendeth quails, Exo_16:13, and manna, Exo_16:14,15. Every one gather a quantity, Exo_16:16-18. The command about keeping it, Exo_16:19, is disobeyed, Exo_16:20. The time of gathering, Exo_16:21. Their increasing the quantity on the sixth day, Exo_16:22-24. The command concerning the sabbath, Exo_16:25,26, disobeyed, Exo_16:27; for which God is angry, Exo_16:28. Moses' s counsel, Exo_16:29. They rest, Exo_16:30. The name of the bread, Exo_16:31. The command concerning the preservation of the manna, Exo_16:32,33. The time of the manna's continuance, Exo_16:35.

BC 1491

They came not immediately to the wilderness of Sin; for there is another stage of theirs by the Red Sea, mentioned Num_33:10, (in which chapter Moses designed exactly to set down all their stations,) but omitted here, because nothing remarkable happened in it; and Moses in this place designed to record only the memorable passages. The wilderness of Sin was a great wilderness between the Red Sea and Mount Sinai, but differing from that Zin mentioned Num_20:1.

Exodus 16:2

For want of meat, as appears from the following verse, their provisions brought out of Egypt being now spent.

Exodus 16:3

By the hand of the Lord; by any of those plagues wherewith God destroyed the Egyptians.

When we did eat bread to the full; which is not probable; but they amplify their former mercies, that they might aggravate their present calamity, as the manner of impatient and ungodly men is.

Quest. What danger was there of dying with hunger, seeing they had their flocks and herds which they brought out of Egypt?

Answ. 1. There was no great danger of it, but they use aggravating expressions, as discontented persons use to do.

2. Their flocks and herds were not so numerous as to suffice them for above a month's provision, if they had all been slain and eaten, as it is implied Num_11:21,22. So there was some danger of it, though neither immediate nor great.

3. They were it seems resolved to spare these, partly for increase, and for their future subsistence; and partly for sacrifice, as not knowing how many of them they should be required to offer. See Exo_10:26.

Exodus 16:4

Bread, i.e. manna , which shall serve them instead of bread, Num_11:8, and was a more delicate and pleasant kind of bread, called therefore the bread of angels , Psa_78:24,25.

From heaven; the air, oft called heaven, in which manna is produced.

Every day, Heb. the thing , i.e. the provision of a day in his day , i.e. every day, as much as was sufficient for a man's sustenance that day. That I may prove them ; either,

1. Whether by my giving them such miraculous and excellent provision they will be won to love and obey me. Or,

2. Whether by raining it down upon them for several days together they will learn to trust me for the following days, and therefore gather no more than that day required.

Exodus 16:5

Prepare; lay up, grind, bake, or seethe. See Exo_16:23. and Num_11:8.

Exodus 16:6

And not by your our own authority or counsel, as you suggest.

Exodus 16:7

The glory of the Lord; either this glorious work of God in giving manna; or rather the glorious appearance of God in the cloud, as is evident from Exo_16:10.

Exodus 16:8

No text from Poole on this verse.

Exodus 16:9

Before the Lord; either before the cloudy pillar, where God was especially present; or in the place of God's worship. For though the great tabernacle was not yet built, yet it seems from Exo_33:7 there was a little tabernacle. For as the solemn, and public, and sabbath worship was among them before the tabernacle was built, so it was necessary. there should be some place where they did assemble together, and perform that worship which was proper to those times, and there God was supposed to be present in a peculiar manner.

Exodus 16:10

An extraordinary brightness suddenly appearing in the pillar of cloud. See Lev_9:6,23.

Exodus 16:11

The Lord spake, or, had spoken , to wit, before, by comparing this with Exo_16:7.

Exodus 16:12

God chooseth the proper time for each kind of provision; the evening for the quails, which being brought from remote parts, by their day's flight, about evening came thither; and the morning for manna, which usually falls at that time.

Exodus 16:13

Heb. There was a bed of dew , wherewith the manna was covered, Rev_16:14. To this the hidden manna , Rev_2:17, alludes.

Exodus 16:14

When the dew was gone up, to wit, into the air; or, was vanished , as the word ascend is used Jer_48:15.

Exodus 16:15

It is manna; or, What is this ? which best suits with the following reason, for they wist not what it was. Man signifies what in the Egyptian tongue; and it is not strange that the Israelites use one of their words, being newly come out of their land. Hence this is called manna; but it is of a different nature from the ordinary manna, which now we use only as physic for purging; whereas this manna was food, and nourishing, being prepared by the great God for this use.

Exodus 16:16

According to his eating, i.e. as much as is sufficient for his eating.

An omer contains the tenth part of an ephah , and therefore was a very liberal allowance, and such as might abundantly suffice a man of greatest strength and stomach. It might seem too much, but it must be remembered that it was a very light meat, and easy of digestion; nor was every one obliged to eat up his whole portion, as we shall see.

Exodus 16:17

Either,

1. According as their families were more or less numerous. Or rather,

2. As the gatherers were more or less strong and active in gathering it.

Exodus 16:18

All that was gathered by the members of one family was put into a heap, and then distributed to each person an omer, neither more nor less; to which St. Paul alludes, 2Co_8:13, &c.

Exodus 16:19

viz. For the provision of the next day, as distrusting God's care and goodness in giving them more. Not that every one was bound to eat all of it, which certainly many of their stomachs could not bear; but that they were to dissolve it, or but it, as they did the remains of some sacrifices, Exo_12:10 29:34, or consume it some other way.

Exodus 16:20

Some of them left of it; either distrusting God's providence for their future provisions; or out of curiosity to learn the nature of this manna, and what they might do when occasion required. It stank , not so much from its own nature, which was pure and durable, as from God's judgment.

Exodus 16:21

To wit, as much of it as was left upon the ground. This was not from its own nature, which was so solid that it could endure the fire, and was bruised by a pestle; but from God's wise providence, partly, that it might not be corrupted or trodden under foot, or otherwise abused, and so despised; partly, that it might not remain there to tempt any of them to gather more of it than they should; and partly, that all their stock of provision being wasted, they might be obliged to the more entire dependence upon God. And this is here mentioned as a reason why they gathered it in the morning.

Exodus 16:22

Considering God's present providence in causing it to fall in double proportion, and remembering that the next day was the sabbath day, which God had blessed and sanctified to his own immediate service, Gen_2:3, and therefore was not to be employed in servile works, such as the gathering of manna was, they rightly concluded that God's commands, delivered Exo_16:16,19, reached only to ordinary days, and must in all reason give place to the more ancient and necessary law of the sabbath.

Either to acquaint him with this increase of the miracle, or to take his direction for their practice, because they found two commands seemingly clashing together, and therefore needed and desired his advice.

Exodus 16:23

This is that which the Lord hath said; either to Moses by inspiration, or to the former patriarchs upon like occasions: this practice is agreeable to the former word and law of God concerning the sabbath, as it follow.

Bake and seethe: the manna was dressed these two ways, Num_11:8. The words to-day are not in the original, and possibly are better left out than taken in; or if they be taken in, they do not seem to me, as they do to many others, to prove that they were commanded to bake or seethe on the sixth day all that they were to eat both that day and upon the following sabbath, or that they were forbidden to bake or seethe it upon the sabbath day; for there is not a word here to that purpose; and it is apparent from the whole context, that the rest of the sabbath is not opposed to their baking or seething of it, but to their going out into the field to gather it. Nay, the contrary is here implied, because after they had baken and sodden what they intended to bake or seethe, part of the manna did, as is here expressly added, remain over, and was reserved for the sabbath day's provision, and that unbaken and unsodden, otherwise it would not have been noted as a miraculous thing, that it did not stink nor breed worms, Exo_16:24.

Lay up until the morning: what you do not eat this day, keep for the next day's provision.

Exodus 16:24

As there was before, Exo_16:20. So great a difference there is between the doing of a thing upon God's command, and with his blessing, and the doing of the same thing against his will, and with his curse.

Exodus 16:25

These words were spoken upon the morning of the sabbath day, as appears from the foregoing verse.

A sabbath unto the Lord, i.e. wholly consecrated to his service, and therefore not to be employed in servile works.

Exodus 16:26

Exodus 16:27

Exodus 16:28

The Lord spoke unto Moses, that he might speak it to the people. He signifies that this was an old disease in them, to disobey God's precepts, and to pollute his sabbaths.

Exodus 16:29

Hath given you the sabbath; hath given to you, and to your fathers, that great command and privilege of the sabbath. Let no man go out of his place, out of his house or tent, into the field to gather manna, as appears from the occasion and reason of the law here before mentioned. For otherwise they might and ought to go out of their houses to the public assemblies, as appears from Lev_23:3 Act_15:21; and to lead their cattle to watering, Luk_13:15; or to help them out of a pit, Mat_12:11; and a sabbath day's journey was permitted, Act_1:12.

Exodus 16:30

Or ceased, to wit, from gathering manna, by comparing this with Exo_16:27, and consequently from all works of that nature.

Exodus 16:31

It was like coriander seed, in shape and figure, but not in colour, for that is dark-coloured, but this white, as it follows here, like bdellium, &c., Num_11:7.

The taste of it, when it was raw; but when it was drest it was like fresh oil, Num_11:8.

Exodus 16:32

No text from Poole on this verse.

Exodus 16:33

In the tabernacle, and by the ark, when they shall be built, and at present in the place where you meet for the solemn worship of God.

Exodus 16:34

i.e. Before the ark, which is called the ark of the testimony , Exo_25:16; and here, by way of abbreviation, the testimony, or witness , because in it were the tables of the covenant, or the law of God, which was a testimony of God's authority and will, and of man's subjection and duty, or of the covenant made between God and man. See Deu_10:5 31:26.

Quest. How could this be laid up before the ark, when the ark was not yet built?

Ans. This text only tells us that Aaron did lay it up, but it doth not determine the time, nor affirm that it was done at this instant, but rather intimates the contrary, and that it was done afterwards when the testimony, i.e. the ark, was built. As the next verse also speaks of what was done in the following forty years.

Exodus 16:35

This Moses might well write; for though he did not go into Canaan, yet he came to the borders of Canaan. And though he did not see the cessation of the manna , yet he sufficiently knew both from the nature of the thing, and by revelation from God, that it would forthwith cease upon their entrance into Canaan.

Exodus 17:1 EXODUS CHAPTER 17

The children of Israel come to Rephidim; there is no water, therefore murmur against Moses, Exo_17:1-3. Moses crieth to the Lord, Exo_17:4. The Lord sendeth Moses to Horeb; he smiteth the rock, and water cometh out, Exo_17:5,6. He names that place, and the reason of it, Exo_17:7. Amalek warreth against the Israelites, Exo_17:8. Moses appointeth Joshua to fight with him, Exo_17:9.

Joshua's success when Moses held up his hand; when let down, Amalek prevailed, Exo_17:11-13. Moses buildeth an altar, and nameth it, Exo_17:15. The reason of it, Exo_17:16.

After their journeys; by divers stations, recorded Num_33:12,13, &c., but here omitted, because there was nothing extraordinary happened in them.

According to the commandment of the Lord, expressed either by word of mouth, or by the motion or rest of the cloudy pillar, Exo_13:21.

Exodus 17:2

By distrusting God's power, and providence, and faithfulness, and goodness, upon such a small occasion, by refusing to submit to God's will, and to wait upon him by humble and fervent prayers for relief, and instead thereof quarrelling with me, as if it were my fault, and murmuring against God under my name.

Exodus 17:5

Take with thee of the elders of Israel, that they may be eye-witnesses of this glorious work, and may report it to the people.

The river; either the Red Sea, for an arm of the sea is sometimes called a river; or the river Nilus.

Exodus 17:6

I will stand before thee there, in my cloudy pillar, which shall stand over that place.

Horeb and Sinai are sometimes spoken of as the same place, and sometimes as two differing places, as here, compared with Exo_19:2. The learned write, that this was one long mountain, whereof there were two eminent parts or tops, the one at a considerable distance from the other, and Horeb was the first part of it, and near Rephidim; and Sinai the more remote, to which they came afterwards.

Moses did so, i.e. smote the rock, and the waters flowed out plentifully and continually, making a river, which God caused to follow them to their several stations. See 1Co_10:4.

Exodus 17:7

viz. To protect and provide for us according to his word given to us. Will God be as good as his word, or will he not? For it is to us very doubtful.

Exodus 17:8

Then, i.e. when they were upon their march from Rephidim to Horeb, Deu_25:17,18.

The ground of the quarrel was the prosecution of the old hatred of Esau against Jacob, and the revenging of themselves and their father upon the posterity of Jacob; for which they thought this the fittest season, they being now great and potent people, Num_24:20, and Israel now weak, and unarmed, and dispirited with long servitude.

Exodus 17:9

Go out; out of the camp to meet the enemy.

I will stand on the top of the hill, both to observe thy carriage, and success or defeat, that I may govern myself accordingly, and that I may in that retirement pour out my soul unto the Lord of hosts, that he may give thee victory.

With the rod of God; by which having done so great exploits formerly, doubt not of the same Divine assistance to accompany it, and make thee victorious.

Exodus 17:10

Hur; a person of eminency both for wisdom and experience, and for place and authority, supposed to be the husband of Miriam. See Exo_24:14.

Exodus 17:11

Moses held up his hand, with the rod of God in it. This gesture, though fervent prayer was doubtless joined with it, seems not to have been the gesture of praying, which is the lifting up of both hands, but of an ensign-bearer, or of one ready to smite his enemies. Howsoever this was only a sign whereby Moses strengthened his faith, and quickened his prayers, and heightened the courage of the soldiers below, and protested that he expected victory not from the skill and prowess of his army, but from the assistance of God.

When he let down his hand, Amalek prevailed; God so dispensing his favour, that the honour of the day and victory might be wholly ascribed to the rod and power of God, not to Israel.

Exodus 17:12

Not that both hands were erected and joined together, which was not a fit posture for one holding a rod in his hand; but that Moses shifted the rod out of one hand into the other when the former was weary, and that

Aaron and Hur did each of them with both hands hold up that hand which was next to them, successively, that they also might relieve one the other.

Exodus 17:13

Either,

1. The king of the Amalekites, and his people. Or,
2. The people of the Amalekites, and those other people who were leagued with them.

Exodus 17:14

In a book; even in this book, which Moses was to write by God's inspiration and appointment. See Exo_34:27 Deu_31:9,22. In the ears of Joshua , thy successor, and the captain of my people, that he and all succeeding governors may watch all occasions to execute this command.

I will utterly put out the remembrance of Amalek, i.e. I will utterly destroy them; for a person or people dead or destroyed are soon forgotten, Psa_31:12, and the grave is called the land of forgetfulness , Psa_88:12. Or thus, Though they are now a numerous and flourishing people, and in great repute, I will make them few and inglorious, for such are little minded or remembered; for this is not to be understood absolutely of a speedy and utter extinction of them, for he supposeth their being from generation to generation , Exo_17:16, but comparatively. From under heaven ; from the face of the whole earth.

Exodus 17:15

Moses built an altar, both for the offering of sacrifices of praise unto God, and to be a monument of this victory, and of the author of it. The name of it , viz. of the altar, which he so calls metonymically, because it was the sign and monument of Jehovah-nissi ; even as circumcision is called God's covenant ,

Gen_17:13, and the lamb, the passover , Exo_12:11, and the cup, the new testament , Luk_22:20, because they were the signs of them. Or the word altar is to be repeated out of the former member, which is frequent, and the place to be is read thus,

he called the name of it the altar of Jehovah-nissi. Or the name given to it signifies only the inscription engraven upon it, which was not the single name of God, but an entire sentence, the lord my banner . By which words he takes all the praise of the victory from the Israelites, and gives it to God.

Exodus 17:16

For, or, and , as the Hebrew particle properly signifies; for these words are not a reason of the passage next preceding, but an additional sentence.

Because, or, surely , (as that particle is oft used, as Job_8:6 20:20 Psa_10:14 44:22, &c.) Heb. the hand upon the throne of the Lord , for the hand of the Lord upon his throne, which is perfectly the same thing, only the order of the words is a little varied after the manner of the Hebrew tongue. These words then are a paraphractical description of a solemn oath, by the usual posture of it, viz. the lifting up the hand , which is usually put for swearing , and in that sense is ascribed both to men, as Gen_14:22, and to God, as Deu_32:40. And this hand of God lifted up upon his throne, where his majesty doth peculiarly and gloriously dwell, signifies that God swears by himself, as is said Heb_6:13. And thus the Chaldee and Arabic interpreters understand it. Others render the place thus, Because the hand (or, his hand, the pronoun being here understood, as it frequently is in the Hebrew language, of which several instances have been given before, i.e. the hand of Amalek, which may easily be understood out of the following clause, in which Amalek is named) was against the throne of the Lord , i.e. was stretched out against God himself; for so God esteems it, because it was done against that people among whom God had placed his throne, or seat, or dwelling, according to his covenant made with them; which also was well known to the Amalekites by the relation of their progenitors, who in all probability had acquainted them with their own rights, and with Jacob's arts, whereby he robbed Esau, the father of Amalek, Gen_36:15,16, of his birthright and blessing, and consequently of the land of Canaan, to which now God was bringing them, that he might plant them there, and set up his throne among them. And the Amalekites doubtless heard, as the other neighbours also did, in what a miraculous manner God had brought them out of Egypt, and over the Red Sea. And they knew better than others, by tradition from their parents, that God had promised Canaan to them, and now they saw that he was conducting them thither, and therefore to prevent this they now commence a war against them, and against God or his throne, whose presence with and conduct over them was most manifest; which was a great aggravation of their sin. And this latter translation and interpretation seems most probable,

1. Because it exactly agrees with the Hebrew words, and the order in which they are placed.

2. It makes the coherence more clear than our translation doth, the former part of the verse containing a reason of the latter, to wit, of that severe curse and everlasting war denounced against Amalek, because they attempted by force to overthrow God's throne and people, and that with so many aggravating circumstances; of which see Deu_25:17,18.

Jethro came, not at this time, but after the delivery of the law at Mount Sinai; as it may appear,

1. Because he finds them encamped, as it here follows, at the mount of God, i.e. Sinai, whither they came not till Exo_19:2.

2. Because the laws of sacrifices were given before his coming, as appears from Exo_18:12.

3. Because the execution of this counsel here given about the choice of magistrates, Exo_18:19, is related after the Israelites' departure from Sinai, Deu_1:7, &c. And therefore here is a transposal in this history, which is also frequent in other places of Holy Scripture.

Now I know, viz. more clearly and by certain experience; as that phrase signifies, Gen_22:12 1Ki_17:18,24. For otherwise it is more than probable that Jethro had the knowledge of the true God before this time, not only because he was the great-grandchild of Abraham, but also because of his long conversation with a person of so great knowledge, and wisdom, and piety, as Moses was.

Wherein they dealt proudly; either,

1. Their false gods, who wrought strange things in and by their servants the magicians, who contended with Moses, and proudly boasted of their skill as not a whit inferior to that of Moses, but at last were forced to yield up the cause, Exo_8:19; or rather,

2. The Egyptians, spoken of Exo_18:10, who dealt proudly, and scornfully, and tyrannically with the Israelites, but God showed himself to be above them, and above their king; though Pharaoh would not own him for his superior, Exo_5:2, but lift up his horn against God, and against his people: but the Lord brought that proud prince upon his knees, and forced him oft to confess his faults, and to become suppliant to Moses for deliverance from the plagues; and at last, when he continued incorrigible, he drowned him in the sea.

Exodus 18:12

Took a burnt-offering, i.e. gave, or offered; as that verb is used Psa_68:18, compared with Eph_4:8; also Exo_25:2. Which he did, that he might publicly testify both his embracing of the true religion, and his thankfulness to God for the great deliverance given to his people, wherein also himself and family were concerned. And he took or offered these, not immediately, or by himself, (which would have seemed a presumptuous and unwarrantable action for a stranger to undertake in the church of Israel,) but by those who were appointed to do it; in which sense David is said to have sacrificed, 2Sa_24:25, and Solomon, 1Ki_8:63, and all those who brought their offerings to the priests to offer for them.

A burnt offering and sacrifices, to wit, of thanksgiving, as is expressed Exo_24:5; for part of these the offerers, with others, did eat, Lev_7:15, whereas no man might eat of the burnt-offerings, Lev_1:9.

To eat bread, i.e. to feast together of the remainders of the sacrifices.

Before God; either before the cloudy pillar; or rather, before the altar, and in the place of public worship; for some such place undoubtedly they had, though the tabernacle was not yet built; and that was the place appointed for such feasts. See Deu_12:7 27:7 1Ch_29:21 Psa_116:17.

See Num_15:33,34 27:5,6.

Exodus 18:20

Thou alone shalt deliver and explain God's law to them, which they may apply to their particular causes and occasions, and so end their differences among themselves without giving thee any trouble.

Exodus 18:21

Able men, Heb. men of might , not for strength of body, but for greatness, resolution, courage, and constancy of mind, which is the best preservative against partiality and corruption in judgment, to which men of little minds, or narrow souls, are easily swayed by fears, or hopes, or gifts.

Such as fear God; which will restrain them from all injustice, even when they have ability and opportunity to do wrong so cunningly or powerfully that they may escape the observation and censure of men.

Men of truth, or, of faith , or faithful , such as love the truth, and diligently labour to find it out in all causes, and then pass a true and righteous sentence; not at all respecting persons, but only the truth and right of their causes; such as hate lies and slanders, and will severely rebuke and punish them. Hating covetousness: this, though included in the former, is particularly expressed, because gifts and bribes are the great corrupters of judges and judgments.

Exodus 18:23

If God approve of the course which I suggest, to whose wisdom I submit my opinion. For Jethro might well think that Moses neither would nor might make so great an alteration in the government without consulting God about it, and expecting his answer. Others render the place thus, both God will give thee his commands, i.e. thou wilt have leisure to ask and take his counsel in all emergencies, which now thou hast not,

and thou wilt be able to endure.

To their place; to their several habitations, which are called men's places, Jud_7:7 9:55 19:28,29; where their calling and business lies, from which they are now diverted and detained by fruitless and wearisome attendances.

In peace, orderly and quietly, having their minds much eased by this course, and their contentions soon ended.

Exodus 18:24

This is one evidence of that meekness for which Moses is justly magnified, that he disdained not to receive advice from one so much his inferior in wisdom, and learning, and knowledge of the things of God. And God would have this wise counsel to come from Jethro, not from Moses himself, to show how variously he distributes his gifts, and to teach all men not to think too highly of themselves, nor to despise the counsels even of their inferiors.

Moses did all that he had said, not immediately, but after he had received God's approbation, Num_11:16, and the people's consent, Deu_1:14.

Exodus 18:25

Moses chose them not solely, but together with the people, as appears from Deu_1:13.

Exodus 18:27

i.e. Moses dismissed him honourably. See Num_10:29.

Exodus 19:1 EXODUS CHAPTER 19

The people come to Sinai, Exo_19:1,2. God's proposal to them by Moses. Of the terms of the covenant, Exo_19:3-6. Moses lays before them what God had commanded, Exo_19:7. The people's acceptance of the same, Exo_19:8. God directeth Moses how to sanctify the people, Exo_19:10,11; to set bounds to the people that they touch not the mount, Exo_19:12. The punishment of those that did, Exo_19:13. Moses sanctifying the people, Exo_19:14; commands them to keep from their wives, Exo_19:15. The manner of God's appearing, Exo_19:16,18,19. God talketh with Moses, Exo_19:21-24.

Heb. Third new moon , called Sivan, including the latter part of May, and the former part of June.

The same day, Heb. in that day , to wit, when the month or new moon began, and when they departed from Rephidim, to note, that there was no station between these two. This is set down thus accurately, because it gives an account of the original of the feast of pentecost, because the giving of the law, which was three or four days after this time, was fifty days after the passover, whereof forty-six or forty-seven were past at their first coming to Sinai, reckoning from the fifteenth day of the first month, when they came out of Egypt, to this time.

Exodus 19:2

To the desert of Sinai, i.e. to that part of the desert which adjoined to Mount Sinai, as Rephidim, from whence they came, was in that part of the wilderness adjoining to Horeb, which was another part of the same mountain. See Exo_17:6. So they seem to have fetched a large compass, and to have come from one side of the mountain to the other.

Exodus 19:3

Moses went up into the mount of God, to the place where God had now fixed his cloudy pillar, and where he was about to manifest himself in a glorious manner. So it is an anticipation.

Exodus 19:4

i. e. Safely, out of the reach of danger; and strongly, against all opposition. Compare Deu_32:11 Isa_63:9 Rev_12:14.

Unto myself, into my presence, and favour, and fellowship, to be my peculiar people, to serve and worship me as your only Lord and King.

Exodus 19:5

If ye will obey my voice indeed; Heb. obeying ye will obey ; i.e. if ye will obey me sincerely, diligently, and constantly.

A peculiar treasure, highly prized and loved, and carefully kept by me, as men's treasures generally are. For all people upon earth are mine by creation and dominion, and I can dispose of them all as I please, and either choose or refuse any of them as I think fit; and therefore though I might refuse you, as well as any others, yet it is my pleasure to single you out of all the world, upon whom to confer my chiefest and peculiar blessings. Or, though all the earth be mine , by general right, yet you only are mine by special title and privilege.

Exodus 19:6

A kingdom of priests; so they are called in regard,

1. Of their exemption and separation from all the people of the world, as priests are taken out of the multitude of men.

2. Of their consecration to the worship and service of God, every subject of this kingdom being in some sort a priest to offer some kind of sacrifices to God,

3. Of their privileges, because God conferred upon them singular honour, safety, and immunity, and liberty of coming near to him, as priests among all nations have been esteemed privileged persons. An holy nation, purged from the idolatry and other abominations of the heathen world, and separated from them by a avail of partition; allied to me by a holy covenant, and consecrated to my use and service.

Exodus 19:7

No text from Poole on this verse.

Exodus 19:8

Not for God's information, but for the people's greater obligation, and to learn what answer he should return from God to them.

Exodus 19:9

I come unto thee, as to the mediator between me and them, and the interpreter of my mind to them.

In a thick cloud: Exo_19:16, and compare 1Ki_8:12 2Ch_6:1.

The words of the people; those mentioned Exo_19:8. This is here repeated, because God's answer to them now follows.

Exodus 19:10

i.e. Command them to sanctify and cleanse themselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit, and to prepare their hearts for the right receiving of my laws, and solemn entering into covenant with me. Compare Lev_11:45 Jos_3:5 7:13.

Let them wash their clothes; by which external washing, which was agreeable to that state of the church, they were taught to cleanse their inward man.

Exodus 19:11

For the third day from this time, and the fiftieth day from the passover, as was noted before, the Lord will come down in a visible and glorious manifestation of his presence.

Exodus 19:12

By this symbolical injunction God designed,

1. To restrain men's curious and bold inquiries into the things of God.
2. To possess the Israelites then present, and all succeeding generations, with the dread and reverence of the Divine Majesty, and of his holy law.
3. To prepare and inure the people to the obedience of God's commands, even when they discern not the reasons of them.
4. To make them sensible of their own impurity and infirmity, and of their absolute need of a mediator, through whom they might have access to God. See Gal_3:19.

Exodus 19:13

There shall not an hand touch it, i.e. the mountain. But,

1. This seems to be a gross tautology, for it was twice forbidden in the words next foregoing.

2. So the word hand would seem to be ascribed both to man and beast. Others therefore render it touch him, i.e. they shall look upon such an impudent transgressor of my express command as an abominable person, whom they cannot touch without defilement, and therefore he shall be put to death in such a manner as may be performed without touching him.

Whether it be beast; for though the beasts are not capable of a law, yet they might be threatened for man's caution, and punished for the fault of their owners in not keeping them at a distance from the mount.

When the trumpet soundeth long, i.e. with one continued, equal, and gentle sound, as is usual in the end of the music song, which is opposed to a rough, and loud, and unequal sound. There was no real trumpet here, but an angel made a sound like that of a trumpet.

They shall come up to the mount.

Object . This was forbidden to them, Exo_19:12.

Answ . 1. They were forbidden to come up to the mount whilst God was delivering his laws, but allowed it afterwards when that action ceased, which was signified by the long sound of the trumpet.

2. They might not come into the mount or towards the top of it, but they might come to the bottom or lower parts of it, where the bounds were set, or at least towards or near it, as the Hebrew preposition both is sometimes used. So the mount may be understood, more strictly, Exo_19:12, for an eminent part or top of it, where the thick cloud appeared, and where Moses was, and here more largely for the whole mountain.

Exodus 19:14

Moses sanctified the people, by commanding them to sanctify themselves, and directing them how to do it.

Exodus 19:15

Abstain from the use of the marriage-bed, partly because your wives may haply have their uncleanness upon them, though unknown to themselves, at least to you, whereby you may be legally defiled; see Lev_15:18; and partly that your minds may be abstracted from all sensual delights, and wholly employed about this great and holy work and service. There is a like command 1Co_7:5; but both this and that do indifferently concern both ministers and people, and are limited to a certain time, and therefore are very impertinently alleged for the perpetual celibacy of ministers. See also 1Sa_21:5.

Exodus 19:16

The

thunders and lightnings were sent partly as evidences and tokens both of God's glorious presence, and of the anger of God, and the dreadful punishments due to the transgressors of the law now to be delivered; and partly as means to humble, and awaken, and convince, and terrify proud and secure sinners, that they might more reverently attend to the words and commands of God, more willingly yield obedience to them, and be more afraid of the violation of them.

A thick cloud was both a fit mean for the production and reception of the thunders and lightnings, and a signification as well of the invisible and unconceivable nature of God, as of the obscurity of the legal dispensation in regard of its types and shadows, & c., 2Co_3:13,18 4:6.

The trumpet was a fit instrument, both for the promulgation of God's law, and for the signification of that war that is between God and sinners.

All the people, Moses himself not excepted, as appears from Heb_12:21.

Exodus 19:17

Therefore one part of the mount they might come to, though not to another, to wit, the higher; which may clear the difficulty and seeming contradiction betwixt Exo_19:12,13.

Exodus 19:18

The Lord descended in fire for further terror to obstinate sinners. Hence this law is called a fiery law, Deu_33:2.

The whole mount quaked greatly, by an earthquake, as appears from Psa_60:2 104:32.

Exodus 19:19

Waxed louder and louder; Heb. went on , or increased and grew very strong, or vehement , or loud . This is opposed to the sounding long, Exo_19:13.

God answered him by a voice, i.e. by plain, distinct, and audible words, as Psa_81:7 Joh_12:29, so as the people also might hear, as appears from Exo_19:9. See Deu_5:24 1Ki_19:12,13 Heb 12:19.

Exodus 19:20

So here are three parts of the mount manifestly distinguished; the top, where the cloud was; the middle part, where Moses now stood, and about which the bounds seem to have been put; and the nether or lower part, where the people were.

Exodus 19:21

Through curiosity to know in what form or manner I appear to thee.

Exodus 19:22

For though the Aaronical priesthood was not yet appointed, it is certain, that as there were sacrifices before, so there were priests to offer them, which were either the first-born, who were consecrated to God, and did execute the office of priests, as may be gathered from Exo_13:2 24:5 Num_3:12 8:26, or some other persons appointed by God for doing that work till the office was settled in Aaron's family.

Which come near to the Lord; not at this time, for both priests and people are now kept at equal distance, Exo_19:24; but usually: q.d. Whose duty and privilege it is to approach unto God, and to present the people's prayers and sacrifices to him, and therefore are here particularly admonished, because they above all others are obliged to this care, and because they might seem to claim this privilege by their function.

Exodus 19:23

The people are sufficiently admonished in that particular, because as thou didst command this same thing before, Exo_19:12, so I have informed and warned them of it; so that it may seem superfluous for me to go down again to acquaint them herewith. But God, who better knew the dulness and the hardness of their hearts than Moses did, saw it necessary to repeat the same command again and again. Some read the words interrogatively, lo for halo , as it is 2Sa_13:26 2Ki_5:26 Job_2:10 Mal_2:15; May not the people (i.e. some of the people, the priests at least, which, as thou hast now said, may come near to the Lord ) go up? Is this a universal prohibition? To this answer is given by a distinction in the next verse, that he and Aaron might come up, but no other.

Exodus 20:1 EXODUS CHAPTER 20

The object of man's worship, Exo_20:1,2. The decalogue, Exo_20:3-17. The people fear, Exo_20:18. They desire Moses to speak to them, and not God, Exo_20:19. Moses encourages them, Exo_20:20. Moses drawing near the darkness, God speaks to him, Exo_20:21,22. God's charge about making no other gods, Exo_20:23. God's command to build an altar, and of what they should make it, Exo_20:24,25; and in what manner they should approach unto it, Exo_20:26.

Or, Then , to wit, when Moses was returned into the mount.

God spake immediately, and not by an angel. For though an ambassador or messenger may act in the name of his master, yet it is against the use of all ages and places for such to call themselves by his name. As well might an ambassador of France say, I am the king of France , which all men would account absurd, arrogant, and ridiculous, as an angel might say,

I am the Lord. All these words , i.e. commands, for so the word is used, Deu_17:19 Est_1:12.

Exodus 20:2

The only true God, and thy God by special title, having entered into covenant with thee, and chosen thee for my peculiar people, to protect, and rule, and bless thee above all others. God's authority and right over them is fitly put in the front, as the foundation of all God's commands, and their duties.

Which have brought thee out of the land of Egypt; and so by right of redemption thou art mine. Out of the house, i.e. the place; for so the word house is sometimes used, as Jud_16:21.

Exodus 20:3

Heb.

There shall not be to thee another god, or other gods, to wit, idols, which others have, esteem, and worship as gods, and therefore Scripture so calls them by way of supposition, Deu_32:21 1Sa_12:21 1Co_8:4,5; but thou shalt not have them in any such reputation or veneration, but shalt forsake and abhor them, and cleave unto me alone.

Before me, i.e. in my presence, in my house or Church, which you are, where I am especially present; and therefore for you to worship any other god is most impudent idolatry, even as when a woman commits adultery before her husband's face. He may also intimate, that all the idolatry which any of them shall hereafter commit, though never so cunningly and secretly managed, is manifest to his eyes, Psa_44:20,21. Others translate it with me , or besides me , as it is rendered Mat_12:30. He forbids the worship of all others, not only in opposition to him, but also in conjunction with him, or subordination to him. See 2Ki_17:33 Exo 32 Ac 7:41 Rev_19:10 22:8,9.

Thou shalt not make, either in thy mind, or with thy hand, Act_17:29, or by thy command.

Unto thee, i.e. for thy use, or for thee to worship; for otherwise they were not absolutely forbidden to make any images, but only to make them for worship, as may appear by comparing this place with Lev_19:4 Deu_4:15 and Amo_5:26, with Act_7:43; and from Lev_26:1, where the setting up of a pillar, or stone , is as absolutely forbidden as the making of an image . And therefore as the former is not forbidden to be done simply and universally, as appears from Jos_24:20 1Sa_7:12, but only to be done in order to worship, so also is the latter. Moreover there were cherubims and other images in the temple, and afterwards the brazen serpent, which because they were not made to be worshipped, neither were indeed, nor were ever esteemed to be, any contradictions to this law.

Any graven image, or molten, or any other image, as is most evident from the nature and reason of the precept. Nor is any thing more common than such synecdochical expressions, wherein under one kind named all other things of the like nature are contained. But for more abundant caution, and to put all out of doubt, he adds a more general word, nor any likeness .

Anything that is in heaven; as of God, Deu_4:15 Isa_44:9,20, angels, sun, moon, or stars, which the heathens worshipped, Deu_4:19 17:3. Or in the earth ; as of men, and beasts, and creeping things, which the Egyptians and other Gentiles worshipped as gods. See Deu_4:16,17 Isa 44:13 Eze_23:14.

Or in the water; as of fishes, such as Dagon was; or serpents, crocodiles, and such other Egyptian deities.

Under the earth: this is emphatically added, to note the singular care of Divine Providence in bringing the waters under the earth, which naturally are lighter and higher than it, and therefore might easily overwhelm it. Compare Psa_104:6.

Exodus 20:5

Not only inward reverence is forbidden, but also all outward gestures that naturally or customarily express reverence, whether bowing down the body, as here; or bending the knee , as 1Ki_19:18; or kissing the idol, or one's hand towards it, as Job_31:27 Hos_13:2; one gesture being by a synecdoche named for all. To them , nor before them; for to bow to them , and to bow before them , are expressions in Scripture of the same extent and use, as appears by comparing this place with Lev_26:1 2Ch_25:14; and 2Sa_7:22, with 1Ch_17:25; and Mat_4:9, with Luk_4:7. Nor serve them; or, worship them, either inwardly in thy mind, or outwardly by any sensible mean or sign of worship given to them, as incense or sacrifice, vowing to them, or swearing by them, or the like. A jealous God, i.e. impatient of any partner in thy love and worship, and full of wrath against them that give my glory to images, Isa_42:8; as jealousy is the rage of a man Pro_6:34 against the defiler of his marriage-bed. God is pleased to call and account himself the Husband of his church and people, Jer_2:2 Hos_2:19; and therefore idolatry is called adultery, Deu_31:16 Jer_3:3,10; and God's anger against idolaters' jealousy . The word el properly signifies the strong God, and shows God's ability to avenge himself, as the word jealous notes his readiness and resolution to do it. Visiting, i.e. remembering, inquiring into, or punishing, (as that word is commonly used, as hath been noted before,) ### the iniquity of the fathers upon the children.

Quest. How can this be just?

Answ. 1. All are born sinners, and are children of wrath, and therefore justly punishable for their own sins.

Answ. 2. He speaks not here of eternal damnation, but of temporal punishments, in which there is no shadow of injustice; as appears,

1. Because the sins of parents are oft punished in their children, even in human courts, as is manifest in traitors, which practice being acknowledged to be just, it cannot with any sense be accounted unjust in God.

2. Because such external punishments have more good than evil in them, and are in many, and may be so in others, if themselves do not hinder it, instruments of the greatest good, exercises of their virtues and graces, and means of their eternal happiness.

3. Because children are a part and the possession of their parents, and therefore it is not unjust if they suffer with them, and for them.

Answ. 3. This is to be understood with an exception of repentance, and penitent children, as appears from Eze 18 And if any such be temporally punished for their fathers' sins, God will abundantly recompense it to them some other way. But if children tread in their fathers' sinful steps, it is but just that they should partake of their plagues.

Unto the third and fourth generation; and further too, as appears in the ten tribes, and afterwards in the two tribes, upon whom the iniquity of their fathers hath been visited now for many generations. But he mentions them in particular, partly, because a parent may live so long, and see the dreadful effects of his sin in his children's children; partly, because so far the memory of a father may extend, and be matter of imitation to his children; and partly, to show the difference between his exercise of justice and mercy, as appears by comparing the next verse.

Them that hate me. This word is opposed to the conceit that idolaters, at least many of them, have of themselves, that they love God more than others do, because they love, and honour, and worship the creatures for his sake, and for those excellencies that he hath wrought in them; but this will no more excuse their idolatry, than it will excuse him that commits adultery with his friend's wife, that he did it for his friend's sake, and from the love he had to his friend, and for his relations.

Unto thousands, to wit, of their generations, i.e. for ever; whereas his punishment extended only to three or four of them: so far is God's mercy exalted above his justice. Compare Psa_103:17.

Them that love me, and keep my commandments: this conjunction is very observable, both against those that falsely and foolishly pretend or insinuate that the inward affection of love to God is not absolutely and always necessary to salvation; and also against them who, pretending inward love to God, live in the customary breach of God's known commands.

Exodus 20:7

Or, not carry , or not take , or lift up, to wit, in or into thy mouth, as the phrase is more fully expressed, Job_4:2; Psa_16:4 50:16. So men are said to take up a proverb , or a lamentation, Isa_14:4 Eze_26:17. The name of the Lord ; not only the proper name of the Lord, but any of his attributes, ordinances, and works, by which God hath made himself known. In vain ; or unto vanity , or vainly . Either,

1. Falsely, or in a false oath; thou shalt not swear falsely by the name of the Lord, or not lift up the name of God into thy mouth in an oath to the confirmation of a lie. Or,

2. In vain, as we render it, and as the word schave is frequently used, as Job_7:3 15:31 Psa_60:11 89:47 Isa_1:13. You shall not use the name of God, either in oaths or in common discourse, lightly, rashly, irreverently, or unnecessarily, or without weighty or sufficient cause. Which being a duty enjoined not only in many places of sacred Scripture, but also in the apocryphal /APC Sir_23:15-17, and even by heathen authors, as Plato in his Book of Laws, and it being evident by the light of nature to man's reason, it were strange if it were not here understood; especially considering that it is most reasonable to take these short laws in the most comprehensive sense, such as this, not the former, is; for the prohibition of using it vainly and rashly doth certainly include that of swearing by it falsely, but this latter doth not include the former. Besides, the former exposition restrains the words to swearing, whereas the words are more general, and speak of any taking God's name into their mouths, either by oaths or any other way. And it becomes not us to set limits to God's words where God hath set none. It is also here to be observed, as well as in the other commands, that when this sin is forbidden, the contrary duty is commanded, to wit, to use the name of God, both in swearing and otherwise, holily, cautiously, and reverently.

Guiltless, or, innocent, i.e. free from guilt, and the punishment of it: the meaning is, the Lord will look upon him as a guilty person, and will severely punish him. And so this or the like phrase is used 1Ki_2:9. And it is a common figure, called meiosis, where more is understood than is expressed, as 1Sa_12:21 Psa_25:3 Pro_10:2. And this reason is here added, because sinners of this sort are usually held innocent by men, either because they cannot discover their fault when they forswear themselves, or because they take no care to punish the abusers of God's name by vain and customary oaths, curses, or blasphemies: q.d. Though men spare them, I will assuredly punish them.

Exodus 20:8

This word remember is here very emphatical; and,

1. It reminds us of a former delivery of the substance of this command, to wit, Gen_2:3.
2. It insinuates the great necessity of consideration and preparation for the sabbath before it comes,
3. It shows the singular importance of this command, which is therefore placed in the heart and centre of the rest, to show that the religious observation of this is the best way to secure our obedience to all the rest, and that the neglect of this will bring in the violation of all the other, as common experience shows.

To keep it holy, i.e. to use it holily, by a careful abstinence from servile works or worldly business, and by a diligent employing of the day in holy thoughts, words, and exercises, in the worship of God in public and private, and the celebration of his works, and the furthering of our own and others' sanctification and salvation. See Isa_58:13.

Exodus 20:9

This may be either,

1. A command to employ those days in our worldly occasions, yet so as God and religion be not neglected on those days, as many scriptures teach us. Or,

2. A permission to do so; which I prefer,

1. Because so it is a proper argument to enforce the observation of the sabbath: q.d. Grudge not me one day, when I allow you six for it.

2. Because the command of diligence in our callings would seem improperly placed here, as being of a quite different nature, and belonging to the second table, and being provided for in a distinct command, as we shall see.

Exodus 20:10

The sabbath of the Lord, or, to the Lord, i.e. consecrated to his use, honour, and service. Hence God calls them my sabbaths, Lev_26:2 Isa_56:4, because they are commended by his example, and enjoined by his command. Any work; , i.e. any servile, laborious, common, or worldly work, tending to thy own profit or pleasure. See Exo_34:21 Lev_23:7 Num_28:18 Isa_58:13.

Nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant: this clause is added, not as if children or servants were not immediately obliged by this command, or were excused by God for the breach of this law at their master's commands, which were to obey men rather than God, contrary to St. Peter's command and practice, Act_5:29 and which were to limit the foregoing word thou , and the law of the sabbath, only to those that have children and servants, which is an idle, senseless, and absurd, as well as profane opinion; but to restrain hard-hearted, and covetous, or ungodly persons, that they should neither command nor suffer their children or servants to profane the sabbath, so far as they can hinder it; which how far it concerns thousands of governors of families at this day, they shall do well seriously and in time to consider.

Nor thy cattle, partly, to teach us to exercise mercy towards the brute creatures; compare Deu_5:14; partly, because the use of cattle must have drawn along with it the attendance and employment of men; and partly, that by observing the rest of the cattle, they might be more minded and quickened to the observation of this sacred rest.

Nor thy stranger, i.e. the Gentile that sojourneth with thee; lest their example should provoke the Israelites to imitate them; and lest the Gentiles should have opportunity of gaining at that time when, and by that thing whereby, the Israelites were losers, even by the religious observation of the sabbath. That dwells within thy cities, which have walls and gates, or within thy villages or territories. So the word gates is oft taken, as Gen_22:17 24:60 2Sa_10:8, compared with 1Ch_19:9.

Exodus 20:11

In six days, and neither in more nor less time, as he could have done.

Rested, i.e. ceased from his creating works; otherwise he worketh still { Joh_5:17} by his providence and grace; and neither is idle nor weary, Isa_40:28; but this rest is ascribed to him for our admonition and imitation.

The Lord blessed the sabbath day, i.e. made it a day of blessing; as well of receiving blessings and praises from men, as of conferring his blessings and favours upon those that religiously observe it. The day is said to be blessed when men are blessed by it, and in it, by a common metonymy, as a man's field , Gen_27:27, and basket and store , Deu_28:5, and the work of his hands , Job_1:10, are said to be blessed when a man is blessed in them. It is remarkable, the blessing and sanctification are not appropriated to the seventh day, but to the sabbath day, whether it should be the seventh day, as to the Jews it then was, or the first day, as to us Christians now it is, which change seems hereby to be insinuated.

Hallowed it, i.e. separated it from the rest of the days, and from all common employments, and consecrated it to his own holy service, and man's holy use.

Exodus 20:12

The word honour doth not only note the reverence, love, and obedience we owe them, but also support and maintenance, as appears from Mat_15:4-6, and from the like signification of that word, 1Ti_5:3,17, which is so natural and necessary a duty, that the Jews say a man is bound even to beg, or to work with his hands, that he may relieve his parents.

The

father is put first here, and the mother Lev_19:3, to show that we owe this duty promiscuously and indifferently to both of them. Compare Exo_21:15,17 Deu 21:18 27:16 Pro_20:20 30:17. And because these laws are brief, and yet comprehensive, under these are contained all our superiors and governors.

That thy days may be long, Heb. that they , i.e. thy parents, may prolong thy days , or the days of thy life, to wit, instrumentally, by their prayers made to God for thee, and by their blessing in my name conferred upon thee; though the active verb is commonly taken impersonally, as Job_7:3 Pro_9:11 Luk_12:10; and so it may be here, they prolong , for be prolonged .

Exodus 20:13

To wit any man or woman, without authority, and without just cause; which exception must necessarily be understood, because many other scriptures command the magistrate to kill great offenders. And this prohibition being delivered by God, who made, and searcheth, and commands men's hearts, must be extended not only to the external act of killing, but to all motions of the heart or tongue which tend that way, as anger, hatred, envy, malice, strife, blows, and the challenges of duelists; which is clearly manifest by comparing this with other scriptures, as Mat_5:21 1Jo_3:15, &c. And here, as in the rest, is commanded the contrary duty of preserving the lives of our neighbours as much as lies in our power.

Exodus 20:14

Here is mentioned one kind of uncleanness, as being eminently sinful, and unjust, and pernicious to human society. But under this are comprehended and forbidden all other kinds of filthiness, as bestiality, sodomy, whoredom, fornication, &c., and all means, occasions, and appearances of them; as it appears,

1. From other scriptures that forbid those things, which either belong to this command, or to none of the ten, which is very improbable.
2. From the large extent of the other commands, noted before.
3. From our Saviour's explication, Mat_5:27. And contrariwise, all chastity and sobriety in thoughts, affections, words, habits, and gestures, is here prescribed. See 1Th_4:3,4 Heb 13:4.

Exodus 20:15

i.e. Either by deceit or violence, or without his knowledge and consent, take away another man's goods, Eph_4:28; but, on the contrary, shalt preserve and increase them, as need requires, and occasion is offered.

Exodus 20:16

Heb. not answer , viz. when thou art asked in judgment, Lev_5:1 19:16; or, not speak a false testimony, or as a false witness; which doth not only forbid perjury in judgment, but also all unjust censure, slander, backbiting, scorning, false accusation, and the like; and also requires a just and candid judgment of him, and of his words and actions, speaking well of him, as far as truth and justice will permit, and defending his good name against the calumnies and detractions of others.

Against thy neighbour; no, nor for thy neighbours; but he saith against, both because such perjuries, slanders, &c. are most commonly designed against them, and because this is a great aggravation of the sin, when a man not only speaks evil and falsehood, but doth this from malice and ill-will. But under this kind are contained other sins of a like, though less sinful, nature, as in the other commands.

A man's neighbour here is not only the Israelite, as some would have it, but any man; as plainly appears,

1. Because that word is frequently used in that sense, not only in the New, as all agree, but also in the Old Testament, as Gen_11:3 Lev_20:10 Est_1:19 Pro_18:17.

2. Because it is so explained, Luk_10:29,36 Ro 13:9, compared with Mat_22:39.

3. From the reason of the thing, which is common to all; unless a man will be so hardy to say that he may bear false witness against a stranger, though not against an Israelite; and, in like manner, that when God forbids a man to commit adultery with his neighbour's wife, Lev_20:10, he may do it with a stranger's wife; and that though a man be commanded to speak the truth to his neighbour, Zec_8:16, he may tell lies to a stranger.

4. Because the great law of love and charity, which is the life and soul of this and all the commands, and binds us to all; binds us, and bound the Israelites, to strangers, as appears from Exo_23:4 Lev_19:33,34.

Exodus 20:17

The coveting here forbidden is either,

1. The inward and deliberate purpose and desire of a deceitful or violent taking away of another man's goods; but this is forbidden in the eighth commandment. And it is hard to conceive that St. Paul should think that this command did not forbid such a practice, Rom_7:7, which even the better sort of heathens esteemed a sin, whose words are, that they who are withheld from incest, or whoredom, or theft, only from a principle of fear, are guilty of those crimes; especially seeing the Old Testament Scriptures, which doubtless he diligently studied, do so plainly condemn evil purposes of the heart, as Lev_19:17 Deu_9:4,5 15:7,9, &c. Or,

2. The greedy desire of that which is another man's, though it be without injury to him. Thus Ahab sinned in desiring Naboth's vineyard, though he offered him money for it, 1Ki_21:2. Or rather,

3. Those inward motions of the heart, which from the fountain of original corruption do spring up in the heart, and tickle it with some secret delight, though they do not obtain tie deliberate consent of the will. For seeing this law of God is spiritual and holy, Rom_7:12,14, and reacheth the thoughts, intents, and all the actual motions of the heart, as is apparent from the nature of God, and of his law; and seeing such motions are both the fruits of a sinful nature, and the common causes of sinful actions, and are not agreeable either to man's first and uncorrupted nature, or to God's law; they must needs be a swerving from it, and therefore sin. And this is the reason why this command is added as distinct from all the rest.

Exodus 20:18

Saw the thunderings, i.e. heard them. One sense is oft put for another, as seeing , Gen_42:1, for hearing , Act_7:12.

They removed from the bottom of the mountain, where it seems they stood.

Exodus 20:19

This they speak from a sense of their own guilt, and of the greatness and holiness of the Divine Majesty, to whom they durst not approach but by a mediator. See Deu_5:27 18:16 Gal_3:19.

Exodus 20:20

To prove you, or try, or search you , whether you are innocent, and such as delight in my presence; or conscious of your guilt, and therefore afraid of my appearance; whether you have such a righteousness as can abide the trial of a severe Judge; or whether you are such as have cause to fear my wrath, and to flee to my grace and mercy; which of you are sincere and upright, and which are hypocrites and ungodly persons; or, to try whether this terrible appearance will produce in you that reverence, fear, and obedience which I call for; or, to give you a law, by which you will be proved whether you do indeed love and fear me, as you pretend you do, or whether you do not.

God's fear is properly in men's hearts; but here the sense seems to be this, That this fear, i.e. his dreadful manifestation of his majesty and justice, (the act being here put for the object,) may be now and ever before your eyes, and in your memories, as an effectual preservative from sin.

Exodus 20:21

No text from Poole on this verse.

Exodus 20:22

Ye have seen, i.e. heard, as Exo_20:18. He may use the word seen here, to intimate that this was all they could see of God, to wit, his voice and speech, and that they saw no image of him, as is expressed in a parallel place, and therefore should make no resemblances of him, as it here follows.

From heaven, i.e. from the lower heaven, to wit, the air, or the clouds, which were over the top of mount Sinai, Deu_4:36 Neh_9:13; and so the word heaven is oft understood, as Gen_1:20 Job_35:11 Psa_79:2. And so this place may be reconciled with Heb_12:25, where this is said to be spoken upon earth.

Exodus 20:23

With me, i.e. to worship together with me; I will allow no companion ; or, to me , as it follows, unto you ; and Exo_20:24, unto me; and the particle eth is sometimes used for el , or lamed , as 1Sa_22:14 2Ki_22:14; or, for me , either to represent my person, by comparing this with the parallel place, Deu_4:15,16, or to worship me by, as it is apparent that the Israelites afterwards did intend to worship Jehovah in the golden calf, and therefore Aaron calls the feast of the calf a feast to Jehovah , Exo_32:5, and that with the approbation of the people, whom he then complied with, and durst not resist.

Gods, i.e. idols or images, to whom you may give the name and worship of gods, of silver, and consequently not of any other materials, as wood or stone: it is a synecdoche.

Exodus 20:24

An altar thou shalt make for thy present use, or whilst thou art in the wilderness: this he commanded, partly, that they might easily and readily erect an altar upon all occasions, which it might be hard for them to do there of better materials; partly, to mind them how much more God regarded the inward holiness than the outward pomp of their devotions; partly, because God would make a conspicuous difference between them and idolaters, who used much cost and curiosity about their altars; partly, that the altars might, after they left them, fall down and moulder away, and not remain as lasting monuments, which might be afterward abused to idolatry by any persons that came thither; partly, because they were uncertain of their stay any where, except at Sinai, and therefore must raise such altars as they could suddenly do. But this command only concerned their wilderness state; for there were better and more durable altars in the tabernacle and temple.

In all places, therefore there is no need of building any stately altar in a certain place, as if my presence were fixed there, and not to be enjoyed elsewhere.

Where I record my name, or, cause my name to be remembered by you; i.e. not in every place which you shall invent, but in all such places as I shall appoint for the remembrance or celebration of my name, or for the service of my majesty, whether it be in the wilderness, and in divers parts thereof, or in the tabernacle and temple.

Exodus 20:25

An altar of stone in those rocky parts might be as easy for them to make as one of earth. Hewn stone would require both time, and cost, and art. The reasons of this precept are in part the same with the former, Exo_20:24.

If thou lift up thy tool upon it, thou hast polluted it, by thy disobedience to my express command now given; and howsoever they think to gratify me by this curiosity, I shall not look upon it as a sacred thing, by which the sacrifices offered on it shall be sanctified, but as a profane thing which will defile them. So little doth God value or approve the inventions of men in his worship, how colourable soever they be.

Exodus 20:26

He seems to mean the steps of ladders, or others of the same nature, which could suddenly be made, and were proper for their present condition, where there was danger of the following inconvenience. For afterwards God appointed an altar ten cubits high, 2Ch_4:1; though some conceive they went not up to that by steps, but by an insensible ascent upon the ground raised by degrees for that purpose. But if the priests did go up to it by steps, God provided against the indecency here mentioned, by prescribing linen breeches to them in that service.

That thy nakedness be not discovered thereon; for these linen breeches were not yet appointed, and the manner then and there was for men to wear long coats or gowns like women. God would remove all appearance or occasion of immodesty, especially in sacred persons and things; and the rather, to show his detestation of that impudence and filthiness which was very usual in some of the solemnities and worships of the heathen.

Exodus 21:1 EXODUS CHAPTER 21

Law concerning bond-men or slaves, Exo_21:1-5. Servants bored through the ear, Exo_21:6. Ordinances for bond-women, Exo_21:7-11. Of murderers, Exo_21:12. Of them that curse their parents, Exo_21:17. Of strikers, Exo_21:18,19. Of them that hurt a woman with child, Exo_21:22-25. Of a master of a family that strikes out an eye or tooth of his man or maid servant, Exo_21:26,27. Of a pushing ox, Exo_21:29. Of them that hurt their neighbour's ox by digging a pit, Exo_21:33. Of one ox killing another, Exo_21:35,36.

Or, the judicial laws , by which thou and the judges before mentioned shall govern thyself and the people in civil and criminal causes.

Exodus 21:2

If thou buy an Hebrew servant; of which practice see Jer_34:14. This was allowed in two cases:

1. When a man for his crimes was condemned by the judges to be sold; of which see Exo_22:3 2Ki_4:1 Mat_8:25.

2. When a man pressed by great poverty sold himself or his children; of which see Lev_25:39,40. The seventh year is to be numbered, either,

1. From the last sabbatical year, or year of release, which came every seventh year; and the sense of the place is, not that he shall always serve six full years, but that he shall never serve longer, and that his service shall last only till that year comes. Or rather,

2. From the beginning of his service; for,

1. It were a very improper speech to say, he shall serve six years, of one who possibly entered into his service but a month before the year of release.

2. In the law of the sabbatical year there is no mention of the release of servants, as there is of other things, Le 25 Deu 15; and in the year of jubilee, when servants are to be released, it is expressed so, as Lev_25:54,55.

Exodus 21:3

By himself, i.e. with his own person only, not with a wife, as the opposite branch showeth.

Exodus 21:4

That being a true rule, and approved both by Scripture and by heathen authors, that the birth follows the belly, Gen_21:10 Gal_4:24,25; and he that owns the tree hath right to all its fruit.

Quest. How was this separation of man and wife agreeable with the first institution of marriage, by which that bond is made indissoluble?

Answ. 1. That bond was not necessarily dissolved by this law, both because the separation was at the man's choice, who might have staid there if he so pleased; and because the distinction of their habitations might consist with the right and use of matrimony, which the master also would probably permit for his own advantage.

Answ. 2. God might here, as well as in the case of divorces, dispense with his own laws and institutions, especially in this case, where he might design this for a punishment to the man for marrying a stranger, which was not pleasing to God, as appears from Deu_21:11 Ezr_10:2 Neh_13:23. And that this woman was a stranger, and not a Hebrewess, is manifest, because then she also must have gone out free, Exo 21 7-9 Deu 15:12.

Exodus 21:5

No text from Poole on this verse.

Exodus 21:6

Shall bring him unto the judges; partly, that it may appear he chooseth this freely, and is not overawed nor overreached by his master; and partly, that the agreement being so publicly and solemnly confirmed, might be irrevocable.

He shall also bring him to the door, to wit, of his master's house, as it is expressed, Deu_15:17; a token that he was fixed there, and never to go a freeman out of these doors.

His master shall bore his ear through with an awl, as a note of a servant; as it continued to be long after this in Syria and Arabia, as Juvenal and Petpontus Arbiter affirm; and it did fitly represent his settled and perpetual obligation to abide in that house, and there to hear and obey his master's commands. See Psa_40:6.

For ever, i.e. not only for six years more, but without any limitation of time, as long as he lives, until the jubilee, which is an exception made by God to this law, Lev_25:40 Deu_15:17. The Hebrew word olam , here used, oft signifies not eternity, but only a long time. See Exo_12:14.

Exodus 21:7

A man, i.e. a Hebrew, as appears by the opposition of one of a strange nation , Exo_21:8.

For a man to sell his daughter to be a maid-servant was allowed in case of extreme necessity, because of the hardness of their hearts.

She shall not go out as the men-servants do, but upon better terms, as being one of the weaker and more helpless sex.

Quest. How doth this agree with Deu_15:17,

Also unto thy maid-servant thou shalt do likewise ?

Answ. 1. Distinguish persons. She, Deu_15:17 was sold by herself, and that to mere servitude; this here was sold by her father, not only for service, but in order to her marriage, as the following verses sufficiently imply.

2. Distinguish things. The likeness between men-servants and maid-servants was only in the rites used, in case she consented to perpetual servitude. The difference here is, in case they both were made free, in which case she had some privileges, which here follow.

Exodus 21:8

Who hath betrothed her to himself, for a concubine or secondary wife. Not that masters did always take maid-servants upon these terms, as some conceive; but that some did so, and of them this place speaks. Though here is a differing reading; and as the margin hath lo the pronoun, signifying to him , so the text hath lo the adverb, signifying not ; and so the text may be translated thus, so that he doth not betroth her, to wit, to himself, or to his son, as he gave her hopes he intended. Either reading or sense is proper and probable.

Then shall he let her be redeemed, either by herself or friends, or any other person that will redeem her.

Quest. How could he part with her, and sell her, when she was betrothed to him?

Answ. 1. This might be one of those many indulgences given to them for the hardness of their hearts; and there is no doubt God could dispense with his own positive laws.

2. The latter reading avoids this difficulty.

To sell her unto a strange nation he shall have no power: this was in general prohibited for all Hebrew servants, but it is particularly mentioned here, because there was special reason for it; both because there was more danger of her corruption in chastity and religion in regard of her sex, and because the master in that case was under a greater temptation of selling her to a foreigner, because no Israelite would buy her, or give so much money for her as a heathen would, who would and might keep her for a perpetual servant, which the Israelites might not do.

He hath dealt deceitfully with her, viz. in breaking his promise of marriage made to her, or blasting the hopes he encouraged her to have of it. The Hebrew words are exactly rendered thus, in dealing deceitfully or falsely with her or against her; and they may be added as an aggravation of that sin of selling her to a strange nation, wherein there was a double false dealing; the one towards God, who by his law forbad this; the other towards her, whom he hired upon other terms, and not with a power to dispose of her contrary to the law and manner of the Israelites.

Exodus 21:9

i.e. Give her a convenient portion, as he doth to his own daughters, Exo_22:16.

Exodus 21:10

Her duty of marriage is called due benevolence , 1Co_7:3. Or, her dwelling , as the word is oft used. So here are the three great conveniences of life, food, and raiment, and habitation, all which he is to provide for her. Or, her cohabitation , or, her time , the convenient and appointed times for conjugal converse with her; for some times were disallowed for it, Le 15, and when there were plurality of wives, they had their vicissitudes, Gen_30:15,16.

Shall he not diminish, or rather, not withdraw , or deny it, as the word signifies, and as the LXX., Chaldee, Samaritan, Vulgate, and others render it,

Exodus 21:11

And with gifts also by virtue of the law, Deu_15:14. The sum is this, The master was either,

1. Willing to part with her; and then he was to let her be redeemed by herself, or any of her friends, but not by a heathen, Exo_21:8. Or,

2. Willing to keep her; and then, as he had betrothed her, he was to perform all the duties of a husband to her, although he had another wife besides her, Exo_21:10.

3. If he would keep her, and yet deny those duties to her, then as his fault was aggravated, so was his punishment; for now he cannot sell her, but must let her go freely, as in this verse.

Exodus 21:12

He that smiteth a man knowingly and wilfully, as appears by the next verse, neither the friends of the party slain, nor the magistrate, shall give him a pardon, or accept a ransom for him, Num_35:31.

Exodus 21:13

If it appear that the manslayer did not intend nor desire it, but only it fell out by his heedlessness, or by some casualty, or by some unexpected providence; or, God, and not man, God without the man's contrivance or design; for otherwise, in a general sense and way, God delivered Christ into the hands of Judas and the Jews, who did advisedly and maliciously kill him.

A place whither he shall flee, i.e. a city or place of refuge, Num_35:11 Deu_19:5.

Exodus 21:14

If a man come presumptuously, i.e. do this proudly, boldly, purposely, and maliciously; for so the word signifies.

From mine altar, which not only in the wilderness, but afterward, seems to have been esteemed a place of refuge, 1Ki_1:50, as it also was among the heathens: but God so far abhors murder, that he will rather venture the pollution of his own altar than the escape of the murderer. See 2Ki_11:15.

Exodus 21:15

He that smiteth; either,

1. So as is before mentioned, Exo_21:12, so as they die . And to smite sometimes signifies to kill , as Gen_4:15 2Ki_14:5, compared with 2Ch_25:3. And this may be here added by way of distinction: q.d. That killing of another man which is punished with death, must be done presumptuously; but the killing of parents, though not done presumptuously, is a capital crime. Or,

2. The mere smiting of them, to wit, wilfully and dangerously. Nor will any think this law too severe, that considers that this is an act full of horrid impiety against God, who hath so expressly and emphatically commanded children to honour their parents; of highest and most unnatural ingratitude, and utterly destructive to human society.

Exodus 21:16

i.e. In the manstealer's hand; q.d. though he keep him in his own hands for his own use; for still it is a theft, and he is made that man's slave, and it is in his power to sell him to another when he pleaseth, and therefore deserves death.

Exodus 21:17

Or, revileth , to wit, wilfully, maliciously, obstinately, against all admonition, by comparing Deu_21:18.

Exodus 21:18

With a stone, or any other instrument fit for such a mischievous purpose. A usual synecdoche.

Exodus 21:19

The loss of his time, i.e. of the profit which he could or commonly did make of his time in the way of his calling.

Cause him to be thoroughly healed, i.e. pay the charges of the cure.

Exodus 21:20

His servant, namely, a stranger; for an Israelite was to be better used. See Lev_25:39,40, &c.

With a rod; a fit and usual instrument for correction, whereby it is implied, that if he killed him with a sword, or any such weapon, he was to die for it.

Under his hand, i.e. whilst the master is correcting him.

He shall be surely punished; not with death, for then it would have been said so, as it is before and after; but as the magistrate or judge shall think fit, according to the diversity of circumstances; and therefore no particular punishment is set down.

Exodus 21:21

i.e. His possession bought with his money; and therefore,

1. Had a power to chastise him according to his demerit, which might be very great.
2. Is sufficiently punished with his own loss.
3. May be presumed not to have done this purposely and maliciously.

Exodus 21:22

A woman with child, to wit, the wife of the other person, who interposed herself to succour her husband.

No mischief follow, neither to the woman nor child; for it is generally so as to reach both, in case the abortive had life in it.

The husband shall impose the fine, and if it be unreasonable, the judges shall have a power to moderate it.

Exodus 21:23

Any mischief; either to the mother or to the child, whether it be death, or any maim or mischief.

Who

shall give life for life?

Ans . Not the private person, which would have introduced infinite mischiefs and confusions, but the magistrate; for these laws are given to Moses, and the execution of these things was committed to Moses, and others under him.

Exodus 21:24

This is called the law of retaliation, and from hence the heathen lawgivers took it and put it into their laws. But though this might sometimes be practised in the letter, yet it was not necessarily to be understood and executed so; as may appear,

1. By the impossibility of the just execution of it in many cases, as when a man that had but one eye or hand was to lose the other, which to him was a far greater mischief than what he did to his neighbour, whom he deprived but of one of his eyes or hands. And this is a sure and righteous rule, Punishments may be less, but never should be greater than the fault. And how could a wound be made neither bigger nor less than that which he inflicted?

2. By comparing this with other laws, wherein a compensation is allowed in like cases, as Exo_21:18,30. And when it is enjoined that no satisfaction shall be taken for the life of a wilful murderer , Num_35:31, it seems therein implied that satisfaction may be taken for lesser injuries. And indeed the payment of such a price as the loss of an eye, or hand, or foot required, though it might not so much satisfy the revenge of the party so injured, yet it was really more to his benefit. This law therefore was only minatory, but so as it was literally to be inflicted, except the injuring party would give such satisfaction as the injured person accepted, or the judges determined.

Exodus 21:27

Some confine this to the Israelitish servants, but the text doth not so limit it; and the reason of the law seems to reach to Gentile servants, this being a just punishment to unmerciful masters, (who ought to be merciful to their beasts, much more to such servants,) and a fit recompence to a servant for such a loss. And this law reacheth the loss of any other member, these two being instanced in, the one as the chief, and the other as the meanest, to intimate that other parts of a like or middle nature are included.

Exodus 21:28

Under which you are to understand any other creatures of like nature which hurt a man in such a dangerous manner, whether with their horns, or teeth, or feet; but he mentions only the ox or bull, and his goring with his horn, because this is most frequently done.

Ox shall be stoned; partly, to prevent future mischiefs from that creature; partly, to punish its master for his negligence in not keeping it in; and principally, for man's admonition, for whom seeing the beasts were made, it is not strange nor unjust if it be destroyed for man's good. God would hereby show that he would not, and men should not, spare a wilful murderer.

His flesh shall not be eaten; both because it was forbidden food, its blood being not let out; and for the punishment of the owner, who was hereby hindered from the sale of it, to beget in all the greater detestation of murderers, when they observe the poor beast upon this account accursed, and therefore not to be touched or tasted.

Exodus 21:29

It hath been testified, which the Jews say was to be done thrice, and before the magistrate.

A man or a woman, to wit, an Israelite, or a stranger who is free, by comparing this with Exo_21:32.

Exodus 21:30

If there be laid on him; either by the avenger of blood, the next akin to the party slain, who is willing to exchange the punishment; or by the judge, who may discern some circumstances which may much lessen the crime, as if an ox had broken his cords wherewith he was tied, or broke forth through the carelessness or wickedness of his servant to whose care he was committed.

Exodus 21:31

A son or a daughter; names signifying their tender age, in respect of the man or woman , Exo_21:29. And this is added, lest the foregoing sense should be restrained to their parents, whose lives were more precious, and therefore their loss greater.

Exodus 21:32

The half the freeman 's price . See Poole on "Mat_26:5".

Exodus 21:33

If a man shall either

open an old pit which hath been covered with earth; or dig a new

pit, to wit, in a public way, as the reason of the law shows; for if it were done in a man's own house or ground, there was no danger of such an accident, except the beast transgressed his bounds, and then the man was not culpable.

Exodus 21:34

The owner of the pit, i.e. he by whose hand or command it was made,

shall give money equal to the worth of the dead beast, in the opinion of the judge.

Exodus 21:35

They shall divide the money; not equally, for so the owner of the mischievous ox might be gainer by the mischief, his ox being much worse than that which was killed; but in such proportions as the judges shall think fit, considering the worth of the cattle, and the circumstances of the action.

Exodus 21:36

Ox for ox; an ox of equal value with that slain ox, or the price and worth of it.

Exodus 22:1 EXODUS CHAPTER 22

Of theft, Exo_22:1-4. Of eating another man's vineyard, Exo_2:5
Of hurt coming by fire, Exo_22:6. Of hurt coming to goods committed to one's trust, Exo_22:7-13. Of hurt befalling things borrowed, Exo_22:14,15. Of committing adultery, Exo_22:16,17. Of witchcraft, Exo_22:18. Of uncleanness with beasts, Exo_22:19. Of idolatry, Exo_22:20. That none shall hurt strangers or widows, Exo_22:21-24. Of unsury, Exo_22:25. Of pawning clothes, Exo_22:26,27. Of honouring magistrates, Exo_22:28. Of the first-fruits, Exo_22:29. Of eating flesh torn by beasts, Exo_22:31.

An ox, or a sheep; or, an ass , which is added Exo_22:4, and consequently any other living creature, to be valued according to its worth and use to man, proportionably to the rule here laid down. Only these are instanced in for their usefulness in the service both of God and men.

Or sell it, which was an aggravation of the crime, and a token of greater boldness, resolvedness, and expertness in the trade of thieving, than was in him who kept it at home, Exo_22:4.

Four sheep for a sheep.

Quest. 1. Why so much, seeing the stealer of other things was tied to restore but double?

Answ. 1. For terror, because these beasts being kept in the fields might more easily be stolen.

2. Because the loss of these was greater than of other things; for they did not only lose what the cattle might be sold for, but all the service, increase, and other benefits which a man might receive from them.

Quest. 2. Why more for oxen than for sheep?

Answ. 1. Because it argued greater boldness and customariness in the thief to steal that which might more easily be discovered.

2. Because besides the intrinsical worth of the ox, the labour of the ox was very considerable to his owner, Pro_14:4, and therefore the loss greater.

Exodus 22:2

Ver. 2: Breaking up, to wit, an house , which the Chaldee here adds, and by night , as appears from the next verse.

For him, i.e. for the thief, though he be killed by a man in his own defence. Because in that case the thief might be presumed to have a worse design, and the owner of the house could neither expect or have the help of others to secure him from the intended violence, nor guide his blows with that discretion and moderation which in the day-time he might use.

Exodus 22:3

There shall be blood shed for him; he that kills him shall be put to death, because he punished him more than his crime deserved, and might have been otherwise either secured or righted; and in that case, it is probable, the thief designed not murder, but theft only. But if it were evident that the housebreaker designed murder, he might doubtless kill him in his own defence.

He shall be sold; either so long till his service was worth the thing stolen, or rather for the ordinary time of six years, because this was not a simple thief, but a housebreaker, which was much worse.

Quest. How can he be sold, who is supposed to be killed?

Answ. 1. The Hebrew word may be better rendered should be sold, as the foregoing word of the same future time is rendered, should make restitution, to wit, if he were not killed; and therefore the killer of him being sufficiently secured against this injury, was more culpable in killing him without necessity.

Exodus 22:4

Alive; not killed, nor sold, as Exo_22:1.

Double; not more,

1. Because in that case it was presumed, either that he intended to restore it, or at least that he was but raw and unexercised in the trade of stealing, and so should be more gently punished.

2. Because the right owner recovered his goods with less charge and trouble. Or,

3. Because it was but a single crime, whereas the other, Exo_22:1, was an aggravated and complicated crime, where one sin and injury was added to another.

Object. It is said, he shall restore sevenfold , Pro_6:31.

Answ. 1.

Sevenfold is put for abundantly, as that word is oft used, as Gen_4:24 Psa_12:6 79:12; and a learned man observes, it is never used for that definite number.

Answ. 2. This sevenfold, or seven times, may relate not to the proportion of his restitution, but to the number of his thefts, or rather of his detections; and the sense is this, Though he be found guilty of theft seven times, all his punishment is, that he shall restore as the law prescribes. Whereas adultery, of which he there speaks in the following verses, is a crime of that nature, that if a man be once found guilty of it, restitution cannot be made, nor will it serve his turn, but he falls into all the mischiefs there reckoned up.

Exodus 22:5

A field or vineyard, or orchard, or other things of like nature; which is generally to be observed in laws.

Exodus 22:6

He that kindled the five, whether wilfully for such a purpose, or carelessly in such a time or place as was dangerous.

He shall surely make restitution; which if he were not able to do, it is probable he was to be sold for it, as in like cases was provided.

Exodus 22:7

Stuff, Heb. vessels , garments, utensils, or any kind of household stuff.

Exodus 22:8

That they may examine all circumstances, and use all means to find out the truth, by offering him his oath, or otherwise.

Unto his neighbour's goods; either to take and reserve them for his own use, or to dispose of them to another for his own advantage.

Exodus 22:9

All manner of trespass, to wit, about matters deposited upon trust, and lost, of which alone this place speaks.

Which another challengeth to be his; or, when , or concerning which he shall say, This is it, viz. the thing that I have lost; or rather, This is he, to whom I committed it, and whom I suspect and charge as guilty.

Whom the judges shall condemn; whether the person with whom the things were deposited, if they judged him guilty of theft, or the depositor, if he were convicted of a false accusation.

Exodus 22:10

To keep, as his servant, not freely, but for wages.

Exodus 22:11

An oath of the Lord; so called here, as also 1Ki_2:43, because it is taken by his authority and appointment, and for his honour, and in his name alone, God being made both witness, and judge, and avenger thereby. Shall be between them both, i.e. shall end the difference between them both; the one shall give his oath, and the other shall accept of it: or be taken by them both; by the one, that he did deliver them to him upon agreement and for hire; by the other, that he put not his hand to them.

Exodus 22:12

From him, Heb. from with him , which is an emphatical expression, and notes that this was taken away, either,

1. From those things which were with him, or which were his, i.e. from the midst of his own goods, which supposeth fraud in him. Or,

2. From under his eye, when he either did know of it, or with common care and diligence it might have been known and prevented, and this argues gross neglect in him. And this is one reason why this man is bound to make restitution, when the other, Exo_22:7, is not: another reason of the difference is, because those things, Exo_22:7, were only or principally dead things, and such things as required no great care; or if they did, (for in that case also were included oxen, asses, &c., Exo_22:9) yet he with whom they were left received no recompence for them, and therefore was not obliged to any singular care about them; but here the things were such as needed great care and diligence, which also this man was obliged to perform by the hire which he received upon that account, which was Jacob's case, Gen_31:39.

Exodus 22:13

Let him bring it; it, i.e. some part of the torn creature, which the wild beast haply had left, Amo_3:11,12.

Quest. What if the whole creature were carried away, as a sheep or lamb is sometimes by the wolf?

Answ. 1. I suppose this was not frequent, and that those ravenous creatures did speedily fall to their meal, and that something was left not far from the place, which the shepherd might easily procure.

2. The words may Be otherwise rendered, he shall bring a witness, as the Chaldee and Samaritan render it; or a testimony, i.e. some evidence whereby the judge might be satisfied; as for instance, that some wolf or lion, &c. was seen in those parts, &c., or some witness of his diligence and Faithfulness in all other things, which therefore might well be presumed in this.

Exodus 22:14

Ought, i.e. any living thing, which may be hurt or die, as it follows.

He shall surely make it good: this may seem hard, but all things considered is reasonable; because in doubtful cases, wherein it is not evident whether the borrower was faulty or not, as it is here, it ought to be interpreted in favour of the lender, rather than of the borrower; partly, to oblige the borrower to the greater fidelity and care in such things, which being not his own, men are commonly more careless about; partly, because the benefit being wholly the borrower's, the loss also in all reason ought to be his, and the lender ought not to suffer for his kindness, lest he should be discouraged from such actions for the future.

Exodus 22:15

If the owner thereof be with it: the law reasonably presumes, both that the borrower would not abuse it in the sight of its owner, and that the lender might and would take due care about it.

He shall not make it good, except there be some manifest fault in the borrower, as if he should kill or wound the beast in the lender's presence; which exception is easily to be understood from divers other laws of God.

It came for his hire, i.e. the benefit was the lender's, and not the borrower's, and therefore the former reason ceaseth; and whether the master were present or absent, he that receives the gain or hire shall bear the loss, except when it came through the borrower's gross and wilful default.

Exodus 22:16

If a man entice a maid, by persuasions, promise of marriage, allurements, or rewards. But if she were betrothed, it was punished with death, Deu_22:23,24.

Exodus 22:17

This shows the necessity of parents' consent in marriage.

According to the dowry of virgins, i.e. in such proportion as the virgin's quality requires; for there was no certain and equal dowry appointed for all women. See Poole on 1Sa_18:25.

Quest. Why is there no punishment for the woman?

Answ. 1. She had no distinct estate, being yet in her father's house.

2. The loss of her virginity was a sufficient punishment, especially in Israel, where it was a great reproach and prejudice.

3. She was not so culpable as the man, both because she was of the weaker sex, and because she was drawn to the sin by the man's persuasion.

Exodus 22:18

i.e. Any person that is in league with the devil, and by his help either doth any mischief, or discovers and practices things above the reach of other men or women. Of which see Exo_7:11 Lev_20:27 Deu_18:10 1Sa_28:9. The word is of the feminine gender, partly because women are most prone to these devilish arts, and most frequently guilty of them; and partly to intimate that no pity should be showed to such offenders, though they were of the weaker sex.

Exodus 22:19

Exodus 22:20

Sacrificeth, or otherwise worshipping, as appears from Deu_17:2-5, and many other places. One act of worship put for all by a very familiar synecdoche.

Destroyed, Heb. anathematized , i.e. esteemed execrable, and as such destroyed without mercy. See Deu_13:15 18:20.

Exodus 22:25

Any of my people, i.e. any Israelite; for it was permitted to take usury of the Gentiles, Deu_23:20.

That is poor: this seems to be added not by way of apposition, as if God's people and the poor were all one, because such are commonly poor; but by way of restriction; for God had promised greatly to bless and enrich the generality of his people, if they by their wickedness did not hinder it, and that there should be few poor among them; yet some such there should be for the trial and exercise of their charity. See Lev_19:10 Deu_15:4,7,11.

Usury; the Hebrew word signifies biting ; so usury is called, not by way of distinction, as if moderate usury were allowed in this case, which is manifestly false, because the borrower is here supposed to be poor, to whom not the use only, but oftentimes even the principal is to be remitted, Luk_6:34,35; but by way of explication, because all usury is of a biting or eating nature, which commonly consumes the person that pays it.

Exodus 22:26

Thy neighbour's; to wit, that is poor, as appears by comparing this with the next verse, where he is supposed to have but one garment, and with Deu_24:12,13.

By that the sun goeth down; because he speaks of such raiment or covering wherein he used to sleep, Exo_22:27. But you are not to think that the creditor would every morning take, and every night redeliver his pledge; and therefore this is rather a prohibition to take any such thing for a pledge as a man hath great and daily need of, by this argument, that if he did take it, he could not keep it. Compare Deu_24:6.

Exodus 22:27

No text from Poole on this verse.

Exodus 22:28

Gods; not gods falsely so called, as some would have it, as appears by 1Ki_18:27 Jer_10:11; but magistrates and governors, whether civil or ecclesiastical, as it is evident both from Act_23:3-5 and from the following words, which explain the former, according to the common use of Scripture, and from the title of gods commonly given to such, as Exo_7:1 Psa_82:6 Joh_10:34,35.

The ruler of thy people. Compare /APC Sir_10:20, Jud_1:8.

Exodus 22:29

Thou shalt not delay beyond the times appointed, lest this delay grow to a total neglect. And delay may here be put for neglect, as that word is used, Deu_7:10 23:21 Hab_2:3; which may seem to be favoured by the following clause, which commands the giving or offering of the first-born without any mention of the hastening or delaying of it.

Thy ripe fruits, Heb thy fulness; and whereas this word is sometimes applied to seed or corn, as Num_18:27, and sometimes to the vintage, as Deu_22:9, the circumstances must determine, as it doth in like cases, how it must be taken; which here seem to restrain it to dry fruits, as corn, &c., because it is opposed to liquors; and so all sorts of fruits are comprehended here. Unless you will make this a usual figure called hendyadis, as judgment and justice, Deu_16:18, is put for judgment of justice, or just judgment; so here the fulness and liquors, for the fulness of thy liquors; and so this may be one kind mentioned for all the rest, than which nothing more frequent.

Shalt thou give unto me, not in kind, but by a price of redemption to be paid to me in their stead.

Exodus 22:30

Likewise, i.e. ye shall offer their first-born.

On the eighth day; not sooner, because it was till then tender and imperfect, and therefore not fit to be offered to God; but it was not tied to that day, for it might be offered afterwards, appears from Lev_22:27, even till it was a year old.

Exodus 22:31

Ye shall be holy, i.e. separated from all filthiness, both moral and ceremonial.

Neither shall ye eat any flesh that is torn of beasts; partly, because the blood was not taken out of it; partly, because the clean beast was ceremonially defiled by the touch of the unclean; and partly, to beget in them a detestation of cruelty, even in the beasts, and much more in men.

Exodus 23:1 EXODUS CHAPTER 23

False witness and report forbidden, Exo_23:1. Right must not be wrested, Exo_23:2. He commands man to do good to his enemies, Exo_23:3-5. Bribes are forbidden, Exo_23:8. The years of sowing appointed, and gathering, Exo_23:10. Of the seventh year, which is the year of rest; God's command concerning it, Exo_23:11. Of the sabbath day, Exo_23:12. Other gods shall not be mentioned, Exo_23:13. Of the three feasts in a year, Exo_23:14. The manner of keeping the feasts, Exo_23:15,16. The times appointed for the males appearing before the Lord, Exo_23:17. No sacrifice to be offered with leavened bread, Exo_23:18. Command concerning the first-fruits, Exo_23:19. God promiseth an Angel to prepare a way, Exo_23:20; who is commanded to be obeyed, Exo_23:21,22. God promising them the land of the Amorites, .& c., Exo_23:23; forbiddeth the honouring of strange gods, Exo_23:24. God promises to bless them that serve him, Exo_23:25-27. Hornets shall expel the enemies of the Israelites, Exo_23:28-30. The borders of the land of Israel, Exo_23:31. A covenant with the heathen is forbidden, Exo_23:32; or to let them inhabit among them, Exo_23:33.

Thou shalt not raise, Heb. not take up , to wit, into thy mouth, as Exo_20:7, either by the first raising, or further spreading of it; or not bear , or endure , as that word oft signifies; not hear it patiently, delightfully, readily, approvingly, as persons are very apt to do; but rather shalt discourage and reprove the spreader of it, according to Pro_25:23. Possibly the Holy Ghost might choose a word of such general signification to show that all these things were forbidden. Put not thine hand, i.e. not conspire or agree with them, which is signified by joining hands, Pro_11:21, not give them a helping hand in it, not encourage them to it by gifts or promises, not assist them by counsel or interest. Others, not swear with them; but swearing is not noted by putting the hand, but by lifting it up.

Exodus 23:2

Thou shalt not follow a multitude, either their counsel or example. But the Hebrew rabbin both here and in the following clause is by some rendered great men, men in power and authority, whom we are commanded not to follow. And as the word is thus used Job_32:9 Jer_41:1, so this sense may seem most probable,

1. Because in the last clause he speaks of causes or controversies, as the Hebrew rib signifies; and matters of judgment, which were not determined by the multitude, but by great men.

2. Because these are opposed to the poor in the next verse.

3. Because the examples of such men are most prevalent.

To do evil, either in general or particular, to work mischief, to oppress or crush another.

Neither shalt thou speak, Heb. answer, when thou art summoned as a witness in any cause.

To wrest judgment, or to turn aside right, or to pervert thyself the verb being taken reciprocally, as hiphil is oft put for hithpahel; or, which is all one, to do perversely, i.e. unrighteously.

Exodus 23:3

Heb. honour , i.e. respect, or prefer his cause when the richer man's cause is more just: the meaning of this and the former verse is, there shall be no respect of persons, whether rich or poor, but an impartial consideration of the cause. See Lev_19:15 Psa_72:1,2.

Exodus 23:4

So far shalt thou be from revenging his injuries, that thou shalt render good to him for them, whereby if thou dost not reconcile him, thou wilt procure peace to thyself, and honour to religion.

Exodus 23:5

This translation depends upon this supposition, that the Hebrew verb azab , which is thrice used in this verse, signifies not only to leave, but also to help , or erect , or lift up , or strengthen , or restore ; which signification of the verb may be proved,

1. From that use of it, Neh_3:8 4:2.

2. From the parallel place, Deu_22:4, where instead of this verb azab is hakim , which is properly to erect or lift up . But if the verb did signify only to leave , it may be thus rendered according to the Hebrew words, then , or therefore , or surely (for all these ways the Hebrew particle vau is used) thou shalt forbear to leave it, to wit, the ass groaning under his burden, or the lifting up of the ass and burden, to him alone; but if thou wilt be leaving, I will appoint thee a better object for it, thou shalt surely leave or lay aside what thou hast against him, i.e. whatsoever controversy thou hast with him, that shall not hinder thee from succouring him or his in any distress.

The Hebrew preposition in , doth oft signify against , as Gen_26:20 Psa_85:4 94:16 Hos_9:8. And it is a concise or short way of speaking, which is very common in the Hebrew language, against him, for what thou hast against him. Or thus, and wouldest forbear to leave , to wit, thy business which thou art going about, for him , i.e. for the sake of him who is thy enemy, as the Hebrew preposition tamed is oft used, as Exo_14:25 Num_25:13 Jos_10:14, &c.; thou shalt repress those malicious desires, and thou shalt surely leave it to be, or to tarry, or to help with him to lift up the ass. So there is only an ellipsis of the verb, which is most common in the Hebrew tongue.

Exodus 23:6

i.e. Of the poor which is among thee, not of the poor Jews only, as some peradventure may conceive; for common right must be done even to the Gentiles. Compare Deu_27:19.

Exodus 23:7

Keep thee far, i.e. abstain from all occasions, degrees, or appearances of it. Compare Job_22:23 Pro_4:14,15.

A false matter, i.e. an unrighteous judgment; for he is speaking to the judges, as appears both by the foregoing and following verses.

Slay thou not; condemn not to death, nor to any other unjust penalty, for the same reason.

I will not justify the wicked, and therefore not condemn the innocent; one contrary being here understood from the other, as is frequent in the book of the Proverbs; and what I do not, thou who actest in my name and stead shouldst not do. Or rather thus, Know, O judge, (for to such he speaks,) if thou dost pronounce such a wicked sentence, I will not justify thee , or hold thee guiltless , i.e. I will severely punish thee, as Exo_20:7.

Exodus 23:8

Thou shalt take no gift, namely, from such whose causes are depending before thee; because if thou dost not sell justice for it, yet thou wilt both seem to do so, and be tempted to do so. Compare Deu_16:19 1Sa_8:3 Pro_17:8,23 19:6.

The wise, or, the open-eyed , and quick-sighted, who in this case cannot see, partly because they will not see, and partly because interest and affection do exceedingly corrupt the judgment, and render it very partial.

The words of the righteous, i.e. the judgment of the righteous judges, i.e. of them who before were such, and are inclined to be so, and probably would be so, were they not tempted with bribes; or of them who by their place should be righteous. So they are called righteous, to admonish them of their duty to be so, and to aggravate their sin when they are unrighteous, and consequently to aggravate the mischief of gifts, which make those unrighteous whose office obligeth them to be righteous. Or thus, the matters or causes of the righteous, which may be understood not of the judges, but of the parties pleading, whose righteous cause is by this means perverted by the judge, and a wrong sentence given.

Exodus 23:9

Ver. 9: The heart of a stranger, i.e. the disposition, dejection, and distress of his heart, which makes him an object of pity, not of malice or mischief.

Exodus 23:10

No text from Poole on this verse.

Exodus 23:11

Thou shalt let it rest, and lie still, i.e. from manuring, ploughing, tilling, and sowing, and reaping also, by comparing Lev_25:3-5. And this God ordained not only for the reason here mentioned, the more comfortable provision of the poor, and for the cattle, but for other weighty reasons; as,

1. That the heart and strength of the land might not be eaten out by continual tillage.

2. That he might both try and exercise, and also secure the obedience of the Israelites.

3. That he might keep them in dependence upon himself, and give to them and all their neighbours a manifest proof of his singular and gracious providence over his people.

4. That by this kind of quit-rent they might be admonished that God alone was the Lord and Proprietary of the land, and they were only tenants at his will.

5. That being freed from their great labours about the land, they might have the more leisure to meditate upon God's works, and to attend upon the law, which was to be solemnly read at this time, Deu_31:10, &c.

That the poor of thy people may eat.

Quest. What had the poor to eat?

Answ. Not only the fruits of the vines, and olives, and other fruit trees, but also all that grew of its own accord, Lev_25:5, from those seeds which in the last reaping-time were scattered here and there, which were much more numerous now than in other years, because God gave a special blessing to the sixth year, whereby it did bring forth the fruit of three years, Lev_25:21, and in years of so great plenty men are generally more negligent in their reaping, and therefore the relics are more.

In like manner thou shalt deal, i.e. thou shalt not prune nor dress them, nor gather and appropriate to thy own use what they shall produce, but shalt leave them to the poor.

Exodus 23:12

This command is here repeated, lest any should think the weekly rest might cease when the whole year was consecrated to rest. There were three sorts of sabbaths to the Jews:

1. Of days.

2. Of years, to wit; the seventh year.

3. Of weeks of years, to wit, the jubilee; and all these are types of the eternal rest in heaven.

Exodus 23:13

Make no mention, to wit, with honour or delight, or without detestation; as fornication is not to be named among saints , Eph_5:3. Or, not mention them in your worship, or in oaths, or in common discourse, and without special occasion, lest the frequent mention of them might keep up their memory, or introduce their worship. Hence the names of idols and idolatrous places were oftentimes changed by the Israelites. See Num_32:38 Jos_23:7 Compare Psa_16:4 Hos_2:17 Zec_13:2.

Exodus 23:14

No text from Poole on this verse.

Exodus 23:15

This may be either,

1. A precept, as it is generally understood, that none should ever come at those times without some offering or other, for the support of the Levites, and of the worship of God; but the determination of this, or what they would give, was left to their choice. Or,

2. A promise to encourage them to come so oft from their remotest habitations to Jerusalem, because they should never appear before God in vain, i.e. to no purpose, or without some benefit, for so the word rekam oft signifies. So it may be parallel to Isa_45:19, I said not unto the seed of Jacob,

Seek ye me in vain . But the former sense is more probable, by comparing this with its parallel place, Deu_16:16,17.

Exodus 23:16

The feast of harvest, i.e. of wheat harvest, for barley harvest was before this time. This feast was otherwise called pentecost.

Quest. How were these the first-fruits, when a sheaf was offered to God in the feast of the passover?

Answ. That sheaf was generally of barley, which was less considerable than their wheat; but this was the first-fruits of their wheat, which was their principal grain, and they had no bread before this time from the growth of that year.

The feast of ingathering, to wit, of all the rest of the fruits of the earth, as of the vines and olives. This was also called the feast of booths , and of tabernacles . See Lev_13:43 Num_29:12 Deu_16:13. All their three feasts had a respect to the harvest, which began in the passover, was carried on at pentecost, and was fully completed and ended in this feast.

In the end of the year; of the common or civil year, which began in September, as the sacred year began in March.

Exodus 23:17

To wit, such as are of competent years, and health, and strength, and such as were at their own dispose; for that servants were not bound to this may seem probable, because none of these concerned were to appear before the Lord empty, or without an offering, but the generality of servants had not any thing to offer. And the care and management of their domestic affairs did require the presence and care of many of their males.

Before the Lord God, i.e. in that place where God shall record his name, Exo_20:24, as the tabernacle or temple.

Exodus 23:18

These clauses most understand of the passover, by comparing this place with its parallel, Exo_34:25, where the passover is mentioned. But the words being here universal, by the laws of interpretation they ought to be universally understood, if they can bear that sense; which here they may, for both these clauses agree to other sacrifices. For as every sacrifice had a minchah , or a meat-offering of flour, attending upon it, and offered with it; so it was expressly cautioned, that no leaven should be in that minchah , Lev_2:11. And the fat of every sacrifice was consecrated to God, Lev_3:16 2Ch_35:14, &c., and was presently to be burnt upon the altar, Lev_7:2,3. And for Exo_34:25, what hinders but what is here more generally prescribed, may be there particularly applied to the passover? and that seems more reasonable, than to make him an idle repetition of the same tiring. And my sacrifice may be here put for my sacrifices , by the common enallage. Moreover, the two principal things which were offered to God in every sacrifice were blood and fat, Lev_17:6,11, &c.

Neither shall the fat of my sacrifice remain until the morning: this, if understood of the passover, may seem superfluous, because nothing of it, neither fat nor lean, was to remain until the morning, Exo_12:10, but all of it was to be eaten, even the purtenance thereof, Exo_23:9, and that, for aught I see, without any exception of the fat, as there was in other sacrifices, Le 16. And therefore in that parallel place, Exo_34:25, where the passover is mentioned, there is not a word of the fat , but only it is said in the general, neither shall the sacrifice of the feast of the passover be left until the morning . And in that 2Ch_35:14, where there is mention of the fat, it is manifestly restrained to the burnt-offerings, which are there distinguished from the passover, Exo_23:11,12.

Exodus 23:19

This seems to be a general rule, extending to all the fruits which the earth first produced; in every kind of which the very first are here enjoined to be offered unto God, before they should presume to eat any of them. It may seem to be repeated here, where the year of rest is mentioned to leach them the first-fruits were to be given to God of all that the earth produced, not only by their labour and seed, as might be thought from Exo_23:16, but also of its own accord, as is here implied.

He names one kind, under which he understands a lamb, or a calf, &c., according to the use of Scripture style. This law many understand literally, and that it is forbidden to them, because the idolaters had such a custom, whereof yet there seems to be no sufficient proof; nor, if there were, doth it seem to be a rite of that importance or probability to entice the Israelites to imitate it, that there needed a particular law against this, more than against a hundred such ridiculous usages which were among the heathen, and are not taken notice of in the book of God's laws. The words may be rendered thus,

Thou shalt not seethe, or roast , (for the word bashal signifies to roast as well as to boil, as it is evident from Deu_16:7)

a kid, being, or whilst it is (which is to be understood, there being nothing more common than an ellipsis of the verb substantive) in his mother's milk; which it may be said to be, either,

1. Whilst it sucks its mother's milk; and so it may admit of a twofold interpretation:

(1.) That this is to be understood of the passover, of which most conceive he had now spoken, Exo_23:18, in which they used either a lamb or a kid, Exo_12:5, and then the word bashal must be rendered roast .

(2.) That this speaks not of sacrifice to God, wherein sucking creatures were allowed, Exo_22:30 Lev_22:27 1Sa_7:9, but of man's use; and so God ordained this, partly because this was unwholesome food, and principally to restrain cruelty, even towards brute creatures, and luxury in the use of them. Or rather,

2. Whilst it is very tender and young, rather of a milky than of a fleshy substance, like that young kid of which Juvenal thus speaks, Qui plus lactis habet quam sanguinis , i.e. which hath more milk than blood in it. And it may be said to be in its mother's milk , by a usual hypallage, when its mother's milk is in it , i.e. whilst the milk it sucks as it were, remains in it undigested and unconverted into flesh, even as a man is oft said to be in the Spirit , when indeed the Spirit is in him . And what is here indefinitely prohibited, is elsewhere particularly explained, and the time defined, to wit, that it be not offered to God before it was eight days old. And this interpretation may receive light and strength from hence, that the law of the firstfruits, which both here and Exo_34:26 goes immediately before this law, doth in Exo_22:30 immediately go before that law of not offering them before the eighth day, which implies, that both of them speak concerning the same thing, to wit, the first-fruits or first-born of the cattle, which were not to be offered to God while they were in their mother's milk, saith this place, or till they were eight days old, saith that place. And consequently, if they might not be offered to God, they might not be used by men for food.

Exodus 23:20

To wit, Christ, the Angel of the covenant, as may be gathered both from the following words, because pardon of sin, which is God's prerogative, Mar_2:7, is here ascribed to him, and God's name is in him , and by comparing other scriptures, as Exo_32:34 Act_7:38,39 1Co_10:9. See Exo_13:21 14:19.

Exodus 23:21

He will not pardon your transgressions, i.e. he will severely punish you for them, by a common meiosis, as Exo_20:7. Understand, if you continue obstinate in your sins.

My name is in him, Heb. is in his inward parts , i.e. is intimately united to him, according to Joh_14:11,

I am in the Father, and the Father in me. It not only signifies that he acts in his name, and by his power and authority, which even the apostles did, and other ministers of the gospel do, and therefore it is unreasonable to think no more is ascribed to this Angel; but that his Divine nature or essence is in him, whence he is called the Lord our Righteousness , Jer_23:6; and God, who will not give his glory to another , Isa_42:8, hath given it to Christ, that all men should honour the Son even as they honour the Father , Joh_5:23, which never was nor can be said of any angel without blasphemy. Add to this, that the word name is oft put for the thing or being, whether it be human or Divine, as is manifest from Deu_28:58 Psa_20:1 115:1 Isa_30:27 Act_1:15 Rev_3:4 11:13. And so it must be here, because this name is not said to be given to him , as it would be, if it were properly taken; but to be in him ; or in his inwards , which agrees well to the Divine nature or essence, but not to the mere name.

Exodus 23:22

All that I speak; all that I have already commanded, and shall further prescribe by him unto Moses.

Exodus 23:23

Exodus 23:24

Thou shalt not bow down nor serve them , i.e. give them neither outward worship with thy body, nor inward with thy mind, nor follow their example in the worship of idols. Them shalt overthrow them , i.e. the people, lest thou be insnared by their counsel or example, and quite break down their images, or statues, or pillars, or any thing else erected in honour to their false gods. See Gen_28:18 35:20.

Exodus 23:25

Thy bread and thy water, i.e. thy meat and thy drink, that they shall be able to nourish thee, and give thee comfort, which without my blessing they will never be able to do.

Exodus 23:26

Here was a double mercy. God gave them strength both to conceive, and to retain the conception till the natural and proper time of bringing forth came.

The number of thy days I will fulfil; I will preserve thee so as thou shalt live as long as the course of nature and temper of thy body will permit, when evil men shall not live out half their days, Psa_55:23.

Exodus 23:27

My fear, i.e. a great terror, or a terror wrought by me. See Exo_33:2 Jos_24:12

Exodus 23:28

Hornets, properly so called, as may be gathered from Jos_24:12 Deu_7:20. Hornets are of themselves very troublesome and mischievous; but these it is very probable were like those Egyptian flies, Exo_8:21, of an extraordinary bigness and perniciousness. Nor is it strange that such creatures did drive many of these people from their habitations; for many heathen writers give us instances of some people driven from their seats by frogs, others by mice, others by bees and wasps; of which see Herodotus, Diodorus, Pliny, Elian, Justin, &c. He names these three people, either for all the rest, because they were the most potent about the time of Israel's first entrance into Canaan, and gave them most trouble; or because these three were more infested with hornets than the other nations, as being more numerous and dangerous.

Exodus 23:29

Desolate, void of inhabitants in a great measure, because thy present number is not sufficient to occupy and manage their whole land.

Exodus 23:30

Exodus 23:31

Compare this place with Gen_15:18 Num_34:3. The sea of the Philistines, i.e. the Mediterranean or midland sea, upon whose coast the land of the Philistines lay. The desert, of Egypt or Arabia; whereof see Gen_16:7 Exo_15:22. The river, to wit, Euphrates, as it is expressed Deu_1:7 11:24, which is oft called the river by way of eminency. All within these bounds were given them by God, but upon conditions, which they manifestly broke, and therefore were for the most part confined to a much narrower compass.

Exodus 23:32

To worship them, as they made a covenant with Jehovah to worship him. The sense is, Thou shalt not engage thyself, either to the people or to their gods, but shalt root out both.

Exodus 23:33

For if thou serve; or, for thou wilt serve ; this will be the fruit of thy cohabitation with them, thou wilt thereby be drawn to idolatry.

It will surely, or, and assuredly this will be a snare ; an occasion of further sin and utter ruin.

Exodus 24:1 EXODUS CHAPTER 24

Moses, Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu are commanded to appear before the Lord, Exo_24:1. Who was to come near the Lord, Exo_24:2. Moses buildeth an altar and twelve pillars, Exo_24:4. He sends young men to sacrifice unto the Lord, Exo_24:5. He sprinkles the altar with the blood, Exo_24:6. The covenant being read, the people promise obedience, Exo_24:7. The people are sprinkled with blood, Exo_24:8. Moses and the elders of Israel see the Lord, Exo_24:9,10. God promises to give to Moses tables of stone, Exo_24:12. Moses and Joshua go up into the mount, Exo_24:13. Aaron and Hur took care for the people in the mean time, Exo_24:14. God's glory on the mount, Exo_24:15,16; appeareth like devouring fire, Exo_24:17. Moses remains there forty days and forty nights, Exo_24:18.

After thou hast gone down and acquainted the people with my will, and received their answer, then come up again. This sense is gathered from the repetition of this command after that was done, Exo_24:12. Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu; Aaron and his two eldest sons, whom by this special honour and favour he prepared for that office to which they were to be called, Exo 28. Seventy of the elders of Israel; not the seventy governors which were chosen after this time, as appears from Num_11:16, compared with Exo_24:14; but seventy persons selected by Moses out of those rulers chosen and mentioned Exo_18:25; and possibly these were the chief heads of those several families which went with Jacob into Egypt, which were about seventy. See Gen_46:26,27. Worship ye afar off. Though they may come up into the mount further than the people, yet do thou, and let them especially, keep their distance; and what worship either thou or they shall offer to me, shall be performed afar off from the top of the mountain, whither thou only shalt be admitted, and that not to pray to me, but only to receive laws and oracles from me. See Exo_24:2.

Moses alone, i.e. without the persons now mentioned, though not without Joshua his minister, as some conceive from Exo_24:13, though even there Moses seems to ascend into the mount without Joshua.

Neither shall the people go up with him to any part of the mount, as Aaron, and Nadab, &c. did, but they shall tarry at the bottom. See Exo_19:12.

Exodus 24:3

Moses came down from the mount to the people, after he had received the laws from God.

All the words which the Lord hath said will we do: this they so readily and rashly promise, because they were not sensible of their own weakness, and because they did not understand the comprehensiveness, and spirituality, and strictness of God's law, but thought it consisted only in the external performances and abstinences expressed.

Exodus 24:4

Moses wrote, to wit, in a book, Heb_9:19. And the ten commandments God himself wrote also in tables of stone, Exo_31:18.

Builded an altar; representing God in Christ, as one party in the covenant.

Twelve pillars; representing the people of Israel, the other party. So here are the outward signs and symbols of a covenant made between God and the Israelites.

Exodus 24:5

It matters not whether they were the first-born, or others; it is sufficient that they were persons appointed and authorized for the present service, not without God's direction.

Peace-offerings of oxen; one kind, as the principal is named for all; for there were offered also goats, as appears both from Heb_9:19, and from hence, that burnt-offerings were usually made of the goats, Lev_1:10 Num_7:28.

Exodus 24:6

Half of the blood of the beasts killed, which for conveniency of sprinkling was mixed with a little water, Heb_9:19, whereby also Christ was most fitly represented, who came by water and blood, 1Jo_5:6.

Half of the blood he sprinkled on the altar, to signify, as well that God was appeased and atoned by this blood, as it represented the blood of Christ, as also that Christ was sanctified with his own blood, Heb_9:12.

Exodus 24:7

The book of the covenant, wherein Moses had written the conditions of this covenant, to wit, the words and laws of God, above, Exo_24:4.

In the audience of the people, i.e. in the hearing of a great number of them, or of some in the name of all the people, by whom it was read, or otherwise published to all the people successively.

Exodus 24:8

Moses took the blood; the other half of the blood, which was put in the basins for this end, Exo_24:6.

On the people; either upon the twelve pillars representing the people; or upon the people's representatives, to wit, the elders mentioned Exo_24:1, as when the people are commanded to lay on their hands, the elders do it in their name and stead, Lev_4:15 Deu_21:2; or upon those of the people which are nearest him, which was imputed to all the rest, and was to be taken by them as if it had reached unto them all. Now this sprinkling of the blood upon the people did signify,

1. Their ratification of the covenant on their parts, and their secret wishing of the effusion of their own blood if they did not keep it.
2. Their sprinkling of their consciences with the blood of Christ, and their obtaining redemption, justification, and access to God through it alone. See Heb_9:20,22 13:20.

The blood of the covenant, whereby the covenant is made and confirmed, as was usual both in Scripture, Mat_26:28 Luk_22:20, and among heathens.

Exodus 24:9

In obedience to that command of God given Exo_24:1.

Exodus 24:10

They saw the God of Israel; not any visible resemblance of the Divine nature, which is expressly denied, Deu_4:15 1Ti_6:16, and was refused to Moses when he desired it, Exo_33:18,20, and therefore surely would never be granted to the elders of Israel; but some glorious appearance or token of God's special presence; or rather, the Second Person in the Trinity, who now showed himself to them in a human and glorious shape, as an essay and testimony of his future incarnation. This may seem probable,

1. Because here is mention of his feet.
2. Because this way of Christ's appearance was not unusual. See Ge 18, &c.
3. Because the person who delivered the law in Sinai was Christ, as appears from Act_7:38, though he be there called an angel, a name oft given to Christ, as hath been formerly showed.

A sapphire stone is of a clear sky colour, mixed with golden spots like stars in the sky.

In his clearness, or, for clearness . A clear sky in prophetic style signifying God's favour, as a cloudy sky notes his anger.

Exodus 24:11

The nobles; or, separated or select ones , i.e. the persons who were singled out to go up with Moses, Exo_24:1,9, the same of whom it is said here, and Exo_24:10, that they saw God .

He laid not his hand, i.e. did not hurt or destroy them, as they might expect according to the vulgar opinion, Gen_16:13 32:20, &c., and the conscience of their own guilt, as being now before their Lord and Judge. And so the phrase of putting or stretching forth the hand is most frequently used, as Gen_37:22 1Sa_26:11,23 Es 2:21 Job_1:11,12 Psa 138:7, &c.

Did eat and drink; so far they were from being destroyed, that they were not affrighted at this glorious appearance of God, but were refreshed and comforted by it, and did joyfully eat and drink together in God's presence, celebrating the sacred feast made of the remnant of the peace-offerings, according to the manner. Thus God gave them a taste of his grace and mercy in this covenant, and an assurance that he would not deal with them according to the rigours of the law, but for the sake of the blood of Christ typically represented there, would graciously pardon and accept all those that sincerely, though imperfectly, obey him.

Be there, i.e. abide, as that verb is used 1Ti_4:15, and elsewhere.

Tables of stone; he chose that material, partly as very durable, yet so that it was capable of being broken, which God, foreseeing their wickedness, intended to do; and partly for signification, to note the hardness of their hearts, upon which no impression could be made but by the finger of God.

A law, and commandments, or, the law ; and because that is ambiguous to the moral, and ceremonial, and judicial, he adds, even the commandment , or commandments , to wit, the ten commandments, so called by way of eminency, for these only were written by God upon the stony tables, as appears by Exo_34:28; the rest were written by Moses in a book, above, Exo_24:4.

Exodus 24:13

Joshua did not go up with Moses to the top of the mount, as is sufficiently implied both here and above, Exo_24:1,2; but abode in some lower place, waiting for Moses's return, as appears from Exo_32:17. And there Joshua abode forty days, not fasting all the while, but having, as the rest had, manna for his meat, and for his drink, water out of the brook that descended out of the mount , as we read Deu_9:21.

Exodus 24:14

For us, i.e. for me and Joshua, and here , i.e. in the camp, where he was when he spake these words; for it was where not only Aaron and Hur, but the people might come, as it here follows, and therefore not upon the mount. Moses had made

Aaron and Hur joint-commissioners, to determine hard causes which were brought to them from the elders, according to the order, Exo_18:22. Some make Aaron the ecclesiastical head, and Hur the civil head; but Aaron was not authorized for ecclesiastical matters till Exo 28$.

Exodus 24:16

The glory of the Lord, i.e. the tokens of his glorious presence in the fire, Exo_24:17 Deu_4:36.

The cloud covered it from the eyes of the people.

The seventh day; so long God made Moses wait, either to exercise his humility, devotion, and dependence upon God; or to prepare him by degrees for so great a work; or because this was the sabbath day, called therefore the seventh with an emphatical article; and God might choose that day for the beginning of that glorious work, to put the greater honour upon it, and oblige the people to a stricter observance of it. So it was upon a Lord's day that St. John had his revelation delivered to him, Rev_1:10.

Exodus 24:17

He saith

like it, for it was not devouring fire, as appears by Moses's long abode in it. Note here, whatsoever the elders of Israel saw before, the people saw no similitude of God, as Moses observes, Deu_4:15.

Exodus 24:18

Into the midst of the cloud, the God that called him enabling him to enter and abide there; whereas, when he was left to himself, he could not enter into the tabernacle, Exo_40:35.

Forty days and forty nights; in which he did neither eat nor drink, Exo_34:28 Deu_9:9,18; whereby it seems most probable the six days mentioned Exo_24:16 were a part of these forty days, because Moses being in perpetual expectation of God's call, seems not to have had leisure for eating and drinking, nor provision neither. Besides, he is not said to be in the midst of the cloud so long, but only in the mount, where he was those six days, Exo_24:15,16.

Exodus 25:1 EXODUS CHAPTER 25

Moses is commanded to take a free-will offering to set up the tabernacle, and of what, Exo_25:1-7. God commands him to make a sanctuary, Exo_25:8; chargeth him how and whereof to make a tabernacle, Exo_25:9. The form of the ark, Exo_25:10-16. The mercy-seat, Exo_25:17-22. The table for the shew-bread, with other utensils, Exo_25:23-30. Of the candlestick, with its employment, and other furnitures for the tabernacle, Exo_25:31-39. Moses is commanded to make it answerable to the pattern which he saw in the mount, Exo_25:40.

Having delivered the moral and judicial laws, he now comes to the ceremonial law, wherein he sets down all things very minutely and particularly, whereas in the other laws he was content to lay down general rules, and leaveth many other things to be by analogy deduced from them. The reason of the difference seems to be this, that the light of reason implanted in all men, gives him greater help in the discovery of moral and judicial things than in ceremonial matters, or in the external way and manner of God's worship; which is a thing depending wholly upon God's institution, and not left to man's invention, which is a very incompetent judge of those things, as appears from hence, because the wittiest men, destitute of God's revelation, have been guilty of most foolery in their devices of God's worship.

Blue, or sky-coloured ; but here you must not understand the mere colours, which could not be offered, but some materials proper for the work, and of the colours here mentioned, to wit, wool, or threads, or some suchlike things, as appears from Heb_9:19, and from the testimony of the Jews. Fine linen, which was of great esteem in ancient times, and used by priests and great officers of state. See Gen_41:42 Rev_19:8,14.

Goats' hair; Heb. goats . But that their hair is understood, is apparent from the nature of the thing, and from the use of the word in that sense in other places.

incense; Heb. incense of spices, or sweet odours ; so called to distinguish it from the incense of the fat of sacrifices, which was burnt upon the altar.

Exodus 25:7

Onyx stones, or, sardonyx stones . Note, that the signification of the Hebrew names of the several stones are not agreed upon by the Jews at this day, and much more may we safely be ignorant of them, the religious use of them being now abolished.

Stones to be set in the ephod; stones of fulness, or filling, or perfecting stones ; so called either because they did perfect and adorn the ephod, or because they filled up the ouches, or the hollow places, which were left vacant for this purpose. What the ephod and breastplate were, see Exo 28.

Exodus 25:16

To wit, the two tables of stone, wherein the decalogue was written, called the testimony here, and Exo_30:6 Lev_16:13; and more fully the tables of the testimony , Exo_31:18 Num_1:50; because they were witnesses of that covenant made between God and his people, whence they are called the tables of the covenant, Deu_9:9, and the ark, the ark of the covenant , Num_10:33. This being as a public record both of God's mercy promised to them, and of the duty and conditions required of them. See Exo_16:34.

Exodus 25:17

Mercy-seat, or, propitiatory ; which seems from the sameness of dimensions to be nothing else but the covering of the ark, upon which God is said to sit, whence the ark is called God's footstool. This covering is a manifest type of Christ, who is therefore called the propitiation , or propitiatory , Rom_3:25 1Jo_2:2 4:10, because he interposeth himself between God our Judge, and the law, by which we all stand condemned and accursed, Gal_3:10,13; that God may not deal rigorously with us according to that law, but mercifully for his sake who hath fulfilled the law, and therefore boldly presents himself to his Father on our behalf.

Exodus 25:18

Figures of human shape, in which alone the angels used to appear; but they had wings, to signify their expedition in God's work and messages. And between these angels God is said to sit and dwell. So this place was a representation of heaven, where God sitteth and dwelleth among the cherubims and other glorious angels.

Of beaten work; not made of several parcels joined together, as images commonly are, nor yet melted and cast in a frame or mould, but beaten by the hammer out of one continued piece of gold, possibly to note the exact unity or indivisibility and the simplicity of the evangelical nature.

i.e. Of one and the same piece of massy gold, out of which the cherubims were made.

Exodus 25:20

Towards God, who is supposed to sit there, whose face the angels in heaven always behold, and upon whom their eyes are fixed to observe and receive his commands; and towards Christ, the true propitiatory, which mystery they desire to look into , 1Pe_1:12; not envying mankind their near and happy relation to him, but taking pleasure in the contemplation of it.

Exodus 25:29

The dishes, in which the bread and frankincense upon it were put, Lev_24:7. Of this sort there were twelve, one for every loaf.

Spoons, in which incense was put, as appears from Num_7:14, and by which incense was either put into the dishes or taken out of them, as occasion required.

Covers; so the Hebrew word is used, Exo_37:16 Num_4:7. Herewith either the bread, or incense, or both, were covered.

Bowls, to cover the same things. So this and the former were two several sorts of covers, the one deeper than the other, one to cover the bread, another the incense. Or, bowls thereof, to pour out withal , to wit, liquid things, as wine and oil, when they were offered. See Gen_35:14. Or these last words may relate not only to the bowls, but the other things, here mentioned, and may be thus rendered, wherewith it , to wit, the table, shall be covered, as indeed it was in a manner quite covered with these vessels.

Exodus 25:30

Heb. Bread of faces, or of the presence , so called, because it was constantly placed in God's presence. This bread was divided into twelve loaves, one for every tribe; and they were in their name presented to God in the nature of an offering, as the frankincense shows, as a public acknowledgment that they received all their bread or food, both corporal and spiritual, from God's hand, and were to use it as in God's presence

Exodus 25:31

Thou shalt make, either by thyself, or by some other person whom thou shalt cause to make it.

His shaft; the trunk, or main body of it.

His knops, or, apples , made in form of a pomegranate.

His flowers shall be of the same, to wit, beaten out of the same piece by the hammer. Compare Exo_25:36.

Exodus 25:32

In every one of which was a lamp, and there was a seventh lamp in the chief stem of it, as appears from Exo_25:37. And all these together represent the seven Spirits of God , Rev_1:4 4:5 5:6; or the Spirit of God, the great Enlightener of the church, with his sevenfold or various gifts and operations.

In the candlestick, i.e. in the shaft or trunk of the candlestick, which is here distinguished from its branches, shall be four bowls, whereas there were but three in each of the branches.

Exodus 25:35

And, to complete the number of four, mentioned in the foregoing verse, we must understand that there was another knop and bowl and flower in the upper part of the shaft, above all the branches, as the rules of proportion, and common use in making such things, will easily evince.

They shall light the lamps, whom I shall appoint for that work. Over against it, i.e. either,

1. The table of shewbread. Or rather,

2. The candlestick, as it is expressed, Num_8:2, where by the candlestick you are to understand, as here, Exo_25:33,34, the stem or main body of it; and the sense is, that the lamps shall be so placed, that they and their light may look towards that stem; unless you will suppose that the seven lamps were distinct and separated from the candlestick, and fastened to the sides of the tabernacle in several places, and all giving light to or over against the great candlestick, which was in the midst, as the candlestick did over-against them, which is also, now usual among us.

Exodus 26:1 EXODUS CHAPTER 26

Moses is commanded to make the tabernacle with ten curtains, Exo_26:1 The length and breadth of the curtains, Exo_26:2. The form of the curtains, Exo_26:3-6. He is commanded to make eleven curtains of goats' hair, Exo_26:7. The manner of the making and placing them, Exo_26:8-14. Of what the tabernacle is to be made, Exo_26:15. The manner of its making, with other utensils, Exo_26:16-30. Of the veil, and what it is to be made of, Exo_26:31. The fashion of it, Exo_26:32,33. The hanging for the tent-door, Exo_26:36.

The tabernacle, or tent ; a little house wherein the ark, table, and candlestick were to be placed. And scarlet, i.e. with materials of these colours, to wit, wool, as may be gathered from hence, that it is opposed to linen. Compare Exo_25:4. Of cunning work, either

Which were of another fashion than the former, as may be gathered both from the distinct nomination and use of them, and from the laws of building. And whereas the rest were but single boards, these were double, for greater strength and conveniency of joining them together.

Exodus 26:24

Coupled together, Heb. as twins , i.e. equal and equally joined together, and exactly answering one to the other.

Unto one ring, which ring was exactly in the corner, and with the help of the bars kept the corner boards, and with them the other boards of the tabernacle, close together. But you must note, that here were two rings in each corner, the one in the upper, the other in the lower parts.

Exodus 26:25

Exodus 26:26

By bars you may understand either,

1. Several rows or orders of bars, one bar beginning at the end of the other, and each containing four cubits in length, and altogether twenty cubits, which was the length of the tabernacle; or,

2. Single bars, which seem truer,

1. Because the word signifies bars , not rows of bars ; and why should we go from the proper signification of the word without cause?

2. If bars be put for rows of bars, there must be five rows of bars on a side, there being so many bars said to be on a side. But the abettors of that opinion allow only four rows of bars on a side; and it is apparent the middle bar, which is one of the five, is but one single bar, Exo_26:28, and therefore it may be presumed the rest were so too.

3. The name of the middle bar implies, that of the other four bars, two were above it, and two below it.

Object. But if they were each single bars, reaching the whole length of the building, why is it said peculiarly of the middle bar, that it should reach from end to end , or from extremity to extremity ? Exo_26:28.

Answ. This may be peculiarly said of this, either because the other four might want something of the just length of the building, or because the middle bar might stand out beyond the two ends of it, for conveniency of the carriage of the building.

Exodus 26:27

There was but one side westward. Either therefore here is a transposition of the Hebrew words, which is usual, and the words are thus to be placed and rendered, westward, looking to both sides , or, westward , according to both the other sides , now mentioned, to note that the number and length of bars in the west end should be equal to those on either of the other sides; or here is an enallage of the number, the dual or plural for the singular, of which there are many examples, and so the words are to be rendered, for the side looking westward .

Exodus 26:28

In the midst of the boards; not within the thickness of the boards, as the Jews conceive, but in the length of them; as appears,

1. Because this bar, as well as the rest, was gilded, Exo_26:29, which was frivolous if it were never seen
2. Because all the bars had rings made to receive and hold them up, Exo_26:29.

Exodus 27:1 EXODUS CHAPTER 27

Of the brazen altar, Exo_27:1-8. Of the court of the tabernacle, Exo_27:9-17; the length of it, Exo_27:18. Of the lamps burning always, Exo_27:20.

This was not that for incense, but another for sacrifices.

Exodus 27:2

The horns were elevated above the body of the altar, in form either of pyramids or spires, or rather of horns, as the word signifies; nor is there any necessity; of departing from the proper signification. These were not only for ornament, but for use also, either to keep things put upon it from falling, or that beasts to be offered might be bound to them. See Psa_118:27.

His horns shall be of the same, of the same piece with the altar, for its use required strength. With brass; With plates of brass of competent thickness, both above the wood and under it, that the fire might not take hold of the wood.

Exodus 27:3

Basons, to receive the blood of the sacrifices, which they were to sprinkle.

Flesh-hooks, wherewith they took flesh out of the pot in which it was seethed, as 1Sa_2:14. But this seems not proper here, because the flesh was never boiled upon the altar, but in other places appointed for that use. And the Hebrew word is general, and may signify either tongs or fire-forks.

Firepans, in which they carried live coals from this altar to that of incense, as occasion required.

Exodus 27:4

A grate of net-work, which was competently strong and thick, this being as it were the hearth of the altar, upon which they laid both the wood and the sacrifices, and it was full of holes, through which the blood and ashes might fall down into the place appointed for them.

Upon the net, or rather at , or beside , or under the net, for so the rings were placed, as their use shows, and the Hebrew preposition al is oft so used.

Four brazen rings, which were either,

1. Peculiar to the grate, which by these was carried apart from the altar, having the perpetual fire kept in it; for had it been carried with the altar, the cloth wherewith the altar was covered, Num_4:13, would have been endangered by the fire. Or,

2. Common to the altar, to which these were fixed on the outside, as on the inside to the grate, that by them the grate might be both kept even and upright, and also carried together with the altar, and that with such caution that the fire included might not hurt the covering-cloth, which was not difficult to do.

Exodus 27:5

Under the compass, i.e. within the square and hollow space of the altar.

That the net may be even to the midst of the altar, or, and the net shall be at (the Hebrew ad being here used for el , as Hos_14:2 Joe_2:12 Amo_4:6,8), the midst of the altar. And these words seem added to explain the word beneath, to show that as it was not to be at the top, so neither at the bottom of the altar, but in the midst of it.

On the twenty pillars the hangings were fastened by the hooks here mentioned.

To burn always, i.e. at all the times. appointed; daily, though not continually; as the lamb offered only every morning and every evening is called a continual burnt-offering , Exo_29:42. For that these were lighted only at the evening, may seem probable from the next verse, and from Exo_27:21 30:8 Lev_24:3 1Sa_3:3 2Ch_13:11. But because Josephus and Philo, who were eye-witnesses of the temple service, and had no temptation to lie in this matter, expressly affirm, that some lights did burn in the day-time; and it may seem indecent and improbable that God should dwell and the priests minister in darkness, and there were no windows to give light to the tabernacle by day; it may be granted that some few burnt in the day, and all in the night, and that the latter is only mentioned in the places alleged, as being a more solemn time when all are lighted.

Exodus 27:21

The tabernacle of the congregation was so called, because there the people used to meet not only one with another, but with God also. See Exo_25:22 Num_17:4. Others render it, in the tabernacle of witness , because there God declared his mind and will, and man's duty. Without the veil , to wit, the second veil, in the holy place.

Before the testimony; a short speech for before the ark of the testimony , as it is elsewhere more largely called: compare Exo_25:16.

Shall order it, to wit, the lamp, or the lights, taking care that there be a constant supply of them, and that they burn well.

Exodus 28:1 EXODUS CHAPTER 28

Aaron and his sons ordained for the priest's office, Exo_28:1. His holy garments, Exo_28:2-5. The ephod, Exo_28:6. Curious girdle, Exo_28:8. Exodus 28:2

Garments to be used only in holy ministrations, for glory and for beauty, i.e. such as are glorious and beautiful; partly to mind the people of the dignity and excellency of their office and employment; and principally to represent the glorious robes wherewith Christ is both clothed himself, and clotheth all his people, who are made priests unto God.

Exodus 28:3

All that are wise-hearted, i.e. skilful artists. The Hebrews make the heart, not the brain, the seat of wisdom See Job_9:4.

Whom I have filled; either,

1. By my ordinary providence and assistance, giving them both ability and opportunity to learn the arts; or rather,
2. By extraordinary inspiration, which was necessary for the Israelites, whose base and laborious drudgery took off their minds and hands from all ingenious studies and arts. To consecrate him, i.e. to be an outward sign of my calling and consecration of him to my holy service. A metonymical expression.

Exodus 28:4

An ephod was a short upper garment, made without sleeves, which was girt about the body. And it was twofold; the one made of fine linen, which was common not only to all the priests, as 1Sa_2:18 22:18; but to some others also upon solemn and sacred occasions, as 2Sa_6:14: the other made of divers stuffs and colours, peculiar to the high priest; the parts whereof were not sewed, but tied together.

A robe; an upper garment like a surplice.

A broidered coat; an under coat curiously wrought with circular works like eyes, as the word notes, and richly adorned with gems and other things.

A mitre; a kind of bonnet or cap for the covering of the head, supposed to be something like a Turkish turban for the form of it.
A

girdle, to enclose and fasten all the other garments, which were loose in themselves, that he might be more expeditious in his work.

The two shoulder-pieces were two parts of the ephod going up from the body of the ephod, the one before, the other behind, which when the priest had put over his head, were tied together, and covered the priest's shoulders, and part of his back and breast.

Exodus 28:8

The girdle of the ephod was for the closer fastening and girding of it. Which is upon it: this is added to distinguish it from the other girdle, Exo_28:4, which was to gird all the garments, and was tied in a lower place.

Of the same; either,

2. Of the same kind of materials and workmanship, as the following words explain it.

Before the Lord; into the holy of holies: an evident type of Christ's entering into heaven with the names and in the stead of his people, the true Israel, upon his shoulders, and presenting them to his Father with acceptance.

For a memorial; not so much to the high priest, that he should not forget to pray for them, as to God, that he, beholding their names there, according to his order, might graciously remember them, and show mercy unto them. Such a memorial to God was the rainbow, Gen_9:13. Such things are spoken of God after the manner of men.

Exodus 28:14

At the ends, or, with ends ; i.e. not like chains that are fastened about one's neck or arm, which seem to have no end; but two distinct chains, with two several ends, both hanging downward: compare Exo_28:22. The Syriac render it double , others equal , or of equal length.

Exodus 28:15

This was a square and curiously wrought piece put over the ephod upon one's breast, called of judgment , because from thence the Israelites were to expect and receive their judgment, and the mind of God in all those weighty matters of war or peace wherein they consulted God for direction.

Exodus 28:16

It was doubled for greater strength, that it might better support and secure the precious stones which were put into it, and that it might receive the Urim and Thummim, Lev_8:8.

Exodus 28:17

It is needless to trouble the reader with the explication of these stones, which the Jewish doctors themselves are not agreed in, seeing this use of them is now abolished. It may suffice to know that they were precious stones severally allotted to the names of the several tribes, according to God's good pleasure, possibly with respect to some disposition or concernment of each tribe, which at this distance we cannot learn.

Some think these are the same with those mentioned Exo_28:14. But it seems improbable and without example that God should in this short description, and that within a few verses, give a new and second command concerning the same thing. It may rather seem that these are other chains fastened to the breastplate, as it follows, whereas those chains, Exo_28:14, seem to have been fastened to the ephod, to those ouches made in it for that purpose, Exo_28:13. And whereas these chains also are fastened in the said ouches, Exo_28:25, two several chains may well enough be fastened in divers parts of each of the ouches; and there seems to be this difference between the chains, those chains mentioned Exo_28:14 are said to be fastened only at one end, even to the ouches of the ephod, whence they might hang down loosely, whereas these are manifestly fastened at both ends, Exo_28:24,25.

Christ, the great High Priest, towards his people, and how mindful he is of them, and of all their concerns, even when he is in the holy of holies, that is, in heaven, where he remembers them still, and incessantly intercedes for them.

Unto the holy place, i.e. into the most holy place; the positive degree being put for the superlative.

Exodus 28:30

The words Urim and Thummim confessedly signify light, or illuminations and perfections, which may be understood either of two differing things, the one noting the knowledge, the other the perfection, to wit, of virtues and graces, which were required in the high priest, and which were in Christ in an eminent degree, and from him alone communicated to his people; or of one and the same thing, noting perfect light or illumination, by a figure called hendyadis, oft used in Scripture, as Deu_16:18 Mat_4:16, compared with Job_10:21 Joh_3:5 Act_17:25, compared with Gen_2:7. Which may seem probable,

1. Because the great use of this instrument was to give light and direction in dubious and difficult cases, and not to confer any other perfection upon any person.

2. Because sometimes both these words and things are expressed only by one of them, and that is by Urim, Num_27:21 1Sa_28:6, which signifies lights. And the name seems to be given from the effect, because hence the Israelites had clear light, and perfect or certain direction in dark and doubtful matters. But the great question is, what this Urim and Thummim was, and in what manner God answered by it; which God having on purpose concealed from us, and not set down the matter or form of it, as he hath done of all the other particulars, it may seem curiosity and presumption for men solicitously to inquire, and positively to determine. Many conceive it was nothing else but the twelve precious stones, wherein the names of the twelve tribes were engraven, and that the answer of God was composed out of those letters which either show more brightly, or thrust themselves further outward, than the rest did; which seems a frivolous and ungrounded conjecture, both because all the letters of the alphabet were not there, and so all answers could not be given by them; and because it was shut up within the duplicature of the breastplate, and therefore could not be seen by the high priest; and there is not a word to signify that he was to take it out thence, and look upon it, but rather the contrary is evident. And that this Urim and Thummim are not the same thing with those twelve stones may be easily proved:

1. Because the stones were set and engraven in the breastplate, Exo_28:17,21, this was only put into it, which is a word of quite different and more loose and large signification, and therefore probably doth not design the same thing.

2. It is not likely that in such a brief account of the sacred utensils the same command would be repeated again, especially in more dark and general words than it was mentioned before. And how could Moses now put it in, when the workmen had fastened it there before? or why should he be required to put it in the breastplate, when it was fastened to it already, and could not without violence be taken from it?

3. Because the stones were put in by the workmen, Exo_39:10, the Urim and Thummim by Moses himself, Lev_8:8. It is objected, that where the stones are mentioned there is no mention of Urim and Thummim, as Exo 29, and that where the Urim and Thummim are mentioned there is no mention of the stones, as Lev_8:8, which shows they were one and the same thing. But that is not necessary, and there is an evident reason of both those omissions; of the former, Exo 39, because he mentions only those things which were made by the workmen, whereas the Urim and Thummim seems to have been made immediately by God, or by Moses with God's direction; of the latter, Le 8, because the stones are implied in the breastplate as a part of it, and being fastened to it, whereas there he only mentions what was put in by Moses himself. There are other conjectures, as that it; as the name Jehovah, or some visible representations, &c. But such conjectures are as easily denied as affirmed. It is therefore more modest and reasonable to be silent where God is silent, than to indulge ourselves in boundless and groundless fancies. It may suffice us to know that this was a singular piece of Divine workmanship, which the high priest was obliged to wear upon solemn occasions, as one of the conditions upon which God engaged to give him answers; which answers God might give to him either by inward suggestion to his mind, or by a vocal expression to his ear. But which of those ways, or whether by any other way, it is needless now to search, and impossible certainly to discover.

The judgment of the children of Israel. A short speech. As the testimony is oft put for the ark of the testimony , so is the judgment here for the breastplate of judgment , i.e. that breastplate which declared the judgment, or oracle, or mind of God to the Israelites in those cases which they brought to the Lord.

Before the Lord continually, i.e. at all times when he shall appear before the Lord in the holy place.

Exodus 28:31

Not the ephod itself, for that was prescribed before, Exo_28:6, but a long and loose robe called the robe of the ephod, because it was worn next under it, and was girded about the high priest's body with the curious girdle of the ephod.

Exodus 28:33

Pomegranates; the figures of pomegranates, but flat and embroidered. By the sound of the bells the people might be admonished of the work which the priest was employed in, and thereby be provoked to join their affections and devotions with his. These pomegranates and bells might note either,

1. The qualifications of the priest, who was both to declare or give forth the sound of pure and wholesome doctrine, and to adorn his doctrine with the fragrancy and fruitfulness of a good conversation. Or,

2. The glorious achievements of Christ, who caused the sound of his doctrine to be heard by all men, and offered up himself as a sacrifice to God for a sweet-smelling savour , Eph_5:2.

Exodus 28:34

Exodus 28:35

For his disobedience or carelessness. For though the matter might seem small in itself, yet it was an error in God's worship, wherein God is more severe than in other things; and it was an error of the high priest, who had more knowledge of God's mind herein, and was obliged to more care and diligence, not only for himself, but for the influences of his bad example upon the people.

Exodus 28:36

The plate of pure gold was like a half coronet, reaching, as the Jews say, from ear to ear.

Holiness to the Lord, to mind the priest of his special consecration to God, and of that singular holiness which was required of him, as at all times, so especially in his approaches to God. It might also represent Christ, who is called the Holy One of God , and who is a crowned Priest, or both King and Priest.

Exodus 28:37

The words may be rendered, thou shalt put it on , or, bind it , as the Vulgate renders it, with a blue lace , to wit, upon the mitre, as it follows.

Exodus 28:38

That Aaron may bear the iniquity of the holy things; either,

1. That he, being consecrated to God for this end, that he should take care as far as he could that both persons and things presented to God should be holy or agreeable to the mind of God, might bear the punishment for any miscarriage committed therein which he could have prevented. Or rather,

2. That he, being a holy person, and appointed by God to make a typical reconciliation for the sins of the people, and to intercede for them, might take away, or obtain from God the pardon of their iniquity , wherewith even their holy things are defiled, if God should severely mark what is amiss in them; which sense the last words of the verse favour. And the high priest was herein eminently a type of Christ, who properly and truly bare and took away the iniquity of his people's holy things by his sacrifice and intercession.

Which the children of Israel shall hallow in all their holy gifts, i.e. shall separate or consecrate unto God in all their offerings or gifts. If there be any thing amiss either in the thing offered, or in the manner of offering, God upon the priest's intercession will pardon it.

It shall be always upon his forehead, i.e. at all times of his solemn appearance before God.

Exodus 28:39

The coat was a loose and large garment made with sleeves, worn under the ephod, reaching down to the feet, which was girt with a girdle, Lev_8:7.

Exodus 28:40

The coats were not of woollen, Eze_44:17, but of linen, Exo_39:27. These were ephods, 1Sa_22:18.

Exodus 28:41

Consecrate them, Heb. fill their hand , i.e. present them to God with part of the sacrifice in their hands, as we find, Exo_29:24, by that rite putting them into their office.

Exodus 28:42

Including both. Compare Exo_20:26.

Exodus 29:1 EXODUS CHAPTER 29

The manner of consecrating priests, Exo_29:1-3. Of consecrating Aaron and his sons, Exo_29:4-7. The priests' vesture, Exo_29:8,9. How the bullock of the sin-offering was to be offered, Exo_29:10-14. One ram for a burnt-offering, and the manner of offering, Exo_29:15-18. A ram for hallowing the priests, Exo_29:19-31. Aaron and his sons eat of the ram wherewith they were consecrated, Exo_29:32,33. The altar sanctified for seven days, Exo_29:36,37. Two lambs offered daily, Exo_29:38. The time, Exo_29:39. The manner of offering, Exo_29:40-43. God's promise to hallow the tabernacle, Aaron, and his sons, Exo_29:44, and to dwell with them, Exo_29:45,46.

Exodus 29:2

The unleavened bread was to show that the priests should be, and that Christ really was, free from all malice and hypocrisy, both which are compared to leaven, Luk_12:1 1Co_5:8, and that all the services offered to God by the priests were to be pure and unmixed.

Exodus 29:3

To the door of the tabernacle , as it follows, Exo_29:4.

Exodus 29:4 Taken out of that laver, Exo_30:18. This signified the universal pollution of all men, and the absolute need they have of washing, especially when they are to draw nigh to God. And this outward washing was only typical of their spiritual washing by the blood and Spirit of Christ in order to their acceptance with God.

Exodus 29:5

Not about the loins, but about the paps, or breast, as Christ and his ministers are represented, Rev_1:13. The linen breeches are here omitted, because they were put on privately before they came to the door of the tabernacle, where the other things were put on.

Exodus 29:6

The holy crown, i.e. the plate of gold, Exo_28:36, as appears by comparing Lev_8:9.

Exodus 29:7

Which signified the gifts and graces of the Holy Ghost, wherewith Christ; as, and the priests ought to be, replenished. See Isa_61:1 1Jo_2:27. But here ariseth a difficulty; for this anointing is sometimes spoken of as peculiar to the high priest, as Lev_21:10, sometimes as common to all the priests, Exo_30:30 40:14,15, which may be thus reconciled: the oil, was sprinkled upon all the priests, and their right ears, thumbs, and toes, and their garments, Exo_29:20,21 Le 8:30, but it was poured out upon the head only of the high priest, Psa_133:2, who herein was a type of Christ, who was anointed above his fellows, Psa_45:7 Heb_1:9.

Exodus 29:10

To signify that they offered it for themselves and for their own sins, which the offerer performing this rite was to confess, Lev_16:21, that they acknowledged themselves to deserve that death which was inflicted upon this innocent creature for their sakes, and to testify their faith in the future sacrifice of Christ, upon whom their sins were to be laid, and by whose blood they were expiated, and that they humbly begged God's mercy in pardoning their sins, and accepting them to and in their holy office.

Exodus 29:11

Moses, who though no priest, yet for this time and occasion was called by God to this work.

Exodus 29:12

Upon the horns of the altar; not of incense, as some would have it, but of the burnt-offerings, as may appear,

1. Because it was that altar at the bottom whereof the blood was to be poured, as it is here expressed; but that was not done at the altar of incense, as is evident and confessed. Compare Lev_16:18, &c.

2. It was that altar upon which the parts of the sacrifices were burnt, as it here follows, Exo_29:13, for there is no distinction here between the two altars. It is true, in the following sin-offerings of the priests the blood was put upon the horns of the altar of incense, Lev_4:7. But it must be considered,

1. That the blood was not poured out at the bottom of that altar.

2. Because Aaron and his sons were not yet complete priests, but private persons, and therefore did this at the same altar which the people used in their sin-offerings, Lev_4:25,30.

Exodus 29:13

The parts which in all sacrifices were burned unto God, Lev_3:3 4:19, to signify either the mortification of their inward and most beloved lusts, or the dedication of the best of all sacrifices, and of their inward and best parts, to God and his service.

Exodus 29:14

To wit, for the high priest, as is plain from the whole context, and therefore ought to be burnt by that law, Le 4. There was indeed a law, that that sin-offering whose blood was not carried into the tabernacle, which was the case here, should not be burnt, but eaten, Lev_6:30 10:18. But that concerned the people, not the priests, who did not eat, but burn their own sin-offerings, Lev_4:3,12.

Exodus 29:18

A sweet savour, Heb. a savour of rest , wherewith God will be well pleased, and for which, as representing Christ who offered up himself, he will graciously accept of the offerings of the priests for themselves, and for the people.

Exodus 29:19

This was for a peace-offering. So here were all the three sorts of sacrifices, which were afterwards to be offered by them for the people.

Exodus 29:20

These parts are consecrated in the name and stead of all the rest; the ear, as the instrument of hearing and receiving the mind and will of God in all their sacred administrations, and in their whole conversation; the hand and foot , as the instruments of action and execution of that which they hear and understand to be the mind of God; and the right parts are chosen rather than the left, as being usually more vigorous and expeditious. And all these parts are sprinkled with this blood, to show the absolute necessity of Christ's blood to qualify them for an acceptable and successful discharge of their office.

Exodus 29:25

No text from Poole on this verse.

Exodus 29:26

To wit, the breast alone, whereas both shoulder and breast were given to Aaron afterwards; the reason whereof might be, either because Moses was not a proper and complete priest, as Aaron afterward was, but only appointed by God for this time to do that work; or because now there were in a manner two priests, the one consecrating, to wit, Moses ; the other consecrated, to wit, Aaron ; therefore these parts were divided, the breast went to the former to be eaten, the shoulder offered unto God for the latter, Exo_29:22; he being not yet a perfect priest, and therefore not in a capacity of eating it.

Exodus 29:27

Heaved up: this was done by throwing the parts upward, and catching them again.

Even of that which is for Aaron, and of that which is for his sons: the words may be rendered thus, of which breast and shoulder of the ram shall be Aaron 's portion, and of which shall be the portion of his sons ; so there is only an ellipsis of the verb substantive, which is most common, and the Hebrew prefix lamed designs a thing belonging to the person to whom that is prefixed, as it is in other like cases, as Gen_40:8 Deu_1:17 Psa_47:9.

Exodus 29:28

It is an heave-offering; under which is comprehended also the wave-offering; as plainly appears both from the context, and from the parity of reason, these offerings being of the same nature, and designed for the same purpose.

Exodus 29:29

His sons, i. e. his eldest sons successively. To be consecrated by some other priest, there being no other higher person who could do it, and therefore the necessity of it made it warrantable.

Exodus 29:30

For so long the solemnity of the consecration lasted, Exo_29:35.

In the holy place; both that strictly so called, and in the most holy place; for as none could go into the most holy place except the high priest, so there were some things to be done in the holy place which none but he could do. See Lev_4:7,8.

Exodus 29:31

In the court-yard at the door of the tabernacle, where it was both boiled and eaten, as appears from this and the next verse, and from Lev_8:31. And part of this was eaten by the person or persons that brought the offering, though they were of the people, who were not admitted into any other holy place but this.

Exodus 29:33

Those things, i.e. the remainders of the oblations mentioned Exo_29:32.

Exodus 29:34

Thou shalt burn the remainder, according to the law of all peace-offerings, except those which were vows or voluntary offerings, Lev_7:16,17, which these were not: compare Exo_12:10.

Exodus 29:35

Exodus 29:36

For atonement, as well for the priests as for the altar; both which, as they were or might be polluted, so they needed the sprinkling of this blood to sanctify them, to show that all persons and things were fitted for God's service, and accepted by him only for and through the blood of Christ.

Exodus 29:37

It shall be an altar most holy, as appears from the following reason, because it was not only holy in itself, but by its touch communicated a legal holiness to other things.

Whatsoever toucheth the altar shall be holy: this may be understood either,

1. Of persons, as a caution that none should touch the altar but holy and consecrated persons. Or rather,

2. Of things, yet not of all things, for polluted things were not made holy by the touch of holy things, which is affirmed, Hag_2:12; but of things belonging to the altar Of offerings, which by God's appointment were to be offered, which were sanctified by being laid upon this altar, and therefore the altar was greater and more holy than the gift, as our blessed Saviour notes, Mat_23:19.

Exodus 29:38

This is that which thou shalt offer: this is the chief end and use of this altar, though it served also for other sacrifices.

Day by day continually; to show, partly, that men do daily contract new defilement, and daily need new pardons; and partly, that God is not only to be worshipped upon rite sabbath days, and other set and solemn times, but every day.

Exodus 29:39

Which two seasons were selected as most commodious, that men might both begin and end their worldly actions said businesses with God, and might see their need of God's assistance and blessing in all their concerns, and the justness of giving him the praise and glory of all.

Exodus 29:40

A tenth deal; the tenth part of an ephah, as is evident from Num_28:5, which is an omer, Exo_16:36.

An hin was a measure for liquid things, as the ephah was for dry things, containing six pints of our measure.

Exodus 29:41

Exodus 29:42

Either,

1. At which door, for there the Lord stood and talked with Moses, Exo_33:9,10. Or rather,

2. In which tabernacle, to wit, in the innermost part of it, because that was the principal place where God did ordinarily reside and meet with his people, Exo_30:6 Lev_16:2; whereas God met but once at the door of the tabernacle, and that with Moses only, not with the people, with whom he is said to meet in this place, Exo_29:43. Add to this, that the place where God meets them is the same place which is sanctified by his glory, and that was the tabernacle, Exo_29:43, as it is expressed in our translation, and sufficiently implied in the Hebrew, by a common ellipsis of the pronoun it , i. e. that place where I meet with you, to wit, the tabernacle, shall be , &c.

Exodus 30:1 EXODUS CHAPTER 30

He commands to make an altar for incense, and of what, Exo_30:1. The length and breadth of it, Exo_30:2. The form of it, Exo_30:3-6. Whereon the priest was to kindle incense every morning, being commanded, Exo_30:7. All the children of Israel to bring half a shekel for their souls, Exo_30:11-16. A laver of brass, Exo_30:17,18; wherein Aaron and his sons wash their hands and their feet, Exo_30:19-21. The making the oil of holy ointment, Exo_30:22-25. Its use, Exo_30:26-28. None might make the like, Exo_30:32,33. The composition of the perfume, Exo_30:34-38.

Incense signifies the prayers of God's people, Psa_141:2 Rev_8:3; which are not acceptable to God except they be offered upon the true altar, Christ. This incense also was useful to correct the bad smell of the sacrifices, which were offered on another altar not far from it. Yea, some sacrifices were offered upon this altar, as appears from Exo_30:10 Lev_4:7. But here only the principal and constant use of it is noted.

Exodus 30:2

See Exo_27:2. Though these horns, as they were for another use, so they seem to be here of another form, and for ornament more than for service.

Exodus 30:7

Aaron was to do this for the first time, but afterwards any priest might do it, as appears from Luk_1:9; this not being done in the holy of holies, which was the high priest's peculiar.

Exodus 30:12

A ransom for his soul; a certain price for the redemption of their lives; whereby they acknowledge the right and power which God had over their lives, and that they had forfeited them by their sins, and that it was God's mercy to continue their lives to them.

When thou numberest them, to wit, upon any just occasion, either now in the wilderness, or afterwards. It may seem that this payment was neither to be made at this time only, as some would have it; nor yet every year, as Josephus and others affirm, because it is not said to be a perpetual statute, as other things of constant observance are, but upon any eminent occasions, when the service of the tabernacle (which is the end and use of this collection) or temple required it, as may be gathered from 2Ki_12:4, compared with 2Ch_24:6. Compare Neh_10:32 Mat_17:24. And as now it was employed in the building of the tabernacle, so afterwards it might be laid out upon the repairs or other services of it.

The shekel of the sanctuary hath been commonly conceived to be double to the common shekel, yet divers late learned men seem more truly to judge that it was no more than the common shekel, consisting of half a crown of English money; which is called the shekel of the sanctuary, because the standard by which all shekels were to be examined was kept in the sanctuary, as afterwards the just weights and measures were kept in Christian temples, or other public places. See Lev_27:25 Num_3:47 Eze_45:10-12. Add to this, that it was a part of the priest's office to look to the weights and measures, as plainly appears from 1Ch_23:29.

An half shekel shall be the offering; not less, lest it should be contemptible; nor more, lest it should be too burdensome for the poor.

Exodus 30:14

From twenty years old and above; the time when they began to be fit for employment, and capable of getting and paying money. Women and children are not included here, because they are reckoned in their fathers or husbands.

Exodus 30:15

This was partly to teach them that all souls are of equal worth in themselves and price with God; that there is no respect of persons with God, and in God's worship and service, but gospel graces, ordinances, and privileges are common and equal to all, Exo 12 16:18 Gal_3:28 Col_3:11; that all persons are alike obnoxious to Divine justice, and are redeemed by one and the same price: partly to check the arrogance and vanity of the rich, who are very apt to despise the poor; and partly that by this means the number of the people might be exactly known when occasion required it.

Exodus 30:16

For the service of the tabernacle; for the building and furniture of it, and the maintenance of God's worship in it.

That it may be a memorial; either to the people, who hereby profess God to be their Lord and Owner, and themselves his subjects and tributaries; or to God, who hereby takes occasion to remember them, and to own them for his people.

Exodus 30:17

The frequent repetition of this phrase, and the shortness of these discourses, in comparison of the length of the forty days, show that God did not deliver all these laws and prescriptions at one time, but successively at several times, possibly upon the sabbath days.

Exodus 30:18

See the accomplishment Exo_38:8; to wash both the priests and the parts of the sacrifices. The altar, to wit, of burnt-offerings.

Exodus 30:19

To signify their natural impurity and unworthiness, either to handle holy things, or to come into the holy place, and their need of washing with the blood and Spirit of Christ, which was typified by this washing.

Exodus 30:20

That they die not; for though the fault might seem small, yet the command was evident and easy, and therefore the disobedience was worse, arguing presumption, rebellion, and contempt. And God is more severe in the matters of his worship than in other cases.

Pure myrrh, Heb. myrrh of liberty ; either,

1. Free from adulteration or mixture; or rather,
2. Freely dropping from the tree, which is esteemed better than that which is forced out of it.

Exodus 30:30

Not all of them, but only those who succeed him in the high priest's office, as appears from Exo_40:15 Lev_4:3,5,16; Exo_16:32 21:10. This anointing of them signified both God's election or calling them to this office, and the inward qualifications requisite for it, to wit, the gifts and graces of the Holy Ghost, which are oft designed by this word of anointing, as Isa_61:1 Dan_9:24 1Jo_2:27, and the solemn setting apart of Christ, the true High Priest, for the mediatorial office.

Exodus 30:31

i.e. Reserved for my service alone, not employed to any profane or civil use, as it follows.

Exodus 30:32

Upon man's flesh shall it not be poured, except those whom God himself, the author of this law, excepts, to wit, the high priests, of which see Exo_30:30; and some of the kings, of which see 1Ki_1:39 Psa_89:20, though others think the kings were only anointed with common oil.

It shall be holy unto you, as it is unto me, Exo_30:31; you shall account it holy, as I do.

Exodus 30:33

The word stranger is commonly used to note the Gentiles, or such as were not of Israel's race; but sometimes it notes those that are not of the priestly race, as Exo_29:33 Lev_22:12,13; and so it seems to be here. And if any of the kings were anointed with this oil, it was done by God's special appointment, who may dispense with his own laws.

Exodus 30:34

Stacte, and onycha, and galbanum: the Jews themselves are not agreed what these were, and it concerns not Christians much to know, the use of them being abolished. It is evident they were each of them sweet spices, and therefore this galbanum was not of the common kind, which gives a very ball scent.

Of each shall there be a like weight, Heb. alone shall be with alone , i.e. each of these alone shall be with another alone, to wit, in equal quantity. Or it may note, that' each of these was to be taken and beaten apart, and then mixed together. Or, it shall be alone alone , i.e. absolutely and certainly alone, the doubling of the word increasing the signification, and thus it doth not belong to all the ingredients, because the Hebrew verb is here of the singular number, but only to the frankincense; and the sense may be, that whereas the other things shall be tempered together, the frankincense should be alone, which may seem most agreeable both to the common use of frankincense, and to its differing nature from the other things mentioned, two of them at least being confessedly liquid things.

Exodus 30:35

Tempered together, Heb. salted ; either,

1. Properly, for salt was to be offered with all offerings, Lev_2:13. And the Hebrew doctors tell us that six egg-shells full of salt were used. Or,

2. Metaphorically, well mixed together, as salt was with things either offered to God, or eaten by man.

Exodus 31:3

I have filled him with the spirit of God, which was now necessary, because the Israelites in Egypt wanted ingenious education to learn these things, and therefore needed inspiration.

In wisdom, or, with wisdom , the following clauses being explicatory of the former, showing what gifts of the Spirit God had filled him with, to wit, wisdom, &c.

Exodus 31:13

My sabbaths ye shall keep: this precept is here repeated, either,

1. To show the chief use of the tabernacle, and all this cost and trouble about it, to wit, that they might there acceptably serve God, as in some measure upon every day, so especially upon the sabbath day. Or rather,

2. To restrain the time for the doing of the forementioned works: q.d. Though the work of the tabernacle and utensils be holy, and for a holy use, yet I will not have it done upon my holy day. The sabbath was not made for them, but they for it, and therefore they shall give place to it.

It is a sign between me and you. The sabbath is a fivefold sign:

1. Commemorative, of God's creation of and dominion over them and all other things, to whom they do hereby profess their subjection.

2. Indicative, showing that they were made to be holy, and that their sanctification can be had from none but from God, as it here follows, and from the observation of God's days and appointments.

3. Distinctive, whereby they owned themselves to be the Lord's peculiar people, by a religious keeping of those sabbaths, which the rest of the world grossly neglected and profanely scoffed at.

4. Prefigurative, of that rest which Christ should purchase for them, to wit, a rest from the burden of the ceremonial, and from the curses and rigours of the moral law, as also from sin and the wrath of God for ever. See Heb 4.

5. Confirmative, both assuring them of God's good will to them, and that as he blessed the sabbath for their sakes, so he would bless them in the holy use of it with temporal, spiritual, and everlasting blessings, as he declares in many places of Scripture; and assuring God of their standing to that covenant made between God and them. So that this was a mutual stipulation or ratification of the covenant of grace on both sides.

That doth sanctify you; that selecteth you out of all people, and consecrateth you to myself, and to my service and worship, a great part whereof is the observation of the sabbath. Or, that sanctifieth you by my word and ordinances, which are in more eminent and solemn manner dispensed upon the sabbath day, by the observation whereof you declare that you own me as your only Sanctifier; and so we may observe, the sabbath owns the Lord as our Creator, and as our Redeemer, and as our Sanctifier; and therefore it is no wonder God so severely enjoins the sanctification of the sabbath, and punisheth the neglect of it, it being a tacit renouncing or disowning of God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost.

Exodus 31:14

Shall surely be put to death; of which see an example, Num_15:32, &c. i.e. Servile work, as it is explained. Lev_23:7, &c.

Exodus 31:15

The sabbath of rest, Heb. the sabbath of sabbaths , or, of sabbaths , i.e. the great and chief sabbath, as the song of songs is the most excellent song, the holy of holies is the most holy, &c. The Jews had many sabbaths or days of rest, but this is here preferred before them all, by this emphatical repetition of the same word; and by this argument the foregoing duty is pressed upon them.

Exodus 31:16

Or, shall keep the sabbath by observing or celebrating the sabbath, i. e. by observing or celebrating it, the antecedent being put for the relative, as is frequently done. So here is another most emphatical repetition to oblige us to the greater caution and diligence in this great duty, and to show what stress God lays upon it, who hath therefore placed this in the midst of the commands of the decalogue, as the heart which gives life and rigour to all the rest. Or it may be rendered thus; shall observe the day of rest to celebrate the sabbath ; and so the phrase is like that in the fourth command , Remember the sabbath day to keep it holy. So here, Observe the sabbath . i.e. watch its coming and approach, consider attentively the nature and use of it, and that not as a matter of idle speculation, but of serious practice; or, so that you may do or celebrate the sabbath, i.e. perform all the duties of it. Or thus, shall observe the sabbath, to make it a sabbath or day of rest , and that no idle or carnal rest, but a rest, holy to the Lord , as it is called in the foregoing verse.

For a perpetual covenant, or, by a perpetual covenant , or, it is a perpetual covenant , i. e. condition or part of that agreement made between me and them. They have solemnly covenanted or promised that they will do all that I commanded them, Exo_24:7,8, among which this is a chief branch; and I have covenanted to bless and sanctify them in so doing. And this word perpetual , as also the word for ever , being added to it in the next verse, may intimate that this hath a longer perpetuity than the ceremonies, to which this phrase is sometimes ascribed, the rather because the reason of this perpetuity given in the next verse is such as hath its force not only till Christ, but even till the end of the world, and it is fit and just that men should retain this monument or memorial of the world's creation even till its dissolution.

It is a sign, a sign of the covenant between us, that I will be their God, and they will be my people; both which depends upon this amongst other duties, and upon this in an eminent degree.

Was refreshed; not as if he had been weary with working, which surely he could not be with speaking a few words, nor can God be weary with any thing, Isa_40:28; but it notes the pleasure or delight God took in reflecting upon his works, beholding that every thing he had made was very good , Gen_1:31.

Exodus 31:18

i.e. The tables of the law, which was the witness of God's will and Israel's duty. See Exo_16:34.

Tables of stone; whereby was signified both the durable and perpetual obligation of the moral law, whereas the ceremonial law was to end with the Jewish polity at Christ's coming; and the stoniness of men's hearts by nature, in which the law of God could not be written but by a Divine and omnipotent hand.

Written with the finger of God, i.e. with the power or Spirit of God, by comparing Mat_12:18; not by any art of man, but immediately by a Divine hand.

Exodus 32:1 EXODUS CHAPTER 32

The people commit idolatry by worshipping the molten image which Aaron made, Exo_32:1-6. God makes it known to Moses, and threatens their destruction, Exo 32 7-10. Moses prays for them, Exo 32 11-13. God repents of the evil, Exo 32 14. Moses comes down from the mount with two tables, Exo 32 15; being God's own writing, Exo 32 16. Moses hearing and seeing their idolatry, breaks the two tables, Exo_32:19; and turns the calf into powder, Exo_32:20. Aaron's excuse, Exo_32:21-24. Moses seeing their nakedness, Exo_32:25, commands them to be slain, Exo_32:26,27. He bids them consecrate themselves, Exo_32:29. Moses charging them with sin, Exo_32:30, prayeth for them, Exo_32:31,32. God spareth them, Exo_32:34; but afterward plagueth them, Exo_32:35.

BC 1491

Moses had now been in the mount for near forty days.

The people, i.e. most or some of the people, as it is expressed 1Co_10:7.

Unto Aaron, as the chief person in Moses's absence.

Make us gods, i.e. images or representations of God, whom, after the manner of idolaters, they call by God's name. For it is ridiculous to think that the body of the Israelites, who were now lately instructed by the mouth, and words, and miraculous works of the eternal God, should be so senseless as to think that was the true God which themselves made, and that out of their own earrings; much more, that that was the God that brought them out of Egypt, as they say, Exo_32:4.

Which shall go before us, to guide us through this vast wilderness to the Land of Promise, where they longed to be; for as for the cloud, which hitherto had guided them, that seemed now to be fixed upon the mount; and they thought both that Joshua and Moses had deserted them. The Jewish doctors note, that he doth not say, Make us gods whom we may worship, but which shall go before us, which, as they truly say, shows that they wanted not a God, whom they knew by infallible evidences they had, but a visible guide, who might supply the want of Moses, as the next words show.

This Moses; an expression of contempt towards their great deliverer.

What is become of him, whether he be not consumed by the fire in the cloud, or taken up to heaven, or conveyed away by God to some other place.

Exodus 32:2

The golden earrings were of good value and common use among the eastern people, who seem to have used them superstitiously, Gen_35:4 Jud_8:24; and therefore Aaron demands these, partly that he might take away one vice, or occasion of vice, whilst the people were intent upon another; and partly that the proposed loss of their precious earrings might cool their idolatrous desires.

In the ears of your wives, whom he thought most fond of their jewels, and most unlikely to part with them.

Exodus 32:3

Whereby they show both their madness upon their idols, and their base ingratitude to their God, who had transferred these jewels from the Egyptians to them, Exo_12:35,36, which therefore God upbraids them with, Eze_16:11, &c.

In their ears, i.e. the men's ears, for the affix is of the masculine gender; whereby it seems the men were more set upon idolatry than the women, parting with their earrings for it, which the women would not do.

Exodus 32:4

A molten calf: the meaning of this translation is, that Aaron, to wit, by artificers, did first melt the gold into one mass, and then by the graving-tool form it into the shape of a calf, and polish it; or as others render the words, he formed it in a type or mould, made in the shape of a calf, into which he cast the molten gold, and so made it a molten calf. But the words may be translated thus, He put it, or them, into a purse; for so the Hebrew verb and noun are both used, 2Ki_5:23; and in like manner Gideon disposed the earrings given him for the like use, Jud_8:24; and afterwards he made of them a molten calf. Now the people desired, and Aaron in compliance with them made this in the form of a calf, or an ox, (for the word signifies both,) in imitation of the Egyptians, as Philo the Jew expressly affirms, and the learned generally agree; and it may thus appear:

1. The great idols of the Egyptians, Apis, Seraphis, and Isis, were oxen and cows, as is confessed.

2. The Egyptians, besides the creatures which they adored as gods, did also make, and keep, and worship their images, as even the heathen writers, Mela and Strabo, affirm.

3. The Israelites, whilst they were in Egypt, were many of them infected with the Egyptian idolatry, as it appears from Jos_24:14 Eze_20:7,8 23:3 Act_7:39. And it is not unlikely divers of them hankered no less after the idols, than after the garlic and onions of Egypt. And being now, as they thought, forsaken by Moses, they might think of returning to Egypt, as afterwards they did, and therefore chose a god of the Egyptian mode, that they might more willingly receive them again.

These be thy gods, i.e. this is thy god, the plural number being put for the singular, as it is usual in this case. The meaning is, This is the sign, or symbol, or image of thy god; for such expressions are very frequent: thus this image of a calf is called a calf frequently, and the images of the temple of Diana are called shrines or little temples, Ac 19. So they intended to worship the true God by this image, as afterwards Jeroboam did by the same image, as we shall plainly see when we come to that place of Scripture. And it is absolutely incredible that the generality of the Israelites should be so void of all sense and reason, as to think that this new-made calf did bring them out Egypt before its own creation, and that this was the same Jehovah who had even now spoken to them from heaven with an audible voice, saying, I am the Lord thy God who brought thee out of the land of Egypt .

Exodus 32:5

When Aaron saw, i.e. observed with what applause they received it, and with what fury and resolution they prosecuted their former desire, he was borne down with the stream, and, as it is probable, by the people's instigation, built an altar to it.

To the Lord, Heb. to Jehovah ; which title being peculiar to the true God, and being here given by Aaron to the calf, with the approbation of the people, makes it more than probable that the people designed to worship the true God in this calf, which they made only as a visible token of God's presence with them, and an image by which they might convey their worship to God.

Exodus 32:6

Brought peace-offerings, but no sin-offerings , which they most needed.

The people sat down to eat and to drink; for the sacrifices were accompanied with feasting, both among the worshippers of the true God, and among idolaters. See Exo_18:12 24:11.

Rose up to play, by shouting, and singing, and dancing, as it appears from Exo_32:17-19

Exodus 32:7

Exodus 32:11

The Lord his God; emphatically so called: q.d. Moses had not lost his interest in God, though Israel had.

Why doth thy wrath wax hot, so hot as to consume them utterly? For though he saw reason enough why God should be angry with them, yet he humbly expostulates with God whether it would be for his honour utterly to destroy them. Or this is a petition delivered in form of an interrogation or expostulation, as Mat_8:29, compared with Luk_8:28.

Against thy people, an ingenious retortion: q.d. They are not my people, as thou calledst them, Exo_32:7, but thy people, which he proves in the following words.

Exodus 32:12

In the mountains, i.e. in or at Mount Sinai, the plural number for the singular; or, in this mountainous desert.

The voice of them that shout for mastery, Heb. of a cry of strength , i.e. of strong men, or of the stronger and victorious party, who use to express themselves with triumphant shouts.

The voice of them that cry for being overcome, Heb. of a cry of weakness, i.e. of weak, and wounded, and vanquished men, who use to break forth into doleful cries.

Exodus 32:19

Not through rash anger, but by Divine instinct, partly to punish their idolatry with so great a loss, and partly to show that the covenant made between God and them, so much to their advantage, which was contained in those tables, was by their sin broken, and now of none effect, and not to be renewed but by bitter repentance.

Exodus 32:20

Ground it to powder; melted it either into one great mass, or rather into divers little fragments, which afterwards by a the or other instruments he, by the help of many others, might soon grind to powder, or dust of gold.

Strawed it upon the water; upon the brook which came out of the rock Horeb, Exo_17:6.

The children of Israel; not all, which would require a long time, but some in the name of the rest; and most probably either the chief promoters of this idolatrous design, or the chief rulers of the people, who should by their power and authority have restrained the people from this wickedness.

To drink of it; of the water into which that dust was cast; partly to make them ashamed of their madness in worshipping a god which now must be drunk, and cast out into the draught; and partly to fill them with terror and dreadful expectation of some ill effect or curse of God to come upon them, either by this draught, or by other means.

Exodus 32:21

What injury or mischief had they done to thee, which thou didst so severely revenge? The sin of the people is charged upon Aaron, both because he did not resist and suppress their wicked suggestion, Exo_32:1, by his counsel, and by the authority which Moses had left in his hand, which he should have done even with the hazard of his life, as the rabbins say that Hur did, whom they report to have been slain by the people whilst he dissuaded them from their attempt, and because he did not promote, and direct, and manage their enterprise, Exo_32:4,5.

Exodus 32:22

Heb. are in evil , i.e. are altogether wicked, addicted to, or bent upon wickedness, so that it was impossible for me to stop or divert their course.

Exodus 32:24

Not that he meant or thought to persuade Moses that the melted gold came out of the fire in the form of a calf by accident, without any art or industry of his, which was a ridiculous conceit, and easily confuted; but only he conceals his own sin in the forming and graving of it, and lays the whole blame upon the people.

Exodus 32:25

i.e. That they were stripped both of their ornament, which was not so much the jewels of their ears, as the innocency of their minds and lives; and of their defence, to wit, of the favour and protection of God, by which alone they were secured from the Egyptians, and were to be defended against those many and mighty enemies towards whom they were about to march; and that being thus disarmed and helpless, they would be a prey to every enemy: when Moses considered this, he took the following course to cover their nakedness, to expiate their sins, to regain the favour of God, and by punishing the most eminent and incorrigible offenders, to bring the rest to repentance.

Aaron had made them naked, as Ahaz is said to have made Judah naked , 2Ch_28:19.

Quest. How were they made naked or ashamed amongst their enemies, when at this time they were in their own camp, remote from all their enemies?

Answ. He speaks not only of their present shame, but of their everlasting reproach, especially among their and God's enemies, who, being constant to their idols, would justly scorn the Israelites for their levity in forsaking their God so quickly and easily. See Jer_2:11. But the Hebrew word may be, and is by some, translated thus, amongst those that do or shall rise up or be born of them i.e. that shall succeed them; for so the word rising is used Exo_1:8 Mat_11:11. And so the Chaldee here renders it, amongst their generations ; and the other Chaldee interpreter, and the Syriac, in their latter days , or in aftertimes . So the sense is, that Aaron had put a note of perpetual infamy upon them, even to all after-ages.

Exodus 32:26

He chose the gate of the camp,

1. As the usual place of judicature.

2. That he might withdraw himself from the company of idolaters as far as he might.

3. As a fit place of concourse and resort for those that were on God's side.

4. To prevent the escape of the greatest delinquents, the rest of the camp being probably surrounded with some trench, or such like thing, else gates had been superfluous and unprofitable.

Who is on the Lord's side? who will take God's part, and plead his cause against idolatry and idolaters?

All the sons of Levi, i.e. the most of that tribe, as that universal particle is oft understood; for some of them were destroyed as guilty.

Exodus 32:27

The meaning is, slay every principal offender whom you meet with, without any indulgence or exception, though brother , or companion , or neighbour . There was no fear of killing the innocent in this case, because,

1. The people were generally guilty.

2. Moses had called to himself all that were on God's side, who thereby were separated from the guilty.

3. The innocent might easily be discerned from the transgressors, either by the personal knowledge which the Levites or others had of the most forward idolaters, or by their abiding in their tents as ashamed and grieving for their sin, whilst the transgressors were impudently walking about in the camp, as trusting to their numbers; or by the direction of God's providence, if not by some visible token.

Exodus 32:28

And no more, for it is probable they slew only those whom they knew to have been the ringleaders to others in this mischief.

Exodus 32:29

Offer up yourselves to the honour and service of the Lord in this work, which because it was joined with the hazard of their lives, he calls it a consecration or oblation of themselves, as Abraham for the like reason is said to have offered up Isaac.

Consecrate yourselves, Heb. fill your hands, & c., i.e. offer a sacrifice, for so the phrase is oft used, as Exo_28:41 Jud_17:5,12. That work of justice which they were going to execute might seem an inhuman and barbarous act, but he tells them it was an acceptable sacrifice to God, as the destruction of God's enemies is called a sacrifice, Isa_34:6 Eze_39:17. Or he hereby intimates that this tribe was designed by God for his immediate service, and therefore recommends this work to them as an excellent initiation into their office, and as a demonstration that they were in some sort worthy of that great trust.

Exodus 32:30

He speaks doubtfully, partly because he was uncertain how far God would pardon them, and partly to quicken them to the more serious practice of repentance.

Exodus 32:31

No text from Poole on this verse.

Exodus 32:32

If thou wilt forgive their sin; understand here, forgive it, or, or it is well , or, I and others shall praise thy name . His great passion for his people stops his words, and makes his speech imperfect.

Out of thy book, i.e. out of the book of life, as appears by comparing this with other places, as Psa_69:28 Dan_12:1 Luk_10:20 Phi_4:3 Rev_3:5 13:8 20:12; or, out of the catalogue or number of those that shall be saved. I suppose Moses doth not in this case wish his eternal damnation, because that state implies both wickedness in himself, and the dishonour of God, but his annihilation, or the utter loss of this life, and of that to come, and of all the happiness of both of them. Nor doth Moses simply desire this, but only comparatively expresseth his singular zeal for God's glory, and charity to his people; signifying, that the very thoughts of the destruction of God's people, and of the reproach and blasphemy which would be cast upon God by means thereof, were so grievous and intolerable to him, that he rather wisheth, if it were possible, that God would accept of him as a sacrifice in their stead, and by his utter destruction prevent so great a mischief. And it is to be considered that Moses speaks this, as also many other things, as the mediator between God and Israel, and as the type of the true Mediator, Jesus Christ, who was in effect to suffer this which Moses was content to suffer.

Exodus 32:33

Whosoever hath sinned, or, doth sin , to wit, presumptuously, obstinately, and impenitently, him will I cut off out of the land of the living, and eternally deprive of my favour and glory, and not thee who art innocent and righteous.

Exodus 32:34

Behold, mine angel; not Christ, the Angel of the covenant, who had hitherto gone before them; but a created angel, as appears by comparing this with Exo_33:2,3,12; though Moses obtained the revocation of this threatening, Exo_33:14,17. I will visit their sin upon them; when I shall punish them for their other sins, which I foresee they will commit, I will remember and punish this also.

Exodus 32:35

This relates either to the destruction of three thousand of them by the Levites, or rather to the future plagues, in which God also reckoned with them for this sin.

Because they made the calf; they made it because they urged

Aaron to make it, as Judas is said to purchase the field, Act_1:18, which was purchased by his money; and Aaron made it, by giving command to make it. The Chaldee, Syriac, Arabic, and Samaritan render the words thus, they worshipped or sacrificed to the calf which Aaron made. And the word which signifies to make, is oft used for worshipping or sacrificing, as Exo_10:25 Jud_13:15 1Ki_18:26.

Exodus 33:1 EXODUS CHAPTER 33

God refuseth to go with the people as formerly, Exo_33:1-3. The people mourn, Exo_33:4. God's command what to say to the children of Israel, Exo_33:5. They mourn, and lay by their ornaments, Exo_33:6. Moses pitcheth the tabernacle without the camp, Exo_33:7; and going in, God speaks to him, Exo_33:8,9. A cloudy pillar descendeth on it, Exo_33:10. God speaks to Moses face to face, Exo_33:11. He prays for his guidance and presence, Exo_33:12-16. God promises him, Exo_33:14,17; proclaims his name, Exo_33:19. His face can be seen by no man, Exo_33:20-23.

Exodus 33:3

I will not go up in the midst of thee by my own special and gracious presence, as hitherto I have done, but I will depart from thee. In pursuance hereof God removes his tabernacle without the camp, Exo_33:7. I will only make good my promise to thy fathers, and send an angel to accomplish it, but I will show no peculiar and further kindness to thee.

Lest I consume thee in the way; lest thy sins should be aggravated by my presence and favour, and thereby I should be provoked utterly to destroy thee. So he shows that their perverseness makes this severity necessary for them, and that God even in his judgment remembers mercy to them.

Exodus 33:4

Their precious garments or jewels, which the women reserved, as we saw, Exo_33:3. This was a visible sign and profession of their inward humiliation and repentance for their sin, and of their deep sense of God's displeasure.

Exodus 33:5

I will come up into the midst of thee, to wit, in anger; not in favour, Exo_33:3, where the words are the same, but the sense differing,

and consume thee.

Object. But God had promised he would not do so, Exo_33:3.

Answ. That was signified to Moses, not to the people, to whom the threatening was most proper and profitable; and this threatening hath a condition implied, to wit, except they repent, as the next words plainly show.

That I may know what to do unto thee; that I may either inflict my judgments, or suspend them, as thou art penitent or impenitent.

Exodus 33:6

No text from Poole on this verse.

Exodus 33:7

The tabernacle was a tent set up by Moses for the people to meet in for sacrifice and seeking of God, and other parts of God's worship, until the great tabernacle should be finished; for such a place was necessary, or highly expedient for that use, and therefore it is not probable they would be without it for a year's space.

Afar off from the camp; in testimony of God's alienation from them, and displeasure against them, this being a kind of excommunication; and all was too little to bring them to a thorough repentance.

The tabernacle of the congregation; it was so before, but he called it so now, to show that God had not wholly forsaken them; and that if they truly repented, he still permitted them to come into his presence, and to seek the Lord.

Every one which sought the Lord; either for his favour, or for counsel and direction. See Exo_18:15,19,20.

Exodus 33:8

Exodus 33:11

Face to face, or, mouth to mouth , as Num_12:8. Not that God hath face or mouth, or that Moses could behold it, which is denied, Exo_33:20. But the sense is, he spake with him freely and familiarly, and immediately, not by an angel in a dream or vision, as he did to other prophets. See Deu_34:10.

Joshua abode in the tabernacle, either to keep it from injury or inconvenience; for as it was set up by man's help, so it needed man's care to preserve it; or to assist and direct those who resorted thither to seek God in Moses's absence. And Joshua seems to be appointed for this work rather than Aaron, or any other of the elders, because they had one way or other been guilty of the late idolatry, and God would hereby punish them with a temporary suspension from his service, and their office.

Exodus 33:12

Whom thou wilt send with me, i.e. what angel it is, whether it be a created angel, for then I profess I am unsatisfied with him, Exo_33:15; or the same uncreated Angel Christ, who hath hitherto accompanied us, and then I am content. But I am at a great loss by thy withdrawing thy cloudy pillar from the people to whom it is to be a guide.

I know thee by name, i.e. distinctly and familiarly, as one whom I have much converse with, and great kindness for; thy name is written in my book. Compare Exo_32:32,33 Psa 87:5,6 Php 4:3. And knowing here notes approbation and affection, as Psa_1:6 Mat_7:23 compare Jer_1:5.

Exodus 33:13

Show me now thy way; the course and manner of thy dealings with men, and particularly thy purpose and will concerning me and thy people, and the method which thou wilt choose for the fulfilling of thy promise, and the course which thou wouldst have me take, and the way by which I shall conduct thy people to the Promised Land.

That I may know thee, i.e. thy mind herein; men are said to know God when they know his mind and will; or that I may experimentally know thee to be what thou hast promised thou wilt be to me and to thy people; or rather, that I may thereby know thee, namely, that I shall find grace in thy sight, as it follows; that I may be assured that thou wilt be reconciled to and present with me and thy people.

Thy people, both by thy own choice and purpose, and promise to their parents, and by their recognition of thee for their God, and their returning to thee again.

Exodus 33:14

My presence, Heb. my face, i.e. I myself, by comparing this with 2Sa_17:11. The Angel of my presence, Isa_63:9; the pledge of my presence, the cloudy pillar; and I will not turn thee over to an angel, as I threatened, Exo_34:2. See Deu_4:34.

I will give thee rest; not only rest from thy present anguish and perplexity of mind for thy people, but in due time I will bring them to their resting-place and settled habitation; for it is evident from Exo_34:15,16, that Moses's care and prayer was more for the people than for himself.

Exodus 33:15

Let us rather live and die in the wilderness with thy presence and favour, than go into Canaan without it; for even that promise of rest I value not without thy presence. So he echoes back God's words to himself, and turns God's promise into a prayer.

Exodus 33:16

Wherein shall it be known here? by what other token shall other nations and after-ages know?

So shall we be separated, i.e. distinguished by thy peculiar kindness and privileges afforded to us. Or, be made wonderful, or eminent, or glorious above all other people.

Exodus 33:17

Exodus 33:18

i.e. Thy glorious majesty, the brightness of thy countenance, some such manifestation of thyself as becomes thy excellency, and such as shall be seen in the other life; or that glorious shape which, together with a human voice, thou hast now assumed. But for the essence of God, as that was and is and ever will be invisible to bodily eyes, 1Ti_6:16, so a man of such great reason and deep knowledge in Divine things, and universal learning, could not be ignorant of it, and therefore would not desire it.

Exodus 33:19

All my goodness, or, my beauty ; for so that Hebrew word is sometimes used, Gen_6:2 1Sa_9:2; or my excellency , or my glory , as appears from Exo_33:22, which was the thing Moses desired to see; and the difference between his request and God's answer doth not lie in glory and goodness, but in showing his glory so as Moses might gaze upon it, and making it only, as it follows, to pass before him, to wit, in a sudden and very transitory vision; though it may be understood properly of God's goodness and kindness to men, of which the following words speak, and that was the great, if not the only thing ascribed to God, Exo_34:6,7.

The name of the Lord, i.e. my name; the noun for the pronoun, as is very frequent. I will give thee notice when I come, that thou mayst attend; I will not surprise thee, nor steal by thee. Or will proclaim, or publish of the name of the Lord, or of my name, i.e. some part of it, especially my goodness, which may seem to be here principally intended,

1. By comparing this with Exo_34:6,7.

2. By the following words, which seem a limitation of this general expression: q.d. I will proclaim, manifest, and impart my goodness, but with a difference, not to all men, but to whom I please.

3. By other places, where the name of the Lord is principally, if not solely, understood of his goodness, as Isa_1:10, and in many places of the Psalms. I will be gracious to whom I will be gracious: this may seem to be added, with reference to the people for whom Moses is interceding, lest Moses should misunderstand or misapply what is said here, and Exo_34:6,7. The sense is, I will show this peculiar favour to thee, I will also be gracious towards the people thou pleadest for, but not promiscuously. Some of them I will severely and eternally punish for this and their other sins; and some of them I will pardon and save, not because they are righteous, or innocent, or less sinners than the rest, but merely out of my own good pleasure and most free grace, whereby I will show mercy to some, when I will not show mercy to others. Thus this place is interpreted by the apostle, Rom_9:16, &c.

Exodus 33:20

My face; either,

1. My essence. But that no man can see, neither in this life, nor in the next. Or rather,

2. My glorious presence. This may note either,

1. God's purpose that that blissful vision of God in glory shall be given to no man here, but is reserved for the future life. Or rather,

2. The impossibility of the thing from man's weakness, which is such, that if God should display all the beams of his glory to him, it would certainly astonish, overwhelm, and destroy him.

Exodus 33:21

There is a place by me, in this mountain where my residence and glorious presence now is, and in that part of it whence my voice now cometh to thine ears.

Exodus 33:22

That thou mayst not be undone by thy own desires, nor swallowed up with the sight of my glory.

Exodus 33:23

My back parts, i.e. imperfectly and in part, as when we see only a man's back parts, and not his face. Thou shalt see a shadow or obscure delineation of my glory, as much as thou canst bear, though not as much as thou dost desire.

Exodus 34:1 EXODUS CHAPTER 34

God commands Moses to hew two tables of stone like the former, wherein he promises to write, Exo_34:1. Moses goes with these tables up to the mount, Exo_34:4. God descends in a cloud, Exo_24:5. He proclaims his name, Exo_34:6,7. Moses worships, Exo_34:8,9. God making a covenant with the people, commands them not to make a covenant with their enemies, Exo_34:10-12; bids them beware of molten gods, Exo_34:13-17. The feast of unleavened bread, Exo_34:18. To rest on the sabbath day, Exo_34:21. Other laws, Exo_34:22-26. Moses wrote these words, Exo_34:27. The time of Moses's abode on the mount. Exo_34:28. Moses's face shining, Exo_34:29, is covered, Exo_34:33-35. He acquaints the people with what the Lord told him, Exo_34:31,32.

The first tables were made immediately by God, who of his own mere grace and good pleasure, and without man's merit or contrivance, entered into covenant with Abraham and his seed. These tables must be made by Moses, partly in token of God's displeasure for their sin, and partly to signify, that though the covenant of grace was first made without man's care and counsel, yet it should not be renewed but by man's repentance. And as the tables of stone signified the hardness of their hearts, so the hewing of them by Moses might signify the circumcision and ploughing up of their hearts, that they might be fit for the receiving of God's mercies, and the performance of their duties.

The words that were in the first tables; to show God's reception of Israel into his favour, and their former state, and that the law and covenant of God was neither abolished nor changed by their sin.

This is said, not for the beasts, which are not capable of a law, but to restrain the presumption and curiosity of the people, by this argument, that even the beasts that come too near shall be destroyed, and much more man, whose knowledge aggravates his sin and punishment.

Exodus 34:4

Exodus 34:5

In the cloud; in the cloudy pillar, which ordinarily stood up in the air above the mount, but came down to the top of it when God spake with Moses. See Exo_33:9 Num_11:17,25.

Stood with him there, to wit, in the mount, Exo_34:2,4, and the clift of a rock, Exo_33:22, which was in the mount, and near the top of it, as appears by comparing these places together.

Exodus 34:6

The Lord God: this title shows his glorious being, power, and authority; the following titles note his goodness to men.

Abundant in goodness and truth; in fulfilling all his gracious promises made to Abraham, and to his seed, and to all his people; wherein he is said to be abundant, because he generally is better than his word, and gives more than he promised. There is a truth in Divine threatenings, but here the situation of this word in the midst of the attributes of Divine goodness plainly shows that it is to be restrained to the promises; this being usual and reasonable, that general words have their signification limited by the context. And indeed here seems to be a hendyadis , goodness and truth, for true, sincere, and hearty goodness , as mercy and truth are oft put for true and real mercy. See Psa_25:10 57:3, &c.

Exodus 34:7

For thousands; the Chaldee and some others render it, for a thousand generations .

Iniquity, and transgression, and sin; sins of all sorts and sizes, secret or open, infirmities or presumptions, against God or men, as the heap of various words here put together signifies.

That will by no means clear the guilty: this is commonly esteemed a title of justice or vengeance, which is here added by way of correction lest men should mistake or abuse God's mercy. God is most gracious indeed, but so as he is also just, and will not pity nor spare impudent and impenitent transgressors, but will severely punish them. And the Jewish doctors hereupon observe, that the mercy of God doth far exceed his justice; here being, as they number them, thirteen attributes of mercy, and but one of justice. But this translation and interpretation is rejected by some late learned interpreters, who make this an attribute of God's goodness or clemency, and render the words thus, In destroying he will not utterly destroy , though visiting , &c.: q.d. He is so gracious, that though he will severely punish the iniquity of the fathers, and especially their idolatry, upon themselves, and upon their children, &c., as he hath said, Exo_20:5, yet in judgment he will remember mercy, and will not utterly destroy his people for their sins. There are many things which favour this interpretation.

1. This suits most with Moses's solicitude and prayer for the people of Israel, which was that God would not utterly destroy them, as he threatened to do.

2. This sense best agrees with God's promise, Exo_33:19, I will make all my goodness pass before thee ; which general promise is particularly explained and performed in these two verses.

3. This place doth not speak of God's disposition and carriage towards his enemies, against whom he proceeds with great severity, and commands the Israelites to do so in the verses here following; but towards his people, whose cause Moses is all along pleading with God. See Exo_32:11-13,31,32 33:13,15 Exo 34:9.

4. The Hebrew verb here used frequently signifies to make empty or desolate , to empty men of their goods, or places of men. See Isa_3:26 Amo_4:6. So here, he will not utterly empty or destroy : though he will leave the marks of his vengeance for this sin upon thy people, even to their third and fourth generation; or, if it may be, further; yet he will not utterly root them out, which is the great thing thou fearest and labourest to prevent. And this very phrase, here used, we have in Jer_30:11, and repeated Jer_46:28, where, though interpreters generally render it, I will not leave thee altogether unpunished , which may make a good sense, yet it seems much better to be rendered, I will not utterly destroy thee ,

(1.) Because hereby these words exactly answer to the foregoing clause, yet will I not make a full end of thee , and so the same thing is elegantly repeated in other words, which is very frequent in Scripture.

(2.) Because here is an opposition between the severity God useth to other people, and the kindness he useth to his own people, which is manifest in the former member of the verse, and therefore most probable and agreeable in this.

5. This is much confirmed from Num_14:18, where Moses, pleading with God for the pardon of his people's sin, useth this very phrase and argument, as taken out of God's mouth, which in this sense is very proper and prevalent, Thou hast said, that even when thou dost visit iniquity, &c., thou wilt not utterly destroy them. And God answers him, Exo_34:20, I have pardoned according to thy word , i.e. so as not utterly to destroy them. But truly as I live , &c., Exo_34:21-23, i.e. But I will severely punish them. But if this had been the meaning, Lord, thou hast said thou wilt by no means clear the guilty, as we render it, it was a most improper argument, and put a sword into the Lord's hand to slay them even by virtue of this consideration.

Exodus 34:9

It is a stiff-necked people, and therefore need thy glorious and powerful presence to rule them. Or rather, though it be a stiff-necked people, as thou sayest, yet forsake them not. The Hebrew particle chi oft signifies though , as Exo_5:11 Isa_44:6.

Take us for thine inheritance, i.e. deal with us as men do with their inheritances, dwell among us, protect us, improve us.

Exodus 34:10

Behold, I make a covenant, i.e. I do hereby renew my covenant with thy people which they had violated and voided by their sin. But the shortness of the phrase, there being no mention here of any with whom this covenant is made or renewed, and the following words, make it more probable that this covenant is nothing but a solemn promise or engagement that God will do the thing which here follows. And the word covenant is oft used for a mere promise, as Gen_9:9, &c.; Lev_24:8 Num_18:19 25:12.

It is a terrible thing that I will do with thee; either,

1. By thy ministry, as that phrase is sometimes used, as 1Co_15:10. Or,

2. In the midst of thee, i.e. of thy people, as Exo_34:11, before thee , i.e. before thy people. This I prefer, because the next verse explains this of such things as were not done by Moses's ministry, nor in his time, but afterwards.

Exodus 34:27

Object.

God saith, I will write , Exo_34:1.

Answ. 1. Moses was to write the ritual precepts mentioned here above, God wrote the moral law.

2. Moses wrote what he wrote in a book; see Exo_24:7; but what was written upon the tables of stone was written by God himself, not by Moses, who had no graving instruments with him in the mount, and could not without them write upon the stone.

Exodus 34:28

He was there forty days and forty nights; as he had been before, being now to renew the broken covenant. This forty days' fast of his is mentioned four times, Exo_24:18, and here, and Deu_9:18 10:10, but it is evident it was performed but twice, as the occasion of it happened only twice.

He wrote, not Moses, but the Lord, as appears from Exo_24:1, and from Deu 10, the relative pronoun being here referred to the remoter antecedent, of which there are many instances, as Gen_10:12 1Sa_21:14 27:8 Psa_99:6.

Exodus 34:29

Quest. Why now, and not when he came down from God before?

Exodus 35:1 EXODUS CHAPTER 35

The command to observe the sabbath, Exo_35:1-3; and to bring a free-will offering to the Lord, Exo_35:4,5. The furniture of the tabernacle, Exo_35:6-19. Men and women bring their jewels for the same, Exo_35:20-24. Understanding women spin, Exo_35:25,26. The chief of the people bring in precious stones and spices, Exo_35:27-29. God endues Bezaleel and Aholiab with a spirit of wisdom for this work, Exo_35:30-35.

No text from Poole on this verse.

Exodus 35:2

This command of the sabbath is repeated here, as also Exo_31:13, together with the instructions for the building of the tabernacle, and its utensils, to show that they were made for no other use than the service of God, which was to be performed, as every day, so in an eminent and peculiar manner upon the sabbath day, and to teach them the absolute necessity of minding that precept in and above all their ceremonial observations.

Exodus 35:3

This command seems to be only temporary and extraordinary during the present season and condition, and not extending to succeeding generations. For,

1. There are instances of temporary precepts both in the Old and New Testament, which yet are not in their places said to be so. Such were some of the precepts concerning the passover, Exo_12:11, as is confessed. And such was that law of abstaining from things strangled, and blood, Ac 15.

2. This precept is nakedly proposed, and not called a perpetual statute , nor enjoined to be observed in their generations, as other precepts are, to whom those, or some like clauses, are frequently added.

3. The sabbath is rather a feast day than a fast day. And the Jews did make feasts, and invited guests upon the sabbath day, which could not probably be without kindling a fire. And, which is more considerable, Christ himself, who fulfilled all righteousness, and therefore would not have joined in the violation of the sabbath, went to one of those feasts, Lu 14. And the Corinthians, as they received the Lord's supper upon that day, which none question, so they had their feasts, as is confessed and apparent from 1Co_11:21,22, &c.

4. The kindling of a fire was no greater hinderance to the religious observation of the sabbath, than other things which were allowed upon that day, such as the washing and dressing of themselves, eating and drinking, &c.

5. This prohibition doth not seem to concern the dressing of meat, as many understand it, by comparing this with Exo_16:23, (which place I humbly conceive is misunderstood, as I have there intimated, for that was lawful to be done upon, their most solemn days, Exo_12:16) but the service of the tabernacle, which is the subject of this chapter, and the occasion of these words; and the sense seems to be this, You shall kindle no fire for any handiwork throughout your habitation, no, not for the service of this tabernacle, for the heating of any tools, or the melting of any metals, or other things belonging to it, which being to be made for God's service, and deserving and requiring all expedition, they might probably conceive that such work might be done upon that day. And here also, as oft elsewhere, under one kind, all the rest are comprehended and forbidden.

Exodus 35:13

But neither did God prescribe the making of the shewbread amongst the other utensils, Exo 25, nor was this made by the workmen here spoken of, but by others. How then comes this to be mentioned here?

Answ. 1.

The shew-bread may be here put for the vessels for the receiving the shew-bread, by a usual metonymy of the adjunct, the thing contained put for the thing containing; as treasures are put for the place where the treasures are put, Psa_135:7 Mat_2:11 12:35, and the gifts or offerings of God for the treasury where they were put, Luk_21:4. Hence Tremellius renders this place, and the vessels of the shew-bread .

Object. All the vessels of the table are mentioned before, of which this was one.

Answ. It is not unusual after a general expression comprehending all distinctly to name one eminent member of that kind, such as this unquestionably was, the table being made principally for this use. Thus Mar_16:7, Tell my disciples and Peter . Like examples are in 2Sa_2:30 1Ki_11:1 Psa_18:1 Act_11:4, and in other authors. And for the particle vau , and, which may seem to imply that these were things of another kind, and not any vessels of the table, that is oft put for especially, as Jos_2:1 Mar_16:7, and so only notes an eminent thing of the same kind, as hath been said.

Answ. 2. Though God did not prescribe the making of the shewbread, yet he mentions it, together with the table, Exo_25:30, and therefore it is conveniently mentioned with the table in this place also, where Moses, to show his exactness and fidelity, doth punctually repeat the same things to the people which he had received in command from God. In like manner the oil, which fed the light of the lamps, is mentioned here in the next verse, because the lighting of the lamps was prescribed, Exo_25:37.

THE THIRD BOOK OF MOSES CALLED LEVITICUS

THE ARGUMENT

This Book, containing the actions of about one month's space, acquainteth us with the Levitical ceremonies used after the tabernacle was erected and anointed in the wilderness, and is therefore called LEVITICUS. It treats of laws concerning persons and things, clean and unclean, by infirmity or accident; as also purifyings in general once a year, and divers particular cleansings, with a brief repetition of divers laws, #Le 19, together with certain feasts, of seven years' rest, of the jubilee, and the redemption of things consecrated to God, &c.; but especially of such ceremonies as were used about offerings and sacrifices, which were both expiatory, for trespasses wittingly or unwittingly committed, whether by the people or the priests; and also eucharistical, in the owning of God's blessings. Here are declared also laws for the regulating of these, and prescribing the lawful time for marriages. Here is set down how several abominable sins are punishable by the magistrate; and how these things are to be managed by certain persons appropriated to the tribe of Levi, whose office is confirmed from heaven, and the maladministration of it threatened, and the judgment particularly inflicted on Nadab and Abihu for an example. Here are also promises and threatenings to the observers or breakers of this law.

Leviticus 1:1 LEVITICUS CHAPTER 1

God commands Moses concerning free-will burnt offerings of bullock or sheep; male without blemish, Lev_1:1-3. The offerer to lay his hand on the head of the offering, that it might be accepted for him, Lev_1:4. The bullock to be slain, and its blood sprinkled on the altar, Lev_1:5. Its parts to be consumed by fire, Lev_1:7-9. Of sheep or goats, Lev_1:10-13. Of fowls, as turtledoves and young pigeons; their blood to be wrung out at the side of the altar, Lev_1:14-17

Moses stood without, Exo_40:35, waiting for God's call.

Out of the tabernacle of the congregation; from the mercyseat in the tabernacle.

Leviticus 1:2

There are divers kinds of sacrifices here prescribed; some by way of acknowledgment to God for mercies either desired or received; others by way of satisfaction to God for men's sins; others were mere exercises of piety and devotion. And the reason why there are so many kinds of them was, partly respect to the childish estate of the Jews, who by the custom of nations, and their own natural inclinations, were much addicted to outward rites and ceremonies, that they might have full employment of that kind in God's service, and thereby be kept from temptations to idolatry; and partly to represent as well the several perfections of Christ, be true sacrifice, and the various benefits of his death, as the several duties which men owe to their Creator and Redeemer, all which could not be so well expressed by one sort of sacrifices.

Of the flock, or, of the sheep ; though the Hebrew word contains both the sheep and goats, as appears both from the use of the word, Gen_12:16 27:9 38:17 and from Lev_1:10, and other places of Scripture. Now God chose these kinds of creatures for his sacrifices, either,

1. In opposition to the Egyptian idolatry, to which divers of the Israelites had been used, and were still in danger of revolting to again, that the frequent destruction of these creatures might bring such silly deities into contempt. Or,
2. Because these are the fittest representations both of Christ and of true Christians, as being gentle, and harmless, and patient, and most useful to men. Or,
3. As the best and most profitable creatures, with which it is fit God should be served, and which we should be ready to part with, when God requires us to do so. Or,

4. As things most common and obvious, that men might never want a sacrifice when they needed or God required it.

Leviticus 1:3

A burnt sacrifice, strictly so called, was such as was to be all burnt, the skin excepted, Lev_7:8 Gen_8:20 1Ki_3:15. For Otherwise every sacrifice was burnt, more or less. The sacrifices did partly signify that the whole man, in whose stead the sacrifice was offered, was to be entirely and unreservedly offered or devoted to God's service; and that the whole man did deserve to be utterly consumed, if God should deal severely with him; and directed us to serve the Lord with all singleness of heart, without self-ends, and to be ready to offer to God even such sacrifices or services wherein we ourselves should have no part nor benefit.

A male, as being more perfect than the female, Mal_1:14, and more truly representing Christ.

Without blemish; of which see Exo_29:1 Lev_23:22, &c.; to signify,

1. That God should be served with the best of every kind.
2. That man, represented by these sacrifices, should aim at all purity and perfection of heart and life, and that Christians should one day attain to it, Eph_5:27.
3. The spotless and complete holiness of Christ, Heb_9:13,14 1Pe_1:18,19 2:22. Of his own voluntary will . According to this translation, the place speaks only of free-will offerings, or such as were not prescribed by God to be offered in course, but were offered at the pleasure and by the voluntary devotion of any person, either by way of supplication for any mercy which he needed or desired, or by way of thanksgiving for any favour or blessing received. But it may seem improper to restrain the rules here given to free will offerings, which were to be observed in other offerings also. And the Hebrew word is by the LXX. Chaldee, Syriac, and Arabic, and others, rendered to this purpose, for his acceptance , or that he may be accepted with God , or that God may be atoned, as it is Lev_1:4. And so this phrase is used Lev_23:11. At the door of the tabernacle of the congregation ; in the court near to the door, where the altar stood, Lev_1:5. For here it was to be sacrificed, and here also the people might behold the oblation of it. And this further signified, that men could have no entrance, neither into the earthly tabernacle, the church, nor into the heavenly tabernacle of glory, but by Christ, who is the door , Joh_10:7,9, by whom alone we have access to God.

Leviticus 1:4

His hand, i.e. both his hands, Lev_8:14,18 16:21; a common enallage.

Upon the head of the burnt-offering; whereby he signified,

1. That he willingly gave it to the Lord.
2. That he did legally unite himself with it, and judged himself worthy of that death which it suffered in his stead; and that he laid his sins upon it in a ceremonial way, and had an eye to him upon whom God would lay the iniquity of us all , Isa_53:6; and that together with it he did freely offer up himself to God.

To make atonement for him, to wit, ceremonially and sacramentally; as directing his faith and thoughts to that true propitiatory sacrifice which in time was to be offered up for him. See Rom_3:25 Heb_9:15,25,26. And although burnt-offerings were commonly offered by way of thanksgiving, Gen_8:20 Psa_51:16,17, yet they were sometimes offered by way of atonement for sin, to wit, for sins in general, as appears from Job_1:5, but for particular sins there were special sacrifices, as we shall see.

Leviticus 1:5

He shall kill; either,

1. The offerer, who is said to do it, to wit, by the priest; for men are commonly said to do what they cause others to do, as Joh_4:1,2. Or,

2. The priest, as it follows, or the Levite, whose office this was. See Exo_29:11 Lev_8:15 Num_8:19 1Ch_23:28,31 2Ch_20:16 35:11.

Sprinkle the blood round about upon the altar; which was done in a considerable, quantity, as may be gathered from Zec_9:15; and whereby was signified,

1. That the offerer deserved to have his blood spilt in that manner.
2. That the blood of Christ should be poured forth for sinners, and that that was the only mean of their reconciliation to God, and acceptance with him.

Leviticus 1:6

He shall flay the burnt-offering; partly for decency, because the sacrifices being as it were God's food and feast, it was incongruous to offer to God that which men refused to eat; and partly to signify that the great thing which God required and regarded in men was, not their outward appearance, but their inside; and that as he doth see all men's insides, Heb_4:13, so he will one day make them visible to others.

Into his pieces, to wit, the head, and fat, and inwards, and legs, Lev_1:8,9.

Leviticus 1:7

Or,

dispose the fire, i.e. blow it up, and put it together, so as it might be fit for the present work. For the fire there used and allowed came down from heaven, Lev_9:24, and was to be carefully preserved there, and all other fire was forbidden, Lev_10:1, &c.

Leviticus 1:8

The fat; all the fat, which was to be separated from the flesh, and to be put together, to increase the flame, and to consume the other parts of the sacrifice more quickly. Others translate it, the trunk of the body, as distinguished from the head, and joints, and inward parts.

Leviticus 1:9

His inwards and his legs shall he wash, to signify the universal and perfect purity both of the inwards, or the heart, and of the legs, or ways, or actions, which was in Christ, and which should be in all Christians.

The priest shall burn all; not only the parts now mentioned, but all the rest, the trunk of the body, and the shoulders, as is apparent from the practice or execution of these precepts.

Of a sweet savour; not in itself, for so it rather caused a stink, but as it represented Christ's offering up himself to God as a sweet-smelling savour, Eph_5:2; and to admonish us of the excellent virtue of Divine institution, without which God values no worship, though never so glorious, and by which even the meanest things, are precious and acceptable to God.

Leviticus 1:10

No text from Poole on this verse.

Leviticus 1:11

This and other kinds of sacrifices were killed on the side of the altar northward, Lev_6:25 7:2, because here seems to have been the largest and most convenient place for that work, the altar being probably near the middle of the east end of the building, and the entrance being on the south side; so the north side was the only vacant place. Besides, this might design the place of Christ's death, both more generally, to wit, in Jerusalem, which was in the sides of the north, Psa_48:2; and more specially, to wit, on Mount Calvary, which was on the north and west side of Jerusalem.

Leviticus 1:14

These birds were appointed for the relief of the poor who could not bring better. And these birds are preferred before others, partly because they were easily gotten, and partly because they are fit representations of Christ's chastity, and meekness, and gentleness, for which these birds are remarkable. The pigeons must be young, because then they are best; but the turtle-doves are better when they are more grown up, and therefore they are not confined to that age.

Leviticus 1:15

Wring off his head, to wit, from the rest of the body; as sufficiently appears, because this was to be burnt by itself, as it here follows, and the body afterwards, Lev_1:17. And whereas it is said, Lev_5:8, he shall wring off his head from his neck, but shall not divide it asunder, that is spoken not of the burnt-offering, as here, but of the sin-offering, in which there might be a differing rite.

Leviticus 1:16

With his feathers, or, with its dung or filth , to wit, contained in the crop, and in the guts.

On the east part, to wit, of the tabernacle. Here the filth was cast, because this was the remotest place from the holy of holies, which was in the west end; to teach us, that impure things and persons should not presume to approach to God, and that they should be banished from his presence.

By the place of the ashes; the place where the ashes fell down and lay, whence they were afterwards removed without the camp. See Lev_4:12 6:10,11 8:17.

Leviticus 1:17

Shall not divide it asunder; shall cleave the bird through the whole length, yet so as not to separate the one side from the other, and so as there may be a wing left on each side. See Gen_15:10.

Leviticus 2:1 LEVITICUS CHAPTER 2

Concerning free-will meat-offerings, of fine flour with oil and frankincense upon it, Lev_2:1; for a memorial, Lev_2:2. The remainder most holy, to be eaten by Aaron and his sons, Lev_2:3. Of baked and unleavened cakes mixed and wafers sprinkled with oil, Lev_2:4; or dressed in the pan, Lev_2:5; or in the frying-pan, Lev_2:7; but without leaven or honey, Lev_2:11. The firstlings excepted, Lev_2:12. Salt of the covenant to be offered, Lev_2:13. First-fruits, how to be offered, Lev_2:14-16.

A meat-offering was of two kinds; the one joined with other offerings, Num_15:4,7,10, which was prescribed, together with the measure or proportion of it; the other, of which this place speaks, was a distinct and separate offering, and was left to the offerer's good will, both for the thing and for the quantity. And the matter of this offering was things without life, as meal, corn, cakes, &c. Now this sort of sacrifices were appointed,

1. Because these are things of greatest necessity and benefit to man, and therefore it is meet that God should be served with them, and owned and praised as the giver of them.

2. In condescension to the poor, that they might not want an offering for God, and to show that God would accept even the meanest services, when offered to him with a sincere mind.

3. These were necessary provisions for the feast, which was here to be represented to God, and for the use of the priests, who were to attend upon these holy ministrations.

Fine flour, searched, or sifted, and purged from all bran, it being fit that the best things should be offered to the best Being.

He shall pour oil upon it; which may note the graces of the Holy Ghost, which are compared to oil, and anointing with it, Psa_45:7 1Jo_2:20, and which are necessary to make any offering acceptable to God. The frankincense manifestly designed Christ's satisfaction and intercession, which is compared to a sweet odour, Eph_5:2, and to incense, Rev_8:3.

Leviticus 2:2

He shall take, i.e. that priest to whom he brought it, and who is appointed to offer it.

The memorial of it; that part thus selected and offered; which is called a memorial, either,

1. To the offerer, who by offering this part is minded that the whole of that he brought, and of all which he hath of that kind, is God's, to whom this part was paid as a quitrent or acknowledgment. Or,

2. To God, whom (to speak after the manner of men) this did put in mind of his gracious covenant, and promises of favour and acceptance of the offerer and his offering. See Exo_30:16 Lev_6:15 Num_5:26

Leviticus 2:3

Aaron's and his sons', to be eaten by them, Lev_6:16. i.e. Most holy, or such as were to be eaten only by the priests, and that only in the. holy place near the altar. See Lev_6:26 7:6,9 21:22.

Leviticus 2:4

Baken in the oven; made in the sanctuary for that use, as may seem from 1Ch_23:28,29 Eze 46:20.

Leviticus 2:11

No meat offering, to wit, which is offered of free will; for in other offerings it might be used, Lev_7:13 23:17.

Shall be made with leaven: this was forbidden, partly to mind them of their deliverance out of Egypt, when they were forced through haste to bring away their meal or dough (which was the matter of this oblation) unleavened; partly to signify what Christ would be, and what they should be, pure and free from all error in the faith and worship of God, and from all hypocrisy and malice or wickedness, all which are signified by leaven, Mat_16:12 Mar_8:15 Luk_12:1 1Co_5:8 Gal_5:9.

Nor any honey; either,

1. Because it hath the same effect with leaven in paste or dough, making it sour, and swelling. Or,

2. In opposition to the sacrifices of the Gentiles, in which the use of honey was most frequent. Or,

3. To teach us that God's worship is not to be governed by men's fancies and appetites, to which honey might have been grateful, but by God's will. The Jews conceive, that under the name of honey all sweet fruits, as figs, dates, &c., are contained and forbidden.

Leviticus 2:12

Or, the offering, or, for the offering of the first-fruits you shall or may offer them, or either of them, to wit, leaven or honey, which were offered and accepted in that case, Lev_23:17 2Ch_31:5.

They shall not be burnt; but reserved for the priests, Num_18:13 Deu_18:4.

Leviticus 2:13

Every oblation of thy meat-offering shalt thou season with salt; either,

1. For the decency and conveniency of the feast, which God would have here represented. Or,

2. For the signification of that incorruption of mind, and sincerity of grace, which in Scripture is signified by salt, Mar_9:49 Col_4:6, and which is necessary in all them that would offer an acceptable offering to God. Or,

3. In testimony of that communion which they had with God in these exercises of his worship; salt being the great symbol of friendship in all nations and ages. The salt of the covenant of thy God : so salt is called, either,

1. Because it fitly represented the durableness and perpetuity of God's covenant with them, which is designed by salt, Num_18:19 2Ch_13:5. Or,

2. Because it was so particularly and rigorously required as a condition of their covenant with God; this being made absolutely necessary in all their offerings, as it follows; and as the neglect of sacrifices was a breach of covenant on their part, so also was the neglect of salt in their sacrifices. With all thine offerings ; not these only, but all other, as appears from Eze_43:24 Mar_9:49.

Leviticus 2:14

If thou offer a meat-offering of thy first-fruits, to wit, of thine own free will; for there were other first-fruits, and that of several sorts, which were prescribed, and the time, quality, and proportion of them appointed by God. See Lev_23:10.

Leviticus 3:1 LEVITICUS CHAPTER 3

Concerning thank-offerings: of bullocks, male or female, without blemish; the manner of this oblation, Lev_3:1-5. Of small cattle, male or female, without blemish; a lamb, Lev_3:6-11; a goat, Lev_3:12-16. All fat the Lord's; the fat and blood not to be eat, 16, 17.

Which was an offering for peace and prosperity, and the favour and blessing of God, either,

1. Obtained; and so this was a thank-offering, as Lev_7:12,16; or,
2. Desired; and so it was a kind of supplication to God, as Jud_20:26 1Ch_21:26. Whether it be a male or female; which were allowed here, though not in burnt-offerings, because those principally respected the honour of God, who is to be served with the best; but the peace-offerings did primarily respect the benefit of the offerer, and therefore the choice was left to himself.

Leviticus 3:2

At the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; not on the north side of the altar, where the burnt-offering was killed, Lev_1:11, as also the sin-offering, and the trespass-offering, Lev_6:25 7:2, but in the very entrance of the court where the Brazen altar stood, which place was not so holy as the other; as appears both because it was more remote from the holy of holies, and because the ashes of the sacrifices were to be laid here. And the reason of this difference is not obscure, both because part of this sacrifice was to be waved by the hands of the offerer, Lev_7:30, who might not come into the court; and because this offering was not so holy as the other, which were to be eaten only by the priest, when part of these were eaten by the offerer.

Leviticus 3:5

Upon the burnt sacrifice; either,

1. Upon the remainders of it, which yet were burning; or rather,
2. After it; for the daily burnt-offering was first to be offered, both as more eminently respecting God's honour, which ought to be preferred before all things; and as the most solemn and stated sacrifice, which should take place of all voluntary and occasional oblation, and as a sacrifice of a higher nature and use, being for expiation and atonement, without which no peace could be obtained, nor peace-offering offered with acceptance.

Leviticus 3:16

The priest shall burn them, the parts mentioned, among which the tail is not one, as it was in the sheep, because that in goats is a refuse part.

All the fat: this is to be limited,

1. To those beasts which were offered or might be offered in sacrifice, as it is explained and restrained Lev_7:23,25.

2. To that kind of fat which is here above mentioned, and required to be offered, which was separated, or easily separable, from the flesh; for the fat which was here and there mixed with the flesh they might eat, Deu_32:14 Neh_8:10.

Leviticus 3:17

Throughout all your dwellings; not only at or near the tabernacle, nor only of those beasts which you actually sacrifice, but also in your several dwellings, and of all that kind of beasts.

That ye eat neither fat: this was forbidden,

1. To preserve the reverence of the holy rites and sacrifices.
2. That they might be taught hereby to acknowledge God as their Lord, and the Lord of all the creatures, who might reserve what he pleased to himself.
3. To exercise them in obedience to God, and self-denial, and mortification of their appetites, even in those things which probably many of them would much desire.

Nor blood: this was forbidden, partly, to maintain reverence to God and his worship; partly, out of opposition to idolaters, who used to drink the blood of their sacrifices; partly, with respect unto Christ's blood, thereby manifestly signified; and partly, for moral admonition about avoiding cruelty, &c.

Leviticus 4:1 LEVITICUS CHAPTER 4

Of sins of ignorance, and their sacrifice, Lev_4:1,2: committed by the priest according to the guilt of the people; he must offer a perfect young bullock, and sprinkle the blood seven times before the veil of the holy place, and upon the horns of the incense altar, Lev_4:3-12. Or by the whole congregation, when their sin is known, the elders of the congregation to lay their hands on the head of the offering, to be offered in the same manner with that of the priest, Lev_4:13-21. Or by a ruler, he, when his sin is made known to him, must offer a he-goat, Lev_4:22-26. Or by a private person, must offer a female goat, Lev_4:27-35: the sin is forgiven him.

No text from Poole on this verse.

Leviticus 4:2

This must necessarily be understood of more than common sins and daily infirmities; for if every such sin had required an offering, it had not been possible either for most sinners to bear such a charge, or for the altar to receive so many sacrifices, or for the priests to manage so infinite a work. And for ordinary sins, they were ceremonially expiated by the daily offering, and by that on the great day of atonement, Lev_16:30.

Through ignorance; or, error ; either not knowing his fact to be sinful, as appears by comparing Lev_4:13,14, or not considering it, but rashly and unadvisedly falling into sin through the power of some sudden passion or temptation, as the Hebrew word signifies, Psa_119:67. Compare Job_19:4 Psa_19:13.

Against any of the commandments of the Lord concerning things which ought not to be done: the words may be thus rendered, in or about every, or any of the commandments of the Lord which should not be done ; or, which concern things that should not be done , to wit, in any negative commands. And there is great reason why a sacrifice should be more necessary for these than for other sins, because affirmative precepts do not so strictly and constantly bind men as the negative do; and if a man through ignorance have neglected them, he may yet recover his error, and fulfil them.

And shall do against any of them; then he shall offer according to his quality, which is here to be understood out of the following verses.

Leviticus 4:3

The priest that is anointed, i.e. the high priest, who only was anointed after the first time. See Exo_29:7 30:30 40:15 Lev_10:7 Num_3:3. His anointing is mentioned, because he was not complete high priest till he was anointed.

Do sin, either in doctrine or practice, which it is here supposed he may do. And this is noted as a blot and character of imperfection in the priesthood of the law, whereby the Israelites were directed to expect another and better High Priest, even one who is holy, harmless, and separate from sinners , Heb_7:26.

According to the sin of the people; in the same manner as any of the people do, which implies that God expected more circumspection and care from him than from the people. But the words may be rendered, to the sin or guilt of the people , which may be mentioned as a reason of the law, and an aggravation of his sin, that by it he commonly brings sin, and guilt, and punishment upon the people, who are infected or scandalized by his example.

A young bullock; the same sacrifice which was offered for all the people, to show how much his sin was aggravated by his quality.

For a sin-offering, Heb. sin , which word is oft taken in that sense, as Exo_29:14.

Leviticus 4:4

He shall lay his hand upon the bullock's head, to testify both his acknowledgment of his sin, and his faith in God's promise for the expiation of his sins through Christ, whom that sacrifice typified.

And kill the bullock, to wit, by one of the priests, whom he shall cause to do it; for this priest is distinguished from the anointed priest , Lev_4:5.

Leviticus 4:5

Into the tabernacle; which was not required nor allowed in any other sacrifice, possibly to show the greatness of the high priest's sin, which needed more than ordinary diligence in him and favour from God to expiate it.

Leviticus 4:6

Seven times; a number much used in Scripture, as a number of perfection; and here prescribed, either to show that his sins needed more than ordinary purgation, and more frequent and manifest exercises of his faith and repentance, both which graces he was obliged to join with that ceremonial rite.

Before the veil, to wit, the second veil dividing between the holy of holies, which is generally called by the name here used, as Exo_26:31 35:12 40:3,21 Num 4:5.

Leviticus 4:7

The altar of sweet incense which is in the tabernacle ; the altar of burnt-offerings was without the tabernacle.

All the blood; so also below, Lev_4:18,30,34, to wit, all the rest, as it is expressed Lev_5:9, for part was disposed elsewhere.

Leviticus 4:12

So no part of this was to be eaten by the priests, as it was in other sin-offerings, Lev_6:26. The reason is plain, because the offerer might not eat of his own sin-offering, and the priest was the offerer in this case, as also in the sin-offering for the whole congregation below, Lev_4:21, of which the priest himself was a member.

Shall he carry forth; not himself, which would have defiled him, but by another whom he shall appoint for that work, as may be gathered from Lev_16:27,28.

Without the camp, to signify either,

1. The horrible and abominable nature of sin, especially in high and holy persons, or when it overspreads a whole people. Or,
2. The removing of the guilt and punishment of that sin from the people, and their duty of keeping such wickedness out of the camp for time to come. Or,
3. That Christ should suffer without the camp or gate, as he did. See Heb_13:11,12. Where the ashes are poured out; for the ashes, though at first they were thrown down near the altar, Lev_1:16, yet afterwards they, together with the filth of the sacrifices, were carried into a certain place without the camp. See Lev_6:10,11.

Leviticus 4:13

The whole congregation; the body of the people, or the greater part of them, their rulers concurring with them.

Leviticus 4:14

Against it; against any one of the said commandments.

A young bullock; but if the sin of the congregation was only the omission of some ceremonial duty, a kid of the goats was to be offered, Num_15:24.

Leviticus 4:15

The elders of the congregation, i.e. the rulers of the people, of whom see Exo_3:16 24:1, who here acted in the name of all the people, who could not possibly perform this act in their own persons.

The burnt-offering is so called by way of eminency, to wit, the daily burnt-offering, of which Exo_29:38, of which place see Lev_1:11. It is a sin-offering, and therefore to be killed where the burnt-offering is killed, as is expressed Lev_6:25 Lev_7:2; whereby it is distinguished from the peace-offerings, which were killed elsewhere, Lev_3:2.

Leviticus 5:1 LEVITICUS CHAPTER 5

If a man heard or knew of blasphemy, and concealed it, he must atone it, Lev_5:1. Or if he touch any unclean thing, and is made sensible of it, or have sworn rashly, he is guilty, must confess it, and offer a lamb or goat, female; in case of poverty, two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons, one for a sin, and one for a burnt-offering, Lev_5:2-10. But if this were too much, the tenth part of an ephah of fine flour, without oil or frankincense, Lev_5:11-13. He that purloineth holy things must offer a ram, and the worth in silver, shekel according to the weight of the sanctuary, Lev_5:14-16. Sins of ignorance again mentioned, and a perfect ram, with the estimation, for a sin-offering, Lev_5:17-19.

And hear; and for that is , as that particle is often used, as Gen_13:15 1Ch_21:12, compared with 2Sa_24:13; for this declares in particular what the sin was. The voice of swearing ; either,

1. Of adjuration upon oath, when the judge adjures a witness to speak the whole truth; of which see Mat_26:63. But this seems too much to narrow the sense; and this and the other laws, both before and after it, speak of private sins committed through ignorance. Or,

2. Of false swearing before a judge. But that is expressly forbidden, Lev_6:3. Or rather,

3. Of cursing, or blasphemy, or execration, as the word commonly signifies; and that either,

1. Against one's neighbour, as 2Sa_16:7; or,

2. Against God, as Lev_24:10,11; which may seem to be principally intended here, because the crime here spoken of is of so high a nature, that he who heard it was obliged to reveal it, and prosecute the guilty. And though God be not here mentioned, yet the general word is here to be understood of the most famous particular, as it is frequently in all authors, of which there are many instances.

Whether he hath seen; being present when it was said.

Or known, by sufficient information from others. He shall bear his iniquity, i.e. the punishment of it, as that word is oft used, as Gen_19:15 Num_18:1. See of this phrase Lev_17:16 20:20 Isa_53:11.

Leviticus 5:2

Touch any unclean thing, to wit, ceremonially; of which see more fully Lev_11:24, &c.; Deu 14.

If it be hidden from him; if he do it unwittingly, yet that would not excuse him, because he should have been more diligent and circumspect to avoid all unclean things. Hereby God designed to awaken men to watchfulness against, and repentance for, their unknown or unobserved sins. See Psa_19:12 1Jo_3:20.

Guilty; not morally, for the conscience was not directly polluted by these things, Mat_15:11,18, but ceremonially.

Leviticus 5:3

As soon as he knoweth it, he must not delay to make his peace with God. And though it was sin before, though not known, yet the knowledge of it made it worse, and therefore required the more speedy repentance.

He shall be guilty, not only ceremonially by that touch, but morally for his violation and contempt of God's authority and command.

Leviticus 5:4

If a soul swear, to wit, rashly, without consideration, either of God's law, or his own power or right, as David did, 1Sa_25:22.

To do evil; either,

1. To himself, to wit, to punish himself, either in his body, or estate, or something else which is dear to him. Or rather,

2. To his neighbour, as 1Sa_25:22 Act_23:12.

Or to do good, to wit, to his neighbour, as Mar_6:23, when a man either may not or cannot do it, which may frequently happen.

And it be hid from him, i.e. he did not know, or not consider, that what he swore to do, was or would be impossible or unlawful.

When he knoweth of it; when he discovers it to be so, either by his own consideration, or by information from others.

In one of these; either in the good or evil which he swore to do.

Leviticus 5:5

In one of these things; in one of the three forementioned cases, either by sinful silence and compliance with others in their sin, Lev_4:1; or by an unclean touch, as Lev_4:2,3; or by rash swearing, Lev_4:4.

He shall confess before the Lord in the place of public worship. And this confession is not to be restrained to the present case, but by a parity of reason, and comparing of other scriptures, to be extended to other sacrifices for sin, to which this was a constant companion; and as it was signified by the guilty person's laying his hand upon his offering, so it is probable it was expressed in words. See Num_5:6,7.

Leviticus 5:6

Quest. How comes confession and a sacrifice to be necessary for him that touched an unclean thing, when such persons were cleansed with simple washing, as appears from Le 11 Num 19?

Answ. This place speaks of him that being so unclean did come into the tabernacle, as may be gathered by comparing this place with Num_19:13, which if any man did, knowing himself to be unclean, which was the case there, he was to be cut off for it; and if he did it ignorantly, which is the case here, Lev_4:2, he was upon discovery of it to offer this sacrifice. Interpreters dispute much what the difference is between sins and trespasses , and between sin-offerings and trespass-offerings . Some make the one for omissions, the other for commissions; the one for greater, the other for lesser sins; the one for known sins, the other for sins of ignorance; in all which there seems to be more curiosity than solidity. Either they seem to be the same, as may be gathered from Lev_4:6, where those two words, asham and theta , which they so carefully and critically distinguish, are both used concerning the trespass-offerings, and from Lev_4:9; or the difference may be this, that sin-offerings were more indefinite or general, being for any particular sin, and trespass-offerings more restrained and particular, for such sins as were more scandalous and injurious, either to God by blasphemy, as Lev_4:1, or to his sanctuary, by approaching to it in one's uncleanness, Lev_4:2,3, as hath been now said; or to one's neighbour, by swearing to do to them either the good which we afterwards cannot or do not, or the evil which we should not; or to the priests and holy things of God, Lev_4:15.

A female; because those sins were less than others, as being committed ignorantly or unwittingly, and therefore God would accept a meaner sacrifice for them.

Leviticus 5:7

If he be not able, through poverty, as Lev_4:11. And this exception was allowed also in other sin-offerings.

Two young pigeons, of which see Lev_1:14.

One for a sin-offering, which was for that particular sin, and therefore is offered first before the burnt-offering, which was for sins in general to teach us not to rest in general confessions and repentances for sin, as hypocrites commonly do, but distinctly and particularly, as far as we can, to search out, and confess, and loathe, and leave our particular sins, without which God will not accept our other religious services. Note that the burnt-offering was for the expiation of sin as well as the sin-offering, Lev_1:4, only that was for sin in general, and this for particular sins.

Leviticus 5:11

The tenth part of an ephah, about a pottle of our measure. See Exo_16:36.

He shall put no oil upon it, neither shall he put any frankincense thereon; either to distinguish these from the meat-offerings, Lev_2:1; or as a fit expression of their true sorrow for their sins, in the sense whereof they were to abstain from things pleasant and delightful; see Num_5:15; or to signify that by his sins he deserved to be utterly deprived both of the oil of gladness, the gifts, graces, and comforts of the Holy Ghost, and of God's gracious acceptance of his prayers and sacrifices, which is signified by incense, Psa_141:2; or to teach them how evil a thing sin was, how hateful to God, and how uncomfortable to themselves.

Leviticus 5:13

As it was in the meat-offering, where all, except one handful, fell to the share of the priests. See Lev_2:3 7:9. And this is the rather mentioned here, because in the foregoing sacrifices, Lev_4:3 13, &c., the priest had no part reserved for him.

Leviticus 5:15

If a soul commit a trespass against the Lord and his priests.

And sin through ignorance; for if a man did it knowingly, he was to be cut off, Num_15:30.

In the holy things of the Lord; in things consecrated to God, and to holy uses; of which see Lev_22:2; such as tithes and first-fruits, or any things due, or devoted, or offered to God, which possibly a man might either withhold, or employ to some common use. See Exo_34:26 Deu_12:17,18 15:19 Jer_2:3.

A ram was a more chargeable sacrifice than the former, as the sin of sacrilege was greater. With thy estimation; as thou shalt esteem or rate it, thou, O priest, as appears from Lev_5:16,18 6:6 22:14 27:2,3; and at present, thou, O Moses, Lev_27:3, for he as yet performed the priest's part. And this either,

1. May be referred to the ram, which was to be of such a price and worth as the priest should appoint. Or rather,

2. Is an additional charge and punishment to him, which, besides the ram, he was to pay for the holy thing which he had withheld or abused, so many shekels of silver as the priest should esteem proportionable to it; which was, as it were, another part or branch of his trespass-offering.

The shekel of the sanctuary; of which see Poole "Gen_23:15".

Leviticus 5:16

Shall add the fifth part; so much they were to add to holy things redeemed, Lev_27:13,15,19.

Leviticus 5:17

Any of these things, to wit, concerning holy things, of which he is yet speaking, though with some difference and addition, as it may seem. The former law concerns the alienation of holy things from the sacred to a common use; and this may concern other miscarriages about holy things and holy duties, as may be gathered from Lev_5:19, where this is said to be a trespass against the Lord, not in a general sense, for so every sin war, but in a proper and peculiar sense.

Though he wist it not; for if he did it knowingly, he must die, Num_15:30.

Leviticus 6:1 LEVITICUS CHAPTER 6

Trespass-offerings for sins of deceit, or violence and perjury; restoration must be made, and a ram offered, Lev_6:1-7. The law of the burnt offering further declared; the fire to be ever burning upon the altar, Lev_6:8-13. Of meat-offerings for a memorial unto the Lord, and every one that toucheth them is holy, Lev_6:14-18.

Meat offerings for the consecration of Aaron and his sons, Lev_6:19-23. Of the sin offering, Lev_6:24-30.

No text from Poole on this verse.

Leviticus 6:2

This sin, though directly committed against man only, is here emphatically said to be done against the Lord ; not only in general, for so every sin against man is also against the Lord, whose image in man is thereby injured, and whose law, which obligeth us to love, and fidelity, and justice to other men, is thereby violated; but in a more special sense, because this was a violation of human society, whereof God is the author, and president, and defender; see Num_5:6; and because it was a secret sin, of which God alone was the witness and judge; see Act_5:4; and because God's name was abused in it by perjury, Lev_6:3.

To keep, to wit, in trust. Or in fellowship , Heb. or in putting of the hand . Which may be either,

1. Another expression of the same thing immediately going before, which is very frequent in Scripture; and so the sense is, when one man puts any thing into another man's hand to keep for him; and when he requires it, to restore it to him. Or,

2. A distinct branch, which seems more probable, and so it belongs to commerce or fellowship in trading, which is very usual, when one man puts any thing into another's hand, not to keep it, as in the foregoing word or member, but to use and improve it for the common benefit of them both, in which cases of partnership it is easy for one to deceive the other, and therefore provision is here made against it. And this is called a putting of the hand , because such agreements and associations used to be confirmed by giving or joining their hands together, Jer_1:15 Gal_2:9. Compare Exo_23:1.

Taken away by violence, to wit, secretly; for he seems to speak here of such sins as could not be proved by witness.

Or hath deceived his neighbour, got any thing from him by calumny, or fraud, or circumvention; for so the word signifies.

Leviticus 6:3

Swareth falsely; his oath being required, seeing there was no other way of discovery left.

Leviticus 6:4

Because he hath sinned, and is guilty. This guilt of his being manifested, either by his refusing to swear when called to it, as in some of the cases alleged; or by his voluntary confession upon remorse, whereby he reapeth this benefit, that he only restores the principal with the addition of a fifth part; whereas if he were convicted of his fault, he was to pay double, Exo_22:9.

Leviticus 6:9

Hitherto he hath prescribed the sacrifices themselves, now he comes to the manner of them. The law of the burnt-offering , to wit, of the daily one, of which Exo_29:38 Num_28:3, as the following words show.

Because of the burning upon the altar all night unto the morning: the meaning is, the evening burnt-offering was to be so managed and laid on piece after piece, that the fire might be constantly maintained by it. It is to be understood, that the morning burnt-offerings were to be kept burning all the day from morning to night also; but he mentions not that because there was so great a number and such a constant succession of sacrifices in the day-time, that there needed no law for feeding and keeping in the fire then; the only danger was for the night, when other sacrifices were not offered, but only the evening burnt-offering, which if it had been consumed quickly, as the morning burnt-offering was, there had been danger of the going out of that fire, which they were commanded diligently and constantly to keep in and maintain here below, Lev_6:13.

Leviticus 6:10

His linen garment, i.e. his linen coat, of which see Exo_28:39,40. The ashes are said to be consumed improperly, When the wood is consumed into ashes; as meal is said to be ground, Isa_47:2, when the corn is ground into meal; and the naked to be stripped of their clothing, Job_22:6, when by being stripped they are made naked.

Leviticus 6:11

Put on other garments, because this was no sacred, but a common work.

Unto a clean place, where no dung or filth was laid. See Lev_4:12, and compare Lev_14:40,41.

Leviticus 6:12

The fire coming down from heaven, Lev_9:24, was to be perpetually preserved, and not suffered to go out, partly that there might be no occasion nor temptation to offer strange fire, nor to mingle their inventions with God's appointments; and partly to teach them whence they were to expect the acceptance of all their sacrifices, even from the Divine mercy and grace, signified by the fire which came down from heaven, which was a usual token of God's favourable acceptance. See Poole "Gen_4:4", See Poole Gen_4:5.

Every morning; though the evening also be doubtless intended, as it appears from Lev_6:9, and from the nature of the thing; yet the morning is only mentioned, because then the altar was cleansed, and the ashes taken away, and a new fire made.

He shall burn thereon, i.e. upon the burnt-offering, which thereby would be sooner consumed, that so way might be made for other sacrifices, which were many.

Leviticus 6:14

The law of the meat-offering, to wit, of that which was offered alone, and that by any of the people, not by the priest, for then it must have been all burnt. This law, delivered Le 2, is here repeated for the sake of some additions here made to it; as it is a common practice of law-makers, when they make additional laws, to recite such laws to which such additions belong.

Leviticus 6:15

Leviticus 6:16

The males only might eat these, because they were most holy things; whereas the daughters of Aaron might eat other holy things, Num_18:11.

With unleavened bread; or rather, unleavened , for with is not in the Hebrew, and it disturbs the sense; for since the meat-offering itself was fine flour, Lev_2:1, it is not likely that they eat it with unleavened bread.

In the court of the tabernacle of the congregation; in some special room appointed for that purpose. See Lev_8:31 1Sa_3:3 Eze_42:13 46:19,24. The reason why this was to be eaten only by holy persons, and that in a holy place, is given Lev_6:17, because it is most holy , and therefore to be treated with greater reverence.

Leviticus 6:17

It shall not be baken with leaven; that part which remains to the priest; for the part here offered to God seems not to have been baked at all.

Leviticus 6:18

It may be understood either,

1. Of persons, that none should touch or eat them but consecrated persons, to wit, priests. Or this may be an additional caution, that they who eat them should be not only priests, or their male children, but also holy, i.e. having no uncleanness upon them, for in that case even the priests themselves might not touch them. Or rather,

2. Of things, as may be gathered by comparing this with Lev_6:27,28. Whatsoever toucheth them, as suppose the dish that receives them, the knife, or spoon, &c. which is used about them, those shall be taken for holy, and not employed for common uses. See Exo_29:37.

Leviticus 6:20

When he is anointed; when any of them are anointed for high priest; for he only of all the priests was to be anointed in future ages. This law of his consecration was delivered before, Exo_29:2,24,25, and is here repeated because of some additions made to it. A meat-offering perpetual, to wit, whensoever any of them shall be so anointed. At night, or, in the evening; the one to be annexed to the morning sacrifice, the other to the evening sacrifice, over and besides that meat-offering which every day was to be added to the daily morning and evening sacrifices, Exo_29:40.

Leviticus 6:21

Leviticus 6:23

No part of it shall be eaten by the priest, as it was when the offering was for the people. The reason of the difference is, partly, because when he offered it for the people, he was to have some recompence for his pains, which he could not expect when he offered it for himself; partly, to signify the imperfection of the Levitical priests, who could not bear their own iniquity; for the priest's eating part of the people's sacrifices did signify his typical bearing of the people's iniquity, as appears from Lev_10:17; and partly, to teach the priests and ministers of God, that it is their duty to serve God with singleness of heart, and to be content with God's honour, though they have no present advantage by it.

Leviticus 6:26

For sin; for the sins of the rulers, or of the people, or any of them, but not for the sins of the priests; for then its blood was brought into the tabernacle, and therefore it might not be eaten.

Leviticus 6:27

Whatsoever shall touch the flesh; of which See Poole "Lev_6:18".

Upon any garment; upon the priest's garment; for it was he only that sprinkled it, and in so doing he might easily sprinkle his garments.

Thou shalt wash that whereon it was sprinkled in the holy place; partly out of reverence to the blood of sacrifices, which hereby was kept from a profane or common touch; and partly that such garments might be decent, and fit for sacred administrations.

Leviticus 6:28

The earthen vessel shall be broken, because being full of pores, the liquor in which it was sodden might easily sink into it, whereby it was ceremonially holy, and therefore was broken, lest afterwards it should be abused to profane or common uses.

It shall be both scoured, and not broken, as being of considerable value, which therefore God would not have unnecessarily wasted. And this being of a more solid substance than an earthen vessel, was not so apt to drink in the humour.

Leviticus 7:1 LEVITICUS CHAPTER 7

The law of the sacrifices of peace-offerings; of thanksgiving, Lev_7:11-15; of vows and free-will-offerings: the unclean person eating thereof to die, Lev_7:16-21. Fat not to be eaten; what fat might be used for other things; he that eats of the fat of the offering to die; and no blood to be eat, Lev_7:22-27. Another caution concerning peace-offerings, Lev_7:28-34. The conclusion of the former laws, which are repeated, Lev_7:35-38.

Leviticus 7:4

Which is by the flanks; or, and that which is , &c. So this is another fat, as may seem probable from the mention of the several parts, the kidneys and the flanks. For it seems preposterous after a plain and exact description of the very particular place of the fat, the kidneys, to add another more dark and doubtful description of it from the flanks. And the Hebrew writers, whose common practice of these things makes them the best interpreters of it, make these divers kinds or parts of fat. And so there is only an ellipsis of the conjunction copulative, which is Psa_133:3, and in many other places, as hath been already showed.

Leviticus 7:8

Leviticus 7:9

All the meat-offering, except the part reserved by God, Lev_2:2,9. Shall be the priest's that offereth it, because these were ready drest and hot, and not to be presently eaten; and because the priest who offered it was in reason to expect and have something more than his brethren who laboured not about it; and that he had only in this offering, for the other were equally distributed.

Leviticus 7:10

Dry, without oil, or drink-offering, as those Lev_5:1 Num_5:15.

One as much as another: the sense may be either,

1. That every priest shall have equal right to this, when the course of his ministration comes. But then there was no reason to make so great an alteration of the phrase, nor to make any distinction of the differing kinds of meatofferings, if in both they were to be the priest's that offered them, as is expressed Lev_7:9, and here, as they say, intended. Or rather,

2. That these were to be equally divided among all the priests. And there was manifest reason for this difference, because these were in greater quantity than the former; and being raw, might more easily and commodiously be divided and reserved for the several priests to dress it in that way which each of them best liked.

Leviticus 7:11

Leviticus 7:12

For a thanksgiving; for mercies received. See Lev_22:29 2Ch_29:31 33:16.

Leviticus 7:13

Leavened bread; partly, because this was a sacrifice of another kind than those in which leaven was forbidden, this being a sacrifice of thanksgiving for God's blessings, among which leavened bread was one; partly, to show that leaven was not so strictly forbidden in other sacrifices, as if it were evil in itself, but to teach us wholly to rest in the will of God in all his appointments, without too scrupulous an inquiry into the particular reasons of them.

Object. Leaven was universally forbidden, Lev_2:11.

Answ. 1. That prohibition concerned only things offered and burnt upon the altar, which this bread was not, but it was offered only towards the priest's food.

2. That was another kind of sacrifice, and therefore it is no wonder if it had other rites.

3. That leaven was not universally forbidden appears from Lev_23:17.

With the sacrifice of thanksgiving of his peace-offerings, or, with the sacrifice of thanksgiving for his peace or prosperity .

Leviticus 7:14

Of it, i.e. either of the loaves of leavened bread mentioned Lev_7:13, or of the offering, one of each part of the whole oblation , as it follows; it being most probable, and agreeable to the rules and laws laid down before and afterward that the priest should have a share in the unleavened cakes and wafers, as well as in the leavened bread.

Concerning the heave-offerings, see Exo_29:24,28.

Leviticus 7:15

By the priests and offerers this flesh was eaten, Lev_22:30.

Leviticus 7:16

Be a vow; offered in performance of a vow, the man having desired some special favour from God, and vowed the sacrifice to God if he would grant it. A voluntary offering, which a man freely offered to God, in testimony of his faith and love to God, without any particular injunction from God, or design of his own special advantage thereby. See Lev_22:23 Eze_46:12.

On the morrow also the remainder of it shall be eaten, which was not allowed for the thankoffering; the reason of which difference is to be fetched only from God's good pleasure and will, to which he expects our obedience, though we discern not the reason of his appointments.

Leviticus 7:17

That it might neither putrefy, and thereby be exposed to contempt; nor yet be reserved either for superstitious abuse, or for the priest's domestic use, which would savour of covetousness, and of distrust of God's care for their future provisions.

Leviticus 7:18

It shall not be imputed unto him for an acceptable service to God.

Leviticus 7:19

The flesh, to wit, of the holy offering, of which he is here treating; and therefore the general word is to be so limited; for other flesh one might eat in this case, Deu_12:15,22.

That toucheth any unclean thing, after its oblation; which might easily happen, as it was conveyed from the altar to the place where it was eaten; for it was not eaten in the holy place, as appears, because it was eaten by the priests, together with the offerers, who might not come thither.

As for the flesh, i.e. the other flesh; that which shall not be polluted by any unclean touch.

All that be clean, whether priests or offerers, or guests invited to the feast. See 1Sa_9:12 20:26. Both the flesh and the eaters of it must be clean.

Leviticus 7:20

The soul that eateth knowingly; for if it were done ignorantly, a sacrifice was accepted for it, Lev_5:2.

Having his uncleanness upon him, i.e. not being cleansed from his uncleanness according to the appointment, Lev_11:24, &c. This verse speaks of uncleanness from an internal cause, as by an issue, &c., for what was from an external cause is spoken of in the next verse.

Leviticus 7:21

The uncleanness of man, or,

of women, for the word signifies both; and that there were such things coming from men or women, the touch whereof did pollute men and things, may be seen Le 15, and elsewhere. Others make it an hypallage uncleanness of man , for a man of uncleanness , or, an unclean man . But that seems not necessary here.

The general prohibition of eating fat, Lev_3:17, is here explained of, and restrained to, those kinds of creatures which were sacrificed to God.

Leviticus 7:24

He speaketh still of the same kinds of beasts, and showeth that this prohibition reacheth not only to the fat of those beasts which were offered to God, but also of those that died, or were killed at home. And if this seems a superfluous prohibition concerning the fat, since the lean as well as the fat of such beasts was forbidden, Lev_22:8, it must be noted that that prohibition reached only to the priests, Lev_7:4.

Not by another, but by himself, as it is explained Lev_7:30. His oblation, i.e. those parts of the peace-offering which are in a special manner offered to God, to wit, the fat, and breast, and shoulder, as it follows. Unto the Lord, i.e. to the tabernacle, where the Lord was present in a special manner. He shows, that though part of such offerings might be eaten in any clean place, Lev_10:14, yet not till they had been killed, and part of them offered to the Lord in the place appointed by him for that purpose.

Leviticus 7:30

After the beast was killed, and the parts of it divided, the priest was to put the parts mentioned into the hands of the offerer. See Exo_29:22-24.

Made by fire; so called not strictly, as burnt-offerings are, because some parts of these were left for the priest, Lev_7:31; but

Leviticus 8:1 LEVITICUS CHAPTER 8

Moses by God's command calls together Aaron and his sons, and the whole congregation, Lev_8:1-5. Washes Aaron and his sons, Lev_8:6. Puts on the priestly garments, Lev_8:7-9. Anoints the tabernacle, with the altar and laver, to sanctify them, Lev_8:10,11. Anoints Aaron, Lev_8:12. Puts the holy garments on his sons, Lev_8:13. Offers sacrifices for them; a bullock for a sin-offering, Lev_8:14-17; and a ram for a burnt-offering, Lev_8:18-21; and a second ram for consecration; uses the blood about some parts of their bodies; gives the parts into their hands to wave before the Lord, and sprinkles of the anointing oil and blood from upon the altar on them and their garments, Lev_8:22-30. Declares to them God's charge, which they perform, Lev_8:31-36.

This is here premised, to show that Moses did not confer the priesthood upon Aaron by virtue of his relation or affection to him, but by God's appointment, which also appears from the following story.

Drunkenness is so odious a sin in itself, especially a minister, and most of all in the time of his administration of sacred things, that God saw fit to prevent all occasions of it. And hence the devil, who is God's ape in his prescriptions for his worship, required this abstinence from his priests in their idolatrous service.

Leviticus 8:35

The charge of the Lord; what God hath commanded you concerning your consecration.

If the threatening seem too severe for the fault, it must be considered both that it is the usual practice of lawgivers most severely to punish the first offences for the terror and caution of others, and for the maintenance of their own authority; and that this transgression was aggravated by many circumstances, being committed by sacred and eminent persons, and that in the presence of the people, which made it a public scandal, and in God's worship, where he is very tender and jealous, and against a plain and easy command of God, and at a time when they were receiving high favours and privileges from God. Nor is sin to be esteemed or measured by the idle fancies of men of corrupt minds and lives, whose interests and lusts easily blind their minds; but by the authority, majesty, and will of the great, and wise, and just Lawgiver.

Leviticus 9:1 LEVITICUS CHAPTER 9

Moses commands Aaron to offer a sin-offering, and burnt-offering, and peace and meat offering; the congregation drawing near, and so the glory of the Lord should appear to them; to make atonement for himself and the people, Lev_9:1-7. Aaron's offering for himself, Lev_9:8-14; for the people, Lev_9:15-21, whom he blesses, first by prayer to God, and then by solemn declaration to them; the glory of God appears; fire from heaven consumes the sacrifice; the people shout and are amazed, Lev_9:22-24.

The eighth day, to wit, from the first day of his consecration, or when the seven days of his consecration were ended, Lev_8:33,35, as appears from Exo_29:30, Eze_43:27. The eighth day is famous in Scripture for the perfecting and purifying both of men and beasts. See Lev_12:2,3 14:8-10 15:13,14 22:27.

All the congregation were called to be witnesses of Aaron's instalment into his office, to prevent their murmurings and contempt, which being done, the elders were now sufficient to be witnesses of Aaron's first execution of his office.

Leviticus 9:2

A young calf, Heb. a calf, the son of a bull or cow ; which may seem to be added purposely to intimate that it was not a young calf properly so called, but a young bullock , for that was the sacrifice enjoined for the high priest's sin-offering, Lev_4:3. Though it be not material, if this be a young calf, and that a young bull, because the grounds and ends of the several sacrifices differ, that Le 4: being for his particular sin, and this for his own and family's sins in general, and therefore no wonder if the sacrifices also differ. For a sin offering, for himself and his own sins, which was an evidence of the imperfection of that priesthood, and of the necessity of another and a better.

Leviticus 9:3

A sin-offering for the people, as it is expressed here Lev_9:15, for whose sin a young bullock was required, Lev_4:14; but that was for some particular sin, but this was more general and indefinite for all their sins. Besides, there being an eye here had to the priest's consecration and entrance into his office, it is no wonder if there be some difference in these sacrifices from those before prescribed.

Leviticus 9:4

See the fulfilling of this promise, Lev_9:24. Heb. hath appeared. He speaks of the thing to come as if it were past, which is frequent in Scripture, to give them the more assurance of the thing.

Leviticus 9:5

Before the tabernacle where God dwelt.

Leviticus 9:6

The glorious manifestation of God's powerful and gracious presence, Lev_9:24. Compare Exo_24:16,17 40:34,35 Eze 43:2.

Leviticus 9:7

Moses had hitherto sacrificed, but now he resigneth his work to Aaron, and actually gives him that commission which from God he had received for him.

The order is very observable, first for thyself, otherwise thou art unfit to do it for the people. Hereby God would teach us, both the deficiency of this priesthood, and the absolute necessity of a higher and better Priest, Heb_7:26,27, and how important and needful it is that God's ministers should be in the grace and favour of God themselves, that their ministrations may be acceptable to God, and profitable to the people.

Leviticus 9:9

Upon the horns of the altar, to wit, of burnt-offerings, of which alone he speaks both in the foregoing and following words; and the blood was poured out at the bottom of this altar only, not of the altar of incense, as appears from Lev_4:7, where indeed there is mention of putting some of the blood upon the horns of the altar of incense, in this case of the priest's sacrificing for his own sins. But there seems to be a double difference:

1. That sacrifice was offered for some particular sin, this for his sins indefinitely.
2. There he is supposed to be complete in his office, and here he is but entering into his office, and therefore must prepare and sanctify himself by this offering upon the brazen altar in the court, before he can be admitted into the holy place where the altar of incense was. And the like is to be said for the difference between the sin-offering for the people here, and Lev_4:17,18.

Leviticus 9:10

Either,

1. Disposed it for the burning, i.e. laid it upon the altar where it was to be burnt by the heavenly fire, Lev_9:24. Thus interpreters generally understand the word here, as also Lev_9:13,17,20, by an anticipation; or the consequent is put for the antecedent, of which there are examples in Scripture. Or,
2. Properly burnt by ordinary fire, which was used and allowed until the fire came down from heaven, Lev_9:24, though afterwards it was forbidden. And if it had not been allowed otherwise, yet this being done by Aaron at the command of Moses, and consequently with God's approbation, it was unquestionably lawful. And therefore there seems to be no necessity of departing from the proper sense of the word. Add to this, that there is nothing said to be consumed by that heavenly fire, but the burnt-offering with the fat belonging to it, namely, that burnt-offering mentioned Lev_9:16, which therefore is not there said to be burnt, as it is said of the other burnt-offering, Lev_9:13, and of the rest of the sacrifices in their places.

Which also was offered for the people, as the last mentioned sin-offering was.

Leviticus 9:22

Aaron lifted up his right hand, which the Jews say was lifted up highest; or his hands, according to the other reading, which was the usual rite of blessing. See Luk_24:50. By this posture he signified both whence he expected the blessing, and his hearty desire of it for them.

Blessed them, in some such manner as is related Num_6:24, &c., though not in the same form, as some suppose, for it is not probable that he used it before God delivered it. And this blessing was an act of his priestly office no less than sacrificing. See Gen_14:18,19 Num 6:23 Deu_10:8 Deu_21:5 Luk_24:50. Came down, to wit, from the altar; whence he is said to come down, either,

1. Because the altar stood upon raised ground, to which they went up by an insensible ascent. Compare Exo_20:26. Or,

2. Because it was nearer the holy place, and the holy of holies, which was the upper end.

Leviticus 9:23

Moses went in with

Aaron to direct him, and to see him perform those parts of his office which were to be done in the holy place, about the lights, and the table of shewbread, and of the altar of incense, upon which part of the blood of the sacrifices now offered was to be sprinkled, according to the law, Lev_4:7,18.

Blessed the people, i.e. prayed to God for his blessing upon the people, as this phrase is explained, Num_6:23, &c., and particularly for his gracious acceptance of these and all succeeding sacrifices, and for his signification thereof by some extraordinary token, which accordingly happened,

The glory of the Lord; either a miraculous brightness shining from the cloudy pillar, as Exo_16:10 Num_14:10; or a glorious and visible discovery of God's gracious presence and acceptance of the present ministry and service, as it follows.

Leviticus 9:24

There came a fire, in token of God's acceptance and approbation of the priesthood now instituted, and the sacrifices now offered, and consequently of others of the like nature. See the like instances, Jud_6:21 13:19,20 1Ch_21:26. And this fire now given was to be carefully kept, and not suffered to go out, Lev_6:13, and therefore was carried in a peculiar vessel in their journeys in the wilderness.

From before the Lord; or, from the face or presence of the Lord ; i.e. from the place where God was in a special manner present: either,

1. From heaven, as 1Ki_18:38 2Ch_7:1, which is oft called God's dwelling-place, as Deu_26:15 Isa_63:15. Or,

2. From the holy of holies, where also God is said to dwell, 2Ki_19:15 2Ch_6:2 Psa_80:1. And what is done before the ark is said to be done before God , as 1Ch_13:8,10 16:1, &c. And this may seem more probable by comparing this with Lev_10:2.

They shouted; as wondering at, rejoicing in, and blessing God for this wonderful and gracious discovery of himself, and of his favour to them therein.

Leviticus 10:1 LEVITICUS CHAPTER 10

Nadab and Abihu offering strange fire, are devoured by fire from heaven, Lev_10:1,2; for God will be sanctified by them that draw near unto him, Lev_10:3. Their dead bodies carried without the camp, Lev_10:4,5. Aaron and his two other sons forbid to mourn, Lev_10:6; also to drink wine or any strong drink, Lev_10:8,9. Their duty to distinguish between holy and unholy; and to teach the people all the statutes of the Lord, Lev_10:10,11. Moses declares to them what of the burnt-offerings they might eat, Lev_10:12-15; is angry that the sin-offering was not eat, nor the blood carried into the holy place, Lev_10:16-18. He is appeased by Aaron, Lev_10:19,20.

Strange fire; so called, as not appointed for, nor belonging to, the present work; fire not taken from the altar, as it ought, but from some common fire.

Before the Lord; upon the altar of incense.

Which he commanded them not; for seeing Moses himself neither did nor might do any thing in God's worship without God's command, which is oft noted of him, for these to do it was a more unpardonable and inexcusable presumption. Besides, not commanding may be here put for forbidding, as it is Jer_32:35. Now as this was forbidden implicitly, Lev_6:12, especially when God himself made a comment upon that text, and by sending fire from heaven declared of what fire he there spake; so it is more than probable it was forbidden expressly, though that be not here mentioned, nor was it necessary it should be.

Leviticus 10:2

From the Lord; from heaven, or rather from the sanctuary. See Lev_9:24.

Devoured them; destroyed their lives; for their bodies and garments were not consumed, as it appears from Lev_10:4,5. Thus the sword is said to devour, 2Sa_2:26. Thus lightning many times kills persons, without any hurt to their bodies or garments.

Leviticus 10:3

This is it that the Lord spake; though the express words be not recorded in Scripture, where only the heads of sermons are contained, yet it is probable they were uttered by Moses in God's name. Howsoever, the sense and substance of them is in many places. See Exo_19:22 29:43 Lev_8:35.

I will be sanctified: this may note either,

1. Their duty to sanctify God, i.e. to demean themselves with such care, and reverence, and watchfulness, as becomes the holiness of the God whom they serve, and of the worship in which they are engaged; whence he leaves them to gather the justice of the present judgment for their gross neglect herein. Or,

2. God's purpose to sanctify himself, i.e. to declare and manifest himself to be a holy and righteous God by his severe and impartial punishment of all transgressors, how near soever they are to him.

In them that come nigh me, i.e. who draw near to me, or to the place where I dwell, and are admitted into the holy place, whence others are shut out. It is a description of the priests. See Exo_19:22 Lev_21:7 Eze_42:13,14.

Before all the people I will be glorified: as they have sinned publicly and scandalously, so I will vindicate my honour in a public and exemplary manner, that all men may learn to give me the glory of my sovereignty and holiness by an exact conformity to my laws.

Aaron held his peace, partly through excessive grief, which is sometimes signified by silence, as Isa_47:5 Lam_2:10, and principally in acknowledgment of God's justice and submission to it. Compare Psa_39:10 Eze_24:17. He murmured not, nor replied against God, nor against Moses; wisely considering that their sin was directly against God, and in that which is most dear and honourable in God's account, to wit, in his worship; and that God's honour ought to be dearer to him than his sons; and that this being the first violation of the law newly given, and committed by those who should have been the strictest observers and assertors of it, did deserve a very severe punishment.

Leviticus 10:4

For Aaron and his sons had scarce finished their consecration work, and were employed in their holy ministrations, from which they were not to be called for funeral solemnities. See Lev_21:1, &c.

The uncle of Aaron. See Exo_6:18 Num_3:19.

Your brethren, i.e. kinsmen, as that word is oft used, as Gen_13:8 24:27. Out of the camp, where the burying-places of the Jews were, that the living might neither be annoyed by the unwholesome scent of the dead, nor defiled by the touch of their graves.

Leviticus 10:5

In their coats; in the holy garments wherein they ministered; which might be done either,

1. As a testimony of a respect due to them, notwithstanding their present failure; and that God in judgment remembered mercy, and when he took away their lives, spared their souls. Or,

2. Because being polluted both by their sin, and by the touch of their dead bodies, God would not have them any more used in his service.

Leviticus 10:6

Uncover not your heads; either,

1. By putting off your mitres and bonnets, or ornaments, and going bare-headed, as mourners sometimes did. See Lev_13:45 Eze_24:17,23. Or,

2. By shaving off the hair of your heads and beards, as mourners did. See Job_1:20 Jer_7:29 41:5 Eze_44:20 Mic_1:16. This latter may seem to be principally intended,

1. Because this ceremony of uncovering the head being used by the people as well as by the priests in case of mourning, as the places now alleged show; and the other ceremony here joined with it, of rending the clothes , being also common to the people; seems to imply that he speaks not of that uncovering of the head which was peculiar to the priests, but of that which was common both to priests and people, especially seeing that which is here forbidden to these priests is in the following words allowed to the people, to bewail their death, which as at other times it was, so now probably might be performed by these same ceremonies.

2. Because the high priest is forbidden to uncover his head in way of mourning for the dead, not only at that time when he was in actual ministration, but at all times, even when he had neither his mitre nor any of the holy garments upon him, Lev_21:10.

Neither rend your clothes; give no signification of your sorrow; mourn not for them; partly lest you should seem to justify and approve of your brethren, and tacitly reflect upon God as too severe in his proceedings with them; and partly lest thereby you should be diverted from or disturbed in your present service, which God expects should be done cheerfully.

But let your brethren...bewail the burning, not so much in compassion to them against whom God hath showed such great and just indignation, as in sorrow for the tokens of Divine displeasure.

Leviticus 10:7

Ye shall not go out from the door of the tabernacle, where at this time they were, either because this happened within seven days of their consecration; see Lev_8:35; or because they were longer detained there about some other holy ministrations. Though the former may seem more probable, because the meat-offering here mentioned, Lev_10:12, and the sin-offering, Lev_10:16, were part of the consecration-offerings. The anointing oil of the Lord is upon you. You are persons consecrated peculiarly to God's service, which therefore it is just and reasonable you should prefer before all funeral solemnities.

Leviticus 10:8

Leviticus 10:9

This is here added, either because Nadab and Abihu had been led to their error by drinking too much, which might easily fall out when they were feasting and full of joy for their entrance into so honourable and profitable an employment; or at least because others might thereby be drawn to commit the same miscarriages, which they might now commit from other causes. Drunkenness is so odious a sin in itself, especially in a minister, and most of all in the time of his administration of sacred things, that God saw fit to prevent all occasions of it. And hence the devil, who is God's ape in his prescriptions for his worship, required this abstinence from his priests in their idolatrous service.

Leviticus 10:10

Persons and things, which Nadab and Abihu did not, mistaking unholy or common fire for that which was sacred and appointed by God for their use.

Leviticus 10:11

That ye may teach; be apt to teach aright, which drunken persons are very unfit to do.

Leviticus 10:12

Moses repeateth and re-enforceth the former command, partly lest their great loss and grief should cause them to forget or neglect their meat prescribed them by God, which abstinence would have been both a signification of their sorrow, which God had forbidden them, and a new transgression of a Divine precept; and partly to encourage them to go on in their holy services, and not to be dejected for the late severity, as if God would no more accept them or their sacrifices.

Leviticus 10:13

See Num_5:1-3. In any place where the women as well as the men might come, for the daughters of the priests might eat these as well as their sons, as it here follows.

Leviticus 10:16

The goat of the sin-offering, to wit, for the people, mentioned Lev_9:15, to know what was done with that part of it which was the priest's; which he inquired into more than into the other sacrifices, because a mistake there was easy and probable, because that matter might seem something doubtful, by reason of two laws concerning it seemingly contrary, the one Lev_4:21, where it is to be burned, the other Lev_6:26, where it was to be eaten. But they are thus reconciled: It was to be burnt when the blood of this sacrifice was brought into the holy place, Lev_4:16,17; and when that was not done, which Aaron this first time could not do, for the reason expressed in Lev_10:18, it was to be eaten, and here lay their mistake.

He was angry with Eleazar and Ithamar: he spares Aaron at this time, as overwhelmed with sorrow, and because the rebuking of him before his sons might have exposed him to some contempt; but he knew that the reproof, though directed to them, would concern him too, as he also apprehended it.

Which were left alive, preserved from death when their brethren were destroyed, which is here mentioned as an aggravation of their sin.

Leviticus 10:17

i.e. As a reward of your service and function, whereby you do expiate, bear, and take away their sins, by offering those sacrifices, and performing those rites, by which God through Christ is reconciled to the penitent and believing offerers.

Leviticus 10:18

The blood of it was not brought in within the holy place; the reason whereof was, because Aaron was not yet admitted into the holy place, whither that blood should have been brought, till he had prepared the way by the sacrifices which were to be offered in the court.

Leviticus 10:19

This day have they offered; they have done the substance of the thing, though they have mistaken this one circumstance. Such things have befallen me ; whereby, having been oppressed with grief, and almost bereft of my reason, it is not strange nor unpardonable if I have mistaken.

Should it have been accepted? because it was not to be eaten with sorrow, but with rejoicing and thanksgiving, as appears from Deu_12:7 26:14 Hos_9:4; and I thought it fitter to burn it, as I did other sacred relics, than to profane it by eating it unworthily.

Leviticus 10:20

He rested satisfied with his answer, either because he thought it reasonable, seeing the letter of the law ofttimes yields to necessities or great accidents, 2Ch_30:18 Mat_12:3,4; or at least because the things alleged were mitigations of his fault, and he would not add affliction to the afflicted, but rather defer the debate of it to a fitter opportunity.

Leviticus 11:1 LEVITICUS CHAPTER 11

From the laws concerning the priests, he now comes to those which belong to all the people.

Beasts clean and unclean, Lev_11:1-8. Of fishes, Lev_11:9-12. Of fowls and creeping things, Lev_11:13-23. In touching of a dead carcass, Lev_11:24-28. Other creatures unclean, Lev_11:29-43. They are exhorted to purity and holiness from the nature of God, and his goodness to them in taking them to be his people, Lev_11:44,45. The whole repeated, Lev_11:46,47.

The Lord spake to both Moses and Aaron, because the cognizance of the following matters belonged to both; the priest was to direct the people about the things forbidden or allowed where any doubt or difficulty arose, and the magistrate was to see the direction here given followed.

Leviticus 11:2

Though every creature of God be good and pure in itself, as appears from Gen_1:31 Mat_15:11 Rom_14:14; yet it pleased God to make a difference between clean and unclean, and to restrain the use of them, which he did in general and in part before the flood, Gen_7:2; but more fully and particularly here for many reasons, as,

1. To assert his own sovereignty over man, and over all the creatures, which men may not use but with God's leave, and to inure that stiff-necked people to obedience.
2. To keep up the wall of partition between the Jews and other nations, which was very useful and necessary for many great and wise purposes.
3. That by bridling their appetite in things in themselves lawful, and some of them very desirable and delightful for food, they might be better prepared and enabled to deny themselves in things simply and grossly sinful.

4. For the preservation of their health, some of the creatures forbidden being, though used by the neighbouring nations, of unwholesome nourishment, especially to the Jews, who were very obnoxious to leprosy, which some of these meats are apt to produce and foment.

5. For moral signification, to teach them to abhor that filthiness and all those ill qualities for which some of these creatures are noted.

Leviticus 11:3

Cloven-footed, to wit, is divided into two parts only, as in the coney, swine, &c., whereas the horse, camel, &c. have their hoofs entire and undivided. This clause is added only to explain and limit the former, as appears from Lev_11:26; for the feet or hoofs of dogs, cats, &c. are parted or cloven into many parts. Cheweth the cud, Heb. and bringeth up the cud, i.e. the meat once chewed out of the stomach into the mouth again, that it may be chewed a second time for better concoction. And this branch is to be joined with the former, both properties being necessary for the allowed beasts. But the reason hereof must be resolved into the will of the lawgiver; though interpreters guess that God would hereby signify their duties by the first, that of dividing the word of God aright, and discerning between good and evil, between God's institutions and men's inventions; and by the latter, that duty of recalling God's word to our minds, and serious meditation upon it.

Leviticus 11:4

The camel was a usual food in Arabia, but yielding bad nourishment, as Galen notes.

Divideth not the hoof, to wit, so as to have his foot cloven in two, which being expressed Lev_11:3, is here to be understood; otherwise the camel's hoof is divided, but it is but a small and imperfect division, as Aristotle and Pliny observe, and observation shows.

Leviticus 11:5

Some understand by the Hebrew word shaphan , a mountain mouse , which were of a much greater size than ordinary mice, and were used by the Arabians for food. But for the names of the following creatures, seeing the Jews themselves are uncertain and divided about them, I think it improper to trouble the unlearned reader with disputes about them, and for the learned, they may have recourse to my Latin Synopsis. I shall therefore take them according to our translation.

The Jews would not so much as name

the swine, but called it another or a strange thing, lest the naming of it should tempt them to eat this meat, which was so commonly used and so much esteemed by others.

Leviticus 11:8

Ye shall not touch, to wit, in order to eating, as may be gathered by comparing this with Gen_3:3 Col_2:21. For since the fat and the skins of some of the forbidden creatures were useful for medicinal and other good uses, and were used by good men; see Mat_3:4; it is not probable that God would have them cast away. Thus God forbade the making of images, Exo 20, not absolutely and universally, but in order to the worshipping of them, as Christian interpreters agree. Or, they were here forbidden to touch them, to wit, unnecessarily; and if he that touched them for some necessary use were polluted by it, it was but a slight and transient pollution, ending at evening, as appears from Lev_11:24,25, &c.

Leviticus 11:9

Whatsoever hath fins and scales, to wit, both of them; such fishes being both more cleanly and more wholesome food than others. The names of them are not particularly mentioned, partly because most of them wanted names, the fishes not being brought to Adam and named by him as other creatures were; and partly because the land of Canaan had not many rivers, nor great store of fishes i.e. Either of the smaller sort of fishes, or of the greater, which are called here living creatures or beasts , as some of them are called the beasts of the sea by other authors.

Leviticus 11:10

Leviticus 11:11

An abomination unto you, to wit, for food. This clause is added to show that they were neither abominable in their own nature, nor for the food of other nations; and consequently when the partition-wall between Jews and Gentiles was taken away, these distinctions of meats were to cease. See Ac 10.

Leviticus 11:13

The true signification of these and the following Hebrew words is now lost, as the Jews at this day confess, which not falling out without God's singular providence may intimate the cessation or abolition of this law, the exact observation whereof since Christ came is become impossible. In general, this may be observed, that the fowls forbidden in diet are all either ravenous and cruel, or such as delight in the night and darkness, or such as feed upon impure things; and so the signification and reason of these prohibitions is manifest, to teach men to abominate all cruelty or oppression, and all works of darkness and filthiness.

Leviticus 11:21

Which have legs above their feet. The truth of this translation may seem evident, both from the following clause, to leap withal, and especially from the next verse, where one of this kind is the locusts, which, as it is manifest, have two legs wherewith they leap, besides the four feet upon which they walk. The adverb lo is here put for the pronoun lo, as it is also 1Ch_11:20, compared with 2Sa_23:18. Others take the words as they lie, and read them negatively, which have not legs upon their feet, and so the sense may be this, That they might eat the locusts, grasshoppers, &c. when they were very young, and therefore more wholesome for food; for they are born without legs, Plin. Nat. Hist. 11.29, or their legs at first are very small, and scarce to be discerned, and in effect none. And the canon of the Jews in this matter is this, Those which yet have not wings and legs may be eaten, though they be such as afterward would have them.

Leviticus 11:22

Locusts, though unusual in our food, were commonly eaten by the Ethiopians, Libyans, Parthians, and other eastern people bordering upon the Jews, which is expressly affirmed by Diodorus Siculus, Aristotle, Pliny, St. Hierom, and others, as well as Mat_3:4. And it is certain that the eastern locusts were much larger than ours, so it is probable they were of different qualities, and yielded better nourishment; and the familiar use of them made them more agreeable to their bodies; for even poisons themselves have by frequent use been made not only harmless, but nourishing also to some persons.

Leviticus 11:23

i.e. All such except those now mentioned; the word other being here understood out of the former verse, without which there might seem to be a contradiction between this and that verse. But the words may be, and by the vulgar Latin are, thus rendered, But all flying creeping things which have only four feet ; which word only is to be gathered out of Lev_11:20,21; i.e. which have not those legs above and besides their feet mentioned Lev_11:21. And so all the verses agree well together.

Leviticus 11:24

And such were excluded both from the courts of God's house, and from free conversation with other men.

Until the even; which possibly might signify that even the smallest defilements could not be cleansed but by the death of Christ, who was to come and offer up himself in the evening, or end, or declining age of the world, as the prophets signify, and the apostle expresseth, Heb_9:26.

Leviticus 11:25

Whosoever beareth, or, taketh away , out of the place where haply it may lie, by which others may be either offended or polluted.

Leviticus 11:26

The word carcasses is easily to be understood out of Lev_11:24,25, where it is expressed.

Leviticus 11:27

Upon his paws, Heb. upon his hands , i.e. which hath feet divided into several]parts like fingers, as dogs, eats, apes, bears, &c.

That on which such water cometh: the meaning is, that flesh or herbs, or other food which is dressed in water, to wit, in a vessel so polluted, shall be unclean; not so, if it be food which is eaten dry, as bread, fruits, &c., the reason of which difference seems to be this, that the water did sooner receive the pollution in itself, and convey it to the food so dressed.

Leviticus 11:35

Leviticus 11:36

Wherein there is plenty of water; of which no solid reason can be given, whilst such unclean things remain in them, but only the will of the Lawgiver, and his merciful condescension to men's necessities, water being scarce in those countries; and for the same reason God would have the ceremonial law of sacrifices to be offered to God, give place to the moral law of mercy towards men.

Leviticus 11:37

Partly because this was necessary provision for man; and partly because such seed would not be used for man's food till it had received many alterations in the earth, whereby such pollution was taken away. See Joh_12:24 1Co_15:36.

Leviticus 11:38

The reason of the difference is, partly because wet seed doth sooner receive and longer retain any pollution; and partly because such seed was not fit to be sown presently; and therefore that necessity which justified the use of the dry seed, which was speedily to be sown, could not be pretended in this case.

Leviticus 11:39

If any beast die; either of itself, or being killed by some wild beast, in which cases the blood was not poured forth, as it was when they were killed by men either for food or sacrifice.

Leviticus 11:40

He that eateth, to wit, unwittingly; for if he did it knowingly, it was a presumptuous sin against an express law, Deu_14:21, and therefore punished with cutting off, Num_15:30.

Leviticus 12:1 LEVITICUS CHAPTER 12

Laws touching the uncleanness of women in child-bearing. Of a son seven days, and her purification thirty-three days, Lev_12:1-4. Of a daughter fourteen days, and her purification sixty-six days, Lev_12:5. Her offering, if rich, a lamb of a year old, a young pigeon or turtle-dove for a sin-offering, Lev_12:6,7. If poor, two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons; one for a burnt-offering, and One for a sin-offering, Lev_12:8.

Leviticus 12:2

From uncleanness contracted by the touching or eating of external things, he now comes to that uncleanness which ariseth from ourselves.

She shall be unclean; not for any filthiness which was either in the conception or in bringing forth, but to signify the universal and deep pollution of man's nature even from the birth, and from the conception. For seven days, or thereabouts, nature is employed in the purgation of most women.

For her infirmity, i.e. for her monthly infirmity. And it may note an agreement therewith not only in the time, Lev_15:19, but in the degree of uncleanness, which was such that she defiled every thing she touched, &c.

Leviticus 12:3

Which law is here repeated, because the woman's uncleanness lasting for seven days, was one, though not the only, reason why the child's circumcision was put off till the eighth day.

Leviticus 12:4

She shall then continue, Heb. sit , i.e. abide, as that word is oft used, as Gen_22:5 34:10, or tarry at home, nor go into the sanctuary.

In the blood of her purifying; in her polluted and separated estate; for the word blood or bloods signifies both guilt, as Gen_4:10, and uncleanness, as here and elsewhere. See Eze_16:6. And it is called the blood of her purifying , because by the expulsion or purgation of that blood, which is done by degrees, she is purified.

She shall touch no hallowed thing; she shall not eat any part of the peace-offerings which she or her husband offered, which otherwise she might have done; and if she be a priest's wife, she shall not eat any of the tithes or first-fruits, or part of the hallowed meats, which at other times she together with her husband might eat.

Leviticus 12:5

The time in both particulars is double to the former, not so much from natural causes, because the purifications in female births are longer and slower, which if it were true, yet doth not extend to any such time as here is mentioned, as for moral reasons; either to be as a blot upon that sex for being the first in man's transgression, 1Ti_2:14, or to put an honour upon the sacrament of circumcision, which being administered to the males, did put an end to that pollution sooner than otherwise had been; or to show the privilege of the man above the woman, and that the women were to be purified, sanctified, and saved by one of the other sex, even by the man Christ Jesus, without whom they should have still continued in their impurity.

Leviticus 12:6

For a son, or for a daughter; for the birth of a son, or of a daughter; but the purification was for herself, as appears from the following verses.

For a sin-offering; either because of her ceremonial uncleanness, which required a ceremonial expiation; or for those particular sins relating to the time and state of child-bearing, of which she is justly presumed to be guilty, which might be many ways.

Leviticus 12:7

For though there was a difference in the time of her uncleanness for the one and for the other, yet both were to be purged one and the same way; to note, that though all sins and sinners were not equal, yet all were to be cleansed by the same means, to wit, by Christ, and by faith. See 1Co_7:14 Gal_3:28.

Leviticus 13:1 LEVITICUS CHAPTER 13

Laws touching leprosy; its different kinds how to be known and judged of by the priest, Lev_13:1-8. Of the swelling, Lev_13:9-17. Of the sores or boils, Lev_13:18-23. Of the fiery inflammation, Lev_13:21-28. Of the scall, Lev_13:29-37. Of the blisters, Lev_13:38,39. Of baldness, Lev_13:40-44. The leper with clothes rent, bare head, and covered lips, must cry, Unclean, unclean, and dwell alone, Lev_13:45,46. Of the leprosy in clothes, linen, woollen, and skins, Lev_13:47-59.

No text from Poole on this verse.

Leviticus 13:2

In the skin, for there was the seat of the leprosy.

Bright spot, shining like the scale of a fish, as it is in the beginning of a leprosy.

Leprosy was a distemper most frequent in Egypt and Syria, &c., known also among the Greeks, who note that it was not so properly a disease as a defilement or distemper in the skin, whence Christ is not said to heal, but to cleanse the lepers that came to him. And this distemper is here provided against, not because it was worse than others, but because it was externally and visibly filthy, and because of its infectious nature, that hereby we might be instructed to avoid converse with such vicious persons who were likely to infect us.

He shall be brought unto Aaron the priest, not to the physician, because, as was now said, it needed not so much healing as cleansing, and was rather a ceremonial pollution than a disease; and because it belonged to the priest to cleanse him, and therefore to search and discover whether he was defiled and needed cleansing. The priest also was to admit to, or exclude from, the sanctuary, and therefore to examine who were to be excluded. And the discovery of this distemper was not so difficult that it required the physician's art, but the priest, by experience, and the observation of those rules, might easily make it.

Leviticus 13:3

On the plague, i.e. the sign or appearance of the plague of leprosy. And it is observable, that the same signs of it are given by Moses here, and by the learned physicians in their works. And when the leprosy came to its height, not the hair only, but also the skin was turned white, as Exo_4:6 Num_12:10. And this change of colour was an evidence both of the abundance of excrementitious humours, and of the weakness of nature, as we see in old and sick persons. Deeper than the skin; for the leprosy did consume both the skin and the flesh, as appears from 2Ki_5:14.

Pronounce him unclean, Heb. make him unclean, i. e. ministerially and declaratively, in which sense ministers are said to remit sins, Mat_16:19, and to destroy nations, Jer_1:10.

Leviticus 13:4

For greater assurance; to teach ministers not to be rash nor hasty in their judgments and censures, but diligently to search and examine all things beforehand.

The plague is here put for the man that hath the plague , as pride is put for a proud man, Jer_50:31, and dreams for the dreamers , Jer_27:9.

Leviticus 13:5

If the plague be at a stay: this translation is justified by the following clause, which is added to explain it. Otherwise the words are and may be rendered thus, stand or abide in its own colour ; the Hebrew word being used for colour as well as for sight .

Leviticus 13:6

If the plague be somewhat dark; which is opposed to the white colour of the leprosy. But the word may be rendered, have contracted itself , or, be restrained or confined to its former place and bigness; and thus the opposition seems to be most clear to the spreading of itself, mentioned both in the foregoing verse, and in the following clause.

He shall wash his clothes, though it was no leprosy, but a scab only; to teach us, that no sin was so small which did not need to be washed by the blood of Christ, which was the thing designed by all these washings.

Quick raw flesh showed that this was not a superficial leprosy, but one of a deeper and more malignant nature, that had eaten into the very flesh, for which cause it is in the next verse called an old, or inveterate, or grown leprosy .

Leviticus 13:13

If the leprosy, i.e. the sign or appearance of the leprosy; or the scab is called a leprosy , because at first view it seemed to be so to the priest, and to other beholders.

Have covered all his flesh: when it appeared in some one part, it discovered the ill humour which lurked within, and withal the inability of nature to expel it; but when it overspread all, it manifested the strength of nature conquering the distemper, and purging out the ill humours into the outward parts.

Leviticus 13:14

In him, or rather, in it, i.e. in the place where the sign or appearance of leprosy was, when the flesh was partly changed into a whiter colour, and partly kept its natural colour; this variety of colours was an evidence of the leprosy, as one and the same colour continuing was a sign of soundness.

Leviticus 13:15

The raw flesh is unclean: this is repeated again and again, because raw or living flesh might rather seem a sign of soundness, and the priest might easily be deceived by it, and therefore he was more narrowly to look into it, and to observe the place and manner and other circumstances in which it appeared.

But here it was only beginning and arising out of a bile, in which together with the white, which was the colour of the leprosy, there might be some mixture of redness arising from the bile, or that part of it which was not yet turned into the nature and colour of leprosy.

This clause seems to overthrow that exposition of the Hebrew word adamdam which is given by a learned man, Lev_13:19, because this colour which is here said to be only white , is distinguished from that which is here called adamdam , which therefore must be some other colour than that of snow, which though very light or bright, yet is only white.

Leviticus 13:31

And that there is no black hair in it; for had that appeared, it had ended the doubt, the black hair being a sign of soundness and strength of nature, Lev_13:37, as the yellow hair was a sign of unsoundness.

His clothes shall be rent, to wit, in the upper and former parts, which were most visible. This was done, partly, as a token of sorrow, Ezr\_9:3,5 Job 2:12, because though this was not a sin, yet it was an effect of sin, and a sore punishment, whereby he was cut off both from converse with men, and from the enjoyment of God in his ordinances; partly, as a warning to others to keep at a due distance from him wheresoever he came; and partly, as some add, that it might conduce to his cure, by giving the freer vent to the ill humours. But the exposing of the affected part to the cold would rather hinder than further evaporation.

His head bare; another sign of mourning, as appears from Lev\_10:6. God would have men, though not overwhelmed with, yet deeply sensible of, his judgments.

A covering upon his upper lip; partly as another badge of his sorrow and shame, as Eze\_24:17,22 Mic 3:7; and partly for the preservation of others from his infectious breath or touch. Unclean, unclean; as begging the pity and prayers of others, and confessing his own infirmity, and cautioning those who came near him to keep at a distance from him.

Leviticus 13:46

Partly, for his humiliation; partly, to prevent the infection of others; and partly, to show the danger of converse with spiritual lepers or notorious sinners. This rule excludes the society of sound persons, but not of lepers. See 2Ki_15:5 2Ch_26:21.

Without the camp; so Num_12:14; and afterward without cities and places of great concourse, whereof we have examples, 2Ki_7:3 Luk_17:12.

Leviticus 13:47

Leprosy in garments and houses is unknown in these times and places, which is not strange, there being some diseases or distempers peculiar to some ages and countries, as the learned have noted. And that such a thing was among the Jews cannot reasonably be doubted; for if Moses had been a deceiver, as some have impudently affirmed, a man of his wisdom would not have exposed himself to the disbelief and contempt of his people by giving laws about that which their experience showed to be but a fiction.

Leviticus 13:48

In the warp, or woof; a learned man renders it, in the outside, or in the inside of it . If the signification of these words be doubtful or unknown now, as some of those of the living creatures and precious stones are confessed to be, it is not material to us, this law being abolished; it sufficeth that the Jews understood these things by frequent experience.

Leviticus 14:1 LEVITICUS CHAPTER 14

Rites and sacrifices for the cleansing of a leper; the leprosy being healed, and judged so by the priest, who, going without the camp, must take two living clean birds, &c. The manner of it: one to be slain, the other to be let loose, Lev_14:1-9. On the eighth day two male lambs and one ewe lamb, and meat-offering, Lev_14:10-20. If poor, Lev_14:21-32. Of the leprosy of houses, how to be known, Lev_14:33-48. The manner of cleansing them, Lev_14:49-53. A repetition of this and the former chapter, Lev_14:54-57.

No text from Poole on this verse.

Leviticus 14:2

Not into the priest's house, but to some place without the camp or city, Lev_13:46, which the priest shall appoint.

Leviticus 14:3

To wit, by God; for God alone did heal or cleanse him really, the priest only ministerially and declaratively, as ministers are said to remit sins, though it be granted that none can truly and properly forgive sins but God, Mar_2:7.

Leviticus 14:4

Two birds; the one to represent Christ as dying for his sins, the other to represent him as rising again for his purification or justification.

Clean; allowed for food and for sacrifice.

Cedar wood; a stick of cedar, to which the hyssop and one of the birds was tied by the scarlet thread. Cedar seems to be chosen, to note that the leper was now freed from that putrefaction or corruption which his leprosy had brought upon him, that kind of wood being in a manner incorruptible.

Scarlet; a thread of wool of a scarlet colour, Heb_9:19, to represent both the leper's sinfulness, Isa_1:18, and the blood of Christ, and the happy change of the leper's colour and complexion, which before was wan and loathsome, now sprightly and beautiful.

Hyssop, chosen partly for its fragrant smell, which signified the cure of the leper's ill scent, and partly for conveniency in the use of sprinkling. See Exo_12:22.

Leviticus 14:5

To wit, by some other man. The priest did not kill it himself, because it was not properly a sacrifice, as being killed without the camp, and not in that place to which all sacrifices were confined; and if it had been a sacrifice, that might be killed by another, so long as the sprinkling of the blood of it, which was the most proper and essential act in the sacrifice, was done by the priest.

Over running water; it seems to be a metathesis or transplacing of words, for over running water put in an earthen vessel. Thus the blood of the bird and the water were mixed together, partly for the conveniency of sprinkling, and partly to signify Christ, who came by water and blood, 1Jo_5:6. The running water, i.e. spring or river water, by its liveliness and motion did fitly signify the restoring of liveliness to the leper, who was in a manner dead with his leprosy, as was noted before.

Leviticus 14:6

No text from Poole on this verse.

Leviticus 14:7

Seven times, to signify his perfect cleansing and restoration to all his former privileges. Compare Lev_4:17.

Into the open field, the place of its former abode, signifying the taking off that restraint which was laid upon the leper, and the liberty which the leper now had to return to his former habitation and conversation with other men.

Leviticus 14:8

Shave off all his hair; partly, to discover his perfect soundness; partly, to preserve him from relapse through any seeds or relics of it which might remain in his hair, or in his clothes; and partly, to teach him to put off his old lusts, and become a new man.

Out of his tent; out of his former habitation, in some separate place, lest some of his leprosy yet lurking in him should break forth to the infection of his family.

Leviticus 14:9

He shall shave all his hair, which began to grow again since it was first shaved, and now for more caution is shaved again.

Leviticus 14:10

Oil is added here as a fit sign of God's grace and mercy, and of the leper's healing.

Log, a measure for liquid things containing six eggshells-full.

Leviticus 14:11

The healing is ascribed to God, Lev_14:13, but the ceremonial cleansing or making of him clean and fit for society was an act of the priest using the rites which God had prescribed, whereby the sinner was cleansed.

Leviticus 14:12

For a trespass-offering, to teach them that sin was the cause of leprosy and of all diseases, and that these ceremonial observations had a further meaning, even to make them sensible of their spiritual diseases, their sins, and to fly to God in Christ for the cure of them.

Leviticus 14:13

In the holy place, to wit, in the court of the tabernacle. See Lev_1:11 7:7.

It is most holy; both of them are equally holy, and therefore to be offered in the same place.

Leviticus 14:14

To signify that he was now free to hear God's word in the appointed places, from which he was before excluded, and to touch any person or thing without defiling it, and to go whither he pleased.

Leviticus 14:15

As the blood signified Christ's blood, by which men obtain remission of sins; so the oil noted the graces of the Spirit, by which they are regenerated and renewed.

Leviticus 14:16

i.e. Before the second veil which covered the holy of holies, where God is oft said to dwell, and to be present in a peculiar manner.

Leviticus 14:17

i.e. Upon the place of that blood, as it is expressed Lev_14:28, or where that blood was put, Lev_14:14; or, over and besides the blood , &c.; i.e. as the blood was put in those places, so shall the oil be.

That they empty the house, i.e. the possessors of the house. It is observable here, that neither the people nor the household stuff were polluted till the leprosy was discovered and declared by the priest, to show what great difference God makes between sins of ignorance, and sins against knowledge and conscience.

Leviticus 14:37

In the walls of the house this was an extraordinary judgment of God peculiar to this people, either as a punishment of their sins, which were much more sinful and inexcusable than the sins of other nations; or as a special mean and help to repentance, which God afforded to them above other people; or as a document of the mischievous nature of sin, typified by leprosy, which did not only destroy persons, but their habitations also: see Zec_5:4.

This may be understood, either,

1. Of the person touching, if he that hath an issue toucheth another with unwashen hands. Thus most take it. But why then should it be limited to his hands? for if he had touched him by any other part, as suppose by kissing him, he had defiled him, though his hands had been washed. Or rather,

2. Of the person touched, to whom the washing of his hands is prescribed as an easier way of cleansing himself, if speedily used; but if that was neglected or delayed, a more laborious course was enjoined him. And thus the Syriac interpreter understands it.

Leviticus 15:18

Man, or, the man , to wit, that had such an issue, which is plainly to be understood out, of the whole context. For though in some special cases, relating to the worship of God, men were to forbear the use of the marriage-bed, as Exo_19:15 1Sa_21:4; yet to affirm that the use of it in other cases did generally defile the persons, and make them unclean till even, is contrary to the whole current of Scripture, which affirms the marriage-bed to be undefiled, Heb_13:4, to the practice of the Jews, which is a good comment upon their own laws, and to the light of nature and reason.

Leviticus 15:19

So it notes her monthly disease. Apart , not out of the camp, as the lepers and some others, but from converse with her husband and others, and from access to the house of God.

Seven days; for sometimes it continues so long, and it was but decent to allow some time for purification after the ceasing of her issue.

Whosoever toucheth her, to wit, of grown persons. For the infant, to whom in that case she might give suck, was exempted from this pollution by the greater law of necessity, and by that antecedent law which required women to give suck to their own children.

This day of expiation, which was on the tenth day of the seventh month, to be a solemn fast and sabbath of rest, and they cleansed from all their sins, Lev_16:29-34.

Leviticus 16:2

That he come not at all times; not whensoever he pleaseth, but only when I shall appoint him, to wit, to take down the parts and furniture of it upon every removal, and to minister unto me once in the year, Exo_30:10.

Holyplace, i.e. into the most holy, or the holy of holies, as the following words demonstrate, which is sometimes called only the holy place , as Heb_9:2,3; the positive degree put for the comparative, which is not unusual in Scripture.

Within the veil, to wit, the second veil. See Lev_4:6.

That he die not, for his irreverence and presumption. I will appear , visibly and gloriously; that is, as it were, my presence-chamber whither the priest shall not dare to come but when I call him. In the cloud ; either in that dark place, for there was no light came into it, and clouds and darkness go together, and one may be put for the other; or in a bright and glorious cloud, which used to be over the mercy-seat, or rather in the cloud of incense mentioned afterward, Lev_16:13.

Leviticus 16:3

Thus; in this manner, or upon these terms. With a young bullock , i.e. with the blood of it, as it is explained Lev_16:14. So it is a synecdoche, the whole put for the part. For as for the body of it, that was to be killed and offered without upon the altar of burnt-offerings.

For a sin-offering, for his own and family's sins, for a goat was offered for the sins of the people.

Leviticus 16:4

It is observable that the high priest did not now use his peculiar and glorious robes, but only his linen garments, which were common to him with the ordinary priests. The reason whereof was, either because this was not a day of feasting and rejoicing, but of mourning and humiliation, at which times people were to lay aside their ornaments, Exo_33:5. Some conceive, that under the linen garments here named are comprehended his more glorious robes also by a synecdoche. But that doth not appear neither from hence, nor from other places alleged. Had only his holy garments been mentioned in general, all might have been understood; but when only the linen apparel is mentioned here, and after, Lev_16:23, and when that is so particularly expressed in four several parts of it, and not a word of the other either here or in the rest of the chapter, it seems presumptuous to add them here without any ground or evidence. Or because it was fit he should not exalt, but abase himself, when he was to appear before the Divine Majesty, and therefore he was to come in the meanest of his priestly habits. Or that it might be an evidence of the imperfection of this priesthood and of the great difference between the Levitical and the true High Priest Christ Jesus, whose prerogative alone it is to go into the true holy of holies with his glorious robes, when this must carry thither the characters of his meanness.

These are holy garments, because appropriated to a holy and religious use, for which reason other things are called holy. See Exo_29:31 30:25 2Ch_5:5.

The bullock, mentioned in general Lev_16:6; the ceremonies whereof are here particularly described. This was a differing bullock or heifer from that Num 19, as appears by comparing the places.

Leviticus 16:12

From off the altar, to wit, of burnt-offering, where the fire was always burning, and whence fire was taken for such uses as these.

Incense; of which see Exo_30:34,35,38.

Within the veil, i.e. into the holy of holies, Lev_16:2.

Leviticus 16:13

Upon the fire, which was in the censer, Lev_16:12.

That he die not for so gross an error committed in the highest acts of worship, and that by a high priest, whose knowledge and function was a great aggravation to his sin.

Leviticus 16:14

He shall sprinkle it upon the mercy-seat, to teach us that God is merciful to sinners only through and for the blood of Christ.

Eastward, i.e. with his face eastward, or upon the eastern part of it, towards the people, who were in the court, which lay eastward from the holy of holies, which was the most western part of the tabernacle. This signified that the high priest in this act represented the people, and that God accepted it on their behalf.

Before the mercy-seat; on the ground.

Leviticus 16:15

Either he killed the goat before he entered into the holy of holies, though it be mentioned after, such transplacings of passages being not unusual; or rather he went out of the holy of holies and killed it, and then returned thither again with its blood, and this agrees best with the text, nor are transpositions to be allowed without necessity. And whereas the high priest is said to be allowed to enter into that place but once in a year, that is to be understood but one day in a year, though there seems to have been occasion of going in and coming out more than once upon that day.

Leviticus 16:16

An atonement for the holy place; of which see below, Lev_16:19,20 Exo 29:36 Lev_8:15 Heb_9:13.

Because of the uncleanness of the children of Israel; for though the people did not enter into that place, yet their sins entered thither, and would hinder the effects of the high priest's mediation on their behalf, if God was not reconciled to them.

In the midst of their uncleanness; encompassed with their sins, being in the midst of a sinful people, who defile not themselves only, but also God's sanctuary, as God complains, Eze_23:38,39.

Leviticus 16:17

In the tabernacle of the congregation, i.e. in the holy place, where the priests and Levites were at other times. This was commanded for the greater reverence to the Divine Majesty, then in a more special manner appearing, and that none of them might cast an eye into the holy of holies as the high priest went in or came out.

Leviticus 16:18

Unto the altar, to wit, the altar of incense, where the blood of sacrifices was to be put, Lev_4:7; and particularly the blood of the sin-offerings offered upon this day of atonement, Exo_30:10; and which is most truly and properly said to be before the Lord, i.e. before the place where God in special manner dwelt, to wit, the holy of holies. Some understand it of the altar of burnt-offerings, because he is said to go out to it. But that going out relates not to the tabernacle, but to the holy of holies, into which he was said to go in, Lev_16:17. Add to this, that this altar which is atoned by the high priest seems to be in that place where he only might now come, and therefore in the holy place, called here the tabernacle, from which all other priests were for this day excluded, whereas the altar of burnt-offerings was without the holy place or tabernacle, to wit, at the door of it, and in the court of the priests.

Leviticus 16:21

Both his hands. See on Exo_29:10 Lev_1:4. And confess over him; confession of sin being a duty to accompany the sacrifice offered for it, as we see Lev_5:5 Num_5:7. All their transgressions in all their sins, or, with or according to all their sins; for so the Hebrew particle is oft used. He mentions iniquities, transgressions, and sins, to note sins of all sorts, and that a very free and full confession was to be made, and that the smallest sins needed, and the greatest sins were not excluded from, the benefit of Christ's death here represented.

Putting them upon the head of the goat; charging all their sins and the punishment due to them upon the goat, which though only a ceremony, yet being done according to God's appointment, and manifestly pointing at Christ, upon whom their iniquities and punishments were laid, Isa_53:5,6, it was available for this end. And hence the heathens took their custom of selecting one beast or man upon whom they laid all their imprecations and curses, and whom they killed as an expiatory sacrifice for their sins, and to prevent their ruin. A fit man; one that knows the wilderness, and the way to it, and what places in it are most convenient for that use. Heb. a man of time, i.e. of years and discretion, who may be trusted with this work. Into the wilderness; which signified the removal of their sins far away, both from the people, and out of God's sight, or from the place of his presence. And here the goat being neglected by all men, and exposed to many hardships and hazards from wild beasts, which were numerous there, might further signify Christ's being forsaken, both by God and by men, even by his own disciples, and the many dangers and sufferings he underwent. The Jews write, that this goat was carried to the mountain called Azazel, whence the goat is so called, Lev_16:10; and that there he was cast down headlong; and that the red string by which he was led turned white when God was pleased with the Israelites, otherwise it remained red; and then they mourned all that year. And the ancient Hebrews write, that forty years before the destruction of the temple, which was about the time of Christ's death, this red string turned no more white.

His garments; not his ordinary priestly linen garments, for he was to leave them in the tabernacle, Lev_16:23, but the high-priestly garments, called his garments properly and peculiarly, and by way of distinction from the former garments, which are called holy garments, Lev_16:4, and the linen garments, Lev_16:23, but never his garments, as these are. And this change of his garments was not without cause. For the common priestly garments were more proper and fit for him in the former part of his ministration, both because he was to appear before the Lord in the most holy place to humble himself, and make atonement for his own and for the people's sins, and therefore his humblest and meanest attire was most fit; and because he was to lay his hands upon that goat on which all their sins were put, by which touch both he and his garments would be in some sort defiled: and therefore, as we read here that he washed himself or his flesh , so we may well presume his linen garments were laid by for the washing, as the clothes of him who carried away the scape-goat were washed, Lev_16:26. And the high-priestly garments were most proper for the latter part of his work, which was of another nature.

Leviticus 17:3

That killeth, not for common use or eating, for such beasts might be killed by any person or in any place, but for sacrifice, as manifestly appears both from Lev_17:4, where that is expressed, and from the reason of this law, which is peculiar to sacrifices, Lev_17:5, and from Deu_12:5,15,21. in the camp, or out of the camp: in Canaan, the city answered to the camp, and so it forbids any man doing this either in the city or in the country.

Leviticus 17:4

This was appointed, partly, in opposition to the heathens, who sacrificed in all places; partly, to cut off occasions of idolatry; partly, to prevent the people's usurpation of the priest's office; and partly, to signify that God would accept of no sacrifices but through Christ and in the church, (of both which the tabernacle was a type: see Heb_9:11) and according to his own prescript. But though men were tied to this law, God was free to dispense with his own law, which he did sometimes to the prophets, as 1Sa_7:9 11:15; &c., and afterwards more fully and generally in the days of the Messiah, Mal_1:11 Joh_4:21,24.

Blood shall be imputed unto that man; he shall be esteemed and punished as a murderer both by God and by men. See Isa_66:3. The reason is, because he shed that blood, which, though not man's blood, yet was as precious, being sacred and appropriated to God, and typically the price by which men's lives were ransomed.

He shall be cut off by death, either by the hand of God, in case men do not know it or neglect to punish it, or by men, if the fact was public and evident.

Leviticus 17:5

Which they offer; either,

1. The Egyptians and other idolatrous nations, which commonly sacrificed to idols or devils in fields or any places; who are not here named, but may be designed by the particle they, in way of contempt, as if they were not worthy to be named, as that particle is used, Luk_14:24 19:27 Joh_7:11 8:10. Or rather,

2. The Israelites now mentioned, and plainly understood in the following they, who, before the building of the tabernacle, took the same liberty herein which the Gentiles did, from which they are now restrained.

He nameth not peace-offerings exclusively to others, as appears from the reason of the law, and from Lev_17:8,9, but especially, because in these the temptation was more common in regard of their frequency, and more powerful, because part of these belonged to the offerer, and the pretence was more plausible, because their sanctity was something of a lower degree than others, these being only called holy, and allowed in part to the people, when the other are called most holy, and were wholly appropriated either to God or to the priests.

Leviticus 17:6

This verse contains a reason of the foregoing law, because of God's propriety in the blood and fat, wherewith also God was well pleased, and the people reconciled. And these two parts only are mentioned, as the most eminent, and peculiar, though other parts also were reserved for God.

Leviticus 17:7

Unto devils; so they did, not directly or intentionally, but by construction and consequence, because the devil is the author of idolatry, and is eminently served, pleased, and honoured by it. And as the Egyptians were notorious for their idolatry, as appears by the testimony of Scripture, and of all ancient writers, so the Israelites were infected with their leaven, Jos_24:14 Eze_20:7 23:2,3. And the name of devils is commonly given in Scripture to idols, yea, even to those which seemed most innocent, as to Jeroboam's calves, 2Ch_11:15, by which he and the people designed and professed to worship the true God, as is manifest from the nature of the thing, and from many places of Scripture; and the worshippers of idols are esteemed and called worshippers of devils. See Deu_32:17 Psa_106:37 1Co_10:20 Rev_9:20. The Hebrew word rendered devils signifies goats, either because goats were eminently worshipped by the Egyptians, as Herodotus, Strabo, and others note, and divers of the idols of the heathens were of that or a like form; or because the devil did oft appear to the heathens in that shape, as their own authors note.

After whom they have gone a whoring; for idolatry, especially in God's people, is commonly called whoredom, as Eze_16:16,26 23:8,19,21, &c., and that justly, because it is a violation of that covenant by which they were peculiarly betrothed or married to God. See Hos_2:18-20.

Leviticus 17:11

Of the flesh, i.e. of living creatures.

Is in the blood, i.e. it depends upon the blood, is preserved and nourished by it, and is extinguished when the blood is gone. And this law was given to the Jews, and hard-hearted people, as they are oft said to be, that by this restraint from the blood of brute creatures they might be wrought to the greater abhorreny of taking away the life of a man.

It is the blood that maketh an atonement; typically, and in respect of the blood of Christ, which it represented, by which the atonement is really made, Heb_9:12. So the reason is double:

1. Because this was the eating up of the price or ransom of their own lives, which in construction was the destroying of themselves.
2. Because this was ingratitude and irreverence towards that sacred blood of Christ which they ought to have in continual veneration.

Leviticus 17:13

Any beast; he instanceth in this kind, either because persons much given to that exercise are commonly too licentious, and being in haste might easily transgress; or because some might think the former prohibition did reach only to the blood of such creatures as were offered to God in sacrifice. Cover it with dust; partly, to beget an honourable respect unto the blood even of beasts, and much more of men; partly, lest the beasts should lick it up, and by tasting the sweetness of it be made more fierce and cruel to devour and destroy others; and partly, as a license from God upon this condition giving them a right to kill and eat such creatures, without any fear of the blood being imputed to them; for as the not covering of the blood portends the punishment which the sin of bloodshedding calls for, Job_16:18 Eze_24:7,8, so covering it notes impunity.

Leviticus 17:15

Every soul that eateth, to wit, through ignorance or inadvertency, as appears by the slightness of the punishment; for if it was done knowingly, it was a presumptuous sin against an express law here, and Deu_14:21, and therefore more severely punished. Or a stranger; understand of the proselytes; either of the proselytes of the gate, who were obliged to observe the precepts of Noah, whereof this was one; or of the proselytes of righteousness, or converts to the Jewish religion; for other strangers were allowed to eat such things, Deu_14:21.

Leviticus 18:1 LEVITICUS CHAPTER 18

Israelites not to live after the customs of the Egyptians or Canaanites, but according to God's institutions, Lev_18:1-5. To abstain from incestuous marriages, Lev_18:6-18; and copulation with a menstruous woman, Lev_18:19; and adultery, Lev_18:20; and offering children to Moloch, Lev_18:21; and all unnatural copulation with man or beast, Lev_18:22,23. These things the nations do; and the land is defied, and God is provoked; and they who do those things shall die: but God was their Lord, Lev_18:24-30.

Leviticus 18:2

Your Sovereign and Lawgiver. This is oft repeated here, because the things here forbidden were practised and allowed by the Gentiles, to whose custom he here opposeth Divine authority, and their obligation to obey his commands.

Leviticus 18:3

Egypt and Canaan: these two nations he mentions, because their habitation and conversation among them made their evil example in the following matters more dangerous. But under them he includes all other nations, as he elsewhere expresseth it. In their ordinances, or statutes; either because their laws did indeed allow such things, or because prevailing customs have the force of laws.

Leviticus 18:4

My judgments and mine ordinances; mine universally, Deu_27:26 Gal_3:10; for though the words be indefinite, the matter is necessary; and mine solely, Deu_6:13, compared with Mat_4:10, and therefore those that here follow, though you do not see the particular reason of some of them, and though they be contrary to the laws and usages of the nations.

Leviticus 18:5

He shall live in them; not only happily here, but also eternally hereafter, as it is expounded Mat_19:17 Rom_10:5. This is added as a powerful argument why they should follow God's commands rather than men's examples, because their life and happiness depends upon the one, not the other. And though in strictness, and according to the law or covenant of works, they could not challenge life for doing, except their obedience was universal, perfect, constant, and perpetual, and therefore no man since the fall could be justified by the law, as the apostle affirms and proves, Ro 4 Ga 3; yet by the covenant of grace this life is promised to all that obey God's commands sincerely, though not perfectly, 1Ti_4:8.

Leviticus 18:6

None, Heb. no man , For though the women also be bound by this law, yet the men alone are mentioned, both because they are most active in the choice of their yoke-fellows, and therefore most likely to transgress these laws, and because they having authority over the women, could have the greater influence upon them, by their power, counsel, or example, to oblige them either to the observation or violation of them.

Approach: this word signifies the conjugal act here, as it doth Gen_20:4 Isa_8:3; but because it is ambiguous in itself, it is so limited and explained in the end of the verse.

To any that is near of kin to him: this is the general rule, which is particularly expounded and applied in the following instances. And these laws are so just and reasonable, that although the barbarous nations did allow of such incestuous marriages, yet wiser and civil heathens by the mere light of nature condemned them, as may be seen in Suetonius, Tacitus, Catullus, and others.

Their nakedness, i.e. their secret parts, so called to put us in mind of the fall of our first parents, whose first sense and shame of their nakedness had its rise from thence. This phrase notes the same thing with knowing , Gen_4:1; and with discovering one's skirt, Deu_22:30 27:20.

Leviticus 18:7

Of thy father, or of thy mother, Heb. and of thy mother , put for that is , or to wit , as it is oft used. Here it notes that the nakedness of the father, and the nakedness of the mother, are one and the same thing, because they two are one flesh, and therefore her nakedness is his also; which further appears, because the mother only is mentioned in the following words, which contain the reason of the law.

She is thy mother; and therefore even nature teacheth thee to abhor such incest. Yet the Persians used to marry their mother; therein worse than the very camels, whom no force will drive to that act with their dams.

Leviticus 18:8

i.e. Thy step-mother. Examples of this are Gen_35:22 49:4 1Co_5:1. It is thy father's nakedness, by interest and relation; that which he only may uncover.

Leviticus 18:9

Thy sister, by both parents.

The daughter of thy father, or daughter of thy mother; thy sister by either of thy parents.

Whether she be born at home, to wit, of thy father by another wife, whom he hath taken into his house. Or born abroad; either of thy mother, by another, whether a former or a second husband, in another house and family; or of thy father by some strange woman, for there might be some doubt in these cases.

Leviticus 18:10

And consequently of all thy children and children's children, and all downwards; for they are a part of thyself, as coming out of thy loins, and out of thy wife, whose nakedness is thine own.

Leviticus 18:11

Begotten of thy father, or, being akin to thy father . He seems to speak of the daughter of the father's brother by his wife, whom the father here spoken of, being brother to the deceased person, married by virtue of that law, Deu_25:5, by which marriage there was a near kindred contracted between the two families, so that the son of the one could not marry the daughter of the other. Thus this law is differing from that Lev_18:9. And that seems more probable, than that in so brief a table of laws the same thing should be forbidden both there and here.

Object. The word being the same here and Lev_18:9, must be understood in the same sense, and therefore here must be rendered begotten or born , as it is there.

Answ. It may be rendered there as well as here akin, as some render the words there of domestic , or of another, a foreign, kindred ; and if the word had been participially put for begotten or born, it is likely the preposition mem or lamed would have been prefixed to the Hebrew word abicha , as is common in those cases.

Leviticus 18:12

Thy aunt by the father's side, as the next verse speaks of the aunt by the mother's side. If Amram's example be alleged to the contrary, See Poole "Exo_6:20".

Thy father's near kinswoman, Heb. thy father 's flesh , a member and product of the same flesh from which thy father came.

Leviticus 18:13

No text from Poole on this verse.

Leviticus 18:14

Of thy father's brother, i.e. of his wife, as the next words explain it. And as a man may not marry his aunt, so neither may a woman marry her uncle, there being altogether the same distance in kindred, and the selfsame reason of the law. And for the examples of Abraham, Amram, Othniel, &c., to the contrary, they were before the publication of this law, by which it pleased God to restrain the liberty allowed formerly, when the holy seed was in a narrower compass, and fewer persons, which altered the case. For in that regard there was a time when God allowed brethren and sisters to marry, to wit, when there were no other in the world, which was the case of Adam's immediate children. We learn from hence that the same degrees are forbidden in consanguinity or kindred by blood, and in affinity or kindred by marriage.

She is thine aunt: some infer from hence that it is unlawful for cousin-germans, or the children of brethren and sisters, to marry. But there is not the same reason, nor the same degree of distance, for my uncle or aunt are nearer akin to me than their children are. Yet because it seems doubtful to many, and may hereafter prove occasion of grievous perplexities of mind, especially to tender and scrupulous consciences, Christian prudence directs us to choose the safest way, there being so great a latitude of unquestionable persons.

Leviticus 18:15

Leviticus 18:16

Neither in his lifetime, nor after his death, and therefore a woman might not marry her husband's brother, nor might a man marry his wife's sister, either before or after his wife's death, for so all the prohibitions are to be understood; which will give light to Lev_18:18. But God, who can undoubtedly dispense with his own laws, did afterwards make one exception to this rule, of which see Deu_25:5.

Leviticus 18:17

Of a woman and her daughter, to wit, thy step-daughter, and so thy step-son's daughter, &c.

It is wickedness; because they are very near to thy wife by consanguinity, as coming directly from her; and therefore they are as near to thee by affinity, which binds as much as consanguinity; the wife, who is only related by affinity, being nearer to a man than any other by consanguinity, they two being made one flesh, and therefore the same distance is to be observed in both of them.

Leviticus 18:18

The word

sister is here understood, either,

1. Properly, so some; whence others infer that it is lawful to marry one's wife's sister after the wife's death. Or,

2. Improperly for any other woman, as not only persons, but things, of the same kind are oft called sisters and brethren, of which see plain examples, Exo_26:3 32:27,29 Eze 1:9 3:13 16:45,48,49. So the sense is, thou shalt not take one woman to another. And this sense may seem more probable,

1. Because else here were a tautology, the marriage of a man with his wife's sister being sufficiently forbidden, Lev_18:16, where marriage with his brother's wife is forbidden; as also Lev_18:9,11, where he forbids the marriage of one's own sister, and consequently the marriage of one's wife's sister, it being manifest and confessed that affinity and consanguinity are of the same consideration and obligation in these matters. Nor can this be added for explication, for then the comment would be darker than the text, nay, it would destroy the text; for then what was simply, and absolutely, and universally forbidden before, is here forbidden doubtfully and restrainedly, and might at least seem to be allowed after the wife's death; which is rejected by those who own the former interpretation.

2. Because the reason of this prohibition, which is lest he should vex her thereby, is much more proper and effectual against marrying any other woman, than against marrying the wife's sister, so near and dear a relation being most commonly and probably a means to induce them rather to love and please and serve, than to vex one another in such a relation. And therefore to take her natural sister to vex her, would seem a course unsuitable to his end or design.

3. Some add another reason, that polygamy, which Christ condemns, Mat_19:5 is either forbidden here or no where in the law. But this may admit of great dispute. And it is observable, that Christ confutes polygamy and divorces, not by any of Moses's laws, (which probably he would not have omitted, if they had been to his purpose,) but by the first institution of marriage, Gen_2:23; whence also Malachi seems to fetch his argument, Lev_2:14,15. And that law, Deu_21:15,16, may seem to intimate that God did then, in consideration of the hard-heartedness of the Jewish nation, dispense with that first and primitive law, especially if we consider the practice of divers holy men amongst the Jews, not only before the law, as Abraham and Jacob, but also after it, as Elkanah and David, who would never have lived in the violation of a known law, or, if they had, would have been blamed for it; whereas on the contrary God mentions it as one of his layouts vouchsafed to David, that he gave him his master's wives into his bosom, 2Sa_12:8; and affirms, that David turned not aside from any thing that he commanded him all the days of his life, save only in the matter of Uriah, 1Ki_15:5. Peradventure therefore it may deserve some consideration, which a learned man in part suggests, that this text doth not simply forbid the taking of one wife to another, but the doing of it in such a manner, or for such an end, that he may vex, or punish, or revenge himself of the former; which probably was a common motive amongst that hard-hearted people to do so, and therefore the forbidding hereof might give a great check to the practice of polygamy amongst them. In her lifetime : this clause is added to signify God's allowance to marry one wife after another, when she is dead, and thereby to intimate how the word sister is to be understood .

Leviticus 18:19

No, not to thy own wife. See Exo_12:2 15:24,25. This was not only a ceremonial pollution, but an immorality also, whence it is put amongst gross sins, Eze_18:6. There is also a natural turpitude in this action. And therefore it is now unlawful under the gospel.

Leviticus 18:21

Pass through the fire this was done two ways; either,

1. By burning them in the fire, of which see 2Ki_3:27 2Ch_28:3 Psa_106:37,38 Isa 57:5.

Or, 2. By making them pass between two great fires, which was a kind of illustration or consecration of them to that god; which latter seems to be here meant. See Poole "Deu_18:10", where the word fire, here understood, is expressed.

To Molech, or, Moloch ; called also Milcom ; an idol chiefly of the Ammonites, as appears from 1Ki_11:7 2Ki_23:13 Jer_49:1,3. This seems to be the Saturn of the heathens, to whom especially children and men were sacrificed. This is mentioned, because the neighbours of Israel were most infected with this idolatry, and therefore they are particularly cautioned against it, though under this one instance all other idols and acts, or kinds of idolatry, are manifestly comprehended and forbidden.

Neither shalt thou profane the name of thy God; either by joining him with, or by forsaking him for, such a base and bloody idol, whereby the name, honour, and service of God would be horribly defiled, and exposed to the scorn of the heathen, as if he were but one of the same kind with their mongrel deities.

A horrible confusion of the natures which God hath distinguished, and of the order which God hath appointed, and an overthrow of all bounds of religion, honesty, sobriety, and modesty.

Leviticus 18:24

In all these, to wit, above-mentioned sins. Whence it is apparent that the several incests here prohibited are not only against the positive and particular law given by God to the Jews, but also against the general law and light of nature. And therefore the law about these things was one of the seven precepts of Noah. And the sober heathens condemned such incestuous marriages. The Roman historians observe, that when Claudius the emperor had married his niece, (which is one of the lowest kinds of incest here mentioned,) and the senate in complaisance with him had made it lawful for any to do so, yet there was but one, and he too an obscure person, that followed his example.

Leviticus 19:1 LEVITICUS CHAPTER 19

Israelites must be holy, Lev_19:1,2; must honour their parents, and keep sabbaths, Lev_19:3; shun idolatry, Lev_19:4; duly to stay and eat their peace-offerings, Lev_19:5-8; in harvest-time leave gleanings for the poor and stranger, Lev_19:9,10; not steal, deceive, or lie, Lev_19:11; nor swear falsely, Lev_19:12; nor defraud, rob, or detain, Lev_19:13; nor curse the deaf, nor put a stumbling-block before the blind, Lev_19:14; nor judge unjustly, Lev_19:15; nor be tale-bearers; nor bear false witness against their neighbour, Lev_19:16; but rebuke their brother for sin, Lev_19:17; not revenge themselves, but love their neighbours, Lev_19:18; not to mix different things, Lev_19:19. Leviticus 19:2

Ye shall be holy, separated from all the forementioned defilements, and entirely consecrated to God, and obedient to all his laws and statutes.

I the Lord your God am holy, both in my essence, and in all my laws, which are holy and just and good, and in all my actions; whereas the gods of the heathens are unholy both in their laws and institutions, whereby they allow and require filthy and abominable actions; and in their practices, some of them having given wicked examples to their worshippers.

Leviticus 19:3

The mother is put first, partly because the practice of this duty begins there, mothers, by perpetual converse, being more and sooner known to their children than their fathers; and partly because this duty is most commonly neglected to the mother, upon whom children have not so much dependence as they have upon their father. And this fear includes the two great duties of reverence and obedience .

And keep my sabbaths: this is here added, to show, that whereas it is enjoined to parents that they should take care that the sabbath be observed both by themselves and by their children, it is the duty of children to fear and obey their parents in this matter; and moreover, that if parents should neglect their duty herein, or by their command, counsel, or example draw them to pollute the sabbath, yet the children in that case must keep the sabbath, and in all such cases prefer the command of God before the commands of their parents or superiors.

Leviticus 19:4

Turn not your hearts and faces from me, whom alone you pretend to respect, unto them. He intimates, that their turning to idols is a turning from God, and that they could not serve both God and idols.

Unto idols: the word signifies such as are no gods , or nothings , as they are called, 1Co_8:4, many idols having no being, but only in the fancy of their worshippers, and all of them having no virtue or power to do good or evil, Isa_41:23. Molten gods , nor graven gods neither, as appears from Exo 20, whereby we learn that such expressions are generally to be understood synecdochically.

Leviticus 19:5

Or, according to your own good pleasure , what you think fit; for though this in the general was required, yet it was left to their choice to determine the particulars. Lev_7:16. Or rather, to your acceptance , i.e. in such manner as it may be accepted by God on your behalf, which is explained in the next verse, and not in such manner as to lose the end you aim at, to wit, God's acceptance; for if ye do otherwise than God hath prescribed, it shall not be accepted, as he adds Lev_19:7, but on the contrary severely punished, Deu 8.

Leviticus 19:6

And on the morrow; by which clause it appears that he speaks here only of that sort of peace-offerings which were offered either by vow, or freely for the obtaining of some mercy desired; for the other sort, which was by way of gratitude for mercies received, were to be eaten the same day, Lev_7:15.

Or, one against another , to the defrauding of him of any of his goods, to which kind of lying the words foregoing and following seem here to restrain it, though it be true that all sorts of lying are unlawful.

Leviticus 19:12

Ye shall not swear by my name falsely: this is here added, to show how one sin draws on another, and that when men will lie for their own advantage, they will easily be induced to perjury.

Neither shalt thou profane the name of thy God, by any unholy use of it. So it is an additional precept, thou shalt not abuse my holy name by swearing either falsely or rashly. Or this may be a reason of the former prohibition, because in so doing thou wilt profane the name of thy God .

Leviticus 19:13

The wages, Heb. the work , put for the wages , as Deu_24:15 Job_7:2 Jer_22:13. Shall not abide with thee all night, because his urgent necessities require it for present subsistence.

Leviticus 19:14

Nor put a stumbling-block before the blind, to make them fall. Under these two particulars are manifestly and especially forbidden all injuries done to such as are unable to right or defend themselves; of whom God here takes the more care, because they are not able to secure themselves; who both discerns the injuries you do them, and can avenge them, though the blind and deaf cannot.

Leviticus 19:15

Thou shalt not respect the person of the poor, so as through pity to him to give an unrighteous sentence. Compare Deu_1:17 10:17 Pro_24:23.

Leviticus 19:16

As a tale-bearer, who makes it his business to go up and down from one to another, and divulge evil and false reports concerning others, which, though many times it proceeds only from levity and talkativeness, yet apparently tends to the great injury of our neighbour. See Pro_11:13 Jer_6:28 9:4. Neither shalt thou stand, to wit, in judgment, as a false accuser or false witness; for accusers and witnesses use to stand, whilst the judges sat, in courts of judicature.

Leviticus 19:17

To prevent murder, last spoken of, he forbids hatred, which is the common cause, and a degree of murder, 1Jo_3:15.

Thy brother; the same with neighbour, as it follows, i.e. every man, Mat_5:44; for it is manifest that God's law commanded them to love strangers no less than Israelites.

If thy brother hath done thee or others any injury, thou shalt neither divulge it to others as a tale-bearer, nor hate him, and smother that hatred by sullen silence, as 2Sa_13:22, nor justify and flatter and encourage him therein; but shalt freely, and in love, not with hatred, tell him of his fault.

And not suffer sin upon him, i.e. not suffer him to lie under the guilt of any sin, which thou by rebuking of him, and thereby bringing him to true repentance, couldest in some sort free him from. But the phrase of suffering sin upon him imperfect and unusual in Scripture, and I doubt whether the Hebrew verb nasa be ever used for permitting or suffering . The words may be rendered thus, And (or so) thou shalt not bear sin for him , or for his sake ; thou shalt not make thyself guilty of his sin, as thou wilt assuredly do, if thou dost not perform thy duty of rebuking him for his sin, which is a likely way, and a course appointed by God, to remove the guilt of his sin from him; and consequently, as it was his fault that he sinned and contracted guilt, so it is thy fault that his guilt continues upon him. Many things favour this sense.

1. This is the proper and usual signification of the word nasa .
2. The same words are used in this sense Lev_22:9 Num_18:32.
3. The preposition al is oft used thus, as Gen_37:8,34 Jud 9:9 1Ki_16:7.
4. This phrase of bearing sin , or iniquity , is constantly used in this book for being guilty and liable to punishment. And so the sense is here full and complete, and a very weighty reason here given to enforce the foregoing precept.

Leviticus 19:18

Nor bear any grudge, Heb. nor keep , either,

1. The injury here supposed in thy memory: so it is opposed to those who say they will forgive, but not forget an injury. Or,
2. Anger or hatred in thy heart: so this verb is used Jer_3:12 Nah_1:2. Thy neighbour ; by which he understands not the Israelites only, as some would persuade us, but every other man with whom we converse, as plainly appears,

1. By comparing this place with Lev_19:34, where this very law is applied to strangers.

2. Because the word

neighbour is explained by another man, Lev_20:10 Rom_13:8: see more on Exo_20:16.

As thyself; with the same sincerity, though not equality, of affection, as to thyself.

Leviticus 19:19

Ye shall keep my statutes; either,

1. My laws. So this is fitly premised, because otherwise some of the following commands might seem trifling, and obedience to them unnecessary. Or,

2. My ordinances, to wit, of nature; or the order which I have appointed in creatures, as the word is used Job_26:10 38:33 Psa_148:6 Pro_8:29; and therefore they shall not confound those things that I have distinguished, which were in some sort to reproach and correct my works, and which may seem to be done in some of the following instances.

Thou shalt not let thy cattle gender with a diverse kind: this was prohibited, partly, to restrain the curiosity and boldness of men, who might attempt to amend or change the works of God; partly, that by the restraints here laid even upon brute creatures men might be taught to abhor all unnatural and unlawful lusts; partly, to teach the Israelites to avoid mixtures with other nations, either in marriage or in religion; which also may be signified by the following prohibitions. See of this and the next Deu_22:9-11.

Leviticus 19:20

Betrothed to an husband; or, reproached or despised , and therefore forsaken, of her husband . For as his continuance with her in his and her master's family and service is mentioned as an evidence that he loved her, Exo_21:5,6 so on the contrary, his forsaking of her was a reproach to her, and a sign of contempt.

She shall be scourged, Heb. there shall be a scourging , which may belong, either,

1. To her alone, as the Jews understand it, for the man's punishment follows, Lev_19:21,22. Or,

2. To both of them; for,

1. Both were guilty.

2. It follows, they shall not be punished with death , which may seem to imply that they were to be punished by some other common and considerable punishment, which scourging indeed was, but the paying of a ram was a small penalty, and very unsuitable to the greatness of the offence. And the offering of the ram as a trespass-offering for the sin against God, is not inconsistent with making satisfaction other ways for the injury done to men, as we may see Lev_6:4-6, but only added here as a further punishment to the man; either because he only could do this, and not the woman, who being a bond-woman had nothing of her own to offer; or because his sex and his freedom aggravated his sin.

They shall not be put to death, which they should have been, had she been free, Deu_22:23,24.

Because she was not free: the reason of this difference is not from any respect which God gives to persons, for bond and free are alike to him, but because bond-women were scarce wives, and their marriages were scarce true marriages, being neither made by their choice, but by their master's authority, nor continued beyond the year of release, but at her master's or husband's pleasure; of which see Exo_21:4, &c.

Leviticus 19:23

As uncircumcised, i.e. as unclean, not to be eaten, but cast away, and counted abominable, as the foreskins are.

Three years. This precept was serviceable,

1. To the trees themselves, which grew the better and faster, being early stript of those fruits, which otherwise would have derived to themselves and drawn away much more of the strength from the root and tree.

2. To men, both because the fruit then was waterish, undigested, and unwholesome, and because hereby men were taught to bridle their appetites; a lesson of great use and absolute necessity in a godly life.

3. To God, who required and deserved the first-fruits, which must be also of the best, and so they could not be in this time.

Leviticus 19:24

Consecrated to the Lord, as the first-fruits and tithes were, and therefore given to the priests and Levites, Num_18:12,13 Deu 18:4; yet so that part of them were communicated to the poor widows, and fatherless, and strangers. See Deu_14:28,29.

To praise the Lord withal; to bless the Lord, by whose power and goodness the trees bring forth fruit to perfection.

Leviticus 19:25

That it may yield unto you the increase thereof; that God may be pleased to give his blessing, which alone can make them fruitful.

Leviticus 19:26

With the blood, i. e. any flesh out of which the blood is not first poured. See 1Sa_14:32. The Jews write, that the Egyptians and other nations, when they offered sacrifices to the devils, did eat part of the sacrifices, beside the blood which was kept in basons for that end, which also they believed to be as it were the special food of the devils.

Nor observe times, to wit, superstitiously, by the observation of the clouds, or stars, or otherwise, by esteeming some days lucky, others unlucky. See Deu_18:10,11 Es 3:7.

Leviticus 19:27

The corners of your heads; i.e. your temples: Ye shall not cut off the hair of your heads round about your temples. This the Gentiles did, either for the worship of the devils or idols, to whom young men used to consecrate their hair, being cut off from their heads, as Homer, Plutarch, and many others write; or in funerals or immoderate mournings, as appears from Isa_15:2 Jer_48:37. And the like is to be thought concerning the beard or the hair in the corner, i.e. corners of the beard. The reason then of this prohibition is, because God would not have his people agree with idolaters, neither in their idolatries, nor in their excessive sorrowing, no, nor so much as in the appearances and outward significations or expressions thereof.

Leviticus 19:28

Any cuttings in your flesh, which the Gentiles commonly did both in the worship of their idols, and in their solemn mournings, Jer_16:6.

For the dead; Heb. for a soul , i.e. either,

1. Improperly, for a dead body; as that word is sometimes used, as Lev_19:28 21:1 Num_6:6: or,

2. Properly, for the soul ; Ye shall not cut your flesh or your bodies, for your souls, or upon pretence of doing your souls any good, either in way of mortification, or in the worship of God, as they did, 1Ki_18:28, in like manner as others were willing to give to God the fruit of their body for the sin of their soul , Mic_6:7.

Leviticus 19:29

This the Gentiles frequently did for the honour of some of their idols, to whom divers women were consecrated, and publicly prostituted.

Leviticus 19:30

Not presuming to approach it without reverence, or with any kind of uncleanness upon you.

Leviticus 19:31

Them that have familiar spirits; that have entered into covenant with the devil, by whose help they foretell many things to come, and acquaint men with secret things. See Lev_20:27 Deu_18:11 1Sa_28:3,7,9 2Ki_21:6.

Wizards; another name expressing the same thing for substance, to wit, persons in league with the devil, with some difference only in the manner of their operation,

Leviticus 19:32

Thou shalt rise up, to do them reverence when they pass by, for which end they were obliged, as the Jews say, presently to sit down again when they were past, that it might be manifest they arose out of respect to them.

Fear thy God; a reason of the former precept, both because old men in some respects do most resemble God, who is styled the Ancient of days, Dan_7:9,13, and because this respect is due to such, if not for themselves, who may be unworthy or contemptible, yet for God's sake, who requires this reverence, and whose singular blessing old age is.

Leviticus 19:33

Either with opprobrious expressions, or grievous exactions.

Leviticus 19:34

As one born among you; either,

1. As to the matters of common right, as it here follows: so it reacheth to all strangers. Or,

2. As to church privileges: so it concerns only those who were proselytes of righteousness.

For ye were strangers; and therefore are sensible of the fears, distresses, and miseries of such, which call for your pity, and you ought to do to them as you would that others should do to you when you were such.

Leviticus 19:35

In meteyard; in the measuring of lands, or any dry and continued things, as cloth, ribband, &c.

In measure; in the measuring of liquid or such dry things as are not continued, only contiguous, as of corn or wine, &c. Or, the former may note greater, the latter, less measures.

Leviticus 19:36

A just ephah, and a just hin; these two measures are named as most common, the former for dry, the latter for moist things; but under them he manifestly comprehends all other measures.

Leviticus 19:37

Therefore; because my blessings and deliverances are not indulgences to sin, but greater obligations to all duties to God and men. So that if religion and righteousness were utterly lost in the world, they ought in all reason to be found among you as my peculiar people and freed men.

Leviticus 20:1 LEVITICUS CHAPTER 20

Israelites must not offer their children to Molech on pain of death, Lev_20:1-3; which if not inflicted by the magistrate, shall be by God himself, Lev_20:4,5. The same against running after soothsayers, Lev_20:6; against cursers of parents, Lev_20:9; against adulterer, Lev_20:10, or incestuous and unlawful copulation with women, men, or beasts, Lev_20:11-21. They must put a difference between clean and unclean, Lev_20:22-26. Soothsayers to be stoned, Lev_20:27.

No text from Poole on this verse.

Leviticus 20:2

Here follow the punishments of the crimes forbidden in the former chapters.

The strangers; not only such as were proselytes, but all others, these being gross immoralities, and such as the precepts of Noah reached to, and such as the laws of nature and nations obliged them to. And therefore the toleration of such actions was not only against reason of state, and the interest of the commonwealth of Israel, and dangerous to the infection and destruction of the Israelites by the imitation of such examples, but also against the light of nature and laws of humanity.

Unto Molech, or to any other idol; for the reason of the law equally concerns all. See Lev_18:21.

Leviticus 20:3

I will set my face against that man, i.e. deal with him as an enemy, and make him a monument of my justice, either by punishing him immediately and eminently, when the magistrate cannot or will not do it, or by adding to his corporal punishments my curse upon his soul and name. See Lev_17:10.

From among his people; from the number of his people, of what nation or kindred soever he was; or, from the land of the living.

To defile my sanctuary, which was done by this wickedness, either because such persons did, for the cover of their idolatry, come into God's sanctuary, as the rest did; see Lev_15:31; or because the sanctuary was, and was said to be, defiled by gross abominations committed in that city or land where God's sanctuary was; or because by these actions they did pronounce and declare to all men that they esteemed the sanctuary and service of God abominable and vile, by preferring such odious and pernicious idolatry before it.

And to profane my holy name; partly by despising it themselves, and partly by disgracing it to others, and giving them occasion to blaspheme it, and to abhor the true religion, because they saw it deserted and condemned by those that best knew it and once embraced it.

Leviticus 20:4

i.e. Wink at his fault, and forbear to accuse and punish him. Compare Act_17:30.

Leviticus 20:5

Against his family, i.e. either,

1. His posterity, whom God threatened to punish for their father's idolatry, Exo 20. Or,

2. His people, as that word is used, Jer_8:3 Mic_2:3, to wit, the people of that land, who by their connivance make themselves guilty of his sin, Lev_20:4. Or,

3. His disciples and followers, who are oft called the sons or children of their masters. And so it may seem to be explained in the following words, all that go a whoring after him, as the first clause, which concerns the head or chief person himself, I will set my face against that man, is explained by these words, I will cut him off.

Leviticus 20:6

To go a whoring after them; to seek knowledge, or counsel, or help from them.

Leviticus 20:8

i.e. Who separated you from all nations, and from their impurities and idolatries, to be a peculiar people to myself, and therefore I will not suffer you to follow their examples. Or, who really sanctify you, and give you my grace to do what I require, i.e. to keep my statutes. Or the argument is this, Those idols and idolatries will defile you and make you worse, but I only and my service will sanctify you and make you better.

Leviticus 20:9

For, or, surely, as that particle, chi, is oft used, as Job_8:6 20:20. So there needs no dispute about the connexion, or what this is a reason of. Curseth; which is not meant of every perverse expression, but of bitter reproaches or imprecations. Or his mother ; Heb. and put for or , as hath been noted before.

His blood shall be upon him; he is guilty of his own death; he deserves to die for so unnatural a crime.

Leviticus 20:13

Except the one party was forced by the other. See Deu_22:25.

Leviticus 20:14

It is wickedness, i.e. abominable and extraordinary wickedness, as the singularity of the punishment showeth.

Both he and they; either, or both or all of them, if they consented to it.

Leviticus 20:15

Partly, for the prevention of monstrous births; partly, to blot out the memory of so loathsome a crime; and partly, that by so severe a punishment of that creature which was only a passive instrument to man's sin, men might be assured that a more dreadful punishment than corporal death was reserved for them, if they repented not.

Leviticus 20:16

Leviticus 20:17

Seeing is here understood, either,

1. Properly, and so God would cut off the occasions of further filthiness. Or rather,

2. Improperly, for touching her or lying with her; for,

1. The sense of seeing is oft put for other senses, as for hearing , Gen_42:1, compared with Act_7:12 Exo_20:18 Rev_1:12; and for touching , as Joh_20:25,29.

2. That act is expressed by words parallel to this of seeing , as by uncovering , or discovering , and by knowing , Gen_4:1.

3. So it is directly explained in the following words, he hath uncovered his sister's nakedness, which manifestly signifies lying with her.

4. It is not probable that an equal punishment would have been appointed to an immodest sight, and to the highest act of filthiness.

5. Nor seems there to be any reason why this crime should be restrained to this rather than to any other relations, when it was as great, yea, a greater crime in some other relations. In the sight of their people , i.e. publicly, for the terror and caution of others.

Leviticus 20:18

If a man shall lie with a woman, wittingly and willingly. See on Lev_15:24 18:19.

Her sisters, i.e. her monthly infirmity. Her fountain, or her issue. Thus the fountain of blood in Mar_5:29, is the issue of blood , Luk_8:44, the fountain put for the stream, the cause for the effect, which is common.

Leviticus 20:20

i.e. Either shall be speedily cut off ere they can have a child by that incestuous conjunction, that the remembrance of the fact may be blotted out: or, if this seem a less crime than most of the former incestuous mixtures, because the relation is more remote, and therefore the magistrate shall forbear to punish it with death, yet they shall either have no children from such an unlawful bed, or their children shall die before them, Hos_9:11,12; or shall not be reputed their genuine children, but bastards, and therefore excluded from the congregation of the Lord, Deu_23:2.

Leviticus 20:21

Except in the case allowed by God, Deu_25:5.

An unclean thing; an abominable thing, like the uncleanness of a menstruous woman, which is oft expressed by this word: Heb. a separation or removing , i.e. a thing deserving separation or exclusion from society with others; or a thing to be removed out of sight or out of the world.

Leviticus 21:1 LEVITICUS CHAPTER 21

Priests must not defile themselves, in mourning over the dead: cases excepted, Lev_21:1-6. Nor marry with a whore, profane, or divorced woman, Lev_21:7,8. His daughter, if a whore, to be burnt with fire, Lev_21:9. The high priest must in no case defile himself with the dead, Lev_21:10-12: must marry a virgin of his people, Lev_21:13-15. Persons having bodily defects allowed to eat of the holy things, but not to serve in the tabernacle, or offer to God, Lev_21:16-24.

To wit, by touching of the dead body, or abiding in the same house with it, or assisting at his funerals, or eating of the funeral feast. The reason of this law is evident, because by such pollution they were excluded from converse with men, to whom by their function they were to be serviceable upon all occasions, and from the handling of holy things, Num_6:6 19:11,14,16 Deu 26:14 Hos_9:4. And God would hereby teach them, and in them all successive ministers of holy things, that they ought so entirely to give themselves to the service of God, that they ought to renounce all expressions of natural affections, and all worldly employments, so far as they are impediments to the discharge of their holy services. See Lev_10:3,7 Deu 33:9 Mat_8:22. Hereby also God would beget in the people a greater reverence to the priestly function, and oblige the priests to a greater degree of strictness and purity than other men.

Leviticus 21:2

For his kin that is near unto him: under this general expression his wife seems to be comprehended, though she be not expressed in the following instances, because from the mention of others more remote it was easy to gather that so near a relation was not excluded. And hence it is noted as a peculiar and extraordinary case, that Ezekiel, who was a priest, was forbidden to mourn for his wife, Eze_24:16, &c. These exceptions God here makes in condescension to human infirmity, because in such cases it was very hard to restrain the affections. But this allowance concerns only the inferior priest, not the high priest, as we shall see.

For his brother.

Object. Eleazar and Ithamar are forbidden to mourn for their brethren, Nadab and Abihu.

Answ. 1. That case was singular, both because such a mourning might seem to be a censure of God's severity upon them, and because they were then in the actual execution of their office, and in their initiation to it, and they were the only persons, besides Aaron, that could perform that work, and therefore their attendance upon it was more necessary than it would be in after-times and other cases.

2. The latter law can either limit or enlarge the former at the pleasure of the lawgiver. And this law may seem to be added, lest that prohibition, Le 10, should be taken for a general rule.

Leviticus 21:3

For his sister, either by father or mother.

Nigh unto him, i.e. by nearness, not of relation, (for that might seem a needless addition,) but of habitation, i.e. one not yet cut off from the family, as it follows.

Which hath had no husband; for if she was married, she was now of another family, and under her husband's special care in those matters.

Leviticus 21:4

Or, seeing he is a chief man, & c., or ruler, &c., for such not only the high priest, but others also of the inferior priests, were. And therefore though he might defile himself for the persons now named, yet he, above all others, must take heed so to do it that he do not profane himself by doing as follows. Or, for a chief man, &c., the preposition lamed being easily understood from the former verse, where it is oft used, such supplements being not unusual in the Hebrew tongue. So the sense is, he shall not defile himself for any other person whatsoever who is not thus near of kin to him, no, not for a prince or chief ruler among his people, who might seem to challenge this duty from him, to join with all others in their resentment of the public loss; much less shall he defile himself for any other. And so the last word, to profane himself, may be added as a reason why he should not defile himself for the prince or any other except the persons named, because such defilement for the dead did profane him, or make him as a common person and unclean, and consequently unfit to manage his sacred employment, which was an impediment to the service of God, and a public inconvenience to the people, whose concerns with God he negotiated. And it was not meet such great and important affairs should give place to the ceremonies of a funeral for a stranger.

Leviticus 21:5

To wit, in funerals, as the heathens did: q. d. Though I allow them to defile themselves for some of the dead, yet in no case shall they use these superstitious and heathenish rites, which also the people are forbidden to do, Lev_19:27 Deu_14:1, but the priests in a more peculiar manner, because they are by word and example to teach the people their duty not to sorrow for the dead as persons without hope.

Leviticus 21:6

Holy unto their God; devoted to God's service, and always prepared and fit for it; and therefore shall keep themselves as far as they can from all defilement, which makes them unmeet for their Master's use.

Not profane the name of their God, which they especially bear; they shall not disparage the service of God by making it give place to such slight occasions.

The bread of their God, i.e. the shew-bread; or rather, all the other offerings besides burntofferings; which are called bread, either because bread is commonly put for all food, as below, Lev_21:17,21; or because God is satisfied and refreshed with these offerings, as a man is with his bread; or rather, because they, or part of them, are the bread or food of the priests, and are here called the bread of their God , either objectively, because they were offered to God, or efficiently, because they were given by God to the priests. And these are called bread in opposition to the burnt-offerings, which being wholly consumed gave no food to the priests. Or, the offerings made by fire are here put synecdochically for all the rest, the most eminent kind for all, which are here called bread, because devoured by fire to the honour of God; for the particle and is not in the Hebrew, and may be omitted.

Leviticus 21:7

Or profane, or defiled , or defloured , though it were done secretly, or by accident, or by force; because the priest must take care that all the members of his family be free not only from gross wickedness, but from all suspicion of evil, and occasions of reproach or contempt, because this would reflect upon himself, and upon his God and religion also. The word may denote one defloured by any person, though it were by her husband; or a widow, because not only the high priest was obliged to marry a virgin, Lev_21:13, but also the inferior priests, as appears from Eze_44:22, and that is either signified by this word, or by none other here. It is true, a widow , and a profane person, are distinguished, Lev_21:14; but the same word may be, and oft is, taken in differing senses, both more largely and more strictly, in the same chapter. And there was some reason why it should be more expressly and distinctly set down there, a widow, or one profane or defloured otherwise, because there was the more need of caution in the high priest, and therefore the widow is particularly mentioned, which in the former case might be sufficiently comprehended under a general title.

A woman put away from her husband, though not for adultery, but for light causes, and by the husband's fault, because though the woman might be wholly innocent and free, yet it would leave some blemish upon her.

Leviticus 21:8

Thou, O Moses, and whosoever shall succeed in thy place, to whom it belongs to see those and other of my laws observed, shall take care that the priest be holy, and do not defile himself by any of these forbidden marriages, though he would do it.

He shall be holy unto thee; either

1. In thy esteem, and therefore shall not give thee cause to think meanly and irreverently of him by his defiling or debasing of himself with irregular mixtures. Or,

2. To thy use or service, in whose name he is to act with God, and therefore shall preserve himself in a state of holiness and acceptation with God. For I the Lord am holy , and therefore my ministers must be such also.

Leviticus 21:9

And by analogy his son also, and his wife, because the reason of the law here added concerns all. And nothing is more common than to name one kind for the rest of the same nature, as also is done Le 18.

She profaneth her father, i.e. exposeth his person and office, and consequently religion, one of whose prime ministers he is, to contempt.

She shall be burnt with fire; which was the severest of all the kinds of punishments among the Jews. Whereby God would show, both the greatness of their sins who stand in nearer relation to God than others, and how far God is from allowing sin in those who are nearest to him.

Leviticus 21:10

Upon whose head the anointing oil was poured, Lev_8:12; which was only sprinkled upon inferior priests, blood also being mixed with it, Lev_8:30.

The garments, to wit, those holy garments which were peculiar to him, as well as those common to others.

Shall not uncover his head; this being then the posture of mourners, Lev_10:6, though afterwards the custom was changed, and mourners covered their heads, 2Sa_15:30 Est_6:12. Or if this custom was now in use, the meaning may be, he shall not put off the priestly covering or mitre, which was necessary for him to do, if he had put on the mourner's covering upon his head, otherwise the holy covering had been defiled, but he shall continue in the exercise of his office, which is signified by keeping on his priestly garments.

Leviticus 21:11

Neither shall he go, to wit, into the chamber or house where they lie. This and divers other rites here prescribed were from hence translated by the heathens into their use, whose priests were put under the same obligations.

Nor defile himself for his father; because upon his father's death he was actually high priest, having been consecrated to this office in his father's lifetime.

Leviticus 21:12

Out of the sanctuary, to wit, to attend the funerals of any person; for upon other occasions he might and did commonly go out.

Nor profane the sanctuary; either by making the service thereof give place to the discharge of his passions, or the performance of a civility, or by entering into the sanctuary before the seven days allotted for his cleansing { Num_19:11 } were expired.

The crown of the anointing oil, i.e. the anointing oil, which to him was instead of a crown, by which he was advanced not only above the rest of his brethren, but even above all the people, whose chief governor he was in the things of God, though subject and accountable to the civil magistrate, by which also he was made an eminent type of Christ, who was to be King and Priest. Or, the crown , to wit, the golden plate, which is called the holy crown , Exo_29:6, and the anointing oil of his God are upon him. So there is only an ellipsis of the conjunction and , which is frequent, as Psa_144:9 Isa_63:11 Hab_3:11, &c. And these two things being most eminent, are put for the rest, and the sign is put for the thing signified, q.d. for he is God's high priest. Or, the consecration (for so nezzer signifies) of the anointing oil, which by an hypallage may be put for the anointing oil of the consecration, i.e. whereby he is consecrated, is upon him; i.e. though that action be past, yet the virtue of it remains still upon him; he is a sacred person in the highest degree, and therefore not to defile himself in any kind.

Leviticus 21:13

Or, a virgin, partly for the decency of the type, because as he was a type of Christ, so his wife was a type of the church, which is compared to a virgin, 2Co_11:2 Rev_14:4; and partly for greater caution and assurance that his wife was not a defiled or deflowered person. This and the following rule belong not to all the priests, for then this were a gross tautology, these same things, or most of them, being expressly forbidden to them, Lev_21:7, but only to the high priest, to show that he also, and he especially, is obliged to the same cautions.

Leviticus 21:14

A widow; except she were the widow of his predecessor, which some gather from Eze_44:22. But that place speaks only of the common priest, not of the high priest.

Of his own people, i.e. either,

1. Of his own tribe, which is confuted by the examples of holy men; see 2Ch_22:11; or,

2. Of the seed of Israel, as it is explained Eze_44:22.

Leviticus 21:15

Neither shall he profane his seed by mixing it with forbidden kinds, whereby the children would be disparaged, and rendered unfit for their priestly function.

Do sanctify him, i.e. have separated him from all other sorts of men for my especial and immediate service, and therefore will not have that race corrupted.

Leviticus 21:16

Leviticus 21:17

Whosoever he be of thy seed, whether the high priest or the inferior ones.

In their generations; in all successive ages, as long as your priesthood and policy endures.

Any blemish, i.e. any defect or excess of parts, any notorious deformity, or imperfection in his body. The reason hereof is partly typical, that he might more fully represent Christ, the great High Priest, who was typified both by the priest and sacrifice, and therefore both were to be without blemish; partly moral, to teach all Christians, and especially ministers of holy things, what purity and perfection of heart and life they should labour after, and that notorious blemishes in the mind or conversation render a man unfit for the ministry of the gospel; and partly prudential, because such blemishes were apt to breed contempt of the person, and consequently of his function, and of the holy things wherein he ministered. For which reason, some conceive, that still such persons as have notorious defects or deformities, which render them contemptible, are not fit for the ministry; which may be true in the general, except where there are eminent gifts and graces, which are sufficient to vindicate a man from the contemptibleness of his bodily presence. The particular defects here mentioned I shall not enlarge upon, because some of the Hebrew words are diversely interpreted, and because the use of these things being abolished, the knowledge of them is not very necessary.

The bread; either the shew-bread, one eminent part being named for the whole; or, the food , i.e. all the oblations. See Poole "Lev_21:6".

Leviticus 21:18

He shall not approach unto God, or to serve him in his sanctuary.

A flat nose: most restrain this word to the nose and to some great deformity relating to it, either the want of it wholly or in part, or the shortness, flatness, or crookedness of it. But according to others, it signifies more generally a person that wants some member or members, because the next word, to which it is opposed, signifies one that hath more members than he should.

In unto the veil i.e. to the second veil, which was between the holy and the most holy place, Exo_26:13,36, to burn incense, to order the shew-bread, and to dress the lamps, which were nigh unto that veil, though without.

Nor come nigh unto the altar, i.e. the altar of burnt-offering, which was without the sanctuary. The sense is, He shall not execute the priest's office, which was to be done in those two places. My sanctuary, Heb. my sanctuaries, in the plural number, as it is also Lev_26:31 Jer_51:51 Eze_28:18; for though the sanctuary was but one, yet there were divers parts, to wit, the court, the holy place, and the most holy, each of which was in a large sense a sanctuary, or a holy place set apart for God's worship.

I the Lord do sanctify them, i.e. do set them apart for high and holy uses, to manifest my presence and grace, and to receive my worship and service in them. And therefore I will not have them polluted or disparaged by the admission of defiled or deformed priests to minister therein.

Leviticus 22:1 LEVITICUS CHAPTER 22

Leviticus 22:2

That they separate themselves, to wit, when any uncleanness is upon them, as it appears from Lev_22:3,4. From the holy things, i.e. from eating of those parts of the offerings which belong to them. Only of the tithes they might eat in that case.

Which they hallow; either the children of Israel, or the priests; for both of them did in their kinds hallow, consecrate, or offer them to God. But the former seems more probable, both because they were mentioned here and Lev_22:3, where they are said to hallow, &c., and because this makes the argument stronger, it ill became the priests to profane or pollute what the people did hallow.

Leviticus 22:3

Unto the holy things, to eat them or to touch them; for if the touch of one of the people having his uncleanness upon him defiled the thing he touched, much more was it so in the priest.

From my presence; either from the place of my presence and from my ordinances by excommunication: he shall be excluded both from the administration and from the participation of them. Or, from the people, among whom I am present, which commonly is expressed by cutting off from his people. Or, from the land of the living.

Heb. my watch , i.e. the watch or guard which I have commanded them to keep.

1. The people shall not profane them, by eating them. Or,

Leviticus 23:2

Ye shall proclaim, i.e. cause to be proclaimed by the priests. See Num_10:8-10.

Holy convocations; days for your assembling together to my worship and service in a special manner.

These are my feasts, which I have appointed, and the right observation whereof I will accept.

Leviticus 23:3

No work ; so it runs in the general for the sabbath day, and for the day of expiation, Lev_23:28, excluding all works about earthly occasions or employments, whether of profit or pleasure; but on other feast days he forbids only servile works, as Lev_23:7,21,36, for surely this manifest difference in the expressions used by the wise God must needs imply a difference in the things. In all your dwellings : this is added to distinguish the sabbath from other feasts, which were to be kept before the Lord in Jerusalem only, whither all the males were to come for that end; but the sabbath was to be kept in all places, where they were, both in synagogues, which were erected for that end, and in their private houses.

Leviticus 23:10

When ye be come into the land; therefore this obliged them not in the desert, where they reaped no harvest, &c.

Shall reap, i.e. begin to reap, as it is expounded Deu_16:9. So, he begat , i.e. began to beget, Gen_5:32 11:26; and, he built , 1Ki_6:1, i.e. he began to build, as it is explained 2Ch_3:2. The harvest thereof , to wit, barley harvest, which was before wheat harvest. See Exo_9:31,32 34:22 Rth_2:23.

A sheaf Heb. an omer , which is the tenth part of an ephah. It seems here to note the measure of corn which was to be offered. For it is to be considered that they did not offer this corn in the ear, or by a sheaf or handful, but as Josephus, iii. 10, affirms, and may be gathered from Lev_2:14-16, purged from the chaff, and dried, and beaten out, and, some add, ground into meal, and sifted into fine flour; though this may be doubted of, because the meat-offering attending upon this was of fine flour, Lev_23:13, and because this offering is said to be of green ears of corn dried , &c., Lev_2:14.

Leviticus 23:11

To be accepted for you; that God may accept of you, and bless you in the rest of your harvest.

On the morrow after the sabbath, i.e. after the first day of the feast of unleavened bread, which was a sabbath, or day of rest, as appears from Lev_23:7, or upon the sixteenth day of the month. And this was the first of those fifty days, in the close whereof was the feast of pentecost, or Whitsuntide.

Leviticus 23:12

An he lamb, besides the daily morning and evening sacrifice, which it was needless to mention here, and besides one of those sacrifices to be offered every day of the seven, Lev_23:8.

Leviticus 23:13

Two tenth deals, or, parts , to wit, of an ephah, i. e. two omers, whereas in other sacrifices of lambs there was but one tenth deal prescribed, Num_15:4. The reason of which disproportion may be this, that one of the tenth deals was a necessary attendant upon the lamb, and the other was peculiar to this feast and occasion, and was an attendant upon that of the sheaf or corn, and was offered with it in thanksgiving to God for the fruits of the earth. Drink-offerings were added to all burnt-offerings, as we may see Num_15:5.

An hin; the measure appointed for every lamb, Num_15:5. This also probably would have been doubled, for the reason now mentioned, had this been a thank-offering for the vintage, as it was for the harvest.

Leviticus 23:14

Bread, made of new wheat, as the nature and reason of the law showeth.

Nor green ears, which were usual, not only for offerings to God, as Lev_2:14, but also for man's food. See Jos_5:11 Rth_2:14 1Sa_17:17 Mat_12:1.

Until the selfsame day: good reason God should be first served and owned as the supreme Landlord.

Leviticus 23:15

From the morrow after the sabbath, i.e. from the sixteenth day of the month, and the second day of the feast of unleavened bread inclusively. See on Lev_23:11.

Seven sabbaths, i.e. weeks, which are so called, by a synecdoche, from the chief day of it, both here and Luk_18:12 Act_20:7 1Co_16:2.

Leviticus 23:16

i.e. After seven weeks, or forty-nine days, the morrow after which was the fiftieth day, called also pentecost.

A new meat offering, to wit, of new corn made into loaves, as it follows.

Leviticus 23:17

Out of your habitations, i.e. out of the corn of your own land, for which and for the fruits of it you are now to offer praises unto God. And this also, as well as the former sacrifice, was brought out of the common charge, and in the name of the whole nation, whence it is said to be brought out of their habitations in the plural number. Some conceive two several loaves were brought from every family, or, as others, from every city or town. But this is easily confuted from Lev_23:18, where we read that with the bread, to wit, the two loaves, were to be offered seven lambs, one bullock, &c., which doubtless was a common oblation, and in the name of all.

Two wave loaves; in double proportion, as before, Lev_23:13.

Baken with leaven; because these were not offered to God, but wholly given to the priest for food. See on Lev_2:11 7:13.

Leviticus 23:18

Two rams; in Num_28:11,19 it is two young bullocks and one ram. Either therefore it was left to their liberty to choose which they would offer, or one of the bullocks there, and one of the rams here, were the peculiar sacrifices of the feast-day, and the other were attendants upon the two loaves, which were the principal and most proper offering at this time. And the one may be mentioned there, and the other here, to teach us that the addition of a new sacrifice did not destroy the former, but both were to be offered, as the extraordinary sacrifices of every feast did not hinder the oblation of the daily sacrifice.

Leviticus 23:19

One kid: in Lev_4:14 the sin-offering for the sin of the people is a bullock, but here a kid, &c.; the reason of the difference may be this, because that was for some particular sin of the people, but this only in general for all their sins. If it be said, then this should have been the better sacrifice, as being for far more, and possibly greater, offences; it may be replied, that this is not the only instance wherein the greater sins are expiated by smaller sacrifices, and the smaller sins by greater sacrifices, which was to instruct us, that sins were not expiated by the sacrifices for any worth in them, but only in respect of Christ, and that, though all sins are not equal, yet they are all expiated by one and the same price, even by the blood of Christ.

Leviticus 23:20

The priest shall wave them, i.e. some part of them in the name of the whole, and so for the two lambs, otherwise they had been too big and too heavy to be waved. So it is a synecdochical expression. For the priests ; who had to themselves not only the breast and shoulder, as in others, which belonged to the priest, but also the rest which belonged to the offerer, because the whole congregation being the offerer here, it could neither be distributed to them all, nor given to some without offence or injury to the rest.

Leviticus 23:21

An holy convocation, a sabbath or day of rest, called pentecost, which was instituted, partly in remembrance of the consummation of their deliverance out of Egypt, by bringing them thence to the mount of God, or Sinai, as God had promised, and of that admirable blessing of giving the law to them at that time, and forming them into a commonwealth under his own immediate government; and partly in gratitude for the further progress of their harvest, as in the passover they offered a thank-offering to God for the beginning of their harvest.

Leviticus 23:22

From the plural ye he comes to the singular thou, because he would press this duty upon every person who hath a harvest to reap, that none might plead exemption from it. And it is observable, that though the present business is only concerning the worship of God, yet he makes a kind of excursion to repeat a former law of providing for the poor, to show that our piety and devotion to God is little esteemed by him, if it be not accompanied with acts of charity to men.

Leviticus 23:24

A memorial of blowing of trumpets, i.e. solemnized with the blowing of trumpets by the priests; not in a common way, as they did every first day of every month, Num_10:10, but in an extraordinary manner, not only in Jerusalem, but in all the cities of Israel. This seems to have been instituted,

1. To solemnize the beginning of the new year, whereof as to civil matters, and particularly as to the jubilee, this was the first day; concerning which it was fit the people should be admonished, both to excite their thankfulness for God's blessing in the last year, and to direct them in the management of their civil affairs.

2. To put a special honour upon this month. For as the seventh day was the sabbath, and the seventh year was a sabbatical year; so God would have the seventh month to be a kind of sabbatical month, for the many sabbaths and solemn feasts which were observed in this more than in any other month. And by this sounding of the trumpets in its beginning, God would quicken and prepare them for the following sabbaths, as well that of atonement and humiliation for their sins, as those of thanksgiving for God's mercies.

Leviticus 23:32

This clause seems to be added to answer an objection, how this day of atonement could be both on the tenth day Lev_23:27, and on the ninth day here. The answer is, it began at the evening or close of the ninth day, and continued till the evening or close of the tenth day; and so both were true, especially if you consider, that the Jews did take in some part of the sixth day's evening by way of preparation for the sabbath, and therefore would much more take in a part of the ninth day to prepare and begin the great and solemn work of their yearly atonement. And this clause may be understood either,

1. Of this-particular sabbath, called here your sabbath, in the singular number, possibly to note the difference between this and other sabbaths; for the weekly sabbath is oft called the sabbath of the Lord, because that was in a special manner appointed for the praising, honouring, and serving of God, and celebrating his glorious works, as also the other sabbaths here mentioned were, whereas this was principally ordained for their need and for their good, even to seek and obtain the pardon of their sins. Or,

2. Of all their sabbaths, and consequently of this. The Jews are supposed to begin every day, and consequently their sabbaths, at the evening, in remembrance of the creation, Gen_1:5, as Christians generally begin their days and sabbaths with the morning, in memory of Christ's resurrection.

Of tabernacles, i.e. of tents, or booths, or arbours. This feast was appointed principally to remind them of that time when they had no other dwellings in the wilderness, as it is expressed Lev_23:43, and to stir them up to bless God as well for the gracious conduct and protection then afforded them, as for their more commodious and secure habitations now given them; and secondarily, to excite them to gratitude for all the fruits of the year newly ended, which were now completely brought in, as may be gathered from Lev_23:39 Exo_23:16 Deu_16:13,14. See an instance of this feast Neh_8:16.

Leviticus 23:36

Seven days ye shall offer an offering; a several offering each day, which is particularly described Num_29:13, &c.

On the eighth day; which though it was not one of the days of this feast strictly taken, nor is it here affirmed to be so, but on the contrary is expressly said to consist of seven days, Lev_23:31,39, nor did they dwell longer in tabernacles; yet in a larger sense it belonged to this feast, and is called the great day of the feast , Joh_7:37. And so indeed it was, as for other reasons, so because, by their removal from their tabernacles into more fixed and comfortable habitations, it represented that happy time wherein their forty years' tedious march in the wilderness was ended, with their introduction into, and settlement in, the land of Canaan, which it was most fit and just they should acknowledge with such a solemn day of thanksgiving as this was.

A solemn assembly, Heb. a day of conclusion , because it was the end of the feast, Joh_7:37; or, of restraint , because they were restrained from servile work, and obliged to attendance upon God's worship; or, of detention , because they were yet detained before the Lord, and kept together for his service, and not suffered to return to their tents till this was over.

Leviticus 23:37

A sacrifice, i.e. another sacrifice, to wit, for a sin-offering, as we shall find it Num_29:16,19,22, &c., called by the general name, a sacrifice, because it was designed for that which was the principal end of all sacrifices, to wit, for the expiation of sin.

Leviticus 23:38

Beside the sabbaths, i.e. the offerings of the weekly sabbaths, by a metonymy, as the day is sometimes put for the actions done in it, as Pro_27:1 1Co_3:13. God will not have any sabbath sacrifice diminished, because of the addition of others proper to any, other feast. And it is here to be noted, that though other festival days are sometimes called sabbaths, as here Lev_23:39, yet these are here called the sabbaths of the Lord, in way of contradistinction to other days of rest, to show that this was more eminently such than other feast-days, which also sufficiently appears from the fourth commandment.

Beside your gifts, which, being here distinguished from free-will offerings made to the Lord, may seem to note what they freely gave to the priests over and above their first-fruits and tithes, or other things which they were enjoined to give.

Leviticus 23:39

Also, or rather, surely , as this particle is oft used; for this is no addition of a new, but only a repetition of the former injunction, with a more particular explication both of the manner and reason of the feast.

The fruit, not the corn, which was gathered long before, but of their trees, as vines, olives, and other fruit-trees; which completed the harvest, whence this is called the feast of ingathering , Exo_23:16.

Leviticus 23:40

Boughs, Heb. the fruit , i.e. fruit-bearing boughs, or branches with the fruit on them, as the word fruit seems to be taken, 2Ki_19:30 Eze_19:12. Goodly trees , to wit, the olive, myrtle, and pine, as they are mentioned, Neh_8:15,16, which were most plentiful there, and which would best preserve their greenness or freshness.

Thick trees, fit for shade and shelter.

Willows of the brook, which might do well to mix with the other, and in some sort to bind them together. And as they made their booths of these materials, as is apparent from Ne 8, so it seems they did also carry some of these boughs in their hands, as is affirmed by Jewish and other ancient writers.

Leviticus 24:8

Before the Lord, whence it was called the shew-bread, Heb. the bread of faces , or of presence , i.e. the bread which was put upon the table in the Lord's presence.

Being taken; such supplements are not unusual. Thus in the floor, 1Ki_22:10, is put for sitting in the floor , 2Ch_18:9; and burdens, 2Ch_2:18, for carrying burdens, 1Ki_5:15. And these cakes are said to be received from or offered by the children of Israel, because they were bought with the money which they contributed, as may be seen Neh_10:32,33; as Judas is said to purchase the field , Act_1:18, which was purchased by his money, Mat_27:7. By an everlasting covenant ; by virtue of that compact made between me and them, by which they are obliged to keep this amongst other commands, and, they so doing, I am obliged to be their God, and to bless them. And this may be here called an everlasting covenant, not only because it was to endure as long as the Jewish religion and polity stood, but also because this was to stand there everlastingly, or continually, as is here said, and therefore the new cakes were first brought before the old were taken away.

Leviticus 24:9

i.e. The old bread now to be taken away.

Of the offerings, or, as one or being one of the offerings , &c., in regard of the incense which was offered by fire, and that for or instead of the bread, as was said on Lev_24:7, and therefore the bread was reputed as if it had been so offered.

Leviticus 24:10

Whose father was an Egyptian: this circumstance seems noted, partly to show the danger of marriages with persons of wicked principles or practices, wherein the children, as one wittily and truly observes, like the conclusion, do commonly follow the worse part, and are more easily taught by word or example to do ten things agreeable to their corrupt natures, than one thing contrary to it; and partly by this severity against him who was a stranger by the father, and an Israelite by the mother, to show that God would not have this sin to go unpunished amongst his people, whatsoever he was that committed it.

Went out, to wit, out of Egypt, being one of that mixed multitude which came out with the Israelites, Exo_12:38. It is probable this was done when the Israelites were near Sinai.

Strove together: this is added to show that provocation to sin is no justification of sin.

Leviticus 24:11

The name of the Lord: the words of the Lord , or of Jehovah , are here conveniently supplied out of Lev_24:16, where they are expressed, but here they are omitted for the aggravation of his crime. He blasphemed the name, so called by way of eminency; that name which is above every name; that name which a man should in some sort tremble to mention; which is not to be named without cause and without reverence. For which reason the godly Jews did many times rather understand than express the name of God, as Mar_14:62, the right hand of power , for of the power of God , as it is Luk_22:69; and the Blessed for the blessed God , Mat_26:63 Mar_14:61. And cursed , not the Israelite only, but his God also, as appears from Lev_24:15,16.

They brought him; either the people who heard him, or the inferior magistrate, to whom he was first brought.

Unto Moses, according to the order settled by Jethro's advice, Exo_18:26.

Leviticus 24:12

For God had only said in general, that he would not hold such guiltless , i.e. he would punish them, but had not declared how he would have them punished by men.

Leviticus 24:13

Leviticus 24:14

By

laying their hands upon his head they gave public testimony that they heard this person speak such words, and did in their own and in all the people's names desire and demand justice to be executed upon him, that by this sacrifice God might be appeased, and his judgments turned away from the people, upon whom they would certainly fall if he were unpunished.

Stone him; the same punishment which was before appointed for those who cursed their parents, whereas it deserved a far more grievous death, Thus God in this life mixeth mercy with judgment, and punisheth men less than their iniquities deserve.

Leviticus 24:15

i. e. Speaketh of him reproachfully, and with contempt. They therefore are greatly mistaken that understand this of the heathen gods, whom their worshippers are forbidden to reproach or curse. But Moses is not here giving laws to heathens, but to the Israelites; nor would he concern himself so much to vindicate the honour of idols; nor doth this agree either with the design of the holy Scriptures, which is to beget a contempt and detestation of all idols and idolatry, or with the practice of the holy prophets, who used oft to vilify them. See 1Ki_18:27 Jer_10:11.

Shall bear his sin, i. e. the punishment of it; shall not go unpunished. Some say he was to be beaten with stripes, others say with death, which is described Lev_24:16.

Leviticus 24:16

He that blasphemeth the name of the Lord: this some make a distinct sin from cursing his God , mentioned Lev_24:15, but the difference they make seems arbitrary, and without evidence from reason, or the use of the words. And therefore this may be a repetition of the same sin in other words, which is common. And as this law is laid down in more general terms, Lev_24:15, so both the sin and the punishment are more particularly expressed, Lev_24:16. Or the first part of Lev_24:16 be an application of the former rule to the present case. And as for him that blasphemeth , &c., or is blaspheming, &c. in the present tense, which is fitly used concerning words just now uttered, and scarce yet out of their ears, he shall , &c. And so the following words, as well the stranger, & c., may be a repetition and amplification of the former law.

All the congregation shall stone him, to show their zeal for God, and to beget in them the greater dread and abhorrency of blasphemy.

Leviticus 24:17

This law is repeated here, either to justify this sentence of putting blasphemers to death, from the same severity executed for a less crime; or to prevent the mischievous effects of men's striving or contending together, which as here it caused blasphemy, so it might in others lead to murder.

Leviticus 25:1 LEVITICUS CHAPTER 25

The land not to be tilled, but rest the seventh year; and that which grew of itself in the field or vineyard to be meat for them and their cattle, Lev_25:1-7. The jubilee on the day of atonement; a year of liberty and restoration; a year of rest to the land; of the peculiar blessing of God on it, Lev_25:8-22. Sold inheritances to be redeemed at any time; but now to be restored; a dwelling-house in a walled city only excepted, Lev_25:23-34. Kindness to the poor; usury forbidden; an Israelite must not be a bond-man or maid, but a hired servant till the year of jubilee; bond-men or maids to be taken from the heathen; an inheritance for ever, Lev_25:35-46 Of an Israelite that should sell himself to a stranger, Lev_25:47-55.

i.e. Near Mount Sinai. So the Hebrew particle beth is sometimes used, as Gen_27:13 Jos_5:13 Jud_8:5 2Ch_33:20, compared with 2Ki_21:18. So there is no need to disturb the order of the history in this place.

Leviticus 25:2

When ye come into the land, so as to be settled in it; for the title of the wars was not to be accounted, nor the time before Joshua's distribution of the land among them, Jos_14:7,10.

Keep a sabbath, i.e. enjoy rest and freedom from ploughing, tilling, &c.

Unto the Lord, i.e. in obedience and unto the honour of God. This was instituted partly for the assertion of God's sovereign right to the land, . in which the Israelites were but tenants at God's will; partly for the trial and exercise of their obedience; partly for the demonstration of his providence as well in the general towards men, as more especially towards his own people, of which see below, Lev_25:20-22; partly to wean them from inordinate love, and pursuit of or trust to worldly advantages, and to inure them to depend upon God alone, and upon God's blessing for their subsistence; partly to put them in the mind of that blessed and eternal rest provided for all good men, wherein they should be perfectly freed from all worldly labours and troubles, and wholly devoted to the service and enjoyment God; see on Exo_23:11; and lastly, that by their own straits in that year they might learn more compassion to the poor, who were under the same straits every year.

Of its own accord; from the grains that fell out of the ears the last reaping time.

Thou shalt not reap, i.e. as thy own peculiarly, but only so as others may reap it with thee, for present food.

The grapes of thy vine undressed, Heb. the grapes of thy separation , i.e. the grapes which thou hast separated or set apart to the honour of God, and to the ends and uses appointed by God; or the grapes of that year, which are in this like the Nazarites' hair, not cut off by thee, but suffered to grow to the use of the poor.

Leviticus 25:9

The jubilee signified the true liberty from our spiritual debts and slaveries, to be purchased by Christ, and to be published to the world by the sound of the gospel.

The seventh month was the first month of the year for civil and worldly affairs, which were mainly concerned in the jubilee, and therefore it began in that month; and, as it seems, upon this very tenth day, when the trumpet sounded, as other feasts generally began when the trumpet sounded.

In the day of atonement; a very fit time, that when they fasted and prayed for God's mercy to them in the pardon of their sins, then they might exercise their charity and kindness to men in forgiving their debts, which is the true fast, as is noted Isa_58:6, and to teach us that the foundation of all solid comfort and joy must be laid in bitter repentance and atonement for our sins through Christ.

Leviticus 25:10

By which it seems most probable that the year of jubilee was not the forty and ninth year, as some learned men think, but precisely the fiftieth year; which may appear,

1. Because the Jews account it so, which is confessed by the adversaries of this opinion, who say that the Jews err in the computation of the jubilee, as they do in Christ , the great end and antitype of the jubilee . But it is not probable that the Jews should universally err in a matter of constant practice among themselves, especially when there was nothing of interest or prejudice in the case, as there was in reference to Christ.

2. Because it is expressly called the fiftieth year here, and Lev_25:11, that fiftieth year , which was not true if it was but the nine and fortieth year. It is said it is called so popularly, and it was so if you take in the foregoing jubilee. But it must be remembered, that there was not yet any foregoing jubilee, but the very first of the kind is expressly called the fiftieth year , which in truth it was not if the jubilee was ended ere the fiftieth year began.

3. From the common course of computation. The old weekly sabbath is called the seventh day , because it truly was so, being next after the six days of the week, and distinct from them all; and the year of release is called the seventh year , Lev_25:4, as immediately following the six years, Lev_25:3, and distinct from them all. And therefore, in like manner, the jubilee must needs be called the fiftieth year , because it comes next after seven times seven , or forty-nine years , Lev_25:8, and is distinct from them all.

4. From Lev_25:11,12, where it is said, ye shall not sow, nor reap , &c; for it is the jubilee , &c.; which looks like a vain and useless repetition, if this year were but one of the seven years, for this very command was given concerning every seventh year, Lev_25:4; but if this year of jubilee was, as indeed it was, a year distinct from and coming after the seven sevens of years, then this repetition and application of that command to it was highly necessary, because otherwise it might seem hard and unreasonable that they should forbear sowing and reaping two years together, which hereby they are commanded to do. Two things are objected against this:

1. That the jubilee was only a revolution of forty-nine years. But that seems a great mistake, for it is most expressly distinguished from them all, and by way of distinction called the fiftieth year , therefore surely none of the forty-nine.

2. The difficulty propounded Lev_25:20 concerns only the seventh year, whereas it had been a greater difficulty if it had been extended to the jubilee, and the jubilee had been another vacant year coming next after the seventh year. But though the difficulty was greater for the jubilee, yet it was more frequent for the seventh year; and the resolution of the one made the way plan for the satisfaction of the other. For as God promised so to bless every sixth year, that it should bring forth fruit for three years, Lev_25:21; so when the case was extraordinary, as in the jubilee, it was but reasonable to expect an extraordinary blessing from God upon that sixth year which went next before the last of the seventh years, or the forty-ninth year, that it should then bring forth fruit for four years.

All the inhabitants thereof : understand such as were Israelites; principally to all servants, even to such as would not and did not go out at the seventh year, and to the poor, who now were acquitted from all their debts, and restored to their possessions. A jubilee ; so called, either from the Hebrew word jobel , which signifies first a ram , and then a ram 's horn , by the sound whereof it was proclaimed; or from Jubal, the inventor of musical instruments, Gen_4:21, because it was celebrated with music and all expressions of joy. Every man unto his possession , which had been sold, or otherwise alienated from him. This law was not at all unjust, because all buyers and sellers had an eye to this condition in their bargains; but it was necessary and expedient in many regards; as,

1. To mind them that God alone was the Lord and Owner and Proprietor both of them and of their lands, and they only his tenants and farmers; a point which they were very apt to forget.

2. That hereby inheritances, families, and tribes might be kept entire and clear until the coming of the Messiah, who was to be known, as by other things, so by the tribe and family out of which he was to come. And this accordingly was done by the singular providence of God until the Lord Jesus did come. Since which time those characters are miserably confounded; which is no small argument that the Messiah is come.

3. To set bounds both to the insatiable avarice of some, and the foolish prodigality of others, that the former might not wholly and finally swallow up the inheritances of their brethren, and the latter might not be able to undo themselves and their posterity for ever, which was a singular privilege of this law and people. Every man unto his family , from whom he was gone, being sold to some other family, either by himself or by his father.

Leviticus 25:11

Though it come immediately after a seventh year, wherein also this was forbidden to you.

Leviticus 25:12

It shall be holy unto you: so it was, because it was sequestered in great part from worldly employments, and dedicated to God, and to the exercise of holy joy and thankfulness; and because it was a type of that holy and happy jubilee which they were to expect and enjoy by and under the Messias.

The increase thereof; such things as it produced of itself; for the year before nothing was sowed. Out of the field; whence they in common with others might take it as they needed it; but must not put it into barns. See Lev_25:5 Exo_23:11.

Leviticus 25:21

i.e. Give

my blessing. Commanding is oft used in Scripture either for the performance of promised blessings, as Deu_28:8 Psa_111:9 133:3, or for the execution of threatened judgments, as Isa_5:6 Amo_9:4; both being acts of God's providential will, as the command is of his legislative will.

For three years; not completely, but in great part, to wit, for that part of the sixth year which was between the beginning of harvest and the beginning of the seventh year, for the whole seventh year, and for that part of the eighth year which was before the harvest, which reached almost until the beginning of the ninth year. And by this expression we may understand the meaning of that eminent passage of Christ's being three days and three nights in the grave , to wit, one whole day, and part of two days; of which more, if God please, in its proper place. This is added to show the equity of this command. As God would hereby try their faith, and exercise obedience, so he gave them an eminent proof of his own exact providence and tender care over them, in making provisions suitable to their necessities. Albeit it be also probable that divers of them, especially such as were more solicitous or distrustful of God's providence, did lay up something of the fruits of former years against this time.

Leviticus 25:22

Of old fruit; of the sixth year principally, if not solely.

Until her fruits, i.e. the fruits of the eighth year.

Leviticus 25:23

For ever, or, absolutely and properly , so as to become the propriety of the buyer; or to the extermination or utter cutting off , to wit, of the seller, from all hopes and possibility of redemption. For the land is mine ; procured for you by my power, given to you by my mere grace and bounty, and the right of propriety reserved by me, and to be disposed of by you only to such persons and in such manner as I shall have ordained.

Sojourners with me, i.e. in my land or houses: thus he is said to sojourn with another that dwells in his house. Thus the poor decayed Israelites and the strangers are said to live with them, i.e. with the other Israelites, to wit, in the land or houses here, Lev_25:35,36,40,44. Or, before me , in my sight, or in my account. Howsoever in your own or other men's opinions you pass for lords and proprietors, yet in truth, according to which my judgment always is, you are but strangers and sojourners, not to possess the land for ever, but only for a season, and to leave it to such as I have appointed for it.

Leviticus 25:30

The reason is from the great difference between such houses and lands. The reasons before alleged for lands do not hold in such houses; there was no danger of confusion in tribes or families by the alienation of houses. The seller also had a greater propriety in houses than in lands, as not coming to him by God's mere gift, but being commonly built by the owner's cost and diligence, and therefore had a fuller power to dispose of them. Besides, God would hereby encourage persons to buy and possess houses in such places, which frequency and fulness of inhabitants in cities was a great strength, honour, and advantage to the whole land.

Leviticus 25:34

Of

the suburbs of the cities, See Poole "Num_35:4".

May not be sold; not sold at all, partly because it was of absolute necessity for them for the keeping of their cattle, and partly because these were no enclosures, but common fields, in which all the Levites that lived in such a city had an interest, and therefore no particular Levite could dispose of his part in it. Some conceive that this law was altered in ensuing ages, which they gather from Jer_32:7,8 Ac 4:36,37. But those examples do not prove it. That sale of Jeremiah's was made by a particular dispensation and command of God, and that in a time when the Levites, as well as the people, were to be destroyed or dispersed, and carried into captivity, and therefore could receive no considerable injury by it; and besides, this sale was only made formally and for signification, as it is explained, Lev_25:14,15. And for the land sold by Barnabas a Levite, Ac 4, as it was at a time when the Jewish church was dissolved, and their state upon the brink of utter ruin, so it is not evident that it was such suburb land, which would have yielded but a small price, but it might be other land, either such as he might have in right of his wife, or such as he might have purchased. For though the Levites in general had no other share of land beside this allotted them by God, yet it is conceived that particular Levites might purchase lands to themselves.

Leviticus 25:35

Fallen in decay, Heb. his hand wavereth, of faileth or is decayed so that he hath not power to get or keep wealth, as the phrase is, Deu_8:18; as on the contrary, when a man is able, his hand is said to attain and find sufficiency, as here above, Lev_25:26.

Relieve him, Heb. strengthen him, comfort his heart, and strengthen his hand.

Leviticus 25:36

i.e. Of thy brother, whether he be Israelite or proselyte.

Increase: this some conceive relates to the fruits of the earth, food, &c., as usury doth to money. But here may rather seem' to be two words expressing the same thing,

(1.) To meet with the subtle evasions of crafty and covetous men, who made gain of their poor brethren (for of such only he speaks here, as is evident from Lev_25:35) by the lending of money or other things; and that they may quiet their consciences, and palliate their sin, they disguise it under other names; and,

(2.) To show that all kinds of usury are in this case forbidden, whether of money, or of victuals, or of any thing that is commonly lent by one man to another upon usury , or upon condition of receiving the thing lent with advantage and overplus, as it is said Deu_23:19.

Dreadful threatenings against the despisers, haters, and breakers of his commands; he will give them over to diseases, their enemies, drought, pestilence, sword, rambles; they who remain shall fall one upon another, and pine away in their sins, Lev_26:14-39. But if they confess their sins, and are humbled under God's judgments, God will remember his covenant, and show them favour in their enemies' land, Lev_26:40-45. Bring forth the old, or, cast out, throw them away, as having no occasion to spend them, or give them to the poor, or even to your cattle, that you may make way for the new corn, which also is so plentiful, that of itself will fill up your barns.

Leviticus 26:11

As I have placed it, so I will continue it among you, and not remove it from you, as once I did upon your miscarriage, Exo_33:7.

Leviticus 26:12

I will walk among you, as I have hitherto done, both by my pillar of cloud and fire, and by my tabernacle, which have walked or gone along with you in all your journeys, and stayed among you in all your stations, to protect, conduct, instruct, and comfort you.

Ye shall be my people; I will own you for that peculiar people which I have singled out of the mass of mankind, to bless you here, and to save you hereafter.

The quarrel of my covenant, i.e. my quarrel with you for your breach of your faith and covenant made with me.

Into the hand of the enemy; because those few that shall be left of the pestilence will be unable to defend you in your cities or strong holds.

Leviticus 26:26

Broken the staff of your bread; either,

1. By taking away that power and virtue of nourishing which I have put into bread or food, which when I withdraw it will be unable to nourish. Or rather,

2. By sending a famine, or scarcity of bread, which is the staff and support of man's present life, Psa_104:15; for so this phrase is commonly used, and elsewhere explained, as Psa_105:16 Eze_4:16, and so the following words expound it here. Ten women , i.e. ten or many families, for the women took care for the bread and food of all the family. Bread by weight : this is a sign and consequence both of a famine, and of the baking of the bread of several families together in one oven, wherein each family took care to weigh their bread, and to receive the same proportion which they put in. Compare Eze_4:16.

Leviticus 26:28

Contrary unto you in fury; or,

in fury of rashness or carelessness with you or among you, like a raging lion breaking into a multitude of people, and destroying all he meets with promiscuously, or without any distinction, both righteous and wicked together, as is threatened Eze_21:3. Or, in fury of contrariety , or meeting with you , or against you, like a man that meets his enemy in the fury of battle.

Leviticus 26:30

Your high places, in which you will sacrifice after the manner of the heathens. See Lev_19:26 Num_33:52.

Your images; or, your images of the sun , made for the honour and worshipping of the sun, and having some resemblance to it. See 2Ch_34:7. Under this one kind of idolatry, famous and frequent in those times and places, he contains all the rest. The carcasses of your idols ; so he calls them, either to signify that their idols, how specious soever or glorious in their eyes, were in truth but lifeless and contemptible carcasses, having eyes, but see not , &c., Psa_115:5, or to show that their idols should be so far from helping them, that they should be thrown down and broken with them, and both should lie together in a forlorn and loathsome state.

Leviticus 26:31

Your sanctuaries; either,

1. God's sanctuary, called sanctuaries here, as also Psa_73:17 74:7 Jer_51:51 Eze_28:18, because there were divers apartments in it, each of which was a sanctuary, or, which is all one, a holy place, as they are severally called. And your emphatically, not mine, for I disown and abhor it, and all the services you do in it, because you have defiled it. Or,

2. The temples built by you to idols, therefore called their sanctuaries, in opposition to God's. Or,

3. Your synagogues. But the first is most probable, because he speaks of the place where they used to offer their sweet odours here following.

I will not smell, i.e. not own or accept them. See Gen_8:21 Isa_1:11, &c.

Of your sweet odours; either of the incense, or of your sacrifices, which when offered with faith and obedience, are very sweet and acceptable to me.

Leviticus 26:40

If they shall confess, Heb. And they shall confess , where our translation and many others understand the particle if , which is also wanting and understood, Exo_4:23 Mal_1:2 3:8. So here, And if they shall confess , &c.

But there seems no necessity of any such supplement, but these and the following words may be taken as they lie in their plain and proper signification, to this purpose, Lev_26:40, And through the heaviness and extraordinariness of their affliction, their consciences will force them to confess their iniquity, and the iniquity of their fathers, with their trespass which they have trespassed against me , i.e. with their prevarication with me and defection from me to idolatry, which by way of eminency he calls their trespass;

and that also they have walked contrary to me, Lev_26:41, and that I also have walked contrary unto them, and have brought them into the land of their enemies ; i.e. that they are not come into these calamities by chance, nor by the misfortune of war, but by my just judgment upon them. All which confession is no more than Pharaoh made in his distresses, and than hypocrites in their affliction use to make. And therefore he adds, if then their uncircumcised , i.e. impure, carnal, profane, and impenitent hearts be humbled , i.e. subdued, purged, reformed; if to this confession they add sincere humiliation and reformation, I will do what follows.

Leviticus 26:41

The Hebrew word avou commonly signifies iniquity , but it is oft used for the punishment of iniquity, as here and 1Sa_28:10 Psa_31:10 Isa_53:6,11. The meaning is, if they sincerely acknowledge the righteousness of God, and their own wickedness, and patiently submit to his correcting hand, and would rather be in their present suffering condition than in their former sinful, though prosperous estate; if with David they are ready to say, it is good for them that they are afflicted, that they may learn God 's statutes , and obedience to them for the future, which is a good evidence of true repentance.

Leviticus 26:42

I will remember my covenant, to wit, so as to perform it, and make good all that I have promised in it. For words of knowledge or remembrance in Scripture do most commonly connote affection and kindness; of which there are many instances, some given before, and more hereafter.

I will remember the land, which now seems to be forgotten, and neglected, and despised, as if I had never chosen it to be the peculiar place of my presence and blessing.

Leviticus 26:43

Leviticus 26:44

Neither the desperateness of their condition, nor the greatness of their sins, shall make me wholly make void my covenant with them and their ancestors, but I will in due time remember them for good, and for my covenant's sake return to them in mercy. From this place the Jews take great comfort, and assure themselves of deliverance out of their present servitude and misery. And from this, and such other places, St. Paul concludes that the Israelitish nation, though then rejected and ruined, should be gathered again and restored.

Leviticus 26:45

For their sakes, or rather, to or for them, i.e. for their good or benefit; for surely, if one considers what is said before concerning the wickedness of this people, he cannot say this deliverance was given them for their sakes, but must rather say with the prophet, Eze_36:22,32, not for your sake, O house of Israel, &c.

Leviticus 27:2

A singular vow, or, an eminent or hard or wonderful vow ; not concerning things, which was not strange, but customary; but concerning persons, as it here follows, which he vowed, or by vow devoted unto the Lord, which indeed was unusual and difficult: yet there want not instances of such vows, and of persons which devoted either themselves or their children to the service of God, and that either more strictly and particularly, as the Nazarites and the Levites, 1Sa_1:11, and for these there was no redemption admitted, but they were in person to perform the service to which they were devoted; or more largely and generally, as some who were not Levites, nor intended themselves or their children should be Nazarites, might yet, through zeal to God and his service, or to obtain God's help in giving them some mercy which they wanted and desired, or in freeing them from some evil felt or feared, devoted themselves or their children to the service of God and of the sanctuary, though not in such a way as the Levites, which they were forbidden to do, yet in some kind of subserviency to them. And because there might be too great a number of persons thus dedicated, which might be burdensome and chargeable to the sanctuary, therefore an exchange is allowed, and the priests are directed to impose and require a tax for their redemption.

For the Lord, i.e. dedicated to the Lord, and consequently to the priest. By whose estimation?

Answ. Either, 1. Thine, O priest, to whom the valuation of things belonged, and here is ascribed, Lev_27:12. Or rather,

2. Thine, O man that vowest, as appears from Lev_27:8, where his estimation is opposed to the priest's valuation. Nor was there any fear of his partiality in his own cause, for the price is particularly limited. But where the price is undetermined, there, to avoid that inconvenience, the priest is to value it, as Lev_27:8,12.

Leviticus 27:3

From twenty years old to sixty years old is the best time for strength and service, and therefore is prized at the highest rate.

Leviticus 27:4

Less than the man's price, because she is inferior to him both in strength and serviceableness.

Leviticus 27:5

From five years old, at what age they might be vowed by their parents, as appears from 1Sa 1. though not by themselves; and the children were obliged by their parents' vow, which is not strange, considering the parents' power and right to dispose of their children so far as is not contrary to the mind of God.

Leviticus 27:8

If he be poorer than thy estimation; if after his vow he be decayed and impoverished, and not able to pay the price which thou, according to the rules here given, requirest of him.

According to his ability; which God also considered in other cases, as Lev_12:8. Compare 2Co_8:12.

Leviticus 27:9

Whereof men bring, to wit, usually and according to God's appointment. Giveth, i.e. voweth to give.

Shall be holy, i.e. consecrated to God, either to be sacrificed, or to be given to the priest according to the manner of the vow, and the intention of him that voweth.

Leviticus 27:10

He shall not alter it, nor change it; two words expressing the same thing more emphatically: q.d. He shall in no wise change it, neither for one of the same, nor of another kind.

A good for a bad, or a bad for a good; partly because God would preserve the sanctity and reverence of consecrated things, and therefore would not have them alienated; and partly to prevent abuses of them who on this pretence might exchange it for the worse, as reserving the judgment to himself.

The exchange thereof, i.e. both the thing first vowed, and thing offered or given in exchange. This was inflicted upon him as a just penalty for his rashness and levity in such weighty matters.

Leviticus 27:11

If it be unclean , either for the kind, or for the quality of it, if it were such a one as might not be offered. The dog only may seem to be excepted, for his price might not be offered. See Deu_23:18.

Leviticus 27:14

Sanctify his house, to wit, by a vow, for of that way and manner of sanctification he speaks in this whole chapter.

Holy unto the Lord; in which case the benefit of it redounded either to the priests, for their maintenance, Num_18:4, or to the sanctuary, for its reparations or expenses.

So shall it stand; supposing that the priest's estimation doth not notoriously swerve from the rules of valuation prescribed by God. For if the priest determined most unrighteously and unreasonably, as suppose a hundred times more than the true value of it, I presume no man is so void of sense as to say they were all bound to stand to the priest's determination in that case. Even as in case a man's leprosy was notorious and unquestionable, if a priest should through partiality pronounce him clean, this did not make him clean. And therefore all those passages of Scripture which leave things to, and command men to acquiesce in, the determination of the priest or priests, are to be understood with this exception, that their determinations be not evidently contrary to the revealed will of God, to whom priests are subject and accountable. Otherwise, if the priests had commanded men to profane the sabbath, this would have acquitted them from the obligation of God's command of keeping it holy, which is impious and absurd to affirm. And this consideration will give light to many scriptures.

Leviticus 27:15

He shall add the fifth part, which he might the better do, because the priests did usually put a moderate rate upon it.

Leviticus 27:16

A field of his possession, i.e. which is his by inheritance, because particular direction is given about purchased lands, Lev_27:22. And he saith part of it, because it was unlawful to vow away all his possessions, because thereby he had disabled himself from the performance of divers duties by way of sacrifice, almsgiving, &c., and made himself burdensome to his brethren.

According to the seed thereof, i.e. according to the quantity and quality of the land, which is known by the quantity of seed which it can receive and return.

Fifty shekels of silver, not to be paid yearly, till the year of jubilee, as some would have it, but once for all, as is most probable,

1. Because here is no mention of any yearly payment, but only of one payment, and we must not add to the text.

2. Because it is most probable that lands and all things were favourably and moderately valued, so that men might be rather encouraged to make such vows upon just occasions, than to be deterred from them by excessive impositions. But if this were yearly rent, it was an excessive rate, and much more than the land ordinarily yielded. For an omer is but the tenth part of an ephah , Exo_16:36, and therefore not above a pottle of our measure, which quantity of seed would not extend very far, and in some lands would yield but an inconsiderable crop, especially in barley, which was cheaper than wheat, and which for that reason, among others, may seem to be here mentioned rather than wheat.

Leviticus 27:17

From the year of jubilee, i.e. immediately after the year of jubilee is past.

According to thy estimation, now mentioned, to wit, of fifty shekels for an homer of barley seed.

It shall stand, i.e. that price shall be paid without diminution.

Leviticus 27:18

After the jubilee, i.e. some considerable time after the jubilee, as appears from the following words.

Unto the year of the jubilee; the defalcation from the full price of fifty shekels being to be more or less, as the years are more or fewer. See Lev_25:15-17.

Leviticus 27:20

If he will not redeem the field, to wit, when the priest shall set a price upon it, and offer it to him in the first place to redeem it.

If he have sold; *he , who? Either,

1. The man that vowed it; if he after such a vow made shall neglect to pay his vow, and shall sacrilegiously sell the same land to another man; or, if he sell it, i.e. suffer it to be sold to another, and will not prevent that by redeeming it to himself. Or rather,

2. The priest, or some in his name, who, though not expressed, is sufficiently understood out of the foregoing clause, If he will not redeem or buy again the field , to wit, of the priest, who is now the seller of it; or, or rather and, for this seems to be added by way of accumulation, if he , i.e. the priest, of whom he might have redeemed it, upon his refusal, offers it to sale, and have sold the field to another man. Add to this, that none but the priest could sell this land, after it was once vowed and declared to be so, and offered by the priest to him again to redeem it, which is apparently the present case.

It shall not be redeemed any more, i.e. he shall for ever lose the benefit of redemption.

Leviticus 27:21

When it goeth out, i. e. of the possession of the other man to whom the priest sold it. The priests ', for their maintenance. Nor is this repugnant to that law, that the priests should have no inheritance in the land , Num_18:20; for that is only spoken of them and the whole tribe of Levi in general, and in reference to the first division of the land, wherein the Levites were not to have a distinct part of land, as other tribes had; but this doth not hinder but some particular lands might be vowed and given to the priests, either for their own benefit, or for the service of the sanctuary.

Leviticus 27:22

No text from Poole on this verse.

Leviticus 27:23

The worth of thy estimation, i.e. the price or sum at which thou, O priest, shalt reckon it. So it is only a change of the person, which is frequent; or, the price which thou, O Moses, by my direction hast set in such cases. Unto the year of the jubilee, i.e. as much as it is worth for that space of time between the making of the vow and the year of jubilee; for he had no right to it for any longer time, as the next verse tells us.

He shall give thine estimation, without the addition of the fifth part, which he was to pay for his lands of inheritance, Lev_27:19, as being of a better and more durable tenure than purchased lands, which were his only till the jubilee.

As a holy thing; as that which is to be consecrated to God instead of the land redeemed by it.

Leviticus 27:24

By original right, which no other person by vow or otherwise could give away from him.

Leviticus 27:25

No text from Poole on this verse.

Leviticus 27:26

No man shall sanctify it, to wit, by vow; because it is not his own, but the Lord's already, and therefore to vow such a thing to God is a tacit derogation from and a usurpation of the Lord's right, and a mocking of God by pretending to give him what we cannot withhold from him.

Ox or sheep: under these two eminent kinds he comprehends all other beasts which might be sacrificed to God, the firstlings whereof could not be redeemed, but were to be sacrificed; whereas the firstlings of men were to be redeemed, and therefore were capable of being vowed, as we see 1Sa_1:11.

Leviticus 27:27

If it be of an unclean beast, i.e. if it be the first-born of an unclean beast, as appears from Lev_27:26, which could not be vowed, because it was a first-born, nor offered, because it was unclean, and therefore is here commanded to be redeemed or sold. Others understand it of all unclean beasts in general, and not of the first-born of them, because the first-born of such were to be redeemed by a sheep, Exo_13:13, without the addition of any such fifth part as is here enjoined; which is true of the first redemption of them, but then as after they were redeemed they might be again vowed unto God, so when the owners would redeem them a second time, it was but reasonable they should pay a better price for them. And if this were meant of unclean beasts in general, this were the very same law which is mentioned before, Lev_27:11-13; which, it is not probable, would after a few verses be unnecessarily repeated again like a distinct law. It shall be sold, and the price thereof was given to the priests, or brought into the Lord's treasury.

Leviticus 27:28

No devoted thing, i.e. nothing which is absolutely devoted to God, with a curse upon themselves or others if they disposed not of it according to their vow; as the Hebrew word implies.

Of all that he hath, to wit, in his power or possession.

Is most holy unto the Lord, i.e. only to be touched or employed by the priests, and by no other persons; no, not by their own families, for that was the state of the most holy things.

Leviticus 27:29

Of men, not by men, as some would elude it; but of men, for it is manifest both from this and the foregoing verses, that men here are not the persons devoting, but devoted.

Quest. Was it then lawful for any man or men thus to devote another person to the Lord, and in pursuance of such vow to put him to death?

Answ. This was unquestionably lawful, and a duty in some cases, when persons have been devoted to destruction either by God's sentence, as idolaters, Exo_22:20 Deu_13:15, the Canaanites, Deu_20:17, the Amalekites, Deu_25:19 1Sa_15:3,26, Benhadad, 1Ki_20:42; or by men, in pursuance of such a sentence of God, as Num_21:2,3 31:17; or for any crime of a high nature, as Jud_21:5 Jos_7:15. But this is not to be generally understood, as some have taken it, as if a Jew might by virtue of this text devote his child or his servant to the Lord, and thereby oblige himself to put them to death, which peradventure was Jephthah's error. For this is expressly limited to all that a man hath, or which is his, i.e. which he hath a power over. But the Jews had no power over the lives of their children or servants, but were directly forbidden to take them away, by that great command, Thou shalt do no murder. And seeing he that killed his servant casually by a blow with a rod was surely to be punished, as is said Exo_21:20, it could not be lawful wilfully and intentionally to take away his life upon pretence of any such vow as this. But for the Canaanites, Amalekites, &c., God, the undoubted Lord of all men's lives, gave to the Israelites a power over their persons and lives, and a command to put them to death. And this verse may have a special respect to them, or such as them. And although the general subject of this and the former verse be one and the same, yet there are two remarkable differences to this purpose:

1. The verb is active Lev_27:28, and the agent there expressed, that a man shall devote; but it is passive Lev_27:29, and the agent undetermined, which shall be devoted, to wit, by God, or men in conformity to God's revealed will.

2. The devoted person or thing is only to be sold or redeemed, and said to be most holy, Lev_27:28; but here it is to be put to death, and this belongs only to men, and those such as either were or should be devoted in manner now expressed.

Leviticus 27:30

There are divers sorts of tithes, but this seems to be understood only of the ordinary and yearly tithes belonging to the Levites, &c., as the very expression intimates, and the addition of the fifth part in case of redemption thereof implies.

Leviticus 27:32

Under the rod; either,

1. The tither's rod, it being the manner of the Jews in tithing to cause all their cattle to pass through some gate or narrow passage, where the tenth was marked by a person appointed for that purpose, and reserved for the priest. Or,

2. The shepherd's rod, under which the herds and flocks passed, and by which they were governed and numbered. See Jer_33:13 Eze_20:37.

THE FOURTH BOOK OF MOSES, CALLED NUMBERS

THE ARGUMENT

This Book giveth us a history of almost forty years travel of the children of Israel through the wilderness, where we have an account of their journeys, and what happened to them therein, with their government, and how they were managed thereby; called Numbers by reason of the several numberings of the people, as at the offerings of the princes, and at their several journeys, &c. But especially two: one, Chapter 1, out of which the priests and Levites were excepted, but numbered by themselves, viz. in the second year after they were come out of Egypt, in the first month whereof the passover was instituted; with the order about the tabernacle, both of the Levites and people, and their several marches, encampings, and manner of pitching their tents, the priests' maintenance and establishment, by the miraculous budding of Aaron's rod, with the several impediments in their marches, both among themselves by several murmurings, seditions, and conspiracies; and from their enemies, viz. the Edomites, Canaanites, over whom having obtained a victory, and afterwards murmuring, they were stung with fiery serpents, and cured by the brazen one; Amorites, whose kings, Sihon and Og, they overcame and slew; and Moabites, where by the allurements of Balaam, who was hired by Balak to curse Israel, they joined themselves to Baal-peor, and are plagued for it; that openly opposed them. The other chief numbering is in Chapter 26, where they are found almost as many as at the first, though among them were none of the first numbering, (according to what God had threatened, Chapter 14,) save Moses, Joshua, and Caleb, by reason of their desire to return back into Egypt upon the discouraging report often of those twelve that Moses sent to spy out the land; whereupon they were forced to wander above thirty-eight years in the wilderness; where he gave them several laws, civil, ecclesiastical, and military; as also particular directions about women's inheriting, occasioned by the case of Zelophehad's daughters, and concerning vows; and then brings them back to the borders of Canaan, where, after divers victories obtained against their enemies, they were directed how the land of Canaan was to be divided among the tribes, and what portion the Levites were to have among them, together with six cities of refuge set apart for the manslayer. At length Aaron being dead, and Eleazar placed in his stead, and Moses also having received the sentence of death, doth, by God's appointment, deliver up the people unto the charge and conduct of Joshua.

Numbers 1:1 NUMBERS CHAPTER 1

God commands Moses and Aaron to number the people that were fit for war, Num_1:1-3. Twelve captains chose, of every tribe one; their names; the number of each tribe, Num_1:4-16, The Levites exempt; to take care of the tabernacle; the other tribes camping round it, Num_1:47-54.

They now had been in the wilderness a full year, or near it, as may be gathered by comparing this place with Exo_19:1 40:17, and other places.

In the tabernacle; from the mercy seat.

B.C. 1490

Numbers 1:2

This is not the same muster with that Exo_38:26, as plainly appears, because that was before the building of the tabernacle, which was built and set up on the first day of the first month , Exo_40:2; but this was after it, to wit, on the first day of the second month, as is said Num_1:1. And they were for differing ends; that was to tax them for the charges of the tabernacle, but this was for other ends; partly, that the great number of the people might be known to the praise of God's faithfulness, in making good his promises of multiplying them, and to their own comfort and encouragement; partly, for the better ordering of their camp and march, for they were now beginning their journey; and partly, that this account might be compared with the other in the close of the book, where we read that not one of all this vast number, except Caleb and Joshua, were left alive; which was an evident discovery of the mischievous nature of sin, by which so vast a company were destroyed, and a fair warning to all future generations to take heed of rebelling against the Lord, for which their ancestors had been so dreadfully plagued even to extirpation. It is true, the sums and numbers agree in this and that computation, which is not strange, because there was not much time between the two numberings, and no eminent sin among the people in that interval whereby God was provoked to diminish their numbers. Some conceive, that in that number, Exo 30 Exo 38, the Levites were included, which are here excepted, Num_1:47, and that in that interval of time there were grown up as many more men of those years as there were Levites of the same age.

Of the children of Israel; so the stranger mixed with them were not numbered. The people were divided into twelve tribes, the tribes into great families, Num_26:5; these great families into lesser families, called the houses of their fathers, because they were distinguished one from another by their fathers.

The genealogy of Moses, Aaron, and his sons, Nadab and Abihu, Num_3:1-4. The Levites are joined with them in the administration of the tabernacle, Num_3:5-10, instead of all the first-born, Num_3:11-13. The three families of the Levites numbered, Num_3:14-39. The first-born numbered, Num_3:40-43. Being more than the Levites, some of them are redeemed, and the money given to Aaron and his sons, Num_3:41-51.

1491

These which follow in this chapter are the generations, i.e. either,

1. The things done by them; as the word generation is sometimes used, as Gen_6:9 25:19 37:2. Or rather,
2. The kindred or family, for that is the subject of this chapter, and not their events or actions.

Object. Aaron's family indeed is here mentioned, but not Moses's family.

Answer. Moses's family and children are here included under the general name of the Amramite , Num_3:27, which includes all the children and grandchildren of Amram , the persons only of Aaron and Moses being excepted. And the generations of Moses are thus obscurely mentioned, because they were but common Levites, the priesthood being given solely to Aaron's posterity, whence Aaron is here put before Moses, who elsewhere is commonly named after him. In the day that the Lord spake with Moses in Mount Sinai: this seems to be added, because Nadab and Abihu, mentioned Num_3:2, were then alive, though dead at the time of taking this account.

Numbers 3:7

His charge, i.e. Aaron's charge, or those things which are committed principally to Aaron's care and oversight, and under him and his direction to the Levites.

Of the whole congregation, i.e. of all the sacrifices and services which are due to the Lord from all the people, and because all the people could not and might not perform them, or at least divers of them, in their own persons, therefore they were to be performed by some particular persons in their name and stead; formerly by the first-born, Num_8:16, and now by the Levites. See Num_1:53 16:9.

Before the tabernacle, emphatically; not within the tabernacle, for the care of these things within the holy place was appropriated to the priests, as the care of the most holy place was peculiar to the high priest.

Numbers 3:8

The charge of the children of Israel; those things which all the children of Israel are in their several places and stations obliged to take care of, though not in their persons, yet by others in their stead.

Numbers 3:12

Instead of all the first-born, who were God's propriety by right of redemption, Exo_13:12, and to whom the administration of holy things was formerly committed, which now was taken away from them, either because they had forfeited this privilege by joining with the rest of their brethren in the idolatrous worship of the calf, or because they were to be mainly concerned in the distribution and management of the inheritances which now they were going to possess, and therefore could not be at leisure to attend upon the service of the sanctuary; which made it fit that this work should be committed to other hands. And God would not commit it to some other persons in each tribe, which might be an occasion of idolatry, confusion, division, and contempt of sacred things, but to one distinct tribe, which might be entirely devoted to that service, and particularly to the tribe of Levi; partly, out of his respect to Moses and Aaron, branches of this tribe; partly, as a recompence of their zeal for God and against idolaters; see Exo_32:26, 29 Deu 33:9; and partly, because it was the smallest of the tribes, and therefore most likely to find both employment in and maintenance for the work.

Numbers 3:38

For the charge of the children of Israel; either in their stead. that charge which they were obliged to keep either by themselves. or by others appointed by them, if God had not committed it to those; or for their good, and service, and benefit; for their preservation, as the word may be rendered.

Numbers 3:39

Object. But if the particular numbers, mentioned Num_3:22,28,34, be put together, they make exactly 22,300.

Ans. The odd 300 are omitted here, either according to the use of the Holy Scripture, which in so great numbers small sums are commonly neglected, or because they were the first-born of the Levites, and therefore belonged to God already, and so could not be given to him again instead of the other first-born. See Lev_27:26. If this number of first-born seem very small to come from 22,000 Levites, it must be considered, that only such first-born are here named as were males, and such as continued in their parents families, not such as had erected new families of their own. Add to this, that God so ordered things by his wise providence for divers weighty reasons, that this tribe should be much the least of all the tribes, as is evident by comparing the numbers of the other tribes from twenty years old, Num 1, with the number of this from a month old; and therefore it is not strange if the number of their first-born be less than in other tribes. Although if the other tribes had been computed from a month old, as this was, their number of 600,000 had probably been double or treble to that; and consequently the number of their first-born being 22,273 Num_3:43, would have been as unproportionable to their whole sum, as this of 300 first-born Levites seems to their whole number. And some add, that only those first-born are numbered, both in this and in the other tribes, which were born since they came out of Egypt, when God challenged all the first-born to be his.

Numbers 3:40

That they may be compared with the number of the Levites for the reason here following.

Numbers 3:41

Instead of all the first-born, to wit, such are now alive of them, but those which should be born of them hereafter are otherwise disposed.

The cattle of the Levites; not that they were to be taken from the Levites, or to be sacrificed to God, any more than the Levites themselves were, but that they together with the Levites were to be presented before the Lord by way of acknowledgment, that the Levites might be set apart for God's service, and their cattle for themselves as God's ministers, and for their support in God's work.

Numbers 4:3

From thirty years old: this age was prescribed, as the age of full strength of body, and therefore most proper for their present laborious work of carrying the parts and vessels of the tabernacle; and of maturity of judgment, which is necessary for the right management of holy services; whence even John and Christ entered not upon their ministry till that age. And it may still seem to be the fittest season for men's undertaking the ministry of the gospel, except in case of extraordinary abilities, or the church's pressing necessity.

Object. They might enter upon this work at their twenty-fifth year, Num_8:24, and in David's time and afterward at their twentieth year.

Answ. 1. Their first entrance upon their work was at their twenty-fifth year, when they began as learners, and acted only under the inspection and direction of their brethren; but in their thirtieth year they were completely admitted to a full discharge of their whole office.

2. David, being a prophet, and particularly directed by God in the affairs of the temple, might and did make a change in this matter, which he might the better do, both because it was but a change in a circumstance, and because the magnificence of the temple, and the great multitude of sacred utensils and sacrifices, required a greater number of attendants than formerly was necessary.

Until fifty years old, when they were exempted from the toilsome work of carrying burdens, but not discharged from the honourable and easy work done within the tabernacle, Num_8:26.

All that enter, i.e. that do and may enter, having no defect, Lev_21:17, nor other impediment. The society of sacred ministers he calls a host, because of that excellent order which was among them, as to persons, place, time, the matter and manner of their services.

the covering of badgers' skins the ark was secured from the injuries of the weather:.

Object. How could these staves be put in, when they were never to be taken out, Exo_25:15, compared with 1Ki_8:8.

Answ. 1. These places may speak of the staves while the ark and tabernacle stood, but when they were to be removed the posture of all things was altered.

2. The Hebrew verb doth not signify putting in , but barely putting , or placing , or disposing , and may be understood not of putting the staves into the rings, wherein they constantly remained, but of the putting of them either upon their shoulders to try and fit them for carriage, or into the holes or receptacles which probably were made in these coverings for the receiving and covering of these gilded staves, to keep them both from the touch of the Levites, and from the inconveniences of bad weather.

Numbers 4:7

Of shew-bread, Heb. of faces or presence , for of the bread of faces or presence, i.e. of the bread which was continually standing in the presence of the Lord.

The dishes, upon which the shew-bread was put.

The continual bread, i.e. shew-bread ; so called because it was continually to be there, even in the wilderness; where though they had only manna for themselves, yet they reserved corn for the weekly making of these loaves, which they might with no great difficulty procure from some of the people bordering upon the wilderness in the innermost parts whereof they were.

From the altar of burnt-offerings; whereby it may seem probable, though it be denied by most, that they did offer some sacrifices in the wilderness, though it may not be so frequently nor orderly as afterwards they did. Whence else were these ashes? And there are some undeniable instances of their sacrificing there, as Exo_18:12 24:4 Num 7, &c.; from which it seems rational to conclude that they did offer sacrifices at other times, though not so constantly and diligently as they did in Canaan. And for the argument against it from Amo_5:25, that may be easily dissolved, as we shall there see, if the Lord please. Moreover the taking away of the ashes only doth sufficiently imply that the fire was preserved, which as it came down from heaven, Le 9, so it was by God's command to be continually fed and kept burning, and therefore doubtless was put into some vessel, which might be either fastened to the altar and put within this covering, or carried by some person appointed thereunto.

Numbers 4:14

Amongst all these vessels here and above named there is no mention of the brazen laver though that be elsewhere. reckoned among the holy things, as Exo_35:16 38:8 39:39 40:30, whereof possibly the reason may be because it was not covered, as not being capable of much hurt by the weather; though some ancient translations of the Bible do here add these words, They shall take a purple covering, and cover the laver, &c.

Afterward the priests themselves, being multiplied, carried these things, as appears from Deu_31:9 Jos_3:6 8:33 1Sa_4:4, though the Levites also were not excluded, 2Ch_5:5. By the dead, i.e. by the touch of the dead. See Lev_21:1 Num_6:6.

By which caution God would intimate the possibility and danger of men's being made guilty by other men's sins, and the necessary duty of avoiding intimate converse with wicked men.

Numbers 5:6

Any sin that men commit, Heb. any sins of men , i.e. either,

1. Of common infirmity, or such sins as men commit through human frailty; for if this were done knowingly and willingly, a greater punishment was appointed. See Lev_6:5,6. Or rather,

2. Sins against men, or belonging to men, to wit, deceits or wrongs, whereby other men are injured, of which he manifestly speaks, as appears from Num_5:7,8; so this is a genitive case of the object, as Mat_12:31, blasphemy of the Spirit (for so it is in the Greek) is blasphemy against the Holy Ghost , as it is called Mar_3:29 Luk_12:10; and power of all flesh , Joh_17:2, is power over all flesh ; and power of spirits , Mat_10:1, is power over or against spirits, Luk_9:1; and prayer of God , Luk_6:12, is prayer directed unto God; and the spoil of the poor , Isa_3:14, is the spoil taken from the poor; and violence of the children of Judah , Joe_3:19, is violence against them, as we translate it.

To do a trespass against the Lord; which words may be added, either,

1. To express a new sin, of prevaricating or dealing falsely with God, either by a false oath, which is a special injury to God, or by a lie or simple denial that he hath taken any thing of his neighbour's, which also God takes as a sin especially concerning himself, who in such cases is the only judge of what is falsely said or sworn. See Act_5:3,4. Or,

2. To aggravate the former sin, and to show that such injuries done to men are also sins against God. who hath commended justice to men as well as religion to himself. But the former is more probable, both because here is a ram of atonement to be offered to God for the special injury clone to him, as well as satisfaction is to be made to the man whom he injured; and especially by comparing this with the parallel place, Lev_6:2, &c. And that person be guilty , i.e. shall be sensible of his guilt, or be convicted in his conscience of his sin; for otherwise this might seem a mere tautology, if it were only meant of being really guilty of sin, which was expressed before in those words, when one shall commit any sin , i.e. be guilty of any sin.

Numbers 5:7

They shall not continue in the denial of the fact, as such persons oft do, but shall give glory to God, and take shame to themselves, by acknowledging their sin with grief and remorse. See Lev_5:5
6:4.

With the principal thereof; i.e. the thing he took away, or what is equivalent to it.

The fifth part thereof is added both as a compensation to the injured person for the want of his goods so long, and for his trouble for the supposed utter loss of them, and as a penalty upon the injurious dealer to discourage others from such attempts.

Quest. How doth this agree with that law, Exo_22:1?

Answer. That law was made against notorious and obstinate thieves, who were legally convicted of their crime, and this against more modest thieves, whose necessities might induce them to steal, and whose consciences are affected with their sin.

Numbers 5:8

If the man have no kinsman, which might be the case commonly with proselytes, if not with Israelites. This also supposeth the person injured to be dead or gone away into some unknown place, and the person injured to be known to the injurer.

God appointed

the priest as his deputy to receive his dues, and take them to his own use, that so he might more cheerfully and entirely devote himself to the ministration of holy things. This is an additional explication to that law, Lev_6:2, and for the sake thereof it seems here to be repeated.

Numbers 5:9

Heb. every heave offering, the heave-offering being here taken largely, so as to comprehend also the wave-offering for both of these were Aaron's portion. See Exo_29:26-28.

Unto the priest to wit, to offer unto the Lord by his hands.

Shall be his, i.e. the priest's. See Lev_6:16.

Numbers 5:10

Every man's hallowed things; understand this not of the sacrifices, no, not of such of them as were voluntary or vowed, as most understand it, because these were not the priest's peculiar, but a good part of them was offered to God, and the remainder was eaten by the offerer as well as by the priest, as is manifest; but of such other things as were devoted to God, and were such as could not be offered in sacrifice; as suppose a man consecrated a house, or rent of it, to the Lord, this was to be the priest's. And this restriction may be easily collected from the nature of the thing, because he speaketh in this and the other branches here of such things as were appropriated to the priest as his portion, which none of the sacrifices were.

Numbers 5:12

This law was given partly to deter wives from adulterous practices, and partly to secure wives against the rage of their hard-hearted husbands, who otherwise might upon mere suspicions destroy them, or at least put them away.

Quest. Why was there not the same law for the trial of the husband, when the wife was jealous of him?

Answ. This might be either,

1. Because the woman's sin is greater, because there is not only filthiness and falseness in it, which is also in the man's sin, but also peculiar unrighteousness in dishonouring his name and family, and transferring his estate to strangers and other men's children. Or,

2. Because there was not like fear of inconveniences to the husband from the jealousy of the wife, who had not that authority, and power, and opportunity for the putting away or killing of the husband as the husband had over the wife. Or,

3. Because being the inferior and the weaker sex, and more subject to jealousies and groundless suspicions, it was not thought expedient to trust them with such a power or privilege.

Go aside, from the way of religion and justice, or from her faith given to her husband, or to the by-paths of falsehood and filthiness, and that either in truth, or in appearance, and in her husband's opinion.

Numbers 5:13

She utterly denying it, Pro_30:20, and none being able and willing to discover it; for if it was witnessed, she was to die for it, Lev_20:10 Deu_22:22.

Numbers 5:14

The spirit of jealousy, i.e. a strong opinion or suggestion or inward motion of that kind, whether from a good or evil spirit. Thus we read of the spirit of wisdom , Isa_11:2, of perverseness , Isa_19:14, of fornication , Hos_4:12, of fear , 2Ti_1:7, of slumber , Rom_11:8.

Numbers 5:15

Then, she persisting in her denial, and her husband requiring her submission to this way of trial. Her offering was partly because none were to appear before God empty, Exo_23:15; partly, by way of solemn appeal to God, whom hereby she desired to judge between her and her husband; and partly, by way of atonement to appease God, who had for her sins stirred up her husband against her, and sent an evil spirit between them. See 1Sa_26:19. No oil nor frankincense , both because it was a kind of sin-offering, from which these were excluded, Lev_5:11, and to testify, her sorrowful sense of the hand of God, and of her husband's displeasure, and because she came thither as a delinquent, or one suspected of delinquency, and under an ill fame, and unpleasing both to God and men; as one that wanted that grace and amiableness and joy which oil signified, and that acceptance with God which frankincense designed, Psa_141:2.

Bringing iniquity to remembrance; both to God, before whom she appeared as a sinner, and to her own conscience, if she were guilty, and, if she were not guilty of this, yet it reminded her of her other sins, for which this might be a punishment.

Numbers 5:16

i.e. the woman; but of her he speaks, Num_5:18; or it, i.e. the offering, which is last spoken of, so the feminine gender is put for the masculine or the neuter, of both which we have instances.

Before the Lord, i.e. before the sanctuary where the ark was.

Numbers 5:17

Holy water; either water out of the holy laver, Exo_30:18, or rather the water of purification appointed for such kind of uses, Num_19:9. This was used, that if she were guilty, she might be afraid to add profaneness and the pollution of holy things to her other crime.

In an earthen vessel; either to signify that frailty and vileness of which she stood accused, or express her sorrowful and shameful condition, or because, after this use, it was to be broken in pieces, that the remembrance of it might be blotted out as far as possible. Compare Lev_6:28 11:33 15:12.

And of the dust; all emblem of vileness and misery, as appears from Job_2:12 Psa_22:15 Lam_3:29; and the serpent's food, Gen_3:14; very proper for her who had been seduced to folly by the serpent's instigation.

In the floor of the tabernacle; which made it holy dust, and struck the greater terror into the woman, if she were guilty. Put it into the water, to make it more unpleasant and bitter, which was suitable to one in that sorrowful state.

Numbers 5:18

Before the Lord; before the tabernacle, with her face towards the ark.

Uncover the woman's head; partly, that she might be made sensible how manifest she and all her ways were to God, and that she might be more visible to the congregation, that her shame might be greater if she were guilty; partly, in token of her sorrow either for her sin, or at least for any cause of suspicion which she had given; partly, as a sign that she was after a sort deprived of the help and protection of her husband, which the covering of the woman's head signified, 1Co_11:5-7,10, and that she was neither virgin nor loyal with, for the heads of both these used to be covered.

In her hands, that she herself might offer it, and therefore call God to be witness of her innocency. Bitter ; so called either from the bitter taste which the dust gave it, or from the bitter effects of it upon her if she were guilty. Compare Exo_32:20.

That causeth the curse; not by any natural power, but by a supernatural efficacy ordained and wrought by God for her punishment, and for the terror and caution of others.

Numbers 5:19

Charge her by an oath, to answer truly to his question, or to declare by oath whether she be guilty or no, and after such oath shall say as follows.

If no man, to wit, except thy husband, as is manifest from the whole context; or no other man, the word another being understood here, as it is thought to be also Gen_14:1 36:6 Exo_22:20. With another , or, with him , i.e. the man now mentioned. So it is an ellipsis easily supplied out of the text.

Numbers 5:20

Numbers 5:21

An oath, i.e. a form of cursing or imprecatory oaths, that when they would curse a person, they may wish that they may be as cursed and miserable as thou wast upon this occasion. See the phrase Isa_65:15 Jer_29:22 and compare Gen_48:20 Rth_4:11,12.

Thy thigh; a modest signification of the genital parts, used both in Scripture, as Gen_46:26 Exo_1:5, and other authors, that the sin might be evident in the punishment.

To rot, Heb. to fall , i.e. to die or waste away, as the word is used, 1Ch_21:14, compared with 2Sa_24:15.

To swell, suddenly and violently till it burst, which the Jews note was frequent in this and like cases, as Exo_32:20. And it was a clear evidence of the truth of their religion.

Numbers 5:22

i.e. So let it be if I be guilty. The word is doubled by her as an evidence of her innocency, and ardent desire that God would deal with her according to her desert.

Numbers 5:23

These curses, wherewith she cursed herself, to which peradventure her name was added.

In a book, i.e. in a scroll of parchment, which the Hebrews commonly call a book , as Deu_24:1 2Sa_11:11 Isa_39:1.

Blot them out with the bitter water, or, rase or scourge them out , and cast then into the bitter water . Whereby it was signified, that if she was innocent, the curses should be blotted out and come to nothing, and if she were guilty, she should find in her the effects of this water which she drunk, after the words of this curse; had been scraped and put in.

Guiltless from iniquity; which he should not have been, if he had either dissembled or indulged her in so great a wickedness, and not endeavoured to bring her either to repentance or punishment; see Mat_1:19; or cherished suspicions in his breast, and thereupon proceeded to hate her or cast her off. Whereas now, whatsoever the consequent is, the husband shall not be blamed or censured, either for bringing such curses and mischiefs upon her, or for defaming her, if she appear to be innocent. Her iniquity, i.e. the punishment of her iniquity, whether she was false to her husband, or by any light and foolish carriage gave him occasion to suspect her to be so.

Numbers 6:1 NUMBERS CHAPTER 6

Num_6:13-21. The form of blessing to be used by the priest in the congregation, Num_6:22-27.

Numbers 6:2

Either man or woman; for both sexes might make this vow, if they were free and at their own dispose, for otherwise their parents or husbands could disannul the vow, Num_30:5, and in that case they sinned in taking God's name in vain, and vowing what they could not perform.

A vow of a Nazarite; whereby they did sequester themselves in a great part from worldly employments and enjoyments, that they might entirely consecrate themselves to God's service; and this either for their whole lifetime, of which see Jud_13:5 16:17 1Sa_1:11 Luk_1:15; or for a less and limited space of time, of which in this chapter.

Numbers 6:4

The days were sometimes more, sometimes fewer, as he thought fit to appoint.

Numbers 6:5

No razor, nor scissors, or other instrument to cut off any part of his hair. This was appointed, partly, as a sign of his mortification to worldly delights, and vain affectation of outward beauty, which is promoted by the polling or cutting off the hair; partly, as a testimony of that purity which hereby he professed, because the cutting off the hair was a sign of uncleanness, as appears from Num_6:9, and Lev_14:8,9; partly, that by the notorious length of his hair he might be constantly minded of his vow, and the exquisite holiness it required, and that others might thereby be admonished and stirred up to the imitation of his holy example; and partly, that he might reserve his hair entirely for God, to whom it was to be offered, Num_6:18.

He shall be holy, i.e. wholly consecrated to God and his service, whereby lie shows that inward and substantial holiness was the great thing which God required and valued in these, and consequently in other rites and ceremonies.

For his father, or for his mother; wherein he was equal to the high priest, Lev_21:11, being, in some sort, as sacred a person, and as eminent a type of Christ, Heb_7:26, and therefore justly required to prefer the service of God, to which he had so fully and peculiarly given himself, before the expressions of his affections to his dearest and nearest relations.

The consecration, i.e. the token of his consecration, to wit, his long hair.

Of his God, i.e. whereby he hath devoted himself to his God in an eminent manner. The genitive case of the object.

Numbers 6:9

He shall shave his head, because his whole body, and especially his hair, was defiled by such an accident, which he ought to impute either to his own heedlessness, or at least to God's providence, so ordering the matter possibly for the punishment of his other sins, or for the quickening of him to more caution and purity, and detestation of all dead works whereby he would be defiled.

On the seventh day, to be reckoned from the time of his pollution; for uncleanness contracted by the dead continued for seven days, and the seventh day was the day of cleansing for it, Lev_15:13 Num_19:11,12.

Numbers 6:10

As in the case of him that had a running issue, Lev_15:14.

Numbers 6:11

Shall offer, Heb. make, which is oft put for sacrificing or offering, as Exo_29:36 1Ch_21:23, compared with 2Sa_24:22.

For a sin-offering, because such a pollution was, though not his sin, yet the chastisement of his sin, and had an appearance of sin, to wit, of negligence in not standing sufficiently upon his guard, which in such persons was in a manner equivalent to a sin. For that he sinned, i.e. contracted a ceremonial uncleanness, which is called sinning, because it was a type of sin, and a violation of a law, though through ignorance and inadvertency, as many other sins were.

Shall hallow; begin again to hallow or consecrate it.

Numbers 6:12

The days of his separation; as many days as he had before separated or vowed unto God. Lost, i.e. not reckoned or imputed to him. Heb. full , to wit, to the ground, i.e. be void or of none effect.

Numbers 6:13

By the priest's appointment and direction.

Numbers 6:14

For a sin-offering, whereby he confessed and bewailed his frailties and miscarriages, notwithstanding the strictness of his vow and all the diligence and care which he could use, and consequently acknowledged his need of the grace of God in Christ Jesus the true Nazarite.

For peace-offerings; for thankfulness to God, who had given him grace to make and in some measure to keep such a vow. So he offered all the three sorts of offerings, that he might so far fulfil all righteousness, and profess his obligation to observe the will of God in all things.

Of his separation; or, of his Nazariteship , i.e. in which the chief of his Nazariteship or separation to God consisted.

At the door of the tabernacle; publicly, that it might be known that his vow was ended; and therefore he was at liberty as to those things from which he had restrained himself for a season, otherwise some might have been scandalized at his use of his liberty. See Act_21:26.

In the fire; either,

1. The fire of the altar. But why then is this restrained to the peaceofferings, seeing it was common to the burnt-offerings and to the sinofferings? Or rather,
2. To the fire of the kitchen, upon which the flesh of the peaceofferings was boiled.

Numbers 6:19

The sodden shoulder; the left shoulder, as it appears from Num_6:20, where this is joined with the heave-shoulder, which was the right shoulder, and which was the priest's due in all sacrifices, Lev_7:32, and in this also. But here the other shoulder was added to it, as a special token of thankfulness from the Nazarites for God's singular favours vouchsafed into them.

Upon the hands of the Nazarite, that he may give them to the priest, as his peculiar gift.

Numbers 6:23

On this wise, Heb. Thus , in this manner, or in these words; yet so as that they were not tied to these very words, because after this we have examples of Moses and David and Solomon and others blessing the people in other words.

Ye shall bless the children of Israel, to wit, in the public assembly.

Numbers 6:24

Bless thee, i.e. bestow upon you all manner of blessings, temporal and spiritual. Compare Gen_12:2.

Keep thee, i.e. continue his blessings to thee, and preserve thee in and to the use of them; keep thee from sin and its bitter effects.

Numbers 6:25

upon thee, i.e. Smile upon thee: this is opposed to the hiding of his face, and to the covering himself or his face with a cloud; and it is explained by the following words, be gracious unto thee. Others expound it of illumination or direction, and the revelation of himself and of his will to them.

Numbers 6:26

i.e. Look upon thee with a cheerful and pleasant countenance, as one that is reconciled to thee, and well pleased with thee and thy offerings and services. See of this phrase Psa_4:6 Pro_16:15. To this is opposed the falling and the casting down of the countenance , of which see Gen_4:5,6 Job 29:24. Or, regard, protect, and help thee. Compare Psa_33:18.

Peace with God, and with thy own conscience, and with all men, and all prosperity, which is comprehended under this word.

Numbers 6:27

i.e. Shall call them by my name, shall recommend them to me as my own people, and bless them and pray unto me for them as such; which is a powerful argument to prevail with God for them, and therefore hath been oft used by the prophets interceding for them, as Jer_14:9 Dan_9:18,19: compare 1Sa_12:22. I will bless them; I will ratify their blessings, and give those blessings to the people which the priests pray for.

Numbers 7:1 NUMBERS CHAPTER 7

The tabernacle being fully finished, the twelve princes offer gifts; which are delivered to the Gershonites and the Merarites, Num_7:1-11. What they offered in particular of silver, gold, vessels, and beasts, Num_7:12-83. The sum thereof, Num_7:84-88. God spake to Moses from the mercy-seat, Num_7:89.

On the day; either,

1. Precisely; and so this history, as many others, is put out of its proper place, and this chapter, and the 8th, 9th, 10th, and 11th, should follow next after Exo 40 and this day is the same on which the tabernacle was erected, which was the first day of the first month of the second year, Exo_40:17,18. Or,

2. Largely, day being put for time, and on the day for about the time , or, a little after the time. And thus it seems to be taken here, because all the princes did not offer these things upon one and the same day, but on several days, as here it follows. And so there is no disorder in the history, and this chapter comes in its proper place, and those things were done in the second month of the second year after the tabernacle, and altar, and all other instruments thereof were anointed, as is here expressed; and after the Levites were separated to the service of the tabernacle, and appointed to their several works, as is manifest from Num_7:5-9, which was done about a month after the tabernacle was erected, &c.; and after the numbering of the people, Num 1, when the princes here employed in the offerings were first constituted; and after the disposal of the tribes about the tabernacle, the order of which is here observed in the time of their offerings. Anointed it, Lev_8:10.

Numbers 7:9

Because of the greater worth and holiness of the things which they carried. See Num_4:6,8,10,12,14 2Sa_6:6,13.

Numbers 7:10

The altar, to wit, of burnt-offerings, and incense too, as appears from the matter of their offerings. The singular number for the plural. Not for the first dedication of them, for it is apparent they were dedicated or consecrated before this time by Moses and Aaron for divers days together, Le 8 Le 9; but for a further dedication of them, these being the first offerings that were made for any particular persons or tribes.

In the day, i.e. about the time, as soon as it was anointed. See Poole Num_7:1.

Numbers 7:11

As well for the greater solemnity and splendour of the work, as for the prevention of confusion. And in this offering they follow the order of their camp, and not of their birth.

Numbers 7:12

In whose name and behalf this offering was made, and so in the rest.

Numbers 7:13

One silver charger, a large dish or platter; of which see Exo_25:29, to be employed about the altar of burnt-offering, or in the court, not in the sanctuary, for all its vessels were of gold.

Numbers 7:14

Into the tabernacle of the congregation; into which Moses, though no priest, was permitted to enter by God's special license.

To speak with him, i.e. to consult God upon occasion.

From off the mercy-seat, which Moses standing without the veil could easily hear. And this seems to be added in this place, to show that when men had done their part in the dedication of the tabernacle, altars, &c., God was not wanting in the performance of his part, and promise made, Exo_25:22.

Numbers 8:1 NUMBERS CHAPTER 8

How the lamps are to be lighted, Num_8:1-4. God commands the Levites to be cleansed, Num_8:5-15; that they may serve with Aaron and his sons instead of the first-born, Num_8:16-22. Their age and service, Num_8:23-26.

Numbers 8:2

i.e. Either,

1. On every side of the candlestick. So the candlestick is here put for the bulk or shaft of the candlestick, as Exo_25:31,35, and the lamps, when they were lighted, were put into the branches of the candlestick, and take it out upon occasion. Thus the meaning is, that all the lamps were to be lighted on that part which was towards the middle, looking that way whence they had their light; for the middle lamp was lighted with the fire of the altar, and from that the other lamps received light. But against this sense it is objected, that the lamps could not be otherwise ordered, but that they must give light round about the candlestick, and therefore that sense seems to make this direction idle and frivolous. Or,

2. On that part which is before the candlestick, Heb. over against the face of the candlestick, i.e. in that place towards which the candlestick looked, or where the candlestick stood in full view, i.e. upon the north side, where the table of shewbread stood, as appears from hence, because the candlestick stood close to the boards of the sanctuary on the south side, Exo_26:35. And thus the lights were on both sides of the sanctuary, which was fit and necessary, because it was wholly dark in itself, and had no window in it.

Beaten gold, not hollow, but solid and massive gold, beaten out of one piece, and not of several pieces joined or soldered together. See Exo_25:18,31 37:17.

Numbers 8:6

Or, wash or purify them, which was also done with the priests and others when they were to approach to God and his service. See Exo_19:10,14 Le 14:9.

Numbers 8:7

Of purifying, Heb. of sin , i.e. for the expiation of sin. This water was mixed with the ashes of a red heifer, Num_19:9, which therefore may seem to have been prescribed before, though it be mentioned after; such kind of transplacings of passages being frequent in Scripture.

Shave all their flesh; which external rite signified the cutting off their inordinate concupiscences of earthly things, and that singular purity of heart and life which is required in the ministers of God. See Isa_52:11 2Ti_2:21.

Numbers 8:8

The same sacrifice which was offered for a sin-offering for the whole congregation, Le 4, because the Levites came in the stead of all the first-born, which did in a manner represent the whole congregation.

Numbers 8:9

No text from Poole on this verse.

Numbers 8:10

The children of Israel; not all of them, which was impossible, but some in the name and stead, and by the appointment of all, to wit, either the first-born, or rather the princes or chiefs of each tribe, who used to transact things in the name of their tribes.

Put their hands upon the Levites; whereby they signified their transferring of that right of ministering to God from the first-born, in whose hands it formerly was, unto the Levites, and their renouncing of their interest in the Levites, from whom they might otherwise have expected help by their persons or purses, as they did from other tribes, in their common concerns, and their entire resignation and dedication of them to God's service; as the person offering, by laying his hand upon the head of his sacrifice, Lev_1:4, signified his translation of his guilt upon the beast, and his dedication of it unto God.

Numbers 8:11

For an offering, Heb. for a wave-offering . Of which see Exo_29:24. Not that Aaron did so wave them, which he could not do, but that he caused or commanded them to imitate that motion, and to wave themselves towards the several parts of the world; whereby they might signify their readiness to serve God according to their capacity wheresoever they should be; though the word may be taken more generally for any offering made to God, as Exo_35:22.

Numbers 8:12

Upon the heads of the bullocks; to signify, that they were offered by them and for them. See Exo_29:15, 19 Le 1:4 3:2 4:4.

Numbers 8:13

Before Aaron and his sons, i.e. put them into the power of Aaron and his sons, to employ them in holy ministrations; for so that phrase is sometimes used, as Gen_13:9, the land is before thee, i.e. in thy power, to use or enjoy it. Or setting the Levites before them did signify the giving the Levites to them, or to their service.

For an offering unto to the Lord; for to him they were first properly offered, and by him given to the priests in order to his service.

To make an atonement for the children of Israel; not by offering sacrifices, which the priests alone might do, but by assisting the priests in that expiatory work, and by a diligent performance of all the parts of their office, whereby God was pleased both with them and with the people. That there be no plague : this is added as a reason why God appointed them to serve in or about the tabernacle, that they might watch and guard it, and not suffer any of the people to come near it, or meddle with holy things, which if they did, it would certainly bring a plague upon them.

The passover kept in the wilderness on the fourteenth day of the first month, Num_9:1-5. By those who were then unclean or journeying, the fourteenth day of the second month, Num_9:6-12. They who otherwise neglect it to be put to death, Num_9:13. Proselytes are to observe the same, Num_9:14. God manifests himself to Israel in a cloud by day, and fire by night, by which they knew when and where to camp, Num_9:15-23.

In the first month; and therefore before the numbering of the people, which was not till the second month, Num_1:1,2. But it is placed after it, because of a special case relating to the passover, which happened after it, and which is here related, upon occasion whereof he mentions the command of God for the keeping of the passover in the wilderness, which was done but once, and without this command they had not been obliged to keep it at all till they came to the land of Canaan. 1490 Of the cloud , see Exo_13:21. The tabernacle, namely, the tent of the testimony, or, the tabernacle towards or above the tent of the testimony , i.e. that part of the tabernacle in which was the testimony, or the ark of the testimony; for there the cloudy pillar stood, Lev_16:2. This was an evident token of God's special presence with and providence over them. See Exo_14:20,24 Psa 105:39. The motion or stay of the cloud is fitly called the command of God, because it was a signification of God's will and their duty, which a command properly is.

Numbers 9:19

The charge of the Lord, i.e. the command of God mentioned before, that they should stay as long as the cloud staid, as the same phrase is manifestly taken below, Num_9:23. And this, saith he, they did, though it were long in one place, which was tedious to them, who desired to change places, and to make haste to Canaan, yet they obeyed God herein against their own inclinations; which because it was remarkable in so obstinate a people, it is so largely and particularly mentioned here, as an instance of their obedience, and as an aggravation of the many following instances of their apostacy and disobedience.

Numbers 10:29

Raguel, called also Reuel , Exo_2:18, who seems to be the same who is called Jethro, Exo_3:1, it being usual in Scripture for one person to have two or three names. And therefore this Hobab is not Jethro, but his son, which may seem more probable, because Jethro was old and unfit for travel, and desirous, as may well be thought, to die in his own country, whither he returned, Exo_18:27; but Hobab was young and fitter for these journeys, and therefore entreated by Moses to stay and bear them company.

Moses's father-in-law; which words are ambiguous, but seem to belong to Raguel, or Reuel, not to Hobab, though others are of another mind.

Numbers 10:30

So he might truly and sincerely say, though after this speech he was overcome by the entreaties and persuasions of Moses. Or he did go and settle his affairs, and afterwards return; for we find his posterity settled among the Israelites. See Jud_1:16 4:11,18, &c.

Numbers 10:31

To direct and guide us; for though the cloud determined them to a general place, yet many particulars might be uncertain and unknown to Moses, wherein Hobab, having long lived in those parts, might be able to advise him, as concerning the conveniences of water for their cattle, concerning the safety or danger of the several parts by reason of serpents or wild beasts, or enemies, in the parts adjoining to them, that so they might guard themselves better against them. Or this to be understood of his directing them not so much in their way, as about great and difficult matters, wherein the counsel he had from God did not exclude the advice of men, as we see in Hobab's father Jethro, Exo 18. And it is probable this was the wise son of a wise father.

Numbers 10:32

Numbers 10:33

Three days' journey, with continued journeys, only it seems most probable that the cloud made little pauses, that they might have time for sleep and necessary refreshments, which their natures required. And thus all writers, when they relate the continued journeys of persons for many days together, are to be understood with this exception.

Before them; not so much in place, say some, for so it went in the midst, or at least after the first camp, as may seem from Num_10:21, as in office and authority, as a general who is said to go before or lead his army, though he do not go in the very first place. But others more probably think that the ark, which indeed is not mentioned Num_10:21, albeit in their stations it was in the middle, where also the cloud was, yet in their marches it went before them, as also the cloud did, and so the cloud was constantly over the ark, whether it stood or went; and therefore the ark is said to go before and direct them, not as if the ark could be seen of all the camps, which being carried only upon men's shoulders was impossible, but because the cloud, which always attended upon the ark, and did together with the ark constitute in a manner one sign of God's presence, did lead and direct them.

To search out a resting-place, where they might safely and commodiously rest. But this is a metaphorical expression for discovering to them; for otherwise the ark could not. search, and God, who knew all places and things, heeded not to search.

Numbers 10:34

And by night too, as was expressed before. So we must learn to compare places of Scripture, and to supply the defects of one out of another, as we do in all authors.

Num_11:26-29. God giveth them quails to eat, Num_11:30-32; and smiteth the people with a very great plague, Num_11:33,34.

Complained, or, murmured ; the occasion whereof seems to be their last three days' journey in a vast howling wilderness, without any benefit; and thereupon the remembrance of their long abode in the wilderness, and the prospect and fear of many other tedious, and fruitless, and dangerous journeys, whereby they were like to be long delayed from coming to that rest, that land of milk and honey, which God had promised them, and which they thirsted after.

The fire of the Lord, i.e. a fire sent from God in an extraordinary manner, possibly from the pillar of cloud and fire, or from heaven, as 2Ki_1:12.

In the uttermost parts of the camp; either because the sin began there among the mixt multitude, who probably had their place there; or amongst those who were feeble and weary with their last journey, and therefore hindmost in the march; or in mercy to the people, whom he would rather awaken to repentance than utterly destroy, and therefore he sent it into the skirts, and not the heart and midst of the camp.

Numbers 11:2

The people, the murmurers being penitent, or others for fear.

Unto Moses, whom they knew to be very prevalent with God.

Numbers 11:3

Tabera, from this fire; as it was called Kibroth-hattaa-vah from another occasion, Num_11:34,35 33:16; as it is no new thing in Scripture for persons and places to have two names. Both these names were imposed as monuments of the people's sin, and of God's just judgment. See Deu_9:7,22,24.

Numbers 11:4

The mixt multitude, consisting of Egyptians or other people, which being affected with God's miraculous works in Egypt, and thereupon believing the promise of God to carry them to a land of milk and honey, for their own advantage joined themselves to the Israelites, Exo_12:38, and now, finding themselves sadly disappointed, they discover their evil minds.

The children of Israel, whose special relation and obligation to God should have restrained them from such carriages.

Wept again: this word relates either to their former murmuring upon this occasion a twelvemonth before, Exo_16:2, or rather to their complaining mentioned Num_11:1, to note the aggravation of their sin, that having just now sinned in the same kind, and sorely smarted for their sin, and being but newly delivered from their fears and dangers caused thereby, they forthwith return to their vomit and murmur again, and that more passionately than before, expressing themselves in tears and bitter words.

Flesh: this word is here taken generally, so as to include fish, as the next words show, and as it is used 1Co_15:39. They had indeed flesh and cattle which they brought with them out of Egypt, but these were reserved for breed to be carried into Canaan, and were so few that they would scarce have served them for a month, as may be gathered from Num_11:20-22.

Numbers 11:5

Freely; either without price, for fish was very plentiful, and fishing was there free; or with a very small price; for nothing is sometimes put for a little, as Joh_18:20 Act_27:33; and none for few, as Jer_8:6 1Co_2:8. And this is the more probable, because the Egyptians might not taste of fish, nor of the leeks and onions, which they worshipped for gods, and therefore the Israelites, who speak these words, might have them there upon cheaper terms.

Numbers 11:6

Our soul; either,

1. Our life, as the soul signifies, Gen_9:5 Psa_33:19 Job_36:14; or,

2. Our body, which is oft signified by the soul, as Psa_16:10 Psa_35:12 105:18. So Lev_19:28 21:1 Num_5:2.

Is dried away; is withered, and pines away; which possibly might be true through envy and discontent, and inordinate appetite, as 2Sa_13:4 Pro_14:30.

Before our eyes;

Heb. our eyes see or look to nothing but this manna . They speak as if the manna were only useful to please their eyes with its fine colour and shape, but not to satisfy their appetites, or sustain their natures.

Numbers 11:7

As coriander seed; not for colour, for that is black, but for shape and figure.

Bdellium is either,

1. The gum of a tree, of a white and bright colour; or rather,

2. A gem or precious stone, as the Hebrew doctors take it; and particularly a pearl , as some render it, wherewith the manna doth manifestly agree both in its colour, which is white, Exo_16:14, and in its figure, which is round. See more on Gen_2:12.

Numbers 11:8

Or, of the most excellent oil ; or, of the flour of oil ; or, as others, of cakes or paste made with the best oil , the word cakes being easily supplied out of the foregoing member of the verse; or, which is not much differing, like wafers made with honey , as it is said Exo_16:31. The nature and use of manna is here thus particularly described to show the greatness of their sin in despising such excellent food as this was.

Numbers 11:9

And then the dew fell again upon it and covered it, as we see Exo_16:13,14; so the manna lay hid as it were between two beds of dew. Hence the phrase of hidden manna Rev_2:17.

Numbers 11:10

In the door of his tent; to note, that they were not ashamed of their sin.

Moses was displeased; partly, for their great unthankfulness; partly, foreseeing the dreadful judgments coming upon them, and partly, for his own burden expressed in the following verses.

Numbers 11:11

Why didst thou not hear my prayer, when I desired thou wouldst excuse me, and commit the care and government of this unruly people to some other person? See Exo_3:11 4:10.

Numbers 11:12

Have I begotten them; are they my children, that I should be obliged to provide food and all things for their necessity and desire?

As a nursing-father beareth the sucking-child; which expression shows the tender care and affection that governors by the command of God ought to have towards their people.

Numbers 11:13

No text from Poole on this verse.

Numbers 11:14

All this people, i.e. the burden of providing for and satisfying of them.

Object. How was he alone, when there were others added to help him, Exo_18:21,24?

Answ. Those were only assistant to him in civil causes and smaller matters, but the harder and greater affairs, such as this unquestionably was, were brought to Moses and determined by him alone, Exo_18:22.

Numbers 11:15

Heb. my evil , i.e. my intolerable anguish and torment, arising from the insuperable difficulty of my office and work of ruling this people, and from the dread of their utter extirpation which they will bring upon themselves, and the dishonour which thence will accrue to God and to religion; as if not I only, but God also, were an impostor. Seeing is here put for feeling, as to see death , Psa_89:48 Luk_2:26, is to suffer it; and to see the salvation of God , Psa_50:23 91:16, is to enjoy it.

Numbers 11:16

Of whom see Exo_3:16 5:6 Lev_4:15 Deu_16:18.

Whom thou knowest to be the elders; whom thou by experience discernest to be elders not only in years, and name, and place, but also in wisdom, and gravity, and authority with the people.

Numbers 11:17

I will come down, not by local motion, but by my powerful presence and operation. See Gen_11:5 Exo_34:5.

Will put it upon them, i.e. I will give the same Spirit to them which I have given to thee. But as the Spirit was not conveyed to them from or through Moses, but immediately from God, so the Spirit or its gifts were not by this means impaired in Moses. The Spirit is here put for the gifts of the Spirit, as it is Num_27:18 Joe_2:28 Joh_7:39 Act_19:2,6 1Co_14:12,32; and particularly for the Spirit of prophecy, Num_11:25, whereby they were enabled, as Moses had been and still was, to discern hidden and future things, and resolve doubtful and difficult cases, which made them fit for government. It is observable, that God would not, and therefore men should not, call any persons to any office for which they were not sufficiently fit and qualified.

Numbers 11:18

Sanctify yourselves, i.e. prepare yourselves, either to receive the miraculous blessings of God, the flesh you desire; or rather,

Prepare to meet thy God, O Israel, in the way of his judgments, and to receive the punishment which God will inflict upon you; for it is evident, from Num_18:20, that God answered them with a curse instead of a blessing. Prepare yourselves by true repentance, that you may either obtain some mitigation of the plague, or, whilst your bodies are destroyed by the flesh you desire and eat, Num_11:33,34, your souls may be saved from the wrath of God. Sanctifying is oft used for preparing, as Jer_6:4 12:3 51:28.

In the ears of the Lord; not secretly in your closets, but openly and impudently in the doors of your tents, Num_11:10, calling heaven and earth to witness your cries and complaints.

Numbers 11:19

No text from Poole on this verse.

Numbers 11:20

Till it come out at your nostrils; which meat loathed and violently vomited up frequently doth;

and it be loathsome unto you, being glutted with the abundance of it. Thus God destroys them by granting their desires, and turns even their blessings into curses; whilst he deals much more favourably with Moses, though he also fell into the same sin with the people, i.e. impatience and murmuring. But God will make a great difference between persons and persons, and between Moses's sins of infirmity and the people's presumptuous and oft-repeated provocations.

Ye have despised the Lord, i.e. you have lightly esteemed his bounty and manifold blessings in manna and other things, and have preferred the leeks, onions, &c. of Egypt before them all; you have slighted and distrusted his promises and providence after so long and large experience of it.

Which is among you; who is present and resident with you to observe all your carriages, and to punish your offences. This is added as a great aggravation of the crime, to sin in the presence of the Judge.

Why came we forth out of Egypt? Why did God do us such an injury? Why did we so foolishly follow and obey him in coming forth?

Numbers 11:21

Six hundred thousand footmen, fit for war, Exo_12:37, besides women, children, &c. That Moses speaks this as doubting or distrusting God's words is evident enough from Num_11:22,23. And that Moses was not remarkably punished for this as he was afterward for the same sin, Num 20 next to God's good pleasure may be imputed to the different circumstances of this and that sin: this was the first great offence of this kind, and therefore more easily passed by; that was after warning, and against more light and experience. This seems to have been spoken secretly in Moses's breast; that openly and publicly before the people, and to their scandal, and therefore it was fit to be openly and severely punished to prevent the contagion of that example.

Numbers 11:22

Will they be sufficient for them? or where shall they have more?

Numbers 11:23

Waxed short, i.e. less able to work such great and glorious miracles as I have done.

Numbers 11:24

Moses went out of the tabernacle, into which he entered to receive God's answers from the mercy-seat, Num_7:89.

The seventy men, either they are called seventy from the stated number, though two of them were lacking, Num_11:26, as the apostles are called the twelve , Mat_26:20, when one of that number was absent; or he is said to have gathered them, when he gave command to gather them.

Round about the tabernacle; partly, that the awe of God might be imprinted upon their hearts, that they might more seriously undertake and more faithfully manage their high employment; partly, to gain them the more authority and respect from the people; and principally, because that was the place where God manifested himself, and gave his blessings, and therefore there he would bestow his Spirit upon them.

Numbers 11:25

Rested upon them, i.e. not only moved them for a time, but took up his settled abode with them, because the use and end of this gift was not temporary, but perpetual; they prophesied, i.e. discoursed of the word and works of God in a singular and marvellous manner, as the prophets did. So this word is used 1Sa_10:5,6 Joe 2:28 Act_2:17 1Co_14:3. Yet were they not hereby constituted prophets or teachers, but civil magistrates and rulers, who together with the Spirit of government, which is here sufficiently implied, received also the Spirit of prophecy, as a sign and seal, both to themselves and to the people, that God had called them to that employment, and would be with them in it, as it was with Saul upon the same occasion, 1Sa_10:10.

Did not cease, either for that day; they continued in that exercise all that day, and, it may be, all the night too, as it is said of Saul, 1Sa_19:24; or afterwards also, to note that this was a continued gift conferred upon them, to enable them the better to discharge their magistracy; which was more expedient for them than for the rulers of other people, because the Jews were under a theocracy, or the government of God, and even their civil controversies were decided out of that word of God which the prophets expounded; and in their wilderness condition they had frequent occasions of seeking counsel from God, which was the work of prophets, and they were to determine all things agreeably to the mind and will of God, which therefore they were obliged to study. Others translate the words, and they added not ; so the sense is, They prophesied only this day for an assurance of vocation to and due qualification for their work, but afterwards they prophesied no more; the gift of prophecy ceased in them, and only the Spirit of government rested upon them.

Numbers 11:26

In the camp; not going to the tabernacle, as the rest did; either modestly declining that high employment from a tremble sense of their own insufficiency, as Saul did, 1Sa_10:22; or not having sufficient or seasonable notice to repair thither; or, being detained in the camp and in their dwellings, whether by uncleanness, or sickness, or some urgent occasion, not without God's special providence, that so the miracle might be more evident, and their call and authority more unquestionable, to all the people.

Were written, to wit, in a book or paper, by Moses, who by God's direction nominated the fittest and worthiest persons.

Numbers 11:27

Fearing lest his authority should be diminished by their prophesying; and thereby, as by the signal given at this time, taking authority to themselves without his knowledge and consent.

Numbers 11:28

One of his young men, or one of his choice ministers, a chosen or excellent person; which may be emphatically added, to note that even great and good men may mistake and misjudge about the works of God. Or, from his youth, as the words will bear, and the Chaldee, Syriac, &c. render it. So it may be added as a reason why Joshua above others were concerned for Moses's honour and authority. He feared either schism or sedition, or that by their usurpation of authority independently upon Moses, and separately from him, his power and esteem might be lessened, as the next words show.

Numbers 11:29

Enviest thou; art thou grieved because the gifts and graces of God are imparted to others besides me? Compare Joh_3:26. He saith prophets, not rulers, for that he knew was absurd and impossible.

Numbers 11:30

Among the people, to exercise the gifts and authority now or formerly received.

Numbers 11:31

A wind from the Lord, i.e. an extraordinary and miraculous wind, both for its vehemency and for its effect

Quails; a delicious and very nourishing food, which, considering their greedy appetite, and the newness and plenty of it, disposed them to surfeits and other distemper of body, and prepared the way for the following plague. God gave them quails once before, Exo_16:13, but neither in the same quantity, nor with the same design and effect as now.

From the sea; principally from the Red Sea, and both sides of it; where, by the report of ancient heathen writers, they were then in great numbers, and, no doubt, were wonderfully increased by God's special providence for this very occasion.

Two cubits high; not as if the quails did cover all the ground two cubits high for a day's journey on each side of the camp, for then there had been no place left where they could spread them all abroad round about the camp, as it is said they did, Num_11:32; but the meaning is, that the quails came and fell down round about the camp for a whole day's journey on each side of it, and that in all that space they lay here and there in great heaps, which were oftentimes two cubits high.

Numbers 11:32

Stood up, or rather rose up, which word is oft used for attempting or beginning to do any business.

All night; some at one time, and some at the other, and some, through their greediness or diffidence, at both times.

Ten homers, i.e. ten ass loads; which if it seem incredible, you must consider,

1. That the gatherers here were not all the people, which could not be without great confusion and other inconveniences; but some on the behalf of all, possibly one for each family, or the like, while the rest were exercised about other necessary things. So the meaning is not that every Israelite had so much for his share, but that every collector gathered so much for the family or others by whom he was intrusted.

2. That the people did not gather for their present use only, but for a good while to come, as we shall see; and being greedy and distrustful of God's goodness, it is not strange if they gathered much more than they needed.

3. That the word rendered homers may signify heaps, as it doth Exo_8:14 Jud_15:16 Hab_3:15, and ten is oft put for many; and so the sense is, that every one gathered several heaps. If yet the number seems incredible, it must be further known,

4. That heathen and other authors affirm, that in those eastern and southern countries quails are innumerable, so that in one part of Italy, within the compass of five miles, there were taken about a hundred thousand of them every day for a month together; and that sometimes they fly so thick over the sea, that being weary they fall into ships, sometimes in such numbers that they sink them with their weight, as Varro and Solinus affirm. And Athenaeus relates, that in Egypt, a country prodigiously populous, as all agree, they were in such plenty, that all those vast numbers of people could not consume them, but were forced to salt and keep them for their future use. So that there is no need at all that God should create innumerable quails for this purpose; which yet if it were affirmed he did, atheists and antiscrypturists have no occasion of triumph, since they must either own the creation of the world, which is a far greater miracle, or ascribe the production of the world to a casual jumble of atoms, which is more senseless and ridiculous than all the fables of the poets.

Spread them all abroad, that so they may dry them, and salt them, and preserve them for their future use, according to what they had seen and learned in Egypt.

Numbers 11:33

Chewed, Heb. cut off, to wit, from their mouths, which is here understood, and expressed Joe_1:5, i.e. ere it was taken away, as the flocks are said to be cut off from the fold, Hab_3:17, when they are lost and perished. The sense is, before they had done eating their quails, which lasted for a month, as appears from Num_11:20.

A very great plague; whether it was leanness sent into them, Psa_106:15, whereby the food was deprived of its nourishing power, which it hath only from God's blessing; or surfeit, a punishment most suitable to their sin, and most likely to follow their intemperate desire and use of this food; or the pestilence; it is not much material: but a great and sore plague unquestionably it was.

Quest. Why did God so sorely punish the people's murmuring and complaining for lack of flesh here, when he spared them after the same sin, Exo 16?

Answ. Because this sin was a far greater sin than that, and aggravated with worse circumstances; as proceeding not from necessity, as that did, when as yet they had no food, but from mere lust and wantonness, when they had manna constantly given them; as committed after large experience of God's care and kindness, after God had pardoned their former sins, and after God had in a solemn and terrible manner made known his laws and duty to them.

Numbers 11:34

Kibroth-hattaavah, Heb. The graves of lust, i.e. of the men that lusted, as it here follows. The abstract for the concrete, which is frequent; as poverty, 2Ki_24:14, pride, Psa_36:11, deceit, sins, Pro_13:6, &c., dreams, Jer_27:9, are put for men who are poor, or proud, or deceitful, or sinful, or dreamers. And it notes that this plague did not seize upon all that did eat of the quails, for then all had been destroyed, but only upon those who were inordinate both in the desire and use of them.

Numbers 11:35

Of which place See Poole "Num_33:17" See Poole "Deu_1:1".

Numbers 12:1 NUMBERS CHAPTER 12

Miriam and Aaron murmur against Moses, Num_12:1-3. God commandeth him, Aaron, and Miriam to come to the tabernacle, which they did, Num_12:4,5. God rebuketh Aaron and Miriam, Num_12:6-9. Miriam becometh leprous, Num_12:10. Aaron humbling himself before Moses, Num_12:11,12; he intercedeth for him, Num_12:13. Miriam remains without the camp seven days, Num_12:14,15.

God permitted

Miriam and

Aaron to murmur against their brother, partly to exercise and discover his admirable meekness and patience for the instruction of after-ages; and partly, that by this shaking Mose's authority might take the deeper root, and the people might be deterred from all sedition and rebellion against him by this example. Miriam seems to be first named, because she was the chief instigator or first mover of the sedition; wherefore she also is more eminently punished.

The Ethiopian woman was either 1. Zipporah, who is here called an Ethiopian , in the Hebrew a Cushite, because she was a Midianite; the word Cush being generally used in Scripture, not for Ethiopia properly so called below Egypt, but for Arabia, as some late learned men have evidently proved from 2Ki_19:9 2Ch_21:16 Eze_29:10 30:8,9 Hab 3:7, and other places. If she be meant, as it is commonly conceived, I suppose they did not quarrel with him for marrying her, because that was done long since, but for indulging her too much, and being swayed by her and her relations, by whom they might think he was persuaded to make this innovation, and to choose seventy rulers, as he had been formerly, Exo 18; by which copartnership in government they thought their authority and reputation much diminished, especially when no notice was taken nor use made of them in the choice, but all was done by the direction of Moses, and for his assistance in the government. And because they durst not accuse God, who was the chief Agent in it, they charge Moses, his instrument, as the manner of men is. Or,

2. Some other woman, though not named in Scripture, whom he married either whilst Zipporah lived, or rather because she was now dead, though that, as really other things, be not recorded. For as the quarrel seems to be about his marrying a stranger, so it is probable it was a late and fresh occasion about which they contended, and not a thing done forty years ago. And it was lawful for him as well as any other to marry an Ethiopian or Arabian woman, provided she were, as doubtless this woman was, a sincere proselyte, which were by the law of God admitted to the same privileges with the Israelites, Exo_12:48; so there might be many reasons why Moses might choose to marry such a person rather than an Israelite, or why God so ordered it by his providence, either because she was a person of eminent worth and virtue, or because God intended that the government should not be continued in the hands of Moses's children, and therefore would have some political blemish to be upon the family, as being strangers by one parent. And this they here urge as a blemish to Moses also.

Numbers 12:2

Are not we prophets as well as he? so Aaron was made, Exo_4:15,16, and so Miriam is called, Exo_15:20. See also Mic_6:4. And Moses hath debased and mixed the holy seed, which we have not done. Why then should he take all power to himself, and make rulers as he pleaseth, without consulting us in the case? The Lord heard it, i. e. observed their words and carriage to Moses.

Numbers 12:3

This is added as the reason why Moses took no notice of their reproach, but was one that heard it not, and why God did so speedily and severely plead Moses's cause, because he did not avenge himself.

Quest. 1. Did it become Moses thus to commend himself?

Ans. 1. The holy penmen of Scripture are not to be measured or censured by other profane writers, because they are guided by special instinct in every thing they write; and as they oftentimes publish their own and their near relations' greatest faults, where it may be useful to the honour of God, and the edification of the church in after-ages; so it is not strange if for the same reasons sometimes they commend themselves, especially when they are forced to it by the insolence and contempt of their adversaries, which was Moses's case here, in which case St. Paul also commends himself, 2Co_11:5, &c. 2Co_12:11,12; which they might the better do, because all their writings and carriage made it evident to all men that they did not this out of vain-glory, and that they were exalted above the affectation of men's praises, and the dread of men's reproaches.

2. This might be added, as some other clauses were, by some succeeding prophet, which was no disparagement to the authority of the Holy Scriptures, seeing it is all written by one hand, though divers pens be used by it.

Quest. 2: How was Moses so meek, when we oft times read of his anger, as Exo_11:8 16:20 32:19 Lev_10:16 Num_16:15 20:10,11, compared with Psa_106:32,33?

Answ. 1. The meekest men upon earth are provoked sometimes, yea, oftener than Moses was.

2. True meekness doth not exclude all anger, but only such as is unjust, or immoderate, or implacable. Moses was and ought to be angry where God was offended and dishonoured, as he was in almost all the places alleged.

Numbers 12:4

Suddenly; partly to show his great respect unto Moses, and unto the grace of meekness; and partly to stifle the beginnings of the sedition, that this example might not spread amongst the people, who had too much of that leaven among them.

Come out, to wit, out of your private dwellings, and from amongst the people, both that you may not infect them by such scandalous words, and partly that you may know my pleasure and your own doom.

Numbers 12:5

In the door of the tabernacle, where they stood without, not being admitted into the tabernacle, as Aaron used to be; which is noted as a sign of God's displeasure.

Numbers 12:6

If you be prophets, as you pretend, yet know there is a difference among prophets, nor do I put equal authority and honour upon all of them. By a vision God represents things to the mind of a prophet when he is awake, as Gen_15:1 46:2 Dan_8:18 10:8. By a dream God manifests his mind to them when asleep, as Gen_20:3 28:12.

Numbers 12:7

i.e. Whom I have set over all my house, i.e. my church and people, and therefore over you, and who hath discharged his office faithfully, and not partially and selfseekingly, as you falsely accuse him.

Numbers 12:8

Mouth to mouth, i.e. distinctly, by an articulate voice; immediately, not by an interpreter, nor by shadows and representations in his fancy, as it is in visions and dreams; and familiarly. This is called speaking face to face, 2Jo_1:12 3Jo_1:14.

Apparently; plainly and certainly. Not in dark speeches ; not in parables, similitudes, riddles, dark resemblances; as by showing a boiling pot, an almond tree , &c. to Jeremiah, a chariot with wheels, &c. to Ezekiel.

The similitude of the Lord; not the face or essence of God, which no man can see and live, Exo_33:20; it being invisible, Col_1:15, and never seen by man, Joh_1:18; but some singular manifestation of his glorious presence, as Exo_33:11,20, &c.;

Exo_34:5, &c.; Deu_34:10. Yea, the Son of God appeared to him in a human shape, which he took up for a time, that he might give him a foretaste of his future incarnation.

My servant; who is so in such an eminent and extraordinary manner.

Numbers 12:9

From the door of the tabernacle, in token of his great displeasure, not waiting for their answer, and judging them unworthy of any further discourse.

Numbers 12:10

From off the tabernacle; not from the whole tabernacle, for then they must have removed, but from that part of the tabernacle whither it was come, to that part which was directly over the mercy-seat, where it constantly abode.

Miriam became leprous; she, and not Aaron, either because she was first or chief in the transgression, or because God would not have his worship either interrupted or dishonoured, which it must have been if Aaron had been leprous.

White as snow: this kind of leprosy was the most virulent and incurable of all. See Exo_4:6 2Ki_5:27. It is true, when the leprosy began in a particular part, and thence spread itself over all the flesh by degrees, and at last made it all white, that was an evidence. of the cure of the leprosy, Lev_13:12,13; but it was otherwise when one was suddenly and extraordinarily smitten with this universal whiteness, which showed the great corruption of the whole mass of blood, as it was here.

Numbers 12:11

Let not the guilt and punishment of this sin rest upon us, upon her in this kind, upon me in any other kind, but pray to God for the pardon and removal of it.

Numbers 12:12

As one dead; either naturally, because part of her flesh was putrefied and dead, and not to be restored but by the mighty power of God; or morally, because she was cut off from all converse with others, Lev_13:46.

When he cometh out of his mother's womb; like an untimely birth, without due shape and proportion, or like a still-born child that hath been for some time dead in the womb, which when it comes forth is white and putrefied, and part of it consumed.

Numbers 12:13

No text from Poole on this verse.

Numbers 12:14

Spit in her face, i.e. expressed some eminent token of indignation and contempt, which this was, Job_30:10 Isa_1:6.

Should she not be ashamed, and withdraw herself from her father's presence? as Jonathan did upon a like occasion, 1Sa_20:34. So though God healed her according to Moses's request, yet he would have her publicly bear the shame of her sin, and be a warning to others to keep them firm the same transgression.

Seven days, the time appointed for cleansing the unclean. See Num_6:9 31:19.

Numbers 12:15

Which was a testimony of respect to her both from God and from the people, God so ordering it, partly lest she should be overwhelmed by such a public rebuke from God, and partly lest, she being a prophetess, together with her person, the gift of prophecy should come into contempt.

Numbers 12:16

Hazereth, where they abode , as is said, Num_11:35, for Miriam's sake.

In the wilderness of Paran, i.e. in another part of the same wilderness, as may be gathered from Num_10:12: see also Deu_33:2. It is possible they might have removed out of one part of that wilderness into another wilderness, and then returned again into another part of it, as we know the Israelites had many strange windings and turnings in their wilderness travels. And this part was more especially called Rithmah , Num_33:18, and Kadesh-barnea , Num_13:26 Deu_1:19, which were two noted places in that part, both which seem to be comprehended within their camp, or near adjoining to it.

Numbers 13:1 NUMBERS CHAPTER 13

God commandeth Moses to send spies to search out the land of Canaan, Num_13:1-3. Their names, Num_13:4-16. Moses's commandment where to go, and what to do, Num_13:17-20. Their return with the fruits of the land, and their report, Num_13:23-29. They are encouraged by Caleb, Num_13:30; but ten others dishearten them by their false report, Num_13:31-33.

In answer to the people's petition about it, as is evident from Deu_1:22. And it is probable from the following story, that the people desired it out of diffidence of God's promise and providence, though Moses liked of it as a prudent course to learn where or how to make the first invasion. And God granted their desire for their trial and punishment, as well knowing from what root it came.

Numbers 13:2

Do as the people press thee to do.

Of every tribe of their fathers, i.e. which comes from their several parents or patriarchs.

A ruler; a person of wisdom and authority, which might make his witness more considerable with the people.

i.e. Of that part of the tribe of Joseph which is peculiarly called the tribe of Manasseh, as the other part of it was called the tribe of Ephraim , Num_13:8. The name of Joseph is elsewhere appropriated to Ephraim, as Eze_37:16,19 Re 7:8; here to Manasseh; possibly to aggravate the sin of the ruler of this tribe, who did so basely degenerate from his noble ancestor, Joseph.

Numbers 13:16

Oshea notes a desire of salvation, signifying, Save, we pray thee , but Jehoshua , or Joshua , includes a promise of salvation, that he should save, or that God by his hands should save the people. So this was a prophecy of his succession to Moses in the government, and of the success of his arms.

Numbers 13:17

Southward, i.e. into the southern part of Canaan, which was the nearest part, and the worst too, being dry and desert, Jos_15:1,3 Jud 1:15 Psa_126:4, and therefore fittest for them to enter and pass through with less observation.

Into the mountain, i.e. into the mountainous country, and thence into the valleys, and so take an exact survey of the whole land.

Numbers 13:18

What it is, both for largeness, and for nature and quality; as is more particularly expressed, Num_13:19,20.

Numbers 13:19

Good or bad, healthful or unwholesome, fruitful or barren.

In tents, as the Arabians did; or in unwall'd villages, which, like tents, are exposed to an enemy.

Numbers 13:20

Fat; rich and fertile.

Be ye of good courage; doubt not but God will preserve you in this dangerous journey, and be not dismayed nor discouraged if you find the people numerous, potent, and well fortified.

Numbers 13:21

The wilderness of Zin, in the south of Canaan, Num_34:3 Jos_15:3; differing from the wilderness of Sin, which was nigh unto Egypt, Exo_16:1.

To Hamath; i.e. from the south they passed through the whole land even to the northern parts of it,

Rehob, a city in the northwest part, Jos_19:28 Jud_1:31; and Hamath, a city in the north-east part, Jos_19:35 Eze_47:17. And that they might more expeditiously and securely perform this office, it is probable that they divided themselves into several small parties, and informed themselves not only by their eye, but also by their ear, and the information of persons, of whom they inquired about the nature and condition of their land.

Numbers 13:22

Here Moses having generally described their process and course from south to north, now returns more particularly to relate some memorable places and passages, as that having entered the land in the southern parts, they travelled then till they came to

Hebron. Came , Heb. he came , to wit, Caleb, as appears from Jos_14:9,12,14; for, as was now intimated, the spies distributed their work among them, and went either severally, or by pairs: and, it seems, the survey of this part was left to Caleb.

Anak; a famous giant so called, whose children these are called, either more generally, as all giants sometimes were, or rather more specially, because Arba, from whom Hebron was called Kirjath-arba, was the father of Anak, Jos_15:13. And this circumstance is mentioned as an evidence of the goodness of that land and soil, because the giants chose it for their habitation.

Before Zoan in Egypt: this seems to be noted to confront the Egyptians, who vainly boasted of the antiquity of their city Zoan above all places.

Numbers 13:23

Upon a staff; either for the weight of it, considering the length of the way they were to carry it, or for the preservation of it whole and entire. In those eastern and southern countries there are vines and grapes of an extraordinary bigness, as Strabo and Pliny affirm.

Numbers 13:26

Kadesh; so called by way of abbreviation, which is frequent in Hebrew names, for Kadesh-barnea , Deu_1:19, which some rashly confound with Kadesh in the wilderness of Zin , Num_20:1 27:14 33:36; into which they came not till the fortieth year after their coming out of Egypt, as appears from Num_33:37,38 whereas they were in this Kadesh in the second year, and before they received the sentence of their forty years' abode in the wilderness.

Numbers 13:27

They told him in the audience of the people, as appears from Num_13:30. They craftily begin their relation with commendations, that their following slanders might be more easily believed.

Numbers 13:28

Strong; potent for the strength of their body, and the valour of their minds.

Numbers 13:29

The south, where we are to enter the land; and they who were so eager and fierce against us that they came into the wilderness to fight with us, will without doubt oppose us when we come close by their land, and are about to settle in their neighbourhood, the rather, to revenge themselves for their former loss and shame received by us. Therefore they mention them, though they were no Canaanites.

In the mountains, i.e. in the mountainous country in the south-east part of the land; so that you cannot enter there without great difficulty, both because of the noted strength and valour of those people, and because of the advantage they have from the mountains.

By the sea; not the midland sea, which is commonly understood by that expression, but the Salt or Dead Sea, as appears,

1. Because it is that sea which is next to Jordan, as here follows.
2. Because the Canaanites dwelt principally in those parts, and not near the midland sea. So these guard the entrance on the east side, as the others do on the south.

Numbers 13:30

Caleb, together with Joshua, as is manifest from Num_14:6,7,30; but Caleb alone is here mentioned, possibly because he spake first and most, which he might better do, because he might be presumed to be more impartial than Joshua, who being Moses's minister might be thought to speak only what he knew his master would like.

Stilled the people; which implies either that they had began to murmur, or that by their looks and carriages they discovered that grief and anger which boiled in their breasts.

Before Moses, or toward Moses , against whom they were incensed, as the man who had brought them into such sad circumstances.

We are well able; partly in moral probability, because we are one people united under one head, whereas they are divided into several nations, and governments of differing counsels, and interests, and inclinations; and principally because of the assistance of the Almighty God.

Numbers 13:31

The men that went up with him; all of them, Joshua excepted.

They are stronger than we, both in stature of body and numbers of people. Thus they wickedly question the power, and truth, and goodness of God, of all which they had such ample testimonies.

Numbers 13:32

They brought up, Heb. brought forth , to wit, out of their mouths; they uttered a reproach, or reproachful words.

Of the land i.e. against it, or concerning the land. It is the genitive case of the object, as Mat_10:1 14:1.

Eateth up the inhabitants; not so much by civil wars, as most think, for that was likely to make their conquest more easy; nor by the barrenness of the soil, which consumed the people with the excessive pains it required to make it fruitful, as others think, for they confessed the excellency of the land, Num_13:27; but rather by the unwholesomeness of the air and place, which they guessed from the many funerals which, as some Hebrew writers, not without probability, affirm, they observed in their travels through it; though that came to pass from another cause, even from the singular providence of God, which, to facilitate the Israelites' conquest, cut off vast numbers of the Canaanites, either by a plague, or by the hornet sent before them , as is expressed Jos_24:12, or some other way.

Numbers 13:33

i.e. Small and contemptible.

Numbers 14:1 NUMBERS CHAPTER 14

The children of Israel murmur against Moses and Aaron, Num_14:1-4. Moses, Aaron, Caleb, and Joshua go to appease the people, Num_14:5-9; wherefore the people would have stoned them, Num_14:10. The Lord threateneth them with the pestilence, Num_14:11,12. Moses entreateth the Lord for the people, Num_14:13-19. The Lord heareth Moses, Num_14:20,21; yet promiseth that the murmurers shall never enter into the land of Canaan, Num_14:22,23. Judgments on the murmurers, Num_14:26-35. They that brought an evil report on the land die of the plague, Num_14:36,37. They who would take possession of the land contrary to God's command are smitten, Num_14:40-45.

Except Caleb and Joshua, and some few others. A synecdochial expression, the whole for the greatest part.

Numbers 14:2

Against Moses and against Aaron, as the instruments and occasions of their present calamity.

That we had died in the wilderness: it was not long before they had their desire, and did die in the wilderness.

Numbers 14:3

From the instruments they rise higher, and strike at God the chief cause and author of their journey; by which we see the prodigious growth and progress of sin when it is not resisted. Should be a prey to the Canaanites , whose land we were made to believe we should possess.

Numbers 14:4

A captain, instead of Moses, one who will be more faithful to our interest than he. This was but a purpose or desire, and yet it is imputed to them as if they had done it, Neh_9:16,17, they appointed a captain , &c., even as Abraham's purpose to offer up Isaac is reckoned for the deed, Heb_11:17.

Let us return into Egypt. Stupendous madness! Whence should they have protection against the many hazards, and provision against all the wants of the wilderness? Could they expect either God's cloud to cover and guide them, or manna from Heaven to lead them? Who should conduct them over the Red Sea? or, if they went another way, who should defend them against those nations whose borders they were to pass? What entertainment could they expect if the Egyptians, whom they had deserted and brought to so much ruin?

Numbers 14:5

As humble and earnest suppliants, either to the people, to entreat them to desist from their wicked and pernicious enterprise; or rather, to God, by comparing this with Num_16:4 20:6, the only refuge to which Moses resorted in all such straits, and who alone was able to still and govern this tumultuous and stiff-necked people.

Before all the assembly, that they might be awaked to apprehend their sin and danger, when they saw Moses at his prayers, whom God never used to deny, and never failed to defend, even with the destruction of his enemies.

Numbers 14:6

To testify their hearty grief for the people's blasphemy against God and sedition against Moses, and that dreadful judgment which they easily foresaw this must bring upon the congregation and people of God.

Numbers 14:7

Numbers 14:8

If by our rebellion and ingratitude we do not provoke God to loathe and forsake us.

Numbers 14:9

They are bread for us; we shall destroy them as easily as we do our bread or common food. Compare Num_24:8 Psa_14:4.

Their defence, i.e. their counsel, conduct, and courage, and especially God, who was pleased to afford them his protection till their iniquities were full, Gen_15:16, is utterly departed from them, and hath given them up as a prey to us.

The Lord is with us, by his special grace and almighty power, to save us from them; and from all our enemies.

Numbers 14:10

Now in the extremity of danger, to rescue his faithful servants, and to stop the rage of the people.

In the tabernacle, i.e. upon or above the tabernacle, where the cloud usually resided, in which the glory of God did appear upon occasion, and now in a more illustrious manner, as the state of things required.

Numbers 14:11

Numbers 14:12

This was not an absolute determination, as the event showed, but only a condition, like that of Nineveh's destruction within forty days, with a condition implied, except there be speedy repentance, or powerful intercession.

Numbers 14:13

Then, i.e. in case thou dost utterly destroy them.

Thou broughtest up this people, whereby thou didst get great honour to thyself, which now thou wilt certainly lose.

Numbers 14:14

To the inhabitants of this land, for there was much intercourse between these two nations.

Numbers 14:15

As one man, i.e. altogether, or to a man; and suddenly as it were by one blow, as if all had but one neck.

Numbers 14:16

His power was quite spent in bringing them out of Egypt, and could not finish the work he had begun and had sworn to do.

Numbers 14:17

Be great, i.e. appear to be great, discover its greatness; a real verb put for a declarative, or the thing for the manifestation of the thing. And this may be understood either,

1. Of God's power in preserving the people, and carrying them on into Canaan, which sense may seem to be favoured by the foregoing verse, where the Egyptians deny that God had power to do so. And according to that sense he adds the following words, not as an explication of this power, but as an argument to move him to show forth his power for his people notwithstanding their sins, according as , or rather because , (as the Hebrew word is oft rendered,) he had spoken, saying, &c., and so he should maintain the honour and the truth of his own name, or of those titles which he had ascribed to himself. Or,

2. The power of his grace and mercy, or the greatness of his mercy , as he calls it, Num_14:19, in pardoning of this and their other sins; for to this the following words manifestly restrain it, according as thou hast spoken, & c., where the pardon of their sins is the only instance of this power both described in God's titles, Num_14:18, and prayed for by Moses, Num_14:19, pardon, I beseech thee , &c., and granted by God in answer to him, Num_14:20, I have pardoned , &c. Nor is it strange that the pardon of sin, especially of such great sins, be spoken of as an act of power in God, because undoubtedly it is an act of omnipotent and infinite goodness; whence despairing sinners sometimes cry out that their sins are greater than God can pardon, as some translate Cain's words, Gen_4:13. And since power is applied to God's wrath in punishing sin, Rom_9:22, why may it not as well be attributed to God's mercy in forgiving it? especially if it be considered that even in men revenge is an act of impotency, and consequently it must needs be an act of power to conquer their passions and inclinations to revenge, and to pardon those enemies whom they could destroy.

Numbers 14:18

These words may seem to be very improperly mentioned, as being a powerful argument to move God to destroy this wicked people, and not to pardon them. It may be answered, that Moses useth these words together with the rest, partly because he would not sever what God had put together, and partly to show that he did not desire a fulfil and absolute pardon, (but was willing that God should execute his vengeance upon the principal authors of this rebellion, and leave some character of his displeasure upon all the people, as God did,) but only that God would not disinherit them, Num_14:12, nor kill all the people as one man , Num_14:15, nor destroy them both root and branch, because he, had promised not to extend his wrath against them in punishing their sins beyond the third and fourth generation. But the truer answer seems to be, that these words are to be translated otherwise, and in destroying he will not utterly destroy , though he visit the iniquity of the fathers upon the children , unto the third and fourth generation. Of which See Poole "Exo_34:7", where all this verse is explained.

Numbers 14:19

After many and great provocations; show thyself still to be the same sin-pardoning God.

Numbers 14:20

So far as not utterly to destroy them, as I threatened, Num_14:12, and thou didst fear, and beg the prevention of it, Num_14:15.

Numbers 14:21

i.e. With the report of the glorious and righteous acts of God in punishing this rebellious people in manner following. That this is the true sense, appears both from the particle of opposition, and the solemn introduction of them.

But truly as I live, and from the following verses, because all these men, &c, which come in without any note of opposition, and have a manifest relation to and connexion with this verse.

Numbers 14:22

My glory, i.e. my glorious appearances in the cloud, and in the tabernacle.

Ten times, i.e. many times. A certain number for an uncertain, as Gen_31:7 Lev_26:8 Job_19:3. Though some reckon ten times precisely, wherein they did eminently provoke God.

Numbers 14:23

Numbers 14:24

Joshua is not here named, because he was not now among the people, but a constant attendant upon Moses; nor was he to be reckoned as one of them, any more than Moses and Aaron were, because he was to be their chief commander.

Another spirit with him, i.e. was a man of another temper and carriage, faithful and courageous, not acted by that evil spirit of cowardice, unbelief, unthankfulness, disobedience, which ruled in his brethren, but by the Spirit of God.

Fully, i.e. universally and constantly, in and through difficulties and dangers, which made his partners halt.

The land whereinto he went; in general, Canaan, and particularly Hebron, and the adjacent parts, Jos_14:9.

Shall possess it, or, shall expel it , i.e. its inhabitants, the land being oft put for the people of it. Compare Jos_8:7 14:12.

Numbers 14:25

In the valley; beyond the mountain at the foot whereof they now were, Num_14:40. And this clause is added, either,

1. As an aggravation of Israel's misery and punishment, that being now ready to enter and take possession of the land, they are forced to go back into the wilderness; or,

2. As an argument to oblige them more willingly to obey the following command of returning into the wilderness, because their enemies were very near them, and severed from them only by that Idumean mountain, and if they did not speedily depart, their enemies would hear of them and fall upon them, and so the evil which before they causelessly feared would come upon them; they, their wives, and their children would become a prey to the Amalekites and Canaanites, because God had forsaken them, and would not assist nor defend them. The verse may be rendered thus,

And, or But , for the present, the Amalekite and the Canaanite dwell in the valley; therefore (which particle is here understood, as it is in other places) to-morrow turn ye, & c. Though some knit these words to the former, and read the place thus, Caleb —and his seed shall possess it , to wit, the land near Hebron, and also the land of the Amalekites and of the Canaanites that dwell in the valley .

Quest. But how are the Canaanites said to dwell in the valley here, when they dwelt in the hill , Num_14:45, and by the sea-coasts, Num_21:1?

Answ. 1. Part of them dwelt in one place, and part in other places.

2. The word Canaanite may here be understood more generally of all the inhabitants of Canaan.

By the way of the Red Sea, i.e. that leadeth to the Red Sea, and to Egypt, the place whither you desire to return, Num_14:3,4.

Forty years, i.e. so long as to make up the time of your dwelling in the wilderness forty years, as appears from Num_33:8 Deu_1:3 2:14. Compare Amo_5:25. It is manifest that one whole year and part of another were past before this sin or judgment.

Your whoredoms, i.e. the punishment of your whoredoms, to wit, of your apostacy from, and perfidiousness against, your Lord, who was your Husband, and had married you to himself. See Jer_3:14. Whence idolatry is called whoredom.

Numbers 14:34

Each day for a year; so there should have been forty years to come, but God was pleased mercifully to accept of the time past as a part of that time.

My breach of promise, that as you have first broken the covenant between you and me, by breaking the terms or conditions of it, so I will make it void on my part, by denying you the blessings promised in that covenant, and to be given to you in case of your obedience. So you shall see that the breach of promise wherewith you charged me, Num_14:3, lies at your door, and was forced from me by your perfidiousness. Or, my breach ; either passively, i.e. your breaking off from me, as such pronouns are oft used, as Gen_1:4 Isa_53:11 56:7; or actively, i.e. my breaking off or departing from you, and stopping the current of my blessings towards you; you shall feel by experience how sad your condition is when I withdraw my grace and favour from you.

Numbers 14:41

The commandment of the Lord; either that command, Go not up, &c., which, though in this place mentioned after, yet may seem to have gone before their transgression, by comparing this place with Deu_1:42,43; or that command above, Num_14:25, Turn ye, and get ye into the wilderness, &c., which was a course directly contrary to that which they took.

Numbers 15:3

A sacrifice, i.e. a peace-offering, as appears,

1. Because that word put by itself is oft so taken, as Exo_18:12 Lev_17:5,8 23:37 Deu_12:27.

2. Because the offerings for sins and trespasses had no meat-offerings and drink-offerings attending upon them, excepting only the case of the leper's cleansing, Lev_14:10.

3. Because this is explained by and called peace-offereings , Num_15:8.

4. From the words here following, because peace-offerings were commonly offerede either in performance of a vow, or freely, or by God's command in their solemn feasts, all which are here expressed.

Numbers 15:4

A tenth deal, or tenth part , to wit, of an ephah, i.e. an omer, Exo_16:36.

Numbers 15:22

To wit, those now spoken of, those which concern the outward worship and service of God, or the rites or ceremonies belonging to it. And herein principally this law may seem to differ from that Lev_14:13, which speaks of some positive miscarriage, or doing that which ought not to have been done about the holy things of God, whereas this speaks only of an omission of something which ought to have been done about holy ceremonies. But besides this, that law, Lev_4:13, concerns the whole congregation of Israel, as it is there expressed, but this concerns only the congregation, or a congregation, as it is here expressed, Num_15:24, i.e. any particular congregation of Israelites, whether of a whole tribe meeting together by their representatives, or a lesser congregation, such as there were to be many in Canaan; and the words rendered all the congregation may be, and are by some here, rendered every congregation. And by virtue of this law, as some suppose, the Israelites newly after their return from the captivity offered twelve bullocks, one for each tribe, Eze_8:35.

Numbers 15:23

Numbers 15:24

In Le 4 the bullock is for a sin-offering, here it is for a burnt-offering, either because they are different laws, as hath been said; or because here is added a new penalty, to breed the greater caution and diligence in the Israelites, who had given many instances, and now a fresh and eminent instance, of their heedlessness in observing the commands of God; and so, besides that bullock for a sin-offering, which he leaves to be gathered out of Lev_4:11, he now requires another bullock for a burnt-offering.

Numbers 15:30

Ought; understand such things as ought not to be done and things relating to the worship of God;

presumptuously, Heb. with a high or lifted hand i. e. knowingly willfully, boldly, resolvedly, deliberately, designedly. So this phrase is elsewhere used. See Exo_14:8 Lev_26:21 Num_33:3 Job_15:26 Psa_19:13.

Reproacheth the Lord, i.e. he sets God at defiance, and exposeth him to contempt, as if he were unworthy of any regard, and unable to punish transgressors.

Numbers 15:31

i.e. The punishment shall be confined to himself, and not fall upon the congregation, as it will do, if they neglect to cut him off.

Numbers 15:32

This seems to be added as an example of a presumptuous sin; for as the law of the sabbath was plain and positive, so this transgression of it must needs be a known and wilful sin.

Numbers 15:33

i.e. To the rulers of the congregation, who, as they represented and governed the congregation, are called by the name of the congregation.

Numbers 15:34

i.e. Moses and Aaron, and the seventy rulers last mentioned.

What should be done to him, i.e. in what manner he was to be cut off, or by what kind of death he was to die, which therefore God here particularly determines; otherwise it was known in general that sabbath-breakers were to be put to death, from Exo_31:14 35:2.

Numbers 15:38

Fringes were certain threads or ends of their garments, standing out a little further than the rest of their garments, left there for this use.

In the borders, i.e. in the four borders or quarters , as it is Deu_22:12. Heb. wings , which is oft used for borders or ends, as Rth_3:9 1Sa_15:27 24:5, &c.

Of their garments, i.e. of their upper garment, or that wherewith they covered themselves , as is expressed Deu_22:12. This was practised by the Pharisees in Christ's time, who are noted for making their borders larger than ordinary, Mat_23:5; and by Christ himself, as may gathered from Luk_8:44.

A riband, to make it more obvious to the sight, and consequently more serviceable to the use here mentioned.

Of blue, or, of a purple colour , as the Jewish writers agree, whose opinion is the more considerable, because it was matter of constant practice among them.

Numbers 15:39

It, i.e. the riband,

shall be unto you, i.e. shall serve you for the fringe, to wit, to render it more visible and notorious by its certain, and remarkable, and distinct colour, whereas the fringe without this was of the same piece and colour with the garment, and therefore less observable. Or, it , i.e. the riband, shall be in your fringes , or, put to your fringes , fastened to them, that by looking upon it you may remember, that your eye may affect your mind and heart.

That ye seek not, or, inquire not , for other rules or ways of serving me than I have prescribed you.

After your own heart, and your own eyes, i.e. neither after the devices and inventions of your own minds or hearts, as Nadab and Abihu did when they offered strange fire, and as you now did, when you pretended to serve and please me by going up the hill and towards Canaan without and against my command; nor after the examples or inventions of others which your eyes see, as you did when you were set upon worshipping a calf after the manner of Egypt. To go a whoring , i.e. to depart from me, and to prefer your own fancies before my commands, and to live only by present sight or sense, and not at all by faith in my promises.

Numbers 15:41

Though I am justly displeased with you, for your frequent and horrid rebellions, for which also I will keep you forty years in the wilderness, yet I will not utterly cast you off, but will continue to be your God, to preserve and provide for you there, and after that time to bring you into Canaan.

Numbers 16:1 NUMBERS CHAPTER 16

Korah, Dathan, and Abiram raise sedition against Moses and Aaron, Num_16:1-3. Moses reprovng them, Num_16:4-11, sends for Dathan and Abiram; their refusal and answer, Num_16:12-14. The manner of their punishment, Num_16:15-35. Their perfuming censers are kept for a memorial and warning, Num_16:36-40. The people murmur against Moses and Aaron, for which they are consumed by the plague, which Aaron by Moses's order stays, Num_16:41-50.

Korah, the first and chief author of this rebellion, Num_16:11 Jud_1:11.

Izhar was Amram's brother, Exo_6:18, therefore Moses and he were cousin-germans. Moreover Izhar was the second son of Kohath, whereas Elizaphan, whom Moses had preferred before him, and made prince or ruler of the Kohathites, Num_3:30, was the son of Uzziel, the fourth son of Kohath. This, the Jewish writers say, made him malcontent, which at last broke forth into sedition.

Sons of-Reuben: these are drawn into confederacy with Korah, partly because they were his next neighbours, both being encamped on the south side, and therefore could easily communicate counsels; partly in hopes to recover their rights of primogeniture, in which the priesthood was comprehended, which was given away from their father.

Took men, to wit, those two hundred and fifty mentioned Num_16:2. In the Hebrew there is nothing but took, and the Hebrew words are placed and may well be rendered thus, Now Korah —took both Dathan and Abiram, &c., or took Dathan, &c., the particule vau being here superfluous, as it is Gen_8:6, and elsewhere.

Numbers 16:2

They, i.e. Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, last mentioned.

Rose up, i.e. conspired together, and put their seditious design in execution.

Before Moses; not privily and obscurely, but openly and boldly, not fearing nor regarding the presence of Moses, who was an eye-witness of their conspiracy.

Famous, for place and birth.

Numbers 16:3

They, i.e. either Korah, and the two hundred and fifty princes, which may seem probable by comparing this with Num_16:12,25,27, where we find Dathan and Abiram in another place, even in their tents, whither it is likely they were gone by consent to form and strengthen their party there, while Korah and the rest went to Moses. Or, Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, and the rest, who were all together when Moses spake those words, Num_16:5-7; but after that Dathan and Abiram retired to their tents, and then Moses sent for Korah and the Levites, who had more special and more colourable pretences to the priesthood, and treats with them apart, and speaks what is mentioned Num_16:8-11; and then having dispatched them, he sends for Dathan and Abiram, Num_16:12, that he might reason the case with them also apart.

Against Aaron, to whom the priesthood was confined, and against Moses, both because this was done by his order, and because before Aaron's consecration Moses appropriated it to himself. For whatever they intended, they seem not now directly to strike at Moses for his supreme civil government, but only for his interest and influence in the disposal of the priesthood, as may appear by the whole context, and particularly by Num_16:5,10,15, &c.

Ye take too much upon you, by perpetuating the priesthood in yourselves and family, with the exclusion of all others from it. Are holy; a kingdom of priests, a holy nation, as they are called Exo_19:6; a people separated to the service of God, and therefore no less fit to present themselves before God, and to offer sacrifice and incense for themselves, than you are.

The Lord is among them, by his tabernacle and cloud, the tokens of his special and gracious presence, and therefore ready to receive all their sacrifices and services from their own hands.

Wherefore lift ye up yourselves; thou, Moses, by prescribing what laws thou pleasest about the priesthood, and confining it to thy brother; and thou, Aaron, by usurping it as thy peculiar privilege?

Numbers 16:4

Humbly begging that God would direct him, and defend and vindicate him from this false and odious imputation. See Num_14:5. Accordingly God answers his prayers, and inspires him with this following answer to Korah, and strengthens him with new courage, and confidence of good success.

Numbers 16:5

To-morrow, Heb. in the morning , the time appointed by men for administering justice, Psa_101:8 Jer_21:12; and chosen by God for that work, Psa_73:14 Isa_47:11 Zep_3:5. Some time is allowed, partly that Korah and his company might prepare themselves and their censers; and partly to give them space for consideration and repentance.

And will cause him, or, and whom he will cause . To come near unto him, i.e. he will by some evident and miraculous token declare his approbation of him and his ministry.

Numbers 16:6

Since ye will be priests, take your censers, and act as priests, at your peril.

Numbers 16:7

Doth choose, i.e. declare his choice and appointment of them for that work.

Numbers 16:8

Consider what I say before it be too late, and repent of your great wickedness.

Numbers 16:9

Near to himself; nearer than the other tribes, though not so near as the priests.

Unto them, i.e. in their stead and for their good. So they were the servants both of God and of the church, which was a high dignity, though not sufficient for their ambitious minds.

Numbers 16:10

There being at this time but very few priests, and the profits and privileges belonging to them being many and great, they thought it but fit and reasonable that they, or some of the chief of them, should be admitted to share in their work and advantages.

Numbers 16:11

Against the Lord, whoso minister and chosen servant Aaron is. You strike at God through Aaron's sides. Compare 1Sa_8:7 Luk_10:16 Joh_13:20.

Numbers 16:12

Moses sent, to treat with them, and give them, as he had done Korah and his company, a timely admonition. Which said unto the messengers sent to them by Moses,

We will not come up, to Moses's tabernacle, whither the people used to go up for judgment. Men are said in Scripture phrase to go up to places of judgment. See Deu_25:7 Rth_4:1 Ezr_10:7,8. But because they would not now go up, therefore they went down quick into the pit, Num_16:12.

Numbers 16:13

i.e. Out of Egypt, a place indeed of great plenty, but to them a place of torment and intolerable slavery. They invidiously and scoffingly use the same words wherewith God by Moses commended the land of Canaan.

Numbers 16:14

Of these men, i.e. of those who are confederate with us, and of all the people who are of our mind. Wilt thou make them blind, or persuade them that they are blind, and that they do not see what is visible to all that have eyes, to wit, that thou hast deceived them, and broken thy faith and promise given to them? or wilt thou lead them about like blind men whither thou pleasest, one time towards Canaan, another time towards Egypt again?

We will not come up; we will not obey thy summons, nor own thy authority.

Numbers 16:15

Moses was very wroth, not so much for his own sake, for he had learnt to bear indignities, Num 12, as for God's sake, who was highly dishonoured, blasphemed, and provoked by these speeches and carriages, in which case he ought to be angry, as Christ was, Mar_3:5.

Respect not thou their offering, i.e. accept not their incense which they are now going to offer, but show some eminent dislike of it. He calls it their offering, though it was offered by Korah and his companions, because it was offered in the name and by the consent of all the conspirators, for the decision of the present controversy between them and Moses.

Not one ass, i.e. not any thing of the smallest value, as an ass was; see 1Sa_12:3 neither have I injured them, nor used my power to defraud or oppress them, as I might have done; but, which is here implied, I have done them many good offices, but no hurt; therefore their crime is inexcusable, because without any cause or provocation on my part.

Numbers 16:16

Not in the tabernacle, which was not capable of so many persons severally offering incense, but at the door of the tabernacle, Num_16:18, which place is oft said to be before the Lord, as Exo_29:42 Lev_1:11, &c.; where they might now lawfully offer it by Moses's direction upon this extraordinary occasion and necessity, because this work could not be done in that place, which alone was allowed for the offering up of incense, not only from its smallness, but also because none but priests might enter to do this work. Here also the people, who were to be instructed by this experiment, might see the proof and success of it.

Numbers 16:17

Numbers 16:18

They could easily make censers in a slight manner, which would suffice for the present purpose. The fire was taken from the altar which stood in that place, Lev_1:3,5, for Aaron might not use other fire, Lev_10:1. And it is likely the remembrance of the death of Nadab and Abihu deterred them from offering any strange fire.

Numbers 16:19

Korah gathered the congregation, that they might be witnesses of the event, and, upon their success, which they doubted not of, might fall upon Moses and Aaron with popular rage, and destroy them. And it seems by this that the people were generally incensed against Moses, and inclined to Korah's side.

The glory of the Lord appeared in the cloud, which then shone with greater brightness and majesty, as a token of God's approach and presence. See Exo_16:7,10 Le 9:6,23 Num 20:6.

And this is no empty title here, but very emphatical and argmmentative, thus, Thou art the Maker of spirits, Zec_12:1, destroy not thy own workmanship, Isa_64:8. O thou who art the preserver of men, and of their spirits; the Lord of spirits, Job_12:10; who as thou mayst justly destroy this people, so thou canst preserve whom thou pleasest: the Father of spirits , Heb_12:9; O deal mercifully with thy own children: the Searcher of spirits, thou canst distinguish between those who have maliciously raised this tumult, and those whose ignorance and simple credulity hath made them a prey to crafty seducers.

Of all flesh, i.e. of all mankind: the word flesh is put for men, as Gen_6:13 Job_12:10 Isa_40:5,6 Eze 20:48 21:4,5.

Korah, Dathan, and Abiram; and On too, who is mentioned Num_16:1, though some think he desisted and repented, and therefore is not now mentioned.

Numbers 16:25

Because they refused to come to him, he goes to them to their cost.

The elders of Israel; the seventy rulers, whom he carried with him for the greater solemnity of the action, and for his own better vindication, because he lay under such calumnies, and to encourage them in their work, notwithstanding the obstinate and intractable nature of the people they were to govern.

Numbers 16:26

Show your dislike of them and their wicked ways by a speedy removal of your persons and tents from about them.

Touch nothing of theirs; because they and all that was theirs was under a curse, and therefore not to be touched. See Deu_13:16,17.

In all their sins; lest, being guilty of their sins, you perish together with them.

Numbers 16:27

Their tents were not far asunder, being both on the south side of the tabernacle, as appears from Num_2:10 3:29.

Stood in the door of their tents; an argument of their foolish confidence, pride, and impudence, obstinacy, and impenitency, whereby they declared that they neither feared God nor revered man, and made themselves ripe for the approaching judgment.

Numbers 16:28

All these works, to wit, which I have done, and for which I am traduced by these and such like wicked men, as the bringing of the people out of Egypt; the conducting of them through, and the keeping of them so long in, the wilderness; the exercising of power and authority among and over them; giving of laws to them, as about other things, so concerning the priesthood, which is the ground of the present quarrel; and, that which vexeth them most, that when they were upon the borders of Canaan, and ready to enter in, I should cause them to go back into this vast howling wilderness, and fix them there for forty years.

Of mine own mind; by pretending or usurping an authority which God gave me not; by feigning words or messages from God to establish my own inventions, and to comply with my own will or lust or interest, as I am now accused to have done. For this phrase, see Num_24:13 Eze_13:2.

Numbers 16:29

i.e.

If these men die by a natural death, or by plague, or sword, or some usual judgment, I am content that you take me for an impostor, falsely pretending to be sent of God. This he might well say, because he was inspired by God to say this, and infallibly assured by God that this should be done.

Numbers 16:30

Make a new thing, i.e. do such a work as was never heard before.

Into the pit, i.e. into the grave which God thereby makes. The Hebrew word scheol sometimes signifies hell, and sometimes the grave, as Gen_37:35 Psa_55:15.

Have provoked the Lord by making his words and works to be nothing but my devices and artifices.

Numbers 16:31

Numbers 16:32

i.e. All his family which were there, women, children, and servants; but his sons, who were spared Num_26:11,58 1Ch_6:22,37 were absent, either upon some service of the tabernacle, or upon some other occasion; God so ordering it by his providence, either because they disliked their father's act, or upon Moses's intercession for them, or for some other reason. This expression may seem to intimate that Korah himself was not here, but that he continued with his two hundred and fifty men before the Lord Num_16:18,19, where they were waiting for God's decision of the controversy; nor is it probable that their chief captain would desert them, and leave them standing there without a head, especially when Aaron, his great adversary, abode there still, and did not go with Moses to Dathan, &c., Num_16:25. And Korah may seem to have been consumed with those two hundred and fifty, Num_16:35, though he be not mentioned there, but is easily understood by comparing that verse with Num_16:16-18, and from the nature of the thing itself, there being no cause of doubt but that destruction which befell the accessaries did much more involve the principal. And so much is intimated Num_16:40, that no stranger come near to offer incense before the Lord, that he be not as Korah, and as his company, i.e. destroyed, as they were, by fire from the Lord. And when the psalmist relates this history, Psa 106, the earth's swallowing them up is confined to Dathan and Abiram, Num_16:17; and for all the rest of that conspiracy, it is added, Num_16:18, and a fire was kindled in their company; the flame burnt up the wicked. As for Num_26:10, which seems to oppose this opinion, we shall see more on that place, if God permit.

Numbers 16:37

Unto Eleazar, rather than to Aaron, partly because the troublesome part of the work was more proper for him, and partly lest Aaron should be polluted by going amongst those dead carcasses; for it is probable this fire consumed them, as lightning sometimes doth others, by taking away their lives, and leaving their bodies dead upon the place.

Out of the burning, i.e. from among the dead bodies of those men who were burnt. Burning put for those who are burnt, as captivity for the captives, Num_21:1, and poverty for the poor, 2Ki_24:14.

The fire, i.e. the cinders or ashes which are left in or near their censers.

Yonder, i.e. far from the altar and sanctuary, into an unclean place, where the ashes were wont to be cast; by which God shows his rejection of their services.

They are hallowed; either,

1. By God's appointment, because they were presented before the Lord by his express order, Num_16:16,17. Or,

2. By God's just judgment, because they, together with the persons that used them, were accursed and devoted by God, and therefore were the Lord's, and not to be employed in any profane or common use, as appears from Lev_27:28. But the first reason is the chief, and is rendered by God himself, Num_16:38.

Numbers 16:38

Against their own souls, i.e. their own lives; who were the authors of their own death and destruction. Compare 1Ki_2:23 Pro_20:2. This he saith for the vindication of God's justice and his own ministry in this severe dispensation.

The altar, to wit, of burnt-offerings, which was made of wood, but covered with brass before this time, Exo_27:1,2, to which this other covering was added for further ornament and security against the fire, which was continually burning upon it.

Numbers 17:2

Speak unto the children of Israel, that I may fully and finally satisfy all their scruples, and take away all pretence and cause of murmuring.

Of every one of them; not of every person, but of every tribe, as it follows.

A rod; either an ordinary walking staff; or rather, that staff or rod which the princes carried in their hand as tokens of their dignity and authority, as may be gathered from Num_21:18, compared with Psa_110:2 Jer_48:16,17.

According to the house of their fathers, i.e. according to each family proceeding from the patriarch or father of that tribe.

Every man's name, i.e. every prince's; for they being the first-born, and the chief of their tribes, might above all others pretend to the priesthood, if it was communicable to any of their tribes, and besides each prince represented and acted for all his tribe; so that this was a full decision of the whole question. And this plate seems to confirm what was before observed, that not only Korah and the Levites, but also those of other tribes, contested with Moses and Aaron about the priesthood, as that which belonged to all the congregation, they being all holy, as they said, Num_16:3.

Numbers 17:3

Aaron's rather than Levi's name, for that would have left the controversy undecided between Aaron and the other Levites, whereas this would justify the appropriation of the priesthood to Aaron's family.

For the head of the house of their fathers; i.e. there shall be in this, as there is in all the other tribes, only one rod, and that for the head of their tribe, who is Aaron in this tribe; whereas it might have been expected that there should have been two rods, one for Aaron, and another for his competitors of the same tribe. But Aaron's name was sufficient to determine both the tribe, and that branch or family of the tribe, to whom this dignity should be affixed.

Numbers 17:4

Before the testimony, i.e. before the ark of the testimony; either mediately, close by the veil behind which the ark stood; or rather immediately, within the veil in the most holy place, close by the ark, as may be gathered by comparing this place with Num_17:10, and with Heb_9:4.

Words of consternation arising, partly, from the remembrance of these severe and repeated judgments; partly, from the threatening of death upon ally succeeding murmurings; partly, from the sense of their own guilt and weakness, which made them fear lest they should relapse into the same miscarriages, and thereby bring the vengeance of God upon themselves.

Numbers 17:13

Any thing near, i.e. nearer than he should do; an error which we may easily commit.

Shall we be consumed? will God proceed with us in these severe courses, according to his strict justice? will he show us no mercy nor pity, till all the people be cut off and destroyed with dying one after another.

Numbers 18:1 NUMBERS CHAPTER 18

God showing to Aaron, his sons, and the Levites their office, Num_18:1-7; appointeth to Aaron and his sons their maintenance, Num_18:8-20; and also to the Levites, Num_18:21-24. He commandeth them by Moses to give tenths of their tenths to the chief priests, Num_18:25-32.

The iniquity of the sanctuary, i.e. shall suffer the punishment of all the usurpations or pollutions of the sanctuary, or the holy things, by the Levites or any of the people, because you have authority and power from me to keep them all within their bounds, and I expect you use it to that cud. Thus the people are in good measure secured against their fears expressed Num_17:12,13. Also they are informed that Aaron's high dignity was attended with great burdens, having not only his own, but the people's sins to answer for; and therefore they had no such reason to envy him as they might think, if the benefits and encumbrances and dangers were equally considered.

Of your priesthood, i.e. of all the errors committed by yourselves, or by you permitted in others in things belonging to your priesthood.

Numbers 18:2

Minister unto thee, about sacrifices and offerings and other things, according to the rules and limits I have prescribed them. The Levites are said to minister to Aaron here, to the church, Num_16:9, and to God, Deu_10:8. They shall not contend with thee for superiority, as they have done, but they shall be subordinate and servants to thee.

Thou and thy sons with thee, or, both to thee , and to thy sons with thee ; which translation may seem to be favoured by the following words, before the tabernacle, which was the proper place where the Levites ministered, whereas the priests did minister to God both before and in the tabernacle. Besides, both the foregoing words, and the two following verses, do entirely speak of the ministry of the Levites, and the ministry of the priests is distinctly spoken of Num_18:5.

Numbers 18:3

Thy charge, i.e. that which thou shalt command them and commit unto them.

Of all the tabernacle, i.e. of the boards and hangings and utensils of the tabernacle, to take them down, and carry them, and set them up again.

The vessels, which therefore were to be covered by the priests before the Levites might meddle with them.

They, nor ye, they for presuming to touch them, and you for your negligence in not covering them well, or not looking to them.

Numbers 18:4

No text from Poole on this verse.

Numbers 18:5

Of the sanctuary, i.e. of the holy, and of the most holy, place.

Upon the children of Israel, for coming too near the holy place, or for usurping any part of your sacred function, or for any other miscarriage which they may be guilty of through your carelessness or remissness, in which case they shall perish for their error, but their blood will I require at your hands, who should have advised them better, or overruled them.

Numbers 18:6

For the Lord, i.e. for the service of the Lord, to assist you therein, in the servile and troublesome parts of it.

Numbers 18:7

The altar, to wit, of burnt-offering, as appears from the following words.

Within the veil. This phrase elsewhere signifies the inward or second veil, but here it signifies either the outward veil only, or rather both the veils, the singular number being put for the plural, as when the altar is put for both the altars, as hath been noted; and so this phrase comprehends both the holy and the most holy place.

As a service of gift; as a gift which I have freely conferred upon you, and upon you alone; and therefore let no man henceforth dare either to charge you with arrogance and usurpation in appropriating this to yourselves, or to invade your office.

Numbers 18:8

Unto thee have I given them; not only the charge of them, but the use of them for thyself and family, in such manner as I have elsewhere expressed.

The anointing, to wit, to the priestly office, i.e. because thou art priest, and art to devote thyself wholly to my service; which, that thou mayst perform more diligently and cheerfully, I give thee this recompence.

Numbers 18:9

The most holy things; such as were to be eaten only by the priests, and that in the sanctuary. How these differ from the holy things, see on Lev_6:17.

Reserved from the fire, i.e. such sacrifices or such parts of sacrifices as were not burnt in the fire.

Every oblation; which may be understood either,

1. Of the wave-loaves, Lev_23:17, and the shew-bread, which were most holy things, Lev_23:20 24:9, and which did belong to the priest; nor was there any other such oblation besides what is here particularly expressed; for the peace-offerings were not most holy, and the burnt-offerings were not the priest's. Or,

2. Of oblations in general; and so the following particulars are mentioned by way of explication and restriction of that general word, to show what oblations are here meant, and to exclude peace-offerings and burnt-offerings.

Which they shalt render unto me, by way of compensation for a trespass committed against me, in which case a ram was to be offered, Lev_6:2,6, which was a most holy thing, and may be particularly designed here.

Shall be most holy; thou shalt esteem it a most holy thing, and shalt use it accordingly, in manner following. Or, these are most holy , and therefore shall be for thee, and for thy sons, to wit, exclusively, none else may eat them.

Numbers 18:10

In the most holy place, to wit, in the court of the priests, where there were places for this use; see Lev_6:16,17,26 7:6 8:31 14:13 Neh_13:5,9 Eze 42:13; which is called the most holy place , not simply and absolutely, as the place within the veil was, but in respect of the thing he speaks of, because this was the most holy of all the places appointed for caring of holy things, whereof some might be catch in any clean place in the camp, Lev_10:14, or in their own houses. And as the most holy place is sometimes called simply holy , so it is not strange if a holy place be called most holy , especially this place which was near to the altar of burnt-offerings, which is called most holy , and made all that touched it holy, Exo_29:37. And God would have these things eaten by them in a holy place, as in God's presence, that they might be obliged to the greater caution, and not to abuse God's good creatures, and especially holy things, to intemperance; and that they might learn to eat this and their other food with thankfulness to God the giver of it, and with respect to his service and glory, which was afterward prescribed to Christians, 1Co_10:31 1Ti_4:3.

Every male, and they only; whereas of peace-offerings the females might eat their share, Deu_12:18.

Numbers 18:11

The heave-offering, i.e. the right shoulder, which was the priest's.

Of their gift, to wit, of their peace-offerings, as may appear, because here is an enumeration of all that belonged to the priest in the several oblations, and therefore it is not likely that he would omit the peace-offerings, wherein the priest had a share, and the very share here spoken of and called a heave-offering, which was the right shoulder, Lev_7:32, which also might be eaten by the daughters, Lev_7:34 10:14, as is here said. See Num_6:17, &c. The wave-offerings, to wit, the breasts of the peace-offerings, which were waved Lev_7:30,31,34.

With thee, i.e. who are with thee in thy house; for if they were married to strangers, they might not eat of them, Lev_22:12,13.

In thy house, to wit, as fixed members of thy house, though they be bond-slaves; for strangers and hired servants were excepted, Lev_22:10,11.

Numbers 18:12

The best, Heb. the fat for the best: the fat of wheat is the best of it, Deu_32:14 Psa_81:16 147:14.

The first-fruits of them; as well those which were offered in the name and behalf of the body of the people at the solemn feasts, Lev_23:10,17, as those which were required of particular persons, Exo_22:29 23:19; whereof the precise quantity is not determined, but left free to the giver, as an exercise for his piety and charity, only they are enjoined to give the first and the best of them.

Numbers 18:13

i.e. Not only the first-fruits of the oil, and wine, and wheat now mentioned, but all other first-fruits of all other grains, and all fruit-trees, &c.

Every one that is clean; and none else, because these were first offered to God, and by consequent given to the priests; but for those which were directly and immediately given to the priests, the clean and unclean might eat of them.

Numbers 18:14

Dedicated to God by vow or otherwise, provided it be such a thing as might be catch or consumed by use; for the vessels or treasures of gold and silver which were devoted or dedicated by Joshua, David, or others, were not the priests' but were appropriated to the uses of the temple.

Numbers 18:15

Whether it be of men, which were offered to God in his temple, Exo_13:12 Luk_2:22, and to his service and disposal.

Numbers 18:16

Those that are to be redeemed, to wit, of men only, not of unclean beasts last mentioned, as is manifest from the time and price of redemption here mentioned, both which agree to men; the time, Num_18:16; the price, Num_3:46,47; but neither agree to unclean beasts, which were to be redeemed with a sheep, Exo_13:13, and that after it was eight days old.

According to thine estimation: this belongs either,

1. To the foregoing clause, to this purpose, that whereas women newly delivered of a child continued in their uncleanness either a longer or shorter time, according to the quality of the birth, as it was male or female, Lev_12:4,5, and the temper of the mother, the priest was to take that time when he judged the mother to be clean, that so the mother might be purified and the child redeemed at the same time. Or rather,

2. To the following clause, to wit, the price which was to be paid, as appears by comparing this place with Lev_27:2,3. And both there and here it is said to be done according to the priest's estimation, though a certain rule be added to guide his estimation, and a certain price set, because the priest was to apply that general rule to each person, and to put that price upon him.

Numbers 18:17

They are holy, to wit, in a peculiar manner, and higher degree than other beasts, consecrated to a holy use, even to be sacrificed unto God, and not to be redeemed nor alienated to any other use. Compare Deu_15:19.

Numbers 18:18

The flesh; all the flesh of them, and not only some parts, as in other sacrifices.

Numbers 18:19

A covenant of salt, i.e. a durable and perpetual covenant; so called here and 2Ch_13:5, either because salt is a sign of incorruption, as being of singular use to preserve things from corruption; or because it is confirmed and ratified on their part by salt, which is therefore called the salt of the covenant, for which the priests were obliged to take care that it should never be lacking from any meat-offering, Lev_2:13. And this promise or privilege conferred upon the priests is called a covenant because it is given them conditionally, upon condition of their service, and care about the worship of God, and sacrifices, which were commonly accompanied with meat-offerings, and therefore with salt.

Numbers 18:20

In their land, i.e. in the land of the children of Israel, mentioned Num_18:13. You shall not have a distinct and separate portion of land, as the other tribes shall. The reason of this law was, partly, because God would have them wholly devoted to and employed in his service, and therefore; free from worldly encumbrances and businesses; partly, because God had abundantly provided for them otherwise by tithes and first-fruits and oblations of all sorts; partly, because God would have their worldly comfort and happiness depend singly upon him and his service, and so would; oblige them to use more zeal and diligence in the advancement of piety, even for their own interest, which was either better or worse as true religion flourished or decayed; see Jud_17:9,10 19:18 2Ch_13:9 30:22 31:4; partly, that this might be a firm bond of hearty love and affection between the people and their teachers, the Levites, who, as they performed religious services for the people, so they received their subsistence from them; and partly, that by this means being dispersed among the several tribes, they might have the better opportunity for teaching and watching over the people, which was their duty, Deu_33:10 2Ch_30:22 Mal_2:4-7.

I am thy part, i.e. I have appointed thee a liberal maintenance out of my oblations.

Numbers 18:21

For the tithes were all given to the Levites, and out of their tithes the tenth was given to the priests, here Num_18:26, & C, and Neh_10:37,38.

Numbers 18:22

i.e. So nigh as to do any act proper to the priests or Levites.

Numbers 18:23

Their iniquity, i.e. the punishment due not only for their own, but also for the people's miscarriage, if it be committed through their connivance or negligence. And this was the reason why the priests withstood king Uzziah, when he would have burnt incense to the Lord, 2Ch_26:17,18.

Numbers 18:24

As an heave-offering unto the Lord, i.e. as a rent charge or an acknowledgment that they have and hold all their lands, and the fruits of it, from God's bounty. Note that the word heave-offering, which is for the most part understood of a particular kind of offerings heaved or lifted up to the Lord, is here used for any offering in general, as before, Num_18:8.

Numbers 18:27

It shall be accepted of you as much as if you offered it out of your own lands and labours.

Numbers 18:28

And to his children, which were one with him, and were all to have their share herein.

Numbers 18:29

Out of all your gifts; not only out of your tithes, but out of the other gifts which you receive from the people, and out of those fields which shall belong to your cities.

Ye shall offer, to wit, to the priest.

Every heave-offering, i.e. as many gifts, so many heave-offerings; you shall reserve a part out of each of them for the priest.

The hallowed part thereof: this may describe either,

1. The nature and proportion of this offering, and so peradventure he means the tenth part, which was the part or proportion that God hallowed or sanctified to himself as his proper portion, both here and elsewhere; or,

2. The reason or ground of this offering, because it is a thing hallowed or appropriated by God to himself, and given by him to the priest, and because the payment of this due doth hallow all the rest, so as they may use it with comfort and good conscience, as it follows, Num_18:31,32.

Numbers 18:30

Numbers 18:31

In every place, i.e. in every clean place, and not in the holy place only.

Numbers 18:32

The best of it; implying, that if they neglected this duty, they sinned in the use of such unhallowed food.

Neither shall ye pollute the holy things, as you will do, if you abuse their holy offerings, by reserving that entirely to yourselves which they offer to God to be disposed as he hath appointed, to wit, part to you, and part to the priests.

Numbers 19:1 NUMBERS CHAPTER 19

The manner of making the water of separation, and of what, Num_19:1-10. The use of it, wherewith the unclean are to be purged, Num_19:11-13. Laws concerning despisers of cleansing, Num_19:14-22.

No text from Poole on this verse.

Numbers 19:2

The ordinance of the law, or, the constitution of the law, i.e. that which God hath ordained or established by law.

That they bring thee, at their common charge, because it was for the common good. Red ; a fit colour to shadow forth both the bloody nature and complexion of sin, Isa_1:8, and the human nature, and especially the blood, of Christ, from which this water and all other rites had their purifying virtue.

Wherein is no blemish; a fit type of Christ, who was such, Heb_7:26 1Pe_1:19.

Upon which never came yoke; whereby may be signified, either that Christ in himself was free from all the yoke or obligation of God's command, till for our sakes he took up our yoke, and put himself under the law; or that Christ was not drawn or forced to undertake our burden and cross, but that he did voluntarily choose it. See Joh_10:17,18.

Numbers 19:3

Unto Eleazar, who was the second priest, and, in some cases, the vicegerent or deputy of the high priest. To him, not to Aaron, because this service made him unclean for a season, Num_19:7, and consequently unfit for holy ministrations; whereas the high priest was, as far as possibly he could, to be preserved from all sorts of defilement, and constantly fit for his high and holy work. Without the camp; partly because it was reputed an unclean and accursed thing, being ceremoniously laden with the sins of all the people; and partly to signify that Christ should suffer without the camp, as he did, Heb_13:12, in the place where malefactors suffered, Lev_24:14.

One; a person appointed by Eleazar for this work.

Numbers 19:4

Directly before the tabernacle, or, towards or over against the tabernacle ; either,

1. Near to it; and so we must suppose that he took some of the blood in a basin, and carried it from without the camp to the tabernacle, and then returned to this place again; which might be done, though it be not here expressed. And this seems to agree best with other places, where this sprinkling seven times was performed in or near the tabernacle, as Lev_4:17. Or,

2. Standing at a good distance from it, even without the camp, yet turning and looking towards it. For here is no intimation that he went into the camp before this work was done, but rather the contrary is implied, Num_19:7. And because being defiled by this work he could not come near to the tabernacle, it was sufficient for him to turn and look towards it. Either way this posture signified his presenting of this blood before the Lord by way of atonement and satisfaction for his and the people's sins, and his expectation of acceptance and pardon only from God, and from his mercy-seat in the tabernacle.

Numbers 19:5

To signify the sharp and grievous sufferings of Christ for our sins.

Her blood; all of it but what was spent in sprinkling.

Numbers 19:6

All which are here burnt, and as it were offered to God, that they might be sanctified to this holy use for the future; for of these kinds of things was the sprinkle made wherewith the unclean were sprinkled, Lev_14:4.

Numbers 19:7

Partly to teach us the imperfection of the Levitical priesthood, in which the priest himself was defiled by some parts of his work, and the absolute necessity of a better and holier priesthood; and partly to show that Christ himself, though he had no sin of his own, yet was reputed by men, and judged by God, as an unclean and sinful person, by reason of our sins which were laid upon him, Isa_53:12 2Co_5:21.

Numbers 19:8

No text from Poole on this verse.

Numbers 19:9

For the congregation of the children of Israel, i.e. for their use, and therefore in a fit place or places, whence any of them might easily procure it.

For a water, or, to the water , i.e. to be put to the water, or mixed with it.

Of separation, i.e. appointed for the cleansing of them that are in a state of separation, who for their uncleanness separated from the congregation. Either the heifer thus managed, or the water thus made and sprinkled, is a purification for sin, Heb. a sin , i.e. a kind of an offering for sin, or rather a mean for the expiation or cleansing of sin. The name of sin is sometimes given to the punishment of sin, and sometimes to the sacrifice or offering for sin.

Numbers 19:10

The stranger that sojourneth, to wit, a proselyte, not any stranger, as some understand it. For since it is confessed all the other ceremonial laws do not oblige them, and that where the name of stranger is put, as here it is, it generally speaks of a proselyte, it is more reasonable to take it so here, than without any reason or evidence to make this a particular exception from the general rule.

Numbers 19:11

Whereas the touch of a dead beast made a man unclean only till even, Lev_11:24.

Numbers 19:12

With it, i.e. with the water of separation.

On the third day, to typify Christ's resurrection on that day, by which we are cleansed or sanctified.

On the seventh day he shall be clean, to teach us that our purification in this life is gradual, and not perfect till we come to that eternal sabbath, which the seventh day respected.

He shall not be clean; but was first to purify himself, and four days after that to be clean.

Numbers 19:13

Whosoever toucheth, to wit, if this transgression be done presumptuously; for if it was done ignorantly, he was only to offer sacrifice, Lev_5:3,6,17.

Defileth the tabernacle of the Lord, by approaching to it in his uncleanness; for holy things or places were ceremonially defiled with the touch of any unclean person or thing. See Lev_15:31
16:16 Hag_2:13.

His uncleanness is yet upon him; he continues in his guilt and filth, not now to be washed away by this water, but to be punished by cutting off.

Numbers 19:14

No text from Poole on this verse.

Numbers 19:15

Every open vessel, because it receives the air of the tent, by which it is ceremonially polluted. Compare Lev_11:32,33.

Numbers 19:16

With a sword, or by any other violent way.

Numbers 19:17

Running water, i.e, waters flowing from a spring or river which are the purest. These manifestly signify God's Spirit, which is oft compared to water, Joh_7:38,39, and by which alone true purification is obtained.

In a vessel, where they were to be mixed, and then the water was to be strained out and kept for this use.

Numbers 19:18

A clean person, to wit, a priest; for to such the work of cleansing was appropriated. See Le 13§.

Upon all the vessels; even those which were in part purified by the fire. See Num_31:23.

Numbers 19:19

No text from Poole on this verse.

Numbers 19:20

Shall not purify himself, i.e, shall contemptuously refuse to submit to this way of purification.

Numbers 19:21

Shall wash his clothes, because he is unclean, as it here follows. It is strange that the same water should cleanse one person, and defile another; but God would have it so, partly, to teach us that it did not cleanse by any virtue in itself, or in the work done, but only by virtue of God's appointment; partly, to mind the Jews of the imperfection of their priesthood, and their ritual purifications and expiations, and consequently of the necessity of a better priest and sacrifice and way of purifying, which these outward rites did point at; and partly, to show that the efficacy of God's ordinances doth not depend upon the person or quality of his ministers, because the same person who was polluted himself could and did cleanse others.

He that toucheth the water of separation; either by sprinkling of it, or by being sprinkled with it; for even he that was cleansed by it, was not fully cleansed as soon as he was sprinkled, but only at the even of that day, as is said here and above, Num_19:19.

Numbers 19:22

The unclean person; not he who is so only by touching the water of separation, Num_19:21, but he who is so by the greater sort of uncleanness, which lasted seven days, of which Num_19:11,16, and which was not removed without the use of this water of purification, as is manifest from the context and other places of Scripture, and from the nature of the thing; for the lesser sort of uncleanness, mentioned in the foregoing verse, lasted only till even, and was cleansed by the sole washing of his clothes and flesh in water, Num_19:7, without any use of this water of purification, which, if it had been necessary, must have been used on the third and on the seventh day, according to the rule, Num_19:12,19, and so the uncleanness of one day had been made an uncleanness of seven days, which is a contradiction. Besides it is unreasonable, that he who immediately touched the defiling thing, should be no more and longer unclean than he who touched that person only; and it was contrary to other rules in like cases, as Le 15, where the man or woman having an issue, are thereby made unclean for seven days, Lev_15:13,28, but he who toucheth them is made unclean only till even, Le 15 7,27. And therefore this cannot be meant of him who was unclean by touching this water, who himself was unclean only till even, Num_19:21, as also he who toucheth him is in this place.

Shall be unclean, to signify to us the very infectious nature of sin and of sinful company.

Until even, because as his defilement was less, so it was fit the duration of it should be shorter.

Numbers 20:1 NUMBERS CHAPTER 20

The people journey in the wilderness of Zin; they murmur against Moses for want of water, Num_20:2-5. God commandeth Moses to speak to the rock, that it might yield water, Num_20:7,8. Moses striking the rock twice, Num_20:9-11, displeaseth God, Num_20:12. Moses desiring passage through Edom, Num_20:14-17, is denied, Num_20:18-21. Aaron by God's command delivering up his office to Eleazar his son, dieth, Num_20:21-28. All the congregation bemoan him, Num_20:29.

Then, to wit, after many other stations and long journeys here omitted. but particularly described Num 33.

The desert of Zin; a place near the land of Edom, distinct and distant from that,

Sin, Exo_16:1.

In the first month, to wit, of the fortieth year, as is evident, because the next station to this was in Mount Hor, where Aaron died, Num_20:22,23, &c., who died in the fifth month of the fortieth year, Num_33:38. Moses doth not give us an exact journal of all their occurrences in the wilderness, but only of those which were most remarkable, and especially of those which happened in the first and second, and in the fortieth year.

Kadesh; whether the same place called Kadesh-barnea , where they were long since, Num_13:26, and to which they now return after thirty-eight years' tedious travels and wanderings in the desert, Deu_2:14, or another place more southerly, it is not material. Miriam died four months before Aaron, and but a few more before Moses.

Numbers 20:2

The water having followed them through all their former journeys, began now to fail them here, because they were now come near Canaan and other countries, where waters might be had by ordinary means, and therefore God would not use extraordinary, lest he should seem to prostitute the honour of miracles. This story, though like that Exo 17, is different from it, as appears by divers circumstances.

Numbers 20:3

i.e. Suddenly, rather than to die such a lingering and painful death. Their sin was much greater than their parents' in like case, because they should have taken warning by their miscarriages, and by the terrible effects of them, which their eyes had seen.

Numbers 20:5

Numbers 20:6

Moses and Aaron went from the presence of the assembly; partly to avoid the growing rage of the people, for God's singular protection of them did not exclude the use of ordinary means; and partly to go to God for relief and redress.

Numbers 20:7

No text from Poole on this verse.

Numbers 20:8

The rod; that rod which was laid up before the Lord in the tabernacle, as appears from Num_20:9. But whether it was Aaron's rod, which was undoubtedly laid up there, Num_17:10, or Moses's rod, by which he wrought so many miracles, it is not considerable; or whether it was not one and the same rod, which was commonly called Moses's rod, as here, Num_20:11, and elsewhere, and sometimes Aaron's rod, as Exo_7:12, which may seem most probable. For it is likely, though not related elsewhere in Scripture, that wonder-working rod, called the rod of God, Exo_4:20, was laid up in some part of the tabernacle, though not in or near the ark, where Aaron's blossoming rod for a particular reason was put. Speak ye unto the rock, which will sooner hear and obey my commands than these sottish and stubborn people.

Numbers 20:9

i.e. Out of the tabernacle.

Numbers 20:10

No text from Poole on this verse.

Numbers 20:11

To the men it was a sacrament, 1Co_10:3,4, but to the beasts it was no holy, but a common thing. So that the elements in the sacraments have no inherent and inseparable holiness, but only a relative holiness with respect to their use, out of which they are unholy and common.

Numbers 20:12

Ye believed me not, but showed your infidelity; which they did either by their looks and gestures, or rather by the matter and manner of their expressions and actions; either,

1. By smiting the rock, and that twice, which is emphatically noted, as if he doubted whether once smiting would have done it, whereas he was not commanded to smite so much as once, but only to speak to it; or,

2. By the doubtfulness of these words, Num_20:10,

Must we fetch water out of the rock? which implies a suspicion of it, as the like words do, Gen_18:13, whereas they should have spoken positively and confidently to the rock to give forth waters. And yet they did not doubt of the power of God, but of his will, whether he would gratify these rebels with this further miracle, after so many of the like kind. And besides the words themselves, it is considerable, both with what mind they were spoken, which God saw to be distrustful, and in what manner they were delivered, which the people might discern to come from misbelief or doubt. And there might be divers other unbelieving words used by them at this time and place, though they be not here recorded, it being usual in Scripture to give only the sum or principal heads of discourses or events, leaving the rest to be gathered out of them. See Psa_106:32,33.

To sanctify me, i.e. to give me glory of my power in doing this miracle, and of my truth in punctually fulfilling my promise so to do, and of my goodness in doing it notwithstanding the people's perverseness.

In the eyes of the children of Israel: this made their sin scandalous to the Israelites, who of themselves were too prone to infidelity, and little needed such an ill example; to prevent the contagion whereof God leaves a monument of his great displeasure upon them, and inflicts a punishment as public and manifest as their sin was.

Numbers 20:13

Meribah, called Meribah Kadesh , to distinguish it from another Meribah , Exo_17:7. Sanctified in them , or, among them , to wit, the children of Israel last mentioned, by the demonstration of his omnipotency, veracity, and clemency towards the Israelites, and of his impartial holiness and severity against sin even in his greatest friends and favourites, as Moses was.

Numbers 20:14

Moses sent messengers, by God's direction, Deu_2:1-3

Thy brother; for was not Esau (who is Edom , Gen_36:1) Jacob's brother ? Mal_1:2. All the travel ; all the wanderings and afflictions of our parents, and of us their children, which doubtless have come to thine ears.

Numbers 20:16

An angel, to wit, the Angel of the covenant, Christ Jesus, who first appeared to Moses in the bush, Exo_3:2, and afterward in the cloudy pillar, who conducted Moses and the people out of Egypt, and through the wilderness, as appears from Exo_14:19 23:20 33:14 1Co_9:4. For though Moses may be called an angel or messenger , a title given to Phineas, Jud_2:1; and to the prophets, 2Ch_36:16; and to Haggai, Hag_1:13; yet it is not probable that he is meant, partly, because Moses was the person that sent this message; partly, because there was no reason why he should express himself by such a dark and doubtful title to them: and partly, because another Angel besides and above Moses did conduct them, and the mention hereof to the Edomites was likely to give more authority and efficacy to their present message.

In Kadesh, i.e. near the city Kadesh, the particle in being oft so used, as we have showed.

Numbers 20:17

Wells, or pits, which any of you have digged for your private use, to wit, without paying for it, Num_20:19 Deu_2:6; but only of the waters of common rivers, which are free to all passengers, and will not be prejudicial to thee.

Numbers 20:18

i.e. Through my country, as thou desirest; I will not suffer time to do so: which was an act of common policy to secure themselves from so numerous a host.

Numbers 20:19

I will pay for it; for water was a scarce commodity in those parts.

Through his border, but permitted them to go by their border, Deu_2:4,8 Jud 11:18, and furnished them with victuals for their money, Deu_2:29.

Israel turned away, according to God's command, Deu_2:5.

Numbers 20:24

This was one, but not the only reason. God would not have Moses and Aaron to carry the people into Canaan, for this reason also, to signify the insufficiency of the Mosaical and Aaronical priesthood to make them happy, and the necessity of a better, and so to keep the Israelites from resting in them so as to be taken off from their expectation of Christ, and from the entertainment of him when he should come.

Numbers 20:26

Of his garments, to wit, of his priestly garments, Exo_28:2 Lev_8:7-9, in token of his resignation of his office. See the like Isa_22:15,19-21.

Put them upon Eleazar, by way of admission and inauguration of him to his office.

Numbers 20:27

That their hearts might be more affected with their loss of so great a pillar, and that they all might be witnesses of the translation of the priesthood from Aaron to Eleazar, and therefore might give him the honour due to him.

Numbers 20:28

Aaron died there, to wit, in Mount Hor.

Object. He died in Mosera, Deu_10:6.

Answ. Mosera was the general name of the place where that station was, and Mount Hor is a particular place in it, where he died, and was buried also, Deu_10:6.

Numbers 20:29

i.e.

When the congregation understood by the relation of Moses and Eleazar, and by other signs. So seeing is used Gen_42:1 Act_7:12.

Thirty days; the time of public and solemn mourning for great persons. See Deu_34:8.

Numbers 21:1 NUMBERS CHAPTER 21

The Canaanites fight against Israel, and take some of them prisoners, Num_21:1. Through God's assistance they overcome them, and destroy their cities, Num_21:2,3. The people murmur, Num_21:4,5; are plagued with fiery serpents, Num_21:6. They repent, Num_21:7. A brazen serpent erected, to which they look, and are saved, Num_21:8,9. They journey, Num_21:10-16. Their hymn for water given at Beer, Num_21:17. They sue for passage to the Amorites; are denied; fight them; overcome, and dwell in their cities, Num_21:18-26. Proverbial sayings concerning it, Num_21:27-30. Og king of Bashan, his sons, and all his people, are killed by the Israelites, and their land possessed by them, Num_21:33-35.

King Arad the Canaanite; or rather, the Canaanite king of Arad; for Arad is not the name of a man, but of a city or territory, as may seem from Jos_12:14 Jud_1:16, if at least this was the same place with that. And he seems to be called a Canaanite in a general sense, as the Amorites and others sometimes are.

In the south, to wit, of Canaan, as appears from Num_33:40, towards the east, and near the Dead Sea.

By the way of the spies; not of those spies which Moses sent to spy the land, Num_13:17, for that was done thirty-eight years before this, and they went so privately, that the Canaanites took no notice of them, nor knew which way they came or went; but of the spies which he himself sent out to observe the marches and motions of the Israelites. But the words may be otherwise rendered; either thus, in the manner of spies , so the sense is, when he heard that divers of the Israelites came into or towards his country in the nature of spies, to prepare the way for the rest; or thus, by the way of Atharim , a place so called, as the seventy interpreters here take it, and it seems not improbable. Took some of them prisoners; which God permitted for Israel's humiliation and punishment, and to teach them not to expect the conquest of that land from their own wisdom or valour, but wholly from God's favour and assistance. See Deu_9:4 Psa_44:3,4.

Numbers 21:2

Being sensible of their own weakness, they endeavour to engage God to help them in the war, which they intended to renew.

I will utterly destroy their cities; I will reserve no person nor thing for my own use, but devote them all to total destruction, which was the consequent of such vows. See Lev_27:29 Deu_13:15

Numbers 21:3

They utterly destroyed them: when?

Answ. Either,

1. Some time after this, under Joshua, who subdued, among others, the king of Arad, Jos_12:14. And so this is mentioned here by anticipation, that the vow being now made and mentioned, the effect or performance of it might be recorded, though out of its place; and so this verse must be supposed to be added by some of the prophets, and inserted into Moses's history, as some other passages seem to be. Or,

2. At this time; and so this is not the same Arad with that, Jos_12:14, nor this the same Hormah with that there mentioned, but another of the same name, which is most frequent in persons and places in Scripture. And this is the more probable, because that Arad and Hormah, Jos_12:14, are two distinct places, and had divers kings, whereas here the same place is called both Arad and Hormah; and because that Arad seems to be at some good distance from this, and more within the country, and more northward, as may be gathered from the other places joined with it, Jos 12$. whereas this Arad was near Edom, Num_21:4, and in the south, Num_21:1.

Quest. 1. How could this be done in the land of Canaan, when Moses neither entered himself, nor led the people into that land?

Answ. Neither Moses nor the whole body of the people did this exploit, but a select number sent out for this purpose to punish that king and people, who were so fierce and malicious that they came out of their own country to fight with the Israelites in the wilderness; and these, when they had done this work, returned to their brethren into the wilderness.

Quest. 2. Why did they not all now go into Canaan, when some of them had once entered it, and pursue this victory?

Answ. Because God would not permit it, there being several works yet to be done, other people must be conquered, the Israelites must be further humbled and tried and purged, Moses must die, and then they shall enter, and that in a more glorious manner, even over Jordan, which shall be miraculously dried up, and give them passage.

Numbers 21:4

By the way of the Red Sea, i.e. which leadeth to the Red Sea, as they must needs do to compass the land of Edom.

Because of the way; by reason of this journey, which was long, and troublesome, and preposterous, (for they were now going towards Egypt,) and unexpected, either because they doubted not but their brethren the Edomites would grant them their reasonable request of passing through their land, which disappointment made it worse; or because the successful entrance and victorious progress which some of them had made in the borders of Canaan, made them think they might have speedily gone in and taken possession of it, and so have saved their tedious travels and further difficulties into which Moses had again brought them.

Numbers 21:5

Against God; against Christ, their chief Conductor, whom they tempted, 1Co_10:9.

This light bread, i.e. of small substance and virtue. Thus contemptuously do they speak of manna, whereas it appears it yielded excellent nourishment, because in the strength of it they were able to go so many and such tedious journeys.

Numbers 21:6

Such there were many in this wilderness, Deu_8:15, which having been hitherto restrained by God, are now let loose and sent among them. They are called fiery from their effects, because their poison caused an intolerable heat, and burning, and thirst in the bodies of the Israelites, which was aggravated with this circumstance of the place, that here was no water, Num_21:5.

Numbers 21:7

No text from Poole on this verse.

Numbers 21:8

A fiery serpent, i.e. the figure of a serpent in brass, which is of a fiery colour. This would require some time: God would not speedily take off the judgment, because he saw they were not thoroughly humbled.

Set it on a pole, that the people might see it from all parts of the camp; and therefore the pole must be high, and the serpent large.

This method of cure was prescribed, partly that it might appear to be God's own work, and not the effect of nature or art; and partly that it might be an eminent type of our salvation by Christ. See Joh_3:14,15. The serpent signified Christ, who was in the likeness of sinful flesh , Rom_8:3, though without sin, as this brazen serpent had the outward shape, but not the inward poison of the other serpents: the pole resembled the cross upon which Christ was lift up for our salvation; and looking up to it designed our believing in Christ.

Numbers 21:9

He was delivered from death, and cured of his disease.

Numbers 21:10

Not immediately, but after two other stations, mentioned Num 33.

Numbers 21:11

Moab is called the wilderness of Moab , Deu_2:8.

Numbers 21:12

Or rather, by the torrent or brook of Zared , as we render it, Deu_2:13; which ran into the Dead Sea, and from which the valley also might be so called.

Numbers 21:13

On the other side of Arnon, or rather, on this side of Arnon , for so it now was to the Israelites, who had not yet passed over it, as appears from Deu_2:24. But the same words, Jud_11:18, are to be rendered on the other side of Arnon , for so it was to Jephthah; and the same preposition signifieth on this side, or beyond , according to the circumstances of the place.

Between Moab and the Amorite, i.e. though formerly it and the land beyond it belonged to Moab, yet afterwards it had been taken from them by Sihon, Num_21:26,28. This is added to reconcile two seemingly contrary commands of God, the one that of not meddling with the land of the Moabites, Deu_2:9, the other that of going over Arnon and taking possession of the land beyond it, Deu_2:24, because, saith he, it is not now the land of the Moabites, but of the Amorites.

Numbers 21:14

The book of the wars of the Lord seems to have been some poem or narration of the wars and victories of the Lord, either by or relating to the Israelites; which may be asserted without any prejudice to the integrity of the Holy Scripture, because this book doth not appear to have been written by a prophet, or to be designed for a part of the canon, but by some other ingenious person, who intended only to write an historical relation of these matters, which yet Moses might quote, as St. Paul doth some of the heathen poets. And as St. Luke assures us that many did write a history of the things done and said by Christ, Luk_1:1, whose writings were never received as canonical, the like may be justly conceived concerning this and some few other books mentioned in the Old Testament; though the words may be thus rendered, Wherefore it shall be said in the relation, or narration (for so the Hebrew sepher is confessed to signify) of the wars of the Lord. In the Red Sea; or, at Vaheb in Suphah, or in the land of Suph . Vaheb seems to be the name not of a man, but of a city or place, and Suphah the name of the country where it was; and the Hebrew particle eth is oft rendered at . And whereas the sense seems to be imperfect, it must be noted, that he quotes only a fragment or piece of the book, and that principally to prove the situation of Arnon, which he had asserted Num_21:13, from which end the passage quoted is sufficient. And the sense is easily to be understood, for it is plain enough that this poet or writer is describing the wars and works of God by the several places where they were done; and having begun the sentence before, and mentioned other places, he comes to these here mentioned, at Vaheb in Suphah, and at the brooks of Arnon, &c. And it seems probable that the war here designed was that of Sihon against the Moabites, mentioned below, Num_21:26, which is fitly ascribed to the Lord, because it was undertaken and perfected by the singular direction and assistance of God, and that for the sake of the Israelites, that by this means that country might be invaded and possessed by them, without taking it away from the Moabites, which they were forbidden to meddle with or to disturb, Deu_2:9, and so their title to it might be more just and unquestionable. See Jud_11:12,13,27.

In the brooks of Arnon, i.e. the brook, the plural number for the singular, as the plural number rivers is used concerning Jordan, Psa_74:15, and concerning Tigris, Nah_2:6, and concerning Euphrates, Psa_137:1, and concerning Thermoodon in Virgil, all which may be so called because of the several little streams into which they were divided.

Numbers 21:15

Ar; a chief city in Moab, as appears from Isa_15:1, of which Num_21:28.

Numbers 21:16

Beer, and Mattanah, Nahaliel, and Bamoth named here, Num_21:19, are not mentioned among those places where they pitched or encamped, Num 33. Either therefore they did not pitch or encamp in these places, but only pass by or through them, nor indeed is it here said they pitched or encamped in these places, which is said of those places, Num 33, but only that they went to them, Num_21:18; or, these are stations omitted there, and to be supplied from hence; for though it be there said they went from such a place, and pitched in such a place, yet it is not said they went immediately from the one place to the other, and therefore they might take these places in their way.

Will give them water, to wit, in a miraculous manner.

Numbers 21:17

Israel sang this song, to praise God for giving them such a seasonable blessing, before they asked it, or complained for the want of it.

Spring up; give forth thy waters that we may drink. Heb. Ascend , i.e. let thy waters, which now lie hid below in the earth, ascend for thy use. It is either a prediction that it should spring up, or a prayer that it might, or a command in the name of God directed to the well, by a usual prosopopoeia, as when God bids the heavens hear , and the earth give ear , Isa_1:2. Any of these ways it shows their faith. Sing ye unto it ; or, sing ye of it ; or, answer to it or concerning it ; it being the manner of the Jewish singers that one should answer to another, of which see Exo_15:21 1Sa_18:7.

Numbers 21:18

The princes digged; either by themselves, or by others whom they commanded to do it. By the direction of the lawgiver , or, with the lawgiver , i.e. Moses; they together with Moses, or they by Moses's direction and appointment, which is signified Num_21:16.

Their staves are here mentioned, either,

1. As the ensigns of their authority, Jud_5:14, by which they gave this command of digging.

2. As the instruments of their work; not that they, did formally and effectually dig the well or receptacle for the water, for which spades were more proper than staves, but that as Moses smote the rock with his rod, so they struck the earth with their staves, making only some small impression for form sake, or as a sign that God would cause the water to flow forth out of the earth where they smote it, as he did before out of the rock.

Numbers 21:19

See Poole "Num_21:16".

Numbers 21:20

In the valley; or, the valley , which might be called Bamoth , not because it was a place naturally high, but from divers other reasons, which may be easily guessed. Or, to the valley , or to that valley , that famous or rather infamous valley, to wit, of Abel-shittim , Num_33:49, where they committed those foul abominations recorded Num 25

Pisgah was the top of these high hills of Abarim; of which see Deu_3:17,27 32:49 34:1,6.

Numbers 21:21

By God's allowance, that so Sihon's malice might be the more evident and inexcusable, and that their title to his country more clear in the judgments of all men, as being gotten by a just war, into which they were forced for their own defence.

Numbers 21:22

They spoke what they seriously intended and would have done, if he had given them quiet passage; but withal they knew that Sihon would not do it, and that he would withstand them, and that they should subdue him and take his land, as God had told them before they sent this message, as appears from Deu_2:21,26,27; and accordingly God hardened his spirit, and made his heart obstinate , for this end, that he might deliver him into Israel's hand there , Num_21:31. And no wonder, for he and his people were Amorites, and therefore devoted to destruction, as all that people were.

Numbers 21:23

Jahaz, a city, of which see Deu_2:32 Jer_48:21.

Numbers 21:24

From Arnon; or which reached from Arnon, &c. such supplements being very usual; and so here is contained a description or limitation of Sihon's conquest and kingdom, that it extended only from Arnon —unto the children of Ammon ; and then the following words, for the border of the children of Ammon was strong , come in very fitly, not as a reason why the Israelites did not or could not conquer the Ammonites, for they were absolutely forbidden to meddle with them, Deu_3:8; but as a reason why Sihon could not enlarge his conquests and empire to the Ammonites, as he had done to the Moabites.

Jabbok; a river by which the countries of Ammon and Moab were in part bounded and divided.

Was strong; either by the advantage of the river, or by their strong holds in their frontiers.

Numbers 21:25

Having destroyed the ancient inhabitants, Deu_2:34.

Numbers 21:26

The city of Sihon: this is added as a reason why Israel took possession of this land, notwithstanding God's prohibition of meddling with them or their land, Deu_2:9, because it was not now the land of the Moabites, but had been some time since taken from them, and in the possession of the Amorites.

The former king of Moab, i.e. the predecessor of Balak, who was the present king.

Numbers 21:27

That speak in proverbs; the poets, or other ingenious persons, to wit, of the Amorites or Canaanites, who made this following song of triumph over the vanquished Moabites; which is here brought in partly as a proof that this was now Sihon's land, and partly as an evidence of the just judgment of God in spoiling the spoilers, and subduing these who insulted over their conquered enemies.

Come into Heshbon: these are the words either of Sihon speaking thus to his people, or of the people exhorting one another to come and possess and repair the city which they had taken.

The city of Sihon; that which once was the royal city of the king of Moab, but now is the city of Sihon.

Numbers 21:28

A fire, i.e. the fury of war, which is oft and fitly compared to fire here, as Isa_47:14 Amo_1:7,10,12,14 2:2,5;

Heshbon; that city which before was a refuge and defence to all the country, now is turned into a great annoyance and a public mischief.

Ar of Moab.

Quest. How can this be, since Ar was yet in the hands of the Moabites, Deu_2:9,18,29?

Answ. 1. This may be understood not of the city Ar, but of the people or the country subject or belonging to that great and royal city, as the Chaldee understands it.

2. Possibly Ar was taken by Sihon of the Moabites, but afterwards was either recovered by the Moabites, or upon the Israelites' approach quitted by Sihon, gathering all his forces together that he might fight with the Israelites, and so repossessed by the Moabites.

3. This place may be thus rendered, It shall consume Ar of Moab , the past tense being put for the future, as is usual in prophetic passages; and so this may be the Amorites' prediction or presage, that having taken Heshbon and its territories, they should now extend their victories to

Ar of Moab, though they fell short of that hope, as ordinarily men do.

The lords of the high places; either,

1. The princes or governors of the strong holds, which were frequently in high places, especially in that mountainous country, and which were in divers parts all along the river of Arnon; and having taken some of these, they promised to themselves that they should take all the rest, and so proceed further and further, till they had taken Ar itself. Or rather,

2. The priests and people that worshipped their god in their high places; which may seem more probable,

1. Because as the Israelites worshipped God, so the heathens worshipped Baal, in high places, Num_22:41, and particularly the Moabites are noted for so doing, Jer_48:35.

2. Because amongst the eminent places of Moab there is mention of Bamoth-baal, or, of the high places of Baal , Jos_13:17.

Numbers 21:29

Alas, poor Moab! thou couldst not save thyself from Sihon's sword.

People of Chemosh, i.e. the worshippers of Chemosh: so the god of the Moabites was called, 1Ki_11:7, 33 2Ki_23:13 Jer_48:46.

He, i.e. their god, hath delivered up his own people to his and their enemies; he could not defend them, but suffered many of them to be killed; nor could be secure even those that had escaped the sword, but suffered them to fall into their enemies' hands, and by them to be carried into captivity.

Unto Sihon king of the Amorites. Now the words of this and the following verse seem to be not a part of that triumphant song or poem made, as I suppose, by some Amoritish bard or poet, which seems to be concluded, Num_21:28; but of the Israelites making their observation upon it. And here they scoff at the impotency not only of the Moabites, but of their god also, who could not save his people from the sword of Sihon and the Amorites.

Numbers 21:30

Though you feeble Moabites, and your god too, could not resist Sihon, we Israelites, by the help of our God, have shot, to wit, with success and victory, as the following words show, at them, to wit, at Sihon and his Amorites; which is easily and plainly understood, both from the foregoing and following words.

Heshbon, the royal city of Sihon, and by him lately repaired, is perished, is taken away from Sihon, and so is all his territory or country, even as far as

Dibon, which, as some think is called Dibon-gad , Num_33:45.

Which reached unto Medeba, i.e. whose territory extendeth to Medeba. Or, yea, even to Medeba ; for the Hebrew word asher is sometimes used for yea , or moreover , as 1Sa_15:20 Psa_10:6 95:11. The sense is, the whole country of Sihon, taken by him from the Moabites, is wasted and perished.

Numbers 21:31

Numbers 21:32

Jaazer; one of the cities of Moab, formerly taken from them by Sihon, and now taken from him by the Israelites, Num_32:1,3,35; and after the decay or destruction of the kingdom of the ten tribes, repossessed by the Moabites, Jer_48:32.

Numbers 21:33

Og also was a king of the Amorites, of whom see Deu_3:1,11. And it may seem that Sihon and Og were the leaders or captains of two great colonies which came out of Canaan, and drove out the former inhabitants of these places.

Bashan, a rich country, famous for its pastures and breed of cattle, Deu_32:14 Psa_22:12 Jer_1:19, and for its oaks , Eze_27:6.

Numbers 21:34

Fear him not; a necessary caution, for he was a great giant, Deu_3:11, likely to strike them with terror.

Numbers 22:1 NUMBERS CHAPTER 22

The Israelites pitch in the plains of Moab, Num_22:1. Balak the king sends for Balaam to curse Israel, Num_22:2-8. He inquires of the Lord, who forbids him to go: he goes not, Num_22:9-14. Balak sends again: the Lord permits Balaam to go, Num_22:15-21. An angel stands in the way; which his ass perceives: his eyes are at length opened to see the angel, who rebukes him, Num_22:22-33. He confesses his fault, and offers to go back; He is commanded to go on, and speak as should be revealed to him, Num_22:34,35. Balak comes to meet him; receives him; expostulates with him; he declares he has no power but to speak the word which God should put into his mouth, Num_22:36-41.

The plains of Moab still retained their ancient title, though they had been taken away from the Moabites by Sihon, and from him by the Israelites.

By Jericho, i.e. over against Jericho; or, near the passage over Jordan to Jericho, or its territories.

Numbers 22:2

Balak, the son or successor of him whom Sihon had spoiled of part of his kingdom, Num_21:26. Of him see Jud_11:25 Mic_6:5.

Numbers 22:3

As it was foretold both in general of all nations, Deu_2:25, and particularly concerning Moab, Exo_15:15.

Numbers 22:4

The elders of Midian, called the kings of Midian, Num_31:8, and princes of Midian, Jos_13:21; who though divided into their kingdoms, yet were now unified upon the approach of the Israelites their common enemy; and being, as it seems, a potent and crafty people, and neighbours to the Moabites, these seek confederacy with them. We read of Midianites near Mount Sinai, Exo 2 Exo 3, which seem to have been a part or colony of this people that went out to seek new quarters, as the manner of those times was, but the body of that people were seated in those parts, as is evident from many scriptures.

Lick up, i.e. consume and utterly destroy, in which sense the fire is said to lick up the water and sacrifices, 1Ki_18:38. The meaning is, we can expect no mercy from them, they will utterly root us out as they did the Amorites, if we do not make a stout and timely opposition.

All that are round about us, i.e. all our people, who lived in the country and territory adjoining to each city, where the princes resided.

Numbers 22:5

Balaam is called a prophet , 2Pe_2:16, because God was pleased to inspire and direct him to speak the following prophecy, as he did inspire Caiaphas to speak those words, Joh_11:51,52, and as sometimes he did for a time inspire other wicked men; but in truth he was a soothsayer , as he is called, Jos_13:22. See Num_24:1.

Beor, or Bosor , 2Pe_2:15; for he had two names, as many others had.

Pethor; a city in Mesopotamia or Aram: see Num_23:7 Deu_23:4.

By the river, i.e. by Euphrates, which is oft called the river , by way of eminency, as Gen_15:18 Jos_24:2,15, and here the river of Balaam's land or country , to wit, of Mesopotamia or Aram, Num_21:7.

They abide over against me; they are encamped in my neighbourhood, ready to invade my kingdom.

Numbers 22:6

Curse me this people, i.e. curse them for my sake and benefit; use thy utmost power, which thou hast with thy gods or infernal spirits, to blast and ruin them.

That we may smite them; thou by thy magical imprecations, and I by my sword joined with them. He had some experience of, or, at least, a great confidence in, Balaam's skill and power in these matters.

Numbers 22:7

With the rewards of divination, Heb. with divinations ; by which he understands not the instruments of divination, which it was needless and absurd to bring to so eminent a diviner, who doubtless was thoroughly furnished for his own trade; but the rewards of it, as it is explained 2Pe_2:15, and as in the Hebrew, 2Sa_4:10, good tidings is put for the reward of good tidings . Nor is it probable they would go to, or could expect to prevail with such a person, especially being noted for his covetousness, as appears from the story, without that powerful engine.

Numbers 22:8

The night was the time when God used to reveal his mind by dreams. Here is the first discovery of his wickedness, that he takes time to consider, and doth his endeavour to effect that wicked notion of cursing the Israelites, which he should have rejected and abhorred at the first mention of it.

As the Lord shall speak, Heb. Jehovah , the true God, whom he here mentions, either for his own greater reputation, as if he consulted not with inferior spirits, as other soothsayers did, but with the supreme God; or rather because this was Israel's God, and the only possible way of ruining them was by engaging their God against them; as the known way of the Romans and other heathens, when they went to besiege any city, they used enchantments to call forth that god under whose peculiar protection they were.

The princes of Moab, and of Midian too, as is manifest from Num_22:7, which was needless to repeat here.

Numbers 22:9

God came unto Balaam, not to gratify his covetous desire, but to advance his own honour and service, even by the counsels of his enemies. He asketh not for his own information, but partly that Balaam by repeating the thing in God's presence might be convinced and ashamed of his sin and folly in offering his service in such a cursed business; and partly for a foundation to the following answer.

Numbers 22:12

God revealeth his mind to Balaam, not for any love to him, but for the sake of his people concerned in it, as he did to Pharaoh, Gen_41:25, and to Nebuchadnezzar, Dan_2:45.

They are blessed by my irrevocable decree and sentence, and therefore it is in vain for men to curse them.

Numbers 22:13

He conceals the principal things, to wit, the reason of God's prohibition, which might have given a stop to their further course and counsels in this matter, and secretly intimates his own goodwill and readiness to comply with them, if God had not hindered him.

Numbers 22:14

Thus they lay the blame upon Balaam, which he imputed to God.

Numbers 22:16

No counsel nor suggestion either of God or man.

Numbers 22:17

Before he wrought upon his covetousness, now upon his ambition.

Numbers 22:18

You desire and expect that from me which is out of my power, to resist the will of the great God. He slyly insinuates, that he wanted not will, but power only.

The Lord my God; so he calls him, partly, to magnify himself as the servant of the great Jehovah; partly, that by professing this respect unto God he might the sooner induce him to grant his desire; and partly, because he worshipped the true God, together with idols, as many in those times and places did.

Numbers 22:19

Possibly he may change his mind, or yield to my renewed suit. Thus he sought to make God and his conscience stoop to the service of his pride and covetousness, which was abominable.

Numbers 22:20

Go with them, since this is thy great desire and purpose; as far as thou canst, take thy course; I will, according to thy wish, withdraw my restraint, and leave thee to thyself and thy own choice. Compare Psa_81:11,12.

That shalt thou do: these words signify not so much his duty as the event and his disappointment, Thou shalt not do what thou desirest, to wit, curse my people, and so enrich and advance thyself; but I will so overrule thy mind, and bridle thy tongue, that thou shalt speak nothing but what is contrary to thy desire and interest; and therefore though I permit thee to go, thou shalt lose thy design in it.

Numbers 22:22

God's anger was kindled; either,

1. Because he went of his own accord with the princes of Moab, and did not wait till they came to call him , i.e. urged him to go, which was the sign and condition of God's permission, Num_22:20, but rather himself rose and called them, as it may seem from Num_22:21. Or,

2. Because those words, Num_22:20, did contain no approbation nor license, but a bare permission, and that. in anger, as Balaam might easily have understood, if he had considered his own heart, or the circumstances of his concession. This was no more an approbation than that passage of Christ to Judas, Joh_13:27, That thou doest, do quickly . Or,

3. Because he went with ill design, and desire to do contrary to what God had charged him, to wit, to curse the people, as plainly appears from the following story, and from Deu_23:5; for God hath been oft and justly angry with those who have done what God bade them, when they did it in evil manner, or for evil ends, as appears from Isa_10:6,7, and many other places.

The Lord stood in the way, i.e. to oppose and terrify, if not to kill him.

His two servants were with him; the rest of the company being probably gone before them. For in those ancient times there was more of simplicity, and less of ceremony; and therefore it is not strange that Balaam came at some distance after the rest, and attended only by his own servants.

Numbers 22:23

Balaam saw not the angel because God withheld his eyes, as he did the eyes of Daniel's companions, Dan_10:7. It is a truth, which mere philosophers own, that when God withdraws his concurrence or help from any of his creatures, they cannot perform their natural acts and offices; the eye cannot see, as Ge 19, nor the ear hear, nor the fire burn, as Da 3.

Numbers 22:28

i.e.

The Lord conferred upon the ass the power of speech and reasoning for that time. Impudent are those heathens that disbelieve and scoff at the Scripture for this and some such relations contained in it, when there are examples of the same kind of prodigies, to wit, of oxen and other brute creatures speaking some few words, in the greatest and most approved writers of the Roman history as Plutarch, Polybius, Livy, an others. See the particulars in my Latin Synopsis on this place. Not included

Numbers 22:29

Balaam, was not much terrified with the ass's speaking, because he was much accustomed to converse with evil spirits, which oft appeared to him and discoursed with him in the shape of such creatures.

Numbers 22:31

In token of reverence and submission.

Numbers 22:32

Howsoever thou mayst deceive thyself or others, I see the perverseness of thy heart and way, the wickedness of thy design and desires in this journey, which thou hast undertaken, not to please me, but to gratify Balak, and, if it be possible, to curse my people.

Numbers 22:33

I had slain thee alone, and left her; and therefore her turning aside and falling down was wholly for thy sake and benefit, not for her own, and thy anger against her was unjust and unreasonable.

Numbers 22:34

A frivolous supposition; for it was apparently displeasing to God, who had now said that his way was perverse, and had therefore opposed him and sought to slay him: but hereby he shows how loth he was to go back and lose the hopes he had conceived; and besides he speaks of desisting from the outward action, but shows no sense of the plague of his heart, his vile affections, which were the root of this ill-designed journey.

Numbers 22:35

Go with the men: this may be either,

1. A mere permission; Since neither the convictions of thy own conscience, nor the experience of thy danger, have weaned thee from thy base designs and inclinations, I shall no further restrain thee; my angel shall give thee no more disturbance; go on and prosper. Or,

2. A concession; I allow thee to go upon the following terms; for the words here are more absolute and unconditional than those Num_22:20.

That thou shalt speak: these words may express either,

1. The event; or,

2. His duty. See Poole on "Num_22:20".

Numbers 22:36

Numbers 22:40

Or, killed , either for sacrifice, or rather for a feast; for the sacrifices were offered after this, Num_23:1,2.

Sent to Balaam, to invite him to the feast. The king had left the princes to accompany him and attend upon him.

Numbers 22:41

The high places of Baal, i.e. consecrated to the worship of Baal, i.e. of Baal-peor , who was their Baal or god, Num_25:2,3 or of Chemosh.

The utmost part of the people, i.e. all that people, even to the utmost and remotest of them, as appears by comparing this with Num_23:13. He hoped that the sight of such a numerous host ready to break in upon his country would stir up his passion and further his charms.

Numbers 23:1 NUMBERS CHAPTER 23

Balak and Balsam sacrifice: God meets him, and he blesses Israel, Num_23:1-10. Balak is troubled: they go to another place to curse them: they sacrifice again: Balaam consults God, who meets him, and he again blesses Israel, Num_23:11-21. They go to a third place, and sacrifice again, Num_23:27-30.

The altars were either,

1. To Baal, in whose high places this was done and to whom alone Balak used to sacrifice. Or rather,
2. To the true God, otherwise he would not have mentioned it to God as an argument why he should grant his requests, as he doth Num_23:4. And though Balak was averse from God and his worship, yet he would be easily overruled by Balaam, who doubtless told him that it was in vain to make an address to any other than the God of Israel, who alone was able either to bless or curse them, as he pleased. And therefore when Balaam lost his design this way he tried it another way with greater success, but still used to the same method, in provoking their own God to destroy the Israelites, Num 25. But though he direct his sacrifices to the right object, he chooseth a wrong place, and, to comply with Balak's desire, makes use of the high places of Baal for this end, and mingles his own superstitions with the worship of God, in erecting divers altars, according to the manner of heathens and idolators, 2Ki_18:22 Isa_17:8 Jer_11:13 Hos_8:11 10:1 12:11; whereas God appointed and holy men used but one altar, though many sacrifices were to be offered upon it, Gen_8:20 Exo_17:15 24:4. Seven was the solemn and usual number in sacrifices, 1Ch_15:26 2Ch_29:21 Job_42:8.

Numbers 23:2

Balak by procuring them and Balaam by offering them; through in ancient times kings' were priests also, and so might perform a priestly work, as this was.

Numbers 23:3

By thy burnt-offering; as in God's presence, as one that offers thyself its well as thy sacrifices to obtain his favour. I will go to some solitary and convenient place, where I may by my enchantments prevail with God to appear to me, and to answer thy and my desires in cursing this people.

Whatsoever he showeth me, i.e. reveals to me, either by word or sign.

To an high place; or, into the plain , as that word properly signifies, for he was now in a high place, Num_22:4. But this is not material, it was doubtless some solitary place, where he might use some gestures and ceremonies which he would not have others see, and where he might more reasonably expect to meet with God; for both good and evil spirits most commonly appeared to persons in such places.

Numbers 23:4

God met Balaam, not to comply with Balaam's charms, nor to gratify, but to oppose, his wicked desires, and to fierce him against his own inclination and interest to utter the following words.

A bullock and a ram, which I pray thee accept, and give me leave to curse thy people, as their abundant wickedness deserves.

Numbers 23:5

He suggested what he should say, even those words, Num_23:8-10.

Numbers 23:6

Numbers 23:7

He took up, to wit, into his mouth; he expressed or spoke.

His parable, i.e. his oracular and prophetic speech; which he calls a parable, because of the weightiness of the matter, and the majesty and smartness of the expressions which is usual in parables.

From Aram; from Aram, Naharaim, or Mesopotamia, Deu_23:4. See Gen_10:22. Aram lay towards the mountains of the east: the east was infamous for charmers or soothsayers, Isa_2:6.

Jacob; the posterity of Jacob, i.e. Israel, as it here follows.

Numbers 23:8

God hath not cursed, but blessed Israel, and therefore it is a vain and ridiculous attempt for me to curse them in spite of God.

Numbers 23:9

From the top of the rocks, upon which I now stand, I see the people, according to thy desire, Num_22:41, but cannot improve that sight to the end for which thou didst design it, to wit, to curse them. This people are of a distinct kind from others, God's peculiar people, separated from all other nations, as in religion and laws, also in Divine protection; and therefore my enchantments cannot have that power against them which they have against other persons and people. See Exo_19:5 Lev_20:21,26.

Numbers 23:10

The dust of Jacob, i.e. the numberless people of Jacob or Israel, who, according to God's promise; Gen_13:16 28:14, are now become as the dust of the earth.

Of the fourth part of Israel, i.e. of one of the camps of Israel; for they were divided into four camps, Num 2, which Balaam from this height could easily discover; much less can any man number all their host.

Of the righteous, i.e. of his righteous and holy people, the Israelites, called Jehesurun , Deu_32:15, which word signifies upright or righteous . The sense is, they are not only happy above other nations in this life, as I have said, and therefore in vain should I curse them, but they have this peculiar privilege, that they are happy after death; their happiness begins where the happiness of other people ends; and therefore I heartily wish that my soul may have its portion with theirs when I die. But it was a vain wish; for as he would not live as God's people did, so he died by the sword, as others of God's enemies did, Num_31:8 Jos_13:22.

My last end, i.e. my death, as the word is used. Or, my posterity, as this Hebrew word signifies, Psa_119:13 Dan_11:4 Amo_4:2. And as the covenant and blessing of God given to Abraham did reach to his posterity, so this might not be unknown to Balaam, which might give him occasion for this wish. Or, my reward, as the word is taken, Pro_23:18 24:20. But the first sense seems the most true, because it agrees best with the usage of Scripture to repeat the same thing in other words, and this includes the third sense, to wit, the reward, which is here supposed to follow death; and for posterity, it doth not appear that he had any, or, if he had, that he was so very solicitous for them; or that he knew the tenor of God's covenant with Abraham and his posterity. Nay, he rather seems to have had some hope of ruining Abraham's posterity, which he attempted both here and afterwards.

Numbers 23:12

I speak not these words by my own choice, but by the constraint of a higher power, which I cannot resist.

Numbers 23:13

He thought the sight of the people necessary both to excite Balaam's passions, and to strengthen and direct his conjurations; but he would now have him see but a part of the people, and not all, because the sight of all of them might dismay and discourage him, and, as it did before, raise his fancy to an admiration of the multitude and of the felicity of the people, Num_23:9,10.

Numbers 23:14

Zophim, a place so called from the spies and watches which were kept there. Pisgah, a high hill in the land of Moab, so called Deu_3:27 34:1.

Numbers 23:18

Rise up: this word implies, either,

1. The reverence wherewith he should hear and receive God's message, as Eglon did, Jud_3:20, which might have been probable, if Balak had been now sitting, as Ehud there was; but he was standing, Num_23:15: or rather,

2. The diligent attention required; Rouse up thyself, and carefully mind what I say.

Numbers 23:19

That he should lie, i.e. break his faith and promises made to his people for their preservation and benediction.

That he should repent, . e. change his counsels or purposes; which men do, either because they are not able to execute them, or because they are better informed and their minds changed by some unexpected occurrent, or by their lusts and passions, none of which have place in God. And therefore I plainly see that all our endeavours and repeated sacrifices are to no purpose, and can make no impression in God, nor induce him to curse those whom he hath purposed, and solemnly and frequently promised, to bless.

Shall he not do it? Is he like a man that oft speaks and promises what he either never intends, or cannot or will not perform?

Numbers 23:20

Or, I have received a blessing , to wit, a sentence of blessing, which God hath put into my mind and mouth, and which I cannot forbear to utter. Heb. I have received to bless . The infinitive put for the noun, as is frequent.

Numbers 23:21

He, i.e. God, understood Num_23:20, and expressed Num_23:19, hath not or doth not behold or see iniquity or perverseness , i.e. any sin, in Jacob or

Israel; which cannot be meant of a simple seeing or knowing of him, for so God did see and observe, yea, and chastise their sins, as is manifest, Exo_32:9 Deu_9:13; but of such a sight of their sins as should provoke God utterly to forsake and curse and destroy them, which was Balak's desire, and Balaam's hope and design. For as Balaam knew that none but Israel's God could curse or destroy Israel, so he knew that nothing but their sin could move him so to do; and therefore he took a right, though wicked, course afterwards to tempt them to sin, and thereby to expose them to ruin, Num 25. And Balaam had now hoped that God was incensed against Israel for their sins, and therefore would be prevailed with to give them up to the curse and spoil. But, saith he, I was mistaken, I see God hath a singular favour to this people, and though he sees and punisheth sin in other persons and people with utter destruction, as he hath now done in Sihon and Og and the Amorites, yet he will not do so with Israel; he winks at their sins, forgets and forgives them, and will not punish them as their iniquities deserve. In this sense God is said not to see sins, as elsewhere he is said to forget them, Isa_43:25 Jer_31:34, and to cover them, Psa_32:1, which keeps them out of sight, and so out of mind; and to blot them out, Psa_51:1, 9, and to cast them behind his back , Isa_38:17, or into the depth of the sea , Mic_7:19, in which cases they cannot be seen nor read. And men are oft said not to know or see those sins in their children or others, which they do not take notice of so as to punish them. And this sense best agrees with the context; God hath decreed and promised to bless this people, and he hath blessed them, and I cannot reverse it , Num_23:20, and he will not reverse it, though provoked to do so by their sins, which he will take no notice of. Others thus, He hath not beheld , as hitherto he hath not, so for the future he will not behold, i.e. so as to approve it, as that word is oft used, as Gen_7:1 Isa_66:2 Hab_1:13, or so as to suffer it, injury against Jacob , &c. For aven , here rendered iniquity , is oft used in that sense, as Job_5:6,7 Pr 12:21 22:8. And the other word, amal , rendered perverseness , oft notes vexation and trouble , as Job_5:6,7 Psa 25:17 36:4; and the particle beth , rendered in , is oft used for against , as Exo_14:25 20:16 Num_12:1. So the sense is, God will not see them wronged or ruined by any of their adversaries, whereof the following words may be a good reason, for God is with him , &c. The Lord his God is with him , i.e. he hath a favour for this people, and will defend and save them. So the phrase of God's being with a person or people signifies, as Jud_6:13 Psa_46:7 Isa_8:10.

The shout of a king is among them, i.e. such joyful and triumphant shouts as those wherewith a people congratulate the approach and presence of their king when he appears among them upon some solemn occasion, or when he returns from battle with victory and spoils. The expression implies God's being their King and Ruler, and their abundant security and just confidence in him as such. And here is an allusion to the silver trumpets which were made by God's command, and used upon great solemnities, in which God their King was present in a special manner, Num_10:9 Jos_6:16,20 1Sa_4:5 2Ch_13:12.

Numbers 23:22

God brought them out of Egypt, to wit, by a strong hand, and in spite of all their enemies, and therefore it is in vain to seek or hope to overcome them.

He; either,

1. God, last mentioned. But so the comparison is mean and unbecoming. Or rather,

2. Israel, whom God brought out of Egypt; such change of numbers being very common in the Hebrew language. The sense is, Israel is not now what he was in Egypt, a poor, weak, dispirited, unarmed people, but high, and strong, and invincible. The great strength and fierceness of a unicorn is celebrated in Scripture, Num_24:8 Deu_33:17 Job_39:9 Psa_22:21 92:10. But whether it be a unicorn, or a rhinoceros, or a strong and fierce kind of wild goat, which is here called reem, it is not needful here to determine.

Numbers 23:23

I find by experience and serious consideration that all mine and thine endeavours to enchant Israel are in vain, being frustrated by their omnipotent God. I can do thee no service by my art against them.

According to this time; not only in succeeding times and ages, of which he speaks, Num_24:17, &c., but even now, in this time and age, and so forward.

What hath God wrought!, i.e. how wonderful and glorious are those works which God is now about to do for Israel, by drying up Jordan, by subduing the Canaanites, &c.! These things will be matter of discourse and admiration to all ages.

Numbers 23:24

As a lion rouseth up himself to fight, or to go out to the prey; so shall Israel stir up themselves to warlike attempts against all their enemies, as occasion shall offer itself.

He shall not lie down, i.e. not rest or cease from fighting and pursuing.

Numbers 24:1 NUMBERS CHAPTER 24

Balaam lays aside his sorceries, and the Spirit of God comes upon him; his eyes are open; hears the words of God, and sees the vision of the Almighty, Num_24:1-4; prophesies of Israel's prosperity, Num_24:5-9. Balak is angry; commands him to flee; his answer, Num_24:10-14. He prophesies of the Messiah the King, and of the destruction of the nations, Num_24:15-24. He returns to his place; and Balak goes his way, Num_24:25.

To seek for enchantments, i.e. to use enchantments, which he is said to have done, either because when he consulted and sacrificed to God, he did also use enchantments and consult with the devil, that if one would not, the other might help him; or because he consulted God in a magical and superstitious way, by using such postures or instruments or forms of words as enchanter's used.

Toward the wilderness, where Israel lay encamped, either with intent to curse Israel without God's leave; or rather, expecting what God of his own accord would suggest to him concerning this matter.

Numbers 24:2

According to their tribes; in the order appointed, Num 2.

Came upon him, i.e. inspired him to speak the following words, and so constrained him again to bless those whom he desired to curse.

Numbers 24:3

The eyes, either,

1. Of his body, as in the following verse; or,

2. Of his mind, which God had opened in a peculiar and prophetic manner, whence prophets are called seers, 1Sa_9:9. He implies that before he was blind and stupid, having eyes, but not seeing nor understanding. Some render the words having his eyes shut, as the Hebrew verb satham signifies, the letters schin and samech being frequently exchanged; and so the meaning is, that he received this revelation either in a dream, when men's eyes are simply shut; or in an ecstasy or trance, when men's eyes, though open, are in a manner shut, to wit, as to the use and exercise of them.

Numbers 24:4

The vision; so called either strictly and properly, because he was awake when this was revealed to him; or largely and improperly, for any extraordinary discovery of God's mind to him, whether sleeping or waking. A trance, or ecstasy, fainting and falling upon the ground, as the prophets used to do. See 1Sa_19:24 Eze_1:28 3:23 43:3 Dan_8:17,18 10:15 Rev_1:17. Others, falling suddenly into a sleep, as the prophets sometimes did, as Gen_15:12 Dan_8:18.

Numbers 24:6

Valleys ofttimes from a small beginning are spread forth fir and wide. Others, as the brooks , or rivers , as the word signifies, which stretch out and disperse their waters into several channels, and sometimes farther. Are they spread forth, i.e. the Israelites last mentioned. As gardens by the river 's side ; pleasant and fruitful, and secured by a fence.

Trees of lign-aloës; an Arabian and Indian tree, of a sweet smell, yielding good shade and shelter both to man and beast; such is Israel, famous among the nations, and not only save themselves, but yielding shelter to all that join themselves to them.

Which the Lord hath planted; which are the best of the kind; such as not man, but God, might seem to have planted, as the best of all sorts are ascribed to God, as the trees, hills, cities, of God , &c. Compare Psa_104:16.

As cedar trees, which are famous for growth, and height, and strength, and durableness, whence Solomon's temple was built of this wood, 1Ki_6:9,10.

Beside the waters, where trees thrive best.

Numbers 24:7

He, i.e. God, will abundantly water the valleys, gardens , and trees , is which represent the Israelites, Num_24:6, i.e. he will wonderfully bless his people, not only with outward blessings, of which a chief one in those parts was plenty of water, but also with higher gifts and graces, with his word and Spirit, which are often signified by waters, Joh_3:5 Joh_4:10 7:38,39, and at last with eternal life, the contemplation whereof made Balaam desire to die the death of the righteous. Others thus, God shall make his posterity numerous; for the procreation of children is oft signified by waters, fountains, cisterns, &c., as Psa_68:26 Pro_5:15,18 9:17 Isa_48:1. But there is no necessity of flying to metaphors here, and therefore the other being the literal and proper sense, is by the laws of good interpretation to be preferred before it.

In many waters: this also may be literally understood of their seed, which shall be sown in waterish ground, and therefore bring forth a better increase, Isa_32:20. Others thus, His seed shall be so numerous, that it shall branch forth into many people, the several tribes being reckoned and sometimes called several people. Or, his seed shall rule over many people or nations, which are sometimes signified by many waters, as Psa_144:7 Isa_57:20 Jer_47:2 Rev_17:15. But here also the literal sense seems best. His king, i.e. the king of Israel; either God, who was in a peculiar manner their King or Ruler, Num_23:21 Jud_6:13 1Sa_8:7 Isa_33:22; or their chief governor or governors, whether king or others; for Moses called their king, Deu_33:5, and the judges were in a manner kings.

Than Agag, i.e. than the king of the Amalekites, which king and people were famous and potent in that age, Num_24:20, as may be guessed by their bold attempt upon so numerous a people as Israel was. And it is probably thought by the Jewish and other interpreters, that the Amalekitish kings, as Abimelech was of the Philistines, and Pharaoh of the Egyptians, and Caesar of the Romans. But though this king only be instanced in, yet other kings, to wit, such as did or should border upon the Israelites, are doubtless to be understood, above whom the kings and people of Israel sometimes were advanced, and oftener should have been, if they had not been their own hinderance by their sins. Some make this a prophecy of Saul's conquering Agag and his people, 1Sa_15:7,8. But the words seem to be more general, and to signify a greater honour and advantage to Israel than that was.

Numbers 24:8

Shall break their bones, or, unbone , or, take out , i.e. shall eat the flesh to the very bones, and then break them also.

Numbers 24:9

Having conquered his enemies the Canaanites, and their land, he shall quietly and securely rest and settle himself there.

Stir him up, i.e. awake or provoke him.

Numbers 24:10

He smote his hands together; a sign of great anger, Eze_21:17 22:13.

Numbers 24:11

Flee thou to thy place, whence I sent for thee, Num_22:5. The Lord, whose commands thou hast preferred before my desires and interest; and therefore seek thy recompence from him, and not from me.

Numbers 24:14

Advertise thee, or inform thee , to wit, concerning future things, as it here follows, for this word seems inseparably joined with the following. Others, give thee counsel , and tell thee what this people , &c. So it is a short and defective speech, such as we have Exo_4:5 13:8. And by counsel . they understand that which is related Num_25:1,2, which was done by Balaam's counsel, Num_31:16 Rev_2:14. But the former sense is more unforced and agreeable to the following words as they lie.

In the latter days: not in thy time, therefore thou hast no reason to fear, but in succeeding ages, as 2Sa_8:2, &c.

Numbers 24:17

I shall see, or, I have seen, or do see, for the future is oft put for other times or tenses: he speaks of a prophetic sight, like that of Abraham's, who saw Christ's day, Joh_8:56.

Him, to wit, the Star and Sceptre, as it here follows, i.e. a great and eminent prince, which was to come out of Israel's loins; either,

1. David, who first did the things here spoken of, 2Sa_8:2 Psa_60:8 108:9, and some of the kings of Judah and Israel after him, for it is not necessarily understood of one particular person; or,

2. The Messias, as both Jewish and Christian interpreters expound it, who most eminently and fully performed what is here said, in destroying the enemies of Israel, or of God's church, who are here described under the names of the nearest and fiercest enemies of Israel; which he doth partly by himself, by his word and Spirit, and spiritual plagues; and partly by his ministers, those princes whom he makes nursing fathers to his church, and scourges to his enemies. And to him alone agrees the foregoing verb properly,

I shall see him, to wit, in my own person, or with the eyes of my own body, as every eye shall see him , Rev_1:7, when he comes to judgment. Nor can it seem strange that Balaam should speak of such high and remote things, seeing he foresaw and foretold these things by the revelation of the Spirit of God, by which also he foresaw the great felicity of good men, and the miserable state of bad men, after death and judgment, Num_23:10.

But not now; not yet, but after many ages.

A Star; a title oft given to princes and eminent and illustrious persons, and particularly to the Messias, Rev_2:28 22:16.

A Sceptre, i.e. a sceptre-bearer, a king or ruler, even that sceptre mentioned Gen_49:10.

The corners; either,

1. Literally, the borders, which by a synecdoche are oft used in Scripture for the whole country to which they belong, as Exo_8:2 Psa_74:7 147:14 Jer_15:13 17:3. Or,

2. Metaphorically, to wit, princes and rulers, who are sometimes compared to corners, as Zec_10:4, and Christ himself is called a corner-stone , because he unites and supports the building. But I prefer the former sense. Sheth seems to be the name of some then eminent, though now unknown, place or prince in Moab, where there were many princes, as appears from Num_23:6 Amo_2:3; there being innumerable instances of such places or persons sometimes famous, but now utterly lost as to all monuments and remembrances of them.

Numbers 24:18

A possession; which was also foretold Gen_25:23, and in part fulfilled, 2Sa_8:14 1Ch_18:13, but more fully by Christ, Amo_9:12 Oba_1:18; who shall subdue and possess all his enemies; here signified by the name of Edom; as Jacob or Israel, his brother, signifies all his church and people. Seir, a part and mountain of Edom, Gen_36:8, which may be here mentioned as the strongest part of Edom, to show that not only the rest of Edom, which is more accessible, but even the rocks and best munitions of it, shall be taken.

His enemies, the Israelites.

Do valiantly, or, gain power , or riches , or victory , all which are comprehended in this phrase.

Numbers 24:19

Out of Jacob; out of Jacob's loins.

He that shall have dominion; David, and especially Christ.

Of the city, or, from or out of this city , i.e. the cities, the singular number for the plural, which hath been oft noted before. The sense is, He shall not only subdue those Moabites and Edomites which meet him in the field, but he shall pursue them even to their strongest holds and cities, and shall pull them out thence. Possibly he may note some eminent city in which they confided most, their metropolis or royal city, as may be guessed from Psa_60:9.

Numbers 24:20

He looked from the top of Pisgah, which was exceeding high, and gave him the prospect of parts of all these kingdoms.

The first, Heb. the first-fruits ; so called either,

1. Because they were the first of all the neighbouring nations which were embodied together in one government. Or,
2. Because they were the most powerful and eminent of them, as is implied above, Num_24:7, the best things in each kind being oft signified by the name of first-fruits. Or,

3. Because he was the first who fought against Israel, and was vanquished by them, in that famous battle Exo 17, which victory was an earnest and first-fruits of that large harvest of victories which the Israelites should in due time get over all their enemies, and, among others, over Amalek himself, 1Sa_15:3.

That he perish for ever: he began with God and with Israel. but God will end with him; and the firm purpose and will of God is, that he shall be utterly destroyed, Exo_17:14; so that Saul lost his kingdom for not executing this decree and God's command pursuant thereunto, 1Sa 15.

Numbers 24:21

The Kenite; the posterity or kindred of Jethro; not that part of them which dwelt among the Israelites, to whom the following words do not agree, but those of them who were mingled with the Amalekites and Midianites. See Exo_3:1 Jud_1:16 4:11 1Sa_15:6.

Thy nest, i.e. thy dwelling-place, so called, either because it was in a high place, as nests commonly are; or from their security and confidence of continuing long and safe in it; see Job_29:18; or in allusion to their name, for ken in Hebrew signifies a nest.

Numbers 24:22

Kenite, Heb. Kain , i.e. the Kenite; so called, either by a transposition of letters, which is very usual in the Hebrew tongue; or from the name of some eminent place where they lived, or person from whom they were descended, though now the memory of them be utterly lost, as it hath fared with innumerable other places and persons famous in their generations mentioned in ancient heathen writers.

Shall be wasted, i.e. shall be by degrees diminished and wasted by the incursions of divers enemies, till at last the Assyrian comes to complete the work, and carries them into captivity. For the Kenites lived partly among the ten tribes, Jos_19:33, compared with Jud_4:11, and partly with the two tribes, Jud_1:16 4:16,17, and were carried captive with them, part by Shalmaneser, the king of Assyria, 2Ki_17:6, and part by Nebuchadnezzar, who also is called an Assyrian, Ezr_6:22 Isa_52:4. The words may be rendered thus, shall be wasted . How long ? to wit, shall they be thus wasted? (these particles being oft used abruptly and pathetically in the same manner, Psa_6:3 90:13 Isa_6:11) till Asshur comes,

Asshur shall carry thee away captive.

Numbers 24:23

How calamitous and miserable will the state of the world be, when the Assyrian, and after him the Chaldean, shall overrun and overturn all these parts of the world! who will be able to live and keep his heart from fainting under such grievous pressures? how few will then escape the destroying sword!

Numbers 24:24

Chittim; a place or people so called from Chittim the son of Javan, Gen_10:4, whose posterity were very numerous, and were first seated in the Lesser Asia, and from thence sent forth colonies into the islands of the Ægean Sea, and into Cyprus, and afterwards into Macedonia, and other parts of Greece, and then into Italy. Whence it comes to pass that by this name is understood sometimes Macedonia, as appears from /APC 1Ma 1:1 8:5; and sometimes Italy, as is manifest from Dan_11:29,30; and sometimes both, as in this place; for he speaks here of the scourge that God hath appointed for the Assyrian after he had done God's work in punishing of his people and the bordering nations. Now although the Assyrian and Chaldean empire was subdued by the Medes and Persians, yet the chief afflictions and calamities of that people came from two hands, both beyond the sea, and brought to them by ships, as is here expressed; first from the Grecians under Alexander and his successors, by whom that people were grievously oppressed and wasted; then from the Romans, who subdued all the Grecian empire, one great part whereof were the Assyrians largely so called, and after many bloody wars made them a colony. Eber , i.e. the posterity of Eber, Gen_10:24, the Hebrews, who were the chief and flower of Eber's children, and therefore are here designed by that general name, such general expressions being oft used concerning one particular and the most eminent of its kind. And it pleased God to express it thus darkly here, because though he would foretell this for the comfort and instruction of his people in after-ages, yet he would not have Balak, nor Balaam neither, understand or utter any thing which might seem to thwart that happy estate of Israel, which Balaam clearly saw and openly applauded. He also ; not the Hebrews, as some understand, for his affliction was now mentioned before, and other scriptures tell us they shall have a better end, and that all Israel shall be saved , and therefore not perish for ever; but the afflicter or scourge of Asshur and Eber, to wit, the Grecian and Roman empire.

Numbers 24:25

To his place, i.e. to Mesopotamia.

Object: He went only to Midian, where he was slain, Num_31:8.

Answ. 1. He is said to return home, because he intended and began to do so, though he was diverted by the Midianites; for men in Scripture are oft said to do what they design or attempt to do, as Exo_8:18 Num_14:40.

Answ. 2. He did go home first, though afterwards he returned to the Midianites, either because they sent for him, or to recover his lost credit, and to do that by policy which he could not do by charms, to which purpose he gave them that devilish counsel which was put in practice, Num 25, and that by his advice, Num_31:16 Rev_2:14.

Numbers 25:1 NUMBERS CHAPTER 25

The Israelites' whoredom and idolatry: God commands the guilty to be put to death, Num_25:1-5. A plague: Phinehas's zeal; for which God promises him the priesthood, Num_25:6-15. God commands the Midianites to be slain for this their treachery in drawing the people to sin, Num_25:16-18.

Shittim; a place called more largely Abel-shittim , Num_33:49, it being usual with the Hebrews to abbreviate long proper names, as Hermon is put for Baal-hermon , Jud_3:3, Tholad for El-tholad , Jos_19:4, Nimrim , Isa_15:6 for Beth-nimrim , Num_32:36. And this was their last station, from whence they passed immediately into Canaan. So this is here noted as a great aggravation of their sin, that they committed it when God was going to put them into the possession of their long-expected and much-desired land.

The people; not all, but many of them, as appears from Deu_4:3,4 1Co_10:8.

To commit whoredom, both corporally and spiritually, either because they prostituted themselves to them upon condition of worshipping their god; or because their filthy god was worshipped by such filthy acts, as Priapus and Venus were.

Of Moab, and of Midian too, as is evident from Num_25:6,17,18 Num 31:16; for both these people being confederated in this wicked design, the one is put for the other; and the daughters of Moab may be named, either because they began fine transgression, or because they were the chief persons, possibly, the relations or courtiers of Balak king of Moab.

Numbers 25:2

They called the people: this may be noted, either,

1. As the consequent of their whoredom, an invitation to further society in their sacred feasts; or rather,

2. As the cause or occasion of their whoredom, the Hebrew vau here signifying for , as it oft doth. The Moabites being now neighbours to the Israelites, and finding themselves unable to effect their design against Israel by war and witchcraft, they now fell another way to work, by contracting familiarity with them; and perceiving their evil and lustful inclinations, they , i.e. their daughters, last mentioned, invited them to their feasts.

Unto the sacrifices, i.e. unto the feasts which were made of their parts of their sacrifices, after the manner of the Jews and Gentiles too, the participation whereof was reckoned a participation in the worship of that god to whom the sacrifices were offered, 1Co_10:18, and therefore was forbidden to the Israelites when such feasts and sacrifices belonged to a false god, Exo_34:15. Yet this was a less and more modest kind of idolatry, and therefore is fitly used to usher in what was more gross and impious.

Of their gods, i.e. of their god, Baal-peor , the plural elohim being here used, as commonly it is, for one god.

Bowed down; which properly notes the outward act of worship, which here consisting in or being accompanied with filthy serious, may either signify or connote them.

To their gods; before their gods, or, to the honour and worship of their gods.

Numbers 25:3

Joined himself; the word implies a forsaking of God, to whom they were and should have been joined, and a turning to, embracing of, strict conjunction with, and fervent affection after, this false god. Compare Hos_9:10 2Co_6:14. Baal-peor , called Baal , by the name common to many false gods, and especially to those that represented any of the heavenly bodies; and Peor , either from the hill Peor , where he was worshipped, Num_23:28, or rather from a verb signifying to open and uncover , either because of the obscene posture in which possibly the idol was set, as Priapus was, or because of the filthiness which was exercised in his worship.

Was kindled, i.e. discovered itself in a dreadful plague, Psa_106:29.

Numbers 25:4

The sense is, either,

1. Take, to wit. to thyself and thy assistance, all the heads, i.e. the judges, as they are called Num_25:5, or rulers, of the people; and in their presence, and by their help, hang them, i.e. the people, now mentioned, to wit, such of them as were guilty, as was said Num_25:1. And this sense seems to be favoured by the next verse, where the execution of this command is mentioned, Moses said unto the judges of Israel , whom he had taken to himself and called together, Slay ye every one his man , i.e. each. of you execute this command of God, and hang up the delinquents under your several jurisdictions. Or,

2. Take, i.e. apprehend, all the heads, i.e. the chief, of the people , such as were chief, either in this transgression, or rather in place and power, who are singled out to this exemplary punishment either for their neglect in not preventing, restraining, or punishing the offenders according to their power and duty, or for their concurrence with others in this wickedness, which was more odious and mischievous in them than in others. And then this must be necessarily limited to such heads as were guilty, which is evident from the nature of the thing, and from the words of the verse. And so these heads of the people differ, as in name and title, so in place and dignity, from the judges of the people , Num_25:5, which may seem to note the superior magistrates, even the seventy elders, which, being persons of great worth and piety, chosen by God, and endowed with his Spirit, most probably kept themselves from this contagion, and therefore were fitter to punish others; and the heads of the people seem to be the inferior magistrates, the rulers of tens or hundreds, or the like, who as they did many of them partake with the people in other rebellions, so probably were involved in this guilt. Now these are to be hanged up as other malefactors and condemned persons were, Deu_21:23 2Sa_21:6.

Before the Lord; to the vindication of God's honour and justice.

Against the sun, i.e. publicly, as their sin was public and scandalous; and speedily, before the sun go down. But withal this phrase may signify, that these also must be taken down about sun-setting, as other malefactors were, Deu_21:23.

Numbers 25:5

Every one his men, i.e. those under his charge; for as these seventy were chosen to assist Moses in the government, so doubtless the care and management of the people was distributed among them by just and equal proportions.

Numbers 25:6

This was done, either,

1. Before God's command to Moses, and by him to the judges, Num_25:4,5, such transpositions and disorders being not unusual in sacred story. Or rather,

2. In the order it is related, to wit, when Moses had given the charge to the judges, and, as it may seem, before the execution of it, otherwise it is probable he would not have been so bold and foolish to have run upon present and certain ruin, when the examples were fresh and frequent before his eyes.

Unto his brethren, i.e. into the camp of the Israelites, or to his friends and relations in his tent, whither he carried her; Num_25:8, for his or their fleshly satisfaction.

In the sight of Moses; an argument of intolerable impudence and contempt of God and of Moses.

All the congregation, i.e. the rulers of the congregation with divers of the people.

Weeping; bewailing the abominable wickedness of the people, and the dreadful judgments of God, and imploring God's mercy and favour.

Numbers 25:7

Numbers 25:8

Into the tent, or brothel house ; for since they gave way to such lewd practices, no doubt they singled out convenient places for their wickedness.

Thrust both of them through; which is no warrant for private persons to take upon them the execution of justice upon any, though the greatest malefactors, because Phinehas was himself a man in great authority and power, and did this after the command given by Moses to the rulers to slay these transgressors, and in the very sight, and no doubt by the consent of Moses himself, and also by the special instinct and direction of God's Spirit.

Through her belly, or in her brothel house , for the word is the same before used, and translated tent, and it may be called hers , because she chose or used that place for her wicked purposes, as the rest doubtless hid other places of like nature. The plague; either the pestilence, or some other sudden and grievous mortality.

Numbers 25:9

Object. They were but 23,000, 1Co_10:8.

Answ. The odd thousand here added were slain by the judges according to the order of Moses, the rest by the immediate hand of God, but both sorts died of the plague , the word being used, as oft it is, for the sword, or hand, or stroke of God.

Numbers 25:12

i.e. The covenant of an everlasting priesthood , as it is expounded, Num_25:13, which is called a covenant of peace, partly with respect to the happy effect of this heroical action of his, whereby he made peace between God and his people; and partly with regard to the principal end and use of the priestly office, which was constantly to do that which Phinehas now did, even to mediate between God and men, to obtain and preserve his own and Israel's peace and reconciliation with God, by offering up sacrifices, and incense, and prayers to God on their behalf, Num_16:47,48, as also by turning them away from iniquity, which is the only peace-breaker, and by teaching and pressing the observation of that law, which is the only bond of their peace, Mal_2:5-7.

Numbers 25:13

And his seed after him.

Quest. What advantage had he by this promise, seeing the thing here promised was due to him by birth?

Answ. 1. The same blessing may be oftentimes promised, as the kingdom was to David; and the renewing of this promise might seem convenient here, To signify that bloodshed was so far from polluting him, and thereby casting him out of the priesthood, that it was a mean to confirm him in it.

2. This promise secured him and his against divers contingencies, which otherwise might have befallen him or them; as that he should live longer than his father, else he could not have been the high priest; that he should be preserved from those blemishes which might have rendered him incapable of the priesthood, which were many; that he should have a seed, and they such as were fit for that office.

An everlasting priesthood, i.e. to continue as long as the law and commonwealth of the Jews did.

Quest . How was this verified, seeing the priesthood went from Eleazar's to Ithamar's line in Eli and three or four of his successors? Answ . 1. This promise, as others of the like nature, was conditional, and therefore might be made void, and of none effect, by the miscarriages of Phinehas's sons, as it seems it was; and thereupon a like promise was made to Eli of the line of Ithamar, that he and his should walk before the Lord , to wit, in the office of high priest, for ever , which also for his and their sins was made void, 1Sa_2:30.

Answ . 2. That was but a short interruption, and not considerable in so long a succession, for the priesthood returned to Phinehas's line in the time of Solomon, 1Ki_2:26,27,35 1Ch_24:3; and continued in that line till the captivity of Babylon, as is evident, and afterward too, 1Ch_6:4 Ezr_7:1,5, even until Christ's time, for any thing which appears to the contrary.

Numbers 25:14

A prince: this is added as a proof of Phinehas's zeal, that he durst venture upon so great a person, who was likely to have many avengers of his blood.

Of a chief house, Heb. of the house of his father . Every tribe was divided into great households, called the houses of their fathers , Num_1:2, and he was the prince or chief of one of these, though not of the whole tribe.

Among the Simeonites; of the tribe of Simeon, which seems to have been too much influenced by his and other such examples, so that for 59,300, which were numbered, Num_1:22,23, there were now only 22,000 Num_26:14.

Numbers 25:15

Numbers 25:17

And why not the Moabites, who were as guilty, Num_25:1?

Answ. 1. Because God will reserve to himself a liberty of punishing or sparing, according to his own good pleasure.

2. God had a kindness for the Moabites for Lot's sake, Deu_2:9.

3. God punished the Moabites in another manner, partly, by his own immediate hand, whereby it is probable he cut off those Moabitish women that were guilty of this fact; partly, by a particular and dreadful kind of excommunication, Deu_23:3; and partly, by impunity, which in its consequences is commonly worse and more pernicious than any or all temporal punishments, which none that believes the Bible can deny.

4. It is probable the Midianites were most guilty, as in persuading Balak to send for Balaam, as may be gathered from Num_22:4,7; so in the reception of Balaam after Balak had dismissed him, Num_31:8, and in further consultation with him, and in contriving the means for the executing of this wicked plot.

Smite them, i.e. kill them; in which words, as there is a command to war against them, so there is a promise of success.

Numbers 25:18

For under pretence of kindred, and friendship, and leagues, yea, and marriages, which they offered to them, instead of that war which the Israelites expected from them, they sought only an opportunity to insinuate themselves into their familiarity, and execute their hellish plot of bringing that curse upon the Israelites, which they had in vain attempted to bring another way.

In the matter of Peor, and in the matter of Cozbi; by drawing you both to spiritual and corporal whoredom.

Their sister, in a large sense, to wit, their countrywoman.

Numbers 26:1 NUMBERS CHAPTER 26

Israel numbered, such as were fit for war, of every tribe; Levi excepted: their number, Num_26:1-51. The land to be distributed according to their number, Num_26:52-56. The Levites numbered by themselves, because they had no inheritance, Num_26:57-62. All that were numbered by Moses and Aaron at Sinai, save only Caleb and Joshua, died in the wilderness, Num_26:63-65.

After the plague, last mentioned, Num_25:8,9.

Eleazar, his father being dead, was high priest.

Numbers 26:2

They were numbered twice before, Exo_30:11,12, and Num_1:1,2. Now they are numbered a third time, partly to demonstrate the faithfulness of God, both in cutting all those off whom he had threatened to cut off, Num_14:29, and in a stupendous increase and multiplication of the people according to his promise, notwithstanding all their sins, and the sweeping judgments inflicted upon them; and partly to prepare the way for the equal division of the land which they were now going to possess.

Numbers 26:10

Swallowed them up together with Korah: according to this translation Korah was not consumed by fire with his two hundred and fifty men, Num 16, but swallowed up by the earth. But others rather think he was devoured by the fire, of which see on Num_16:32,35, and render these words, and the things of Korah , or belonging to Korah, to wit, his tent, and goods, and family, children excepted, as here follows; which interpretation receives strength by comparing this place with Num_16:32,

And the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed them (to wit, Dathan and Abiram , as is manifest from Num_26:24,25,27) up, and their houses, and all the men that appertained unto Korah ; which variation of the phrase plainly shows that Korah himself was not swallowed up with them, but only his men and his tabernacle, which is mentioned there together with the tabernacles of Dathan and Abiram, Num_26:24,27, but his person is not there mentioned with their persons. Nor is it unusual both in sacred and profane authors, by the name of a man who is the head and master, to understand only his house and family, though himself be not included. But this difficulty may be cleared another way. The Hebrew particle eth may? be here the note of a nominative case, as it is 2Ki_6:5 Neh_9:19 Jer_38:16 Eze_39:14 43:7, and there may be a defect of a verb, which is most frequent; and so the place may be rendered thus, and the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed them up, to wit, Dathan and Abiram, Num_26:9, and Korah , or, and as for Korah , he died (which verb is easily understood out of the following noun, of which ellipsis there are many instances in Scripture, some whereof have been given before, and more will follow in their places) in the death of that company, or when that company died, what time the fire devoured the two hundred and fifty men . And so this place, and Num_16:35, explain one another; and whereas there. is mention only of two hundred and fifty men consumed by that fire, Korah is here added to the number.

They became a sign, i.e. God made them a monument or example, to warn others not to rebel against God nor against magistracy, nor to usurp the priestly office.

Numbers 26:11

God being pleased to spare them, either because they disowned their father's act, and thereupon separated themselves both from his tent and company, or because Moses interceded for them, or because God would glorify his own free mercy in sparing some, while he punished others, according to his declaration in a like case, Exo_33:19. Hence the sons of Korah are mentioned 1Ch_6:22,37, and oft in the book of Psalms.

Gilead is here mentioned as Machir's only son, and therefore some conceive that the family of the Machirites, and of the Gileadites, are one and the same family, only called by two names; first Machirites, but afterwards Gileadites. Others make them distinct families, because Machir had other children, Gen_1:23 1Ch_7:14-16, which are called by their father's name, Machirites, whereas the children of his eldest son Gilead are called by his name, Gileadites. But though Machir had other children, it seems they and their posterity were extinct at this time, and that Machir alone was left and his posterity, as may be gathered by comparing this and the following verses with Jos_17:1-3 1Ch_7:14-19.

Numbers 26:53

Unto these; to these families now mentioned.

The land shall be divided, by lot, Num_26:55. The land was divided into nine parts and a half, respect being had in such division to the goodness as well as to the largeness of the several portions, and the lot gave each tribe their part.

Of names, i.e. of the persons, names being oft put for persons, as Act_1:15 Phi_2:9 Rev_3:4 11:13. The meaning is, that the share of each tribe was divided amongst the several families, to some more, to some less, according to the number of the persons of each family, Num_33:54. And withal, if one of the lots or portions proved too large or too little for all the families and persons of that tribe, in this case they might either give part of their portion to another tribe, as Simeon and Dan had parts of Judah's share, Jos_19:1,40, or take away a part from the portion belonging to another tribe.

Numbers 26:54

Thou shalt give; thou, Moses, partly by thyself, for he divided the land beyond Jordan to the two tribes and a half; and partly by thy successor Joshua, whom thou shalt empower and command to do it.

According to those that were numbered of him; according to the number of the families and persons now numbered, and being twenty years old, no regard being to be had either to any increase of the number by those who came up to that age between this time and the division of the land, or to the diminution of this number by the sword of Canaanites or otherwise.

Numbers 26:55

By lot; which lots seem to have been cast only for the tribes, not, as some would have it, for the several families, for the distribution of it to them was left to the ruler's wisdom, according to the rule now given, Num_26:54. Yet if any lot was too large for the tribe, they might give up part of their right to others, with the ruler's consent, as Judah gave a share to Simeon and to Dan within his lot.

According to the names of the tribes, i.e. the lots shall go under the names of each tribe or each patriarch.

Numbers 26:65

There was not left a man of them, to wit, of those who then murmured and rebelled against God, as plainly appears, both because this threatening and punishment is confined to those transgressors, and because otherwise this had not been true; for of those that were then numbered there were now left Eleazar and Ithamar, and possibly many of the Levites, and some others, who being not guilty of that sin, did not partake of their judgment. Caleb and Joshua are mentioned here, as also Num 14, not by way of exception, as if these were murmurers, which is utterly denied, Num_14:24, but by way of opposition, to signify that they, though they were two of the spies, and companions of them who were the chief authors and ringleaders of that mutiny, yet they kept themselves from their sin, and therefore God kept them from their plague and destruction, as also he did some others for the same reason.

Numbers 27:1 NUMBERS CHAPTER 27

The law of inheritance: for daughters on defect of sons; and on defect of them to the brother; and if there be none, to the next kinsman, Num_27:1-11. God commands Moses to go up into a mountain to view the land of Canaan, and die there: the reason, Num_27:12-14. Moses prays to the Lord to appoint an able successor, Num_27:15-17. Joshua chose, and confirmed in his office by imposition of hands before all the people, Num_27:18-23.

Perceiving that the males only were numbered, and that the land was to be divided to them only, they put in their claim for a share in their father's inheritance.

Numbers 27:2

Nigh unto

the door of the tabernacle of the congregation it seems was the place where Moses and the chief rulers assembled for the administration of public affairs, which also was very convenient, because they had frequent occasion of recourse to God for his assistance and direction therein.

Numbers 27:3

He was not in the company of Korah, nor in any other rebellion of the people, which must be understood, because all of them are opposed to his own sin, in which alone he is said to die. But they mention this only either,

1. Because he might possibly be accused to be guilty of this. Or,
2. Because he, being an eminent person, might be thought guilty of that rather than of any other, because the great and famous men were more concerned in that rebellion than others. Or,
3. To gain the favour of Moses, against whom that rebellion was more particularly directed, and more desperately prosecuted than any other. Or,
4. Because peradventure he died about that time, and therefore might be presumed guilty of that crime. Or rather,

5. Because that sin, and, as it may seem, that only of all the sins committed in the wilderness, was of such a flagitious nature, that God thought fit to extend the punishment not only to the persons of those rebels, but also to their children and families, Num_16:27,32, as was usual in like cases, as Deu_13:15 Jos_7:24; whence it is noted as a singular privilege granted to the children of Korah , that they died not , Num_26:11, whereas the children of their confederates died with them. And this makes their argument here more proper and powerful, that he did not die in that sin for which his posterity were to be cut off, and to lose either their lives or their inheritances, and therefore their claim was more just.

In his own sin; either,

1. For that sin mentioned Num 14, which they call his own sin , in opposition not to the rest of the people, for it was a common sin, but to his children, i.e. the sin for which he alone was to suffer in his person and not in his posterity, as God had appointed, Num_14:33. Or rather,

2. For his own personal sins; for,

1. These were more properly his own sins .

2. It was a truth, and that believed by the Jews, that death was a punishment for men's own sins.

3. The punishment of that common sin was not directly and properly death, but exclusion from the land of Canaan, and death only by way of consequence upon that.

Numbers 27:4

Be done away; as it will be, if it be not preserved by an inheritance given to us in his name and for his sake. Hence some gather that the first son of each of these heiresses was called by their father's name, by virtue of that law, Deu_25:6, whereby the brother's first son was to bear the name of his elder brother, whose widow he married.

A possession in the land of Canaan upon the division of it, which, though not yet conquered, they concluded would certainly be so, and thereby gave glory to God by believing.

Numbers 27:5

i.e. Into the tabernacle, where God was pleased to speak with Moses upon occasions, Exo_25:22 Num_7:89. For it was a hard case; and though their plea seemed reasonable, yet Moses showed his humility and modesty, that he would not determine it himself without God's particular direction.

i.e. Which may wisely conduct them in all their affairs, both when they go forth to war, or upon other occasions, and when they

Numbers 27:20

Thou shalt not now use him as a servant, as thou hast done, but as a brother and thy partner in the government, showing respect to him, and causing others to do so, and thou shalt impart to him the ensigns and evidences of thy own authority, whatsoever they be. Some understand this honour of those spiritual endowments which did adorn Moses, which Moses was now to confer upon him. But this Joshua had before, for in him was the spirit, Num_26:18; and he received a further measure of the spirit by Moses's laying on of hands, from both which this honour is distinguished; and, had he meant this, he would not have expressed it in so dark and doubtful a phrase, but have called it a putting not of honour, but of the spirit , upon him, as it is called, Num_11:17. And seeing the word honour here may very well be properly understood, why should we run to figurative significations?

Numbers 27:21

Or, concerning the judgment ; or sentence, i.e. what the mind and will of God is in the matter. Or, after the manner or rite, for so the Hebrew word mishpat here used oft signifies.

Urim, understand, and of Thummim , for these two generally go together; only here, as also 1Sa_28:6, Urim is synecdochically, put for both Urim and Thummim . For the manner of this inquiry and answer, see on Exo_28:30.

Before the Lord; ordinarily in the tabernacle near the second veil, setting his face to the ark, or otherwise presenting himself as in God's presence, as Abiathar did by David's direction, 1Sa_23:9, when they were both banished from the ark.

The pentecost and the sacrifices thereof, Num_28:26-31.

God here repeats some of the former laws about sacrifices, not without great reason, partly, because they had been generally discontinued for thirty-eight years together; partly, because the generation to which the former laws had been given about these things was wholly dead, and it was fit the new generation should be instructed about them, as their parents were; partly, to renew the testimonies of God's grace and mercy, notwithstanding their frequent forfeitures thereof by their horrid apostacies and rebellions; and principally, because they were now ready to enter into that land, in which they were obliged to put these things in practice, Deu_12:8, &c.

Made by fire. According to this translation the sense is, My offering , i.e. my offering or sacrifices, and my bread, i.e. either my shew-bread, or rather my meat-offering made of bread or meal, for my sacrifices made by fire , i.e. which is to accompany my burnt-offerings. Or thus, My offering , to wit, my bread , i. e. my meat-offering, which was made of bread or meal, which is oft expressed by this very name of corban or offering , as Lev_2:1 6:20; but because corban signifies not only a meatoffering, but other offerings also, as Lev_7:37,38, therefore he limits that general word by adding my bread with (so the Hebrew lamed is oft used, as Gen_46:26 Ezr_1:5 2:63, &c.) my sacrifices made by fire , which may be understood either,

1. Generally for all the sacrifices, as that phrase is sometimes taken, as 1Sa_2:28, where it must needs be so meant, because the burntofferings properly so called were not given to the priest, but reserved to God himself, and the priest's portion lay in the other sacrifices only; or,

2. Specially and properly for burnt-offerings; and so under them, as the most eminent kind, are contained all other sacrifices; as under the meat-offering here is contained the drink-offering. And according to this translation and explication these words contain a full and general rule, comprehending all the particulars following in this chapter, as in reason they ought to do, and which otherwise they do not.

Numbers 29:1 NUMBERS CHAPTER 29

The sacrifice at the feast of the trumpets; its burnt-offering, and sin-offering, Num_29:1-4. Of the feast of atonement; its offerings, Num_29:5-11. Of the feast of tabernacles, during seven days; their offerings; the eighth day a great holiday Num_29:12-38.

In the seventh month; so it was in their ecclesiastical account, in which the month Abib was the first; but as to civil matters, this was the first month.

A day of blowing the trumpets; whereby the people were admonished solemnly to prepare themselves for the feasts, which were as many in this month as in all the year besides.

Numbers 29:2

A burnt-offering, besides the offerings of every month and day, as is expressed, Num_29:6.

Seven days; not by abstaining so long from all servile works, but by offering extraordinary sacrifices each day.

Numbers 29:13

Thirteen young bullocks; more sacrifices than at any other feast, partly because this feast was in the close of the year, when it was meet to supply the defects of the year past, and when they had gathered in all their fruits, Deu_16:13,15 and therefore ought to make the larger returns and acknowledgment to God; partly because it was God's pleasure so to order it, for reasons known to himself, in whose will we ought to acquiesce. And the same reason holds why these sacrifices grew fewer and fewer every day.

Numbers 30:1 NUMBERS CHAPTER 30

Vows not to be broke: if a man vow, he must perform, Num_30:1,2. If a daughter living with her father vow, and he disapprove thereof, she is free, Num_30:3-5. If a married woman vow, and her husband disapprove thereof, she is free, Num_30:6-8. A widow or divorced woman's vow binding, Num_30:9; but not those of a married woman, unless her husband consent or be silent, Num_30:10-15.

The heads of the tribes; the chief rulers of each tribe, who were to communicate it to the rest.

Numbers 30:2

A man; which notes both the sex, as appears by Num_30:3, and the age, that he be grown up; for none can be so weak as to think the vow of a young child would bind it.

A vow, i.e. a simple Vow to do something possible and lawful.

Unto the Lord; to the honour and service of God.

Or swear an oath; confirm his vow by an oath.

To bind his soul with a bond; to restrain himself from something otherwise lawful, as suppose from such a sort of meat or drink; or to oblige himself to the performance of something otherwise not necessary, is to observe a private day of fasting.

He shall not break his word, Heb. not pollute or profane his word, as the same phrase is used, Psa_55:20 89:34, i.e. not render his word, and consequently himself, profane, or vile and contemptible in the eyes of others.

According to all that proceedeth out of his own mouth; and that without delay, Deu_23:21 Ecc_5:4, provided the thing be not unlawful and forbidden by God, Act_23:14; for it is an idle conceit that a man can give away God's right, or that he can make void God's commands by his own vows, which was the dotage of the Pharisees, Mar_6:23,26.

Numbers 30:3

If a woman, or a man in the same circumstances, a son or a servant, as plainly appears from hence, because the reason of this law is perfectly the same in both sexes, which is, that such persons have given away what was not their own, but another's, even their superior's right, which is against the rule and law of natural reason, and against the word of God, which binds all persons to give to every one their due. He instanceth only in the woman, because that sex is both by creation and sin put into a state of subjection, but under the chief and most unquestionable kind all other subjects in like circumstances are comprehended, as is very usual.

Being in her father's house, i.e. under his care, power, and government, which she is whilst she continues in her father's house, being a virgin, as appears by the opposition of a married woman, Num_30:6, and of a widow, and divorced woman, Num_30:9, and by this phrase of being in her father's house, for when she marries, she is removed into her husband's house, Rth_1:9. Or, being in, or of her father's family, the word house being commonly used for family; for when she marries, she is translated and removed into another family.

In her youth; when not only her sex, but her age, disables her for vowing; and this clause is added not by way of restriction, as if virgins in their riper years were freed from their parents' jurisdiction, and at their own disposal, (which undoubtedly they are not,) but by way of addition, or amplification, q.d. especially (which particle is here to be understood, such defects of particles being frequent in the Hebrew tongue) in her youth, which is commonly reckoned about her twelfth or thirteenth year.

Numbers 30:4

Her father; under which title seem to be comprehended, as in other places of Scripture, masters, magistrates, and all other superiors, in such cases wherein their right is given away by the inferior's vow; as for instance, when a servant vows to go a long journey for his friend, and his master will not permit him to do so; but not in other cases; as if a servant vows to do something for another in that time which his master alloweth to his own use and disposal, in this case his vow binds him, but not in the former.

And her father shall hold his peace; his silence being an interpretative consent, and much more if he declares his approbation of it.

Shall stand, i.e. be established, or confirmed, or be in force.

Numbers 30:5

In the day that he heareth, i.e. speedily, or without delay, allowing' only necessary and convenient time for deliberation. And it is hereby intimated, that the day or time he had for disallowing her vow was not to be reckoned from her vowing, but from his hearing or knowledge of her vow.

Shall forgive her; or, will forgive either her rashness of making such vows, or rather her not performing of it. But this is to be understood only of such vows which could not be performed without invading the father's or superior's right; for if one should vow to forbear such or such a sin, and all unnecessary occasions or means leading to it, and to perform such or such duties, when he had opportunity, no father nor superior can discharge him from such vows.

Numbers 30:6

An husband, to whose will and authority she was thereby made subject.

When she vowed, to wit, when she was in her father's house, as is evident by comparing Num_30:10; and this clause seems to be added by way of exception to that which was said Num_30:3,4, to signify, that though she were in her father's house, yet if she were married, her husband only, and not her father, could disoblige her from her vow.

Or uttered ought; either,

1. By way of vow, and so this clause explains and determines the former, i.e. if she express her vow in words. Or,

2. By way of oath, concerning which this same phrase is used Lev_5:4, and so this clause is distinct from the former, which the disjunctive particle or implies.

Numbers 30:9

Though she be in her father's house, whither such persons oft returned; which limitation may be gathered both from the opposition of her being in her husband's house, Num_30:10, and from hence, that this was the only doubtful cast for if such a person was not in her father's house, she was unquestionably bound by it, but being now freed from her husband, and returned to her father, it was doubtful whether she was not returned to the same state of subjection in which she was before, and consequently unable to make or perform a vow without her father's consent, as she was before, which is here denied.

Numbers 30:10

In her husband's house, i.e. if she that now is a widow, or divorced, made that vow whilst her husband lived with her; as suppose she then vowed, that if she was a widow, she would give such a proportion of her estate to pious or charitable uses, of which vow she might repent when she came to be a widow, and might believe or pretend she was free from it, because that vow was made in her husband's lifetime, which is here granted, in case her husband then disallowed it, but denied, in case by silence or otherwise he consented to it. And thus this law is sufficiently distinguished from that above, Num_30:6-8.

Numbers 30:13

Afflict the soul, i.e. herself by fasting, which oft goes under that name, as Lev_16:29,31 23:27,32 Isa 58:5, by watching, or the like. And these words are added not for limitation, for it is manifest from Num_30:5,8,10,12, that the power of parents and husbands was more general and large; but for amplification, to show that the husband had this power not only in those vows which concerned himself or his estate, but also in those which might seem only to concern her own person or body. And the reason hereof is, because the wife's person or body being the husband's right, she might not do any thing to the injury of her body without his consent.

Numbers 31:1 NUMBERS CHAPTER 31

God commanded Moses, before he die, to avenge Israel of the Midianites, Num_31:1,2. he chooses twelve thousand men, and Phineas: the kings of Midian and Balaam slain, Num_31:3-8. Their women and cattle taken; and cities burnt: they bring the spoil to Moses and Eleazar, Num_31:9-12. Moses is wroth with the officers for saving the women alive; commands them to kill every male child, and woman that had known man; the rest saved alive; and to purify themselves and the captives. Num_31:13-21. A law for dividing the booty; executed; and the sum of the booty, Num_31:25-40. The tribute. offering of the Lord given to the priests and Levites, Num_31:41-47. The captains make an offering to the Lord; which is laid up in the tabernacle for a memorial, Num_31:48-54.

Numbers 31:2

Of the Midianites, for their malicious designs and practices against Israel, both by hiring Balaam to curse them, and by sending their women to enslave them. The Moabites also were guilty, but God out of his own good pleasure, and in kindness to Lot, was pleased to spare them, the rather, because the measure of their iniquity was not yet full.

Numbers 31:3

For the affront and injury which they offered to God, partly by their own idolatry and lewdness, and partly by seducing God's people into rebellion against him. God's great care was to avenge the Israelites, Num_31:2, and Moses's chief desire was to avenge God rather than himself or the people. Withal he doth hereby insinuate, that God and his people have the same cause, the same friends and enemies.

Numbers 31:4

Numbers 31:5

A thousand of every tribe, to prevent emulations or divisions. God would send no more, though it is apparent that the Midianites were numerous and strong, because he would try and exercise their trust in him, and because he would hereby give them an earnest of their Canaanitish conquests.

Numbers 31:6

Phinehas had the charge not of the army, as general, (an office never committed to any priest in all the Old Testament,) but of the holy instruments, & c. as is here expressed, and was also sent to encourage, and quicken, and confirm them in their good enterprise. It is not here mentioned who was the general, whether Joshua, as some think, because he is not named amongst those who went out to meet the returning host, though that might be for other reasons, or some other prince, nor is it worth while to determine. The holy instruments ; either,

1. The ark, with the things belonging to it, which before the building of the temple they did sometimes carry into the war for the encouragement of their army. See Num_14:44 Jos_6:9 1Sa_4:4 14:18. But why then is it thus ambiguously expressed, seeing in all the other places it is called by its proper name? Nor is the ark ever so called in Scripture. Or,

2. The trumpets, as it here follows, the words being thus to be read, the holy instruments that is, the trumpets ; for and is oftentimes put exegetically for that is , or to wit , as Gen_13:15 1Ch_21:12, compared with 2Sa_24:13 Zec_1:4 9:9, &c. Or rather,

3. The holy breastplate, wherein was the Urim and Thummim, which was easily carried and used, and very useful in war upon many emergent occasions. See 1Sa_23:9 30:7.

And the trumpets, which were to be used in war as well as in the service of the tabernacle. See Num_10:9 2Ch_13:12.

Numbers 31:7

Namely, all whom they took in that war, or all who lived in those parts; for it is probable (and was then very usual) some colonies of them were sent forth to remoter places, which therefore had no hand either in their former sin, or ill this present ruin, of whom we read after this, Jud 6. And herein they did according to God's own order concerning such people, Deu_20:13; only their fault was, that they did not consider the special reason and great obligation which they had to involve the women in the destruction, for which reason Moses blames them afterward, Num_31:15,16.

Numbers 31:8

The kings, called dukes or princes of Sihon, Jos_13:21, because they were subject to him while he lived, but upon his death they resumed their kingly power.

Zur, the father of Cozbi , Num_25:15.

Balaam also.

Object. He was gone and returned to his own place, Num_24:25, which was Aram or Mesopotamia, Num_23:7.

Answ. Either he did go thitherward, but in his journey made some stay in Midian, where he was overtaken by Divine vengeance; or understanding the success of his wicked counsel left with Balaam, in the sin and slaughter of the Israelites, he returned, partly to enjoy the reputation and reward of his counsel which he had lost before, and partly to employ his hellish arts against Israel, now they were, as he thought, forsaken by their God, and exposed to his malice. Here Balaam dies the death of the wicked, and not of the righteous, as he desired, Num_23:10.

Every woman that hath known man; partly for punishment, because the guilt was general, and though some of them only did prostitute themselves to the Israelites, yet the rest made themselves accessory by their consent, or concurrence, or approbation; and partly for prevention of the like mischief from such an adulterous generation.

The Reubenites and Gadites sue for their inheritance on that side Jordan, as being fit for cattle, Num_32:1-5. They promise to leave their children and cattle there, and go armed before their brethren till Canaan should be subdued, Num_32:16-19; on which condition they, together with the half-tribe of Manasseh, obtain their desire, Num_32:20-42.

Numbers 32:38

Nebo; of which city see Deu_34:1 Jer_48:1.

Their names being changed; either because conquerors of places use to do so; or because the names of other gods (which Nebo and Baal-meon unquestionably were) were not to be mentioned , Exo_23:13, especially at the first settling of the Israelites there, that the very remembrance of the idols might be blotted out, and so the temptation to idolatry removed, though afterwards, when that danger was over, they were called by their old names again, Jos_13:17,20.

Numbers 32:39

Took it, i.e. part of it; or Gilead is here taken more strictly. See Poole on "Num_32:29"; Gen_31:21 Deu_3:12,13.

Numbers 32:40

Unto Machir, i.e. not to Machir himself, who doubtless was long since dead; see Gen_1:23; but the family or posterity of Machir, which are called by their father's name; as the names of Abraham , Act_7:16; of Isaac , Amo_7:9; of Jacob or Israel frequently; of Judah and Simeon , Jud_1:3; of David , 1Ki_12:16; are manifestly put for their posterity.

Numbers 32:41

Jair is called here

the son of Manasseh, partly because he was so by his mother, 1Ch_2:21,22; and partly because he joined himself with the Manassites in this expedition, and settled himself among them.

Numbers 32:42

Nobah, who though not elsewhere named, was doubtless an eminent person of the tribe of Manasseh.

Numbers 33:1 NUMBERS CHAPTER 33

A relation of the marches and campings of the Israelites from Egypt to Canaan, Num_33:1-49. They are commanded to drive out the Canaanites, and destroy their pictures, molten images, and high places, and to divide the land by lot, Num_33:50-54. The Canaanites, if not dispossessed, should trouble and vex them; and God would do to them as he thought to do to the others, Num_33:55-56.

With their armies, i.e. in great number and exact order, as armies march, and they did, Exo_12:37,38 13:18.

Numbers 33:2

Moses would have this done, partly to evince the truth of the history, partly to preserve the remembrance of God's glorious and miraculous works both of judgment and mercy towards his people, and thereby to confirm their faith in their present difficult undertaking.

Numbers 33:3

They all repaired to

Rameses by Moses's order from all parts of the land.

In the sight of all the Egyptians. See Exo_14:8 Num_15:30.

Numbers 33:4

Upon their gods; either,

1. Their princes and rulers, who are sometimes called gods in Scripture; and so this is added by way of amplification, God slew their first-born; not only of the meaner sort, but even of their king and princes. Or,

2. Their false gods, to wit, those beasts which the brutish Egyptians worshipped as gods, which were killed with the rest, for the first-born both of men and beasts were then killed, Exo_13:5. See Poole "Exo_12:12"; See Poole "Exo_18:11".

Numbers 34:2

Or, limits , or bounds , to wit, of the land beyond Jordan; which are here particularly described,

1. To direct and bound them in their wars and conquests, that they might not seek the enlargement of their empire, after the manner of other nations, but be contented with their own portion.
2. To encourage them in their attempt upon Canaan, and assure them of their success.
3. To guide them in the approaching distribution of the land.

Numbers 34:3

The south quarter is here described from east to west by divers windings and turnings, by reason of the mountains, rivers, &c.

By the coast of Edom, bordering all along upon the Edomites.

The Salt Sea, so called from the salt and sulphurous taste of its waters.

Eastward, i.e. at the eastern part of that sea, where the eastern and southern borders meet.

Numbers 34:4

Akrabbim, called Maaleh-acrabbim , Jos_15:3, which was at the south end of the Salt or Dead Sea.

From the south, or, on the south , i.e. proceeding onward towards the south.

Kadesh-barnea was on the southern part of Canaan, Num_13:17.

Hazar-addar, in Jos_15:3, may seem distinguished into two places, Hezron and Adar, which here are united, because peradventure they were contiguous, or joined together. Or, the village of Addar ; and so this is the same place called Adar , Jos_15:3; and for Hezron, that may be another place here omitted, and there supplied for more exactness. Azmon is at the west end of the Mount of Edom.

Numbers 34:5

The river of Egypt, called Sihor , Jos_13:3, which divided Egypt from Canaan. See Gen_15:18.

Numbers 34:6

The great sea; the midland sea from the south to the north so far as runs parallel with Mount Libanus.

Numbers 34:7

Not that Hor where Aaron died, Num_20:23, which was southward, and bordering upon Edom, Num_33:37,38, and therefore could not be their northern border; but another mountain, and, as it is conceived, the mountain of Libanus, which is elsewhere mentioned as the northern border of the land, and which, in regard of divers parts, or by divers people, is called by divers names, as Sirion and Shenir , Deu_3:9, and Sion , Deu_4:48, and Hermon , Jos_13:5, and here Hor , which signifies a mountain , and this may be called so by way of eminency. Certain it is, that as Hor here, so Hemon , Jos_13:5, is joined with the entrance of Hamath , which makes it probable they are one and the same place.

Numbers 34:8

Hamath, called Hamath the great , Amo_6:2, which is among the northern borders, Eze_47:16,17. See Gen_10:15,18 Num 13:21 Jud_3:3 1Ki_8:65.

Numbers 35:1 NUMBERS CHAPTER 35

Eight and forty cities given to the Levites, together with their suburbs; among which six cities of refuge, for an Israelite or stranger who had killed another unawares, Num_35:1-15. Wilful murder decided, and the murderer to be put to death, Num_35:16-21. The man-slayer must abide in the city of refuge till the death of the high priest; and if caught out of it, might be killed, Num_35:25-29. Two witnesses required to condemn a man to die, Num_35:30. No satisfaction to be taken for the life of a murderer, Num_35:31, nor that any one might return from a city of refuge before the time, Num_35:32; that the land be not defiled and polluted, and not cleansed of the blood shed in it, Num_35:33,34.

Numbers 35:3

For their cattle; for pasturage for their cattle; where they might not build houses, nor plant gardens, orchards, or vineyards, no, nor sow corn, for which they were abundantly provided out of the first-fruits and tithes. And these suburbs did not belong to the Levites in common, but were distributed to them in convenient proportions, as may appear from Jos_21:18 1Ch_6:60.

Numbers 35:4

Object. In the next verse it is two thousand. How do these agree?

Answ. 1. LXX. interpreters read both here and Num_35:5 two thousand cubits , whence some suppose this to be an error in the Hebrew text, which, being in a matter neither concerning faith nor good manners, is not prejudicial to the authority of the Holy Scriptures.

Answ. 2. The one thousand cubits may be in length from the city, and the two thousand cubits in breadth on each side of the city, and so they well agree; for a line of a thousand cubits being drawn in length eastward, and another westward, and another northward, and another southward, a line drawn at a thousand cubits distance from the city, from east to west, must needs contain two thousand cubits, and so must the other line from north to south, and so on every side of the city there must be two thousand cubits.

Answ. 3. This verse and the next do not speak to the same thing: this speaks of the space or place from whence the suburbs shall be measured, the next verse speaks of the space unto which that measure shall be extended; and the words may very well be read thus, And the suburbs —shall be (so it is only an ellipsis of the verb substantive, which is most frequent, and the meaning is, shall be taken or accounted) from the wall of the city, and from (that particle being supplied or understood from the foregoing words, which is very usual) without it , or, from the outward parts of it , (which being a general and indefinite expression is limited and explained by the following words,) even from a thousand cubits round about; which are mentioned not as the thing measured, for as yet there is not a word of measuring , but as the term or space from which the measuring line should begin. And then it follows, Num_35:5, And ye shall measure from without the city (not from the wall of the city , as was said before, Num_35:4, but from without it , i.e. from the said outward part or space of a thousand cubits without the wall of the city round about) on the east side two thousand cubits , &c. So in truth there were three thousand cubits from the wall of the city, whereof one thousand probably were for out-houses, stalls for cattle, gardens, vineyards, and olive-yards, and the like, and the other two thousand for pasture, which are therefore called the field of the suburbs , Lev_25:34, by way of distinction from the suburbs themselves, which consist of the first thousand cubits from the wall of the city.

Numbers 35:6

For refuge, or, of receipt , or escape , or resort , to wit, for man-slayers; and these cities are assigned among the

Levites, partly, because they might be presumed to be the most proper and impartial judges between man-slayers and wilful murderers; partly, because their presence, and counsel, and authority would more effectually bridle the passions of the avenger of blood who might pursue him thither; and partly, to signify that it is only in Christ (whom the Levitical priests did represent) that sinners find refuge and safety from the destroyer. The names of these cities, we have Deu_4:41,43 Jos 20:8.

The avenger, to wit, of the party slain, or, of blood , as it is fully expressed below, Num_35:19,25; Heb. from the redeemer , or, from the next kinsman , to whom by the law belonged the right of redemption of the lands of, and vindication of the injury done to the person deceased.

Die not, i.e. be not killed by the avenger meeting him in some other place.

Before the congregation, i.e. before the society or convention of judges or elders, who were appointed in every city for the decision of criminal causes, who were twenty-three, who were to examine the matter, and that publicly before the people, whether the murder was wilful or casual.

Quest . In what city was this cause to be tried?

Answ . Some say in the city of refuge, others say in the city in or near which the fact was committed. It seems to me it was done in both, at first in the city of refuge, as is manifest in Jos_20:4; but if that trial and sentence did not satisfy the avenger of blood, it was fully and finally determined in the other city, as is sufficiently evident both by comparing this place with Num_35:25 Jos_20:6, and from the usual and most reasonable course of justice, which is that facts should be examined, as far as may be, in or near the places where they were committed, and where the witnesses and evidences were at hand. In judgment , or, for judgment , i. e. to receive sentence there according to the nature of the fact.

He shall abide in it, be confined to it, partly to show the hatefulness of wilful murder in God's account by so severe a punishment, as this in many cases might prove, inflicted upon the very appearance of it; and partly for the security of the man-slayer, lest the presence of such a person, and his conversation among the kindred of the deceased, might occasion reproach and bloodshed.

Unto the death of the high priest; partly because the public grief for the loss of so public a person was likely to assuage the private griefs and passions of men, the rather, because by this example they were minded of their own mortality, and thereby withheld from taking vengeance; and principally to show that the death of Christ (the true High Priest, whom the others did evidently and eminently represent and typify) is the only mean whereby sins are pardoned, and sinners are set at liberty.

Numbers 35:33

These words are added as a reason not of the last law, Num_35:32, for in that case the land was cleansed without the blood of the man-slayer. but of the law next foregoing that, Num_35:31, in which case it holds; and the sense is, If you shall spare the murderer, or take any satisfaction for him, you do together with yourselves involve your land and people in guilt, and will certainly bring down God's vengeance upon yourselves and them.

Numbers 35:34

Be not cruel to your own land by making it a den of murderers.

Numbers 36:1 NUMBERS CHAPTER 36

The inconvenience of daughters inheriting is remedied by a general command that all such marry in the tribe of their fathers, to which of them they shall think best, Num_36:1-9. They obey, Num_36:10-12. These commands God gave by Moses to Israel in the plains of Moab, Num_36:13.

The chief fathers of the families, who had the care and management of the public affairs of that tribe committed to them.

Numbers 36:2

Our brother, i.e. our kinsman, one of our tribe, Jos_17:2,3.

Numbers 36:3

For their inheritance will pass to their children, who will be of another tribe by their father's side, which alone is considered in this place.

Numbers 36:4

Which God appointed principally for this end, to preserve the inheritance in the hands of the tribes and families to which they were first given.

Numbers 36:5

Their plea is just and reasonable. God did not take particular care about every occurrence that happened, or might happen, but left divers things to be found out by human prudence, which being his own gift, it was meet there should be opportunities left for the exercise of it; and God thought fit to approve and ratify the prudent and profitable inventions of men by his own law or sanction; as in the case of Jethro, Exo 18, of Zelophehad's daughter, Num 27, and here of their brethren. But it is observable, that God allowed this only in civil affairs, but never in the matters of his worship, where he utterly forbids it.

Numbers 36:6

They seem hereby to be confined not only to the same tribe, but also to the family of their tribe, as appears from the reason of the law, for God would have the inheritance of families as well as tribes kept entire and unmixed; and this was one reason of that law of marrying the brother's wife, Deu 25. And although the next verse may seem to thwart this interpretation, the reason of this law being there given that inheritances might not go from tribe to tribe, Num_36:8 confirms it, where the very same phrase is repeated, and that more emphatically, that such shall marry one of the family of the tribe of her father ; and this further reason and restriction is added, that they may enjoy every man the inheritance (not only of his tribe, but) of his fathers , to wit, belonging to his father's family.

Numbers 36:7

No text from Poole on this verse.

Numbers 36:8

By which clause it seems that this law was not general to forbid every woman to marry into another tribe, (as may be reasonably concluded from the practice of so many patriarchs, kings, priests, and other holy men, who have married women of other tribes, yea, sometimes of other nations, which it is not likely they would have done, if this had been a transgression of God's law,) but restrained to heiresses, or such as were likely to be so. See 1Ch_23:22. But if they had brethren, it is probable they were free to marry into any tribe, yet so that, if their brethren died, their punishment was, that the inheritance went from them to the next akin of their father's tribe and family. And the principal reason why God was solicitous to preserve tribes and families unmixed was, that the tribe and family too out of which the Messiah was to come, and by which he should be known, might be evident and unquestionable.

THE FIFTH BOOK of MOSES, CALLED DEUTERONOMY

THE ARGUMENT

Moses, in the two last months of his life, rehearseth what God had done for them, and their frequent murmurings, rebellions, and constant ingratitude. He begs to enter into the land, but is permitted only to see it. He forbiddeth any communion with the nations for several reasons, #De 8. He gives a short repetition of those sundry laws, moral, ceremonial, judicial, and military, which he had given them, from whence this book is called DEUTERONOMY. Then, after many exhortations, he prophesieth of Christ; afterwards he shows how matters of war are to be managed, and, giving many other particular directions with reference to duties, conditions, and persons of both sexes, he pronounceth blessings on the obedient, and curses on the disobedient: he then gives a charge for laying up and reading of the law at certain times, and every seven years to be solemnly read before all the people; he composeth a song for common use, comprising the wonderful things here mentioned: he prophesieth of Christ's coming, and the calling of the Gentiles, seeth the land, and dieth, leaving Joshua, after he had consecrated him, to succeed.

DEUTERONOMY CHAPTER 1

A rehearsal of what had befallen Israel in their forty years' march; as, God's command to depart, #De 1:1-8. Moses's inability to judge alone, #De 1:9-12. Other judges and officers appointed, #De 1:13-16. Charge given the judges, #De 1:17,18. Their passage to Kadesh-barnea, #De 1:19-21. Spies sent to search the land of the Amorites, #De 1:22-24. Their return and report, #De 1:25. The disobedience of the people, #De 1:26-33. God's wrath, #De 1:34-40. They smitten by the Amorites, #De 1:44. Their complaint to God, which the Lord regards not, #De 1:45.

Ver. 1.

These are the laws, counsels, and admonitions delivered by Moses from God to Israel, which are here repeated for the instruction and obligation of those who by reason of their tender years were incapable either of understanding them, or of entering into covenant with God.

Unto all Israel, to wit, by the heads or elders of the several tribes, or others, who were to communicate these discourses to all the people in several assemblies.

In the plain; either.

1. In the vast desert of Arabia. But that is no where called a plain. Or rather,
2. In the plain of Moab, as may appear by comparing this with #De 1:5 Nu 22:1 De 34:8.

Object. That was far from the Red Sea here mentioned.

Answ. The word suph here used doth not signify the Red Sea, which is commonly called jam suph, and which was at too great a distance; but some other place now unknown to us, (as also most of the following places are,) so called from the reeds, or flags, or rushes (which that word signifies) that grew in or near it; which reason of the name being common to other places with the Red Sea, it is not strange if they got the same name. Compare #Nu 21:14. Paran; not that #Nu 10:12, which there and elsewhere is called the wilderness of Paran, and which was too remote; but some other place called by the same name, than which nothing more usual. Tophel and Laban; places not mentioned elsewhere.

Hazereth; of which see #Nu 11:35 33:17,18. And these places seem to be the several bounds and limits not of the whole country of Moab, but of the plain of Moab, where Moses now was, and spoke these words.

Ver. 2.

This is added to show that the reason why the Israelites in so many years were advanced no further from Horeb than to these plains, was not the great distance of the places or length of the way, which was but a journey of eleven days at most, but because of their rebellions, as is mentioned before and repeated in this book.

Horeb, or

Sinai, the place where the law was given, which is promiscuously called by both those names.

Mount Seir, or Mount Edom, i.e. the mountainous country of Seir, which was first possessed by the Horims, and afterwards by the Edomites, #De 2:12.

Kadesh-barnea was not far from the borders of Canaan. See #Ge 16:14 Nu 13:26.

Ver. 3.

This was but a little before his death.

Ver. 4.

His palace or mansion-house was at

Astaroth, and he was slain at

Edrei, #Nu 21:33; of both these places, see #Ge 14:5 Jos 13:31.

Ver. 6.

Of Horeb, where they continued about a year's space, #Ex 19:1 Nu 10:11,12.

Ver. 7.

To the mount of the Amorite, i.e. to the mountainous country where the Amorites dwelt, which is opposed to the plain here following, where others of them dwelt. And this is the first mentioned, because it was in the borders of the land: see below, #De 1:19,20. The divers parts or bounds of the land are here mentioned.

Ver. 8.

Your burden; the trouble of ruling and managing so perverse a people.

Your strife; either your quarrellings with God; or rather your contentions among yourselves, for the determination whereof the elders were appointed.

Ver. 13.

Persons of knowledge, wisdom, and experience, men famous, and had in reputation, for ability and integrity; for to such they would more readily submit.

Ver. 15.

The chief, not in authority, which yet they had not, but in endowments for good government.

And officers; inferior officers, that were to attend upon the superior magistrates, and to execute their decrees.

Ver. 16.

That converseth or dealeth with him. To such God would have justice equally administered as to his own people, partly for the honour of religion, and partly for the interest which every man hath in matters of common right.

Ver. 17.

Not respect persons, Heb. not know or acknowledge faces, i.e. not give sentence according to the outward qualities of the person as he is poor or rich, your friend or enemy, but purely according to the merits of the cause. For which reason some of the Grecian lawgivers ordered that the judges should give sentence in the dark, where they could not see men's faces. See the same or the like phrase #De 10:17 2Ch 19:6,7 Job 13:8 Jas 2:1,9.

The small; persons of the meanest rank.

The judgment is God's, i.e. it is passed in the name of God, and by commission from him, by you as representing his person, and doing his work, who therefore will own and defend you therein against all your enemies, and to whom you must give an exact account.

Ver. 24.

The valley, or, the brook: the word signifies both, for brooks commonly run in valleys.

Of Eshcol, i.e. of grapes, so called from the goodly cluster of grapes which they brought from thence, #Nu 13:23.

Ver. 25.

The fruit; grapes, pomegranates, and figs, #Nu 13:23.

It is a good land; which acknowledgment, coming from its enemies, should have prevailed with you to go in, more than their discouraging words should have beat you off, because the Lord who had given you this land, was unquestionably able to settle you in it in spite of all opposition.

Because the Lord hated us, and therefore designed to destroy us.

Ver. 28.

The people is greater, in number and strength and valour.

Up to heaven, i.e. to a great height. A common hyperbole, as #Ge 11:4 Ps 107:26. The Anakims; the children of Anak or Enak. See #Jud 1:10,20.

Ver. 30.

Where you were weak, dispirited, divided, raw, and unexperienced, and in a great measure unarmed, and able to do nothing against your numerous, potent, united enemies, but to stand still and see the salvation of God. And therefore now your distrust is highly unreasonable, when you have been hardened and fitted for military service by your travels, disciplined and experienced in some degree as to martial affairs, encouraged by frequent and glorious miracles for forty years together, and you are going into a country divided into several nations and kingdoms.

Ver. 31.

God bare thee, or, carried thee, as a father carries his weak and tender child in his arms, as #Isa 49:22; or as upon eagles' wings, as it is #Ex 19:4, through difficulties and dangers, gently leading you according as you were able to go, and sustaining you by his

Ver. 3.

Towards the land of the Amorites and Canaanites.

Ver. 4.

Through the coast, or, by or near the coast or border; for they did not pass through their borders, as it is said, #Nu 20:21. And the particle beth doth oft signify by or near, as #Ge 37:13 Jos 5:13 Jud 8:5 Jer 32:7. Thus that difference may be reconciled, which others reconcile thus, that they at first denied it, but afterwards granted it.

Which dwell in Seir: these words restrain the prohibition to these particular children of Esau, for there were another sort or branch of Esau's children, which were to be meddled with and destroyed, even the Amalekites, #Ex 17:14 De 25:17, who were Esau's posterity, #Ge 36:12.

They shall be afraid of you; but I charge you take no advantage of their fears, which you will be very apt to do.

Ver. 5.

Meddle not with them, to wit, in battle at this time.

Ver. 6.

Buy meat of them; for though the manna did yet rain upon them, they were not forbidden to buy other meats when they had opportunity, but only were forbidden greedily to hunger after them when they could not obtain them.

Buy water of them; for water in those parts was scarce, and therefore private persons did severally dig pits for their particular use. See #Ge 26:18 Nu 21:18.

Ver. 7.

By God's blessing thou art able to buy thy conveniences, and therefore thy theft and rapine will be inexcusable, because without any pretence of necessity.

He knoweth, Heb. he hath known, i.e. observed, or regarded with care and kindness, which that word oft notes, as #Ps 1:6 31:7; which experience of God's singular goodness to thee, should make thee trust him still, and not use any indirect and unjust practices to procure. what thou wantest or desirest.

Ver. 8.

Ezion-gaber; of which see #Nu 33:35, which may be either that place upon the Red Sea, #1Ki 9:26, or another of the same name.

We turned, to wit, from our direct road which lay through Edom's land.

Ver. 9.

Ar, the chief city of the Moabites, #Nu 21:15,28, here put for the whole country, which depended upon it.

The children of Lot; so called to signify that this preservation was not for their sakes, for they were a wicked people; but for Lot's sake, whose memory God yet honours.

Ver. 10.

Emims; men terrible for stature and strength, as their very name imports; see #Ge 14:5; whose expulsion by the Moabites is here noted as a great encouragement to the Israelites, for whose sake he would much more drive out the wicked and accursed Canaanites.

Ver. 11.

Ver. 12.

Object. God had not yet given it unto them.

Answ. 1. The past tense is here put for the future, will give, after the manner of the prophets.

2. Things are oft said to be done when they are only resolved, or decreed, or attempted to be done, in which sense Reuben is said to deliver Joseph, #Ge 37:21; Balak to fight against Israel, #Jos 24:9; Abraham to have offered his son, #Heb 11:17.

3. God may well be said to have given it, not only because he had purposed and promised to give it, but also because he was now about to give it, and had already given them some part of it, and that as an earnest of the whole.

4. This may be particularly understood of that part of Israel's possession which was beyond Jordan, which God had actually given to them, that is, to some of them, for even the land of Canaan on this side Jordan was not given to all of them, but only to some of the tribes.

See #Jer 47:4 Am 9:7.

Caphtor is by the learned thought to be Cappadocia; whither these people might make an expedition out of Egypt, either because of the report of the great riches of part of that country, which drew others thither from places equally remote, or after the manner of those ancient times, or for some other reason now unknown.

Answ. This is true of that half of it which the Amorites had taken from them, but not of the other half, which yet was in the possession of the Ammonites.

In the mountains; the mountainous country of the Ammonites.

Forbad us, Heb. commanded us: commanding is put for forbidding here, as #Ge 2:16 3:11 Le 4:2 De 4:23. The words may be thus rendered, concerning which the Lord gave us command or charge, to wit, that we should not meddle with them, as was said before. So it is only an ellipsis of the preposition, which is very frequent.

DEUTERONOMY CHAPTER 3

Their march to Bashan, #De 3:1. Ver. 10.

Gilead is sometimes taken largely for all the Israelites' possessions beyond Jordan, and so it comprehends Bashan, but here more strictly for that part of it which lies in and near Mount Gilead, and so it is distinguished from Bashan and Argob.

The other giants of Bashan were destroyed before; and therefore when Og was killed, the Israelites' work was done.

Ver. 16.

Half the valley, or rather to the middle of the river; for the word rendered half signifies commonly middle; and the same Hebrew word signifying both a valley and a brook or river, it seems more reasonable to understand it of a river, as the same word is here rendered in the next foregoing clause of this verse, than of a valley, which was not mentioned before, especially seeing there is here an article added which seems to be emphatical, and to note that river, to wit, now mentioned. Add to this, that there was no such valley, much less any half valley, belonging both unto the Reubenites and Gadites. But according to the other translation the sense is plain and agreeable to the truth, that their land extended from Gilead unto Aroer, and, to speak exactly, to the middle of that river; for as that river was the border between them and others, so one half of it belonged to them, as the other half did to others. And that this is no subtle device, as some may think it, but the truth of the thing, and the real meaning of the place, will appear by comparing this place with two others:

1. With #Jos 12:2, where the same thing is expressed in the same words in the Hebrew which are here, though our translators render the selfsame words there from the middle of the river, which here they render half of the valley; and where the bounds of Sihon's kingdom, which was the same portion there mentioned as given to Reuben and Gad, are thus described, from Aroer, which is upon the bank of the river of Arnon, and from the middle of the river, and from half Gilead, even unto the river Jabbok, which is the border of the children of Ammon.
2. With #De 2:36, From Aroer, which is by the brink of the river of Arnon, and from the city that is by the river, or rather, as the Hebrew hath it, in the river, i.e. from Ar, which was the chief city of the Moabites, and therefore denied to the Israelites, as is here implied, and more fitly expressed, #De 2:9, which city was seated in an island in the middle of the river. So that here we have a just and full reason why the border of this land given to Reuben and Gad is so nicely and critically described there, even to the middle of a river, which although in truth and strictness it be the bound of those lands which are divided by a river, yet is not usually expressed in the description of borders, either in Scripture or other authors, because here was an eminent city of the Moabites in the middle of this river, which by this curious and exact description is excepted from their possession, as God would have it to be. And the border even unto the river Jabbok: the meaning seems to be this, and the border, to wit, of their land, was, which verb substantive is commonly understood, or went forth, (as the phrase is, #Jos 15:6,7, &c.,) from thence, to wit, from the river Arnon, even unto the river Jabbok, for so indeed their border did proceed. Which is the border of the children of Ammon. Object. This was the border between them and the Manassites, as is evident, and therefore not the border of the Ammonites.

Answ. It bordered upon the Manassites in one part, and upon the Ammonites in another part, to wit, in that part which is remoter from Jordan, and so both are true.

Ver. 18.

For he supposed God's threatening might be conditional and reversible, as many others were.

That goodly mountain, or, that blessed mountain, which the Jews not improbably understand of that mountain on which the temple was to be built. For as Moses desired and determined to prepare an habitation for God, #Ex 15:2, and knew very well that God would choose a certain place for his habitation, and to put his name there, #De 12:5; so he also knew that it was the manner both of the true worshippers of God and of idolaters to worship their God in high places, and particularly that Abraham did worship God in the mount of Moriah, #Ge 22:2, and therefore did either reasonably conjecture that God would choose some certain mountain for the place of his habitation, or possibly understood by revelation that in that very mount of Moriah, where Abraham performed that eminent and glorious act of worship, there also the children of Abraham should have their place of constant and settled worship. This he seems to call that mountain, emphatically and eminently, that which was much in Moses's thoughts, though not in his eye, and the blessed (as the Hebrew tob oft signifies) or the goodly mountain. Or, the mountain may be here put for the mountainous countries, as that word is oft used, as #Ge 36:9 Nu 13:29 23:7 De 1:7 Jos 10:6 11:16,21, &c. And it is known that a great part of the glory and beauty and profit of this country lay in its hills or mountains. See #De 11:11 33:15. And that goodly mountain may by an enallage of the number be put for those goodly mountains in Canaan, which were many. Thus also he proceeds gradually in this desire and description, and prays that he may see in general the good land that is beyond Jordan, and then particularly the goodly mountains of it, and especially that famous mount of Lebanon, which was so celebrated for its tall and large cedars, and other trees and excellent plants. See #Ps 29:5 104:16 Isa 2:13 14:8.

Charge Joshua; give him commission and authority, and a command to execute his trust, and conduct the people.

Strengthen him with exhortations and promises, and assurances of my presence and help, and of good success.

He shall go over: it was not Moses, but Joshua or Jesus, that was to give the people rest, #Heb 4:8.

Ver. 29.

The house or temple of Peor, or of Baal-Peor, of which see #Nu 25:3, whence this place or city had its name.

DEUTERONOMY CHAPTER 4

An exhortation to obey the law, #De 4:1-13; and warning against idolatry, #De 4:14-24; from the mischief of it upon themselves and children, #De 4:25-28; God's promise upon their repentance, #De 4:29-31; and from God's wonders towards them, #De 4:32-40. Cities of refuge are appointed, #De 4:41-43.

Ver. 1.

The statutes; the laws which concern the worship and service of God. The judgments; the laws concerning your duties to men. So these two comprehend both tables, and the whole law of God.

Ver. 2.

Ye shall not add, by devising other doctrines or ways of worship than what I have taught or prescribed; see #Nu 15:39,40 De 12:8,32 1Ki 12:33 Pr 30:6 Mt 15:9; for this were to accuse me of want of wisdom or care or faithfulness in not giving you sufficient instructions for my own service.

Neither shall ye diminish, by rejecting or neglecting any thing which I have commanded, though it seem never so small.

Ver. 6.

For though the generality of heathen people in the latter and degenerate ages of the world, did, through inveterate prejudices, and for their own lusts and interest, condemn the laws of the Hebrews as foolish and absurd, yet it is most certain that divers of the wisest heathens did highly approve of them, so far that they made use of divers of them, and translated them into their own laws and constitutions; and Moses, the giver of these laws, hath been mentioned with great honour for his wisdom and learning by many of them. And particularly the old heathen oracle expressly said, that the Chaldeans or Hebrews, who worshipped the uncreated God, were the only wise men.

Ver. 7.

God nigh unto them, by glorious miracles, by the pledges of his special presence, by the operations of his grace, and particularly, as it here follows, by his readiness to hear our prayers, and to give us those succours which we call upon him for.

Ver. 8.

Whereby he implies that the true greatness of a nation doth not consist in pomp or power, or largeness of empire, as commonly men think, but in the righteousness of its laws.

Ver. 9.

Ver. 10.

Some of them stood in Horeb in their own persons, though then they were but young; the rest stood then in the loins of their parents, in whom they may well be said to stand there, because they are said to have entered into covenant with God, because their parents did so in their name and for their use.

Ver. 11.

Flaming up into the air, which is oft called heaven; and the midst or the heart of it is not only that which is strictly and properly the middle part, but that which is within it, though but a little way, in which sense places or persons or things are said to be in the heart of the sea, #Ex 15:8 Pr 23:34 Eze 28:2; and Christ in the heart of the earth, #Mt 12:40.

Ver. 12.

i.e. No resemblance or representation of God, whereby either his essence or properties or actions were represented, such as were usual among the heathens.

Ver. 13.

No text from Poole on this verse.

Ver. 14.

Statutes and judgments, i.e. the ceremonial and judicial laws, which are here distinguished from the moral, or the ten commandments, #De 4:13.

Ver. 15.

By which caution he insinuates man's great proneness to the worship of images.

God, who in other places and times did appear in a similitude, in the fashion of a man, now in this most solemn appearance, when he comes to give eternal laws for the regulation and direction of the Israelites in the worship of God, and in their duty to men, he purposely avoids all such representations, to show that he abhors all worship of images, or of himself by images of what kind soever, as it here follows, #De 4:16-19, because he is the invisible God, and cannot be represented by any visible image. See #Isa 40:18 Ac 17:29.

Ver. 16.

i.e. Lest ye corrupt your minds with mean and carnal thoughts of God. Or, corrupt your ways or courses, by worshipping God in a corrupt manner, or by falling into idolatry.

A graven image, to wit, for worship, or for the representation of God, as it is explained #De 4:19, for otherwise it was not simply unlawful to draw the picture or make a figure of a man or a beast.

Ver. 17.

Whereby the heathen nations did represent and worship God, some by an ox, some by a goat, or a hen, or a serpent, or a fish, &c.

Ver. 18.

No text from Poole on this verse.

Ver. 19.

Driven to worship them, i.e. strongly inclined, and in a manner constrained, partly by the glory of these heavenly bodies, which may seem to be made for higher purposes than to enlighten this lump of earth; partly from that natural propension which is in men to idolatry. Or, shouldest be driven or thrust, to wit, out of the way of the Lord, (as it is more fully expressed, #De 13:5) or be seduced, or led aside, as silly sheep easily are, and worship them. Or, shouldest be cast down, or throw down thyself and worship them, i.e. worship them by falling down before them.

Unto all nations, which are not gods, but creatures, made not for the worship, but for the use of men, yea, of the meanest and most barbarous people under heaven, and therefore cannot without great absurdity be worshipped, especially by you who are so much advanced above other nations in wisdom and knowledge, and in this, that you are my peculiar people.

Ver. 20.

i.e. The furnace wherein iron and other metals are melted, to which Egypt is fitly compared, not only for the torment and misery which they there endured, but also because they were thoroughly tried and purged thereby, as metals are by the fire.

A people of inheritance; his peculiar possession from generation to generation. See #Ex 19:5 De 7:6 Tit 2:14. And therefore for you to forsake God, and worship idols, will be not only wickedness and madness, but most abominable ingratitude.

God hath granted you the favour which he denied to me, which greatly increaseth your obligation to God.

Ver. 22.

Ver. 23.

Or, commanded thee, to wit, not to do, which is easily understood by comparing this place with #Ex 20:4,5, and with #Ge 3:11, where this phrase is fully expressed. See more on #Le 4:2 De 2:37.

Ver. 24.

A consuming fire; a just and terrible God, who, notwithstanding his special relation to thee, will severely punish and destroy thee if thou provokest him by idolatry, or other ways.

A jealous God, who being espoused to thee, will be highly incensed against thee, (if thou followest after other lovers, or committest whoredom with idols,) and will bear no rival or partner.

Ver. 25.

In the sight of the Lord: these words are here added, either,

1. As a caution. Your idolatry, though possibly secretly and cunningly managed, will not be hid from him; he sees it, and he will punish it. Or,
2. To aggravate their spiritual whoredom, as being committed in the sight and presence of their Lord and Husband, whose eye is alone peculiarly upon them in all their ways, than it is upon other people. Or,
3. By way of opposition unto men's judgment. Idolatry oft times seems good, and reasonable, and religious in the eyes of men, but, saith he, it is evil in the eyes of the Lord, whose judgment is most considerable.

Ver. 26.

Heaven and earth; either,

1. Figuratively, i.e. God, and angels, and men. Or rather,
2. Properly; it being usual in Scripture to call in the senseless creatures as witnesses in such cases, as #De 32:1 Isa 1:2 Jer 2:12.

Ver. 27.

No text from Poole on this verse.

Ver. 28.

i.e. Idols. You shall be compelled by men, and given up by me to idolatry. So that very thing which was your choice shall be your punishment; it being just and usual for God to punish one sin by giving them up to another, as is manifest from #Ro 1:24,25.

Ver. 29.

If thou seek him; if thou desirest his help and favour. See #De 30:2 Isa 45:6.

With all thy heart, i.e. sincerely and fervently.

Ver. 30.

In the latter days; either in general, in succeeding ages and generations; or particularly, in the days of the Messias, which are commonly called in Scripture the latter, or last days, as #Isa 2:2 Ho 3:5 Mic 4:1 Da 2:44 Heb 1:2 9:26. And so this may respect the conversion and redemption of the Jewish nation even in those times when their case seems most desperate, when they have forsaken their God and rejected their Messias for many ages, to wit, towards the end of the world.

Ver. 31.

i.e. Made with thy fathers, including their posterity, as #Ge 17:7.

Ver. 32.

From the one side of heaven, i.e. of the earth under heaven. Ask all the inhabitants of the world. Compare #Mt 24:31, with #Mr 13:27.

Ver. 33.

i.e. And was not overwhelmed and consumed by such a glorious appearance. See #Ex 24:11 33:20

Ver. 34.

By temptations; by tribulations and persecutions, which are commonly called temptations, which are here fitly mentioned as one great occasion first of their cries unto God, and then of God's coming for their rescue. Or, temptations is the general title, which is explained by the following particulars, signs and wonders, &c., which are called temptations, because they were trials both to the Egyptians and Israelites, whether thereby they would be induced to believe and obey God or no.

Great terrors, raised in the minds of the Egyptians, as the history showeth; compare #De 2:25 34:12; or by terrible things done among them.

In his sight; keeping his eye fixed upon him, as the father doth on his beloved child. Or, with his presence, i.e. he did not send them forth by Moses, but he himself was present with them, and as it were marched along with them, in the pillar of cloud and fire.

DEUTERONOMY CHAPTER 5

God, upon Mount Horeb, makes a covenant with Israel, #De 5:1-5. The covenant or ten commandments is delivered to Moses in two tables, #De 5:6-22. The Israelites desire that not God, but Moses, may speak to them, #De 5:23-27; which God approves of, #De 5:28-31. Moses exhorts them to obedience, with a promise of life, #De 5:32,33.

Ver. 1.

Moses called all Israel, to wit, by their elders, who were to impart it to the rest.

Ver. 2.

No text from Poole on this verse.

Ver. 3.

With our fathers; either,

1. Not only with them, the word only being here understood, as it is #Ge 32:28 35:10 1Sa 8:7 Jer 7:19 31:34 Mt 9:13. Or,
2. Not at all with them. But then the word covenant is not here to be taken for the covenant of grace in general, for so it was made with their fathers, #Ex 2:24, but for this particular and mixed dispensation of the covenant at Sinai, as appears both by the foregoing and following words.

All of us here alive this day: he saith not, that all who made that covenant at Sinai are now alive, for many of them were dead, but that this covenant was made with all that are now alive, which is most true, for it was made with the elder sort of them in their own persons, and with the rest in their parents, who did covenant for them; for this phrase, with us, is put exclusively as to their fathers, but not as to their posterity, as is evident from the nature of the covenant, #Ac 2:39, and course of the story.

Ver. 4.

Not in a visible shape, which was utterly denied, #De 4:12,15; but personally and immediately, not by the mouth or ministry of Moses; plainly and certainly, as when two men talk face to face; freely and familiarly, so as not to overwhelm and confound you. Compare #Ex 33:11 Nu 12:8.

Ver. 5.

As a mediator or messenger between you, according to your desire, below, #De 5:27. Compare #Ex 19:16, &c.; #Ex 20:19 Ga 3:19.

The word of the Lord; not the ten commandments, which God himself uttered, but the following statutes and judgments.

Ver. 6.

The ten commandments, delivered #Ex 20, are here repeated with some small difference of words, but the sense is perfectly the same, and therefore the explication of them must be fetched thence.

In #Ex 20, the order is contrary, and thy neighbour's house is put before his wife, whereby it is evident that Moses intended this but for one commandment, wherein the order of the words was an inconsiderable circumstance; for if this were two commandments, as some would have it, it would be altogether uncertain which is the ninth, and which the tenth commandment, seeing the one is first, #Ex 20, and the other here.

Ver. 22.

He added no more; he ceased for that time to speak immediately, and with that loud voice unto the people, for the rest were delivered to Moses, and by him communicated to the people. This he did to show the preeminence of that law above the rest, and its everlasting obligation.

DEUTERONOMY CHAPTER 6

The end of the commandment, obedience, #De 6:1,2. He exhorts them thereto, #De 6:3. The unity of the Divine essence asserted, #De 6:4. The duty required of the Israelites, #De 6:5; to love God, #De 6:5,6; and teach their children, #De 6:7; to use signs, as memorials of it, #De 6:8,9. Not to forget God in prosperity, #De

6:10-12. Not to worship other gods, #De 6:13-15. Not to tempt God, #De 6:16; but keep his commandments, #De 6:17; and to transmit the knowledge of God's works to their posterity, #De 6:20-25.

That thou mightest fear the Lord, which he hereby implies to be the first principle of true obedience.

Ver. 3.

Ver. 4.

One in essence, and the only object of our worship.

Ver. 5.

Now he shows another spring or principle of sincere obedience to God, even hearty love to God, which will make his work and service easy; and that the fear he mentioned before, #De 6:2, was such as would consist with love to God, and not that slavish fear and honour which produceth hatred.

Ver. 6.

i.e. In thy mind to remember them, and meditate upon them, and in thy affection to love and pursue them.

Ver. 7.

Teach them diligently, Heb. whet, or sharpen them, so as they may pierce deep into their hearts. This metaphor signifies the manner of instructing them, that it is to be done diligently, earnestly, frequently, discreetly, and dexterously.

Ver. 8.

Thou shalt give all diligence, and use all means, to keep them in thy remembrance, as men oftentimes bind something upon their hands, or put it before their eyes, to prevent forgetfulness of a thing which they much desire to remember: compare #Pr 3:3 6:21 7:3. See Poole "Ex 13:16".

Among you, Heb. in the midst of you, to see and observe all your ways and your turnings aside to other gods.

Ver. 16.

i.e. Not provoke him, as the following instance explains. Sinners, especially presumptuous sinners, are oft said to tempt God, i.e. to make a trial of God, whether he be what he pretends to be, so wise as to see their sins, so just and true and powerful as to take vengeance on them for their sins, concerning which they are very apt to doubt because of the present impunity and prosperity of many such persons. See #Nu 14:22 Ps 78:18 Mt 4:7 Ac 5:9.

Ver. 18.

Not that which is right in thine own eyes, as many superstitious and sinful practices seem right and good to evil-minded men. Let God's will and word, and not thine own fancy or invention, be thy rule in God's service. Good actions are oft said to be right in God's sight, as #Jer 34:15 Ac 4:19; and evil actions are oft said to be right in our own eyes, as #De 12:8 Jud 17:6.

The benefit of obedience is ours, not God's #Job 35:7 and therefore our obedience is highly reasonable, and absolutely necessary.

Ver. 25.

Heb. righteousness shall be to us. and pronounced by God to be truly righteous and holy persons, if we sincerely obey him, otherwise we shall be declared to be unrighteous and ungodly persons, and all our profession of religion will appear to be in hypocrisy. Or, mercy shall be to us, or with us. For as the Hebrew word rendered righteousness is very oft put for mercy, as #Ps 24:5 36:10 51:14 Pr 10:2 11:4 Da 9:16, &c.; so this sense seems best to agree both with the Scripture use of this phrase, in which righteousness, seldom or never, to my remembrance, but grace or mercy frequently, is said to be to us or with us, as #2Sa 15:20 Ps 89:24 Pr 14:22 Ga 6:16 2Jo 1:3; and with the foregoing verse and argument, God, saith he, #De 6:24, commanded these things for our good, that he might preserve us alive, as it is this day. And, saith he in this verse, this is not all; for as he hath done us good, so he will go on to do us more and more good, and God's mercy shall be to us, or with us, in the remainder of our lives, and for ever,

if we observe, &c.

DEUTERONOMY CHAPTER 7

Israel is commanded to cast out the Hittites, the Perizzites, &c. #De 7:1. All communion with them forbidden, #De 7:2,3, for fear of idolatry, #De 7:4. They must ruin the places of idolatry, #De 7:5. The Israelites' holiness and relation to God, #De 7:6. His faithfulness to the obedient, #De 7:9; and vengeance on them that hate him, #De 7:10. The advantages of obedience, #De 7:12-16. God encourages them, and promises to drive out the nations before there, #De 7:17-24. They are commanded to destroy their images, #De 7:25; and keep themselves clean from their cursed things, #De 7:26.

Ver. 1.

There were ten in #Ge 15:19-21; but this being some hundreds of years after that, it is not strange if three of them were either destroyed by foreign or domestic wars, or by cohabitation and marriage united with and swallowed up in some of the rest.

Ver. 2.

No covenant with them, to spare them, or permit them to dwell with thee in the land. Other nations had more favour, but these were for their great wickedness, and for the good of Israel, devoted to utter destruction.

Ver. 3.

No text from Poole on this verse.

Ver. 4.

i.e. There is manifest danger of apostasy and idolatry from such matches; which reason doth both limit the law to such of these as were unconverted, otherwise Salmon married Rahab, #Mt 1:5, and enlarge it to other idolatrous nations, as appears from #1Ki 11:2 Ezr 9:2 Ne 13:23.

Ver. 5.

Idolaters planted groves about the temples and altars of their gods. Hereby God designed to take away whatsoever might bring their idolatry to remembrance, or occasion the reviving of it.

Ver. 6.

Ver. 7.

To wit, at that time when God first declared his love to you, and choice of you for his peculiar people, which was done to Abraham. For Abraham had but one son concerned in this choice and covenant, to wit, Isaac, and that was in his hundredth year; and Isaac was sixty years old ere he had a child, and then they had only two children; and though Jacob had twelve sons, yet it was a long time ere they made any considerable increase. Nor do we read of any great multiplication of them till after Joseph's death, #Ex 1:6,7.

Ver. 8.

Because the Lord loved you, i.e. because it pleased him to love you; it was his free choice, without any cause or motive on your part. Compare #De 10:15 1Sa 12:22 Ps 44:3.

Ver. 9.

The faithful God; true to his word, and constant in performing all his promises.

Ver. 10.

Them that hate him; not only those who hate him directly and properly, (for so did few or none of the Israelites, to whom he here speaks,) but those who hate him by construction and consequence; those who hate and oppose his people, and word, and image, those who presumptuously and wilfully persist in the breach of God's commandments, as appears from #De 7:9, where the love of God, to which this hatred is opposite, is described and expressed by the keeping of his commandments. To their face, i.e. openly, and so as they shall see it, and not be able to avoid it.

He will not be slack, to wit, so as some men count slackness, #2Pe 3:9, so as to delay it beyond the fit time or season for vengeance; yet withal he is long-suffering, and slow to anger, as that and other places inform us.

Ver. 1.

That ye may live, i.e. live comfortably and happily, as life is oft taken, as #Ge 17:18 Pr 3:2; as, on the contrary, troubles or afflictions are called death, #Ex 10:17 2Co 11:23.

Ver. 2.

All the way, i.e. all the events which befell thee in the way, the miraculous protections, deliverances, provisions, instructions which God gave thee; and withal the frequent and severe punishments of thy disobedience.

To know what was in thine heart, i.e. that thou mightest discover to thyself and others that infidelity, inconstancy, hypocrisy, apostacy, rebellion, and perverseness, which lay hid in thy heart; the discovery whereof was of singular use, both to them and to the church of God, in all succeeding ages.

Ver. 3.

i.e. By every or any thing which God appoints for this end, how unlikely soever it may seem to be for nourishment, as appears in the manna; seeing it is not the creature, but only God's command and blessing upon it, that makes it sufficient for the support of life.

Ver. 4.

Thy raiment did not wear away through age, which they must needs have done without a miracle;

neither did thy foot swell, notwithstanding thy long and hard travels, which also was miraculous.

Ver. 5.

and out of whose hills thou mayest dig brass, to wit, in great plenty. These are mentioned, because they had none such in Egypt whence they came.

Ver. 10.

i.e. Solemnly praise him for thy food; which is a debt both of gratitude and justice, because it is from his providence and favour that thou receivest both thy food and refreshment and strength by it. The more unworthy and absurd is that too common profaneness of them, who, professing to believe a God and his providence, from whom all their comforts come, grudge to own him at their meals, either by desiring his blessing before them, or by offering due praise to God after them.

That he night humble thee, by keeping thee in a constant dependence upon him for every day's food, and convincing thee what an impotent, helpless, and beggarly creature thou art in thyself, having nothing whereon to subsist, but from hand to mouth, and being supported wholly by the alms of Divine goodness given to thee from day to day. The mercies of God, if duly considered, are as powerful an argument or mean to humble us as the greatest afflictions, because they increase our debts to God, and manifest our dependence upon him, and insufficiency without him; and by making God great, they make us little in our own eyes; though this clause, as well as that which follows, may have respect to their afflictions, mentioned #De 8:15.

At thy latter end, i.e. that after he hath purged and prepared thee by afflictions, he may give thee, and thou mayst receive and enjoy, his blessings with less disadvantage, whilst by the remembrance of former afflictions thou art made thankful for them, and more cautious not to abuse and forfeit them again.

DEUTERONOMY CHAPTER 9

Israel's march over Jordan to possess Canaan, #De 9:1-3. But must not ascribe it to their own righteousness, #De 9:4-6. A rehearsal of their manifold provocations at Horeb, #De 9:8, at Taberah, #De 9:22, and at Kadesh-barnea, #De 9:23.

Ver. 1.

This day, i.e. shortly, within a little time, the word day being oft put for time, as #Joh 8:56 1Co 4:5 Re 16:14, within two months; for Moses spake this on the first day of the eleventh month, #De 1:3, and they passed over Jordan on the tenth day of the first month, #Jos 4:19. Nations, i.e. the land of those nations; for that only they were to possess, but as for the nations or people they were not to possess, but to destroy them. Thus they are said to inherit Gad, #Jer 49:1, i.e. the country and cities of Gad, as it is there explained.

Greater and mightier than thyself: this he adds, partly that they might not be surprised when they find them to be such; partly that they might not trust to their own strength, but wholly rely upon God's help, for the destroying of them, and, after the work was done, might ascribe the praise and glory of it to God alone, and not to themselves.

Fenced up to heaven, as the spies reported, #De 1:28. See on #Ge 11:4.

Ver. 2.

Ver. 5.

Neither for thy upright heart, nor holy life, which are the two things which God above all things regards, #1Ch 29:17 Ps 15:1,2; and consequently he excludes all merit. And surely they who did not deserve this earthly Canaan, could not merit the kingdom of glory. That he may perform the word which he sware; to show my faithfulness in accomplishing that promise which I graciously made and confirmed with my oath. By which words it is implied, that this land was not given to them for the righteousness of their fathers, though they were righteous and holy persons, and much less for their own righteousness, which they had not, as it follows.

Ver. 6.

Rebellious and perverse, and so destitute of all pretence of righteousness; such were the people, but there were divers particular persons amongst them truly righteous and holy, and yet even their righteousness is denied to be the procuring cause of this land.

DEUTERONOMY CHAPTER 10

Moses repeats God's mercies in restoring the two tables, #De 10:1-5. Aaron's death. Eleazar his son officiates in his stead, #De 10:6. The tribe of Levi is separated for the priesthood, #De 10:8,9. God hearkening to Moses not to destroy them, #De 10:10; he is commanded to lead them towards Canaan, #De 10:11. God requires their obedience, #De 10:12-15. To circumcise their hearts, #De 10:16,17. To help the fatherless and widow, #De 10:18. To love strangers, #De 10:19. To fear and serve the Lord for his mercies towards them, #De 10:20-22.

Ver. 1.

At that time, When God was newly appeased by my intercession. An ark of wood; either a temporary ark for this use, till the other was finished; or the famous ark, as may seem by comparing this with #De 10:5. Ver. 6.

This following history comes in manifestly by way of parenthesis, as may appear from #De 10:10, where he returns to his former discourse; and it seems to be here inserted, either,

1. Because the priests and Levites here mentioned were the guardians and keepers of the ark and tables here mentioned. Or rather,
2. As an evidence of God's gracious answer to Moses's prayers, and of his reconciliation to the people, notwithstanding their late and great provocation. For, saith he, after this they proceeded by God's guidance in their journeys, some eminent stages whereof he names for all; and though Aaron died in one of them, yet God made up that breach, and Eleazar came in his place, and ministered as priest, one branch of which office was to intercede for the people. Then, saith he, God brought them from the barren parts of the wilderness to a land of rivers of waters, #De 10:7, a pleasant and fruitful soil. Then he adds, God separated the Levites, &c., #De 10:8.

Mosera.

Object. This place seems directly contrary to that, #Nu 33:31, where their journey is quite contrary to this, even from Moseroth to Bene-jaakan. This indeed is a great difficulty, and profane wits take occasion to cavil. And if a satisfactory answer be not yet given to it by interpreters, it ought not therefore to be concluded unanswerable, because many things formerly thought unanswerable have been since fully cleared, and therefore the like may be presumed concerning other doubts yet remaining. And it were much more reasonable to acknowledge here a transposition of the words through the scribe's mistake, than upon such a pretence to reject the Divine authority of those sacred books, which hath been confirmed by such irresistible arguments. But there is no need of these general pleas, seeing particular answers are and may be given to this difficulty sufficient to satisfy modest and impartial inquirers.

Answ.

1. The places here mentioned are differing from those, #Nu 33, it being very frequent in Scripture for diverse persons and places to be called by the same names, and yet the names are not wholly the same; for there it is

Bene-jaakan, and here Beeroth bene-jaakan, or

Beeroth of the children of Jaakan; there Moseroth, here Mosera; there Horhagidgad, here Gudgodah; there Jotbathah, here Jotbath. If the places were the same, it may justly seem strange why Moses should so industriously make a change in every one of the names. And therefore these may be other stations, which being omitted in #Nu 33, are supplied here, it being usual in sacred Scripture to supply the defects of one place out of another.

Answ. 2. Admitting these two places to be the same with those #Nu 33:31, yet the journeys are diverse. They went from

Beeroth of the children of Jaakan to Mosera, which is omitted in Numbers, and therefore here supplied; and then back again from Mosera or Moseroth to Bene-jaakan, as is there said; for which return there might then be some sufficient reason, though now unknown to us, as the reasons of many such like things are: or God might order it so for his own pleasure, and it is not impossible he might do it for this reason, that by this seeming contradiction, as well as some others, he might in just judgment do what he threatened to the Jews, #Jer 6:21, even lay stumbling-blocks before profane and proud wits, and give them that occasion of deceiving and ruining themselves, which they so greedily seek and gladly embrace; which is the reason given by some of the ancients why God hath left so many difficulties in Scripture.

Answ. 3. The words may be otherwise rendered, from Beeroth of the children of Jaakan, and from Mosera; where the order of the places is not observed, as was noted before of the order of time, #De 10:1, because it was nothing to the purpose here, and because that might be easily fetched from #Nu 33, where those journeys are more particularly and exactly described. For the conjunction and, that may be here wanting, and to be supplied, as it is #Ex 6:23 1Sa 4:7 Ps 133:3 Isa 63:11 Hab 3:11. And the preposition from is easily supplied from the foregoing words, as is most usual. Nor seems there to be any more reason to render it to Mosera, than from Mosera, seeing the Hebrew letter he in the end is made a part of the proper name, and therefore is not local. There Aaron died. Quest. How is this true? when Aaron died not in Mosera, but in Mount Hor, #Nu 33:38.

Answ. 1. Mosera may be a different place from Moseroth, and that may be the name of a town or region in which Mount Hor was, or to which it belonged. Or, the same mountain, in respect of diverse parts and opposite sides of it, might be called by diverse names, here Mosera, and there Hor. And it is possible they might go several journeys, and pass to divers stations, and by fetching a compass (which they oft did in their wilderness travels) come to the other side of the same mountain.

Answ. 2. The Hebrew particle scham may here note the time, and not the place of Aaron's death, and may be rendered then, as it is taken, #Ge 49:24 Ps 14:5 Ec 3:17 Zep 1:14. And then is not to be taken precisely, but with some latitude, as it is oft used in Scripture; that is, about that time, after a few removes more; as the words, at that time, #De 10:8, must necessarily be understood.

Ver. 7.

Either,

1. From that place, and that either from Mosera, last mentioned, or from Bene-jaakan; for relatives many times in Scripture belong to the remoter antecedent. Or,
2. From that time; for this particle sometimes notes not place, but time, as #2Ki 2:21 Isa 65:20. So the meaning is, at, or about that time, as it is #De 10:8, which being considered, may serve to clear the great difficulty discoursed upon the last verse concerning the seeming contradiction of this place and #Nu 33:1,32.

Ver. 8.

At that time, about that time, i.e. when I was come down from the mount, as was said #De 10:5; for these words manifestly look to that verse, the sixth and seventh verses being put in by way of parenthesis, as was said before. Or, if it relate to the words immediately foregoing, this may be meant of a second separation of them upon Aaron's death; and having mentioned the separation of Eleazar to the office of the high priest in his father's stead, #De 10:6, he now repeats it, that the Levites who were his, as they had been his father's servants, were separated as before, or were confirmed in their office.

To stand before the Lord; a phrase used concerning the prophets, #1Ki 17:1 18:15, this being the posture of ministers. Hence the angels are said to stand, #2Ch 18:18 Lu 1:19.

To bless in his name; either,

1. Particularly, to pronounce the solemn blessing of God upon the congregation, which was done in God's name, of which see #Le 9:23 Nu 6:23, &c. But that work was peculiar to the priests, not common to all the Levites. Or, more generally, to bless, either,
  1. God, i.e. to praise him, which being a considerable part of the Levites' work, #1Ch 16, it is not probable it would be omitted here, where their office is so particularly described. Or,
  2. The people, whom they did bless by performance of those holy ministrations for the people, and giving those instructions to them, to which God's blessing was promised and usually given; and this they did in God's name, i.e. by command and commission from him.

Ver. 9.

The Lord is his inheritance, i.e. the Lord's portion, to wit, tithes and offerings, which belong to God, are given by him to the Levites for their subsistence from generation to generation, as inheritances run.

Ver. 15.

Ver. 16.

Rest not in your bodily circumcision, but seriously set upon that substantial work which is signified and designed thereby: cleanse your hearts from all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness, which is fitly compared to the foreskin, which if not cut off, made persons profane, unclean, and odious in the sight of God. Compare #De 30:6 Jer 4:4 9:25 Ro 2:28,29 Col 2:11.

Ver. 17.

Ver. 10.

i.e. With great pains and labour of thy feet, partly by going up and down to fetch water and disperse it, and partly by digging furrows with thy foot, and using engines for distributing the water, which engines they thrust with their feet. For though the river Nilus did once in a year overflow the grounds, and made them fruitful, yet oftentimes it failed or scanted them, and then they were put to great pains about their ground; and when it did overflow sufficiently, and left its mud upon the earth, yet that mud was in a little time hardened, and needed another watering and much digging and labour both of the hands and feet, especially in places something higher or more remote from that river; which inconvenience Canaan was free from.

Ver. 11.

A land of hills and valleys; and therefore much more healthful than Egypt was, which as it was enriched, so it was annoyed with Nilus, which overflowed the land in summer time, and thereby made the country both unpleasant and, which is much worse, unhealthful. And health being the greatest of all outward blessings, Canaan must therefore needs be a more desirable habitation than Egypt, which is the thing here implied.

Drinketh water of the rain of heaven which is more honourable, because this comes not from man's art or industry, but immediately from God's power and goodness; more easy, being given thee without thy charge or pains; more sweet and pleasant, not hindering thy going abroad upon thy occasions, as the overflow of Nilus did, whereby the Egyptians were confined in a great measure to their several houses; more safe and healthful, being free from that mud which attends upon the waters of Nilus; and more certain too, the former and the latter rain being promised to be given to them in their several seasons, upon condition of their obedience, which condition, though it may seem a clog and inconvenience, yet indeed was a great benefit, that by their own necessities and worldly interest they should be obliged to that obedience, upon which their happiness depended both for this life and for the next.

Ver. 12.

Land which the Lord careth for, to wit, in a special manner, watering it immediately as it were by his own hand, without man's help, and giving peculiar blessings to it, which Egypt enjoys not.

The eyes of the Lord are always upon us, to give it the rain and other blessings proper to the several seasons. But all these mercies, and the fruitfulness of the land consequent; upon them, were suspended upon their disobedience, as it here follows. And therefore it is not at all strange that some later writers decry the land of Canaan as in great part a barren soil, which is so far from affording any ground to question the Divine authority of the Holy Scriptures, in which its fruitfulness is declared, that it doth much more confirm it, this being but an effect of that threatening that God would turn a fruitful land into barrenness for the wickedness of those that dwell in it, #Ps 107:34, and elsewhere; and the wickedness of the Israelites in succeeding ages being notorious, it is but just and fit that the barrenness of their land should be as evident and infamous.

Ver. 16.

That your heart be not deceived by the specious pretenses of idolaters, who will plead the general consent of all nations, except yours, in the worship of creatures, and that they worship the creatures only for God's sake, and as they are glorious works of God, whom they worship in and by them; which, and the like arguments, being commonly alleged by heathens for their idolatries, as their own writers declare, might possibly seduce an unwary Israelite; and therefore they are here cautioned against such deceit, and withal it is implied, that if a man's mind be corrupted and deceived, so as he believes idolatry to be lawful, this will not excuse him in the sight of God.

Ver. 17.

Heaven is compared sometimes to a bottle, #Job 38:37, which may be either stopped or opened; sometimes to a great storehouse, wherein God lays up his treasures of rain, #Job 38:22 Ps 33:7, the doors whereof God is said to open when he gives rain, and to shut when he withholds it. ## DEUTERONOMY CHAPTER 12

They are commanded to destroy all the places of idolatry, #De 12:1-3; and must worship God in his own place, and after his will, #De 12:4-15. The eating of blood prohibited, #De 12:16. Where and how they should eat the tithe, #De 12:17,18. The Levite not to be forsaken, #De 12:19. They may eat flesh clean or unclean any where, #De 12:20-22; but not the blood, #De 12:23-25. Holy things to be eaten at the altar of the Lord, #De 12:26-28. They are forbidden to inquire after the heathen worship, #De 12:29,30; or to worship the true God as they, #De 12:31; but to keep to the law in their worship, #De 12:32.

Ver. 1.

No text from Poole on this verse.

Ver. 2.

All the places; temples, chapels, altars, groves, as appears from other scriptures. The Gentiles used to employ the high mountains for their idolatry; {see #Isa 57:5,7 Eze 6:13 Ho 4:13} and as they consecrated divers trees to their false gods, so they worshipped these under them:

Ver. 3.

Their pillars, upon which their images were set. The names of them, i.e. all the memorials of them, and the very names given to the places from the idols.

Ver. 4.

i.e. Not worship him in several places, mountains, groves, &c., which sense is evident from the following opposition.

Ver. 5.

To put his name there, i.e. to set up his worship there, or which he shall call by his name, as his house, or dwelling-place, &c., to wit, where the ark should be, the tabernacle, or temple; which was first Shiloh, #Jos 18:1, next and especially Jerusalem.

Ver. 6.

The

sacrifices were wisely appropriated to that one and public place, partly for the security of the true religion, and for the prevention of idolatry and superstition, which otherwise might more easily have crept in; and partly to signify that their sacrifices were not accepted for their own worth, but by God's gracious appointment, and for the sake of God's altar, by which they were sanctified, and for the sake of Christ, whom the altar did manifestly represent. Of tithes, See Poole "De 12:17".

Heave-offerings, i.e. your first-fruits, to wit, of the earth, as of corn and wine and oil and other fruits, as plainly appears by comparing this place with #De 18:4 26:2, where these are commanded to be brought thither; and seeing here is an exact and particular enumeration of all such things, and these cannot be put under any of the other branches, these must needs be intended here, the rather because the other kind of first-fruits, to wit, of the herds and flocks, are here expressly mentioned. And these are called here the heave-offerings of their hand, because the offerer was first to take these into his hands, and to heave them before the Lord, (as other places tell us,) and then to give them to the priest, as appears from #De 18:3,4 26:4.

Your free-will offerings; even for your voluntary oblations, which were not due by my prescription, but only by your own choice and voluntary engagement: you may choose what kind of offering you please to vow and offer, but not the place where you shall offer them.

The firstlings of your herds and of your flocks; either,

1. The holy firstlings or first-born, as appears by #Nu 18, where they are commanded to be brought to this one place here designed, and to be offered upon God's altar, #De 12:17. It is objected by some, that those were given to the priests, #Nu 18:18, but these were to be eaten by the people here, #De 12:7. But that the next verse doth not say, but only in general, there shall ye eat, to wit, such of the offerings mentioned #De 12:6 as they were allowed to eat, but not such as were the priest's peculiar, for these they might not eat, nor all there expressed; for it is evident they might not eat any of the burnt-offerings, nor some parts of the other sacrifices, which are here mentioned. Or,
2. The second births, which were the people's first-born, or the first which they could eat of, which they were to eat before the Lord by way of acknowledgment of his favour in giving them to them and all their succeeding births. See more on #De 12:17.

Ver. 7.

There; not in the most holy place, wherein only the priests might eat, #Nu 18:10, but more generally in places allowed to the people for this end in the holy city.

Ye shall eat, to wit, your part of the things mentioned #De 12:6.

Before the Lord, i.e. in the place of God's presence, where God's sanctuary shall be.

All that ye put your hand unto; either to bestow your pains and labour upon it; or, to take and use or enjoy it. The sense is, You thus doing shall be blessed and enabled to rejoice, or to take comfort in all your labours and enjoyments, which otherwise would be accursed to you. We have the same phrase below, #De 12:18 15:10.

Ver. 8.

Here; where the inconveniency of the place, and the uncertainty of our abode in and removal from several places, would not permit exact order in sacrifices, and feasts, and ceremonies, which therefore God was pleased then to dispense with; but, saith he, he will not do so there.

Every man whatsoever is right in his own eyes; not that universal liberty was given to all persons to worship whom and how they listed, but that in many things their unsettled condition gave every one opportunity to do so if he thought good.

Ver. 11.

His name, i.e. his majesty and glory, his worship and service, his special and gracious presence, and the tokens of it.

All your choice vows, Heb. the choice of your vows. i.e. your select or chosen vows were to be perfect, whereas superfluous or defective creatures were accepted in free-will offerings, as appears from #Le 22:21-23.

Ver. 12.

Hence it appears, that though the males only were obliged to appear before God in their solemn feasts, #Ex 23:17, yet the women also were permitted to come, as they did. See #Jud 21:19,21 1Sa 1:3,7,21-23.

Ver. 13.

Nor the other things mentioned above, this one and most eminent kind being put for all the rest, as is usual; for being all expressed before, it was needless to repeat them again.

In every place that thou seest, to wit, with complacency and approbation, which thou thinkest very fit and proper for such a work, as one might possibly judge of some high places, or groves, or gardens.

Ver. 14.

Ver. 15.

Thou mayest kill and eat flesh, to wit, for thy common use and food.

In all thy gates, i.e. thy cities or dwellings.

Whatsoever thy soul lusteth after; what you shall desire either for quantity or quality, provided always you observe the laws given you elsewhere about avoiding excess and uncleanness in the things you eat.

Which he hath given thee, according to thy quality and estate; whereby he manifestly condemns those who profusely and riotously spend other men's money, and live at a rate which their consciences know to be much above their ability; which certainly is an ungodly and unrighteous, though too common, practice.

The unclean, who is forbidden to eat of holy meats, #Le 7:20.

May eat thereof, to wit, of any sort of creatures, even of those sorts which are offered to God in sacrifices, which are as free to your use as the

roe buck and the

hart, which were not accepted in sacrifice, #Le 22:19; yet were clean beasts, #De 14:5; and therefore here is a tacit exception of unclean beasts.

Ver. 16.

Ver. 17.

Thou; either,

1. Thou, O Levite; or rather,

2. Thou, O Israelite, whom he distinguisheth from the Levite, #De 12:18, accordingly as the following particulars agree to the one or to the other of you. Within thy gates, i.e. in your private habitations, here opposed to the place of God's worship, #De 12:18.

The tithe of thy corn, or of thy wine, or of thy oil. Here seems to be a great difficulty, not yet sufficiently observed nor cleared by interpreters. There were divers kinds of tithes:

1. The tithes given to the Levites out of all, of which #Nu 18:21,24 De 14:22 Ne 10:31.
2. The tithe of those tithes, which were to be given by the Levites to the priests, of which #Nu 18:21,24 De 14:29 Ne 10:37.
3. The third year's tithe, of which #De 14:28. To which some add another tithe, which they call the second tithe, which they say was taken after the Levites' tithe was laid by. Now each of these hath its difficulty. It seems this place cannot be understood,
  1. Of the Levites' tithe; partly, because it might seem a great and wholly superfluous trouble to carry all their tithes up to Jerusalem, and to carry them back to their several habitations for their use; partly, because those were holy to the Lord, #Le 27:30, and not to be eaten by the people, #Le 27:31; whereas these belonged principally to the people, the Levites being only taken in as accessories to eat with them, as it is here, #De 12:18; and partly, because those might be eaten in every place, as it is expressly affirmed, #Nu 18:31 Nor,
  2. Of the tithe of the tithe, which was the priest's; and neither Levites nor others might eat of it, except they were of or in the priest's household. Nor,
  3. Of the third year's tithe, because that was to be eaten within their gates, #De 14:28,29, as this was not.

I do therefore humbly conceive that this is meant of the second tithe, spoken of #De 14:22; and that this was the very same tithe with that third year's tithe, with this only difference, that in the third year they were to eat them together with the Levites within their gates, #De 14:28,29, but in the two first years they were to eat them, together with the Levites also, in the place of God's worship, as it is prescribed here and #De 14:23. And that it is one land the same tithe which is spoken of #De 14:22, and #De 12:28, seems more than probable, both because they are called by the same name, all the tithe of their increase, and because that #De 12:28 manifestly looks back to that #De 12:22, and because otherwise every third year the Israelites were to pay three several tithes one after another, which Scripture no where affirms, and it seems to make the people's burdens and the Levites' provisions too great. For the objection taken from #De 26:12,13, it shall be considered in its place. And the reason of that difference of place, and why the same tithes were eaten for two years together in Jerusalem, and the third in their own gates, seems to be this, that in the two first years there was a more special regard had to the Levites, who were very much conversant in Jerusalem, where those tithes were then eaten, and in the third year there is a respect had to the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow, who are mentioned as joint sharers with the Levites in this third year's tithe, whose occasions and obligations of coming to Jerusalem were not so many nor strong as those of the Levites, and therefore they were to be found generally within their gates, where these were to be eaten. And whereas the objection made before against the chargeable and useless carrying of the first tithes to Jerusalem might be applied here, it is answered there, and it is provided, that when they lived at a great distance from Jerusalem they might turn it into money and bestow it there, De 14-26, which both confirms the objection as to the first tithe, for which no such provision was made, and answers it as to this, where such a remedy is expressed. And whereas it may be pleaded on the behalf of the first, or the Levitical tithe, that those tithes were brought to Jerusalem, and that there were store-houses or chambers in the temple appointed for the receiving of the tithes, #2Ch 31:5,6,11,12 Ne 10:37,38 12:44, it may be answered, that those chambers, being only thirty-eight in number, and each of them, except two, but six cubits broad and twelve cubits long, were altogether incapable of all those tithes, and seem principally, if not solely, appointed for the priests' tithes, and not for all them neither, but only for so much of them as would serve for the use and necessity of those priests and Levites too that were in the actual ministrations.

The firstlings of thy herds, or of thy flock. As the tithes now mentioned were not the Levitical, but second tithes, as hath been discoursed; so these firstlings do not seem to be the first firstlings, which being appropriated to the Levites were not to be eaten by any of the people, except those of or in the Levites' families, but the second firstlings, which were the first which the owner could dispose of, and which, in conformity to the second tithes, he is required to set apart for this use.

Ver. 19.

Take heed lest a worldly mind and self-love make thee rob the Levites of their dues, as afterwards the ungodly Jews did. See #Mal 3:8.

Ver. 20.

When the Lord shall enlarge thy border, which will make it inconvenient and impossible to do what now thou dost, and because of the narrow bounds of thy camp canst conveniently do, to wit, to bring all the cattle thou usest to the tabernacle, which it seems probable they did, to prevent their eating of blood. Compare #Le 17:3 1Sa 14:34.

Ver. 21.

Be too far from thee; in which case, being obliged to carry their sacrifice to the place of worship, that the blood might be there poured forth, &c., they might think themselves obliged, for the same reason, to carry their other cattle thither to be killed. They are therefore released from all such obligations, and left at liberty to kill them at home, whether they lived nearer to that place, or further from it; only the latter is here mentioned, as being the matter of the scruple, and as containing the former in it.

As I have commanded thee; in such manner as the blood may be poured forth, as above, #De 12:16, and below, #De 12:24.

Ver. 22.

As the roebuck and the hart; as common or unhallowed food, though they be of the same kind with the sacrifices which are offered to God.

1. Not offer him that indignity and injury to worship other gods together with him. Or rather,
2. Not worship him in such manner as they worshipped their gods, to wit, by offering thy children to him, as they did to their gods, as it here follows, or by their own devices or superstitions, as is implied, #De 12:32.

DEUTERONOMY CHAPTER 13

Enticers to idolatry, being permitted by God to try Israel, were to be stoned to death., #De 13:1-5, though near of kin, #De 13:6-11. A city found guilty of idolatry to be burnt and utterly destroyed, #De 13:12-16. They were not to take any of its cursed things, but to obey God's command, that his mercy might be upon them, #De 13:17,18.

Ver. 1.

Among you, i.e. one of your nation, for such might be both seduced and afterwards seducers.

A dreamer of dreams; one that pretends himself to be one to whom God hath revealed himself, either by visions or dreams. See #Nu 12:6.

Giveth thee a sign or a wonder, i.e. shall foretell some strange and wonderful thing to come, as appears from #De 13:2, as the true prophets used to do, as #1Sa 10.

Ver. 2.

And the sign or the wonder come to pass; which God may suffer for the reason after mentioned.

Saying: this word is to be joined with the beginning of #De 13:1,

If there arise among you a prophet, or dreamer of dreams, saying, what there follows, and giveth thee a sign, &c., to confirm his doctrine; such transpositions are frequent.

Ver. 3.

Thou shalt not hearken unto the words of that prophet; not receive his doctrine, though the sign come to pass. For although when such a sign or wonder foretold did not follow or come to pass, it was a sign of a false prophet, as is said, #De 18:22, yet when it did come to pass, it was no sufficient or infallible sign of a true one, especially in such a case when he brings in new gods. The reason of the difference is, because many causes must concur to make a thing good and true, but any one failure is sufficient to make a thing bad or false. And particularly there are many signs, yea, such as men may think to be wonders, which may be wrought by evil spirits, God so permitting it for divers wise and just reasons, not only for the trial of the good, as it here follows, but also for the punishment of ungodly men, who would not receive Divine truths, though attested by many evident and unquestionable miracles, and therefore are most justly exposed to these temptations to believe lies.

Proveth you, i.e. trieth your faith, and love, and obedience, examineth your sincerity by your constancy. See #Mt 24:24 2Th 2:11 Re 13:14. See Poole on "Ge 21:1"; See Poole on "De 8:2,7".

To know; that he may know it, to wit, judicially, or in a public manner, so as both you and others may know and see it, that so the justice of his judgments upon you may be more evident and glorious.

Ver. 4.

Ye shall serve him, to wit, only, as appears from the opposition. Compare #De 6:13, with #Mt 4:10.

Ver. 5.

He hath spoken, i.e. taught or persuaded you.

To turn you away from the Lord; to forsake God and his worship. He shows that the chiefest and most certain character of a true prophet, is to be taken from his doctrine rather than from his miracles.

To thrust thee out of the way: this phrase denotes the great force and power of seducers to corrupt men's minds. Compare #De 4:19 2Ki 17:21 Mt 24:2,14.

The evil; either

1. That evil thing, that wicked doctrine and practice. Or,
2. That wicked and scandalous man, that idolater and seducer.

Ver. 6.

The son of thy mother: this is added to restrain the signification of the word brother, which is oft used generally for one near akin, and to express the nearness of the relation, the mother's side being the surest, and usually the ground of the truest and most fervent affection. See #Ge 20:12.

Or thy daughter; thy piety must overcome both thy affection to thy nearest relation, and thy compassion to the weaker sex.

The wife of thy bosom; either,

1. That is near to thy heart, that hath thy dearest love. Or rather,

2. That lieth in thy bosom, as it is expressed, #Mic 7:5. Compare #Ge 16:5 Pr 5:20 De 28:54. So we read of the husband of her bosom, #De 28:56.

As thine own soul; as dear to thee as thyself. The father and mother are here omitted, not, as some fancy, because children might not in this nor in any case accuse their parents, for certainly they owe more reverence and duty to God, who is injured in this case, than to their parents, and Levi is commended for neglecting his father and mother in this case; but because they are sufficiently contained in the former examples; for since men's love doth usually descend more strongly than it ascends, and the relation of a with is and ought to be nearer and dearer than of a parent, that favour which is denied to wives and children cannot be thought fit to be allowed to parents.

Entice thee, though it be without success, because the very attempt of such all abominable crime deserved death, as it is judged in case of treason.

Other gods; unknown and obscure and new gods; which greatly aggravates the crime, to forsake a God whom thou and thy fathers have long known, and had great and good experience of, for such upstarts.

Ver. 7.

He arms against the preference of the universality of this idol worship, wherewith they were like to be oft assaulted.

Ver. 8.

i.e. Smother his fault, hide or protect his person, but shalt accuse him to the magistrate, and demand justice upon him, which was not to be done in most other criminal causes; and no wonder, this crime being of a far higher nature than others.

Ver. 9.

Thou shalt surely kill him; not privately, which pretence would have opened the door to innumerable murders, but by procuring his death by the sentence of the magistrate; and thou shalt cast the first stone at him, as the witness was to do. See #De 17:7 Ac 7:58.

The children of Belial; a title oft used in Scripture, as #Jud 19:22 1Sa 1:16 25:25 2Sa 16:7. It signifies properly persons without yoke, vile and wretched miscreants, lawless and rebellious, that will suffer no restraint, that neither fear God nor reverence man.

From among you, i.e. from your church and religion. It notes a separation or departure from them, not in place, (as appears by their partnership with their fellow citizens both in the sin and punishment, as it here follows,) but in heart, doctrine, and worship, as the same phrase is used, #1Jo 2:19.

Ver. 14.

Then shalt thou inquire: this is meant of the magistrate, to whose office this properly belongs, and of whom he continues to speak in the same manner, thou, #De 13:15,16.

Ver. 15.

The inhabitants of that city, to wit, all that are guilty, not the innocent part, such as disowned this apostacy, who doubtless by choice and interest, at least upon warning, would come out of so wicked and cursed a place.

Destroying it utterly; the very same punishment which was inflicted upon the cities of the cursed Canaanites, to whom having made themselves equal in sin, it is but fit and just that God should equal them in punishment.

Ver. 16.

For the Lord thy God, i.e. for the satisfaction of God's justice, the maintenance of his honour and authority and laws, and the pacification of his offended majesty.

It shall be an heap for ever; it shall be an eternal monument of God's justice, and terror to after-ages, who may be tempted to like practices.

This is to be understood of the second tithes, which seem to be the same with the tithes of the third year, mentioned here below, #De 14:28 26:12, on which see above, on #De 12:17. And to confirm this opinion, (though I would not lay too great a stress upon criticisms,) yet I cannot but observe that this tithing is spoken of only as the people's act here, and #De 26:12, and the Levites are not at all mentioned in either place as receivers or takers of them, but only as partakers of them together with the owners, and therefore they are so severely charged here upon their consciences, thou shalt truly tithe all thine increase, because the execution of this was left wholly to themselves, whereas the first tithes were received by the Levites, who therefore are said to take or receive those tithes, #Nu 18:26 Ne 10:38 Heb 7:5.

All the tithe of thine increase. I join with those expositors who make this the same tithe with the former, #De 14:22, as being called by the same title without any distinction between them, save only as to the place of eating them. See Poole "De 14:22", and See Poole "De 12:17".

The same year: this is added to show that he speaks of the third year, and not of the fourth year, as some might conjecture from the phrase, at the end of three years.

DEUTERONOMY CHAPTER 15

The seventh year a year of release, #De 15:1, to their brethren only, #De 15:2,3. God promiseth to bless them in the land of Canaan, #De 15:4-6; and commandeth them to lend freely to the poor, #De 15:7-18. The firstlings to be sanctified and eaten before the Lord, #De 15:19-23.

Ver. 1.

i.e. In the last year of the seven, as is most evident from #De 15:9 Ex 21:2 Jer 34:14. So the like phrase is oft used, as #De 14:28 Jos 3:2 Jer 25:12 Lu 2:21 Ac 2:1. And this year of release, as it is called below, #De 15:9, is the same with the sabbatical year, #Ex 23:11 Le 25:4.

Ver. 2.

Shall release it; not absolutely and finally forgive it, but forbear it for that year, as may appear,

1. Because the word doth not signify a total dismissal or acquitting, but an intermission for a time, as #Ex 23:11. He shall not exact it, as it here follows, i.e. force it from him by course of law or otherwise, to wit, that year, which is easily understood out of the whole context.
2. Because the person releasing is called a creditor, and his communicating to him what he desires and needs is called lending here and #De 15:8; whereas it were giving, and the person giving it were no creditor, but a donor, if it were to be wholly forgiven to him.
3. Because the reason of this law is temporary and peculiar to that year, wherein there being no sowing nor reaping, they were not in a capacity to pay their debts.
4. Because it seems unjust and unreasonable, and contrary to other scriptures, which require men to pay what they borrow, as #Ps 37:21. Yet I deny not that in case of poverty the debt was to be forgiven; but that was not by virtue of this law, but of other commands of God.

Or of his brother: this is added to explain and limit the word neighbour, which is more general, unto a brother, to wit, in nation and religion; to an Israelite, who is opposed to a foreigner, #De 15:3, Heb. and a brother, for that is a brother, the particle and being oft so used, as #Ge 13:15, &c.

The Lord's release; or, a release to or for the Lord, in obedience to his command, for his honour, and as an acknowledgment of his right in your estates, and of his kindness in giving and continuing them to you. If you are unwilling to release this for your brother's sake, yet do it for God's sake, your Lord and the chief Creditor.

Ver. 3.

A foreigner, or stranger, yea, though a proselyte. For,

1. They are oft called by this name, as #Ge 17:12 Ru 2:10.
2. Though proselytes were admitted to the church privileges of the Israelites, yet they were not admitted to all their civil immunities or privileges. See #1Ch 22:2 2Ch 2:17.
3. Such were not then freed from their personal debt, to wit, of their service, #Le 25:44 De 15:12 Jer 34:14, therefore not from their real debt.

That which is thine, to wit, by right, though lent to him.

Ver. 4.

When there shall be no poor: so the words are an exception to the foregoing clause, which they restrain to the poor, and imply that if his brother was rich, he might exact his debt of him in that year. And indeed this law seems to be chiefly, if not wholly, designed and given in favour to the poor and to the borrower, as is manifest from #De 15:6-11. But the words are and may be rendered thus, as in the margin of our Bibles, To the end that there be no poor among you. And so they contain a reason of this law, to wit, that none be impoverished and ruined by a rigid and unseasonable exaction of debts. They may also be translated thus, Nevertheless of a truth, or assuredly, (as the particle chi is oft used,) there shall be no poor along you; and the sense may be this, Though I impose this law upon you, which may seem hard and grievous, yet the truth is, supposing your performance of the conditions of God's covenant, you shall not have any great occasion to exercise your charity and kindness in this matter, for God will greatly bless you, &c., so as you shall be in a capacity of lending, and few or none of you will have need to borrow, and thereby to expose his brethren to the inconvenience and burden of this law. Thus the connexion is plain and easy, both with the foregoing and following words.

Object. It is said, the poor should never cease, #De 15:11.

Answ. That also is true, and affirmed by God, because he foresaw they would not perform their duty, and therefore would bereave themselves of the promised blessing.

The Lord shall greatly bless thee; and therefore this will be no great inconvenience nor burden to thee.

Ver. 5.

Ver. 6.

Thou shalt lend unto many; thou shalt be rich and able to lend not only to thy poor brother, but even to strangers of other nations, yea, to many of them.

Ver. 7.

No text from Poole on this verse.

Ver. 8.

Open thine hand wide unto him, i.e. deal bountifully and liberally with him, giving him as it were by handfuls.

Ver. 9.

Beware that there be not a thought in thy wicked heart; suppress the first risings and inward motions of such uncharitableness.

Thine eye be evil, i.e. envious, unmerciful, unkind, as this phrase is used, #Pr 23:6 Mt 20:15; as a good eye notes the contrary disposition, #Pr 22:9.

It be sin, i.e. it be charged upon thee as a sin, and as a great sin, as the word sin sometimes signifies, as #Pr 24:9 Joh 15:24 Jas 4:17.

Ver. 10.

Thine heart shall not be grieved when thou givest unto him, i.e. thou shalt give not only with an open hand, but with a willing and cheerful mind and heart, #Ro 12:8 2Co 9:9, without which thy very charity is uncharitable, and not accepted by God, who requires the heart in all his services.

In all that thou puttest thine hand unto, i.e. in all thy works, as before, for the hand is the great instrument of action.

Ver. 11.

The poor shall never cease out of the land; God by his providence will so order it, partly for the punishment of your disobedience, and partly for the trial and exercise of your obedience to me, and charity to your brother, both which are best discovered by your performance of costly duties.

Ver. 12.

If thy brother be sold unto thee. See Poole "Ex 22:3".

Six years; to be computed, either,

1. From the year of release; as they gather from hence that personal and real debts were both released together. But that seems to be supposed rather than proved; nay, there is a manifest difference between them, for the release of real debts is expressly mentioned and required in the year of release, but so is not the release of the personal debt of servitude, either here or elsewhere. Or rather,

2. From the beginning of this servitude, which is every where limited unto the space of six years, as here and below, #De 15:18 Ex 21:2 Jer 34:14. And it seems a strange and forced exposition, to take these six years for so much of the six years as remains until the year of release, which possibly might not be one quarter of a year, whereas a hired servant serves for a far longer time, and this is said to be worth a double-hired servant, in regard of the longer time of his service, #De 15:18. Add to this, that it is mentioned as the peculiar privilege of the year of jubilee, that such servants were then freed, though their six years of service were not expired.

Ver. 15.

And the Lord thy God redeemed thee, and brought thee out with triumph and with riches, which because they would not, God did, give to thee as a just recompence for thy service, and therefore thou shalt follow his example, and send out thy servant furnished with all convenient provisions.

Ver. 16.

Because he is sensible that he fares well with thee. Or, because it is good, i.e. acceptable in his eyes, or pleasing to him, to be with thee.

Ver. 17.

For ever, i.e. all the time of his life, or, at least, till the year of jubilee. See on #Ex 21:6.

Unto thy maid-servant thou shalt do likewise, i.e. either dismiss her honourably, and with plenty of provisions; or engage her to perpetual servitude in the same manner, and by the same rites; whence it appears that this case differs from that #Ex 21:7, and that the maid-servant there was taken in upon other and better terms than this here.

Ver. 18.

He hath been worth a double-hired servant to thee; or, he deserves double wages to an hired servant, because he served thee upon better terms, both without wages, which hired servants require, and for a longer time, even for six years, as it here follows, whereas servants were ordinarily hired but from year to year, #Le 25:53, or at most but for three years, as they gather from this place and #Isa 16:14.

Ver. 19.

With the firstling of thy bullock: this is meant, either,

1. Of the male firstlings; which, they say, is forbidden here, because some did plough with the firstlings of their oxen, and shear the firstlings of their sheep, before they were offered. But this seems absurd and incredible, because they were to be offered on the eighth day, #Ex 22:30, when they were very unfit for such uses. Or rather,
2. The second firstlings, of which see on #De 12:17.

Ver. 20.

Thou shalt eat; either,

1. Thou, O priest. Or rather,
2. Thou, O Israelite. For it is evident that the same person who was forbidden to work with these, #De 15:19, is here commanded to eat them, &c. Thou shalt eat it, together with the Levites, as it is to be understood from #De 12:18 14:27,29, where that is expressed in like cases.

Year by year, to wit, in the solemn feasts which returned upon them every year. See #De 16:11,14.

DEUTERONOMY CHAPTER 16

Their feast of the passover to be kept, #De 16:1-7, and to eat unleavened bread, #De 16:8. The seven weeks and their feasts, #De 16:9-12. The feast of tabernacles to be observed by them, and their family, seven days, #De 16:13-15. All the males to appear before the Lord three times a year, and at these three feasts, #De 16:16,17. Judges and officers are appointed, #De 16:18-20, and are prohibited to set up idolatry, #De 6:21,22.

Ver. 1.

Object. They came out of Egypt by day, and in the morning, as appears from #Ex 12:22 13:3 Nu 33:3.

Answ. They are said to be brought out by night, because in the night Pharaoh was forced to give them leave to depart, and accordingly they made preparation for their departure, and in the morning they perfected the work.

Ver. 2.

The passover, i.e. either,

1. Properly and strictly so called, which was the paschal lamb, and so the sheep and oxen, which here follow, are mentioned only as additional sacrifices, which were to be offered in the seven days of the paschal solemnity, #Nu 28:18,19, &c. Or,
2. Largely, to wit, for the passover-offerings, to wit, which were offered after the lamb in the seven days, and so this very word is used #2Ch 35:8,9. And this signification seems necessary here, partly because it is here said to consist of the flock and of the herd, or of sheep and oxen, and partly because it follows, #De 16:3, Thou shalt eat no leavened bread with it, seven days shalt thou eat unleavened bread therewith, i.e. with the passover, which could not be done with the passover strictly so called, which was to be wholly spent in one day. Or,

3. The feast of the passover, and so the place may be rendered, Thou shalt therefore observe or keep the feast of the passover (as those same Hebrew words are taken, #Nu 9:5 Jos 5:10 2Ch 35:1,17,18,19) unto the Lord thy God, with sheep and with oxen, as is prescribed, #Nu 28:18, &c.

Ver. 3.

With it, to wit, with the passover, in the sense delivered; or, in it, i.e. during the time of the feast of the passover.

The bread of affliction, i.e. bread which is not usual nor pleasant, but unsavoury and unwholesome, to put thee in mind both of thy miseries endured in Egypt, and of thy hasty coming out of it, which allowed thee no time to leaven or to prepare thy bread.

Ver. 4.

At even, i.e. of the passover properly so called, and by these words plainly described; which circumlocution may seem to insinuate that the word passover, #De 16:1, was improperly used, and therefore he chose rather to describe it than to name it, lest the ambiguity of the word should occasion some mistake.

Ver. 5.

Within any of thy gates, i. e. of thy cities, as that word is oft used, as #Ge 22:17 24:60 De 17:2 Ru 4:10.

Ver. 6.

There thou shalt sacrifice the passover, to wit, in the court of the tabernacle or temple. This he prescribed, partly, that this great work might be done with more solemnity and care, in such manner as God required; partly, because it was not only a sacrament, but also a sacrifice, as appears because it is so called, #Ex 12:27 23:18 34:25 Nu 9:7, and because here was the sprinkling of blood, which is the essential part and character of a sacrifice; and partly, to design the place where Christ, the true Passover or Lamb of God, was to be slain.

At the season; understand this with some latitude, as such phrases are commonly taken, about that season, when you had received command from me to go out of Egypt, and were preparing yourselves for the journey.

Ver. 7.

Thou shalt roast; so that word is used also #2Ch 35:13.

In the morning; either,

1. The morning after the seventh day, as appears, partly, by the following verse, which is added to explain and limit this ambiguous word; partly, by the express command of God that the people should come to Jerusalem to keep this feast, which by God's appointment lasted for seven days; partly, from the examples of the people staying there the whole time of the feast, #2Ch 30:21 35:17; and partly, from the nature and business of this feast, wherein there being so many extraordinary sacrifices to be offered, and feasts made by the people upon the sacrifices, and two days of solemn assemblies, it is not probable that they would absent themselves from these solemn services, for the performance whereof they came purposely to Jerusalem. Or,
2. The morning after the first day, and so they were permitted to go then, and possibly some that lived near Jerusalem might go and return again to the last day of the solemn assembly. But the former seems more probable.

Thy tents, i.e. thy dwellings, which he calls tents, as respecting their present state, and withal to put them in mind afterwards when they were settled in better habitations, that there was a time when they dwelt in tents.

Ver. 8.

Six days, to wit, besides the first day, on which the passover was killed; or rather besides the seventh and the last day, which is here mentioned apart, not as if leavened bread might be eaten then, for the contrary was evident from many places, but because there was something more to be done, to wit, a solemn assembly to be kept. So in all there were seven days, as it is said, #Ex 12:15 Le 23:6 Nu 28:17.

Ver. 9.

Seven weeks; of which see on #Ex 34:22 Le 23:10,15.

To put the sickle to the corn, i.e. to reap thy corn, thy barley, when the first-fruits were offered, #Le 23:10,11.

Ver. 10.

The feast of weeks, i.e. of pentecost, #Ac 2:1.

Which thou shalt give, over and besides what was appointed, #Le 23:17-20 Nu 28:27-31.

Ver. 15.

To wit, in God and the effects of his favour, praising him with glad heart.

Ver. 16.

All thy males; not the women, partly, because of their infirmity and unfitness for many journeys; partly, because the care of their children and families lay upon them; and partly, because they were sufficiently represented in the men.

Ver. 17.

No text from Poole on this verse.

Ver. 18.

Judges; chief magistrates to examine and determine causes and differences.

Officers, who were inferior and subordinate to the other, to bring causes and persons before them, to acquaint people with the mind and sentence of the judges, and to execute their sentence, #De 20:5,9 Jos 1:10,11 3:2,3. In all thy gates, i.e. thy cities, which he here calls gates, because there were seats of judgment set. Compare #1Ch 23:4.

Ver. 19.

Not wrest judgment, i.e. not give a perverse, forced, and unjust sentence. See Poole "Ex 23:8".

Not respect persons, i.e. not give sentence according to the quality of the person, his riches or poverty, friendship or enmity, but according to the justice of the cause.

A gift doth blind the eyes of the wise; corrupts and biasseteth his mind, that as he will not, so oftentimes he cannot, discern between right and wrong.

The words of the righteous; either,

1. The words, i.e. the sentence, of those judges who are inclined and used to do righteous things, and have the repute of righteous men, it makes them give wrong judgment. Or,
2. The words, i.e. the matters, or causes, (as word oft signifies,) of righteous persons, or of them whose cause is just.

Ver. 20.

That which is altogether just, Heb. righteousness, righteousness, i.e. nothing but righteousness in all causes and times, and to all persons equally. Compare #Isa 26:7.

Ver. 21.

Because this was the practice of idolaters, #1Ki 15:13, and might be an occasion of reviving idolatry. See #Jud 3:7 1Ki 14:23 1Ki 16:33 18:19.

Ver. 22.

Heb. statue, whether with a picture or representation, or without it, as the idolaters used to worship smoothed and polished stones or pillars without any image upon them.

DEUTERONOMY CHAPTER 17

They are not to offer blemished sacrifices, #De 17:1. Idolaters are to be put to death, #De 17:2-7. Doubts in difficult matters to be resolved by priests and judges, #De 17:8-13. To choose a king of their own brethren, and not a stranger, #De 17:14,15. The duty of their king, #De 17:16-20.

Ver. 1.

Any bullock or sheep, i.e. either greater or smaller sacrifices, all being comprehended under the two most eminent kinds. See #Le 22:20,21.

An abomination, i.e. abominable, as #De 18:12.

Ver. 2.

Man or woman; the weakness and tenderness of that sex shall not excuse her sin, nor prevent her punishment.

In transgressing his covenant, i.e. in idolatry, as it is explained #De 17:3, which is called a transgression of God's covenant made with Israel, partly because it is a breach of their faith given to God, and of that law which they covenanted to keep; and principally because it is a dissolution of their matrimonial covenant with God, a renouncing of God and his worship and service, and a choosing other gods.

Ver. 3.

Those glorious creatures, which are to be admired as the wonderful works of God, but not to be set up in God's stead, nor worshipped as gods: see #Job 31:26. By condemning the most specious and reasonable of all idolaters, he intimates how absurd a thing it is to worship stocks and stones, the works of men's hands.

Which I have not commanded, i.e. I have forbidden, to wit, #Ex 20. Such negative expressions are oft emphatical, and imply the contrary, as #Pr 10:2 17:21 24:23.

Ver. 4.

Told thee by any person, thou shalt not slight so much as a rumour or flying report of so gross a crime.

Inquired diligently, by sending messengers, examining witnesses, &c.

Ver. 5.

No text from Poole on this verse.

Ver. 6.

At the mouth, i.e. upon the testimony delivered upon oath before the magistrates.

Three witnesses, to wit, credible and competent witnesses. The Jews rejected the testimonies of madmen, children, women, servants, familiar friends, or enemies, persons of dissolute lives and evil fame.

Ver. 7.

Shall be first upon him; either laid upon his head to design the person, or stretched out to throw the first stone at him. God thus ordered it, partly for the caution of witnesses, that if they had through malice or wrath accused him falsely, they might now be afraid to imbrue their hands in innocent blood; partly for the security and satisfaction of the people in the execution of this punishment.

The hand of all the people, who, being all highly and particularly obliged to God, are bound to express their zeal for his honour and service, and their detestation of all persons and things so highly dishonourable and abominable to him.

Ver. 8.

Too hard for thee; he speaks to the inferior magistrates, who were erected in several cities, as appears by the opposition of these to them at Jerusalem. If, saith he, thou hast not skill or confidence to determine so weighty and difficult a cause.

Between blood and blood, i.e. in capital causes in matter of bloodshed, whether it be wilful or casual murder, whether punishable or pardonable by those laws, #Ex 21:13,20,22,28 22:2 Nu 35:11,16,19 De 19:4,10.

Between plea and plea; in civil causes or suits between plaintiffs and defendants about words or estates.

Between stroke and stroke, i.e. either first in ceremonial causes, between plague and plague, between the true leprosy, which is oft-times called the plague, and the seeming and counterfeit leprosy, which was oft-times hard to determine. And under this, as the most eminent of the kind, may seem to be contained all ceremonial uncleannesses. But this seems not probable,

1. Because the final determination of the matter of leprosy is manifestly left to any particular priest, #Le 13 14.
2. Because the person suspected of leprosy was not to be brought to Jerusalem, to be tried there, but was to be shut up in his own city and house, #Le 13:4,5; and the judges at Jerusalem neither could nor would determine his case without once seeing the person.
3. Because the case of leprosy was not hard or difficult, as those causes are said to be, but plain and evident, and so particularly and punctually described, that the priest needed only eyes to decide it. Or rather,
2. In criminal causes, concerning blows or wounds inflicted by one man upon another, and to be requited to him by the sentence of the magistrate according to that law, #Ex 21:23-25, wherein there might be many cases of great difficulty and doubt, about which see the annotations there.

Matters of controversy, i.e. such things or matters of blood and pleas and strokes being doubtful, and the magistrates divided in their opinions about it; for if it was a clear case, this was not to be done. Some make this an additional clause to comprehend these and all other things, thus as if he had said, and in general, any words or matters of strifes or contentions.

1. Which the Lord shall choose, to wit, to set up his worship and tabernacle or temple there; because there was the abode, both of their sanhedrim, or chief council, which was constituted of priests and civil magistrates, who were most able to determine all controversies, and of the high priests, who were to consult God by Urim, #Nu 27:21, in great matters, which could not be decided otherwise.

Ver. 9.

Unto the priests the Levites, i.e. unto the great council, which it is here denominated from, because it consisted chiefly of the priests and Levites, as being the best expositors of the laws of God, by which all those controversies mentioned #De 17:8 were to be decided. And the high priest was commonly one of that number, and may seem to be understood here under the priests, whereof he was the chief.

Unto the judge: this judge here is either,

1. The supreme civil magistrate, who was made by God the keeper of both tables, and was by his office to take care of the right administration both of justice and of religion, who was to determine causes and suits by his own skill and authority in civil matters, and by the priests' direction in spiritual or sacred causes. But this seems obnoxious to some difficulties, because,
  1. This judge was obliged to dwell in the place of God's worship, which the civil magistrate was not, and oftentimes did not.
  2. This judge was one whose office it was to expound and teach others the law of God, as it here follows, #De 17:11, therefore not the civil magistrate. Or,
2. The high priest, who was obliged to live in this place, to whom it belonged to determine some at least of those controversies mentioned #De 17:8, and to teach and expound the law of God. And he may be distinctly named, though he be one of the priests, partly because of his eminency and superiority over the rest of them, as after all David's enemies Saul is particularly mentioned, #Ps 18:1; and partly to show that amongst the priests he especially was to be consulted in such cases. But this also seems liable to objections.

1. That he seems to be included under that general expression of the priests and Levites.

2. That the high priest is never in all the Scripture called simply the judge, but generally called the priest, or the high priest, or chief priest, or the like; and it is most probable if Moses had meant him here, he would have expressed him by some of his usual names and titles, and not by a strange title which was not likely to be understood.
3. That divers controversies between blood and blood, plea and plea, stroke and stroke, were not to be determined by the high priest, but by other persons, as appears by #Ex 18:22 De 1:16,17. Or,
3. The sanhedrim or supreme council, which, as was said before, consisted partly of priests, and partly of wise and learned persons of other tribes, as is confessed by all the Jewish and most other writers. And so this is added by way of explication, partly to show that the priests and Levites here mentioned, as the persons to whom all hard controversies are to be referred, are not all the priests and Levites which should reside in Jerusalem, but only such of them as were or should be members of that great council by whom, together with their fellow-members of other tribes, these causes were to be decided; partly to intimate that that great council, which had the chief and final determination of all the above-said controversies, was a mixed assembly, consisting of wise and good men, some ecclesiastical, and some secular; as it was most meet it should be, because many of the causes which were brought unto them were mixed causes. As for the conjunctive particle and, that may be taken either disjunctively for or, as it is #Ex 21:15,17, compared with #Mt 15:4; and #Nu 35:5,6, compared with #Mt 12:37 Le 6:3,5 2Sa 2:19,21; or exegetically, for that is, or to wit, as #Jud 7:24 1Sa 17:40 1Sa 28:3 2Ch 35:14; and so the sense may be, the priests, the Levites, or the judge, as it is #De 17:12; or, the priests, the Levites, that is, the judge, or the judges appointed for this work. And though the word judge be in the singular number, and may seem to denote one person, yet it is only an enallage, or change of the number, the singular for the plural, judges, which is most frequent, as #Ge 3:2,7 49:6 1Sa 31:1 1Ki 10:22 2Ki 11:10, compared with #2Ch 9:21 23:9 and in the Hebrew, #1Ch 4:42, where divers officers are called one head. And so it is most probably here,

1. Because the following words Which belong to this run altogether in the plural number, they, they, they, &c., here and #De 17:10,11.
2. Because here is the same enallage in the other branch, the same person or persons being called the priests here, and the priest de 17:12.
3. Because for the judge here is put the judges, #De 19:17, where we have the same phrase used upon the same or a like occasion, the men between whom the controversy is shall stand before the Lord, before the priests and the judges, which shall be in those days. Nor is it strange, but very fit and reasonable, that so many persons being all united in one body, and to give judgment or sentence by the consent of all, or the greatest part, should be here called by the name of one judge, as indeed they were; and for that reason the priests are spoken of in the plural number, because they were many, as also the other members of that assembly were, and the judge in the singular number, because they all constituted but one judge. The sentence of judgment, Heb. the word or matter of judgment, i.e. the true state and right of the cause, and what judgment or sentence ought to be given in it.

Ver. 10.

Thou shalt, i.e. thou shalt pass sentence; for he speaks to the inferior magistrates, as was before noted, who were to give sentence, and came hither to be advised about it.

Thou shalt observe to do. It is very observable that this place doth not speak of all controversies of faith, as if they were to believe every thing which they should teach; but only of some particular matters of practice and strife between man and man, to which it is plainly limited, #De 17:8. And they are not here commanded to believe, but only to do, which is thrice repeated.

Ver. 11.

According to the sentence of the law which they shall teach thee: these words are a manifest limitation of the foregoing assertion, that they were to do according to all that the judge or judges informed him. And they seem to limit and regulate,

1. The judges in their sentence, that they shall not, upon pretence of this supreme authority put into their hands, presume to teach or direct otherwise than the law prescribes.
2. The people in their obedience; first they shall not simply obey them in all things, but so far forth as their sentence is according to the law and word of God, but not when their commands are evidently contrary to God's laws, for then, say even popish commentators on this place, they must obey God rather than man. And this cannot be denied by any man of sense, upon supposition that this place speaks of, and this power given to the priest or judge reacheth to, all controversies or questions of faith and manners, as the papists would extend it: for put case these priests or judges' should give a sentence directly contrary to the express words of God's law, Thou shalt worship a graven image, as Aaron did in the case of the calf, thou shalt profane the sabbath, thou shalt dishonour thy father and mother, thou shalt murder, steal, commit adultery, &c., I ask, were the people in this case bound to do as the judge determined, or not?

If any say they were, such a bold and wicked assertion must need strike all sober Christians with horror; and if they say they were not, then this must needs be taken for a limitation. But this place speaks only of particular suits between man and man, as is apparent from the notes on See Poole "De 17:8". And in all such cases, although the judge be hereby confined and tied to his rule in giving the sentence, yet it seems but fit and reasonable that people should be bound simply to acquiesce in the sentence of their last and highest judge, or else there would have been no end of strife.

Ver. 12.

That will do presumptuously, i.e. that will proudly and obstinately oppose the sentence given against him. This is opposite to ignorance and error, #Ex 21:13,14.

The evil; either,

1. The evil thing, that scandal, that pernicious example. Or,
2. That evil, refractory, pernicious person, whose practice herein tends to the dissolution of all government, and the ruin of the common-wealth of Israel.

Ver. 13.

Ver. 14.

He only foresees and foretells what they would do, but doth not seem to approve of it, because when they did this thing for this very reason here alleged, he declares his utter dislike of it, #1Sa 8:7.

Ver. 15.

Thou shalt set him, i.e. appoint, or install. If you will choose a king, which I shall suffer you to do, I command you to mind this in your choice.

Whom the Lord shall choose, approve of, or appoint. So it was in Saul, and in David. God reserved to himself the nomination both of the family and of the person. See #1Sa 9:15 10:24 1Sa 16:12 1Ch 28:4,5.

From among thy brethren; of the same nation and religion; partly because such a person was most likely to maintain true religion, and to rule with righteousness, gentleness, and kindness to his subjects; and partly that he might be a fit type of Christ, their supreme King, who was to be one of their brethren.

Mayest not set a stranger over thee, to wit, by thy own choice and consent; but if God by his providence and for their sins should set a stranger over them, they might submit to him, as appears from #Jer 38:17 Eze 17:12 Mt 22:17.

Ver. 16.

He shall not multiply horses to himself, to wit, excessively, beyond what the state and majesty of his place required. Hereby God would prevent many sins and mischiefs, as,

1. Pride of heart, and contempt of his people.
2. Oppression and tyranny, and the imposition of unnecessary burdens upon his people.
3. Carnal confidence, which by this means would be promoted. See #Ps 33:17 Pr 21:31.
4. Much commerce with Egypt, as it here follows, which was famous for horses, as appears from #Ex 14:23 1Ki 10:26,28 2Ch 1:16 9:28 Isa 31:1,3 Eze 17:15.

Nor cause the people to return to Egypt; either for habitation, or for trade. This God forbade to prevent,

1. Their unthankfulness for their deliverance out of Egypt.

2. Their confederacies with the Egyptians, their trusting to them for aid, which they were very prone to, and their infection by the idolatry and other manifold wickednesses for which Egypt was infamous.
3. Their multiplication of horses, as it here follows. The Lord hath said: when or where? Answ. Either implicitly, when he showed his dislike of their return to Egypt, as #Ex 13:17 Nu 14:3,4; or expressly at this time, The Lord hath now said it to me, and I in his name, and by his command, declare it to you. That way; in the way that leads to that place.

Ver. 17.

Neither shall he multiply wives, as the manner of other kings was.

That his heart turn not away, to wit, from God and his law; either,

1. To idolatry and superstition, to which women are oftentimes prone, and especially such women as he was likely to choose, even the daughters of neighbouring and idolatrous kings and princes, as Solomon did; or,
2. To other manifold sins and violations of his duty to his people, either by neglect and contempt of his business, through effeminacy and sloth, or by oppressing his people, and perverting justice, to comply with the vast and exorbitant desires of his wives.

Neither shall he greatly multiply to himself silver and gold, lest this should lift up his heart in confidence and pride, which God abhors, and beget in him a contempt of his people; and lest it should incline, or engage, or enable him to burden his people with immoderate exactions. They are not simply forbidden to be rich, if God made them so either by the voluntary gifts of their subjects, or by the spoils of their enemies, which was the case of David, and Solomon, and Jehoshaphat, &c.; but they are forbidden either inordinately to desire, or irregularly to procure, great riches by grinding the faces of their poor people, or by other wicked arts and courses, as the manner of their neighbouring kings was.

Ver. 18.

He shall write; either with his own hand, as the Jews say; or, at least, by his command and procurement.

Out of that which is before the priests the Levites, i.e. out of the original, which was carefully kept by the priests in the sanctuary, #De 31:26 2Ki 22:8, partly that it might be a true and perfect copy, and partly that it might have the greater authority and influence upon him, coming to him as from the hand and presence of God.

Ver. 19.

All the days of his life, i.e. diligently and constantly; neither the greatness of his place, nor the weight and multitude, of his business, shall excuse or hinder him.

Ver. 20.

That his heart be not lifted up; he intimates, that the Scriptures, diligently read and studied, are a powerful and probable means to keep him humble, because they show him that, though a king, he is subject to a higher Monarch, to whom he must give an account of all his administrations and actions, and receive from him his sentence and doom agreeable to their quality, which is sufficient to abate the pride of the haughtiest person in the world, if he duly consider it.

DEUTERONOMY CHAPTER 18

The Lord is the priests' and Levites' inheritance. #De 18:1,2. Their due from the people, #De 18:3-5. A Levite's portion that came to serve voluntarily, #De 18:6-8. All unlawful arts prohibited, #De 18:9-14. Christ is promised, whom they must hearken to, #De 18:15-19. False prophets threatened, #De 18:20. The mark of a false prophet, #De 18:21,22.

Ver. 1.

The offerings of the Lord made by fire; by which phrase we here manifestly see that he means not burnt-offerings, which were wholly consumed by fire, and no part of them eaten by the priests; but other sacrifices, whereof part was offered to the Lord by fire, and part was allotted to the priests for their food. His inheritance, i.e. the Lord's portion or inheritance, which God had reserved to himself, as tithes and first-fruits, and other oblations distinct from those which were made by fire; and so these two branches make up the whole of that which belonged to God, and was by him given to the Levites.

Ver. 2.

i.e. The Lord's part and right, as was now said.

Ver. 3.

A sacrifice, to wit, a sacrifice of thanksgiving, or a peace-offering, as appears from #Le 7:31,33, which is oftentimes called simply a sacrifice, as #Ex 18:12 Le 17:5,8 Nu 15:3 De 12:27.

The shoulder, and the two cheeks, and the maw.

Quest. How doth this agree with other texts, in which the shoulder and the breast, and those parts only, are the priest's due, not the cheeks and maw?

Answ.

1. Who shall tie God's hands? what if he now makes an addition, and enlargeth the priest's commons? Nothing more usual than for one scripture to supply what is lacking in another, and for a latter law of God to add to a former.

2. The breast may be here omitted, because it is comprehended under the shoulder, to which it is commonly joined, and with which it was waved before the Lord.
3. The Hebrew word here rendered maw or stomach, which was reckoned among dainties by the ancients, is not to my remembrance used elsewhere, and therefore it may have another signification, and some render it the breast, others take it for the uppermost part of the stomach, which lies under the breast.

Ver. 4.

No text from Poole on this verse.

Ver. 5.

To minister in the name of the Lord, i.e. either by authority and commission from him, or for his honour, worship, or service.

Ver. 6.

Either for any private occasions, or to sojourn there for a season, or rather with full purpose to fix his abode, and to spend his whole time and strength in the service of God, as appears by the sale of his patrimony, mentioned #De 18:8. It seems probable that the several priests were to come from their cities to the temple by turns before David's time, and it is certain they did so after it. But if any of them were not contented with this seldom attendance upon God in his tabernacle or temple, and desired more entirely and constantly to devote himself to God's service there, he was permitted so to do, because this was an eminent act of piety joined with self-denial to part with those great conveniencies which he could and did enjoy in the city of his possession, and to oblige himself to more constant and laborious work about the sacrifices, &c.

Ver. 7.

No text from Poole on this verse.

Ver. 8.

Like portions, to wit, with their brethren who were in actual ministration; as they share with them in the work, so shall they also in the encouragements.

Beside that which cometh of the sale of his patrimony; though he have an estate whereby he may subsist raised by the sale of his house in his city, and his cattle, and other movables, yet you shall not upon this ground either deny or diminish their part of your maintenance. The reason of this law was, partly because he that waited on the altar ought to live by the altar; and partly because it was fit he should keep his money, wherewith he might redeem what he sold, if afterwards he saw occasion for it. Heb. besides his sales by the fathers, i.e. of that which came to him by his fathers, or, according to his fathers, or, his father's house; and these words may be joined not with the word immediately foregoing, but with the former part of the verse, the next word coming in by a kind of parenthesis, in this manner and order,

Besides that which cometh by the sale of their goods, they shall have like portions to eat to what their brethren have, each of them eating according to his father's house, i.e. a Gershonite shall eat with his brethren the Gershonites who are then ministering, and a Merarite with the Merarites, &c., and so there shall be no disturbance nor change in the appointed courses by their accession to the number.

Ver. 9.

Ver. 10.

To pass through the fire; either by a superstitious lustration or purgation, or by a cruel sacrificing of them. See #Le 18:21 2Ki 17:31 23:10 2Ch 28:3 Ps 106:37 Jer 7:31 19:5 Eze 16:20,21 Eze 23:37-39.

That useth divination, i.e. foretelleth things secret or to come, #Mic 3:11, by unlawful arts and practices.

An observer of times; superstitiously pronouncing some days good and lucky, and others unlucky, for such or such actions. Or, an observer of the clouds or heavens, i.e. one that divineth by the motions of the clouds, by the stars, or by the flying or chattering of birds, all which heathens used to observe.

An enchanter, or, a conjecturer, that discovers hidden things by a superstitious use of words or ceremonies, by observation of water or smoke, or any contingencies, as the meeting of a hare, &c. See Poole "Le 19:26".

A witch; one that is in covenant with the devil, and by his help deludes their senses, or hurts their persons. See #Ex 7:11 22:18.

Ver. 11.

A charmer; one that charmeth serpents or other cattle, #Ps 58:5; or, a fortune-teller, that foretellethe the events of men's lives by the conjunctions of the stars, &c. See Poole "Le 19:31"; See Poole "Le 20:6".

A consulter with familiar spirits, whom they call upon by certain words or rites to engage them in evil designs.

A wizard, Heb. a knowing or cunning man, who by any superstitious or forbidden ways undertakes the revelation of secret things:

A necromancer; one that calleth up and inquireth of the dead, #1Sa 28:8 Isa 8:19.

Ver. 12.

The people of the land which thou art going to possess, mentioned above, #De 18:9.

Ver. 13.

Sincerely and wholly his, seeking him and cleaving to him and to his word alone, and therefore abhorring all commerce and conversations with devils or their agents, such as were now mentioned.

Ver. 14.

Hath not suffered thee to follow thy own vain mind, and these superstitions and diabolical practices, as he hath suffered other nations to do, #Ac 14:16, but hath instructed thee better by his word and Spirit, and thereby kept thee from such courses, and will more fully instruct thee by a great Prophet, &c. Or, hath not given to thee, to wit, such persons to consult with, but hath given thee prophets to instruct thee, and will in due time give thee an eminent Prophet, as it here follows.

Ver. 15.

Will raise up, i.e. will produce and send into the world in due time.

A Prophet: those words may be understood secondarily concerning the succession of prophets which God would raise for the instruction of his church, both because this is alleged as an argument why they need not consult with diviners, &c., because they should have prophets at hand whensoever it was needful to advise them, and because this Prophet is opposed to the false prophet; and a general rule is hereupon given for the discovery of all succeeding prophets, whether they be true or false, #De 18:20-22; but they are chiefly to be understood of Christ, as the following words show, which do not truly and fully agree to any other; particularly where he is said to be like unto Moses, which is simply denied concerning all other prophets, #De 34:10, and therefore it is not probable that it should be simply affirmed concerning all true prophets succeeding him. But Christ was truly, and in all commendable parts, like him, in being both a Prophet and a King, and a Priest and Mediator, as Moses was, in the excellency of his ministry and work, in the glory of his miracles, in his familiar and intimate converse with God, &c. And this place is expounded of Christ alone by God himself in the New Testament, #Ac 3:22 7:37. See also #Joh 1:45 6:14.

Ver. 22.

If the thing follow not; which he gives as a sign of the truth of his prophecy. He means the prediction of some strange and wonderful event, as appears by comparing this with #De 13:1,2.

The Lord hath not spoken: the falsehood of his prediction shows him to be a false prophet, though the truth and accomplishment of his prediction had not proved him to be a true prophet, as is evident from #De 13:2,3.

Presumptuously; impudently ascribing his own vain and lying fancies to the God of truth.

Thou shalt not be afraid of him, i.e. of his predictions or threatenings, so as to be scared from doing thy duty in bringing him to deserved punishment.

DEUTERONOMY CHAPTER 19

The rehearsal of the cities of refuge for him that killeth his neighbour ignorantly, #De 19:1-10; but he that hateth and killeth his neighbour, though fled into one of these cities, must die, #De 19:11-13. Ver. 1.

Ver. 2.

In the midst of thy land, to wit, beyond Jordan, as there were three already appointed on this side Jordan, #Nu 35:14. He saith, in the midst of the land, either for in the land, as in the midst of the city, #Jer 52:25, is the same with that in the city, #2Ki 25:19, or to design the places, that they should be situated in the midst of the several parts of their land, to which they might conveniently and speedily flee from all the parts of the land.

Ver. 3.

Thou shalt prepare thee a way; distinguish it by evident marks, and make it plain and convenient, to prevent mistakes and delays.

Into three parts; not into more, because it was fit that these places should, as far as it was possible, be at some considerable distance from the friends of the slain person, lest the sight of the manslayer might have provoked their passion, and occasioned his ruin.

This verse is to be joined with #De 19:3, as is evident, the 4th and 5th verses coming in as a parenthesis, which is usual in Scripture and other authors.

And slay him; which is supposed, but not allowed, as appears from the following words. But the avenger of blood is not to be punished with death for killing the manslayer, in case he found him without the borders of the city of refuge after he had been received there, #Nu 35:26,27, because then he was guilty of a new crime, to wit, a contempt of God's ordinance, and a gross neglect of the duty of self-preservation, and therefore deserved death from God, who might permit it to be inflicted by the avenger of blood.

Fetch him thence; demand him of the elders of the city of refuge, who upon the hearing of the cause and the evidence of the murder were obliged to deliver the offender to justice.

Ver. 15.

Shall not rise up, or, not stand, or, not be established, accepted, owned as sufficient: it is the same word which in the end of the verse is rendered be established.

Ver. 17.

See Poole "De 17:9,12", and observe that the controversies both here and there referred to, and to be determined by the priests and judges, are only between man and man, and not doctrines of faith and manners, as the papists for their own advantage pretend.

DEUTERONOMY CHAPTER 20

The priest's exhortation to encourage the people to fight their enemies, #De 20:1-4. The officers' proclamation who are to be dismissed from the war, #De 20:5-9. A proclamation of peace to be made to besieged cities, #De 20:10, and to deal with them as they accept or refuse it, #De 20:11-18. What trees were to be cut down for the siege, and what not, #De 20:19,20.

Ver. 1.

When thou goest out to battle, upon a just and necessary cause, as upon great provocation, or for thy own defence.

Ver. 2.

The priest; an eminent priest appointed for this work, and to blow with the holy trumpets, #Nu 10:9 31:6.

Speak unto the people; either successively to one regiment of the army after another, or to some by himself, to others by his brethren or deputies, which accompanied him for that end.

Ver. 3.

Faint, Heb. be soft or tender. Softness or tenderness of heart towards God is commended, #2Ki 22:19, but towards enemies it is condemned, here and #De 20:8 Le 26:36 2Ch 13:7 Isa 7:4.

Ver. 4.

No text from Poole on this verse.

Ver. 5.

Houses were dedicated by feasting and thanksgiving to God. See #Ps 30:1 Ne 12:27. Heb. hath initiated it, i. e. entered upon it, taken possession of it, dwelt in it.

Let him return to his house, lest his heart be set upon it, and thereby he be negligent or timorous in the battle, to the scandal and prejudice of others.

Another man dedicate it; and so he should lose and another get the fruit of his labours, which might seem unjust or hard. And God provides even for men's infirmities. But this and the following exceptions are to be understood only of a war allowed by God, not in a war commanded by God, not in the approaching war with the Canaanites, from which even the bridegroom was not exempted, as the Jewish writers note.

Ver. 6.

This and the former dispensation were generally convenient, but more necessary in the beginning of their settlement in Canaan, for the encouragement of those who should build houses or plant vineyards, which was chargeable to them, and beneficial to the commonwealth.

Eaten of it, Heb. made it common, to wit, for the use of himself and family and friends, which it was not till the fifth year, #Le 19:23 Jer 31:5.

Ver. 7.

Ver. 9.

Or rather, as the Hebrew hath it, they shall set or place the captains of the armies in the head or front of the people under their charge, that they may conduct and manage them, and by their example encourage their soldiers. But it is not likely they had their captains to make or choose when they were just going to battle.

Ver. 10.

This seems to be understood not of the cities of the Canaanites, as is manifest from #De 20:16-18, who were under an absolute sentence of utter destruction, #Ex 23:32,33 De 7:1,2; whence they are blamed that made any league or peace with them, #Jud 2:2; but of the cities either of other nations who injured or disturbed them, or commenced war against them, or aided their enemies, or oppressed their friends and allies; or of the Hebrews themselves, if they were guilty or abettors of idolatry or apostasy from God, or of sedition or rebellion against authority, or of giving protection and defence to capital offenders. See #Ge 15 Jud 20 2Sa 20, &c.

Ver. 19.

The trees thereof, to wit, the fruit trees, as appears from the following words; which is to be understood of a general destruction of them, not of the cutting down of some few of them, as the conveniency of the siege might require.

Man's life, i.e. the sustenance or support of his life, as life is taken #De 24:6. But this place may be otherwise translated, as it is in the margin of our English Bibles: For, O man, (the Hebrew letter he being here the note of a vocative case, as it is #Ps 9:7)

the tree (or trees, the singular number for the plural, as is common) of the field is (or ought, as the Hebrew lamed is used #Es 9:1 Ps 62:10) to be employed in the siege; or, as it is in the Hebrew, to go before thy face, i.e. to make fences for thy security, in the siege.

The trees of the field: I here understand not its general signification of all trees, including fruit-bearing trees, as that phrase is commonly used, but in its more special and distinct signification, for unfruitful trees, as it is taken #Isa 55:12; or such as grow only in open fields, such as are elsewhere called the trees of the wood, #1Ch 16:33 Isa 7:2, or the trees of the forest, #So 2:3 Isa 10:19, which are opposed to the trees of the gardens, #Ge 3:2,8 Ec 2:5 Eze 31:9; as the flower of the field, #Ps 103:15 Isa 40:6, and the lilies of the field, #Mt 6:28, are opposed to those that grow in gardens, and are preserved and cultivated by the gardener's art and care. And so it is a very proper argument to dissuade from the destroying of fruit trees, because the wild and unfruitful trees were sufficient for the use of the siege. And this sense fitly agrees with the following words, where the concession or grant, which here is delivered in more ambiguous terms, of the tree of the field, is repeated and explained concerning the trees which thou knowest that they be not trees for meat.

DEUTERONOMY CHAPTER 21

How to expiate an uncertain murder, #De 21:1-19. The usage of a captive taken to wife, #De 21:10-14. The first born, though the son of the hated, is not to be disinherited, #De 21:15-17. The punishment of a stubborn son, viz. death, #De 21:18-21. The cursed death of them that are hanged, #De 21:22,23.

Ver. 1.

In the field, or, in the city, or any place, only the field is named, as the place where such murders are most commonly committed, and most easily concealed.

Ver. 2.

Thy elders and thy judges; those of thy elders who are judges; for the latter word explains and restrains the former, the judges or rulers of all the neighbouring cities, who were all concerned in this inquiry.

They shall measure, unless it be evident and confessed which city is nearest, for then measuring was superfluous.

Ver. 3.

A fit vicegerent and representative of the murderer, in whose stead it was killed, who by this act hath shown himself to be a son of Belial, who would not bear the yoke of God's law. A type also of Christ, who was obliged to no work, and under no yoke, but what he had voluntarily taken upon himself.

Ver. 4.

Neither eared nor sown; partly to represent the hard and unprofitable and untutored heart of the murderer; and partly that such a desert and horrid place might beget a horror of murder and of the murderer.

Strike off the heifer's neck, to show what they would and should have done to the murderer if they had found him.

Ver. 5.

The priests shall come near, both to direct them in all the circumstances of action and to see that the law was observed, and to bless them in God's name, by praying for them, and absolving or pronouncing them guiltless in this matter.

Every controversy; not absolutely all manner of controversies that could possibly arise, as if their word were to determine whether there were a God or providence or no, whether God should be worshipped, and his commands observed, or no, whether Moses was a true prophet or an impostor, whether apostate and idolatrous Israelites should be punished or no, which is apparently absurd and ridiculous; but every such controversy as might arise about the matter here spoken of; nothing being more usual than to understand universal expressions in a limited sense; and indeed this is limited and explained by the following words, and every stroke, the particle and being put expositively, of which instances have been formerly given, i.e. every controversy which shall arise about any stroke, whether such a mortal stroke as is here spoken of, a murder, which may well be called a stroke, as to smite is oft used for to kill, as #Ge 4:15 Le 24:17, &c., or any other stroke or wound given by one man to another.

Ver. 6.

In testimony of their innocency. See Poole "Mt 27:24".

Ver. 7.

They shall answer, to wit, to the priests who shall examine them and determine this controversy.

This blood; this about which the present inquiry is made; or this which is here present; for it is thought the corpse of the slain man was brought into the same place where the heifer was slain.

Neither have our eyes seen it; nor have we seen or understood how or by whom this was done.

Ver. 8.

i.e. Not imputed to them, nor punished in them; for God is sometimes said to forgive when he doth not punish, as #Ps 78:38. Besides, though there was no mortal guilt in this people, yet there was a ceremonial uncleanness in the land, which was to be expiated and forgiven.

Ver. 9.

No text from Poole on this verse.

Ver. 10.

Thine enemies, of other nations, but not of the Canaanites, for they might not spare their women, and much less marry them, #Ex 34:16 De 7:3.

Ver. 11.

Hast a desire unto her; or, hast cleaved to her, to wit, in love; or, hast taken delight in her; which may be a modest expression for lying with her, and seems probable, because it is said, #De 21:14, that he had humbled her, to wit, by military insolence, when he took her captive, not after he had married her, for then he would have expressed it thus, because thou hast married her, which had been more emphatical than to say, because thou hast humbled her. And here seem to be two cases supposed, and direction given what to do in both of them:

1. That he did desire to marry her, of which he speaks #De 21:11-13.

2. That he did not desire this, or not delight in her, of which he speaks #De 21:14.

Ver. 12.

Either,

1. To take off his affections from her by rendering her uncomely and deformed; but then the last words must not be rendered shall pare her nails, but shall nourish them, or suffer them to grow, as the Chaldee, Arabic, and divers of the learned Jews and other interpreters render it. Or,

2. To express her sorrow for the loss of her father and mother, as it follows, #De 21:13, it being the ancient custom of mourners in most nations to shave themselves, and in some to pare their nails, in others to suffer them to grow. Or rather,
3. In token of her renouncing her heathenish idolatry and superstition, and of her becoming a new woman, and embracing the true religion; which her captive condition and subjection to his will would make her inclinable to do in profession.

Ver. 13.

The raiment of her captivity, i.e. either,

1. Those goodly raiments in which she was when she was taken captive, instead of which she now must put on a servile habit, as this is generally understood; or rather,
2. Those servile and sordid raiments which were put upon her when she was taken captive, as the manner was to do with captives, as the phrase itself seems to intimate; as prison garments {#Jer 52:33} are such garments as prisoners use to wear; and garments of praise are praiseworthy or glorious garments; and it seems harsh to call those garments of captivity, which are made for and generally worn by free persons only, and which are usually taken away from persons when they come into captivity. Add, that this doth not seem to be any part or token of her sorrow, but rather a mending of her condition, and exchanging her servile habit for a better and more decent one, which might be, though this were a mourning habit.

Her father and mother; either their death, or, which was in effect the same, her final separation from them. Withal this signified her alienation from them or from their superstitious and idolatrous courses, and her translation of her love from all other persons to her husband and to the true religion. Compare #Ps 45:11.

She shall be thy wife; supposing what might very rationally be supposed of one in her circumstances, and what she signified by the foregoing rites, that she should submit to her husband's religion, in which case the marriage might be tolerable. Or this was a permission and indulgence given to them for the hardness of their hearts, as in the case of divorce, #De 24:1 Mt 19:8.

Ver. 14.

If thou have no delight in her; either,

1. After thou hast married her; and so this is a permission of a divorce, which being indulged towards an Israelitish woman, was not likely to be denied towards a stranger. Or rather,
2. Before thy marriage; for it is not probable, that God having given him competent time for the trial of his affections to her before he was permitted to marry her, would suffer him upon so slight an occasion, within a day or two after so solemn a contract, to send her away; nor is there a word spoken here of any divorce.

Thou shalt not make merchandise of her, i.e. make gain of her, either by using her to thy own servile works, or by prostituting her to the lusts or to the service of others.

Humbled her, i.e. lain with her, as this phrase is oft used, as #Ge 34:2 De 22:24,29 Jud 19:24 Eze 23:10,11.

Ver. 15.

Two wives; either,

1. Both together; which practice, though tolerated, is not hereby made lawful, but only provision is made for the children in that case. Or,
2. One after another. Hated, comparatively, i.e. less loved, as #Ge 29:31 Mt 6:24 Lu 14:26.

Ver. 16.

He may not; it is not lawful, because contrary to the rights and law of nature.

Before the son, or, before the face of the son, i.e. in his lifetime, as this phrase is understood, #Ge 11:28 16:12 25:18. And when this phrase is rendered before another, it signifies only in the presence of another, but never notes the preference of one person to another, which the Hebrews express in another manner. And this may be added to intimate, that if the eldest son were dead, and had left a child, the father was free to give the right of his first-born unto his second son, rather than to the child of the eldest. Or this phrase may be an aggravation of the fact, whereby his father did in a manner spit in his face, and fasten a reproach upon him in his very sight and presence.

Ver. 17.

Acknowledge, i.e. make it appear that he owns him.

Double portion; for the phrase, see #2Ki 2:9 Zec 13:8; and for the thing, see #Ge 25:31 1Ch 5:1.

The beginning of his strength, i.e. the first evidence of his manly strength and ability for procreation.

Ver. 18.

No text from Poole on this verse.

Ver. 19.

The consent of both father and mother is required to prevent the abuse of this law to cruelty. And it cannot reasonably be supposed that both would agree without manifest necessity, and the son's abominable and incorrigible wickedness, in which case it seems a fit and righteous law, because the crime of rebellion against his own parents was so high in itself, and did so fully signify what a pernicious member and son of Belial he would be in the commonwealth of Israel, who had dissolved all his natural obligations. Yet the Jews say this law was never put in practice, and therefore it might be made for terror and prevention, and to render the authority of parents more sacred and powerful.

Bring him out unto the elders of his city; which was a sufficient caution to preserve children from the malice of any hard-hearted parents, because these elders were first to examine the cause with all exactness, and then to pronounce the sentence.

Ver. 20.

Stubborn and rebellious, adds incorrigibleness to all his wickedness.

A glutton and a drunkard; under which two offences others of a like or worse nature are comprehended by a synecdoche.

Ver. 21.

Stoning was the punishment appointed for blasphemers and idolaters; which if it seem severe, it is to be considered that parents are in God's stead, and intrusted in good measure with his authority over their children; and that families are the matter and foundation of the church and commonwealth, and they who are naughty members and rebellious children in them, do commonly prove the bane and plague of these; and therefore no wonder if they are nipped in the bud.

Ver. 22.

Which was done after the malefactor was put to death some other way, this public shame being added to his former punishment. See #Jos 7:25 8:29 10:26 2Sa 4:12.

Ver. 23.

Is accursed of God, i.e. he is in a singular manner cursed and punished by God's appointment with a most shameful kind of punishment, as this was held among the Jews and all nations; and therefore this punishment may suffice for him, and there shall not be added to it that of lying unburied, which was another great calamity, #Jer 16:4. And this curse is here appropriated to those that are hanged, partly because this punishment was inflicted only upon the most notorious and public offenders, and such as brought the curse of God upon the community, as #Nu 25:4 2Sa 21:6; and principally to foreshadow that Christ should undergo this execrable punishment, and be made a curse for us, #Ga 3:13, which though it was yet to come in respect to men, yet was present unto God, and in his eye at this time. And so this is delivered with respect unto Christ, as many other passages of Scripture manifestly are.

Be not defiled, to wit, morally; either by inhumanity towards the dead; or rather by suffering the monument or memorial of the man's great wickedness, and of God's curse, to remain public and visible a longer time than God would have it, whereas it should be put out of sight, and buried in oblivion.

DEUTERONOMY CHAPTER 22

Laws about stray cattle, #De 22:1-3. About thy neighbor's ox fallen in the way, #De 22:4. Woman's wearing of apparel distinct from man's, #De 22:5. Of birds caught, #De 22:6,7. Of battlements for houses, #De 22:8. Of divers seeds sown, #De 22:9. Of ploughing with an ox and ass, #De 22:10. Of garments of divers colours, #De 22:11. Of fringes upon the four quarters of a garment, #De 22:12. The punishment of him that slandereth his wife. #De 22:13-19. Her punishment if the scandal be true, #De 22:20,21. The punishment of adultery, #De 22:22-24; of rape, #De 22:25-27; of fornication, #De 22:28,29. Against incest, #De 22:30.

Ver. 1.

Thy brother; so called by communion not of religion, but of nature, as having one Father, even God, #Mal 2:10; as appears,

1. Because the same law is given about their enemy's ox, &c., #Ex 23:4.
2. Because else the obligation of this law had been uncertain, seeing men could not ordinarily tell whether the straying ox or sheep belonged to a Jew or to a stranger.
3. Because this was a duty of common justice and charity, which the law of nature taught even heathens, and it is absurd to think that the law of God delivered to the Jews should have less charity in it than the law of nature given to the Gentiles.

Hide thyself from them, i.e. dissemble or pretend that thou dost not see them; or neglect or pass them by as if thou hadst not seen them.

Ver. 2.

If thy brother be not nigh unto thee, which may make the duty more troublesome or chargeable.

If thou know him not; which implies, that if they did know the owner, they should restore it to him.

Thou shalt bring it unto thine own house, to be used like thine own cattle. Thou shalt restore it to him again, the owner, as it may be presumed, paying the charges.

Ver. 3.

i.e. Dissemble that thou hast found it. Or, hide it, i.e. conceal the thing lost.

Ver. 4.

Help him, i.e. thy brother, the owner. Compare #Ex 13:5.

Ver. 5.

This shall not be done ordinarily or unnecessarily, for in some cases it may be lawful, as to make an escape for one's life. Now this is forbidden, partly for decency sake, that men might not confound, nor seem to confound, those sexes which God hath distinguished, that all appearance of evil might be avoided, such change of garments carrying a manifest umbrage or sign of softness and effeminacy in the man, of arrogance and impudency in the woman, of lightness and petulancy in both; and partly to cut off all suspicions and occasions of evil, which this practice opens a wide door unto.

Ver. 6.

No text from Poole on this verse.

Ver. 7.

Let the dam go; partly for the bird's sake, which suffered enough by the loss of its young; for God would not have cruelty exercised towards the brute creatures; and partly for men's sake, to restrain their greediness and covetousness, that they should not monopolize all to themselves, but might leave the hopes of a future seed for others.

Ver. 8.

A battlement, i.e. a fence or breastwork, because the roofs of their houses were made flat or plain, that men might walk on them. See #Jud 16:27 1Sa 9:25 2Sa 11:2 Ne 8:16 Mt 10:27.

Blood, i.e. the guilt of blood, by a man's fall from the top of thy house, through thy neglect of this necessary provision.

Ver. 9.

With divers seeds; either,

1. With divers kinds of seed mixed and sowed together between the rows of vines in thy vineyard; which was forbidden to be done in the field, #Le 19:19, and here in the vineyard. Or,
2. With any kind of seed differing from that of the vine, which would produce either herbs, or corn, or fruit-bearing trees, whose fruit might be mingled with the fruit of the vines. Now this and the two following precepts, though in themselves small and trivial, are given, according to that time and state of the church, for documents or instructions in greater matters, and particularly to commend to them simplicity and sincerity in all their carriages towards God and men, and to forbid all mixture of their inventions with God's institutions, in doctrine or worship.

The fruit of thy seed, Heb. the fulness of thy seed, i.e. that seed when it is ripe and full. See #Ex 22:29 Nu 18:27.

Defiled; either,

1. Naturally corrupted or marred, whilst one seed draws away the fat and nourishment of the earth from the other, and so both are starved and spoiled. Or rather,
2. Legally and morally, as being prohibited by God's law, and thereby made unclean; as, on the contrary, things are sanctified by God's word allowing and approving them, #1Ti 4:5. Heb. be sanctified, or, be as a sanctified thing, by an ellipsis of the particle as, i.e. unlawful for the owner's use, as things sanctified were. Or, sanctifying is put for polluting, by a figure called euphemismus, which is frequent in Scripture, as when  blessing is put for  cursing, as #Job 2:9, and in other authors, as when they use  sacred for execrable.

Ver. 10.

Either,

1. Because the one was a clean beast, the other unclean; whereby God would teach men to avoid polluting themselves by the touch of unclean persons or things, #2Co 6:14. Or,
2. Because of their unequal strength, whereby the weaker, the ass, would be oppressed and overwrought. Or,
3. For mystical reasons, of which see on #De 22:9 Le 19:19.

Ver. 11.

No text from Poole on this verse.

Ver. 12.

Fringes, or laces, or strings; partly to bring the commands of God to their remembrance, as it is expressed, #Nu 15:38; and partly as a public profession of their nation and religion, whereby they might be discerned and distinguished from strangers, that so they might be more circumspect to behave themselves as became the people of God, and that they should not be ashamed to own their God and religion before all the world. Wherewith thou coverest thyself: these words are either restrictive to the upper garment, wherewith the rest were covered; or argumentative, why they should use these things, because herewith they might possibly fasten their garments, and prevent the uncovering themselves, as might easily happen, when they wore no breeches, but only loose garments.

Ver. 13.

Go in unto her, i.e. hath had carnal knowledge of her.

Ver. 14.

Of speech, Heb. of words, i.e. of discourses or defamations.

Ver. 15.

i.e. The linen cloth or sheet, as is expressed, #De 22:17, which in the first congress was infected with blood, as is natural and usual. But because this is not now constant, the enemies of Scripture take occasion to quarrel with this law, as unreasonable and unjust, and such as might oppress the innocent, and hence take occasion to reject the Holy Scriptures. It were much more reasonable for these men either to expound this place metaphorically, of producing those proofs and testimonies of her virginity which should be as satisfactory as if that cloth were produced, as some of the Jews understand it; or modestly to acknowledge their own ignorance in this, as they are forced to do in many other things, and not impudently to conclude it is insoluble, because they cannot resolve it. But there is no need of such general answers, many things may be particularly said for the vindication of this law.

1. That it was necessary for that people, because of their hard-heartedness towards their wives, and their levity and desire of change of wives.
2. That either this trial, or at least the proof of her virginity, was to be taken presently after the day of marriage, and that proof was to be admitted afterwards upon occasion.
3. That this law was seldom or never put in execution, as the Jews note, and seems to be made for terror and caution to husbands and wives, as really other laws have been in like cases.
4. That that God who gave this law did by his providence govern all affairs, and rule the tongues and hearts of men, and therefore would doubtless take care so to order matters that the innocent should not suffer by this means, which he could prevent many ways.
5. That there is a great difference in times and climates. Who knows not that there are many things now by our moderns thought uncertain or false, by which by the ancient physicians were thought and affirmed to be true, and certain in their times and countries, and that many signs of diseases and other things do generally hold true in those more southerly and warmer parts of the world, which are many times deceitful in our northern and colder climates?

6. That this very way of trial of virginity hath been used not only by the Jews, but also by the Arabians and Egyptians, as is affirmed by divers learned writers, among whom yet it was more doubtful and hazardous than among the Jews, who might promise to themselves that God would guide the execution of his own law to a just and good issue.

7. That this sign, if it were uncertain in persons of riper years, yet it may be reasonably thought certain and constant in virgins of young and tender age, and that the Jews did ordinarily marry their daughters when they were about twelve or thirteen years old, as is confessed; as making haste to roll away that reproach which they thought to be in an unmarried state.

Ver. 16.

No text from Poole on this verse.

Ver. 17.

No text from Poole on this verse.

Ver. 18.

Either,

1. By the following mulct. Or,

2. By severe reproofs, which that word oft signifies. Or,

3. By stripes, as is expressed, #De 25:2,3. Which is not strange, considering how precious a thing one's good name is, of which he endeavoured to deprive his wife.

Ver. 19.

Unto the father of the damsel; because this was a reproach to his family, and to himself, because such a miscarriage of his daughter would have been ascribed to his evil education.

He may not put her away all his days; which seems to have been his design in this false accusation, and therefore that liberty of a divorce which is permitted to others, #De 24:1, shall be denied to him.

Ver. 20.

No text from Poole on this verse.

Ver. 21.

Quest. Why should she die when her crime was only fornication, which was not punished in a woman with death, #Ex 22:16,17?

Answ. Because there was not only fornication in this case, as #Ex 22, but this was accompanied with deep dissimulation and injury to her husband in the false profession of virginity, and it might be presumed that she committed this folly after she was betrothed to him, and therefore so obstinately denied it, as knowing the danger of it in that case; or God ordered it thus for the honour and custody of the matrimonial bed from all defilement, that she, who being defiled before she was married or betrothed, and therefore not punishable by death, yet if she should presume to carry her defilement into the married estate with a pretence of virginity, she should then be put to death.

Ver. 22.

If a man be found; if he be convicted of this fault, though not taken in the very act.

Ver. 23.

By this betrothing she had actually engaged herself to another man, and was in some sort his with, and therefore is sometimes so called, as #Ge 29:21 Mt 1:20.

Ver. 24.

Because she cried not; and therefore is justly presumed to have consented to it.

Ver. 25.

The man force her; which was to be examined and determined by the consideration of all the circumstances.

Ver. 26.

Not an act of choice, but of force and constraint.

Ver. 27.

The damsel cried; which is in that case to be presumed; charity obliging us to believe the best till the contrary be manifest.

Ver. 28.

i.e. An unmarried man, as appears,

1. From his obligation to marry the person he abused, which it is not probable would have been imposed upon him, had he been married.
2. Because if the man had been married, this had been adultery, and so had been punished with death. Lay hold on her; which notes some kind of force or artifice, whereby she was overpowered; whereas #Ex 22:16, she was enticed, which implies consent, and therefore the man doth here receive a greater punishment, because he used hostile violence towards her, which was the greater sin.

Ver. 29.

Fifty shekels of silver, besides the dowry, as Philo the learned Jew notes, which is here omitted, because that was common and customary, and because it might easily be gathered out of #Ex 22:16, it being sufficient here to mention what was peculiar to this case.

She shall be his wife, to wit, if her father consent to it, which is to be supposed out of #Ex 22:16, it being not likely that the father should lose his paternal right of disposing his child when she was in some sort forced, rather than when she was enticed.

He may not put her away all his days, which others were suffered to do, #De 24:1, and he who enticed the maid {#Ex 22:16} was not prohibited to do.

Ver. 30.

Shall not take to wife. So this respects the state, and the next branch speaks of the act only.

His father's wife; his mother-in-law. See #Le 18:8 20:11 1Co 5:1.

His father's skirt, i.e. the skirt of the mother's garment, i.e. the nakedness, which is here called his father's skirt, because his father and mother were one flesh, or because his father alone had the right to uncover it. The phrase is taken from the ancient custom or ceremony of the bridegroom's spreading the skirt of his garment over the bride, to signify his right to her, and authority over her, and his obligation to the marriage duty. See #Ru 3:9 Eze 16:8.

DEUTERONOMY CHAPTER 23

Who are to be excluded from the congregation, #De 23:1-6. An Edomite and Egyptian not to be abhorred, and why, #De 23:7,8. No uncleanness to be in the camp, #De 23:9-14. No filthiness, #De 23:17. No abominable sacrifice must be, #De 23:18. No usury, but to strangers, #De 23:19,20. Vows must be kept, #De 23:21-23. The liberty that was lawful in their neighbour's field or vineyard, #De 23:24,25.

Ver. 1.

Heb. wounded by compression, or attrition, or contusion, to wit, of the stones, which was the course the Gentiles took with infants to make them eunuchs. And these eunuchs and bastards, #De 23:2, seem to be not only those of other nations, as some understand it, without any foundation for such restriction, but also of the Israelites; the reason of this law being the same in all, to wit, that God would bring into disgrace those heathenish practices of making eunuchs, and getting bastards, which doubtless he would especially do among his own people. Shall not enter into the congregation of the Lord; which phrase cannot be understood so that they might not come into the church, or holy assemblies, to worship God, to pray, or hear, &c., because proselytes of any nation, being admitted to common church privileges, no less than the Jews, (as is evident from #Ex 12:48 Le 22:18 Nu 9:14 15:15) it were absurd to think that any of the Israelites, for such a natural or involuntary defect, should be shut out from all God's ordinances; nor so that they were to be put out of the muster-roll of God's people, or to lose the privileges common to all Israelites, to wit, the benefit of the year of release or jubilee, which it is not probable the Israelites were to forfeit merely for this unculpable imperfection; but either,

1. That they should not be incorporated into the body of Israel by marriage; for so this phrase may seem to have been understood by the whole congregation of Israel, #Ne 13:1-3 23-25; although at that time the government was in part in the hands of such persons as are here mentioned, #De 23:3, or of their children, seeing it is apparent from #Ezr 10 that many priests and Levites and other officers and rulers of Israel were married to strange women, whose issue are by this law excluded from all share in the government, and for that, among other reasons, Nehemiah separated them from Israel by virtue of the law here following. Or,
2. That they should not be admitted to honours and offices either in the church or commonwealth of Israel; and so the congregation of the Lord doth not here signify, as commonly it doth, the body of the people, but the society of the elders or rulers of the people, who, as they represent the whole congregation, and act in their name, and for their service and good, so they are sometimes called by the name of the congregation, as #Nu 35:12 24 25 Jos 20:6,9 1Ki 8:5, compared with #De 23:1-3; and #1Ch 13:1,2,4 29:1,10,20, compared with #1Ch 28:1 29:6; and of the congregation of God, as it is in the Hebrew of #Ps 82:1. Howsoever, seeing they are oft called the congregation, they may very well be called in a special manner the congregation of the Lord, because they were appointed by God, and act in his name and stead, and for his work and service, and did also oft assemble near the tabernacle, where God was eminently present. Add to this, that the Hebrew word kahal generally signifies a congregation or company of men met together; and therefore this cannot so conveniently be meant of all the body of the people, which could never meet in one place, but of the chief rulers, which frequently did so. Nor is it strange that eunuchs are excluded from government, partly because such persons are commonly observed to want that courage which is necessary for a governor, #Ex 18:21; and partly because as such persons ordinarily were despicable, so the office and authority in their hands was likely to be exposed to the same contempt.

Ver. 2.

A bastard; so the word is commonly rendered, and so it notes a person base-born, or born in fornication or adultery, or by incestuous or any prohibited mixtures of man and woman.

Object.

1. This law seems harsh, and too severe for the innocent bastard.

Answ. 1. It was only an exclusion from government, which was a tolerable burden.

2. It was a necessary caution to prevent and brand the sin of uncleanness, to which the Jews were more than ordinarily prone.

Object. 2. Pharez and Jephthah were both bastards, yet advanced to great honour and authority.

Answ. God gives laws to us, and not to himself; and, therefore he might, when he saw fit, confer what favour or power he pleased upon any such person, as he did to these. But some add, that the Hebrew word mamzer signifies not every bastard, but a bastard born of any strange woman, as the word may seem to intimate, and as such persons generally seem to have been, because of that special provision, that there should be no whore of the daughters of Israel, as it is here below, #De 23:17.

To his tenth generation; or, his tenth generation, as it is in the Hebrew, and so in the following verses.

Ver. 3.

This may be understood either,

1. Of the males only, or the children of such fathers, as interpreters commonly take it. Or rather,
2. Of females also, or of all that were born either of such fathers or mothers, as may be gathered from #Ezr 10 Ne 13, where the children of strange wives were separated from Israel no less than the children of strange fathers. And it is an allowed maxim, that the birth follows the belly. And whereas the children of Rahab and Ruth are produced to the contrary, it may be said as it was before, that these were extraordinary instances, and that God when he pleased might exempt any particular person of them from this curse, though the Israelites might not do so.

For ever; so it seems to note the immutability and perpetuity of this law, that it should be inviolably observed in all succeeding ages, and not dispensed with for any merit in the persons, or any pretence whatsoever. But why then should this clause be added only here, seeing the foregoing laws are as inviolable as this? It seems therefore to extend the duration of this exclusion of them from the congregation of the Lord beyond what was said at first, and to be added by way of aggravation, even to their tenth generation shall they not enter—yea, even for ever, i.e. they shall never enter, as it is expressed, without any mention of the tenth generation, #Ne 13:1, that they shall not come into the congregation of God for ever.

Ver. 4.

They met you not, as the manner of those times was to wait and provide for strangers and travellers; see #Ge 14:17 18:2,3 19:1,2 Jud 19:17-21; which was the more necessary, because in those times and countries there were no such public houses of entertainment, as now there are among us. Their fault then was unmercifulness to strangers and pilgrims, and afflicted persons, which was aggravated both by their relation to the Israelites, as being the children of Lot, and by the special kindness of God and of the Israelites to them, in not fighting against them, as they had just occasion to do, and as they did by others, #De 2.

Object.

Quest. How doth this agree with #De 2:28,29, where the Moabites which dwell in Ar are said to have sold them meat and drink?

Answ. 1. It is one thing voluntarily to meet them, and kindly to relieve them with bread and water, which they are here denied to have done, and a quite differing thing to sell them bread and water when they are upon their very borders, and their own interest forced them to do so.

2. It may seem that it was only those Moabites that dwelt in Ar did so, as is said #De 2:29, and that all the rest of the people neglected or refused to do it; and therefore the sin being so general and national, no wonder if the punishment be so too.

3. These and the following words, both here and #Ne 13:1, are to be taken distributively; and this first member of the verse belongs to the Ammonites, who did not meet them with bread, &c., and the latter part to the Moabites, who, together with the Midianites, but not with the Ammonites, hired Balaam, &c.

Ver. 5.

i.e. Forced Balaam to bless thee, who was hired and inclined to curse thee, if possibly he could.

Ver. 6.

i.e. Make no contracts, either by marriages, or leagues, or commerce with them, but rather shalt constantly keep a jealous eye over them, as enemies who will watch every opportunity to insnare or disturb thee. This counsel was now the more necessary, because a great part of the Israelites lived beyond Jordan in the borders of those people, and therefore God sets up this wall of partition betwixt them, as well knowing the mischief of bad neighbours, and Israel's proneness to receive infection from them. Each particular Israelite is not hereby forbidden to perform any office of humanity to them, but the body of the nation are forbidden all friendly and familiar conversation with them.

Ver. 7.

An Edomite; the children of Edom; only the Amalekites are excepted by God's particular order, and upon special reason, #De 25:17-19.

Thy brother, by Esau, Jacob's brother.

Thou wast a stranger in his land, and didst receive habitation, protection, and provision from them a long time, which kindness thou must not forget for their following persecution. It is ordinary with great men and others, that one injury or offence blots out the remembrance of twenty courtesies; but God doth not deal so with us, nor will he have us to deal so with others, but commands us to overlook and forget injuries, and to remember kindnesses.

Ver. 8.

Supposing their grandfather or great grandfather turned proselyte, and the children continue in that faith received by such ancestors.

Ver. 9.

Then especially take heed, because that is a time and state of confusion and licentiousness, when, as one said, the laws of God and man cannot be heard for the noise of arms; and because the success of thy arms and enterprises depends upon God's blessing, which wicked men have no reason to expect; and because thou dost then carry thy life in thy hand, and therefore hast need to be well prepared for death and judgment.

Ver. 10.

Of which uncleanness see #Le 15:4,16,17; or by uncleanness of any like kind; one kind being here, as oft, put for all.

He shall go out of the camp.

Quest. Why doth this uncleanness oblige a man to go out of the camp, when it did not oblige him to such a removal, #Le 15?

Answ. 1. It is not unreasonable if they were obliged to greater strictness and purity when they were undertaking so difficult and dangerous a work.

2. There is a manifest reason of the difference, because in their houses they had private chambers, where they could in such cases keep themselves from converse with others; whereas in the camp their conveniencies were so small, and their occasions of action so many, that it was very hard for his fellow soldiers that continued with him in the same tent, or part of the camp, to avoid the touching of him, which yet was infectious, #Le 15:7,22.

Ver. 11.

No text from Poole on this verse.

Ver. 12.

To wit, to ease thyself, as it follows, #De 23:13.

Ver. 13.

A paddle; the nature of which may be known from the use, which here follows.

Cover that which cometh from thee; partly, to prevent the annoyance of ourselves or others; partly, to preserve and exercise modesty and natural honesty; and principally, that by such outward rites they might be inured to the greater reverence of the Divine Majesty, and the greater caution to avoid all real and moral uncleanness, especially now when it was most necessary so to do.

Ver. 14.

In the midst of thy camp; either because the ark was commonly present with them, or at least some of the holy instruments, which were pledges of God's presence; or because God had promised to go forth with them when they engaged in a just and necessary war.

Ver. 15.

This is not to be understood universally, as if all servants that flee from their masters, though without any sufficient cause or colour of justice, might be detained from them by any person to whom they fled for refuge, for this is apparently contrary to all the laws of religion, and justice, and charity, and would open a door to infinite disorders and mischiefs; but it is to be understood,

1. Of the servants of strangers, because it follows, #De 23:16, he shall dwell with thee, even among you, which shows that he had dwelt with and belonged to another people.
2. Of such as belonged to the Canaanites, or other neighbouring nations, because if he had lived in remote countries, it is not probable that he would flee so far to avoid his master, or that his master would follow him so far to recover him. And for the Canaanites this sentence was most just, because both they and theirs were all forfeited to God and to Israel, and whatsoever they enjoyed was by special indulgence. And for the other neighbours it may seem just also, partly, because some of them were within the larger limits of the land belonging to Israel by God's grant or deed of gift, #Ge 15:18 Jos 1:4; partly, because by their hostile carriages they had given Israel a right to much more of theirs than a few servants that might possibly run away from their masters; and especially, because both masters and servants of these and other nations are unquestionably at the dispose of the Lord their Maker and sovereign Ruler.
