

Proverbs

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. The Proverbs.] Or, Master sentences; maxims, axioms, speeches of special precellence and predominance; received rules ^{a} that must overrule matters, and mightily prevail in the minds of men. The principal, no doubt, they are of those three thousand mentioned in #1Ki 4:32, and far beyond those golden sayings ^{b} of Phocylides (profanely preferred before those holy parables by that apostate Julian, ausu nefario), as having in them more sentences than words, ^{c} and being so far above all human praise for weight and worth, that, as Salust writes of Carthage, I had better speak nothing of them than too little, since too much is too little.

Of Solomon.] Who better, a deal, deserves to be styled "Master of the sentences" than Peter Lombard; and to be esteemed πανσοφος και παντα ανθρωπεια επισταμενος, as one ^{d} saith of Homer; or as another saith of Jerome, that he was a man, quem nullum scibile latuit, that knew all that was knowable by a man.

King of Israel.] King in Jerusalem, ^{#Ec 1:1} which was now the Israel of Israel, as Athens was, in its flourish, said to be the Greece of Greece; ^{e} yea, the soul, and sun, and eye of Greece; ^{f} yea, the common school of all mankind. ^{g} For King Solomon exceeded all the kings of the earth both in riches and in wisdom. "And all the world sought to Solomon, to hear his wisdom, which God had put into his heart." ^{#1Ki 10:24} For "the more wise the preacher was, the more he taught the people knowledge, and caused them to hear, and searched forth many parables"; ^{#Ec 12:9, marg.} even "words of delight." ^{#Pr 1:10, marg.} ^{See Trapp in "Pr 1:10"}

^{f} φυγη και ηλιος, και οφθαλμος Ελλαδος.—Demost.

^{g} Κοινων παιδευτηριον παντων ανθρωπων.—Thucyd. and Diodor.

Ver. 2. To know wisdom.] That is, To give others to know; to wise them, as in #Da 12:3; to give the knowledge of salvation; {#Lu 1:77} to show men "great and mighty things which they know not," {#Jer 33:3} but may here hence be taught better than out of Lipsius's Beehive or Machiavel's Spider web.

Ver. 3. To receive the instruction.] Tertullian calls the Bible (and the Proverbs by a specialty) nostra digesta, from the lawyers; and others our pandects, {a} from them also. Is there not a thin veil laid over them, which is more ratified by reading, and at last wholly worn away? Surely as by much reading the statute book men grow worldly wise; and as a friend (it is Chrysostom's comparison) that is acquainted with his friend will get out the meaning of a letter or phrase which another could not that is a stranger, so it is in Scripture. And herein, as one well observeth, the poorest idiot being a sound Christian, goeth beyond the profoundest clerks that are not sanctified, that he hath his own heart instead of a commentary to help him to understand even the most needful points of the Scripture.

{a} A complete body of the laws of any country or of any system of law.

Ver. 4. To give subtilty.] Serpentine subtilty, {#Ge 3:1} sacred sagacity, a sharp wit, a deep reach, a Spirit that "searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God," {#1Co 2:10} and transformeth a man "into the same image from glory to glory." {#2Co 3:18} Equidem scio multos esse qui hoc non credant, et non paucos qui ea rideant, nosque insanire arbitrentur; saith Peter Martyr, {a} sed istos rogatos velim, &c.: that is, I know well there be many that will not believe it, and not a few that will deride it, and think we are mad in ascribing so much to the Scriptures. But oh that they would be entreated to make trial awhile, and to take to the reading of the Bible! Male mihi sit (ita enim in tanta causa iurare ausim) nisi tandem capiantur: sentient denique quantum divina hac ab humanis distent, &c. Let me never be believed, if they perceive not a plain and palpable difference between these and all human writings whatsoever. And to the same purpose Erasmus, {b} expertus sum in meipso, saith he, I can speak it by experience, that there is little good to be gotten by reading the Bible cursorily and carelessly; but do it duly and dillgently, with attention and affection, and you shall find such an efficacy as is to be found in no other book that can be named.

To the simple.] Fatuo, פתל, fatuello -Lipsius's diminutive; to the silly simple, whose learning hangs not in his light, who holds not himself too wise to be taught, who is not uncounsellable, unpersuadable. Bis desipit qui sibi sapit; {c} he is two fools that is wise in his own eyes. {#Pr 3:7} Plurima ignoro, sed ignorantiam meam non ignoro. Little though it be that I know, yet this I know, that I know but little.

To the young man.] Though rude and rash, headlong and headstrong, {a} untameable and untractable as "a wild ass's colt"; {#Job 11:12} though addicted to "youthful lusts," {#2Ti 2:22} and madly set upon sin, yet he may "cleanse his ways by cleaving to God's word," {#Ps 119:9 Ec 11:10} and become a young saint, an old angel; whereas otherwise, like young lapwings, he is apt to be snatched up by every buzzard.

{a} Pet. Mart. in Rom. Ep. dedicat.

{b} Erasm., Praefat. in Lucam.

{c} Chytraeus.

{d} Arist., Ethic., lib. i.

Ver. 5. A wise man will hear.] Hearing and seeing are by Aristotle called "the learned senses," because by these doors learning, yea, life, entereth into the soul. {#Isa 55:3} David Chytraeus, when he lay dying, lifted up himself to hear the discourses of his friends that sat by him, and said that he should die with better cheer if he might die learning something. {a}

And will increase learning.] "Take heed what you hear: unto you that hear shall more be given." {#Mr 4:24} {See Trapp on "Mr 4:24"} Only ponder and apply what you hear. For they that do otherwise are like the wolf, who never attain to any more divine learning than to spell Pater ; father; but when they should come to put together, and to apply it to their souls, they say agnus , lamb , -their minds running a-madding after the profits and pleasures of the world, and they thinking those little less than mad that "run to and fro to increase knowledge." {#Da 12:4}

{a} " Si moribundus etiam aliquid didicisset."—Melch. Adam.

Ver. 6. To understand a proverb, and the interpretation.] Or, The sweetness thereof; there being nothing so sweet to a good soul as the knowledge of dark and deep mysteries. See #Ps 119:103 where the same word is used. {a} The little book of the Revelation was in John's mouth sweet as honey. {#Re 10:9,10} {See Trapp on "Re 10:9"} {See Trapp on "Re 10:10"}

And their dark sayings.] Dark to those that are acute obtusi, that have not their "senses exercised to discern both good and evil." {#Heb 5:14} Legum obscuritates non assignemus culpae scribentium sed incitiae non assequentium, saith he in Gellius. If the law be dark to any, the fault is not in the lawgiver, but in those that should better understand it.

Ver. 7. The fear of the Lord is the beginning.] Or, The chief and principal point {a} of wisdom, as the word here signified; yea, wisdom itself. {#Job 28:28} This Solomon had learned by the instruction of his father, as it is in the next verse, who had taught it him of a child, {#Pr 4:4 Ps 111:10} and therefore sets it here in the beginning of his works as the beginning of all. As in the end he makes it the end of all, {#Ec 12:13} yea, the all of man, {b} without which he counts him not a complete man, though never so wise to the world ward. Heathen sages, as Seneca, Socrates, &c., were wise in their generation, and had many excellent gifts, but they missed of the main; there was no fear of God before their eyes: being herein as alchemists, who miss of their end, but yet find many excellent things by the way. These merchants found goodly pearls, but "the pearl of price" {#Mt 13:45,46} they failed of. The prophet calls the fear of God "our treasure." {#Isa 33:6}

But fools despise.] Fools; so are all such as fear not God, "being abominable, disobedient, and to every good work reprobate," or injudicious. {#Tit 1:16} Evil is Hebrew for a fool; Nebulo of Nabal; fool of Φαυλος. When one highly commended the Cardinal Julian to Sigismund, he answered, Tamen Romanus est; yet he is a popeling. So, yet he is a fool, because void of God's true fear. "Behold they have rejected the word of the Lord, and what wisdom is in them?"

{#Jer 8:9}

{a} The head or firstfruits; the head and height.

{b} Hoc est enim totus homo.

Ver. 8. Hear the instruction of thy father, &c.] It is not fit to disobey God, thy father, nor thy teacher, saith Aristotle {a} Our parents, said Hierocles, are Θεοι εφεστιοι, our household gods: and their words should be received as oracles. This is a principal fruit of the fear of God, which it here fitly followeth: like as in the decalogue, the commandment for honouring of parents is set next of all to those of the first table, nay, is indeed, as Philo saith of it, ειτολη μικτη, a mixed commandment.

Ver. 9. For they shall be an ornament.] "A man's wisdom maketh his face to shine." {#Ec 8:1} Tum pietate gravem, &c. {a} Ου το χρυσοσ ουτε αδαμασ ουτωσ αστραπτει. {b} Neither gold nor precious stone so glittereth, saith Plato, as the prudent mind of a pious person. Nothing so beautifies as grace doth. Moses and Joseph were "fair to God," {#Ac 7:20} and favoured of all men. A crown of gold, a chain of pearl, are no such ornaments as are here commended.

{a} Virgil.

{b} Plato.

Ver. 10. If sinners entice thee.] To an ill bargain; to a match of mischief, as Ahab did Jehoshaphat, as Potiphar's wife would have done Joseph; and truly, that he yielded not, was no less a wonder, than that those three worthies burnt not in the midst of the fiery furnace. But as the sunshine puts out fire, so did the fear of God the fire of lust.

Consent thou not.] But carry a severe rebuke in thy countenance, as God doth. {#Ps 80:16} To rebuke them is the ready way to be rid of them.

Ver. 11. If they say.] The dragon bites the elephant's ear, and thence sucks his blood; because he knows that to be the only place that he cannot reach with his trunk to defend. So deal the red dragon and his angels: "with good words and fair speeches they deceive the hearts of the simple" {#Ro 16:18} "With her much fair speech she caused him to yield, with the flattering of her lips she forced him." {#Pr 7:21}

Come with me.] If sinners have their "Come," should not saints much more? "Come, let us go up to the house of the Lord." {#Isa 2:3} "Come, let us walk in the light of the Lord." {#Isa 2:5} "Let us go speedily to pray before the Lord, and to seek the Lord of hosts; I will go also." {#Zec 8:21} Should we not incite, entice, whet, and "provoke {a} one another," {#Heb 10:24} "sharpen" and extimulate, {#Pr 27:17} rouse and "stir up" {b} each other to love and good works? {#2Pe 1:13}

Ver. 12. Let us swallow them up alive.] As the devil doth. {#1Pe 5:8 2Ti 2:26} Homo homini demon. The poor Indians have been heard to say, it had been better that their country had been given to the devils of hell than to the Spaniards; and that if the cruel Spaniards go to heaven when they die, they, for their parts, desire not to come there.

Ver. 13. We shall find all precious substance.] But those that rake together, rem, rem, quocunque modo rem, that count all good fish that comes to net, will in the end catch the devil and all.

Fill our houses with spoil] Not considering that they "consult shame to their houses by cutting off many people, and sinning against their own souls." {#Hab 2:10} He that brings home a pack of cloths infected with plague, hath no such great booty of it.

Ver. 14. Let us all have one purse.] How much better were a wallet to beg from door to door, than such a cursed hoard of evil gotten goods!

Ver. 15. Walk not thou in the way with them.] "God will not take the wicked by the hand." {#Job 8:20} Why then should we? "Gather not my soul with sinners," saith David. {#Ps 26:9} "O Lord, let me not go to hell where the wicked are: for Lord, thou knowest I never loved their company here," said a good gentlewoman, when she was to die, being in much trouble of conscience.

Ver. 16. For their feet run to evil.] By the abuse of their locomotive faculty, given them to a better purpose. They "run," as if they should not come time enough; they take long strides toward the burning lake, which is now but a little before them.

Ver. 17. Surely in vain the net.] Which is to say, Silly birds pick up the meat, but see not the net, and so become a prey to the fowler. If the fruits of the flesh grow out of the trees of your hearts, saith blessed Bradford, {a} surely, surely the devil is at inn with you; you are his birds, whom when he hath well fed, he will broach you, and eat you, chew you, and champ you, world without end, in eternal woe and misery.

{a} Sermon of Repent., p. 70.

Ver. 18. And they lay wait.] Their sin will surely find them out. "No doubt this man is a murderer," said those barbarians, {#Ac 28:4} "whom though he had escaped the sea, yet vengeance suffereth not to live." {a} "Surely I have seen yesterday the blood of Naboth." {#2Ki 9:26} Murder ever bleeds fresh in the eye of God; to him many years, yea, that eternity that is past, is but yesterday.

Ver. 19. Which taketh away the life.] The greater wealth, the greater spoil awaits a man: as a tree with thick and large boughs, every man desires to lop him. Trithemius writeth that the Templars, at the request of Philip, King of France, were put down and extinct, upon the pretext of heresy; but indeed, because they were rich, and Philip sore longed after their possessions. Cyprus for its great wealth became a spoil to the Roman's auri sacra fames, &c. Δεινος και παντολμος της φιλοχρηματιας ερωσ. {a} Covetousness is daring and desperate: it rides without reins, as Balaam did after the wages of wickedness, "the mammon of iniquity." {#Lu 16:9}

{a} Sixtus Rufus, Virgil, Isidor.

Ver. 20. Wisdom.] Heb., Wisdoms: that is, the most absolute and sovereign wisdom, the Lord Jesus, "in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge," {#Col 2:3} who also "is made unto us of God wisdom, righteousness," &c. {#1Co 1:30}

Crieth without.] The Hebrew word signifies often to shout for joy. {#Ps 81:2 Le 9:24} Christ surely cried sweetly, "the roof of his mouth was like the best wine that goeth down sweetly"; {#So 7:9} "with a desire did he desire" our salvation, though he well knew it should cost him so very dear. {#Lu 22:15}

She uttereth her voice.] Verbis non solum desertis, red et exertis. "In the last day, that great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink." {#Joh 7:37} Ver. 21. In the chief place of concourse.] Veritas non quaerit angulos. Christ, as his manner was, preached in the synagogues; Paul disputed in the market with whomsoever he met, and preached in the midst of Mars hill. {#Ac 17:17-22} And at Rome his "bonds in Christ were manifest in all Caesar's court, and in all other places." {#Php 1:13}

Ver. 22. How long, ye simple ones.] The fatuelli that are easily persuaded into a fool's paradise. These are the best sort of bad men; the apostle calls them ΑΚΑΚΟΙ. {#Ro 16:18} Optimi putantur Pontifices (saith Papirius Massonius, a Popish writer) {a} si vel leniter mali sint; vel minus boni quam coeteri mortales esse solent. Those are thought to be very good popes that are not stark naught, or that have any good at all in them. These simplicians are much better than scorners that delight in their scorning, but far beyond those fools that hate knowledge. See a like gradation in #Ps 1:1, {See Trapp on "Ps 1:1"} Peccata non sunt paria; Nemo repente fit turpissimus. All sins are not alike sinful, and wicked men grow worse and worse.

Ver. 23. Turn you at my reproof.] He that reproves, and then directs not how to do better, is as he that snuffs a lamp, but pours not in oil to maintain it.

Behold, I will pour out my Spirit.] Now, if men make their hearts as an adamant, lest they should hear, &c., and wilfully withstand the Spirit, let them read their neck-verse in the following words, and in that parallel text. {#Zec 7:11-13} Resisting the Spirit is a step to the unpardonable sin.

Ver. 24. Because I have called, and ye refused.] If any ask, why did God suffer them to refuse, and not make them yield? I answer with Augustine, Doctiorem quaerat, qui hanc quaestionem ei explicet: Let him look one that can tell him, for I cannot.

Ver. 25. But ye have set at naught.] As those recusant {a} guests in the Gospel that pretended they therefore came not, because they had bought farms and oxen; but indeed it was because their farms and oxen had bought them. They had either so much to do, or so little to do, that they could not make use of so fair an offer, so sweet advice and advantage.

And would none of my reproof.] Ruinam praeceunt stillicidia. It is a sure presage and desert of ruin, when men will not be ruled. {#Pr 29:1} The cypress, the more it is watered, the more it is withered. The tree that is not for fruit, is for the fire. The earth that beareth thorns and briars only is rejected. {#Heb 6:8}

{a} One who refuses to submit to some authority, comply with some regulation or request, etc.

Ver. 26. I also will laugh.] Quod Deus loquitur cum risu, tu legas cum fletu. {a} If God laugh, thou hast good cause to cry. Note here the venomous nature of sin, which is so offensive to God, that it makes him (against his ordinary wont) merry at his creatures' misery, who otherwise delights in mercy. {#Mic 7:18}

When your fear cometh.] That "terrible tempest." {#Job 15:21,22 Ps 11:6} Tullus Hostilius (a profane prince) set up and worshipped at Rome two new gods, viz., Pavor and Pallor, as Lactantius {b} testifieth. Cataline was wont to be afraid at any sudden noise, as being haunted with the furies of his own evil conscience. {c} So was our Richard the Third after the murder of his two innocent nephews, {d} and Charles the Ninth of France after the Parisian massacre {e} These tyrants became more terrible to themselves than ever they had been to others.

Ver. 27. When your fear cometh as desolation.] Scilicet, Of war, which lays heaps upon heaps, and leaves not a stone upon a stone. {#Mt 24:2}

As a whirlwind.] Suddenly and irresistibly, and with a terrible noise and loud crash.

Ver. 28. Then shall they call, &c.] This was Saul's misery; -The Philistines are upon me, and God will not answer me. This was Moab's curse. {#Isa 16:12} This was the case of David's enemies. {#Ps 18:41} A doleful case it is surely, when a man shall lose his prayers, and shall not be a button the better for all his pretended prayers and devotions. "He that turneth away his ear from hearing of the law, even his prayer shall be abominable." {#Pr 28:9} If God answer him at all, it is according to the idols of his heart, {#Eze 14:3,4} with bitter answers, as in #Jud 10:13,14. Or if better, yet it is but as he answered the Israelites for quails, and afterwards for a king; better have been without. Deus saepe dat iratus quod negat propitius. Giftless gifts God gives sometimes. "He will consume you after that he hath done you good." {#Jos 24:20}

Ver. 29. For that they hated knowledge.] These are the worst sort of sinners, {#Pr 1:22} that not only slight knowledge, but hate it, as thieves do a torch in the night; curse it, as Ethiopians do the scorching sun; fly against it, as bats do against the light. {a} "This is the condemnation"; {#Joh 3:19,20} this is hell beforehand.

And did not choose.] Αρετη, quasi αρετη: Αγαθον, quasi αγαθον θεατον. "Refuse the evil, and choose the good." {#Isa 7:16} "Choose the things that please God"; {#Isa 56:4} "that wherein he delights." {#Isa 65:12} Such a choice made Moses; {#Heb 11:25} and Joshua; {#Jos 24:15} and Mary. {#Lu 10:42}

{a} Herodot.

Ver. 30. They would none of my counsel.] These are condemned and menaced, as well as those that despised or execrated God's reproof. So also in the precedent verse, not only they that "hated knowledge," but that "did not choose the fear of the Lord."

They despised all my reproof.] Heb., They execrated, blasphemed it.

Ver. 31. Therefore shall they eat of the fruit.] Eat as they baked, drink as they brewed. They that sow the wind of iniquity, shall reap the whirlwind of misery, Aequum est ut faber quas fecit compedes ipse gestiat.

And be filled with their own devices.] Their never enough shall be quit with fire enough in the bottom of hell.

Ver. 32. For the turning away.] Whereas it might be objected that meanwhile wicked men live at ease and prosper; it is granted, but withal asserted, that these fatted oxen are but fitted for the slaughter. The sunshine of prosperity ripens the sin of the wicked apace. Bernard calls it miseriordiam omni indignatione crudeliorem, a mercy that he had no mind to. What good is there in having a fine suit with the plague in it? As soon may a man miscarry upon the soft sands as upon the hard rocks.

Ver. 33. Shall be quiet from fear of evil.] Impavidum ferient ruinae. {a} "He shall not be afraid of evil tidings." {#Ps 112:7} His ark is pitched within and without; tossed, it may be, but not drowned; shaken, but not shivered.

Chapter 2

Ver. 1. My son.] Fatherly and filial affection ought to be between teacher and hearers. "But who is their father?" {#1Sa 10:12} "O my father, my father," said he to the dying prophet. {#2Ki 13:14} "Dwell with me, and be unto me a father and a priest," said that idolatrous Micah to the wandering Levite. {#Jud 17:10} Popish novices do so observe their padres (as they call them), that though they command them a voyage to China or Peru, without dispute or delay they presently set forward {a} Tu et asinus unum estote, said one once to a young novice, who being about to enter into a monastery, asked his counsel how he should carry himself. "Come, children, hearken unto me, I will teach you the fear of the Lord." {#Ps 34:11}

{a} Spec. Europ.

Ver. 2. So that thou incline thine ear.] Lie low at God's feet, and say, "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth." His saints "sit down at his feet, every one to receive his word." {#De 33:3} They are compared to "a garden of cucumbers," {#Isa 1:8} which, when ripe, lie on the ground. Surely, as waters meet and rest in low valleys, so do God's graces in lowly hearts.

And apply thine heart.] Attention of body, intention of mind, and retention of memory, are indispensably desired of all wisdom's scholars; such as King Edward VI, who constantly stood up at the hearing of the word, took notes, which he afterwards diligently perused, and wrought the sermon upon his affections by meditation.

Ver. 3. If thou criest after knowledge.] Bene orasse est bene studuisse, said Luther. Knowledge is God's gift (#Jas 1:5 and 17), and must be sought at his hand, since he is "the Father of lights," and sells us "eye salve," #Re 3:17.

And lifest up thy voice.] As resolved to "give God no rest" till thou hast it. A dull suitor begs a denial. "Then shall men know if they follow on to know the Lord," #Ho 6:3. "Teach me," "teach me," saith David often. "Lord, show me thy glory," said Moses, newly come from the mount.

Ver. 4. If thou seekest her as silver.] Opulentissima metalla quorum in alta latent venae, saith Seneca, {a} Your richest metals lie lowest. Viscera terrae extrahimus, ut digito gestetur gemma, quam petimus, saith Pliny; {b} We draw out the very bowels of the earth, that we may get the gem that we desire. Shall we not do as much for this pearl of price, the knowledge of God and his will, of ourselves, and our duties? Beg we must; {#Pr 2:3} but with it we must dig too, {#Pr 2:4} and continue to do so, searching for her as for hid treasures. Ora et labora, for else "the talk of the lip only brings want." {#Pr 14:23} What man, finding a rich mine of gold or silver, is content with the first ore that offers itself to his view, and doth not dig deeper and deeper till he become owner of the whole treasure? So here, "Then shall ye know, if ye follow on to know the Lord," {#Ho 6:3} if ye cease not till ye get all the dimensions of knowledge mentioned by the apostle, {#Eph 3:18} till ye see that blissful sight. {#Eph 1:18,19}

{b} Lib. ii. cap. 65.

Ver. 5. Then shalt thou understand.] Then shalt thou be as those noble Romans were, {#Ro 15:14} "full of goodness, filled with all knowledge, able also to admonish others"; in fine, well accomplished Christian, that hath Christian for his name, and Catholic for his surname, Such a Catholic as Augustine describeth when he saith, Boni Catholici sunt qui et fidem integram sequuntur et bonos mores. Those be good Catholics that believe well and live well. These be not those ancient Roman Catholics.

Ver. 6. Out of his mouth cometh knowledge.] If it could be said by the divine chronologer, {a} Ex Adami sapientissimi doctoris ore promanavit tanquam ex fonte quicquid in mundo est utilium doctrinarum, disciplinarum, scientiae et sapientiae -Out of Adam's mouth, even after the fall, as out of a fountain, flowed all the profitable knowledge, skill, and wisdom in the world: how much better may the same be said of "the only wise God," who is "wonderful in counsel, and excellent in working." {#Isa 28:29} Platonici lumen mentiam esse dixerunt ad discenda omnia, eundem ipsum Deum quo facta sunt omnia. {b} The Platonists said, that God, the maker of all, was that light of the mind whereby we learn all.

Ver. 7. He layeth up sound wisdom.] Heb., Substance, reality; that which hath a true being, in opposition to that which is not; so riches are described. {#Pr 23:5} Heaven only hath a "foundation"; {#Heb 11:10} earth hath none, but is "hanged upon nothing." {#Job 16:7} Grace hath solid substance in it and true worth; whereas opinion only sets the price upon all outward things. The prophet Amos complains of the epicures of his time, that they "ate the lambs out of the flock, and the calves out of the midst of the stall; they drank wine in bowls, and chanted to the sound of viols." {#Am 6:4-6} This to some might seem brave and desirable. But {#Pr 2:13} the prophet, in true judgment, thus speaks to them: "Ye which rejoyce in a thing of nought," ye embrace a shadow, ye pursue after things that profit not, but perish in the use; for "Meats for the belly, and the belly for meats: but God will destroy both it and them." {#1Co 6:13} Some sense the text thus: The Lord lays up when he is in distress, then he hath such quietness of spirit, soundness and presence of mind, that in the midst of his straits he is in a sufficiency. Not so the wicked. {#Job 20:22}

He is a buckler to them.] The body cannot be wounded, but through the buckler, if skilfully handled: "Happy art thou, O Israel; who is like unto thee, O people saved by the Lord, the shield of thy help?" {#De 33:29}

Ver. 8. He keepeth the paths of judgment.] Well may they walk uprightly that are so strongly supported. God's hand is ever under his; they cannot fall beneath it. "He keepeth the feet of his saints."

{#ISa 2:9}

Ver. 9. Then shalt thou understand righteousness.] Not as cognoscitiva, standing in speculation; but as directiva vitae, a rule of life. Knowledge is either apprehensive only, or affective also. This differs from that, as much as the light of the sun, wherein is the influence of an enlivening power, from the light of torches.

Ver. 10. Is pleasant to thy soul.] Spiritual joy mortifies sin. His mouth hankers not after homely provision that hath lately tasted of delicate sustenance. Pleasure there must be in the ways of God, because therein men let out their souls into God, that is the fountain of all good; hence they so infinitely distaste sin's tasteless fooleries. Crede mihi, res severa est verum gaudium, saith Seneca. True joy is a solid business.

Ver. 11. Discretion.] Heb., Thoughtfulness, or good advisement. Cogito quasi cogito. {a} Notat sereitatem, such as is that of the wife "to please her husband," {#1Co 7:34} casting this way and that way how to give best content: or that of the good housewife to "build her house," {#Pr 14:1} studying in every business how to set everything in order, as the carpenter studies how to set every part of the frame in joint.

Ver. 12. That speaketh froward things.] As if his mouth were distorted, or the upper lip stood where the nether should. See #Ac 20:30. {a}

{a} διεστραμμενα.

Ver. 13. To walk in the ways of darkness.] As thieves, drunkards, dicers, and our other solifugae, that abuse even gospel light; that put not light under a bushel, but under a dunghill; that, when they have walked themselves weary in these byways, highways to hell, sit down "in darkness, and in the shadow of death," {#Lu 1:79} which posture imports, (1). Continuance there; (2). Content, as well paid of their seat. These "hate the light because their ways are evil." {#Joh 3:20} The light stands in the light of their wicked ways, as the angel did in Balaam's way to his sin.

Ver. 14. Who rejoice to do evil.] It is their meat, drink, sport; {#Pr 4:27 10:23} they cannot be merry unless the devil be their play fellow. This is reckoned as an aggravation of Jerusalem's sin: "When thou doest evil, then thou rejoicest." {#Jer 11:15} But better is the sorrow of him that suffereth evil than the jollity of him that doth evil, saith Augustine. {a}

Ver. 15. Whose ways are crooked.] How justly may God say to such, as the crab in the fable did to the serpent, when he had given him his death's wound for his crooked conditions, and then saw him stretch himself out straight, At oportuit sic vixisse: It is too late now, you should have lived so.

And who are froward.] Absurd, ἄστοχοι. {#2Th 3:2} Men made up of mere incongruities, solacising in opinion, speeches, actions, all.

Ver. 16. From the strange woman.] Forbidden thee by God, as strange fire, strange gods, &c.

Which flattereth with her words.] Whose lips are nets, whose hands are bands, whose words are cords to draw a man in as a fool to the stocks, or an ox to the slaughter.

Ver. 17. Which forsaketh the guide of her youth.] That is, Her husband; as Helena, Herodias, Bernice, {#Ac 25:13} and other odious harlots. Adulterium quasi ad alterum, vel ad alterius torum. {a} This wanton never wants one, though her husband be ever so near.

And forgetteth the covenant of her God.] Marriage is a mixed covenant, partly religious and partly civil: the parties tie themselves first to God, and then to one another. The bond is made to God, who also will be ready enough to take the forfeiture. For whores and adulteresses God will judge. {#Heb 13:3}

{a} Becman.

Ver. 18. For her house inclineth unto death.] Terence calleth harlots Cruces, quia iuvenes macerent et offligant. Venery {a} is death's best harbinger: Venus ab antiquis λυσιμελης dicta. She provideth, saith one, {b} not for those that are already born, but for those that shall be born. Of Pope Paul the Fourth, that old goat, it went for a byword, Eum per eandem partem animam profudisse, per quam acceperat. Pope John the Twelfth being taken with an adulteress, was stabbed to death by her husband. {c} Alexander the Great and Otho the Third test their lives by their lusts. But how many, alas! by this means have lost their souls. Fleshly lusts, by a specialty, "fight against the soul." {#1Pe 2:12} And nothing hath so much enriched hell, saith one, as beautiful faces.

And her paths unto the dead.] Heb., El Rheapaim, to the giants: {d} To that part of hell where those damned monsters are, together with those sensual Sodomites, who, giving themselves over to fornication, and "going after strange flesh, are thrown forth, προκεινται, proiecti sunt, for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire." {#Jude 7}

{a} The practice or pursuit of sexual pleasure; indulgence of sexual desire.

Ver. 19. None that go unto her return again.] Some of the ancients have herehence concluded that adultery is an unpardonable sin; but "all manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men," saith our Saviour, "save only the sin against the Holy Ghost." {#Mt 12:31} True it is, that "a whore is a deep ditch, and a strange woman is a narrow pit"; -that {#Pr 23:27} "whoredom, and wine, and new wine take away the heart"; -that {#Ho 4:11} such are said to be "destitute of understanding," and to have lost even the light of nature; {#Pr 6:32 Ro 1:28} to be "past feeling, and given up to a dead and dedolent disposition"; {#Eph 4:18,19} to be "impudent," {#Jer 2:3} -wherefore also they are compared to dogs {a} {#De 23:18 2Sa 3:8} -and for the most part impenitent. {#Ec 7:28} Grace, as one well observeth, is seated in the powers of nature. Now carnal sins disable nature, and so set us in a greater distance from grace, as taking away the heart, &c. Howbeit "all things are possible with God"; {#Mr 9:23,27} and though few have awakened out of this snare of the devil, yet some have, as David, and that woman in #Lu 7:37,50, lest any humbled sinners should despair.

Ver. 20. That thou mayest walk in the way.] This is another work of wisdom—as to keep us from bad company, so to put us into good, where much good may be learned. Dr Taylor, martyr, rejoiced that ever he came in prison, there to be acquainted with that angel of God, John Bradford (so he called him). {a} Latimer and Ridley, while they lived, kept up Cranmer by intercourse of letters, and otherwise, from entertaining counsels of revolt. {b} A child having been brought up with Plato, returned home to his father's house, and, hearing his father to chide, and exclaim furiously in his anger, used these speeches to his father, "I have never seen the like with Plato." {c}

{c} Sen., De Ira, lib. iii. cap. 11.

Ver. 21. For the upright shall dwell in the land.] Of Canaan, a type of heaven; for by these outward and corporeal things, inward, spiritual, and eternal are understood. Here the wise man speaks after the manner of Moses' law, under which he lived; {#De 11:8} and howsoever upright men suffer hardship and hunger here, yet they enjoy great tranquillity and felicity, as seeing God in all, and depending wholly upon him for help. "Well for the present, and it will be better hereafter";—this is the upright man's motto. Heaven, thinks he, will make amends for all. He that sees visions of glory will not matter, with St Stephen, a shower of stones. How much less will he think much, though "the Lord give him the bread of adversity, and water of affliction." {#Isa 30:20}

Ver. 22. But the wicked shall be cut off.] Certainly, suddenly, utterly, cum maxime velint vivere, when they have feathered their nests, and set up their rest, and reckon upon long life, as the fool in the Gospel: "God will shoot at them with an arrow suddenly," and fetch them off when they least look for it. The wicked may die sinning. The saints shall not die till the best time—not till that time when, if they were but rightly informed, they would even desire to die.

Shall be rooted out.] Heb., Plucked up, as degenerate plants. Exorientur, sed exurentur. "God shall likewise destroy thee for ever: he shall take thee away, and pluck thee out of thy dwellingplace, and root thee out of the land of the living. Selah." {#Ps 52:5}

Ver. 1. My son, forget not.] We should be able to say to wisdom, as Coenis did to her Lady Antonia, Frustra, domina, iussisti: haec enim atque caetera omnia quae mihi imperas, ira semper in memoria habeo ut ex ea deleri non possint. {a} You need not, madam, bid me do your business, for I so remember your commands, as I need never be minded of them.

Iussa sequi tam velle mihi, quam posse, necesse est,
I am ready, to my power, to do your pleasure.

But let thine heart keep.] As the ark kept the two tables; as the pot kept the hidden manna.

Ver. 2. For length of days.] A sweet mercy, and generally desired. {#Ps 34:12} Short life is reckoned as a curse, {#Ps 89:47} yet in some cases it is a blessing. {#1Ki 14:13 Isa 57:1} Ωκυμοροι οι θεοφιλεις—God taketh away his from the evil to come, {a} as, when there is a fire in a house or town, men carry out their jewels; but then God makes them up in his cabinet. "They do enter into peace"; their souls go to heaven; "they rest in their beds"; {#Isa 57:2} their bodies rest sweetly and safely in the grave till the resurrection of the just. And is not this far better than the longest life here? Length of days may prove a curse, when it brings shame, sorrow, &c., as it did to Cain, Ham, &c.

And peace shall they add to thee.] Without which to live is nothing else but to lie dying. Rebecca, for want of this, was weary of her life; so was Elijah when he sat under the juniper tree. "All the days of the afflicted are evil." {#Pr 15:15} Συνοικουσι, ου συμβιουσι; they dwell together; they do not live together, said Themistocles of married folk that agree not. Non ille diu vixit, sed diu fuit, said Seneca of one. And again, Non multum navigavit, sed multum iactatus est; He was tossed much up and down, but sailed not far, as being driven about by contrary winds.

Shall they add to thee.] Multiplicem pacem significat, saith one. "Peace, peace," as in #Isa 26:3; that is, a multiplied peace; with God, with one's self, with others; or a renewed continued peace, today, tomorrow, and every day; or a perfect, sheer, pure peace.

Ver. 3. Let not mercy and truth forsake thee,] That is, True mercy; not that which is natural or moral only, but that which is right, both quoad fontem, and quoad finem. They that do otherwise, as heathens and hypocrites, lay up their treasure in the eyes and ears of men, which is a chest that hath neither lock nor key to keep it.

Bind them.] That is, My commandments. He seems to allude to #De 6:8. {See Trapp on "De 6:8"}

Ver. 4. So shalt thou find favour.] As did Joseph, Moses, David. He was a man after God's own heart, and whatsoever he did pleased the people. It is God that gives credit; he fashioneth men's opinions, and inclineth their hearts, as Ezra oft acknowledges with much thankfulness. {#Ezr 7:27,28}

Ver. 5. Trust in the Lord.] To trust in God is to be unbottomed of thyself, and of every creature, and so to lean upon God, that if he fail thee thou sinkest. Confidence is the least, and yet the best we can render to the Lord, for hereby we acknowledge his sovereignty, and set the crown upon his head, as it were. See #Jud 9:15.

And lean not to thine own understanding.] Which, because men do, hence it is, many times, that the fairest blossoms of their endeavours wither, and the unprobablest things do come to pass. God loves to confute men in their confidences, as he did the Philistines in their champion Goliath. We must not, therefore, trust—no, not trust itself—but God, on whom it relies, who is therefore called our trust. They trust not God at all that do it not alone. He that stands with one foot on a rock, and another foot upon a quicksand, will sink and perish as certainly as he that stands with both feet on a quicksand. "Lord, lead me to a rock that is higher than I," saith David. Whither, when he was once got, then he sat and sang, "The Lord is my rock and my salvation." {#Ps 27:1} Surely, as one said of general councils, they seldom were successful, because men came with confidence, leaning to their own understanding, and seeking for victory rather than verity. So it holds as true in other like cases.

Ver. 6. In all thy ways acknowledge him.] Ask counsel at his mouth, aim at his glory, be evermore in the sense of his presence, and light of his countenance. It is reported of a worthy divine of Scotland, {a} that he did even eat and drink and sleep eternal life. This is to walk with God; this is to live by faith; this is to see him that is invisible (Moses's optic); this is to go the upper way, even that "way of life that is above to the wise, that he may depart from hell beneath." {#Pr 15:24} {See Trapp on "Pr 15:24"}

And he shall direct thy paths.] As he carefully chose out the Israelites' way in the wilderness; not the shortest, but yet the safest for them. So will God do for all that make him their guide. The Athenians had a conceit that their goddess Minerva turned all their evil counsels into good unto them. The Romans thought that their Vibilia (another heathenish deity) set them again in their right way, when at any time they were out. All this, and more than this, is undoubtedly done by the true God for all that commit their ways unto him, and depend upon him for direction and success. "Lo, this God is our God for ever and ever: he will be our guide even unto death." {#Ps 48:14}

Ver. 7. Be not wise in thine own eyes.] Bis desipit qui sibi sapit. He is two fools that is wise in his own eyes. This δοκησισοφια mars all. Socrates's Hoc scio quod nihil scio, got him the name of the wisest among men. Consilii satis in me mihi {a} is the proud man's posy. "He that would be wise, must be a fool, that he may be wise." {#1Co 3:18} Intus existens prohibet alienum. A conceit of wisdom bars out wisdom.

Fear the Lord.] This makes a modest opinion of a man's self. Joseph, a man famous for the fear of God, when Pharaoh expected from him an interpretation of his dream, as having heard much of his skill, "It is not in me," said he; "God shall give Pharaoh an answer of peace." {#Ge 41:16} Lo he extenuates his own gifts, and ascribes all to God. Wherefore suddenly after, as Joseph had said to Pharaoh, "Without me shall God make answer to Pharaoh," so Pharaoh is heard say to Joseph, "Without thee shall no man lift up his hand or foot in all the land of Egypt." {#Ge 41:44} So that here was exemplified that holy proverb, "By humility and the fear of the Lord, are riches, and honour, and life." {#Pr 22:4} The original runs thus, By humility the fear of the Lord are riches, &c. There is no and in the Hebrew. Humility and the fear of the Lord are so near akin (this being the mother of that), as if the one were predicated of the other, as if they were one and the same grace.

And depart from evil.] Another effect of this "clean" fear of God, as David calleth it. {#Ps 19:9} Cave, spectat Cato, was a watchword among the Romans. A reverend and religious man had these words following written before him in his study, Noli peccare: Nam Deus videt, Angeli astant, Diabolus accusabit, Conscientia testabitur, Infernus cruciabit. Take heed of sin, for God seeth thee, angels stand by thee, the devil will accuse thee, thy conscience will testify against thee, and hell will torture thee. But besides all this, "there is mercy with God that he may be feared"; {#Ps 130:4} and "the children of Israel shall fear the Lord and his goodness." {#Ho 3:5}

{a} Arachne apud Ovid. Metamor, lib. vi.

Ver. 8. It shall be health to thy navel.] That is, Thou shalt be in good plight both for the outward and inward man: Thy bones full of marrow, thy breasts full of milk, thy spirit also lively and lifted up in the ways of the Lord. And as it is with children in the womb (for to these is the allusion here), that by the navel nourishment is ministered unto them, yea, even to the strengthening of the inward parts: so the godly in the Church are fed and bred by the faith and fear of God. And as without marrow in the bones, no part of man, no, not that which is of greatest value and force, is able to do any thing: {a} so the strength that they have from God, is as the marrow which strengtheneth the bones, and maketh them apt to do good things. And as a man that hath his bones filled with marrow, and hath abundance of good blood and fresh spirits in his body, can endure to go with less clothes than another, because he is well lined within: so it is with a heart that hath a great deal of grace and peace; he will go through difficulties and troubles, though outward comforts fail him. It is recorded of Mr Saunders, martyr, {b} that himself should tell the party that lay in the same bed with him in prison, that even in the time of his examination before Stephen Gardiner, he was wonderfully comforted, not only in spirit, but also in body, he received a certain taste of that holy communion of saints, while a most pleasant refreshing did issue from every part and member of the body to the seat and place of the heart, and from thence did ebb and flow to and fro unto all the parts again.

Ver. 9. Honour the Lord with thy substance.] Freely expending it in pious and charitable uses. {#Ex 25:19 De 26:2} {See Trapp on "Ex 25:19"} {See Trapp on "De 26:2"} See also my "Commonplace of Alms."

Ver. 10. So shall thy barns be filled.] The Jews at this day, though not in their own country, nor have a Levitical priesthood, yet those who will be reputed religious among them do distribute the tenth of their increase unto the poor, being persuaded that God doth bless their increase the more; for their usual proverb is, Decima, ut dives fias. {a} Pay thy tithes, that thou mayest be rich. {See Trapp on "Mt 5:7"}

{a} Godwyn's Heb. Antiq. 277. Thegnaler hischilshethegnasher.

Ver. 11. Despise not the chastening of the Lord.] Slight it not, but "sit alone," {#La 3:28} and "consider." {#Ec 7:14} Some think it a goodly thing to bear out a cross by head and shoulders, and wear it out as they may, never improving it. As a dog that getting out of the water into which he is cast shakes his ears; or as a man, that coming out of a shower of rain, dries again, and all is as before. Perdidistis fructum afflictionis, saith Augustine of such scape thrifts. {a} Thus the proud Greeks (having lost two castles in Chersonesus, taken from them by the Turks) commonly said, that there was but a hog sty lost, alluding to the name of that country. Whereas that was the first footing that the Turks got in Europe, and afterwards possessed themselves of the imperial city of Constantinople. Shortly after, 1358 AD, Callipolis also being lost, the mad Greeks, to extenuate the matter, when they had any talk thereof, in jesting ways commonly said, that the Turks had but taken from them a bottle of wine. {b} So Galienus, the Roman Emperor, hearing that Egypt was revolted, said, Quid? sine lino Ægyptio esse non possumus? What? cannot we be without the hemp of Egypt? So when Calais was taken from us by the French, the court parasites, to ease Queen Mary's mind (which yet they could not), said, that it was only a refuge for renegade heretics; and that no true Roman Catholic ought to deplore, but rather rejoice at the damage. {c}

At Regina gravi iamdudum saucia cura

Vulnus alit venis. -Virgil.

Monsieur de Cordes used to say that he would be content with all his heart to lie in hell seven years, on the condition that Calais were taken from the English. {a} And a considerate English captain being asked by a proud Frenchman, When will ye fetch Calais again? gravely replied, Quando peccata vestra erunt nostris graviora, When your sins shall weigh down ours. God is to be seen in everything we suffer, since light afflictions, not improved, are but as a drop of wrath forerunning the great storms, a crack forerunning the ruin of the whole.

Neither be weary of his correction.] This is the other extreme, despair and despondency of spirit. {e} See my "Love Tokens," p. 44, &c.

Ver. 12. For whom the Lord loveth.] The saints' afflictions proceed oft from love displeased, offended. And yet we have some now that tell us that God is never displeased with his people, though they fall into adultery, or the like sin, no, not with a fatherly displeasure; that God never chastiseth his people for any sin, no, not with a fatherly chastisement. But he (though a father) doth alter the set of his looks towards his child, who is wanton upon his love, and lets down the diligence of his just observance and duty.

In whom he delighteth.] Quem unice diligit, Whom he coddles above the rest of his children. That son in whom he is well pleased, saith Mercerus; quem approbat, whom he makes his whiteboy. So Theophylact, Qui excipitur a numero flagellatorum, excipitur a numero filiorum. He that escapes affliction, may well suspect his adoption. See my "Love tokens," p. 54,55.

Ver. 13. Happy is the man.] Though afflicted, if with it instructed, si vexatio det intellectum. Bought wit is ever best prized. "Blessed is the man whom thou chastenest, O Lord, and thereby teachest him out of thy law." {#Ps 94:12} Schola crucis, schola lucis. God's house of correction is his school of instruction. See my "Love Tokens," p. 145,146, &c.

And the man that getteth understanding.] Heb., That draweth out understanding, viz., de thesauro suo, "out of the good treasure of his heart," {#Mt 13:52} as that good scribe instructed to the kingdom of heaven. The Chaldee hath it, iabiang, scaturire facit, that hath so profited in spiritual understanding, that he can readily bring it forth to the benefit of others.

Ver. 14. For the merchandise of.] That is, The profit that is gotten by making use of it. Κερδανοντες ου κοπιωμεν, saith a father. Seldom is any man weary of making money. Sing a song of utile, and men will lend their ears to it. The Jassians in Strabo, delighted with the music of an excellent harper, ran all away, as soon as the market bell rang, save a deaf old man, and he too, as soon as he heard of it. Now "godliness is profitable to all things," as having the promises of both lives; and the promises are "exceeding great and precious" things, {#2Pe 1:4} even "the unsearchable riches of Christ," {#Eph 3:8} who brings "gold tried in the fire," and that which is better. {#Re 3:18} For one grain of grace is far beyond all the gold of Ophir, and one hour's enjoyment of God to be much preferred before all the king of Spain's annual tribute. What is gold and silver, but the guts and garbage of the earth? And what is all the pomp and glory of the world, but dung and dogs' meat? {#Php 3:7,8} I esteem them no better (surely) that I may win Christ, said St Paul, that great trader both by land and sea. {#2Co 11:23,25,26} Let me be put to any pain, to any loss, tantundem ut Iesum nanciscar; so I may get my Jesus, said Ignatius. This gold we cannot buy too dear, whatever we pay for it. The wise merchant sells all to purchase it. {#Mt 13:44,46} Every true son of Jacob will be content to part with his broth for the birthright, to purchase spiritual favours with earthly. "The Lord that made heaven and earth, bless thee out of Sion"; {#Ps 134:3} which is to say, the blessings that come out of Sion are choice, peculiar, precious, even above any that come out of heaven and earth. When God is shaking all nations, {#Hag 2:7} the saints shall come with their desirable things (so some read the words). Colligent omnes thesauros suos, saith Calvin, They shall gather up all their treasures.

Ver. 15. She is more precious than rubies.] Or, Pearls, which of old were most highly esteemed, {a} as Pliny testifieth; nostra etate multis aliis gemmis post ponunter. Today, there are many other gems of greater price, as rubies, carbuncles, &c. Cardan {b} tells us that every precious stone hath an egregious virtue in it; every spiritual grace hath, we are sure, and is of more value than large domains, stately buildings, and ten thousand rivers of oil. If the mountains were pearl, the huge rocks rubies, and the whole globe a shining chrysolite, yet all this were not to be named in the same day with wisdom.

Ver. 16. Length of days is in her right hand.] This is the same in effect with #Pr 3:2. {See Trapp on "Pr 3:2"} Ου μονον ταυτα αλλα και περι ταυτων, said Socrates. The same again may be profitably said over; Solomon wanted neither matter, nor words, and yet he repeats and inculcates (for his readers' greater benefit) the same matter in the self same words almost. Nunquam satis dicitur quod nunquam satis discitur. {a} As to the text, health and long life is that which every man covets. Now, Non domus et fundus, non aeris acervus et auri aegroto domini deducant corpore febres. {b} "Riches avail not in the day of wrath, but righteousness delivereth from death." {#Pr 10:2} The honourable garter cannot cure the gout, nor the chair of state ease the colic, nor a crown remove the headache. Nugas, the Scythian, despising the rich presents and ornaments that were sent unto him by Michael Paleologus, Emperor of Constantinople, asked whether those things could drive away calamities, diseases, or death? {c} No; this they cannot do; as Henry Beaufort (that rich and wretched Cardinal) found by woeful experience in the reign of Henry the Sixth. For perceiving death at hand, he asked, Wherefore should I die, being so rich? If the whole realm would save my life, I am able either by policy to get it, or by riches to buy it. Fie! quoth he, will not death be hired? will money do nothing? {d} No; money in this case bears no mastery. Death (as the jealous man) will not regard any ransom, neither will he rest content though thou offer many gifts. {#Pr 6:35}

And in her left hand riches and honour.] Bonus Deus Constantinum Magnum tantis terrenis implevit muneribus, quanta optare nullus auderet. {e} The good Lord heaped so much outward happiness upon his faithful servant, Constantine the Great, as no man ever durst to have wished more, saith Augustine. If God give his people a crown, he will not deny them a crust. If they have bona throni, the good things of a throne, they shall be sure of bona scabelli, the good things of the footstool.

Ver. 17. Her ways are ways of pleasantness.] Such as were those of Adam before his fall, strewed with roses, paved with peace. Some degree of comfort follows every good action, as heat accompanies fire, as beams and influences issue from the sun. Which is so true, that very heathens, upon the discharge of a good conscience, have found comfort and peace answerable. This, saith one, is praemium ante praemium, a fore reward of well doing. "In doing thereof (not only for doing thereof) there is great reward." {#Ps 19:11}

Ver. 18. She is a tree of life.] A tree that giveth life and quickeneth: or, as one interprets it, a most assured sign of eternal life; whatsoever it is, he alludeth, no doubt, to the tree mentioned in #Ge 2:9 3:22. {See Trapp "Ge 2:2:9"} {See Trapp "Ge 3:22"}

And happy is every one that retaineth her.] Though despised by the world as a poor sneak, a contemptible captive. Ver. 19. The Lord by wisdom.] By his essential Wisdom, by his Eternal Word; {#Pr 8:30} the Lord Christ, who is "the beginning of the creation of God." {#Re 3:14} {See Trapp on "Joh 1:3"} "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth," {#Ge 1:1} that is, in his Son, as some interpret it. {#Heb 1:2 Col 1:16} This interpretation is grounded upon the Jerusalem Targum, who translates that, {#Ge 1:1} bechochmatha, in sapientia. So doth Augustine and others; and for confirmation they bring #Joh 8:25; but that is a mistake, as Beza shows in his Annotations there.

He established the heavens.] Heb., He aptly and trimly framed them in that comeliness that we now see. "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handiwork." {#Ps 19:1} Upon the third heaven he hath bestowed a great deal of curious skill and cunning workmanship. {τεχνησις, #Heb 11:10} But of that no natural knowledge can be had, nor any help by human arts, geometry, optics, &c.; for it neither is aspectable nor moveable. The visible heavens are (for the many varieties therein, and the wonderful motion of the several spheres) fitly called Κοσμος. {a} The original word here used, ratione coniugationis plus aliquid significat quam paravit, vel stabilivit. "Conen," Mirum in modum disposuit; he hath cunningly contrived. And hence haply our ancient English word koning, and by contraction king, coming of the verb con, which signifies (as Becanus noteth) possum, scio, audeo -I can, I know, I dare do it.

Ver. 20. The depths are broken up,] viz., Those great channels and hollow places made in the earth, to hold the waters, {#Ge 1:9} that they may not overflow the earth; and this the very philosophers are forced to confess to be a work of divine wisdom. Others by "depths" here understand fountains and floods breaking out, and as it were flowing from the nethermost parts of the earth, even as though the earth did cleave itself in sunder, to give them passage.

And the clouds drop down the dew.] Clouds, the bottles of rain and dew, are vessels as thin as the liquor that is contained in them; there they hang, move, though weighty with their burden. How they are upheld, and why they fall here and now, we know not, and wonder.

Ver. 21. Let not them depart.] Ne effluent haec ab oculis tuis, saith the Vulgate. Ne haec a tuis oculis deflectant in obliquum huc et illuc; so Mercer. Let the eyes look right on, σκοπουντων, {#Pr 4:25} look wistfully and intently on these great works of God, and his wisdom therein set forth and conspicuous, as on a theatre. Eye these things, as the steersman doth the compass, as the archer doth the mark he shoots at, {#2Co 4:18} or as the passenger doth his way, which he finds hard to hit, and dangerous to miss. Yea, let them be the delight of thine eyes, with the sight whereof thou canst not be sated or surfeited.

Ver. 22. So shall they be life unto thy soul.] For "by these men live, and this is the spirit of my life," saith Hezekiah; {#Isa 38:16} even what God hath spoken and done. {#Pr 3:15} A godly man differs from a wicked, as much as a living man from a dead carcass. The wicked are stark dead, and stone cold. The saints also want heat sometimes, but they are soon made hot again; because there is life of soul in them, as charcoal is quickly kindled, because it hath been in the fire.

And grace to thy neck.] Or, To thy throat; that is, to thy words uttered through the throat. {See Trapp on "Pr 1:9"}

Ver. 23. Then shalt thou walk in thy way safely.] Fiducialiter, saith the Vulgate—confidently and securely. Every malvoy shall be a salvoy to thee: thou shalt ever go under a double guard, the "peace of God" within thee, {#Php 4:7} and the "power of God" without thee. {#1Pe 1:5} "Thou shalt be in league also with the stones of the field, and the beasts of the field shall be at peace with thee." {#Job 5:23}

Ver. 24. Thou shalt not be afraid.] See this exemplified in David; {#Ps 3:5,6} Peter; {#Ac 12:6} and Mr Rogers, our late protomartyr, who when he was warned suddenly to prepare for the fire, he then being sound asleep in the prison, scarce with much shaking could be awaked. {a}

Thy sleep shall be sweet.] As knowing that God—thy keeper {#Ps 121:4,5} -doth wake and watch for thee. {#Ps 121:1} Wicked men's sleep is often troublesome, through the workings of their evil consciences; as our Richard III, after the murder of his own two innocent nephews, had fearful dreams, insomuch that he did often leap out of his bed in the dark, and catching his sword, which always lay naked stuck by his side, he would go distractedly about the chamber, everywhere seeking to find out the cause of his own occasioned disquiet. {b} So Charles IX of France, after the bloody massacre of Paris, was so inwardly terrified, that he was every night laid to sleep, and wakened again with a set of musicians. {c}

{b} Daniel's Hist. of Eng.

Ver. 25. Be not afraid.] Or, Thou shalt not be afraid. Nec si fractus illabatur orbis. Sudden evils do commonly dispirit people, and expectorate their abilities; they be at their wits' end. But let a David "walk through the vale of the shadow of death," that is, the darkest side of death—death in its most horrid and hideous representations, he will not fear, no though he should go back again the same way; "for thou art with me," saith he. {#Ps 23:4} He had God by the hand, and so long he feared no colours.

Ver. 26. For the Lord shall be thy confidence.] The Hebrew word here used signifies both unconstant folly, {#Ec 7:28} and constant hope. {#Ps 77:7} And Rabbi Solomon saith, that he had found in the Jerusalem Targum this text, thus censured and expounded, The Lord shall be with thee in thy folly; that is, he shall turn to thy good, even thine inconsiderate and rash enterprizes, if thou addict thyself to the study of wisdom.

And shall keep thy foot from being taken.] In the snare which thou wast near unto, by choosing rather to be held temerarious than timorous.

Ver. 27. Withhold not good from them to whom it is due.] Either by the law of equity, or of charity. For there is a debt of love {#Ro 13:8} that we must ever be owing and ever pay. And as we say of thanks, gratiae habendae et agendae, thanks must be given, and held as still due; so must this debt of love. Quicquid clerici habent, pauperum est, saith Jerome. It is true, in a sense, of others, as well as of ministers. The poor (God's poor) are the owners of that we have; we are but stewards and dispensers of God's bounty to his necessitous servants. Now if our receipts be found great, and our layings out small, God will cast such bills back in our faces, and turn us out of our stewardship. They are fools that fear to lose their wealth by giving, but fear not to lose themselves by keeping it.

When it is in the power of thy hand.] When thou hast opportunity and ability; for we must not stretch beyond the staple; that were to mar all; neither, when "a price is put into our hands," {#Pr 17:16} may we play the fools and neglect it. But wheresoever God sets us up an altar, we must be ready with our sacrifice of alms, "for with such sacrifices God is well pleased." {#Heb 13:16} See my "Common Place of Alms."

Ver. 28. Tomorrow.] Bis dat qui cito dat. While ye have time, do good to all; your beneficence must be prompt and present; who can tell what a day may bring forth? "Ethiopia shall soon stretch out her hands unto God." {#Ps 68:32} Currere faciet manus suas ad Dominum, to note their speediness in giving, saith one. {a} Tyrus also, when converted once, makes haste to feed and clothe God's poor saints with the money and merchandise she was wont to heap up and hoard. {#Isa 23:18}

{a} Weems.

Ver. 29. Devise not evil against thy neighbour.] Heb. Plow not evil —i. e., plot not. One of the Rabbis renders it, suspect not; shun "evil surmises." {#ITi 6:4} Most unkindnesses among friends grow upon mistakes, misprisions; charity is candid, and takes everything in the best sense, and by the right handle. {#ICo 13}

Ver. 30. Strive not with a man without cause.] If men's hurts were not bigger than their suits, there would not be half so many. It is a fault to go lightly to law, but especially with such as have done thee no harm. Zuinglius renders this text thus: Ne temere litem cum quoquam suscipias, quominus superior factus, malum tibi retribuatur; others, sim mendax, nisi rependat tibi malum. How Cardinal Wolsey, when he became Lord Chancellor, paid home Sir James Paulet, for setting him by the heels, when as yet he was but a poor schoolmaster, is well known. {a} How much better Archbishop Cranmer, of whom the proverb passed, "Do my Lord of Canterbury a shrewd turn, and you shall have him your friend for ever after." And Robert Holgat, Archbishop of York, of whom it is recorded {b} that in the year 1541 he obtained a benefice in a place where one Sir Francis Askew of Lincolnshire dwelt, by whom he was much troubled and molested in law. Upon occasion of these suits, he was fain to repair to London, where being, he found means to become the king's chaplain, and by him was made Archbishop of York, and President of the King's Council for the North. The knight before mentioned happened to have a suit before the council there, and doubted much of hard measure from the Archbishop, whose adversary he had been. But he, remembering the rule of the gospel, to do good for evil, yielded him all favour that with justice he might, saying afterwards merrily to his friends, he was much beholden to Sir Francis Askew, for that had not he been, he must have lived a hedge priest {c} the days of his life. {d}

Ver. 31. Envy not the oppressor.] That grows rich by unjust quarrels and vexatious lawsuits. It is not for nothing surely that our Saviour, {#Lu 12:15} after "who made me a judge?" adds, "Take heed and beware of covetousness." Implying that most men go to law with a covetous or a vindictive mind; whereas if they will needs wage law, they should do it as Charles the French King made war with our Henry VII, "more desiring peace, than profit or victory." It should be with men in this case as it was with Augustine and Jerome in their disputations: it was no matter who gained the day, they would both win by understanding their errors.

Ver. 32. For the froward is abomination.] The vilitigator, the wrangler, the common barreter, though he may prosper in the world, yet God cannot abide him; his money will perish with him. He will one day say to his cursed heaps of evil gotten goods, as Charles the Fifth, emperor, in his old age did of his victories, trophies, riches, honours; he cursed them all, saying, Abite hinc, abite longe; Avaunt, be packing, hence, away. {a}

But his secret.] They shall be of his cabinet council, that choose rather to lie in the dust than to rise by evil arts, by wicked principles; such were Joseph, Macaiiah, Daniel, &c.

{a} Phil. Morn.

Ver. 33. In the house of the wicked.] His wife, children, family, possessions, all are accursed; his fine clothes have the plague in them: or his house, which is his castle, the flying roll of curses—that is, ten yards long and five yards broad—shall remain in the midst of it, and consume it. {#Zec 5:4}

But he blesseth the habitation of the just.] "Kabvenaki, " casam exponit et tuguriolum egregio sensu, saith Mercer. The poor little cottage or tenement of the righteous, there is a blessing in it, there is contented godliness, which is greatest gain; the blessing of God which maketh rich. Ενθα και οι θεοι, Here are the gods—could the philosopher say of his poor habitation, meaning his heathenish household gods—whatever else is wanting to me. How much more may a saint say so of his God, who will "awake for him, and make the habitation of his righteousness prosperous!" {#Job 8:6}

Ver. 34. Surely he scorneth the scorners.] Those proud haughty scorners {#Pr 21:24 1Pe 5:5} who jeer at this doctrine, and at those who believe it. Surely God scorneth these scorners, for he loves to retaliate; he that sitteth in heaven laughs a good {a} at them; {#Ps 2:4} he makes them also, in his just judgment, a derision to others, {b} and punisheth them with the common hatred of all: contempt being a thing that man's nature is most impatient of, and in carnal reason, tallying of injuries is but justice.

But he giveth grace to the lowly.] Though oppressed by scorners, yet shall they be no losers, for "God will give grace, and he will give glory"—grace and glory! what things be these?—"and no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly." {#Ps 84:11} Humility is both a grace and a vessel to receive grace. And as he that goeth into a pond or river to take up water puts the mouth of his vessel downward, and so takes it up; in like sort, he that looks for any good from God must put his mouth in the dust, and cry out, Lord, I am not worthy, &c. Non sum dignus, at sum indigenus, "I am poor and needy, make haste unto me, O God." {#Ps 70:5}

Ver. 35. The wise shall inherit glory.] Not have it only, but inherit it — Hoc est, proprio, perfecto et perpetuo iure possidebunt, as Pellican; they shall have it as their proper, perfect, and perpetual right.

But shame shall be the promotion of fools.] A fair promotion they come to, but good enough for them, unless they were better. If they attain to high places and preferments, these prove but as high gibbets to bring them to more disgrace in this world, and torment in the next. Some there be that read the text thus: "But shame taketh away the foolish"; that is, it carrieth both them and their hope away in a pinch of time, or twinkling of the eye, as it were.

Ver. 1. Hear, ye children.] Audite senem, iuvenes, quem iuvenem senes audierunt: Hear me, now an old man, O ye youths, whom old men once gladly heard, when I was but a youth. With this speech Augustus pacified his mutinous army:—

*Ecce meos, utinamque oculos in pectore posses
Inserere, et patrias intus deprendere curas.*” ^{a}

“Behold my looks; and oh that thou couldst see Mine anxious thoughts and careful heart for thee!”

^{a} Sol Phaetonti, apud Ovid. Met.

Ver. 2. For I give you good doctrine.] The common cry is, "Who will show us any good?" and every man will lend both ears to a good bargain. The doctrine here delivered is good every way, whether you look to the author, matter, or effect of it, and is therefore worthy of all men to be received, as the Hebrew word ^{a} here used for doctrine importeth. The Vulgate renders it, Donum bonum tribuam vobis: I will give you a good gift, even that good part that shall never be taken from you.

Ver. 3. For I was my father's son,] q.d., I that am now so famous for wisdom, was once as wise as a wild ass's colt. But I had the happiness to be taught and tutored by the best and wisest man in his generation, and therefore you should the rather regard my doctrine. Plato praised God that he was pupil to Socrates, Bucholcerus that he was bred under Melanchthon, Mr Whately under Mr Dod's ministry, and I under Mr Ballam's, at Evesham. Holy David was far beyond any of these, as being divinely inspired, and rarely qualified. Such a heart so well headed, and such a head better hearted, was not to be found among the sons of men, for he was "a man after God's own heart." His counsel to his son therefore must needs be very precious and ponderous. See some of it, for a taste, in #1Ch 28:9,10.

Tender and only beloved.] Filius a φιλος. The Greeks commonly called their children φιλατα, the Latin chari, darlings, as he in Plautus, Domi domitus fui usque cum charis meis. {a} I was hardly handled at home, together with my dear children.

In the sight of my mother.] Who had other children; {#1Ch 3:5} but Solomon she loved best, because he had most grace. And as a special fruit of her love, she gave him excellent counsel in her "Lemuel's lesson." {#Pr 31} His fall was therefore the more blameworthy, because he had been so piously educated.

Ver. 4. He taught me also.] As Cato taught his own children, and took it for no disgrace, though so great a man. "Nurture" is as necessary for children as nourishment, {#Eph 6:4} which they that neglect to bestow upon them. are peremptores potius quam parentes -not parents, but parricides. One cause of Julian's apostasy was his two heathenish tutors, Libanius and Jamblicus, from whom he drank in great profaneness. Doubtless David had Nathan the prophet, and the best he could get, to breed up his son in the best things, but yet so as himself had a main stroke in the business.

And said unto me.] Jacobus Valentinus, {a} and some others, grounded an opinion from these words, that Solomon received this whole book of Proverbs following from his father David; but that is no way likely. The substance of his father's doctrine he briefly sets forth in this and the five following verses, and then proceeds in his own words.

Retain my words.] As the good stomach doth food; as the good earth doth seed; that is, bene occatum, et occultatum, saith one.

{a} Praefat. in Cant. Cantic.

Ver. 5. Get wisdom, get understanding.] Compara sapientiam, compara intelligentiam -so Chrysostom. Compare saeculares, compare vobis biblia, animae pharmaca. Get you Bibles by all means, whatever they cost you. You may better want bread, light, &c., than the knowledge of the Scriptures. Augustine makes mention of some that neglected the means of knowledge, because knowledge puffeth up; and so would be ignorant, that they might be humble, and want knowledge, that they might want pride. This was to do as that foolish philosopher that plucked out his eyes to avoid the danger of uncleanness; or as the silly friar, to whom Sir Thomas Moore wrote thus, —

Litera: Nam nota est litera nulla tibi. ”

But men must get knowledge, and lest it puff them up, swelling them beyond measure, they must get humility laid on as a weight to keep them down.

Forget it not.] For so much a man learns as he remembers. The promise also of salvation is limited to the condition of "keeping in memory what we have received." {#1Co 15:2}

Ver. 6. Forsake her not, &c.] Wisdom is her own reward. If she forsake us, it is because the desertion is first on our part. But she cannot but be "justified of her own true children." {#Mt 11:19} Falling stars were never but meteors; temporaries were never Christians indeed. What wonder though some hold falling from grace, since they mistake common grace for true grace? Hence Bellarmine saith, That which is true grace, veritate essentiae, only may be lost, not that that is true veritate firmae soliditatis: which latter being rightly understood, may be called special, as the other common grace.

Love her, and she shall keep thee,] viz., From recidivation and utter apostasy, caused by the overflow of iniquity. {#Mt 24:12 2Th 2:10,11} This to prevent, let knowledge and affection, like two individual twins, grow up together, and mutually transfuse spiritual vigour into each other.

Ver. 7. Wisdom is the principal thing.] Say the world what it will, a drachma of this wisdom is worth a pound of wit. Let others censure with the scribes, let me wonder with the multitude. And for wealth he is rich, not that hath the world, but that can contemn it. As for honour, virtue is a thousand escutcheons. And that is the true nobility, whereof God is the top of the kin, religion the root. For without this, well may a man be notable or notorious, but truly noble he can never be. {a} Lastly, for learning, the Greeks express learned and good by one word, {b} as if they were not learned that are not good; and the Scripture calls a wicked man generally a fool.

With all thy getting get.] With any pains; for any price. This gold cannot be bought too dear. Make religion thy business, other things do by the by; as Aristotle studied philosophy in the morning, that was his εργον; but eloquence in the afternoon, that was his παρεργον. Or as Caesar, swimming through the waters to escape his enemies, carried his books in his hand above the waters, but lost his robe. {c}

Ver. 8. Exalt her, and she shall.] Have a high and honourable esteem of her and her children. Rabbi Solomon, out of the Talmudists, renders it, Search for her, minutatim in ea singula consectans, do it diligently, as holding every parcel of her precious, as men do the very filings of gold.

Ver. 9. A crown of glory.] The psalmist shows by prophesying {#Ps 138:4,5 119:72} that even kings, coming to taste the excellence of the comforts of godliness, and to feel the power of God's word, should sing for joy of heart, and greatly acknowledge the excelling glory of God and godliness.

Ver. 10. Hear, O my son, and receive.] How slippery an age youth is, and how easily it slips into sinful courses and companies the wise man well knew; and therefore ceaseth not to inculcate and repeat the same thing over and over. Liquidae sunt puerorum memoriae.

Ver. 11. I have led thee in right paths.] Impli ambulat in circuitu, The wicked walk the round. So doth the devil, that great peripatetic. {#Job 1:6-12} "How long wilt thou go about, O thou backsliding daughter?" {#Jer 31:22} "How long wilt thou run retrograde, or turn aside unto crooked ways?" {#Psa 125:5} "The ways of the Lord are right, and the righteous shall walk in them; but the transgressors shall fall therein." {#Ho 14:9}

Ver. 12. And when thou runnest.] Having a good mixture of zeal and knowledge; so that thy zeal doth quicken thy knowledge, and thy knowledge guide thy zeal. For that the soul be without knowledge, it is not good; "And he that (so) hasteth with his feet (being indiscreetly zealous) sinneth." {#Psa 19:2}

Thou shalt not stumble.] Or if thou do, thou shalt recover thy stumbling, and so get ground. But say thou do so stumble as to fall; in falling forwards is nothing so much danger as backward. So he that is earnest in good, though he may carry some things indiscreetly, yet is far better than an apostate.

Ver. 13. Take fast hold of instruction.] Nam magnum certamen sustines adversus haereticas et epicureos, saith a Jewish doctor upon this text: Heretics and epicures will seek to wring it from thee, by wretch and wile. Therefore "hold fast the faithful word, as thou hast been taught." {#Tit 1:9} Hold it as with tooth and nail against those gainsayers that would snatch it from thee. For "there are many unruly and vain talkers," and so there are many loose and lewd walkers too, that would bereave thee of the benefit of what thou hast learned; but "hold fast that which is good." Let it not go, Ne languescas; surcease not, slake not, give not over striving against sin and sinners.

Ver. 14. Enter not into the path of the wicked.] Qui male vivunt, et peius credunt, saith one, which live ill, and believe worse. Qui aequo animo malis immiscetur, malus est, saith another. {a} He that is well content to keep company with those that are naught, is himself naught. The river Dee, in Merionethshire, running through Pimblemeer, remains entire, and mingles not her streams with the waters of the lake. See #1Co 5:9-11.

And go not in the way.] Ne tibi placeat via malorum; so the Vulgate. Think not thyself happy in their company, applaud not their way. Verbum eundi significationem felicitatis habet in multis linguis. {b} The Hebrew word to go signifies also to be happy; and Solomon haply here would take it in both senses.

{a} Fuller's Holy State, 162.

{b} אָר, incessit, felicitavit. Ita συμβαινει et ενοδοσθαι
Graecis. Il va bien, Gallicis.

Ver. 15. Avoid it, pass not by it.] As ye would not come near a carrion carcass; as the seaman shuns sands and shelves (the apostle's simile, #2Th 3:6); as ye would be loath to come near those that have the plague sore running upon them. Evil men endanger good men, as weeds the grain, as bad humours the blood, or as an infected house the neighbourhood. Nemo errat sibi ipsi, sed dementiara spargit in proximos, {a} Entireness with wicked consorts is one of the strongest chains of hell, and binds us to a participation both of sin and punishment. Hence so many words about it here: Abundans cautela, &c. This heap of words is not without great use and emphasis; there is earnestness, and not looseness in this repetition.

{a} Seneca.

Ver. 16. For they sleep not.] So much are they set upon it. Or as empty stomachs can hardly sleep, so neither can graceless persons rest till gorged and glutted with the sweetmeats of sin, with the murdering morsels of mischief. The devil, their taskmaster, will not allow them time to sleep; which is very hard bondage. "They have eyes full of adultery, and that cannot cease to sin." {#2Pe 2:14}

Unless they cause some to fall.] Protagoras, as Plato relates, boasted of this, that whereas he had lived threescore years, forty of them he had spent in corrupting of young men that conversed with him.

Ver. 17. For they eat the bread of wickedness.] As Tartarians feed upon dead carcasses of horses, asses, cats, dogs, yea, when they stink, and are full of maggots, and hold them as dainty as we do venison. {a} As spiders feed upon aconite; {b} as Mithridates, and the maid in Pliny, upon spiders; or as the Turkish galley slaves upon opium—they will eat near an ounce at a time, as if it were bread (the tithe whereof would kill him that is not accustomed to it), and can neither sleep nor live without it.

{a} Petcham's Valley of Vanity.

{b} A genus of poisonous plants, belonging to the family Ranunculaceae. esp. the common European species Aconitum Napellus, called also Monk's-hood and Wolf's-bane. Also applied loosely or erroneously to other poisonous plants.

Ver. 18. But the path of the just is as the shining light.] He sets forth betime in the morning, and travels to meet the day. He proceeds from virtue to virtue, till at length he shine as the sun in his strength. {#Mt 13:43}

Ver. 19. Is as darkness.] That little light they had by nature they imprison, {κατεχοντων, #Ro 1:18} and are justly deprived of. And as for those sparkles of the light of joy and comfort that hypocrites have, it is but as a flash of lightning which is followed with a thunder clap, or like the light smitten out of the flint; (1.) they cannot warm themselves by it, nor see to direct their ways; (2.) it will quickly go out; (3.) and after that they must "lie down in sorrow." {#Isa 50:11}

They know not at what they stumble.] They stumble sometimes at Christ himself, and at his word, "being disobedient, whereunto also they were appointed." {#1Pe 2:8} A shrewd sign of reprobation. The Vulgate renders it, Ne sciunt ubi corruant. They know not how soon they may drop into hell, which even gapes for them. {#Isa 14:9}

Ver. 20. My son, attend to my words.] Still he calls for attention, as knowing our dulness and fickle headedness. It fared with the prophet Zechariah as with a drowsy person, who, though awaked and set to work, is ready to sleep at it. {#Zec 4:1} It fares with many of us as with little children, who, though saying their lessons, yet must needs look off to see the feather that flies by them.

Ver. 21. Let them not depart.] {See Trapp on "Pr 3:21"}

In the midst of thy heart.] As in a safe repository, a ready repertory.

Ver. 22. For they are life.] {See Trapp on "Pr 3:22"} {See Trapp on "Pr 3:16"}

And health unto all their flesh] Sin is the cause of sickness. {#1Co 11:20} "Sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee." {#Joh 5:14} But "the joy of the Lord is a man's strength"; {#Ne 8:10} and such "a merry heart doeth good, like a medicine." {#Pr 17:22} As sin is a universal sickness, {#Isa 1:5,6} like those diseases wherein physicians say are corruptio totius substantiae, a corruption of the whole substance, as the heretic, &c.; so grace is a Catholicon, a general cure, like the herb Panace, whdch is said to be good for all diseases; whence also, saith Pliny, it hath its name. {a}

Ver. 23. Keep thy heart.] Filth free, as much as may be; keep a constant counterguard against all inroads made by flesh, world, and devil. Keep the heart always supple and soluble, for else thou canst not be long in spiritual health. Quod sanitas in corpore, id sanctitas in corde. Keep it ever well in tune, and then all shall go well. If in a viol I find the treble string in tune, I make no question of the bass; that goes not out so easily. So here.

For out of it are the issues of life.] That is, as of natural, so of spiritual actions, Hinc fons boni et peccandi origo, saith Jerome. It is the fountain; {#Mt 15:19} the root; {#Mt 7:17,18} the treasury or storehouse; {#Lu 6:49} the primum mobile; the great wheel; the Pharos that commands the haven; the chief monarch in this Isle of Man that gives laws to all the members. {#Ro 7} Keep it therefore with all custody, or with all caution; or if the devil cast poison into it (as he will), cleanse it after. It is in vain to purge the stream, where the spring is defiled; but if the spring be clear, the streans will soon clear themselves.

Ver. 24. Put away from thee a froward mouth.] To the keeping of the heart, a careful watching over the mouth, eyes, feet, &c., doth much conduce. For these outward parts abused, as they receive defilement from the heart, so they reflect defilement also upon it. They stain the soul, and dispose it to further evil. Christ had a pure heart; therefore his eyes were not bewitched, nor his ears enchanted, "neither was there any guile found in his mouth."

And perverse lips put far from thee.] Because it is a duty of no small difficulty, {#Jas 3:2-12} therefore he redoubleth his exhortation. "The words of the wise are as nails fastened by the masters of assemblies." {#Ec 12:11}

Ver. 25. Let thine eyes look right on.] E regione, vel in rectum. Let them be fixed upon right objects. Get that stoic eye of our Saviour; get a patriarch's eye; be well skilled in Moses's optics; {#Heb 11:27} have oculum in metam, which was Ludovicus Vives's motto. Do as mariners that have their eye on the star, their hand on the stern. A man may not look intently upon that which he may not love. The disciples were set agog by beholding the beauty of the temple. {#Mt 24:2} If therefore thine eye offend thee, or cause thee to offend, pull it out of the old Adam, and set it in the new man. If thou use it not well, thou wilt wish that thou hadst pulled it out indeed, as Democritus did.

Ver. 26. Ponder the path of thy feet.] Viz., By the weights of the word. Look to thine affections, for by these maids Satan woos the mistress. Take heed where you set gunpowder, since fire is in your hearts. Augustine thanks God that his heart and the temptation did not meet together. Walk accurately, tread right, ακριβως ορθοδοειν; {#Ga 2:14} step warily; lift not up one foot till you find firm footing for another, as those in #Ps 35:6. The way of this world is like the vale of Siddim, slimy and slippery: Cavete. Beware, We have an Eve, a tempter (each one) within us, our own flesh, saith Bernard. And Nemo sibi de suo palpet: quisque sibi Satan est, saith another father. We have enough to watch for our halting; the devil also casts his club at us that we "may stumble and fall, and be broken, and snared, and taken." {#Isa 8:15}

Ver. 27. Turn not to the right.] Keep the king's highway; keep within God's precincts, and ye keep under his protection. The heathen orator {a} could say, A recta conscientia ne latum quidem unguem discedendum; A man may not depart a hair's breadth all his life long from the dictates of a good conscience.

Remove thy foot from evil.] Bestir thee no otherwise than if thou hadst trod upon a snake. "Abhor that which is evil"; {#Ro 12:9} "abstain from all appearance," all shows and shadows of it. {#1Th 5:22} Run from the occasions of it; "come not near the doors of her house." {#Pr 5:8}

Ver. 1. My son, attend unto my wisdom.] Aristotle {a} could say that young men are but cross and crooked hearers of moral philosophy, and have much need to be stirred up to diligent attendance. Fornication is by many of them held a peccadillo; and Aristotle spareth not to confess the disability of moral wisdom to rectify the intemperance of nature; which also he made good in his practice, for he used a common strumpet to satisfy his lust.

{a} Ethic., lib. vii. cap. 3,4.

Ver. 2. That thou mayest regard discretion.] Or, That thou mayest keep in thy thoughts, as Job did, {#Job 31:1} "Why then should I think upon a maid?" "Out of the hearts of men proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications," &c., saith our Saviour. {#Mr 7:21} Many men's hearts are no better than stews and brothel houses, by reason of base and beastly thoughts and lusts that muster and swarm there, like the flies of Egypt. "There is that leviathan, and there are creeping things innumerable." {#Ps 104:25,26} Yea, the hypocrite, who outwardly abstains from gross sins, yet inwardly consenteth with the thief, and partaketh with the adulterer, {#Ps 50:18,19} that is, in his heart and fancy, supposing himself with them, and desiring to do what they do. This is mental adultery, this is contemplative wickedness. So it is also to recall former filthiness with delight. She multiplied her whoredoms in calling to remembrance the days of her youth, wherein she had played the harlot. {#Eze 23:21} Surely as a man may die of an inward bleeding, so may he be damned for these inward boilings of lust and concupiscence, if not bewailed and mortified. {#Jer 4:14} "The thoughts of the wicked are abominable to the Lord." {#Pr 15:26} To look and lust is to commit adultery. {#Mt 5:28} Therefore "desire not her beauty in thy heart." {#Pr 6:25}

And that thy lips may keep knowledge.] As Joseph did in answering his wanton mistress; {#Ge 39:7-9} as he in Augustine did, that replied to his minions, Ego sum -It is I, at ego non sum -but it is not I.

Ver. 3. For the lips of a strange woman drop.] Take heed therefore how thou exchange any words at all with her. But if thou be first set upon, as Joseph was by his mistress, and as Franciscus Junius {a} was by those impudent queans (harlots) at Lyons, in France (whither he was sent by his father for learning's sake), who night and day solicited him; then to keep thee from the bitter sweet lips of these enchantresses, "let thy lips keep knowledge"; answer them (as Joseph did) with "the words of truth and soberness"; {#Ac 26:25} with "gracious and wholesome words," {#1Ti 6:3} such as have a cooling and healing property in them; with Scripture language, which the devil and his agents cannot answer or away with. When, therefore, thou art tempted to this or any like sin, say No—I may not, I dare not; for it is forbidden in such a place, and again in such a place, "How then can I do this great wickedness, and sin against God?" {#Ge 39:9} "Lo this is the way, walk in it." Let thy lips keep knowledge, and it shall keep thee from the lips of a strange woman, though they drop as a honeycomb, and seem to have plenty of pleasure and sweetness in them.

Drop as a honeycomb.] But is like that honey spoken of by Pliny that had poison in it, as being sucked out of poisonous herbs and flowers. In the Cadiz voyage, at Alvelana, three miles from Lisbon, many of our English soldiers, under the Earl of Essex, perished by eating of honey, purposely left in the houses, and spiced with poison, as it was thought. {b} How much better is it to be preserved in brine than to rot in honey! to mortify lusts, than to enjoy them! {#Ro 8:13} Voluptatem vicisse voluptas est maxima, saith Cyprian, {c} nec ulla maior est victoria, quam ea, quae cupiditatibus refertur. There is no such pleasure as to have overcome an offered pleasure; neither is there any greater conquest than that which is gotten over a man's corruptions.

Ver. 4. But her end is bitter as wormwood.] The pleasure passeth, the sting remaineth; for in the froth of this filthy pleasure is bred that hell worm of guilt that never dieth. {a}

Laeta venire Venus, tristis abire solet.* ”

Diana of the Ephesians was so artificially portrayed, that she seemed to smile most pleasantly upon such as came into her temple, but to frown at those that went out. So doth sensual pleasure. Heus tu scholastiae, dulce et amarum gustulum carpis, &c., said the harlot to Apuleius; hark, scholar, it is but a bitter sweet that you are so fond of. {b} Plus aloes quam mellis habet; {c} knowest thou not that there will be bitterness in the end? The chroniclers {d} have observed of our Edward III that he had always fair weather at his passage into France, and foul upon his return. Such is the way of the harlot; the sin committed with her is as the poison of asps. When an asp stings a man, it doth first tickle him so as it makes him laugh, till the poison by little and little get to the heart, and then it pains him more than ever before it delighted him. See #Lu 6:25,16:25 Heb 12:15,16 Job 13:26 Ec 7:27,28.

Ver. 5. Her feet go down to death.] The Romans were wont to have their funerals at the gates of Venus's temple, to signify that lust was the harbinger and hastener of death, saith Plutarch. As for whores, they were of old shut out of the city, and forced to seek places among the graves. Hence they were called Maechae bustuariae. De scortis dictum inter busta prostrantibus, saith Turnebus. {a} {See Trapp on "Pr 2:18"}

Her steps take hold on hell.] Whither she is hastening, and hurrying with her all her stallions and paramours, {See Trapp on "Pr 2:18"} {See Trapp on "Pr 2:19"} and where, "by how much more deliciously they have lived, by so much more they shall have of sorrow and torment." {#Re 18:7}

{a} Lib. advers, xiii. 19.

Ver. 6. Lest thou shouldest ponder,] q.d., Lest thou shouldest persuade thyself that thou mayest embrace the bosom of a stranger, and yet lay hold upon the paths of life by repenting thee of thy folly—this was Solomon's error sometimes {#Ec 1:17 2:3} -thou art utterly deceived herein, for her ways are moveable, so that thou observest not whither she tendeth; she wanders here and there (and thou with her), yet not so wide as to miss hell; lo, that is the centre whereunto she is rolling, that is the rendezvous for all her associates in sin.

Ver. 7. O ye children.] See #Pr 4:1. Shechem, though at ripeness of age, yet is called a child. {#Ge 39:19} Neque distulit puer. And the young man, or the child, deferred not to do the thing. A child he is called, that is, a fool, quia non ratione sed affectu rapitur, saith an interpreter, {a} because not reason but lust overruled him. "As for thee, thou shalt be as one of the fools in Israel," said she to her libidinous {b} brother Amnon. {#1Sa 23:13}

{b} Of persons, their lives, actions, desires: Given to, full of, or characterized by lust or lewdness; lustful, lecherous, lewd.

Ver. 8. Remove thy way far from her.] The Jesuits boast (but believe them who will) that they can dally with the fairest women without danger. But he that would not be burnt must dread the fire; he that would not hear the bell, must not meddle with the rope.

“ Quid facies facies Veneris cum veneris ante?

Non sedeas, sed eas; ne pereas, per eas.”

"Chambering and wantonness," is a deed of darkness and dishonesty. {#Ro 13:13 Ex 23:7}

Come not nigh the doors.] Keep thee far from an evil matter, saith Moses. The plague (and worse) is at the harlot's house; stand off, απισπασο. {#1Ti 6:5} To venture upon the occasion of sin, and then to pray, "Lead us not into temptation," is all one, as to thrust thy finger into the fire, and then to pray that it may not be burnt. Was not he a wise man that would haunt taverns, theatres, and whore houses at London all day, but yet durst not go forth without prayer in the morning, and then would say at his departure, Now devil do thy worst? {a}

{a} Shepherd's Sincere Convert, 232.

Ver. 9. Lest thou give thine honour, / i.e., Whatsoever within thee, or without thee, may make thee honourable or esteemed, as the flower of thine age, the comeliness of thy body, the excellency of thy wit, thy possibility of preferment, that good opinion that the better sort had of thee, &c. How was David slighted by his own children and servants after he had thus sinned! Compare #1Sa 2:30 with #2Sa 12:10. Chastity is a man's honour. {a} {#1Th 4:4}

And their years, / i.e., According to some, Thy wealth that thou hast been many years in gathering; πλουτος quasi πολυετος.

To the cruel.] That is, To the harlot and her bastardly brood, whom thou must maintain. The Hebrews expound it of the devil. To the cruel—i.e., principi gehennae, saith Solomon; angelo morris, saith another; to the Prince of Hell, to this Angel of Death. Aczar, the Hebrew word, properly signifies, saith one, "the poison of the asp," {#De 32:33} which paineth not at first, but is deadly.

Ver. 10. Lest strangers be filled.] This sin is a purgatory to the purse, though a paradise to the desires. How soon had the prodigal {Ασωτος, #Lu 15:13, quasi ασωστος} wasted his portion when once he fell among harlots, those sordida poscinumia, those crumenimulgae. "Ask me never so much gift, and I will give it," said Shechem. {#Ge 34:12} "What pledge shall I give thee? and she said, Thy signet, thy bracelets," &c., {#Ge 37:18} and if she had asked more, she might have had it. "Ask what thou wilt, and it shall be given thee," said Herod to his dancing damsel; nay, he sware "to her that whatsoever she should ask, he would give it to her to the half of his kingdom," {#Mr 6:22,23} so strongly was he enchanted and bewitched with her tripping on the toe and wanton dancing. {a} This detestable sin is able to destroy kings, as Solomon's mother taught him. {#Pr 31:3} And surely Solomon by the many women that he kept, was so exhausted in his estate (for all his great riches) that he was forced to oppress his subjects with heavy taxes and tributes, which occasioned the revolt of ten tribes. The whore "lyeth in wait for a prey," {#Pr 23:28} and "by means of a whorish woman a man is brought to a morsel of bread" {#Pr 6:26} -to extreme beggary.

Ver. 11. And thou mourn at the last.] Heb., And thou roar; as being upon the rack of an evil conscience, and in the suburbs of hell, as it were: while "the just Lord" {#Zep 3:5} makes thee, even here, possess the sins of thy youth, and writes bitter things against thee. The word signifies, To roar as a lion, or as the sea, {a} or as the devil doth. For the devils believe and tremble, or roar. {#Jas 2:19} Grecians ascribe the original, ορρισουσι, to the roaring of the sea. {b}

When thy flesh and thy body.] By the word here rendered body, there are those who understand the radical humour, the natural moisture that maintains life, and is much impaired by this sensual sin. {c} Avicenna doubted not to say, that the emission of a little seed more than the body could well bear, was a great deal more hurtful than the loss of forty times so much blood. Gouts, palsies, epilepsies, &c., oft follow upon this sin: but the French disease is the natural fruit of it, such as will stick by men when their best friends forsake them. "Jezebel is cast into a bed, and they that commit adultery with her, into great tribulation." {#Re 2:20} The Popish libidinous {d} clergy are smitten with ulcers. {#Re 16:11} Their pope, Paul the Fourth, died ex nimio veneris usu, saith the historian, {e} by wasting his strength in filthy pleasure, as the flame consumeth the candle.

Ver. 12. And say, How have I hated, &c.] When cast out with the prodigal, and hath nothing left him but a diseased body, a distressed soul, then, all too late, he fills the air with doleful complaints of his former folly, and cries out, as he did, Totum vitae meae tempus perdidit, quia perdit vixi. {a} Oh, what a wretch, what a beast, what a maddened devil was I, so woefully to waste the fat and marrow of my dear and precious time, the flower of mine age, the strength of my body, the vigour of my spirits, the whole of mine estate, in sinful pleasures and sensual delights! Lo, here is a kind of repentance which, though late, yet, if it were true, would be accepted, {b} The mole, they say, begins to see when he dies, and not till then. Oculos incipit aperire moriendo, quos clausos habuit vivendo. {c} But it is a rare thing, and seldom seen, that any whoremonger doth truly repent. "One such man among a thousand have I found," saith Solomon—perhaps he meant himself—"but a woman among all those have I not found." {#Ec 7:28} And yet Scultetus tells us that Dr Speiser, minister of Ansborough, in Germany, preached there so powerfully, that the common harlots, there tolerated, left their filthy trade of life, and became very honest women. {d}

And my heart despised reproof] Experience shows that they that are once given up to this sin are more graceless, profane, and incorrigible than others, deriders and contemners of all good counsel, having lost even the very light of nature, and so set in their sin, and so wedded and wedged to their wicked ways, as that they cannot be removed but by an extraordinary touch from the hand of Heaven.

Ver. 13. Nor inclined mine ear.] I would not so much as hear them, nmch less obey their voice. Intus existens prohibet alienum. The songs of those syrens had so enchanted him, that it was past time of day to give him counsel. If you speak against his sweet sin, and dissuade him from that, he shrinks back into the shell, and lets his hood hearken. All that is of ‘Davy Dutton’s dream,’ as the proverb is, and therefore, Surdo fabulam, he will in nowise give ear to you.

Ver. 14. I was almost in all evil.] Abraham Ben Ezra reads it in the future tense, Brevi ero in omni malo, I shall shortly be in all evil; and so his repentance here appears to be poenitentia sera, Iscariotica, such as was that of Judas and of those popelings, {#Re 18:19} a desperate repentance, and not "toward God," {#Ac 20:24} not a repentance for sin, as it is offensivum Dei, et aversivum a Deo, an offence against God, and a turning away from him. Such a repentance in this man had been, as the Romans said of Pompey, {a} Εχθρου πατρος φιλτατον τεχνον, a fair and happy daughter of an ugly and odious mother—of his sin I mean, the sight whereof had sent him to Christ.

In the midst of the congregation.] That is, Openly, and before all men. And this he brings as an aggravation of his misery, that there were so many eye witnesses thereof. No unclean person can have any assurance that his sin shall always be kept secret, no, not in this life. The Lord hath oft brought such—sometimes by terror of conscience, sometimes by frenzy—to that pass, that themselves have been the blazers and proclaimers of their own secret filthiness. Yea, observe this, saith one, {b} in them that are the most cunning in this sin, that, though nobody peradventure can convince them evidently of the fact, yet everybody, through the just judgment of God, condemns them we for it. As the Lord seeth their secret villanies, even so oftentimes he testifieth agaiust them, accordins to that which he threateneth, "I will be a swift witness against the adulterers." {#Mal 3:5}

Ver. 15. Drink waters out of thine own cistern.] After other preservatives from fornication, as not to think of or speak with the harlot, not to come near the doors of her house, &c., but to consider the many mischiefs that follow upon it—a diseased body, a damned soul, a poor purse, &c.—here the wise man prescribeth wedlock as a remedy properly ordained by God for that end. {#1Co 7:2,9} And because not the having of a wife, but the loving of her keeps a man honest; therefore it follows, {#Pr 5:19} "Let her be as the loving hind," &c.

And running waters.] Heathen writers also set forth a wife by waters: as Hesiod {a} bids men not to pass over a running water without prayers to the gods—that is, not to render unto their wives due benevolence till they have sought God, as Johannes Grammaticus interprets it. A pious precept: marriage, as well as food, must be sanctified by the word and prayer, and God be called in to bless this physic to the soul. Lust makes the heart hot and thirsty: God therefore sends men to this well, to this cistern. Compare #Isa 65:1. The Hebrews call a woman נקבולת, i.e., perforata {#Ge 1:27}

Ver. 16. Let thy fountains be dispersed.] "Thy fountains," that is, thy children. Let thine end in marrying be, that thou mayest have a numerous offspring, that may be as an infantry to the kingdom of heaven. Lawful marriage is usually blessed with many children; and the contrary. {#Ho 4:10} Erasmus tells of one Combe, a young woman in Euboea, that being married to one whom she liked, became mother and grandmother to a hundred children. {a} The same author tells of an Englishman, a cripple, that married a blind woman, lived very lovingly with her, and had by her twelve lusty boys, that had no defect or deformity. {b}

Ver. 17. Let them be only thine own.] Sint, vel erunt; Let them be, or they shall be. It is both an exhortation and a promise; q.d., Far be it from thee to be a pander to thine own bed, as the Lituanians, of whom Maginus relates that they have their connubii adiutores, their coadjutors in wedlock, and prize them far above all their acquaintance. God also will bless thee with an honest wife, that shall be true to thy bed, and not obtrude upon thee children to keep that are not thine. St Paul gives charge, "that no man go beyond, or defraud his brother in the matter".—that is, in re venerea, in the matter of the marriage bed, as some {a} expound it, but that "every one possess his vessel,"—that is, say they, his wife, that "weaker vessel"—in sanctification and honour. {#1Th 4:4-6}

{a} Jerome, Chrysost., Heinsius.

Ver. 18. Let thy fountain be blessed.] Or, Thy fountain shall be blessed, thy wife shall be fruitful, as #Ps 128:3, that psalm for Solomon, whose many wives brought him but few children. We read but of one son that he had, who was none of the wisest neither, and two daughters, both of them subjects. Our Henry VIII, though blameworthy for women too, was more happy in King Edward his son, that orbis deliciae, and his two daughters, both sovereigns of an imperial crown.

Rejoice with the wife of thy youth.] As Isaac did, who was the most loving husband that we read of in Holy Writ. Ezekiel's wife was "the delight of his eyes"; he took singular complacency in her company. This conjugal joy is the fruit of love, which therefore he commendeth to all married men, in the next words.

Ver. 19. Let her be as the loving hind, &c.] The hind and the roe are the females of the hart and roebuck, of which creatures it is noted that of all other beasts they are most enamoured, {a} as I may so speak, with their mates, and even mate again in their heat, and desire after them. This being taken in a good sense, may set forth the ardent affections that husbands should bear to the wives of their bosoms; so they are called, too, because they should be as dear to them as the hearts in their bosoms. A wife is the most proper object of love, {#Col 3:18} above parent, friend, child, or any other, though never so dear to us.

And be thou ravished always.] Heb., Err thou always in her love: velut extra te sis et rerum aliarum obliviscare. {b} It implies, saith one, a lawful earnest affection, so as, first, to oversee some blemishes and defects. Love is blind. In facie naevus causa decoris erit. {c} Secondly, so highly to esteem her, and so lovingly to comport with her, that others may think him even to dote on her. Howbeit mulierosity must be carefully avoided, as a harmful error, and that saying of Jerome duly pondered and believed, Quisquis in uxorem ardentior est amator, adulter est. As a man may be drunk with his own drink, and a glutton by excessive devouring of his own meat, so likewise one may be unclean by the intemperate or intempestive abuse of the marriage bed, which ought by no means to be stained or dishonoured with sensual excesses.

Ver. 20. And why wilt thou, my son?] The premises considered, there is no reason for it, but all against it. Nothing is more irrational than irreligion, and yet nothing more usual with the devil than to persuade his vassals that there is some sense in sinning, and that they have reason to be mad. And, truly, though there were no devil, yet our corrupt nature would act Satan's part against itself; it would have a supply of wickedness—as a serpent hath of poison—from itself. It hath a spring within to feed it. Nitimur in vetitum semper, petimusque negata. Nothing would serve the rich man's turn but the poor man's lamb. If Ahab may not have Naboth's vineyard, he hath nothing. The more God forbids any sin, the more we bid for it. {#Ro 7:8} 'Nay, but we will have a king,' said they, when they had nothing else to say why they would.

Ver. 21. For the ways of man, &c.] Turpe quid acturus te sine teste time. {a} A man that is about any evil should stand in awe of himself; how much more of God, since he is πανοφθαλμος, all eye, and beholdeth the most secret of thine actions. The proverb is, Si non caste, saltem caute, Carry the matter, if not honestly, yet so closely and cleanly that the world may be never the wiser. How cunningly did David art it to hide his sip! But it would not be. "There is nothing covered that shall not be revealed." {#Lu 12:2} "If I make my bed in hell," said he, {#Ps 139:8} -as indeed the places where fornicators use to lodge are little better, -"behold thou art there." This God allegeth as a forcible reason against this sin. "I have seen the lewdness of thy whoredoms"; {#Jer 13:27} and, "Even I know, and am a witness, saith the Lord." {#Jer 29:23}

Ver. 22. His own iniquities shall take the wicked.] As so many sergeants set on by God; who will surely hamper these unruly beasts, that think to shift and escape his fingers, with the cords of their own sins, binding them hand and foot, and bringing them to condign punishment. So that, say the adulterer be not punished by the magistrate, or come off by commutation, yet he shall feel himself in the gall of bitterness and bond of perdition; he shall find that he hath made a halter to hang himself. Nobody can be so torn with stripes as a mind is with the remembrance of wicked actions. Tiberius felt the remorse of conscience so violent, that he protested to the senate that he suffered death daily. {a}

Ver. 23. He shall die without instruction.] To spend the span of this transitory life after the ways of one's own heart, is to perish for ever. But, oh, what madmen are they that bereave themselves of a room in that city of pearl for a few dirty delights and carnal pleasures!

Ver. 1. My son, if thou be surety.] The wise man, having exhorted his son to marry, rather than burn, and to nourish a family, rather than to haunt harlots' houses, to the end that he may show himself a good economic, and provide for the comfortable subsistence of wife and children, he bids him here beware—(1.) Of unadvised suretyship; (2.) Of idleness, two great enemies to thrift, without which there can be no good house kept. The royalty of Solomon could not have consisted, for all his riches, without forecast and frugality.

Ver. 2. Thou art snared,] i. e., Endangered to slavery or poverty, or both. Hence the proverb, Sponde, noxa praesto est; Give thy word, and thou art not far from a mischief. Shun, therefore, suretyship, if fairly thou canst, or if not, propound the worst, and undertake for no more than thou canst well perform without thy very great prejudice: ne, ut leo cassibus irretitus dixeris, Si praescivissem? lest thou, being got into the hamble trambles, come in too late with thy fool's "Had I wist."

Thou art taken.] For a bargain binds a man by the law of nature, and of nations. Judah, though in a shameful business, would make good his engagement to the harlot. {#Ge 38:23} Every godly man will do so, though it be to his own hindrance. {#Ps 15:4} The Romans had a great care always to perform their word, insomuch that the first temple built in Rome was dedicated to the goddess Fidelity. The Athenians were so careful this way, that Atticus testis is used for one that keeps touch, and Attica fides is sure hold; as, contrarily, Punica fides, there was no hold to be taken of Carthaginian promises. Of a certain pope and his nephew, it is said that the one never spoke as he thought, the other never performed what he spoke. This was small to their commendation. Debt is a burden to every well-minded man; neither can he be at rest till he come to "owe nothing to any man but this, that ye love one another." {#Ro 13:8} When Archbishop Cranmer discerned the storm which afterwards fell upon him in Queen Mary's days, he took express order for the payment of all his debts and engagements, which when it was once done, a most joyful man was he, saith Master Foxe in his life. {a} For bills and obligations do mancipate the most free and ingenuous spirit, and so put a man out of aim that he can neither serve God without distraction nor do good to others, nor set his own state in any good order, but lives and dies entangled and puzzled with cares and snares; and, after a tedious and laborious life passed in a circle of fretting thoughts, he leaves at last, instead of better patrimony, a world of intricate troubles to his posterity, who are also "taken with the words of his mouth."

Ver. 3. When thou art come into the hand.] For "the borrower is servant to the lender," {#Pr 22:7} and Facile ex amico inimicum facies cui promissa non reddes, saith Jerome. {a} A friend will soon become a foe, if unfriendly and unfaithfully dealt with. Not keeping time makes a jar in payments—and so in friendship too—as well as in music.

Go, humble thyself.] Crave favour and further time of the creditor. Say, Doubt not of your debt, only forbear a while. Cast thyself at his feet, as to be trodden—so the Hebrew word here signifieth. {#Eze 32:2 34:18} Stick not at any submission, so thou mayest gain time, and get off, and not be forced to run into the usurer's books, that Amalek, or licking people, which, as cormorants, fall upon the borrowers, and, like cur dogs, suck your blood only with licking, and in the end kill you, and crush you, rob you, and ravish you. {#Ps 10:8-10}

And make sure thy friend.] For whom thou standest engaged; call upon him to save thee harmless. For as Alphius, the usurer, sometimes said of his clients, Optima nomina non appellando mala fieri; {b} even good debtors will prove slack paymasters if they be let alone, if not now and then called upon. Some read the words thus: Multiply thy friends, or solicit them, viz., to intercede for thee to the creditor, and to keep thee out of this brake.

Ver. 4. Give not sleep to thine eyes, &c.] Augustus wondered at a certain knight in Rome, that owed much, and yet could sleep securely; and when this knight died, he sent to buy his bed, as supposing there was something more than ordinary in it, to procure sleep. {a} The opportunity of liberty and thriving is to be well husbanded, lest some storm arising from the cruelty of creditors, or mutability of outward things, overwhelm a man with debt and danger, as the whirlwind doth the unwary traveller upon the Alps with snow. Now if such care be taken that we run not rashly in debt to men, how much more to God! If to undertake for others be so dangerous, how should we pray with that godly man Augustine, From my "other men's sins" good Lord deliver me! If we are so humble ourselves to our fellow creatures in this case, how much more should we "humble ourselves under the mighty hand of God, that he may lift us up in due season!" {#Jas 4:10} If this is to be done without delay, where the danger reacheth but to the outward man, how much more speed and earnestness should be used in making peace with God, whose wrath is a fire that burns as low as hell, and getting the black lines of our sins drawn over with the red lines of his Son's blood; and so utterly razed out of the book of his remembrance!

Ver. 5. As a roe from the hand, &c.] This creature may be taken, but not easily tamed: it seeks therefore by all means to make escape, and when it fleeth, looketh behind it, holding it no life, if not at liberty. {a}

And as a bird.] A most fearful creature, and desirous of liberty, that Avis Paradisi bird of paradise, especially, that being taken, never gives over groaning, till let go again. Nititur in sylvas quaeque redire suas.

{a} Chald. Paraph. in #So 8:14.

Ver. 6. Go to the ant, thou sluggard.] Man, that was once the captain of God's school, is now, for his truantcy, turned down into the lowest form as it were, to learn his A B C's again; yea, to be taught by these lowest creatures. So Christ sends us to school to the birds of the air, and lilies of the field, to learn dependence upon divine providence, {#Mt 6:25-29} and to the stork, crane, and swallow, to be taught to take the seasons of grace, and not to let slip the opportunities that God putteth into our hands. {#Jer 8:7} This poor despicable creature the ant, is here set in the chair to read us a lecture of sedulity and good husbandry. What a deal of grain gets she together in summer! What pains doth she take for it, labouring not by daylight only, but by moonshine also! What huge heaps hath she! What care to bring forth her store, and lay it drying on a sunshine day, lest with moisture it should putrefy, &c. Not only

Aristotle, Aelian, and Pliny, but also Basil, Ambrose, and Jerome, have observed and written much of the nature and industry of this poor creature; telling us in addition that in the ant, bee, stork, &c., God hath set before us, as in a picture, the lively resemblance of many excellent virtues, which we ought to pursue and practise. These, saith one, are veri laicorum libri, the true laymen's books, the images that may teach men the right knowledge of God and of his will, of themselves and their duties.

Ver. 7. Which having no guide, overseer, &c.] How much more then should man, who hath all these, and is both ad laborem natus, et ratione ornatus, born to labour, and hath reason to guide him. Only he must take heed that he be not antlike, wholly taken up about What shall we eat, or what shall we drink? &c.

Ver. 8. Provideth her meat in the summer.] She devours indeed much grain, made chiefly for the use of man; but deserves, saith an interpreter, for this very cause, to be fed with the finest wheat, and greatest dainties, that all men may have her always in their eye: diligent men to quicken their diligence, and sluggards to shame them for their slothfulness.

And gathereth her food in harvest.] That may serve in winter. It is good for a man to keep somewhat by him, to have something in store, and not in diem vivere, to live for the day, ^{a} as the fowls of heaven do. Bonus Servatius facit bonum Bouifacium, as the Dutch proverb hath it; A good saver makes a well doer. Care must be taken ne promus sit fortior condo, that our layings out be not more than our layings up. Let no man here object that of our Saviour, "Care not for tomorrow," &c. There is a care of diligence, and a care of diffidence; a care of the head, and a care of the heart; the former is needful, the latter sinflil.

Ver. 9. How long wilt thou sleep, O sluggard?] The ear, we say, is first up in a morning: call a sleeping man by his name, and he will sooner awake and answer to it than to anything else. The wise man therefore thus deals with the sluggard, that he may go forth and shake him, as Samson, not giving way to excessive sleep, which comes as a publican, saith Plutarch, and takes away a third part of our lives at least. Pliny ^{a} said to his nephew, when he saw him walk out some hours without studying, Poteras has horas non perdere, you might have put these hours to better uses. May not the same be said to the sleepy sluggard? While the crocodile sleeps with open mouth, the Indian rat shoots himself into his body, and eats up his entrails. While Ishbosheth slept upon his bed at noon, Baanah and Rechab took away his head. Epaminondas, a renowned captain, finding one of his sentinels asleep, thrust him through with his sword: and being chided for so great severity, replied, Talem eum reliqui qualem inveni, I left him but as I found him. It must be our care that death serve us not in like sort, that we be not taken napping, and so "killed with death." {#Re 2:23} The bird Onocrotalus is so well practised to expect the hawk to grapple with her, that even when she shutteth her eyes she sleepeth with her beak exalted, as if she would contend with her adversary, to teach us continual vigilance, resembling those who were wont to sleep with brazen balls in their hands, which falling on vessels purposely set on their bedsides, the noise did dissuade immoderate sleep, Nullus mihi per otium exit dies, partem etiam noctium studiis vindico, saith Seneca, {b} I let no day pass me idly, some part of the night also I spend in study. Our King Alfred, 872 AD, cast the natural day into three parts: eight hours he spent in prayer, study, and writing, eight in the service of his body, and eight in the affairs of his state; which space, having then no other dvice for it, he measured by a great wax light divided into so many parts, receiving notice by the keeper thereof, as the several hours passed in the burning. {c} The Jews divided likewise the day into three parts, the first, ad Tephilla, for prayer; the second, ad Torah, for reading the law; the third, ad Malachah, for work; no talk of sleep. Their work would, likely, keep them waking. As for the law, what Servilius Scevola said of the civil law, holds more true of the divine, Ius civile scriptum est vigilantibus non dormitantibus, the law was not written for sleepers, but wakers. Jerome exhorted some godly women to whom he wrote, not to lay the Bible out of their hands, until being overcome with sleep, and not able any longer to hold up their heads, they bowed them down, as it were, to greet the leaves below them, with a kiss. {d} And for prayer, David would not fall asleep at it, but break his sleep for it. {#Ps 119:62,147} He was at it at midnight, at day dawn, and "In the morning will I direct my prayer unto thee, and will look up." {#Ps 5:3} Two military words {e} he there makes use of, to shew his wakefulness at his work soldiers are not the greatest sleepers: Caesar was no less vigilant, than valiant: Scanderbeg from his first coming to Epirus never slept more than two hours in a night; -he would not only pray, but marshal up his prayers, put them in good array; and when he had so done, he would be as a spy upon a tower, to see whether he prevailed, whether he got the day. {f} The spouse slept, but her heart waked; and, as repenting of that half-sleep also, which yet the night and foul weather persuaded, she promiseth to get up early. {#So 5:2 7:12} Our Saviour was up and at prayer "a great while before day." {#Mr 1:35} The holy angels are styled "Watchers," Εγρηγοροι. {#Da 4:10} And they are three times pronounced happy that watch. {#Lu 12:37,38,43} "Watch therefore."

Ver. 10. Yet a little sleep.] Heb., Sleeps; so, slumbers. Though he speaks in the plural, and would have much, yet all is but a little in his pretence and conceit. He asks "a little," but he will not be denied: sed finite paululum ibit tu longum. {a} First, he must have "sleep"; having slept, he must have "slumbers,"—sleep will not quickly be rubbed out of his eyes; having slumbered, he must "fold his hands." Compressis sedere manibus {b} to sit with hands folded up, is used by the Latins in a like sense. He tumbles on his bed, "as a door on the hinges." {#Pr 16:14} A man must come with a lever to help him off his couch.

Ver. 11. As a traveller, and thy want as an armed man.] That is, Speedily and irresistibly. Men must sweat out a living, and earn their bread before they eat it. {#2Th 3:12} Think not to have wealth without working; as cities and towns are said to have fallen into Timotheus's toil as he was sleeping—with so much ease he took them in. Spontaneae lassitudines morbos praecedunt, { a } roamings and

Ver. 12. A naughty person.] Lo, every idle man is a naughty man; is, or ere long will be; for by doing nothing, men learn to do evil, said the heathen. {a} And "thou wicked and slothful servant," saith our Saviour. {#Mt 25:26} He puts no difference between nequam et nequaquam, an idle and an evil person. The devil also will not long suffer such a one to be idle, but will soon set him to work. Idleness is the hour of temptation.

A wicked man.] Or, An unprofitable man, vir nihili; good for nothing, but to eat, and drink, and sleep, and sport, and sit, and talk, and laugh, and be merry. These are nothing; nay, they are excrements in human society; that live in the world to no purpose, yea, to bad purpose. Oh, it is good, saith one {b} to do something whereby the world may be the better; and not to come hither merely as rats and mice, only to devour victuals, and to run squeaking up and down.

Walketh with a froward mouth.] Graditur ore perverso. Nothing more usual with idlebies than to go tattling up and down, prying, and spying, and carrying tales and rumours. {#1Ti 5:13} {See Trapp on "1Ti 5:13"} It is nothing that they can do; they will say the more therefore; αργοι, περιεργοι. {#2Th 3:11}

{b} Mr Wheatly.

Ver. 13. He winketh with his eyes.] He is restless in evil, and with his odd tricks and gesticulations seeks to spread mischief, even there, where he dares not otherwise discover himself. Or the sense may be this: Though he speak froward things, though he slander and detract, to the hurt of the hearers, yet as if he spake nothing but truth, and out of deep affection to the party, he seeks to assure it by the constance of his countenance, by the gravity of his gait, and by the motion of his fingers, to make believe that it is so indeed, when as in truth it is neither so nor so.

Ver. 14. Frowardness is in his heart.] What marvel then though he solecise with his hand, ^{a} though he twinkle with his eye, and tinkle with his feet, &c.? "When he speaketh fair, believe him not, for there are seven abominations in his heart." ^{#Pr 26:25} Even those seven next mentioned here, ^{#Pr 6:16-19} as Aben Ezra conceiveth upon that text.

He deviseth mischief continually.] Heb., At all times. Pliny speaks of the scorpion, that there is not one minute wherein it doth not put forth the sting. The soul of a wicked man is "in a sling," ^{#ISA 25:29} restless, and violently tossed about by Satan, who acts and agitates him. ^{#Eph 2:2 Mic 2:1 Ho 7:6}

He soweth discord.] And so shows himself a true breathing devil, a disciple of Machiavel, whose maxim was, divide et impera, make division and get dominion. In the year 1579, Allen at Rhemes instructed his emissary seducers, sent over into England, to make way for their great project of perdition in 1588, by dividing the people under the terms of Protestant and Puritan, and provoking them thereby to real and mutual both hate and contempt. ^{b} And what labouring there is now by the Jesuit party to heighten our unhappy differences, that they may make themselves masters of all, who seeth not? Herein they deal, -saith Gregory, of the like factors for the devil in his time, -as the master of the pit, who oft sets two cocks to fight together to the death of both, that after mutual conquest, he may sup with both their carcasses. The Jews, before they were banished out of this kingdom, threw bags of poison into the wells and fountains that the people were to drink of, and thereby endeavoured to poison them all: so do our seedsmen of sedition.

^{b} Archbishop Abbot's answer to Dr Hill's Three Reasons.

Ver. 15. Suddenly shall he be broken without remedy.] A dismal doom: broken, and not bruised only; "suddenly" broken, when they least dream or dread the danger. And this "without remedy"; no possibility of piecing them up again, or putting them into a better condition. See this exemplified in Nabal, {#1Sa 25:36-38} and Doeg. {#Ps 52}

Ver. 16. These six things doth the Lord hate.] That is, He detesteth, dammeth, punisheth them in the sluggard, whose soul is the sink of all these ensuing evils. Where note, that sin makes wicked men the object of God's hatred; the saints, of his pity: as we hate poison in a toad, but we pity it in a man; in the one, it is their nature, in the other, their disease.

Yea, seven are an abomination to him.] Or, That seventh {a} his soul abhorreth, that sowing of discord among brethren heighteneth and completeth his hatred of the rest.

Ver. 17. A proud look.] Heb., Haughty eyes. Men's hearts usually and chiefly sit and show themselves in oculis, in loculis, in poculis, in their eyes, purses, and cups. The Latins speaking of an arrogant disdainful person say, that he doth supercilium attollere, look loftily. {a} Odi fastum istius Ecclesiae, said Basil; {b} I hate the proud stateliness of that Western Church: the Church of Rome he means, which even in those purer times began to look big, and despise all others in comparison of itself. {c} This he somewhere calls οφρυς δυτικη, the Western eyebrow, which occasioned at length that lamentable separation of the Eastern or Greek Church from communion with the Latin: the other four patriarchs dividing themselves from the Bishop of Rome, and at their parting, using these or the like words, -"Thy greatness we know, thy covetousness we cannot satisfy; thine intolerable insolence we can no longer endure, live to thyself," &c. {d} God himself "resists" a proud person in a special manner, {#1Pe 5:5} and that "afar off"; {#Ps 138:6} he cannot abide the sight of him, looks aloof at him. For whereas all other vices fly from God, saith Boethius, pride lets fly at him. {e} No wonder therefore though his soul abhor it, when it "buds especially," {#Eze 7:10} and "testifies to a man's face," {#Ho 7:10} breaking forth as the masterpock of the soul in big swelling words, bubbles of vanity, {#2Pe 2:18} proud gait, ridiculous gestures, garish attire, lofty and haughty looks, that hate of heaven and gate to hell. David could not endure it in any of his. {#Ps 101:5} No more could Queen Elizabeth in the greatest favourite about her. Dissension once falling out between her and Essex about a fit man for government of Ireland, he forgetting himself, and neglecting his duty, uncivilly turneth his back, as it were in contempt, with a scornful look. She waxing impatient, gave him a cuff on the ear, bidding him begone with a vengeance, &c. {f} For avoiding of all discontent and distempers this way occasioned, it were to be wished that men would first get humble hearts, -the apostle makes humble mindedness the first virtue, {#Eph 4:2} as here a proud look is made the first vice, the master root, -and then, that they would enter into a covenant, as Job did, with his own eyes at least; {#Job 31:1} such a covenant as was once made at a meeting of the Borderers in the marches between England and Scotland: security was given and confirmed on both sides by oath, according to custom, and proclamation made, saith mine author, {g} that no man should harm other by word, deed, or look.

A lying tongue.] Heb., A tongue of lying—viz., that hath learnt the trade, and can do it artificially. "A friar, a liar," was the old proverb here, passing for current of that evil generation, those loud and lewd liars. "The proud have forged lies against me"; {#Ps 119:69} — Assunt mendacium mendacio, so the Hebrew hath it; they sew one lie to another, "until their iniquity be found to be hateful." {#Ps 36:2} "A righteous man"—how much more the righteous God!—"hateth lying; but a wicked man"—for his lying—"is loathsome" (Heb., stinketh), "and cometh to shame." {#Pr 13:5} Pilate, for instance, -of whom Egesippus saith that he was Vir nequam et parvi faciens mendacium, a naughty man, and that made light of a lie. It may seem so by that scornful question of his What is truth? {#Joh 18:38} Tacitus also is by Tertullian said to be mendaciorum loquacissimus. Where he speaks of Christians, he writes so many lines, so many lies. Liars pervert the end for which God created speech, which was, to give light to the notions of the mind. Hence φωνη, quasi φως του νοου.

And hands that shed innocent blood.] This is fitly subjoined and set after a lying tongue, because bloodshed is oft occasioned by lying.

“ Nil est audacius illis

Deprensivis: iram atque animos ex crimine sumunt. ”

- Juvenal.

Ruffians revenge the lie given them with a stab. Persecutors, as in the French massacre, give out that Christians are the worst of men, not fit to live for their notorious enormities, and therefore not to be pitied if taken from the earth. Those that kill a dog, saith the French proverb, make the world believe he was mad first. So they always belied the Church, and traduced her to the world, and then persecuted her; first "took away her veil," and then "wounded her; ." {#So 5:7} The devil was first a slanderer and liar, and then a murderer. He cannot murder without he slander first. But "God will destroy them that speak lies; the Lord will abhor the bloody and deceitful man." {#Ps 5:6}

Ver. 18. An heart that deviseth wicked imaginations.] This is the old beldam, the mother of all the foregoing and following mischiefs, and is therefore fitly set in the midst of the seven, as having an influence into all. From the eyes, the wise man descends to the mouth; from the mouth to the hands; from the hands to the heart; from thence to the feet; and so takes the parts in order as they stand. But as for the heart, it transfuseth its venom into all the rest, and may say to them all, as the heart of Apollodorus the tyrant seemed to say to him, who dreamed one night that he was flayed by the Scythians, and boiled in a caldron, and that his heart spoke to him out of the kettle, Εγώ σοι τουτων αιτια; It is I that have drawn thee to all this. Those in hell cry so, doubtless.

Feet that be swift.] As if they should come too late. This is a foul abuse of the locomotive faculty given us by God for better purpose, that we should be "swift to hear," {#Jas 1:19} "run to and fro to increase knowledge," {#Da 12:4} walk in the way that is called holy, "go from strength to strength," {#Ps 84:7} taking long strides towards heaven.

Those, then, that walk in a contrary road, and make all possible haste to heap up sin upon sin, must needs be abominated and accursed of God.

Ver. 19. A false witness that speaketh lies.] Heb., That blows abroad lies, -as with a pair of bellows; that vents them boldly and freely in open court, in the face of the country. These knights of the post can lend an oath for a need, as they did Jezebel against Naboth, and, like those in the history, will not stick to swear that their friend or foe was at Rome and Interamna both at once. God oft thundereth against such, to show his utter hatred of them, and hath threatened that the winged flying book, that is full of curses, within and without, shall overtake them ere they get home, and shall rest in the midst of their houses, to consume them with the timber thereof, and the stones thereof. {#Zec 5:4}

And him that soweth discord.] {See Trapp on "Pr 6:14"} {See Trapp on "Pr 6:16"} Unity among brethren is fitly compared to a cable rope, which will not easily break; but if once cut asunder, it is hard to tie a knot upon it. What ill officers then are breedbates and boutefeus firebrands!

Ver. 20. My son, keep thy father's commandment.] The commandments of religious parents are the very commandments of God himself, and are therefore to be as carefully kept "as the apple of a man's eye." {#Pr 7:2} {See Trapp on "Pr 1:8"}

Ver. 21. Bind them continually.] Observe them with as much care and conscience as thou art bound to do the law of God given by Moses. {#De 6:8} {See Trapp on "Mt 23:5"}

Ver. 22. When thou goest, it shall lead {a} thee.] No such guide to God as the word, which while a man holds to, he may safely say, Lord, if I be deceived, thou hast deceived me; if I be out of the way, thy word hath misled me.

When thou sleepest, it shall keep thee.] If thou sleep with some good meditation in thy mind, it shall keep thee from foolish and sinful dreams and fancies, and set thy heart in a holy frame when thou awakest, he that raketh up his fire at night shall find fire in the morning. "How precious are thy thoughts" (that is, thoughts of thee) "unto me, O God." {#Ps 139:17} What follows "When I awake, I am still with thee." {#Ps 139:18}

Ver. 23. For the commandment is a lamp.] Or, Candle, whereof there is no small use when men go to bed, or rise early. He that hath the word of Christ richly dwelling in him may lay his hand upon his heart, and say as dying Oecolampadius did, Hic sat lucis; here is plenty of light. Under the law all was in riddles; Moses was veiled; and yet that saying was then verified, Et latet et lucet. There was light enough to light men to Christ, "the end of the law." {#Ro 10:4}

And reproofs of instruction.] Or, Corrections of instructions. A lesson set on with a whipping is best remembered. {See Trapp on "Pr 3:13"}

Ver. 24. To keep thee from the evil woman.] Heb., From the woman of evil, that is wholly given up to wickedness, -as Aaron saith of the people, {#Ex 32:22} and as Plautus, In fermento tota iacet uxor. In this sense Antichrist is called "the man of sin." {#2Th 2:3}

From the flattery of the tongue.] This is the proper effect of God's word, hid in the heart, as an amulet. Bellerophon and other heathens, without this preservative, abstained from adultery, either for love of praise, or fear of punishment, or opinion of merit. But this was not properly chastity, but continence, which kept them from the outward act, sed non sine dolore -not without inward lustings and hankerings after strange flesh. Vellem, si non essem imperator; said Scipio, when a fair harlot was offered to him; I would if I were not a general.

Of a strange woman.] Filthiness, as also swearing and drunkenness, in a woman is most abominable. Hence, among other reasons, saith one, the whorish woman is called "the strange woman."

Ver. 25. Lust not after her beauty.] Aureliae Orestillae praeter formam nihil unquam bonus laudavit. Aurelia Orestilla had beauty indeed, but nothing else that was praise worthy, saith the historian.

{a} How much better Aspasia Milesia, of whom Aelian {b} reports that she was fair and modest. And the Lady Jane Gray, whose excellent beauty was adorned with all variety of virtues, as a clear sky with stars, as a princely diadem with jewels. Some women are like Helen without, Hecuba within; but it is a small praise to have a good face and a naughty nature—a beautiful countenance and a base life.

In thine heart.] {See Trapp on "Mt 5:28"} {See Trapp on "1Co 7:34"}

Neither let her take thee with her eyelids.] Si nescis, oculi sunt in amore duces. Some {c} render it, Neque te capiat splendoribus suis; let her not take time with her glitterings, and gay habiliments, or head tires. Cyprian and Augustine say that superfluous attire is worse than whoredom, because whoredom only corrupts chastity, but this corrupts nature. Jerome saith, that if women adorn themselves so as to provoke men to lust after them, though no evil follow upon it, yet those women shall suffer eternal damnation, because they offered poison to others, though none would drink it.

Ver. 26. For by means of a whorish woman.] {See Trapp on "Pr 5:10"} These creatures know no other language but that of the horse leech's daughter, Give, give, and may fitly be compared to the ravens of Arabia, that, fully gorged, have a tunable, sweet record, but empty, screech horribly; or to carrion crows, that flock to a dead carcass, not to defend it, but to devour it; and no sooner have they bared the bones but they are gone. Thus dame Alice Peirce, King Edward III's concubine, served him while he lived; all was here as she would; and when this king lay dying, she packed away what she could snatch, even to the rings on his fingers, and so left him. {a}

Will hunt for the precious life.] As Potiphar's wife did for Joseph's. {#Ge 39:14} And surely it was a great providence of God that, upon her false accusation, he had not been presently put to death. Into prison he was thrown, and so laden with fetters, that "the iron entered into his soul" #Ps 105:18 -i.e., ate into his flesh, and all by means of this whorish woman, whose lust turned into hatred. Aut te ardentem amat, aut te capitaliter odit. {b} {See Trapp on "Pr 5:11"}

Ver. 27. Can a man take fire?] Lest any man should reply, 'I will see to myself, and save one from the afore named mischiefs; I have more wit than to trust any harlot, and more skill than to let it come abroad to my disgrace and detriment'; the wise man answers, that it is as possible to take a live coal from the hearth, and bear it in a man's bosom without burning his clothes, or to walk upon fire without scorching his feet, as to attempt anything in this kind and to escape Scot free. Flagitium et flagellum sicut acus et filum. Sin and punishment go linked together with chains of adamant. Thy clothes will stink, at least, of that fire; thy feet will blister, at least, with those coals. If the great shower blow over thee, yet thou shalt be wet with the after drops.

Ver. 28. Can one go upon hot coals?] Similitudes are never set out to confirm or confute, but to adorn and illustrate, giving unto their matter a certain kind of lively gesture, and stirring up thereby men's drowsy minds to the consideration and acknowledgment of the truth, and to the pursuit and practice of virtue and godliness. Of the great use of similes, we may read in Chrysost., Hom. in Gen.; Origen in Levit.; August. de Doctrina Christ., lib. ii.; Greg. Moral., lib. iii. cap. 36, &c.

Ver. 29. So he that goeth in to his neighbour's wife.] That suspiciously converseth with her alone, though haply with no intent of corrupting her. Joseph shunned the company of his mistress; he would not be with her alone. {#Ge 39:10} Chambering and secret familiarity with women is forbidden, as a deed of darkness and dishonesty. {#Ro 13:13} How much more, then, wanton touches and dalliance! Sit not at all with another man's wife; sit not down upon the bed with her, saith Siracides (chap. 9). Christ's disciples marvelled that he talked with the woman of Samaria, solus cum sola, - saith Beza. {#Joh 4:27} But he might do that which we must beware of lest concupiscence kindle. Abraham might see Sodom burning, but Lot might not look that way.

Shall not be innocent.] Shall not be held so, howsoever he shall suffer in his name, be he never so honest—besides that hereby he tempts the devil to tempt him to uncleanness. Now the proverb is, Oculus et lama non patiuntur iocos, A man's eye and his name will bear no jest. And he was no fool that said, Negligere quid de se quisque sentiat, non solum arrogantis est, sed et dissoluti. He is not only a proud but a lewd person, that takes no thought what others think and talk of him. "Provide," we must, "for things honest, not only before the Lord, but also before men." {#2Co 8:20,21}

Ver. 30. Men do not despise a thief.] We used to say, A liar is worse than a thief; {a} and Siracides saith the same of a constant liar. (chap. 20) But that an adulterer is worse than a thief, the Holy Ghost here assureth us; and his reasons are unanswerable. For, first, his necessity pleads for him: {b} he must either steal or starve; and this doth somewhat excuse him, a tanto, as they say, but not a tote; for as a man should rather die than lie, so he should rather perish than purloin or pilfer. But what excuse hath the adulterer?— non ventris inedia patitur, sed cordis indigentiam, He wants not meat, but wit; he preserveth not his body, but destroyeth his soul.

Ver. 31. He shall restore sevenfold,] i.e., Manifold, according as the law limiteth, though it be to the utmost of what the thief is worth. But what restitution can the adulterer make, should he make him amends with as much more? The thief steals out of want; the adulterer of wantonness.

Ver. 32. Lacketh understanding.] Being wholly carried by sensual appetite, against the dictates both of religion and of reason. Beetles love dunghills better than ointments, and swine love mud better than a garden. Luther tells of a certain noble in his country so besotted with the sin of whoredom, he was not ashamed to say, that if he might ever live here, and be carried from one whore house to another, there to satisfy his lusts, he would never desire any other heaven. This filthy man did afterwards breathe out his wretched soul between two notorious harlots.

Destroyeth his own soul.] It is not therefore leve peccatum, a small sin, as the pope's canonists call it. {a} Divine justice doth not use to kill flies with beetles.

{a} Loniceri Theat. Histor., p. 568.

Ver. 33. A wound and dishonour shall he get.] Either from the husband of the adulteress or from the magistrate, who will put him to death, according to the law of God, {#Le 20:10,13,15,16 De 22:22-24} and of various nations, with whom adultery is a capital crime.

And his reproach shall not be wiped away.] {See Trapp on "Pr 5:9"} How oft read we of David that he was upright in all things, save only in the matter of Uriah! What an indelible blot is that still upon him!

Ver. 34. For jealousy is the rage.] Howbeit he may not kill the adulterer, though taken in the act, but prosecute the law against him, and appeal to the magistrate, who is the lord keeper of both tables—custos utriusque tabulae. But if no law will relieve a man, yet let him know that he shall do himself no disservice by making God his chancellor.

Ver. 1. My son, keep my words.] Aristotle hath observed, and daily experience makes it good, that man shows his weakness no way more than about moderating the pleasure of his tasting and touching, forasmuch as they belong to him, not as a man, but as a living creature. Now therefore as where the hedge is lowest, there the beast leaps over soonest, so Satan will be sure to assault us where we are least able to withstand him. And whereas old men {a} have no cause to be secure—(David was old when he went in to Bathsheba, and Lot not young when he deflowered his two daughters; -of the Brabonts it is said, that quo magis senescunt eo magis stultescunt, The older the more foolish; and the heathen sages say, Metuendam esse senectam, quod non veniat sola, that old age is to be feared, as that which comes not alone, but being itself a disease, it comes accompanied with many diseases both of body and mind); -young men {b} especially, whom the Greeks call ηθεοι of αθω, to be hot, and Αιζηοι of Ζεω, to boil, and who think they have a licence helluari, scortari, fores effringere, to drink and drab, which they count and call a trick of youth, have but more than need to be constantly and carefully cautioned and called upon, as here they are, to "flee fornication," {#1Co 6:8} to "flee youthful lusts," {#2Ti 2:22} with posthaste to flee them, to "abstain from fleshly lusts" tanquam a mellito veneno, " which war against the soul." {#1Pe 2:11} The body cannot be so wounded with weapons as the soul is with lusts. Holy Timothy—so temperate a young man that St Paul was fain to prescribe him medicine, bidding him no longer to drink water, but "a little wine for his stomach's sake and his often infirmities," {#1Ti 5:23} contracted happily by his too much abstinence, for the better keeping under his body, and bringing it into subjection—is in the same chapter by the same apostle exhorted to exhort the younger women with all purity; {#1Ti 5:2} whereby is intimated, that through the deceit of his heart, and the slipperiness of his age, even while he was pressing those young women to purity, some impure motion might press in upon him; which, though but a stranger to Timothy—as Peter Martyr and others observe out of that passage in Nathan's parable, {#2Sa 12:5} that lust was to David—yet might prove a troublesome inmate if not suddenly ejected. It is no marvel, therefore, that the wise man is so exceedingly earnest with his son about the business of abhorring harlotry, the hatefulnes whereof he now paints out in a parable, setting it forth in liveliest colours.

Ver. 2. Keep my commandments, and live.] "Live," i.e., live happily. I am the Lord that teacheth thee to profit, therefore keep my commandments; {#Isa 48:17} as if God should say, It is for thy profit that I command thee, and not for mine own. "In doing thereof there is great reward," saith David, {#Ps 19:11} and present reward, saith Solomon here, Do it and live. In the court of earthly princes there is αναβολη και μεταβολη delays and changes. Men are off and on in their promises; they are also slow and slack in their performances. But it is otherwise here: the very "entrance of thy word giveth light," {#Ps 119:130} and the very onset of obedience giveth life. It is but "Hear, and your soul shall live," {#Isa 55:3} "Behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me." {#Re 22:12}

And my law as the apple of thine eye.] With all chariness and circumspection. The least mote offends the eye, and the least deviation violates the law. Sin is homogeneous, all of a kind, though not all of the same degree; as the least pebble is a stone, as well as the largest rock, and as the drop of a bucket is water, as well as the main ocean. Hence the least sins are in Scripture reproached by the names of the greatest. Malice is called man slaughter, lust adultery,

&c.; concupiscence is condemned by the law, even the first motions of sin, though they never come to consent. {#Ro 7:7} Inward bleeding may kill a man. De minutis non curat lex, saith the civilian; but the law of God is spiritual, though we be carnal. And as the sunshine shows us atoms and motes, that till then we discerned not, so doth the law discover and censure smallest failings. It must therefore be kept curiously, even "as the apple of the eye," as that little man {a} in the eye, that cannot be touched but he will be distempered. Careful we must be even in the minutula legis, the punctilios of duty. Men will not lightly lose the least ends of gold. {b}

Ver. 3. Bind them upon thy fingers.] That thou mayest have them always in sight, as God hath his people: "Behold I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands: thy walls are continually before me." {#Isa 49:16} The Hebrews here refer fingers to action, heart to meditation and retention. Men should have the law of God at their fingers ends. Any of us Jews, saith Josephus, being asked of any point of the law, answereth it as readily as if he had been asked his own name: they should also be "doers of the word, and not hearers only." The hand is οργανον οργανων {a} the instrument of action. David "lifted up both his hands to the word," {#Ps 119:48} as if he would pull it to him with both hands, as if he would do the deed in good earnest. The "heavens are the work of God's fingers"; {#Ps 8:3} the law should be of ours.

Ver. 4. Say unto wisdom, Thou art my sister, / q.d., If thou must needs have a lady to set thy love upon, let me commend a mistress to thee more amiable and affable than any that thou canst meet with, and that is heavenly wisdom. Say unto her, Thou art my sister, &c. Christ oft woos his spouse by this title, "My sister, my spouse." As the nearest affinity is spouse, so the nearest consanguinity is sister. There are all bonds to knit us to Christ, there shall be all to knit Christ to us, if we fall in with wisdom; this is to become akin to Christ. {#Mt 12:50} And that is the truest nobility where God himself is top of the kin, and religion the root, in regard whereof all the rest (riches, retinue, &c.) are but shadows and shapes of nobleness.

Call understanding thy kinswoman,] i.e., Be thoroughly and familiarly acquainted with her. Surely as in nature he is accounted a singular idiot that knows not his own sisters or near kinsfolk, so in religion he is strangely simple and stupid that is not acquainted with the grounds of behaviour and comfort, as they are contained in the word.

Ver. 5. That they may keep thee.] The "wisdom from above" can and will preserve a man from hankering after strange flesh. The world's wizards have been most of them tacked and tainted with this vice, and that by a just hand of God upon them, for the contempt of religion, {#Ro 1:28} which is indeed the most excellent preservative. Hence, when the apostle had said, {#1Ti 4:7} "exercise godliness," he adds, as a motive, "Godliness is profitable to all things," #Pr 7:8. See further for this, #Pr 23:26,27 2:16 6:23,24. {See Trapp on "Pr 23:26"} {See Trapp on "Pr 23:27"} {See Trapp on "Pr 2:16"} {See Trapp on "Pr 6:23"} {See Trapp on "Pr 6:24"}

Ver. 6. I looked through my casement.] Little did this young fool think whose eye was upon him, less did he heed the all-seeing eye of Heaven. Solomon was observing his subjects' carriages, and found a miscarriage. Magistrates, as they have many eyes upon them (whence also they have their name in the Hebrew tongue), {a} so they are to have their eyes upon many, watching when other men sleep, and observing what other men slight. The poets feign that Jupiter overlooks the world, and that Somnus or sleep, dared never come near him. "A king that sitteth in the throne of judgment scattereth away all evil with his eyes." {#Pr 20:8}

Ver. 7. Among the simple ones.] The word signifieth such a one as may be soon persuaded, easily drawn any way {a} by a twined thread with a wet finger; fatuellus, such as whom it is no hard matter to cozen and collude with.

Ver. 8. Near her corner.] Which he should have balked, according to #Pr 5:8. {See Trapp on "Pr 5:8"} Men's own inconsideration, security, and dallying with the beginnings of sin, or with the occasion, doth usually tempt the devil to tempt them; and he feeling their pulse thereby which way it beats, fits them a penny worth, provides them of mates, sets one Delilah or other to bind them, as she did Samson, with the green withes of fleshly pleasure. But let a man divorce the flesh from the world, and the devil can do him no harm.

Ver. 9. In the black and dark night.] Thinking to obscure himself; but Solomon saw him, how much more God, cui obscura patent, muta respondent, silentium confitetur; before whom night will convert itself into noon, and silence prove a speaking evidence. Foolish men think to hide themselves from God, by hiding God from themselves. See #Ps 139:11,12.

Ver. 10. And behold there met him a woman.] Fit lettuce for such lips, a fit handle for such a hatchet. Every corner is full of such dust heaps, the land is even darkened with them, as Egypt once was with the locusts. {#Ex 10:15}

With the attire of an harlot.] {See Trapp on "Pr 6:25"} The Hebrew word here signifies a set habit or ornament finely fitted to the body: vestitus in quo plicae, saith Lavater, plaited tarments, plaited hair, &c. Let such take heed of the plica poloniaea, that dreadful disease.

And subtile of heart.] Or, Trussed up about the breasts, with her upper parts naked. So Levi Ben. Gersom: Erat nudo collo et pectore, corde tenus, &c. She met him with her naked breasts; at this day too commonly used by such as would be held no harlots.

Ver. 11. Her feet abide not in her house.] As the modest woman's do, {#Tit 2:5} who is therefore called domiporta, set forth by the snail, which carries her house on her back, and compared to the vine, that grows by the house side. {#Ps 128:3} The Egyptian women wear no shoes, that they might the better keep home. Of the Italian women it is said, that they are magpies at the door, saints in the church, goats in the garden, devils in the house, angels in the streets, and sirens in the windows. {a}

Ver. 12. Now she is without.] {See Trapp on "Pr 7:11"} Further observe, that the former faults—loudness of language, stubbornness against a husband's lawful commands and restraints, and this of gadding up and down to see and to be seen—albeit they be not certain signs, yet they are strong presumptions of a whorish disposition.

Ver. 13. So she caught him, and kissed him.] Strange impudence in this "strange woman," who hath not her name for nought. Potiphar's wife was such a beast; so was Messalina the empress, wife to Claudius, Joan, queen of Naples, and other prodigious strumpets, of the kind of those whom they call Borboritae. We have heard, saith a grave divine, {a} of virgins, which at first seemed modest, blushing at the motions of an honest love; who being once corrupted and debauched, have grown flexible to easy entreaties to unchastity; and from thence boldly lascivious so as to solicit others, so as to prostitute themselves to all comers; yea, as our casuists {b} complain of some Spanish stews, to an unnatural filthiness.

{b} Martin. Vivald., in Candelabro. cap. de Confes.

Ver. 14. I have peace offerings.] Sacris abutitur, ut sceleratis mos est; {a} she pretends religion to her filthy practices. So did those wicked women that lay with Eli's sons at the door of the tabernacle. {#ISA 2:22} So did King Edward IV's holy whore, as he used to call her, {b} that came to him out of a nunnery when he used to call for her. And such were those kedesheth, or common whores, so called in Hebrew, because such abomination was committed under a pretext of religion. {#Ge 38:21 De 23:17} But what an odd thing was that of David, that would not lie with Bathsheba till purified! Doth he make conscience of ceremonial, and none of moral purity?

This day have I paid my vows.] A votary then she was, by all means, and so more than ordinarily religious. So was Doeg; why else was he detained "before the Lord?" {#ISA 21:7} A Doeg may set his foot as far into God's sanctuary as a David. That many Popish votaries are no better than this housewife in the text, see the "Lisbon Nunnery," &c., besides those thousands of infants' skulls found in the fish pools by Gregory the Great.

Ver. 15. Therefore came I forth.] As having much good cheer at home, as at all peace offerings they had. Gluttony is the gallery that lustfulness walks through. {a}

Diligently to seek thy face.] Or, Thy person, not thy purse; thee, not thine do I seek. Quis credit? who belives that?

And I have found thee.] By a providence, no doubt; God must have a hand in it, or else it is marvel. "God hath given me my hire," said Leah; "because I have given my maid to my husband." {#Ge 30:18} See #1Sa 23:7 Zec 11:5.

Ver. 16. I have decked my bed.] Lest haply by being abroad so late he should question where to have a bed, she assures him of a dainty one, with curious curtains.

Ver. 17. With myrrh, aloes, &c.] This might have minded the young man that he was going to his grave; for the bodies of the dead were so perfumed. Such a meditation would have much rebated his edge, cooled his courage. Jerusalem's filthiness was "in her skirts"; and why? "She remembered not her latter end" {#La 1:9} As the strokings of a dead hand, they say, cureth a tympany; and as the ashes of a viper applied to the part that is stung draws the venom out of it, so the serious thought of death will prove death to fleshly lusts. I meet with a story {a} of one that gave a loose young man a ring with a death's head, with this condition, that he should one hour daily, for seven days together, look and think upon it, which bred a strange alteration in his life.

Ver. 18. Until the morning.] But what if death draw the curtains, and look in the while? If death do not, yet guilt will. And here beasts are more happy in carnal contentments than sensual voluptaries; for in their delights they seldom surfeit, but never sin; and so never find any cause or use for pangs of repentance, as epicures do, whose pleasure passeth, but a sting stays behind. Job calleth sparks the "sons of fire," being engendered by it upon fuel; as pleasures are the sons of men's lusts, when the object and they lie and couple together. And they are not long lived; they are but as sparks, they die as soon as begotten.

Ver. 19. For the goodman is not at home.] Heb., The man, -not my man, or my husband, &c. The very mention (how much more the presence!) of such a man might have marred the mirth.

Ver. 20. He hath taken a bag of money.] And so will not return in haste. Let not the children of this world be wiser than we: "Lay up treasure in heaven; provide yourselves bags that wax not old" {#Lu 12:33} Do as merchants, that being to travel into a far country, deliver their money here upon the exchange, that there they may receive it. Evagrius in Cedreus bequeathed three hundred pound to the poor in his will; but took a bond beforehand of Synesius the bishop for the repayment of this in another life, according to the promise of our Saviour of a hundred fold advantage.

Ver. 21. With much fair speech.] Fair words make fools fain. This Circe so enchanted the younker {a} with her fine language, that now she may do what she will with him, for he is wholly at her devotion.

{a} A young nobleman or gentleman, a youth of high rank.

Ver. 22. He goeth after her straightway.] Without any consideration of the sad consequences. Lust had blinded and besotted him, and even transformed him into a brute. Nos animas etiam incarnavimus, saith one. Many men have made their very spirit a lump of flesh, and are hurried on to hell with greatest violence. Chide them, you do but give medicine in a fit; counsel them, you do but give advice to a man that is running a race; be your counsel never so good, he cannot stay to hear you, but will be ready to answer, as Antipater did when one presented him with a book treating of happiness, he rejected it, and said ου σχολαζω, I have no leisure to read such discourses.

As an ox goeth to the slaughter.] When he thinks he goeth to the pasture; or as those oxen brought forth by Jupiter's priest, with garlands unto the gates, but it was for a slain sacrifice. {#Ac 14:13} Fatted ware are but fitted for the shambles.

Or as a fool to the correction of the stocks.] Such stocks as Paul and Silas (yet no fools) were thrust into, feet and neck also, as the word there signifieth {a} {#Ac 14:24} This the fool fears not till he feels; till his head be cooled, and his heels too till he hath slept out his drunkenness, and then he finds where he is, and must stick by it. See this exemplified in #Pr 5:11. How many such fools have we today (mori morantur quocunque sub axe morantur) that rejoice in their spiritual bondage, and dance to hell in their bolts, as one saith; nay, are weary of deliverance. They sit in the stocks when they are at prayers, and come out of the church when the tedious sermon runs somewhat beyond the hour, like prisoners out of a jail. The devil is at inn with such, saith Master Bradford; and the devil will keep holiday, as it were in hell, in respect of such, saith another.

Ver. 23. Till a dart strike through his liver, / i.e. Filthy lust, that fiery dart of the devil, pointed and poisoned (as the Scythian darts are said to be) with the gall of asps and vipers. Philosophers {a} place lust in the liver. Mathematicians subject the liver to Venus; the poets {b} complain of cupid's wounding them in that part.

“ *Cor sapit, et pulmo loquitur, fel commovit iras:
Splēn ridere facit, cogit amare iecor.*”

Or, as some sense it, Till the adulterer be, by the whore's husband or friends, or by the hand of justice, deprived of life; perhaps in the very act, as Zimri and Cozbi were by Phinehas in the very flagrancy of their lust.

{a} Plato in hepate το επιθυμητικον ponit.

{b} Horat., Ode v. lib. iv., and Ode xxv. lib. v. Ovid. Trist.

Ver. 24. Hearken now therefore.] Call up the ears of thy mind {#Lu 8:18} to the ears of thy body, that one sound may pierce both. Solomon knew well how hard it was to get ground of a raging lust, even as hard as to get ground of the sea. Hence he so sets on his exhortation.

Ver. 25. Let not thine heart.] Think not of her, lust not after her. Thoughts and affections are sibi mutuo causae. "While I mused the fire burned," {#Ps 39:3} so that thoughts kindle affections, and these cause thoughts to boil. See #Job 31:1. See therefore that evil thoughts, though they rush into the heart, yet they rest not in it.

Ver. 26. For she hath cast down many.] That have let in death at those windows of wickedness, those loop holes of lust; that have died of the wound in the eye. Aliorum perditio tua sit cautio -Seest thou another man shipwrecked, look well to thy tacklings.

Yea, many strong men have been slain by her.] The valour of man hath oft been slaved by the wiles of a woman. Witness many of your greatest martialists, who conquered countries, and were vanquished of vices, being captivarum suarum captivi. The Persian kings commanded the whole world, and were commanded by their concubines. So was Alexander, Samson, Hercules, whom some make to be the same as Samson.

Quem fera non potuit vincere, vicit hera.* ”

Ver. 27. Her house is the way to Hell.] The shortest cut to utter destruction. This, if well believed, would make the young man stop or step back, as if he had trod upon a serpent.

“ *Sed vivunt homines tanquam mors nulla sequatur:
Aut velut infernus fabula vana foret.* ”

Going down to the chambers of death.] Both temporal and eternal. Lo, those hosts that welcome men into their inn with smiling countenance will cut their throats in their beds. The syrens are said to live in green meadows, and to have by them ever a heap of dead men's bones. {a}

{a} Natal. Comes.

Ver. 1. Doth not wisdom cry?] And shall a harlot be sooner heard than she? Shall men prefer dross before gold, acorns before wheat, a swinesty before a sanctuary, dirty delights and sensual pleasures before peace that passeth all understanding, joy unspeakable and full of glory? Heathen stories {a} tell how Hercules, when he was young, was courted by Virtue on the one hand, and Pleasure on the other; but Pleasure lost her sweet words upon him; he hearkened to Virtue rather. Shall not we to Wisdom?

Put forth her voice.] In her ministers, who are criers by office, and must be earnest. {#Isa 58:1} See an instance in holy Bradford. "I beseech you," saith he, "I pray you, I desire you, I crave at your hands with all my very heart, I ask of you with hand, pen, tongue, and mind, in Christ, through Christ, for Christ, for his name, blood, mercy, power, and truth's sake, my most entirely beloved, that you admit no doubting of God's final mercies toward you," &c. {b} Here was a lusty crier indeed. And such another was Mr Perkins, of whom it is said, that in expounding the commandments, when he was catechist of Christ's College, he applied them so home to his hearers, that he made their very hearts fall down, and their hairs stand upright. {c}

Ver. 2. She standeth in the top of high places.] That is, saith an interpreter, In the lofty oracles of the patriarchs and prophets.

Ver. 3. At the entry of the city.] Heb., At the mouth; for as words go out of the mouth, so do men out of the city; only men go and come at their pleasure. Sed volat emissum semel irrevocabile verbum, {a} -A word once uttered cannot be recalled.

At the coming in at the doors.] Everywhere Christ offereth himself; hence ariseth this phrase, "My salvation is gone forth"; but to little purpose, through men's singular perverseness. Indeed if the Lord would set up a pulpit at the ale house door, they would hear more often; but since he doth not, they will run to hell as fast as they can; and if God cannot catch them, they care not, they will not return.

Ver. 4. Unto you, O men, I call.] O viri praestantes, - so some render it, O ye eminent men, whether for greatness of birth, wealth, or learning. The Pharisees and philosophers, for their learning, are called the "princes of this world." {#1Co 2:8} Sed sapientes sapienter in infernum descendunt, saith one; et potentes potenter torquebuntur, saith another. But "the world by wisdom knows not God"; {#1Co 1:21} and "not many wise men, not many mighty, not many noble are called." {#Pr 8:26} And yet they shall not want for calling, if that would do it, for "unto you, O mighty men, I call." Sed surdo plerunque fabulam, but all to little purpose, for the most part. They that lay their heads upon down pillows cannot so easily hear noises.

Courts and great places prove ill air for zeal. Divitibus ideo pietas deest, quia nihil deest. Rich men's wealth proves a hindrance to their happiness.

And my voice is to the sons of men,] i.e., To the meaner sort of people. See #Ps 49:2. These usually, like little fishes, bite more than bigger. The poor are evangelized, {a} saith our Saviour. Smyrna was the poorest, but best of the seven churches. Certain it is, that many of the meaner sort hold that they are not bound to look after Scripture matters, but that it is for rich men and scholars only to do so. We have nothing, say they, to live by but these hands. How can day labourers and poor craftsmen attend to such things? {b} The baser sort of people in Switzerland do always break the Sabbath, saying that it is only for gentlemen to keep that day. See #Jer 5:4 Joh 7:49. But Paul, a poor tent maker, could say, "Our conversation is in heaven"; and God's people are "afflicted and poor," yet "they trust in the name of the Lord." {#Zep 3:12} Who ever richer than Adam in Paradise? poorer than Job on the dunghill? Yet in Paradise Satan foiled Adam, on the dunghill Job foiled Satan. Think not that poverty can excuse from duty. Poor men also must listen to wisdom's voice, or it will be worse with them; there is yet but a beginning of their sorrows.

{b} "πως δυνασομαι χειροτεχνηςων και πενης φιλοσοφειν."—Chrysost, Hom. 22, ad Pop. Antioch.

Ver. 5. O ye simple.] If ye be not set in sin, resolved of your way, as good as ye mean to be; if yet there be any place left for persuasion.

And ye fools.] Ye that have already made your conclusion, and are wiser in your own conceit than seven men that can render a reason.

Ver. 6. I will speak of excellent things.] ηγεμονικα; ruling cases, master sentences, axioms of state, principles for princes. "I have written for them the great things of my law." {#Ho 8:12} Solomon calls the Scriptures "lords of collections," as some sense that text, #Ec 12:11.

Shall be right things.] Right for each man's particular purposes and occasions. The Scriptures are so penned, that every man may think they speak de se, in re sua {a} of him and his affairs. In all the commandments of God, there is so much rectitude and good reason, could we but see it, that if God did not command them, yet it were our best way to practise them.

{a} Athanas.

Ver. 7. For my month shall speak truth.] Heb., Shall meditate truth; i.e., I will neither speak falsely nor rashly, but upon due deliberation and undoubted certainty. See my "True Treasure," p. 122.

Ver. 8. All the words.] The Rabbis have a saying, that there is a mountain of sense hanging upon every tittle of the Scriptures.

There is nothing froward or perverse in them.] Some places of Scripture may seem to cross other places, but they do only seem so. Men may think they are like the accusers of Christ, never a one speaking like the other; but those that understand them shall find them like Nathan and Bathsheba, both speaking the same things. The old Rabbis could not reconcile Ecclesiastes (some passages in it) to the rest of the Holy Scriptures, and had therefore some thoughts to conceal it from the people {a} But this was their weakness, and would have been their wickedness.

Ver. 9. They are all plain to him that understandeth.] Plain in things necessary to salvation; for as all duties, so all truths do not concern all men. God doth not expect or require that every man should be a doctor in the chair; but those points that direct to duty here, and salvation hereafter, are clear, express, and obvious to them that desire to understand them; for some there are, qui ut liberius peccent, libenter ignorant. {a} It was a smart answer which M. Durant, a witty and learned minister of the Reformed Church of Paris, gave to a lady of suspected chastity, and now revolted: when she pretended the hardness of the Scripture, Why, said he, madam, what can be more plain than "Thou shalt not commit adultery?" Had she not been failing in the practice of what she could not but know, she had found no cause to complain of the difficulty of that which she could not know.

Ver. 10. Receive mine instruction, and not money.] That is, Rather than money; as, "I will have mercy, and not sacrifice"—that is, rather than sacrifice. Knowledge of the Scriptures is the greatest riches. "Let the word of Christ dwell richly in you." {#Col 3:16} The Corinthians were enriched in all knowledge. {#1Co 1:5} Plato gave three hundred florins for a book that he liked. {a} Dionysius said that Aristippus was always craving money from him, but Plato desired nothing but books. What spending of money and lavishing out of the bag is there for human learning! And yet Aristotle himself could say, that a little knowledge, though but conjectural, about heavenly things, is to be preferred above much knowledge, though certain, about inferior things.

Ver. 11. For wisdom is better than rubies.] {See Trapp on "Pr 3:15"}

Ver. 12. I wisdom dwell with prudence.] I draw all into practice, and teach men to prove by their own experience, what "that good, and holy, and acceptable will of God is." {#Ro 12:2} Of the most that would be held knowing men, it may well be said, as Cicero says the proverb went of the Athenians, that they used their wisdom as men do artificial teeth, for show only, and that they did scire quae recta sunt, sed facere nolle, know what was right, but had no mind to do accordingly. Socrates said there was no difference between σοφία and σωφροσύνη—wisdom and prudence or moderation, since he that knows good things, to do them, and evil things, to avoid them, is to be held a wise man, and none else. {a}

And find out knowledge of witty inventions.] Tending to piety; not those toilsome toys, sophismata, quae nec ignorantibus nocent, nec scientibus iuvant, {b} that are hard to come by, but of no use or worth, proof or profit. These are but laborious loss of time, {c} as Aristotle hath it; like an olive, or datestone, hard to crack the one, or cleave the other, but nothing, or nothing worth aught, when cracked or cloven, within either. Wisdom finds her scholars somewhat else to do than to be so busily idle. Witty she allows them to be, but not wittily wicked, not wise to do evil, inventors of evil, or idle things. "Walk circumspectly," saith she, "not as fools, but as wise, redeeming the time, understanding what the will of the Lord is,"

{#Eph 5:15-17} and putting it in speedy execution. "Keep therefore and do it, for this is your wisdom." {#De 4:6} {See Trapp on "De 4:6"} This will speak you far more witty than those wits of the world, who "seek out many inventions," {#Ec 7:28} but all to no purpose, and "become vain in their imaginations, their foolish heart being darkened." {#Ro 1:21}

Ver. 13. The fear of the Lord.] Which is a high point of heavenly wisdom, {#Pr 1:7} to the praise whereof this therefore appertaineth. There are those who make this verse an explanation of the former, thus: I find out the knowledge of witty inventions, such as are the fear of the Lord, the hatred of evil, yea, of inward evils, as pride, arrogancy, &c. Odi fastum istius Ecclesiae. I hate the pride of that Romish Church, said Basil, long since. "I hate vain thoughts; but thy law do I love." {#Ps 119:113} "I hate and abhor lying." {#Ps 119:163} "Yea, I hate every false way," both in myself and others. {#Ps 119:104} "Thou hatest the works of the Nicolaitans, which I also hate." {#Re 2:6} God's people partake of the Divine nature, and so have God-like both sympathies and antipathies. They not only leave sin, but loathe it, and are at deadly feud with it. They purge themselves—by this clean fear of God {#Ps 19:7} -from all pollutions, not of flesh only, worldly lusts, and gross evils, but of spirit also, that lie more up in the heart of the country, as pride, arrogance, &c., so "perfecting holiness in the fear of God." {#2Co 7:1} There may be some kind of pride in sincerity, and of humility in hypocrisy. But hypocrisy's humility is followed with pride, and sincerity's pride with humility. This latter humility is the better. And here only it is seemly for virtue to come behind vice. Hypocrisy is proud because it is humble; sincerity is humble because it is proud.

And the evil way.] That is, Custom of committing sin. Viam pro frequentatione accipiunt Hebraei. And this the godly man doth, not that he may appear to do so, sed quia aliter facere non potuit -as one {a} falsely and flatteringly said of Cato—but because having his heart seasoned with this holy fear, he can do no otherwise.

Ver. 14. Counsel is mine, &c.] Christ is "wise in heart, and mighty in strength," {#Job 9:4} his Church's both counsellor {#Isa 9:6} and champion; {#Isa 37:23,24} and though she be but a "virgin daughter of Zion," yet she despiseth her adversary, and laughs him to scorn, {#Pr 8:22} because she hath one that is in love with her, and will fight her quarrel, who is

Hostibus haud tergo sed forti pectore notus. {b}

{b} De Achille Catullus.

Ver. 15. By me kings reign.] How, then, can the schoolmen defend Thomas Aquinas in that paradox, Dominium et praelatio introducta sunt ex iure humane; {a} dominion and government is of man? This crosseth the apostle, {#Ro 13:1,2} and the wisest of the heathens. {b}

{a} Thomas Aquinas, II. 2, Quest. 10, Art. 10.

Ver. 16. And nobles.] So called in the original, from their liberality and bounty. Hence {#Lu 22:25} this word is expressed by Ευεργεται, Bountiful, or benefactors, such as are ingenuous, free, munificent, endued with that free princely spirit. {#Ps 51:14}

Even all the judges of the earth.] Though haply they be reckoned in the rank of bad men, but good princes; such as was Galba, and our Richard III, and Trajan, much magnified for a good emperor, and yet a drunkard and a cruel persecutor. {a}

{a} Plin. Secund. Dion. Cass.

Ver. 17. I love them that love me.] The philosopher could say, that if moral virtue could be seen with mortal eyes, she would stir up wonderful loves of herself in the hearts of the beholders. How much more, then, would the "wisdom of God in a mystery!," {#1Co 2:7} that essential wisdom of God especially, the Lord Jesus, who is totus desiderabilis, "altogether lovely," {#So 5:16} "the desire of all nations," {#Hag 2:7} whom whosoever loveth not deserves to be doubly accursed. {#1Co 15:22} My love was crucified, {a} said Ignatius, who "loved not his life unto the death." {#Re 12:11} Neither was there any love lost, or can be, for "I love them that love me." "And if any man love me, my Father will love him, and I will love him, and will manifest myself unto him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him." {#Joh 14:21,23} Men do not always reciprocate, nor return love for love. "For my love they are mine adversaries; yea, they have rewarded me hatred for my love." {#Ps 109:4,5} David lost his love upon Absalom; Paul upon the Corinthians; old Andronicus, the Greek emperor, upon his graceless nephew of the same name. But here is no such danger. It shall not be easy for any man to outlove wisdom. For,

(Objection.) Whereas some one might reply, You are so taken up with states, and have such great suitors, kings, princes, nobles, judges, {as #Pr 8:15,16} that it is not for mean men to look for any love from you; —

(Solution.) Not so, saith wisdom, for "I love them that love me," be they never so much below me. "Grace be with all them that love the Lord Jesus in sincerity." {#Eph 6:23} Tantum velis, et Deus tibi praeoccurret, saith Nazianzen. Ambulas, si amas: non enim passibus ad Deum, sed affectibus curritur, saith Augustine. Thou walkest if thou lovest; thou actest if thou affectest.

They that seek me early.] As students sit close to it in the morning. Aurora rousis amica.

{a} Ο ερος μου εσταυρωται.

Ver. 18. Riches and honour are with me.] I come not unaccompanied, but bring with me that which is well worth having. The muses, though Jupiter's daughters, and well deserving, yet are said to have had no suitors, because they had no portions. Our Henry VIII, when he died, gave his two daughters, Mary and Elizabeth, but ten thousand pounds apiece. {a} But this lady is largely endowed, and yet—such is men's dulness—she is put to solicit suitors, by setting forth her great wealth. {See Trapp on "Mt 6:33"}

{a} England's Elisabeth.

Ver. 19. My fruit is better than gold.] This wisdom is as those two golden pipes {#Zec 4:12} through which the two olive branches do empty out of themselves the golden oils of all precious graces into the candlestick, the Church; hence grace is here called "fruits," and "pleasant fruits," {#So 4:16} and "fruits of the Spirit." {#Ga 5:22}

Ver. 20. I lead in the way of righteousness.] Which is to say, I got not my wealth per fas atque nefas, by right and wrong, by wretch and wile. My riches are not the riches of unrighteousness, "the mammon of iniquity"; {#Lu 16:9} but are honestly come by, and are therefore like to be "durable," {#Pr 8:18} or, as others render it, ancient. St Jerome somewhere saith, that most rich men are either themselves bad men, or heirs of those that have been bad. There is a profane proverb among us, Happy is that child whose father goes to the devil! It is reported of Nevessan the lawyer, that he should say, He that will not venture his body, shall never be valiant; he that will not venture his soul, never rich. But wisdom's walk lies not any such way. God forbid, saith she, that I, or any of mine, should take of Satan, "from a thread even to a shoe latchet, lest he should say, I have made you rich." {#Ge 14:23}

Ver. 21. To inherit substance.] Heb., That which is; that which hath some tack or substance in it, some firmity, or solid consistency. "Wilt thou set thine eyes upon that which is not?" Outward things are not, but only in opinion, in imagination; in semblance, not in substance. The pomp of this world is but a fancy, {#Ac 25:23} the glory of it a conceit, {#Mt 4:8} the whole fashion of it a mere notion. {#ICo 7:31} Riches get them great eagles' "wings, they fly away," {#Pr 23:5} without once taking leave of the owner, leaving nothing but the print of their talons in his heart to torment him. When we grasp them most greedily, we embrace nothing but smoke, which wrings tears from our eyes, and vanisheth into nothing. Only true grace is "durable substance"; the "things above" outlast the days of heaven, and run parallel with the life of God, and line of eternity.

Ver. 22. The Lord possessed me.] Not created me, {a} as the Arians out of the Septuagint pressed it, to prove Christ a creature.

Before his works of old.] Heb., Ante opera sua, ante tunc; id est, priusquam quis dicere potest tunc; before there was any either now or then; before all time, therefore from all eternity. For whatsoever was before the world and time, that was created with the world, must needs be eternal.

Ver. 23. I was set up.] Coronata sum; I was crowned; so some render it. Inuncta fui, I was anointed—so others—for king, priest, and prophet of my Church. And to this high honour I grew not up by degrees, but had it presently from before all beginnings.

Ver. 24. When there were no depths.] In mentioning God's works of creation, some observe here, that wisdom proceeds from the lower elements to the superior and heavenly bodies: she begins with the earth, {#Pr 8:23} goes on here to the waters, and so to the air, called streets, rendered "fields," {#Pr 8:26} that is, the vast element of the air; which compared with the far less elements of earth and water, must needs seem exceedingly large, spacious, and open, as streets, or fields. Lastly, by "the highest part of the dust of the world," the Hebrew doctors understand the element of fire. Iudicium sit penes lectorem: let the reader judge.

Ver. 25. Was I brought forth.] Or, Begotten. Thus wisdom describes her eternity in human words and expressions, for our better apprehension. Which while Arius either knew not, or weighed not, he herehence took occasion to oppose the Deity of our Saviour, and to propagate that damnable error in the Eastern Churches, to the ruin of many souls. This arch-heretic Arius sitting on the stool to ease nature at Constantinople, voided there his entrails. And now Mohammedanism is there as the excrement of Arius.

Ver. 26. Nor the fields, nor the highest.] {See Trapp on "Pr 8:24"}

Ver. 27. When he prepared the heavens.] Or, Caused them to be prepared, took order to have it done, viz., by me, who was with him, and "by whom he made the worlds." {#Heb 1:3 Joh 1:3 Col 1:16} "For the Father loveth the Son, and hath put all things into his hand." {#Joh 3:35}

When he set a compass.] Or, Drew a circle round about the earth, meaning the outspread firmament of heaven. {#Ge 1:6} Howbeit the Hebrews understand it of the world of angels, called by them the third world, or the third heaven; whereunto St Paul also seems to allude in #2Co 12:2.

Ver. 28. When he established the clouds above.] That they might be kept there, as it were in tuns and bottles, till he would have them to pour down their dew, or rain.

Ver. 29. When he appointed the foundations.] That it should remain unmoveable, though it hang in the air, as it were by geometry.

“ Terra pilae similis nullo fulcimine nixa, Aere suspenso tam grave pendet onus.”—Ovid.

Ver. 30. Then I was by him.] Accursed then for ever be that blasphemous assertion of the Arians, ἦν ὅταν οὐκ ἦν, There was a time when he was not. This scripture, so much abused by them, makes utterly against them. But heretics pervert the Scriptures, saith St Peter. {#2Pe 3:15} A metaphor from those who put a man upon the rack, and make him speak that which he never thought. Tertullian calls Marcion the heretic, Mus Ponticus, because of his arrodng {a} and gnawing the Scripture, to make it serviceable to his errors.

As one brought up with him.] Or, As a nourisher; that is, as a maintainer and upholder of that his excellent workmanship of creation. {#Heb 1:3} The Septuagint render it, I was with him making all fine and trim, Eram apud eum aptans; {b} so Irenaeus.

Rejoicing always.] Or, Laughing {c} with him. This, as the very Jews are forced to confess, doth notably set forth that unspeakable sweetness and joy that the blessed God findeth in the apprehension of his own wisdom, which, say they, is one and the same with God himself.

{c} More pueri qui alatur, et risum captans ac concilians. -Mercer.

Ver. 31. Rejoicing in the habitable part.] That is, In the human nature, wherein the fulness of the Godhead dwelt bodily, by means of the hypostatical union. Or, In the saints, whose hearts the Lord Christ inhabiteth by faith. Or, In the work of creation, which Christ did without either tools or tool.

Ver. 32. Now therefore hearken unto me.] Audite senem iuvenes, said Augustus to his seditious soldiers, and had audience: and shall not wisdom, that is so ancient, as before the creation, so eminent, as to make and conserve a world, so gracious with the Father, shall not she be hearkened to?

For blessed are they.] And blessedness is the mark that every man shoots at.

Ver. 33. Hear instruction, and be wise.] This way wisdom enters into the soul. Hear, therefore, for else there is no hope; hear, howsoever. Augustine, coming to Ambrose to have his ears tickled, had his heart touched.

Ver. 34. Waiting at the posts of my doors.] At the schools and synagogues, say the Hebrews, where men should come in with the first, and go forth with the last, as doorkeepers do, which was the office that David desired. {#Ps 84:10}

Ver. 35. For whoso findeth me, findeth life.] Lest any man should hold it too hard a task to wait at wisdom's gates—as princes' guards, or as the Levites did in the temple—she tells them what they shall have for so doing.

And shall obtain favour.] Which is better than life. God's favour is no empty favour; it is not like the winter's sun, that casts a goodly countenance when it shines, but gives little heat or comfort. As air lights not without the sun, nor wood heats without fire, so neither can anything yield comfort without God's favour.

Ver. 36. Wrongeth his own soul.] Rapit animam suam. He plunders his own soul of its happiness; yea, he cruelly cuts the throat thereof, being ambitious of his own destruction.

Ver. 1. Wisdom.] Heb., Wisdoms, in the plural; and this, either honoris causa, for honour's sake, or else by an ellipsis, as if the whole of it were "wisdom of wisdoms," as "the song of songs," for a most excellent song. {#So 1:1} Junius renders it, Summa sapientia. Highest wisdom. {See Trapp on "Pr 1:20"}

Hath builded her house.] That is, The Church. {#1Ti 3:15} {See Trapp on "Pr 1:20"}

She hath hewn out her seven pillars] Pillars, and polished pillars. Anything is good enough to make up a mud wall; but the Church's pillars are of marble, and those not rough, but hewn; her safety is accompanied with beauty.

Ver. 2. She hath killed her beasts.] Christ provideth for his the best of the best, "fat things full of marrow, wines on the lees," {#Isa 25:6} his own "flesh, which is meat indeed, his own blood, which is drink indeed," {#Joh 6:55} besides that continual feast of a good conscience, whereat the holy angels, saith Luther, are as cooks and butlers, and the blessed Trinity joyful guests.

She hath mingled her wine.] That it may not inflame or distemper. Christ spake "as the people were able to hear," lisping to them in their own low language. So must all his ministers, accommodating themselves to the meanest capacities. Mercer's note here is, Cam sobrietate tractandae Scripturae, The Scriptures are to be handled with sobriety.

She hath also furnished her table.] So that it even sweats with variety of precious provisions wherewith her guests are daily and daintily fed. Mr Latimer says, that the assurance of salvation is the desert of this stately feast. But what a dolt was Cardinal Bobba, who, speaking in commendation of the library of Bonony—which being in an upper room, hath under it a victualling house, and under that a wine cellar—had thought he had hit it in applying thereunto this text, Wisdom hath built her a house, hath mingled her wine, and furnished her table! {a}

{a} Angel. Roccha in Vatican, p. 395.

Ver. 3. She hath sent forth her maidens.] So ministers are called—in prosecution of the allegory, for it is fit that this great lady should have suitable attendants—to teach them innocence, purity, and sedulity as maidens, keeping the word in sincerity, and not adulterating and corrupting it, as vintners oft do their wines, or hucksters their wares. Hence Isaiah also putteth the prophets and evangelists in the feminine gender, Mebashereth {#Isa 52:7}

She crieth upon, &c.] She, together with her maids, crieth; she puts not off all the business to them, but hath a hand in it herself. We are workers together with God, saith Paul.

Ver. 4. Whoso is simple.] And with it persuadable; that have not yet contracted that callum obductum, corneas fibras, brawny breasts, horny heart strings.

She saith to him.] It is Christ, then, that speaketh in his ministers: "He that heareth you heareth me." "Ye received it not as the word of man, but as it is indeed, the word of the ever living God."

Ver. 5. Come, eat of my bread.] Stand not off in a sinful modesty; say not, I am not worthy, &c., but "Come," for "the Master calls you," as they said to the blind man, who therefore came. And those recusant guests, by not coming when invited, might "not taste" of Christ's supper; for they were unworthy. {#Mt 22:1-7}

And drink of the wine which I have mingled.] Lo, here a full feast, not a dry feast! Lyrannus noteth on this chapter, that the Eucharist was anciently delivered in both kinds: but because of the danger of spilling the blood, the Church ordained that laymen should have the bread only. The Council of Constance comes in with a non obstante against Christ's institution, withholding the cup from the sacrament. {a}

Ver. 6. Forsake the foolish.] No coming to this feast in the tattered rags of the old Adam; you must relinquish your former evil courses and companies. There are those who read the words thus, "Forsake, O foolish ones—viz., your own ways—and live."

And go in the way of understanding.] Renounce your vices, and practise the contrary graces. True repentance stands in an entire change of the whole man, from all that is evil to all that is good.

Ver. 7. He that reproveth a scorner.] This, with the three next verses, may seem to come in by way of parenthesis; and they do not obscurely intimate what manner of hearers ministers mostly meet with—viz., such as our Saviour did, -"But the Pharisees that were covetous, derided," {#Lu 16:14} or blew their noses at him, εἰς ἐμὸν κτηρῖον, as one renders it, -and such as long before him the prophet Isaiah did, {#Isa 28:10} "Precept upon precept, line upon line." One observeth that that was a scoff put upon the prophet; and is as if they should say, Here is nothing but line upon line, precept upon precept. The very sound of the words in the original—Zau le zau, kau lakau—carries a taunt, as scornful people by the tone of their voice, and rhyming words, scorn at such as they despise.

Ver. 8. Reprove not a scorner.] See my "Commonplace of Admonition." Look how dogs prefer loathsome carrion before the sweetest odours, and would fly in the faces of such as would drive them from it: so is it here.

And he will love thee.] When he hath well considered he will, though, for present, he may seem to do otherwise; as Ass swaggered with the prophet, and put him in prison. We read in the ecclesiastical history that Agapetus, bishop of Rome, being sent by Theodatus, king of Goths, to Constantinople on an embassy to Justinian, and having obtained a peace, he was earnestly entreated by the emperor to subscribe and confirm the heresy of Eutyches. This when he utterly refused to do, the emperor threatened him in case he did not. Agapetus thereto boldly replied—I had a desire to wait upon Justinian, whom I took to be a most pious prince; but now I perceive him to be a most violent persecutor, a second Dioclesian. With this free reproof, and God's blessing with it, Justinian was so wrought upon, that he presently embraced the true faith, and banishing bishop Anthemius, a great propagator of the Eutychian heresy, he set up Menna, an orthodox divine, in his room, whom Agapetus consecrated, if Platina may be believed. {a} David loved Nathan the better while he lived for dealing so plainly with him, and named him a commissioner for the declaring of his successor. {#1Ki 1:32-35} So Alipius loved Augustine for reprovng him.

Ver. 9. Give admonition to a wise man.] This is an alms that the poorest may give, and be never the poorer, but the better. For by instructing another, a man engageth himself, lest he hear, "Physician heal thyself." Turpe est doctori, cum culpa redarguit ipsum. See my "Common Place of Admonition."

Ver. 10. The fear of the Lord.] {See Trapp on "Pr 1:7"} Here it is given as a reason why wise men are the better for sharp and seasonable admonition, because the fear of the Lord is in them. This makes them, when they are reprov'd of all, "fall upon their faces, worship God, and say, God is in you of a truth." {#1Co 14:26} What shall we say unto my lord? What shall we speak? How shall we justify ourselves? "God hath found out the iniquity of thy servants," &c. {#Ge 44:16}

And the knowledge of the holy.] That is, Of the holy God. Holy is here in the plural number, importing the Trinity of Persons, as likewise #Jos 24:19. Howbeit we may well take in here holy angels and saints, whose kingdom is in Daniel said to be the same with the kingdom of God, {#Da 7:22,27} and whose knowledge is the right understanding of God's will revealed in his word.

Ver. 11. For by me thy days.] This verse depends upon #Pr 9:6. {See Trapp on "Pr 9:7"} Those that embrace wisdom shall be paid for their pains, either in money or money's worth. Either they shall die, as Abraham did, with a good gray head; or else, with Josiah, they shall live long in a little time, and then live for ever in heaven. Enoch had the shortest life of any of the ten patriarchs; but then he was recompensed in the longest life of his son Methuselah, but especially in that "God took him" to glory. Besides, that though he departed the world soon, yet fulfilled he much time, as Mr Hooker hath it. {a}

And the years of thy life shall be increased.] Heb., They shall increase the years of thy life. That is, They that survive thee shall perpetuate thy memory, thy good name shall never die. Some live to be their own executors for their good name; and yet they see them, not honestly, buried before themselves die; nay, many are as those in #Job 27:15,23, hissed and kicked off this stage of the world, buried before they are half dead. There is scarce a vicious man, whose name is not rotten before his carcase. On the other side, a good man's name is oftentimes the heir to his life. Or if obscured for a time, as the martyrs were, yet as the sun breaks through the cloud that masketh it, so God shall "bring forth their righteousness as the light, and their judgment as the noonday." {#Ps 37:6}

Ver. 12. If thou be wise, thou shalt.] The benefit shall be thine own. Plutarch reports of the palm tree that it yields to the Babylonians three hundred and sixty different commodities, and is therefore in great esteem among them. How should men esteem of sound wisdom, since there is a μυριομακαριότης in it, {#1Ti 4:8} a thousand commodities to be reaped by it!

Thou alone shalt bear it.] Thy scorning shall not, as thou thinkest, hurt him that tendereth thy salvation. For as the air when beaten is not hurt, no, nor so much as divided, but returns to his place and becomes thicker, Ita animus recti conscius, et ad optima erectus, non admittit irradientium flatus, nec sentit, saith one; so an honest heart, set for heaven, slights the contempts of graceless persons, and pities them that jeer when they should fear, as much as good Lot once did his profane sons-in-law. His words to such are like those of the prophet, "Be not ye mockers, lest your bands be increased." {#Isa 28:22,10 Pr 9:7}

Ver. 13. A foolish woman is clamorous.] This woman is "folly," as that woman sitting in the ephah is "wickedness." {#Zec 5:7} Lavater is of the opinion, that as by wisdom is meant Christ, so by this foolish woman here is meant antichrist, to whom therefore he finally fitteth and applieth all the following words.

Is clamorous.] Folly is full of words, and of a lavish tongue; her factors are extremely talkative, and usually lay on more words than the matter will bear. A great deal of small talk you shall usually have from them. "A fool also is full of words," saith Solomon; {#Ec 10:14} and this fond custom of his is there expressed by way of imitation in his vain tautologies, "A man cannot tell what shall be; and what shall be after him, who can tell?" {#Ec 10:14} The basest things are ever the most plentiful. Some kind of mice breed a hundred and twenty young ones in one nest; whereas the lion and elephant bear but one at once; so the least wit yields the most words. Aristophanes and Lucian, when they describe fools, they call them κεχηιωτας—gapers, or open-mouthed. Guiltiness is ever clamorous, and the most lewd are most loud. {#Ac 7:27,28}

Ver. 14. For she sitteth at the door.] In a harlot's habit, to see and be seen; the guise and garb of harlots. Cicero wittily compareth the Greek tongue to an ambitious strumpet, quae multo luxu superfluat, which overlasheth in too much bravery; but the Latin tongue to an honest and modest matron, cui nihil deest quod ad honestum pertineat mundiciem, that wants nothing pertaining to a necessary neatness. Such a like comparison between wisdom and folly is here made by Solomon.

Ver. 15. That go right on their way.] She fights at the fairest, seeks to seduce the forwardest. "They shall deceive, if it were possible, the very elect." {#Mt 24:24} Flies settle upon the sweetest perfumes when they are cold, and corrupt them.

Ver. 16. Who is simple.] Wisdom's own words. {#Pr 9:4} Take heed, saith our Saviour; they come unto you "in sheep's clothing"; {#Mt 7:15} but trust them not, for "with fair words and flattering speeches they deceive the hearts of the simple" {#Ro 16:18} Samuel himself could not have spoken more gravely, severely, divinely to Saul, than the fiend at Endor did. When the devil himself puts on gravity and religion, who can marvel at the hypocrisy of men?

Ver. 17. Stolen waters are sweet.] Forbidden pleasures are most pleasing to sensualists, who count no mirth but madness; no pleasure, unless they may have the devil to their playfellow. Venison is nothing so sweet, they say, as when it is stolen.

“ *Quod licet ingratum est; quod non licet, acrius urit:
Sic interdictis imminet aeger aquis.*”—Ovid.

Men long to be meddling with the murdering morsels of sin, which nourish not, but rent and consume the belly that receives them. Many eat on earth that which they digest in hell. {a}

{a} In terris manducant quod apud inferos digerant. -Augustine.

Ver. 18. That the dead are there.] {See Trapp on "Pr 2:18"} {See Trapp on "Pr 7:27"}

Ver. 1. The Proverbs.] Properly so called. See #Pr 1:1. For the nine former chapters are a kind of common places, or continued discourses premised as a preface to these ensuing wise and grave sentences, tending much to the information of the mind and reformation of the manners, and containing things profitable for all sorts of people. They are not unfitly compared by a divine to a bag full of sweet and fragrant spices, which shuffled or shaken together, or taken single, yield a sweet odour; or to stars in the firmament, each in itself glorious and independent of another, yet all receive their light from the sun.

A wise son maketh a glad father.] Children are certain cares, but uncertain comforts. {a} Every son should be an Abner, that is, his father's light; and every daughter an Abigail, her father's joy. Eve promised herself much in her Cain, and David did the like in his

Absalom. Sed, fallitur augurio spes bona saepe suo, - they were both deceived. Samuel succeeds Eli in his cross, as well as his place, though not in his sin; and had cause enough to call his untoward children, as Augustus did, tres vomicas, tria carcinomata, - so many ulcerous sores, mattery imposthumes. {b} Virtue is not as lands, inheritable. All that is traduced with the seed is either evil, or not good. Let parents labour to mend by education what they have marred by propagation; and when they have done all, pray "God persuade Japhet," lest else they be put to wish one day, as Augustus did, Oh that I had never married, or never had children! {c} And let children cheer up their parents, as Joseph, Samuel, and Solomon did; and as Epaminondas, who was wont to say, Se longe maximum suarum laudum fructum capere quod earum spectatores haberet parentes, {d} -that he joyed in nothing more than that his parents were yet alive, to take comfort in his brave achievements; for otherwise God will take them in hand, as he did Abimelech, to whom he "rendered the wickedness done to his father"; {#Jud 9:5} and as he did Absalom, whom he trussed up in the height of his rebellious practices with his own immediate hand; or else he will punish them in and by their posterity, which shall either be none (#Pr 20:20, compared with #2Sa 14:7), or worse than none; as he who, when his aggrieved father complained that never man had so undutiful a child as he had, Yes, said his son (with less grace than truth), my grandfather had. {e}

The heaviness of his mother.] The mother is mentioned (though the father haply as heavy) first, as most faulted if her children miscarry; {#Pr 24:15} next, as most slighted by them; {#Pr 15:20} and lastly, as most impatient of such an affliction. Rebekah was weary of her life by reason of the daughters of Heth brought in to her by Esau. {#Ge 27:46} If they lie idle at home, mothers have the misery of it; if they do worse abroad, the worst is made of it to the mother at home by fame, that loud liar.

{c} Sueton, cap. 6.

{d} Corn. Nepos.

{e} Mr Fuller's Holy State.

Ver. 2. Treasures of wickedness.] Our Saviour calls it "Mammon of iniquity," {#Lu 16:9} that next odious name to the devil. Most men's care is how to grasp and get wealth for their children— rem rem, quocunque modo rem. Virtus post nummos, &c. But what saith a grave author? {a} "Better leave thy child a wallet to beg from door to door, than a cursed hoard of evil gotten goods." There is for the most part lucrura in arca, damnum in conscientia, {b} -gain in the purse, but loss in the conscience.

But righteousness delivereth from death.] Piety, though poor, delivereth from the second death, and from the first too, as to the evil of it. For as Christ took away the guilt of sin, not sin itself, so he hath taken away, not death, but the sting of death from all believers, making it to such of a curse a blessing; of a punishment, a benefit; of a trap door to hell, a portal to heaven; a postern to let out temporal life, but a street door to let in eternal life.

Ver. 3. The Lord will not suffer the soul of the righteous.] That refuseth to enrich himself by evil arts, and to rise by wicked principles. For it might be objected, If I strain not my conscience, I may starve for it. Fear not that, saith the wise man; faith fears not famine. Necessaries thou shall be sure of; {#Ps 37:25,26 34:15} superfluities thou art not to stand upon {a} {#1Ti 6:8} The Hebrews by "righteousness" in the former verse understand alms deeds, as #Da 4:24,27 {See Trapp on "Mt 7:1"} and so the sense here may be. The righteous, though he give much to the poor, shall be never the poorer, since not getting, but giving, is the way to thrive. See my "Common Place of Alms."

But he casteth away the substance of the wicked.] For either they lose it, or live beside it, and are little the better for it. "He that getteth riches, and not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days, and in his end be a fool." {#Jer 17:11} God will make a poor fool of him quickly. {b} And the like may be said of the illiberal and tenacious person. {See Trapp on "Pr 3:27"} Niggards fear to lose their wealth by giving, but fear not to lose their wealth, and souls, and all, by keeping it.

Ver. 4. He becometh poor.] Lest any should say, If God do all, we need do the less. Doing you must be, saith the wise man, or else the beggar will catch you by the back. Labour also you must with your hands, "working the thing that is good, that ye may have to give to him that needeth." {#Eph 4:28}

But the hand of the diligent.] Or, Of the nimble; that do motitare, saith Kimchi, are active and agile; that will lose nothing for looking after, but take care of smallest matters that all go right, being frugal and parsimonious of time, husbanding the opportunity of thriving and plenty. How did Boaz follow the business himself. How were his eyes in every corner, on the servants, and on the reapers, yea, on the gleaners too. He doth even lodge in the midst of his husbandry, {#Ru 2:4-14 3:7,14} as knowing well the truth of that proverbial sentence, Procul a villa sua dissitus iactura vicinus, {a} -He that is far from his business, is not far from loss.

Ver. 5. He that gathereth in summer.] A well chosen season is the greatest advantage of any action, which, as it is seldom found in haste, so it is too often lost in delay. The men of Issachar were in great account with David, because "they had understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do," and when to do it; {#1Ch 12:32} so are they in great account with God for their wisdom who observe and use the season of well doing.

But he that sleepeth in harvest,] i.e., That lets slip his opportunity; as Plutarch writes of Hannibal, that when he could have taken Rome he would not, when he would he could not. And as it is told of Charles, king of Sicily and Jerusalem, that he was called Carolus Cuncator, Charles the Lingerer, not (in the sense as Fabius) because he stayed till opportunity came, but because he stayed till opportunity was lost.

Ver. 6. Blessings are upon the head.] Plentifully and conspicuously; they shall abound with blessings. {#Pr 28:20} As the fear of the Lord is not only in them, but upon them, {#2Ch 19:7} so blessings of all sorts, a confluence of all spiritual and temporal comforts and contentments, shall be not only with them, but upon them, so that nothing shall hinder it. See #Ga 6:16. They are blessed, and they shall be blessed, {#Ge 27:33} neither shall any roaring or repining Esau be able to reverse it.

But violence covereth the mouth of the wicked.] They shall be certainly shamed, condemned, executed, as Haman, whose face they covered, {#Es 7:8} and shortly after strangled; and as Sir Gervaise Ellowayes, lieutenant of the Tower, hanged on Tower Hill for poisoning Sir Thomas Overbury, his prisoner. This Sir Gervaise being on the gallows, freely confessed that he had oft, in his playing at cards and dice, wished that he might be hanged if it were not so and so, and therefore confessed it was just upon him.

Ver. 7. The memory of the just is blessed.] "Demetrius had a good report of the truth." {#3Jo 12} In the Hebrew tongue the same word signifieth "a good name," and "a blessing." This is one of those blessings mentioned in #Pr 10:6, that shall be heaped upon holy men. "Holy and reverend is his name." {#Ps 111:9} How comes God's name to be "reverend," but by being "holy?" Be good, and do good, so shall thy name be heir to thy life; yea, when thou art laid in thy grave, thy stock remains, goes forward, and shall do till the day of doom.

But the name of the wicked shall rot.] And stink as putrefied flesh. Hypocrites then must be detected, though they carry it never so clearly; how else shall they be detested, and stink above ground Simon Magus so handled the matter, that Philip mistook him for a believer, and baptized him; but Peter soon smelt him out, and laid him open in his colours. "He that perverteth his ways shall be known"; {#Pr 10:9} "The Lord shall lead them forth with the workers of iniquity," for all their cunning contrivances. {#Ps 125:5}

Ver. 8. The wise in heart shall receive commandment,] i.e., Submit to God's holy word without replies and cavils. This is check to the brave gallants of our age, which exercise their ripe heads and fresh wits in wrestling with the truth of God, and take it for a glory to give it a foil. The Athenians encountered with Paul, and had argument for argument against him, that Christ was not the Saviour of the world, that he was not risen from the dead, &c. This shewed they were not wise in heart, though reckoned chief among the world's wizards.

But a prating fool shall fall.] Or, Be beaten. Such a fool was Diotrefes, who prated or trifled {φλναρει, #3Jo 10} against St John with malicious words, and might have been therefore surnamed Nugax, as Rodulphus, that succeeded Anselm in the see of Canterbury, was.

Ver. 9. He that walketh uprightly, walketh surely.] Because, keeping within God's precincts, he keeps under his protection: as the king undertakes to secure him that travels the highway, and between sun and sun. He is tutus sub umbra leonis, safe under the hollow of God's hand, "under the shadow of his wing." {#Ps 91:1}

Shall be known.] All shall out to his utter disgrace. See #Pr 10:7. Or, He shall be known by some exemplary judgment of God inflicted upon him, for a terror to others; as one that is hanged up in gibbets.

Ver. 10. He that winketh with the eye.] That is, Loath to stand to those truths that shall bring him to suffering. Or, He that winketh wiles; for all winking is not condemned. See #Joh 13:34.

Causeth sorrow,] scil., To his own heart sinneth against his own soul: or causeth sorrow, i.e., sin; for so sorrow is taken for sin. {#Ec 11:10}

But a prating fool shall fall.] He that runs himself upon needless danger shall come to ruin. See #Pr 28:25. {See Trapp on "Pr 10:8"}

Ver. 11. The mouth of a righteous man is a well of life.] Vena vitae os iusti. A fountain runs after it hath run, so doth a good man's mouth incessantly utter the "words of truth and soberness," {#Ac 25:26} more perennis aquae. See the reason hereof: {#Ps 37:30,31} the "law of his God is in his heart," that "law of his mind," {#Ro 7:23} that counterpane of the written law, {#Heb 8:10} that "good treasure" {#Mt 12:35} that is daily drawn out, and yet not diminished. Salienti aquarum fonti undas si tollas, nec exhauritur, nec extenuatur, sed dulcesit. Take water from a well, it loses nothing, but becomes better and sweeter.

But violence covereth.] {See Trapp on "Pr 10:6"}

Ver. 12. Hatred stirreth up strifes.] Especially when hatred is grown from a passion to a habit, which is, when the heart is so settled in an alienation and estrangement from the person hated, that it grows to wish, and desire, and seek his hurt. I could like that exposition well if it were not Calvin's, said Maldonat; and that reformed religion, if Luther had not had a hand in it, said George Duke of Saxony.

But love covereth all sins.] {See Trapp on "1Pe 4:8"} {See Trapp on "1Co 13:4"}

Love hath a large mantle. If I should find a bishop committing adultery, said Constantine the Great, I would cover that foul fact with mine imperial robe rather than it should come abroad to the scandal of the weak and the scorn of the wicked. {a} Love either dissembleth a trespass, if it be light, or by a wise and gentle reproof seeks to reclaim the offender, claps a plaster on the sore, and then covers it with her hand, as we have seen chirurgeons do. {See Trapp on "Le 19:17"} Lutherus commodius sentit quam loquitur, dum effervescit, said Cruciger. So Melanchthon, Sciebam horridius scripturum Lutherum quam sentit. The sayings, doings of others, are reverenter glossanda, to have a reverent, a fair, and favourable gloss put upon them, as one said once of the pontifical laws. This is love.

{a} Eusebius.

Ver. 13. In the lips of him, &c.] "Grace is poured into his lips," {#Ps 45:2} and he pours it out as fast for the good of others, who do therefore admire him, as they did our Saviour. {#Lu 4:22}

But a rod is for the back.] That, since he will not hear the word, he may "hear the rod," {#Mic 6:9} and smart for his uncounsellableness. He that trembleth not in hearing, shall be broken to pieces in feeling, saith Bradford.

Ver. 14. Wise men lay up knowledge.] To know when to speak, and when to be silent. It is a great skill to be able "to time a word," {#Isa 50:4} to set it upon the wheels. {#Pr 25:11} "How forcible are right words!" {#Job 6:25}

But the mouth of the foolish.] An open mouth is a purgatory to the master. Nemo stultus tacere potest, saith Solon. A fool tells all, saith Solomon. {#Ec 10:12-14} And Ut quisque est dissolutissimae vitae, ita est solutissimae linguae, saith Seneca. A fool's bolt is soon shot, and as soon retorted oftentimes upon himself.

Ver. 15. The rich man's wealth, &c.] Wealthy worldlings think themselves simply the better and the safer for their hoards and heaps of riches. The best of us are more ready to "trust in uncertain riches than in the living God, who giveth us all things richly to enjoy." {#1Ti 6:17} Surely this should humble us, that riches—that should be our rises to raise us up to God, or glasses to see the love of God in—our corrupt nature useth them as clouds, as clogs, &c., yea, sets them up in God's place, and "saith to the fine gold, Thou art my confidence." {#Job 31:24}

The destruction of the poor is their poverty.] They are devoured by the richer cannibals, {#Ps 14:4} as the lesser fish are by the greater. Men go over the hedge where it is lowest. "Poor" and "afflicted" are joined together. {#Zep 3:12} So are "to want," and "to be abased." {#Php 4:12}

Ver. 16. The labour of the righteous, &c.] If the righteous man may but sweat out a poor living, get enough to bear his charges home to heaven, have enough to serve his turn here, be it but "food and raiment, he is content." {#1Ti 6:8} Cibus et potus sunt divitiae Christianorum. The true Christian desires but meat and drink.

The fruit of the wicked.] Or, The revenues of the wicked are wasted upon their lusts, which to seek to satisfy is an endless labour, besides the danger of fathomless perdition. {#1Ti 6:4}

Ver. 17. He is in the way of life.] Rich fools refuse reproof; hold themselves above admonition, Tange montes et fumigabunt, and are therefore, by the just judgment of God, led through a fool's paradise into a true prison. Divitibus ideo amicus deest, quia nihil deest. Rich men have few faithful counsellors.

Ver. 18. He that hideth hatred, &c.] These are dangerous creatures that thus lie at the catch, and wait advantages to do a man mischief, as Cain dealt by Abel, Absalom by Amnon, Joab by Amasa, Judas by Jesus. Tuta frequensque via est, &c.

And he that uttereth a slander is a fool.] Because he hath no command of his passions, as the former seems to have, because close in cloaking his malice, who yet is a fool too before God.

Ver. 19. In the multitude of words.] In multiloquio stultiloquium. Many words are hardly well managed. Non est eiusdera, saith one. It is seldom seen that a man of many words miscarries not.

But he that refraineth his lips.] As Elihu did, {#Job 32:11} and as Epaminondas is worthily praised by Plutarch for this, quod nemo plura noscet, et pauciora loqueretur; that no man knew more, and spake less than he did.

Ver. 20. The tongue of the just is as choice silver.] He scattereth "pearls," {#Mt 7:6} he throws abroad "treasure," {#Mt 12:35} even "apples of gold in shrines of silver." {#Pr 25:11} "I will turn to the people a pure language," saith God, {#Zep 3:9} a "lip of excellency," {#Pr 17:7} the language of heaven. As William the Conqueror sought to bring in the French tongue here, by enjoining children to use no other in schools, lawyers to practise in French; no man was graced but he that spake French, &c. {a}

The heart of the wicked is little worth.] Est quasi parum, is as little as need to be. He is ever either hatching cockatrice' eggs or weaving spiders' webs, as the prophet hath it. {#Isa 59:5} Vanity or villainy is his whole study, and his daily discourse.

{a} Daniel's Hist.

Ver. 21. The lips of the righteous feed many.] A great housekeeper he is, hath his doors ever open, and, though himself be poor, yet he "maketh many rich." {#2Co 6:10} He well knows that to this end God put "honey and milk under his tongue," {#So 4:11} that he might look to this spiritual lip feeding. To this end hath he communicated to him those "rivers of water," {#Joh 7:38} that they may flow from him, to quench that world of wickedness that, being "set on fire of hell, would set on fire the whole course of nature." {#Jas 3:6} They are "empty vines that bear fruit to themselves." {#Ho 10:1} Those are void houses, we say, where the doors daily open not. The people hung upon—εξεκρεματο—our Saviour's lips as the young bird doth on the dam's bill. {#Lu 19:48} Bishop Ridley preached every Lord's day and holiday, except letted by some weighty business, to whose sermons the people resorted, saith Master Foxe, ^{a} swarming about him like bees, and coveting the sweet juice of his gracious discourses. Look how Joseph nourished his father's household with bread, "according to their families," or "according to the mouths of their families" ^{b} ^{#Ge 47:12} So doth the righteous man those of his own charge especially. Welfare Popery for that, saith a grave divine. ^{c} I have heard old folks talk, that when in those days they had holy bread, as they called it, given them at church, they would bear a part of it to those that did abide at home. So should heads of families carry home the bread of life to their households.

But fools die for want of wisdom.] By their either refusing or abusing the food of their souls As the Pharisees, they "pine away in their iniquities." ^{#Le 26:39}

Ver. 22. The blessing of the Lord it maketh rich.] As is to be seen in the examples of the patriarchs, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and others. Whereas there is a curse upon unlawful practices, though men be industrious, as in Jehoiachim. ^{#Jer 22:30} And all our policies without prayer are but arena sine calce -sand without lime; they will not hold together.

And he addeth no sorrow with it.] Those three vultures shall be driven away that constantly feed on the wealthy worldling's heart—care in getting, fear in keeping, grief in losing the things of this life. God giveth to his, wealth without woe, store without sore, gold without guilt, one little drop whereof troubleth the whole sea of all outward comforts. Richard III had a whole kingdom at command, and yet could not rest in his bed for disquietment of mind. Polydor Virgil thus writes of his dream that night before Besworth Field, that he thought all the devils in hell pulled and haled him in most hideous and ugly shapes, and concludes of it at last: 'I do not think it was so much his dream as his evil conscience that bred those terrors.'

Ver. 23. It is a sport to a fool to do mischief.] He is then merriest when he hath the devil for his playfellow. He danceth to hell in his bolts, and as passing well apaid for his woeful bondage. Was he a father or a monster, think you, that, playing with his own child for a pastime, put his thumbs in the boy's eyes, and thrust out the balls thereof This was Robert de Beliasme, Earl of Shrewsbury, in the reign of our Henry I, A.D. 1111. {a} And what a mad sport was that of Joab and Abner, {#2Sa 2:14} to see and set those youngsters of Helkath Hazzurim to sheath their swords in their fellows' bowels! And that of Nero, who set the city of Rome on fire for his pleasure, while he played on his harp, the destruction of Troy!

But a man of understanding hath wisdom.] Viz., For his sport or delight. It is his meat and drink—his honey and honeycomb, &c. Libenter omnibus omnes opes concesserim, ut mihi liceat, vi nulla interpellante, isto modo in literis vivero, saith Cicero, {b} -I would give all the wealth in the world that I might live altogether in my study, and have nothing to trouble me. Crede mihi extingui dulce esset mathematicarum artium studio, saith another; {c} Believe me, it were a dainty death to die studying the mathematics. Nusquam requiem inveni nisi in libro et claustro, saith a third; All the comfort I have is in a book, and a cloister, or closet. Mentior, if my soul accord him not, saith learned Doctor Slatter. {d} The old Lord Burley, lord high treasurer, to his dying day would carry always a "Cicero's Offices" about him, either in his bosom or pocket. {e} And the Emperor Charles V took such delight in the mathematics, that even in the midst of his whole army, in his tent, he sat close at his study, having for that purpose as his instructor Turrianus of Cremona evermore with him; so sweet is the knowledge of human arts to those that have tasted them. {f} How much more the knowledge of the holy—which, saith Augur, is to ascend up into heaven {#Pr 30:3,4} -to those mature ones who, "by reason of use, have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil!" {#Heb 5:14 Ps 119:103 Job 23:12 Ro 7:22}

Ver. 24. The fear of the wicked shall come upon him.] "A sound of fear is in his ears: in prosperity the destroyer shall come upon him." {#Job 15:21} Pessimus in dubiis Augur Timor. {a} Thus it befell Cain, Saul, Belshazzar, Pilate (who, for fear of Caesar, delivered up Christ to be crucified, and was afterwards by the same Caesar kicked off the bench—yea, off the stage of the world), those wicked Jews that feared that the Romans would come and take away both their place and nation, {#Joh 11:48} which accordingly befell them some forty years after, at which time some of them also killed themselves, lest they should be taken by the enemy. {b} The like may be said of our Richard III, {See Trapp on "Pr 10:22"} and Henry IV of France, after his revolt to Popery. He, being persuaded by the Duke of Sully not to re-admit the Jesuits, which had been banished by the parliament of Paris, answered suddenly, Give me, then, security for my life, and afterwards admitted them into his bosom, making Father Cotton his confessor, and using them ever with marvellous respect, yet was stabbed to the heart by Ravilliac, through their instigation. {c} Excellent is that of Solomon, {#Pr 29:25} "The fear of man bringeth a snare: but whoso putteth his trust in the Lord"—as Hezekiah did, {#2Ki 18:4,5} and our King Edward VI, and that peerless Queen Elizabeth—"shall be safe."

But the desire of the righteous shall be granted.] Provided that these be the lawful desires of honest hearts. If such ask and miss, it is "because they ask amiss"; {#Jas 4:3} either they fail in the matter, as Moses in his desire to enter into the promised land, or in the manner, as the Church in the Canticles, #So 5:3. Virtutem exoptant, intabescuntque relicta -they would, and they would not. There is a kind of wambling willingness, and velleity, but it boils not up to the full height of resolution for God, and utmost endeavour after the thing desired. Now affection without endeavour is like Rachel—beautiful but barren. Or, lastly, they fail in the end, either of intention, {#Jas 4:3} or of duration. {#Lu 18:1} They draw not near with that "true heart" {#Heb 10:22} that is content either to wait or to want the thing desired, being heartily willing that God should be glorified, though themselves be not gratified. Let them but bring this "true heart," and they may have any thing. {See Trapp on "Mt 5:6"}

Ver. 25. As the whirlwind passeth away.] The whirlwind is terrible for the time, but not durable. Lo, such is the rage of tyrants and persecutors. Nubecula est, cito transibit, said Athanasius of the Arian persecution. Our Richard III and Queen Mary had, as the bloodiest, so the shortest reigns of any since the Conquest. Bloody and deceitful men shall not live out half their days. Dioclesian, that cruel persecutor, giving over his empire, decreed to lead the rest of his life quietly, {a} But he escaped not so, for after that his house was wholly consumed with lightning and a flame of fire that fell from heaven. He, hiding himself for fear of the lightning, died within a little while after. "Then terrors take hold on him as waters, a tempest stealeth him away in the night. The east wind carrieth him away, and he departeth; and, as a storm, hurleth him out of his place. For God shall cast upon him, and not spare: he would fain flee out of his hand. Men shall clap their hands at him, and shall hiss him out of his place," as Job elegantly and emphatically sets it forth. {#Pr 26:20-23}

But the righteous is an everlasting foundation.] Or, Is the foundation of the world; as firm as the world's foundation, which remains unmoveable. The Hebrews sense it thus, -The righteous is the foundation of the world, which, but for their sakes, would soon shatter and fall to ruin. {b} Sanctum semen statumen terrae {#Isa 6:13} "I bear up the pillars of it," saith David. {#Ps 75:3}

{b} Absque stationibus non staret mundus.

Ver. 26. So is the sluggard to them that send him.] Habent aulae suum cito, cito. What thou doest, do quickly, said our Saviour to the traitor. He cannot away with dulness and oscitancy in any of his, but condemns it in those slow things, $\omega\theta\rho\iota$, the Hebrews, {#Heb 5:11} and commands them double diligence. {#Pr 6:11,12} "Not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord." {#Ro 12:11} A dull heart makes no riddance. Baruc accendit seipsum {#Ne 3:20} repairing earnestly, and so finished his task in shorter time. Let ambassadors, ministers, messengers, &c., nimble up their business, or look for no thank. What a deal of content gave Cranmer to Henry VIII, by his expediting the business of the divorce, both at home and abroad, in foreign universities! And what a deal of distaste gave Wolsey by the contrary!

Ver. 27. The fear of the Lord prolongeth days.] Heb., Addeth days, viz., beyond expectation or likelihood in a course of nature. "The days of mourning for my father are at hand," said bloody Esau, "and then will I slay my brother Jacob." {#Ge 27:41} But threatened men, if they fear God especially, {#Ec 8:12,13} live long. For even Isaac who died soonest, lived above fifty years beyond this. {See Trapp on "Ex 20:12"}

But the years of the wicked shall be shortened.] "Be not overmuch wicked, neither be thou foolish: why shouldst thou die before thy time?" {#Ec 7:17} Sin brings death, and the worst of deaths, an unseasonable death, when it were better for a man to do anything than to die; for to such, death is a trap door to hell: and as their friends are scrambling for their goods, the worms for their bodies, so are the devils for their souls.

Ver. 28. The hope of the righteous shall be gladness.] The righteous doth not so fear God, {#Pr 10:2,7} but that he hopes in him also; -see #Ps 130:4,5:—and that with such a hope as "maketh not ashamed." Deo confisi nunquam confusi: "The righteous hath hope in his death"; {#Pr 14:32} his motto is, Cum expiro, spero; - My hope lasts beyond life.

But the expectations of the wicked.] As Esau came from hunting, with his head full of hopes, but went away with his heart full of blanks, and his face full of blushing.

Ver. 29. The way of the Lord is strength.] "The joy of the Lord," that joy of hope, spoken of in the preceding verse, "is their strength." {#Ne 8:10} The peace of God within them, and the power of God without them, bears up their spirits under whatsoever pressures; such can boldly say, It is well with me for the present, and it will be better hereafter.

But destruction.] Such as they shall never be able either to avoid or to abide.

Ver. 30. The righteous shall never be removed.] Or, They shall not be removed for ever, though for a while they may seem to be so.

But the wicked shall not inhabit the earth.] God sits upon the circle of the earth, to shake them out thence, as by a canvass.

Ver. 31. The mouth of the just, &c.] Heb., Buddeth forth, as a fruit tree, to which the tongue is fitly and finely here resembled. Hence speech is called the "fruit of the lips."

But the froward tongue shall be cut out.] As a fruitless tree is cut down to the fire. Nestorius the heretic his tongue was eaten off with worms. {a} Archbishop Arundel's tongue rotted in his head. From Miriam's example, {#Nu 12:1-3,10} the Jewish doctors gather that leprosy is a punishment for an evil tongue, and in special for speaking against rulers. The Lady de Breuse had by her virulent and railing tongue more exasperated the fury of King John, whom she reviled as a tyrant and a murderer, than could be pacified by her strange present, of four hundred kine, and one bull, all milk white, except only the ears, which were red, sent unto the queen. {b}

{b} Speed's Chron., fol. 572.

Ver. 32. The lips of the righteous.] He carries, as it were, a pair of balances between his lips, and weighs his words before he utters them. Et prodesse volens et delectare -willing to speak things both acceptable and profitable. The wicked throws out anything that lies uppermost, though never so absurd, obscene, defamatory, &c.

“*Aera puto nosci tinnitu, sed pestora verbis:
Sic est, namque id sunt utraque quale sonant.*”

Chapter 11

Ver. 1. A false balance is abomination.] {See Trapp on "Le 19:36"} {See Trapp on "De 25:15"} This kind of fraud falls heaviest upon the poor, {#Am 8:5} who are fain to fetch in everything by the penny. Hither may be referred corruptions in courts, and partialities in church businesses. See that tremendous "charge" to do nothing by partiality, or by tilting the balance. {#1Ti 5:21} Those that have the "balances of deceit in their hand" {#Ho 12:7} are called Canaanites, so the Hebrew hath it—that is, mere natural men, {#Eze 16:3} that have no goodness in them, no, not common honesty; they do not as they would be: done by, which very heathens condemned.

Ver. 2. When pride cometh.] Where pride is in the saddle, shame is on the crupper, tanquam Nemesis a tergo. He is a "proud fool," saith our English proverb. Proud persons, while they leave their standing and would rise above the top of their places, fail of their footing, and fall to the bottom.

But with the lowly is wisdom.] Which maketh the face to shine. Pride proceeds from folly, and procures contempt. But "God gives grace to the humble"; {#Jas 4:6} that is, as some sense it, good repute and report among men. Who am I? saith Moses; and yet who fitter than he to go to Pharaoh? He refused to be Pharaoh's daughter's son; he was afterwards called to be Pharaoh's god. {#Ex 7:1} Aben Ezra observes, that the word here rendered "lowly," signifies "bashful," "shame faced," Qui prae verecundia sese abdunt, that thrust not themselves into observation. The humble man, were it not that the fragrant smell of his many virtues betrays him to the world, would choose to live and die in his self-contenting secrecy. Hence humility is by Bernard compared to the violet, which grows low to the ground, and hangs the head downward, and, besides, hides itself with its own leaves.

Ver. 3. The integrity of the upright shall guide them.] An elegant allusion in the original. Their uprightness shall lead them whither they would, and secure them from danger. They "fulfil the royal law," {#Jas 2:8} keep the king's highway, and so are kept safe; while those that go out of God's precincts are out of his protection.

But the perverseness of transgressors.] Of prevaricators, that run upon rough precipices. These are by the prophet Amos likened to horses running upon a rock, where first they break their hoofs, and then their necks. {#Am 6:12}

Ver. 4. Riches profit not in the day of wrath.] Neither their silver nor their gold shall be able to deliver them in the day of the Lord's wrath. {#Zep 1:18 Isa 13:7} Yea, they carried away the richer Jews, when the poorer sort were left to till the land. {#2Ki 24:14} The great Caliph of Babylon, whom all the Mohammedan princes honoured above all others, as the true successor of Mohammed, and the grand oracle of their law, being taken together with his city by the great Cham of Tartary, was by him set in the midst of his infinite treasure, and willed to feed thereon, and make no spare; in which order, the covetous wretch, being kept for certain days, miserably died for hunger, in the midst of those things, whereof he thought he should never have enough. {a} Wherefore should I die, being so rich? said that wretched Cardinal Henry Beaufort, Bishop of Winchester, in Henry VI's time. Fie, quoth he, will not death be hired? will money do nothing? {b} His riches could not reprieve him.

But righteousness delivereth from death.] {See Trapp on "Pr 10:2"}

{b} Acts and Mon., fol. 925.

Ver. 5. The righteousness of the perfect.] This is the same in effect with #Pr 11:3. Nunquam satis dicitur, quod nunquam satis discitur.

But the wicked shall fall by his own wickedness.] Or, In his own wickedness. He shall fall out of one wickedness unto another, while he "draws iniquity with cords of vanity, and sin as it were with a cart rope." {#Isa 5:18} Thus Babylon's sins are said to "reach unto heaven"; {#Re 18:5} quasi concatenatus funis. Therefore "she is fallen, she is fallen," certo, brevi, penitus, nondum tamen. Flagitium et flagellum, ut acus et filum. Sin and punishment are inseparable companions.

{a} Seneca.

Ver. 6. The righteousness of the upright shall deliver them.] As Noah's integrity prevailed for his safety. Many are the troubles of the righteous, but out of them all they are sure to be delivered. No country hath more venomous creatures than Egypt—none more antidotes. So godliness hath many troubles, and as many helps against trouble. As Moses' hand, it turns a serpent into a rod; and as the tree that Moses cast into the waters of Marsh, it sweeteneth the bitter waters of affliction. Well may it be called the divine nature, for as God brings light out of darkness, &c., so doth grace.

But transgressors shall be taken in their own naughtiness.] Taken by their own consciences (those bloodhounds), and by the just judgments of God, which they shall never be able to avoid or abide, though now they carry themselves as if they were out of the reach of his rod, or had gotten a protection.

Ver. 7. When a wicked man dieth, his expectation shall perish.] He died, perhaps, in strong hopes of heaven, as those seem to have done that came rapping and bouncing at heaven gates, with "Lord, Lord, open unto us," but were sent away with a Non novi vos; "Depart, I know you not." {#Mt 7:22,23}

And the hope of unjust men.] Etiam spes valentissima petit. So some render it. His most strong hope shall come to nothing. He made a bridge of his own shadow, and thought to go over it, but is fallen into the brook, he thought he had taken hold of God; but it is but with him as with a child that catcheth at the shadow on the wall, which he thinks he holds fast; but he only thinks so.

Ver. 8. And the wicked cometh in his stead.] Thus it befell Haman, and Daniel's enemies, and those inhuman Edomites, {#La 4:21} and Herod with his hacksters. {#Ac 12:1-4,21-23} It is "a righteous thing with God," {#2Th 1:6,7} though to men it seem an incredible paradox, and a news by far more admirably wonderfull than acceptable, that there should be such a transmutation of conditions on both sides, to contraries. But thus it happens frequently. John Martin of Briqueras, a mile from Angrogne, in France, vaunted everywhere that he would slit the minister's nose of Angrogne. But, behold! himself was shortly after assaulted by a wolf, which bit off his nose, so that he died mad from it. {a}

Ver. 9. An hypocrite with his mouth destroyeth.] That is, The flatterer, slanderer, evil counsellor, but especially the heretic, as the Valentinians, qui artificium habuerunt, quo prius persuaderent quam docerent, {a} by their Pythanology. "By good words and fair speeches they deceive the hearts of the simple." {#Ro 16:18} They bring men into the lion's mouth, as that old seducer did, by telling them of an angel that spoke to them, and so make prize of them, {#Col 2:8} and "drag disciples after them." {#Ac 20:30}

But through knowledge shall the just be delivered.] He is too wise to be flattered, and too knowing to be plucked away with the error of the wicked. {#1Pe 3:17,18} Zanchius was set upon by Socinus, but the heretic lost his labour. {b} Wherefore add to your virtue knowledge, {#2Pe 1:5} and have your senses exercised to discern good and evil. {#Heb 5:14}

Ver. 10. When it goeth well with the righteous.] When they are set in place of authority, all the country fare the better for it. All cannot choose but do well, so long as thou rulest well, {a} said the senate to Severus the emperor. And Ita nati estis, said he in Tacitus, ut bona malaque vestra ad rempublicam pertineant. Public persons are either a great mercy or a great misery to the whole country.

And when the wicked perish, there is shouting. For by their fall the people rise, and their ruin is the repair of the city.

" Cum mors crudelem rapuisset saeva Neronem, Credibile est multos Romam agitasse iocos."

Ver. 11. By the blessing of the upright the city is exalted.] This is given in as a reason of that public joy in the welfare of the just, because they are of public spirits, and will by their good deeds, good doctrines, good counsels, and good prayers, promote the public good to their utmost. Catonis mores erant—toti genitum se credere mundo. {a} Saints are "clouds" {#Heb 12:1} that water the earth, as a common blessing.

But it is overthrown by the mouth of the wicked.] Whether he be a seedsman of sedition or a seducer of the people, a Sheba or a Shebna, a carnal gospeller or a godless politician, whose drift is to formalise and enervate the power of truth, till at length they leave us a heartless and sapless religion. "One of these sinners may destroy much good." {#Ec 9:18}

Ver. 12. He that is void of wisdom despiseth his neighbour.] Not remembering that he is his neighbour, cut out of the same cloth, the shears only going between, and as capable of heaven as himself, though never so poor, mean, deformed, or otherwise despicable. None but a fool will do so—none but he that hath a base and beggarly heart of his own, as the words signify.

But a man of understanding holdeth his peace.] That is, Refraineth his tongue from such opprobrious language, speaketh the best he can of another, thinks with himself—

“Aut sumus, aut fuimus, aut possumus esse quod hic est.”

“Or we are, or will be, or are able to be what this is.”

Or, if himself be slighted or reviled, abiecta probra digno supplicio punit, festivo scilicet contemptu et oblivione, vel si tanti est, misericordia elevat. He knows it is to no purpose to wash off dirt with dirt, and is therefore as a dumb man, &c.

Ver. 13. A talebearer revealeth secrets.] Heb., A pedlar. {See Trapp on "Le 19:16"} {See Trapp on "1Ti 5:13"} Si sapis arcano vina reconde cado. God forbids us to chaffer with these petty chapmen. {#Pr 20:19}

Concealeth the matter.] Tacitus to him is the best historian—primus in historia. He is a rare friend that can both give counsel and keep counsel. One being hit in the teeth with his stinking breath, wittily excused it, that it was by reason of the many secrets committed to him, and concealed by him so long, till they were even rotten in his bosom.

Ver. 14. Where no counsel is, the people fall.] As where no pilot is, the ship miscarrieth. The Vulgate render it, Ubi non est gubernator, corruiit populus. Tyranny is better than anarchy. And yet, "Woe also to thee, O land, whose king is a child"; that is, wilful and uncounsellable, as Rehoboam, who was a child at forty years old, whenas his father was a man at twenty. Age is no just measure of wisdom, and royalty without wisdom is but eminent dishonour. Solomon the wise chose him an excellent council of state, whom Rehoboam refused to hear, being as much more wilful than his father, as less wise—all head, no heart, losing those ten tribes with a churlish breath, and returning to Jerusalem lighter by a crown than he went forth. He and his green headed council was like Alcibiades and his army, where all would be leaders, none learners. Or it may be it was now in Israel as once it was in Persia, and as now it is in Turkey, when the great Turk stands at the dangerous door, where if any counsellor delivered anything contrary to the king's mind, flagris caedebatur, he was chastised with rods. {a} Or as in Regno Cyclopico ubi, ουδεις ουδεν ουδενοσ ακουει, where no man cared for better counsel, but each one did what was good in his own eyes. {b} Such cannot long subsist.

But in the multitude of counsellors.] So they be good counsellors; better than Balaam was, better than Ahithophel, better than those of Aurelius, by whom the good emperor was even bought and sold. {c} One special thing the primitive Christians prayed for the emperor was, that God would send him Senatum fidelem, a faithful council. There were in Josiah's days horrible abominations; and why? "The princes were as roaring lions, the judges wolves," &c. {#Zep 3:3} Queen Elizabeth was happy in her council, by whom she was mostly ruled, and grew amiable to her friends, and formidable to her enemies, both at home and abroad. "Wisdom is better than strength," saith Solomon; and, Romani sedendo vincunt, The Romans conquer by being settled. {d} said they of old. The welfare of a state is procured and preserved, not so much by a multitude of worthy warriors as of wise counsellors; as Cleon, in Thucydides long since observed, {e} and as we have blessedly found in this present Parliamentum benedictum, more truly so styled than that was in the twenty-fifth of Edward III.

Ver. 15. He that is surety for a stranger shall smart for it.] Heb., Shall break—prove a bankrupt. {See Trapp on "Pr 6:1"} {See Trapp on "Pr 6:2"} {See Trapp on "Pr 6:3"} &c

Ver. 16. A gracious woman retaineth honour.] Such a one as is set forth in Lemuel's lesson, {#Pr 31:10-31} such as was Sarah, Deborah, Abigail, Esther, Queen Elizabeth, of whom a great French princess gave this eulogium, that she was gloriosissima, et omnium quae unquam sceptrum gesserunt felicissima femina, the bravest and happiest woman that ever swayed sceptre. {a} Piety, sobriety, purity, charity, and chastity—maugre the venomous tongues of all hell born slanderers, such as Sanders, Rhiston, and other Romish railers, and dead dogs that barked against her {b} -were her inseparable companions; never suffering any lady to approach her sacred presence of whose stain she had but the least suspicion.

And strong men retain riches.] By their industry and good husbandry: that they may maintain their wives' honour, and bear up their port according to their place. Others render it, Improbi apprehendunt divitias. Wicked men catch at wealth, sc., in the choice of their wives. And indeed among suitors, both in love and in law, money is a common meddler, and commonly drives the bargain and business to an upshot.

Ver. 17. The merciful doth good to his own soul.] His chief business is with and for himself: how to set all to rights within, how to keep a continual sabbath of soul, a constant composedness. He will not violate his conscience to get or retain riches, as #Pr 11:16, or purchase earth with the loss of heaven. And inasmuch as the body is the soul's servant, {a} and should therefore be neither supra negotium, above the business, nor infra negotium, below the business but par negotio, fit for the soul's business—it ought not to be pined or pinched with penury and overmuch abstinence, as those impostors, {#Col 2:23} and our Popish merit mongers, that starve their genius, and are cruel to their own flesh. These shall one day hear, "Who required these things at your hands?"

Ver. 18. The wicked worketh a deceitful work.] By defrauding his genius, and afflicting his flesh, {as #Pr 11:17} he thinks he doth a very good work. Some emperors have left their thrones, and thrust themselves into a monastery, there to macerate themselves with much fasting and coarse clothing, out of an opinion of promoting their soul's health thereby. But "bodily exercise profiteth little." {#1Ti 4:8} And as the pride of virginity is as foul a sin as impurity, {a} so is it in this case. The formal faster loseth his labour. {#Isa 58:3 Zec 7:5} In seventy years they kept seven score fasts in Babylon; yet among them all not one fast to God. There are that render it thus, Improbos comparat praemium falsum. The wicked get a false reward: all that he hath is but the things of this life, quae nec vera sunt, nec vestra. For the very fashion of this world passeth away and "surely every man walketh in a vain show," or shadow, "surely he disquieteth himself in vain he heapeth up riches, and knows not who shall gather them." {#Ps 39:6} They that dig in mines, or labour in mints, have gold enough about them, but are little the better for it. A sumpter horse bears much treasure on his back all day, but is eased of it at night, and turned into the stable with his back full of galls and bruises. So shall it be with wicked rich men at death; so that they have no great bargain of it.

But to him that soweth righteousness.] And so soweth upon blessings {b} -as the apostle's Greek hath it; {#2Co 9:6} {See Trapp on "2Co 9:6"} #Ga 6:7,8 -upon well watered places {c} {#Ec 11:1} To such shall be a sure reward: only he must have patience, and not look to sow and reap all in one day. {#Jas 5:7} {See Trapp on "Jas 5:7"}

Ver. 19. As righteousness tendeth to life.] Heb., Lives; for "godliness hath the promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come." {#1Ti 4:8} And this is that sure reward spoken of in the former verse; for "he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting," {#Ga 6:8} which indeed is the only life that deserveth so to be called and counted.

So he that pursueth evil.] That follows it hotfoot—as Asael followed Abner; that is, wholly carried after it, and thinks to have a great catch of it, that works "all uncleanness with greediness." {#Eph 4:19} This the prophet calls a "spirit of whoredom," a strong inclination, a vehement impetus to that and other sins, an "adding drunkenness to thirst, rebellion to sin"; till wrath come upon them to the utmost. Hell gapes for such sinners.

Ver. 20. They that are of a froward heart, &c.] Not only those that pursue and practise wickedness, but they also that harbour it in their hearts, are hated of God. {#Lu 16:15} A man may die of inward bleeding; a man may be damned for contemplative wickedness. {#Jer 4:14} The schools do well observe, that outward sins are maioris infamiae, greater notorieties, but inward heart sins are maioris reatus, greater guilt, as we see in devils.

But such as are upright in their way.] The antithesis requires that he should say, such as are "upright in heart." But he chooseth rather to say, "in their way," not only because a good heart ever makes a good life, but to meet with such as brag of the goodness of their hearts when their lives are altogether loose and licentious. Whereas holiness in the heart, as the candle in the lantern, well appears in the body. These boasters are ignorant, {#Re 3:17} proud, {#Joh 9:40} carnal, {#Ro 8:6} therefore stark naught. {#Pr 19:2}

Ver. 21. Though hand join in hand, &c.] Heb., Hand to hand; that is, "out of hand, ... by and by," as some interpret it. Munster renders it, "Though plague follow upon plague, the wicked will not amend." Others, though there be a combination, a conspiracy of wicked doers, as if, giant like, they would fight against God, {a} and resist his wrath, yet they shall never be able to avert or avoid it. "The wicked shall be turned into hell, yea, whole nations that forget God." {#Ps 9:17} God stands not upon multitudes: he buried the old world in one universal grave of waters; and "turning the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah into ashes, condemned them with an overthrow." {#2Pe 2:6} This is a good sense. Howbeit I cannot but incline to those that expound, "hand in hand," for "father and child," in regard of the following line, "But the seed of the righteous shall be delivered." As if the prophet should say—The wicked traduce a cursed stock of sin to their children, and shall therefore be punished in their own person, or at least in their posterity. "This their way is their folly; yet their posterity approve their sayings. Therefore like sheep they are laid in the grave, death shall feed on them." {#Ps 49:13,14}

{a} Θεομαχοι.

Ver. 22. As a jewel of gold in a swine's snout.] It is a small praise, saith one, to have a good face and an evil nature. No one means, saith another, hath so enriched hell as beautiful faces. Aureliae Orestillae praeter formam nihil unquam bonus laudavit, saith Sallust. In Aurelia Orestilla there was nothing praiseworthy but her beauty. Are thou fair? saith an author; be not like an Egyptian temple, or a painted sepulchre. Art thou foul? let thy soul be like a rich pearl in a rude shell.

Ingenio formae damna rependo meae.* ” {a}

So is a fair woman which is without discretion.] Sic dignitas in indigno est ornamentum in lute, saith Salvian. Fair and foolish ones abuse their beauty to pride and incontinence, and so give occasion to some Diogenes to say, O quam bona domus, et malus hospes -O fair house, but ill inhabitant.

{a} Sapph. ap. Ovid.

Ver. 23. The desire of the righteous is only good, / i.e., So far as he is righteous, or spiritual, he "delights in the law of God after the inward man," {#Ro 7:22} "willing in all things to live honestly." {#Heb 13:18} Evil motions haunt his mind otherwhiles, but there they inhabit not. Lust was a stranger to David, as Peter Martyr observes out of Nathan's parable; -"There came a traveller to this rich man." {#2Sa 12:4} The main stream of his desires, the course and current of his heart ran upon God and godliness. {#Ps 119:4,5 39:1,3} He resolved to do better than he did. "The spirit ever lusteth against the flesh"; howbeit when the flesh gets the wind and hill of the spirit, all is not so well carried. As the ferryman plies the oar, and eyes the shore homeward, where he would be, yet there comes a gust of wind that carries him back again, so it is oft with a Christian. But every man is with God so good as he desires to be. In vitae libro scribuntur qui quod possunt faciunt, etsi quod debent non possunt. {a} They are written in the book of life that do what good they can, though they cannot do as they would.

But the expectation of the wicked is wrath, / i.e., The good they expect proves to be "indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish," {#Ro 2:8,9} woeful perplexities and convulsions of soul, which will be so great and so grievous, as will make them rave and rage with madness and fury, especially because they looked for a better state.

{a} Bernard.

Ver. 24. There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth.] Bounty is the most compendious way to plenty; neither is getting but giving the best thrift. The five loaves in the Gospel, by a strange kind of arithmetic, were multiplied by a division and augmented by subtraction. So will it be in this case.

But it tendeth to poverty.] St Augustine descanting upon those words, "They have slept their sleep, all the rich men, and have found nothing in their hands,"—for so he reads that text {#Ps 76:5} -and why is this? saith he. Nihil invenerunt in manibus suis, quia nihil posuerunt in manu Christi. They found nothing in their own hands, because they feared to lay up anything in Christ's hands. Manus pauperum gazophylacium Christi, saith another father—the poor man's hand is Christ's treasury.

Ver. 25. The liberal soul shall be made fat.] {See Trapp on "Mt 5:7"} and my "Common Place of Alms."

Ver. 26. The people shall curse him, / i.e., Complain and cry out of him, as the people of Rome did of Pompey in another case. Nostra miseria tu es magnus. Our misery is you greatness. In another case, I say; for in this I must acquit him, remembering that speech of his, when, being by his office to bring in corn from a far country for the people's necessity, and wished by his friends to stay for a better wind, he hoisted up sail, and said: Necesse est ut eam, non ut vivam -there is a necessity of my going, not so of my life; if I perish, I perish. Hence he was the people's Corculum, or sweetheart, as it is said of Scipio Nasica.

Ver. 27. He that diligently seeketh good.] Heb., He that is up betime to promote the public good, as Joseph, who came not in till noon to eat meat; as Nehemiah, who willingly brake his sheep, and traded every talent for his people's comfort; as Scipio Africanus, who usually went before day into the capitol, in cellam Iovis, and there stayed a great while, quasi consultans de Rep. cum Iove, {a} as consulting with his god about the public welfare; whence his deeds were pleraque admiranda, saith mine author, -amiable and admirable, the most of them. And as Daniel, who though sick, yet rose up and did the king's business. {#Da 8:27}

It shall come to him.] It shall come certainly, suddenly, irresistibly, and, as we say of foul weather, unsent for. God will say to such, as Aulus Fulvius did to his traitorous son and then slew him, Non Catilinae te genui, sed patrice. The Lord shall pour upon him, and not spare, because he cruelly oppressed, spoiled his brother by violence, and did that which is not good among his people, therefore "he shall die in his iniquity." {#Eze 18:18}

Ver. 28. He that trusteth to his riches shall fall.] Riches were never true to any that trusted to them. The rich churl that trusted and boasted that he had "much goods laid up in store" for many years, when, like a jay, he was pruning himself in his boughs, he came tumbling down with the arrow in his side. {#Lu 12:15-21} So did Nebuchadnezzar, Belshazzar, Herod, &c. "The righteous also shall see and fear, and laugh at such a one, saying, Lo, this is the man that made not God his strength, but trusted in the abundance of his riches, and strengthened himself in his wickedness." {#Ps 52:6,7} "But I am like a green olive tree," &c. {#Ps 52:8} Agreeable whereunto is this that follows here: "But the righteous shall flourish as a branch," while the wicked, Faenea quadam felicitate temporaliter florent, et exoriuntur ut exurantur; {a} flourish and ruffle for a time, but shall be soon cut down like the grass, and wither as the green herb.

{a} Aug., Epist. 120.

Ver. 29. He that troubleth his own house.] Either by prodigality, or excessive parsimony. Prodigi singulis auribus bina aut terna dependent patrimonia, saith Seneca. We have known great rents soon turned into great ruffs, and lands into laces. For parsimony and cruelty, {See Trapp on "Pr 15:27"}

Shall inherit the wind.] That is, Shall bring all to nothing, as he did that, having wasted his estate, vainly vaunted that he had left himself nothing, praeter coelum et caenum. {a} His substance shall fly up like smoke into the air, and nothing be left to maintain him on earth. And when all his goods are gone, his liberty must go after—for this "fool shall be servant to the wise in heart"—if not, his life; as that notorious unthrift, Apicius, who having eaten up his estate, and finding by his account that he had no more than two hundred thousand crowns remaining, thought himself poor, and took down a glass of poison. {b}

Ver. 30. The fruit of the righteous is a tree of life, / i.e., The commodities and comforts that one may every way receive from a righteous person, -for, est aliquid quod a viro bono etiam tacente discas, saith Seneca, somewhat a man may learn from a good man, even when he says nothing, -are more than can be imagined. Plutarch reporteth that the Babylonians make three hundred and sixty various commodities of the palm tree, and do therefore greatly honour it. Should not we much more honour the multifarious gifts of God in his righteous ones for our good? For whether it be "Paul, or Apollo, or Cephas," "All is ours." {#1Co 3:4-9}

And he that winneth souls.] And useth singular art and industry therein, as fowlers do to take birds (for so the Hebrew word imports), or fishermen fishes. "He is wise, and wiseth others," as Daniel hath it; {#Pr 12:3} he is just, and justifieth others; he "shall save a soul from death." {#Jas 5:20} He shall shine as a star in heaven. And this is instanced as one special fruit of that tree of life mentioned in the former verse. This is a noble fruit indeed, since one soul is more worth than a world, as he hath told us, who only went to the price of it. {#Mt 16:26}

Ver. 31. The righteous shall be recompensed, / i.e., Chastened, afflicted, "judged of the Lord, that they may not be condemned with the world," for their sufferings are not penal, but medicinal or probational; and they have it here in the earth, which is their house of correction, not in hell.

Much more the wicked.] #Na 1:9. Non surget hic afflictio. These shall be totally and finally consumed at once. {See Trapp on "1Pe 4:17"} {See Trapp on "1Pe 4:18"} see also my "Love Tokens," page 69, &c.

Ver. 1. Whoso loveth instruction, loveth knowledge.] Here is showed, that adversity is the best university, saith an interpreter. Schola crucis, schola lucis. {a} Corrections of instruction are the way of life. Men commonly beat and bruise their links, before they light them, to make them burn the brighter. God first humbles whom he means to illuminate; as Gideon took thorns of the wilderness and briers, and with them he "taught the men of Succoth." {#Jud 8:16} {See Trapp on "Re 3:19"} Mr Ascham was a good schoolmaster to Queen Elizabeth, but affliction was a better, as one well observeth. That verse was much in her mouth—

But he that hateth reproof.] Whether it be by the rebukes of men, or the rod of God, he is brutish: tardus est, he is fallen below the stirrup of reason, he is a beast in man's shape; nothing is more irrational than irreligion. That sapless fellow Nabal would hear nothing; there was no talking to him, no dealing with him; but as the horse and mule that have no understanding. {#Ps 32:9} Basil complains of the Western churches, that they were grown so proud, ut quid verum sit neque sciant, neque sustineant discere, {b} that they neither knew what was truth, nor would be taught better. Such are near to ruin, and that without remedy. {#Pr 29:1} {See Trapp on "Pr 29:1"}

Ver. 2. A good man obtaineth favour of the Lord.] Or, "Hath what he will of God"; id quod vult a Domino impetrat; quia eius voluntas est ipsissima Dei voluntas, nec aliud vult. Thus Mercer out of Rabbi Levi. Thus it is written of Luther, that by his prayers he could prevail with God at his pleasure. When great gifts were offered him, he refused them with this brave speech, Valde protestatus sum me nolle sic satiari a Deo: -I solemnly protested to God, that I would not be put off with these low things. And on a time praying for the recovery of a godly useful man, among other passages, he let fall this transcendent rapture of a daring faith, Fiat mea voluntas, "Let my will be done"; and then falls off sweetly, Mea voluntas, Domine, quia tua; "My will, Lord, because thy will!" Here was a good man, here was a blessed man; according to that rule, Beatus est qui habet quicquid vult, et nihil male vult; - Blessed is he that hath what he will, and wills nothing but what he should.

But a man of wicked devices.] Such as no good man is; he doth not plot or plough mischief; he doth not cater and "make provision for the flesh"; {#Ro 13:14} there is no "way of wickedness" {#Ps 139:24} found in him; the peace is not broken between God and him, because his mind never yields to sin, {#Ro 7:25} he "walks not after the flesh, but after the Spirit, therefore no condemnation." {#Ro 8:1} If an evil thought haunt his heart, as again it befalls, it is the device of the man, he is not the man of such devices. The wicked, on the contrary, is wholly made up of sinful thoughts and purposes, and is in the midst of them; therefore God will call him to a heavy reckoning. See #Jer 6:19 Re 2:23.

Ver. 3. A man shall not be established by wickedness.] For he lays his foundation upon firework, and brimstone is scattered upon his house top: if the fire of God from heaven but flash upon it, it will be all a flame immediately. He walks all day upon a mine of gunpowder; and hath God with his armies ready to run upon the thickest bosses of his buckler, and to hurl him to hell. How can this man be sure of anything? Cain built cities, but could not rest in them. Ahab begat seventy sons, but not one successor in the kingdom. Phocas having built a mighty wall, heard from heaven: "Though thy walls were as high as heaven, sin is under it, and will subvert it." {a} Ασταφμητον το κακον. Sin hath no settledness.

But the root of the righteous shall not be moved.] For though shaken with winds, yet they are rooted as trees; like a ship at anchor, they wag up and down, yet remove not. "God is my rock, I shall not be greatly moved." {#Ps 62:2} Nay, "I shall not be moved at all." {#Pr 12:6} "The gates of hell cannot do it." {#Mt 16:18} "None can pluck them out of God's hands," {#Joh 10:28} for he "hath laid help upon one that is mighty." {#Ps 89:19}

Ver. 4. A virtuous woman is a crown to her husband.] Heb., A valiant woman; an able housewife, such as Bathsheba commends to her son, {#Pr 31:10-31} and as Paul describes. {#Tit 2:4,5} She is said to be a crown to her husband—not a ring for his finger, or a chain of gold for his neck, but a crown or garland for his head, a chief and choice ornament, as Sarah was to Abraham, as Livia to Augustus, as Placilla to Theodosius, as Nazianzen's mother to her husband. {a}

Is as rottenness in his bones.] Not a disgrace only to him, but a disease, and such a disease, as is far worse than a quartan ague: for there be two good days for one bad; but here a continual pain, and hardly curable. The wise man here expresseth the mischief of an evil wife, by a very apt similitude. And that of Jerome is not much behind it, Sicut in ligno vermis, ita perdit virum suum uxor malefica. As the worm eats into the heart of the tree, and destroys it, so doth a haughty wife her husband. All evils, as elements, are most troublesome, when out of their proper place, as impiety in professors, injustice in judges, dishonour and discomfort in a wife, &c.

Ver. 5. The thoughts of the righteous are right.] He feeds his thoughts upon the best objects, those especially mentioned in that little Bible, #Php 4:8, "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these Things."if worse break in, as they will, he jostles them out, and rids the room of them. {See Trapp on "Pr 11:23"}

But the counsels of the wicked are deceit.] Not their rash thoughts only, but also their deliberate ones are how to circumvent others, or to cloak their own wickedness. "Every imagination," the whole frame, "of their thoughts is evil, only evil, and continually evil." {#Ge 6:5,8:21} If good thoughts look into a wicked heart, they stay not there, as those that like not their lodging: the flashes of lightnings may be discerned into the darkest prisons. The light that shines into a holy heart is constant, like that of the sun, which keeps due times, and varies not the course for any of these sublunary occasions.

Ver. 6. The words of the wicked are to lie in wait for blood.] As they think not, so neither speak they the language of the righteous. "Ye are the light of the world"; {#Mt 5:14} and because the light stands in the light of their wicked ways, as the angel in Balaam's way to his sin, therefore they hate the saints; and, as all hatred is bloody, seek their lives, mixing cruelty with their craft, as Cain, Herod, Julian, &c. The old serpent lends them his seven heads to plot, and his ten horns to push. Their own study and exercise also hath made them expert and skilful in their hellish trade; and the taste of blood hath made them as hungry as hounds after it. Thus I kept the ban dogs at stave's end, said Nicholas Shetterden, martyr, not as thinking to escape them, but that I would see the foxes leap above ground for my blood, if they can reach it, so it be the will of God; yet we shall see them gape and leap for it. {a}

But the mouth of the upright shall deliver them.] Shall defend harmless men that are helpless. {#Pr 24:11} Hence those many apologies of Tertullian, Apollonius, Arnobius, and others for the primitive Christians under persecution. Hence we had that unparalleled work, Calvin's Institutions, which was written upon this occasion. Francis, king of France, willing to excuse his cruelty exercised upon his Protestant subjects to the German princes, whose friendship he then desired, wrote to them, that he only punished Anabaptists for their contempt of the Scriptures, and of all civil government. Calvin, though then but twenty-five years of age, not able to bear that blur cast upon the reformed religion under the name of those sectaries, set forth that excellent work, as well to vindicate the truth, as to plead for the innocence of those that professed it. {b}

Ver. 7. The wicked are overthrown, and are not.] Say that the righteous cannot prevail by their apologies for themselves and others, God will take the matter into his own hand, and avenge them, {#Lu 18:7} as he did the primitive Christians and the French Protestants, upon their merciless persecutors.

“Tu, vero, Herodes sanguinolente, time.”

As Beza warned Charles IX, author of the massacre.

But the house of the righteous shall stand.] God’s house, the Church, shall; as the gloss applies this text, "The mountain of the Lord shall be exalted above all mountains." The Church, because it is highest in the favour of God, so it shall be highest in itself; when the enemies shall be in that place that is fittest for them, the lowest, that is the footstool of Christ. There is a council in heaven will dash the mould of all contrary counsels upon earth. {#Ps 2} Gaudeo quod Christus dominus est: alioqui totus desperassem; -‘ I am glad yet that Christ is king; for otherwise I should have been utterly out of hope,’ writes Miconius to Calvin, upon the view of the Church’s enemies.

Ver. 8. A man shall be commended according to his wisdom.] And all wisdom consists in this, Ut Deum quis cognoscat et colat, saith Lactantius; -That a man rightly know and worship God. This did not Apollonius, whom yet Philostratus commendeth, that he was non doctus, sed natus sapiens, not instructed, but born wise. See the contrary, #Job 11:12. Nor Archimedes, who yet had the name and note, saith Plutarch, of a divine, and not human wisdom; {a} nor Aristotle, whom yet Averroes admires, as the very rule and copy that nature invented, wherein to set forth the utmost of human perfection; and further saith, that his doctrine was the chieftest truth, and his understanding the utmost extent of human wisdom. These were wise, I confess, in their generations, and so accounted; but by whom? Not by St Paul; he had another opinion of them. See #Ro 1:22,23 1Co 2:6. Not by our Saviour. See #Mt 11:25. Not by any that are rightly instructed to the kingdom of heaven, and have their senses exercised to discern good and evil. The Italians arrogate to themselves the monopoly of wisdom in that proverb of theirs, Italus sapit ante factum, Hispanus in facto, Germanus post factum. Italians, say they, both seem and are wise; whereas Spaniards seem wise, and are fools; Frenchmen seem fools, and are wise; Portuguese neither are wise, nor so much as seem so. Thus the Jesuits—those great clerks, politicians, and wizards of the world—do vaunt that the Church is the soul of the world, the clergy of the Church, and they of the clergy. But what saith that great apostle that knew more than twenty of them? "He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord"; {#1Co 1:31} for "not he that commendeth himself is approved,"—no, nor he whom the world cries up for a wise man—"but he whom the Lord commendeth." {#2Co 10:18}

But he that is of a perverse heart.] As all are that are not heavenly wise, and that show not "out of a good conversation their works with meekness of wisdom." {#Jas 3:13,17} But so did none of those heathen sages, whom God, for their unthankfulness, "gave up unto vile affections" {#Ro 1:20} and vicious conversation; and so set a noverint universi, as it were, upon them. Know all men that these men know nothing aright, and as they ought to know; "professing themselves to be wise, they proclaim themselves fools." {#Ro 1:22}

Ver. 9. Better is he that is despised.] Viz., Of others, and hath no extraordinary opinion of himself, but sticks close to his business, and hath help at hand when he pleases, a servant at his beck and check. This was the case of Galleacius Caracciolus, that noble marquis, in his exile at Geneva for conscience' sake. See his life set forth in English by Mr Crashaw.

Than he that honoureth himself and lacketh bread.] That standing upon his slippers, and boasting of his gentility—as those Spanish Hidalgos ruffle it out in brave apparel—but hath not a penny in his purse, yea, not sometime food sufficient to put in his belly. Spaniards are said to be impudent braggers, and extremely proud in the lowest ebb of fortune. If a Spaniard have but a capon, or the like good dish to his supper, you shall find the feathers scattered before his door the next morning. {a}

Ver. 10. A righteous man regardeth the life of his beast.] There be beasts ad usum, et ad esum. Some are profitable alive, not dead, as the dog, horse, &c.; some dead, not alive, as the hog; some both, as the ox. There is a mercy to be shewed to these dumb creatures, as we see in Eleazar; {#Ge 24:32} and the contrary in Balaam, who spurred his ass till she spake. {#Nu 22:27,28} Otherwise we shall make them "groan under the bondage of our corruption," {#Ro 8:21} and he that hears the young ravens, may hear them, for "he is gracious." {#Ex 22:27} The restraint that was of eating the blood of dead beasts, declared that he would not have tyranny exercised on them while they are alive.

But the tender mercies of the wicked.] If any such thing there were; but they have no such bowels left, with Judas; no such tenderness, scarce common humanity; cannibal-like, they "eat up God's people as they eat bread," feeding upon them alive, and by degrees; and dealing by them as the cruel Spaniards do by the Indians. They suppose they shew the wretches great favour when they do not for their pleasure whip them with cords, and day by day drop their naked bodies with burning bacon, which is one of the least cruelties that they exercise toward them. {a} In the sixth Council of Toledo, it was enacted that the king of Spain should suffer none to live within his dominions that profess not the Roman Catholic religion. In pursuance of which decree, Philip, king of Spain, said, he had rather have no subjects than Protestants; and, out of a bloody zeal, suffered his eldest son Charles to be murdered by the cruel Inquisition, because he seemed to favour that profession. When the Spaniards took Heidelberg, they took Monsieur Mylius, an old minister; and, after they had abused his daughter before his eyes, tied a small cord about his head, which, with truncheons, they wreathed about till they squeezed out his brains. What should I speak of the French massacres, and late Irish immane and monstrous murders, equalling, if not exceeding that at Athens, taken by Sulla, which yet, saith Appian, was ἀνελεης σφαγη, a merciless massacre; or that of Ptolomy Lathurus, king of Egypt, who slew thirty thousand Jews at once, and forced the rest to feed upon the flesh of their slain fellows; or, lastly, that of the Jews committed upon the inhabitants of Cyrene, whom they not only basely butchered, but afterwards ate their flesh, drank their blood, and clothed themselves with their skins, as Dio relates in the life of Trajan, the emperor!

{a} Sir Francis Drake's World Encompass.

Ver. 11. He that tilleth his land shall be satisfied, &c.] This is true of all other lawful callings, manual or mental, -the sweat of the brow or of the brain. Sin brought in sweat, {#Ge 3:19} and now not to sweat increaseth sin. Men must earn their bread before they eat it, {#2Th 3:12} and be diligent in their callings to serve God and men, themselves and others, with the fatness and sweetness thereof, and then they have a promise they shall be fed. {#Ps 37:7}

But he that followeth vain persons, &c.] It is hard to be a good fellow and a good husband too. Qui aequo animo malis immiscetur, malus est, saith one, He that delights in bad company cannot be good.

Ver. 12. The wicked desireth the net of evil men, / i.e., He so furiously pursueth his lusts, as if he desired destruction; as if he would outdare God himself; as if the guerdon of his gracelessness would not come time enough, but he must needs run to meet it. Thus thrasonical Lamech {#Ge 4:23} thinks to have the odds of God, seventy to seven. {a} Thus the princes of the Philistines, while plagued, came up to Mizpeh against Israel {#ISa 7:10,11} -who were there drawing water, i.e., weeping abundantly before the Lord—as it were to fetch their bane. Thus Pope Julius III will have his pork flesh, al despito de Dio; and Doctor Story {b} will curse Queen Elizabeth in his daily grace before eating, and yet say in open parliament that he saw nothing to be ashamed of, much less to be sorry for, but that he had done no more against the heretics, yea, against the queen herself in the days of her sister Mary. This Story, escaping out of prison, got to Antwerp, and there received commission under Duke d'Alva to search all ships coming thither for English books. But one Parker, an English merchant, trading to Antwerp, laid his fair net to catch this foul bird, causing secret notice to be given to Story, that in his ship were store of heretical books, with other intelligences that might stand him in stead. The canonist, conceiving that all was cock sure, hasted to the ship, where, with looks very big upon the poor mariners, each cabin, chest, and corner above board, were searched, and some things found to draw him further on; so that the hatches must be opened, which seemed to be unwillingly done, and great signs of fear were revealed by their faces. This drew on the doctor to descend into the hold; where now in the trap the mouse might well gnaw, but could not get out; for the hatches went down, and the sails hoisted up, which, with a merry gale, were blown into England, where ere long he was arraigned and condemned of high treason, and accordingly executed at Tyburn, as he had well deserved. {c}

Ver. 13. The wicked is snared by the transgression of his lips.] His heart is oft so full of venom that it cannot be hid, but blisters his tongue, and breaks out at his lips to his own ruin, as it befell Story, Campian, Garnet, and other Popish poisonous spiders, who were swept down by the hand of justice, and drew their last thread in the triangle of Tyburn. Detexit facinus fatuus, et non implevit, as Tacitus saith of one that was sent by the senate to despatch Nero, but exposed and betrayed himself.

But the just shall come out of trouble.] They suffer sometimes for their bold and free invectives against the evils of the times, or otherwise for discharging their consciences, but they shall surely be delivered. "There is yet one man," saith Ahab, "Micaiah the son of Imlah, by whom we may inquire of the Lord: but I hate him; for he doth not prophesy good concerning me, but evil." {#1Ki 22:8} It is very probable that Micaiah was that disguised prophet who brought to Ahab the fearful message of displeasure and death for dismissing Benhadad, for which he was ever since fast in prison, deep in disgrace. But God, "with the temptation, made a way for him to escape." So he did for Peter; {#Ac 12:7-11} Paul; {#2Ti 4:6-8} all the apostles. {#Ac 4:13-21} John Baptist, indeed, was, without any law, right, or reason, beheaded in prison, as though God had known nothing at all of him, said George Marsh the martyr. {a} And the same may be said of sundry other faithful witnesses to the truth, but then by death they entered into life eternal. Mors fuit aerumnarum requies, which was Chaucer's motto. Besides that, heaven upon earth they had during their troubles. Philip, Landgrave of Hesse, being a long time prisoner under Charles V, was demanded what upheld him all that while. Respondit, divinas consolationes martyrum se sensisse, he answered—that he had felt the divine comforts of the martyrs. The best comforts are usually reserved for the worst times.

Ver. 14. A man shall be satiated with good, &c.] There are "empty vines that bear fruit to themselves." {#Ho 10:1} And as empty casks sound loudest, and base metal rings shrillest, so many empty tattlers are full of discourse— sed cui bono? as he said. Plato and Xenophon thought it fit and profitable that men's speeches at meals should be written. And if Christians should so do, what kind of books would they be! And yet "for every idle word account must be given," {#Mt 12:36} as for every good word there is "a book of remembrance." {#Mal 3:16} Much fruit will redound by holy speeches to ourselves—much to others. Paul shows that the very report of his bonds did a great deal of good in Caesar's house. {#Php 1:14} A poor captive maid was the means of Naaman's conversion, as afterwards the words of his servants were greater in operation with him than the words of the great prophet Elisha. One seasonable truth, falling upon a prepared heart, hath oft a strong and sweet influence. Sometimes also, though we know that which we ask of others as well as they do, yet good speeches will draw us to know it better by giving occasion to speak more of it, wherewith the Spirit works most effectually, and imprints it deeper, so that it shall be a more rooted knowledge than before; for that satiates the soul which is graciously known, and that is graciously known which the Spirit seals upon our souls. "In the morning, therefore, sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thy hand, for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good." {#Ec 11:6}

And the recompense of a man's hands shall be given unto him.] He "shall eat the fruit of his doings." {#Isa 3:10} "For the talk of the lips, if that be all, tendeth only to penury." {#Pr 14:23} Nos non eloquimur magna, sed vivimus, said they of old. Origen's teaching and living were said to be both one. He cannot look to be satisfied with good by the fruit of his mouth, qui operibus destruit quod recto docet -who says one thing and doeth another. A smooth tongue and a rough hand carries away double judgment.

Ver. 15. The way of a fool is right in his own eyes.] He thinks his own wit best. Consilii satis est in me mihi; {a} he will not part with his commonwealth of baubles for the Tower of London. And such a fool is every natural man; {#Job 11:12} wise enough, haply, in his generation—so is the fox too; -wise with such a wisdom as, like the ostrich's wings, makes him outrun others upon earth, and in earthly things, but helps him never a whit towards heaven—nay, hinders him, and hangs in his light, as it fared with the Pharisees. {#Mt 21:31} Of such it may be said, as Quintilian said of some conceited, presumptuous, and arrogant of themselves, that they might have proved excellent scholars if they had not been so persuaded already. So might many have been wise if they had not been conceited by their own wisdom, and saved if not too well persuaded of their good estate to Godward. They clasp and hug the barn {b} of their own brain, with the ape, till they strangle it.

Cogi posse negat.* ”—Hor., Ep. 2.

But he that hearkeneth to counsel is wise.] He that, suspecting his own judgment, takes advice from those wiser than himself, seldom miscarries. There is that self-love in many, that they think their molehill a mountain, their kestril an eagle, their goose a swan. And, being self-conceited, they love to be flattered. Not so the wise man; he knows that humanum est errare, to error is human, and that triste mortalitatis privilegium est licere aliquando peccare. It is a sad privilege of mortals to be permitted to sin at any time. He is therefore glad of good counsel, and thankful for a seasonable reproof. "Let the righteous smite me."

Ver. 16. A fool's wrath is presently known.] He hath no power over his passions. Hence פֶּתִי, a fool, and מֵאֵתָּה, suddenly, rashly, are from the same root. Like tow, he is soon kindled; like a pot, he soon boils; and like a candle whose tallow is mixed with brine, as soon as lighted he spits up and down the room. A fool uttereth all his mind. {#Pr 29:11} The Septuagint render it, All his anger—θυμῶν. For, as the Hebrews well note in a proverb they have, A man's mind is soon discovered, bekis, bekos, becoynos; — in loculis, in poculis, in ira; - in his purse, in his drink, in his anger. See my "Common Place of Anger."

But a wise man covereth shame.] By concealing his wrath, or rather by suppressing it when it would break forth to his disgrace, or the just grief of another. Ut fragilis glacies, occidit ira mora. {a} This was Saul's wisdom; {#1Sa 10:27} and Jonathan's, when, incensed by his father's frowardness, he went shooting; {#1Sa 20:35} and Ahasuerus, when in a rage against Haman, he walked into the garden. The philosopher wished Augustus, when angry, to say over the Greek alphabet; Ambrose desired an angel's authority; {#Ga 1:8} Theodosius to repeat the Lord's Prayer before he decreed anything.

{a} Ovid.

Ver. 17. He that speaketh truth sheweth forth righteousness.] Will be ready to help the truth in necessity, and will do it boldly, as the word signifies—even with a courage not budging, for "Charity rejoiceth not in unrighteousness, hut rejoiceth in the truth." {#1Co 13:6}

But a false witness uttereth deceit.] Coloureth his sycophancies with plausible pretences, and faceth down an untruth. "The proud have forged a lie against me." {#Ps 119:69} The Hebrew hath it, Assuunt mendacium mendacio, They eke out one lie with another; they are loud and lewd liars; as Egesippus saith of Pilate, that he was Vir nequam et parvi faciens mendacium. What is truth? said he, scornfully, to our Saviour, q.d., Thy life is in question, and dost thou talk of truth?

Ver. 18. There is that speaketh lies like the piercings of a sword.] False witnesses do so, with a witness. As Doeg, {#Ps 52:2} and his fellow hacksters with their murdering weapons in David's bones, {#Ps 42:10} whereby they killed him alive, and buried him in their throats, those gaping graves, open sepulchres. Abimelech and his fellow priests were killed with the tongue, as with a tuck or rapier; so was Naboth and his sons; so was our Saviour Christ himself. Reckon thou Shimei and Rabshakeh among the first and chiefest kill Christs, {#Ac 2:23 3:15} saith one, because ever an honest mind is more afflicted with words than blows. You shall find some, saith Erasmus, that if death be threatened, can despise it; but to be belied they cannot brook, nor from revenge contain themselves. How was David enraged by Nabal's railings! Moses, by the people's murmurings! Jeremiah, by the derisions of the rude rabble. {#Jer 20:7,8}

But the tongue of the wise is health.] Or, A medicine, as the tench is to the wounded fishes; or as that noble Lady Eleanor's tongue was to her husband, Prince Edward, afterward Edward I, who, being traitorously wounded by a poisoned knife in the Holy Land, was perfectly cured by her daily licking his rankling wounds whilst he slept, and yet herself received no harm; {a} so sovereign a medicine is a good tongue, anointed with the virtue of love and wisdom. Wholesome words, as certain salves or treacles, cure the wounds of afflicted hearts, and extract the poison infused by evil tongues.

{a} Speed, Camden.

Ver. 19. The lips of truth shall be established for ever.] Veritas odium parit: Truth breeds hatred: a good mistress she is, but he that follows her too close at heels, may hap have his teeth struck out. He that prizeth truth, shall never prosper by the possession or profession thereof, saith Sir Walter Raleigh. {a} This is most true, for the most part, of "the truth of the gospel," {#Ga 2:5} "the doctrine according to godliness" {#1Ti 6:3} - "sweet in the mouth, but bitter in the belly"; {#Re 10:9} very pleasant in itself, but the publishing of it, whereby the fruit of it might come to the rest of the members, is full of trouble and anguish. How many faithful witnesses of the truth have lost their lives in the defence of it! All which notwithstanding, "the lips of truth shall be established," saith the Spirit here. 'Great is the truth, and shall prevail.' He that loseth his life in Christ's cause, shall find it in heaven; "his name" also "shall be famous upon earth; the generation of the upright shall be blessed."

The lying tongue is but for a moment.] As is to be seen in Gehazi, in Ananias and Sapphira, in Doeg, and others; -"God {#Ps 52:5} shall likewise destroy thee for ever, and root thee out of the land of the living." Did he not deal so by Julian, Ecebolius, Latomus, Bomelius, Pendleton, Harding, and others, both ancient and modern, renegades and apostates? "How are they brought into desolation as in a moment! they are utterly consumed with terror." {#Ps 73:19}

Ver. 20. Deceit is in the heart of them, &c.] Incendiaries and make-baits, counsellors of contention, have twenty devices to make trouble, and to put all into a combustion; but they shall either be defeated of their purposes, or have small joy of their achievements; -witness our late English boutifeaus, with the whole nation of Ignatius, whose practice is to machinate mischief, and breed hate; being herein no less dangerous than once those Jews were, who, before they were banished hence, threw bags of poison into the wells and fountains that the people were to drink from, and so endeavoured to poison them all. The just judgment of God upon Nicholas Saunders, priest, the firebrand of Ireland, 1580 AD, spent with famine and forsaken of all help, is most worthy to be kept in perpetual remembrance. He being impatiently grieved at the evil success of his rebellion with Earl Desmond, and seeing that neither the Pope's blessing, nor the consecrated banner, nor the plume of phoenix feathers, so said to be at least, sent from Rome, could do him any help, lost himself, and ran stark mad, wandering up and down in the mountains and woods, and, finding no comfort, died miserably. {a} Thus God met with a restless and wretched man, and that foul mouth was stopped with famine that was ever open to sow sedition and stir up rebellions against the state.

But to the counsellors of peace there is joy.] They shall have peace for peace: peace of conscience for peace of country, pax pectoris peace of the heart for pax temporis; peace of time, they shall be called and counted the children of peace, yea, "the children of God," have the comfort and credit of it, {#Mt 5:9} {See Trapp on "Mt 5:9"} as Augustus Caesar and our Henry VII had; who as he went into banishment together with the public peace, so he brought it back with him at his return, and was afterwards wont to say, If we princes should take every occasion that is offered, the world should never be quiet, but wearied with continual wars.

Ver. 21. There shall no evil happen to the just.] First, For evil of sin: God will not lead him into temptation, but will cut off occasions, remove stumbling blocks out of his way: devoratory evils, as Tertullian calls them, he shall be sure not to fall into. "That evil one shall not touch him," {#1Jo 5:18} viz., tactu qualitativo, as Cajetan expounds it, with a deadly touch: nibble he may at their heels, but cannot reach their heads; shake he may his chain at them, but shall not set his fangs in them, or so far thrust his sting into them as to infuse into them the venom of that sin unto death. {#Pr 12:17} Next, For evil of pain: though "many be the troubles of the righteous," {#Ps 34:19} and they "fall into manifold temptations," {#Jas 1:2} they go not in step by step into these waters of Marah, but "fall into" them, being, as it were, precipitated, plunged over head and ears, yet are bidden to be "exceeding glad," as a merchant is to see his ship come laden in. Their afflictions are not penal, but probational; not mortal, but medicinal. "By this shall the iniquity of Jacob be purged, and this is all the fruit, the taking away of his sin." {#Isa 27:9} Look how the scourging and beating of a garment with a stick, drives out the moths and the dust; so doth affliction corruptions from the heart; and there is no hurt in that, no evil happens thereby to the just.

But the wicked shall be filled with mischief.] To treasure up sin, is to treasure up wrath. {#Ro 2:5} "Every bottle shall be filled with wine"; {#Jer 13:12} the bottle of wickedness, when once filled with those bitter waters, will sink to the bottom: the ephah of wickedness, when top full, shall be borne "into the land of Shiner, and set there upon her own base." {#Zec 5:8 11} He that makes a match with mischief, shall have his bellyful of it; {#Ho 4:17 Pr 14:14} he shall have an evil, "an evil, an only evil" {#Eze 7:5} -that is, "judgment without mercy," as St James expounds it. {#Jas 2:13} Non surgit hic afflictio, as the prophet Nahum hath it; {#Na 1:9} affliction shall not rise up the second time: God will have but one blow at him; he shall totally and finally be cut down at once. The righteous are smitten in the branches, but the wicked at the root; {#Isa 27:8} those he corrects with a rod, yea, with the rods of men, hominum debiliūm, of weak or old men, as the word signifies, {#2Sa 7:11} but these with a "grounded staff"; {#Isa 30:32} and yet the worst is behind too. For whatsoever a wicked man suffers in this world is but hell typical; it is but as the falling of leaves—the whole tree will one day fall upon them. It is but as a drop of wrath forerunning the great storm, a crack forerunning the ruin of the whole building; it is but as a paying the use money required for the debt that must be paid at last.

Ver. 22. Lying lips are abomination to the Lord.] Who hath therefore threatened to "cut them off," {#Ps 12:3} and to broil them on "coals of juniper," {#Ps 120:4} which burn sweetly, fiercely, lastingly; and to make them eat their false words, as Master Lewes of Manchester made the summoner that came to cite his wife eat the citation, by setting a dagger to his heart. {a}

But they that deal truly are his delight.] He "desireth truth in the inward parts," {#Ps 51:6} and all his are "children that will not lie"; {#Isa

63:8} they will rather die than lie; Nec prodam, nec mentiar, said Firmus in Augustine; Non ideo negare volo, ne peream; sed ideo mentiri nolo, ne peccem, said that good woman upon the rack mentioned by Jerome. As they "love in the truth," {#2Jo 1:1} so they "speak the truth in love," {#Eph 4:15} and are therefore dear to the Father in truth and love, {#2Jo 3} especially since they "do truth" as well as speak it, {#1Jo 1:6} and do not more desire to be truly good than they hate to seem to be so only.

{a} Acts and Mon., fol. 1825.

Ver. 23. A prudent man concealeth knowledge, J scil., Till he finds a fit time to vent it; for then "the lips of the wise do spread abroad knowledge." {#Pr 15:7} He is no niggard where there is need, but loves not to outlash. Taciturnity is a virtue with him; Tacitus a good historian, Persae magnam rem sustineri posse non credunt ab eo cui tacere grave sit; {a} -The Persians hold not him fit for great employments that cannot keep counsel, saith Curtius.

But the heart of fools proclaimeth foolishness.] In it is, and out it must: Pleni rimarum sunt, they can keep no counsel, hold no secrets, must needs tell all, whatever come of it: ut qui nec tacere nec prudenter loqui norint; they can neither hold their tongue nor use it to purpose. The moralist adviseth η σιγαν η κρεισσονα σιγης λεγειν, -either to say nothing, or that which is better than nothing. And Socrates, being asked by one how he might have the reputation of a wise man, First, said he, thou must hold thy tongue oftener than speak; secondly, thou must learn how to frame thy speeches.

Ver. 24. The hand of the diligent shall bear rule, J i.e., It shall make rich, and so get preferment; for, regina pecunia; money bears the mastery, and is a common meddler in most businesses. Agathocles, by his industry, became king of Sicily, Cromwell came to be earl of Essex, Cranmer came to be archbishop of Canterbury, &c.

But the slothful (or deceitful) shall be under tribute.] Cajetan renders it, Dolus erit ad liquefactionem; - Deceitful dealing shall melt to nothing. The same word {a} signifieth both melting and tribute, because too much tribute wastes men's estates; as when the spleen swells, the rest of the body consumes. King John's exactors received from his subjects no less sums of curses than of coin. He gathered money, the sinews of war; but lost their affections, the joints of peace. He had a troublesome reign, ill-beloved of his people, and far a less king, only by striving to be more than he was, the just reward of violations; what tribute he paid to the Pope's legate at his absolution (eight thousand marks, besides other huge sums, insomuch as that John Florentinus, the legate, was nicknamed Ferentinus, for bearing away so much money) I need not here relate. {b} And yet this king was not slothful (for his endless turmoils kept his body still in motion, his mind in passions, and his prowess in use); {c} deceitful, I cannot deny him, in breaking promise with his subjects about their just liberties. But a great part of that blame may well lie upon his court parasites, who suggested, that now he was a king without a kingdom, a lord without a dominion, and a subject to his subjects. Wicked counsellors! as if it were not enough to be above men, but to be above mankind, as those princes would be that would not be under the law.

Ver. 25. Heaviness in the heart of a man maketh it stoop.] Grief is like lead to the soul, -heavy and cold; it sinks downward, and carries the soul with it; Αἰψα γὰρ ἐν κακοτητι βροτοὶ καταγρηρασκουσι. {a} How decrepit was David grown with much grief at seventy years of age. The like we may say of Jacob, who "attained not to the days of the years of the life of his fathers," {#Ge 47:9} as being a man of many sorrows. And this, some think, was the reason that our Saviour Christ, at little past thirty, was reckoned to be toward fifty. {#Joh 8:57} He was "the man that had seen affliction by the rod of God's wrath." {#La 3:1}

But a good word maketh it glad.] Such as was that of our Saviour to the poor paralytic, "Son, be of good cheer, thy sins are forgiven thee." The promises are called a "good word." {#Jer 29:10} So David found them; {#Ps 119:92} medicine for the soul {b} -more truly so called than the library at Alexandria; cordials of comfort, "breasts of consolation"; {#Isa 66:11} "wells of salvation"; {#Isa 12:3} μαλακτικά miserarium, - as Plato said of wine and music; -that which mitigates man's miseries; and without which wine, music, merry company, &c., will prove but miserable comforters, and at the best, but the devil's anodynes.

Ver. 26. The righteous is more excellent than his neighbour.] Let him dwell by whomsoever; he is ever a better man than his neighbours; he is "a prince of God" among them, as Abraham was among the Hittites. The Jews say that those seventy souls that went with Jacob into Egypt, were as much worth as all the seventy nations in the world. Nemo me maior, nisi qui iustior; said Agesilaus, when he heard the king of Persia styled the great king, i.e., I acknowledge none more excellent than myself, unless more righteous; none greater, unless better: "Upon all the glory shall be a defence," {#Isa 4:5} that is, upon all the righteous, those only glorious, those "excellent of the earth," {#Ps 16:3} that are "sealed up to the day of redemption." {#Eph 4:30} Now, whatsoever is sealed with a seal, that is excellent in its own kind, as #Isa 28:25 hordeum signatum, excellent barley. The poorest village is an ivory palace, in quo est pastor et credentes aliqui, saith Luther, if it have in it but a minister and a few good people.

But the way of the wicked seduceth them, / i.e., The wicked will not be persuaded of the just man's excellence; he cannot discern, nor will be drawn to believe, that there is any such gain in godliness, any such worth in well doing, any such difference between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not. He therefore goes another way to work, but is fearfully frustrated; for "who ever yet hardened himself against God and prospered?" {#Job 9:4} They think themselves far better than the righteous; and so they were indeed, if they could find that felicity in wicked ways which their deceitful hearts promise them. But this they can never do.

Ver. 27. The slothful (or deceitful) man roasteth not that which he took in hunting.] He shall never enjoy his evil gotten goods; but "though he heap up silver as the dust, and prepare raiment as the clay, he may prepare it, but the just shall put it on, and the innocent shall divide the silver." {#Job 27:16,17} I read of a dishonest butcher that, having stolen an ox and caused it to be dressed on his wedding day, was on that very day apprehended, and not long after executed. I read of Tecelius, the Pope's pardon monger in Germany, that having by sale of indulgences scraped together a huge amount of money, and returning for Rome, he was met, and eased of his cash by an odd fellow, who being afterwards prosecuted for a felon, produced a pardon for future sins granted him by Tecelius himself, and being thereupon acquitted by the judge he roasted that which that other old fox had taken in hunting.

But the substance of a diligent man is precious.] Great in value, whatsoever it be in quantity; as a small boxful of pearls is more worth than mountains of pebbles. {#Ps 37:16 Pr 15:16 12:2} The house of the righteous hath much treasure; though there be but curta suppellex, res augusta dotal, he is without that care in getting, fear in keeping, grief in losing, -those three fell vultures that feed continually on the heart of the rich worldling, and dissweeten all his comforts. Jabal that dwelt in tents, and tended the herds, had Jubal to his brother, the father of music. Jabal and Jubal, diligence and complacence, good husbandry and a well contenting sufficiency, dwell usually together.

Ver. 28. In the way of righteousness is life.] And life, in any sense, is a sweet mercy, a precious indulgence. Life natural is but a little spot of time between two eternities, before and after, but it is of great consequence (for ex hoc momento pendet aeternitas), and given us for this purpose, that glory may be begun in grace, and we have a further and further entrance into the kingdom of heaven here, as Peter saith, #2Pe 1:11.

And in the path thereof there is no death.] Christ hath unstinged the first death, and made it of a punishment, a benefit; of a postern to let out temporal life, a street door to let in eternal life. {a} Surely the bitterness of this death is past to the righteous; there is no gall in it (as the Hebrew word there signifies); nay, there is honey in it, as once there was in the corpse of Samson's dead lion. And for the second death, there is no danger; for they shall pass from the jaws of death to the joys of heaven. Yea, though hell had closed her mouth upon a child of God, it could as little hold him as the whale could Jonah; it must, perforce, regurgitate, and render up such a morsel.

Ver. 1. A wise son heareth his father's instruction.] Heb., Is the instruction or discipline of his father; he was not natus sapiens, as Appollonius, sed factus, {a} not born wise to salvation, but made so by his father's discipline, as Solomon. {#Pr 4:4} {See Trapp on "Pr 4:4"}

But a scorner heareth not rebuke.] Or, Heareth and jeereth; -as Lot's sons-in-law, as Eli's sons, and afterwards Samuel's. Samuel succeeds Eli in his cross, as well as in his place, though not in his sin of indulgence. God will shew that grace is by gift, not by inheritance or education. Ciceroni degenerem fuisse filium constat, et sapiens ille Socrates liberos habuit matri similiores quam patri, saith Seneca. Cicero had a son nothing like him; so had Socrates.

Ver. 2. A man shall eat good by the fruit of his mouth.] {See Trapp on "Pr 12:14"} {See Trapp on "Pr 10:6"} {See Trapp on "Mt 12:37"}

Ver. 3. He that keepeth his mouth.] As the guard keepeth the gates in a siege. God hath set a double guard of lips and teeth before this gate, and yet, unless he himself set the watch, and keep the door, all will be lost. {#Ps 141:3}

But he that openeth wide his lips.] As she did her feet, to "multiply her whoredoms." {#Eze 16:25} Κεχηνοτες, gaping mouthed men are noted for fools by Lucian and Aristophanes. An open mouth is a purgatory to the master, say we. And cave ne feriat lingua tua collum tuum, {a} say the Arabians in their proverb, Take heed that thy tongue cut not thy throat.

{a} Scalig. Arab. Prov., cent. 1. prov 75.

Ver. 4. The soul of the sluggard desireth, &c.] Vult, et non vult piger -so the Vulgate reads it. The sluggard would, and he would not; he would have the end, but he would not use the means; he would "sit at Christ's right hand," but he would not "drink of his cup, or be baptized with his baptism." Lyra compares these men to cats that would fain have fish, but are loath to wet their feet. (This is an English proverb; for Lyra was a famous English Jew, and flourished in the year of grace 1320.) Affection without endeavour is like Rachel—beautiful, but barren.

But the soul of the diligent shall be made fat,] i.e., Those that work as well as wish, that add endeavours to their desires, as #2Co 8:11. David, ravished with the meditation of the good man's blessedness, presently conceives this desire and pursues it; not, Oh that I had this happiness! but, Oh that I could use the means! "Oh that my ways were so directed." {#Ps 119:4,5}

Ver. 5. A righteous man hateth lying.] Hateth it as hell. {#Ro 12:9} {a} "I hate and abhor lying," saith David; {#Ps 119:163} and yet, among other corruptions, he had an inclination to this sin. See how roundly he tells three or four lies together; {#1Sa 21:2,8 27:8,10} but he both hated it in himself and prayed against it {#Ps 119:29}

But a wicked man is loathsome.] Stinks above ground; a liar especially is looked upon as a pest. Riches cannot make a man so graceful as lying will disgrace him; for "a poor man walking in his integrity, is better than a rich man that is a liar." {#Pr 19:1,22} Hence the liar denies his own lie, because he is ashamed to be taken with it. Some read it thus, 'a wicked man maketh others loathsome, and casteth shame upon them,' scil., by raising or reporting lies of them, by blasting or blemishing their good names. Thus Core and his complices sought to cast an odium on Moses; the Pharisees upon our Saviour; the Arians upon Athanasius; the Papists upon Wycliffe, whom Binius slanders for his missing the bishopric of Worcester, to have fallen upon that successful contradiction; like as the spiteful Jews said Paul did, because he could not obtain the high-priest's daughter to wife. {b}

Ver. 6. Righteousness keepeth him that is upright.] That, though belied or otherwise abused, he will not let go his integrity. {#Job 27:5}

David's "feet stood on an even place." {#Ps 26:12} The spouse, though despoiled of her veil, and wounded by the watch, yet cleaves close to Christ. {#So 5:7,8} Not but that the best are sometimes disquieted in such cases; for not the evenest weights but, at their first putting into the balance, somewhat sway both parts thereof, not without some show of inequality, which yet after some little motion, settle themselves in a meet poise and posture.

But wickedness overthroweth the sinner.] Heb., The sin; as if the man were transformed into sin's image. "What is the transgression of Jacob? Is it not Samaria?" {#Mic 1:5} Tubulus quidam paulo supra Ciceronem Praetor fuit: homo tam proiecte improbus ut eius nomen non hominis sed vitii esse videretur; saith Lipsius. {a} The Pope is called "the man of sin," {#2Th 2:3} to note him merum scelus, saith Beza, -made up merely of sin.

Ver. 7. There is that maketh himself rich.] Such πτωχολαζονες (as the witty Greek calls them) there are not few, that stretch their wing beyond their nest, that bear a port beyond their estate, that trick up themselves with other men's plumes, laying it on above measure in clothes, fair building, &c., when not worth a groat, but die in prison, or make a fraudulent composition. This is no better before God than rapine and robbery.

There is that makes himself poor, &c.] As the newly elected Pope doth, when in his Lateran procession he casts among the people pieces of brass and copper, {a} saying, "Silver and gold have I none, but such as I have I give you." So the friars are a race of people (saith one {b} that hath been long among them) that are always vowing obedience, but still contentious; chastity, yet most luxurious; poverty, yet everywhere scraping and covetous. No Capuchin may take or touch silver; at the offer of it he starts back, as Moses from the serpent; yet he carries a boy with him that takes and carries it, and never complains of either metal or measure. {c} We had in King Stephen's days a rich chancellor of England, who yet was, and would be, called Roger paupere censu. {d}

Ver. 8. The ransom of a man's life are his riches.] They may help a man out at a dead lift, and get him a release out of captivity, or a lease of his life. "Slay us not," say they, {#Jer 41:8} "for we have treasures in the field. So he forebore, and slew them not among their brethren." Some read it thus: 'The price of a man's life are his riches.' It costs him his life that he is rich; as Naboth, and as many Turkish viziers. In the days of Caligula the tyrant, publicum crimen fuit divitem fuisse, {a} it was crime enough to be rich. And in the reign of Henry II of France, many were burned for religion, as was pretended; but indeed to satiate the covetousness of Diana Valentina, the king's mistress, to whom he had given all the confiscations of goods made in the kingdom for cause of heresy. {b}

But the poor heareth not rebuke.] He escapes many times as not considerable, as not worth a chiding, as under law. In a tragedy there is no place for a poor man but only to dance, as Arian hath observed upon Epictetus.

Ver. 9. The light of the righteous rejoiceth.] As the sun rejoiceth to run his race, and seemeth sometimes to suffer eclipse, but doth not. {a} A saint's joy is as the light of the sun, fed by heavenly influence, and never extinct, but diffused through all parts of the world.

But the lamp of the wicked shall be put out.] Their joy is but as the light of a candle, -fed by base and stinking matter, soon wasting and ending in an offensive snuff. "The light of the wicked shall be put out, and the spark of his fire shall not shine. The light shall be dark in his tabernacle; and his candle shall be put out with him." {#Job 18:5,6} Ecquandone vidisti flammom stipula exortam claro strepitu, largo fulgore, cito incremento, sed enim materalevi, caduco incendio, nullis requiis? {b} Solomon compares it fitly to a handful of brushwood or sear thorn under the pot. {#Ec 7:6}

Ver. 10. Only by pride cometh contention.] Heb., Dabit iurgium. Pride, if there be no cause of contention given, will make it. Transcendo, non obedio, perturbo, is the motto written upon pride's triple crown. A proud person is full of discontent; nothing can please him. Just like one that hath a swelling in his hands, something or other toucheth it still, and driveth him to outcries. Pride maketh a man drunk with his own conceit. "The proud man" is as he that "hath transgressed by wine." {#Hab 2:5} And drunkards, we know, are quarrelsome. The Corinthians had riches and gifts and learning; and carried aloft by these waxen wings, they domineered and despised others; {#1Co 4:8} they were divided and discontented; {#1Co 3:3} and these overflowings of the gall and spleen came from a fulness of bad humour. Pride is a dividing distemper; gouty swollen legs keep at a distance; bladders blown up with wind spurt one from another, and will not close; but prick them, and you may pack a thousand of them in a little room.

But with the well advised is wisdom.] The "meekness of wisdom," as St James hath it; {#Jas 3:13} of the which we may well say, as Tertullus said to Felix, "By thee we enjoy great quietness." {#Ac 24:2} It was a great trouble to Haman to lead Mordecai's horse, which another man would not have thought so. The moving of a straw troubleth proud flesh; whereas humility, if compelled to go one mile, will go two for a need—yea, as far as the shoes of the gospel of peace can carry it. "The wisdom from above is peaceable." {#Jas 3:17}

Ver. 11. Wealth gotten by vanity shall be diminished.] De male quaesitis vix gaudet tertius haeres, { a } Ill-gotten goods fly away without taking leave of the owner; leaving nothing but the print of talons to torment him. {#Pr 23:5} Many when they have a loss in their riches, it is as it were raked out of their bellies. {#Job 20:15} A piece of their very heart goes with it.

But he that gathereth by labour shall increase.] Howbeit sometimes it is otherwise: "Master, we have laboured all night and taken nothing." {#Lu 5:5} "Behold, is it not of the Lord of hosts that the people shall labour in the very fire, and the people shall weary themselves for very vanity?" {#Hab 2:13} There is a curse upon unlawful practices, though men be industrious, as in Jehoiakim. {#Jer 22:24-30}

Ver. 12. Hope deferred maketh the heart sick.] Hope's hours are full of eternity; and how many see we lie languishing at hope's hospital, as he at the pool of Bethesda! Spes interrenis incerti nomen boni spes in divinis nomen est certissimi {#Heb 11:1} Hope unfaillable {#Ro 5:5} is founded upon faith unfeigned. {#1Ti 1:5}

But when the desire cometh.] As come it will to those that wait patiently upon God; for waiting is but hope and trust lengthened. Deo confisi, nunquam confusi. "The vision is but for an appointed time; therefore wait," {#Hab 2:3} you shall be well paid for your patience. We are apt to antedate the promises, and to set God a time, as they {#Jer 8:20} looked for salvation at summer at furthest. We are short breasted, short spirited. But as God seldom comes at our time, so he never fails at his own; and then he is most sweet, because most seasonable.

Ver. 13. Whoso despiseth the word shall be destroyed.] Bishop Banner's chaplain called the Bible, in scorn, his little pretty God's book. Gifford and Rainold said it contained doctrinam peregrinam, strange doctrine—yea, some things profane and apocryphal. The more modest Papists account traditions the touchstone of doctrine and foundation of faith; and repute the Scriptures to be rather a kind of storehouse for advice in matters of religion. {a} We account them the divine beam and most exact balance, cor et animam Dei, the heart and soul of God, as Gregory calleth them; the best fortress against errors, as Augustine, though some of our sublimated sectaries blaspheme that blessed book as a dead letter and a beggarly element.

But he that feareth the commandment.] That honoureth the Scriptures, and trembleth at the word preached, as King Edward VI did, that second Josiah, and as Queen Elizabeth, his sweet sister Temperance, as he used to call her, who, when the Bible was presented to her as she rode triumphantly through London after her coronation, received the same with both her hands, and kissing it, laid it to her breast, saying that it had ever been her delight, and should be her rule of government.

Ver. 14. The law of the wise is as a well of life.] Or, The law to the wise is a fountain, &c., whence he may draw the best directions and helps to holiness and happiness. It confines him to live in that element where he would live—as if one were confined to paradise, where he would be—though there were no such law. The wicked, on the contrary, leaps over the pale after profit and pleasure, and falls upon the snares of death, as Shimei sought his servants and lost himself.

Ver. 15. Good understanding giveth favour.] See this exemplified in Joseph, David, Daniel, Paul. {#Ac 27:43 28:2} God oft speaketh for such in the hearts of their enemies, who cannot but admire their piety and patience, and spend more thoughts about them than the world is aware of; as Darius did about Daniel when cast into the den. Natural conscience cannot but do homage to the image of God stamped upon the natures and works of the godly: when they see in them that which is above the ordinary nature of men, or their expectation, they are afraid of the name of God, whereby they are called, {#De 28:9,10} and are forced to say, "Surely this is a wise and understanding nation"; {#De 4:6} "God is in this people of a truth"; {#1Co 14:25} "Certainly this was a righteous man." {#Lu 23:47}

But the way of transgressors is hard.] Or, Rough and rugged. Satan is a rough, harsh spirit; hence devils are called Shegnirim, hairy ones, {#Le 17:7} satyrs. {#Isa 34:14} So are all his; ἀνημεροί, fierce, "heady, highminded"; {#2Ti 3:3,4} "Living in malice and envy, hateful and hating one another." {#Tit 3:3} Such were Ishmael, Esau, Saul, Antiochus (that little Antichrist), the Pope, that Αντικειμενος, and our Richard III; who, well knowing it was no good policy to play the devil by half deal, resolved to leave never a rub to lie in the way that might hinder the running of his bowl; and hence was he so infinitely hated of all.

Ver. 16. Every prudent man dealeth with knowledge.] Observes circumstances, and deports himself with discretion; thrusts not himself into unnecessary dangers; carves not a piece of his heart but to those he is well assured of. See an instance of this prudence in Ezra; {#Ezr 8:22} in Nehemiah, {#Neh 2:5} he calls it not the place of God's worship—such an expression that heathen king might have disgusted—but the place of his father's sepulchres; in Esther, who concealed her stock and kindred till she saw her time; in Christ, when he was tried for his life; in Paul, {#Ac 23:6 19:10} who lived two years at Ephesus, and spake not much against the worship of their great goddess Diana. {#Ac 19:35,37} "The prudent shall keep silence in an evil time." {#Am 5:13} It is not good provoking evil men that are irreformable, nor safe pulling a bear or mad dog by the ear.

But a fool layeth open his folly.] Plasheth it, and setteth it a sunning, as it were, by his headlong, headstrong exorbitances. By his inconsiderate courses he openly bewrays and proclaims what he is; he sets his folly "upon the cliff of the rock, that it should not be covered." {#Eze 24:7}

Ver. 17. A wicked messenger falleth into mischief.] Incurs the displeasure and just revenge of them that sent him, or, at least, of God, in case of his slackness. How much more then wicked ministers, those "messengers of the Churches," {#2Co 8:23} that do the Lord's work "negligently," {#Jer 48:10} that "corrupt" {a} his message, {#2Co 2:17} that huckster it and handle it craftily and covetously, calling good evil, and evil good, &c.? "Who is blind but my servant? or deaf as my messenger?" {#Isa 42:19} Such an ambassador was once worthily derided in the Roman state. As at another time, a certain stranger coming on embassy to the senators of Rome, and colouring his hoary hair and pale cheeks with vermilion hue, a grave senator, espying the deceit, stood up and said, 'What sincerity are we to expect at this man's hands, whose locks, and looks, and lips do lie?' It was an honest complaint of a Popish writer, We, saith he, handle the Scripture, tantum ut nos pascat et vestiat, that we may pick a living out of it, and are therefore fain to preach placentia, pleasingly and so to put men into a fool's paradise. But "shall they" thus "escape by iniquity?" {#Ps 56:7} have they no better doctors?

But a faithful ambassador is health.] To him that sendeth him, to those he is sent to, and to himself. So is a faithful minister that delivers "the whole counsel of God"; all that he hath in commission.

{#Jer 1:17 Eze 3:17}

{a} κατηλενεiv.

Ver. 18. Poverty and shame.] These two are fitly set together; for poverty is usually slighted, if not shamed. {#Jas 2:16}

“ *Nil habet infelix paupertas durius in se
Quam quod ridicules homines facit.* ”

The world looks over a poor though virtuous man. "This thy son"; {#Lu 15:30} not, This my brother. And why, but because in poverty? How much more an uncounsellable and incorrigible man, as here, and as that prodigal had been till he came to himself!

But he that regardeth reproof shall be honoured.] Though not haply enriched, he shall be of good account with the wise and godly, though in meaner condition. Mr Fox being asked whether he knew such an honest poor man who had received help and good counsel from him in time of trouble, answered, ‘I remember him well; I tell you, I forget lords and ladies to remember such.’

Ver. 19. The desire accomplished is sweet to the soul.] Tota vita boni Christiani sanctum desiderium est, saith Augustine: The whole life of a good Christian is one holy desire; he even spends and exhales himself in continual sallies, as it were, and expressions of strongest affection to God, whom he hath chosen, and with whom he hath much sweet intercourse. He cannot be at rest without some comings in from him every day. And then, Oh the joys, the joys, the inconceivable joys! as she once cried out {a} ‘Oh that joy! O my God, when shall I be with thee?’ {b} These were the dying words of the young Lord Harrington. He was in heaven aforehand, as having let out his holy soul into God, the fountain of all good.

But it is abomination to fools to depart from evil.] To be pulled from their vain delights, though never so sinful, never so destructive. Esau, for a mess of pottage, sold his birthright; Cardinal Burbon would not part with his part in Paris for a part in paradise. Theotimus, in Ambrose, being told that intemperance would be the loss of his eyesight, cried out, Vale lumen amicum. He would rather lose his sight than his sin; so doth many a man his soul. The panther loves man’s dung, they say, so much, that if it is hanged a height from him, he will leap up, and never stop till he hath burst himself in pieces to get it; and this is the way they get that creature. Like policy uses Satan, by base lusts, to draw many to hell. It was a speech of Gregory Nyssen, He that doth but hear of hell, is without any further labour or study taken off from sinful pleasures. Men's hearts are grown harder today.

Ver. 20. He that walketh with wise men shall be wise.] He that comes where sweet spices and ointments are stirring, doth carry away some of the sweet savour, though he think not of it; so he that converseth with good men shall get good. Holiness is such an elixir as by contactation (if there be any disposition of goodness in the same metal) it will render it of the property. A child having been brought up with Plato, and afterwards hearing his father break out into rage and passion, said, I have never seen the like with Plato. {a}

But a companion of fools shall be broken.] There is an elegance in the original that cannot be told in English. Bede, by a companion or friend of fools here, understands those that take delight in jesters, stage players, and such idle companions, unprofitable burdens—fruges consumere nati, the botch and canker of the commonwealth. Theatra iuvenes corrumpunt, saith Plato. {b} Ludi praebeant semina nequitiae, saith Ovid. The Lacedemonians would not admit any of them, that so they might not hear anything contrary to their laws, whether in jest or in earnest. And Henry III, Emperor of Germany, when a great sort of such fellows flocked together at his wedding, sent them all away, not allowing them so much as a cup of drink, 1044 AD. {c}

Ver. 21. Evil pursueth sinners.] Hard at heels. Flagitium et flagellum, ut acus et filum. Sin and punishment are linked together with chains of adamant. Of sin we may say as Isidore doth of the serpent, Tot dolores, quot colores; so many colours, so many dolours. "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life." {#Ro 6:23} The same in effect with this sentence of Solomon.

But to the righteous good shall be repaid.] Or, He, that is, God, shall repay good. Now he is a liberal paymaster, and all his retributions are more than bountiful. Never did any yet do or suffer aught for God, that complained of a hard bargain. God will recompense your losses, -saith that thrice noble Lord Brook, ^{a} who lost his precious life in the recent unhappy wars at Litchfield, -as the king of Poland did his noble servant Zelislaus, having lost his hand in his wars, he sent him a golden hand. Caligula—Agrippa having suffered imprisonment for wishing him emperor—when he came afterwards to the empire, the first thing he did was to prefer Agrippa, and gave him a chain of gold as heavy as the chain of iron that was upon him in prison. Those that lose anything for God, he seals them a bill of exchange of a double return; nay, a hundredfold here, and eternal life hereafter.

Ver. 22. A good man leaveth inheritance to his child.] Personal goodness is profitable to posterity. God gives not to his servants some small annuity for life only, as great men used to do; but "keepeth mercy for thousands" of generations "of them that fear him" ^{#Ex 34:7} -(where the Masorites observe Nun-Rabbath, a large N, in the word Notsot, "keepeth," to note the large extent of God's love to the good man's posterity.) God left David "a lamp in Jerusalem," ^{#1Ki 15:4} although his house were not so with God. ^{#2Sa 23:5}

And the wealth of the sinner is laid up for the just.] As Nabal's was for David, Haman's for Mordecai, the Canaanites' for the Israelites. Howbeit this holds not perpetually and universally in every wicked person; for some of them are "full of children, and leave the rest of their substance for their babes." ^{#Ps 17:14} Hereupon "their inward thought is, that their houses shall continue for ever; they call their lands after their own names"—as Cain called his new built city after the name of his son Enoch ^{#Ge 4:17} -"this their way is their folly"—or, is their constant hope, for the word signifies both—"and their posterity approve their sayings," and vote the same way. ^{#Ps 49:11,13} But together with their lands, they bequeath their children their sins and punishments, which is far worse than that legacy of leprosy that Joab left his issue. {#2Sa 3:29} Compare #Job 27:16,17 Isa 61:5.

Ver. 23. Much food is in the tillage of the poor.] of the poet is well known, Laudato ingentia rura, exiguum colito. {a} It is best for a man to have no more than he can master and make his best of. The ground should be weaker than he that tills it, saith Columella. {b} The earth is a fruitful mother, and "brings forth meat for them by whom it is dressed." {#Heb 6:7}

But there is that is destroyed for want of judgment.]—viz., In ploughing and sowing, {#Isa 28:26} or in managing and husbanding what he hath gotten, for the best. For non minor est virtus quam quaerere, parta tueri. We must be good husbands, and see that condus be fortior promo, our comings in be more than our layings out. Bonus servatius facit bonum bonifacium, saith the Dutchman in his blunt proverb, A good saver makes a well doer.

{b} Lib. i. cap. 3.

Ver. 24. He that spareth his rod hateth his son.] It is as if one should be so tender over a child as not to suffer the wind to blow upon it, and therefore hold the hand before the mouth of it, but so hard as he stranglenth the child. It is said of the ape that she huggeth her young one to death; so do many fond parents, who are therefore peremptores potius quam parentes, rather parricides than parents. Eli would not correct his children: God therefore corrected both him and them. David would not once cross his Absalom and his Adonijah, and he was therefore singularly crossed in them ere he died. {a} The like befell old Andronicus the Greek emperor, in his unhappy nephew of the same name; and Muleasses king of Tunis, in his son Amida, whom he cockered so long, till, Absalom like, he rose against his father, and possessing himself of the kingdom, put out his father's and brethren's eyes, slew his captains, polluted his wives, and took the castle of Tunis. {b}

But he that loveth him, chasteneth him betimes.] And this is a God like love. #Pr 3:12 Re 3:19. {See Trapp on "Pr 3:12"} {See Trapp on "Re 3:19"} Correction is a kind of cure, saith the philosopher, {c} the likeliest way to save the child's soul; where yet, curare exigeris, non curationem, saith Bernard, it is the care of the child that is charged upon the parent, not the cure, for that is God's work alone. But he usually worketh by this mean, and therefore requires that it be soundly set on, if need so require. A fair hand, we say, makes a foul wound. A weak dose doth but stir bad humours and anger them, not purge them out. In some diseases, the patient must be let bleed, even ad deliquium animae, till he swoon again: so here. Quintilian tells us of some faults in a child that deserve not a whipping. And Chrysippus is ill spoken of by some, because he first brought the use of the rod into the schools. It was he, I trow, that first offered that strict and tetical division to the world, Aut mentem aut restim comparandam: Either a good heart, or a good halter for yourself and yours. The condemned person comes out of a dark prison, and goes to the place of execution; so do children, left to themselves and not nurtured, come from the womb, their prison, to the fire of hell, their execution, Severitas tamen non sit tetra, sed tetrica: {a} Corrections must be wisely and moderately dispensed. "Parents provoke not your children to wrath, lest they be dissipated," {#Col 3:21} and, through despondency, grow desperate or heartless. Our Henry II first crowned his eldest son Henry while he was yet alive, and then so curbed him, that, through discontent, he fell into a fever, whereof he died before his father. {e} A prince of excellent parts, who was at first cast away by his father's indulgence; and afterwards by his rigour.

Ver. 25. The righteous eateth to the satisfying of his soul.] Have he more or less, he hath that which satisfies him. Nature is content with a little, grace with less; Cibus et potus sunt divitiae Christianorum. food and drink are the divinity of Christians, If Jacob may but have "bread to eat, and clothes to put on," it sufficeth him; and this he dare be bold to promise himself. Beg his bread he hopes he shall not; but if he should, he can say with Luther (who made many a meal with a broiled herring), Mendicato pane hic vivamus; annon hoc pulchre sarcitur in eo quod pascimur pane cum angelis, et vita aeterna, Christo, et sacramentis? {a} Let us be content to fare hard here: have we not the bread that came down from heaven?

But the belly of the wicked shall want.] Because "their belly prepares deceit," {#Job 15:35} not their heads only; they take as much delight in their witty wickedness, as the epicure in his bellytimber. Therefore, "in the fulness of their sufficiency they are in straits"; {#Job 20:22} they are sick of the bulimy, or doggish appetite. {#Mic 6:14}

Ver. 1. Every wise woman buildeth her own house.] Quaevis pia perita. Every holy and handy woman buildeth her house; not only by bearing and breeding up children, as Rachel and Leah builded the house of Israel, {#Ru 4:11} but by a prudent and provident preventing of losses and dangers, as Abigail; as also by a careful planning, and putting everything to the best: like as a carpenter that is to build a house, lays the plan and platform of it first in his brain, forecasts in his mind how everything shall be, and then so orders his stuff, that nothing be cut to waste. Lo, such is the guise of the good housewife. As the husband is as the head from whom all the sinews do flow, so she is as the hands into which they flow, and enable them to do their office.

But the foolish plucketh it down with her hands.] With both hands earnestly: she undoes the family whereof she is the calamity, be she never so witty, if with it she be not religious and thrifty, heedy and handy. {a} Be the husband never so frugal, if the wife be idle, or lavish, or proud, or given to gadding and gossipping, &c., he doth but draw water with a sieve, or seek to pull a loaded cart through a sandy way without the help of a horse; it little boots him to bestir himself, for he puts his gets "into a bag with holes." {#Hag 1:6} He "labours in the very fire," {#Hab 2:13} as Cowper, bishop of Lincoln, did, whose wife burnt all his notes that he had been eight years in gathering, lest he should kill himself with too much study (for she had much ado to get him to his meals), so that he was forced to fall to work again, and was eight years in gathering the same notes wherewith he composed his dictionary, that useful book. {b} How much happier in a wife was that learned Gul. Budaeus. Coniux mea, saith he, sic mihi morem gerit, ut non tractet negligentius libros meos quam liberos, &c. My wife seeing me bookish, is no less diligent about my books, than about my barns, whom she breeds up with singular care and tenderness. How well might he have done, having such a learned helper, as a countryman of his {c} did, of whom Thuanus reporteth, quod singulis annis singulos libros et liberos, reip. dederit: That he set forth every year a book and a child, a book and a child! But this by the way only.

Ver. 2. He that walketh in his uprightness, feareth the Lord.] He is "in the fear of the Lord all day long"; {#Pr 23:17} he walketh "in the fear of the Lord, and in the comforts of the Holy Ghost." {#Ac 9:31} "The fear of the Lord is upon him," so that he "takes heed and does it"; {#2Ch 19:7} for he knows "it shall be well with them that fear God, that fear before him." {#Ec 8:12} God's "covenant was with Levi of life and peace, for the fear wherewith he feared God, and was afraid before his name." Hence "the law of truth was in his mouth, and iniquity was not found in his lips: he walked with God in peace and equity, and did turn many from iniquity." {#Mat 2:5,6} He that truly fears God, is like unto Cato, of whom it is said, that he was homo viriutis simillimus, and that he never did well that he might appear to do so, sed quia aliter facere non potuit, but because he could not do otherwise.

But he that is perverse in his ways, despiseth him.] Sets him aside, departs from his fear, dares to do that before him that he would be loath to do before a grave person. Thus David "despised God," when he defiled his neighbour's wife. {#2Sa 12:9} Not but that even then he had God for his chief end; but he erred in the way, thinking he might fulfil his lust, and keep his God too (he would not forego God upon any terms), as Solomon thought to retain his wisdom, and yet to pursue his pleasures. Hence his partial and temporary apostasy—as the word here rendered "perverse" importeth; his warping and writhing from the way of righteousness

—as the Septuagint ^{a} here interpret it—which was, interpretative, a "despising" of God, a saying, "He seeth it not." ^{#Ps 10:11}

Ver. 3. In the mouth of the foolish is a rod of pride.] Wherewith he beats others, and lays about him like a madman, or rather like a mad dog he bites all he meets, and barks against God himself; till he procure the hate of God and men, and smart for his petulance, being beaten at length with his own rod, as the lion beats himself with his own tail.

But the lips of the wise shall preserve them.] From the aspersion of false and foolish tongues. Their good names are oiled, so that evil reports will not stick to them. Dirt will stick upon a mud wall, not so upon marble. Or if they lie under some undeserved reproach for a season, either by a real or verbal apology they wade out of it, as the eclipsed moon by keeping her motion wades out of the shadow and recovers her splendour. ^{#Isa 54:17}

Ver. 4. Where no oxen are, the crib is clean.] The barn and garner are empty. Neque mola, neque farina; no good to be got without hard labour of men and cattle. Let the idle man's motto be that of the lily, neque laborant, neque nent: "They neither toil nor spin." ^{#Mt 6:28} Man is born to toil, as the sparks fly upwards. ^{#Job 5:7} And spinster they say is a term given the greatest women in our law. Our lives are called "the lives of our hands," ^{#Isa 57:10} because to be maintained by the labour of our hands.

But much increase is by the strength of the ox.] This is one of those beasts that serve ad esum et ad usum, and are profitable both alive and dead. A heathen counselleth good husbands and husbandmens that would thrive in the world to get first a house, then a wife, and then an ox that lustily plougheth and bringeth in much increase. Bede applies this text to painful preachers, set forth by oxen, ^{#1Co 9:9 Re 4:7} for their tolerance and tugging at the work; where these labour lustily there is commonly a harvest of holiness, a crop of comfort. Only they must be dustily diligent. ^{a}

Ver. 5. A faithful witness will not lie.] Nec prece nec precio, he cannot lend an oath for a need before a magistrate. Nay, he will not lie upon any condition. {See Trapp on "Pr 13:5"}

But a false witness will utter lies.] Or, He that telleth lies will be a false witness—he that makes light of a lie will not stick at perjury. That was a foul blur to the Romans of old, if true, that Mirrhanes the Persian general chargeth upon them, Romanis promittere promptum est, promissis autem quanquam iuramento firmatis minime stare; {a} the Romans will presently promise anything, but perform no promise though confirmed with an oath. Of the Romists at this day it is written by an Italian, no stranger to the court of Rome, that their proverb is, Mercatorum est, non regum, stare iuramentis; It is for merchants, not for princes, to stand to what they have sworn. Fides cum hereticis non est servanda is their position, and their practice is accordingly. They play with oaths as the monkey doth with his collar, which he doth slip on for his master's pleasure, and slip off again for his own. Pascenius scoffs King James for the invention of the oath of allegiance.

{a} Procop., lib. i. de bello Persico.

Ver. 6. A scorner seeketh wisdom, and findeth it not.] Or, He seeketh wisdom, and he seeketh it not. He seeketh it not seriously, seasonably, duly; he seeks it as a coward seeks his adversary, with a hope he shall not find him; or a man seeks his false coin, which he hath no joy to look upon. "What is truth?" said Pilate in a jeer to Christ, but stayed not for the answer. "How can this man give us his flesh to eat?" said those carnal Capernaïtes, {#Joh 6:52} and away they went, who, if they had stayed out the sermon, might have been satisfied in the point. Herod sought to see Christ, but never sent for him, nor went to him; and when the Lord Christ was brought before him, he looked upon him no otherwise than as upon some juggler to show him some tricks and make him sport, and is therefore answered with silence.

But knowledge is easy to him that doth understand.] In any science the worst is at first; as the root of the herb moly in Homer is said to be black and unsightly, but the leaf lovely and the fruit pleasant. The more a man sees into heavenly mysteries the more he may. "I love them that love me," saith wisdom, "and those that seek me early shall find me." {#Pr 8:17} Provided that they be not proud persons, but come with a desire to learn and a resolution to practise. He that comes to a fountain to fill his pitcher, must first wash it, and then put the mouth of it downward to take up water. So he that would have heavenly knowledge must first quit his heart of corrupt affections and high conceits— intus existens prohibet alienum -and then humble himself at God's feet, "every one to receive his words" #De 33:3. {See Trapp on "Pr 8:9"}

Ver. 7. Go from the presence of a foolish man.] If he be a proud fool, as #Pr 14:6, a scorner and derider of good counsel, and one that knows not how to lisp out the least syllable of savoury language, break off society with such as soon as may be; for what good can be gotten by their company or conference? "Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?" They infect the very air they breathe upon, and are therefore called λοιμοι, pests, {a} according to the Septuagint, {#Ps 1:1} their tongues have the very plague in them; "their breath as fire shall devour you." {#Isa 33:11} Non potest vir ille sine convitiis quenquam a quo dissentit vel in levissimis, nominare, saith Dr Rivet concerning Bishop Montague; that man hath not the power to forbear railing at any one that dissents from him, though in never so small a matter. Is there any good to be gotten by such? Do not "their words eat as a gangrene." {#2Ti 2:17}

Ver. 8. The wisdom of the prudent is to understand his way.] His wisdom begins in the right knowledge of himself, and ends in the right knowledge of God, that he may "walk worthy of God in all well pleasing," worthy of the calling wherewith he is called, that high and "heavenly calling" {#Heb 3:1} to the fruition of high and heavenly privileges, to an angelical and convincing conversation, such as may draw hearts or daunt them. We use to say of him that knows his place, and carries himself accordingly, such a man understands himself well enough. So here.

But the folly of fools is deceit.] Or, Is to understand deceit, to know the devil's depths, to search his skull for carnal arguments that they may cum ratione insanire, be mad with show of reason, and deceive the hearts of the simple. "This their way is their folly; yet their posterity"—as wise as their foolish fathers—"approve their sayings," abet their practices. {#Ps 49:13}

Ver. 9. Fools make a mock of sin.] A sport or pastime of it. {#Pr 10:23} {See Trapp on "Pr 10:23"} They dance with the devil all day, and yet think to sup with Christ. But what saith the heathen historian? Nae, illi falsi sunt qui diversissimas res expectant, ignaviae voluptatem, et praemia virtutis. In good truth they are utterly out that take their swing in sin, and yet look for the reward of virtue. No, their sweet meat must have sour sauce. "God also will laugh at their destruction, and mock when their fear cometh." {#Pr 1:26,27} And then "they all shall be damned that had pleasure in unrighteousness," {#2Th 2:12} yea, double damned, because they jeered when they should have feared. {#2Pe 2:13}

But among the righteous there is favour.] That, though they sin of infirmity, yet forasmuch as they are sensible and sorrowful for their failings, and see them to confession, God will never see them to their confusion. Homo agnoscit, Deus ignoscit; man repenteth, and God remitteth; yea, he "compasseth his returning people with favour as with a shield," {#Ps 5:12} he re-accepts them with all sweetness through Christ, "who is the propitiation for their sins." {#1Jo 2:2}

Ver. 10. The heart knoweth his own bitterness] None can conceive the terrors and torments of a heart that lies under the sense of sin and fear of wrath. A little water in a leaden vessel is heavy. Some can bear in their grief better than others; but all that are under this affliction have their back burden. Job's "stroke was heavier than his groaning," {#Job 23:2} and yet his complaint was bitter too. Some holy men, as Mr Leaver, have desired to see their sin in the most ugly colours, and God hath heard them. But yet his hand was so heavy upon them that they went always mourning to their graves, and thought it fitter to leave it to God's wisdom to mingle the portion of sorrow than to be their own choosers. {a}

And the stranger doth not intermeddle with his joy.] None but such as are of the "family of faith" {#Ga 6:10} can conceive the surpassing sweetness of spiritual joy. The cock on the dunghill knows not the worth of this jewel. It is joy "unspeakable"; {#1Pe 1:8} such as none feel but those that stir up sighs "unutterable." {#Ro 8:26} It is joy "unspeakable, and full of glory," a hanel of heaven, a foretaste of eternal life. It is the peace that "passeth all understanding"; {#Php 4:7} they that have it understand not the full of it, nor can relate the one-half of it. Paul said somewhat to the point, when he said, "I do over abound exceedingly {b} with joy," but words are too weak to utter it. Father Latimer said somewhat, when he said it was the 'deserts of the feast of a good conscience.' But sermo non valet exprimere, experimento opus est. {c} It is a thing fitter to be believed, than possible to be discoursed. Tell a man never so long what a sweet thing honey is, he can never believe you so well as if he himself tastes it. Those that never yet "tasted how good the Lord is," {#Ps 34:8} are far from intermeddling with the just man's joy. 'The world wonders,' saith Mr Philpot, martyr, 'how we can be so merry in such extreme misery; but our God is omnipotent, who turns misery into felicity. Believe me, there is no such joy in the world as the people of Christ have under the cross. I speak it by experience.' {d} Another holy martyr, Richard Collier, after his condemnation sang a psalm; wherefore the priests and the officers railed at him, saying, He was out of his wits. {e}

Ver. 11. The house of the wicked shall be overthrown.] As Phoca's high walls were, because sin was at the bottom: "Brimstone also shall be scattered on his habitation"; {#Job 18:15} as it befell Dioclesian, whose house was wholly consumed with fire from heaven; wherewith himself also was so terrified, that he died within a while after. {a}

But the tabernacle of the upright shall flourish.] The wicked have "houses," and are called the "inhabitants of the earth." {#Re 12:12} The upright have "tabernacles," or tents that were transportative and taken down at pleasure; here they "have no continuing city," no mansion place; and yet what they have shall flourish: "Our bed is green, the beams of our house are cedar, and our rafters of fir." {#So 1:16,17} See #2Sa 23:5.

Ver. 12. There is a way that seemeth right unto a man.] Sin comes clothed with a show of reason; {#Ex 1:10} and lust will so blear the understanding, that he shall think that there is great sense in sinning. "Adam was not deceived"; {#1Ti 2:14} that is, he was not so much deceived by his judgment—though also by that too—as by his affection to his wife, which at length blinded his judgment. The heart first deceives us with colours; and when we are once a-doting after sin, then we join and deceive our hearts, {#Jas 1:26} using fallacious and specious sophism, to make ourselves think that lawful today which we ourselves held unlawful yesterday, and that we are possessed of those graces whereto we are perfect strangers.

But the end thereof are the ways of death.] Via multiplex ad mortem. The very first step in this evil way was a step to hell; but the journey's end, if men stop not, or step not back in time, is undoubted destruction. Some flatter themselves, as Micah. {#Jud 17:13} They flee to "the temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord": and think to take sanctuary and save themselves there from all danger, as the Jews fable that Og, king of Bashan, escaped in the flood by riding astride upon the ark without; wherein it falls out oft, as it did with the riflers of Semiramis's tomb, who, where they expected to find the richest treasure, met with a deadly poison; or as it doth with him that, lying asleep upon a steep rock, and dreaming of great matters befallen him, starts suddenly for joy, and so breaks his neck at the bottom. As he that makes a bridge of his own shadow cannot but fall into the water, so neither can he escape the pit of hell who lays his own presumption in place of God's promise, who casts himself upon the unknown mercies of God, &c.

Ver. 13. Even in laughter the heart is sorrowful.] Nulla est sincera voluptas. Labor est etiam ipsa voluptas. Of carnal pleasures a man may break his neck before his fast. "All this avails me nothing," said Haman. Omnia fui, et nihil profuit, said that emperor. "Vanity of vanity, all is vanity," said Solomon; and not vanity only, but "vexation of spirit." Nothing in themselves, and yet full of power and activity to inflict vengeance and vexation upon the spirit of a man; so that even in laughter the heart is sorrowful. Some kind of frothy and flashy mirth wicked men may have; such as may wet the mouth, but not warm the heart; smooth the brow, but not fill the breast. It is but ‘a cold armful,’ {a} as Lycophron saith of an evil wife. As they repent in the face, {#Mt 6:16} so they rejoice in the face, not in the heart. {#2Co 5:12} Rident et ringuntur. They laugh and snare. There is a snare or a cord in the sin of the wicked—that is, to strangle their joy with; but the righteous sing and are merry; {#Pr 29:6} others may revel, they only must rejoice. {#Ho 9:1}

And the end of that mirth is heaviness.] They dance to the timbrel and harp, but suddenly they turn into hell; {#Job 21:12,13} and so their merry dance ends in a miserable downfall. "Woe be to you that laugh now." {#Lu 6:25} Those merry Greeks, that are so afraid of sadness that they banish all seriousness, shall one day wring for it. Adonijah’s guests had soon enough of their good cheer and jollity; so had Belshazzar and his combibones optimi. Thou mad fool, what doest thou {#Ec 2} saith Solomon to the mirth monger, that holds it the only happiness to ‘laugh and be fat’; knowest thou not yet there will be bitterness in the end? Principium dulce est, sed finis amoris amarus. The candle of the wicked shall be put out in a vexing snuff. Their mirth—as comets—blazeth much, but ends in a pestilent vapour; as lightning, it soon vanisheth, leaveth a greater darkness behind it, and is attended with the renting and roaring thunder of God’s wrath.

Ver. 15. The simple believeth every word.] You may draw him any way with a wet finger, persuade him to anything, as Rehoboam, that old baby. Νηφε και μεμνησο απιστειν, was a very good rule of Epicharmus. Be not light of belief; try before you trust; look before you leap. Alioqui saliens antequam videas, casurus es antequam debeas, {a} Wisdom would, that as men should not be too censorious ("This man blasphemeth," said they of our Saviour), so neither too credulous, as the giddy headed Galatians were to their seducing doctors; -"I {#Ga 1:6} wonder that ye are so soon removed," &c. Let us leave to the Papists Ministorum muta officia, populi caeca obsequia -their ministers’ dumb services, their people’s blind obediences; and ever count it a singular folly to take men’s bare authority in matters of faith, and not to "prove the spirits whether they are of God," {#1Jo 4:1} as those "noble" Bereans did, and are worthily renowned for it. {#Ac 17:11}

But the prudent man looketh well to his goings.] He looketh not so much what others believe, or not believe, do or not do, as what he is bound to believe or do. He pins not his faith to another man's sleeve; he frames not his pace by another man's practice, but walks by line and by rule, treads gingerly, steps warily, lifts not up one foot till he finds sure footing for the other, as those of #Ps 35:6. This is to "walk exactly, accurately, {b} not fools, but as wise." {#Eph 5:15}

Ver. 16. A wise man feareth and departeth from evil.] He trembleth at the judgments while they hang in the threatenings, meets God with entreaties of peace, and so redeems his own sorrows. Solo auditu contremisco, saith Jerome, speaking of that terrible text, #Eze 16:42: "I tremble at the very hearing of it." So Erasmus, repeating those words, "His blood will I require at thy hands"; {#Eze 3:18} these, saith he, are fulmina, non verba -not words, but thunderbolts. A good child, if but threatened only, will amend his fault; yea, if he but hear others threatened. Daniel was more troubled than Nebuchadnezzar was. {#Da 4:19} Habakkuk, when in a vision he saw the judgments of God that were to come upon the Chaldeans, it made his very heart to ache and quake within him. {#Pr 3:16}

But the fool rageth and is confident.] Some render it "rangeth and is confident," transit et confidit -so the Vulgate and the original will well enough bear it—he passeth on from sin to sin like a madman, and yet persuades himself that all shall do well. Such a desperate fool was Balaam, though the angel met him with a drawn sword, yet he would needs on; and what was the issue? He died by the sword of Israel, though he seemed a friend to Israel. Not to be warned is both a just presage, and desert, of ruin.

Ver. 17. He that is soon angry dealeth foolishly.] Alexander, in his hot blood, slew his dearest friend, whom he would have revived again with his heart blood.

Infectum velit esse dolor quod suaserit, et mens. ”

Rash anger differs from madness, saith Seneca, in nothing but in time only. See my "Common Place of Anger."

And a man of wicked devices is hated,] i.e., He that beareth a grudge intending revenge—as one that only wants, and therefore waits a fit time, as Absalom did for Amnon—this is a dangerous man, and deservedly detested of all. It is counted manhood—indeed it is doghood. The curs of Congo, they say, bite but never bark. Esau threatened Jacob. Tiberius lentus in meditando, ubi prorupisset, tristioribus dictis atrocia facta conungebat. The more he meditated revenge, the more did time and delay sharpen it; and the further off he threatened, the heavier the stroke fell; therefore he was generally hated as an odious miscreant.

Ver. 18. The simple inherit folly.] Acceperunt per successionem seu haereditario iure, so one renders it; they are as wise as their forefathers, and they are resolved to be no wiser. Me ex ea opinione quam a maioribus accepi de cultu deorum, nullius unquam movebit oratio, said Cicero; I will never forsake that way of divine service that I have received from my forefathers, for any man's pleasure, or by any man's persuasion. The monarch of Morocco told the English ambassador for King John that he had recently read St Paul's epistles, which he liked so well, that were he now to choose his religion he would, before any other, embrace Christianity. But everyone ought, saith he, to die in the religion received from his ancestors, and the leaving of the faith wherein he was born was the only thing that he disliked in that apostle. {a}

But the prudent are crowned with knowledge.] They know that dies diem docet: and therefore are not so wedded to their old principles, superstitions, and fopperies, but that they can, as right reason requires, relinquish and abjure them, glorifying the word, {#Ac 13:48} and "receiving the truth in love," {#2Th 2:10} whereby it soon comes to pass, that they get "good repute and report of all men, as Demetrius had, yea, and of the truth itself," {#3Jo 12} which is the crown of all commendation, Haud velim Erasmi gloria aut nomine vehi, saith Luther: I care not to be praised as Erasmus is, &c.

{a} Heyl. Geog.

Ver. 19. The evil bow before the good.] Here they do so many times, as Joseph's brethren before him in his greatness, as Saul before Samuel, Belshazzar before Daniel, the persecuting tyrants before Constantine the Great; {a} yea, one of them, viz., Maximinus Galerius, being visited with grievous sickness, not only proclaimed liberty to the poor persecuted Christians, but also commanded their churches to be re-edified, and public prayers to be made for his recovery {b} So #Ezr 6:10, "Pray for the king's life, and for his sons'," some of which had died in their minority; for the rest, therefore, prayer must be made by the Church. That place is well known, {#Isa 49:23} "Kings shall be thy nursing fathers, and their queens thy nursing mothers: they shall bow down to thee with their faces toward the earth, and lick up the dust of thy feet." The prophet seems to allude to the manner of the Persians, who, when they were to speak to their king, did first kiss the pavement whereon he trod. {c} Howsoever, natural consciences cannot but do homage to the image of God, stamped upon the natures and practices of the righteous, as is aforementioned; and the worst cannot but think well of such, and honour them in their hearts. In the life to come these things shall have their full accomplishment; and at the last day, when the saints shall judge the world, and Christ shall have put all things under his feet, so that they shall have "power over the nations." {#Re 2:26}

{c} Pictorum solea basiare regum.—Martial.

Ver. 20. The poor is hated, / i.e., Less loved, little respected, as #Ge 29:31 Mal 1:5 Lu 14:26. The heathen could say, Αφιλον το δυστοχες—adversity finds few friends. Et cum fortuna statque caditque fides. Few will appear for suffering saints. This Job and David much complain of; but when a deer is shot, the rest of the herd push him out of their company, so here, Tempora si fuerint nubila, solus eris. The same Hebrew word that signifies winter, an emblem of poverty, signifies reproach. "This thy son"; {#Lu 15:30} not this "my brother," because in poverty. The Samaritans would not once own the Jews when they were in a poor estate, but disavow them, as they did to Antiochus Epiphanes; {a} but when in prosperity, then they would curry favour with them, and call them their sweet cousins. When it was sometimes disputed among the Romans in the council, using to deify great men, whether Christ, having done many wonderful works, should be received into the number of the gods, it was resolved that he should not, Propter hoc, quod paupertatem predicarit et elegerit, quam mundus contemnit, because he preached poverty and chose poor men whom the world cares not for.

But the rich man hath many friends.] Such as they are, ollares amici -trencher flies, such as follow the scent, and, like Bohemian curs, will fawn upon a good suit. {b} As for faithful friends, divitibus ideo amicus deest, quia nihil deest, saith one; few such to be found such as, with Ittai the Gittite and Hushai the Archite, will stick close to a David when stripped of all. Josephus relates of the Jews that they were very careful how they received proselytes in Solomon's time, because then the state of the Jews flourished.

{b} Purchas.

Ver. 21. He that despiseth his neighbour sinneth.] His poor neighbour. Where the hedge is low the beast will easily break over. None usually are so trampled on with the feet of pride and contempt, by the great bulls of Bashan, as the necessitous and afflicted. Hence "poor" and "afflicted" are set together; {#Zep 3:12} so are "to want" and "to be abased." {#Php 4:11} This is a great sin, saith Solomon; it is to commit sin and to "be convinced of the law" as transgressors, saith St James. {#Pr 3:9}

But he that hath mercy on the poor, happy is he.] His sins shall be remitted, his necessities relieved, and the blessings of God multiplied upon him, even a $\mu\upsilon\pi\iota\omicron\mu\alpha\kappa\alpha\rho\iota\sigma\tau\eta\varsigma$. See my "Common Place of Alms."

Ver. 22. Do they not err that devise evil?] Heb., That plough it and plot it, that dig it and delve it, that whet their wits and beat their brains about it—do not these err? Are they not heavenly wide, {a} utterly out? Shall they not miss their purpose, and meet with disappointment? Witness those Babel-builders, {#Ge 11:1-9} those kill-Christis, {#Ps 2} those state traitors, Sheba, Shebna, &c., various English traitors who drew their last thread in the triangle of Tyburn. Knute, the first Danique king, caused the false Edric's head to be set on the highest part of the Tower of London, therein performing his promise of advancing him above any lord in the land. {b} Traitors always become odious, though the treason be commodious. Philip, Duke of Austria, paid the ambassadors of Charles IV, who had betrayed their trust, in counterfeit coin, whereof, when they complained, he answered, that false coin was good enough for false knaves. {c} James I, King of Scots, was murdered in Perth by Walter, Earl of Athol, in hope to attain the crown; but his hopes failed him. Crowned, indeed, he was, but with a crown of red-hot iron clapt upon his head, being one of the tortures wherewith he ended at once his wicked days and devices. {d}

But mercy and truth shall be to them that devise good.] Mercy and truth were the best that David could wish to his fast friend, Ittai. {#2Sa 15:20} These two attributes of God shall cause that good devices shall not miscarry. His mercy moves him to promise, his truth binds him to perform. "For thy word's sake, and according to thine own heart, hast thou done all these things." {#2Sa 7:18,21} "According to thine own heart"; that is, of mere mercy, out of pure and unexcited love, thou didst give thy word and promise, and "for thy word's sake" thou hast performed it.

Ver. 23. In all labour there is profit.] In all honest labour, for there are those who "do wickedly with both hands earnestly"; and "what profit have such of all their labour?" {#Ec 1:3} Do they not take pains to go to hell? There are also that labour about ματαιοτεκνηματα, toilsome toys that pay not for the pains—that do magno conatu magnas nugas agere. Such a one was Paleottus, Archbishop of Bonony, who made a great book of the shadow of Christ's body in a sindon; and it was commented upon by the professor there. This Aristotle calls 'laborious loss of time.' {a} The apostle calls upon men to "labour, working with their hands the thing that is good"; so shall "they have," not for their own uses only, but also "to give to him that needeth." {#Eph 4:28}

But the talk of the lips tendeth only to penury.] Great talkers are do-littles, for the most part. Corniculas citius in Africa, quam res rationesque solidus in Turriani scriptis invenies, saith one; -Turrian was a very wordy man; ye cannot find matter; for words, in him; -λογους μὲν Ερμωδορος εμπορευεται. The Athenians fought against Philip with words and messages, saith one; but Rabshekah could tell Hezekiah that war was to be made—so is work to be done—not with words and the talk of the lips, but with counsel and strength. {#Isa 36:5} And "why stand you looking upon one another? Get you down to Egypt," said Jacob to his sons. {#Ge 42:1}

Ver. 24. The crown of the wise is their riches.] An ornament, an encouragement in well doing, and an instrument of doing much good, if God give a heart thereto; for quid cervo ingentia cornua, cum desit animus? To what end is a treasure, if a man have lost the key that leads to it?

“Vel mihi da clavem, vel mihi tolle seram.”

But the foolishness of fools is folly.] That is, Of rich fools, such as was Pope Clemens V, of whom the historian saith, Papa hic ditior quam sapientior that he was more wealthy than wise. The crown of the wise is their riches; but yet give them to a fool, you put a sword into a madman’s hand; the folly of such fools will soon be foolishness. Why, was it not foolishness before they were rich? Yes, but now it is become egregious foolishness. Αφορητος εστι μαστιγιας ευτυχων, the earth cannot bear the insolence of such. Set a beggar on horseback, &c.

Ver. 25. A true witness delivereth souls.] Or, Lives that lie at stake. He that helps the truth in such a necessity doth a worthy work. To walk about with slanders is to "shed blood." {#Eze 22:9} Way was made to that bloody French massacre by false reports cast abroad by the friar liars, that the Protestants, under pretence of religion, met by night that they might feed daintily, and then lie together promiscuously. He that hath a mind to hang his dog, saith the French proverb, will first give out that he is run mad. The devil was first a liar, and then a murderer from the beginning. {#Joh 8:44}

Ver. 26. In the fear of the Lord is strong confidence.] The reverential fear of God is monimenturn, munimentum, ornamentum. The wise man had said, in #Pr 14:24, "The crown of the wise are their riches," and in #Pr 18:11, he will tell us that "the rich man's wealth is his strong city." Now, lest any should hereby be brought to think of riches more highly than is meet, he gives us to know that wealth, severed from the fear of God, can neither adorn us nor secure us. Great is the confidence of a good conscience. "Our God whom we serve is able to deliver us, and he will deliver us out of thine hand." {#Da 3:17} Hezekiah pulled down the brazen serpent, for he "trusted in God." {#2Ki 18:5} At ego rem divinam facio, - But I am sacrificing, said Numa, when they told him the enemy was at hand. Non sic Deos coluimus, aut sic vivimus ut illi nos vincerent, said the Emperor Antoninus. We are bold to believe that God will deal better with us than so.

And his children have a place of refuge], i.e., God's children run to his name and are safe. Or, The children of him who fears God. For God will bless those who fear him, "both small and great." {#Ps 115:13} If I can but once find the fear of God in those about me, said reverend Claviger, satis habeo, satisque mihi, meae uxori, fillis, et filiabus prospexi, { a } I shall have enough for myself, wife, and children; they will be all cared for.

Ver. 27. The fear of the Lord is a fountain of life.] So said to be, both for the constant faithfulness, as never failing, and for the gracious effects—viz., blessings of all sorts. (1). Temporal; {#Pr 22:4} riches, honour, life. (2). Spiritual; {#Mal 4:2} such shall "grow up as the calves of the stall," fat and fair-liking. (3). Eternal; {#Ps 31:19} "O how great is thy goodness which thou hast laid up for them that fear thee"; "eye hath not seen," &c. {#1Co 2:9} It shall be always "well with them." {#Ec 8:12} And though many afflictions, &c., yet he that feareth God "shall come out of them all." {#Ec 7:18}

To depart from the snares of death.] Satan, that mighty hunter, hath laid snares for us in all places. And the way of this world is like the vale of Siddim, slimy and slippery; full of slime pits and pitfalls, snares and stumblingblocks, laid on purpose to maim us or mischief us. He that fears God comes off without hurt by remembering that saying—which, as short as it is, yet our memories are shorter—Cave, Deus videt; - Take heed; God seeth thee. A godly man had these verses written before him on a table in his study:

Accusat Satanus et lex, mens conscia culpae:
Mors incerta furit: cruciat te luridus Orcus:
Et manet aeternum tristi damnatio poena.”

Ver. 28. In the multitude of the people is the king's honour.] For that is a sign of peace, plenty, prosperity, and just government, as in Solomon's days, when "Israel and Judah were many, as the sand which is by the sea in multitude, eating, and drinking, and making merry." ^{#1Ki 4:20} And as in Augustus's days, when Christ, the Prince of Peace, was born into the world, cuncta atque continua totius generis humani aut pax fuit, aut pactio. ^{a} Ferdinand III, King of Spain, reigned full thirty-five years, in all which time, nec fames nec pestis fuit in regno suo, saith Lopez, there was neither famine nor pestilence throughout that kingdom. ^{b} What incredible waste of men hath war lately made in Germany, that stage of war; in Ireland; and here in this kingdom, besides what formerly! In the civil dissensions between the houses of York and Lancaster, were slain eighty princes of the blood royal, and twice as many natives of England as were lost in the two conquests of France. The dissensions between England and Scotland consumed more Christian blood, wrought more spoil and destruction to both kingdoms, and continued longer, than ever quarrel we read of did between any two people of the world. ^{c} "Be wise now therefore, O ye kings," &c. Tu vero, Herodes sanguinolente, time, as Beza covertly warned Charles IX, author of the French massacre. ^{d} Many parts of Turkey lie unpeopled, most of the poor being enforced with victuals and other necessaries to follow their great armies in their long expeditions; of whom scarce one of ten ever return home again, there by the way perishing if not by the enemy's sword, yet by want of victuals, intemperateness of the air, or immoderate painstaking. ^{e} Hence the proverb, Wherever the Great Turk sets his foot, there grass grows not any more.

Ver. 29. He that is slow to anger is of great understanding.] "The wisdom from above is first pure, then peaceable," tractable. Thunder, hail, tempest, neither trouble nor hurt celestial bodies. Anger may rush into a wise man's bosom, not rest there; {#Ec 7:9} it dwells only where it domineers, and that is only where a fool is master of the family. A wise man either receives it not or soon rids it. Be slow to wrath, is a lesson that God hath engraven, as one wittily observeth in our very nature. For the last letter that any child ordinarily speaketh is R, and that is the radical letter of all words of strife and wrath in almost all languages? {a}

But he that is hasty of spirit exalteth folly.] He sets it up upon a pole, as it were; he makes an Oh yes, and proclaims his own folly by his ireful looks, words, gestures, actions, as that furious friar Feuardensius doth in his book called Theomachia Calvinistica, where he took up his pen with as much passion and wrath as any soldier takes up his sword. Such another hasty fool was friar Alphonsus, the Spaniard, who, reasoning with Mr Bradford, martyr, was in a wonderful rage chafing with om and cho; so that if Bradford had been anything hot, one house could not have held them. {b}

Ver. 30. A sound heart is the life of the flesh.] A heart well freed from passions and perturbations holds out long, and enjoys good health; neither causeth it molestation of mind or want of welfare to others. It is the life of fleshes (in the plural); {a} not only its own, but other men's bodies are the better, at least not the worse, for it; whereas the envious and angry man rangeth and rageth; and like a mad dog biting all he meets, sets them, as much as in him lies, all a-madding, and undoes them.

But envy is the rottenness of the bones.] A corroding and corrupting disease it is, like that which the physicians call Corruptio totius substantiae, it dries up the marrow; and because it cannot come at another man's heart, this hell-hag feeds upon its own, tormenting the poor carcase without and within. It is the moth of the soul, and the worm, as the Hebrew word signifies, of the bones, those stronger parts of the body. It is the same to the whole man that rust is to iron, as Antisthenes affirmeth; it devoureth itself first, as the worm doth the nut it grows in. Socrates called it serram animae, the soul's saw; and wished that envious men had more ears and eyes than others, that they might have the more torment by beholding and hearing of other men's happinesses; for invidia simul peccat et plectitur; expedita iustitia. Like the viper, it is born by eating through the dam's belly; like the bee, it loseth its sting and life together; like the little fly, to put out the candle, it burns itself; like the serpent Porphyrius, it drinks the most part of its own venom; like the viper that leaped upon St Paul's hand to hurt him, but perished in the fire; or as the snake in the fable, that licked off her own tongue; as envying teeth to the file in the forge. In fine, "Envy slayeth the silly soul"; {#Job 5:2} as it did that fellow in Pausanias, who, envying the glory of Theagenes, a famous wrestler, whipped his statue—set up in honour of him after his death—every night so long, till at length it fell upon him, and killed him. {b}

Ver. 31. He that oppresseth the poor reproacheth his Maker.] Since it is he that "maketh poor, and that maketh rich, and thereby killeth and maketh alive." {#ISa 2:6,7} Rich men only seem to be alive. Hence David, sending his servants to that Pamphagus, that rich curmudgeon, Nabal, speaketh on this sort, "Thus shall ye say to him that liveth" {#ISa 25:6} -there is no more in the original—as if rich men only were alive. Poor people are "free among the dead" {#Ps 88:5} -free of that company, as David was, when they are crushed and oppressed, especially by rich cormorants and cannibals. {#Ps 14:4} A poor man's livelihood is his life, {#Lu 8:43} for a poor man in his house is like a snail in his shell—crush that, and you kill him. This reflects very much upon God, the poor man's king, as James IV of Scotland was called, who will not suffer it to pass unpunished, "for he is gracious." As unskilful hunters may shoot at a beast, but kill a man, so do these oppressors hit God, the poor man's maker.

But he honoureth him that hath mercy on the poor.] Quibus verbis nihil gravius, nihil efficacius dici potuit. God takes it for an honour; how should this prevail with us! "Honour the Lord with thy substance," {#Pr 3:9} and take it for a singular honour that he will vouchsafe to be thus honoured by thee, as David did. How exceedingly shall such be honoured in that great Panegyris {a} at the last day, when the Judge shall say, "Come, ye blessed of my Father: I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat," &c. {#Mt 25:34,35}

{a} πανηγυρις, #Heb 12:23.

Ver. 32. The wicked is driven away in his wickedness.] Being arrested by death, as a cruel serjeant, in the devil's name, he is hurried away, and hurled into hell, as dying in his sins, and killed by death. {#Re 2:23} And oh, what a dreadful shriek gives the guilty soul then to see itself launching into an infinite ocean of scalding lead, and must swim naked in it for ever!

But the righteous hath hope in his death.] Death to the righteous, as the valley of Achor, is a door of hope to give entrance into paradise; to the wicked it is a trap door to hell. Improbi dum spirant, sperant: iustus etiam cum expirat, sperat. Aelian tells how he once heard a dying swan sing most sweetly and melodiously, {a} which in her lifetime hath no such pleasant note. As, on the other side, syrens are said to sing curiously while they live, but to roar horribly when they die. Such is the case of the godly and the wicked when they come to die.

Ver. 33. Wisdom resteth in the heart of him, &c.] He sets not his good parts and practices a-sunning, as vain glorious fools used to do, that they may be praised and applauded. As Jerome calls Crates the philosopher, we may call the whole nation of them so, Gloriae animal, popularis aurae vile mancipium, {a} a base hunter after praise of men. The truly wise concealeth himself till he seeth a fit time, and may be compared to the red rose, which though outwardly not so fragrant, is inwardly far more cordial than the damask, being more thrifty of its sweetness, and reserving it in itself. Or to the violet, which grows low, hangs the head downward, and hides itself with its own leaves; whereas the marigold, of nothing so good a smell, opens and shuts with the sun; which, when it is set, it hangs down the head, as forlorn and desperate. So that which is in the midst of fools is made known. Jehonadab must needs see what zeal Jehu hath for the Lord of hosts; his piety is shored up by popularity, &c.

Ver. 34. Righteousness exalteth a nation.] True religion and the power of godliness is the beauty and bulwark of a state; {#De 28:13} so are good laws, enacted and executed. This made "the faithful city" {#Isa 1:21} to be the princess of provinces; {#La 1:1} that land a "land of desire, a heritage of glory"; {#Jer 3:19} even "the glory of all nations." {#Eze 20:6} Josephus calls tile commonwealth Θεοκρατειαν; and Prosper's conceit is, that Iudaei Judah, were so called because they received ius Dei. law of God, It was said of old, Angli quasi Angeli, and Anglia regnum Dei. England was called the kingdom of God, and Albion quasi Olbion, a happy country, the paradise of pleasure and garden of God. {a} Now the Lord is with us while we are with him, &c.; but if we cast off the yoke of his obedience, as Capernaum, though lifted up to heaven, we shall be brought down to hell. Sins are the snuffs that dim our candlestick, and threaten the removal of it; the leaven that defiles our passovers, and urges God to pass away and depart from us; the reproach that will render us a proverb and a byword, {#De 28:37} an astonishment and a hissing, {#Jer 25:9} like Sodom and her sisters, a reproach and a taunt; {#Eze 5:15} which to prevent, Currat poenitentia, ne praecurrat sententia. {b} Mittamus preces et lachrymas cordis legatos. {c} Let us break off our sins, and cry mightily to God; for otherwise a dismal change, a sad removal of our candlestick, may be as certainly foreseen and foretold as if visions and letters were sent us from heaven, as once to those seven churches of Asia. {#Re 2:1- 3:22}

Ver. 35. The king's favour is toward a wise servant.] As was Pharaoh's toward Joseph, Solomon's toward Jeroboam, Darius's toward Daniel, Henry VIII's toward Cromwell, whom, for his wisdom and faithfulness, he raised from a mean man (son to a blacksmith), to be first master of his jewel house, then baron of Oakham in Rutlandshire, then Knight of the Garter, Earl of Essex, lord great chamberlain; and lastly, ordained him his vicar general. {a} And if kings do thus, what will not the King of kings do for every faithful and wise servant of his, whom he hath made "ruler over his household"; {#Mt 24:45} "Verily, I say unto you, that he shall make him ruler over all his goods, {#Mt 24:47} yea, partaker of his master's joy." {#Mt 25:21,23}

But his wrath is against him that causeth shame.] Such as was Jeroboam at length, Haman, Shebna, Ziba, Gehazi, Ahithophel, Judas, &c. It fares with many princes, as it doth with the creature called millepede, which the more feet it hath, the slower it goeth. Corrupt servants hinder the course of justice, that it cannot run down as a torrent. This reflects upon their lords, and at length fails heavily upon themselves.

Ver. 1. A soft answer turneth away wrath.] It is easier to stir strife than to stint it. Hard to hard, will never do; but lay a flint upon a pillow, and you may break it with ease.

What is more boisterous than the winds? tamen iidem imbribus sopiuntur; saith Pliny, yet are they laid with soft showers. How soon was David disarmed by Abigail's gentle apology, and made as meek as a lamb! So were the hot and hasty Ephraimites by Gideon's mild and modest answer. {#Jud 8:1-3} "By long forbearing is a prince persuaded, and a soft tongue breaketh the bone." {#Pr 25:15} Howbeit, some persons must be more roughly dealt with, or they will never have done—nettles hardly handled sting not as they will if gently touched—in some eases especially, as when God's glory is engaged.

When Servetus condemned Zuinglius for his harshness, he answers, In aliis mansuetus ero, in blasphemii in Christum non ita: {a} In other cases I will be mild; but in case of blasphemies against Christ, I have no patience. So Luther, in a letter to Staupicius, Inveniar sane superbus, &c., modo impii silentii non arguar dum dominus patitur: Let me be counted proud or passionate, so I be not found guilty of sinful silence when the cause of God suffereth. Madness, in this case, is better than mildness: moderation here is mere mopishness, nay, it is much worse.

But grievous words stir up anger.] Heb., Make it to ascend—viz., into the nostrils, as fire in a chimney, when blown up with bellows. Some men have quick and hot spirits; yea, some good men, as those two brethren, "sons of thunder," how soon was their choler up. {#Lu 9:55} Now, hard and harsh words do cast oil upon the flame, and set their passions afloat; and then there is no ho with them. Fertur equis auriga, nec audit currus habenas. How was Saul enkindled by Doeg, and David by Nabal's currishness! Rehoboam, with one churlish breath, lost ten tribes; and Adrian the emperor, gave the crier great thanks, who, when he was bidden to quiet the tumultuous people with an imperious Σιωπησατε, Hold your tongues, he held out his hand only; and when the people listened with great silence (as the manner was), to hear the cry, Hoc vero, inquit, princeps vult; - This is that, said he, that the emperor requires of you—viz., to be silent. {b} The best answer to words of scorn and petulance (saith one), is Isaac's apology to his brother Ishmael, patience and silence, η σιγαν χρη, η κρεισσονα σιγης λεγειν: η ηχιστα η ηδιστα. Either reply not at all, or else so that all may be well between you.

Ver. 2. The tongue of the wise useth knowledge aright.] Heb., Deals kindly with her; offers her no abuse, by venting her unseasonably, and making her overly cheap, and little set by. Eloquence wisely ordered is very commendable, and avails much: but what a poor praise was that to the Duke of Buckingham, that speaking to the Londoners in the behalf of that usurper, Richard III, he gained the commendation, that no man could deliver so much bad matter in so good words and quaint phrases. {a} Here was eloquentiae satis, sapientiae parum. The tongue was given us for better purpose; it was David's "glory," and he used it accordingly.

But the mouth of fools poureth out foolishness.] Heb., Bubbleth it out; blurteth it out, as a fountain casteth out its waters, with a great force and swiftness: non quid, sed quantum, is all their care, being talkative above measure, and forward to utter whatsoever comes into their chaps: quicquid in buccam.

{a} Daniel's Hist.

Ver. 3. The eyes of the Lord are in every place.] He is πανοφθαλμος, all-eye: and his providence like a well drawn picture, that vieweth all that come into the room. I know thy works, and thy labour; {#Re 2:2} not thy works only, but thy labour in doing them. And as for the offender, though he think to hide himself from God, by hiding God from himself, yet God is nearer to him than the bark is to the tree; "for in him all things subsist," {#Col 1:17} "and move"; -understand {#Ac 17:28} it to be the mind's motions also. And this the very heathen saw by nature's rush candle. {a} For Thales Milesius being asked, Whether the gods knew not when a man doth ought amiss? Yea, said he, if he do but think amiss. Deus intimior nobis intimo nostro, saith another, God is nearer to us, than we are to ourselves. {b} Repletively he is everywhere, though inclusively nowhere. Nusquam est, et ubique est. As for the world, it is to him as "a sea of glass"; {#Re 4:6} corpus diaphanum -a clear transparent body; he sees through it.

Beholding the evil and the good.] The evil are first mentioned, because they make question of this truth. But what saith a worthy divine, yet alive: Think not that he who is invisible cannot see; God, like the optic virtue in the eye, sees all, and is seen of none. No man needs a window in his breast (as the heathen Momus wished), for God to look in at; every man before God is all window. {#Job 34:22} The eyes of Christ are "as a flaming fire." {#Re 1:14} And the school of nature teacheth that the fiery eye needs no outward light, that sees extra mittendo, by sending out a ray, &c.

Ver. 4. A wholesome tongue is a tree of life.] As uttering words that have a healing property in them, pure, precious, and profitable; not unlike that tree of life in the midst of God's garden, that would have given immortality to the eaters. See August. de Civit. Dei, lib. xv. cap. 20.

But perverseness therein is a breach of the spirit.] That is, in the conscience, which it goeth and gasheth; and in the heart, which it defileth and disposeth to further evil: it leaveth both a sting and a stain in a man's own soul; besides the much mischief that it doeth to the spirits and manners of other men that are corrupted by it. God's Spirit also is not a little grieved and vexed, when the godly man suddenly falls (as sometimes he doth), into bitter words, clamours, and evil speakings: these are even as smoke to the eyes, and make the Spirit of God ready to loathe and leave his lodging, as the apostle intimates, #Eph 4:30,31. There are those who translate the text, But the mischievousness of it is as a breach made by the wind; and set this sense upon it, As a blustering wind, which throws down trees and houses, doth much harm; so a violent and venomous tongue, causing troubles and calamities, is very pernicious and hurtful. {#Job 8:2} Pray we therefore with David "Deliver me, Lord, from a lying lip, and a deceitful tongue." {#Ps 120:2}

Ver. 5. A fool despiseth his father's instruction.] Heb., Entertains it with contumelious and opprobrious language; as a madman doth a potion offered him for his health. Jerome oft renders the word, "to blaspheme"; and indeed to reject good counsel, of a father especially, with scorn and reproach, is blasphemy in the second table.

But he that regardeth reproof, is prudent.] Wise he is, and wiser he will be. This made David prize and pray for a reprove. {#Ps 141:5} And it is said of Gerson, that great and wise chancellor of Paris, that he took pleasure in nothing more, quam si ab aliquo fraterne et charitative redargueretur; { a } than in a friendly reproof. The like is reported of Sir Anthony Cope, by Dr Harris, who preached his funeral; { b } and of that famous man of God, Mr William Wheatly, by Mr Scudder, who writes his life. He was glad, saith he, when any of the righteous smote him, and would take it well, not from his superiors only, but from his equals, and far inferiors. { c }

Ver. 6. In the house of the righteous is much treasure.] Every righteous man is a rich man, whether he hath more or less of the things of this life. For, first, he hath plenty of that which is precious. Secondly, Propriety; what he hath is his own; he holds all in capite tenure {a} in Christ; he shall not be called to account as a usurper. "All is yours," {#1Co 3:22} "because you are Christ's, and Christ is God's." And although he hath little, many times, in present possession, yet he is rich in reversion; rich in bills and bonds, rich in an apparent pledge, that is worth all the world besides—that is, in Christ; for, having given us his Son, "how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?" {#Ro 8:32}

But in the revenues of the wicked are trouble.] For besides the curse of unsatisfiability, in the very pursuit of them, he meets with many grievances, fears, jealousies, disgraces, interruptions, discontentments, and then, after the unsanctified enjoyment of them, follows the sting of conscience that dissweetens all, and that will unexpressibly vex and torment him through all eternity. "He hath swallowed down riches, and he shall vomit them up again; God shall cast them out of his belly." {#Job 20:15} Disgorge he shall surely those murdering morsels, either by remorse and restitution in the meantime, or with despair and impenitent horror hereafter.

{a} The name of a tenure (abolished by Act 12 Chas. II, xxiv.), by which land was held immediately of the King, or of the crown?

Ver. 7. The lips of the wise disperse knowledge.] They are the "lights of the world," φωστῆρες, {#Php 2:15} and they diffuse light wherever they come, shining as lamps or luminaries, and seeking to save themselves, and those that hear them. How did those learned scribes, our famous reformers, bring forth their rich treasure, and liberally disperse it? By preaching, writing, and every way trading their talents for the church's good. Farellus, {a} with his talent, gained to the faith five cities of the Cantons, with their territories. Wyckliff, Huss, Luther, Calvin, &c., how active and fruitful were they in their generations to dispread and scatter light over the Christian world, to wise and win souls to Christ. {#Pr 11:30} These surely shine as stars in heaven, {#Da 12:3} that, like stars by their light and influence, made such a scatter of riches upon earth. Every star, saith one, is like a purse of gold, out of which God throws down riches and plenty upon the sons of men. And as it is the nature of gold to be drawn forth marvellously, so that, as the learned affirm, an ounce of gold will go as far as eight pound of silver, so it is the nature of sound knowledge to be spreading and diffusive. {b}

But the heart of the foolish doth not so.] Or, Is not right. It is "little worth," {#Pr 10:20} as having no true treasure in them, but froth and filth, vanity and villany: hence they do not only not disperse knowledge, which they have not, {#Ps 14:4} but patronise and promote ignorance and error, sow cockle as fast as wiser men do corn, and are as busy in digging descents to hell, as others are in building staircases for heaven.

Melch. Adam in vit.

{b} Zanc., de oper. Dei, part 2, lib. iii. c. 6.

Ver. 8. The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination.] Their very incense stinks from the hand that offers it. {#Isa 1:13} Good words may be uttered, but we cannot hear them, because uttered with a stinking breath: and good meat may be presented, but we cannot eat of it because it is cooked or brought to the table by a nasty sloven. Works materially good, may never prove so formally and eventually—viz., when they are not right quoad fontem, et quoad finem. (1). When they proceed not from a right principle, "a pure heart, a good conscience, and faith unfeigned"; {#1Ti 1:5} (2). When they tend not to a right end, the glory of God in our own or other men's salvation. Christus opera nostra non tam actibus quam finibus pensat. {a} The glory of God must consume all other ends, as the sun puts out the light of the fire.

But the prayer of the righteous is his delight.] His music, his honey drops, {#So 4:11} his sweetest perfume, {#Ps 141:2} his "calves of the lips," {#Ho 14:2} with which, when we cover his altar, he is abundantly well-pleased. For as all God's senses, nay, his very soul is offended with the bad man's sacrifice {#Isa 1:13-15} -his sharp nose easily discerneth, and disgusteth the stinking breath of his rotten lungs, though his words be never so scented and perfumed with shows of holiness—so the prayer that proceeds from an upright heart, though but faint and feeble, doth come before God, "even into his ears," {#Ps 18:6} and so strangely charms him, {#Isa 26:16, marg.} {b} that he breaks forth into these words, "Ask me of things concerning my sons, and concerning the works of my hands command ye me." {#Isa 45:11} Oh that we understood the latitude of this royal charter! then would we pray always with all prayers and supplications in the Spirit; then would we watch thereunto with all perseverance, and not faint or shrink back. {#Eph 6:18 Lu 18:1, εκκακειν}

Ver. 9. The way of the wicked is abomination.] Not his sacrifices only, but his civilities; all his actions—natural, moral, recreative, religious—are offensive to all God's senses, as the word signifies. The very "ploughing of the wicked is sin": {#Pr 21:4} all they do is defiled, yea, their "very consciences." {#2Ti 1:15} Their hearts, like some filthy bog or fen, or like the lake of Sodom, send up continual poisonous vapours unto God: and he, not able to abide them, sends down eftsoons a counterpoison of plagues and punishments. {#Ps 11:6 Ro 1:18}

But he loveth him that followeth after righteousness.] Although he fulfil not all righteousness, yet if he make after it with might and main, as the word signifies, if he pursue it and have it in chase, as ravenous creatures have their prey, "if by any means he may attain to the resurrection of the dead"; {#Php 3:11} that is, that height of holiness that accompanieth the resurrection: this is the man whom God loves. Now God's love is not an empty love; it is not like the winter sun, that casts a goodly countenance when it shines, but gives little warmth and comfort. "Thou meetest him that rejoiceth and worketh righteousness; those that remember thee in thy ways," {#Isa 64:5} "that think upon thy commandments to do them," {#Ps 103:20} qui faciunt praecepta, etsi non perficiant, { a } that are weak but willing, θελοντες, {#Heb 13:18} that are lifting at the latch, though they cannot do up the door: "Surely, shall every such one say, In the Lord have I righteousness and strength." {#Isa 45:24} "Righteousness," that is, mercy to those that come over to him, and "strength" to enable them to come, as the sea sends out waters to fetch us to it.

{a} Augustin.

Ver. 10. Correction is grievous unto him that forsaketh the way.] He pleaseth himself in his outstrays, and would not be reduced; he is in love with his own ruin, and takes long strides towards hell, which is now but a little afore him. And if any man seek to save him, "with fear pulling him out of the fire," {#Jude 23} he flies in his face. This is as great madness as if they whom our Saviour had healed or raised should have raged and railed at him for so doing.

And he that hateth reproof shall die.] He that is embittered by rebukes, and not bettered by chastisements, shall die, τελευτωσιν αιχρωσ, say the Septuagint—shall 'die shamefully'; yea, shall die eternally, as the next verse shows; shall be swallowed up by hell and destruction, which even now gapes for him. They that will not obey that sweet command, "Come unto me all ye that labour and are heavy laden," shall one day have no other voice to obey but that terrible discedite, "Go ye cursed into everlasting flames."

Ver. 11. Hell and destruction are before the Lord.] "Tophet is prepared of old"; and wherever it is, as it skills not curiously to inquire, -below us it seems to be, {#Re 14:11} et ubi sit sentient qui curiosius quaerunt {a} -so it is most certain that "hell is naked before God, and destruction uncovered in his sight." {#Job 26:6} We, silly fishes, see one another jerked out of the pond of life by the hand of death; but we see not the frying pan and the fire that they are cast into, that "die in their sins," and refuse to be reformed. Cast they are into utter darkness. {#Mt 8:12} In tenebras ex tenebris infeliciter exclusi, infelicius excludendi. {b} Howbeit this thickest "darkness hideth not from God, but the light shineth as the day"; {#Ps 139:12} he perfectly knows the state of the dead and the damned. Oh that men knew more of it, and did believe in any measure that eternity of extremity that is there to be endured! Oh that they would be forewarned to flee from this wrath to come! Oh that they were wise, that they understood this, that they would consider their latter end, those quatuor novissima! {#De 32:29} Utinam ubique de Gehenna dissemineretur; saith Chrysostom. He that doth but hear of hell, is without any further labour or study taken off from sinful pleasures, saith Nyssen. But if a man had but one glimpse of it, it were enough, saith Bellarmine, to make him not only turn Christian and sober, but anchorite and monk; to live after the strictest rule that can be. But, alas! we cannot get men to think of it till they be plunged headlong into it.

Vel pueri credunt nisi qui nondum aere levantur.”

- Juvenal.

No, though one should come from the dead to testify unto them, they would not be persuaded. {#Lu 16:31}

How much more then the hearts of the children of men.] Though deep and deceitful, full of turnings and windings, Multae sunt in animo latebrae, multi recessus, saith Cicero, yet God can fathom and find them out. {#Jer 17:9,10} He searcheth the hearts and reins, which yet are the most remote and abstruse of all the entrails, covered from the eye of the anatomist with fat and flesh, &c. By "hearts and reins" understand thoughts and affections; the reins being the seat of the strongest affection, that which is for generation. Lo, these are pervious and patent to the eyes of God, yea, dissected, quartered, cleft in the backbone—as the apostle's word, τετραχλισημενα {#Heb 4:13} signifies—how much more then their evil actions! These cannot possibly be hidden from God's all-seeing eye, though they dig deep to secure themselves, as those gunpowder traitors; though they throw thereupon wood, stones, and rubbish, all these to God would be but as spectacles to make their sins appear the greater, or as perspectives to multiply them. {c}

Ver. 12. A scorner loveth not one that reproveth him.] Nay, he "hateth those that reprove him in the gate," {#Am 5:10} as Ahab did Micaiah; Herodias, John Baptist; the Pharisees, our Saviour. Bishop Ridley, lamenting, a little before his death, the state of England, even of the greatest magistrates, some, the king's highness excepted, evermore unkindly and urgently against those that went about most busily and wholesomely to cure their sore backs, spurned privily, and would not spare to speak evil of them, even to the prince himself; and yet would they toward the same preachers outwardly bear a jolly countenance, and fair face. As for Latimer, Lever, Bradford, and Knox, their tongues were so sharp, they ripped so deep in their galled backs to have purged them, no doubt, of their filthy matter that was festered in their hearts, of unsatiable covetousness, of filthy carnality and voluptuousness, of intolerable ambition and pride, of ungodly loathsomeness to hear poor men's causes, and to hear God's word. And these men of all others, these magistrates then could never abide, &c. Thus that godly martyr, and much more to the same purpose. {a}

Neither will he go unto the wise.] Men should "run to and fro to increase knowledge." {#Da 12:4} The Shunammite rode ordinarily to the prophet on the Sabbaths, and other holy days. {#2Ki 4:23} Those good souls in #Ps 84:7, passed on "from strength to strength," setting the best foot forwards for like purpose; yea, those that were weak and unfit for travel would be brought to the ordinances upon "horses, in chariots, and in litters." {#Isa 66:20} But now the scorner holds it not worth while to put himself to this pains; and is ready to say with Jeroboam, "It is too much for men to go up to Jerusalem," to go up "to the mountain of the Lord, to learn his ways." {#Isa 2:3} Yea, he set watchers to observe who would go from him to Judah to worship, that he might shame them at least, if not slay them. {#Ho 5:1} He would never have gone to the prophet to be reprov'd, and when the prophet came to him he stretched forth his hand to apprehend him. So Herod had a desire to see Christ, but could never find a heart to go to hear him; and yet our Saviour looked that men should have come as far to him, as the queen of Sheba came to Solomon. {#Mt 12:42}

{a} Acts and Mon., 1616.

Ver. 13. A merry heart makes a cheerful countenance.] It sits smiling in the face, and looks merrily out of the windows of the eyes. This is not till faith have healed the conscience, and till grace have hushed the affections, and composed all within. Saint Stephen looked like an angel when he stood before the council; {#Ac 6:15} and the apostles went away rejoicing. {#Ac 5:41} There are that rejoice in the face only, and not in the heart; {#2Co 5:12} this is but the hypocrisy of mirth, and we may be sure that many a man's heart bleeds within him when his face counterfeits a smile. It is for an Abraham only to laugh for joy of the promise, and for a David "to rejoice at the word as one that findeth great spoil," {#Ps 119:162} wherein the pleasure is usually as much as the profit. Christ's chariot, wherein he carries his people up and down in the world, and brings them at length to himself, is "paved with love"; {#So 3:9,10} he brings them also into his wine cellar, {#So 2:4} where he cheers up their hearts, and clears up their countenances; and this is praemium ante praemium, Heaven aforehand. These are some few clusters of the grapes of the celestial Canaan.

But by the sorrow of the heart the spirit is broken.] As the looks are marred, so the spirits are dulled and disabled, as a limb out of joint can do nothing without deformity or pain. Dejection takes off the wheels of the soul, hinders comfortable intercourse with God, and that spiritual composedness, that habitual cheerfulness, that sabbath of spirit that every man should strive to enjoy. Afflictions, saith one, are the wind of the soul, passions the storm. The soul is well carried, when neither so becalmed that it moves not when it should, nor yet tossed with tempests of wrath, grief, fear, care, &c., to move disorderly. Of these we must be careful to crush the very first insurrections; storms rise out of little gusts, but the top of those mountains above the middle region are so quiet that ashes, lightest things, are not moved out of place.

Ver. 14. The heart of him that hath understanding seeketh knowledge.] As a hungry man seeks meat, or a covetous man gold, the more he hath, the more he desires. Moses was no sooner off the mount where he had seen God face to face, but he cries, "Lord, shew me thy glory." David, that knew more than his teachers, cries ever and anon, "Teach me thy statutes." Job prefers knowledge before his necessary food. {#Pr 23:12} Chrysippus was so studious that he would not take time to eat his food, but had perished with hunger if his maid Melissa had not put food into his mouth. John ate the book that the angel gave him. {#Re 10:9} Jacobus de Voragine and Petrus Comestor had their names from devouring the Bible. Let fools feed on foolishness, as swine do on swill, as flies do on blotches, as carrion kites do on stinking carcases, as Tartars do on dead camels, asses, dogs, cats, &c. The wise man finds no such sweetness in the most delicate and dainty dishes, as in the search after divine knowledge. {#Ps 119:103} Even Aristotle saith that a little knowledge, though conjectural, about heavenly things, is to be preferred above knowledge, though certain, about earthly things. And Agur saith, it is to "ascend into heaven." {#Pr 30:4}

Ver. 15. All the days of the afflicted are evil.] The guilt of sin puts a sting into afflictions, and makes them very grievous. Nihil est miserius quam animus hominis conscius, { a } said the heathen. Such an affliction may well be called, as #Am 6:6, shebharim, ' a breaking to shivers,' for then God is a terror to man, {#Jer 17:17} and runs "upon the thick bosses of his bucklers." {#Job 15:25} Himself is also a magor-missabib to himself; so that he is for the time in the very suburbs of hell, and ready to become his own deathsman, as Judas. Hence Anselm; Mullem, purus a peccato, saith he, Gehennam intrare, quam peccati sorde pollutus coelorum regna tenere.

But he that is of a merry heart hath a continual feast.] The sincere heart, the quiet conscience, will not only stand under greatest pressures, as Paul, {#2Co 1:9,12} but goes as merrily to die in a good cause as ever he did to dine, as divers martyrs. Be the air clear or cloudy, he enjoys a continual serenity, and sits continually at that blessed feast, whereat the blessed angels are cooks and butlers, as Luther hath it, and the three persons in Trinity gladsome guests. Mr Latimer saith that the assurance of heaven is the deserts of this feast. There are other dainty dishes, but this is the banquet. Another saith, In minimo maximum est, bona mens in corpore humano: quae si adsit, deliciosius vivit etiam is qui teruntium non habet in orbe, quam si in unum hominem sexcentos conflēs Sardanapalos. All other feasts to this are stark hunger. It is a full feast, a lasting feast; not for a day, as that of Nabal, not for seven days, as that of Samson, no, nor of hundred and eighty days, as that of Ahasuerus, but a durable continual feast, without intermission of solace, or interruption of society. Vis ergo, o homo, semper epulari? vis nunquam tristis esse? saith Bernard; bene vive: Wilt thou therefore, O man, never be sad? wilt thou turn thy whole life into a merry festival? get and keep a good conscience. The heathen philosopher {b} could say, O αγαθος αιει εωραζει. A good man keeps holiday all the year about.

Ver. 16. Better is a little with the fear of the Lord.] This is one special consideration that keeps up the good heart in continual comfort. Contented godliness is great riches; Misera est magni custodia census. {a} Great treasures bring great troubles. It is not the great cage that makes the bird sing. It is not the great estate that brings alway the inward joy, the cordial contentment. The little lark with a wing sees further than the ox with a bigger eye but without a wing. Birds use not to sing when they are on the ground, but when got into the air, or upon the top of trees. If saints be sad, it is because they are too busy here below, and, Martha-like, troubled about many things, with neglect of that one thing necessary. They that will be rich pierce themselves through with many sorrows. If the bramble bear rule, fire will rise out of it that will consume the cedars; the lean kine will soon eat up the fat, and it shall not be seen by them. It is hard to handle these thorns hard and not to prick one's fingers. Riches, though well got, are but as manna, those that gathered less had no want, and those that gathered more, it was but a trouble and annoyance to them.

Ver. 17. Better is a dinner of herbs where love is.] Mensa consecrata est amicitiae, saith one. The table is dedicated to friendship, and an absurd thing it is there to raise quarrels, or to revenge wrongs, as Absalom did when he killed his brother Amnon; as Alexander did when he killed his friend Philotas; and as the great Turk when he intends the death of any of his great Bashaws—he invites them to a feast, in the midst whereof he commandeth the black gown to be cast upon their shoulders, and then they are presently taken from table and strangled. Isaac made a feast for Abimelech and Phicol, to show that he was heartily reconciled to them. {#Ge 26:30} The Greeks had their χαριστήρια, or love feasts for like purpose. Among the Latins, as Varro testifieth, it was held a complete feast, si belli convenient homines, si temporis sit habita ratio, si locus sit non ingratus, si non negligens apparatus, { a } if they were merry men that met, if they sat not over long, nor over late; if the place were pleasant, and the cheer indifferent. Green herbs, it seems, was a great dish with them, which therefore they called Holus, ab ολον, as if they thought no dish were wanting if that were set upon the table. These herbs they are called οξυβαφα, Acetaria, because they used to dip them in vinegar, and thereunto if they had bread, which they called Panis of πav, they held they had all that heart could wish or need require. {b}

Ver. 18. A wrathful man stirreth up strife.] Miscet lites, he mingleth strife with his meat, and feeds upon chafing dishes. Such troublesome guests Augustine forbade his table by these two verses written round about it—

“Quisquis amat dictis aliorum rodere famam, Hanc mensam vetitam noverit esse sibi.” {a}

This is the worst music at meat that may be. But some men maledictis aluntur, ut venenis capreae. David met with such "hypocritical mockers in feasts," that most uncivilly "gnashed upon him with their teeth." {#Ps 35:16} Hence much mischief many times ariseth. For, as Basil noteth, ira excitat rixam, vixā parit convicia, convicia ictus, ictus vulnera, et saepe vulnera mors consequitur: Wrath stirs up strife, strife causeth ill words, ill words draw on blows, bloodshed, and loss of life sometimes.

But he that is slow to anger appeaseth strife.] Is as busy to stint strife, as the other to stir it; brings his buckets to quench this unnatural fire between others, and puts up injuries done to himself, as Jonathan did when his father flung a javelin at him—he rose from table and walked into the field. David also, though provoked, yet he "as a deaf man heard not, and was as one dumb, in whose mouth there was no reproof." Such peaceable and peacemaking men are blessed of God and highly esteemed of men, when wranglers are to be shunned as perilous persons. "Make no friendship with an angry man," saith Solomon. {#Pr 22:24} And they are not much to be regarded that with every little offensive breath, or disgraceful word, are blown up into rage, that will not be laid down without revenge or reparation to cure their credits.

Ver. 19. The way of a slothful man is as a hedge of thorns.] Perplexed and letsome, so that he gets no ground, makes no riddance; he goes as if he were shackled when he is to go upon any good course; so many perils he casts, and so many excuses he makes; this he wants, and that he wants, when in truth it is a heart only that he wants, being woefully hampered and enthralled in the invisible chains of the kingdom of darkness, and driven about by the devil at his pleasure. This will be a bodkin at these men's hearts one day, to think I had a price in my hand, but no heart to make use of it; I foolishly held that a little with ease was best, and so "neglected so great salvation," shifting off him that "spake to me from heaven," {#Heb 12:25} and pretending some "lion in the way," some 'goose at the gate,' {a} When I was to do anything for my soul's health. Never any came to hell, saith one, but had some pretence for their coming thither.

But the way of the righteous is made plain.] Or, Is cast up as a causeway, {b} a Gabbatha, {#Joh 19:13} a road raised above the rest. There seems to be an illusion to that bank or causeway that went from the king's house to the temple; {#1Ch 26:16,18 1Ki 10:5 2Ch 9:4} and the sense is, that the godly, by much practice of piety, having gotten a habit, despatch duty with delight, and come off with comfort. {#Isa 40:31}

Ver. 20. A wise son maketh a glad father.] {See Trapp on "Pr 10:1"}

Ver. 21. Folly is joy to him that is destitute of understanding.] {See Trapp on "Pr 10:23"}

But a man of understanding walketh uprightly.] And he doth it with delight, as the opposition implies. Christ's "burden" is no more "grievous" to him than the wing is to the bird. {#Mt 11:30 1Jo 5:3} His sincerity supplies him with serenity; {a} the joy of the Lord, as an oil of gladness, makes him lithe and nimble in ways of holiness. And this spiritual joy, in some, is a habitual gladness of heart, which constantly, after assurance, is found in them, though they feel not the passions of joy; but in others there are felt at some times the vehement passions of joy, but not any constant gladness.

Ver. 22. Without counsel purposes are disappointed.] The word here rendered "counsel" signifies 'secret,' because counsel should be kept secret; which to signify, the old Romans, as Servius testifieth, built the temple of Consus, their god of counsel, sub tecto in circo, in a public place, but under a covert; and it grew to a proverb, Romani sedendo vincunt; The Romans, by sitting in council, conquer their enemies. But what a strange man was Xerxes, and it prospered with him accordingly, who, in his expedition against Greece, called his princes together, but gave them no freedom of speech nor liberty of counsel! Lest, said he to them, I should seem to follow mine own counsel, I have assembled you: and now, do you remember, that it becomes you rather to obey than to advise. {a} Such another was that James that reigned in Scotland in our Edward IV's time. He was too much wedded, saith the historian, {b} to his own opinion, and would not endure any man's advice, how good soever, that he fancied not. He would seldom ask counsel, but never follow any. See the note on #Pr 11:14.

Ver. 23. A man hath joy by the answer of his mouth.] It reflects comfort upon a man when he hath spoken discreetly to the benefit and good content of others. Some degree of comfort follows every good action, as heat accompanies fire, as beams and influence issue from the sun; which is so true, that very heathens, upon the discharge of a good conscience, have found comfort and peace answerable.

A word spoken in due season, how good is it.] One seasonable truth falling on a prepared heart, hath oft a strong and sweet operation. Galeacius was converted by a similitude used by Peter Martyr reading on 1 Corinthians. Junius was reduced from atheism by conference with a countryman of his. Luther, having heard Staupicius say, that that is kind repentance which begins from the love of God, ever after that time the practice of repentance was the sweeter to him. Also this speech of his took well with Luther, Doctrina praedestinationis incipit a vulneribus Christi. {a} The doctrine of predestination begins at Christ's wounds. Melancthon tells how that one time, when Luther, as he was naturally passionate, fell into a great distemper upon some provocation, he quickly quieted him by reciting this verse:—

At the hearing hereof Luther curbed in his passion, and smiling said, Non volumus de his amplius, sed de aliis colloqui: We'll talk no more of these matters. {b}

Ver. 24. The way of life is above to the wise.] He goes a higher way than his neighbour, even in his common businesses, because they are done in faith and obedience. He hath his feet where other men's heads are, and, like a heavenly eagle, delights himself in high flying. Busied he may be in mean, low things, but not satisfied in them as adequate objects. A wise man may sport with children, but that is not his business. Domitian spent his time in catching flies, and Artaxerxes in making hafts for knives; but that was the baseness of their spirits. Wretched worldlings make it their work to gather wealth, as children do to tumble a snowball; they are scattered abroad throughout all the land—as those poor Israelites were {#Ex 5:12} to gather stubble—not without an utter neglect of their poor souls. But what, I wonder, will these men do when death shall come with a writ of habeas corpus, You may have the body, and the devil with a writ of habeas animam, you may have the soul—when the cold grave shall have their bodies, and hot hell hold their souls? Oh that they that have their hands elbow deep in the earth, that are rooting and digging in it, as if they would that way dig themselves a new and a nearer way to hell! oh that these greedy moles, these insatiate muckworms, would be warned to flee from the wrath to come, to take heed of hell beneath, and not sell their souls to the devil for a little pelf, as they say Pope Sylvester did for seven years' enjoyment of the popedom! Oh that they would meditate every day a quarter of an hour, as Francis Xaverius counselled John king of Portugal, on that divine sentence, "What shall it profit a man to win the whole world, and lose his own soul?" He should be a loser by the sale of his soul; he should be—that which he so much feared to be—a beggar, begging in vain, though but for a drop of cold water to cool his tongue.

Ver. 25. The Lord will destroy the house of the proud.] Where he thinks himself most safe, God will pull him, as it were, by the ears out of his tabernacle. He will surely unroost him, unnest him, yea, though he hath set his nest among the stars, as he did proud Lucifer, who "kept not his first estate, but left his habitation," {#Jude 6} which indeed he could hold no longer; for it spewed him out into hell, that infernus ab inferendo dictus. {See Trapp on "Pr 12:7"} {See Trapp on "Pr 14:11"}

But he will establish the border of the widow.] Not the rest of her goods only, but the very utmost borders of her small possession. She hath commonly no great matters to be proud of, nor any patrons to stick to her, and stickle for her. She hath her name in Hebrew {a} of dumbness, because either she cannot speak for herself—death having cut off her head, her husband, who was wont to speak for her—or if she do speak, her tale cannot be heard. {#Lu 18:4} God therefore will speak for her in the hearts of her greatest opponents and oppressors. He also will do for her, and defend her borders, as he did for the Shunammite, and for the Sareptan, and for the poor prophet's widow, whose debts he paid for her, and for the widow of Nain, whose son he raised unrequested; {#Lu 7:13} especially if she be a "widow indeed," {#1Ti 5:5} such as Anna was. {#Lu 2:37} A vine whose root is uncovered thrives not; a widow whose covering of eyes is taken away, joys not. But in God "the fatherless findeth mercy," {#Ho 14:3} and he will "cause the widow's heart to sing for joy." {#Job 29:13}

Ver. 26. The thoughts of the wicked are abomination.] Let him not think to think at liberty. Thought is not free, as some fools would have it. To such God saith, "Hearken, O earth; behold I bring evil upon this people, even the fruit of their thoughts." {#Jer 6:19} The very heathen could say, Fecit quisque quantum voluit, What evil a man wills he doth. And Incesta est et sine stupro quoe stuprum cupit. He that lusteth after a woman, hath lain with her in his heart. "If I regard iniquity in mine heart," saith David, "shall not God find this out, and for it reject my prayer?" {#Ps 66:18} Kimchi, being soured with Pharisaical leaven, makes this strange sense of that text: If I regard iniquity only in my heart, so that it break not forth into outward act, the Lord will not hear me—that is, he will not hear so as to impute it or account it a sin. But was not this caedem Scripturarum facere, as Tertullian hath it, to murder the Scripture, or at least to set it on the rack, so as to make it speak what it never intended, to force it to go two miles when it would go but one.

But the words of the pure are pleasant words.] Such as God books up, {#Mal 3:16} and makes hard shift to hear, as I may so say, for he "hearkens and hears" (ibid.). The rather because these pleasant words are the fruits and products of that law of grace within, that "good treasure," that habit of heavenly mindedness they have acquired. For though "the heart of the wicked be little worth," and as little set by, yet "the tongue of the just is as choice silver." {#Pr 10:20} {See Trapp on "Pr 10:20"} He mints his words, and God lays them up as his riches, yea, looks upon them "as apples of gold in pictures of silver," {#Pr 25:11} as gold put in a case of cut-work of silver, which is no less precious than pleasant. {#Ec 12:10} {See Trapp on "Ec 12:10"}

Ver. 27. He that is greedy of gain, troubleth his own house.] Fires his own nest while he thinks to feather it; fingers that which will burn in his purse, will prove lucrum in arca, damnum in conscientia, { a } gain to his purse, but loss to his conscience. Add hereunto, that the covetous man's house is continually on a tumult of haste and hurry, "up, up, up," saith he; "to bed, to bed"; "quick at meat, quick at work," &c.; what with labour, and what with passion and contention, he and his household never live at heart's ease and rest. Thus it was in the houses of Laban and Nabal.

But he that hateth gifts shall live.] Viz., Gifts given to pervert or buy justice. The "fire of God shall devour the tabernacles" of such corrupt judges. {#Job 15:34}

So for those that are bribed out of their religion, Stratagema nunc est Pontificium, ditare multos, ut pii esse desinant. {b} The Papists propose rewards to such as shall relinquish the Protestant religion and turn to them, as in Ansburch, where, they say, there is a known price for it of ten florins a year; and in France, where the clergy have made contributions for the maintenance of renegade ministers. Thus they tempted Luther, but he would not be hired to go to hell; and thus they tempted that noble Marquis of Vicum, nephew to Pope Paul V, who left all for Christ and fled to Geneva, but he cried out, Let their money perish with them that prefer all the world's wealth before one day's communion with Jesus Christ and his despised people. {c}

Ver. 28. The heart of the righteous studieth to answer.] His tongue runs not before his wit, but he weighs his words before he utters them (as carrying a pair of balance between his lips), and dips his words in his mind ere men see what colour they are of, as Plutarch saith Phocion did. {a} He hath his heart, not at his mouth, but at his right hand, saith Solomon, to make use of when he sees his time. Melanchthon, when some hard question was proposed to him, would take three days' deliberation to answer it. And, in his answer to Staphylus, he ingenuously confesseth, or rather complaineth, Quos fugiamus habemus, quos sequamur nondum intelligimus; We know whom we are to flee from (meaning the Papists), but whom to follow we as yet know not. Such divisions there were amongst themselves, and such lack of light at the beginning of the Reformation, that it was an ingenuous thing to be a right reformed catholic. A young man, one Vincentius Victor, as Chemnitius relates it, when learned Augustine demurred, and would not determine the point concerning the original of a rational soul, censured boldly the father's unresolvedness, and vaunted that he would undertake to prove by demonstration that souls are created de novo by God; for which peremptory rashness the father returned the young man a sober reprehension, a mild answer, as the Hebrew word {b} here used imports. Not so sharp as that of Basil to the emperor's cook, who yet well enough deserved it; for when the fellow would needs be pouring forth what he thought of such and such deep points of divinity which he understood not, Basil rounded him up with, Σοῦ εστι τῆς τῶν ζῶμων καρυκείας φροντιζεῖν:—It is for thee, man, to look well to thy porridge pot, and not to meddle with these disputes.

Ver. 29. The Lord is far from the wicked.] He was so from the proud Pharisee, who yet got as near God as he could, pressing up to the highest part of the temple. The poor publican, not daring to do so, stood aloof off; yet was God far from the Pharisee, near to the publican. Videte magnum miraculum! saith Augustine, altus est Deus; erigis te, et fugit a te; inclinas te, et descendit ad te, &c.; - Behold a great miracle! God is on high; thou liftest up thyself and he flees from thee; thou bowest thyself downward and he descends to thee. Low things he respects, that he may raise them, proud things he knows afar off, that he may depress them. When a stubborn fellow, being committed, was no whit mollified with his durance, but the contrary, one of the senators said to the rest, Let us forget him a while and then he will remember himself. Such is God's dealing with those that stout it out with him. "I will go and return to my place, till they acknowledge their offence, and seek my face: in their affliction (if ever) they will seek me early." {#Ho 5:15} And it proved so. {#Pr 6:1}

But he heareth the prayer of the righteous.] "The Lord is near to all that call upon him." {#Ps 145:18} "His ears are in their prayers." {#1Pe 3:12} Yea, he can feel breath when no voice can be heard for faintness. {#La 3:56} When the flesh makes such a din that it is hard to hear the Spirit's sighs, "He knows the meaning, φρονημα, of the Spirit," {#Ro 8:26,27} and can pick English out of our broken requests; yea, he hears our "afflictions," {#Ge 16:11} our "tears," {#Ps 39:12} our "chatterings," {#Isa 38:14} though we cry to him but by implication only, as "the young ravens" do. {#Ps 147:9} It is not with God as with their Jupiter of Crete, that had no ears, that was not at leisure {a} to attend small matters, that had cancellos in coelo, as Lucian feigns, certain crevices or chinks in heaven, through which, at certain times, he looks down upon men, and hears prayers; whereas at other times he hears them not though they call upon him never so long, never so loud. Neither is it with God as with Baal, that pursuing his enemies could not hear his friends; nor yet as with Diana, that, being present at Alexander's birth, could not at the same time preserve her Ephesian temple from the fire. "Am I a God at hand, saith the Lord, and not a God afar off?" {#Jer 23:23} Yes, yes, he is both, and delights to distinguish himself from all dunghill deities by hearing prayers. Hereby Manasseh "knew him to be the true God"; {#2Ch 33:13} and all Israel hereupon cried out with one consent, "The Lord he is God; the Lord he is God." {#1Ki 18:39} {See Trapp on "Pr 15:8"}

Ver. 30. The light of the eyes rejoiceth the heart.] Light and sight are very comfortable. He was a mad fool that being warned of wine by the physicians as hurtful to his eyes, cried out, Vale lumen amicum; - If they will not bear with wine, they are no eyes for me. "Truly the light is sweet, and a pleasant thing it is to behold the sun." {#Ec 11:7} Eudoxus professed that he would be willing to be burnt up by the sun presently, so he might be admitted to come so near it as to behold the beauty of it, and to see further into the the nature of it. {a}

And a good report maketh the bones fat.] Fama bona, vel auditio bona; - A good name, or good news. Ego si bonam famam servasso, sat dives ero, saith he in Plautus. It is riches enough to be well reputed and reported of. It is ἡδίστον ακουσμα, {b} the sweetest hearing. It pleased David well that "whatsoever he did pleased the people." It pleased St John well that his friend "Demetrius had a good report of the truth," {#3Jo 12} and he "had no greater joy than to hear that his children walked in the truth." Pindarus could say that the bath doth not so refresh the bones as a good name doth the heart.

Ver. 32. He that refuseth instruction, despiseth his own soul.] Is a sinner against his own soul, as Korah and his complices were, and sets as light by it as if it were not worth looking after. Oh! is it nothing to lose an immortal soul, to purchase an ever-living death? Wilt thou destroy that for which Christ died? {#1Co 8:11} What shall a man give in exchange for his soul? There is no great matter in the earth but man, nothing great in man but his soul, said Faverinus. "Whose image and superscription is it" but God's? "Give," therefore, "unto God the things that are God's," by delivering it up to his discipline.

But he that heareth reproof, getteth understanding.] Heb., Possesseth his heart. This is like that sentence of our blessed Saviour, "In your patience possess ye your souls." {#Lu 21:19} They have need of patience that must hear reproof; for man is a cross creature, and likes not to be controlled or contraried. "But suffer," saith that great apostle, "the words of exhortation"; suffer them in God's name, sharp though they be, and set on with some more than ordinary earnestness. Better it is that the vine should bleed than die. Sinite virgam corripientem, ne sentitatis malleum conterentem. Certes, "when the Lord shall have done to you according to all the good that he hath spoken concerning you, and hath brought you to his kingdom, this shall be no grief unto you or offence of heart," as he said in a like case, {#1Sa 25:30,31} that you have hearkened to instruction, and been bettered by reproof.

Ver. 33. The fear of the Lord is the instruction of wisdom.] {See Trapp on "Pr 1:7"}

And before honour is humility.] David came not to the kingdom till he could truly say, "Lord, my heart is not haughty, nor mine eyes lofty," &c. {#Ps 131:1} Abigail was not made David's wife till she thought it honour enough to wash the feet of the lowest of David's servants. {#1Sa 25:41} Moses must be forty years a stranger in Midian before he become king in Jeshurun; he must be struck sick to death in the inn before he go to Pharaoh on that honourable embassy. Luther observed that ever, for most part, before God set him upon any special service for the good of the church, he had some sore fit of sickness. Surely, as the lower the ebb, the higher the tide; so the lower any descend in humiliation, the higher they shall ascend in exaltation; the lower this foundation of humility is laid, the higher shall the roof of honour be overlaid.

Ver. 1. The preparations of the heart in man.] He saith not 'of man' as if it were in man's power to dispose of his own heart, but "in man," as wholly wrought by God; for our sufficiency is not in ourselves, but "in him (as we live, so) we move" {#Ac 17:28} -understand it of the motions of the mind also. It is he that "fashioneth the hearts of men," {#Ps 33:13} shaping them at his pleasure. He put small thoughts into the heart of Ahasuerus, but for great purposes. And so he did into the heart of our Henry VIII about his marriage with Katherine of Spain, the rise of that Reformation here, Quam desperasset aetas praeterita, admiratur praesens, obstupescet futura, { a } as Scultetus hath it, which former ages despaired of, the present admireth, and the future shall stand amazed at.

And the answer of the tongue is from the Lord.] For though a man have never so exactly marshalled his matter in hand, as it were in battle array, -as the Hebrew word {b} here imports, and as David, using the same word, saith, he will marshal his prayer, and then be as a spy upon a watch tower to see what became of it, whether he got the day, {#Ps 5:3} -though he have set down with himself both what and how to speak, so that it is not only scriptum in animo, sed sculpture etiam, as the orator said, yet he shall never be able to bring forth his conceptions without the obstetrication of God's assistance. The most eloquent Demosthenes being sent various times in embassy to Philip, king of Macedonia, thrice stood speechless before him, and thrice more forgot what he intended to have spoken. {c} Likewise Latomas of Lovain, a great scholar, having prepared a set speech to be made before the emperor, Charles V, was so confounded when he came to deliver it that he uttered nothing but nonsense, and thereupon fell into a fit of despair. So Augustine, having once lost himself in a sermon, and wanting what else to say, fell upon the Manichees (a point that he had well studied), and by a good providence of God converted one there present, that was infected with that error. Digressions are not always useless. God's Spirit sometimes draws aside the doctrine to satisfy some soul which the preacher knows not. But though God may force it, yet man may not frame it; and it is a most happy ability to speak punctually, directly, and readily to the point. The Corinthians had elocution as a special gift of God. And St Paul gives God "thanks for them, that in everything they were enriched by him, in all utterance, and in all knowledge." {#1Co 1:5}

Ver. 2. All the ways of a man are clean in his own eyes.] Every man is apt to think well of his own doings, and would be sorry but his penny should be good silver. They that were born in hell know no other heaven; neither goes any man to hell but he hath some excuse for it. Quintilian could say, Sceleri nunquam defuisse rationem. As covetousness, so most other sins go cloaked and coloured. Sed sordet in conspectu iudicii quod fulget in conspectu aestimantis. {a} All is not gold that glitters. A thing that I see in the night may shine, and that shining proceed from nothing but rottenness. Melius est pallens aurum, quam fulgens aurichalcum. {b} "That which is highly esteemed amongst men, is abomination in the sight of God." {#Lu 16:15}

But the Lord weigheth the spirits.] Not speeches and actions only, as #Pr 5:21, but men's aims and insides. Men see but the surface of things, and so are many times mistaken, but God's fiery eyes pierce into the inward parts, and there discover a newly found world of wickedness. He turns up the bottom of the bag, as Joseph's steward did, and then out come all our thefts and misdoings that had so long lain latent.

{b} Bernard.

Ver. 3. Commit thy works unto the Lord.] Depend upon him alone for direction and success; this is the readiest way to a holy security and sound settlement. Hang not in doubtful suspense, as meteors do in the air. Neither make discourses in the air, so one renders it, as those use to do, whose hearts are haunted with carking cares. Let not your thoughts be distracted about these things; so the Syriac hath it. But "cast your burden upon the Lord," {#Ps 55:22} by a writ of remove, as it were. Yea, "cast all your care upon God, for he careth for you." {#1Pe 5:7} I will be "careless" according to my name, said John Careless, martyr. "Commit the matter to God, and he will effect it."

{#Ps 37:5}

And thy thoughts shall be established.] Never is the heart at rest till it repose upon God; till then it flickers up and down, as Noah's dove did upon the face of the flood, and found no footing till she returned to the ark. This is certain, saith a reverend divine, {a} yet living, so far as a soul can stay on and trust in God, so far it enjoys a sweet settlement and tranquillity of spirit. Perfect trust is blessed with a perfect peace. A famous instance for this we have in our Saviour, "Now is my soul troubled, and what shall I say? Father, save me from this hour; but for this cause came I to this hour. Father, glorify thy name." {#Joh 12:27,28} All the while the eye of his humanity was fixed upon deliverance from the hour of temptation; there was no peace nor rest in his soul, because there he found not only uncertainty, but impossibility; "For this cause came I to this hour." But when he could come to this, "Father, glorify thy name"—when he could wait on, acquiesce in, and resign to the will of his Father—we never hear of any more objection, fear, or trouble. Thus he.

{a} Mr Case.

Ver. 4. The Lord hath made all things for himself.] That is, for his own glory, which he seeks in all his works. And well he may; for, first, He hath none higher than himself to whom to have respect; and, secondly, He is not in danger (as we should be in like case) of being puffed up or desirous of vain glory. Or thus, "He hath made all things for himself," that is, for the demonstration of his goodness, {a} according to that of Augustine, {b} Quia bonus est Deus sumus; et in quantum sumus, boni sumus. We owe both our being and wellbeing, and the glory of all to God alone. {#Ro 11:36}

The wicked also for the day of evil,] i.e., Of. destruction. Hereof Dei voluntas est ratio rationam; nec tantum recta sed regula. {c} Howbeit, whereas divines make two parts of the decree of reprobation—viz., preterition and predamnation—all agree for the latter, saith a learned interpreter, that God did never determine to damn any man for his own pleasure, but the cause of his perdition was his own sin. And there is a reason for it. For God may, to show his sovereignty, annihilate his creature; but to appoint a reasonable creature to an estate of endless pain, without respect of his desert, cannot agree to the unspotted justice of God. And for the other part, of passing over and forsaking a great part of men for the glory of his justice, the exactest divines do not attribute that to the mere will of God, but hold that God did first look upon those men as sinners, at least in the general corruption brought in by the fall; for all men have sinned by Adam, and are guilty of high treason against God.

{c} Bernard.

Ver. 5. Every one that is proud in heart, &c.] That lifts up himself against God and his righteous decree; daring to reprehend what they do not comprehend about the doctrine of reprobation, as those chatters, #Ro 9:20. These, while, like proud and yet brittle clay, they will be knocking their sides against the solid and eternal decrees of God—called mountains of brass {#Zec 6:1} -break themselves in pieces. So likewise do such as "stumble at the word, being disobedient, whereunto also they were appointed." {#1Pe 2:8} How much better were it for them to take the prophet's counsel, "Hear, and give ear, be not proud, for the Lord hath spoken it. Give glory to the Lord your God"—let him be justified and every mouth stopped, subscribe to his most perfect justice, though it were in your own utter destruction—"before your feet stumble upon the dark mountains." {#Jer 13:15,16} That was a proud and atheistic speech of Louis XI, Si salvabor, salvabor; si veto damnabor damnabor: If I shall be saved, I shall be saved; and if I shall be damned, I shall be damned; and there is all the care that I shall take. Not unlike to this was that wretched resolution of one Ruffus, of whom it is reported that he painted God on the one side of his shield, and the devil on the other, with this mad motto, Si tu me nolis, iste rogitat: If thou wilt not have me, here is one who will!

Though hand join in hand.] {See Trapp on "Pr 11:21"} Some make "hand in hand" to be no more than 'out of hand,' 'immediately' or 'with ease'; for nothing is sooner or with more ease done than to fold one hand in another. God "shall spread forth his hands in the midst of them, as he that swimmeth spreadeth forth his hands to swim, and he shall bring down their pride together with the spoil of their hands."

{#Isa 25:11} The motion in swimming is easy, not strong; for strong strokes in the water would rather sink than support. God with greatest facility can subdue his stoutest adversary when once it comes to handy grips; when once his hand joins to the proud man's hand—so some sense this text—so that they do manus conserere, then shall it appear that "it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." {#Heb 10:31}

Ver. 6. By mercy and truth iniquity is purged.] Lest the proud person, bearing these dreadful threats, should fall into despair, here is a way shewed him how to escape. "By mercy and truth"; that is, by the goodness and faithfulness of God; by his love that moved him to promise pardon to the penitent, and by his truth that binds him to perform; "iniquity"—though never so hateful, be it blasphemy or any like heinous sin {#Mt 12:31}—"is purged," or expiated, viz., through Christ, "who is the propitiation for our sins." {#1Jo 2:2 Pr 14:22} {See Trapp on "Pr 14:22"}

And by the fear of the Lord men depart from evil.] As in the former clause were declared the causes of justification, so here the exercise of sanctification, for these two go ever together. Christ doth not only wash all his in "the fountain" of his blood "opened for sin and for uncleanness," {#Zec 13:1} but healeth their natures of that swinish disposition, whereby they would else wallow again in their former filth. The laver and altar under the law situated in the same priest's court signified the same, as the water and blood issuing out of Christ's side, viz., the necessary concurrence of justification and sanctification in all that shall be saved: that the latter was intimated by the laver and water; this the former by the altar and blood.

Ver. 7. When a man's ways please the Lord.] Sin is the only make-bait that sets God and man at difference. Now, when God is displeased, all his creatures are up in arms to fetch in his rebels, and to do execution. "Who then would set the briars and thorns against him in battle? Would he not go through them? Would he not burn them together? Let him then take hold of my strength, saith God, that he may make peace with me, and he shall make peace with me." {#Isa 27:4,5} And not with God only, but with the creature too, that gladly takes his part, and is at his beck and check. Laban followed Jacob with one troop, Esau met him with another, both with hostile intentions. But God so wrought for Jacob, whom he had chosen, that Laban leaves him with a kiss, Esau meets him with a kiss. Of the one he hath an oath, tears of the other—peace with both. Who shall need to fear men that is in league with God?

Ver. 8. Better is a little with righteousness, &c.] A small stock well gotten is more comfortably enjoyed and bequeathed to posterity than a cursed hoard of evil gotten goods. The reason why people "please not God, and are contrary to all men"—as this verse refers to the former—is, because they prefer gain before God, and care not how they wrong men so they may have it. See #Pr 15:16.

Ver. 9. A man's heart deviseth his way, but God directeth his steps.] Man purposeth, God disposeth of all. {#Pr 19:21} Events many times cross expectation, "neither is it in man to order his own ways." {#Jer 10:23} This the heathen saw, and were much troubled at, {a} as were the Athenians when their good General Nicias lost himself and his army in Sicily. So the Romans when Pompey, Cato, and others, worthy patriots, were worsted by Julius Caesar. Brutus, a wise and valiant man overthrown by Antony, cries out, ω πλημῶν ἀρετῆ, &c., O miserable virtue, thou art a mere slave to fortune! Christians have learned better language, and can set down themselves with sounder reason if crossed of their designs or desires. They know "it is the Lord"; they are "dumb, because it is his doing," and they are "punished less than their deserts." {#Ezr 9:13} Pompey, that seeing all to go on Caesar's side, said there was a great deal of mist over the eye of Providence, did no better than blame the sun, because of his sore eyes. {b}

{b} Dio.

Ver. 10. A divine sentence is in the lips of the king.] It is, or should be. His words usually pass for oracles, and many times stand for laws. It should be his care, therefore, to "speak as the oracles of God." {#1Pe 4:11} Yea, "so to speak, and so to do, as one that shall be judged by the law of liberty," {#Jas 2:12} or, as some read it, As they that should judge by the law of liberty. Our old word Koning, and by contraction King, comes of Con, saith Becanus, which comprehends three things, Posssum, scio, audeo -I can do it, I know how to do it, and I dare do it. If either he want power, or skill, or courage to do justice, the people, instead of admiring his divinations, will cry out of him, as the Romans did of Pompey, Miseria nostra magnus est: This great one is our great misery.

His mouth transgresseth not in judgment.] Viz, If he ask counsel at God's mouth, as David did, and execute "justice, justice," as Moses speaks, {#De 16:20, marg.} that is, pure justice, without mud or mixture of selfish affections sparing neither the great for might, nor the mean for misery.

Ver. 11. A just weight and balance are the Lord's, / i.e., Are commanded and commended by him. {#Pr 2:1 De 25:14-16} {See Trapp on "De 25:14"} {See Trapp on "De 25:15"} {See Trapp on "De 25:16"}

All the weights of the bag are his work, / i.e., His ordinance, and therefore not to be violated. Yea, they are iudicia Domini, as the Vulgate here reads the former clause, God's judgments. "Let no man therefore go beyond or defraud his brother" in buying and selling, "for God is the avenger of all such." {#1Th 4:6} Surely his magistrates must not transgress in judgment, lest they prove but fures publici, as Cato {a} called them; latrones cum privilegio {b} as Columella, public thieves; "scabs," as the prophet Isaiah terms them, {#Isa 5:7, marg.} and lest their regiment without righteousness appear to be but robbery with authority. So neither must private persons cheat and deceive their brethren by false weights and measures, &c., lest they be looked upon as the botches of the commonwealth, and enemies to civil society.

Ver. 12. It is an abomination for kings to commit wickedness.] It is so for any man, but especially for great men. Peter Martyr told Queen Elizabeth in an epistle, that princes were doubly obliged to God: first, as men; secondly, as chief men. When I was born into the world, said Henry IV of France, there were thousands of others born besides myself; what have I done to God more than they? It is his mere grace and mercy which doth bind me more unto his justice; for the faults of great men are never small. {a} Thus he. It is reported of Tamberlane, {b} that warlike Scythian, that having overcome Bajazet the great Turk, he asked him whether ever he had given God thanks for making him so great an emperor? who confessed ingenuously he never thought of it. To whom Tamberlane replied, that it was no wonder so ungrateful a man should be made a spectacle of misery. For you, saith he, being blind of one eye, and I lame of a leg, was there any worth in us, why God should set us over two great empires of Turks and Tartars, to command many more worthy than ourselves? Good turns aggravate unkindnesses; and men's offences are increased by their obligations.

For the throne is established by righteousness.] Politicians give many directions for the upholding and conserving of kingdoms; but this of Solomon is far beyond them all. See it exemplified in #Jer 22:15-20, "Shalt thou reign, because thou closest thyself in cedar? Did not thy father eat and drink, and do judgment and justice, and then it was well with him?" &c.

Ver. 13. Righteous lips are the delight of kings,] i.e., Of good kings, such as David was, who loved Nathan never the worse, but the better, for dealing plainly with him, gave him free access to his bedchamber, and named him a commissioner for the declaring of his successor. {#1Ki 1:32} King Edward VI took much delight in Latimer, that faithful preacher; and Queen Elizabeth inquired much after Dearing, after she had once heard him telling her in a sermon that once it was tanquam ovis, but now velar indomita iuvenca, &c. But Dearing was without her knowledge laid up fast enough by the bishops, and kept far enough from coming near the court any more.

And they love him that speaketh right.] They should do so; but it happens somewhat otherwise oftentimes. Ahab hated Micaiah, and looked upon Elijah as a troubler of Israel. Alas! what had these righteous ones done? They taxed his sin, they foretold his judgment; they deserved it not, they inflicted it not, they were therefore "become his enemies, because they told him the truth." Truth breeds hatred, as the fair nymphs are feigned to do the ugly fawns and satyrs. Most princes are held by their parasites, who soothe them up in their sins, and smooth them up with fair words, which soak into them as oil doth into earthen vessels. David was none such; {#Ps 101:3-5} he went not attended, saith one, ut nunc fit, magno agmine aionum, negonum, ganeonum, palponum, gnathonum, balatronum, with a great sort of sycophants, courtparasites, flatterers, &c., but had the best he could pick to be next his person, and loved them that spoke right.

Ver. 14. The wrath of a king is as messengers of death.] In the plural number, the better to set forth the danger of a king's displeasure. {a} "Thou shalt surely die, Ahimelech." {#1Sa 22:16} "Adonijah shall be put to death this day." {#1Ki 2:24} "Hang Haman on the tree that is fifty cubits high," &c. Hunc pugionem tibi mittit senatus, &c. Queen Elizabeth was so reserved, that all about her stood in a reverent awe of her very presence and aspect, but much more of her least frown or check; wherewith some of them, who thought they might best presume of her favour, have been so suddenly daunted and planet stricken that they could not lay down the grief thereof but in their grave. {b} One of these was Sir Christopher Hatton, Lord Chancellor, who died of a flux of urine and grief of mind. Neither could the queen, having once cast him down with a word, raise him up again, though she visited and comforted him. {c}

But a wise man will pacify it.] Either by some prudent speech or political device, as Abigail did David, and David Saul; as Benhadad's servants did Ahab, and as our King Edward I's servant did him. {d} For this king venturing his life, by spurring his horse into a deep river, only to be revenged on his servant that had incensed him by a saucy answer, was soon pacified when once he saw him on his bended knees, exposing his neck to the blow of the drawn sword, wherewith the king pursued him.

Ver. 15. In the light of the king's countenance is life.] As when it is well with the head, it is the better with all the members; and as when the sky is clear, the bodies of men are in better temper. When David had given Ziba the land, "I humbly beseech thee," said he, "that I may find grace in thy sight, my lord king." {#2Sa 16:4} As if he should say, I had rather have the king's favour than the lands.

Artabazus (in Xenophon) complained when Cyrus had given him a cup of gold, and Chrysantas a kiss in token of his special favour, saying, that the cup that he gave him was not so good gold as the kiss that he gave Chrysantas.

“ Ut mala nulla feram nisi nudam Caesaris iram, Nuda parum nobis Caesaris ira mali est? ”
- Ovid.

And his favour is as a cloud of the latter rain.] That refresheth the ground after drought, and ripeneth the corn before harvest. In the island of St Thomas, on the back side of Africa, in the midst of it is a hill, and over that a continual cloud wherewith the whole island is watered. {a} Christo optime congruit haec sententia, saith Lavater here. This saying of Solomon may very fitly be applied to Christ, the King Immortal. "He shall come down like rain upon the mown grass, as showers that water the earth"; {#Ps 72:6} one cast of his countenance is more worth to a David than all the world's wealth, {#Ps 4:7,8} yea, more worth than the corporeal presence of Christ: therefore he tells his disciples they shall be great gainers by losing of him; for I will send you the Comforter, who shall seal up my love to you, and shed it abroad in your hearts.

{a} Abbot's Geography, 251.

Ver. 16. How much better is it to get wisdom than gold,] q.d., It is unspeakably better to get grace than gold; for what is gold and silver but the guts and garbage of the earth? and what serves it to but the life that now is, the back and belly? and what is the happiness that a man hath in much store of it but skin deep, or rather imaginary? "Surely man walketh in a vain show, in heaping up riches." {#Ps 39:6} That I speak not of the uncertainty of riches, their commonness to the wicked also, the insincerity of the comforts they yield, and their utter insufficiency to fill the infinite heart of man. Non enim plus satiatur cor auro quam corpus auro. The contrary of all which is true of heavenly wisdom. "How much better is it, therefore, to get wisdom than gold."

Ver 17. The highway of the upright is to depart from evil.] That is his road, his desire and endeavour, his general purpose, though sometimes (by mistake, or violence of temptation), he step out of the way, and turn aside to sin, yet there is no "way of wickedness" {#Ps 139:24} in him. His endeavour is, with Paul, to walk in all good conscience, to shape his course by the chart of God's Word, to shun sin as a serpent in his way, as poison in his meats.

He that keepeth his way, preserveth his soul.] As, if a man be out of God's precincts, he is out of his protection. "He shall keep thee in all thy ways," {#Ps 91:11} not in all thine out strays. He that leaves the highway, and takes to byways, travelling at unseasonable hours, &c., if he fall into foul hands, he may go look his remedy; the law allows him none.

Ver. 18. Pride goeth before destruction.] A bulging wall is near a downfall. Swelling is a dangerous symptom in the body; so is pride in the soul. Sequitur superbos ultor a tergo Deus. {a} Surely, as the swelling of the spleen is dangerous for health, and of the sails for the overbearing of a little vessel, so is the swelling of the heart by pride. Instances hereof we have in history not a few. Pharaoh, Adonibezek, Agag, Haman, Herod, &c. Xerxes, having covered the seas with his ships, and with two millions of men, and passed over into Greece, was afterwards, by a just hand of God upon him for his prodigious pride, forced to flee back in a poor fisher's boat, which, being overburdened, had sunk all, if the Persians, by the casting away of themselves, had not saved the life of their king. {b} It was a great foretoken of Darius's ruin, when in his proud embassy to Alexander he called himself the king of kings and cousin of the gods; but for Alexander he called him his servant. {c} The same senators that accompanied proud Sejanus to the senate conducted him the same day to prison; they which sacrificed unto him as to their god, which erst kneeled down to adore him, scoffed at him, seeing him dragged from the temple to the jail—from supreme honour to extreme ignominy. {d} Sigismund, the young King of Hungary, beholding the greatness of his army, in his great jollity, hearing of the coming of the Turks, proudly said, What need we fear the Turk, who need not at all to fear the falling of the heavens; which, if they should fall, yet were we able, with our spears and halberts, to hold them up from falling upon us? He afterwards shortly received a notable overthrow, lost most of his men, and was himself glad to get over Danube in a little boat to save his life. {e} What should I speak of Bajazet, the terror of the world, and, as he thought, superior to fortune, yet in an instant, with his state, in one battle, overthrown into the bottom of misery and despair, and that in the midst of his greatest strength? {f}

Ver. 19. Better it is to be of a humble spirit.] A humble man is worth his weight in gold; he hath far more comfort in his losses than proud giants have in their rapines and robberies. Truth it is, that meekness of spirit commonly draws on injuries. A crow will pull wool from a sheep's side; she durst not do so to a wolf or mastiff. Howbeit, it is much better to suffer wrong than to do it; to be patient than to be insolent; to be lowly in heart and low of port than to enjoy "the pleasures," or treasures, "of sin for a season."

Ver. 20. He that handleth a matter wisely shall find good.] Doing things with due deliberation and circumspection, things of weight and importance especially—for here Deliberandum est diu, quod statuendum est semel -we may look for God's blessing, when the best that can come of rashness is repentance. Youth rides in post to be married, but in the end finds the inn of repentance to be lodged in. The best may be sometimes miscarried by their passions to their cost, as good Josiah when he encountered the King of Egypt, and never so much as sent to Jeremiah, Zephaniah, or any other prophet then living, to ask, Shall I go up against Pharaoh or not?

And whoso trusteth in the Lord, happy is he.] Let a man handle his matter never so wisely, yet if he trust to his own wisdom, he must not look to find good. God will cross even the likeliest projects of such, and crack the strongest sinew in all the arm of flesh. The Babylonians held their city impregnable, and boasted, as Xenophon witnesseth, that they had twenty years' provision beforehand; but God confuted their carnal confidence. The Jews in Isaiah, when they looked for an invasion, looked in that day to the armour of the house of the forest, and "gathered together the waters of the lower pool, numbered the houses, and cast up the ditches to fortify the wall; but they looked not all this while to God their Maker," &c. Therefore they had "a day of trouble, and of treading down, and of perplexity, by the Lord God of hosts in the valley of vision." {#Isa 22:5,8-10} Where the beginning is creature confidence or self-conceitedness, the end is commonly shame and confusion, in any business. Whereas he that, in the use of lawful means, resteth upon God for direction and success, though he fail in his design, yet he knows whom he hath trusted, and God will "know his soul in adversity." {#Ps 31:7}

Ver. 21. The wise in heart shall be called prudent.] He shall have the style and esteem of an intelligent, though not, haply, of an eloquent man. Of some it may be said, as Solinus {a} saith of his poly-histor to his friend Antius, Fermentum (ut ita dicam) cognitionis, ei magis in esse, quam bracteas eloquentiae deprehendas, - You may find more worth of wisdom in them than force of words. Bonaventure requireth to a perfect speech congruity, truth, and ornament. This latter some wise men want, and it is their ornament that they neglect ornament, as Cicero writes of Atticus, {b} and as Beza writes of Calvin, that he was facundiae contemptor et verborum parvus, sed minime ineptus scriptor - a plain but profitable author.

And the sweetness of the lips increaseth learning.] That is, eloquence with prudence edifieth, and is of singular use for the laying forth of a man's talent to the good of others. As one being asked whether light was pleasant, replied, That is a blind man's question; {c} so if any ask whether eloquence and a gracious utterance be useful in the Church of God, it is an insulse {d} and inficete {e} question. Zaneby, speaking of Calvin and Viret—who were preachers together at Geneva when he first came there out of Italy—uses these words: Sicut in Calvino insignem doctrinam, sic in Vireto singularein eloquentiam, et in commovendis affectibus efficacitatem admirabar; {f} i.e., As Calvin I admired for excellent learning, so did I Viret no less for his singular eloquence and efficacy in drawing affections. Beza also was of the same mind, as appears by that epigram of his:

Quo nemo docuit doctius:
Et miratur adhuc fundentem mella Viretum,
Quo nemo fatur dulcius.”

Ver. 22. Understanding is a well spring of life.] Vena vitae -as the heart is the principle of life, the brain of sense, so is wisdom in the heart of all good carriage in the life, and of a timely laying hold upon eternal life; besides the benefit that other men make of it, by fetching water thence as from a common well.

But the instruction of fools is folly.] When they would show most gravity they betray their folly. They act not from an inward principle, therefore they cannot quit themselves so, but that their folly at length will appear to all men that "have their senses exercised to discern between good and evil." {#Heb 5:14} There are that read the text, Castigatio stultorum stultitia est. It is a folly to correct or instruct a fool, for it is to no more purpose than to wash a blackmore, &c.

Ver. 23. The heart of the wise teacheth his mouth.] Frameth his speech for him, and seasoneth it with salt of grace, ere it sets it as a dish before the hearers. Nescit poeuitenda loqui qui proferenda prius suo tradidit examini, saith Cassiodore. {a} He cannot lightly speak amiss that weighs his words before he utters them. The voice which is made in the mouth is nothing so melodious as that which comes from the depth of the breast Heart sprung speech hath weight and worth in it.

And addeth learning to his lips.] By restraining talkativeness, and making him as willing to hear as to speak, to learn as to teach, to be an auditor as an orator.

{a} Lib. x. Ep. 4.

Ver. 24. Pleasant words are as a honeycomb.] Dainty and delicious, such as "the preacher set himself to search out"; {#Ec 12:10} such as his father David found God's words to be; {#Ps 119:103} "wells of salvation." {#Isa 12:3} "Breasts of consolation"; {#Isa 66:11} the honey drops of Christ's mouth. {#So 5:16} Oh, hang upon his holy lips, as they did! {#Lu 19:48} Hast thou found honey with Samson? Eat it as he did. {#Pr 25:16} Eat God's book as John did; {#Re 10:9} find fatness and sweetness in it. {#Ps 63:5} Get "joy and gladness" out of it. {#Ps 51:8} And if at any time the word, in searching our wounds, put us to pain, as honey will cause pain to exulcerate parts, let us bear it, and not be like children, who, though they like honey well, yet will they not endure to have it come near their lips when they have sore mouths.

Sweet to the soul, health to the bones,] i.e., Satisfactory to the mind and medicinal also to the body, which many times follows the temperament of the mind. Alphonsus, King of Sicily, is said to have recovered from a dangerous disease by the pleasure that he took in reading Quintus Curtius, and some others in like sort by reading Livy, Aventine, &c. But these were "physicians of no value" to that of David. "Unless thy law had been my delight, I should then have perished in mine affliction." {#Ps 119:92} Look how those that are fallen into a swoon may be fetched again with cold water sprinkled on their faces, or with hot water poured down their throats. So those that are troubled in mind may by patience and comfort of the Scriptures recover hope.

Ver. 25. There is a way that seemeth right to a man.] This we had before, totidem verbis, in #Pr 14:12; {See Trapp on "Pr 14:12"} And think not this a vain repetition; but know that it is thus redoubled, that it may be the better remarked and remembered. Nothing is more ordinary or more dangerous than self-delusion. To deceive another is naught, but to deceive thyself—which yet most men do—is much worse; as to belie one's self, kill one's self, &c., is counted most abominable. To warn us therefore of this greatest wickedness, it is that this sentence is reiterated.

Ver. 26. He that laboureth, laboureth for himself.] He earns it to eat it, he gets it with his hands to maintain "the life of his hands," as it is therefore also called {#Isa 57:10} Animantis cuiusque vita in fuga est, saith the philosopher; Life will away if not repaired by aliment. Et dii boni; quantum hominum unus exereet venter! {a} Oh what ado there is to provide meat for the belly! There are those who make too much ado, while they make it "their god," {#Php 3:19} as did that Pamphagus, Nabal; those in St Paul's time, that "served not the Lord Jesus Christ, but their own bellies"; and our Abbey lubbers, Quorum luxuria totus non sufficit orbis; O monachi, vestri stomachi, &c. See my Common Place of Abstinence.

For his mouth craveth it of him.] Heb., Bows down to him, or upon him, either as a suppliant or as importunately urgent. {b} The belly hath no ears; necessity hath no law. Malesuada fames will have it if it be to be had. Drusus, meat being denied him, did eat the very stuffings of his bed; but that was not nourishment. {c} The stomach of man is a monster, saith one, which, being contained in so little a bulk as the body, is able to consume and devour all things; and yet is not consumed of itself, nor destroyed by that heat that digesteth all that comes into it.

Ver. 27. An ungodly man diggeth up evil,] i.e., He ransacketh and raketh out of the dust, out of the dunghill, such old evils as have long lain hid, to lay in the saints' dishes, and to upbraid them with. Thus the Manichees dealt by Augustine when they could not answer his arguments, they hit him in the teeth with his youthful follies; whereunto his reply was only this, Quae vos reprehenditis, ego damnavi: What you discommend in me, I have long since condemned. The malicious Papists did the like to reverend Beza, reprinting his wit-wanton poems (put forth in his youth), on purpose to despise him; and objecting to him his former miscarriage which he had sorely repented. This, when one of them did with great bitterness, all the answer he had, was, Hic homo invidet mihi gratiam Christi; This man envies me the grace of Jesus Christ. Neither dealt Aaron and Miriam much more gently with their brother Moses, {#Nu 12:1} when they "spake against him because of the Ethiopian woman whom he had married." Who was this Ethiopian woman but Zipporah?—for an Ethiopian and a Midianite are all one and the same. And when did he marry her? Many a year ago. {#Ex 2:21} But they were resolved to pick a hole in Moses's coat; and having nothing else to fasten on, they dig up this evil, and throw it as dirt in his face.

In his lips there is a burning fire.] The tongue, in its shape and colour, resembleth a flame of fire. "It is oft set on fire of hell, and itself setteth on fire the whole course of nature." {#Jas 3:6} "Their breath, as fire, shall devour you," {#Isa 33:10} as the fire of Etna devoured Empedocles, that would needs go too near it. "But what shall be given unto thee, or what shall be done unto thee, thou false tongue?"—false though thou speak the truth, if with a mind to do mischief:—"Sharp arrows of the mighty, with coals of juniper," {#Ps 120:3,4} yea, that very fire of hell, from whence thou wast enkindled. Ver. 28. A froward man soweth strife.] The Belialist before mentioned, {#Pr 16:27} as he digs, so he sows; but as ill seed as may be, that which comes not up but with a curse, as cud-weed, {a} and devil's bit. He is a sedulous seedsman of sedition; this bad seed he sows in every furrow where he can find footing.

And a whisperer separateth even very friends.] A pestilent tale bearer that carries tales, and so sows strife. Such were Doeg and other abjects that tare David's name, "and ceased not," {#Ps 35:15} tossing it with their carrion mouths as dogs, buzzing into Saul's ears ever and anon that which might set him agog against him. Such also were those malicious make baits the Pharisees, who, when they thought the disciples had offended, spake not to them, but to their Master, "Why do thy disciples that which is not lawful?" As when they thought Christ offended, they spake not to him, but to his disciples. Thus these whisperers went about to "separate very friends," to make a breach in the family of Christ, by setting off the one from the other. "The words of such whisperers are as wounds, and they go down into the innermost parts of the belly." {#Pr 18:8} They are like the wind that creeps in by the chinks and crevices in a wall, or the cracks in a window, that commonly prove more dangerous than a storm that meets a man in the face upon the champion the plain.

{a} The common name for the genus Gnaphalium of composite plants, having chaffy scales surrounding the flower heads; originally proper to G. sylvaticum; extended to other plants, of allied genera, or similar appearance.

Ver. 29. A violent man enticeth his neighbour.] As those seducers at Ephesus "dragged disciples after them" {a} {#Ac 20:30} compelling them by their persuasions to embrace distorted doctrines, such as cause convulsions of conscience. Such are said to "thrust men out of God's ways"; {#De 13:5} as Jeroboam did the house of Israel; as Julian and other cunning persecutors did in the primitive times, prevailing as much by their tising tongues, as by their terrifying saws. {b} #Heb 11:37, "They were sawn asunder, they were tempted." The apostle ranks and reckons their alluring promises among their violent practices. But "though they speak fair, believe them not; for there are seven abominations in their hearts." {#Pr 26:25}

Ver. 30. He shutteth his eyes to devise froward things.] Wicked men are great students; they beat their brains and close their eyes that they may revolve and excogitate mischief with more freedom of mind. They search the devil's skull for new devices, and are very intente to invent that which may do harm; their wits will better serve them to find out a hundred shifts or carnal arguments, than to yield to one saving truth, though never so much cleared up to them.

Moving his lips, he bringeth evil to pass.] Mumbling and muttering to himself, and so calling the devil into counsel, he hath him at hand to bring about the business. Bartolus {a} writes of Doctor Gabriel Nele, that by the only motion of the lips, without any utterance, he understood all men, perceived and read every man's mind in his countenance. If Nele could do so, how much more the devil? who, besides his natural sagacity, hath had so long experience, and both knows and furthers those evil plots and practices that he himself hath injected into wicked hearts.

Manna, the longer it was kept against the command of God, the more it stank. What can be more odious than an old goat, an old fornicator? &c. What more ridiculous than puer centum annorum, a child, of fourscore or a hundred years old? Turpis et ridieulosa res est elementarius senex, saith Seneca. {d} An A B C old man is a shameful sight. Nectarius, that succeeded Nazianzen at Antioch, had little else to commend him to the place but a goodly gray beard and a graceful countenance. {e} Whereas of Abraham it is reported that he went to his grave in a good old age, or, as the Hebrew hath it, with a good gray head. Ver. 32. He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty.] Unruly passions are those Turks, saith one, that we must constantly make war with. Those Spaniards, with whom, as another saith, whoever made peace, gained nothing but repentance. Pax erit infida, pax incerta, as Livy {a} saith of that which the Romans made with the Samnites; a peace worse than war, as Augustine {b} saith of the peace brought in by Sulla. Men must be at deadly feud with those "lusts that war in their members," {#Jas 4:1} "fighting against their souls." {#1Pe 2:11} These to conquer is the noblest and most signal victory, since in subduing these we overcome the devil, {#Eph 4:26 Jas 4:7} as in yielding to them, we "give place" to him, and entertain him into our very bosoms. Passionate persons, though they be not drunk, yet are not they their own men; but have so many lusts, so many lords, conquering countries, as Alexander, vanquished of vices; or as the Persian kings, who commanded the whole world, but were commanded by their concubines. How much better Valentinian the emperor, who said, upon his deathbed, that among all his victories one only comforted him; and being asked what that was, he answered, I have overcome my worst enemy, mine own naughty heart.

I cannot better translate it than by Solomon's next words,

He that ruleth his spirit, is better than he that taketh a city.] See this exemplified in Jacob, who did better, when he heard of the rape of Dinah, in "holding his peace," than his sons did in taking and pillaging the city Shechem. {#Ge 34:5} None was to triumph in Rome that had not gotten five victories. {c} He shall never triumph in heaven that subdueth not his five senses himself.

Ver. 33. The lot is cast into the lap.] This sentence at first sight seems light and unworthy of the place it holds in this book. But as every line in the holy Bible is pure, precious, and profitable, so this sets forth a matter of very great moment—viz., that the providence of God extendeth to the disposing of all things, even those things, also, that in regard of as are merely contingent and casual. Lottery is guided by providence, as in the finding out of Achan, designing of Saul to be king, dividing the land among the Israelites, &c. Chance-medley {a} is providence {#Ex 22} Cambyses, lighting off his horse, after he had been showing great cruelty to them of Athens, his sword flew out of his scabbard and slew him. Disponit Deus membra pulicis et culicis, saith Augustine: God disposeth of gnats and flies. Birds flying seem to fly at liberty, yet are they guided by an overruling hand; {#Mt 10:26-31} he teacheth them to build their nests; {#Ps 84:3} ׀ in the word ׀ for a nest there is written bigger than ordinary, to imply so much, say Hebricians; he also provides them their meat, their several meats in due season—the young raven especially, {#Ps 147:9} if that be true that Aristotle {b} reporteth. This doctrine of God's particular providence rightly resented, yields incredible profit and comfort. See my Love Tokens, pp. 11, 12.

{a} Accident or casualty not purely accidental, but of a mixed character. Chiefly in manslaughter by chance-medley (for which later writers often use chance-medley itself): 'the casual killing of a man, not altogether without the killer's fault, though without an evil intent; homicide by misadventure; homicide mixt' (Cowel).

Ver. 1. Better is a dry morsel and quietness therewith.] Though there be not so much as a little vinegar to dip in. {#Pr 14:17} {See Trapp on "Pr 14:17"} The Hebrew word properly signifies a morsel of bread, as Rabbi Elias tells us. So, then, better is a crust of coarse bread without any other dainties or dishes—never so little, with love and peace—than a houseful of sacrifices; that is, of good cheer, usual at offering up of sacrifices. {#Pr 7:14} And hereunto Saint James seems to allude in #Pr 5:5.

Ver. 2. A wise servant shall have rule over a son, &c.] God hath a very gracious respect unto faithful servants, and hath promised them "the reward of inheritance," {#Col 3:24} which properly belongs to sons. This happens sometimes here, as to Joseph, Joshua, those subjects that married Solomon's daughters; {#IKi 4:10,14} but infallibly hereafter, when "they shall come from east and west to sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven," and to "enter into their Master's joy," "but the children of the kingdom shall be cast out." {#Mt 8:11,12}

Ver. 3. The fining pot is for silver, &c.] God also hath his "fire in Zion, and his furnace in Jerusalem"; {#Isa 31:9} his conflatories and his crucibles wherein he will refine his, "as silver is refined, and try them as gold is tried." {#Zec 13:9} Not as if he knew them not, till he had tried them; for he made them, and therefore cannot but know them; as artificers know the several parts and properties of their works. Sed tentat ut sciat, id est, ut scire nos faciat, saith Augustine. He therefore tries us, that he may make us know what is in us, what dross, what pure metal; and that all may see that we are such as, for a need, can "glorify him in the very fires," {#Isa 24:15} "that the trial of our faith being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though tried in the fire, may be found to praise, and honour, and glory." {#1Pe 1:7}

Ver. 4. A wicked doer giveth heed to false lips.] It is an ill sign of a vicious nature to be apt to believe scandalous reports of godly men. If men loved not lies, they would not listen to them. Some are of the opinion that Solomon having said, "God trieth the hearts," doth in this and the two next following verses instance some particular sins so accounted by God, which yet pass among men for no sins, or peccadilloes at the utmost, seeing no man seems to receive wrong by them—such as these are, to listen to lying lips, to mock the poor, to rejoice at another man's calamity, and the like. Lo, they that do thus, though to themselves and others they may seem to have done nothing amiss, yet God that tries the hearts will call them to account for these malicious miscarriages.

Ver. 5. He that mocketh the poor, &c.] {See Trapp on "Pr 14:31"}

And he that is glad at calamities, shall not be unpunished.] He is sick with the devil's disease, επιχαρκακια, which Job was not tainted with; {#Job 31:16-40} as the Edomites, Ammonites, Philistines, and other of Sion's enemies {#La 1:21} were. How bitterly did the Jews insult our Saviour, when they had nailed him to the cross! And in like sort they served many of the martyrs, worrying them when they were down, as dogs do other creatures; and shooting sharp arrows at them when they had set them up for marks of their malice and mischief. Herein they deal equally barbarous manner with the saints, as the Turks did with one John de Chabes, a Frenchman, at the taking of Tripolis in Barbary. They cut off his hands and nose, and then, when they had put him quick into the ground to the waist, they, for their pleasure, shot at him with their arrows, and afterwards cut his throat. {a} Mr John Denly, martyr, {b} being set in the fire with the burniug flame about him, sang a psalm; then cruel Doctor Story commanded one of the tormentors to hurl a faggot at him; whereupon, being hurt therewith upon the face, that he bled again, he left his singing, and clapped both his hands upon his face. 'Truly,' said Doctor Story to him that hurled the faggot, 'thou hast marred a good old song.' This Story being, after the coming in of Queen Elizabeth, questioned in parliament for many foul crimes, and particularly for persecuting and burning the martyrs, he denied not but that he was once at the burning of a herewig, for so he termed it, at Uxbridge, where he cast a faggot at his face as he was singing psalms, and set a wine bush of thorns under his feet a little to prick him, &c. {c} This wretch was afterwards hanged, drawn, and quartered, {d} and so this proverb was fulfilled of him, "He that is glad at calamities, shall not be unpunished."

Ver. 6. Children's children are the crown of old men.] That is, if they be not children those who "cause shame," as #Pr 17:2, and who disgrace their ancestors—stain their blood; if they obey their parents' counsel and follow their good example; for otherwise they prove not crowns, but corrosives, to their aged sires, as did Esau, Absalom, Andronicus, and others.

And the glory of children are their parents.] If those children so well descended do not degenerate, as Jonathan the son of Gershom, the son of Manasseh—or rather of Moses, as the Hebrews read it with a nun suspensum {#Jud 18:31} -and as Eli's, Samuel's, and some of David's sons did. Heroum filii noxae. Manasseh had a good father, but he degenerated into his grandfather Ahaz, as if there had been no intervention of a Hezekiah. So we have seen the kernel of a well-fruited plant degenerate into that crab or willow that gave the original to his stock. But what an honour was it to Jacob that he could swear "by the fear of his father Isaac!"—to David, that he could, in a real and heavenly compliment, say to his Maker, "Truly, Lord, I am thy servant; I am thy servant, and the son of thy handmaid!" {#Ps 116:16} -to Timothy, that the same faith that was in him had dwelt first "in his grandmother Lois, and his mother Eunice!" {#2Ti 1:5} -to the children of the elect lady! &c.—to Mark, that he was Barnabas's sister's son!—to Alexander and Rufus, men mentioned only, #Mr 15:21, but famously known in the Church to be the sons of Simon of Cyrene!—to the sons of Constantine the Great, to come of such a father, whom they did wholly put on, saith Eusebius, ^{a} and exactly resemble!—to be descended of those glorious martyrs and confessors that suffered here in Queen Mary's days!

Ver. 7. Excellent speech becometh not a fool.] A Nabal, a sapless, worthless fellow, in whom all worth is withered and decayed, — qui nullas habet dicendi vires, as Cicero hath it, that can say no good except it be by rote, or at least by book, -what should he do discoursing of high points? God likes not fair words from a foul mouth. Christ silenced the devil when he confessed him to be the Son of the most high God. The leper's lips should be covered, according to the law. The Lacedemonians, when a bad man had uttered a good speech in their council house, liking the speech but not the speaker, commanded one of better carriage to give the same counsel, and then they made use of it. ^{a} The people of Rome sware they would not believe Carbo though he sware. ^{b}

Much less do lying lips a prince.] Or any ingenuous man, as some render it. A prince's bare word should be better security than another man's oath, said Alphonsns, King of Arragon. When Amurath, the great Turk, was exhorted by his cruel son, Mohammed, to break his faith with the inhabitants of Sfetigrade, in Epirus, he would not listen, saying, "That he which was desirous to be great among men, must either be indeed faithful of his word and promise, or at least seem to be so." ^{c} -thereby to gain the minds of the people, who naturally abhor the government of a faithless and cruel prince. What a foul blur was that to Christian religion, that Ladislaus King of Hungary should, by the persuasion of the Pope's envoy, break his oath given to this Amurath at the great battle of Varna, and thereby open the mouth of that dead dog to rail upon Jesus Christ! ^{d} And how will the Papists ever be able to wipe off from their religion that stain that lies upon it ever since the Emperor Sigismund, by the consent and advice of the Council of Constance, brake his promise of safe conduct to John Huss and Jerome of Prague, and burnt them! But they have a rule to walk by now, Fides cum haereticis non est servanda: Promises made to heretics are not to be observed. And it is for merchants, say they, and not for princes, to stand to their oaths, any further than may stand with the public good. This divinity they may seem to have drawn out of Plato, who, in his third Dialogue of the Commonwealth, saith, That if it be lawful for any one to lie, it may be lawful doubtless for princes and governors, that aim therein at the public welfare. But God, by the mouth of his servant and secretary, Solomon, here assures us it is otherwise.

Ver. 8. A gift is as a precious stone, &c.] Heb., As a stone of grace. Like that precious stone tantarbe, spoken of in Philostratus, {a} that hath a marvellous conciliating property; or the wonderworking lodestone, that among other strange effects reckoned up by Marbodeus and Pictorius, doth possessores suos disertos et principibus gratos reddere, make those that have it well-spoken men, and well accepted by princes.

Whithersoever it turneth, it prospereth.] Most men are δωροφάγοι, and "love with shame, Give ye." Yet some Persian-like spirits there are—as hath been made good before by the examples of Luther, Galeabrius, and some others—that regard not silver; and as for gold, in such a way, they have no delight in it. {#Isa 13:17} But these are black swans indeed. The most sing, Quis nisi mentis inops oblatum respuat aurum? Who but a fool would refuse offered gold?

{a} In Vita Apollon, lib. iii. cap. 14.

Ver. 9. He that covereth a transgression, seeketh love.] In friendship, faults will happen. These must be many of them dissembled, and not chewed but swallowed down whole as medicine pills, for else they will stick in a man's teeth and prove very unpleasant. {See Trapp on "Pr 10:12"}

But he that repeateth a matter separateth very friends.] He that is so soft and sensible of smallest offences, so tender and ticklish that he can put up nothing without revenge or reparation—he that rips up and rakes into his friends' frailties, and makes them more in the relating, having never done with them, he shall soon make his best friends weary of him, nay, to become enemies to him.

Ver. 10. A reproof entereth more into a wise man, &c.] A word to the wise is sufficient. A look from Christ brake Peter's heart, and dissolved it into tears. Augustus being in a great rage, ready to pass sentence of death upon many, was taken off by these words of his friend Maecenas, written in a note, and cast into his lap, Tandem aliquando surge carnifex. Pray rise at last executioner! ^{a} When Luther was once in a great heat, Melanchthon cooled him and qualified him by repeating that verse, Vince animos iramque tuam, qui caetera vincis: ^{b} Master your passions, you that so easily master all things else.

Than an hundred stripes into a fool.] Hic enim plectitur, sed non flectitur; corripitur, sed non corrigitur: Beaten he is, but not bent to goodness; amerced, but not amended. The cypress, the more it is watered, the more it is withered. Ahaz was the worse for his afflictions; so was the railing thief. Jeroboam's withered hand works nothing upon his heart. He had herein as great a miracle wrought before him, saith a reverend man, ^{c} as St Paul had at his conversion, yet was he not wrought upon, because the Spirit did not set it on.

Ver. 11. An evil man seeketh only rebellion.] Viz., How to gainstand and mischief those that by words or stripes seek to reclaim him. Some read it thus, 'The rebellious seeketh mischief only'; he is set upon sin, he shall be sure of punishment. No warnings will serve obdurate hearts. Wicked men are even ambitious of destruction. Judgments need not go to find them out; they run to meet their bane—they seek it, and as it were send for it. But this they need not do, "for a cruel messenger shall be sent against him." God hath forces enough at hand to fetch in his rebels—viz., good and evil angels, stars, meteors, elements—other creatures, reasonable, unreasonable, insensible. The stones in the wall of Aphek shall sooner turn executioners than a rebellious Aramite shall escape unrevenged; not to speak of hell torments prepared for the devil and his angels, and by them to be inflicted on rebels and reprobates.

Ver. 12. Let a bear robbed of her whelps meet a man.] A bear is a fierce and fell creature, the she ear especially, as Aristotle notes, but most of all when robbed of her whelps, which she licketh into form, and loveth without measure. To meet her in this rage is to meet death in the face; and yet that danger may be sooner shifted and shunned than a furious fool set upon mischief. Such were the primitive persecutors, not sparing those Christians whom bears and lions would not meddle with. Such a one was our bloody Bonner, who in five years' time took and roasted three hundred martyrs, most of them within his own walk and diocese. {a} Such another was that merciless Minerius, one of the Pope's captains, who destroyed twenty-two towns of the innocent Merindeliens in France, together with the inhabitants; and being entreated for some few of them that escaped in their shirts to cover their nakedness, he sternly answered that he knew what he had to do, and that not one of them should escape his hands, but he would send them to hell to dwell among devils. {b}

Ver. 13. Whoso rewardeth evil for good, &c.] Ingratitude is a monster in nature, and doth therefore carry so much more detestation, as it is more odious even to themselves that have blotted out the image of God. {a} Some vices are such as nature smiles upon, though frowned at by divine justice; not so this. Lycurgus would make no law against it, because he thought none could be so absurd as to fall into it. Among the Athenians there was an action, αποστασιου, of a master against a servant ungrateful for his manumission, not doing his duty to his late master: such were again to be made bond-slaves. {b} Who can choose but abhor that abominable act of Michael Balbus, who that night that his prince (Leo Armenius) had pardoned and released him, got out and slew him? {c} And that of Muleasses, king of Tunis, who cruelly tortured to death the manifes and mesner, by whose means especially he had aspired to the kingdom; grieving to see them live to whom he was so much beholden. {d} And that of Dr Watson, bishop of Lincoln in Queen Mary's days, who, being with Bonnet at the examination of

Mr Rough, martyr (a man that had been a means to save Watson's life in the days of King Edward VI), to requite him that good turn, detected him there to be a pernicious heretic, who did more harm in the northern parts than a hundred more of his opinion. {e} Whereunto may be added that of William Parry, who having been for burglary condemned to die, was saved by Queen Elizabeth's pardon; but he (ungrateful wretch) sought to requite her by vowing her death, anno dom. 1584. {f} To render good for evil is divine, good for good is human, evil for evil is brutish, evil for good is devilish.

Evil shall not depart from his house,] i.e., From his person and posterity, though haply he may escape the lash of man's law for such an abhorred villany. See this fulfilled in Saul's family, for his unworthy dealing with David; in Muleasses, and many others. Jeremiah, in a spirit of prophecy, bitterly curseth such, and foretelleth the utter ruin of them and theirs, {#Pr 18:20,21, &c.} "Shall evil be recompensed for good?" saith he. "Therefore deliver up their children to the famine, and let their wives be widows. Let a cry be heard from their houses," &c. {#Jer 18:20-22}

Ver. 14. The beginning of strife is as when one lets out water.] It is easier to stir strife than stint it. Lis litem generat; as water, it is of a spreading nature. Do therefore here as the Dutchmen do by their banks; they keep them with little cost and trouble, because they look narrowly to them, and make them up in time. If there be but the least breach, they stop it presently, otherwise the sea would soon flood them.

Cum stabulis armenta trahit.”—Virgil, Aeneid.

The same may fitly be set forth also by a similitude from fire; which if quenched presently, little hurt is done; as if not, "Behold how great a wood a little fire kindleth," saith Saint James. {#Pr 3:5} If "fire break out but of a bramble, it will devour the cedars of Lebanon." {#Jud 9:15} Cover therefore the fire of contention, as William the Conqueror commanded the curfew bell.

Therefore leave off contention before it be meddled with.] Antequam commisceatur. Stop or step back, before it come to further trouble. Satius est recurrere quam male currere, better retire than run on, in those ignoble quarrels especially, ubi et vincere inglorium est et atteri sordidum, wherein, whether he win or lose, he is sure to lose in his credit and comfort. We read of Francis I, king of France, that, consulting with his captains how to lead his army over the Alps into Italy, whether this way or that way, Amaril, his fool, sprang out of a corner, where he sat unseen, and bade them rather take care which way they should bring their army out of Italy again. It is easy for one to interest himself in quarrels, but hard to be disengaged from them when he is once in. Therefore principiis obsta, withstand the beginnings of these evils, and "study to be quiet." {#1Th 4:11} Milk quencheth wild fire. Oil, saith Luther, quencheth lime; so doth meekness strife.

Ver. 15. He that justifieth the wicked, and he that condemneth the just, &c.] To wrong a righteous man in word only is a grievous sin; how much more to murder him under pretence of justice, as they did innocent Naboth; as the bloody Papists do Christ's faithful witnesses; and as the Jews did Christ himself, crying out, "We have a law, and by our law he ought to die." This is to play the thief or manslayer cum privilegio; this is to "frame mischief by a law." {#Ps 94:20} The like may be said of that other branch of injustice, the justifying of the wicked. Bonis nocet, qui malis parcit: He wrongs the good that spares the bad; better turn so many wild boars, bears, wolves, leopards loose among them, than these monstrous men of condition, that will either corrupt them, or otherwise mischief them. For "thou knowest this people is set upon mischief" {#Ex 32:22} They cannot sleep, unless they have hurt some one. Neither pertains this proverb to magistrates only, but to private persons too, who must take heed how they precipitate a censure. Herein David was to blame in pronouncing the wicked happy, and condemning the generation of God's children, {#Ps 73:3-16} for the which oversight he afterwards shames and shents himself, yea, befools and be-beasts himself, as well he deserved. {#Ps 73:22}

Ver. 16. Wherefore is there a price in the hand of a fool? &c.] Wealth without wit is ill bestowed. Think the same of good natural parts, either of body or mind; so for authority, opportunity, and other advantages. Whereto serve they, if not rightly improved and employed? Certainly they will prove no better than Uriah's letters to those that have them; or as that sword which Hector gave Ajax; which so long as he used against his enemies, served for help and defence, but after he began to abuse it to the harm of harmless beasts, it turned into his own bowels. This will be a bodkin at thy heart one day, 'I might have been saved, but I woefully let slip those opportunities that God had thrust into my hands, and wilfully cut the throat of mine own poor soul, by an impenitent continuance in sinful courses, against so many dissuasives.' Oh the spirit of fornication, that hath so besotted the minds of the most, that they have no heart to look after heaven while it is to be had, but trifle and fool away their own salvation!

Ver. 17. A friend loveth at all times.] Such a friend was Jonathan; Hushai the Archite; Ittai the Gittite, who stuck close to David when he was at his lowest point. But such faithful friends are in this age all for the most part gone in pilgrimage, as he {a} once said, and their return is uncertain. David met with others, besides those above mentioned, that would be the causes, but not the companions, of his calamity—that would fawn upon him in his flourish, but forsake him in his trouble. "My lovers and friends stand aloof," &c. The ancients pictured Friendship in the shape of a fair young man, bare-headed, meanly appareled, having on the outside of his garment written, 'To live and to die with you,' and on his forehead, Summer and winter. His breast was open, so that his heart might be seen; and with his finger he pointed to his heart, where was written, Longe, prope -Far and near.

And a brother is born for adversity.] Birth binds him to it; {b} and although at other times fratrum concordia rara, brethren may jar and jangle, yet at a straight and in a stress, good-nature will work, and good blood will not belie itself. And as in the natural, so in the spiritual brotherhood, misery breeds unity. Ridley and Hooper, that when they were both bishops, differed so much about ceremonies, could agree well enough, and be mutual comforts one to another, when they were both prisoners. Esther concealed her kindred in hard times; but God's people cannot. Moses must rescue his beaten brother out of the hand of the Egyptian, though he venture his life by it.

{a} Bishop Morton.

{b} Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester, being wounded and overthrown by the Duke of Alencon at the battle of Agincourt, was rescued by his brother, King Henry V, who, bestriding him, delivered him from danger, &c.—Speed.

Ver. 18. A man void of understanding striketh hands.] Of the folly and misery of rash suretyship, see #Pr 6:1-3 {See Trapp on "Pr 6:1"} {See Trapp on "Pr 6:2"} {See Trapp on "Pr 6:3"}

In the presence of his friend.] Or, Before his friend; that is, before his friend do it, who was better able, and more obliged. Thus like a woodcock he puts his neck into the gin, his foot into the stocks as the drunkard; and then hath time enough to come in with the fool's "Had I wist," and to say, as the lion did when taken in the toil, Si praescivissem: If I had foreseen this. But why should there he among men any such Epimetheus, such a post master, an after wit?

Ver. 19. He loveth transgression that loveth strife.] It is strange that any should love strife, that hellhag, ἐρις ἐρουντις. And yet some, like trouts, love to swim against the stream; like salamanders, they live in the fire of contention; like Phocion, they hold it a goodly thing to dissent from others; like Pyrrhus, they are a "people that delight in war"; {#Ps 68:30} like David's enemies, "I am for peace," saith he (that was his motto), "but when I speak of it, they are for war." {#Ps 120:7} These unquiet spirits are of the devil doubtless, that turbulent creature, that troubler of God's Israel. He knows that "where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work," {#Jas 3:16} and that he loveth transgression that loveth strife; he taketh pleasure in sin, which is the cause of his unquietness. Good, therefore, and worthy of all acceptance is the council of the Psalmist, "Cease from anger, and forsake wrath; fret not thyself in any wise to do evil." {#Ps 37:8} He that "frets" much will soon be drawn to "do evil." "An angry man stirs up strife, and a furious man aboundeth in transgression" {#Pr 29:22} Hence our Saviour bids "have salt within yourselves"; that is, mortify your corruptions, and then

"be at peace one with another." {#Mr 9:50} Hence also St James saith, that "the wisdom from above is first pure, and then peaceable." And St Paul oft joins faith and love together; there can be no true love to, and good agreement with men, till the heart be purified by faith from the love of sin.

And he that exalteth his gate seeketh destruction.] Eventually he seeketh it, though not intentionally. "That exalteth his gate," that is, his whole house—a part being put for the whole—which he that builds too sumptuously is in the ready road to beggary; the beggar will soon have him by the back, as they say; quaerit rupturam, he will shortly break. Others read the words thus, "And he enlargeth his gate that seeketh a breach"; that is, say they, he that picketh quarrels, and is contentious, setteth open a wide door to let in many mischiefs.

Ver. 20. He that hath a froward heart findeth no good.] Who this is that hath a froward heart and a perverse tongue, Solomon shows, {#Pr 11:20} viz., the hypocrite, the "double minded man," {#Jas 1:8} that hath "a heart and a heart," {#Ps 12:2, mart.} one for God, and another for him that would have it, as that desperate Neapolitan boasted of himself. And as he hath two hearts, so two tongues too, {#1Ti 3:8} wherewith he can both "bless and curse," talk religiously or profanely, according to the company, {#Jas 3:10,11} speak Hebrew and Ashdod, the language of Canaan and the language of hell, like those in an island beyond Arabia, of whom Diodorus Siculus {a} saith, that they have cloven tongues, so that therewith they can alter their speech at their pleasure, and perfectly speak to two persons, and to two purposes, at once. Now how can these monsters of men expect either to find good, or not to fall into mischief? How can they escape the damnation of hell, whereof hypocrites are the chief inhabitants, yea, the freeholders, as it were? for other sinners shall have "their part" {μερος, #Mt 24:51} with the devil and hypocrites.

Ver. 21. He that begetteth a fool, doeth it to his sorrow.] Solomon might speak this by experience, and wish, as Augustus did, utinam caelebs vixissem, aut orbis periissem. Oh that I had either lived a bachelor or died childless! To "bring forth children to the murderer," {#Ho 9:13} children to the devil, that old manslayer; oh, what a grief is this to a pious parent! how much better were a "miscarrying womb, and dry breasts!" What heavy moan made David for his Absalom, dying in his sin! How doth many a miserable mother weep and warble out that mournful ditty of hers in Plutarch over her deceased children, Quo pueri estis profecti? Poor souls, what is become of you!

And the father of a fool hath no joy.] No more than Oedipus had, who cursed his children when he died, and breathed out his last with “Per coacervatos pereat domus impia luctus.”

No more than William the Conqueror had in his ungracious children, or Henry II, who, finding that his sons had conspired against him with the king of France, fell into a grievous passion, cursing both his sons, and the day wherein himself was born; and in that distemperature departed the world, which himself had so oft distempered. {a}

{a} Daniel, fol. 112.

Ver. 22. A merry heart doeth good, like a medicine.] Ευεκτηειν ποιει: so the Septuagint renders it. And, indeed, it is ευθυμια~ that makes ευεξια. All true mirth is from rectitude of the mind, from a right frame of soul. When faith hath once healed the conscience, and grace hath hushed the affections, and composed all within, so that there is a Sabbath of spirit, and a blessed tranquillity lodged in the soul; then the body also is vigorous and vigetous, for the most part in very good plight and healthful constitution, which makes man's life very comfortable. For, si vales, bene est. If you are well it is good. And λωστον υγιαίνειν. "Go thy ways," saith Solomon to him that hath a good conscience, "eat thy bread with joy, and drink thy wine with a merry heart, since God accepteth thy works. Let thy garments be always white, and let thy head lack no ointment. Live joyfully with the wife of thy youth," {#Ec 9:7-9} &c., be lightsome in thy clothes, merry at thy meats, painful in thy calling, &c., these do notably conduce to and help on health. They that in the use of lawful means "wait upon the Lord, shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; they shall walk and not faint." {#Isa 40:31}

But a broken spirit drieth the bones.] By drinking up the marrow and radical moisture. See this in David, {#Ps 32:3} whose "bones waxed old," whose "moisture," or chief sap, "was turned into the drought of summer"; his "heart was smitten and withered like grass; his days consumed like smoke"; {#Ps 102:3,4} his whole body was "like a bottle in the smoke"; {#Ps 119:83} he was a very bag of bones, and those also "burnt as a hearth." {#Ps 102:3} Aristotle, in his book of long and short life, assigns grief for a chief cause of death. And the apostle saith as much in #2Co 7:10. {See Trapp on "2Co 7:10"} {See Trapp on "Pr 12:25"} All immoderations, saith Hippocrates, are great enemies to health.

Ver. 23. A wicked man taketh a gift out of the bosom,] i.e., Closely and covertly, as if neither God nor man should see him. The words may be also read thus: 'He,'—that is, the corrupt judge—'taketh a gift out of the wicked man's bosom'; there being never a better of them, as Solomon intimateth by this ambiguous expression. Rain is good, and ground is good, yet ex eorum coniunctione fit lutum. {a} So giving is kind, and taking is courteous; yet the mixing of them makes the smooth paths of justice foul and uneven.

Ver. 24. Wisdom is before him that hath understanding.] The face of an understanding man is wisdom; his very face speaks him wise; the government of his eyes, especially, is an argument of his gravity. {a} His eyes are in his head, {#Ec 2:4} he scattereth away all evil with them. {#Pr 20:8} He hath oculum irretortum, as Job had; {#Job 31:1} and Joseph had oculum in metam (which was Ludovica's Vives's motto), his eye fixed upon the mark; he looks right on; {#Pr 4:25} he goes through the world as one in a deep muse, or as one that hath haste of some special business, and therefore overlooks everything besides it. He hath learned out of #Isa 33:14,15, that he shall see God to his comfort, must not only "shake his hands from taking gifts," as in the former verse, but also "stop his ears from hearing of blood," and "shut his eyes from seeing of evil." Vitiis nobis in animum per oculos est via, saith Quintilian; {b} sin entereth into the little world through these windows, and death by sin, as fools find too oft by casting their eyes into the corners of the earth, suffering them to rove at random without restraint, by irregular glancing and inordinate gazing. In Hebrew the same word signifies both an eye and a fountain, to show, saith one, that from the eye, as from a fountain, flows both sin and misery. 'Shut up, therefore, the five windows, that the house may be full of light,' as the Arabian proverb hath it. We read of one, that making a journey to Rome, and knowing it to be a corrupt place, and a corrupter of others, entered the city with eyes close shut; neither would he see anything there but St Peter's church, which he had a great mind to go visit. Alipius in Augustine being importuned to go to those bloody spectacles of the gladiatory combats, resolved to wink, and did; but hearing an outcry of applause, looked abroad, and was so taken with the sport, that he became an ordinary frequenter of those cruel meetings.

Ver. 25. A foolish son is a grief to his father.] {See Trapp on "Pr 10:1"} {See Trapp on "Pr 15:20"}

Ver. 26. Also to punish the just is not good.] The righteous are to be cherished and protected, as those that uphold the state. Semen sanctum statumen terrae {#Isa 6:13} What Aeneas Sylvius said of learning, may be more properly said of righteousness, "Vulgar men should esteem it as silver, noble men as gold, princes prize it as pearls," but they that punish it, as persecutors do, shall be punished to purpose, when "God makes inquisition for blood." {#Ps 9:12}

Nor to strike princes for equity.] Righteous men are "princes in all lands," {#Ps 45:16} yea, they are kings in righteousness, as Melchisedec. Indeed they are somewhat obscure kings, as he was, but kings they appear to be, by comparing #Mt 13:17 Lu 10:24; "many righteous," saith Matthew "many kings," saith Luke. Now, to strike a king is high treason; and although princes have put up blows, as when one struck our Henry VI, he only said, 'Forsooth you do wrong yourself more than me, to strike the Lord's anointed.' Another, also, that had drawn blood of him when he was in prison, he freely pardoned when he was restored to his kingdom, saying, 'Alas, poor soul, he struck me more to win favour with others, than of any evil will he bare me.' {a} So when one came to cry Cato mercy, for having struck him once in the bath, he answered, that he remembered no such matter. Likewise, Lycurgus is famous for pardoning him that smote out one of his eyes; yet he that shall touch the apple of God's eye—as every one doth that wrongeth a righteous man, for equity especially—shall have God for a revenger. And "it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." {#Heb 10:31}

{a} Daniel's Hist., 198.

Ver. 27. He that hath knowledge spareth his words.] Taciturnity is a sign of solidity, and talkativeness of worthlessness. Epaminondas is worthily praised for this, saith Plutarch, that as no man knew more than he, so none spake less than he did.

And a man of understanding is of an excellent spirit.] Or, Of a cool spirit. The deepest seas are the most calm.

“Where river smoothest runs, deep is the ford,
The dial stirs, yet none perceives it move,” &c.

Ver. 28. Even a fool when he holdeth his peace, &c.]

“πας τις απαιδευτος φρονιμωτατος εστι σιωπων.”

"Oh that you would altogether hold your peace, and it should be your wisdom," saith Job to his friends that spake much, but said little {#Job 13:5}

Ver. 1. Through desire a man having separated himself, &c.] Here the reading that is in margin, methinks, is the better: "He that separates himself"—either from his friend, as the old interpreter makes the sense, or from anything else that he hath formerly followed—"seeketh according to his desire"—seeketh to satisfy his own heart's lust, and to compass what he coveteth—"and intermeddleth with every business"—stirs very busily in everything that is done, and leaves no stone unrolled, no course unattempted, whereby he may effect his design, and come off with his credit. The practice hereof we may observe in the Pharisees, those old Separatists, who slandered all that our Saviour did; and in their pertinacious malice, never left till they had slain him for a deceiver of the people. So the Donatists separated, and affirmed that there were no true churches but theirs. They were also divided among themselves, in minutula frustula, into small sucking congregations, as Augustine saith, whose arguments not being able to confute, they reproached him for his former life, when he was a Manichee. In like sort dealt the Anabaptists with Luther, whom they held more pestiferous than the pope. Muncer wrote a book against him, dedicating it to the illustrious Prince Christ, and rails at him, as one that wanted the spirit of revelation, and savoured only the things of the flesh. {a} Our Separatists, the better sort of them, have said, that the differences are so small between themselves and us, that they can for a need come to our churches, partake in the sacraments, and hold communion with us as the churches of Christ. {b} But if so, how then dare they separate, and intermeddle with every business, that they may have some spacious pretence for it? Turks wonder at English for cutting or picking their clothes, counting them little better than mad to make holes in whole cloth, which time of itself would tear too soon. Men may do pro libitu -as some render "through desire" in this text—as they will with their own; but woe he to those that cut and rend the seamless coat of Christ with causeless separations.

{b} Apologet. Narrat., p. 6.

Ver. 2. A fool hath no delight in understanding, but that his heart may discover itself.] Or, In discovering his own heart—i.e., in following his own humour, against all that can be said to the contrary. He is wilful, and so stands as a stake in the midst of a stream; lets all pass by him, but he stands where he was. It is easier to deal with twenty men's reasons, than with one man's will. He hath made his conclusion, you may as soon remove a rock as him. Quicquid vult valde vult, quicquid vult sanctum est. His will is his rule, and when a man hath said and done his utmost to convince him by force of reason, he shall find him like a mill horse, just there in the evening where he began his morning circuit. Some think that Solomon here taxeth, not so much the wilfulness, as the vain gloriousness and ostentation of fond fools, who seem to delight in wisdom; but it is only for a name, and that they may, by setting their good parts a-sunning, gain the applause and admiration of the world, for men singularly qualified. But why should any affect the vain praises of men, and not rest content with the euge of a good conscience? The blessed Virgin was troubled, when truly praised of an angel. Moses had more glory by his veil than by his face. Christ, beside the veil of his humanity, says, "See you tell no man," &c.

Ver. 3. When the wicked cometh, then cometh contempt.] It comes into the world with him, so the Hebrew doctors expound it. He is born a contemner of God, of his people, and of his ordinances, being "vainly puffed up by his fleshly mind," {#Col 2:18} and having a base esteem of others, in comparison of himself. Thus "vain man would be wise," yea, the only wise, "though man be born like a wild ass's colt," {#Job 11:12} and so he could not but confess, would he but consult a while with himself. But he doth with himself as some people do by dogs and monkeys, which they know to be paltry carrion beasts, and yet they set great store by them, and make precious account of them, merely for their mind's sake.

And with ignominy, reproach.] These two he shall be sure of, according to that of #1Sa 2:30:—"They that despise me shall be lightly esteemed"; and #Pr 3:34, "Surely God scorneth the scorers"; {See Trapp on "Pr 3:34"} he pays them in their own coin, overshoots them in their own bow, makes them to meet with such as will mete them out their own measure, and for their contempt repay them with ignominy, "reproach."

Ver. 4. The words of a man's mouth are as deep waters.] Fitly are the words of the wise resembled to waters, saith one, inasmuch as they both wash the minds of the hearers, that the foulness of sin remain not therein, and water them in such sort that they faint not, nor wither by a drought and burning desire of heavenly doctrine. Now these words of the wise are of two sorts—some are as deep waters, and cannot easily be fathomed, as Samson's riddles and Solomon's apothegms, so very much admired by the Queen of Sheba, #2Ch 9:1-9; some again are plain, and flow so easily, as a flowing brook, that the simplest may understand them. The same may be affirmed of the holy Scriptures—those "words of the wise and their dark sayings." {#Pr 1:6} The Scriptures, saith one, are both text and gloss; one place opens another; one place hath that plainly, that another delivers darkly. The Rabbis have one saying, That there is a mountain of sense hangs upon every apex of the word of God; and another they have, Nulla est obiectio in lege quae non habet solutionem in latere -i.e., There is not any doubt in the law but may be resolved by some other text. Parallel scriptures cast a mutual light one upon another; and is there not a thin veil laid over the word, which is more rarefied by reading, and at last wholly worn away? A friend, says Chrysostom, that is acquainted with his friend, will get out the meaning of a letter or phrase which another could not that is a stranger; so it is in the Scripture.

Ver. 5. It is not good to accept the person of the wicked.] Indeed, it is so bad as can hardly be expressed, and is therefore here set forth by the figure liptote; which is, say grammarians, cum minus dicitur; plus intelligitur; when little is said, but more is understood. {a} This accepting of persons, declared here to be so very naught, is either in passing sentence of judgment, of which see #Le 19:15; {See Trapp on "Le 19:15"} or otherwise in common conversation, of which read #Jas 2:1-4. {See Trapp on "Jas 2:1"} {See Trapp on "Jas 2:2"} {See Trapp on "Jas 2:3"} {See Trapp on "Jas 2:4"}

To overthrow the righteous in judgment.] Which is the easilier done, because they cannot quarrel and contend as the wicked can. "The fool's lips enter into contentions"; {#Pr 18:6} they have an art in it; they are dexterous at it; it is their trade and study to brabble and wrangle, to set a good face upon an ill matter, to rail and out brave, to set men further at odds, and to embitter their spirits one against another. This is a trick they have learned of their father the devil; and this their graceless speeches do as directly tend unto, as if they had legs to go into contention.

Ver. 6. A fool's lips enter into contention.] {See Trapp on "Pr 18:5"}

And his mouth calleth for strokes] {a} By his desire upon others; but by desert and effect upon himself.

Ver. 7. A fool's mouth is his destruction.] #Pr 10:14,12:13 13:3 {See Trapp on "Pr 10:14"} {See Trapp on "Pr 12:13"} {See Trapp on "Pr 13:3"}

Ver. 8. The words of a talebearer are as wounds.] {See Trapp on "Pr 12:18"} He that takes away a man's good name kills him alive, and ruins him and his posterity; being herein worse than Cain, for he, in killing his brother, made him live for ever, and eternalised his name. Some read, "Are as the words of the wounded": they seem to speak out of wounded, troubled hearts, and then their words go down into the belly—they go glib down, pass without the least questioning.

Ver. 9. He also that is slothful in his work.] As he must needs be that goes peddling about with tales, and buzzing evil reports into the ears of those that will hear them. See #1Ti 5:3, with the note there. Lata negligentia dolus est, saith the civilian.

Is brother to him that is a great waster.] Est frater Domini disperditionis, will as certainly come to poverty as the greatest waster of good. A man dies no less surely, though not so suddenly, of a consumption than of an apoplexy.

Ver. 10. The name of the Lord is a strong tower.] God's attributes are called "His name"; because by them he is known as a man is, by his name. These are said to be Arx roboris, a tower so deep, no pioneer can undermine it; so thick, no cannon can pierce it; so high, no ladder can scale it; -"a rock," an "old rock"; {#Isa 26:4} yea, "munitions of rocks"; {#Isa 33:16} rocks within rocks; a tower impregnable—inexpugnable. {a}

The righteous runneth to it.] All creatures run to their refuges when hunted, {#Pr 30:26 Ps 104:18 Pr 18:11 Da 4:10,11 Jud 9:50,51} which yet fail them many times, as the tower of Shechem did; {#Jud 9:46-49} as the stronghold of Sion did those Jebusites that scorned David and his host—as conceited, that the very lame and blind, those most shiftless creatures, might there easily hold it out against him. {#2Sa 5:6,7} The hunted hare runs to her form, but that cannot secure her; the traveller to his bush, but that, when once wet through, does him more hurt than good; as the physicians did the haemorrhoids. {#Mr 5:26} But as she, when she had spent all before, came to Christ and was cured, so the righteous being poor and destitute of wealth—which is the rich man's strong city {#Pr 18:11} -and of all human helps (God loveth to relieve such as are forsaken of their hopes), runs to this strong refuge, and is not only safe, but 'set aloft,' as the word signifies, out of the gunshot. {b} None can pull them out of his hands. Run therefore to God, by praying and not fainting. {#Lu 18:1} This is the best policy for security. That which is said of wily persons that are full of fetches, of windings, and of turnings in the world, that such will never break, is much more true of a righteous, praying Christian. He hath but one grand policy to secure him in all dangers; and that is, to run to God.

{a} That cannot be taken by assault or storm; incapable of being overcome, subdued, or overthrown by force; impregnable, invincible.

{b} εκ βελους, John x. Sic.—Query? #Joh 10:4, τα ιδια προβατα εκβαλη.

Ver. 11. The rich man's wealth is his strong city.] It is hard to have wealth, and not to trust to it. {#Mt 19:24 1Ti 5:17; see the notes there} But wealth was never true to those that trusted it; there is an utter uncertainty, {#1Ti 5:17} a nonentity, {#Pr 23:5,6} an impotence to help in the evil day, {#Zep 1:18} an impossibility to stretch to eternity, unless it be to destroy the owner for ever. {#Ec 5:13 Jas 5:1,2} A wicked man beaten out of earthly comforts is as a naked man in a storm, and an unarmed man in the field, or a ship tossed in the sea without an anchor, which presently dasheth upon rocks, or falleth upon quicksands. Totam igitur anchoram sacram figamus in Deo, qui solus nec potest, nec vult fallere; Cast we anchor therefore upon God, who neither can nor will fail us, saith a learned interpreter.

And as an high wall in his own conceit.] It is "conceit" only that sets a price upon these outward comforts, and bears men in hand, that thereby, as by a high wall, they shall not only be secured, but secreted in their lewdness, from the eyes of God and men. But what said the oracle to bloody Phocas? Though thou set up thy walls as high as heaven, sin lies at the foundation, and all will out—yea, all be overturned. {a}

Ver. 12. Before destruction the heart of a man is haughty.] Creature confidence and high mindedness are the Dives's richman's diseases, and go therefore yoked together, as here; so in #1Ti 6:17—"Charge the rich that they be not high minded, nor trust to uncertain riches." Magna cognatio ut rei sic nominis divitiis, et vitiis; Wealth and wickedness are of near alliance, and are not far from destruction, or 'breaking to shivers,' as the word signifies. So bladder like is the soul, that, filled with earthly vanities, though but wind, it grows great and swells in pride; but pricked with the least pin of divine justice, it shrinks and shrivels to nothing. {#Pr 16:18 15:33 12:2} {See Trapp on "Pr 16:18"} {See Trapp on "Pr 15:33"} {See Trapp on "Pr 12:2"}

Ver. 13. He that answereth a matter before he heareth it.] Solomon had said before, that "even a fool, when he holdeth his peace, is counted wise," {#Pr 17:28} and in many passages of this blessed book he sets forth that a great part of man's wisdom is shown in his words. To be too forward to answer, before the question be fully propounded or expounded is rash, if not proud boldness, and reflects shame upon them that do it. Likewise to be "slow to hear, swift to speak,"—hath not God given us two ears, and one tongue, to teach us better?—to precipitate a censure, or pass sentence before both parties be heard, to speak evil of the things that a man knows not, or weakly and insufficiently to defend that which is good against a subtle adversary; Augustine professeth this was it that hardened him; and made him to triumph in his former manicheism, that he met with feeble opponents, and such as his nimble wit was easily able to overturn. Oecolampadius said of Carolostadius, that he had a good cause, but wanted shoulders to support it.

Ver. 14. The spirit of a man will sustain his infirmity.] Some sorry shift a man may make to bustle with, and to rub through other ailments and aggrievances, disasters or diseases, sores or sicknesses of the body—as the word here properly importeth. Let a man be sound within, and, upon good terms, at peace with his own conscience, and he will bravely bear unspeakable pressures. {#2Co 1:9,12} Paul was merry under his load, because his heart was cheery in the Lord; as an old beaten porter to the cross, maluit tolerare quam deplorare, his "stroke was heavier than his groaning," as Job. {#Job 23:2} Alexander Aphrodisius {a} gives a reason why porters under their burdens go singing; because the mind, being delighted with the sweetness of the music, the body feels the weight so much the less. Their shoulders, while sound, will bear great luggage; but let a bone be broken, or but the skin rubbed up and raw, the lightest load will be grievous. A little water in a leaden vessel is heavy; so is a little trouble in an evil conscience.

But a wounded spirit who can bear?] q.d., It is a burden importable, able to quail the courage, and crush the shoulders of the hugest Hercules, of the mightiest man upon earth; who can bear it?

The body cannot; much less a diseased body. And if the soul be at unrest, the body cannot but co-suffer. Hence Job preferred, and Judas chose strangling before it. Bilney and Bainham, after they had abjured, felt such a hell in their consciences, till they had openly professed their sorrow for that sin, as they would not feel again for all the world's good. {b} Daniel chose rather to be cast into the den of lions, than to carry about a lion in his bosom, an enraged conscience. The primitive Christians cried likewise, Ad Leones potius quam ad Lenones adiaciamur. To the lions is more preferable than let us be thrown near the lions. What a terror to himself was our Richard III, after the cruel murder of his two innocent nephews; and Charles IX of France, after that bloody massacre? He could never endure to be awakened in the night without music, or some like diversion. But, alas! if the soul itself be out of tune, these outward things do no more good than a fair shoe to a gouty foot, or a silken stocking to a broken leg.

Ver. 15. The heart of the prudent getteth knowledge.] Such as can keep the bird singing in their bosom, and are free from inward perturbations, these by meditating on the good word of God, and by listening to the wholesome words of others, get and gather knowledge; that is, great store of all sorts of knowledge, that which is divine especially, and tends to the perfecting of the soul.

Ver. 16. A man's gift maketh room for him.] This Jacob {#Ge 43:11} knew well, and therefore bade his sons take a present for the governor of the land, though it were but of every good thing a little. So Saul, {#Isa 9:7} when to go to the man of God to inquire about the asses; "But behold, said he to his servant, if we go, what shall we bring the man? what have we?" {See Trapp on "Pr 17:8"} {See Trapp on "Pr 17:23"}

Ver. 17. He that is first in his own cause seemeth just.] The first tale is good till the second be heard. How fair a tale told Tertullus for the Jews against Paul, till the apostle came after him, and unstarched the orator's trim speech? Judges had need to get and keep that οὐκ ἀδιαβληκτον that Alexander boasted of, to keep one ear clear and unprejudiced, for the defendant; for they shall meet with such active actors or pleaders, as can make Quid libet ex quo libet, candida de nigris et de candentibus atra, as can draw a fair glove upon a foul hand, blanch and smooth over the worst causes with goodly pretences, as Ziba did against Mephibosheth, Potiphar's wife against Joseph, &c. He must therefore ἀφοτιν ἀκροασθαι, as the Athenian judges were sworn to do, "hear both sides indifferently": and as that Levite said, {#Jud 19:28-30} Consider, consult, and then give sentence, doing nothing by partiality or prejudice.

Ver. 18. The lot causeth contentions to cease.] As it did in #Jos 14:2, where it is remarkable, that Joshua, that lotted out the land, left none to himself; and that portion that was given him, and he content with it, was but a mean one in the barren mountains. So again in #Ac 1:26, where it is remarkable, that this Joseph, called Barsabas, seeing it was not God's mind by lot to make choice of him now to succeed Judas in the apostleship, was content with a lower condition; therefore, afterwards God called him to that high and honourable office of an apostle, if at least this Joseph Barsabas, were the same with that Joseph Barnabas in #Ac 4:36, as the Centurists are of opinion. {See Trapp on "Pr 16:23"}

Ver. 19. A brother offended is harder to be won, &c.] Whether it be a brother by race, place, or grace; Corruptio optimi pessima: those oft that loved most dearly, if once the devil cast his club between them, they hate most deadly. See this exemplified in Cain and Abel, Esau and Jacob, Polynices and Eteocles, Romulus and Remus, Caracalla and Geta, the two sons of Severus the Emperor, Robert and Rufus, the sons of William the Conqueror, the civil dissensions between the houses of York and Lancaster, wherein were slain eighty princes of the blood royal, {a} the dissensions between England and Scotland, which consumed more Christian blood, wrought more spoil and destruction, and continued longer than ever quarrel we read of did between any two people of the world. As for brethren by profession, and that of the true religion too, among Protestants, you shall meet with many divisions, and those prosecuted with a great deal of bitterness. Nullum bellum citius exardescit, nullum deflagrat tardius quam Theologicum. {b} No war breaks out sooner, or lasts longer, than that among divines, or as that about the sacrament; a sacrament of love, a communion, and yet the occasion, by accident, of much dissension. This made holy Strigelius weary of his life. Cupio ex hac vita migrare ob duas causas, saith he. For two causes chiefly do I desire to depart out of this world; First, That I may enjoy the sweet sight of the Son of God, and the Church above; Next, Ut liberer ab immanibus et implicabilibus odiis Theologorum, that I may be delivered from the cruel and implacable hatreds of dissenting divines. {c} There is a most sad story of those that fled to Frankfort hence in Queen Mary's time; yet among them there were such grievous breaches, that they sought the lives one of another; great care therefore must be taken that brethren break not friendship: or if they do, that they reunite in peace again as soon as is possible.

Ver. 20. A man's belly shall be satisfied with the fruit of his mouth.] {See Trapp on "Pr 12:14"} {See Trapp on "Pr 13:2"}

And with the increase of his lips shall he be satisfied.] It is worthy the observing, saith an interpreter here, that Solomon doth vary his words: he speaketh sometimes of the "mouth," sometimes of the "lips," sometimes of the "tongue," as #Pr 18:21, to show that all the instruments or means of speech shall have, as it were, their proper and just reward.

Ver. 21. Death and life are in the power of the tongue.] That best and worst member of the body, as Bias told Amasis, king of Egypt; {a} an "unruly evil set on fire of hell," saith St James of an ill tongue—as contrarily a good one is fired with zeal by the Holy Ghost. {#Ac 2:2-4} Fire, we know, is a good servant, but an ill lord; if it get above us once, there is no dealing with it. Hence it is, that as the careful householder lays a strict charge upon his children and servants to look well to their fire, so doth Solomon give often warning to have a care of the tongue. "For by thy words shalt thou be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned," saith a greater than Solomon. {#Mt 12:37} The Arabians have a proverb, 'Take heed that thy tongue cut not thy throat.' {b} A word and a pest grow upon the same root in the Hebrew; to shew, saith one, that an evil tongue hath the pestilence in it. It spits up and down the room, as the serpent Dipsas, or as a candle, whose tallow is mixed with brine.

Ver. 22. Whoso findeth a wife, &c.] Whoso, after much seeking, by prayer to God, and his own utmost industry—as {#Ge 24:1-9} Isaac went forth to pray, and his servant went forth to seek—findeth a fit and faithful yoke fellow—called here "a wife," that is, "a good wife," as #Ec 7:1. A name is put for a good name, and as #Isa 1:18, wool is put for white wool: every married woman is not a wife; a bad woman is but the shadow of a wife; {a} according to Lamech's second wife's name, Zillah. "He findeth a good thing," a singular blessing, and such as should draw from him abundance of thanks. He may well say, as they were wont to do at Athens when they were married, εφ' ὅτου κακόν, εὖρον ἀμεινον. I have left a worse condition, and found a better. {b} If any be the worse for a wife, for a good wife especially, it is from his own corrupt heart, that, like a toad, turns all it takes into rank poison.

Ver. 23. The poor useth entreaties.] Speaks supplications; comes in a submissive manner; uses a low language, as a broken man. How much more should we do so to God? Quanta cum reverentia, quanto timore, quanta ad Deum humilitate aecedere debet e palude sua procedens et repens vilis ranuncula, { a } creeping into his presence with utmost humility and reverence.

{a} Bernard.

Ver. 24. A man that hath friends, &c.] For Cos amoris amor, Love is the whetstone, or loadstone rather, of love. Marce, ut ameris, ama. {a} Love is a coin that must be returned in kind.

And there is a friend, &c.] Such a friend is as one's own soul, {#De 13:6} a piece so just cut for him, as answers him rightly in every joint. This is a rare happiness.

{a} Martial.

Chapter 19

Ver. 1. Better is the poor that walketh in his integrity.] That poor but honest man, that speaks supplications, {#Pr 18:23} but abuseth not his lips to lewd and loose language, is better than that rich fool that answers him roughly and robustly—as Nabal did David's messengers—and otherwise speaks ill, thinks worse. We usually call a poor man a "poor soul"; a poor soul may be a rich Christian, and a rich man may have a poor soul.

Ver. 2. Also, that the soul be without knowledge, it is not good.] An ignorant man is a naughty man. Ignorat sane improbus omnis, saith Aristotle, {a} Every bad minded man is in the dark; neither can any good come into the heart, but it must pass through the understanding; and the difference of stature in Christianity grows from different degrees of knowledge. The Romans were "full of knowledge," and therefore "full of goodness." {#Ro 15:14}

And he that hasteth with his feet sinneth.] Or, Wandereth out of the way. As he that is out of his way, the faster he rides or runs, the farther he is out; so is blind zeal. It is like mettle in a blind horse, that, running upon the rocks and precipices, first breaks his hoofs, and then his neck; or like the devil in the possessed, that cast him sometimes into the fire and sometimes into the water.

Ver. 3. The foolishness of a man perverteth his way.] So that all goes cross with him, and God "walks contrary to him," {#Le 26:21} as it befell our King John, Queen Mary, and Henry IV of France. King John saw and acknowledged it in these words, Postquam, ut dixi, Deo reconciliatus, me ac mea regna (proh dolor!) Romanae subieci ecclesiae, nulla mihi prospera, sed omnia contraria advenerunt, {a} Ever since I submitted to the see of Rome, nothing hath prospered with me.

And his heart frets against the Lord.] As the cause of his calamity. Birds of prey, that have been long kept in the dark, when they get abroad, are out of measure, raging and ravenous: so are ignorant spirits; they let fly on all hands, when in durance especially, and spare not to spit their venom in the very face of God, as did Pharaoh, when that thick darkness was upon him; the king of Israel that said, "Behold this evil is of the Lord, and what should I wait for the Lord any longer?" {#2Ki 6:33} Mohammed, the first emperor of the Turks, being wonderfully grieved with the dishonour and loss he had received at the last assault of Scodra, in his choler and frantic rage, most horribly blasphemed against God, saying, that it were enough for him to have care of heavenly things, and not to cross him in his worldly actions. {b}

{a} Mat. Paris.

{b} Turk. Hist., fol. 423.

Ver. 4. Wealth maketh many friends.] Res amicos invenit, saith he in Plautus. Wine, saith Athenaeus, hath ελκοστικον τι προς φιλιαν, a force in it to make friendship. Wealth we are sure hath; but as that is no sound love that comes out of cups—it is but ollaris amicitia; friendship of the cup, so neither are they to be trusted that wealth wins to us. Hired friends are seldom either satisfied or sure, but, like the ravens in Arabia, that, full gorged, have a tunable, sweet record, but empty, screech horribly. Flies soon fasten upon honey, and vermin will haunt a house where food is to be gotten.

But the poor is separated from his neighbour.] Who either turns from him as a stranger, or against him as an enemy. Nero being condemned to die, and not finding any one that would fall upon him and despatch him, cried out, Itane, nec amicum, nec inimicum habeo? Have I now neither friend nor foe that will do this for me?

Ver. 5. A false witness shall not be unpunished.] Many poor people care not to lend their rich friend an oath at a need; and many rich, though they think ill of pillory perjury, yet they make little conscience of a merry lie. Neither of these shall pass unpunished. And this sentence may be to them, as those knuckles of a man's hand were to Belshazzar, to write them their destiny, or as Daniel was to him, to read it unto them.

Ver. 6. Many will entreat the favour of the prince.] Yea, lie at his feet, and lick up his spittle, not being loyal in love for conscience, but submissive in show for commodity. Every man will be thrusting in where anything is to be gotten. The poets make Litae, or Petitions, to be the daughters of Jupiter, and ever about him; to signify, saith the mythologist, that princes and great ones are seldom without suppliants and suitors. {a}

And every man is a friend, &c.] {See Trapp on "Pr 17:8"}

Ver. 7. All the brethren of the poor do hate him.] How much more then his hired friends? These are like crows to a dead carcase, which if they flock to it, it is not to defend but to devour it; and no sooner have they bared the bones, but they are gone. {See Trapp on "Pr 14:20"}

Ver. 8. He that getteth wisdom.] Heb., He that getteth, or possesseth a heart; for we are born brutes, and are compared to "the horse and mule that have no understanding." {#Ps 32:9} Hearts we have all, but our "foolish hearts are darkened," {#Ro 1:21} yea, "a deceived heart hath turned us aside that we cannot deliver our souls, nor say, Is there not a lie in my right hand?" {#Isa 44:20} Well may the rich have many friends, but not many hearts: for without wisdom no man can love his own soul, much less can he truly love another. Therefore, by how much better it is for a man to love his own soul as he ought than to be beloved of others for his gifts, by so much it is better to get wisdom than to get wealth.

Ver. 9. A false witness, &c.] See #Pr 19:5.

Ver. 10. Delight is not seemly for a fool.] Dignitas in indigno est ornamentum in luto, saith Salvian. Health, wealth, nobility, beauty, honour, and the like, are ill bestowed upon a wicked man, who will abuse them all to his own and other men's undoing. The wisest have enough to do to manage these outward good things. What may we then expect from fools? {a} {See Trapp on "Pr 14:24"} If they make wise men fools, they will make fools mad men.

Much less for a servant to rule over princes.] As Abimelech, that bramble, did over the cedars of Lebanon; as Tobiah, the servant, the Ammonite, sought to do over Nehemiah and the princes of Judah; as the servants of the Emperor Claudius did over him and the whole State, which occasioned that verse to be pronounced on the theatre

As Becket and Wolsey affected to do in their generations; and as the bridge maker of Rome, who styles himself servus servorum, a servant of servants, and yet acts as a dominus dominantium et rex regum, lord of lords, and king of kings. Round about the Pope's coins are these words stamped, "That nation that will not serve thee shall be rooted out." His janissaries, also, the Jesuits, are as a most agile sharp sword, whose blade is sheathed at pleasure in the bowels of every commonwealth, but the handle reacheth to Rome and Spain. This made that most valiant and puissant prince, Henry IV of France, when he was persuaded by one to banish the Jesuits, say, "Give me then security for my life."

Ver. 11. The discretion of a man deferreth his anger.] Plato, when angry with his servant, would not correct him at that time, but let him go with Vapulares nisi irascerer, I am too angry to beat thee. A young man that had been brought up with Plato, returning home to his father's house, and hearing his father chide and exclaim furiously, said, "I have never seen the like with Plato." {a} {See Trapp on "Pr 14:29"} Anger, by being deferred, may be diminished, so it be not concealed for a further opportunity of mischief, as Absalom's towards Amnon, and Tiberius's, who, the more he meditated revenge, the more did time and delay sharpen it. And the farther off he threatened, the heavier the stroke fell. {b}

And it is his glory to pass over a transgression.] Heb., To pass by it, as not knowing of it, or not troubled at it. Thus David was deaf to the railings of his enemies, and "as a dumb man, in whose mouth are no reproofs." Socrates, when he was publicly abused in a comedy, laughed at it. Polyagrus vero seipsum strangulabat, saith Aelian; but Polyagrus, not able to bear such an indignity, hanged himself. Augustus likewise did but laugh at the satires and buffooneries which they had published against him; and when the senate would have further informed him of them, he would not hear them. The manlier any man is, the milder and readier to pass by an offence. This shows that he hath much of God in him (if he do it from a right principle), who bears with our evil manners, {c} and forgives our trespasses, beseeching us to be reconciled. When any provoke us, we use to say, We will be even with him. There is a way whereby we may be not even with him, but above him, and that is, forgive him. Wink at small faults especially. Qui nescit dissimulare, nescit vivere.

Ver. 12. The king's wrath is as the roaring of a lion.] Heb., Of a young lion, which, being in his prime, roars more terribly; sets up his roar with such a force that he amazeth the other creatures whom he hunteth, so that, though far swifter of foot than the lion, they have no power to fly from him. {a} Kings have long hands, strong clutches. Good therefore is the wise man's counsel in #Ec 8:2-4. {See Trapp on "Pr 16:14"} {See Trapp on "Pr 16:15"}

{a} Ambros., Hexs., lib. vi. cap. 5.

Ver. 13. A foolish son is the calamity of his father.] Children are certain cares, but uncertain comforts. Let them prove never so towardly, yet there is somewhat to do to breed them up, and bring them to good. But if they answer not expectation, the parent's grief is inexpressible. See the note on #Pr 10:1, and xv. 20. How many an unhappy father is tempted to wish with Augustus,

'O utinam caelebs vixissem, orbusque perissem?'

And the contentions of a wife are a continual dropping.] Like as a man that hath met with hard usage abroad thinks to mend himself at home, but is no sooner sat down there but the rain, dropping through the roof upon his head, drives him out of doors again. Such is the case of him that hath a contentious wife—a far greater cross than that of ungracious children, which yet are the father's calamities and heart breaks. Augustus had been happy if he had had no children; Sulla if he had had no wife. All evils, as elements, are most troublesome when out of their proper place, as impiety in professors, injustice in judges, discomfort in a wife. This is like a tempest in the haven, most troublesome, most dangerous. {a}

Ver. 14. House and riches are the inheritance of the fathers.] Viz., More immediately. God gives them to the parents, and they leave them to their children, being moved thereto by God. Though a carnal heart looks no higher than parents, cares not, so he may have it, whence he hath it. It is dos non Deus that maketh marriages with them—good enough, if goods enough. Money is the greatest meddler, and drives the bargain and business to an upshot. Mostly such matches prove unhappy and uncomfortable. How can it be otherwise, since Hic Deus nihil fecit? God indeed had a hand in it, but for their just punishment that so followed after lying vanities, and so forsook their own mercies.

But a prudent wife is of the Lord.] Nature makes a woman, election a wife; but to be prudent, wise, and virtuous is of the Lord. A good wife was one of the first real and royal gifts bestowed on Adam. God set all the creatures before him ere he gave him a wife, that, seeing no other fit help, he might prize such a gift; not a gift of industry, but of destiny, as one saith; for "marriages are made in heaven," as the common sort can say, and as very heathens acknowledge. The governor of Eskichisar, hearing Othoman the great Turk's relation of a fair lady whom he was in love with, and had highly commended for her virtues, seemed greatly to like his choice, saying that she was by the divine providence appointed only for him to have. {a}

Ver. 15. Slothfulness casteth into a deep sleep.] Sloth bringeth sleep, and sleep poverty. See this excellently set forth. {#Pr 6:9-11 10:4}

{See Trapp on "Pr 6:9"} {See Trapp on "Pr 6:10"} {See Trapp on "Pr 6:11"} {See Trapp on "Pr 10:4"}

Ver. 16. He that keepeth the commandment keepeth his own soul.] This is the first fruit of shaking off sloth and sleepiness. He that "stirs up himself to take hold of God," {#Isa 64:7} and to "take hold of his covenant," {#Isa 56:4} "to love the name of the Lord, and to be his servant," {#Pr 19:6} to "love him, and keep his commandments," {#Ex 20:6} to do that little he does out of love, if it be no more than to "think upon his commandments to do them," {#Ps 103:18} this man's soul shall be bound up "in the bundle of life," he shall find his name written "in the book of life." For in vitae libro scribuntur omnes qui quod possunt faciunt, etsi quod debent non possunt, saith Bernard. Their names are written in heaven who do what they can, though they cannot do what they ought. "If there be a willing mind, God accepts according to what a man hath, not according to what he hath not." {#2Co 8:12} And here also, Nolentem, praevent Deus ut velit, volentem subsequitur ne frustra velit. {a} God, that gives "both to will and to do," "causeth his people to keep his commandments," and "worketh all their works in them, and for them." {#Php 1:13 Eze 36:17 Isa 26:12} Lex iubet, gratia iuvat; petamus ut det, quod ut habeamus iubet. The law commandeth, but grace helpeth. Let us beg that God would make us to be what he requires us to be. {b}

But he that despiseth his ways.] That is, God's ways, chalked out in his word. {See Trapp on "Pr 13:13"} Or, He that despiseth his own ways—lives carelessly, and at random; walks at all adventures with God, cui vita est incomposita, et pessime morata contra gnomonem et canonem Decalogi, a loose and lawless person—he "shall die," not a natural death only, as all do, but spiritual and eternal. {c} There is but an inch between him and hell, which already gapes for him, and will certainly swallow him up.

{c} Aut mentem aut restim comparandum. -Chrysip.

Ver. 17. He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth, &c.] This is a second fruit of shaking off sloth, and working with the hands the thing that is good, that one may have to give to him that needeth. {#Eph 4:28} He doth not give it, but lend it; God accepts it both as δωρον και δανεισμα, as a gift, and a loan, saith Basil. {a} Nay, he lends it upon usury, Faeneratur Domino; and that to the Lord, who both binds himself to repay, and gives us security for it under his own hand here. He will pay him again to be sure of it—מלשי in the Hebrew tense Piel—he will fully and abundantly repay him; mostly in this world, but infallibly in the world to come. Evagrius in Cedrenus bequeathed three hundred pounds to the poor in his will; but took a bond beforehand of Synesius the bishop for the repayment of it in another life; and the very next night after his departure, saith the history, appearing to him in his shape, delivered in the bond cancelled, and fully discharged.

{a} Orat. de Elcemos.

Ver. 18. Chasten thy son while there is hope.] {See Trapp on "Pr 13:24"}

Ver. 19. A man of great wrath shall suffer punishment.] He that lays the reins on the neck, and sets no bounds to his wrath, whether in chastising his child, or otherwise, shall be sure to smart for it:

shall bring himself and his friends into great trouble. Such, therefore, as are choleric should pray much, and prevent all occasions of wrath; as Callius and Cotis, because they would not be stirred up to anger, burned their enemies' letters before they were read. The like did Pompey to the letters of Sertorius, and Caesar to Pompey's letters.

Ver. 20. Hear counsel, and receive instruction.] Or, Correction. Here he directs his speech to the younger sort, and exhorts them. (1.) To hear counsel, that is, to keep the commandment, as #Pr 19:16: (2.) To receive correction of parents, as #Pr 19:18, as the only way to sound and lasting wisdom: for Vexatio dat intellectum; Piscator ictus sapit; Quae nocent docent. Or Solomon may here bring in the father, thus lessoning his untoward child, whom he hath lashed. For to correct, and not to instruct, is to snuff the lamp, but not pour in oil to feed it.

Ver. 21. There are many devices in a man's heart.] They may purpose, but God alone disposeth of all. {See Trapp on "Pr 16:1"} {See Trapp on "Pr 16:9"} Some think to rise by ill principles, but it will not be. Some to be rich, but God crosseth them, and holds them to prisoners' pittances, to hard meat, as we say. Some, to live long, and to enjoy what they have gotten: but they hear, "Thou fool, this very night shall thy soul be taken from thee." {#Lu 12:20} Some set themselves to root out true religion, to dethrone the Lord Christ. But God sees and smiles, looks and laughs. {#Ps 2:4} The counsel of the Lord, that shall stand when all is done. Christ shall reign in the midst of his enemies: the stone cut out of the mountains without hands shall bring down the golden image with a vengeance, and make it "like the chaff of the summer floor." {#Da 2:35} Sciat Celsitudo vestra et nihil dubitet -saith Luther in a letter to the Elector of Saxony— longe aliter in coelo quam Noribergae de hoc negotio conclusum esse. {a} Let your highness be sure that the Church's business is far otherwise ordered in heaven, than it is by the emperor and states at Norimberg. And Gaudeo quod Christus Dominus est; alioqui totus desperassem, - I am glad that Christ is King; for otherwise I had been utterly out of heart and hope—saith holy Myconius in a letter to Calvin, upon the view of the Church's enemies.

{a} Scult., Annal

Ver. 22. The desire of a man is his kindness.] Or, His mercy. Many have a great mind to be held merciful men, and vainly give out what they would do, if they had wherewith; and perhaps they speak as they think too. This may be one of those many devices, those variae et vance cogitationes in the heart of a man. {#Pr 19:21}

But the poor man is better than a liar.] For though he hath nothing to give, yet having a giving affection, he is better than a liar, that is, than such a rich man, who, before he was rich, would brag what he would do if he were rich, and yet now is a niggard.

Ver. 23. The fear of the Lord tendeth to life, &c.] Life, saturity, {a} and security from evil (from the hurt, if not from the smart of it) are all assured here to those that fear God. Who would not then turn spiritual purchaser? See #Pr 22:4.

{a} Saturatus pernoctabit, He shall not go supperless to bed.

Ver. 24. A slothful man hideth his hand in his bosom.] The Latins say, He wraps it in his cloak; Manum habet sub pallio, He puts it in his pocket, say we. Erewhiles we had him fast asleep; and here going about his business, as if he were still asleep; so lazy that any the least labour is grievous to him, he can hardly find in his heart to feed himself, so to uphold the life of his hands, which he should maintain with "the labour of his hands" {#2Th 3:10} and with "the sweat of his brow." {#Ge 3:19} Very sucklings get not their milk without much tugging and tiring themselves at the dug.

Ver. 25. Smite a scorner, and the simple will beware.] Alterius perditio, tua fit cautio, saith the wise man. Seest thou another man shipwrecked? look well to thy tackling. Poena ad paucos, &c. Let but a few be punished, and many will be warned and wised; any will, but the scorner himself, who will not be better, though brayed in a mortar. This scorner may very well be the sluggard mentioned in the former verse. Smite him never so much, there is no beating any wit into him. Pharaoh was not a button the better for all that he suffered; but Jethro, taking notice of God's heavy hand upon Pharaoh, and likewise upon the Amalekites, was thereby converted, and became a proselyte, as Rabbi Solomon noteth upon this text.

Ver. 26. He that wasteth his father.] That spoileth, pilfereth, pillageth, preyeth upon his father; not so much as saying with that scapethrift in the gospel, "Give me the portion that falls to my share." {#Lu 15:12} Idleness and incorrigibleness lead to this wickedness, as may appear by the context.

Ver. 27. Cease, my son, to hear the instruction.] "Beware of false prophets." {#Mt 7:15} {See Trapp on "Mt 7:15"} Take heed also what books ye read; for as water relisheth of the soil it runs through, so doth the soul of the authors that a man readeth.

Ver. 28. An ungodly witness scorneth judgment.] As if he were out of the reach of God's rod. And because "judgment is not presently executed, therefore his heart is set in him to do wickedly," {#Ec 8:11 Ps 50:21} he looks upon God as an abettor of his perjury. His mouth devoureth iniquity, as some savoury morsel. But know they not that there will be bitterness in the end? Let them but mark what follows.

Ver. 29. Judgments are prepared for scorers.] For these scorers (that promise themselves impunity) are judgments, not one, but many, not appointed only, but prepared long since, and now ready to be executed.

Ver. 1. Wine is a mocker, &c.] For, first, it mocks {a} the drunkard, and makes a fool of him, promising him pleasure, but paying him with the stinging of an adder, and biting of a cockatrice, #Pr 23:32. {See Trapp on "Pr 23:32"} Wine is a comfortable creature, {#Jud 9:12} one of the chief lenitives {b} of human miseries, as Plato calls it; but "excess of wine" {#1Pe 4:3} {c} is, as one well saith, Blandus daemon, dulce venenum, suave Teccatum; quam qui in se habet, se non habet; quam qui facit, non facit peccatum, sed totus est peccatum. That is, a fair spoken devil, a sweet poison, a sin which he that hath in him, hath not himself, and which he that runs into, runs not into a single sin, but is wholly turned into sin. Secondly, It renders a man a mocker, even one of those scorers, for whom judgments are prepared, as Solomon had said in the foregoing verse. See #Ho 7:5 Isa 28:1 1Sa 25:36-38 Abigail would not tell Nabal of his danger till he had slept out his drunkenness, lest she should have met with a mock, if not with a knock.

Strong drink is raging.] All kinds of drink that will alienate the understanding of a man and make him drunk, as ale, beer, cider, perry, metheglin, &c. Of this Pliny {d} cries out, Hei, mira vitiorum solertia inventum est quemadmodum aqua quoque inebriaret. Portentosum sane potionis genus! quasi non ad alium usum natura parens humane generi fruges dedisse videatur. So witty is wickedness grown now, that there is a way invented to make a man drunk with water; a monstrous kind of drink surely! as if dame Nature had bestowed grain upon us to such a base abuse. {See Trapp on "Pr 23:29"}; St Paul very fitly yoketh together drunkards and railers. {#1Co 6:9}

And whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise.] For when the wine is in the wit is out. They have a practice of drinking the Outs, as they call it—all the wit out of the head, all the money out of the purse, &c.—and thereby affect the title of roaring boys, by a woeful prolepsis (doubtless), here for hereafter.

Ver. 2. The fear of a king is as the roaring of a lion.] See #Pr 16:14 19:12.

Ver. 3. It is an honour for a man to cease from strife.] To stint it rather than to stir it; to be first in promoting peace and seeking reconciliation, as Abraham did in the controversy with Lot. Memento -said Aristippus to Aeschines, with whom he had a long strife— quod cum essem natu maior, prior te accesserim. {a} Remember, said he, that though I am the elder man, yet I first sought reconciliation. I shall well remember it, said Aeschines, and while I live I shall acknowledge thee the better man, because I was first in falling out, and thou art first in falling in again. {b}

But every fool will be meddling.] Or, Mingling himself with strife; he hath an itching to be doing with it, to be quarrelling, brabbling, lawing. Once it was counted ominous to commence actions and follow suits. {c} Now nothing more ordinary, for every trifle, treading upon their grass, or the like. This is as great folly as for every slight infirmity to take physic.

Ver. 4. The sluggard will not plough by reason of the cold.] So the spiritual sluggard either dreams of a delicacy in the ways of God, which is a great vanity; or else, if heaven be not to be had without the hardship of holiness, Christ may keep his heaven to himself. The young man in the gospel went away grieved that Christ required such things that he could not be willing to yield to. {#Mt 19:22} The Hebrews have a common proverb among them: He that on the even of the Sabbath hath not gathered what to eat, shall not at all eat on the Sabbath; meaning thereby that none shall reign in heaven that hath not wrought on earth. "Man goeth forth," saith the Psalmist, "to his work, and to his labour until the evening." {#Ps 104:23} So till the sun of his life be set, he must be working out his salvation. "This is to work the work of him that sent us," as our Saviour did. Which expression of "working a work": notes his strong intention upon it, as "to devise devices," {#Jer 18:18} notes strong plotting to mischief the prophet. So "with a desire have I desired," &c.; {#Lu 22:15} "yea, how am I straitened, till it be accomplished" {#Lu 12:50} Lo, Christ thirsteth exceedingly after our salvation, though he knew it should cost him so dear. Is not this check to our dulness and sloth?

Ver. 5. Counsel in the heart of man is like deep water.] See #Pr 18:4. As the red rose, though outwardly not so fragrant, is inwardly far more cordial than the damask rose, being more thrifty of its sweetness, and reserving it in itself; so it is with many good Christians.

But a man of understanding will draw it out.] And surely this is a fine skill to be able to pierce a man that is like a vessel full of wine, and to set him a running.

Ver. 6. Most men will proclaim every one his own goodness.] As the kings of Egypt would needs be called Ευεργεται, bountiful, or benefactors, {#Lu 22:25} many of the Popes Pii and Bonifacii &c. The Turks will needs be styled the only Mussulmans or true believers, as Papists the only Catholics. The Swenkfeldians—Stinkfeldians, Luther called them, from the ill savour of their opinions—intituled themselves with that glorious name, The confessors of the glory of Christ. {a} David George, that monstrous heretic, that was so far from accounting adulteries, fornications, incests, &c., for being any sins, that he did recommend them to his most perfect scholars, as acts of grace and mortification, &c.; yet he was wonderfully confident of the absolute truth of his tenets, and doubted not but that the whole world would soon submit to him and hold with him. He wrote to Charles the emperor, and the rest of the states of Germany, a humble and serious admonition, as he styled it, written by the command of the omnipotent God, diligently to be obeyed, because it contained those things whereupon eternal life did depend. {b}

But a faithful man who can find.] Diaconos paucitas honorabiles fecit, saith Jerome. The paucity of pious persons makes them precious. Perraro grati reperiuntur, saith Cicero. It is hard to find a thankful man. Faithful friends are in this age all for the most part gone in pilgrimage, and their return is uncertain, said the Duke of Buckingham to Bishop Morton in Richard III's, time. {c}

His children are blessed after him.] Personal goodness is profitable to posterity; yet not of merit, but of free grace, and for the promise' sake; which Jehu's children found and felt to the fourth generation, though himself were a wicked idolater.

Ver. 8. A king that sitteth in the throne of judgment, &c.] Kings in their own persons should sit and judge causes sometimes, to take knowledge, at least, what is done by their officers of justice: I have seen the king of Persia many times to alight from his horse, saith a late traveller, {a} only to do justice to a poor body. He punisheth theft and manslaughter so severely, that in an age a man shall hardly hear either of the one or of the other.

{a} The Preacher's Travels, by John Cartwright.

Ver. 9. Who can say, I have made my heart clean?] That can I, saith the proud Pharisee and the Popish justiciary. Non habeo, Domine, quod mihi ignoscas: I have nothing, Lord, for thee to pardon, saith Isidore the monk. When St Paul, that had been in the third, heaven, complains of his inward impurities, {#Ro 7:15} and though he should have known no evil by himself, yet durst he not look to be thereby justified. {#1Co 4:4} And holy Job could say, "If I wash myself with snow water, and make my hands never so clean; yet God would plunge me in the ditch, so that my own clothes should abhor me." {#Job 9:30,31} And "If thou, Lord, shouldst mark iniquities," saith David, "who should stand before thee?" {#Ps 130:3}

Ver. 10. Divers weights, and divers measures, &c.] {See Trapp on "Pr 11:1"} {See Trapp on "Pr 16:11"} Now, if the very weights and measures are abomination, how much more the men that make use of them? And what shall become of such as measure to themselves a whole six days, but curtail God's seventh or misemploy it?

Ver. 11. Even a child is known by his doings, &c.] Either for the better, as we see in young Joseph, Samson, Samuel, Solomon, Timothy, Athanasius, Origen, &c. It is not a young saint, an old devil; but a young saint, an old angel:—Or, for the worse, as Canaan the son of Ham—who is therefore cursed with his father, because, probably, he had a hand in the sin—Ishmael, Esau, Vajezatha, the youngest son of Haman. {#Es 9:9} Hebricians {a} observe that in the Hebrew this youth's name is written with a little zain, but a great vau, to show, that though the youngest, yet he was the most malicious against the Jews of all the ten. Early sharp, say we, that will be thorn.

Ver. 12. The hearing ear, and the seeing eye, &c.] There are those who have "ears to hear, and hear not; who have eyes to see, and see not: for they are a rebellious house." {#Eze 12:2} Now when God shall say to such, as in #Isa 42:18, "Hear ye deaf, and look ye blind, that you may see"; when he shall give them an obedient ear, and a Scripture searching eye, "senses habitually exercised to discern both good and evil," {#Heb 5:14} so that they "hear a voice behind them, saying, This is the way," and they "see him that is invisible," as Moses: then is it with them, as it is written, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard," i.e., — Natural eye never saw, natural ear never heard, such things; "but God hath revealed them to us by his Spirit." {#1Co 2:9,10}

Ver. 13. Love not sleep, lest thou come to poverty.] In sleep there is no use either of sight or hearing, or any other sense. And as little is there of the spiritual senses in the sleep of sin. It fared with the good prophet {#Zec 4:1} as with a drowsy person, who though awake and set to work, yet was ready to sleep at it; and Peter, James, and John, if the spirit hold not up their eyes, may be in danger to fall asleep at their prayers, {#Mt 26:37-45} and so fall into spiritual poverty: for if prayer stands still, the whole trade of godliness stands still. And a powerless prayer, proceeding from a spirit of sloth, joined with presumption, makes the best men liable to punishment for profaning God's name, so that he may justly let them fall into some sin, which shall awaken them with smart enough. {#Pr 19:15} {See Trapp on "Pr 19:15"}

Ver. 14. It is naught, it is naught, saith the buyer.] Or, Saith the possessor, and so Melanchthon reads it: as taxing that common fault and folly of slighting present mercies, but desiring and commending them when they are lost. Virtutem incolumen odimus, sublatam ex oculis quaerimus invidi. Israel "despised the pleasant land," {#Ps 106:24} and the precious manna, {#Nu 11:6} and Solomen's gentle government, {#1Ki 12:4} Our corrupt nature weighs not good things till we want them, as the eye sees nothing that lies upon it.

Ver. 15. There is gold and a multitude of rubies.] Quintilian defines an orator, Vir bonus dicendi peritus: A good man, that can deliver himself in good language. Such a master of speech {a} was St Paul, who was therefore by those heathen Lystrians called Mercury, because he was the chief speaker. {#Ac 14:12} Such afore him was the prophet Isaiah, and our Saviour Christ, who "spake as never man spoke," his enemies themselves being judges. Such after him was Chrysostom, Basil, Nazianzen, famous for their holy eloquence. So were Mr Rogers and Mr Bradford, martyrs; in whom it was hard to say whether there were more force of eloquence and utterance in preaching, or more holiness of life and conversation, saith Mr Foxe. {b} Now if Darius, could say that he preferred one Zopyrus before ten Babylons: and if, when one desired to see Alexander's treasures and his jewels, he bade his servants show him not ἀργυριου ταλαντα, but τους φιλους, not his talents of silver, and such other precious things, but his friends; {c} what an invaluable price think we doth the King of heaven set upon such learned scribes, as do out of the good treasure of their hearts throw forth good things for the use of many!

He that will undertake for such a one's debts, or run in debt to gratify her, should be carefully looked to, and not trusted without a sufficient pawn. How can he be faithful to me that is unfaithful to God? said Constantinus Chlorus to his courtiers and counsellors. {a}

Ver. 17. Bread of deceit is sweet to a man.] Sin's murdering morsels will deceive those that devour them. There is a deceitfulness in all sin, {#Heb 3:13} a lie in all vanity. {#Jer 2:8} The stolen waters of adultery are sweet, {#Pr 9:17} but bitterness in the end: such sweet meat hath sour sauce. Commodities craftily or cruelly compassed, yield a great deal of content for present. But when the unconscionable cormorant hath "swallowed down such riches, he shall vomit them up again; God shall cast them out of his belly." {#Joh 20:15} Either by remorse and restitution in the meantime, or with despair and impenitent horror hereafter.

His mouth shall be filled with gravel.] Pane lapidoso, as Seneca hath it—with grit and gravel, to the torment of the teeth; that is, terror of the conscience, and torture of the whole man. Such a bitter-sweet was Adam's apple, Esau's mess, the Israelites' quails, Jonathan's honey, the Amalekites' cates after the sack of Ziklag, {#1Sa 30:16} Adonijah's dainties, {#1Ki 1:9} which ended in horror; ever after the meal is ended, comes the reckoning. Men must not think to dine with the devil, and then to sup with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven: to feed upon the poison of asps, and yet that the viper's tongue shall not slay them. {#Job 20:16} When the asp stings a man, it doth first tickle him, so as it makes him laugh, till the poison by little and little gets to the heart, and then it pains him more than ever it delighted him. So doth sin. At Alvolana in Portugal, three miles from Lisbon, many of our English soldiers under the Earl of Essex perished, by eating of honey, purposely left in the houses and spiced with poison, as it was thought. {a} And how the treacherous Greeks destroyed many of the western Christians, French and English, marching toward the Holy Land, by selling them meal mingled with lime, is well known out of the Turkish history.

Ver. 18. Every purpose is established by counsel.] That thy proceedings be not either unconstant or uncomfortable, deliberate long ere thou resolve on any enterprise. {a} Advise with God especially, who hath said, "Woe be to the rebellious children that take counsel, but not of me." {#Isa 30:1} David had able counsellors about him: but those he most esteemed and made use of were God's testimonies. "Thy testimonies also are my delight, and the men of my counsel." {#Ps 119:24} Princes had learned men ever with them, called Μνημονες, remembrancers, monitors, counsellors; as Themistocles had his Anaxagoras; Alexander his Aristotle; Scipio his Panaetius and Polybius: of which latter Pausanias {b} testifieth, that he was so great a politician, that what he advised never miscarried. But that is very remarkable that Gellius reports of Scipio Africanus, that it was his custom before day to go into the capital in cellam Iovis, and there to stay a great while, quasi consultans de Rep cum Iove, as if he were there advising with his god concerning the commonwealth. Whence it was that his deeds were pleraque admiranda, admirable for the most part, saith the author. {c} But we have a better example. David in all his straits went to ask counsel of the Lord, who answered him. Do we so, and God will not fail us, for he hath made Christ wisdom unto us, and a "wonderful counsellor."

{#1Co 1:30 Isa 9:6}

And with good advice make war.] Ahab in this might have been a precedent to good Josiah. He would not go against Ramothgilead, till he had first advised with his false prophets. But that other peerless prince, though the famous prophet Jeremiah was then living, and Zephaniah, and a whole college of seers, yet he doth not so much as once send out of doors to ask, Shall I go up against the king of Egypt? Sometimes both grace and wit are asleep in the holiest and wariest breasts. The soldiers' rule among the Romans was, Non sequi, non fugere bellum. ^{a} Neither to fly, nor to follow after war. The Christian motto is, Nec temere nec timide, Be neither temerarious nor timorous. And that is a very true saying of the Greek poet, ἄρ' αὖτις ἀποθνήσκει αὖτις ἀποθνήσκει ἄρ' ἀποθνήσκει τ-320 “η βραδυπους βουλη μεν αμεινων: η δε παχεια ἀποθνήσκει ἄρ' ἀποθνήσκει τ-320 Αιεν ε φελκουνηνην την μετανοιαν εχει.”

Ver. 9. He that goeth about as a talebearer.] Therefore make not such of thy counsel: for if they can give counsel, yet they can keep none. ^{See Trapp on "Pr 11:13"}

Therefore meddle not with him that flattereth.] Tale carriers and flatterers are neither of them fit counsellors. These will say as you say, be it right or wrong; those will tell abroad all that you say, and more too, to do you a mischief. The good Emperor Aurelius was even bought and sold by such evil counsellors; and Augustus complained when Varus was dead, that he had none now left that would deal plainly and faithfully with him.

Ver. 20. Whoso curseth his father, &c.] ^{See Trapp on "Ex 21:17"} ^{See Trapp on "Mt 15:4"} Parents usually give their children sweet and savoury counsel; but they, for want of grace, listen rather to flatterers and whisperers, vilipending their parents' advice, and vilifying them for the same, as Eli's sons did.

His lamp shall be put out in obscure darkness.] Heb., In blackness of darkness. These are those "raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame; to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever." ^{#Jude 13} All exquisite torment such are sure of in hell, whom the Holy Ghost curseth in such an emphatic manner, in such exquisite terms; besides the extreme misery they are likely here to meet with, who, when they ought to be "a lamp" to their parents, #1Ki 15:4 as Abner was, or by his name should have been—do seek to put out their lamp, to cast a slur upon them, and to "quench their coal that is left," as she said, #2Sa 14:7. It may very well be that the temporal judgment here threatened, is, that such a graceless child shall die childless, and that there shall be Nullus cui lampada tradat.

Ver. 21. An inheritance may be gotten hastily, &c.] By wishing and working the death of parents, or by any other evil arts whatsoever. See an instance hereof in Achan, Ahab, Gehazi, Adonijah's leaping into the throne without his father's leave. Jehoahaz also, the younger son of Josiah, would needs be king after his father, putting by his eldest brother, Jehoiakim; but he was soon put down again, and put into bands by Pharaohnechoh. {#2Ki 23:33,34} He portrayed the ambitionist to the life, that pictured him snatching at a crown, and falling, with this motto, Sic mea fata sequor. So I am followed by fate.

Ver. 22. Say not thou, I will recompense evil.] Much less, swear it, as some miscreants do; to whom, Est vindicta bonum, et vita dulcius ipsa. In reason, tallying of injuries is but justice. It is the first office of justice, saith Cicero, to hurt nobody, unless first provoked by injury. Whereupon Lactantius; O quam simplicem veramque sententiam, saith he, duorum verborum adiectione corrupit! Oh what a dainty sentence marred the orator by adding those two last words! How much better Seneca! Immane verbum est ultio. Revenge is a base word, but a worse deed; it being no less an offence to requite an injury than to offer it, as Lactantius {a} hath it. The mild and milken man, as his name speaks him, was such an enemy to revenge, that he dislikes the waging either of law or of war with any that have wronged us. Wherein, though I cannot be of his mind, yet I am clearly of the opinion that not revenge, but right should be sought in both. Neither can I hold it valour, but rashness, in our Richard I, who, being told, as he sat at supper, that the French king had besieged his town of Vernoil in Normandy, protested that he would not turn his back until he had confronted the French; and thereupon he caused the wall of his palace that was before him to be broken down toward the south, and posted to the sea coast immediately into Normandy.

But wait on the Lord.] Who claims vengeance as his, {#De 32:35 Ro 12:19} {See Trapp on "De 32:35"} {See Trapp on "Ro 12:19"} and will strike in for the patient, as he did, #Nu 12:2,3. While Moses is dumb, God speaks; deaf, God hears and stirs. Make God your chancellor in case no law will relieve, and you shall do yourselves no disservice. If compelled to go a mile, rather than revenge, go two, yea, as far as the shoes of the preparation of the gospel of peace will carry you, and God will bring you back "with everlasting joy." {#Isa 35:10} This is the way to be even with him that wrongs you, nay, to be above him.

Ver. 23. Divers weights are an abomination.] In righting and revenging themselves men are apt to weigh things in an uneven balance, to be overpartial in their own cause, and to judge that a heinous offence in another, that is scarce blameworthy in themselves. It is best, therefore, to lay down all injuries at God's feet, who will be sure to give a "just recompense to every transgression," {#Heb 2:2} and will else turn his wrath from our enemies to us, for our diverse weights and false balances. {See Trapp on "Pr 20:10"}

Ver. 24. Man's goings are of the Lord.] {See Trapp on "Pr 16:1"} {See Trapp on "Pr 16:9"} God brought Paul to Rome by a way that he little dreamed of. Augustine once travelling lost his way, and fetching a compass came safe to the place he intended; whereas, had he kept the right way, he had been caught by an armed band of the Donatists that lay in wait for him. {a} "The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord," {#Ps 37:23} and he finds himself sometimes crossed with a blessing. As when Isabel, Queen of England, was to repass from Zeland into this kingdom with an army, in favour of her son against her husband, she had utterly been cast away had she come to the port intended, being there expected by her enemies; but providence, against her will, brought her to another place where she safely landed. Good, therefore, and worthy of all acceptation is the wise man's counsel, "In all thy ways acknowledge God, and he shall direct thy path." {#Pr 3:6} {See Trapp on "Pr 3:6"}

{a} Augustin. in Enchirid. ad Laurent., cap. 17.

Ver. 25. It is a snare to a man who devoureth, &c.] He doeth as a fish that swallows the hook, as the eagle that stole the flesh from the altar with a coal sticking to it, that set the whole nest on fire, &c. What a sad end befell Cardinal Wolsey, while he sought more to please the king than God, as himself said! And what a revenging hand of God pursued his five chief agents that were most instrumental for him in that sacrilegious enterprise! One of them killed his fellow in a duel, and was hanged for it. A third drowned himself in a well. A fourth fell from a great estate to extreme beggary. Dr Allen (the last and chiefest of them) being archbishop of Dublin, was cruelly slain by his enemies. ^{a} Utinam his et similibus exemplis edocti discant homines res semel Deo consecratas timide attricare! saith Scultetus, ^{b} who relates this story; I would men would take heed by these add the like examples how they meddle with things once consecrated to God. If divine justice so severely punished those that converted church goods (though not so well administered) to better uses (doubtless, because they did it out of selfish and sinful principles and intentions), what shall become of such as take all occasions to rob God, that they may enrich themselves? Spoliantur parochiae et scholae non aliter ac si fame necare nos velint, saith Luther; ^{c} Parishes and schools are polled and robbed of their maintenance, as if they meant to starve us all.

And after vows to make inquiry.] Viz., How he may devour that tit bit without vomiting, and not find it hard meat on his conscience. But a man may easily eat that on earth, that he shall have time enough to digest in hell. The fear of this made Queen Mary restore again all ecclesiastical livings assumed to the crown, saying, that she set more by the salvation of her own soul, than she did by ten kingdoms. ^{d} And upon the like motive, King Louis of France, about the year 1152, cast the Pope's bulls, whereby he required the fruits of vacancies of all cathedral churches of France, into the fire, saying, He had rather the Pope's bulls should roast in the fire, than his own soul should fry in hell. ^{e}

Ver. 26. A wise king scattereth the wicked.] Drains the country of them by his just severity, yet with due discretion, as appears by the latter words, "and bringeth the wheel over them," compared with #Isa 28:27,28. The Turks' justice will rather cut off two innocent men, than let one offender escape. {a} The Venetians punish with death whosoever shall misappropriated a penny of the public money to his own private profit. {b} Durescite, durescite, o infaelix Lantgravic, said the poor smith to the Landgrave of Thuring, that was more mild than was for his people's good. The sword of justice must, I confess, be furnished with the oil of mercy; but yet there are cases wherein severity ought to cast the scale.

Ver. 27. The spirit of a man is the candle of the Lord.] Some read it, The breath of a man, that is, his life, is the candle of the Lord, and sense it thus: Look how men deal by their lights or lamps, so doth God by our lives. Some we put out as soon as lighted; others we let alone till half wasted, and others again till wax and wick and all be consumed. So some die younger, some older, as God pleaseth. But the word Neshamah here used, as it holds affinity with the Hebrew Shamajim, Heaven, so it doth with the Latin word mens, the mind, or reasonable soul, which indeed is that light that is in us by an excellence, {#Mt 6:23} that "spirit of a man that knows the things of a man," {#1Co 2:11} that candle that is in a man's belly or body, as in a lantern, making the least mote perspicuous. This is true by a specialty of that divine faculty of the soul, conscience, which is frequently called the "spirit of a man," as being planted by God in all and every part of the reasonable soul, where she produceth occasionally several operations, being the soul's schoolmaster, monitor, and domestic preacher; God's spy, and man's overseer, the principal commander and chief controller of all his doings and desires.

- Ovid.

Surely it is a most celestial gift, saith one. {a} It is so of God and in man, that it is a kind of middle thing between God and man; less than God, and yet above man. It may be called our God, saith another, {b} in the sense that Moses was Pharaoh's; having power to control and avenge our disobediences with greater plagues than ever Moses brought on Egypt. Ver. 28. Mercy and truth preserve the king.] These are the best guard of his body, and supporters of his throne. Mildness and righteousness, lenity and fidelity, do more safe guard a prince than munitions of rocks, or any warlike preparations, amidst which Henry IV of France perished, when Queen Elizabeth of England lived and died with glory. That French king, being persuaded by the Duke of Sully not to readmit the Jesuits, answered, Give me then security for my life. But he was shortly after stabbed to death by their instigation. When our queen, that stuck fast to her principles, was not more loved of her friends than feared of foes, being protected by God beyond expectation. Our King John thought to strengthen himself by gathering money, the sinews of war; but meanwhile he lost his people's affections, those joints of peace, and came, after endless turmoils, to an unhappy end. So did our late sovereign of bleeding memory.

Ver. 29. The glory of young men is their strength.] If well used in following their callings, and fighting for their countries, as those young men of the princes of the provinces did, {#1Ki 20:20} and not in quarrelling and duelling, as those youngsters of Helkathhazzurim, who sheathed their swords in their fellows' bowels. {#2Sa 2:16}

And the beauty of old men is their gray head.] That silver crown of hoary hairs, saith one, which the finger of God doth set upon their heads, makes them venerable in all places where they come; so that they carry an authority or majesty with them, as it were. {See Trapp on "Pr 16:31"}

Ver. 30. The blueness of the wound cleanseth.] Some must be beaten black and blue ere they will be better; neither is wit anything worth with them till they have paid well for it.—The Jews were ever best when in worst condition. The Athenians, Non nisi atrati, would never mend till they were in mourning. And,

As a great statesman said of his nation, Physicians commonly cure a lethargy by a fever. Surgeons let their patients bleed sometimes, etiam ad deliquium animae. The scorpion heals his own wounds; and the viper being beaten and applied cures his own biting. Surely as the scourging of the garment with a stick beats out the moths and the dust, so do corrections corruptions from the heart; and as lancing lets out filth, so doth affliction sin.

Ver. 1. The king's heart is in the hand of the Lord.] Be kings never so absolute and unaccountable to any, yet are they ruled and overruled by him "that is higher than the highest, ." { #Ec 5:8} God's heart is not in the king's hand, as that foolish prince in Mexico pretends, when at his coronation he swears that it shall not rain unseasonably, neither shall there be famine or pestilence during his reign in his dominions; but "the king's heart," that is, his will, desires, devices, resolutions, are God's to dispose of. He turneth them this way or that way with as much ease as the ploughman doth the water course with his paddle, or the gardener with his hand. Thus he turned the heart of Pharaoh to Joseph; of Saul to David; of Nebuchadnezzar to Jeremiah; of Darius to Daniel; of Cyrus, and afterwards of Alexander the Great, to the Jews; of some of the Roman persecutors to the primitive Christians; and of Charles V, who ruled over twenty-eight flourishing kingdoms, to the late reformers, Melanchthon, Pomeran, and other famous men of God, whom, when he had in his power, after he had conquered the Protestant princes, he not only determined not anything extremely against them, but also, entreating them gently, he sent them away, not so much as once forbidding them to publish openly the doctrine that they professed: albeit, all Christendom had not a more prudent prince than he was, saith Mr Foxe, {a} nor the Church of Christ almost a a sorer enemy.

Ver. 2. Every way of a man is right in his own eyes.] {See Trapp on "Pr 16:2"} Such is our sinful self-love, that, Suffenus-like, we easily admire that little nothing of any good that is in us; we so clasp and hug the barn of our own brain, with the ape, that we strangle it; we set up a counter for a thousand pounds, and boast of those graces whereunto we are perfect strangers. We turn the perspective telescope, and gladly see ourselves larger, others smaller than they are: we flatter our own souls as Micah did his. {#Jud 17:13} Wherein it often happens as it did with the riflers of Semiramis' tomb, who, where they expected to find the richest treasure, met with a deadly poison. Seem we never so just, because first in our own cause, God—as Solomon saith of a man's neighbour—comes and searches us, and then things appear otherwise. {#Lu 16:15}

Ver. 3. Is more acceptable to the Lord.] Qui non vult ex rapina holocaustum, as heathens could see and say by the light of nature. The Jews thought to expiate their miscarriages toward men, and to set off with God by their ceremonies and sacrifices. {#Isa 1:11-15 Jer 7:21-26 Mic 6:6-8} Some heathens also, as that Roman emperor, could say, Non sic deos coluimus ut ille nos vinceret, We have not been at so much charge with the gods that they should give us up into the enemy's hands. But the Scripture gave the Jews to understand that "to obey was better than sacrifice," that God "would have mercy and not sacrifice," and that for a man to "love God above all, and his neighbour as himself, is more than all whole burntofferings and sacrifices." {#Mr 12:33} The heathens also were told as much by their sages, as Plato in his book intituled περι προσευχης, where Socrates, reprehending the gilt horned bulls of the Greeks, and the sumptuous sacrifices of the Trojans at length infers—και γαρ αν δεινον εη, &c. It were a grievous thing if the gods should more respect men's offerings and sacrifices than the holiness of their hearts, and the righteousness of their lives, &c. Aristotle in his Rhetorics, Ουκ εικος Θεον χαιρεινταις δαπαναις, &c., saith he. It is not likely that God takes pleasure in the costliness of sacrifices, but rather in the good conversation of the sacrificers.

Ver. 4. An high look and proud heart.] {See Trapp on "Pr 6:17"}

And the ploughing of the wicked is sin.] As they plot and plough mischief—being the devil’s hinds and drudges—so all their actions, natural, moral, spiritual, are turned into sin; whether they plough, or play, or pray, or eat, or sleep, "to the impure and unbelieving, all things are impure." {#Th 1:15} Their proud or big swollen heart is full of filthy corrupt matter, that oozeth out still and offendeth the eyes of God’s glory. Everything they do is as an evil vapour reeking from that loathsome dunghill, worse than those that came up from the five cities of the plain. Pride is like copperas, which will turn wine or milk into ink; -or leaven, which turns a very passover into pollution; -or as the sanies pus of a plague sore, which will render the richest robe infectious.

Ver. 5. The thoughts of the diligent tend only, &c.] The word rendered "diligent" signifies one that is sedulous and solicitous in his business; that weighs circumstances and waits opportunities; that "sits down first and counts his costs"; {#Lu 14:28} that considers seriously, and then executes speedily. {a} Such a one was Abraham’s servant, {#Ge 24:1-9} Joseph, Boaz, Daniel. And how should such a man choose but thrive? {See Trapp on "Pr 10:4"} A sufficiency he is sure of, though not of a superfluity.

But of every one that is hasty.] And headlong; that, resolving to be rich, graspeth greedily all he can come at—accounting all good fish that comes to hand, and not sticking at any injustice or cruelty that may make for his advantage. The beggar will catch this man ere long; -the usurer will get him into his clutches, and leave him never a feather to fly with. There is a curse upon such precipitate practices, though men be never so industrious, as in Jeboiakim, {#Jer 22:24-30} and Saul. {#ISa 14:24-30} Those that, making more haste than good speed to be rich, reach at things too high for them—which David would not do {#Ps 131:1} -may be likened to the panther, which loves the dung of man so much, as if it be hanged a height from it, it will skip and leap up, and never leave till it have burst itself in pieces to get it.

Ver. 6. The getting of treasures by a lying tongue.] As do seducers, sycophants, flatterers, corrupt judges, that say with shame, "Give ye"; mercenary pleaders, that sell both their tongues and silence, and help their clients' causes, as the wolf did the sheep of his cough, by sucking his blood; witnesses of the post that can lend an oath, as Jezebel's hired rake hells did, and will not stick to swear (if they may be well paid for it) that their friend or foe was at Rome and at Interamna both at once; false chapmen, that say the best of their worst commodities, and cheat the unwary buyer. These, and the like, though for a while they may thrive and ruffle, yet in the end they prosper not, but perish with their wealth, as the toad doth with his mouth full of earth. God blows upon their cursed hoards of evil gotten goods, scattering them as chaff before the wind. Destruction also dogs them at the heels, both temporal and eternal. This they are said to seek, scil., eventually, though not intentionally. They seek it, because they not only walk in the way to it, but run and flee with post haste, as if they were afraid that they should come too late, or that hell should be full before they got there. Thus Balaam's ass never carries him fast enough after the wages of wickedness. Set but a wedge of gold before Achan, and Joshua, that could stop the sun in his course, cannot stay him from the fingering of it. Judas, in selling his Master, what he doth doth "quickly." But with what issue? What got Balaam but a sword in his ribs? Achan, but the stones about his ears? Judas, but the halter about his neck? besides a worse thing in another world. Thus many a wretched worldling spins a fair thread to strangle himself both temporally and eternally. By covetousness they not only kill others, {#Pr 1:19} but desperately "drown themselves in perdition and destruction." {#1Ti 6:9} Fuge ergo, dives, eiusmodi exitum -as St Ambrose concludes the stroy of Ahab's and Jezebel's fearful end— sed fugies eiusmondi exitum si fugeris huiusmodi flagitium, - Flee, O rich miser, such an end. Such an end you shall avoid, if you carefully flee from such sinful courses.

Ver. 7. The robbery of the wicked shall destroy them.] Heb., Shall saw them: that is, shall bring upon them exquisite and extreme torments, such as the prophet Isaiah, and those martyrs {#Heb 11:37} were put unto unjustly; such as Agag suffered justly, and those barbarous Ammonites. {#2Sa 12:31} Some render it dissecabit eos shall cut them in twain, as that evil servant, {#Lu 12:46} and those blasphemers of Daniel's God. {#Da 3:29} Others render it, Shall abide upon them, or, Dwell with them. Their illgotten goods vanish, but their punishment remains. Their stolen venison is soon eaten up, but the shot is not yet paid; there is a sad reckoning behind. God will rake out of their bellies those tit bits—those murdering morsels. Besides that, for their last dish is served up astonishment and fearful expectation of just revenge. The Hebrew word here translated "destroy" signifies also to terrify and fear. They shall be a Magormissabib to themselves, as Pashur was, {#Jer 20:3,4} running from chamber to chamber, to hide from the hand of justice—as that notable thief Bulas in the days of Severus the emperor {a} -but they shall not escape; their sin will find them out. God will pour upon them, and not spare, whether they be private thieves, or those public robbers, qui in auto et purpura visuntur, {b} as Cato once said, that are clad with purple, and have gold chains about their necks; corrupt judges, who judge for reward, and take away the righteousness of the righteous from him. Such were Empson and Dudley in their generation. Such was Judge Belknap in Richard II's days, who, being about to subscribe the articles against proceedings of parliament, said there wanted but a hurdle, a horse, and a halter to carry him where he might suffer for assenting to them. {c} And that of these public thieves Solomon chiefly speaks here we may well think by the following clause, shewing the cause of their sore and sharp punishment, because they refuse to do judgment.

{b} Gell., lib. xi. cap. 16.

{c} Speed, p. 747.

Ver. 8. The way of man is froward and strange.] And therefore strange, because froward, various, and voluble, so that you know not where to have him, he is so unconstant, nor what to make of him, he is so uncertain and unsettled; "double minded," {#Jas 1:8} double tongued; {#1Ti 3:8} versutulus et versatilis —

“ Qui tantum constans in levitate sua.”

Folieta Galeazo reports of Sforza, Duke of Milan, that he was a very monster, made up and compact of virtue and vice. Such of old were Alcibiades, and likewise Julian, the apostate, of whom Marcellinus saith, that by his vicious errors, obnubilabat gloriae multiplices cursus, he stained his many praiseworthy parts and practices. Galba, and our Richard III are said to have been bad men—good princes.

And of King Henry VIII saith Mr Camden, Fuerunt quidem in eo rege magnae virtutes, nec minora vitia, confuso quodam temperamento mixtae -that is, there was a strange mixture of great virtues, and no less vices found in this king.

But as for the pure, his work is right.] For what reason? He works by rule, and therefore all his actions are uniform. He is also one and the same in all estates of life; as gold is purged in the fire, shines in the water. "Did I use lightness?" saith St Paul, "or is there with me yea yea, and nay nay?" No; "But as God is true, so our word toward you was not yea and nay?" {#2Co 1:17,18} I did not say and unsay, do and undo, &c.

Ver. 9. It is better to dwell in a corner of the house top.] Their house tops were made flat by order of the law. The sense is, then, A man had better abide abroad, sub dio, under the sun exposed to wind and weather, yea, to crowd into a corner, and to live in a little ease, than to cohabit in a convenient house with a contentious woman, that is ever brawling and brangling, that turns coniugium into coniurgium by inserting the dogs' letter (r), and leading her husband a dog's life. Such a one was Zillah, Peninnah, Xantippe, the wife of Phoroneus the lawgiver, who upon his deathbed told his brother he had been a man happy if he had never married. {a} Aristotle {b} affirms, that he that hath miscarried in a wife, hath lost more than half the happiness of his life. Rubius Celer and Albutius Tertius were held happy among the Romans, because the former had lived with a wife three and forty years and eight months, the latter five and twenty years, sine querela, without quarrelling or contending. And this they gave order should be engraven upon their gravestones. {See Trapp on "Pr 19:13"}

Ver. 10. The soul of the wicked desireth evil.] Sinful self-love, the chokeweed of all true love, prompteth the wicked man to envy the good, and wish the evil of all but himself. Hard hearted he is and inhuman, unless it be in a qualm of kindness (as Saul to David, the Egyptians to the Israelites), or merely in dissimulation, as John O'Neale, father to the Earl of Tyrone, that rebel (1598), inscribed himself in all places: I am great John O'Neale, friend to the Queen of England, and foe to all the world. {a} Εμου θανοντος γιαια μιχθετω πυρι, said one wicked emperor; Εμου δε ζωντος, said another, striving to outvie him: When I die, let the world be confounded. Nay, while I live let it be so, said the other monster. {b}

His neighbour finds no favour in his eyes.] Whether he sink or swim, it is no part of his care. What cares that churl Nabal though worthy David die at his door, so long as himself sits warm within, feeding on the fat and drinking of the sweet? The priests and the Levites saw the wounded man that lay half dead, and lent him no help. It was well they fell not upon him and despatched him, as dogs fall upon a man that is down; or, as when a deer is shot, the rest of the herd push him out of their company. Such cruel beasts David complains of; {#Ps 69:26} and such fierce savages St Paul foretells shall be in these last and worst days. Hard hearts shall make hard times. {#2Ti 3:3}

Ver. 11. When the scorner is punished, &c.] {See Trapp on "Pr 19:25"}

And when the wise is instructed.] Or, When he accurately considers the wise, and observes both their integrity and their prosperity, by God's blessing thereupon (for the word imports both), he resolves to play the wise man.

Ver. 12. The righteous man wisely considereth, &c.] He foreseeth its fearful fall, and is not offended at their present prosperity; for God, he knows, will shortly overturn it. This consideration cures him of the fret, as it did David {#Ps 37:1,2} It doth also instruct him in many points of heavenly wisdom, as it did the Church. {#Isa 26:11 1Co 10:11} The destruction of others should be an instruction to us, that we may wash our feet in the blood of the wicked. {#Ps 52:6}

Ver. 13. Whoso stoppeth his ear at the cry, &c.] This was fulfilled in Pharaoh; Haman; the rich glutton; Hatto, archbishop of Mentz; Mauricius, the emperor, and many others, who might have better provided for their own comfort in sickness, and other exigencies, had they been more pitiful to poor people. Whereas now, when they shall lie tossing and tumbling upon their sick beds, roaring as bulls, and "tabering upon their breasts," {#Na 2:7} God will not hear them; men will say, It is good enough for them. All hearts, by a divine hand, will be strangely set off from the merciless, as it befell Sejanus.

Ver. 14. A gift in secret pacifieth anger.] That is, say some, Alms rightly performed {#Mt 6:1} pacifieth God's displeasure—compare #Da 4:27; and the Jews at this day write this sentence of Solomon (in an abbreviation) upon their alms box. {a} This sense suits well with the previous verse; but I conceive the wise man's drift here is to show how prevalent gifts are, if closely conveyed especially—which takes away the shame of open receiving—and what a pave they have to an amicable reconciliation. Thus Jacob pacified Esau; Abigail, David; Hezekiah, the Assyrian that came up against him. {#2Ki 18:24,25} Howbeit this doth not always do the deed. Our chronicler tells us that the Lady de Bruse had, by her virulent and railing tongue, more exasperated the fury of King John, whom she reviled as a tyrant and a murderer of her husband, than could be pacified by her strange present—viz., four hundred kine and one bull, all milk-white, except only the ears, which were red—sent unto the queen. {b} {See Trapp on "Pr 17:8"}

Ver. 15. It is joy to the just to do judgment.] They love it dearly, and therefore cannot but rejoice in it exceedingly: "I rejoice at thy word, as one that findeth great spoil," {#Ps 119:162} wherein the pleasure is usually as much as the profit. Besides, as every flower hath its sweet savour, so every good duty carries meat in the mouth—comfort in the performance. Hence the saints' alacrity in God's service, so far as they are spiritual. "I delight in the law of God, after the inward man," saith St Paul, {#Ro 7:22} who yet but a little before complained of a clog.

But destruction shall be to the workers of iniquity.] Wicked men are great workmen; they put themselves to no small pains in "catering for the flesh to fulfil the lusts thereof"; yea, and this they do with singular delight, as the opposition implies; they "weary themselves to commit iniquity," {#Jer 9:5} and yet they give not over, but lie grinding day and night in the mill of some or other base lust. Now what can come of this, better than utter destruction? which indeed is the just hire of the least sin, and will befall the workers of iniquity, as sure as the coat is on their back or the heart in their body. Ver. 16. The man that wandereth out of the way.] Let him wander while he will that deviateth from the truth according to godliness—he cannot possibly wander so far as to miss hell. God hath sworn in his wrath that no such vagrants shall enter into his rest; {#Ps 95:8-11} nay, "This shall they have of my hand, they shall lie down in sorrow," {#Isa 50:11} they shall rest with Rephaims—if at least they can rest in that restless resting place of hell fire, in that congregation house of giants of Gehenna, where is punishment without pity, misery without mercy, sorrow without succour (help), crying without comfort, mischief without measure, torments without end and past imagination. {#Pr 2:18} {See Trapp on "Pr 2:18"}

Ver. 17. He that loveth pleasure, &c.] Luxury is attended by beggary. Pleasure may be had, but not loved. Isaac loved venison a little better haply than he should; Esau loved hunting, hence he grew profane, and though not a beggar, yet worse. The prodigal in the gospel "spent his substance with riotous living"; {#Lu 15:13} so did Apicius the Roman, who, hearing that there were seven hundred crowns only remaining of a vast estate that his father had left him, feared want, and hanged himself. {a} Marcus Livius, another goods waster, boasted when he died that he had left nothing for his heir, praeter coelum et caenum, more than air and mire. {b} Roger Ascham, schoolmaster to Queen Elizabeth, and her secretary for the Latin tongue, being too much addicted to dicing and cock fighting, lived and died a poor man. {c}

Ver. 18. The wicked shall be a ransom.] Heb., Copher, a cover, or an expiation; as Achan was for Israel, and as those condemned persons among the heathens, that in time of pestilence or contagious infection were offered up by way of public expiation, with these words, περιψημα ημων γενου; Be thou a reconciliation for us. {a} To this custom St Paul seems to allude. {#1Co 4:13} Thus, when Saul's sons were hanged, God's wrath was appeased; {#2Sa 21:1-9} and when guilty Jonah was cast into the sea, all was calm. Thus God gave Egypt for Israel's ransom; yea, Sheba and Ethiopia. {#Isa 43:3} And although he may seem sometimes to "sell his people for nought, and not to increase his wealth by their price," {#Ps 44:12} yet when it comes to a critical point, "I will give men for thee, and people for thy price." {#Isa 43:4} {See Trapp on "Pr 11:8"}

Ver. 19. It is better to dwell in the wilderness.] Among ravenous beasts and venomous serpents, in greatest danger, and want of all necessary accommodation. This is so much worse than the housetop, as an angry and vexatious woman—which, like a mad dog, bites all about her, and makes them as mad as herself—is worse than her that is not so much angry as unquiet, brawling (as dogs bark sometimes in the night) of custom or fancy, and not provoked by any. {See Trapp on "Pr 21:9"}

Ver. 20. There is a treasure to be desired.] He had said before, He that loveth wine and oil shall not be rich. Here he shows, that though these things may not be loved or lavished, yet they may and must be had and heaped up in a way of good husbandry for necessity, yea, for honest affluence; that we may not only live, but live comfortably; that we may not only have prisoner's pittance, so much as will keep us alive, but that we may have plenty of things desirable, both for profit, as treasure, and for delight, as oil. And these things must not be foolishly wasted, as they are usually by unthrifths, lest that make the wife that wants angry and unquiet, as in the former verse.

Ver. 21. He that followeth after righteousness.] Though, for such a measure of it as he desires, he cannot overtake or compass it. If he be but doing at it, Si faciat praecepta, etiamsi non perficiat, if he "think upon God's commandments to do them." {#Ps 103:18} If, though he cannot open the door, yet he is lifting at the latch, he shall be accepted, yea, rewarded. "He that follows after righteousness and mercy, "as an apprentice follows his trade, though he be not his craftsman, shall "surely find righteousness," with life and honour to boot. And is not that a good thing—a treasure to be desired?

Ver. 22. A wise man scaleth the city of the mighty.] Wisdom is that το παγχρηστον, which is profitable for all things; of singular and sovereign use, as in domestic and politic, so in military affairs and businesses. Here prudence is made out to be better than puissance, and one wise man to be too hard for many mighty, though got into the strongest garrisons. In war wisdom is better than strength, saith Solomon more than once. {#Ec 9:16 7:19} How did Archimedes hold out Syracuse against the Roman general by his singular skill and industry! And how many strong cities have been scaled and surprised by warlike wiles and stratagems! as Babylon by Cyrus first, and afterwards by Zopyrus, Jerusalem by Pompey, taking the opportunity of the seventh day, Sabbath, wherein he knew the superstitious Jews would not stir to defend themselves, and many others that might out of histories be instanced. {a}

Ver. 23. Whoso keepeth his mouth and his tongue.] As he that keepeth his doors fast locked, preserveth himself from danger; {See Trapp on "Pr 13:3"} The large and loose use of the tongue brings a man oft to divers straits and miseries.

Ver. 24. Proud and haughty scorner is his name.] An ill name he gets him, and lies under the common reproach of a proud peevish person. He seeks renown by his rage and revenge, as Lamech that vaunted of his valour this way to his wives; Alexander Pheraeus, who consecrated the javelin wherewith he had slain Polyphron; Caelius, the lawyer, who gloried to be held the most froward and frample (brawler) Roman alive, &c. But God loadeth such a man with disgrace, as here, and gives him his due character. Men also will hate him and despise him for a "son of Belial," as Nabal's servants said of him; for a mad frantic fellow, being once enraged, cares not what he says, as Jonas, what he doth, as Saul, who dealing in proud wrath, was so kindled by the devil, that he could not be quenched till he fell into the unquenchable lake. Besides the infamy that will never be washed off, the brand of reproach, like that of Dathan and Abiram, who rose up in proud wrath against Moses and Aaron, and are therefore worthily stigmatised with a "this is that Dathan," {#Nu 26:9} like that other, "this is that King Ahaz," {#2Ch 28:22} and as we commonly say of such a one, that he is a proud fool.

Ver. 25. The desire of the slothful killeth him.] He only wisheth well to himself; but refusing to labour, "pineth away in his iniquity." {#Le 26:39} Neither grace nor wealth is had with wishing; Nemo casu fit sapiens, saith Seneca. {a} Some have a kind of willingness and velleity, a kind of wambling after the best things, but it doth not boil up to the full height of resolution for God.

Carnal men care not to seek after him whom yet they would fain find, saith Bernard; Cupientes consequi sed non et sequi; have heaven they would, but stick at the hard conditions; like faint chapmen, they bid money for heaven, but are loath to come up to the full price for it. Balaam wished well to heaven; so did the young Pharisee in the gospel, that came to Christ hastily, but went away heavily. Herod for a long time desired to see Christ, but never stirred out of doors to see him. Pilate asked Christ, What is truth? but never stayed his answer. The sluggard puts out his arm to rise, and pulls it in again; he turns upon his bed, as the door doth upon the hinges, which yet comes not off for all the turnings, but hangs still, and this is his utter undoing. Men must not think that good things, whether spiritual or temporal, will drop out of the clouds to them, as towns were said to come into Timotheus's toil while he slept. {a} Now, "perform the doing of it," saith St Paul to those lazy Corinthians. {#2Co 8:12} A thirsty man will not only long for drink, but labour after it. A covetous man will not only wish for wealth, but strive to compass it. Yet not every covetous man, I confess; for in the next verse it is said of the sluggard,

Ver. 26. He coveteth greedily all day long.] But these greedy constant coverings come to nothing he makes nothing of them. Meteors have matter enough in the vapours themselves to carry them above the earth, but not enough to unite them to the element of fire, therefore they fall and return to their first principles. So it is with our wishers and woulders. Many came out of Egypt, that never came into Canaan; and why? The land they liked well, but complained, with those spies, of the strength of the Anakims, and the impossibility of the conquest, therefore their carcasses fell in the wilderness; their sluggishness slew them. "They lusted and had not, they killed" themselves with coveting, as in the former verse, and "desired to have," as here, "but could not obtain." {#Jas 4:2}

But the righteous giveth and spareth not.] Neither necessity nor niggardice hindereth him; he hath it, and he holds that he hath no more than he giveth. He is both painful and pitiful, and what he cannot do for the poor himself, he stirs up others to do; so far is he from forbidding, or hindering any from showing mercy. Some render the words thus: The righteous giveth, and forbiddeth not. "Give a portion," saith he to his richer friend, "to seven, and also to eight, for thou knowest not what evil shall be upon the earth." {#Ec 11:2} {See Trapp on "Ec 11:2"}

Ver. 27. The sacrifice of the wicked, &c.] {See Trapp on "Pr 15:8"}

How much more when he bringeth it, &c.] As Balak and Balaam did. {#Nu 23:1,2} As those that present ex rapine holocaustum, a sacrifice of what they have got by rapine and robbery; and as those likewise that ask good things at God's hand, that they may "consume them upon their lusts." {#Jas 4:3} Let the wicked bring his sacrifice with never so good an intention, he is an abomination; but if with an evil mind, his dissembled sanctity is double iniquity, as if a man think by observing the Sabbath to take out a license to walk licentiously all the week long; or by praying in a morning to get a dispensation to do evil all day after. I have read of one that would haunt the taverns, theatres, and whore houses at London all day; but he durst not go forth without private prayer in the morning, and then would say at his departure, Now devil do thy worst. {a} The Circassians are said to divide their life between rapine and repentance. {b} The Papists, many of them, make account of confessing, as drunkards do of vomiting. When we have sinned, say they, we must confess, and when we have confessed, we must sin again, that we may also confess again, and make work for new indulgences and jubilees. {c}

Ver. 28. A false witness shall perish.] {See Trapp on "Pr 19:5"} The Scythians had a law that if any man did duo peccata contorquere, bind two sins together, a lie and an oath, he was to lose his head, because this was the way to take away all faith and truth among men.

But the man that heareth speaketh constantly.] He testifieth confidently what he knoweth assuredly; he is always also in the same tale, as Paul was in the plea to the chief captain, to Felix, to Festus, and to Agrippa. Not so Bellarmine. How oft doth that loud liar forget himself, and write contradictions? As for instance, in one place he affirmeth that it can by no means be proved by Scripture that any part of Scripture is the very word of God. Sed mendax redarguit seipsum, saith Pareus. {a} But the liar confutes himself by saying elsewhere, besides other arguments to evince the divinity of the canonical Scripture, it giveth sufficient testimony to itself. {b}

{a} Paraeus in #Re 22:16.

{b} Bel de Verb. Dei, lib. i. cap. 2.

Ver. 29. A wicked man hardeneth his face.] Procaciter obfirmat vultum suum, so the Vulgate renders it. The false witness {#Pr 21:28} impudently defends, or at least extenuates and excuses his falsities. Frontem perfricat, assuens mendacium mendacio, as the Hebrew hath it. {#Ps 119:69} He thinks to make good one lie by another; to outface the truth, to overbear it with a bold countenance. It seems to be a metaphor from a traveller that sets his face against the wind and weather, and holds on his journey, though he be taking long strides towards destruction. {a}

But as for the upright, he directeth his way.] He proceeds warily, weighs his words before he utters them, and delivers nothing but the naked truth. And truth is like our first parents, most beautiful when naked. Some interpreters take this verse as setting forth the difference between the wicked and the godly, without any relation to the false and true witness. {#Pr 21:28} And then it is Sententia sapiente digna, saith one, tam paucis verbis tam profundum sensum cumulans; a sentence worthy of Solomon, as having so much in a little.

Ver. 30. There is no wisdom against the Lord.] That is, they are all to no purpose. If God deny concurrence, and influence, the arm of human power and policy, as Jeroboam's, shrinks up presently. {#Ps 2:1-3 33:10,11 62:3} {See Trapp on "Pr 19:21"} Excellently Gregory— Divinum consilium dum devitatur impletur; humana sapientia dum reluctatur, comprehenditur. God's decree is fulfilled by those that have least mind to it. Human wisdom, while it strives for masteries, is overmastered.

Ver. 31. The horse is prepared against the day, &c.] A very serviceable creature, and in battle full of terror; so swift in service that the Persians dedicated him to their god, the sun, ασπερ το ταλιστον το ταχυτατω, as Pausanias hath it. But as the sun in heaven can neither be outrun nor stopped in his race, so neither by men, though wise, nor by means, though likely, can God's purposes be disappointed. "A horse is a vain thing for safety; neither shall he deliver any by his great strength." {#Ps 33:17}

But safety (or victory) is of the Lord.] He gives it to which side he pleaseth, as he did to the Israelites in the conquest of Canaan, though they had no horses to help them, as their adversaries had, and chariots too, both Egyptians and Canaanites.

Ver. 1. A good name is rather to be chosen.] Heb., A name, as "a wife," for a good wife. {#Pr 18:22} Better no wife than an ill wife, so better no name than an ill name. This good name proceeding from a good conscience, this honour from virtue, {#Isa 43:4} this perfume of faith and obedience, this splendour and sparkle of the "white stone," which only shines upon heavenly hearts—is far more desirable than great riches. For, first, These oft take away the life of the owners thereof. {#Pr 1:19} The greater wealth, the greater spoil awaits a man. As a tree with thick and large boughs, every man desires to lop him. Whereas a good name saves a man oft from that danger, as it did Jonathan, whom the people rescued. Secondly, Riches breed and bring their cares and cumbers with them. Qui habet terras habet guerras, saith the proverb; many lawsuits and other vexations, &c.; when a good name, as a precious ointment poured out, gets loving favour, with which it is therefore fitly coupled in this text. Thirdly, Riches are enjoyed but till death at utmost; but a good name outlives the man, and is left behind him for a blessing. {#Isa 65:15 Pr 10:7} {See Trapp on "Pr 10:7"} Other people went beyond God's Israel in wealth and riches, but none in fame and renown. {#2Sa 7:23 De 4:6} Fourthly, Riches are oft gotten by fame. Let a man's name be up, and there will be great recourse to him; but let him once crack his credit, and riches cannot repair him. Infamy will not be bought off with money. Lastly, Riches are common to good men with bad men; but a good name, truly so called, is proper to God's peculiar, confined to the communion of saints. He was therefore a better husband than divine that first called riches bona, goods, And that heathen was nearer the truth than many profligate professors of it who said, Ego si bonam famam servasso sat dives ero: {a} that is, If I may but keep a good name, I have wealth enough.

And loving favour rather than silver and gold.] Which what is it else but white and red earth? and therefore no way fit to come in competition with good repute and report among the best, such as Christ had, {#Lu 2:52} and Joseph, and Daniel, and David, and Demetrius; {#3Jo 12} and they had it as a special favour from God, who fashions men's opinions, and hides his people from the strife of tongues. {#Job 5:21 Ps 31:20}

Ver. 2. The rich and the poor meet together.] They have mutual need one of another, and meet many times, as it were, in the midway, by an alteration of their condition. "They that were full were hired forth for bread, and the hungry are no more hired." {#1Sa 2:5} "The mighty are put down from their seats, and those of low degree are exalted." {#Lu 1:53}

The Lord is the maker of them all.] The maker of the men, the maker of their estates, and the maker of that change and alteration which often happeneth, that the one might become grateful, the other humble. See #Job 31:15.

Ver. 3. A prudent man foreseeth an evil, &c.] Prevision is the best means of prevention. "A wise man's eyes are in his head," {#Ec 2:14} "his heart is also at his right hand." {#Ec 10:2} The Chinese say of themselves that all other nations of the world see but with one eye, they only with two. The Italians give out that they only do sapere ante factum, look before they leap, forecast an evil before it befall them. But these are praises proper to them that have learned holy and heavenly wisdom, that by certain sights and signs discern a tempest in the clouds, and seek seasonable shelter under the hollow of God's hand, "under the shadow of his wings." Such prudent persons were Noah, Joseph, Jonadab, Josiah, the Christians at Pella, &c.

But the fool passeth on.] Pusheth on without fear or wit, as being resolved to have his will, whatever it stand him in.

And is punished.] As a just reward of his rashness. Sin ever ends tragically. Flagitium et flagellum, ut acus et filum. Who ever waxed fierce against God and prospered? {#Job 9:4} "With the froward thou wilt wrestle," saith David. {#Ps 18:26} "Upon the wicked God shall rain snares," &c. {#Ps 11:6} And then, ut leo cassibus irretitus dixit, si praescivissem, as the lion, when he was caught in the hunter's toil, said, If I had foreknown this mischief, I would have shunned it. So these after wits, these post masters, these Epimetheuses, shall come in (but all too late) with their fool's 'Had-I-wist,' which they should have timeously foreseen and prevented.

Ver. 4. By humility and the fear of the Lord.] Heb., The heel of humility, &c. The humble heart that lies low, and "hearkens what God the Lord will say unto it," that follows him trembling, as the people followed Saul, {#ISa 13:7} shall have hard at the heels of it riches—a sufficiency, if not a superfluity—and honour, which is to be chosen before riches, {#Pr 22:1} {#See Trapp on "Pr 22:1"} and life, above the danger of those thorns and snares mentioned in the next verse; not life present only, but "length of days for ever and ever." {#Ps 21:4} Oh the $\mu\upsilon\sigma\iota\omicron\mu\alpha\kappa\alpha\rho\iota\sigma\tau\eta\varsigma$, the heaped up happiness of a man that humbles and trembles before the Lord! He that doth the former, cannot but do the latter. Hence that close connection of these two graces in this text, "By humility, the fear of the Lord"; so the original runs without the grammatical copulative and, to show that they go always together—yea, the one is as it were predicated upon the other. Neither want they their reward—"riches," "hohour," "life." What things be these? Who would not turn spiritual purchaser?

Ver. 5. Thorns and snares are in the way of the froward.] In opposition to the reward of righteousness; {#Pr 22:4} which is to say, "The ungodly are not so." Or if they have riches, they prove thorns to them to prick and choke their souls; if honour, and long life to enjoy it, these prove snares to them. Of carnal hearts it may be said, as Pharaoh said of the Israelites, "They are entangled in the land, the wilderness hath shut them in." {#Ex 14:3} They have treasures in the field, of wheat, barley, and oil, as those ten men had, {#Jer 41:8} and are therefore loath to die. And yet before they die—live they never so long in all abundance of riches and honours—God can bring them to that pass that Charles V was at, whom of all men the world judged most happy. Philip of Mornay reports of him that he cursed his honours in his old age, his victories, trophies, riches, saying, Abite hinc, abite longe: Away, away, get you far away.

He that doth keep his soul, shall be far from them.] As well from the wicked man's miseries as his misdemeanours; he keeps aloof from both; he dares not meddle with the hole of the asp, lest he meet with a sting. Custos animae elongabit se, & c. Moneo te iterumque monebo, saith Lactantius to his Demetrian, ne oblectamenta ista terrae pro magnis aut veris bonis habere te credas: quae sunt non tantum fallacia quia dubia, verum etiam insidiosa quia dulcia. {a} Set not thine heart upon the asses, since thou art in election for a kingdom, and the hearts of all Israel are upon thee.

Ver. 6. Train up a child in the way he should go.] Or, According to his measure and capacity, dropping good things by degrees into his narrow mouthed vessel, and whetting the same upon his memory by often repeating, as the knife by oft going over the whetstone (it is Moses's comparison) {a} becomes keen and useful. This is the way to make them expert and exact, and to secure them from Satan, for we are not ignorant of his wiles. It is reported of the harts of Scythia, that they teach their young ones to leap from bank to bank, from rock to rock, from one turf to another, by leaping before them, which otherwise they would never practise, by which means, when they are hunted, no beast can ever take them. So if men exercise their children unto godliness while they are young, Satan, that mighty hunter, shall never have them for his prey. They will not be young saints, old devils, as the profane proverb hath it; but young saints, old angels. Now, as all children should be carefully catechised and well principled, so those Timothies especially that are designed to the work of the ministry. Quintilian's orator must, from two or three years old, be inured and accustomed to the best and purest words, very well pronounced unto him by his nurses, parents, handmaids, as soon as ever he begins to babble. Quanto id in theologo futuro expetendum, curandumque magis? {b} How much more, saith a learned man, should this be done by one that is to be a divine?

{a} Shanan and shanah; repeterere sicut in acuendo. {#De 6:6}

{b} Amama in Attib.

Ver. 7. The rich ruleth over the poor.] And that with rigour, as Pharaoh did over Israel, as those imperious mammonists in St James's time that oppressed and subjugated their poorest brethren, trampling upon them with the feet of intolerable insolence and cruelty. {#Jas 2:6} "Yet now our flesh is as the flesh of our brethren, our children as their children," said those poor Jews in Nehemiah, who pleads their cause most effectually. {#Ne 5:7-13} Ubi quot verba, tot tela, quae nimirum animam divitum percellant, fodicent et lancinent, as one saith in another case, He sets upon them with irresistible rhetoric, and makes them restore—which yet rich oppressors are very hardly drawn to do. Every grain of riches hath a vermin of pride and ambition in it. {#1Ti 6:17} {See Trapp on "1Ti 6:17"} Men's blood riseth together with their good, and they think that everything must be as they would have it. But especially if they have "drawn the poor into their nets" {#Ps 10:9} -that is, into their bonds, debts, mortgages, as Chrysostom expounds it; then they not only rob, but ravish them; to their cruelty they join dishonesty; there is neither equity nor mercy to be had at their hands.

Ver. 8. He that soweth iniquity, shall reap vanity.] The usurer and cruel creditor soweth his money, his mammon of iniquity (that ungain grain), upon his poor debtors; and whether it be a barren year or a fruitful, a good soil or a bad, luna affert menstruos sensus, he hath his constant pay, yea, his use upon use, according to that Greek verse,

Ἔστι τοκος προ τοκοιο, τοκος τε μεν εστι και αλλος.'

Now, can such increase be blest? Shall not those that thus sow the wind be sure to reap the whirlwind?

And the rod of his anger shall fail.] That is, that tyrannical power which he exerciseth upon others, as his underlings, shall be broken.

God will take out of his hand the rod wherewith he hath beaten his fellow servants, and waste it upon his own back to the very stump.

Ver. 9. He that hath a bountiful eye shall be blessed.] How Amalek, the licking people, as the name imports, I mean, the nation of usurers and proud lenders, shall speed, hath been spoken already. Now, on the other side, the bountiful eye, the cheerful giver (as the Septuagint, {a} and after them St Paul, render, or rather expound, this text), shall be abundantly blessed, for he gives with all his heart; he "draws out" not his sheaf only but "his soul to the hungry." {#Isa 58:10} Dat bene, dat multum, quia dat cum munere vulture: He spares it out of his own belly to give to the hungry, as some have here gathered from the words "his bread," that which was appointed for his own eating—he voluntarily fasteth from a meal now and then that he may bestow it upon the needy, and he shall not lose his reward.

Ver. 10. Cast out the scorner.] Or, The evil interpreter, that construes everything to the worst, and so sows dissension. This is an evil instrument, and must be cashiered good company; the place where such a trouble town lives, longs for a vomit to spew him out. There is nothing that may not be taken with either hand. It is a spiritual unmannerliness to take it with the left, as that proud Pharisee did, {#Lu 7:34} and to cast it as an apple of contention among others. They that do thus are the pests of families, and other societies, and must therefore be carefully cast out with scoffing Ishmael, as ever we desire to avoid strife, suits at law, reproach, and many more mischiefs.

Ver. 11. He that loveth pureness of heart.] That is vexed at his inward pollutions, and affecteth (what he can never fully effect) to be pure as God is pure. {#1Jo 3:3} He that hath gotten that pure lip, {#Zep 3:9} called here the grace of his lips, and elsewhere the "law of grace," {#Pr 31:26} he that can skill of those good words that do ingratiate with God and man (#Ge 49:21, compared with #De 33:23), he is fit to make a courtier, a favourite, such as was Joseph, Mordecai, Daniel, who though he used not always verbis byssinis, soft and silken words, but delivered heavy messages from God to Nebuchadnezzar and Belshazzar, yet God so wrought their hearts, though tyrants, that they greatly honoured him and highly preferred him. And when, out of his love to pureness of heart, he chose rather affliction than sin, to be cast to the lions than to bear a lion in his own bosom by offending his conscience, God made the king's heart yearn towards him; so that this plain dealing "Daniel prospered in the reign of Darius, and in the reign of Cyrus the Persian." {#Da 6:28}

Ver. 12. The eyes of the Lord preserve knowledge.] That is, Knowing persons. Those in the former verse that love truth in the inward parts, and hold this a rule, Truth must be spoken, however it be taken; these, howsoever they may suffer for a season, as Daniel in the den, Micaiah in the stock house, yet the watchful providence of God will preserve them, and provide for them. He will clear their innocence, and so plead for them in the hearts of greatest princes, that they shall find the truth of this divine proverb, and the falsity of that other so common among men, Obsequium amicos, veritas odium parit; Flattery gets friends, but truth hatred.

And he overthroweth the words (or matters) of the transgressors.] That is, Of the court parasites, who speak only pleasing things, et saepe leonum laudibus murem obruunt, flatter abominably, as those in #Ac 12:21-23 did Herod; as the false prophets did Ahab. God will confute and convince their soothing words of singular vanity; he will also overthrow their matters, attempts, practices, "as a man wipeth a dish, turning it upside down." {#2Ki 21:13} See in that claw back Amalekite, {#2Sa 1:4-10} in Ahithophel, Haman, Sejanus, &c.

Ver. 13. The slothful man saith, There is a lion, &c.] 'The lion is not so fierce as is painted,' saith the Spanish proverb; much less this sluggard's lion, a mere fiction of his own brain to cover and colour over his idleness. He pretends two lions for failing; first, Leo est foris, There is a lion abroad, or in the field, where his work lies, {#Ps 104:23} and another in the streets; -a likely matter; lions haunt not in streets, but in woods and wildernesses. Here is no talk of Satan, "that roaring lion," that lies couchant in the sluggard's bed with him, and prompts him to these senseless excuses. Nor yet of the "lion of the tribe of Judah," who will one day send out summons for sleepers, and tearing the very caul of their hearts in sunder, send them packing to their place in hell. {#Mt 10:28} But to hell never came any yet that had not some pretence for their coming thither. The flesh never wants excuses. Corrupt nature needs not be taught to tell her own tale. Sin and shifting came into the world together; and as there is no wool so coarse but will take some colour: so no sin so gross but admits of a defence. Sin and Satan are alike in this, they cannot abide to appear in their own likeness. Some deal with their souls as others deal with their bodies; when their beauty is decayed, they desire to hide it from themselves by false glasses, and from others by painting; so their sins from themselves by false glosses, and from others by idle excuses.

Ver. 14. The month of a strange woman.] Diabolus capite blanditur, ventre oblectat, cauda ligat, saith Rupertus. These she sinners, as their gallants call them, are most dangerous. {See Trapp on "Pr 2:16"} {See Trapp on "Pr 5:3"} Solomon had the woeful experience of it; {#Ec 7:26} and Samson, {#Jud 16:18-21} who

Quem fera non potuit vincere, vicit hera.”

How did David muddy himself in this deep pit, and there might have stuck in the mire, had not God drawn him out by a merciful violence, and purged him with hyssop from that abhorred filth? {#Ps 51:7}

He that is abhorred of the Lord shall fall therein.] As the Jesuits, those odious Connubisanctifugae Commeretricitegae, too often do; though they boast that they can talk and dally with the fairest women without danger, and the people must believe no otherwise, but that when they are kissing a woman, they are giving her good counsel. David George, that execrable heretic, was so far from accounting adulteries, fornications, incests, &c., for being any sins, that he did recommend them to his most perfect scholars as acts of grace and mortification; and was confident that the whole world would submit to his doctrine. {a} Peccatum peccatum trahit, as the Hebrew proverb hath it. One sin draws on another, and the latter is oft a punishment of the former; God, by a peculiar kind of revenge, delivering up such to a reprobate sense, or a mind disallowed or abhorred of God, as the apostle's word {b} {#Ro 1:28} signifies.

Ver. 15. Foolishness is bound in the heart, &c.] As a pack or fardle is bound to a horse's back. Error and folly be the knots of Satan, wherewith he ties children to the stake to be burnt in hell. Better see their brains dashed out against the stones, saith one, than suffer the ignorance of God to abide in their heads. Therefore, that we may loose the bands of death and works of the devil, parents must bring their sons in their arms, and their daughters upon their shoulders, to the house of God, that they may learn to know him. {#Isa 49:22} They must also see to their profiting, and exact of them a daily growth, "nurturing," as well as nourishing them, {#Eph 6:4} -the one being as needful as the other, -and using the rod where words will not do; so to chase away that evil by chastisement, seasoned with admonition, and seconded with prayer, that else will prove pernicious to their souls. Eli brought up his sons to bring down his house. David's sons were undone by their father's fondness. A fair hand, we say, makes a foul wound. Correction is a kind of cure, saith Aristotle; {a} and God usually blesseth it to that purpose. "Corrections of instructions are the way of life." {#Pr 6:23}

{a} Ιατρεια τις η παιδεια.

Ver. 16. He that oppresseth the poor, &c.] By fraud or force, or any indirect means. This man lays his foundation in firework, {#Job 20:26} he walks upon a mine of gunpowder; "brimstone is scattered upon his habitation"; {#Job 18:15} if but a flash of God's lightning light upon it, all will be on fire, all blown up and brought to nothing.

And he that giveth to the rich.] Either to ingratiate and curry favour for countenancing their oppressive practices, or with a mind to get more than they give—for so saith one, that clause, To increase their riches, must here be repeated—which is a more artificial kind of selling their gifts, than if they had professedly set them to sale, as the Greek orator observeth. {a} Both these take a wrong course to be rich. The way were to give to the poor, and not to oppress them, and to "bring presents to him that ought to be feared," {#Ps 76:11} since it is he alone that "giveth us all things richly to enjoy." {#1Ti 6:17}

{a} Isocr. ad Demon.

Ver. 17. Bow down thine ear and hear.] Here begins, say some interpreters, the third book of Solomon's Proverbs—as the second began at chapter ten. And indeed he here seems to assume a new kind of bespeaking his son, different from his discourse in the preceding twelve chapters; and much like that in the first nine.

And apply thy heart, &c.] q.d., Call up the ears of thy mind to the ears of thy body, that one sound may pierce both at once; otherwise thou wilt be like the wolf in the fable: thou wilt never attain to any more divine learning than to spell Pater, father, and when thou shouldst come to put together, and to put thy heart to it, as Solomon's phrase here is, instead of Pater father thou wilt say Agnus, thy mind running a-madding after profit and pleasures of the world, as hath been once before noted.

Ver. 18. For it is a pleasant thing if thou keep them within thee.] Heb., In thy belly; that is, in thine inwards. Truth it is, that St John found the little book he ate—whether we understand it of the revelation only, or of the whole Bible, which Bishop Bonner's chaplain called in scorn his little pretty God's book, it much matters not—bitter in his belly, though sweet in his mouth, {#Re 10:10} because ministers find it grievous to be kept from making known the whole counsel of God to their people. But the word of God attentively heard, and by a later meditation well digested and incorporated into the soul, is sweeter than honey, as David felt it; and yields more pleasure than all the tasteless fooleries of this present world.

They shall withal be fitted in thy lips.] Thou shalt need no other help to discourse: thou shalt get a singular dexterity and volubility of holy language, being able to utter thy mind in pure Scripture—Loquamur verba Scripturae, saith that incomparable Peter Ramus, utamur sermone Spiritus Sancti -thou shalt "so speak and so do, as one that must be judged by that law of liberty." {#Jas 2:12}

Ver. 19. That thy trust may be in the Lord.] Only a divine word can beget a divine faith, and herein the Scripture excels all human writings, none of which can bring our hearts to the "obedience of faith." I can speak it by experience, saith Erasmus, {a} that there is little good to be got by the Scripture, if a man read it cursorily and carelessly; but if he exercise himself therein constantly and conscionably, he shall feel such a force in it, as is not to be found again in any other book whatsoever. I know, saith Peter Martyr, {b} that there are many that will never believe what we say of the power of God's word hidden in the heart; and not a few that will jeer us, and think we are mad for saying so. But oh that they would but be pleased to make trial! Male mihi sit (ita enim in tanta causa iurare usim ausim), nisi tandem capiantur. Let it never go well with me—for so I am bold to swear in so weighty a business—if they find not themselves strangely taken and transformed into the same image, if they pass not into the likeness of this heavenly pattern. The Ephesians "trusted in God as soon as they heard the word of truth"; they "believed," and were "sealed." {#Eph 1:13} And the Thessalonians' faith was famous all the churches over, when once the gospel "came to them in power." {#1Th 1:5,8}

To thee, even to thee.] Men must read the Scriptures as they do the statute books, holding themselves as much concerned therein as any other, threatening themselves in every threat, binding themselves in every precept, blessing themselves in every promise, resolving to obey God in all things; as convinced of this, that these are verba vivenda, non legenda, Words to be lived, and not read only.

{a} Erasm., Praef in Lucam.

Ver. 20. Have not I written to thee excellent things?] Heb., Princely things; principles for princes, rare and royal sentences. The word signifies, say some, the third man in the kingdom for authority and dignity. Others read the words thus: Have not I three times written for thee concerning counsels and knowledge, -meaning his three books, proverbial, penitential, nuptial. The Canticles were penned perhaps in his younger years, saith one, {a} when his affections were more warm, active, and lively in spirituals; the Proverbs in his manly, ripe age, when his prudence and parts were at highest, most grave, solid, settled; Ecclesiastes in his old age, &c.

{a} Key of the Bible, by Mr Roberts.

Ver. 21. That I might make thee know the certainty.] And so find firm footing for thy faith. {#Lu 1:3,5} "These words of God are true," saith the angel. {#Re 21:5} These words are "faithful and true" {#Re 22:6} -void of all insincerity and falsehood. How can it be otherwise, whenas they are, as Gregory {a} speaks, Cor et anima, the very heart and soul of the God of truth? There must needs be a certainty in these words of truth, neither need we hang in suspense. When some took Christ for John Baptist, some for Elias, some for Jeremiah; But "whom say ye that I am?" {#Mt 16:14,15} -to teach that Christ would not have men stand doubtful, halt between two, be in religion as beggars are in their way, ready to go which way soever the staff falleth; but to "search the Scriptures," and grounding thereon, to get a certainty, a "full assurance of understanding," {#Col 2:2} so as to be able to say, "We have believed, therefore have we spoken." {#2Co 4:13}

Ver. 22. Rob not the poor, &c.] Here some caviller will be apt to cry out, Quid dignum tauto feret hic promissor hiatus? After so promising a preface, and such wooing of attention, we looked for some new matter, and that of best note too. But behold here is nothing but what we had before. It is truth, saith the wise man; and yet I must tell you, that "to write the same things, to me indeed is not grievous, but for you it is safe." {#Php 3:1} See the like in #Ps 49:1-3, &c. The scope of the psalm is to show the happy and secure estate of the saints in trouble, and the slippery condition of the wicked when at their height. Now whereas some might object and say, This is an ordinary argument, we have heard of it a hundred times; the Psalmist answers, that yet this is the great "wisdom" that he will speak of, and the "dark saying" that he will open. And hereunto he makes a solemn Oyez!—"Hear this, all ye people, and give ear all ye inhabitants of the world."

Because he is poor.] As the greater fish devour the lesser, and as the larger falls upon the cur and worries him, only because he is bigger than the other. This is a brutish ferity. See #Ps 10 And if those that relieve not the poor shall be damned, surely they that rob them shall be double damned.

Neither oppress the afflicted.] The poor man must needs be an afflicted man, obnoxious to all manner of injuries and hard usages. But God, who is the poor man's king—more truly so called than James IV of Scotland was—takes order here, that no man oppress or wrong him, either at the gate of his house, whither he comes begging, or at the gate of the city, where he sues for redress of injury; let not might suppress right, lest some Cato complain, as once, and not without cause, that poor thieves sit in the stocks, when greater thieves sit on the seats of judicature. {a}

{a} Gel., lib. xi. cap. 18.

Ver. 23. For the Lord will plead their cause.] Without fee, for those that come to him forma pauperis, and without fear of their oppressors, against whom he will plead with pestilence and with blood, {#Eze 38:22} as he did against the house of Saul for the poor Gibeonites, and against Ahab for Naboth.

And spoil the soul (or life) of those that spoiled them.] A poor man's livelihood is his life. {#Mr 12:42-44 Lu 8:43} He is in his house as a snail in his shell; crush that, and you kill him quite. God therefore, who loves par pari referre, to pay oppressors home in their own coin, will have life for life, if they may escape so, and not be cast to hell among those cruel ones. {#Pr 5:9} {See Trapp on "Pr 5:9"} Oh that these cannibals would think of this, before the cold grave hold their bodies, and hot hell hold their souls.

Ver. 24. Make no friendship with an angry man.] Anger is a short madness; it is a leprosy breaking out of a burning, {#Le 13:25} and renders a man unfit for civil society; for his unruly passions cause the climate where he lives to be like the torrid zone, too hot for any to live near him. The dog days continue with him all the year long; he rageth, and eateth firebrands, so that every man that will provide for his own safety must flee from him, as from a nettling, dangerous and unsociable creature, fit to live alone as dragons and wild beasts, or to be looked on only through a grate, as they; where, if they will do mischief, they may do it to themselves only: as Bajazet the great Turk, who, being taken by Tamerlane, and carried up and down in an iron cage, beat out his own brains against the bars thereof. {a}

{a} Turkish Hist.

Ver. 25. Lest thou learn his ways.] As a man is an imitating creature, and easily conformed to the company he keepeth. Sin is also very spreading, and more infectious than the plague: this of rash anger especially, whereunto being naturally inclined, we shall easily get a habit of frowardness. Entireness with wicked consorts is one of the strongest chains of hell, and binds us to a participation both of sin and punishment.

And get a snare to thy soul.] This is all thou art like to get by such men's company. An angry man—a master of anger, as the Hebrew here hath it, or rather one that is mastered by his anger, and enslaved thereunto—is fitly compared by one to a cock of the game, that quarrelsome creature, that is still bloody with the blood either of others or of himself. He flies upon his best friends sometimes, as Alexander did, and slays those whom he would revive again with his own heart blood. Dogs in a chase bark oft at their best friends.

Ver. 26. Be not thou of them.] {See Trapp on "Pr 6:1"} {See Trapp on "Pr 6:2"} {See Trapp on "Pr 6:3"}

Ver. 27. If thou hast nothing to pay.] And yet art gotten into the usurer's furnace, he will leave thee at last neither metal nor matter.

Ver. 28. Remove not the ancient landmark.] Unless ye covet a curse. {#De 27:17} Let levellers look to it, and know that property is God's ordinance; {#Ac 5:4 Ps 17:14} that magistracy is the hedge of a nation; {a} and that "he that breaks a hedge, a serpent shall bite him"; {#Ec 10:8} that the ministry is Christ's own institution; {#Eph 4:11} and that lay preachers may look to speed as Nadab and Abihu, as Uzzah and Uzziah, or as other usurpers: {See Trapp on "De 19:14"}

{a} ερμα πολεως.

Ver. 29. Seest thou a man diligent.] God loves nimbleness; "what thou doest, do quickly," said Christ to Judas, though it were so ill a business that he was about. Princes love such, and employ them, as Pharaoh did Joseph, and those that were men of activity among his brethren. Solomon also made use of Jeroboam for the same reason, though that was not the wisest act that ever he did. {#1Ki 11:28} How dear was Daniel to Darius, because, though sick, yet he despatched the king's business! What favourites to our Henry VIII were Wolsey, Cromwell, Cranmer, for like reason! A diligent man shall not sit long in a low place. Or if he do all the days of his life, yet if his diligence proceed out of conscience, "he shall stand before the King" of kings when he dies. And surely if Solomon's servants were held happy for this, and the greatest reward Solomon could promise the diligent is this in the text, what an inconceivable honour must it needs be to look for ever upon the face of God, and, angel-like, stand in his presence!

Chapter 23

Ver. 1. When thou sittest to eat.] See my Common Place of Abstinence.

Consider diligently what is before thee.] And "feed with fear," {#Jude 12} lest thou lose by thy luxury that praise and preferment that thou hadst gotten by thine industry. {#Pr 22:9}

‘Non minor est virtus quam quaerere parta tueri.’

Ver. 2. And put a knife to thy throat.] Put into thy throat, as Aben Ezra reads it, rather than offend by inordinate appetite. Some read it thus: For thou puttest a knife to thy throat, if thou be a man given to appetite. Thou shortenest thy life, and diggest, as it were, thine own grave with thine own teeth. Meat kills as many as the musket; the board as the sword. Tenuis mensa sanitatis mater: {a} but much meat, much malady.

{a} Chrysost.

Ver. 3. Be not desirous of his dainties.] It is a shame for a saint to be a slave to his palate. Isaac loved venison too, too well; the disciples are cautioned by Christ, {#Lu 21:34} who well enough knew where they were weakest.

For they are deceitful meat.] There is a hook under that bait; it may prove as dangerous as Jonathan's honey, of which he had no sooner tasted but his head was forfeited. There is a deceitfulness in sin, {#Heb 3:13} a lie in vanity, {#Jon 2:8} transit voluptas, manet dolor—dolor est etiam ipsa voluptas.

Ver. 4. Labour not to be rich.] The courtier is still at his lesson. Many have gotten into princes' palaces, into places of profit, fat offices, mind nothing more than the feathering of their own nests, raising of their own houses, filling of their own coffers. Such were Shebna, Haman, Sejanus, of whom Tacitus makes this report: Palam compositus pudor; intus summa adipiscendi libido, that he made show of modesty, but was extremely covetous; insomuch, saith Seneca, {a} that he thought all to be lost that he got not for himself. How much better Joseph, Nehemiah, Daniel, &c., who, being wholly for the public, as they had nothing to lose, so they had as little to get, but were above all price or sale.

Cease from thine own wisdom.] Cast away that carnal policy that would prompt thee to get rem, rem, quocunque modo rem, wealth of any fashion. This wisdom is by St James fitly styled "earthly, sensual, devilish." "Earthly," managing the lusts of the eye to the ends of gain; "sensual," managing the lusts of the eye to the ends of pleasure; and "devilish," managing the pride of life unto ends of power (#Jas 3:15 1Jo 2:14,15)

{a} Quicquid non acquiritur damnum est. -Sen.

Ver. 5. Wilt thou set thine eyes, &c.] Heb., Wilt thou cause thine eyes to flee after? &c. Wilt thou flee a fool's pitch, and go hawking after that which cannot be had? or, if had, will not pay for the pains—countervail the cost? Wilt thou cast a leering look after such vanities?

Upon that which is not.] That hath no solid subsistence, though the foolish world call it substance. "The fashion of this world passeth away." (#1Co 7:31) The Greek word there used, οχημα, intimateth that there is nothing of any firmness or solid consistence in the creature. Heaven only hath a foundation. (#Heb 11:10) Earth hath none, but is "hanged upon nothing," as Job speaketh. "Ye rejoice in a thing of nought," saith the prophet to them that "drank wine in bowls," &c. (#Am 6:6,13)

For riches certainly make themselves wings.] As the heathens feigned of their god Pluto. Under these wings let the master hide himself, as #Isa 28:15; yet with those wings will they fly away, without once taking leave, leaving nothing but the print of talons in his heart to torment him. Riches, saith one, were never true to those that trusted them. To fly from us they make themselves great eagles' wings; to fly to us, or after us, Ne passerinas quidem, {a} not so much as old sparrows' wings. Temporals, saith another, {b} are as transitory as a hasty headlong torrent—a shadow, a ship, a bird, an arrow, a post that passeth by; or if you can name anything of swifter wing or sooner gone.

{b} Mr Bolton.

Ver. 6. Eat thou not the bread of him that hath an evil eye.] That is, of a miserly muckworm, that wisheth thee choked for so doing, even then when he maketh greatest show of hospitality and humanity.

Ver. 7. For as he thinketh in his heart, so is he.] Mens cuiusque is est quisque: -The man is as his mind is; or as he thinketh in his heart, so he speaketh. He cannot so dissemble, but that soon he blurts out some word, or shows some sign of his sordid disposition. Some read it thus: For as he grudgeth his own soul, so he will say unto thee, Eat, drink, &c. As he starves his own genius, and cannot afford himself a good meal's meat, so he grudgeth at his guests whom yet he bids welcome. Christ doth not so. {#So 5:1}

Ver. 8. The morsel which thou hast eaten.] That is, that which thou hast eaten, shall be so ill-sauced that thou shalt wish it up again, and thou shalt repent thee of thy compliments, or of whatsoever good speech thou hast used at table; which was the salt wherewith our Saviour used to sprinkle the dishes wherever he dined.

Ver. 9. Speak not in the ears of a fool.] That is, of a wilful fool, that seldom asketh council, but never followeth any, as it is said of James, King of Scotland. {a} {See Trapp on "Pr 9:7"} {See Trapp on "Pr 9:8"} {See Trapp on "Mt 7:6"}

{a} Daniel's History.

Ver. 10. Remove not the ancient landmark.] {See Trapp on "Pr 22:28"}

Ver. 11. For their Redeemer is mighty.] "The thunder of his power who can understand?" {#Job 26:14} And "who knoweth the power of his wrath?" {#Ps 90:11} Oh, "contend not with him that is mightier than thou." {#Ec 6:10} God Almighty is. in a special manner the guardian of his orphans, and the great Master of the wards.

Ver. 12. Apply thy heart unto instruction.] Make thine heart to come to it—though never so averse. Call in thy scattered thoughts, and busy them about the best things. Anima dispersa fit minor. This is the wise man's counsel to the younger sort. But because sardis plerunque fabulam, few youths will be better advised; therefore he bespeaks their parents and tutors in the next words.

Ver. 13. Withhold not correction from the child.] {See Trapp on "Pr 13:24"}

He shall not die.] Or if he do, yet not by thy default. Thou hast delivered thine own soul howsoever. If a blackmore enter into the bath, though he become not white by it, yet the bath master hath his pay, saith Keyserspergius. The physician hath his fee whether the patient recover or die.

Ver. 14. And shall deliver his soul frown hell.] Fond and foolish parents are peremptores potius quam parentes, {a} rather parricides than parents; since Qui non, cum potest, servat, occidit, by not saving their children they slay them; by cockering them, in their sin they pitch them headlong into hell.

{a} Bernard., Epist. 111.

Ver. 15. My son, if thine heart be wise.] Si vexatio det intellectum, if either by instruction or correction I may make thee wise or well spoken, Bonum virum, dicendi peritum -as Quintilian's orator—totus laetitia dissiliam, I shall be a joyful man indeed. St John had no greater joy than to hear that his children walked in the truth. {#3Jo 4} And St Paul could never be thankful enough for such a mercy. {#1Th 3:9}

Even mine.] Or, Even as I—viz., was a comfort to my parents.

Ver. 17. Let not thine heart envy sinners.] Who, have they never so much here, they have but a pension, an annuity; a state of life granted them in the utmost and most remote part of our inheritance.

But be thou in the fear of the Lord all day long.] An excellent means to cure one of the fret. Probatum est. Only it must be used constantly. Men must wake with God, walk with him, and lie down with him, be in continual communion with him and conformity unto him. This is to be in heaven beforehand.

Ver. 18. For surely there is an end,] viz., Of their pomp and prosperity. Dum faenea quadam felicitate temporaliter floreant, as Augustine {a} hath it: while as grass they flourish, and then deflourish.

And thine expectation shall not be cut off.] As the wicked shall. {#Ps 37:38} Cheer up, therefore, and do not despond: Flebile principium melior fortuna sequetur; as Queen Elizabeth was wont to say, while she was yet a prisoner, Then she envied the milkmaid that sang so merrily. But if she had known what a glorious reign she should have for four-and-forty years, she would not have envied her.

{a} Aug., Ep. 120.

Ver. 19. Hear thou, my son, and be wise.] Hearing is one of the learned senses, as Aristotle calls it. Wisdom entereth into the soul by this door, as folly did at first, when the woman listened to the old serpent's illusions. This sense is first up in the morning; and this preface the wise man purposely premiseth to his following discourse; as well knowing how hardly young men are drawn off from drinking matches and good fellow meetings,

And guide thine heart in the way.] That is to say, Let knowledge and affection be as twins, and run parallel; let them mutually transfuse life and vigour, the one into the other. Practise God's will as fast as thou understandest it. The Tigurine translation reads it, Ut beatura sit in via cor tuum: That thine heart may be blessed in the way.

Ver. 20. Be not among wine-bibbers.] Follow not the custom nor company of such; thou knowest not what thou mayest be drawn to do, though of thyself averse to such evil courses. Noah got no good by the luxurious old world {#Mt 24:38} with whom he lived; nor Lot by the intemperate Sodomites. {#Eze 16:49} Uriah, a good man, was at length persuaded to drink to excess. {#2Sa 11:13} "Let him that standeth take heed lest he fall." That evil servant that presumes to "eat and drink with the drunken," shall be cut off in the middle {a} {#Mt 24:49}

Among riotous eaters of flesh.] Among fleshmongers, qui crapulae indulgent, that pamper their paunches, In cute curanda plus aequo operati. See my Common Place of Abstinence. These are all for themselves, as Nabal was. Helluantur sibi carnem -so the Hebrew runs; They ravin up flesh for themselves.

Ver. 21. For the drunkard shall come to poverty.] Nay, to eternal misery in hell; {#1Co 6:10} but few men fear that; beggary they hold worse than any hell. Per mare pauperiem fugiunt, per saxa, per ignes. {a} But poverty to such is but a prelude to a worse matter.

{a} Horat.

Ver. 22. Hearken to thy father, &c.] {See Trapp on "Pr 1:8"}

And despise not thy mother when she is old,] Dr Taylor, martyr, said to his son, among other things, when he was to suffer: When thy mother is waxed old, forsake her not, but provide for her to thy power, and see that she lack nothing; for so will God bless thee, and give thee long life upon earth, and prosperity. {a}

{a} Acts and Mon.

Ver. 23. Buy the truth and sell it not.] Every parcel of truth is precious, as the filings of gold, as the bezar stone, when beaten, are carefully looked to and preserved. "Hold fast the faithful word," as with both hands. {#Tit 1:9} "Strive together for the faith of the gospel." {#Php 1:27} Be zealous for it; {#Jude 3} η ταν η επι ταν, Either live with it, or die for it. As we have received it as a legacy from our forefathers (who sealed it with their blood, and paid dear for it), so we must transmit it to our posterity pure and entire, whatever it stands us in. They were so religious that they would not exchange a letter or syllable of the faith wherewith Christ had be trusted them. {a} So zealous in buying the truth, that they would give five marks and more for a good book—and that was more money than ten pound is now. Some gave a load of hay for a few chapters of St James or of St Paul in English, sitting up all night in reading and hearing, &c. {b} What a deal of charge was the Queen of Sheba at for Solomon's wisdom! The wise merchant for the pearl of price! Jerome and Reuchlin for their Hebrew learning! Pro singulis horis singulos aureos numerabant. Reuchlin gave a crown an hour to the Jew that read to him. Jerome ventured his life to visit by night to a Jewish doctor. See #Mt 13:44.

Ver. 24. The father of the righteous, &c.] {See Trapp on "Pr 10:1"}

Ver. 26. My son, give me thy heart.] There is a strange strife, not of earthly, but of spiritual powers, after the possession of man's heart; and through man's transgression Satan hath gotten strong hold thereon. {#Ac 5:3 Lu 22:3} Once he strove about a dead man's body; {#Jude 9} but doubtless his purpose was therein to have set up an idol for himself in the hearts of the living. If Satan can get the heart, he is safe; and so is Satan's vicar. It was a watchword in Pope Gregory XIII's time, in Queen Elizabeth's days, My son, give me thy heart; be in heart a Papist, and then go to church, dissemble, do what ye will. Among the heathens, when the beast was cut up for sacrifice, the first thing the priest looked upon was the heart; and if the heart were naught, the sacrifice was rejected. As among the Jews Philo observeth, that the heart, and the horns, or brains were never offered with the sacrifices; for they are the fountains and secret cells wherein lurks, and out of which flows, all impiety. But whatever was in the type, this is in the truth. As the heart is by nature, the Lord will have none of it; yet till the heart be renewed and given to the Lord, he will accept nothing that can come from man. {#Isa 29:13 66:3 Jer 42:20} Of the heart God seems to say to us, as Joseph did to his brethren concerning Benjamin, "Ye shall not see my face without it." {#Ge 43:3} The heart is Christ's bed of spices, {#So 6:2} wherein he delights, {#Ps 51:17} and for which he wisheth, "O that there were such an heart," &c. {#De 5:29}

And let thine eyes observe my ways.] Look well to thy pattern, so fairly pencilled out unto thee; take true stitches out of this perfect sampler; take right strokes after this incomparable copy. The Hebrew here hath it, Let thine eyes run through my ways. Get a full prospect of them, and diligently peruse them. Fix and feed thine eyes upon the best objects, and restrain them from gazing upon forbidden beauties, lest they prove to be windows of wickedness, and loopholes of lust.

Ver. 27. For an whore is a deep ditch.] Fitly so called, quod nullus neque modus neque finis sit in amore meretricio, because lust is boundless, bottomless. He is a perfect slave that serves a whore. {See Trapp on "Pr 22:14"}

Ver. 28. She also lieth in wait.] Terence calls harlots Cruces crumenimulgas, sordida poscinumia, &c., base beg pennies, pick purses, &c. See the notes upon Pr. 7. {See Trapp on "Pr 7:1"} &c

And increaseth the transgressors among men.] Nothing hath ever so enriched hell as the whorish woman. See above.

Ver. 29. Who hath woe? who hath sorrow?] Whoredom is usually ushered in by drunkenness. Est Venus in vinis. It is Venus in the wines. Hence, {#Re 17:4} the whore cometh forth with a "cup," as with an instrument fit for the fulfilling of her lust; even as of old every one did openly bear in his hand at Rome the badge of that art that he professed. Solomon therefore having warned his young nobleman of whoredom, fitly shows him next the mischief of drunkenness; and this he doth by way of admiration or interrogation, that the drunkard may (will he, nill he) see, as in a glass, and so abhor his own absurdities, miseries, and mischiefs. The best that can come of drunkenness is repentance—that fairest daughter of so foul a mother—and that is not without its woe, and, alas! its sorrow and redness of eyes with weeping for sin. But few drunkards are taken in that fault.

Who hath babbling?] A great deal of small talk, telling all that's within.

When the wine is in, the wit is out.

Who hath redness of eyes?] Oculorum suffusio, the Vulgate reads suffossio. Drunkards have usually red and rich faces. Nasos instar coctilis cancri, {a} Noses like a boiled lobster; plenty of pustulaes or quots, as they call them. Briefly, drunkenness, like another Africa, is never without some new monster of mischief.

{a} Lavater.

Ver. 30. They that tarry long at the wine.] These men do not want time, but waste it. Pliny, if he were alive, would surely say to such, as once he did to his nephew, Poteris has horas non perdidisse, Thou mightest have spent thy time much better. How may those winebibbers more justly lament their loss than good Bernard did, and say each man for himself, Totum vitae meae tempus perdidit, quia perditte vixi!

Ver. 31. Look not thou upon the wine.] Many men die of the wound in the eye. It is not unlawful to look; but because of looking comes lusting, therefore laws are to be laid upon our looks; Vitiis nobis in animum per oculos est via, saith Quintilian. If we do not let in sin at the window of the eye, or by the door of the ear, it cannot enter into our hearts.

When it moveth itself aright.] When it sparkles, and is vinum cos (as they call the best wine at Paris, and Louvain) that is, Vinum coloris, odoris, saporis, optimi, Wine of the best colour, smell, and savour. {a}

{a} Beehive of Rome, Preface.

Ver. 32. At the last it biteth like a serpent.] Lo, such is the guilt of sin, such the end and effect of drunkenness—torments here, and tortures in hell.

Ver. 33. Thine eyes shall behold strange women.] {See Trapp on "Pr 23:29"} Venter aestuans mero, spumat in libidinem, saith Jerome. A belly filled with wine, foameth out filthiness. Wine is the milk of Venus, {a} saith another. Drunkenness is the gallery that lechery walketh through, saith a third. {b}

Thine heart shall utter perverse things.] Preposterous, distorted, dislocated matters: solliciting thy neighbour's wife to wickedness; or otherwise vomiting out that which God hateth, and godly men abhor.

{b} Vina parent animos Veneri.—Ovid.

Ver. 34. Yea, thou shalt be as he, &c.] Thy brains shall crow, and thou shalt be of Copernicus his opinion, that the earth turns round. Thou shalt also be fearless of the greatest danger, and not refuse to sleep upon a mast pole, dance upon a weather cock, &c.

Ver. 35. They have stricken me.] A drunken man, we say, takes no hurt, feels no smart, is turned into a very stock. Dionysius the Heracleot felt not needles thrust into his fat belly. Pliny mentioneth certain bears, that being sound asleep, cannot be wakened with the sharpest prickles. Mathiolus {a} reports of the asses of Etruria, that, feeding upon henbane, {b} they fall into such a dead sleep, that being taken for dead, they are half hideled, {c} ere they can be aroused. Lo, such is the drunkard's lethargy; neither is he more insensible than sensual and irrecoverable.

{b} The common name of the annual plant Hyoscyamus niger; a native of Europe and northern Asia, growing on waste ground, having dull yellow flowers streaked with purple, viscid stem and leaves, unpleasant smell, and narcotic and poisonous properties; also extended to the genus as a whole.

{c} ?Skinned.

Ver. 1. Be not thou envious against evil men.] Heb., Men of evil—such as are set upon sin; as are like Caracalla, qui nihil cogitabat boni, qui id non didicerat; quod ipse fatebatur, saith Dio, Who never thought of any good, &c. Envy not such a one his pomp, any more than we do a dead corpse his flowers and gaiety. See #Pr 23:17.

Neither desire to be with them.] That is, To be in their estate, so thou mightest be at their stay. This hath been the folly of some of God's people, as David noteth, #Ps 73:10. For the which they have afterwards befooled and bebeasted themselves, as he did, #Ps 73:22. Ver. 2. For their heart studieth destruction.] Great students they are; wittily wicked; but they consult shame and confusion to them and theirs.

And their lips talk of mischief.] The mischief that they machinate budgeth and blistereth out at their tongues' ends. They are even big with it, and not well till delivered.

Ver. 3. Through wisdom is an house builded.] q.d., I will show thee a better project; wouldst thou thrive and grow great? Exercise godliness, wish not wickedness. {See Trapp on "Pr 3:16"} {See Trapp on "Pr 3:17"}

Ver. 4. With all precious and pleasant riches.] Riches imply (1.) Plenty of that which is precious and pleasant. (2.) Propriety; they must be good things that are our own; and hereunto economical prudence much conduceth. God bestoweth abundance on the wicked ex largitate, only out of a general providence; but upon his people that are good husbands ex promisso, by virtue of this and the like promises.

Ver. 5. A wise man is strong.] {See Trapp on "Pr 21:22"}

Ver. 6. For by wise counsel.] {See Trapp on "Pr 20:18"} This Salust delivers as the sentence of the wisest sages, but Solomon said it long before.

Ver. 7. Wisdom is too hard for a fool.] Heb., Too high; his pericranium comprehends it not, "neither indeed can" do. {#1Co 2:14} He puts off the study of it, pretending the impossibility of reaching to it.

He openeth not his mouth in the gate.] He were two fools if he should, for while he holds his tongue he is held wise.

Ver. 8. Shall be called a mischievous person.] Heb., A master of sinful musings, an artist at any evil. Josephus saith of Antipater, that his course of life might fitly be called a mystery of mischief, {a} quae altissimas egerat radices, &c.

{a} κακιας μυστηριον.

Ver. 9. The thought of foolishness is sin.] The schools do well observe, that outward sins are maioris infamiae, of greater infamy; but inward heart sins are maioris reatus, of greater guilt, as we see in devils. {See Trapp on "Pr 14:22"}

And the scorner is an abomination to men.] Witness Julian, Lucian, Porphyry, Julius Scaliger, that proud hypercritic (qui neminem prae se duxit hominem), Laurentius Valla, who jeered at other logicians, and extolled his own logic as the only best, calling it Logicam Laurentinam.

“ Iupiter hunc coeli dignatus honore fuisset, Censorem linguae sed timet ipse suae. ”—Trithem.

But what an odious scorner was Quintinus the libertine, of whom Calvin complains, that he scoffed at every one of the holy apostles? Paul he called a broken vessel, John a foolish youth, Peter a denier of God, Matthew a usurer, En quomodo ille faectoris gurgis putido ore suo blasphemare audebat! saith Calvin. {a} See how this stinking elf doth bark and blaspheme the saints. The basest can mock, as the abjects did David, {#Ps 35:15} and Tobiah the servant did Nehemiah. {#Neh 2:19} Scorners are the most base spirits. The Septuagint call them pests, {#Ps 1:1} incorrigible, {#Pr 21:1} proud persons, {#Pr 3:34} naught, {#Pr 9:12} &c.

{a} Calv., Inst. Advers. Libert., cap. 9.

Ver. 10. If thou faint in the day of adversity.] Afflictions try what sap we have, as hard weather tries what health. Withered leaves fall off in a wind: rotten boughs break when weight is laid on them; so do earthen vessels when set empty to the fire. "As is the man, so is his strength," said they to Gideon. Joseph's "bow abode in strength, though the archers sorely grieved him, and shot at him, and hated him; and the arms of his hand were made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob." {#Ge 49:23,24}

Ver. 11. If thou forbear to deliver them, &c.] That is, That are wrongfully butchered. Here, not to save a man, if it be in our power, is to destroy him. {#Mr 3:4} Job "brake the jaws of the wicked, and plucked the prey out of his teeth." {#Job 29:17} The people rescued Jonathan, and Ebedmelech Jeremiah. Henry VIII delivered his Queen Katherine, and King Philip with his Spaniards kept the Lady Elizabeth from the cruel mercies of Stephen Gardiner, who had designed them destruction. Sir George Blage (one of King Henry VIII's privy chamber), being condemned for a heretic, was yet pardoned by the king. He coming afterwards to the king's presence, -"Ah, my pig," saith the king, for so he was wont to call him. "Yea," said he, "if your Majesty had not been better to me than your bishops were, your pig had been roasted ere this time." But what a bloody mind bore Harpsfield, archdeacon of Canterbury, who, being at London when Queen Mary lay dying, made all post haste home to despatch those whom he had then in cruel custody. {a}

Ver. 12. If thou sayest, Behold, we knew it not, &c.] As no wool is so coarse but will take some colour; so there is no sin so foul but will admit some excuse. Ignorance is commonly pleaded, -We know not this man's case, the justice of his cause, the means of his rescue, &c. But "be not deceived, God is not mocked." They that would mock him imposturum faciunt et patientur, defraud themselves, as the emperor said of him that sold glass for pearl. Deo obscura clarent, muta respondent, silentium confitetur. {a} God's "eyes behold, his eyelids try the children of men." {#Ps 11:4} The former points out his knowledge, the latter his critical descant.

Doth not he that pondereth the heart consider?] No man needs a window in his breast—as the heathen Momus wished—for God to look in at; for every man before God is all window, {#Job 34:22} and his "eyes are as a flaming fire," {#Re 1:14} that need no outward light, that see extra mittendo by sending out a ray, &c., that see through that transparent body, the world, called "a sea of glass." {#Re 4:6}

Ver. 13. My son, eat thou honey, because it is good.] Profitable and pleasant, wholesome and toothsome. So, and much more than so, is divine knowledge. Plutarch tells of Eudoxus, that he would be willing to be burned up by the sun presently, so he might be admitted to come so near it as to learn the nature of it. How sweet must it needs be then to know Christ and him crucified! Sweeter it was to David than live honey dropping from the comb. {#Ps 19:10 119:103} The believing Hebrews knew "within themselves" that there should be a reward, and that their expectation should not be cut off. {#Heb 10:34} They drew the circumference of God's promises to the centre of their hearts, and so living by faith they had the deserts of the feast of a good conscience as Master Latimer hath it: they tasted of that honey, the sweetness whereof none can find by any discourse, how elegant soever, so well as by eating of it, as Augustine speaketh.

Ver. 15. Lay not wait, O wicked man, &c.] Ἐνθα γὰρ οἱ Θεοί, as that heathen said—God dwells with the righteous; molest him not therefore, beat not up his quarters. The Scythians, saith he in Plutarch, {a} though they have no music or vines among them, yet they have gods. So, whatever the saints want, they want not God's gracious presence with them. And if wicked men had but so much knowledge of God as Pilate's wife had in a dream, they would take heed of having anything to do with these just men.

Ver. 16. For a just man falleth seven times,] i.e., Often. Seven times a day, as the Vulgate and many of the Fathers read it, who also understand this text as falling into sin, and rising again by repentance. But the opposition carries it to the other sense, of falling into trouble. And the next verse speaks as much, "Rejoice not when thine enemy falleth." God's saints are bound to "rejoice when they fall into divers temptations." {#Jas 1:2} What though they fall into them? not go in step by step, but be precipitated, plunged over head and ears. Say they fall not into one but many crosses, -as they seldom come single, but like Job's messengers, one at the heels of another, -yet be exceeding glad, saith the apostle; as a merchant is to see his ships come laden in. For, "though ye fall, ye shall arise; and though ye sit in darkness, the Lord shall give you light." {#Mic 7:8}

But the wicked shall fall into mischief,] i.e., Into remediless misery. Non surget hic afflictio {#Na 1:9} As they shall have an evil, an only evil without mixture of mercy, {#Eze 7:5} so they shall totally and finally be consumed at once. If Mordecai be of the seed of the Jews, before whom Haman hath begun to fall, he shall fall to some purpose. {#Es 6:13} A Jew may fall before a Persian, and get up and prevail; but if a Persian or other persecutor begin to fall before a Jew, he can neither stay nor rise. There is an invisible hand of omnipotence that strikes in for his own, and confounds their opposites.

Ver. 17. Rejoice not when thine enemy falleth.] If thou dost, it is a sure sign of devilish hatred—επιχαιρεκακια being the devil's disease—what goodwill, innocence, or ignoscency soever thou makest show of. Job clearth himself of this fault, {#Job 31:24} and so doth David notably. {#Ps 35:13,14} See his practice. {#2Sa 1:11,12} Caesar wept when Pompey's head was presented to him, and said, Victoriam volui, non vindictam. {See Trapp on "Mt 5:44"} {See Trapp on "Ro 12:19"}

Ver. 18. Lest the Lord see it,] viz., Thy pride and cruelty, as he will, for he is ολοφθαλμος, all eye, and εχει Θεος εκδικον ομμα, if he see, he will kindle and turn the wheel upon thee, as he threatened to do upon Edom, for looking with liking upon Israel's calamity. For prevention hereof, think thus with thyself, Either I am like mine enemy, or else I am better or worse than he. If like him, why may not I look for the like misery? If better, who made me to differ? If worse, what reason then have I to insult? See #Ob 12.

Ver. 19. Fret not thyself because of evil men.] We are wondrous apt to be sick of the fret; hence so many precepts to this purpose. See #Pr 23:17 24:1.

Ver. 20. For there shall be no reward.] He shall suffer both pain of loss, and pain of sense, which whether is the more grievous, is hard to determine. Sure it is, that the tears of hell are not sufficient to bewail the loss of heaven; their worm of grief gnaws as painfully as their fire burns. "Depart from me, ye cursed," sounds as harsh in their ears as that which follows, "into everlasting flames."

Ver. 21. My son, fear the Lord and the king.] "Who would not fear thee, O king of nations? for unto thee doth it appertain." {#Jer 10:7} God is the prime and proper object of fear. {#Ps 76:11} Whence, by an appellative proper, he is called "fear" by the Psalmist. The Greeks call him Θεος quasi Λεος, as some think, from the fear that is due to him. Princes also must be feared and honoured, {#1Pe 2:17} as those that are invested with God's authority, and intrusted with the administration of his kingdom upon earth, by the exercise of vindictive and remunerative justice. And while they be just, ruling in the fear of God, {#2Sa 23:3} and commanding things consonant to the word and will of God, they must be obeyed for conscience sake, {#Ro 13:5} otherwise not. {See Trapp on "Ac 4:19"}

And meddle not with them that are given to change, / i.e., With seditious spirits that affect and effect alterations; lawless persons, as St Paul calls them; malcontents, {a} to whom αει το παρον βαρυ, the present government is ever grievous, as Thucydides notes. Such were Korah and his complices; Absalom; Sheba; the ten tribes that cried, Alleys iugum, Ease our yoke; and before them, those in Samuel's time that cried, "Nay, but we will have a king." Novatus hath still too many followers, of whom St Cyprian, under whom he lived, thus testifieth: Novatus rerum novarum semper cupidus, arrogantia inflatus, that he was an arrogant innovator. These turbulent spirits prove oft the pests and boutefeaus of the state they live in; and it is dangerous having to deal with them.

{a} Μεμψιμοιροι.

Ver. 22. For their calamity shall rise suddenly.] When they think they have made all cock sure. "Had Zimri peace that killed his master?" Had Absalom; Sheba; Rodolphus, Duke of Suevia; Sanders; Story; Parry; Campian; the gunpowder plotters; Raviliac, &c.? Canute, the first Danish king, caused the false Edric's head, that had been his agent, to be set upon the highest part of the Tower of London, therein performing his promise of advancing him above any lord in the land. {a} James I, king of Scots, was murdered in Perth by Walter, Earl of Athol, in hopes to attain the crown. Crowned indeed he was, but not as his witches and sorcerers had ambiguously insinuated, with the crown of that realm, but with a crown of red-hot iron clapt upon his head, being one of the tortures wherewith he ended at once his wicked days and desires. {b}

And who knoweth the ruin of them both?] i.e., That both God and the king will inflict upon the rebels; or "of them both"—i.e., both of the king, if a tyrant, and of those that seditiously move against him.

Ver. 23. These things also belong to the wise.] As subjects must know their duties, so magistrates theirs; neither may they hold themselves too wise to learn. God can send even a Solomon to school to the raven, to the pismire, yea, to the lilies of the field, as being able to teach the wisest man by the weakest creature.

It is not good to have respect of persons.] Heb., To know faces; to regard not so much the matter as the man; to hear persons speak, and not causes; to judge not according to truth and equity, but according to opinion and appearance—to fear or favour. This cannot be good, lawful, or safe. "He will surely" (or thoroughly) "reprove you," (not verbally only, but penally too) "if you secretly accept persons." {#Job 13:10} Of Trajan it is said that he neither feared nor hated any man, but that he heard the causes of his subjects without prejudicate impiety, judiciously examined them without sinister obliquity, and sincerely judged them without unjust partiality.

Ver. 24. Him shall the people curse.] Heb., They shall run him through; with their evil wishes for his evil sentence. He shall be generally hated, and set against, as was Herod, Pilate, Festus, Ferres, &c.

Ver. 25. But to them that rebuke him shall be delight.] Those judges that reprove and punish the wicked shall—besides the Euge of a good conscience, which is far better than the world's plaudite-delight themselves in the Lord, and reign in the affections of all good men, who shall soon also say, ‘God’s blessing be on such a good judge’s heart, for he saveth the innocent, and punisheth the wicked,’ &c. As he hath "done worthily in Ephrata, so he shall be famous in Bethlehem." {#Ru 4:11} See #Job 29:11,12.

Ver. 26. Every man shall kiss his lips.] That is, Shall do him honour, as #Ge 41:40. All the people shall kiss at thy mouth, saith Pharaoh to Joseph; and Samuel kissed Saul when he anointed him king; {#Isa 10:1} and, "Kiss the Son," saith David. {#Ps 2:12} That is, Give unto him the honour due unto his name.

Ver. 27. Prepare thy work without, &c.] God would have all his to be not good men only, but good husbands too; to order their affairs with discretion, and to take their fittest opportunities for despatch of household businesses. Pliny {a} hath a saying to like sense with this: Aedificandum, saith he, consito agro, et tunc quoque cunctanter; - Let building alone till thy field be tilled, vined, planted, &c.

Ver. 28. Be not a witness against thy neighbour without cause.] That is, Without calling, being not thereunto required; for this would speak thee spiteful, rash, and revengeful, as in the next verse.

And deceive not with thy lips.] When called to be a witness, speak thy mind simply and plainly, without preface or passion, {a} without varnish of fine words, whereby to mislead the judge, or deceive the jurors, to bolster out a bad cause, or outface a good.

Ver. 29. Say not, I will do so to him as he hath done to me.] Nothing is more natural than revenge of wrongs, and the world approves it as right temper, true touch, as to put up wrongs is held cowardice and unmanliness. But we have not so learned Christ. Nay, those that have never heard of Christ have spoken much against this vindictive disposition. {See Trapp on "Pr 20:22"} {See Trapp on "Mt 5:39"} {See Trapp on "Ro 12:17"}

I will render to the man according to his works.] But is not that God’s office? And will you needs leap into his chair—wring the sword out of his hand? or at least, will you be a pope in your own cause, depose the magistrate, or appeal from him to yourself? What Luciferian pride is this? Nemo te impune lacessit? Is not God the God of recompenses?

Ver. 30. I went by the field of the slothful.] Not purposely to spy faults—for Nemo curiosus quin malevolus -but my business lay that way, and I was willing to make the best of everything that came before me.

By the vineyard of the man void of understanding.] Heb., That had no heart; that is, that made no use of it—that was not egregie cordatus homo, as one describes a wise man.

Ver. 31. And, lo, it was all grown over with thorns.] So is the spiritual sluggard's soul with lusts and sins, under the which lurketh that old serpent.

Ver. 32. Then I saw and considered it well.] I made my best use of it for mine own instruction. A bee can suck honey out of a flower, which a fly cannot do; so a spiritual mind can extract good out of every object and occurrence, even out of other men's faults and follies. He can gather grapes of thorns, and figs of thistles, as here. Well, therefore, may grace be called "the divine nature"; {#2Pe 1:4} for as God draws light out of darkness, good out of evil, &c., so doth grace, by a heavenly kind of alchemy, as I may so say.

And received instruction.] Exemplo alterius qui sapit, ille sapit. The worse others are, the better should we be, getting as far off from the wicked as we can in our daily practice, and "saving ourselves from this untoward generation."

Ver. 33. Yet a little sleep.] Mercer makes this to be the lesson that the wise man both learnt himself and also lays before others—viz., to be content with a little sleep—to be up and at it early, &c., that the beggar catch us not. But I rather incline to those that think that he here brings in the sluggard pleading for his sloth, and by an elegant mimesis imitates and personifies him, saying, as he used to do, "yet a little more sleep, a little more slumber," &c. "A little," and yet "sleeps," in the plural. A little he would have, but a little will not serve his turn. {See Trapp on "Pr 6:9"} &c.

Ver. 34. So shall thy poverty come.] Swiftly and irresistibly. Seneca calls sloth the nurse of beggary—the mother of misery.

Ver. 1. These also are proverbs of Solomon, which the men.] Solomon "hath his thousand out of this his vineyard of three thousand proverbs," {#1Ki 4:32} and these men of Hezekiah that kept, and yet communicated, the fruit thereof, "their two hundred." {#So 8:12} It is good for men to be doing what they are able for the glory of God and good of others, {a} if it be but to copy out another man's work, and prepare it for the press. Them that any way honour God he will honour; that is a bargain of his own making, and we may trust to it.

Ver. 2. It is the glory of God to conceal a thing.] That what we conceive not, we may admire (mirari non rimari), and cry out with Paul, "O the depth," {#Ro 11:33} as the Romans dedicated to their goddess Victoria a certain lake, the depth whereof they could not dive into. God is much to be magnified for what he hath revealed unto his people in the holy Scriptures for their eternal good. But those unsearchable secrets of his—such as are the union of the three persons into one nature, and of two natures into one person, his wonderful decrees, and the no less wonderful execution thereof, &c.—these make exceeding much to the glory of his infinite wisdom and surpassing greatness, in speaking whereof our "safest eloquence is our silence," {a} since tantum recedit quantum capitur, saith Nazianzen—much like that pool spoken of by Polycritus, which in compass at the first scarce seemed to exceed the breadth of a shield; but if any went in to wash, it extended itself more and more.

But the honour of kings is to search out a matter.] As Solomon did that of the two harlots (#1Ki 3:16-28 Job 29:16). There are those who divide this book of Proverbs into three parts. In the first nine chapters things of a lower nature, and fit for instruction of youth, are set down and described. Next, from thence to this twenty-fifth chapter, the wise man discourseth of all sorts of virtues and vices, suitable to all sorts of people. Lastly, from this chapter to the end, he treateth, for the most part, higher matters, as of kings' craft and state business.

Ver. 3. The heaven for height, &c.] It is a wonder that we can look up to so admirable a height, and that the very eye is not tired in the way. If this ascending line could be drawn right forwards, some that have calculated curiously, have found it five hundred years' journey to the starry sky. Other mathematicians say, that if a stone should fall from the eighth sphere, and should pass every hour a hundred miles, it would be sixty-five years or more before it would come to the ground. I suppose there is as little credit to be given to these as to Aratus the astrologer, who boasted that he had found out and set down the whole number of the stars in heaven; or as to Archimedes the mathematician, that said, that he could by his art cast up the just number of all the sands both in the habitable and inhabitable parts of the world. {a}

And the earth for depth.] From the surface to the centre, how far it is, cannot be known exactly, as neither whether hell be there: but that it is somewhere below may be gathered from #Re 14:11, and other places. Ubi sit sentient, qui curiosius quaerunt.

And the heart of kings is unsearchable.] Profundum sine fundo. God gave Solomon "a large heart, even as the sand that is on the sea shore." {#IKi 4:29} A vast capacity, an extraordinary judgment, and wisdom to reserve himself. No bad cause was too hard for him to detect; no practices which he did not smell out; no complotter which he did not speedily entrap in their wiles, as Adonijah.

Ver. 4. Take away the dross from the silver.] The holy prophets were not only most exactly seen in the peerless skill of divinity, but most exquisitely also furnished with the entire knowledge of all things natural. Hence their many similies wherewith they learnedly beautify their matter, and deck out their terms, words, and sentences, giving thereunto a certain kind of lively gesture, attiring the same with light, perspicuity, easiness, estimation, and dignity; stirring up thereby men's drowsy minds to the acknowledgment of the truth, and pursuit of godliness.

Ver. 5. Take away the wicked.] Who are compared elsewhere also to dross, {#Eze 22:19} and fitly; for as dross is a kind of unprofitable earth, and hath no good metal in it; so in the wicked is no good to be found, but pride, worldliness, &c. Frobisher, in his voyage to discover the Straits, being tossed up and down with foul weather, snows, and unconstant winds, returned home, having gathered a great quantity of stones, which he thought to be minerals, from which, when there could be drawn neither gold nor silver, nor any other metal, we have seen them, saith Master Camden, ^{a} cast forth to fix the highways. Evil counsellors about a prince are means of a great deal of mischief, as were Doeg, Haman, Rehoboam's and Herod's flatterers, Pharaoh's sorcerers, &c. Of a certain prince of Germany it was said, Esset alius, si esset apud alios; He would be another man, if he were but among other men. Say they be not so drossy, but that some good ore is to be found in them; yet all is not good that hath some good in it. It is Scaliger's note, Malum non est nisi in bono. The original nature of the devil is good, wherein all his wickedness subsisteth. When one highly commended the cardinal Julian to Sigismund, he answered, Tamen Romanus est, Yet he is a Roman, and therefore not to be trusted. Those cardinals and Popish bishops being much about princes, have greatly impoisoned them, and hindered the Reformation. Zuinglius fitly compares them to that wakeful dragon that kept the golden fleece, as the poets have feigned. They get the royalty of their ear, and then do with them whatsoever they wish. David therefore vows, as a good finer, to rid the court of such dross, ^{#Ps 101:4} and gives order upon his death bed to his son Solomon, to take out of the way those men of blood, ^{#IKi 2:5-9} that his throne might be established in righteousness.

^{a} Camden's Elizabeth, fol. 189.

Ver. 6. Put not forth thyself in the presence of the king.] Ne te ornes coram rege. Compare not, vie not with him in apparel, furniture, house keeping, &c., as the Hebrews sense it. This was the ruin of Cardinal Wolsey, and of Viscount Verulam.

And stand not in the place of great men.] Exalt not thyself, but wait till God shall reach out the hand from heaven and raise thee. ^{#Ps 75:5-8} Adonijah is branded for this, that he exalted himself, saying, "I will be king." ^{#IKi 1:5} When none else would lift Hildebrand up into Peter's chair, he got up himself: 'for who,' said he, 'can better judge of my worth than I can?' 'Harden thy forehead,' said Calvus to Vatinius, 'and say boldly, that thou deservest the praetorship better than Cato.’ {a} Ambition rides without reins, as Tullia did over the dead body of her own father, to be made a queen. See my Common Place of Ambition.

{a} Quintil., lib. ix. cap. 2.

Ver. 7. For better it is that it be said unto thee.] From this text our Saviour takes that parable of his, put forth to those that were bidden to a feast. {#Lu 14:10} Now, if before an earthly prince men should carry themselves thus modestly and humbly, how much more before the King of heaven! And if among guests at a feast, how much more among the saints and angels in the holy assemblies! That is an excellent saying of Bernard, Omnino oportet nos orationis tempore curiam intrare coelestern, in qua Rex regum stellato sedet solio, circumdante innumerabili et ineffabili beatorum spirituum exercitu. Quanta ergo cum reverentia, quanto timore, quanta illuc humilitate accedere debet e palude sua procedens et repens vilis ranuncula? {a} At prayer time we should enter into the court of heaven, where sitteth the King of kings with a guard of innumerable blessed spirits. With how great reverence then, with how great fear and self abasement, should we come, like so many vile vermin creeping and crawling out of some sorry pool or puddle!

{a} Bernard., De Divers.

Ver. 8. Go not forth hastily to strive.] Contention is the daughter of arrogance and ambition. {#Jas 4:1} Hence Solomon, whose very name imports peace, persuades to peaceableness very oft in this book, and sets forth the mischief of strife and dissension. Stir not strife, saith he, but make haste to stint it—so the words may be rendered—you may do that in your haste that you may repent by leisure. Hasty men, we say, never want woe. If every man were a law to himself, as the Thracians are said to be, {a} there would not be so much lawing, warbling, and warring as there is. There is a curse upon those "that delight in war," {#Ps 68:30} as King Pyrrhus did, but a blessing for all the children of peace, {#Mt 10:40-42} who shall also be called the children of God. {#Mt 5:9} Paul and Barnabas had a sharp, {b} but short fit of falling out. {#Ac 15:39} Jerome and Augustine had their bickerings in their disputations; but it was no great matter who gained the day, for they would both win by understanding their errors.

When thy neighbour hath put thee to shame.] That is, When thine adversary hath got the upper hand, and foiled thee. Those are ignoble quarrels, saith one, Ubi vincere inglorium est, atteri sordidum, wherein, whether a man get the better or the worse, he is sure to go by the worse, to sit down with loss in his name, state, or both.

Ver. 9. Debate thy cause with thy neighbour, &c.] What shall I do then, may some say, if I may not right myself by law? You may, saith he, so you do it deliberately, and have first privately debated the cause out of desire of agreement, and moved for a compromise. See #Mt 18:15.

And discover not the secret of another.] Merely to be revenged on him for some supposed injury. There are those who in their rage care not what they disclose to the prejudice of another. Charity chargeth the contrary. {#ICo 13} It claps a plaster on the sore, and then covers it with her hand, as surgeons use to do, that the world may be never the wiser.

Ver. 10. Lest he that heareth it put thee to shame.] Repute thee and report thee an evil conditioned fellow, a backbiter, and a tale bearer, one not fit to be trusted with secrets. True it is that dearest friends are in some cases to be accused and complained of to those that may do good upon them, as Joseph brought his brethren's evil report to his father, and as the household of Chloe told Paul of the Corinthian contentions. But this must be done wisely and regularly, with due observation of circumstances, as Solomon elegantly sets forth in the following proverb.

Ver. 11. A word fitly spoken.] Hebrew, Spoken upon his wheels—that is, rightly ordered and circumstantiated, spoken with a grace, and in due place. It is an excellent skill to be able to time a word, {#Isa 50:4} to set it upon the wheels, as here. How "good" are such words! {#Pr 15:23} how "forcible!" {#Job 6:25} How pleasant! even "like apples of gold in pictures, or lattices of silver," not only precious for matter, {#Ec 12:10} but delectable for order, as gold put in a case of silver cut work.

Ver. 12. As an earring of gold, &c.] Ut in auris aurea, &c. A seasonable word falling upon a tractable ear hath a redoubled grace with it, as an earring of gold, and as an ornament of fine gold, or as a diamond in a diadem. It is a hard and happy thing to "suffer the words of exhortation," to digest a reproof; to say with David, "Let the righteous smite me," &c.; to be of Gerson's disposition, of whom it is recorded that he rejoiced in nothing more, quam si ab aliquo fraterne et charitative redargueretur; {a} than if he were friendly and freely reprov'd by anyone. Every vice doth now go armed; touch it never so gently, yet like the nettle it will sting you. If you deal with it roughly and roundly it swaggereth, as the Hebrew did with Moses, "Who made thee a man of authority?" &c. {#Ex 2:14} Earrings and ornaments are ill bestowed upon such uncircumcised ears.

Ver. 13. As the cold of snow in the time of harvest.] Harvest men, of all men, bear the heat of the day, being far from shade or shelter, far from springs of water, parched and scorched with heat and drought, in those hotter countries especially. Now, as the cold of snow or ice, which in those countries they kept under ground all the year about to mix with their wines, would be most welcome to such, so is a trusty and speedy messenger; for by his good news he greatly reviveth the longing and languishing minds of those that sent him, who, during the time of his absence, through fear and doubt, were almost half dead. This is much more true of God's faithful messengers, {#Job 33:23} whose very "feet are" therefore "beautiful," and message most comfortable to those that labour and languish under the sense of sin and fear of wrath.

Ver. 14. Whoso boasteth himself of a false gift] As Ptolemy, surnamed Δωσων, from his fair promises, slack performances; as Sertorius, the Roman, that fed his creditors and clients with fair words, but did nothing for them, Pollicitis dives quilibet esse potest; as that pope and his nephew, of whom it is recorded that the one never spoke as he thought, the other never performed what he spoke; lastly, as the devil who promised Christ excelsa in excelsis, mountains on a mountain, and said, "All this will I give thee," {#Mt 4:9} whenas that all was just nothing more than a show, a representation, a semblance, or if it had been something, yet it was not his to give; for "the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof."

Physicians call their drugs Δοσεις, gifts, and yet we pay dear for them. Apothecaries set fair titles upon their boxes and gaily pots, but there is oftentimes aliud in titulo, aliud in pyxide, nothing but a bare title. Such are vain boasters, pompous preachers, painted hypocrites, Popish priests, such as was Tecelius Tetzel, that sold iudulgences in Germany, and those other mass mongers in Gerson's time that preached publicly to the people, that if any man would hear a mass he should not on that day be smitten with blindness, nor die a sudden death, nor want sufficient sustenance, &c. These were clouds without rain, that answer not expectation. {#Jude 12}

Ver. 15. By long forbearing is a prince persuaded.] If he be not over hasty, his wrath may be appeased, and his mind altered. Our Henry III gave commandment for the apprehending of Hubert de Burgo, Earl of Kent, who, having sudden notice thereof at midnight, got him up and fled into a church in Essex. They to whom the business was committed finding him upon his knees before the high altar, with the sacrament in one hand, and a cross in the other, carried him away nevertheless unto the Tower of London. Roger, Bishop of London, taking this to be a great violence and wrong offered unto the holy Church, would never leave the king until he had caused the earl to be carried unto the place whence he was fetched. And this, it is thought, was a means of saving the earl's life. For though order was taken he should not escape thence, yet it gave the king's wrath a time to cool, and himself leisure to make his apology, by reason whereof he was afterwards restored to the king's favour and former places of honour. {a} So true is that of the philosopher, Maximum irae remedium est dilatio, {b} and that of the poet—

“Ut fragilis glacies, interit ira mora.”—Ovid.

There are those who read and sense the words thus: By meekness a prince is appeased—that is, when he seeth that he is not opposed, that his subjects repine not, rebel not against him. An old courtier of Nero's being asked how he had escaped that lion's mouth, answered, Iniurias ferendo, et gratias agendo, by taking shrewd turns and being thankful.

A soft tongue breaketh the bones.] Though it be flesh, and no bones, yet it breaketh the bones—that is, stout and stern spirits, that otherwise would not yield. Thus Gideon broke the rage of the Ephraimites, {#Jud 8:1-3} and Abigail David's, by her humble and dutiful oration. {#1Sa 25:23-34} {See Trapp on "Pr 15:1"}

Ver. 16. Hast thou found honey? eat so much as is sufficient,] i.e., Be moderate in the use of all lawful comforts and contentments. Απαντων γαρ η πλησμονη, saith the orator, {a} for there is a satiety of all things, and by excess the sweetest comforts will be dissweetened, as Epictetus also observed. It is therefore excellent counsel that the holy apostle giveth, that "those that have wives be as if they had none," &c.; {#1Co 7:29} that we hang loose to all creature comforts, and be weanedly affected towards them, considering that licitis perimus omnes. We generally most of all overshoot ourselves in the use of things lawful, as those recusant guests did, {#Mt 22:2-7} and the old world. {#Lu 17:26,27}

Ver. 17. Withdraw thy foot from thy neighbour's house.] This is a honey that thou mayest surfeit on, therefore make thy foot precious, or rare (so the original {a} hath it) at thy neighbour's house, by too oft frequenting whereof thou mayest become cheap, nay, burdensome. At first thou mayest be Oreach, as the Hebrew proverb hath it, i.e., welcome as a traveller that stays for a day. At length thou wilt be Toveach, a charge, a burden. And lastly, by long tarrying, thou shalt be Boreach, an outcast, hunted out of the house that thou hast so immodestly haunted. It is a very great fault among many, saith one, that when they have found a kind and sweet friend, they care not how they encumber him or abuse his courtesy. But, as we say in our common proverb, it is not good to take too much of a frank horse.

Ver. 18. Is a maul, and a sword, and a sharp arrow] A "maul," hammer, or club, to knock out his brains, and make them fly about the room, as the Hebrew word imports. A "sword," {#Ps 42:10} or murdering weapon, to run him through and let out his bowels. And a "sharp arrow," {#Ps 57:5} to pierce his flesh, and strike through his very heart. Lo, here the mischief of an evil tongue, thin, broad, and long, like a sword to let out the life blood of the poor innocent—nay, to destroy his soul too, as seducers do that bear false witness against the truth of God, and by their cunning lies "deceive the hearts of the simple."

Ver. 19. Confidence in an unfaithful man, &c.] In a prevaricator, a covenant breaker, a perfidious person, such as Ahithophel was to David; Job's miserable comforters to him—he compares them to the brooks of Tema, #Job 6:16-19, in a moisture they swelled, in a drought they failed; Egypt to Israel, "a staff or broken reed, whereon if a man lean, it will go into his hand and pierce it"; {#Isa 36:6} the Roman senate to Julius Caesar, whom they killed in the council chamber with twenty-three wounds, and this was done a pluribus amicis quam inimicis quorum non expleverat spes inexplebiles saith Seneca, {a} by most of his pretended friends whose unreasonable hopes he had not satisfied. How good is it therefore to try before we trust: yea, to trust none that are not true to God! David dared not repose upon Saul's fair promises, whom he knew to be moody and slippery. The French say in their proverb, When the Spaniard comes to parle of peace, then double bolt the door. The Hollanders make no conditions with the Spaniard, whom they know to hold that Machiavellian heresy—Fides tam diu servanda est quamdiu expediat -but such as are made at sea and sealed with great ordnance. Calvin and other Protestant divines were called to the Council of Trent, but dared not venture thither, quia me vestigia terrent, as the fox in the fable said: they had not forgot how John Huss, and Jerome of Prague sped at the Council of Constance, although they had the emperor's safe conduct. They knew that Turks and Papists concur in this, as they do in many other tenets, That there is no faith to be kept with dogs—that is, with Christians, as Turks understand it, with heretics, as Papists.

Ver. 20. As he that taketh away a garment in cold weather.] Music in mourning is held most unseasonable; that was a heathenish custom that the Jews had taken up {#Mt 9:23} Cantabat moestis tibia faneribus, saith Ovid, {a} We should rejoice with those that rejoice, and weep with those that weep. Nabla et lyra lugentibus ingrata, saith Plutarch. Music and mourning agree like harp and harrow; like thin clothing and cold weather; or like nitre and vinegar, saith Solomon. There are those who read the words otherwise, and accordingly sense them thus, As he that putteth on a garment in the cold season, or vinegar on nitre; so is he that singeth songs to a sad heart—that is, Tristitiam dissolvit cantus, ut vestes discutiunt frigus, et acetum dissolvit nitrum. {b} As a garment warmeth the body, and vinegar dissolveth nitre, so a sweet singer, by his delightsome ditty, cheereth up the pensive soul and driveth sorrow out of it. See #1Sa 16:23 2Ki 3:15 Da 6:18.

{b} Junius.

Ver. 21. If thine enemy be hungry.] Elisha did so: he feasted his persecutors {#2Ki 6:22} by a noble revenge, and provided a table for those who had provided a grave for him. Those Syrians came to Dothan full of bloody purposes to Elisha; he sends them from Samaria full of good cheer and jollity. Thus, thus should a Christian punish his pursuers, no vengeance but this is heroic and fit for imitation. {a}

{a} Dr Hall's Contempt.

Ver. 22. For thou shalt heap coals of fire.] By heaping courtesies upon him, thou shalt win him over to thyself, as the king of Israel did those Syrians he feasted. They came no more after that by way of ambush or incursion into the bounds of Israel. In doing some good to our enemies, we do most to ourselves.

And the Lord shall reward thee.] However men deal with thee. It may be they may prove dross that will not be melted, dirt that will not be mollified, but moulder to nothing, crumble to crattle as stones, &c., as having no metal of ingenuity or good nature in them. But desist not, despond not; "God will reward thee," and his retributions are more than bountiful. Or, as the words may be read, "God will pacify for thee," as he did Saul for David. Never did a charitable act go away without a blessing. God cannot but love in us this imitation of his mercy, who bids his sun to shine upon the evil and unthankful, and that love is never fruitless.

Ver. 23. The north wind drives away rain.] Hence Homer calls it αἰθρηγενουτήν, the fair weather maker, and Jerome the air's besom. There is a southerly wind that attracts clouds and engenders rain. {a}

So doth an angry countenance, a backbiting tongue.] The ready way to be rid of tale bearers is to browbeat them; for like whelps, if we stroke them they leap upon us and defile us with fawning; but give them a rap and they are gone; so here. Carry, therefore, in this case, a severe rebuke in thy countenance, as God doth {#Ps 80:16} Be not a resetter to these privy thieves, a receptacle for these mures nominis, as one calls them; the tale hearer is as blameworthy as the tale bearer, and he that "loves" a lie as he that "makes" it {#Re 22:15 Ps 15:3 Ro 1:31}

Ver. 24. It is better to dwell, &c.] {See Trapp on "Pr 21:9"} {See Trapp on "Pr 21:13"}

Ver. 25. As cold waters to a thirsty soul, so is good news.] This and many more of these proverbs Solomon might well utter out of his own experience, for he sent out into far countries for gold, horses, and other commodities, {#1Ki 9:26} besides embassies of state, and inquiries into the natures and qualities of foreign parts and peoples. Of the conversion of other countries to the faith, he could not then hear, as we now may, and lately have good news from New England. Neither had he the happiness to hear that which we have not only heard, but "seen and handled of the word of life." {#1Jo 1:1} He had επαγγελίαν, the promise; but we have ευαγγελίαν, the joyful tidings, the sum of all the good news in the world, as the angels, those first messengers, proclaimed it. {#Lu 2:10} "Jesus" is a short gospel, and the good news of him should drown all discontents—yea, make our very hearts dance levaltoes within us, as Abraham's did, though he heard of him only by the hearing of the ear, or saw him afar off. Heaven is called a "far country"; {#Mt 25:14} good news from thence brought in by the hand of the Holy Ghost, "witnessing with our spirits that we are the sons of God, and if sons, then heirs" of that far country, of that fair city "whose maker and builder is God," how welcome should that be to us, and how inexpressibly comfortable! See #1Pe 1:8.

Ver. 26. A righteous man falling down before the wicked,] i.e., Doing anything, though by mere frailty, unbecoming his profession, or that redounds not to the scandal of the weak only, {as #Ga 2:11} but to the scorn of the wicked, {as #2Sa 12:14} "is as a troubled fountain," &c., is greatly disgraced and prejudiced. What a blemish was it for Abraham to fall under the reproof of Abimelech! for Samson to be taken by the Philistines in a whorehouse! for Josiah to be inmind of his duty by Pharaoh Necho! for Peter to be drawn by a silly wench to deny his master, &c.! Was not the fountain here troubled when trampled by the feet of these beasts? the spring corrupted when conscience is thus defiled and gashed? Let it be our care to cleanse this spring of all pollutions of flesh and spirit; as a troubled fountain will clear itself, and as sweet water made brackish by the coming in of the salt, yet if naturally it be sweet, at length it will work it out.

Ver. 27. It is not good to eat too much honey.] For it breeds choler and brings diseases.

So for men to search their own glory,] i.e., To be "desirous of vain glory"; {#Ga 5:26} to seek the praise of men; to hunt after the world's plaudite; to say to it, as Tiberius once answered Justinus, Si tu volueris ego sum, si tu non vis ego non sum -I am wholly thine, I am only thy clay and wax; this is base and inglorious; this is to be Gloriae animal, popularis aurae vile mancipium, the creature of vain glory, a base slave to popular applause, as Jerome {a} calls Crates, the philosopher, who cast his goods into the sea merely for a name. Some do all for a name, as Jehu and the Pharisees; like kites, they flutter up a little, but their eye is upon the carrion. The Chaldee paraphrast by "their glory," understands the majesty of the Scriptures—which to David were sweeter than honey. These we must search, but not too curiously. Ne qui scrutatur maiestam, opprimatur a gloria, as the Vulgate here hath it; lest prying into God's majesty we be oppressed by his glory.

Ver. 28. He that hath no rule over his own spirit.] Cui non est cohibitio in spiritum suum, that reigns not in his unruly affections, but suffers them to run riot in sin, as so many headstrong horses, or to ride upon the backs one of another, like cattle in a narrow shoot.

This man being not fenced with the wall of God's fear, lies open to all assaults of Satan and other enemies; {#Eph 4:26,27 Jus 4:7} as Laish; {#Jud 18:27,28} or Hazor, that had neither gates nor bars; {#Jer 49:31} or the Hague in Holland, which the inhabitants will not wall, as desiring to have it counted rather the principal village of Europe than a lesser city. {a}

Ver. 1. So honour is not seemly for a fool.] Honour is the reward of virtue; dignity should wait upon desert. Sed dignitas in indigno est ornamentum in luto, as Salvian. Honour is as fit for a fool as a gold ring for a swine's snout. Sedes prima et vita ima, will never suit. The order of nature is inverted when the vilest men are exalted; {#Ps 12:8} it is a foul incongruity, and of very evil consequence. For thereby themselves will be hardened, and others heartened to the like prosperous folly, felix enim scelus virtus vocatur; saith Cicero. {a} The study of virtue also will be neglected when fools are preferred, and God's heavy wrath poured out in full measure upon these uncircumcised vice-gods—as I may in the worst sense best term them—who misrepresent him to the world by their ungodly practices, as a wicked, crooked, unrighteous Judge.

{a} Cicer., De Divinat., lib. ii.

Ver. 2. As the bird by wandering, and the swallow,] i.e., As these may fly where they will, and nobody cares, or is the worse; so here. And as birds tired with much wandering, and not finding where to rest, return again to their nest, after that they have beat the air with weary wing; so the causeless curse returns to the author. Cursing men are cursed men.

So the curse causeless shall not come.] What was David the worse for Shimei's rash railings? Or Jeremiah for all the people's cursings of him? {#Jer 15:10} Or the Christian churches for the Jews cursing them in their daily prayers, with a Maledic, Domine, Nazaraeis? or the reformed churches for the Pope's excommunications and execrations with bell, book, and candle? The Pope is like a wasp, no sooner angry but out comes a sting; which being out, is like a fool's dagger, rattling and snapping, without an edge. Sit ergo Gallus in nomine diabolorum; {a} The devil take the French, said Pope Julius II, as he was sitting by the fire and saying his prayers, upon news of his forces defeated by the French at the battle of Ravenna. Was not this that very mouth that "speaketh great things and blasphemies?" {#Re 13:5} And—as qualis herus talis servus, like master, like man—a certain cardinal, entering with a great deal of pomp into Paris, when the people were more than ordinarily earnest with him for his fatherly benediction: Quandoquidem, said he, hic populus vult decipi, decipiatur in nomine diaboli: Forasmuch as this people will be fooled, let them be fooled in the devil's name. And another cardinal, when at a diet held at Augsburg, Anno Dom. 1559, the Prince Elector's ambassador was (in his master's name) present at mass, but would not, as the rest did, kiss the consecrated charger; the cardinal, I say, that sung mass being displeased thereat, cried out, Si non vis benedictionem, habeas tibi maledictionem in aeternum: {b} If thou wilt not have the blessing, thou shalt have God's curse and mine for ever. "Let them curse, but bless thou: when they arise, let them be ashamed, but let thy servants rejoice." {#Ps 109:28}

{a} Annul. Gallic.

{b} Bucholcer.

Ver. 3. A whip for the horse,] viz., To quicken his slow pace. "A bridle for the ass," wherewith to lead him in the right way; for he goes willingly but a foot pace, and would be oft out, but for the bit; and besides, he is very refractory, and must be "held in with bit and bridle." {#Ps 32:9}

And a rod for the back of fools.] Τυφθεις δε τε νηπιος εγγω. A fool will be the better for beating. Vexatio dat intellectum. Due punishment may well be to these horses and asses—so the Scripture terms unreasonable and wicked men—both for a whip to incite them to good, and for a bridle to rein them in from evil. God hath rods sticking in every corner of his house for these froward fools; and if a rod serve not turn, he hath a "terrible sword." {#Isa 27:1} So must magistrates. Cuncta prius tentanda. If a rod will do, they need not brandish the sword of justice; nor do as Draco did, who punished with death every light offence. This was to kill a fly upon a man's forehead with a beetle, to the knocking out of his brains.

Ver. 4. Answer not a fool according to his folly.] When either he curseth thee, {as #Pr 26:2} or cryeth out upon thee for giving him due correction {#Pr 26:3} -for every public person had need to carry a spare handkerchief, to wipe off the dirt of disgrace and obloquy cast upon him for doing his duty, -pass such a one by in silence, as not worthy the answering. Sile, et funestam dedisti plagam, say nothing, and you play him to purpose. {a} Hezekiah would not answer Rabshakeh, nor Jeremiah Hananiah; {#Jer 28:11} nor our Saviour his adversaries. {#Mt 26:62 Joh 19:9} He reviled not his revilers, he threatened not his open opposites. {#1Pe 2:23}

Lest thou also be like unto him.] As hot and as headlong as he; for a little thing kindles us, and we are apt to think that we have reason to be mad, if evil entreated; to talk as fast for ourselves as he doth against us, and to give him as good as he brings; so that at length there will be never a wiser of the two, and people will say so.

Ver. 5. Answer a fool according to his folly.] Cast in somewhat that may sting him, and stop his mouth. Stone him with soft words but hard arguments, as Christ dealt with Pilate, lest he lift up his crest, and look upon himself as a conqueror, and be held so by the hearers. In fine, when a fool is among such as himself, answer him, lest he seem wise. If he be among wise men, answer him not, and they will regard rather quid tu taceas, quam quod ille dicat, thy seasonable silence than his passionate prattle.

Ver. 6. He that sendeth a message by the hand of a fool.] The worth of a faithful messenger he had set forth; {#Pr 15:13} here, the discommodity of a foolish one—such as were the spies Moses sent. {#Nu 13:1-14:38} So when the prophet proves a fool, and the "spiritual man is mad," {#Ho 9:7} things go on as heavily as if feet were wanting to a traveller, or as if a messenger had lost his legs.

Ver. 7. The legs of the lame are not equal.] Locum habet proverbium cum is qui male vivit, bene loquitur; saith an interpreter. {a} This proverb hits such as speak well, but live otherwise. Uniformity and ubiquity of obedience are sure signs of sincerity; but as an unequal pulse argues a distempered body, so doth uneven walking show a diseased soul. A wise man's life is all of one colour, like itself; and godliness runs through it, as the woof runs through the warp. But if all the parts of the line of thy life be not straight before God, it is a crooked life. If thy tongue speak by the talent, but thine hands scarce work by the ounce, thou shalt pass for a Pharisee. {#Mt 23:3} They spake like angels, lived like devils; had heaven commonly at their tongue ends, but the earth continually at their finger ends. Odi homines ignava opera, philosopha sententia, said the heathen; that is, I hate such hypocrites as have mouths full of holiness, hearts full of hollowness. A certain stranger coming on embassy to the senate of Rome, and colouring his hoary hair and pale cheeks with vermilion hue, a grave senator espying the deceit, stood up and said, 'What sincerity are we to expect at this man's hand, whose locks, and looks, and lips do lie?'

{a} Rodolph. Bain.

Ver. 8. As he that bindeth a stone in a sling.] A precious stone is not fit for a sling—where it will soon be cast away and lost; no more is honour for a fool. See #Pr 26:1. Ebenezer saith that Margemah, here rendered a sling, signifies purple, and senseth it thus: As it is an absurd thing to wrap a pebble in purple, so is it to prefer a fool, as Saul did Doeg, as Ahasuerus Haman.

Ver. 9. As a thorn goeth up into the hand, &c.] He handleth it hard, as if it were another kind of wood, and it runs into his hand. So do profane persons pervert and pollute the Holy Scriptures, to their own and other men's destruction. By a parable here the Hebrews understand either these parables of Solomon or the whole book of God. At this day no people under heaven do so abuse Scripture as the Jews do. For commending, in their familiar epistles, some letter they have received, they say, Eloquia Domini, eloquia pura, - The words of my Lord are pure words. When they flatter their friends, Pateat, they say, accessus ad aditum sanctitatis tuae: {a} Let me have access to the sanctuary of thy holiness. When they would testify themselves thankful, Nomini tuo psallam, - I will sing praise to thy name. When they complain, friends forsake them, "Lord," say they, "thou goest not forth with our armies." When they invite their friends to a banquet or a wedding, "In thee have I trusted; let me not be put to confusion." Lo, thus do these witless, wicked wretches abuse God's parables, and take his name in vain. Whereas the very heathen could say, Non loquendum de Deo sine lumine, - God is not to be talked of lightly, loosely, disrespectfully. "Thou shalt fear that glorious and fearful name, Jehovah thy God," saith Moses, their own lawgiver. {#De 28:58}

{a} Weemse.

Ver. 10. The great God that formed all things.] As he made all so he maintains all, even the evil and the unthankful. God deals not as that cruel Duke of Alva did in the Netherlands; -some he roasted to death, saith the historian, {a} starved others, and that even after quarter, saying, though he promised to give them their lives, he did not promise to find them meat; -but as he hath given them their lives, forfeited in Adam, so he allows them a livelihood, gives them their portion in this life, fills their bellies with his good treasure, but by it sends leanness into their souls, or if he fattens them, it is to fit them for destruction, as fated ware is fitted for the meat market.

{a} Grimston.

Ver. 11. As a dog returneth to his vomit.] A homely comparison, able to make a true Christian ready to lay up all, but good enough for the odious apostate to whom it is applied. Such a one was Judas, Julian, Ecebolius, Baldvinus, Islebius, Agricola, that first Antinomian, -who did many times promise amendment, and yet afterwards fell to his error again; -after that he condemned his error, and recanted it in a public auditory, and printed his revocation; yet when Luther was dead, he relapsed into that error, so hard a thing is it to get poison out when once swallowed down. Harding, Bishop Jewel's antagonist, was in King Edward's days a thundering preacher against Popery, wishing he could cry out against it as loud as the bells of Oseney, so that by his preaching many were confirmed in the truth. All which to be so they can testify that heard him and be yet alive, saith Mr Foxe. See an excellent letter of the Lady Jane Grey's to him while she was prisoner in the Tower, "Acts and Monuments," fol. 1291, wherein she wills him to remember the horrible history of Julian of old, and the lamentable case of Spira a late, &c.

Ver. 12. Seest thou a man wise in his own conceit?] This foolish wise man, or wise foolish man (for whether of the two to call him I know not, as the chronicler saith of Sir Thomas Moore), is that "dog" spoken of in verse #Pr 26:11, that forethinks not the evil that followeth upon his returning to his filthy vomit, which, being made much worse by the heat of the sun and open air, maketh him much more sick than before he had been. Similarly, the witless wicked man, insensible of the evil of his way, and highly conceited thereof, goes boldly on, till there be neither hope of better nor place of worse. {See Trapp on "Pr 3:7"} See my Common Place of Arrogance.

Ver. 13. The slothful man sayeth, There is a lion.] {See Trapp on "Pr 22:13"}

Ver. 14. As the door turneth upon his hinges.] But comes not off, unless lifted or knocked off. So neither comes the sluggard out of his feathered nest, where he lies soaking and stretching, unless hard hunger or other necessity rouse and raise him. As abroad there is a lion, so at home there is a lusk, a lurdam, and a losel, that lives in the worm to no purpose—yea, to bad purpose, and being wise in his own conceit, will not accept of better counsel. Those whose heads are laid upon down pillows are not apt to hear noises; no more are those that live at ease in Zion to hearken to wholesome advice, or if sometimes they have a kind of willingness and velleity to do better, yet it is but as the door that turns on the hinges, but yet hangs still upon them.

Ver. 15. The slothful hideth his hand in his bosom.] {See Trapp on "Pr 19:24"}

Ver. 16. Than seven men that can render a reason.] Yea, though they were the seven wise men of Greece, they were all fools to him. The proud Pharisees rejected the counsel of God, and would not be baptized of John. {#Lu 7:30} Belly policy teaches the sluggard a great many excuses, which he thinks will go for wisdom, because by them he thinks to sleep in a whole skin.

Ver. 17. He that passeth by and meddleth, &c.] Two kind of studies have I always hated, saith one: Studium partium, et studium novarum forum. Study of parts, and study of new markets. They that enter strife without calling, saith another, do commonly hazard themselves into trouble without comfort. This was Jehoshaphat's folly at Jabeshgilead, and, as some think, Josiah's when he went up against Pharaohnecho, thinking thereby to ingratiate with the Assyrian, Pharaoh's professed enemy. It is from idleness usually that men are thus busy in other men's matters without thank or other benefit, {#1Ti 5:13 1Th 4:11} and therefore this proverb fitly follows the former. Howbeit this is not always true, for charity may move men to interpose for a right understanding and a good accord between disagreeing parties. Neither in this case must a man affect to be held no meddler, since "blessed are the peace makers." And though it be for most part a thankless office—for if a man have two friends he oft loseth one of them—yet our reward is with God; and if, by seeking to part the scuffle, we derive some blows upon ourselves, yet the Euge of a good conscience will salve that well enough. That which is here forbidden is for a man to make himself a party, and maintain one side against another. And yet where it is for God and his truth this may be done too; as when Queen Elizabeth not only sat as umpire between the Spaniard, French, and Hollanders ^{a} -so as she might well have taken up that saying of her father, Cui adhaereo, praeest, He whom I side with carries it—but afterwards, when she saw her time, undertook the protection of the Netherlanders against the Spaniard, wherein all princes admired her fortitude, and the King of Sweden said that she had now taken the diadem from her head, and set it upon the doubtful chance of war. This was done Anno 1585. ^{b}

Is like else that taketh a dog by the ears.] Where he loves not to be handled, but about the neck rather. The Dutch have a like proverb, -To take a dog by the tail. The Greeks, -To take a lion by the beard, or a bear by the tooth—to thrust one's hand into a wasp's nest—to stir up a scorpion, &c. ^{c}

^{c} τον λεοντα ξυραθαι. σφηκας ερεθιζειν

Ver. 19. Am not I in jest?] The wicked man's mirth is usually mixed with mischief. It is no sport, unless he may have the devil his play fellow—no good fellowship without horse play. Salt jests, and dry flouts, to the just grief or disgrace of another, is counted facetious and fine. But St Paul calls it foolish ^{a} ^{#Eph 5:4} and further saith, that "for such things' sake the wrath of God cometh upon the children of disobedience." Quid mihi cum fabulis, cum iocis? saith Bernard, -What hath a Christian to do with jesting and jeering? We allow a horse to prance and skip in a pasture, which if he doth when backed by the rider, we count him an unruly and unbroken jade. So, howsoever in heathens and atheists God may wink at jocularly aud dicacity, yet he looks for better things from his own people. Credo mihi, res severa est verum gaudium, saith Seneca; True mirth is a severe business. But what a madman was Robert de Beliasme, Earl of Shrewsbury, 1111 AD, delighting to do mischief and exercise his cruelty, and then to say, Are not I in jest? An example hereof he showed upon his own son, who, being but a child, and playing with him, the father, for a pastime, put his thumb in the boy's eyes, and thrust out the balls thereof. {b}

{b} Speed's Chron., 473.

Ver. 20. Where no wood is, there the fire goeth out.] Lignis ignis conservatur. So is strife by evil tongues; these are the devil's bellows and boutefeaus. "Ye shall conceive chaff, ye shall bring forth stubble, your breath as fire shall devour you." {#Isa 33:11} Such is the breath of tale bearers. A curfew bell would do well for these incendiaries, that else may "set on fire the whole course of nature."

{#Jas 3:6} {See Trapp on "Pr 16:28"}

Ver. 21. So is a contentious man.] Heb., A man of contentions, Vir biliosus et bellicosus; a man made up of discords, as Democritus said the world was—that loves to live in the fire, as the salamander doth; the dog days continue with such all the year long, and, like mad dogs, they bite and set a-madding all they can fasten on, as did Sheba, Korah, and Judas, who set all the disciples murmuring at the oil poured on Christ's head. So Arius set all the Christian world on a light fire, and Pope Hildebrand cast abroad his firebrands.

Ver. 22. The words of a talebearer, &c.] See #Pr 18:8.

Ver. 23. Burning lips and a wicked heart, &c.] The tongue of the righteous is as fined silver; but glossing lips upon a false heart is no better than dross upon dirt: counterfeit friends are naught on both sides, having os maledictum et cor malum, as Luther renders this text; -a bad mouth, and a worse heart. Wicked men are said to speak with a heart and a heart, {#Ps 12:2, marg.} as speaking one thing and thinking another, drawing a fair glove on a foul hand. These are dangerous to be dealt withal; for, like serpents, they can sting without hissing; like cur dogs, suck your blood only with licking, and in the end kill you and cut your throats without biting: so cunning and close are they in the conveyance of their collusion. Squire, sent out of Spain to poison Queen Elizabeth, anointed the pommel of her saddle with poison secretly, and, as it were, doing somewhat else, praying with a loud voice, God save the queen. {a} When those Romish incendiaries, Gifford, Hodgeson, and others, had set Savage to work to kill the said queen, they first set forth a book to persuade the English Catholics to attempt nothing against her. So Parsons, when he had hatched that nameless villany, the gunpowder plot, set forth his book of Resolution, as if he had been wholly made up of devotion. Caveatur osculum Iscarioticum. Betware the mouth of Judas. It is the property of a godly man to speak the truth from his heart. {#Ps 15:2}

{a} Camden's Elizabeth, 57.

Ver. 24. He that hateth dissembleth with his lips.] And so heaps sin upon sin, till he be transformed into a breathing devil. This is meant not so much of the passion of hatred as of the habit of it; when it hath wholly leavened the heart, and lies watching its opportunity of doing mischief. The devil is at inn with such, as Mr Bradford {a} phraseth it, and was as great a master, long before the Florentine secretary was born, as since.

{a} Serm. of Repent.

Ver. 25. When he speaketh fair, believe him not.] Νηφε και μεμνησο απιστειν. Take heed whom you trust; "beware of men"; {#Mt 10:17} bless yourselves from your pretended friends, and pray with David to be "delivered from lying lips, and from a deceitful tongue." {#Ps 120:2} Admit they not only speak us fair, but do us many kindnesses; yet believe them as little as David did Saul. Enemies' gifts are giftless gifts, said one heathen. {a} And timeo Danaos et dona ferentes, saith another. {b} “Munera magna quidem misit, sed misit in hamo:

Et piscatorcm piscis amare potest?”—Martial.

{b} Virgil.

Ver. 26. Whose hatred is covered by deceit, &c.] He shall be detected and detested of all, sooner or later. God will wash off his varnish with rivers of brimstone. Love, as it is the best armour, so it is the worst cloak, and will serve dissemblers, as the disguise Ahab put on, and perished. {#IKi 22:30-37}

Ver. 27. Whoso diggeth a pit shall fall thereinto.] This is the same with #Ps 7:15, from which it seems to be taken; {See Trapp on "Ps 7:15"} Heathen writers have many proverbs to like purpose. See Erasm. Chiliad.

And he that rolleth a stone, it will return upon him.] Cardinal Benno relates a memorable story of Pope Hildebrand, or Gregory VII, that he hired a base fellow to lay a great stone upon a beam in the church where Henry IV, the emperor, used to pray, and so to lay it that it might fall as from the top of the church upon the emperor's head, and kill him. But while this wretch was attempting to do it, the stone, with its weight, drew him down, and falling upon him, dashed him in pieces upon the pavement. The Thracians in Herodotus, being offended with Jupiter for raining unseasonably upon them, shot up their arrows at him, which soon after returned upon their own heads.

Ver. 28. A lying tongue hateth those that are addicted by it.] False love proves to be true hatred, by the evil consequent of its ruin and destruction to the party flattered, and betrayed by a smooth supparasitation. There are those who thus read the text. The false tongue hateth those that smite it, &c. Truth breeds hatred, as the fair nymphs did the ill-favoured fauns and satyrs.

Ver. 1. Boast not thyself of tomorrow.] That is, Of what thou wilt do hereafter, {#Ex 13:14, marg.} in quovis tempore postero. See #1Sa 28:19 Jas 4:14. He {a} was a wise man, that being invited to a feast on the next morrow, answered, Ex multis annis crastinum non habui, For these many years I have not had a morrow day to promise for any business. But what luxurious fools were those Sybarites, that intending a feast, did use to invite their guests a whole year before! {b}

For thou knowest not what a day may bring forth.] {c} A great bellied day. While a woman is yet with child, none can tell what kind of birth it will be. {#Lu 21:23} Time travaileth with God's decrees, and in their season brings them forth; but little doth any man know what is in the womb of tomorrow, till God hath signified his will by the event. David in his prosperity said, that he should "never be moved"; but he soon after found a sore alteration: God confuted his confidence. {#Ps 30:6,7} So the evil which men intend against us may prove abortive, either die in the womb, or else they may travail with mischief, and bring forth a lie—that is, somewhat contrary to what they intended; but fata viam invenient—stat sua cuique dies. {#Jud 5:28-30 1Ki 20:10} Accidit in puncto quod non speratur in anno.

{a} Petrarch, lib. iii. Memorab. ad finem.

{c} Nescis quid serus vesper vehat. Hinc Hebraei eventa appellant "filios temporis."

Ver. 2. Let another man praise thee, and not thine own mouth.] Unless it be in defence of thine innocence, as David, {#Ps 7:10} or when the concealing of thy goodness may turn to the hindrance of the truth, or to the hurt of the Church, or impairing of God's glory, as Paul. {#2Co 11:1-12:21} Let a man "do worthily in Ephrata," and he shall be "famous in Bethlehem"; {#Ru 4:11} he need not be his own trumpeter, as Jehu, the proud Pharisee, and other arrogant, vain glorious braggards. See my Common Place of Arrogance. God will take order that those that honour him be honoured of all, and that fame shall attend virtue, as the shadow doth the body. Say that wicked men will not speak well but ill of us, yet we have a testimony in their consciences, as David had in Saul's, Daniel in Darius's, &c. "Demetrius hath a good report of all good men, and of the truth itself"; {#3Jo 12} and that is enough for him, since "not he that commendeth himself, or hath the world's applause, is approved, but he whom the Lord and his people commendeth." {#2Co 10:18} Haec ego primus vidi, I see these matters first, was a vain glorious brag that Zabarel had better held in. And haec ego feci, I made these things, proves men to be no better than faeces, dregs, saith Luther, wittily. These brags are but dregs; Laus proprio sordeseit in ore; that which had been much to a man's commendation, if out of another man's mouth, sounds very slenderly out of his own, saith Pliny. {a} Let her "works," not her words, "praise her in the gates," {#Pr 31:31} as they did Ruth. "All the city of my people knows that thou art a virtuous woman." {#Ru 3:11} She was so, and she had the credit of it; so had the Virgin Mary, and yet she was troubled when truly praised of the angel. They shall be praised of angels in heaven, who have eschewed the praises of men on earth, and blush when but justly commended, speaking modestly and meanly of their own good parts and practices. Saint Luke saith, "Levi made a great feast." {#Lu 5:27-29} But when himself speaks of it, {#Mt 9:10} he saith only, that Christ came home and ate bread in Levi's house, to teach us the truth of this proverb, that another man's mouth should praise us, and not our own. Like as in the Olympic games, those that overcame did not put the garlands on their own heads, but stayed till others did it for them so here.

{a} Quod magnificum referente alio fuisset, ipso qui gesserat recensente vanescit. -Plin., Ep. 8, lib. i.

Ver. 3. But a fool's wrath is heavier than them both.] Himself cannot rule nor repress it, but that he dies of the sullens sometimes, as that fool Nabal did. Much less can others endure it without trouble and regret, especially when so peevish and past grace as to be angry with those that approve not, applaud not his folly. How angry was Nebuchadnezzar, how much hotter was his heart than his oven against those three worthies, for refusing to fall down before his golden mawmet! How unsufferable was Herod's anger in the massacre at Bethlehem, and the primitive persecutors for the two first ages after Christ, that I come no lower. See my Common Place of Anger.

Ver. 4. Wrath is cruel, and anger is outrageous.] Or, Overflowing all the banks, or carrying all before it as an impetuous land flood, and therefore most intolerable, as #Pr 27:3; but behold a worse matter: Envy is an evil that none can stand before for it knows neither end nor measure, as appears in the devil and his patriarch Cain; in Saul, the Pharisees, those spiteful Jews, #Ac 13:45. And to this day they do antiquum obtinere, bear the old grudge to us Christians, cursing us in their daily prayers, calling us bastard Gentiles, professing that if their Messiah were come, rather than we should have any part in him, or benefit by him, they would crucify him a hundred times over. They have a saying among them, Optimus qui inter gentes est dignus cui caput conteratur tanquam serpenti; The best of us Gentiles is worthy of the serpent's punishment, viz., to have his head bruised, &c., so great is their envy still against Christians, who pity them and pray for them; and truly it is no more than need, since by the question here propounded we may easily guess how potent this quick sighted and sharp fanged malignity, envy, is; indeed the venom of all vices is found in it;

neither will it be drawn to embrace that good which it envies to another, as too good for him. {#Ac 13:44,45}

Ver. 5. Open rebuke is better than secret love.] For, after the nature of pills, rebuke, though it be not toothsome, yet it is wholesome, and a sure sign of a faithful friend, if rightly managed. See my Common Place of Admonition. Secret love, that either seeth nothing amiss in a friend, or dare not say so, is little worth in comparison. "Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thy heart," but, as an argument of thy love, "thou shalt reprove him," plainly, but wisely, "and not suffer sin upon him," {#Le 19:17} much less further it, and be his broker or pander in it, as Hirah the Adullamite was to his friend Judah, and Jonadab to his cousin Amnon. {#2Sa 13:5}

Ver. 6. Faithful are the wounds of a friend.] And are therefore to be prayed for; "but the kisses of an enemy are deceitful," or to be detested, and therefore prayed against: so some read the words, and make the opposition. See this done by David. {#Ps 141:5} Knocks from "a righteous man" he would take for "kindnesses"; but the precious oils of the wicked—answerable to their kisses here—he would cry out of, as the "breaking of his head"; for so Mercer, Ainsworth, and others read that text, and the Septuagint accordeth, saying, Let not the oil of the sinner supple my head; by oil meaning flattering words, as #Ps 55:21. Reproofs and corrections, though sharp and unpleasant, yet if looked upon as issuing from that love that lies hid in the heart, they are faithful—that is, fair and pleasant, as the Chaldee interprets it.

But the kisses of an enemy are deceitful, / i.e., His glossing and closing with us for a further mischief; such as were the kisses of Joab, Judas, Absalom, and Ahithophel are not to be fancied, but deprecated and detested. {See Trapp on "Pr 26:23"} Theophrastus {a} hath in his character drawn out these kissing cut-throats, who can be affable to their enemies, and disguise their hatred in commendation, while they privately lay their snares: men Italianated, that can salute with mortal embracements, and clasp you in those arms which they mean to imbrue in your dearest blood. These treacherous kissers are of kin to that mad Haeket, hanged in Queen Elizabeth's days, who bit off his honest schoolmaster's nose as he embraced him, under colour of renewing their love, and ate it down before the poor man's face. {b}

So, and no better, are the kisses, that is, the fawnings and flatteries, of perfidious persons.

{b} Camden's Elizabeth, Anno 1592.

Ver. 7. The full soul loatheth an honeycomb.] Heb., Treadeth it under feet as dung or dogs meat. Chrysostom reports the saying of a certain philosopher to the same purpose. Anima in satietate posita etiam favis illudit; The sated soul rejecteth finest fare and most sweetest sustenance. This holds true in spirituals too. The honey of God's holy word, how is it trampled on by those stall fed beasts, in whom fulness hath bred forgetfulness, -saturity security! "Our soul loatheth this light meat," said they of their manna, when once cloyed with it. The Pharisees found no more sweetness or savouriness in our Saviour's sermons, than in the white of an egg, or a dry chip. Our nation is also sick of a spiritual plethory or pleurisy; we begin to surfeit on the bread of life. Now when God sees his mercies lying under table, it is just with him to call to the enemy to take away. "Behold, therefore, I will deliver thee to the men of the East, -who shall eat thy fruit, and drink thy milk." {#Eze 25:4}

But to the hungry soul every bitter thing is sweet.] Hunger is the best cook, say the Dutch—the best sauce, say we; experience proves it so: how sweetly doth it season homely cates, coarse fare. {a} Artaxerxes Memor being put to flee for his life, fed hungrily on barley bread, with dried figs, and said he never made a better meal in all his life. Huniades, once driven out of the field by the Turks, and lighting upon a shepherd, craved for God's sake of him something to eat: who brought him to a poor cottage not far off, causing to be set before him bread and water with a few onions: who in the pleasant remembrance of that passed misery, would often times after in his greatest banquets say, that he never in his life fared better or more daintily than when he supped with this shepherd. {b}

Ver. 8. As a bird that wandereth from her nest.] Doth it of inconstancy, and oft meets with misery: whereas God had taken order that none should molest a bird upon her nest. {#De 22:6,7}

So is a man that wandereth from his place.] A vagrant, an idleby, or a busybody, that keeps not his station, abides not in the calling wherein he was called, {#1Co 7:20} exposed to misery and mischief, to ruth and ruin. {#Nu 16:32 2Sa 6:6,7 2Ch 26:19 Jon 1:1-17 Jude 6 Ps 107:4} An honest man's heart is the place where his calling is: such a one, when he is abroad, is like a fish in the air, whereinto if it leap for recreation or necessity, yet it soon returns to its own element.

Ver. 9. Ointment and perfume rejoice the heart.] Sweet ointment, sensum afficit, spiritum reficit, cerebrum iuvat, affects the sense, refresheth the spirit, comforteth the brain.

So doth the sweetness of a man's friend by hearty counsel.] It is as a fresh gale of sweet air to him that lives among walking dunghills, open sepulchres. It preserveth the soul as a pomander, and refresheth it more than musk or civet doth the brain. The counsel of such especially (ministers, I mean) of whom the Scripture saith, that they "are unto God a sweet savour of Christ unto them that are saved"; {#2Co 2:15} these are they that can sell us oil for our lamps, that we may buy for ourselves. {#Mt 25:9} Such a counsellor may be an angel, nay, a god to another, as Moses was to Aaron: the comfort given by such (as the blessing of parents) is usually most effectual, because they are in God's room. See #Job 33:23, "If there be a messenger with him, an interpreter, one among a thousand," Unus e millibus not Unus e similibus as the Vulgate reads it falsely, and from the purpose.

Ver. 10. Thine own friend and thy father's friend forsake not.] To forsake a friend, an old friend especially, is to forsake one's self: for a friend is a second self, and friendship, as wine, is commendable from its oldness. What a price set Solomon upon Hiram, who had been his father's friend; {#1Ki 5:1-12} and how did he seek his love, as a precious inheritance left him, as it were, by his father; and how courteously, for his father's sake, likewise dealt he with Abiathar, that had dealt disloyally with him.

Neither go into thy brother's house.] Cajetan reads it, and perhaps better, Thy brother's house will not come in the day of thy calamity, when thine old friend will visit thee and stick close to thee, as Jonathan did to David, and Onesiphorus to Paul. David complains of his carnal kindred, -"My lovers and my friends stand afar off from my sore, and mine acquaintance stand aloof," {#Ps 88:18} as the priest and Levite did from the wounded man, when the Samaritan, a stranger, but a neighbour indeed, relieved him.

Ver. 12. A prudent man foreseeeth the evil.] {See Trapp on "Pr 22:3"}

Ver. 13. Take his garment that is surety.] {See Trapp on "Pr 20:16"}

Ver. 14. He that blesseth his friend with a loud voice.] Qui leonum laudibus murem obruit, that extols a man above measure, -as the false prophets did Ahab, and the people Herod, -that praiseth him to his face; which, when a court parasite did to Sigismund the emperor, he gave him a sound box on the ear. {a} A preacher in Constantine's time, ausus est imperatorem in os beatum dicere, saith Eusebius, presumed to call the emperor a saint to his face; but he went away with a check. {b} When Aristobulus the historian presented to Alexander the great book that he had written of his glorious acts, wherein he had flatteringly made him greater than he was, Alexander, after he had read the book, threw it into the river Hydaspes, and said to the author, 'It were a good deed to throw thee after it.'

Rising early in the morning.] As afraid to be prevented by another, or that he shall not have time enough all day after to do it in.

Ver. 15. A continual dropping.] {See Trapp on "Pr 19:13"}

Ver. 16. Whosoever hideth her, hideth the wind,] i.e., One may as soon hide the wind, or hold it from blowing, as hide her shame, or hush her brawling. The wife should make her husband her covering, when she is abroad especially; but many wives are so intemperate and wilful, that a man may as well hide the wind in his fist, or oil in his clutch fist, as his wife's infirmities. Let this be marked by those that venture upon shrews, if rich, fair, well descended, in hope to tame them and make them better.

Ver. 17. Iron sharpeneth iron.] One edge tool sharpeneth another; so doth the face of a man his friend. Ipsæ aspectus viri boni delectat, saith Seneca. Let us "whet one another to love and good works," saith Paul, {#Heb 10:24} as boars whet their tusks, as mowers whet their scythes. Thus Paul was "pressed in spirit" by the coming of Timothy, {#Ac 18:5} and extimulates Timothy to "stir up (αναζωοπυρειν) the gift of God that was in him." {#2Ti 1:6} Thus Peter roused up (διεγειρειν) those to whom he wrote, ex veterno torporis et teporis, out of their spiritual lethargy. {#1Pe 1:13} And thus those good souls "spake often one to another," for mutual quickening in dull and dead times. {#Mal 3:16,17} {See Trapp on "Mal 3:16"} {See Trapp on "Mal 3:17"} As amber grease is nothing so sweet in itself as when compounded with other things; so godly and learned men are gainers by communicating themselves to others. Conference hath incredible profit in all sciences. Castalio renders this text thus: Ut ferrum ferro, sic heroines alii aliis coniuguntur; As iron is to iron, so are men joined and soldered to one another, -viz., in a very straight bond of love and friendship.

Ver. 18. Whoso keepeth the fig tree shall eat, &c.] Of the continually renewed fruits thereof; for when the ripe figs are pulled off others shortly come in their place. The Egyptian fig tree is reported by Solinus to bear fruit seven times in a year: such as is good both for meat and medicine, as Galen observeth, and after him Dioscorides.

So he that waiteth on his master shall be honoured.] That is, Liberally maintained, and highly promoted, as Joseph was wherever he served. The heathens were very cruel to their servants; putting an engine about their necks, called πανσικοπη, and it reached down to their hands, that they might not so much as lick off the meal when they were sifting it. These poor servants were in worse case than the Jews' oxen. {#1Co 9:9} But such as are faithful and serviceable, however their masters deal with them—they should deal well with them {#De 15:12-14} -God will bestow upon them a child's part, even "the reward of inheritance." {#Col 3:22-24} Their masters also, if faithful and beloved, as "they partake of the benefit," {a} viz., of their good service, so they will be beneficial to them. Beneficentia recompensatores, as Bullinger, after Theophilact, renders that text, #1Ti 6:2.

Ver. 19. As in water face answereth to face, &c.] Men's fancies differ as much as their faces: so the Chaldee interprets it. But they do better that give this sense, that in regard of natural corruption, all men look with one countenance, and have one visage; since "whole evil is in man, and whole man in evil," neither by nature is there ever a better of us. In the heart of the vilest person we may see, as in a mirror, our own evil hearts. For as there were many Marii in one Caesar, so are there many Cains and Judases in the best of us. And as that first chaos had the seed of all creatures, and wanted only the Spirit's motion to bring them forth, {#Ge 1:1,2} so there is a πανσπερμια, a common seed plot of sin in us all; there wants but the warmth and watering of Satan's temptations to make it bud. {#Eze 7:10} And though there were no devil, yet our naughty nature would act Satan's part against itself; it would have a supply of wickedness, as a serpent hath poison, from itself; it hath a spring to feed it. Hence our Saviour chargeth his own disciples to take heed of surfeiting, drunkenness, and distracting carefulness {#Lu 21:34} -who would ever have suspected such monsters to lurk in such holy bosoms? And St Paul saw cause to warn so pure a soul as young Timothy to "flee youthly lusts," {#2Ti 2:22} and to exhort the younger women "with chastity"; thereby intimating, that while he was exhorting them to chastity, some impure motion might steal upon him unawares. Corruption in the best will have some flurts.

Ver. 20. Hell and destruction are never satisfied.] Hell and the grave have their name in Hebrew from their unsatisfiability, being always craving more, and that with assiduity and importunity. And this fitly follows upon the former verse, as Aben Ezra well observeth, that men may be frightened by the remembrance of hell's wide mouth gaping for them, from following the bent of their sinful natures; and that those that here have never enough, shall once have fire enough in the bottom of hell.

So the eyes of men are never satisfied.] That is, Their lusts, their carnal concupiscence. To seek to satisfy it is an endless piece of business, Quaecunque videt oculus, ea omnia desiderat avarus, saith Basil. The covetous man hankereth after all that he beholdeth; the curse of unsatisfiability lies heavy upon him; his desire is a fire, riches a fuel, which seem to slake the fire; but, indeed, they increase it. "He that loveth silver shall never be satisfied with silver"; {#Ecc 5:10} no more shall he that loveth honour, pleasure, &c. Earthly things cannot so fill the heart, but still it would have more things in number, and otherwise for manner. And therefore the particles in the Hebrew that signify and and or, come of a word that signifies to desire; {a} because the desires of a man would have this and that, and that and another; and doth also tire itself, not knowing whether to have this, or that, or the other, &c.

Ver. 23. Be thou diligent to know the state, &c.] Heb., Knowing thou shalt know the face of thy flocks; alluding, belike, to those shepherds that know their sheep asunder by their visages, and can call them by name, as #Joh 10:3

And look well to thy herds.] Heb., Set thy heart to them—that is, be very inquisitive and solicitous of their welfare. Leave not all to servants, though never so faithful; but supervise and oversee business, as Boaz did. His eyes were in every corner—on the servants, on the reapers, on the gleaners. He lodged in the midst of his husbandry, he was not to learn that the master's eye feeds the horse, and the master's foot soils the land, {a} and that Procul a villa sua dissitus, iacturae vicinus, as Columella {b} hath it: He that is far from his husbandry is not far from poverty. And unless the master be present, saith the same author, it will be as in an army where the general is absent, cuncta officia cessant, all business will be hindered. He must be as the great wheel to set all awork, or little will be done.

Ver. 24. For riches endure not for ever.] Whether they be riches of inheritance or of purchase, they will waste without good husbandry. The royalty of Solomon could not have consisted for all his riches, had he not been frugal. Our Henry III merited to be called Regni dilapidator; a waste kingdom. But what a great husband, perhaps too great, was Louis XI of France, of whom ye shall find in the chamber of accounts a reckoning of two shillings for new sleeves to his old doublet, and three half pence for liquor to grease his boots (A.D. 1461)! Pertinax, the emperor, also was a singular good husband, for the which, as the rich gallants derided him, so others of us, Quibus virtus luxuria potior, laudabamus, who prized virtue above luxury, commended it in him, saith Dio the historian, who writes his life.

Ver. 25. The hay appeareth, and the tender grass.] And the due time must be taken to take it in for fodder in the hard winter. The earth is alma mater, a bountiful mother, to man and beast. It is, as one well saith, marsepium Domini, the Lord's great purse. The stars also are God's storehouses, which he openeth to our profit. {#De 28:12} Every star is like a purse of gold, saith one, out of which God throws down riches, which good men gather, bad men scramble for. By their influence they make a scatter of corn, hay, fruits of all sorts. And good husbands cut hay, not only in the valleys, where there is great store, but upon the mountains too, as soon as it is ready, lest heat or wet mar it. Note here by the way—(1.) How good the Lord is, that stoops so low as to teach us thrift; (2.) How perfect the Holy Scripture is, that instructs us in these lessor matters also.

Ver. 26. The lambs are for thy clothing.] Ad esum et ad usum, for food and raiment a profitable creature. Some creatures are profitable alive, not dead, as the dog, horse, &c.; some dead, not alive, as the hog; some both, as the ox; yet none so profitable as the sheep.

And the goats are the price of thy field.] Wherewith thou mayest pay thy rent, and besides hire tillage, or it may be purchase land, and have money in thy purse to do thy needs with.

Ver. 27. And thou shalt have goat's milk enough.] And this was anciently accounted good cheer indeed. By goat's milk understand all manner of white meat, as they call it; and see how sparingly they lived in those days, content with that they had at hand, and not running every hand's while to the butcher's or draper's, as now. Or if the men, being harder wrought, had stronger meat sometimes, yet the maidens were well content with a more slender diet. Apelles painted a servant with his hands full of tools—to show that he should be work brittle; with broad shoulders—to bear hard usage; with hind's feet—to run about his businesses; with ass's ears, and his mouth shut—to signify that he should be swift to hear, slow to speak; lastly, with a lean belly—that he should be content with coarse fare, spare diet, &c.

Ver. 1. The wicked fly when none pursueth.] None but their own consciences. Facti sunt a corde suo fugitivi, as Tertullian hath it. Such a fearful fugitive was bloody Cain, who cried out, when there were yet few or none to pursue him, "Every man that meets me shall kill me." {#Ge 4:14} Such were those cursed Canaanites that were chased by God's hornet sent among them—that is, by the blood hounds of their own consciences. {#Jos 24:12} Such were those Syrians that, struck with a panic terror, fled for their lives, and left their rich camp for a booty to the Israelites. {#2Ki 7:7} The shadow of the mountains seemed armed men to guilty Gaal. {#Jud 9:36} The Burgundians, expecting a battle, thought long thistles were lances. God sends a faintness into the hearts of the wicked, and the sound of a shaken leaf frightens them. In arithmetic, of nothing comes nothing, yet they fear where no fear is. As Cardinal Crescentius feared a fancied devil walking in his chamber like a great mastiff {a}, and couching under his table as he was writing letters to Rome against the Protestants. {b} As Richard III thought he saw in his sleep various images like terrible devils, pulling and hauling at him, after he had, Joab-like, slain two men more righteous than him, his two innocent nephews. {c} As Charles IX of France, after the cruel massacre, could neither sleep nor wake without music to divert his self-accusing thoughts, so hotly was he haunted and followed with the furies of his own conscience. {d} As the Spanish fleet, in 1588, Venit, vidit, fugit, as the Zealanders thereupon stamped their new coin. {e} The Hollanders also stamped new money with this invincible armada, as the Spaniards in their pride had styled it, having this motto Impius fugit, nemine sequente, {f} The wicked fly when no man pursueth. I pity the loss of their souls, saith a reverend man, {g} that serve themselves as the Jesuit in Lancashire, followed by one that found his glove with a desire to restore it him, but pursued inwardly with a guilty conscience, leaps over a hedge, plunges into a gravel pit behind it unseen and unthought of, wherein he was drowned.

But the righteous is bold as a lion.] Conscientia pura semper securo, A good conscience hath sure confidence; and he that hath it sits, Noah-like, mediis tranquillis in undis, quiet in the greatest combustions, freed, if not from the common destruction, yet from the common distraction; for he knows whom he hath trusted, and is sure that neither life nor death, nor things present, nor things to come, can ever sunder him from God's love in Christ. {#Ro 8:38} He is bold as a lion, saith the text; yea, as a young lion, that is in his hot blood, and therefore fears no other creature; yea, when he is fiercely pursued he will never once alter his gait, though he die for it. No more will the righteous man his resolution against sin, such is his Christian courage. Daniel chose rather to be cast to the lions, than to bear a lion in his own bosom, to violate his conscience. The primitive Christians chose rather to be abandoned, ad leones quam ad lenones, they preferred affliction before sin. And this their persecutors counted not courage and magnanimity, but wilfulness and obstinace. {h} But they knew not the power of the Spirit, nor the private armour of proof that the righteous have about their hearts; that insuperable faith whereby some have "stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the violence of fire," &c., {#Heb 11:33,34} and whereby they do all daily encounter and conquer that roaring lion, the devil, "quenching his fiery darts," &c. {#Eph 6:16}

Ver. 2. For the transgression of a land, many are the princes.]

Either many at once, or many ejecting and succeeding one another, to the great calamity and utter undoing of the people, as may be seen in the books of Judges and Kings, as in the Roman state after Nero's death, by the succession of Galba, Otho, and Vitellius. What a deal of trouble was here in the time of the heptarchy! {a} and in the dissensions of the two houses of York and Lancaster! causing the death of twice as many natives of England as were lost in the two conquests of France, besides eighty princes of the blood-royal slain. {b} And all this is said to be "for the transgression of a land," thus chastised by the Lord. Elihu tells Job that the hypocrite is set to reign for the people's sin; {#Job 34:30 Le 26:17} it is threatened as a heavy curse: "If ye still trespass against me, I will set princes over you that shall hate you"; mischievous, odious princes, odious to God, malignant to the people. And, {#Isa 3:4} "I will give children to be their princes, and babes shall rule over them." How many kings had the ten tribes after their defection from the house of David, and not one good one among them all! And what got most of the Roman Caesars by their hasty honours nisi ut citius interficerentur, saith one, but to be slain the sooner! Very few of them till Constantine but died unnatural deaths. "If ye do wickedly, ye shall perish, both you and your king." {#Isa 12:25}

But by a man of understanding and knowledge.] As "one sinner may destroy much good," {#Ec 9:18} so by one excellently wise man—called here a man of understanding knowledge; there is no copulative in the original—the state may be prolonged; there may be a lengthening of its tranquillity; it may be "delivered by the pureness of thine hands." {#Job 22:30 2Sa 20:16-22 Ec 9:13-16 Jer 5:1} Religious and prudent princes especially may do much in this case. {#2Ki 22:20}

{b} Daniel's History, 249.

Ver. 3. A poor man that oppreseth the poor, &c.] Such an oppressor bites hard (as a lean louse doth), makes clean work, plunders to the life, as they say, Omnia corradi et converret. Poor men should pity poor men, as knowing the misery of poverty; but to oppress or defraud their comrades is greatest inhumanity, as that merciless fellow servant did. {#Mt 18:28, &c.} A weasel is a ravenous beast, as well as a lion; a sparrow hawk as greedy as an eagle; and more mercy is to be expected from those more noble creatures than from the base and abject.

Ver. 4. They that forsake the law praise the wicked.] As Machiavel doth Caesar Borgia, that bipedum nequissimum, proposing him for a pattern to all Christian princes; as Onuphrius (the Pope's biographer), doth Hildebrand or Gregory VII, in five books written of his noble acts and great virtues; whom Cardinal Benno truly describeth to have been a murderer, an adulterer, a conjurer, a schismatic, a heretic, and every way as bad as might be. Epiphanius {a} tells us that there were a sort of brain sick heretics that extolled Cain, and were therefore called Cainites. They also commended the Sodomites, Korah, Judas the traitor, &c. In the book of Judith, the act of Simeon and Levi upon the Shechemites is extolled; and there was one Bruno that wrote an oration in commendation of the devil.

But they that keep the law contend with them.] Moved with a zeal of God, they cannot be silent. As Croesus's dumb son, they cry out, Wilt thou kill my father, dishonour nay God, &c.? Good blood will never belie itself; good metal will appear. How did young David bristle against blackmouthed Goliath, and enter the lists with him! "Do not I hate thmn that hate thee?" saith he, "yea, I hate them with a perfect hatred." {#Ps 139:21,22} I cast down the gauntlet of defiance against them; I count them mine enemies. Asa cannot bear with idolatry, no, not in his own mother. Our Edward VI would by no means yield to a toleration for his sister Mary, though solicited thereunto by Cranmer and Ridley, for political respects. Mihi quidem Auxentius non alius erit quam diabolus, quamdiu Arianus, said Hilary; I shall look upon Auxentius as a devil, so long as he is an Arian. It was the speech of blessed Luther, who though he was very earnest to have the communion administered in both kinds, contrary to the doctrine and custom of Rome, yet if the Pope, saith he, as pope, commanded me to receive it in both kinds, I would but receive it in one kind; since to obey what he commands as pope, is a receiving of the mark of the beast.

Ver. 5. Evil men understand not judgment.] They are wise to do evil, but to do good they have no knowledge: their wits work not that way; they are bard and brutish as "horse and mule." {#Ps 32:9} Yea, they fall beneath the stirrup of reason, and know not their owner, which yet the ox and ass doth; {#Isa 1:3} no wiser at seventy years old than at seven. Ut liberius peccent, libenter ignorant, not willing to know what they are not minded to practise.

But they that seek the Lord understand all things.] Not all that is possible to be known, as Averroes saith Aristotle did; as the Civilians say their Baldus did; ^{a} as the Papists say Tostatus did; but they understand all things needful to salvation, and they often meditate on the last judgment.

Ver. 6. Better is the poor, &c.] See #Pr 19:1.

Ver. 7. He that keepeth the law is a wise son.] It is neither good nature, nor good nurture or breeding, that can prove a man to be truly wise, but obedience to God's statutes. ^{#De 4:6} Aiphonsus, king of Spain, surnamed the Wise, was a rank fool and an arrant atheist; so are all the world's wizards.

But he that is a companion to riotous men.] Or, That feedeth gluttons, whose belly hath no bottom.

'Ingluvies et tempestas, barathrumque macelli.'

They say the locust is all belly, which is joined to his mouth, and endeth at his tail: such are riotous belly gods. To feed such is to cast away all, and bring an indelible infamy upon the family.

Ver. 8. He that by usury and unjust gain, &c.] Usury is condemned by the very heathens (Aristot. Ethic., lib. iv. cap. 1). The ancient law of the Romans make the usurer a thief and worse; the Hebrews make him a biting thief, who gnaweth the debtor to the very bones; yea, the most toothless usury, that usual plea, hath sharp gums, which bite as sore as an old dog or a hungry fly; and under show of licking whole, sucks out the heart blood. Let those who plead for it consider that God dispenseth with no usury, ^{#Eze 18:8} whether neshec or tarbith, biting or toothless; that the lender deals not as he would be dealt with it; that the gospel makes these sinners worse than other sinners when it saith, "Sinners lend to sinners to receive the like," ^{#Lu 6:34} but these to receive more; that at Rome this day all usurers are excommunicated monthly; that the canon law drives them from the sacrament, denies them burial, makes their will no will, as though their goods were not their own; that no man of note in all antiquity—Jews and Manichees excepted—for 1500 years after Christ, hath ever undertaken the defence of usury; that Chrysostom is very fierce against it, comparing it to the stinging of an asp, which casts a man into a sleep, whereof he dies, &c.

He shall gather it for him that will pity the poor.] God will provide him an executor never mentioned in his will; or his heir, being a better man, shall freely distribute what he hath wrongfully raked together. {#Ec 2:21 Job 27:16}

Ver. 9. He that turneth away his ear from hearing, &c.] Heb., That causeth his ear to decline the law, that wilfully slights the opportunities of hearing, and frames excuse, trusting to his good prayers, as they call it, and conceits that he can better bestow his time at home; this man prays for a curse, and shall have it, as Saul had—he would not hear Samuel, God will not hear nor answer him in his distress. This was, as the Hebrews call it, Mensuram contra mensuram, to pay him home in his own coin. "The backslider in heart shall be filled with his own ways." {#Pr 14:14} {See Trapp on "Pr 1:28"}

Even his prayer shall be abomination.] See #Pr 15:8.

Ver. 10. Whoso causeth the righteous to go astray, &c.] This follows fitly upon the former. Seducers and sectaries dissuade men from hearing the law in public assemblies, and carry them into by corners under a pretence of prayer; like moles, they do all their mischief by working underground, as Epiphanius observeth, they shall therefore perish in their own pit. "If the blind lead the blind," &c. {See Trapp on "Pr 26:27"}

But the upright shall have good things in possession.] They shall not be so "led away with the error of the wicked as to fall from their own steadfastness," {#2Pe 3:17} or to forfeit their hereditary right to the kingdom, because "both the deceived and the deceiver are with the Lord," {#Job 12:13,16} and it is impossible for the elect to be fundamentally and finally seduced, {#Mt 24:24} since they are "kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation." {#1Pe 1:5} Heaven is kept for them and they for heaven; how then should they miss it?

Ver. 11. The rich man is wise in his own conceit.] He sacrificeth to himself, as Sejanus did; {a} to his "drag and net," {#Hab 1:16} as the Babylonians did; he thanks his wit for his wealth, and takes upon him as if there were none such. {#1Ti 6:17} {See Trapp on "1Ti 6:17"} her ass, that had gone so oft to the temple of that goddess, that at length she thought herself worshipful. Every grain of riches hath a vermin of pride and self-conceit in it, and a very small wind will blow up a bubble.

But the poor that hath understanding.] That is, Well versed in the bigger volume of God's word, and in the lesser volume of his own heart—which is better to him than any expositor, for the right understanding of the Scriptures; this poor wise man searcheth him out, finds the rich man's folly, and if need be tells him of it, giving him a right character of himself. Sed divitibus fere ideo talis amicus deest, quia nihil deest.

Ver. 12. When righteous men do rejoice, there is great glory.] That is, There is cause of common joy to all; for they have public spirits, and rectified judgments, neither can they be merry at heart when it goes ill with the Church. All comforts are but Ichabods to them, if the ark be taken; all places but Hadadrimmons, if the Church be in heaviness. Terentius, under Valens, the Arian emperor, asked nothing but that the Church might be freed from Arians, and when the emperor tore his petition, he said that he would never ask anything for himself if he might not prevail for the Church, for that his happiness was laid up in hers.

But when the wicked rise, a man is hidden.] That is, When tyrants are set up, "a man," that is, a good man—for God reckons of men by their righteousness {#Jer 5:1} -"is hidden," lies close, and hath no heart to show himself, lest he should suffer either in his own person or in his possession. Thus the man Moses fled and hid himself from Pharaoh, David from Saul, Elishah from Ahab, Obadiah's clients from Jezebel, Jeremiah from Jehoiakim, Joseph and the child Jesus from Herod; those worthies, of whom the world was not worthy, {#Heb 11:38} from Antiochus, that little Antichrist, and other persecutors, and the Christian Church from the greater Antichrist, {#Re 12} so that she was not to be sought in tectis et exteriori pampa, sed potius in carceribus et speluncis, in palaces of worldly pomp, but in dens and dungeons, as Hilary hath it: "She fled into the wilderness, into her place, from the face of the serpent." {#Re 12:14}

Ver. 13. He that covereth his sins shall not prosper.] Sin is a traitor and must not be hid; for if so, now it sucks a man's breast, shortly it will suck his blood. Sin is a sore and must be opened, a sickness, and must be declared to the physician; the concealing of one circumstance may endanger all. Sin is a deformity that must be uncovered, or God will never cover it: see it we must to confession, or see it we shall to our confusion. If Job had covered his transgression as Adam—or "after the manner of men"—he had undone himself. {#Job 31:33} It is the manner of men—and they have it from Adam—to palliate their sins and plead for them, to elevate and extenuate them, to mince and excuse them. Sin and shifting came into the world together. Sin and Satan are alike in this, they cannot abide to appear in their own colour. Some deal with their souls as others do with their bodies; when their beauty is decayed they desire to hide it from themselves by false glasses, and from others by painting; so their sins from themselves by false glosses, and from others by excuses. These must not look for Gaius's prosperity {#3Jo 2} The sunshine also of their outward prosperity ripens their sin apace, and so fits them for destruction. Never was Ephraim's case so desperate as when God said "Ephraim is joined with idols, let him alone"; {#Ho 4:17} nor Jerusalem so near destruction as when God said, "My fury shall depart from thee; I will be quiet, and no more angry." {#Eze 16:42} To prosper in sin is the greatest unhappiness that can befall a man out of hell.

But whoso confesseth and forsaketh them, &c.] Confession of sin must be joined with confusion of sin, or all is lost. Papists use confession as drunkards use vomiting, that they may "add drunkenness to thirst." Profane people use it as Louis XI of France did his crucifix; he would swear an oath and then kiss it, and swear again and then kiss it again; so they sin and confess they do not well, nor will they strive to do better. As they sorrow not to a transmutation with those Corinthians, so they confess not to an utter abandoning of their wicked courses. They confess, as those Israelites did, {#Nu 14:40} "We have sinned, we will go up." They might as well have said, 'We have sinned, we will sin,' for God had flatly forbidden them to go up at that time. They confess, as Saul did, "I have sinned," viz., in humouring the people, "yet honour me," said he, "before the people." As the Philistines confessed God's hand, yet sent away the ark, so do these. They that confess and forsake not are only dog sick; when they have disgorged their stomachs they will return to their vomit.

Shall have mercy.] Confess the debt, and God will cross the book; he will draw the red lines of Christ's blood over the black lines of our sins, and cancel the handwriting that was against us. No sooner could David cry Peccavi, I have sinned, but Nathan said, Transtulit peccatum tuum Dominus, God hath taken away my sin; yea, transtulit, he hath translated it, he hath caused thy sin to pass over from thee to Christ. {#Isa 53:6 Ro 4:8} Confession is the soul's vomit, and those that use it shall not only have ease of conscience, but God's best comforts and cordials to restore them again. Cum homo agnoscit, Deus ignoscit, saith Augustine. It is not here, Confess and be hanged, but Confess and be saved. In the courts of men it is safest to say Non feci, quoth Quintilian; I did it not; to plead not guilty. Not so here; Ego feci is the best plea, I did it, I have done very foolishly. "Have mercy upon me, O Lord," &c. {a} Judah, that is, confession, got the kingdom from Reuben; it is the way to the kingdom. No man was ever kept out of heaven for his confessed badness; many are for their supposed goodness.

{a} Per Misere mei, tollitur ira Dei.

Ver. 14. Blessed is the man that feareth always.] That is "in the fear of the Lord all day long." {#Pr 23:17} Duo sunt timores Dei, servilis et amicalis, saith Bede: There is a twofold fear of God—servile and filial; perfect love casts out the former, breeds and feeds the latter. By this "fear of the Lord it is that men depart from evil," that they shake off security, that they abound in God's work, that they may abide in his love, that they set a jealous eye upon their own hearts, and suspect a snake under every flower, a snare in every creature, and do therefore "feed with fear," and "rejoice in fear," "pass the whole time of their sojourning here in fear," yea, "work out their whole salvation with fear and trembling." Oh the blessedness of such!

But he that hardeneth his heart.] As a perfect stranger to God's holy fear. The contrite heart ever "trembles at God's word" {#Isa 57:17} "Why hast thou hardened our hearts from thy fear," {#Isa 63:17} which, as fire doth iron, mollifies the hardest heart, and makes it malleable. Fear is a fruit of repentance, {#2Co 7:11, "yea, what fear"} which intenerates the heart, and makes it capable of Divine impressions, as Josiah. On the other side, the Jews feared not God because of a rebellious heart. {#Jer 5:22,23}

Shall fall into mischief.] Manifold mischief, ruin without remedy {#Pr 29:18} The incestuous person, though delivered up to Satan, repented and recovered: but he that is delivered up to a hard heart, to a dead and dedolent disposition, is in a manner desperate and deplored; he "heaps up wrath against the day of wrath." {#Ro 2:5} This made a reverent man once say, If I must be put to my choice, I had rather be in hell with a sensible heart than on earth with a reprobate mind. A hard heart is, in some respect, worse than hell: since one of the greatest sins is far greater in evil than any of the greatest punishments, as one hath well observed.

Ver. 15. As a roaring llon, and a ranging bear.] Regimen without righteousness turns into tyranny, and becomes no better than robbery by authority. {a} Look how the lion frightens the poor beasts with his roaring, so that they have no power to stir, and then preys upon them with his teeth; and as the bear searches them out and tears them limb from limb: so deal tyrants with their poor subjects. "Her princes within her are roaring lions, her judges evening wolves; they gnaw not the bones till the morrow." {#Zep 3:3} Such were those cannibals in David's days, that "eat up God's people as they eat bread"; {#Ps 14:4} such those miscreants in Micah, who did eat the flesh of God's people, and flayed their skin, that brake their bones, and chopped them in pieces as for the pot. {#Mic 3:3-7} Much like those American cannibals, who, when they take a prisoner, feed upon him alive, and by degrees, cutting off from his body now a meal and then a meal, which they roast before his eyes, searing up the wounded place with a firebrand to staunch the blood, to the unutterable aggravation of his horror and torment. Such a lion rampant was Nero; "I was delivered," saith St Paul, "out of the mouth of the lion." {#2Ti 4:17} Tertullian calls him the dedicator of the condemnation of the Christians; whom he used as badly almost as the Spaniards at this day do the poor Indians, under pretence of converting them to the faith. Their own writers tell us that within forty years twenty-seven million people were killed, and that with such cruelties as never were heard of before. Let every good man bless himself out of the paws and jaws of these bloody Catholics, more savage and fierce than the wild beasts, as they soon show when armed with power, as were easy to instance. See the Babylonian cruelty graphically described, #Jer 51:34, and see whether it be not matched and over matched by mystical Babylon. The ranging lion and ravening bear is nothing to that man of sin that hath dyed all Christendom with the blood of God's saints, and dunged it with their carcasses. This ostrich can digest any metal, especially money: witness his incredible exactions here in England, anciently called the Pope's ass. This cannibal is a pickerel in a pond, or shark in the sea, devours the poorer, as they the lesser fishes: not unlike that cruel prince mentioned by Melancthon, who, to get money from his miserable subjects, used to send for them, and if they refused to furnish him with such sums of money as he demanded, he would first knock out one of their teeth, and then another, threatening to leave them none at all.

Ver. 16. The prince that wanteth understanding.] As every tyrant doth, {#Ps 14:4} though they think they deal wisely, as Pharaoh, {#Ex 1:10} for they usually come to untimely ends, {a} as most of the Caesars till Constantine, and as our Richard III and Queen Mary, whose reigns are the shortest of all the kings since the Conquest. "Bloody and deceitful men live not half their days," or if they do, it is for a further evil unto them. {#Isa 65:20}

But he that hateth covetousness.] Covetousness in the original hath its name from piercing or wounding, and fitly, both in respect of others, {#Pr 1:19} and himself. {#1Ti 6:10}

Ver. 17. A man that doth violence unto the blood.] The Hebrew word Adam, here rendered man, hath one letter in the original less than the rest, {Hebrew Text Note} to show that a blood shedder is not worthy to be called man. {a}

Shall flee to the pit, let no man stay him,] i.e., Let him die without mercy; let no man mediate for him, lest he pay down, as

Ahab did, life for life, people for people, {#1Ki 20:42} lest he draw upon the land guilt of blood, {#Nu 35:33,34} and hinder the man slayer from repentance to salvation never to be repented of. To blame then are the Papists that open sanctuaries to such; and if a cardinal put his red hat upon the head of a murderer going to execution, he is delivered from death. See #De 19:13. {See Trapp on "De 19:13"}

{a} Buxtorf.

Ver. 18. Whoso walketh uprightly shall be saved,]{ See Trapp on "Pr 10:9"} "Shall be saved"; a little word, but of large extent. It properly noteth the privative part of a man's happiness, deliverance from evil; but is put here, and everywhere almost, for the positive part too—fruition of good as well as freedom from evil: it comprehendeth (1.) Malorum ademptionem; (2.) Bonorum adeptionem.

But he that is perverse in his ways.] Heb., In his two ways, shall fall in one of them. "Evil shall hunt the wicked man to destroy him"; and albeit he may shuffle for a season from side to side, as Balaam's ass did, to avoid the angel's sword, yet he shall not escape mischief. Let our political professors look to it that can tune their fiddle to the bass of the times, that call shift their sails to the sitting of every wind, that like the planet Mercury can be good in conjunction with good, and bad with bad.

Ver. 19. He that tilleth his land shall have plenty.] At fugiens molam fugit farinam: Men must earn it ere they eat it; and not think that bread and other good things will drop out of the clouds to them, as towns were said to come in to Timotheus's toils while he slept. {a} See #Pr 12:11.

Shall have poverty enough.] As the prodigal had, {#Lu 15:13-17} and Pythius, who in a bravery entertained Xerxes's whole army, but was so poor at length that he perished through want of meat.

{a} Plut. in Sulla.

Ver. 20. A faithful man shall abound in blessings.] God will bless him, and all that bless him. {#Ge 12:3} {See Trapp on "Ge 12:3"} Men also shall rise up and call him blessed, saying, as #De 33:29, "Happy art thou, O Israel; who is like unto thee, O people, saved by the Lord, the shield of thy help," &c. Stars, though we see them sometimes in a puddle, in the bottom of a well, nay, in a stinking ditch, though they reflect there, I say, yet they have their situation in heaven. So God's faithful servants, though in a low condition, yet are they fixed in the region of happiness. {#Le 26:1-13 De 28:1-14}

But he that maketh haste to be rich shall not be innocent.]

Neveſſan (a better lawyer than good Chriſtian) was wont to ſay, He that will not venture his body ſhall never be valiant; he that will not venture his ſoul ſhall never be rich. But let their money periſh with them, that, Shimei-like, by ſeeking their ſervants, loſe their ſouls; or, Jonaslike, care not to be caſt over ſhipboard, ſo the ſhip of their worldly wealth may be in ſafety. Francis Xaverius counſelled John III., King of Portugal, to meditate every day a quarter of an hour on that divine ſentence, "What ſhall it profit a man to win the whole world and loſe his own ſoul?" See #1Ti 6:9, with the note. What a woeful will was that of rich but wretched Hubertus. I yield, ſaid he, my goods to the king, my body to the grave, my ſoul to the devil?

Ver. 21. To have reſpect of perſons is not good.] {See Trapp on "Pr 24:23"}

For, for a piece of bread.] For a trifle he will tranſgreſs, and ſell his ſoul dog cheap for a groat, or leſs money. Cato in Gellius hits Marcus Coelius in the teeth with his baſeneſs, that for a morſel of bread he would ſell either his tongue or his ſilence. And the falſe prophets in Ezekiel's days would do the like. {#Eze 13:19}

Ver. 22. He that haſteth to be rich hath an evil eye.] He is ſick of "the luſt of the eye" {#1Jo 2:16} -for all ſinful luſts are παθηματα, ſickneſſes—coveting his neighbour's goods, envying his proſperity, and begrudging him every bit he eats at his table. {#Pr 23:6,7} {See Trapp on "Pr 23:6"} {See Trapp on "Pr 23:7"}

And conſidereth not that poverty ſhall come upon him.]

Etiamsi per mare pauperiem fugeat, per saxa, per ignes; Though he run as faſt from beggary as he can flee, yet it will overtake him, and catch him by the back. {#Job 27:16,17} Surely as the ſtars that went before the wiſe men went when they went and ſtayed when they ſtayed, ſo riches fly the faſter from a man the more eagerly he follows them, but then ſtay when a man's wind is ſtayed. "In the fullneſs of his ſufficiency he ſhall be in ſtraits," ſaith Zophar, concerning the wicked. {#Job 20:22} He is poor in the midst of his riches; but God will strip him of all, and make a poor fool of him. {#Jer 17:11}

Ver. 23. He that rebuketh a man shall find, &c.] He that binds a madman, or rouseth up one in a lethargy, hath but little thank for present; so here. In the sweating sickness, they that were kept awake escaped; but the sickness was deadly to them that were suffered to sleep. Let us keep one another awake, saith a reverend man, {a} -an unpleasing work on both sides, but we shall one day thank such. See how well Master Gilpin's plain dealing with the Bishop of Durham succeeded, in his Life written by Bishop Carlton, p. 58.

{a} Dr Sibbes.

Ver. 24. He that robbeth his father or his mother.] As that idolatrous Micah did his mother of her gold; {#Jud 17:2} as Rachel did her father of his gods; as Absalom did David of his crown. Thus, though it may seem a light sin, it is as much greater than stealing from another as parricide is than manslaughter, or as Reuben's incest was than another man's defiling his neighbour's wife. Our parents are our household gods, as that heathen could say; and to give them cause of grief must needs be an offence of a deep dye, of a crimson colour, condemned by the very pagans. {a}

Ver. 25. He that is of a proud heart.] Latus animo. He that through pride and ambition cannot keep within bounds of his calling or condition, but thinks great thoughts of himself, and therefore seeks great things for himself, this man, if crossed, is easily kindled, and shall be made lean; God will tame him, and take him a link lower, as we say. {#Isa 2:11-13} {#Pr 13:10} {See Trapp on "Pr 13:10"} This largeness of heart is but as the bigness of a blown bladder, &c.

But he that putteth his trust in the Lord, shall be fat.] He shall laugh and be fat, as the saying is; he shall live at a great deal of heart's ease, and others shall live quietly by him. That which would break a proud man's heart will not break a humble man's sleep. He is content with his present condition, be it better or worse, hath a self-sufficiency, {#1Ti 6:6} studies to be quiet, seeks peace and ensues it, depends upon God for direction and success in all businesses, and what should all this man but that he may grow fat? The Irish would ask him, if they knew his wealth, what he meant to die?

Ver. 26. He that trusteth to his own heart is a fool.] He that saith, Consilii satis est in me mihi: I am wise enough to order my own business, and need no advice of others, seek no success from above, -Ajax acknowledged no other God but his sword, Polyphemus but his belly, -this man is a fool, a proud fool, and he shall be sure to be hampered.

But whoso walketh wisely.] Taking others into counsel, and God above all, as David: "I will hearken," saith he, "what the Lord God saith unto me." "He shall be delivered," either from trouble, or in it—either with an outward or an inward deliverance. He shall enjoy a blessed composedness, a sweet sabbath of spirit howsoever, being mediis tranquillus in undis, tranquility in the midst of the waves, as Noah was.

Ver. 27. He that giveth unto the poor shall not lack.] Eleemosyna ars omnium questuosissima, saith Chrysostom: Not getting but giving is the way to wealth. God will bless the bountiful man's stock and store, his barn and his basket; {#De 15:10} his righteousness and his riches together shall endure for ever. {#Ps 112:3}

But he that hideth his eyes, / i.e., That when he hath a fit object and opportunity of showing mercy offered him, frameth excuse, and pretendeth this thing and that, to his worldly and wicked retentions; that useth his wits to save his half penny, but will not use his eyes to affect his heart with pity. {#Isa 58:7}

Shall have many a curse.] Men shall curse him, and call him a Pamphagus, a churl, a hog in a trough, a fellow of no fashion, &c. God shall also curse him, and set off all hearts from him, as he did from Haman; in his necessity he will shut his ears to such a man's moans in misery, and hide his eyes from his supplication. {#Ps 55:1 Isa 1:15} Finally, "he shall have judgment without mercy, that hath showed no mercy"; {#Jas 2:13} "an evil, an only evil shall befall him"; {#Eze 7:5} his punishments shall come close together, and God shall so set them on as no creature shall be able to take them off.

Ver. 28. When the wicked rise, men hide themselves.] They are glad to skulk and shelter themselves from that fierce storm. {See Trapp on "Pr 28:12"}

But when they perish, the righteous increase.] When either they die, or are deposed from their dignities, the righteous swarm as a hive of bees in a warm sunny day—as they did when Constantine came to the crown, and here when Queen Elizabeth came as a fresh spring after a sharp winter, and brought the ship of England from a tempestuous sea to a safe harbour.

Ver. 1. He that being often reprov'd hardeneth his neck.] As an untamed heifer, that "pullesh away the shoulder," {#Zec 7:11} and detracteth the yoke; or as the creature called monoceros, the unicorn, interimi potest, capi non potest, {a} may be slain but not taken; so those that refuse to be reformed, {b} hate to be healed, will not bend, shall surely and severely be broken, certissime citissimeque confringentur; they shall certainly and suddenly be dashed in pieces as a potter's vessel, that cannot be pieced together again. {#Isa 30:13,14} Shall iron break the northern iron and the steel, {#Jer 15:12} and shall not the fierce wrath of God shatter and shiver out a silly sinner that will needs stout it out with him, and yet is no more able to stand before him than a glass bottle before a cannon shot? Let Eli's sons, and such refractories, look for ruin. The prophet fitly compares them to headstrong horses that get the bit into their mouths, run desperately upon the rocks, and so in short time break first their hoofs and then their necks. Queen Elizabeth, in talking with Marshal Biron—whom the French king sent ambassador to her, anno 1601—sharply accused Essex (who had recently lost his head) of obstinacy, rash counsels, and wilful disdain to ask pardon, and wished that the French king would rather use mild severity than careless clemency, and cut off the heads of treacherous persons in time, &c. This might have terrified Biron from those wicked attempts which he was even at this time plotting against his king, had not his mind been besotted. But the power of his approaching fate did so blind him, that within few months after he underwent the same death that Essex did—though nothing so piously and Christianly, as having hardened his neck against wholesome counsel. {c} Now if men harden their hearts, God will harden his hand, and hasten their destruction, and that without remedy.

{a} Solinus.

{b} Corruptimur sed non corrigimur. -Augustine.

{c} Cambden's Elisabeth, fol. 562.

Ver. 2. When the righteous are in authority.] Or, Are increased, as #Pr 28:28; {See Trapp on "Pr 28:28"}

The people mourn.] Heb., Sigh (as the oppressed Israelites in Egypt did) where they dare not speak out. But what a bloody tyrant was Sulla, who put to death Marcus Plaetorius only for sighing at the cruel execution of Marcus Marius! So one Lancelot was burnt in Giles's fields for pitying the cruel death of a couple of martyrs. {a}

{a} Acts and Mon., fol. 1164.

Ver. 3. Whoso loveth wisdom rejoiceth his father.] {See Trapp on "Pr 10:1"}

But he that keepeth company with harlots.] {See Trapp on "Pr 5:9"} Those she sinners, as they call them, are costly creatures, and they that keep them care not what cost they cast away upon them.

Ver. 4. The king by judgment stablisheth the land.] This one piece of Solomon's politics hath much more good advice in it than all Lypsius's Beehive, or Machiavel's Spider web.

But he that receiveth gifts.] Heb., A man of oblations; that is, as some interpret it, a man that sacreligiously meddleth with things dedicated to pious uses, and makes a gain of them to himself. See #Pr 20:25.

Ver. 5. A man that flattereth his neighbour, &c.] A smooth boots, as the word {a} signifies, a butterspoken man, {see #Isa 3:12} or a divided man, for a flatterer's tongue is divided from his heart.

{a} Glaber.

Ver. 6. In the transgression of an evil man there is a snare.] Or, A cord—viz., to strangle his joy with—to check and choke all his comforts. In the midst of his mirth he hath many a secret gripe, and little knows the world where his shoe pincheth him. Every fowl that hath a seemly feather hath not the sweetest flesh, nor doth every tree that bringeth a goodly leaf bear good fruit. Glass giveth a clearer sound than silver, and many things glitter besides gold. The wicked man's jollity is but the hypocrisy of mirth; it may wet the mouth, but not warm the heart—smooth the brow, but not fill the breast. We may be sure, that as Jezebel had a cold heart under a painted complexion, so many a man's heart aches and quakes within him when his face counterfeits a smile.

But the righteous sing and rejoice.] Good men only may be glad, and none have any reason to rejoice but they. {#Ho 9:1} The Papists have a proverb, Spiritus Calvinianus est spiritus melancholicus, and the mad world are easily persuaded by the devil that there is no comfort in a Christian course—that your precise fellows live a melancholy and monkish kind of life, and have no joy of anything. Herein the devil deals like those inhospitable savages in America, that make great fires, and set forth terrible sights upon their country's shore, purposely to frighten passengers from landing there. And as those wicked spies brought up an evil report of the land of Canaan, and thereby discouraged the people, so doth the devil and his imps of the purity of religion and power of godliness as uncouth and uncomfortable, when in truth there is no sound comfort without it—no true joy but in it. Though Saul could not be merry without a fiddler, Ahab without Naboth's vineyard, Haman without Mordecai's courtesy, yet a righteous man can be merry without all these. Yea, as the lily is fresh, beautiful, and looks pleasantly, though among thorns, so can he amidst troubles. Paul—than whom never any out of hell suffered more—did not only glory in tribulation, but "overabound exceedingly with joy." {#2Co 7:4}

Ver. 7. The righteous considereth the cause of the poor.] The cause, not the person of the poor, for that is forbidden in the law. {#Le 19:15} The great must not be favoured for their might, nor the mean for their misery, but justice, justice must be done to all, as Moses hath it; that is, even law and execution of right—as the oath runs that is given to our judges—without respect of persons. The cause of the poor and needy must come into equal balance with the rich and mighty, lest he be trampled on by those fat bulls of Bashan, to his utter undoing. For a poor man in his house is like a snail in his shell—crush that, and ye kill him.

But the wicked regardeth not to know it.] Unless there were more to be got by it. Felix had soon enough of Paul's defence, because he expected some bribe from him; but nothing came. How ill-willing was that unjust judge, {#Lu 18:1-8} either to take knowledge of, or to take course for, the relief of the poor widow! Aperi bursam, apperiam buccam, saith the greedy lawyer. They that cannot lavish money out of the bag are little welcome to these Crumenimulgae, as one calls them—these purse suckers, that will weigh your gold, but not your cause; and if a man put not into their mouths, they even prepare war against him. {#Mic 3:5}

Ver. 8. Scornful men bring a city into a snare.] The Vulgate render it, Pestilent persons undo a city or a state; as Nahash did the Ammonites, {#1Sa 11:2,11} and as his son Hanan did much more. {#2Sa 10:4 12:31} Mocking is catching, as the pestilence, and no less pernicious to the whole country. Geraldus Cambrensis tells of three Irish kings that, being derided for their rude habits and fashions, rebelled, and set the country in a combustion. And the young King of France, jesting at William the Conqueror's great belly, whereof he said he lay in at Rouen, so irritated him, as he being recovered of a sickness, entered France in the chiefest time of their fruits, making spoil of all in his way, till he came even to Paris, where this scornful king then was, to show him of his visiting, and from thence marched to the city of Mants, which he utterly sacked and ransacked, razed and harassed. {a}

But wise men turn away wrath.] They stand in the gap, and divert the divine displeasure. {#Ps 106:23 Eze 13:5} Their persons are in acceptance; God will look upon them, and do much for them, when he is most of all angry with the wicked. {#Ex 32:10,14 Job 22:30 Ge 18:32} Their prayers also are prevalent. Something the Lord will yield thereunto, when most bitterly bent against a people, {#Mt 24:20} and when unchangeably resolved upon their ruin, he takes course to silence such; "Pray not for this people." "Sanctum semen statumen terrae" {#Isa 6:13} "The innocent shall deliver the island." {#Job 22:30}

{a} Dan. Chron., 42.

Ver. 9. If a wise man contendeth with a foolish man.] Such fools were the Pharisees, though for their worldly wisdom called princes of this world. {#1Co 2:8} Christ piped to them, John mourned to them, neither wrought upon them. {#Mt 11:16,17} Such was their peevishness and pertinace in evil, that they "rejected the counsel of God against themselves," {#Lu 7:30} being ingrati gratiae Dei, as Ambrose hath it; receiving the grace of God in vain, as Paul; turning good nourishment into vicious humours, as foul stomachs use to do. And as wine, a strong remedy against hemlock, yet mingled with it, doubles the force of the poison; so was it with the most powerful means of grace, mingled with their obstinace and unbelief. Tigers are enraged with perfumes, and vultures killed with oil of roses, as Aristotle writes.

Ver. 10. The bloodthirsty hate the upright.] As Cain did Abel for his goodness, {#1Jo 3:12} and as many bloody villains still, who bear about, and, so far as they dare, make use of Cain's club to knock on the head God's righteous Abels. All hatred is bloody, but especially the habit of hatred. No sight pleased Hannibal better than a ditch running over with man's blood. Nothing would satisfy Farnesius, the Pope's champion, but to ride his horse up to the skirts in the blood of the Lutherans. Charles IX of France, author of the Parisian Massacre, looking upon the dead carcasse of the admiral, that stank by being long kept unburied, uttered this most stinking speech: Quam suaviter olet cadaver inimiei! -How sweet is the smell of an enemy's carcasse! And the queen mother of Scotland, beholding the dead bodies of her Protestant subjects, whom she had slain in battle, said that she never saw a finer piece of tapestry in all her life.

But the just seek his soul.] In a good sense; {as #Ps 142:4} seek the salvation of it—as Christ did of his deadliest enemies; as Paul did of his countrymen the Jews, of whom five times he received forty stripes save one; {#2Co 11:24} as the disciples did of those spiteful Pharisees, that had causelessly accused them; {#Mt 15:2,12} as that martyr Master Saunders did. 'My lord,' said he to Bishop Bonner, 'you seek my blood, and you shall have it. I pray God you may be so baptized in it that you may hereafter loathe bloodsucking, and so become a better man.' {a} And another time, when Steven Gardiner, being prettily nipped and touched by the same Saunders, said, 'Carry away this frenzy fool to prison'; he answered, that 'he did give God thanks, which had given him at the last a place of rest and quietness, where he might pray for the bishop's conversion.' 'If ye will not hear me speak for myself,' said another martyr, 'then send me to my prison again among my toads and frogs, which will not interrupt me, while I pray to God for you.' {b}

Ver. 11. A fool uttereth all his mind.] He is full of chinks, and can hold nothing; his heart lies so near his mouth, that he will out suddenly. פֶּתִי, a fool, and מֵאֵתָּה, suddenly, are from the same root. He hath little command of himself at any time, but especially when he is angry; then he sputters and spews out all that he hath in his heart. The Septuagint here translate, A fool uttereth all his anger, θυμῶν; he pulls out his wooden dagger, and cares not whom he hits. Bishop Bonner, in his visitation, because the bells rang not at his coming into Hadham, nor the church dressed up as it should, called Doctor Bricket knave and heretic; and, striking at him, gave Sir Thomas Josselin, who then stood next to the bishop, a good buffet under the ear; whereat the knight, somewhat astonished at the suddenness of the quarrel, said, 'What meaneth your lordship? have you been trained up in Will Summers' school, to strike him that stands next you?' The bishop, still in a rage, either heard not or would not hear. And when Mr Fecknam would have excused him by his long imprisonment in the Marshalsea, whereby he was grown testy, he replied merrily, 'So it seems, Mr Fecknam; for now that he is come forth of the Marshalsea, he is ready to go to Bedlam.' {a} See #Pr 14:23.

But a wise man keepeth it in till afterwards.] Or, In an inner room, {b} in the bottom and bosom of his mind, till he see a fit season; as knowing well that all truths are not fit for all times, but discretion must be used, and taciturnity counted a virtue. The Rabbis have this saying among them: Masosa sepes legi, decimae divitiis, vota sanctimoniae, silentiurn sapientiae. Silence is no less a mound to wisdom than vows are to holiness, tithing to riches, or their Masorite's pains to the law. Open heartedness is a fruit of foolhardiness. Gird up, therefore, the loins of your minds with the golden girdle of meekness, of wisdom; and "keep your mouth with a bridle while the wicked is before you." {#Ps 39:1}

{b} Beachor, in interiori aliquo loco, in ulteriore animi recessu.

Ver. 13. The poor and the usurer meet together.] That is, The poor and the rich, as #Pr 22:2; because commonly usurers are rich men, and many rich men usurers. "The Lord lighteneth both their eyes"; that is, he gives them the light of life, {#Job 1:8} and the comforts of life, {#Mt 5:45} so that their eyes are lightened, as Jonathan's were after he had tasted of the wild honey. {#1Sa 14:25-30} Others read it thus: "The poor and the deceived," or crushed by the usurer, "meet together"—that is, condole or comfort one another; because they are both in the dark, as it were, of poverty and misery; they can do one another but little help, more than by commending their cases to God, who thereupon "enlighteneth them both"—that is, either he supplies their wants, and so their eyes are opened, as Jonathan's were; or else gives them patience, as he did those believing Hebrews. {#Pr 10:32} But "call to remembrance the former days in which after ye were illuminated"—viz., to see the glory that shall be revealed, whereof all the sufferings of this life are not worthy {#Ro 8:18} -ye endured a great fight of affliction. If we read it, "The poor and the usurer meet together: the Lord enlighteneth both their eyes," understand it thus: The poor man he enlighteneth by patience, the usurer by repentance, and grace to "break off his sins by righteousness, and his iniquity by showing mercy to the poor," as Zaccheus, Matthew, and those usurious Jews did. {#Ne 5:10,11}

Ver. 14. The king that faithfully judgeth the poor, &c.] An office not unbecoming the greatest king, to sit in person to hear the poor man's cause. James IV of Scotland was for this cause called the poor man's king. I have seen, saith a late traveller, the King of Persia many times to alight from his horse, only to do justice to a poor body. "Help, O king!" said the poor woman to Jehoram. And if thou will not hear and right me, why dost thou take upon thee to be king? said another woman to Philip, King of Macedonia. It is a mercy to have judges mode audeant quae sentiunt, as the orator hath it, {a} so that they have courage to do what they judge fit to be done. Inferior judges may be weighed and swayed, by gifts or greatness of an adversary, to pass an unrighteous sentence. Not so a king; he neither needs nor fears any man, but is, if he be right—as one saith of a just law—a heart without affection, an eye without lust, a mind without passion, a treasurer which keepeth for every man what he hath, and distributeth to every man what he ought to have.

Lo, such a prince shall sit firm upon his throne; his kingdom shall be bound to him with chains of adamant, as Dionysius dreamt that his was; he shall have the hearts of his subjects, which is the best life-guard, and God for his protection; for he is professedly the poor man's patron, {#Ps 9:18,19} and makes heavy complaints of those that wrong them. {#Isa 3:13-15 10:1-3 Am 5:11-12 8:4-6 Zep 3:12}

Ver. 15. The rod and reproof give wisdom.] If reproof do the deed, the rod may be spared, and not else. Chrysippus is by some cried out upon as the first that brought the use of a rod into the schools; but there is no doing without it; for children are foolish, apt to imitate others in their vices, before they know them to be vices; and though better taught, yet easily corrupted by evil company, as young lapwings are soon snatched up by every buzzard. Now, therefore, as moths are beaten out of garments with a rod, so must vices out of children's hearts. Vexatio dat intellectum: Smart makes wit; it is put in with the rod of correction. See #Pr 22:15.

But a child left to himself bringeth his mother, &c.] For her fondness in cockering of him, and hiding his faults from his father, lest he should correct or cashier him. Mothers have a main hand in education of the children, and usually partus sequitur ventrem, the birth follows the belly, as we see in the kings of Judah, whose mothers are therefore frequently nominated. No wonder, therefore, though the mother deeply share in the shame and grief of her darling's miscarriages. See #Pr 15:20.

Ver. 16. When the wicked are multiplied, transgression increaseth.] As saith the proverb of the ancients: Wickedness proceedeth from the wicked. Miserable man hath, by his fall from God, contracted a necessity of sinning against God. And when a rabble of rebels are gotten together, are grown many and mighty, they make account to carry all before them, and not to suffer a godly man to live—as in Spain, and where the Inquisition is admitted. But the righteous shall see their fall; shall see it and rejoice at it, as the Hebrew doctors expound this text by comparing it with #Ob 12,13, "Thou shouldest not have looked on the day of thy brother in the day of his calamity, neither shouldest thou have rejoiced over the children of Judah," &c. "The righteous shall rejoice when he seeth the vengeance"; being moved with a zeal of God, he shall rejoice with trembling; "he shall wash his feet in the blood of the wicked"; beholding their ruin he shall become more cautious; {a} "so that a man shall say,"—any man but of an ordinary capacity shall make this observation—"Verily, there is a reward for the righteous; verily he is a God that judgeth in the earth," {#Ps 58:10,11} that will sink to the bottom the bottle of wickedness, when once filled with those bitter waters. {#Ge 15:16}

Ver. 17. Correct thy son, and he shall give thee rest.] He will grow so towardly, that thou shalt with less ado rule him when grown up; or at least, thou shalt have peace within, in that thou hast used God's means to mend him.

Yea, he shall give delight.] See #Pr 10:1. The often urging this nurturing of children, shows that it is a most necessary, but much neglected duty.

Ver. 18. Where there is no vision the people perish.] Or, Are barred of all virtue; laid naked and open to the dint of divine displeasure; scattered, worsted, and driven back. Great is the misery of those Brazilians, of whom it is said that they are sine fide, sine rege, sine lege, without faith, king, or law. And no less unhappy those Israelites about Asa's time, that for a long season had been "without the true God, and without a teaching priest, and without law." {#2Ch 15:3} Then it was that God's "people were destroyed for lack of knowledge"; {#Ho 4:6} and not long after, that they sorrowfully complained that there was "no more any prophet among them, nor any that knew how long" {#Ps 74:9} -no minister, ordinary or extraordinary. How did it pity our Saviour to see the people "as sheep without a shepherd!" This troubled him more than their bodily bondage to the Romans, which yet was very grievous. {#Mt 9:36} And what good heart can but bleed to think of those once flourishing churches of Asia and Africa, now overspread partly with Mohammedanism and partly with heathenism; and that by the most miserable occasion might befall—namely, famine of the word of God, through lack of ministers! What a world of sects, superstitions, and other horrible abuses got into the Church of Rome, when prophecy was suppressed, and reading the Holy Scriptures inhibited!—and what a slaughter of souls ensued thereupon! Letters were framed by some, as sent from hell to the Popish clergy (A.D. 1072), wherein the devil and his angels give them many thanks for such a number of souls sent them down daily, by their neglect of preaching, as had never been before. {a} Hence it was that in this kingdom, at the first Reformation, for want of ministers, readers were sent; whence one of the martyrs wished that every able minister might have ten congregations committed to his charge, till further provision could be made; for of preaching it may be said, as once David did of Goliath's sword, "There is none to that" for conversion of souls; as where that is wanting people go tumbling to hell thick and threefold.

But he that keepeth the law, happy is he.] Though to want the word preached and sincerely handled, rightly divided—for as every sound is not music, so every pulpit discourse is not a sermon—be a great unhappiness, a ready road to utter ruin; yet is not the bare hearing of it that which renders a man blessed, unless he "hide it in his heart," with David, and "lift up his hands" to the practice of it. {#Ps 119:48} The words of the law are, verba vivenda non legenda, as one said—words to be lived, and not read only. Let not your lives be Antinomians, no more than your opinions, saith another. That is a monstrous opinion of some Swenckfeldians, that a man was never truly mortified till he had put out all sense of sin, or care of duty: if his conscience troubled him about such things, that was his imperfection; he was not mortified enough. {b} Some of our Antinomians are not far from this. Their predecessors in Germany held that the law and works only belong to the court of Rome; that good works are perniciosa ad salutem, {c} hurtful and hindrersome to salvation; that that saying of Peter, "Make your calling and election sure" by good works, was dictum inutile, an unprofitable saying—and Peter did not understand Christian liberty: that as soon as a man begins to think how he should live a godly and modest life, he wandereth from the gospel. David George was so far from accounting adulteries, fornications, incests, &c., for being any sins, that he did recommend them to his most perfect scholars as acts of grace and mortification. {d} This fellow was sure somewhat akin to those Carpocratian heretics in St John's days, who taught that men must sin, and do the will of all the devils, otherwise they could not enter into heaven. {e}

Ver. 19. A servant will not be corrected by words.] Some servants will not, but must have blows. If words will do, they must be chidden with good words, and not reviled. Christians must be "no brawlers, but gentle, showing all meekness to all men"; {#Tit 3:2} and masters must "do the same things, forbearing threatening, knowing that their Master also is in heaven, neither is there respect of persons with him." {#Eph 6:9} Severitas nec sit tetra nec tetrica, saith Sidonius. {a} But because some mastigiae are of so servile a disposition, that they must be beaten to their work, like those Phrygians, Qui non nisi flagris castigantur, that will do nothing longer than scourged to it; or the Russian women, that love that husband best that beats them most, and think themselves else not regarded, unless two or three times a day well favouredly swaddled. {b} Therefore let him that knows his Master's will, and yet, out of stoutness, sullenness, or laziness, will not do it, be beaten with many stripes; let him be "buffeted for his faults," {#1Pe 2:20} and made serviceable in all things, "not gainsaying, not purloining." {#Tit 2:9,10}

Ver. 20. Seest thou a man that is hasty in his words.] Or, Matters; that weighs not his words before he utters them, but too soon shoots his fool's bolt, let it light where it will, hit or miss, it matters not; that had rather be reckoned temerarious than timorous, and is with child till delivered of an abortive birth; that rashly rusheth on the weightiest businesses, and holds it loss of time to take counsel; this hasty, headlong man, as he never wants woe, so—because he is no less headstrong than headlong, wise in his own conceit, than witless in every man's else—there is more hope of a natural than of him, and sooner he will be wrought upon. Scaliger ^{a} tells us the nature of some kind of amber is such, that it will draw to itself all kind of stalks of any herb, except basilisk, a herb called capitalis, because it maketh men heady, filling their brains with black exhalations. Thus those hastings, who, by the fumes of their corrupt wills are grown headstrong, and by it are conceited, ^{#Pr 26:12} will not be drawn by that which draws others that are of lower parts and capacities, it being easier to deal with twenty men's reasons than with one man's will. Good therefore is the counsel of St James, "Be swift to hear, slow to speak," &c., and of the preacher, ^{#Ec 5:2} "Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thy heart be hasty to utter anything before God," in prayer, vows, and especially in preaching. It was a wise speech of Aristides, who being required of the emperor to speak to something propounded ex tempore, answered, Propound today, and I will answer tomorrow; for we are not of those that spit or vomit things, but of those that do them carefully and accurately. ^{b} Demosthenes in like manner, when it was objected unto him that he came premeditated to plead, answered, that he, if it might be possible, would plead, Non tantum scripta sed etiam sculpta, not things written only, but even engraven. And when Eccius told Melanchthon that it was little for his praise that he was so long ere he answered his adversaries' arguments—he would take three days sometimes to think on it—he replied, Nos non quaerimus gloriam, sed veritatem, We seek not victory but verity.

Ver. 21. He that delicately bringeth up his servant.] A master that would be, as he ought, both loved and feared by his servants, must see to two things:—(1.) The well-choosing; and (2.) The well using of them. This Solomon himself, that thus adviseth here, was not so well advised of; for he saw that Jeroboam, who gave occasion, as it is conceived, of uttering this proverb, was meet for the work, and therefore, not examining his religion, entertained him into his service, yea, placed him over the family of Joseph, admitted him into so much familiarity, and so let loose the bridle of domestic discipline to him, that he took estate upon him as a young master in the house, and soon after turned traitor, and would needs be as his son, and more. The like is to be seen in Abner, Ishbosheth's servant, who grew so haughty and haughty, that he might not be spoken to, {#2Sa 3:7-11} and in Zimri, whom his master Elah so favoured and esteemed, that he made him captain over the half part of his chariots. But this beggar, thus set on horseback, rides without reins, to the ruin of his master and his whole house. {#IKi 16:11} So true is that of the poet—

“Asperius nihil est humili dum surgit in altum.”

Tobiah the servant is so insolent there is no dealing with him.
Ver. 22. An angry man stirreth up strife.] See #Pr 15:18 16:21.

And a furious man.] Heb. A master of fury; or one that is mastered and overmatched by his fury; that hath no command of his passions, but is transported by them, or—as some make the metaphor, and the original will well bear it—is wedded to them as a man is to his wife: commanded by them, as the Persian kings were by their concubines, being captivarum suarum captivi, {a} slaves to their slaves. Such a man being big with wrath, not only breeds contention, but brings forth transgression in great abundance, he "sets his mouth against heaven, and his tongue walketh through the earth," &c., {#Ps 73:9} he lets fly on both hands, and lays about him like a madman.

Ver. 24. Whoso is partner with a thief hateth his own soul.] Since to hold the bag is as bad as to fill it; to consent to sin or to conceal it, as bad as to commit it. By the one as well as by the other, a man may easily become, as Korah did, "a sinner against his own soul," and cruelly cut the throat of it. Let our public thieves look to this. See #Isa 1:23.

He heareth cursing, and bewrayeth it not.] See #Le 5:1. {See Trapp on "Le 5:1"} To conceal treason is treason, so here. "Have no fellowship therefore with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." Let me be counted proud or pragmatic, saith Luther, ^{a} rather than found guilty of sinful silence, while my Lord suffereth.

Ver. 25. The fear of man bringeth a snare.] This cowardly passion expectorates and exposes a man to many, both sins and sufferings. And albeit faith, when it is in the heart, quelleth and killeth distrustful fear, and is therefore fitly opposed to it in this sacred sentence: yet in the very best sense fights sore against faith when it is upon its own dunghill. I mean in a sensible danger. Nature's retraction of itself from a visible fear, may cause the pulse of a Christian that beats truly and strongly in the main point, the state of the soul, to intermit and falter at such a time, as we see in the examples of Abraham, Isaac, David, Peter, others who showed some trepidation and timidity, and, like fearful birds and beasts, fell into the pits and toils of the hunter, and hazarded themselves to God's displeasure. The chameleon is said to be the most fearful of all creatures, and doth therefore turn himself into so many colours to avoid danger, which yet will not be. God equally hateth the timorous and the treacherous. "Fearful" men are the first in that black roll. ^{#Re 21:8}

But he that trusteth in the Lord shall be safe.] ^{a} Or, Set on high, as on a rock; his place of defence shall be munitions of rocks, ^{#Isa 33:16} far out of harm's way; he shall be kept safe, as in a tower of brass, or town of war. "Even the youth shall faint and be weary, and the young men shall utterly fall; but they that wait upon the Lord shall mount up with wings as eagles," &c. ^{#Isa 40:30,31} Like as the coney that flies to the holes in the rocks doth easily avoid the dogs that pursue her, when the hare that trusts to the swiftness of her legs is at length overtaken and tore in pieces: so here.

^{a} Tectus et tutus.

Ver. 26. Many seek the ruler's favour.] More than the love of God; and so cast themselves into a second "snare," besides that of #Pr 29:25. But as he that truly trusts in God will easily expel the fear of man: so he that looks upon God as Judge of all, from whose sentence there is no appeal, will rather seek his face than the favour of any earthly judge whatsoever. Especially since, whether the judge clear him or cast him, the judgment he passeth is from the Lord.

Ver. 27. An unjust man is an abomination to the just.] Who yet hates, non virum sed vitium, not the person of a wicked man, but his sin—as the physician hates the disease, but loves the patient, and strives to recover him—he abhors that which is evil, perfectly hates it, {#Ps 139:22} hates it as hell so the Greek word {a} signifies; {#Ro 12:9} hates it in his dearest friends, as Asa did in his mother Maachah; hates it most of all in himself, as having the divine nature transfused into him, whereby he resembles God, and that life of God, whereunto sin, he knows, is a destructive poison, a sickness unto death. {#1Jo 5:16} Hence his implacable and no less impartial hatred of all as well as any sin, for all hatred is προς τα γενη, as Aristotle {b} hath it, to the whole kind. It was said of Antony that he hated a tyrant, not tyranny; it cannot be said of a saint he hates sinners, not sin, but the contrary.

And he that is upright in the way, is abomination to the wicked.] So there is no love lost between them. The devil hath set his limbs in all wicked people; they are a serpentine seed, a viperous brood, and the old enmity continues. {#Ge 3:15} {See Trapp on "Ge 3:15"} Antipathies there are in nature, as between the elephant and boar, the lion and cock, the horse and the stone called taraxippe, &c. But this is nothing to that between the godly and the wicked; and why? but because the one's works are good, and the other's evil; and because the just man condemns the unjust by his contrary courses; yea, he frightens his heart, and terrifies him with his presence and company.

Ver. 1. The words of Agur the son of Jakeh.] The Vulgate renders, Verba Congregantis filii Vomentis, taking these proper names for appellatives, as if the penman of this chapter meant to tell us that he would here give us his sacred collectanies or miscellanies, such as he had taken up from the mouths of wisest men, who had vomited or cast them up, in a like sense as that painter in Aelian drew Homer vomiting, and all the other poets licking it up. {a} This Agur, whether he lived in Solomon's days or Hezekiah's, was an excellent man, as the word Gheber here used imports; Vir bonus et prudens, minus tamen clarus (as one saith of Jesse, David's father), a godly, wise man, though nothing be elsewhere spoken of him in Scripture. Some think that, being requested by Ithiel and Ucal, two of his disciples, to give them a lesson, Socrates-like he answered, Hoc unum scio, quod nihil scio: This one thing I know, that I know nothing: "Surely I am more brutish than any man," sc., of myself, further than taught of God; for every man is a brute by his own understanding, as Jeremiah hath it. {#Jer 10:8} But I rather incline to those that take Ithiel and Ucal for Christ, whose goodness and power—those two pillars of a Christian's faith, as Jachin and Boaz were of Solomon's temple—are by these two names deciphered, and whom he propounds as the matter of his prophecy. Now, because sense of misery must precede sense of mercy, neither can any be welcome to Christ, but "the weary and heavy laden"; therefore he first bewails his own brutishness—fetching it up as low as Adam fallen, {#Pr 30:2} and aggravating it in that he had not yet acquired better abilities. {#Pr 30:3} Next he flees to Ithiel and Ucal, by the force of a particular faith—Ithiel, God with me, and Ucal, God Almighty, through whom I can do all things. This, this was the right ready way of coming to Christ; and him that thus cometh he will in no wise cast out. {#Joh 6:37} There is a good interpreter, {b} that, paralleling this text with #Jer 9:23,24, reads it thus: A gathering together of the words of Agur, the son of Jakeh. Let the excellent man say, 'Let God be with me, let God be with me, and I shall prevail.'

Ver. 2. Surely I am more brutish than any man.] Or, Surely I have been brutish since I was a man. See how this good man vilifies, yea, nullifies himself to the utmost. This was true humility, that like true balm ever sinks to the bottom, when hypocritical, as oil, swims on the top. Humilitas, ab humo, because it lays a man flat on the ground. Agur had seen Ithiel and Ucal; hence he seeth so little by himself: "Now mine eyes have seen thee; wherefore I abhor myself." {#Job 42:5} "Woe is me! for I am undone," saith Isaiah; "for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts." {#Pr 6:5} He that looks intently upon the sun hath his eyes dazzled; so he that beholds the infinite excellencies of God, considers the distance, cannot but be sensible of his own naughtiness, nothingness. It is fit the foundation should be laid deep, where the building is so high. Agur's humility was not more low than his aims lofty: "Who hath ascended up into heaven?" It is a high pitch that he flies, for he knew well that godliness, as it begins in the right knowledge of ourselves, so it ends in the right knowledge of God.

And have not the understanding of a man.] Or, Neither is there in me the understanding that was in Adam. Man, when he came first out of God's mint, shone most glorious in knowledge, righteousness, and holiness. Socinians feign him silly, and therein betray their own silliness. {a} He had a large measure of objective knowledge, both in natural things and supernatural; which we have lost in him. {#1Co 2:14} This we should, with Agur here, sit down and bewail, as those in Ezra did the burnt temple. {#Ezr 3:12}

Ver. 3. I neither learned wisdom.] As he had it not by nature, {a} so neither had he attained unto it by any pains or skill of his own. "There is a spirit indeed in man"—a reasonable soul and a faculty of reasoning—"but the inspiration of the Almighty giveth understanding." {#Job 32:8} Not that Agur neglected the means of knowledge, or put off the study of it (as Solomon's fool, #Pr 24:7), from a conceit of the impossibility of reaching to it. Neither yet was he of their mind of whom Augustine makes mention that they cast off the care of knowledge, because knowledge puffeth up; and so would be ignorant that they might be humble, and want knowledge that they might want pride. This was to do as the philosopher that plucked out his eyes to avoid the danger of uncleanness. Sed nihil aliud egit quam quod fatuitatem suam urbi manifestam fecit, saith Tertullian, {b} wherein he proclaimed his own folly to all the country. But holy Agur here assures us that flesh and blood never revealed these high things that follow unto him, but as Paul was an apostle, so was he a prophet "not of men, neither by man, but by Jesus Christ, and God the Father," {#Ga 1:1} even "the Father of lights." {#Jas 1:17} In nature's school nothing is to be learned concerning Ithiel and Ucal. St Augustine, though much taken with Cicero's "Hortensius," yet because he found not the name of Christ in it he could not so heartily affect it. {c} The philosophers much magnify the mind of man as full of divine light and perspicacy, when the truth tells us that it is

There is nothing great in the earth but man, nothing in man but his mind. Si eousque scandis, coelum transcendis, said Favorinus the philosopher; If you get up thither you ascend beyond heaven. But Agur "had not so learned Christ." He talks of natural blindness and other evils born with him. Erras si tecum vitia nasci putes; supervenere, ingesta sunt. You are out, Agur, saith Seneca, if you talk on that manner; blindness is not natural to you, but adventitious. Agur bewails his loss in Adam; this nature's eye never saw, and therefore heart never rued. Those that were born in hell knew none other heaven, as the proverb is. Agur tells us here that he never learned true wisdom from any man, but must thank God for that measure thereof that he had attained to. On the contrary Cicero {d} tells us that, inasmuch as every man acquires to himself that virtue that he hath, no wise man ever yet gave God thanks for it. And Seneca saith, It is of the gods that we live, but of ourselves that we live well and honestly. {e} How different are the saints in Scripture from the world's wizards!

Nor have the knowledge of the holy.] That is, Of the angels {#Da 4:13,17 8:13} whom Jacob saw ascending and descending. {#Ge 28:12, compared with #Pr 30:4 Joh 1:51} Moses made them looking intently into the mercy seat. {#Ex 25:18,19} Peter sets them forth as stooping down to look wishtly and earnestly {f} into the mystery of Christ {#IPe 1:12} which was hid from them till the discovery, and ever since, that they are great students in it. {#Eph 3:10} But how should Agur, or any man else that cannot tell the form and the quintessence of things, that cannot enter into the depth of the flower, or the grass he treads on, that cannot understand the nature and properties of so small a creature as an ant or bee—Pliny {g} tells of one that spent eight and fifty years in learning out the nature of the bee, and yet had not fully attained unto it—how is it possible, I say, that the wisest naturalist should have the wit to enter into the deep things of God? Ver. 4. Who hath ascended up into heaven, or descended?] Who but the Son of man which is in heaven? {#Joh 3:13} who but the holy angels upon that Son of man, the ladder of life? {#Joh 1:51} who but those that have, in some measure, the knowledge of those holy ones, {#Pr 30:3} the knowledge of God in Christ, which is life eternal, {#Joh 17:3} heaven aforehand? Holy Agur holds it out to us here that to "know heavenly things" is to "ascend into heaven." Even Aristotle {a} saith that a little knowledge, though but conjectural, about heavenly things, is to be preferred above much knowledge, though certain, about inferior things, and yet he knew no heaven beyond the moveable heavens, neither acknowledged any body, or time, or place, or vacuum there. The truth is, no natural knowledge can be had of the third heaven, nor any help by human arts, for it is neither aspectable nor moveable. As no man hath seen God at any time, so, nor heaven, the throne of God, only "the only begotten Son of God which is in the bosom of the Father," he hath declared both him and heaven, {#Joh 1:18} as that there are many mansions, crowns, sceptres, kingdoms, glories, beauties, angelical entertainments, beatific visions, sweetest varieties, felicities, eternities. And yet all this, or whatsoever more can be said of heaven's happiness, is not the one half, as she said of Solomon's magnificence, of what we shall find in that city of pearl. To express it is as impossible as to compass the heavens with a span, or contain the ocean in a nutshell. Let there be continual ascensions thither in our hearts; let us lift up hearts and hands to God in the heavens, and he will shortly send his chariots for us, as Joseph did for his father, fetch us riding upon the clouds, convoy us by his angels through the air, as through the enemy's country, and puts us into that panegyries, that general assembly, and solemn celebrity of holy and happy souls. {#Heb 12:23} As in the mean space, how should we every day take a turn or two with Christ upon Mount Tabor?—get up to the top of Pisgah with Moses, and take a prospect of heaven?—turn every solemnity into a school of divinity? Say, as Fulgentius, when he saw the nobility of Rome sit mounted in their bravery, Si talis est Roma terrestris qualis est Roma coelestis? If Rome be such a glorious place, what is heaven? What music may we think there is in heaven? said another good soul, when he sat and heard a good concert of music. This, this is the principal end and most profitable use of all creatures, Cum scalae nobis et alae fiant, When they become ladders and wings to us to mount up to heaven.

Who hath gathered the wind in his fists? &c.] None but God, the great wonder worker, the right Aeolus, that "bringeth the winds out of his treasures," {#Ps 135:7} and bids them at his pleasure "Peace, be still." We read of a whirlwind raised by the devil, {#Job 1:19} and of a tempest, laid by the magicians (Herodotus, in Polymnia). But it cannot be said {as #1Ki 19:11} that "God was not in that wind"; for he hath the royalty of all the creatures, though he suffer the devil to play rex sometimes, for ends best known to himself.

Who hath bound the waters in a garment?] Those above the firmament, in clouds—through which they distil and drop down, as water would do if bound up in a garment—those below, in channels and bottles, as the Psalmist hath it. Water is naturally above the earth, as the garment above the body, and would, but for the providence of God, prove as the shirt made for the murdering of Agamemnon, where the head had no issue out, &c. {See Trapp on "Ge 1:7"}

What is his name?] God is above all name, to speak properly. When Manoah inquires after his name, the answer is, "It is Wonderful"; that is, I am called as I am called; but such is thy weakness that it passeth thy conception; this ocean will not be measured by thy musselshell. Multa nomina et lumina sibi finxerunt infideles. The heathens had many names for their dunghill deities; but the Africans called an "unknown god" whom they worshipped, Amen, that is, Heus tu quis est? Hark, who art thou? as Plutarch relateth. {b}

And what is his son's name?] Christ hath many names in Holy Scripture, as #Isa 9:6,7. So "Jehovah, our righteousness"; "Messiah the Prince," {#Da 9:25} whereunto answereth in the New Testament, "the Lord Christ"; but "who can declare his generation?" {#Isa 53:8} whether that eternal generation, or that in the fulness of time, the mystery whereof was beyond words? Our safest eloquence here will be our silence, our greatest knowledge a learned ignorance. Only we have here a clear testimony of the distinction of the persons, and that the Son is coequal and consubstantial with the Father, since he is also, as the Father, above all name and notion.

If thou canst tell.] But so can none: "No man knoweth the Son but the Father; neither doth any man know the Father but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal him." {#Mt 11:27} The Son is so like the Father here, that if you know the one, ye cannot but know the other. {#Joh 14:7-9} Milk is not so like milk. Non tam ovum ovo simile. He is "the brightness of his Father's glory, and the express image of his person." {#Heb 1:3} {See Trapp on "Heb 1; 3"} And if we desire a glass wherein to behold the face of God the Father, and of his Son, here is one held forth in the next verse.

Ver. 5. Every word of God is pure: he is a shield.] Albeit all the sacred sentences contained in this blessed book are pure, precious, and profitable; yet as one star in heaven outshineth another, so doth one proverb another, and this is among the rest, velut inter stellas luna minores, an eminent sentence often recorded in Scripture, and far better worthy than ever Pindar's seventh ode was to be written in letters of gold. {a} Every word of God is pure, purer than "gold tried in the fire," {#Re 3:18} purer than "silver tried in a furnace, and seven times purified." {#Ps 12:6} Julian, therefore, that odious apostate, is not to be hearkened to, who said there was as good stuff in Phocylides as in Solomon, in Pindar's odes as in David's psalms. Nor is that brawling dog Porphyry to be regarded, who blasphemously accuseth Daniel the prophet, and Matthew the evangelist, as writers of lies, Os durum! harsh speech. The Jesuits, some of them, say little less of St Paul's epistles, which they could wish by some means censured and reformed, as dangerous to be read, and savouring of heresy in some places. {b} Traditions they commonly account the touchstone of doctrine and foundation of faith; the Scriptures to be rather a Commonitorium , as Bellarmine calls it, a kind of storehouse for advice, than cor et animam Dei, the heart and soul of God, as Gregory {c} calls them, -a fortress against errors, as Augustine. {d} The apostle calleth concupiscence sin— at non licet nobis ita loqui; but we may not call it so, saith Possevine, the Jesuit {e} The author to the Hebrews saith, "Marriage is honourable among all men"; but the Rhemists, on #1Co 7:9, say that the marriage of priests is the worst sort of incontinence. Christ saith the sin against the Holy Ghost hath no remission. Bellarmine {f} saith that it may be forgiven. The Council of Constance comes in with a non obstante against Christ's institution, withholding the cup from the people at the sacrament. And a Parisian doctor {g} tells us, that although the apostle would have sermons and service celebrated in a known tongue, yet the Church, for very good cause, hath otherwise ordered it. Bishop Bonner's chaplain called the Bible, in scorn, 'his little pretty God's book,' and judged it worthy to be burnt, tanquam doctrina peregrina, as strange doctrine. Gilford and Raynolds said it contained some things profane and apocryphal. Others have styled it the 'mother of heresy,' and therefore not fit to be read by the common people, lest they suck poison out of it. Prodigious blasphemy! Of the purity and perennity of the holy Scriptures, see more in my True Treasure, pp. 85, 139.

Ver. 6. Add thou not unto his words.] As the Jews at this day do by their traditions, which they arrogantly call mashlamnutha, completio, perfectio, {a} because they think that thereby the law is completed and perfected, as the Artemonites, and after them the schoolmen, corrupted the Scripture out of Aristotle and Theophrastus, turning all into questions and quilllets. {b} As Mahomet joined his Alfurta, his service book, a horrible heap of all blasphemies, to the three parts of holy Scripture, as he divides them, the law, psalms, and gospel. As the Papists add their human inventions and unwritten verities, which they equalise unto, if not prefer before, the book of God, as appears by that heathenish decree of the Council of Trent. And when at the Council of Basil the Hussites denied to receive any doctrine that could not be proven by Scripture, Cardinal Cusan answered that Scriptures were not of the being of the Church, but of the well being, and that they were to be expounded according to the current rite of the Church, which, if it change its mind, the judgment of God is also changed. {c} Lastly, Such add to God's word as wrest it and rack it; making it speak that which it never thought; causing it to go two miles where it would go but one; gnawing and tawing it to their own purposes, as the shoemaker taws {d} upper leather with his teeth. Tertullian calls Marcion the heretic, Mus Ponticus, of from his arroding and gnawing the Scripture, to make it serviceable to his errors.

Lest he reprove thee.] Both verbally and penally—both with words and blows. Lest he severely punish thee, as one that adds to his will, or imbaseth his coin.

And thou be found a liar.] As all Popish forgers and roisters at this day are found to be. God hath ever raised up such as have detected their impostures, and vindicated the purity and perfection of the sacred Scriptures.

Ver. 7. Two things have I required of thee.] Two special requests he had among many, for our present condition is a condition of singular vanity and indigence. We get our living by begging, and are never without somewhat to be required of God; never without our wants and ailments and suits for supplies.

Deny me them not.] See here both his familiarity with God in prayer and his importunity; for a lazy suitor begs a denial. Agur therefore re-enforceth his request: it was honest, else he would never have begun it; but being so, he is resolved to follow it. So doth David with his "one thing" which he did desire, and he would desire, {#Ps 27:4} he would never give it over. So Jacob would have a blessing, and therefore wrestles with might and slight; and this he doth in the night and alone, and when God was leaving him, and upon one leg. He had a hard pull of it, and yet he prevailed. "Let me go," saith God: no, thou shalt not go, saith Jacob, till I have my request. It is not unlawful for us to be unmannerly in prayer, to be importunate, and after a sort impudent. {#Lu 18:8} {a} Was not the woman of Canaan so? {#Mt 15:22} She came for a cure, and a cure she would have; and had it too, with a high commendation of her heroic faith. Christ was no penny father; he had more blessings than one, even the abundance of the Spirit for them that ask it. When poor men make requests to us, we usually answer them as the echo doth the voice, the answer cuts off half the petition: if they ask us two things, we think we deal well if we grant them one. Few Naamans, that when you beg one talent will force you to take two. But God heaps mercies upon his suppliants, and blames them for their modesty in asking. "Hitherto you have asked me nothing"; nothing to what you might have done, and should have had. "Ask, that your joy may be full." "Thou shouldst have smitten five or six times," said the prophet to the king of Israel, that smote thrice only—"then hadst thou smitten Syria till thou hadst consumed it." {#2Ki 13:18,19}

Before I die, / q.d., I intend to be a daily suitor for them while I live; and when I die I shall have no more to do in this kind. Every one as he hath some special grace or gift above others, and as he is dogged with some special temptation or violent corruption, so he hath some great request. And God holds him haply in hand about it all his lifelong, that he may daily hear from him, and that a constant intercourse may be maintained. Thus it was with David, {#Ps 27:4} and with Paul. {#2Co 12:8,9} In this case we must resolve to give God no rest, never to stand before him but ply this petition; and yet take heed of prescribing to him, of "limiting the holy one of Israel." Say with Luther, Fiat voluntas mea: Let my will be done; but then he sweetly falls off with, mea voluntas, Domine, quia tua: My will, Lord, but because it is, and no further than it is, thy will too.

Ver. 8. Remove far from me vanity and lies,] i.e., All sorts of sins, those lying vanities that promise much happiness to those that pursue them, but perform little enough; "shame" at the best, but usually "death." {#Ro 6:21,23} Free me both from the damning and from the domineering power of sin; both from the sting and stain of it; from the guilt and filth; from the crime and curse; from the power and punishment. Let my person be justified, and my lusts mortified. "Forgive me my trespasses, and deliver me from evil."

Give me neither poverty nor riches.] So that God must give to be poor as well as to be rich. He makes holes in the money bag, {#Hag 1:6} and he stops the secret issues and drains of expense at which men's estates run out, they know not how nor when. Agur would have neither poverty, for the many inconveniences and discomforts that attend it, nor yet riches, for the many cares, cumbers, and other evils not a few that follow them; but a mediocrity, a competence, a sufficiency without superfluity. A state too big, he knew, is troublesome, as well as a shoe too big for the foot. They say it is not the great cage that makes the bird sing; sure we are it is not the great estate that brings always the inward joy, the cordial contentment. Glass keeps out wind and rain, but lets in the light, and is therefore useful in building. A moderate estate is neither so mean as to expose a man to the injuries, nor so great as to exclude a man from the influence of heaven. A staff may help a traveller, but a bundle of staves may be a burden to him; so may too great an estate to a godly man.

Feed me with food convenient for me.] Heb., With food of mine allowance, or which thou seest fit to allow me: so much as my demensum comes to; the piece that thou hast cut for me; the portion that belongs unto me; the bread of the day for the day; give me daily bread that I may in diem vivere, live on today, as Quintilian saith the birds do, the little birds, that have their meal brought in every day by their dams without defeatment. And hereunto the original here seems to allude. Pomponius Atticus thus defineth riches, Divitiae sunt, ad legem naturae composita paupertas, Riches are such a poverty or mediocrity as hath enough for nature's uses. If I may have but offam et aquam, a morsel of meat, a mouthful of water, and convenient clothing, I shall not envy the richest Croesus or Crassus upon earth. {See Trapp on "Mt 6:11"} {See Trapp on "1Ti 6:8"}

Ver. 9. Lest I be full and deny thee, &c.] Fulness breeds forgetfulness, saturity security #De 32:14; {See Trapp on "De 32:14"} #1Ti 6:17 {See Trapp on "1Ti 6:17"} every grain of riches hath a vermin of pride and ambition in it. A man may desire them, as one desires a ship to pass over the sea from one country to another; but to many they prove hindrances to heaven, remoras to religious practices. Many in their low estate could serve God, but now resemble the moon, which never suffers eclipse but at her full, and that is by the earth's interposition between the sun and herself. Even an Agur full fed may grow wanton, and be dipping his fingers in the devil's sauce; yea, so far may he forget himself, as to deny the Lord (or as the Hebrew hath it, belie him), disgrace his housekeeping, and cast a slur upon his work and wages by his shameful apostasy; yea (as Pharaoh-like), to ask, Who is the Lord? as if such were petty gods within themselves, and could by the help of their mammon do well enough without him. Solomon's wealth did him more harm than his wisdom did him good. {#Ec 2} It was his abundance that drew out his spirits, and dissolved him, and brought him to so low an ebb in grace.

Or, lest I be poor and steal.] Necessity is a hard weapon; we use to say, Hunger is an evil counsellor, and poverty is bold or daring, as Horace calls it. {a} The baser sort of people in Swethland do always break the Sabbath, saying, that it is only for gentlemen to keep that day. And the poorer sort among us (some of them I mean that have learned no better) hold theft in them, petty larceny at least, a peccadillo, an excusable evil; for either we must steal, say they, or starve; the belly hath no ears; our poor children must not pine and perish, &c. And truly "men do not despise,"—i.e., not so much despise—"a thief if he steal to satisfy his soul when he is hungry," saith Solomon {#Pr 6:30} in his argument that an adulterer is worse than a thief; though a thief be bad enough, shut out of heaven. {#1Co 6:9} But if he steal for necessity—πεινωντι κλεπτειν εστ αναγκαιως εχον, saith the Greek proverb, there is no remedy but a harking stomach must be quieted—men do the more excuse him a tanto, though not a toto. But God saith flat and plain, "Thou shalt in no case steal." "Let him that stole steal no more," but let him labour with his hands, and depend upon God's providence; let him prefer affliction before sin, and rather die than do wickedly. But want is a sore temptation, as Agur feared, and that good man felt, mentioned by Master Perkins, who being ready to starve, stole a lamb; and being about to eat of it with his poor children, and (as his manner was before meat) to crave a blessing, durst not do it, but fell into a great perplexity of conscience, acknowledged his fault to the owner, and promised restitution if ever able to make it.

And take the name of my God in vain.] He says not, Lest I, being poor, steal and be fined, burnt in the hand, whipped, &c. No; but "Lest I take thy name in vain"; that is, cause thy name to stink among the ungodly, open their mouths, break down the banks of blasphemy, by such a base sin, committed by such a forward professor. Good men take God's name in vain no way so much as by confuting and shaming their profession by a scandalous conversation, such as becometh not the gospel of Christ; moreover, they count sin to be the greatest smart in sin, as being more sensible of the wound they therein give the glory of God, than of any personal punishment.

{a} Necessitas durum telum. Fames malesuada, audax paupertas.

Ver. 10. Accuse not a servant unto his master.] Unless it be in an ordinance, for the benefit of both. Much less may we falsely accuse wives to their husbands—as Stephen Gardiner and other courtparasites did King Henry VIII his wives to him of adultery, heresy, conspiracy, &c.; children to their parents—as the Jesuits, the Pope's bloodhounds, did Charles, eldest son of Philip, King of Spain, for suspicion of heresy, whereupon he was murdered by the cruel Inquisition; one friend to another; a sin that David could not endure; {#Ps 101:5} and Christ, the Son of David, as deeply disliked it in the Pharisees, those mischief makers, that by accusing his disciples to him one while, and him to his disciples another while, sought to make a breach in his family, by setting off the one from the other.

Lest he curse thee, and thou be found guilty.] Lest to cry quittance with thee he rip up thy faults, such as it will be for thy shame, —

He that speaketh what he should not, shall hear of what he would not. Put them in mind to speak evil of no man falsely and rashly, without cause and necessity. And why? "For we ourselves also"—even I Paul, and thou Titus—"were sometimes foolish, disobedient," &c., {#Tit 3:1-3} and may haply hear of it to our shame and sorrow, if we irritate others thereunto by way of recrimination.

Ver. 11. There is a generation that curseth their father.] An evil and an adulterous generation, doubtless; a bastardly brood, {a} as were those in the gospel; "a generation of vipers," {b} that make their way into the world by their dams' death. These monsters of men are doomed to destruction. {#Le 20:9} Hell gapes for them, as also it doth for such as revile or denigrate their masters, magistrates, ministers, benefactors, ancients. There is a certain plant which our herbalists call Herbam impiam, or wicked cudweed, {c} whose younger branches still yield flowers to overtop the older. Such weeds grow too rife abroad; it is an ill soil that produceth them. But of this before.

{a} γενεα μοιχαλις. {#Mt 12:39}

{b} γενεα αχιδων. {#Mt 3:7}

{c} The common name for the genus Gnaphalium of composite plants, having chaffy scales surrounding the flower heads; originally proper to G. sylvaticum; extended to other plants, of allied genera, or similar appearance.

Ver. 12. There is a generation that are pure, &c.] As the ancient Puritans, the Novatians, Donatists, Catharists, Illuminates. Non habeo, Domine, cui ignoscas, said one justiciary: I have done nothing, Lord, that needs thy pardon. "Ye are those that justify yourselves," saith Christ to the Pharisees. "All these things have I done from my youth; what want I yet?" said one of them that far overweaned his own worth, and rated himself above the market. "In all my labours they shall find none iniquity in me," saith guilty Ephraim; "that were sin," {#Ho 12:8} that were a foul business to find iniquity in Ephraim, whose iniquities were (yet) grown over his head, as appears throughout that whole prophecy. That man of sin, the Pope, will needs be held sinless, and sundry of his votaries say they can supererogate. And are there not among us, even among us, such sinners before the Lord, that stand upon their pantofles, and proudly ask, Who can say, black is their eye? There is a generation of these, that is, a continual succession of them. Such dust-heaps you may find in every corner.

And yet is not washed from their filthiness.] Either "of flesh or spirit"; {#2Co 7:1} they wallow in sin like swine, and welter in wickedness, which is filth and blood, {#Isa 4:4} the vomit of a dog, {#2Pe 2:22} the excrement of the devil, the superfluity or garbage of naughtiness, and the stinking filth of a pestilent ulcer, as the Greek words {a} used by St James, {#Jas 1:21} do signify. The whole world lieth in wickedness, {#1Jo 5:19} as a lubber in a lake, as a carcase in its slime. Nil mundum in mundo; and yet who so forward to boast of their good hearts to Godward?

Ver. 13. Oh how lofty are their eyes.] The eyes are the seat of pride and disdain, which peep out at these windows. The Hebrews have a saying, that a man's mind is soonest seen in oculis, in loculis, in poculis, in his eyes, expenses, cups. See #Pr 6:17.

Ver. 14. There is a generation whose teeth, &c.] These are sycophants and greedy gripers, of whom before, often, in this book. In the year 1235, there were spread through England certain Roman usurers, called Caursini, quasi capientis ursi, devouring bears, quoth Paris, who had entangled the king, nobles, and all that had to do with them. These were called the "Pope's merchants." {a}

{a} Speed.

Ver. 15. The horseleech {a} hath two daughters.] That is, Two forks in her tongue, whereby she first pricketh the flesh, and then sucketh the blood. Hereunto Solomon seemeth to resemble those cruel cormorants spoken of in the former verse. By the horseleech some understand the devil, that great red dragon, red with the blood of souls, which he hath sucked and swallowed, {#1Pe 5:8} seeking whom he may (καταπιη) let down his wide gullet, while he glut gluts their blood, as the young eaglets are said to do, {#Job 39:30} by a word made from the sound, {b} By the horseleech's two daughters they understand covetousness and luxury, whom the devil hath long since espoused to the Romish clergy.

“Cuius avaritiae totus non sufficit orbis,
Cuius luxuriae meretrix non sufficit omnis.”

Ver. 16. The grave.] Which in Hebrew hath its name of craving. It is a sarcophagus, feeds on flesh, and it as little appears as once in Pharaoh's lean kine; or as in those that having a flux, take in much, but are neither fuller nor fatter. The word here used may be rendered hell, called by the Latins Infernus ab inferendo, from the devil's continual carrying in souls to that place of torment.

And the barren womb.] Barren women are most desirous of children, which yet are certain cares, but uncertain comforts. How impatient was Rachel! how importunate was Hannah! One hath well observed, that the barren women in Scripture had the best children, as being the fruit of their faith, and the product of their prayers. The Vulgate renders it, Os vulvae and Mercer, Orificium matricis, referring it not to barren, but to incontinent women, such as was Messala, and other insatiate punks, quarum libido non expletur virili semine vel coitu.

The earth that is not filled with water.] That can never have enough at one time to serve at all times. That is a strange earth or country that Pliny speaks of, ubi siccitas dat lutum, imbres pulverem, where drought makes dirt, and rain causeth dust. And yet so it is with us, saith a divine. The plentiful showers of God's blessings rained down upon us, are answered with the dusty barrenness of our lives. The sweet dews of Hermon have made the hill of Sion more barren. Oh, how inexcusable shall we be!

And the fire that saith not, it is enough.] Fire is known to be a great devourer, turning all corn bustibles into the same nature with itself. How many stately cities hath this untamable element turned into ashes? It is an excellent observation of Herodotus, that the sparks and cinders of Troy are purposely set before the eyes of all men, that they might be an example of this rule—that great sins bring great punishments from God upon the sons of men. {a} Scipio having set Carthage on fire, and beholding the burning, foresaw and bewailed the destiny of Rome: which, as it hath been often burnt already, so it shall be shortly to purpose—the kings, mariners, and merchants, standing aloof and beholding the smoke of her burning. {#Re 17:16 18:8,9} God will cast this rod of his wrath into the fire, burn this old whore, that hath so long burnt the saints for heretics, and refused to be purged by any other nitre or means whatsoever; therefore all her dross and trash shall pass the fire. This is so plain a truth, that even the Papists themselves subscribe to it. Hear what Ribera, a learned Jesuit, saith, Romam non solum ob pristinam impietatem, &c. {b} That Rome, as well for its ancient impiety as for its late iniquity, shall be destroyed with a horrible fire, it is so plain and evident, that he must needs be a fool that doth but go about to deny it.

{a} των μεγαλων αδικηματων μεγαλαι εισι και αι τιμωριαι παρα του Θεου.

Ver. 17. The eye that mocketh at his father.] As Ham did at Noah. "And despiseth to obey his mother," or 'Despiseth the wrinkles of his mother,' as some read it; that looks upon her with disdain, as an old withered fool.

The ravens of the valley shall pick it out.] God takes notice of the offending member, and appoints punishments for it. By the law such a child was to be put to death, and here is set down what kind of death—hanging upon a tree, which the Greeks also call a being cast, εις κορακας, to the crows or ravens. Thus the Scripture is both text and gloss; one place opens another; the prophets explain the law; they unfold and draw out that arras {a} that was folded together before. The ravens of the valleys or brooks are said to be most ravenous; {b} and the young eagles or vultures smell out carcasses, and the first thing they do to them is to pick out their eyes: Effossos oculos voret atro gutture corvus. They are cursed with a witness whom the Holy Ghost thus curseth in such emphatic manner, in such exquisite terms. {c} Let wicked children look to it, and know that vultu saepe laeditur pietas, as the very heathens observed; that a proud or paltry look cast upon a parent is a breach of piety punishable with death, yea, with a shameful and ignominious death. Let them also think of those infernal ravens and vultures, &c.

Ver. 18. There be three things which are too wonderful.] The wisest man that is cannot give a reason for all things; such as the ebbing and flowing of the sea, of the colours in the rainbow, of the strength of the nether chap, and of the heat in the stomach, which consumeth all other things, and yet not the parts about it. Agur here confesseth himself gravelled in four things at least, and benighted.

Ver. 19. And the way of a man with a maid.] That is, Either with a close and chaste virgin, that is kept close from the access of strangers, and goes covered with a veil; or else with a maid that, though deflowered, yet would pass for a pure virgin, and is so taken to be till her lewdness is discovered. It is expressly noted of Rebecca, to her commendation, that though fair to look upon, yet she was a virgin, neither had any man known her. {#Ge 24:16} There are those who pass for virgins, and yet it cannot be said of them that man never knew them.

“ Thesaurum cure virgo tuum vas fictile servet, Ut fugias quae sunt noxia, tuta time.”

Ver. 20. So is the way of an adulterous woman.] The strumpet, when she hath eaten stolen bread, hath such dexterity in wiping her lips, that not the least crumb shall stick to them for discovery. So that Agur here shows it to be as hard to find it out as the way of an eagle in the air, the way of a serpent on a rock, &c. Unless taken in the manner, she stoutly denies the action. And if so taken, yet

“ Nihil est audacius illis, Deprensis, iram atque animos a crimine sumunt.”
- Juvenal, Satyr. 6.

Ver. 21. For three things the earth is disquieted.] Such trouble towns are odious creatures; the places where they live, long for a vomit to spew them out. As they live wickedly, so they die wishedly; there is a good world's riddance of them, as there was of Nabal, and of those in #Job 27:23,15, who were buried before half dead, being hissed and kicked off the stage of the world, as Phocas was by Heraclius.

And for four which it cannot bear.] The very axle of the world is even ready to crack under them, the earth to open and swallow them up.

Ver. 22. For a servant when he reigneth.] As Jeroboam, Saul, Zimri, Herod, Heliogabalus, Phocas. {See Trapp on "Pr 19:10"} Vespasian only, of all the emperors, is said to have been better for his advancement.

For a fool when he is filled with meat.] When his belly is filled with God's "hid treasure"; {#Ps 17:14} when he prospers and hath what he will. Prosperity is hard meat to fools; they cannot digest it. {a} They grow giddy, as weak heads do after a cup of generous wine, and lay about them like madmen; the folly of these rich fools is foolishness with a witness. {#Pr 14:24} {See Trapp on "Pr 14:24"}

Ver. 23. For an odious woman when she is married.] Such a one was Peninnah, who vexed good Hannah, "to make her to thunder," as the original hath it. {a} Such was Jezebel, Herodias, Messalina, wife to the Emperor Claudias, who was her agent to effect her sinful purposes, and her patient to sustain her lewd conditions. She compelled also other Roman ladies to be as lewd as herself, and those that would not she hated, and banished them from the court. {b}

And an handmaid that is heir to her mistress.] That succeeds her in the marriage bed; her good and her blood will rise together, as we see in Hagar. Hence that counsel of the Greek poet:

“Μηποτε δουλευσασα γυνη δεσποινα γενοιτο”

“Never make thy maid thy mistress.”

Such hens will be apt to crow, such wives to breed disturbance in the family.

{a} #1Sa 1:6.

{b} Dio in Claudio.

Ver. 24. There be four things.] Made up thus in quaternions (as the 119th Psalm is in octonaries, and those in an alphabetical order), for help of memory.

Which are little upon the earth, but exceeding wise.] God is maximus in minimis, very much seen in the smallest creatures. In formicis maior anima quam in elephantis, in nanis quam in gigantibus, The soul is more active in ants than elephants, in dwarfs than in giants. "Who hath despised the day of small things?" {#Zec 4:10}

“A cane non magno saepe tenetur aper.”—Ovid.

The creatures, next to the Scriptures, are the best layman's books, whereby we may learn to know God and ourselves savingly. "Ask now the beasts, and they shall teach thee, and the fowls of the heaven, and they shall tell thee." {#Job 12:7}

Ver. 25. The ants are a people not strong.] A feeble folk, but notable for their forecast. See #Pr 6:6,7. Let us be so, but specially in spirituals.

Ver. 26. The conies are but a feeble folk.] But what they want in strength they have in wisdom; while they work themselves holes and burrows in the earth. Gaudet in effossis habitare cuniculus antris, { a } secures herself in the rocks and stony places. It shall be our wisdom to work ourselves into the rock Christ Jesus, where we shall be safe from hellish hunters.

{a} Martial.

Ver. 27. The locusts have no king.] They are all belly, which is joined to their mouths, and endeth at their tails; hence they make such havoc where they come in those Eastern countries. See #Joe 2:11, where they are called "God's great army." For though they have no king to command them, yet they go forth by bands, and march all in a company, to teach men concord and combination in lawful affairs and attempts. For,

“Coniuncti pollent etiam vehementer inertes.”

Those locusts in the Revelation (whereby is meant the Popish clergy), have their king Abaddon, the Pope, {#Re 9:11} to whom they appeal from their lawful sovereign; yea, the rebellion of a clergyman against his prince is not treason, saith Sa the Jesuit, quia non est principi subiectus, because he is the Pope's subject. And when the English clergy whipped King Henry II for a penance for Becket's death, one of the Pope's legates said unto him, Domine, noli minari, &c.: Sir, never threaten us, for we fear no menaces of men, as being of such a court as use to command kings and emperors. {a}

{a} Jacob. Revius, De Vit. Pontiff

Ver. 28. The spider taketh hold with her hands.] Some render it the ape, and the Hebrew semamith is somewhat like the Latin simia, a creature that is very witty, active, and imitative, taking hold with his hands (such as they are) and doing strange feats; being therefore much in king's palaces, who delight to look upon them, as Solomon did, for recreation. If we take it for the spider, she doth her work painfully and curiously, spins a finer thread than any woman can do, builds a finer house than any man can do, in manner and form like to the tent of an emperor. This base creature may teach us this wisdom, saith one, not to be bunglers or slubberers in our works, but to be exact in our trades, and labour so to excel therein, that our doings may be commendable and admirable.

Ver. 29. There be three things that go well.] And all for our learning, to teach us in our several stations to deport ourselves in all gravity, maintain our dignity, and show our magnanimity. "Only let your conversation be as becometh the gospel of Christ," saith Paul. {#Php 1:27} There is a το πρεπον, a comeliness and suitableness of carriage belongs to every calling, and this must be carefully kept. Vellem si non essem imperator; said Scipio to one that offered him a harlot: I would, if I were not a general. And remember that thou art a king's son, said Menedemus to Antigonus; that will be a retentive to thee from unseemly practices. "Should such a man as I flee?" {#Ne 6:11} — et Turnum fugientem haec terra videbit? It is a pusillanimity to yield so much to men. The lion will not alter his gait though he die for it. We should learn regnum in pectore gerere, to be of noble resolutions. It is a common saying among us, Such a man understands himself well; that is, he understands his place, worth, dignity, and carries himself accordingly.

Ver. 32. Lay thy hand upon thy mouth.] That is, Better examine thyself, commune with thine own heart and be still. Repent thee, as Job did in like case. {#Job 42:1-6} Quem poenitet peccasse, pene est innocens. {a} It is not the falling into the water that drowns one, but the lying in it.

Ver. 33. So the forcing of wrath.] Too much stirring in an offensive matter bringeth forth brawling, lawing, warring, fighting. Patientia laesa sit furor. The most patient person may be put beyond all patience if much provoked. Abner bare long with Asahel, but sped him at length. Abused mercy turns into fury. See #Pr 15:1.

Chapter 31

Ver. 1. The words of King Lemuel.] Lemuel's lesson, Bathsheba's catechism. Lemuel she calls him, because God had owned him. "I will be his father, and he shall be my son"; {#2Sa 7:14} and was "with him" so long as he was "with God," according to #2Ch 15:2. Indeed, when he grew discinct and dissolute, then God's soul sat loose to him, and was disjointed from him, {#Jer 6:8} and the rather because he had had the benefit of better education. His father had taught him, and had taken much pains with him. {#Pr 4:4} His mother {a} also had counselled and cautioned him early not to give his strength to wine and women; and yet he was most inordinate in his love to these two. {#Ecc 2} This was almost as great an aggravation of his sin, that he had been better taught and brought up, as that other, that he forsook the Lord that had "appeared unto him twice." {#1Ki 11:9} The "words of King Lemuel" they are called, because, though composed by his mother, yet for his use, in the same sense as #Ps 127:1, is styled "A song of degrees of Solomon," or "for Solomon," though made by his father, who tells him there that which he found true by experience, "Lo, children are a heritage of the Lord," &c., for by all his wives Solomon had none but one son, and him none of the wisest either.

Ver. 2. What, my son? and what, the son of my womb?] An abrupt speech, importing abundance of affection; even more than might be uttered. There is an ocean of love in a parent's heart, a fathomless depth of desire after the child's welfare, in the mother especially. Some of the Hebrew doctors hold that this was Bathsheba's speech to her son after his father's death, when she partly perceived which way his genius leaned and led him: that she schooled him in this way, q.d., Is it even so, my son, my most dear son, &c. Oh do not give thy strength to women, &c.

Ver. 3. Give not thy strength to women.] Waste not unworthily the fat and marrow of thy dear and precious time, the strength of thy body, the vigour of thy spirits, in sinful pleasures and sensual delights. See #Pr 5:9.

Nor thy ways to that which destroyeth kings.] Venery is called by one death's best harbinger. It was the destruction of Alexander the Great, of Otho the emperor (called for his good parts otherwise Miraculum mundi), of Pope Sextus the Fourth (qui decessit tabidus voluptate, saith the historian, died of a wicked waste), and of Pope Paul the Fourth, of whom it passed for a proverb, Eum per eandem partem animam profudisse per quam acceperat. The Lacedemonian commonwealth was by the hand of divine justice utterly overturned at Leuctra, for a rape committed by their messengers on the two daughters of Scedusus. And what befell the Benjamites on a like occasion is well known out of #Jud 20:29-48, that I speak not of the slaughter of the Shechemites, {#Ge 34:25-29} &c.

Ver. 4. It is not for kings to drink wine,] i.e., To be "drunk with wine, wherein is excess," {#Eph 5:18} where the apostle determines excessive drinking to be downright drunkenness, viz., when as swine do their bellies, so men break their heads with filthy quaffing. This, as no man may lawfully do, so least of all princes; for in maxima libertate minima est licentia. Men are therefore the worse because they are bound to be better.

Nor for princes strong drink.] Or, as some read it, Where is the strong drink? It is not for princes to ask such a question. All heady and intoxicating drinks are by statute here forbidden them. Of Bonosus the emperor it was said that he was born non ut vivat sed ut bibat, not to live but to drink; and when, being overcome by Probus, he afterwards hanged himself, it was commonly jested that a tankard hung there, and not a man. But what a beast was Marcus Antonius, that wrote (or rather spewed out) a book concerning his own strength to bear strong drink? And what another was Darius King of Persia, who commanded this inscription to be set upon his sepulchre, "I was able to hunt lustily, to drink wine soundly, and to bear it bravely." {a} That Irish rebel Tiroen, A.D. 1567, was such a drunkard, that, to cool his body when he was immoderately inflamed with wine and whisky, he would many times be buried in the earth up to the chin. {b} These were unfit men to bear rule.

{b} Camden's Elisabeth.

Ver. 5. Lest they drink and forget the law.] Drunkenness causeth forgetfulness (hence the ancients feigned Bacchus to be the son of forgetfulness), and stands in full opposition to reason and religion: when the wine is in, the wit is out. Seneca saith, that for a man to think to be drunk, and yet to retain his right reason, is to think to drink rank poison, and yet not to die by it. {a}

And pervert the judgment, &c.] Pronounce an unrighteous sentence: which when Philip king of Macedon once did, the poor woman whose cause it was, presently appealed from Philip now drunk, to Philip when he should be sober again. The Carthagenians made a law that no magistrate of theirs should drink wine. The Persians permitted their kings to be drunk one day in a year only. Solon made a law at Athens that drunkenness in a prince should be punished with death. See #Ec 10:16,17.

{a} Plutarch in Sympos.

Ver. 6. Give strong drink to him, &c.] To those that stand at the bar, rather than to them that sit on the bench. Wine maketh glad the heart of man. {#Jud 9:13 Ps 104:15} Plato calls wine and music the μαλακτικα—mitigators of men's miseries. Hence that laudable custom among the Jews at funerals to invite the friends of the deceased to a feast, and to give them the "cup of consolation." {#Jer 16:7} And hence that not so laudable of giving wine, mingled with myrrh, to crucified malefactors, to make them die with less sense. {a} Christ did not like the custom so well, and therefore refused the potion. People should be most serious and sober when they are to die, since in death, as in war, non licet bis errare It is not permitted to error twice.—if a man miss at all, he misses for all and for ever. Vitellius therefore took a wrong course, who, looking for the messenger Death, made himself drunk to drown the fear of it. {b}

And wine unto those that be of heavy hearts.] Heb., Bitter of spirit, as was Naomi when she would needs be called "Marah"; {#Ru 1:20} as was Hannah when she pleaded that she had neither drank wine nor strong drink (though at that time she had need enough of it), but was "a woman of a sorrowful spirit"; {#1Sa 1:15} as was David when his heart was leavened and soured with the greatness of his grief, and he was "pricked in his reins." {#Ps 73:21} This grief was right, because according to God—ἡ κατά Θεον λύπη, {#2Co 7:11} so was that bitter mourning, {#Zec 10:12} and Peter's weeping bitterly. These waters of Marah, that flow from the eyes of repentance, are turned into wine; they carry comfort in them; there is a clear shining after this rain. {#2Sa 23:4} Such April showers bring on May flowers.

{b} Vitellius trepidus, dein temulentus.

Ver. 7. Let him drink and forget his poverty.] And yet let him drink moderately too, lest he increase his sorrows, as Lot did, and not diminish them, for drunkenness leaves a sting behind it worse than that of a serpent or of a cockatrice. {#Pr 23:32} Wine is a prohibited ware among the Turks, which makes some drink with scruple—others with danger. The baser sort, when taken drunk, are often bastinadoed {a} upon the bare feet. And I have seen some, saith mine author, {b} after a fit of drunkenness, lie a whole night crying, and praying to Mohammed for intercession, that I could not sleep near them, so strong is conscience, even where the foundation is but imaginary.

{b} Blunt's Voyage, p. 105.

Ver. 8. Open thy mouth for the dumb, / i.e., Speak wisely and freely for those that either cannot or may not speak for themselves. Thus Nicodemus spoke for our Saviour; {#Joh 7:21} Paphnutius in the council for the married clergy; Pliny to Trajan for the persecuted Christians; the Elector of Saxony for Luther, &c. Oecolampadius saith {a} that wise men only open their mouths, for a fool's mouth is never but open. Hence, κεχηνοτες, gapers, are put for fools in Lucian and Aristophanes.

{a} Oecolamp. in Job xxxiii.

Ver. 9. Plead the cause of the poor and needy.] These are God's great care, as appears in many texts. Job comforted himself in this, that he had been "eyes to the blind, feet to the lame, a father to the poor," &c. {#Job 29:15,16} Ebedmelech is renowned for pleading the cause of the poor prophet, and so should Pharaoh's butler have been if he had done it sooner. Master Holt, who was of counsel to Master Pryn, when so unjustly censured in the Star Chamber, but refused, through cowardice, to sign his answer, according to promise, being overawed by the prelates, bewailed his own baseness to his wife and friends; and, soon after falling sick for conceit only of the miscarriage of that cause, he died, never going to the Star Chamber after that bloody sentence. {a}

{a} New Discoveries of the Prelate's Tyranny, p. 47, 48.

Ver. 10. Who can find a virtuous woman?] Good wives are rare commodities, and therefore precious and highly to be prized, even above rubies. The Hebrews put rarum pro charo, as in #1Sa 3:1 Pr 25:7; "Let thy feet be precious in thy neighbour's house"—that is, let them seldom come there, lest thou become overcheap and undervalued. {a} It is easy to observe that the New Testament affords more store of good women than the Old. When Paul came first to Philippi, few or none came to hear him but women, {#Ac 6:13} but they drew on their husbands, and it soon became a famous church. What a rare piece was Priscilla, who better instructed Apollos, ventured her life for Paul, {#Ro 16:4} and was such a singular help to her husband that she is mentioned before him as the more forward of the two. {#Ro 16:3} Like as was also Manoah's wife, {#Jud 13:24,25} and Nazianzen's mother. Solomon's mother was behind none of them, as appears by this poem, either composed by Solomon as a character of her, as some have thought, or else by herself, for his direction in the choice of a good wife, which would be worthy his pains, though he should fetch her as far as men do rubies— procul prae unionibus precium eius. What a way sent Abraham and Isaac for good wives for their sons!

Ver. 11. The heart of her husband doth safely trust in her.] He is confident of her love, care, and fidelity. He dare trust her with his soulsecrets, &c.; he doubteth not of her chastity, secrecy, or care to keep his family.

So that he shall have no need of spoil, / i.e., Of necessary commodities: for these she will provide as plentifully by her industry as if she had shared in the spoils of a sacked and ransacked city. The Turks, when they took Constantinople, were so enriched, that it is a proverb among them to this day, if any grow suddenly rich, to say, He hath been at the sacking of Constantinople. {a}

{a} Turkish History, fol. 347.

Ver. 12. She will do him good, and not evil, &c.] She is constant in her conjugal affection, and sticks to him, as Sarah did to Abraham, in all changes and chances whatsoever. She "leaves not off her kindness to the living, and to the dead." {#Ru 2:20} See that notable example of the Lady Valadaura in Ludovicus Vives.

Ver. 13. She seeketh wool and flax.] This was held no shame for Solomon's wife. Augustus Caesar taught his daughters to spin and card; he wore no garments but what his wife and daughters made him. The like is reported of Charles the Great. Spinster, they say, is a term given the greatest women in our law. Rebecca was a dainty cook; so was Tamar, David's daughter. {#2Sa 13:7-10} By Mohammed's law, the grand Turk himself must be of some trade.

And worketh willingly with her hands.] As if her hands did desire to do what she put them to do, for so the original soundeth: "She worketh with the will of her hands." The Vulgate render it, "with the counsel of her hands," as if her hands were oculatae. She discreetly and cheerfully rids her work—with fervour and forecast.

Ver. 14. She is like the merchants' ships.] That is, She gets wealth apace; yea, though she stir not off her stool, and studies how to buy everything at best hand, though she send far for it. Of the Low Country men it is said, Peterent ccelum navibus Belgae, si navibus peti posset. So the good housewife would do anything to further thrift.

Ver. 15. She riseth also while it is yet night.] That is, Betime in the morning—"a great while before day," as our Saviour also did to pray. {#Mr 1:35}

And a portion to her maids.] She neither pines nor pampers them, but allows them that which is sufficient. Three things, saith Aristotle, a man owes to his servants: work, meat, and correction, -εργα, τροφην κολασιν

Ver. 16. She considereth a field and buyeth it.] Here is the fruit of her pains and providence. The manus motitans, the "stirring hand maketh rich," {#Pr 10:4} and "a wise woman buildeth her house." {#Pr 14:1} {See Trapp on "Pr 14:1"} She considers the convenience of this field, and then casts about how she may compass it.

Ver. 17. She girdeth her loins with strength.] She flies about her work, and sets on it with a courage. We have read of women in whom, besides their sex, there was nothing woman-like or weak; such were Semiramis, Zenobia, Blandina, that brave Hungarian woman, who, in an assault at the siege of Buda, thrusting in among the soldiers upon the top of the fort, with a great scythe in her hand, at one blow struck off two of the Turks' heads as they were climbing up the rampier. {a} The like is reported of Marulla, a maid of Lemnos, who, seeing her father slain in the gates of the city by the Turks, which hoped to have surprised it, took up the weapons that lay by him, and, like a fierce Amazon, notably revenged his death.

Ver. 18. She perceiveth that her merchandise is good.] She feels the sweet of it, and is heartened to redouble her diligence, as a draught horse feeling his load coming, draws the harder. The good soul doth the same. For, having once tasted how sweet the Lord is, it can never have enough of him, but is carried after him with strength of desire, as the doves to their dove cotes, as the eagles to the carcasses. {#Ps 84:1-3} No reason would satisfy Moses, but when God had done much for him he must still have more. {#Ex 33:12-19,34:9}

Ver. 19. She layeth her hands to the spindle.] ^{a} Notwithstanding her late purchase, and planting a vineyard ^{#Pr 31:16} and other out businesses. ^{See Trapp on "Pr 31:13"} The two cardinals, Wolsey and Campeius, coming from King Henry VIII on a message to Queen Catherine of Spain, a little before the divorce, found her with a skein of red silk about her neck, being at work with her maids. ^{b} And Queen Anne Boleyn kept her maids, and all that were about her, so busied in sewing and working, that neither was there seen any idleness among them, nor any leisure to follow such pastimes as are usually in princes' courts. ^{c}

Ver. 20. She stretcheth out her hand to the poor.] She laboureth with her hands to that purpose, ^{#Eph 4:28} and findeth by experience that not getting but giving is the way to thrive. See my Common Place of Alms.

Yea, she reacheth forth her hands to the needy.] 'Nittily needy,' as one phraseth it. To those that are extremely poor she not only stretcheth but reacheth, not her hand only, but both hands; yea, she hath her almoners to give to those that she cannot go to, as Queen Anne Boleyn had. ^{a} For, besides what she dealt and distributed by the hands of others, she carried ever about her a certain little purse; out of which she was wont to scatter about daily some alms to the needy, thinking no day well spent wherein some man had not fared the better by some benefit at her hands. The like is told of Placilla, wife to the Emperor Theodosius, that for her courtesy and bounty to the poor she was called φιλοπτωχως, The poor man's friend.

^{a} Acts and Mon., fol. 957.

Ver. 21. She is not afraid of the snow.] As she is liberal to the poor, so her chief care is for those of her own house, that they may be accommodated. For she knows that to stretch beyond the staple were to mar all; and not to provide for her own were to be worse than an infidel. ^{#1Ti 5:8}

Ver. 22. Her clothing is silk and purple.] Suitable to her husband's condition, who is a principal man. ^{#Pr 31:23} That is excellent counsel that Tertullian gives women, Vestite vos serico pietatis, byssino sanctitatis, purpura pudicitiae: {a} Clothe yourselves with the silk of piety, with the satin of sanctity, with the purple of modesty, &c. See #1Pe 3:3,4.

{a} Lib. de cultu faem.

Ver. 23. Her husband is known in the gates.] Is renowned and noted for his wife's worth, besides that he is a ruler in Israel.

Ver. 24, She maketh fine linen and sells it.] Such sindons as our Saviour's dead body was wrapt in, and for girdles. {read #2Sa 18:11 Isa 3:24 Jer 2:32} It was anciently no shame for a queen to make gain of her handiwork.

Ver. 25. Strength and honour are her clothing.] See #Pr 31:22. She is not of those, quae fulgent monilibus, sordent moribus, that are well habited but ill mannered. No; she is inwardly decked with spiritual attire, such as rendereth her glorious in the eyes of God and angels. "The joy of the Lord is her strength," so that she laugheth at the time to come. This "daughter of Sarah, so long as she doth well," and hath the euge a good conscience, "is not afraid with any amazement," as women are apt to be. {#1Pe 3:6} Gaudebat Crispina cum tenebatur, cure audiebatur, cum damnabatur, cam dacebutur: {a} So did Mistress Anne Askew, Alice Driver, and many other gracious women that suffered for the truth in Queen Mary's days. Strength and honour were their clothing, and they rejoiced at the time to come: they went as merry to die as to dine, and cheered up one another with this, that although they had but a bitter breakfast, yet they should sup with Christ in joy.

Ver. 26. She openeth her mouth with wisdom.] Her mouth is not always open, but duly shut and discreetly opened—her words are few, true, and ponderous; the stream and current of her conference tends either to wisdom or kindness—that is, to duties either of piety or charity. The Jesuits forbid women to speak of God and his ways, either in good sort or in bad, and to meddle only with the distaff. But the good women in both Testaments, Abigail, Hannah, Esther, the Virgin Mary, Priscilla, Lois, &c., never heard of this new doctrine. Tatianus tells us that in the primitive Church every age and sex among the Christians were Christian philosophers; yea, that the very virgins and maids, as they sat at their work in wool, were wont to speak of God's word. And Nicephorus writes that the Christians, even as they laboured or journeyed, were wont to sing psalms, and that thereby there was at a certain time a Jew converted. {a} It were surely a great grace, saith Lambert the martyr: if we might have the word of God diligently and often spoken and sung unto us in such wise that women and children might understand it. {b} Then should it come to pass that craftsmen should sing spiritual psalms sitting at their work, the husbandman at his plough, the good housewife at her wheel, as wisheth St Jerome.

And in her tongue is the law of kindness.] It is worthy the mark, saith the chronicler, {c} that Edward I and his grandson, Edward III, the best of our kings, had the two best wives, ladies of excellent virtue, that drew evenly with them in all the courses of honour that appertained to their side. The first of these Edwards being traitorously wounded while he was yet prince in the Holy Land, as they called it, by the poisoned knife of an assassin, the Lady Eleanor his wife extracted the poison with her tongue, licking daily, while her husband slept, his rankling wounds, whereby they perfectly closed, and yet herself received no hurt {d} So sovereign a medicine is a wife's tongue, anointed with the virtue of kindness and affection.

Ver. 27. She looketh well to the ways of her household.] She hath an oar in every boat, an eye in every business; she spies and pries into her children's and servants' carriages, and exacts of them strict conversation and growth in godliness: she overlooks the whole family no otherwise than if she were in a watch tower; Speculatur itinera domus suae.

And eateth not the bread of idleness.] She earns it before she eats it. Aristotle {a} also commends φιλεργια, laboriousness, in a woman, and joins it with temperance and chastity, which are preserved by it. So is taciturnity and sober communication, for which she is commended in the former verse. For, as idleness is the seed of talkativeness, {#ITi 5:12} so painfulness is a singular help against it. Queen Catherine of Spain, wife to our Henry VIII, was not more busy in her calling than prudent in her carriage. She had been counselled to it by Ludovicus Vives, who came into England with her, and was master to her daughter, the Lady Mary. {See Trapp on "Pr 31:19"}

Her husband also.] Whom she commanded by obeying, as Livia did her husband Augustus.

And he shall praise her.] Praise is due to virtue. And albeit, landis non indiga virtus, ilia sed est proprio plane contenta theatro; virtue is her own reward, and she is the best woman, and best to be liked, saith Thucydides, de cuius laude vel vituperio minimus sit sermo, of whose praise or dispraise there is least said abroad; yet forasmuch as praise is a spur. and virtue grows by it, why should it be denied to those who deserve it? {a} Is not a garland here made up by the hand of the Holy Ghost, and set upon the head of this excellent housewife? Neither is it any disparagement that her own husband and children commend her; for her business lying most within doors, who so fit to praise her as those that were ever present with her? and yet neither do they more praise her by their words than by their lives, formed by her to a right posture.

Ver. 29. Many daughters have done virtuously.] By the benefit of a better nature, or civil education, or for praise of men, or for a quiet life, sure it is that all unsanctified women, though never so well qualified, have failed, both quoad fontem, et quoad finem, for want of faith for the principle, and God's glory the aim of their virtuous actions. And therefore, though they be suo genere, praise worthy, yet they are far short of this gracious matron. The civil life without faith is but a beautiful abomination, a smoother way to hell. Melius est pallens aurum quam fulgens aurichalcum, {a} Better is pale gold than glittering copper. Say the world what it will, a drachm of holiness is worth a pound of good nature. Prefer that before this (in the choice of a wife especially), as ye would do a piece of gold for weight rather than for workmanship, for value than for elegance, like that French coin in the historian, in qua plus formae quam ponderis, wherein there was more neatness than weightiness. Of carnal women, though never so witty, well-spoken, and well-deeded too, we may say, as the civil law doth of those mixed beasts, elephants and camels, operam praestant, natura fera est, they do the work of tame creatures, but they have the nature of wild ones.

But thou excellest them all.] As the only paragon of the world, the female glory, the wonder of womenkind.

{a} Bernard.

Ver. 30. Favour is deceitful.] Some marry by their eyes, and some by their fingers' ends. Dos, non Deus, makes such marriages, but they commonly prove unhappy. There is esh, esh, fire, fire, of debate and discord between that ish and ishah, that man and wife, where Jah is not the matchmaker, as the Cabbalists have collected. Favour will fade, and beauty wither; a herd of pox will mar the fairest face, and of a Nireus make a Thersites. Forma bonum fragile est, saith one poet; {a} Res est forma fugax, saith another. {b} But better than they both the prophet Isaiah, "All flesh is grass, and the glory thereof as the flower of the field." All these outward accoutrements are non tantum fallacia quia dubia, verum etiam insidiosa quia dulcia, saith Lactantius; because there is no trusting to them, so there is great danger in them, as Absalom and his sister Tamar found in their beauty.

But a woman that feareth the Lord.] That is indeed the crown of all commendation, as that which makes one "all glorious within," amiable and admirable beyond belief. Nicostratus, in Aelian, himself being a cunning artisan, finding a curious piece of work, and being wondered at by one, and asked what pleasure he could take to stand gazing as he did on the picture, answered, Hadst thou mine eyes thou wouldst not wonder, but rather be ravished as I am at the inimitable art of this rare piece. So if men had saints' eyes to see the beauty of holiness, the excellency of the new creature, they would prize and prefer it before the shining rubbish of all earth's beauty and bravery. But as Augustus, in his solemn feasts, gave to some gold, to others gauds and trifles, so doth God to some give his fear, to others beauty, wealth, honour, and with these they rest contented. But what saith the Psalmist? "The Lord that made heaven and earth bless thee out of Sion,"—q.d., The blessings that come out of Sion are choice blessings, even above any that come out of heaven and earth.

She shall be praised.] Shall live and die with honour. The body of honour is virtue, the soul of it humility. Whosoever rises without the one, or stands without the other, embraces but the shadow of a shadow; may be notable or notorious, cannot be truly noble.

{b} Seneca.

Ver. 31. Give her of the fruit of her hands.] God would have desert dignified, good parts praised. Here he seals up his approbation and good liking of what her husband and children had said of her in the former verses. He takes it well when we speak good of his people, and holds himself honoured in their just praises. Give her her full due, saith God, both within doors and without. Let her eat of the vineyard that she hath planted, live of the land that she hath purchased, enjoy the fruit of her own labours, have both the comfort and the credit of her worthy parts and practices, she being—as she here stands described—not unlike that precious stone among the Troglodytes which is therefore called hexacantalithos, because within its own little compass it hath the radiant colours of sixty other stones of price. {a}

Ecclesiastes

Ver. 1. The words.] Golden words, weighty, and worthy of all acceptance; grave and gracious apophthegms, or rather oracles, meet to be well remembered. Solomon's sapiential sermon of the sovereign good, and how to attain to it; Solomon's soliloquy, as some style it; others, his sacred retractations; others, his ethics, or tractate de summo bono, {a} of the chiefest good, compiled and composed with such a picked frame of words, with such pithy strength of sentences, with such a thick series of demonstrative arguments, that the sharp wit of all the philosophers, compared with this divine discourse, seems to be utterly cold, and of small account; their elaborate treatises of happiness to be learned dotages, and laborious loss of time. {b} How many different opinions there were among them concerning the chief good in Solomon's days is uncertain. Various of them he confuteth in this book, and that from his own experience, the best school dame. {c} But Varro, the most learned of the Romans, reckoneth up two hundred and eighty in his time; and no wonder, considering man's natural blindness, not unlike that of the Syrians at Dothan, or that of the Sodomites at Lot's door. {d} What is an eye without the optic spirit but a dead member? and what is all human wisdom without divine illumination but wickedness of folly, yea, foolishness of madness? as our preacher, not without good cause, calleth it. "A spirit there is in man," saith Elihu—viz., the light of reason; and thus far the animal man goes, and there he makes a halt; {#Ec 7:15} he cannot transcend his orb—but "the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding." {#Job 32:8} God had given Solomon wisdom above any man; Abulensis saith above Adam in his innocence, which I believe not. He was παιδαριουργῶν—as Macarius was called—a man at twelve years old. {e} His father, had taught him; {#Pr 4:3,4} his mother had lessoned him; {#Pr 31:1} the prophet Nathan had had the breeding of him. But besides, as he was Jedidiah, loved of God, so he was θεοδιδάκτος, taught of God. And being now, when he penned this penitential sermon, grown an old man, he had experimented all this that he here affirmeth; so that he might better begin his speech to his scholars than once Augustus Caesar did to his soldiers, Audite senem iuvenes, quem iuvenem senes audierunt, Young men, hearken to me, an old man, whom old men hearkened unto when I was yet but young. "Have not I written for you excellent things in counsel and knowledge?" {#Pr 22:20} Or, have I not written three books for thee—so some read those words—proverbial, penitential, nuptial? See the note there.

Quem fugias, ideoque fugis.”—Ovid. Metam.

Surely, "if thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that speaketh unto thee," {#Joh 4:10} thou wouldst "incline thine ear and hear," {#Isa 55:3} thou wouldst listen as for life itself. Knowest thou not that I am a preacher, a prince, son of David, king in Jerusalem, and so do come multis nominibus tibi commendatissimus, much commended to thee in many respects? But "need I, as some others, epistles of commendation" {#2Co 3:1} to my readers, or letters of commendation from them? Is it not sufficient to know that this book of mine, both for matter and words, is the very work of the Holy Ghost speaking in me, and writing by me? {f} For "prophecy comes not by the will of man, but holy men of God speak it as they are moved by the Holy Ghost." {#2Pe 1:21} And albeit this be proof good enough of my true, though late, repentance, whereof some have doubted, some denied it. {g} Yet take another.

Of the Preacher.] Or, Of a preaching soul (for the Hebrew word koheleth, is of the feminine gender, and hath nephesh, soul, understood), or of a person reunited and reconciled to the church, {h} and in token of reconciliation to God, readmitted by him to this office in his Church; like as Christ sealed up his love to Peter, after his shameful fall, by bidding him "feed his lambs"; and to the rest of the apostles that had basely forsaken him, by saying to them, after his resurrection, "Peace be unto you: as my Father hath sent me, even so send I you. Receive ye the Holy Ghost." {#Joh 20:21,22} See the like mercy showed to St Paul. {#1Ti 1:12} Howbeit, some learned men here observe, that it is no new thing in the Hebrew tongue to put feminine names upon men, as Ezra is called Sophereth, descriptrix, a she scribe, in the very same form as Solomon is here called Koheleth, a preacheress; and the gospel preachers, Mebaseroth, {#Ps 68:11} Isa 52:7; either to set forth the excellence and elegance of the business, or else to teach ministers to keep themselves pure as virgins; whence they are also called Wisdom's maids; {#Pr 9:3} and Christ's paronyms; {#Joh 3:29} to "present the church as a chaste virgin to Christ." {#2Co 11:2}

The son of David.] So Christ also is said to be, {#Mt 1:1} as if David had been his immediate father. "The glory of children are their fathers," {#Pr 17:6} to wit, if they be godly and pious. The Jews made great boasts that they were "the seed of Abraham"; {#Mt 3:9 Joh 8:33} and that wretch, Elymas the sorcerer, had surnamed himself Barjesus, {#Ac 13:6} or the son of Jesus, as if he had been of nearest alliance to our Saviour, of whom "the whole family of heaven and earth is named." {#Eph 3:15} What an honour is it now accounted to be of the posterity of Latimer, Bradford, Ridley, &c.! How much more of David, that man of renown, the father of our princely Preacher, who himself took also not scorn to teach and do the office of a preacher, {#Ps 32:9 34:11} though he were the governor of God's people, {#Ps 78:71} and head of many heathen! {#Ps 18:43} The like may be said of Joseph of Arimathea, who of a counsellor of state became a Preacher of the gospel. So did Chrysostom, a noble Antiochian; Ambrose, lieutenant and consul of Milan; George, prince of Anhalt; Earl Martinengus; John a Lasco, a noble Polonian; and various others of like quality and condition. The Psalmist {#Ps 138:4,5 119:72} shows by prophesying, that they that have tasted the joys of a crown shall leave the throne and palace to sing with the saints, and to publish the excelling glory of God and godliness.

King in Jerusalem.] And of Jerusalem. The Pope will allow the Duke of Milan to be king in Tuscany, but not King of Tuscany: {i} Solomon was both {#Pr 1:1} {See Trapp on "Pr 1:1"} Hither came the Queen of Sheba from the utmost parts of the earth to hear him: here he wrote his excellent book, these "words of delight," which he had learned from that one Shepherd, the Lord Christ, {#Ec 12:10,11} and hath left them faithfully set down for the use of the Church; so honouring learning with his own labours, -as Sylverius said of Caesar. Here, lastly, it was that he sovereigned over God's own peculiar, the people of his purchase, Israel, God's firstborn, and in that respect "higher than the kings of the earth." {#Ps 89:27} So that if Maximilian, the Emperor of Germany, could say, Rex hominum Hispanus, asinorum Gallus, regum ego {j} the Spaniard is king of men, the French is king of asses, and I am King of kings; how much better might Solomon have said so!

Ver. 2. Vanity of vanities.] Or, Most vain vanity: therefore, no happiness here to be had but in the reverential fear of God, {#Ec 12:13} and this is the sum of the whole sermon, the result of the discourse, the impartial verdict brought in by one that could best tell; and he tells it over and over, that men might the sooner believe him, without putting themselves to the fruitless pains of trying any further conclusions. Sin hath hurled confusion over the world, and brought a vanity on the creature. This our first parents found, and therefore named their second son Abel, or vanity. David comes after and confirms it, {#Ps 144:4} "Adam is as Abel," {a} or, "Man is like to vanity." There is an allusion in the original to their two names: yea, all-Adam is all-Abel, {b} when he is best underlaid—so the Hebrew hath it {c} -"Every man at his best estate," when he is settled upon his best bottom, "is altogether vanity: surely, Selah." It is so, it is so; you may seal to it. {#Ps 39:5} But who, alas! hath believed our report? These outward things are so near to us, and so natural to us, that although we can say, nay swear, with the Preacher, "Vanity of vanities," a heap, a nest of vanities, -It is naught, it is naught, saith the buyer, yet, when gone apart, we close with them; albeit, we know they are naught and will come to naught. {#1Co 2:6} Neither will it ever be otherwise with us, till, with Fulgentius, we have found, after much trial, the vanity of all earthly triumph; {d} till, with Gilimer, King of Vandals, led in triumph by Belisarius, we cry out, as here, "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity"; {e} till, with Charles V,

Emperor of Germany (whom of all men the world judged most happy), we cry out with detestation to all our honours, pleasures, trophies, riches, {f} Abite hinc, abite longe, Get you hence, let me hear no more of you.

Ver. 3. What profit hath a man?] What durable profit? Quid residui? what excess? what more than will serve to satisfy back and belly? Our life is called, "the life of our hands," {#Isa 57:10} because it is maintained by the labour of our hands. Si ventri bene, si lateri, as he in Horace saith, If the belly may be filled, the back fitted, that's all that can here be had, and that most men care to have; which if they have (some have but prisoners' pittance, so much as will keep life and soul together), yet quid amplius? as the Vulgate renders this text, what have they more to pay them for their pains? Surely, when all the account is subducted, such a labouring man's happiness resolved into its final issue and conclusion, there resteth nothing but ciphers. This should make us more moderate in our desires and endeavours after earthly things, since we do but "labour in the very fire, and weary ourselves for very vanity." {#Heb 2:13} They that seek after the philosopher's stone, they must use so much gold, and spend so much gold, and then they can turn as much into gold by it as they have spent in making of it; and so they have their labour for their pains. Quid emolumentum? What profit hath a man? Do we not see many take a great deal of pains to go to hell? whereinto at length they are turned as a sumpter horse is at night, after all his hard travail, with his back full of galls and bruises.

Ver. 4. One generation passeth away, &c.] Therefore, no happiness here, because no assurance of life or long continuance:—

“*Omnia sunt hominum tenui pendentia filo:
Et subito casu, quae valere ruunt.*”

Xerxes, looking upon his huge army, wept to think that, within less than a hundred years, not one of those many should be left alive. Mortality is the stage of mutability; mere man is but the dream of a dream, but the generation of a fancy, but an empty vanity, but the curious picture of nothing, a poor feeble, unable, dying flash. How then can he here work out unto himself a happiness worth having? Why should he lay up and "load himself with thick clay," {#Hab 2:6} as if his life were riveted upon eternity?

But the earth endureth for ever.] As a stage, whereon the several generations act their parts and go off; as the centre of the world and seat of living creatures, it stands firm and unmovable. That was an odd conceit of Plato's that the earth was a kind of living creature, having stones for bones, rivers for veins, trees for hairs, &c. And that was worse of Aristotle, teaching the world's eternity; which some smatterers in philosophy fondly strive to maintain out of this text, not rightly understanding the force of the Hebrew phrase for ever, which ofttimes, and here, signifies a periodical perpetuity, a long indefinite time, not an infinite. {see #2Pe 1:3,10} The whole engine shall be changed. By ever then is meant, till the end of all things.

Ver. 5. The sun also ariseth.] That sweet and swift creature (the Persians deified it); so sweet that Eudoxus professed himself willing to be burnt up by the sun presently, so he might be admitted to come so near it as to learn the nature of it; {a} so swift that the Persians dedicated a horse to their god the sun, as the swiftest on earth to the swiftest in heaven. {b} He courseth about the world with incredible speed, and "rejoiceth as a giant to run a race." {#Ps 19:5} He exceedeth the eagle's flight more than it goes beyond the slow motion of a snail. Whether it run nearer the earth now by 9976 German miles than it did in Ptolemy's days, as some mathematicians affirm, I know not; but that, being of a fiery nature, it should, contrary to the nature of fire (which is to fly upward), send down its beams, its heat, light, and influence, this I admire, with Chrysostom, {c} as a gracious work of God, in making this great servant of the world—as his name in Hebrew {d} signifies—so sweetly serviceable.

And hasteth to the place.] Heb., Panteth, as if tired, and even breathless, A figurative speech, like that in #Da 9:21, where the angel Gabriel is said to "fly swiftly," or with weariness of flight, to inform Daniel. For use hereof, hear the poet:—

“The sun doth set and rise,
But we contrariwise,
Sleep after one short light,
An everlasting night.” {e}

Ver. 6. The wind goeth toward the south, &c.] It is a little very small thing at first, a vapour rising out of the earth; but, by circuiting and whirling about, it gathers strength—now rushing toward the south, and anon toward the north, &c.; the original is very lively in expressing the manner of it. Una Eurusque Notusque ruunt, &c. {a} The restlessness of these insensible creatures, and diligence in doing their duties, as it taxeth our dulness and disaffection, so it reminds us of the instability of our states, and that we should seek and set up our rest in God alone. All earthly things are to the soul but as the air to the stone, -can give it no stay till it come to God the centre.

{a} Virg., Aeneid.

Ver. 7. All the rivers run into the sea.] And the nearer they come to the sea, the sooner they are met by the tide; sent out, as it were, to take their tribute due to the sea, that seat and source of waters. Surely as the rivers lead a man to the sea, so do all these creatures carry him to God by their circular motion. A circle, we say, is the most perfect figure, because it begins and ends; the points do meet together; the last point meets in the first from whence it came; so shall we never come to perfection or satisfaction till our souls come to God, till he make the circle meet. A wise philosopher could say, that man is the end of all things in a semicircle; that is, all things in the world are made for him, and he is made for God, to whom he must therefore hasten.

Unto the place from whence the rivers come.] Sc., From the sea, through the pores and passages of the earth, where they leave their saltness. This is Solomon's opinion, as it was likewise the opinion of the ancient philosophers, which yet Aristotle finds fault with, and assigns another cause of the perennity of rivers, of their beginning and origin—viz., that the air thickened in the earth by reason of cold, doth resolve and turn into water, &c. {a} This agrees not with that which Solomon here saith by the instinct of the Holy Ghost. And therefore Averroes is by no means to be hearkened unto in that excessive commendation he gives Aristotle—viz., that there was no error in his writings, that his doctrine was the chiefest truths, and that his understanding was the utmost that was by any one attainable; himself the rule and pattern that Nature invented to show her most perfect skill, &c. {b}

Ver. 8. All things are full of labour.] Labor est etiam ipsa voluptas. Molestation and misery meet us at every turn. The whole world is a "sea of glass" (for its vanity), "mingled with fire" (for its vexation), - {#Re 4:6} Vota etiam post usum, fastidio sunt: All things are sweeter in the ambition than in the fruition. There is a singular vanity in this splendid misery. One well compares it to a beautiful picture, drawn with white and red colours in sackcloth, which afar off is very lovely, but near by it is like the filthy matter of a sore or wound, purulent rottenness, or the back of a galled horse. No man ever yet found any constant contentation in any state; {a} yet may his outward appearance deceive others, and another's him.

Man cannot utter it.] If Solomon cannot, no man can; for "what can the man do that cometh after the king?" {#Ec 2:12}

The eye is not satisfied with seeing.] Though these be the two 'learned senses,' as Aristotle calls them, whereby learning is let into the soul, yet no man knows so much but he would know more. Herillus, therefore, and those other philosophers that placed the happiness of a man in the knowledge of natural causes and events, were not in the right. There is a curse of dissatisfaction which lies upon the creature. The soul, that acts in and by the outward senses, flickers up and down, as Noah's dove did, but finds no firm footing; sharks and shifts from one thing to another for contentment, as the bee doth from flower to flower for honey, and desires still more things in number, and new things for manner. Hence the particles in the Hebrew that signify and and or, come of a word that signifieth to desire, {b} because the desires of man would have this and that, and that and another; and doth also tire itself, not knowing whether to have this or that or that or the other, so restless it is, after utmost endeavours of plenary satisfaction, which this life affords not.

Ver. 9. The thing that hath been, it is that which shall be.] History, therefore, must needs be of noble and necessary use; because, by setting before us what hath been, it predicts what will be again, since the self same fable is acted over again in the world, the persons only are altered that act it. Plato {a} will therefore have history to have its name, παρα το στανα του ρουν of stopping the flux of endless errors and restless uncertainties. {b} His conceit of a general revolution of all things, after thirty thousand years expired, is worthily exploded and learnedly confuted by Augustine (De Civ. Dei, lib. xii. cap. 13), but in no wise confirmed by this text, as some would have it, and Origen among the rest. Plato might haply hint at the general resurrection, called the "regeneration," by our Saviour.

Ver. 10. Is there anything whereof it may be said, See, this is new?] Hoc ego primus vidi, saith Zabarel. But how could he tell that? Many men have been so befooled. We look upon guns and printing as new inventions; the former found out by Birchtoldin the monk, A.D. 1380, the other by friar Faustus, A.D. 1446. But the Chinese are said to have had the use of both these long before. Should we then so eagerly hunt after novelties, those mere new nothings, till we lose ourselves in the chase? Nil admirari prope res

Yea, get this natural itch after novelties killed by the practice of mortification, and get into Christ, that thou mayest be a new creature. So shalt thou have a new name upon thee; {#Isa 62:2} a new spirit within thee; {#Eze 36:27} new alliance; {#Eph 2:14} new attendants; {#Ps 91:11} new wages, new work; {#Isa 62:11} a new commandment; {#IJo 2:8} a new covenant; {#Jer 31:33} a new way to heaven; {#Heb 10:20} and a new mansion in heaven. {#Joh 14:2 2Co 5:8}

Ver. 11. There is no remembrance of former things.] None to speak of. How many memorable matters were never recorded! How many ancient records long since perished! How many fragments of very good authors are come bleeding to our hands, that live, as many of our castles do, but only by their ruins! God hath by a miracle preserved the Holy Bible from the injury of times and tyrants, who have sought to abolish it. There we have a true remembrance of former things done in the Church by Abraham and his offspring, when the grandees of the earth, Ninus, Belus, &c., lie wrapt up in the sheet of shame, or buried in the grave of utter oblivion. Diodorus Siculus confesseth that all heathen antiquities, before the Theban and Trojan wars, are either fabulous relations or little better. Ezra—that wrote one of the last in the Old Testament—lived before any chronicles of the world now extant in the world.

Neither shall there be any remembrance.] Unless transmitted to posterity by books and writings, which may preserve and keep alive their memory, and testify for their authors that such have one day lived.

Ver. 12. I, the Preacher, was king over Israel.] And so had all the helps that heart could wish, the benefit of the best books and records that men or money could bring me in, the happiness of holy conference, beside mine own plentiful experience, and therefore you may well give credit to my verdict. Mr. Foxe had a large commission under the great seal to search for all such monuments, manuscripts, registers, ledger books, as might make for his purpose in setting forth that worthy work, the 'Acts and Monuments of the Church of England.' And the like had Polydor Virgil for the framing of his history, though with unlike success; for he had the ill hap to write nothing well, saith one, {a} save the life of Henry VII, wherein he had reason to take a little more pains than ordinary, the book being dedicated to Henry VIII, his son. {See Trapp on "Ec 1:1"}

Ver. 13. And I gave my heart to seek and search out by wisdom.] God had given Solomon a large heart, and great store of wisdom; and this made him not more idle, but more industrious, more sedulous and serious in seeking and...

Searching out by wisdom,] i.e., By the best skill that he had, maturely and methodically, the causes, properties, and effects, with the reason of all things that are, and are done under heaven. Neither did he this in pride and curiosity (as Hugo de Sancto Victore here sharply censureth him), but soberly and modestly, setting down his disquisitions and observations of things political and natural for the use of posterity. And forasmuch as these {a} are now lost—because haply too much admired and trusted to, by those that had the use of them under the first temple, in and with the which some Jews say they were burnt—what a high price we all set upon this and the other two books of Solomon, the wisest of men, as, not Apollo, but the true God of heaven hath called him, and commended him unto us! Surely, as in the Revelation, heaven never opened but some great mystery was revealed, some divine oracle uttered; so we may be confident that the Holy Ghost never sets any penman of Scripture a work but for excellent purpose. And if we disregard it, he will complain of us as once, -"I have written for them the great things of nay law, but they were counted as a strange thing." {#Ho 8:12} As for those other worthy works of Solomon (the fruits of this privy search into the natures of the creatures here mentioned), that the injury of time bereft us of, how much better may we say of them, than a godly and learned man {b} once did of Origen's Octapla, Huius operis

To speak truth, it is not a work but a treasury; nay, a world of things most worthy to be known of all men.

And behold all is vanity and vexation of spirit.] Nothing in themselves, and yet of sufficient activity to inflict vengeance and vexation upon the spirit of a man; so far are they from making him truly happy. They do but "feed the soul with wind," as the text may be rendered. Wind gotten into the veins is a sore "vexation."

Ver. 15. That which is crooked cannot be made straight.] Most men are so wedded and wedged to their wicked ways, that they cannot be rectified but by an extraordinary touch from the hand of Heaven. Hesiod, speaking of God, saith that he can easily set crooked things straight, and only he. {a} Holy Melanchthon, being himself newly converted, thought it impossible for his hearers to withstand the evidence of the gospel; but after he had been a preacher a while, he complained, that 'old Adam was too hard for young Melanchthon'; and yet, besides the singular skill and learning that God had given him—for the which he merited to be called the phoenix of Germany—Ad eum modum in hoc vitae theatro versatum Philippum Melanchthonem apparet, saith a friend and scholar of his—i.e., It well appeareth that Melanchthon was, Solomon-like, on this wise busied upon the theatre of his life, that, seeing and observing all he could, he made profit of everything, and stored his heart, as the bee doth her hive, out of all sorts of flowers, for the common benefit. Howbeit, he met with much crossness and crookedness that wrung mahy tears from him, as it did likewise from St Paul, {#Php 3:18} not in open enemies only, as Eccius and other Papists, but in professed friends, as Flaccius, Osiander, &c., who not only vexed him grievously while alive, but also fell foul upon him when he was dead, {b} as Zanchins complaineth. {c} Of all fowl, we most hate and detest the crows, and of all beasts the jackals, a kind of foxes in Barbary; because the one digs up the graves and devours the flesh, the other picks out the eyes of the dead. But to return to the text: sinful men grow aged and crooked with good opinions of themselves, and can seldom or never be set straight again. The Pharisee sets up his counter for a thousand pound, -"I am not as other men," saith he, "nor as this publican"; he stands upon his comparisons, nay, upon his disparisons, and although he turn aside unto his crooked ways, as Samson did to his Delilah, yet he thinks much to be "led forth with the workers of iniquity," but cries, "peace shall be upon Israel." {#Ps 125:5} How many are there that, having "laden themselves with thick clay," {#Hab 2:6} are bowed together, as he in the gospel was, {#Lu 13:11} and can in nowise lift up themselves! They neither can nor will (O curvae in terras animae, &c.), but are frample and foolish.

The Greek word for crooked, {d} comes of a Hebrew word that signifies a fool, {e} and every fool is conceited; he will not part with his bauble for the Tower of London. Try to straighten these crooked pieces, and they will sooner break than bend, venture all, than mend anything. Plato went thrice to Sicily to convert Dionysius, and could not do it. A wiser than Plato complains of a "perverse and crooked generation." {#De 32:5 Ac 2:40 Php 2:15} It is the work of God's Spirit only, by his corrective and directive power, to set all to rights. {#Lu 3:5} Philosophy can abscondere vitia, non abscindere, - chain up corrupt nature, but not change it.

And that which is wanting cannot be numbered.] Et stultorum infinitus est numerus, so the Vulgate renders it; 'there is a numberless number of fools,' such as are wanting with a witness; witless, sapless fellows, such as have principium laesum, their brains cracked by the first fall, and are not cured of their spiritual frenzy by being reunited to the second Adam. Of such fools there are not a few; all places are full of them, and so is hell too; the earth is burdened, the air darkened, with the number of them, as the land of Egypt was with the flies that there swarmed. Bias the philosopher could say, that the 'most were the worst'; {f} and Cicero, that there was a great nation of bad people, but a few good. {g} Rari quippe boni, saith Juvenal, There is a great paucity of good people. And those few that are, find not a few wants and weaknesses in themselves, quae tamen non nocent, si non placent, these hurt us not, if they please us not; for God considers whereof we are made, and will cast out condemnation for ever, as one renders that place, #Mt 12:10: Triste mortalitatis privilegium est, licere aliquando peccare. {h} Our lives are fuller of sins than the firmament is of stars, or the furnace of sparks. Nimis augusta res est nusquam errare. {i} David saw such volumes of infirmities, and so many errata in all that he did, that he cries out, "Who can understand his errors? Oh, cleanse thou me from secret sins." {#Ps 19:12}

Ver. 16. I communed with mine own heart, saying, &c.] Here Hugo de Sancto Victore proceeds to censure Solomon (as he had done before, #Ec 1:13) {See Trapp on "Ec 1:13"} of pride and vain-glory, but with greater pride. For puerilis iactantiae est accusando illustres viros suo nomini famam quaerere. {a} It is a childish vanity to seek for fame by aspersing better men. Solomon might, without boasting, say of himself, as here he doth, Lo, I am come to great estate, or, I have greatened and added wisdom above all that have been before me. Doth not God say as much of him? {#1Ki 3:11-13 4:29-34 5:7 10:4-9} And had he not good reason to praise himself in this sort? For, whereas some might here object that the cause that men get not happiness by the knowledge of natural philosophy is, because they understand it not. That cannot be, saith the wise man, for I have out-gone all that went before me in wisdom and perspicacity, and yet I can do no good on it; try you another while if you think you can outdo me. I think a man may break his neck before his fast of these sublunary felicities.

Ver. 17. And to know madness and folly.] That by comparing of contraries, I might the sooner find and fish out what I sought for. Sed frustra fui, but I disquieted myself in vain. Philosophandum igitur; sed paucis; there is a deceit in philosophy, {#Col 2:8} and he who chooseth to hold fast this "lying vanity," doth by his own election "forsake his own mercy." {#Jon 2:8}

Ver. 18. For in much wisdom is much grief.] And herein children and fools have the advantage; as they want wit, so they want woe; as little is given to them, so little is required of them. Nihil scire vita iucundissima, To know nothing is the bravest life, as the Greek proverb hath it. {a} But this must be taken with a grain of salt; and we must know, that heavenly wisdom hath infinite pleasure; and so far as all other arts and sciences are subservient to it, and regulated by it, they afford to the mind an incredible delight and sweetness.

Ver. 1. Go to now, I will prove thee with mirth.] The merry Greeks of the world think that they have the only life of it; that there is no such happiness as to 'laugh and be fat,' to 'sing care away,' and to lie carousing and melting in sinful pleasures; yea, though they perish therein, as the Duke of Clarence did in his butt of malmsey. {a} But a little time will confute these fools, saith Solomon, and let them see that it is better to be preserved in brine than to rot in honey. Flies and wasps use to come to honey and sugar, and such sweet things; so doth Beelzebub, the god of flies, to the hearts of epicures and voluptuaries. Behemoth haunteth the fens. {#Job 40:21} Here, therefore, this wise man was utterly out, and made an ill transition from the search of wisdom to the pursuit of pleasures; from the school of Socrates, to the herd of Epicurus. For though these hogs may grunt out their "Let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we shall die," yet, if death but draw the curtain, and look in upon them, all the mirth is marred, and they put into as great an agony as Belshazzar was at the sight of the handwriting that was against him.

{a} A strong sweet wine, originally the product of the neighbourhood of Monemvasia (Napoli di Malvasia) in the Morea; but now obtained from Spain, the Azores, and the islands of Madeira and the Canaries, as well as from Greece.

Ver. 2. I said of mirth, It is mad, / q.d., Thou mad fool, what dost thou? Yet is not mirth amiss, so it be moderate; nor laughter unlawful—as some Anabaptists in Calvin's time held—so that it be well limited. Carnal mirth, and abuse of lawful things, doth mightily weaken, intenerate, and emasculate the spirit; yea, it draws out the very vigour and vivacity of it, and is therefore to be avoided. Some are so afraid of sadness that they banish all seriousness; they affect mirth as the eel doth mud, or the toad ditches. These are those that dance to the timbrel and harp, but suddenly turn into hell. {#Job 21:12,13}

Ver. 3. Yet acquainting my heart with wisdom, / i.e., Resolving to retain my wisdom; but that could not be, "For whoredom, and wine, and new wine take away the heart"; {#Ho 4:11} they dull and disable nature, and so set us in a greater distance from grace; they "fight against the soul," {#1Pe 2:11} and take away all scent and sense of heavenly comforts: much like that parcel of ground in Sicily, that sendeth such a strong smell of fragrant flowers to all the fields thereabouts, that no hound can hunt there. {a} And here I believe began Solomon's apostasy, his laying the reins on the neck to pursue sinful pleasures, pleasing himself in a conceit that he could serve God and his lusts too. A Christian hath ever God for his chief end, and never sins with deliberation about this end; he will not forego God upon any terms; only he errs in the way, thinking he may fulfil such a lust, and keep God too. But God and sin cannot cohabit; and God's graces groaning under our abuses in this kind cry unto him for help, who gives them thereupon, as he did to the wronged Church, {#Re 12:14} the wings of an eagle: after which, one lust calls upon another, as they once did upon their fellow soldiers, "Now Moab to the spoil," till the heart be filled with as many corruptions as Solomon had concubines.

{a} Arist., De Mirab. Auscul., lib. viii.

Ver. 4. I made me great works.] I took not pleasure in trifles, as Domitian did, in catching and killing flies with his penknife; or as Artaxerxes did, in making hafts for knives; or as Solyman the great Turk did, in making notches of horn for bows; but I built stately houses, planted pleasant vineyards, &c. A godly man may be busied in mean, low things; but he is not satisfied in them as adequate objects: he trades for better commodities, and cannot rest without them.

I builded me houses.] Curious and spacious, such as is the Turk's seraglio or palace, said to be more than two miles in compass. William Rufus built Westminster hall, and when it was done, found much fault with it for being built too little, saying, It was fitter for a chamber than for a hall for a king of England, and took a plot of land for one far more spacious to be added unto it. {a}

I planted me vineyards.] That no pleasant thing might be wanting to me. To plant a vineyard is a matter of much cost and care; but it soon quits cost by bearing (1.) Plenty of fruit in clusters and bunches, many grapes together; (2.) By bearing pleasant fruit, no fruit being more delectable to the taste than is the grape, nor more comfortable to the heart than is the wine made of the grape. {#Jud 9:13} Solomon had one gallant vineyard at Baalhamon that yielded him great profit. {#So 8:1}

{a} Daniel's History.

Ver. 5. I made me gardens.] So called, because guarded and enclosed with a wall, {#So 4:12} like as we call garments quasi guardments, in an active acception of the word, because they guard our bodies from the injury of wind and weather. The Hebrew word גן, Gan, comes likewise from a word that signifieth to protect or guard; and there are those who give this for a reason why the Lord forbade the Jews to keep swine, because they are such enemies to gardens, whereof that country is very full.

And orchards.] Heb., Paradises; famous for curious variety and excellence of all sorts of trees and foreign fruits, resembling even the garden of God for amenity and delight. And herein perhaps he gratified Pharaoh's daughter—the Egyptians took great pleasure in gardens—like as that king of Assyria did his wife horto pensili, with a garden that hung in the air, to his incredible cost. {a}

Ver. 6. To water therewith the wood,] i.e., The gardens or hort yards, that were as large as little woods. Christ's garden in the Canticles, as it hath a wall, {#So 4:15} so a well to water it, and make it fruitful.

Ver. 7. I got me servants, &c.] Too many by one, viz., Jeroboam, who rent ten tribes from his son. It is well observed by an interpreter, that Solomon, among all his delights, got him not a fool or jester, which some princes cannot be without, no, not when they should be most serious. It is recorded of Henry III, king of France, that in a solemn procession at Paris, he could not be without his jester, who, walking between the king and the cardinal, made mirth to them both. {a} There was sweet devotion the while.

I had great possessions of great and small cattle.] Μηλα, {b} pecudes, et postea synechdochicos, opes significant: sic pecunia a pecude. So chesita signifies in Hebrew both money and a lamb.

{b} Melanch., in Hesiod.

Ver. 8. I gathered me also silver and gold.] Gold of Ophir, now called Peru, where the Spaniards are said to meet with more gold ore than earth; besides his great gifts from other princes, as Hiram, the queen of Sheba, &c., his royal revenue, his tributes from foreign nations subdued by his father David, to a very great value. Sextus IV was wont to say, that a pope could never want money while he could hold a pen in his hand. His predecessor, John XXII, left in his treasury to his heirs two hundred and fifty tons of gold. {a} Boniface VIII being plundered by the French, was found to have more wealth, saith mine author, {b} than all the kings of the earth could have raised by one year's revenue. It should seem, by the people's complaint after Solomon's death, {#IKi 12:4} that he lay over heavy upon them by his exactors and gold gatherers, which caused the revolt of the ten tribes. One act of injustice oft loseth much that was justly gotten. Chedorlaomer and his fellow kings were deprived of the whole victory, because they spared not a man whom they should have spared. Ill-gotten gold hath a poisonous operation, and will bring up the good food, together with ill humours. {#Job 20:15}

And the delights of the sons of men.] These drew out his spirits and dissolved him, and brought him to so low an ebb in grace; his wealth did him far more hurt than his wisdom did him good. It is as hard to bear prosperity as to drink much wine and not be giddy. It is also dangerous to take pleasure in pleasure, to spend too much time in it; as Solomon, for seven years spent in building God's house, spent thirteen in his own. Lovers of pleasures, φιληδονοι, are set as last and worst in that catalogue of wickedness in the last days. {#2Ti 3:4}

{b} Heidfield.

Ver. 9. Also my wisdom remained with me.] Outward things are dead things, and cannot touch the soul, a lively spirit, unless by way of taint. Solomon, if not at first, yet at length, was fearfully tainted by them, making good that of the poet—

“Stultitiam patiuntur opes...

Ardua res haec est, opibus non tradere mores,
Et cum tot Croesos viceris, esse Numam.”

- Martial.

Ver. 10. And whatsoever mine eyes desired, &c.] I fed them with pleasant pictures, shows, sights, and other objects of delight, which yet have plus deceptionis quam delectationis, {a} able to entice and ready to kill the entangled. How many are there that have died of the wound in the eye; David, knowing the danger, prayeth, "Turn away mine eyes from beholding of vanity." {#Ps 119:37} Job steps one degree further, from a prayer to a vow, {#Job 31:1} yea, from a vow to an imprecation. {#Ec 2:7} If our first parents fell by following the sight of their eyes and lust of their hearts, what can Solomon or any of us promise of ourselves, qui animas etiam incarnavimus, who have made our very spirit a lump of flesh, prone to entertain vice, yea, to solicit it?

For my heart rejoiced in all my labour.] This is not every worldling's happiness. For some live not to enjoy what they have raked together, as that rich fool in the gospel; others live indeed, but live beside what they have gotten, as not daring to diminish ought, but defrauding their own genius, and denying themselves necessaries. So did not Solomon, and yet he found not the good he sought for either, as he tells us in the next words. Nor is it want of variety in these pleasures, but inward weakness, an emptiness and insufficiency in the creature. In heaven the objects of our delight and blessedness shall be, though uniform, yet everlastingly pleasing.

Ver. 11. Then I looked on all the works.] A necessary and profitable practice, well worthy our imitation—viz., to recognise and review what we have done, and to how little purpose we have "wearied ourselves in the multitude of our counsels." {#Isa 47:13} "God looketh upon men, and if any say, I have sinned and perverted that which was right, and it profited me not, he will deliver his soul from going into the pit, and his life shall see the light." {#Job 33:27,28} Cicero {a} could tell Nevius, that if he had but well weighed with himself those two words, Quid ago? What do I? his lust and luxury would have been cooled and qualified.

And behold, all was vanity and vexation of spirit] In the very pursuit of them is much anguish, many grievances, fears, jealousies, disgraces, interruptions, discontentments. Next, it is seldom seen that God allows to the greatest darlings of the world a perfect contentment. Something they must have to complain of, that shall give an unsavoury verdure to their sweetest morsels, and make their very felicity miserable. "Yet all this avails me nothing so long as I see Mordecai," saith Haman the king's minion. Lastly, after the unsanctified enjoyment follows the sting of conscience, that will inexpressibly vex and torture the soul throughout all eternity.

And there was no profit under the sun.] Nulla emolumenta laborum, nothing but labour for travail, no contentation but desperation, no satisfaction but endless vexation; as children tire themselves to catch a butterfly, which when they have caught profits them nothing, only fouls their fingers. Or rather as the dropsical body, by striving to quench thirst by drinking, doth but increase the disease, and in the end destroy itself.

{a} Orat. pro Quintio.

Ver. 12. For what can the man do that cometh after the king?]—q.d., Who is it that can outdo me in this review and discovery? Neither is this a vainglorious vaunting of his own virtues, but an occupation or prevention of an objection: thus,

Objection. It may be thou hast not perfectly known the difference of things, and so hast not rightly determined.

Solution. To this he answers, that he hath to quit himself in searching and trying the truth in these points, that it is not for any other to go beyond him. And having removed this rub, having carried this dead Amasa out of the way, that might have hindered his hearers' march, he proceeds in his discourse.

Ver. 13. Then I saw that wisdom excelleth folly, / i.e., Philosophy and human wisdom, though it cannot perfect the mind, nor make a man happy, yet it is as far beyond sensuality and brutishness as light is beyond darkness. Those that seek for the philosopher's stone, though they miss their end, yet they find many excellent things by the way. So philosophers, politicians, moralists, though they missed the "pearl of price," yet they sought out other "goodly pearls" (with that wise merchant, #Mt 13:45), for the which they have their just praise and profit:

Ver. 14. The wise man's eyes are in his head.] He judiciously pondereth things past, and prudently ordereth things present, and providently foreseeeth to prevent dangers likely to ensue. ^{a} The Chinese use to say of themselves, that all other nations of the world see but with one eye, they only with two. ^{b} Italians tell us, that, whereas Spaniards seem wise and are fools, Frenchmen seem fools and are wise, Portuguese neither are wise nor so much as seem to be so, they themselves both seem wise, and are so. ^{c} This I could sooner believe if from a better mouth than their own. Romani, sicut non acumina, ita non imposturas habent, saith Bellarmine; The Romans (those wittiest of the Italians) are neither very subtle nor very simple.

But the fool walketh in darkness.] He hath neither sight nor light, but is acted and agitated by the prince of darkness, who holds his black hand before the eye of such men's minds and blinds their understandings—dealing with them as Pliny saith the eagle deals with the hart; she lights upon his horns, and there flutters up and down, filling his eyes with dust borne in her feathers, that at last he may cast himself from a rock, and so be made a prey unto her.

One event happeneth to them all.] As did to Josiah and Ahab in the manner of both their dying in battle. They may be all wrapped up together in a common calamity, and sapientes sapienter in gehennam descendant, {a} the world's great wise men go very wisely down to hell; there, for want of saving grace, fools and wiser men meet at one and the same inn, though by several ways, at one and the same haven, though from several coasts.

Ver 15. As it happeneth to the fool, so it happeneth.] It is with men as with counters, though in the account one stand for a penny, another for a pound, yet in the bag there is no difference; so here in the event all our wisdom is soon refuted with one black Theta, which understanding us not, snappeth us unrespectively without distinction, and putteth at once a period to our reading and to our being.

And why was I then more wise?] This is a piece of peevishness, a childish folly we are all prone to—viz., to repent us of our best pains if not presently paid for it; so short spirited are we, that unless we may sow and reap all in a day, unless all things may go with us as well as we could wish, we repent us of our repentance with David, {#Psa 73:13} hit God in the teeth with our obedience, as those hypocrites in #Isa 58:2,3, and as that elder brother in the parable, that told his father he had never been worth a kid to him for all his good service. But, what! is God like to break or to die in our debts that we are so hasty with him? This was good Baruch's fault, and he is soundly chidden for it. {#Jer 45:1-5 36:32} Good men oft find it more easy to bear evil than to wait till the promised good be enjoyed. It was so with those Christian Hebrews, {#Heb 10:34,36} whom therefore the apostle there tells they had need of patience, υπομονη, or tarrance, to tarry God's time. It needs not repent the wise of this world, much less the children of light, of any good they have done or gotten, however it prove with them, since some degree of comfort follows every good action, as heat accompanies fire, as beams and influences issue from the sun. And this is so true, that very heathens, upon the discharge of a good conscience, have found comfort and peace answerable.

Ver. 16. For there is no remembrance of the wise.] viz., Unless he be also wise to salvation, for then he shall be had in everlasting remembrance. Or otherwise, either he shall be utterly forgotten, as being not written among the living in Jerusalem, {#Isa 4:3} or else he shall not have the happiness to be forgotten in the city where he had so done; {#Ec 8:10} I mean, where he had been either a dogmatic, or at least a practical atheist, as the very best of the philosophers were, {#Ro 1:18-31 1Co 1:17-31} the choicest and the most picked men among them. {#1Co 3:21}

And how dieth the wise man? as the fool.] {See Trapp on "Ec 2:14"} {See Trapp on "Ec 2:15"} Wise men die as well as fools, {#Ps 49:10} good men die as well as bad, {#Eze 21:4} yet with this difference, that "the righteous hath hope in his death," which to him is neither total, but of the body only; nor perpetual, but for a time only, till the day of refreshing. See both these, #Ro 8:10,11.

Ver. 17. Therefore I hated life,] i.e., I less loved it than I had done; I saw mortality to be a mercy, with Cato; I was neither fond of life, nor afraid of death, with Queen Elizabeth. I preferred my coffin before my cradle, my burial day before my birthday {a} {#Ec 7:1} A greater than Solomon threatens those that love life with the loss of life, {#Lu 17:33} and hath purposely set a particular vanity and vexation upon every day of our life, that we may not dote upon it, since "we die daily." "Sufficient to the day is the evil (that is, the misery) thereof." Quicquid boni est in mundo, saith Augustine; what good thing soever we have here, is either past, present, or to come. If past, it is nothing; if to come, it is uncertain; if present, yet it is insufficient, unsatisfactory. So that, while I call to mind things past, said that incomparable Queen Elizabeth, behold things present, and expect things to come, I hold them happiest that go hence soonest, {b}

Ver. 18. Yea, I hated all my labour, / i.e., I was sorry to think that I had been so eager and earnest in getting a great estate, which now I must leave, and to whom I know not; sure I am to those that never took any pains for it. And herein we see the corruption of our nature discover itself, in that we are so wedded to the things of this world—especially if gotten by our own art and industry—that we think much to be divorced from them by death, and to leave them to others, when ourselves can enjoy them no longer. Henry Beaufort, that rich and wretched cardinal, bishop of Winchester, and chancellor of England, in the reign of Henry VI, when he perceived that he must die, and that there was no remedy, murmured at death, that his riches could not reprieve him till a further time. For he asked, ‘Why should I die, being so rich? If the whole realm would save my life, I am able either by policy to get it, or by riches to buy it. Fie, quoth he, will not death be hired? will money do nothing?’ {a}

Latimer, in a sermon before King Edward VI, tells a story of a rich man, that when he lay upon his sick bed, there came one to him and told him that certainly, by all reason they can judge by, he was like to be a man for another world, a dead man. As soon as ever he hears but these words, saith Latimer; What! must I die? said he. Send for a physician; wounds, sides, heart, must I die? wounds, sides, heart, must I die? and thus he goes on, and there could be nothing got from him, but Wounds, sides, heart, must I die? Must I die and go from these? Here was all, here is the end of a man that made his portion to be in this world. If this man’s heart had been ripped up after he was dead, there might have been found written in it, ‘The god of this present world.’

Mr Jeremy Burroughs relates in print {b} of another rich man, that had sometime lived near unto him, who, when he heard his sickness was deadly, sent for his bags of money, and hugged them in his arms, saying, Oh! must I leave you? Oh! must I leave you? And of another, who, when he lay upon his sick bed, called for his bags, and laid a bag of gold to his heart, and then bade them take it away, It will not do, it will not do.

Mr Rogers in his "Treatise of Love," tells of one that, being near death, clapped a twenty shillings piece of gold into his own mouth, saying, Some wiser than some, I will take this with me howsoever.

Ver. 19. And who knoweth whether he shall be a wise man.] A friend or an enemy, an acquaintance or a mere stranger; riches oft change masters. How many by a just hand of God die childless! or else leave what they have to spendthrifts, that will spend it as merrily as ever their parents got it miserably! scatter with a fork, as it were, what they have wretchedly raked together. Our Henry II, some few hours before he died, saw a list of their names who conspired with the King of France, and Earl Richard, his son and successor, against him; and finding therein his son John—whom he had made Earl of Cornwall, Somerset, Nottingham, Derby, and Lancaster, and given him a vast estate—to be the first, he fell into a grievous passion, both cursing his sons, and the day wherein himself was born and in that distemperature departed the world, which so often himself had distempered. {a}

Ver. 20. Therefore I went about to cause my heart, &c.,] i.e., I set myself to take off the edge of my affections from these outward comforts that are so uncertain, and so unsatisfactory, and to take another course for the attaining of true happiness. The Hebrew word {a} signifies, I set a compass, I turned round, or I turned short again upon myself, by a reflex action of my mind, as Ephraim did, {#Jer 31:19,20} as the prodigal did when he "came to himself," who before had been beside himself in the point of salvation, and as Solomon elsewhere prays, that the captive people may bethink themselves, or, as the Hebrew hath it, "bring back to their heart," {#1Ki 8:47} "return and discern between the righteous and the wicked." {#Mal 3:18} Thus David examined his ways, and finding all to be naught and stark naught—contrary to that of God, who, reviewing His works, found all good and very good—he bethought himself of a better course, he "turned his feet to God's testimonies." {#Ps 119:59} "Set not thy heart upon the asses," said the prophet to Saul, forasmuch as better things abide thee "the desire of all Israel is to thee."

Ver. 21. For there is a man whose labour is in wisdom.] This seemed to Solomon—whose own case it was like to be—so unworthy a thing, and such a vexation of spirit, that he can never say enough of it; but could find in his heart to cry out with the poet, Τρις κακοδαιμων και τετρακις και πεντακις και δωδεκακις και μυριακις, I am thrice miserable, nay, ten times, nay, a hundred, nay, a thousand times so, that am born to be a provident and a perfect drudge of an idle drone, or perhaps of a mere stranger.

This is also vanity and a great evil.] Not privation of good only, a nothing; but a position of evil, a sad thing; an inconvenience not to be avoided by the most circumspect prudence; for it is written, He taketh {a} the wise in their own craftiness. And again, The Lord knoweth the thoughts {b} of the wise, their inward disceptions, their debating the matter with themselves, that they are vain. {#1Co 3:19,20} The rich fool talked to himself, {c} as fools used to do, and set down how everything should be; {#Lu 12:17} but it proved somewhat otherwise ere he was a day older.

Ver. 22. For what hath a man of all his labour.] What makes he of it, everything reckoned? See #Ec 1:3. What takes he with him when he dies, more than a poor winding sheet? As that great Emperor of Egypt caused to be proclaimed at his funeral, that that shirt of his, there hanged up for the purpose, was all that he now had of all his labour and great achievements. Saladin the mighty monarch of the East is gone, and hath taken no more with him than what you see, said the bare priest that went before the bier. {a} {See Trapp on "1Ti 6:7"}

Ver. 23. For all his days are sorrows, &c.] All the days of the afflicted are evil, {#Pr 15:15} and every day hath a sufficient evil laid upon it by God. {#Mt 6:34} "Few and evil" were the days of Jacob's pilgrimage. {#Ge 47:9} God gave him not a draught only of the cup of affliction, but made him a diet drink. "Man is born to trouble," saith Eliphaz, {#Job 5:7} "as the sparks fly upward." Man and miserable are in a manner terms convertible. He that remembers that himself is a man, will not think much of any sorrow betides him, saith the heathen orator. {a} For,

“ Si nisi res cuius nulla est contraria votis
Vivere nemo potest, vivere nemo potest.”

Yea, his heart taketh no rest in the night.] As a clock can never stand still so long as the plummets hang thereat, so neither can a worldling's heart for cares and anxieties. These gnats will not suffer him to sleep; these flies of Egypt are continually stinging him, Nocte ac die non dabunt requiem, as those tyrants. {#Jer 16:13} Night and day he is disquieted with them; he lies upon a pillow stuffed with thorns. Not so the godly man; he contracts his cares into a narrow compass, communes with his own heart upon his bed, and having made all even with God, sleeps undisturbed. {#Ps 3:5 4:8} Jacob rests sweetly when his head lay upon a hard stone at Bethel. Ahasuerus cannot rest, though upon a bed of down, but calls for the chronicles. It was wisely done of Burleigh, Lord Treasurer, to put off his cares together with his clothes; when he laid by his gown he would commonly say, Lie there Lord Treasurer, and so quietly compose himself to take his sleep. {b} "In nothing be careful," saith the apostle, "but let the peace of God guard your hearts and minds in Christ Jesus." {#Php 4:6,7}

{b} Camden.

Ver. 24. There is nothing better for a man, &c.] This may seem to savour of epicurism, as may also some following passages of this book. For which cause some of the old Jewish doctors were once in a mind to hide this whole book out of the way, and not allow the common sort to see it any more. But this they needed never to have done, for the Preacher expressly calls carnal mirth "madness" in this very chapter, and shows that the happiness of a man stands in fearing God and keeping his commandments; {#Ec 12:13,14} all which is point blank against atheism and epicurism. And whereas here and elsewhere the liberal use of the creatures is commended and commanded; this is done in opposition to, and detestation of, such parsimonious penny fathers as deny themselves that necessary and honest affluence that God hath permitted and afforded them; living sordidly, that they may grow rich suddenly, although they know not how soon they may leave all, nor yet to whom.

This also I saw, that it was from the hand of God.] It is he that "fills our hearts, as with food, so with gladness." {#Ac 14:17} He can curse our blessings, make our table a snare, sauce that we eat, spice that we drink, with his fierce wrath, as he did the quails to those Israelites. He can dissweeten our delicacies either with sickness, {#Job 33:20} or sorrow, {#Ps 107:17,18} or sudden terror. {#ISA 30:16,17 1Ki 1:41} Adoniah's feast ended in horror; astonishment was served up for their last dish. Let God, therefore, be sought for a comfortable use of the creature, and then be merry at thy meat, and put sorrow from thy heart. {#Ec 9:7} "Eat the fat, and drink the sweet, &c., for the joy of the Lord is your strength." {#Ne 8:10}

Ver. 25. For who can eat, or who can hasten? &c.] And yet I have found—and so shall you—that tranquillity and true happiness, the kingdom of God, doth not consist in meats and drinks. A Turk may believe sensualities in his fool's paradise, but no servant of God is a slave to his palate.

Ver. 26. Wisdom and knowledge.] To get these things rightly, and to use them comfortably.

To gather and to heap up.] Converrere et congerrere, to rake and scrape together—the muckworm's occupation.

That he may give.] As he did the Egyptians' goods to Israel, Nabal's to David, Haman's to Mordecai.

Chapter 3

Ver. 1. To everything there is a season.] A set time, such as we can neither alter nor order. This is one of those keys that God carries under his own belt. {#Ac 1:7} To seek, to do, or get anything before the time, is to pull apples before they are ripe, saith a father, {a} which set the teeth on edge, and breed stomach worms. They labour in vain that would prevent the time prefixed by God, as those hasty Ephraimites in Egypt {#1Ch 7:22 Ps 78:9,10} those heady Israelites in the wilderness. {#Nu 14:40} Moses would be acting the judge before his time, {#Ex 2:12} he is therefore sent to keep sheep in Midian. {#Ex 2:15} David stayed God's leisure for the kingdom, those in Esther for deliverance—they knew that God would keep his day exactly, as he did with the Israelites in Egypt. "Even the self same day," when the "four hundred and thirty years" foretold were expired, God's people were thrust out of Egypt. {#Ex 12:40,41} So in #Da 5:30. In that night was Belshazzar slain; because then exactly the "seventy years" were ended. And as God fails not his own time, so he seldom comes at ours, {#Jer 8:20} for he loves not to be limited. We are short breasted, short sighted, apt to antedate the promises in regard of the accomplishment. {#Hab 2:2} And no less apt to outstand our own markets, to let slip opportunities of grace which are ever headlong, and once past, irrecoverable. "Oh, if thou hadst known at the least in this thy day," "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" {#Heb 2:3} "Therefore shall every one that is godly seek thee in a time when thou mayest be found." {#Ps 32:6} There is a certain time set for men to come in and be saved; as Alexander set up a taper when he besieged a town; as Tamerlane hung out first a white flag and then a red. Many a man loseth his soul, as Saul did his kingdom, by not discerning his time. Esau came too late; so did the foolish virgins. If the gale of grace be past over, the gate shut, the draw bridge taken up, there is no possibility of entrance. "Let us, therefore, fear lest a promise being left us," and an overture made us "of entering into God's rest, any of us should seem to fall short" ὑστερηκεναι, {#Heb 4:1} or come late, a day after the fair, an hour after the feast. God, who in his eternal counsel hath appointed things to be done, hath also ordained the opportunity and time wherein each thing should be done, which to neglect is such a presumption as he usually punisheth with final hardening. {#Eze 24:13}

{a} Poma importuni tempore decerpunt. -Tertul.

Ver. 2. There is a time to be born, and a time to die]. We do not hear the wise man say, There is a time to live. What is more fleeting than time? yet life is not long enough to be worthy the title of time. Death borders upon our birth, and our cradle stands in our grave. Orimur, morimur. we spring forth, we die.

“ Multos ostendunt terris bona faeta, nec ultra

Esse sinunt...Finisque ab origine pendet.”

How many have we seen carried from the womb to the tomb; {a} from the birth to the burial! And what a short cut hath the longest liver from the grave of the womb to the womb of the grave! Men chop into the earth before they are aware many times; like as he that walks in a field covered with snow falls suddenly into a clay pit.

A time to plant, &c.] In point of good husbandry fit seasons are to be observed, or else little increase can be expected. God also, the great vinedresser, plants and plucks up more churches or particular persons at his pleasure. {#Isa 5:1-8 Mt 15:13} Jerusalem, that plant of renown, is now of an Eden become a Sodom, and that which Moses threatened {#De 28:49-57} is fulfilled to the utmost. Susa in Persia signifies a lily, and was so called for the beauty and delectable sight; now it is called Valdac, of the poverty of the place. Nineveh, that great city, that once had more people within her walls than are now in some one kingdom, is at this day become a sepulture of itself, a little town of small trade, where the patriarch of the Nestorians keeps his seat at the devotion of the Turks.

Corruet, et mundi definet esse caput.” {b}

{a} Ab utero ab urnam.

{b} Frid. secund. Imper.

Ver. 3. A time to kill,] viz., To cut off corrupt members by the sword of justice or of war, ne pars sincera trahatur: There is a cruel mercy, saith one; There is a pious cruelty, saith another. "But cursed is he that doth the Lord's work negligently; and cursed is he that (in a good cause, and upon a good calling) keepeth back his sword from blood." {#Jer 48:10} But that soldier can never answer it before God, that striketh not more as a justice of peace than as a soldier of fortune.

A time to break down, and a time to build up.] This and the rest, though every one knows to be so in common experience, yet one and the same thing (in effect) is oft repeated, that it may be once remembered—viz., that this whole world is nothing else but a mass of mutabilities; that every man, every state, everything is a planet, whose spherical revolutions are some of longer, some of shorter continuance. Omnia versantur in perpetuo ascensu et descendu, there is a perpetual ascending and descending of life and state.

Ver. 4. A time to weep, and a time to laugh.] Only we must not invert the order, but weep with men that we may laugh with angels; lay godly sorrow as a foundation of spiritual joy. Surely out of this eater comes meat; out of this strong, sweet. Strong and sweet refreshments follow upon penitential performances; these April showers bring on May flowers. Tertullian saith that he was nulli rei natus nisi poenitentiae, born for no other purpose but to repent; but then he that truly repenteth, de peccatis dolet et de dolore gaudet, is grieved for his sins, and then is glad of such a grief. "Those that so sow in tears shall reap in joy": whereas those that will not—in an evil time, especially when God "calls to weeping and mourning," {#Isa 22:12} and even thrusts men down, as it were, with a thump on the back—weep here, where there are weeping handkerchiefs in the hands of Christ, are like to have their eyes whipt out in hell, and to howl with devils.

A time to mourn.] Matter enough of mourning we shall be sure of (and we should be soberly sensible of it) while we are in this vale of misery, valley of tears, in hoc exilio, in hoc ergastulo, in hoc peregrinatione, as Bernard hath it, in this prison house, purgatory, pilgrimage. In this place of banishment and bondage, how can we look for better? God sets us not here, as he did Adam in paradise, to take his pleasure, or as he did Leviathan in the sea, to sport and dally. We must not think to do as the people of Tombutum, in Africa, who are said to spend their time in singing and dancing. The way of this world is like the wilderness of Sin, or the vale of Siddim, or the Pacific Sea, which Captain Drake found tempestuous and troublous above measure. {a} Many miseries and molestations, both satanical and secular, we are sure to meet with, to make us mourn. Jerome complains that he had furrows in his face, and icicles from his lips, with continual weeping. Origen is thought to have died of grief. Chrysostom calls the days of his life the days of his sorrow. Basil was made old and unprofitable for God's Church before his time, with travail and trouble. Rebecca is weary of her life; so is Elijah. Naomi will be Naomi no longer, but Marah; Paul veils all his topsails, and sits down in the dust, {#1Ti 1:15} besides his sympathising with others. {#2Co 11:29,30}

And a time to dance.] Or, Skip, as young cattle do at spring time. Here is nothing for mixed immodest dancings. Quid opus est talibus salsamentis? What need people provoke themselves to that evil they so naturally incline to? Nemo sobrius saltat, said the heathen orator: No sober man will offer to dance. Where there is dancing, there the devil is, saith a Father: {b} and cannot men be merry unless they have the devil for their playfellow? Dancing, saith another, {c} is a circle, whose centre is the devil, but busily blowing up the fire of lust, as in Herod, that old goat.

{c} Augustine.

Ver. 5. A time to cast away stones.] As when King Henry VIII pulled down the abbeyes and other religious houses (as they called them), saying, Corvorum nidos esse penitus disturbandos, ne iterum ab cohabitandum convolent, that the crows' nests were to be pulled in pieces, that they might never nestle there any more. {a} And herein he did but as Cardinal Wolsey did before him for he, by the Pope's own license, had a little before pulled down forty monasteries, and taken their stones and revenues to build and endow his two colleges at Oxford and Ipswich. {b} Elapidation is a piece of the Church's happiness. {#Isa 5:2}

And a time to gather stones together.] As in building forts, castles, colleges, bridges, causeys, such as was that in #1Ch 26:16,18 1Ki 10:5 2Ch 9:11 16:6.

A time to embrace.] With honest conjugal embracements (as the Chaldee paraphrast interprets it), not with those libidinous embracings of the bosom of a stranger {c} {#Pr 5:20} No time for such. {#1Pe 4:3} Diabolus capite blanditur, ventre oblectat, cauda ligat.

And a time to refrain.] As in times of common calamity; for should we then make mirth? {#Eze 21:10} Should not the bridegroom come forth of his chamber, and the bride out of her closet? {#Joe 2:16} Some of the ancients {d} do very much note the manner of Noah's going into the ark, and how the father and the sons went together, the mother and her daughters-in-law went together, God himself dividing at that time those whom himself had joined together. Others tell us that et bruta ipsa intra arcam quamdiu diluuium duravit, continuerint, the very brute creatures bred not in the ark during the deluge. There is both an intemperate and intempestive abuse of the marriage bed, which ought to be kept undefiled, {#Heb 13:3} and not stained and dishonoured with either unseasonable or sensual excesses and uncleannesses, which God will certainly plague (though they lie without the walk of human censure) without true and timely repentance. Lutheri nuptias amici etiam improbabant, {e} &c. Luther's marrying a wife, then, when all Germany was in a hurly burly, and all Saxony in heaviness for the death of their good Elector Frederick, Luther's greatest friend, was no small grief to his best friends; and afterward also to himself, as Melanchthon testifieth in an epistle to Camerarius. {f}

Ver. 6. A time to get.] Heb., To seek; for men do but seek here, they do not properly get what they cannot long hold. How much better therefore were it to seek God! Cuius inventio est ipsum semper quaerere (as Nyssen hath it here), the finding of whom is always to seek him, and in seeking of whom there is so great reward. {#Heb 11:6} "Seek ye me and ye shall live." {#Am 5:4} "Seek him that maketh the seven stars and Orion." {#Am 5:8} Seek him "in a time when he may be found." {#Ps 32:6} "Now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation." {#2Co 6:2} Take the present "now," and be serious, and then God scorns to do as heathen idols did—viz., to say to the seed of Jacob, "Seek ye me in vain." {#Isa 45:19} How greedy are men of getting gain! {a} Get God, and you get all: Habet omnia qui habet habentem omnia. {b}

And a time to lose.] There is an "uncertainty" in riches; {#1Ti 6:17} a "deceitfulness"; {#Mr 4:19} a "lie." {#Joh 8:44} They were never true to those that trusted them; subject they are to vanity or violence. {#Mt 6:19-21} How seldom do gamesters grow rich! Vitrea est fortuna; cum splendet, frangitur. {c} And as they say of the metal they make glass of: it is nearest melting when it shines brightest in the fire; so are many rich men nearest ruin when at greatest lustre, as Haman, Herod, Pythias, &c.

A time to keep.] It is good for a man to keep somewhat by him. Bonus servatius facit bonum bonifacium, according to the Dutch blunt proverb, 'A good saver makes a good well doer.' {See Trapp on "Pr 6:8"}

And a time to cast away.] To "cast bread upon the waters," {#Ec 11:1} upon those poor creatures that, pinched with penury, water their plants, feed upon tears. And although bread and other comforts cast upon such may seem cast down the waters, because no hope of recompense, yet thou shalt be "recompensed at the resurrection of the just," saith Christ to such, and blessed in the meanwhile. {#Lu 14:14} Temporalia Dei servis impensa non pereunt, sed parturiunt, Alms perisheth not, but is put to use.

{c} Mimus.

Ver. 7. A time to rend, and a time to sew.] As in making a new or translating an old garment. Turks wonder at the English for pinking or cutting their clothes, and making holes in whole cloth, which time of itself would tear too soon. {a} It was a custom among the Jews to rend their clothes in the case of sad occurrences. The prophet Ahijah rent Jeroboam's new garment in twelve pieces, to show that God would rend the kingdom out of the hand of Solomon. {#1Ki 11:31} Schismatics rend the Church, heretics the Scriptures. God will stitch up all in his own time, and heal the breaches thereof. {#Ps 60:2}

A time to keep silence, and a time to speak.] It is a singular skill to "time a word," {#Isa 50:4} to set it upon its wheels, {#Pr 25:11} as Abigail did for her family, {#ISA 25:23-31} as Esther did against Haman. And it is a happy thing when a man can pray, as one once did, Det Deus ut sermo meus adeo commodus sit, quam sit accommodus, God grant my speech may be as profitable as it is seasonable. He that would be able to speak when and as he ought, must first learn silence, as the Pythagoreans did of old, {b} as the Turks do at this day, Perpetuum silentium tenent ut muti, they are not suffered to speak. Discamus prius non loqui, saith Jerome upon this text. Let us first learn not to speak, that afterwards we may open our mouths to speak wisely. Silence is fitly set here before speaking, and first takes its time and turn. It is a good rule that one gives, either keep silence, or speak that which is better than silence. {c}

Ver. 8. A time to love, and a time to hate.] Yet I like not his counsel that said, Ama tanquam osurus, odi tanquam amaturus, {a} Let a man choose whom he may love, and then love whom he hath chosen. "Let love be without dissimulation; abhor the evil, cleave to the good." {#Ro 12:9} Hate we may, but then it must be, non virum, sed vitium, not the man, but his evil qualities; whereof also we must seek to bereave him, that he may be totus desiderabilis, "altogether lovely." {#So 5:16}

A time of war, and a time of peace.] Time, saith an interpreter, is a circle; and the Preacher shutteth up this passage of time in a circle. For having begun with "a time to be born," and "a time to die," he endeth with "a time of war," which is a time of dying, and with "a time of peace," which is a time wherein people, by bringing forth, are multiplied.

Ver. 9. What profit hath he that worketh? &c.] i.e., How can any man, by any means he can use, help or hinder this volubility and vanity that he meets with in every creature? Cui bono? What profit? {See Trapp on "Ec 1:3"} whereunto this verse relateth, as being a conclusion of the principal argument.

Ver. 10. I have seen the travail that God, &c.] Not fortune, but Providence ordereth all cross occurrences; "a wheel" there is "within a wheel"; {#Eze 1} then when men may think things run on wheels, at sixes and sevens, as they say. "Humble yourselves under the mighty hand of God." {#1Pe 5:6} His holy hand hath a special stroke in all our travails. He both ordaineth {#Ac 2} and ordereth all, {#Ge 1 20} altering the property, {#Ro 8:28} and disposing them to good, raising profit from all. Thus men afflicted Job for covetousness, the devil for malice, {#Ec 1:15,16} God, for trial and exercise of his graces. "To be exercised therein," saith the text, or, as the word signifieth, to be "humbled therewith," to "hide pride from man," {#Job 33:17} to tame and take him a link lower. "Their hearts are brought down," saith the prophet; "they speak out of the ground," {#Isa 29:4} that erst set their mouths against heaven, and said, "I am, and besides me there is none."

Ver. 11. He hath made everything beautiful, {a} &c.] Plato was wont to say that God did always γεωμετρειν—work by geometry. Another sage said, Pondere, mensura, numero, Deus omnia fecit, God hath done all in number, weight, and measure; made and set all things in comely and curious order and equipage; he hath also prefigured beforehand a convenient and beautiful season for everything; ordering the disorders of the world to his own glory and his Church's good.

Also he hath set the world in their heart,] i.e., He hath given to men the creature to contemplate, together with an earnest desire to search into nature's secrets. The Vulgate renders this text thus: Et mundum tradidit disputationi eorum, And he hath delivered the world to their disputations. But so foolishly {b} and impiously have men disputed of God, of his providence, of his judgments, of the chief happiness, &c., that they have reasoned, or rather wrangled away the truth, being able to find out neither the beginning nor end of the causes or uses of God's works. {#Ro 1:21,22} Veritatem philosophia quaerit, theologia invenit, religio possidet, said Picus Mirandula; Philosophy inquires after truth, divinity finds it out, and religion only improves it.

Ver. 12. I know that there is no good in them,] i.e., No other good, but for a man to rejoice and do good in his life—i.e., Frui praesentibus et facere quod infuturo prosit, { a } to enjoy things present, and to do that which may do him good a thousand years hence; to expend what he hath upon himself, and to extend it unto others that are in necessity, this is to "lay up in store for himself a good foundation against the time to come"; this is to "lay hold upon eternal life." {#1Ti 6:18,19}

{a} Glossa Minor.

Ver. 13. And enjoy the good of all his labour.] "They that will not labour must not eat," {#2Th 3:10} saith the apostle. As they that do shall enjoy the good of all their labour, eat the labour of their hands, and be thrice happy. {#Ps 128:1,2} Jabal and Jubal, {#Ge 4:20,21} frugality and music, good husbandry and good content, dwell together; and yet not always, but where God gives the gift. He gives strength to labour, and health to enjoy the good of our labour. {a} This the rich fool in the gospel either knew not or considered not. "Eat, drink, and be merry," said he to himself; but God was not in all his thoughts. How much better David! "Hope in the Lord," {#Ps 43:5} saith he to himself and others, "and be doing good; dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed." {#Ps 37:3}

{a} Valeat possessor oportet, si comportatis rebus bene cogitat uti. -Horat.

Ver. 14. I know that whatsoever God doeth it shall be for ever,] i.e., That his decree is unchangeable, that his "counsel shall stand," {#Pr 19:21} that the sun may sooner be stopped in his course than God hindered of his will or in his work, since his power and grace is irresistible. Nature, angels, devils, men, may all be resisted, and so miss their design. Not so God. For who hath resisted his will? Vain men, while (like proud and yet brittle clay) they will be knocking their sides against the solid and eternal decree of God, break themselves in pieces, as Adonijah did. {#1Ki 1:5-9,41-43} And while, with Pompey, vanquished by Julius Caesar, they complain that there is a great mist upon the eye of Divine providence, they do but blame the sun, because of the soreness of their bleary eyes. Certain it is, and Solomon knows it—though the best of heathens doubted it when they saw good men suffer, bad men prosper—that every creature walks blindfold; only he that dwells in light sees whither they go; and that the chariots of all effects and actions come forth from between those "mountains of brass," God's provident decrees and counsels most firm and immutable. {#Zec 6:1}

That men should fear before him.] And not lay the reins on the neck, casting away all care upon pretence of God's decree, as that French king did that thus desperately argued: Si salvabor, salvabor; si vero damnabor, damnabor: If I shall be saved, I shall be saved; and if I shall be damned, I shall be damned; therefore I will live as I wish. {a} This was to suck poison out of a sweet flower, to dash against the rock of ages, to fall into the pit (like a profane beast) which was digged for better purpose; to "stumble at the word" (an ill sign, and yet an ordinary sin) "whereunto also they were appointed." {#1Pe 2:8} A bridge is made to give men safe passage over a dangerous river; but he that stumbleth on the bridge is in danger to fall into the river. So here.

{a} Ludovicus II

Ver. 15. That which hath been is now, &c.,] viz., With God, to whom all things are present. {#Ro 4:17 2Pe 3:8 Jer 1:5-7} Hence God is said to know future things, {#Ex 3:9 Joh 18:4} not to foreknow them. For indeed neither foreknowledge nor remembrance are properly in God, since his whole essence is wholly an eye or a mind; it is the example or pattern of all things, so that he needs but to look upon himself, and then he seeth all things, as in a glass. The eye of man beholds many things at once, as ants in a mole hill; but if it will see other things at the same time, it must remove the sight. The mind of man can take in a larger circuit, even a city, a country, a world; but this it doth only in the lump or whole mass of it, for else it must remove from form to form, and from thought to thought. But God takes all at once most steadfastly and perfectly. All things without him are but as a point or ball, which with as much ease he discerneth as we turn our eyes.

And God requireth that which is past.] Or, Inquireth, asketh, that which is bygone; he bespeaks it as present, "calling those things that are not as if they were." Non aliter scivit Deus creata quam creancla, saith Augustine. God knew things to be created, as if they had been before created.

Ver. 16. The place of judgment, that wickedness was there,] i.e., That wrong reigned in the places of judicature, that justice was shamefully perverted, and public authority abused to public injury. Cato saw as much in the Roman States, and complained that private robbers were laid in cold irons, when public thieves went in gold chains, and were clothed in purple. {a} Another, not without cause, complains that, even among us Christians, some follow the administration of justice as a trade only, with an unquenchable and unconscionable desire of gain, which justifies the common resemblance of the courts of justice to the bush, whereto while the sheep flees for defence in ill weather, he is sure to lose part of his fleece. Such wickedness saw the wise man in the place of judgment, where he least looked for it. God himself "looked for judgment, but beheld a scab." {#Isa 5:7, marg.} So the Hebrew hath it.

{a} A. Gell., lib. xi. cap. 16.

Ver. 17. I said in my heart, God shall judge, &c.] He did not deny the Divine providence, as Averroes for this cause did; much less did he turn atheist with Diagoras, because he could not have justice done upon a fellow that had stolen a poem of his, and published it in his own name. But he concluded within himself, that God would surely take the matter into his own hand, judge those unrighteous judges, right and relieve the oppressed, "bring forth their righteousness as the light, and their innocence as the noonday," {#Ps 37:6} if not in this world, yet certainly at that great assizes to be held by his Son. "Because he hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness, whereof he hath given assurance to all men." {#Ac 17:31} His petty sessions he keepeth now, letting the law pass upon some few corrupt judges by untimely death, disgraces, banishment, remorse of conscience, &c.—as he did upon Judge Morgan, that condemned the Lady Jane Grey; Judge Hales, Belknap, Empson, Dudley, that I speak not of Pilate, Felix, &c.—reserving the rest till the great assizes. {#1Ti 5:24} Some he punisheth here, lest his providence—but not all, lest his patience and promise of judgment—should be called into question, as Augustine well observeth. His twenty-two learned books, De Civitate Dei, were purposely written to clear up this truth; and so were Salvian's eight books, De gubernatione Dei, et de iusto praesentique eius iudicio.

Ver. 18. That they might see that they themselves are beasts.] It is reckoned a great matter that wicked men are made "to know themselves to be but men," and no more. {#Ps 9:20} But God will make good men see and say with David, "So foolish was I and ignorant; I was as a beast before thee." Pulchre addidit, "apud te," saith Ambrose upon those words. {a} Elegantly said the Psalmist, "Before thee," because, in respect of God, what is man but an unreasonable beast? He that is wisest among men, said Socrates, who himself was held the wisest of men, if he be compared to God, Simia videbitur, non sapiens, he will seem rather an ape than a wise man. {b} David calls himself not a "beast" only, but "beasts," in the plural, {c} behemoth, or at least a very great beast, not an ape, but an elephant. And this is that which God would have all good men see, hemmah lahem, as this text hath it, themselves to themselves, in their humble account of themselves, as holy Agur did. {#Pr 30:2} {See Trapp on "Pr 30:2"}

Ver. 19. For that which befalleth the sons of men.] As hunger, thirst, heat, cold, diseases, aches, and other ill accidents.

As the one dieth.] They are sure to die, both of them.

Yea, they have all one breath.] They breathe in the same air, and expire alike, in respect of the body. {a}

So that a man hath no pre-eminence.] Unless it be in reason and speech, which he frequently abuseth to his own utter destruction. But otherwise—

“Nos aper auditu praecellit, aranea tactu, Vultur odoratu, lynx visu, simia gustu.”

{a} Nec te tua plurima Pentheu,

Ver. 20. All are of the dust.] {See Trapp on "Ge 3:19"}

Ver. 21. Who knoweth the Spirit?] q.d., Who but a man that is spiritually rational, and rationally spiritual? Who but he that hath "the mind of Christ?" {#1Co 2:16} that hath seen the insides of nature and grace? Whether Plato and Cicero believed themselves in what they wrote touching the immortality of the soul, is a great question.

Ver. 22. Wherefore I perceive.] He resumeth his assertion, {#Ec 3:13} and concludeth. See #Ec 2:24.

Ver. 1. So I returned, and considered.] Here is a second instance of corruption in civil state, added to that of #Ec 3:16, to fill up the nest of vanities.

And behold the tears of such, &c.] Heb., Tear; as if they had wept their utmost, et vix unicum lachrymulam extorquere possent, and could hardly squeeze out one poor tear more for their own ease. For as "hinds by calving," so men by weeping "cast out their sorrows." {#Job 39:3} {a} Now tears are of many sorts: Lachrymas angustiae exprimit crux; lachrymas poenitentiae, peccatum; lachrymas sympathiae, affectus; lachrymas letitiae, excellentia gaudii; denique lachrymas nequitiae, vel hypocrisis, vel vindictae, cupiditas. {b} Oppression draws tears of grief; sin, tears of repentance; affection, tears of compassion; good success, tears of joy; hypocrisy or spite, tears of wickedness.

And they had no comforter.] This was Job's doleful case, and David's, {#Ps 69:21} and the Church's in the Lamentations. {#La 1:2} Affert solarium lugentibus suspiriorum societas, saith Basil Pity allays misery; but incompassionateness of others increaseth it. This was one of Sodom's sins, {#Eze 16:49} and of those epicures in Amos. {#Am 6:6} The king and Haman sat drinking in the gate; but the whole city of Shushan was in heaviness. {#Es 3:15}

And on the side of their oppressors, &c.] The oppressed Romans sighed out to Pompey, Nostra miseria tu es magnus. You, our misery, is great. The world hath almost as many wild beasts and monsters as it hath landlords in various places. It is a woeful thing, surely, to see how great ones quaff the tears of the oppressed, and to hear them make music of shrieks.

{a} Expletur lachrymis egeriturque dolor. -Ovid.

{b} Alsted.

Ver. 2. Wherefore I praised the dead.] Because they are out of the reach of wrong doers; and if dead in the Lord, they have "entered into peace, they do rest in their beds, each one walking in his uprightness." {#Isa 57:2} But if otherwise, men had better do anything, suffer anything here than die; since by death, as by a trap door, they enter into those terrors and torments that shall never either mend or end. Men, like silly fishes, see one another caught and jerked out of the pond of life but they see not, alas! the fire and pan into the which they are cast that die in their sins. Oh it had been better, surely, for such if they had never been born, as Christ said of Judas, than thus to be "brought forth to the murderer" {#Ho 9:14} -to the old manslayer—to be hurled into hell, there to suffer such things as they shall never be able to avoid or abide.

Ver. 3. Yea, better is he than both they.] The heathen could say, Optimum non nasci: proximum mori. Life is certainly a blessing of God, though never so calamitous. Why is living man sorrowful? saith the prophet: {#La 3:39} and it is as if he should say, Man, if alive, hath some cause of comfort amidst all his miseries; if he may escape though but "with the skin of his teeth," {#Job 19:20} and have his life for a prey, he should see matter of thankfulness, and say, "It is the Lord's mercy that I am not consumed" {#La 3:22} -that I am yet on this side hell. But those that have set their hearts upon earthly things, if ever they lose them, they are filled almost with unmedicineable sorrows; so as they will praise the dead above the living, and wish they had never been born. These are they whom Solomon in this sentence is by some thought to personate.

Ver. 4. That for this a man is envied of his neighbour.] This is another piece of life's vanity; that, as greater men will lie heavy upon you and oppress you, so meaner men will be envying at you and oppose you: as Cain did Abel, Saul's courtiers did David; the peers of Persia, Daniel; the Scribes and Pharisees, our Saviour. Every Zopyrus shall be sure to have his Zoilus. The garment of righteousness, parti-coloured with all variety of graces, is a great eyesore to the wicked, and makes the saints maligned. See #Pr 27:4.

Ver. 5. The fool foldeth his hands together.] A graphical and lively description of a sluggard, fitly called a fool (φωυλος), a naughty person. "Thou idle and evil servant." {#Mt 25:26} God puts no difference between nequaquam and nequam, a drone and a naughty pack, seem he never so "wise in his own eyes," {#Pr 26:16} and have he never so much reason to allege for himself—as in the verse here next following; a fool he is, and so he will soon prove himself; for "he folds up his hands and hides them in his own bosom." {#Pr 26:15} A great many chares he is likely to do the while: {See Trapp on "Pr 19:24"} And as (Neque mola, neque farina -nothing do, nothing have) "he eateth his own flesh"—he maketh many a hungry meal, he hath a dog's life, as we say. "Ease slayeth this fool"; {#Pr 1:32, marg.} poverty comes upon him as an armed man; grief also slays him; {#Pr 21:25} envy consumes his flesh, and he is vexed at the plenty of painful persons, and, because he cannot come at, or rather pull out their hearts, he feeds upon his own.

Ver. 6. Better is an handful with quietness.] This is the sluggard's plea, whereby he bolstereth himself up in his wickedness, and would make you believe that he did, non sine ratione insanire, not play the madman without good reason. To what end, saith he, should a man toil and tire out himself with hard labour to compass commodity—making a drudge and a beast of himself for a little pelf, since he knows not who shall have the spending of it, and he is sure to be either squeezed by his superiors, {as #Ec 4:1} or else envied by his neighbours? {as #Ec 4:4} Is not a little with ease better? a penny by begging better than twopence by true labour? It is well observed by an interpreter, that this sentence uttered by the sluggard, is, in its true meaning, not much different from that of the wise man in #Pr 17:1, but ill applied by him. Good words are not always to be trusted, from ill men especially.

Ver. 7. Then I returned, and saw vanity, &c.,] i.e., Another extreme of vanity, visible wherever the sun is seen. Dum vitant stulti vitium in contraria currant: Fools while they shun the sands rush upon the rocks, -as Herod would needs prevent perjury by murder. The sluggard here, seeing those that do best to be envied of others, resolves to do just nothing. Again, the covetous miser, seeing the sluggard lie under so much infamy for doing nothing, se laboribus conficit, undoes himself with over doing. Sed nemo ita perplexus tenetur inter duo vitia, quin exitus pateat absque tertio, saith an ancient; but no man is so held hampered between two vices but that he may well get off without falling into a third. What need Eutyches fall into the other extreme of Nestorius? or Stancarus, of Osiander? or Illyricus, of Strigelius? but that they were for their pride justly given up to a spirit of giddiness.

Ver. 8. There is one alone, and there is not a second.] A matchless miser, a fellow that hardly hath a fellow; a solivagant, or solitary vagrant, that dare not marry for fear of a numerous offspring. Child he hath none to succeed him, nor brother to share with him, and yet "there is no end of all his labour"; he takes incessant pains and works like a horse, "neither is his eye satisfied with riches"; that lust of the eye—as St John calls covetousness {#1Jo 2:16} -is as a bottomless gulf, as an unquenchable fire, as leviathan that wanteth room in the main ocean, or as behemoth, that "trusteth that he can draw up Jordan into his mouth." {#Job 40:23}

Neither saith he, For whom do I labour and bereave my soul of good?] Si haec duo tecum verba reputasses, Quid ago? respirasset cupiditas et avaritia paululum, saith Cicero to Nevius. {a} If thou wouldst but take up those two words, and say to thyself, What do I? thy lust and covetousness would be somewhat rebated thereby. But lust is inconsiderate and headlong; neither is anything more irrational than irreligion. The rich glutton bethought himself of his store, and resolved to take part of it, {#Lu 12:17} so did Nabal; but this wretch here hath not a second, he "plants a vineyard and eats not of the fruit thereof." {#1Co 9:7}

And bereave my soul of good, / i.e., Deprive myself of necessary conveniences and comforts, and defraud my genius of that which God hath given me richly to enjoy; {#1Ti 6:17} or, bereave my soul of good, of God, of grace, of heaven, never thinking of eternity, of "laying up for myself a good foundation," that I may "lay hold upon eternal life"; {#1Ti 6:19} but by low ends, even in religious duties, making earth my throne and heaven my footstool. "This is vanity" in the abstract; "this is a sore travail," because, Nulla emolumenta laborum, No good to be gotten by it—no pay for a man's pains; but, as the bird that sitteth on the serpent's eggs, by breaking and hatching them brings forth a perilous brood, to her own destruction, so do those that sit abroad on the world's vanities.

{a} Orat. pro Quinti

Ver. 9. Two are better than one.] Friendly society is far beyond that wretched "aloneness" of the covetous wretch; {#Ec 4:8} he "joins house to house and land to land, that he may live alone in the midst of the earth." {#Isa 5:8}

"Quin sine rivali, seque et sua solus amato."—Horat.

Let him enjoy his moping solitariness, if he can. "It is not good for man to be alone," saith God; {#Ge 2:18} and he that loves to be alone is either a beast or a god, saith the philosopher {a} Man is ζῶον πολιτικόν, a sociable creature—he is "nature's good fellow," and holds this for a rule, Optimum solarium sodalitiū. There is great comfort in good company: next to communion with God is the communion of saints. Christ sent out his apostles by two and two. {#Mr 6:7} He himself came from heaven to converse with us; and shall we, like stoics, stye up ourselves, and not daily run into good company? The evil spirit is for solitariness, God is for society. {b} He dwells in the "assembly of his saints"; yea, there he hath a delight to dwell, calling the Church his Hephzibah, {#Isa 62:4} and the saints were David's Hephzibam, "his delight." {#Ps 16:3} Neither doth God nor good men take pleasure in a stern, froward austerity, or wild retiredness, but in a mild affableness and amiable conversation.

Ver. 10. For if they fall, the one will lift up his fellow.] Provided that they hold together and be both of a mind. That which is stronger shoreth up that which is weaker. While Latimer and Rid ley lived, they kept up Cranmer, by intercourse of letters and otherwise, from entertaining counsels of revolt. Bishop Ridley, being prisoner in the Tower, had the liberty of the same, to prove, belike, whether he would go to mass or not, which once he did. And Mr Bradford, being there prisoner, and hearing thereof, wrote an effectual letter to persuade him from the same, which did Mr Ridley no little good, for he repented, &c. {a} Bishop Farrar also being in the King's Bench prisoner, was travailed with by the Papists at the end of Lent to receive the sacrament at Easter in one kind, who, after much persuading, yielded to them, and promised so to do. But, by God's good providence, the Easter evening, the day before he should have done it, was Bradford brought to the same prison, where, the Lord making him his instrument, Bradford only was the means that the said bishop revoked his promise, and would never after yield to be spotted with that Papistical pitch. {b} Dr Taylor for like cause rejoiced that ever he came into prison, there to be acquainted with that angel of God, John Bradford: so he called him, for the good he received from him. {c} One man may be an angel to another in regard of counsel and comfort; nay, a God to another, as Moses was to Aaron. "Though he fall, he shall arise," for the Lord puts under his hand. {#Ps 37:24}

But woe to him that is alone.] Because Satan is readiest to assault when none is by to assist. Solitariness, therefore, is not to be affected, because it is "the hour of temptation."

For he hath not a second to help him up.] As Elizabeth Cowper, the martyr, in Queen Mary's days had, who, being condemned, and at the stake with Simon Miller, when the fire came unto her she a little shrank thereat, crying once, Ah! When Simon heard the same, he put his hand behind him toward her, and willed her to be strong and of good cheer; for, 'Good sister,' said he, 'we shall soon have a joyful and sweet supper. It is but winking a little, and you are in heaven.' With these and the like speeches, she, being strengthened, stood still and quiet, as one most glad to finish that good work. {d} It was therefore a devilish policy in Julian and other heathen persecutors to banish Christians into far countries one from another, and to confine them to isles and mines, where they could not have access one to another.

Ver. 11. Again, if two lie together, then they have heat.] Heat of zeal and good affection. "Did not our hearts burn within us," said those two disciples, when Christ once made the third with them, and by holy conference kindled them. {#Lu 24:32} So when Silas and Timotheus came from Macedonia, Paul was "pressed in spirit." {#Ac 18:5} Warm he was before, but now all of a light fire, as it were. Those dull daughters of Jerusalem, by hearing the spouse describe her beloved, as she doth from tip to toe, were fired up with desire to join with her in seeking after him whom her soul loved. The lying together of the dead body of one with the bones of Elisha, gave life to it. So doth good company give life to those that are dead in sin. Let two cold flints be smitten together, and fire will come forth. So let two dull Christians confer and communicate their soul secrets, and it shall not repent them; they shall find the benefit of it. "Canst thou bind the sweet influences of the Pleiades?" saith God to Job. {#Job 38:31} These Pleiades be the seven stars, that have all one name, because they all help one another in their work, which is to bring the spring, and, like seven sisters, so are they joined together in one constellation, and in one company. We see that God will have the sweetest works in nature to be performed with mutual help. The best time of the year, the sweetest warmth cometh with these Pleiades, and the best time of our life cometh when we lie together in true love and fellowship, No sooner had the Philippians received the gospel, but they were in "fellowship" to a "day." {#Php 1:5} They knew, that as sincerity is the life of religion, so is society the life of sincerity.

Ver. 12. And if one prevail against him, &c.] Vis unita fortior. God bade Gideon to go down to the camp of the Midianites, and if he feared to go, then to take with him his servant Phurah. Jonathan will not go without his armourbearer—David without Abishai. {#ISa 26:6} Christ, when to begin his passion in the garden, took Peter, James, and John with him, for the benefit of their prayers and company, though they served him but sorrily. "My dove is but one." {#So 6:9} "Jerusalem is a city compact together." {#Ps 122:3} The Church is "terrible as an army with banners"; {#So 6:4} "the gates of hell cannot prevail against her." {#Mt 16:18} Unity hath victory, but division breeds dissolution, as it did once in this island when Caesar first entered it. Dum singuli pugnant universi vincuntur, saith Tacitus of the ancient Britons. The Turks pray daily that the differences among us

Christians may be heightened, for that will soonest undo us, and one of their emperors, when his council dissuaded him from a war against the Germans, because of their multitude, said that he feared them not, because sooner would his fingers be all of one length than their princes all of one mind. {a}

And a threefold cord is not easily broken.] A proverbial confirmation well interpreted by Lyra: Quanto plures et boni in amicitia coniuncti sunt, tanto status eorum melioratur; - The more they are that unite, so they be good, the better it is with them. See #2Sa 10:9-12. We lose much of our strength in the loss of friends; our cable is as it were untwisted. Hence David so bemoans the loss of Jonathan, and made him an epitaph. {#2Sa 1:17-27} Hence St Paul counted it a special mercy to him that Epaphroditus recovered. {#Php 1:27}

Ver. 13. Better is a poor and wise child.] Such as was Joseph, David, Daniel, and his three comrades, &c.; apt to learn, ready to receive instruction, and as careful to follow it. And well doth the Preacher join poverty with wisdom, for, Nescio quomodo bonae mentis soror est paupertas, saith he in Petronius; and, Paupertas est philosophiae vernacula, - Poverty is the proper language of philosophy, and wisdom is undervalued little and set by. Those wisest of the Greeks were very poor—Aristides, Phocion, Pelopidas, Epaminondas, Socrates, Ephialtes. {a} So were those worthies "of whom the world was not worthy; they wandered about in sheep skins and goat skins, being destitute." {#Heb 11:38} Sweet smelling Smyrna was the poorest of all the seven churches, yet hath the richest price set upon it. {#Re 2:8-11} Lactantius died miserably poor; so did Theodorus Gaza, that learned Greek. Of Archimedes thus sings Silius, —

“Nudus opum, sed cui coelum terraeque patebant.” {b}

But I am fully of Aeneas Sylvius’s judgment, that popular men should esteem wisdom as silver, noblemen as gold, princes as pearls. Of Queen Elizabeth (that peerless princess) it is said that she hated, no less than did Mithridates, such as despised virtue forsaken of fortune. {c}

Than an old and foolish king.] Brabanli quo magis senescunt, eo magis stultescunt. {d} So do many men of quality, monarchs and others, weak, and yet wilful, short witted, and yet self-conceited; such as were Saul, Rehoboam, Jehoiakim, Nebuchadnezzar, our Henry III, called Regni dilapidator; destroyer of kingdoms, and that James that reigned in Scotland in our Edward IV's time, of whom as the story is told that he was so much wedded to his own opinion, that he could not endure any man's advice (how good soever) that he fancied not. He would seldom ask counsel, but never follow any. {e} Xerxes, in his expedition against Greece, is reported to have called his princes together, and thus to have spoken to them: Lest I should seem to follow mine own counsel, I have assembled you; and now do you remember, that it becomes you rather to obey than to advise. {f}

Ver. 14. For out of prison he cometh to reign.] As Valentinian the emperor; Sultan Mustapha the great Turk, A.D. 1622; our Henry IV, who was crowned the very same day that, the year before, he had been banished the realm. {a} As, on the other side, Henry VI was sent again prisoner to the Tower the same day that he had been carried through the city, as it were, in triumph, and had heard the shouts of the commons in every street, crying, God save King Henry. Lo! he that had been the most potent monarch for dominions, saith the chronicler, {b} that ever England had, was not now the master of a molehill, nor owner of his own liberty. So that in him it appeared that mortality was but the stage of mutability, when a man born in his kingdom, yea, born to a kingdom, became thus miserably poor. Furthermore, Henry Holland, Duke of Exeter, grandchild to John of Gaunt, may serve as a fit instance and example to all how uncertain Adam's sons are of any continuing greatness. For, saith Philip

Commines, I once saw him run on foot bare legged after the Duke of Burgundy's train, begging {c} his bread for God's sake; but he uttered not his name, he being the nearest of the house of Lancaster, and brother-in-law unto King Edward IV, from whom he fled; and being known who he was, Burgundy gave him a small pension to maintain his estate. {d}

Ver. 15. I considered all the living, &c.] He means the multitude, that shallow brained, but great and many headed beast, making defection from their old prince, though never so prudent, and setting up his own son against him, as they dealt by David more than once, merely out of an itch of instability and affectation of novelty. Now, as this is to others, so to kings also a vexation, to see already the common aspect of their people bent upon another object before the time; to behold them worshipping the rising sun, {a} as the proverb is, and themselves laid aside, in a manner, as broken vessels out of request in comparison. {b} Crowns have their cares and crosses, and high seats are never but uneasy. O vilis pannus! O base clout! said one king concerning his diadem, were it but known how many molestations and miseries do attend thee, Nemo foret qui te tollere vellet humo, no man would deign to take thee up lying at his feet. Antoninus the philosopher said often that the empire was malorum oceanus, an ocean of mischiefs; and another caused it to be written upon his tomb, Felix si non imperitasset, Happy had I been if I had never reigned. It is seldom seen, as before hath been observed, that God allows unto the greatest darlings of the world a perfect contentment, be they never so well deserving. Something they must have to complain of, that shall give an unsavoury verdure to their sweetest morsels, and make their very felicity miserable.

And so had they of their new king, Saul, whom contra gentes, they would needlessly have, after the manner of all other nations. {#1Sa 8:6,7} How soon did the Baptist grow stale to the Jews, that had lately "heard him gladly," {#Mr 6:20} and was no more set by than "a reed shaken with the wind!" {#Mt 11:7} How suddenly did they change their note concerning Christ from "Hosanna" to Crucify him! The common people are like to children, saith an interpreter, that rest not contented with any schoolmaster, and like to servants that love to change every year their masters. People are desirous to hear new preachers, as feasters to hear new songs and new instruments. {#Eze 33:32}

Ver. 1. Keep thy foot, J q.d., Wouldst thou see more of the world's vanity than hitherto hath been discoursed? get thee "to the sanctuary," as David did. {#Ps 73:17} For as they that walk in a mist see it not so well as those that stand on a hill; so they that have their hands elbow deep in the world cannot so easily discern what they do as those that go a little out from it. To the house of God therefore, to the temple and synagogues, to the churches and oratories steer thy course, take thy way. Only "see to thy feet," i.e., keep thy senses and affections with all manner of custody, from the mire of wicked and worldly matters. Shoes we have all upon our feet—that is, to speak in St James's phrase, "filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness" {#Jas 1:21} in our hearts, that must be put off at God's school door, as God taught Moses and Joshua. {#Ex 3:5 Jos 5:15} And Pythagoras, having read Moses belike, taught his scholars as much, when he saith, αποδητος θεε και προσκυνει, Put off thy shoes when thou sacrificest and worshippest. His followers, the Pythagoreans, expounded his meaning, when they would not have men εν παροδω προσκυνειν, but οικοθεν παρασκευασαμενοι, worship God carelessly or by the way, but prepare themselves at home aforehand. And Numa Pompilius, one that had tasted of his learning, would not have men worship the gods εν παρεργω και αμελωσ, by the by, and for fashion, but χολην αγοντας απο των αλλων, at good leisure, and as making religion their business. {a} In the law of Moses, the priests were commanded to wash the inwards and the feet of the sacrifice in water. And this was done, πανυ συμβολικωσ, saith Philo, not without a mystery—sc., to teach us to keep our feet clean when we draw nigh to God. Antonius Margarita, in his book of the rites and ceremonies of the Jews, tells us that before their synagogues they have an iron plate, against which they wipe and make clean their shoes before they enter; and that being entered, they sit solemnly there for a season, not once opening their mouths, but considering who it is with whom they have to do. Thus it was wont to be with them; but alate though they come to their synagogues with washen hands and feet, yet for any show of devotion or elevation of spirit, they are as reverent, saith one that was an eyewitness, {b} as grammar boys are at school when their master is absent: their holiness is the mere outward work itself, being a brainless head and a soulless body. And yet upon the walls of their synagogues they write usually this sentence, by an abbreviature, "Tephillan belo cauvannah ceguph belo neshamah, " i.e., A prayer without effection, is like a body without a soul. Solinus report eth of the Cretians, that they do very religiously worship Diana, and that no man may presume to come into her temple but barefooted. {c} Satan Dei aemulus, The devil is God's ape. He led these superstitious Ethnics captive, as the Chaldeans did the Egyptians, "naked and barefoot" {d} {#Isa 20:2,4}

When thou goest to the house of God.] Called "the gate of heaven," {#Ge 28:17} such as none but "the righteous" may "enter," {#Ps 118:20} the "beauty of holiness," the place of angels and archangels, the kingdom of God, yea, heaven itself, {e} as Chrysostom calls it. The French Protestants called their meeting house in Paris paradise. The primitive Christians {f} called such places κυριακουσ, whence kirks, churches, and the Lord's houses; and basilicas, kingly palaces. Now it is held an uncivil thing to come to the palace of a king with dirty shoes, or to eat at his table with foul hands. Men wash their hands every day of course, but when to dine with a prince, they wash them with balls. So it should be here; when we come to God's house we should come with the best preparation we can make; we should also be there with the first, and stay till the last, as doorkeepers use to do, which office in God's house David held a high preferment. {#Ps 84:10} And while we are there, let our whole deportment be as in the presence of the great God, whom we must look full in the face, and be ready to hear, as those good souls in #Ac 10:33; "Now therefore we are all here present before God," say they, "to hear all things that are commanded thee of God." Neither must we hear only with the hearing of the ear, but with the obedience of the heart and life—for so the original word here signifieth; #Ge 3:17, "Because thou hast heard," that is, obeyed, "the voice of thy wife," &c.—hearing diligently without distraction, and doing readily without sciscitation.

Than to give the sacrifice of fools, / i.e., The formalities and external services of profligate professors that think to set off with God for their sins by their sacrifices; for their evil deeds by their good. Hence they burden God's altar, and even cover it with their sacrifices; sticking in the bark and gnabbling upon the shell of holy services, not once piercing to the heart or tasting of the kernel thereof, and are therefore "abominable, because disobedient, and to every good work reprobate." {#Tit 1:16} How many are there at this day that not only pray by tale, as Papists do by their beads, but turn over other duties of religion as a mere task, holding only a certain stint of them, as malt horses {g} do their pace, or mill horses their round, merely out of form and custom, those banes and breaknecks of due devotion! These do not only lose their labour but commit sin, {#Isa 1:14} compass God with a lie, {#Ho 11:12} because they wash not their feet before they compass God's altar. The heathen orator {h} can tell these fools of the people, Deum non superstitione coli velle, sed pietate, that God requires the heart in all holy duties, and must be served in spirit, {#Joh 4:24} even toto corde, id est amore summo, more vero, ore fideli, re omni.

For they consider not that they do evil.] That they despite him with seeming honours, with displeasing service, which is double dishonour; with seeming sanctity, which is double iniquity, and deserves double damnation. This they so little consider, that they think God is greatly beholden to them, and does them no small wrong that he so little regards and rewards them. {#Isa 58:3 Mal 3:14} Non sic Deos coluimus ut ille nos vinceret, said that emperor, {i} going into the field against his enemy. Ver. 2. Be not rash with thy mouth.] From hearing, the Preacher proceeds to give directions for speaking, whether it be of God or to him. For the first, the very heathens could say, Non loquendum de Deo sine lumine, {a} We may not speak of God without a light—i.e., without a deliberate premeditation and well advised consideration. In speaking of God, saith one, {b} our best eloquence is our silence. And if we speak at all on this subject, saith another, {c} no words will so well become us as those, quae ignorantiam nostram praetendunt, that most discover our small knowledge of him. "How little a portion or pittance is heard of him," saith holy Job; {#Job 26:14} the Hebrew word signifies a little bit or particle—nay, a little piece of a word, such as an echo resoundeth, "But the thunder of his power who can understand?" it is ineffable, because inconceivable. Here, if ever,

"Claudicat ingenium, delirat linguaque mensque."—Lucret.

But although Jerome {d} thinks it best to understand the Preacher here of a speaking of God, yet others, and for better reason, conceive his meaning to be rather of a speaking to God by prayer, and particularly by a vow, which implies a prayer, as the Greek words εὐχη and προσευχη import. Here then,

Let not thine heart be hasty to utter anything.] Heb., Let not thine heart through haste be so troubled or disturbed, as to tumble over, and throw out words without wisdom, in a confused manner, in a slubbering sort. But as there was "half an hour's silence in heaven" when the seventh seal was opened, {#Re 8:1} and or ever the seven trumpets sounded, so should there be a sad and serious weighing of our petitions before we utter them. Nescit poenitenda loqui, qui proferenda prius suo tradidit examini, { e} He repents not of his requests who first duly deliberates what to request. Whereas he that blurts out whatsoever lies uppermost—as some good men have done in their haste and heat of passion (as Job, #Job 6:5; David, #Ps 116:11; Jeremiah, #Jer 15:10,18; Jonah, #Jon 4:1-3, who brawled with God instead of praying to him)—displeaseth God no less than the Muscovy ministers do their hearers if they mispronounce but any syllable in their whole liturgy.

For God is in heaven, and thou upon earth.] He is the "high and Holy One that inhabiteth eternity," {#Isa 57:15} and thou art E palude sua procedens et repens vilis ranuncula, as Bernard hath it, a base toad creeping or crawling out of a ditch: there is an infinite distance and disproportion between him and thee; therefore see to it that thou come to him with all possible reverence, humility, and self-abasement. See #Job 42:6 1Ki 18:42 Mt 26:38. It is observable that when the great Turk comes into his mosque or temple, he lays by all his state, and hath none to attend him all the while.

Therefore let thy words be few.] But full, as the publicans were. {#Lu 18:13} O quam multa quam paucis! Oh, how much in a little! said Cicero of Brutus's Epistle. So may we say of that publican's prayer; how much more of the Lord's prayer, set in fiat opposition to the heathenish battologies {f} and vain repetitions usual with pagans and papagans. {See Trapp on "Mt 6:7"} {See Trapp on "Mt 6:8"} {See Trapp on "Mt 6:9"} It is reported of the ancient Christians of Egypt, Quod brevissimis et raptim iaculatis orationibus uti voluerint, ne per moras evanesceret et hebetaretur intentio, { g} that they made very short prayers that their devotion might not be dulled by longer doings. Cassian also makes mention of certain religious persons in his time, Qui utilius censebant breves quidem orationes sed creberrimas fieri, &c., who thought it best that our prayers should be short, but frequent: the one, that there might be continual intercourse maintained between God and us; the other, that by shortness we might avoid the devil's darts, which he throws especially at us, while we are praying. These are good reasons, and more may be added out of #Mt 6:5-15, as that "our heavenly Father knows what we need," &c. That which the Preacher here presseth is the transcendent excellence and surpassing majesty of almighty God. "I am a great King," saith he, {#Mat 1:14} and I look to be served like myself. Therefore "take with you words," {#Ho 14:2} neither over curious, nor over careless, but such as are humble, earnest, direct to the point, avoiding vain babblings, needless and endless repetitions, heartless digressions, tedious prolixities, wild and idle discourses of such extemporary petitioners, as not disposing their matter in due order by premeditation, and with it being word bound, are forced to go forward and backward, like hounds at a loss; and having hastily begun, they know not how handsomely to make an end.

Ver. 3. For a dream cometh through the multitude of business.] When all the rest of the senses are bound up by sleep, the soul entereth into the shop of the fancy, and operates there usually according to the businesses and employments of the day past; et fieri videntur quae fieri tamen non videntur; saith Tertullian, {a} those things seem to be done in a dream, which yet are not seen to be done at all: these are but vanae iactationes negotiosae animae, the idle tossings of a busy mind. In like sort a fool, a heartless, sapless fellow, that being sensual and void of "the spirit of grace and supplications," hath neither the affections nor expressions of holy prayer, "multiplies words without knowledge," thinks to make out in words what he wants in worth, being λαλειν αριστος, λεγειν δε αδυνατωτατος, as Plutarch saith of Alcibiades, one that could talk much but speak little: "His voice is known by multitude of words." It is but a "voice" that is heard, it is but a sound that is made, like the uncertain sound of a trumpet, that none can tell what it meaneth, what to make of it. Corniculas citius in Africa, quam res rationesque solidus in Turriani scriptis reperias, saith one, {b} so here if there be any worth of matter in the fool's words, it is but by chance, as Aristotle saith, {c} that dreams do by chance foretell those things that come to pass. Let it be our care to shun as much as may be all lavish and superfluous talkativeness and tediousness, but especially in prayer, lest we "offer the sacrifice of fools," and God be angry with us. For as it is not the loudness of a preacher's voice, but the weight and holiness of his matter, and the spirit of the preacher, that moves a wise and intelligent hearer, so it is not the labour of the lips, but the travail of the heart that prevails with God. The Baalites' prayer was not more tedious than Elijah's short, yet more pithy than short. And it was Elijah that spake loud and sped in heaven. Let the fool learn, therefore, to show more wit in his discourse than words, lest being known by his voice, he meet, as the nightingale did, with some Laconian that will not let to tell him, Vox tu es, praeterea nihil, Thou art a voice, and that's all.

Ver. 4. When thou vowest a vow unto God, defer not to pay it.]

{See Trapp on "De 23:22"} It is in thy power to vow or not to vow. Vovere nusquam est praeceptum, saith Bellarmine. {a} We have no command to vow. That of David, "Vow and perform to the Lord your God," is not purum praeceptum, saith Mr Cartwright, a pure precept, but like that other, "Be angry, and sin not"; where anger is not commanded, but limited. So neither are we simply commanded to vow, but having voluntarily vowed, we may not defer to pay it; delays are taken for denials, excuses for refusals.

For he hath no pleasure in fools.] He "needs" them as little as King Achish did; {#1Sa 21:15} he "abhors" them {#Ps 5:5} as deceitful workers, as mockers of God. Jephthah in vovendo fuit stultus, inpraestando impius: {b} Jephthah was a fool invowing, and wicked in performing.

But he that vows a thing lawful and possible, and yet defers to perform it, or seeks an evasion, is two fools for failing; since—

Ver. 5. Better it is that thou shouldst not vow,] q.d., Who bade thee be so forward? Why wouldst thou become a voluntary votary, and so rashly engage to the loss of thy liberty and the offence of thy God, who expected thou shouldst have kept touch, and not have dealt thus slipperily with him? {a} "Thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God." {#Ac 5:4} "As the truth of Christ is in me," saith Paul; {#2Co 11:10} so he binds himself by an oath, as the learned have observed. And "as God is true, our word toward you was not yea and nay; for the Son of God who was preached among you by me was not yea and nay; but in him all the promises of God are yea and amen." {#2Co 1:19,20} Why, what of that? some might say; and what is all this to the purpose? Very much, for it implieth that what a Christian doth promise to men (how much more to God?) he is bound by the earnest penny of God's Spirit to perform. He dares no more alter or falsify his word than the Spirit of God can lie. And as he looks that God's promises should be made good to him, so is he careful to pay what he hath vowed to God, since his is a covenant of mercy, ours of obedience; and if he shall be all-sufficient to us, we must be altogether his. {#So 2:16}

Ver. 6. Suffer not thy mouth to cause thy flesh to sin.] Heb., Nec des, Give not liberty to thy mouth, which of itself is so apt to overflow and run riot in sinful and superfluous language. Rein it in therefore, and lay laws upon it, lest it "cause thy flesh to sin," thyself to become a sinner against thine own soul. Say to it in this case, as Christ did to those Pharisees in the gospel, "Why temptest thou me, thou hypocrite?" or as the witch said to Saul, that sought to her, "Wherefore layest thou a snare for my life, to cause me to die?" {#1Sa 28:9} Shall my prayer become sin, and my religious vows, through non-payment, a cause of a curse? {#Ps 109:7} When thou art making such an ill bargain, say to thy mouth, as Boaz said to his kinsman, "At what time thou buyest it, thou must have Ruth with it"; {#Ru 4:5} so thou must have God's curse with it—for that is the just hire of the least sin, {#Ro 6:23} how much more of thy crimson crime! And let thy mouth answer, No, I may not do it; I shall mar and spoil a better inheritance; I shall anger the angel of the covenant, who, if his wrath be kindled, yea, but a little, "he will not pardon my transgression, for God's name is in him," {#Ex 23:21} who, as he is pater miserationum, "the Father of mercies," so he is Deus ultionum, "the God of recompenses." {#Ps 94:1} True it is that anger is not properly in God; "Fury is not in me"; {#Isa 27:4} but because he chides and smites for sin, as angry men use to do, therefore is anger here and elsewhere attributed to him, that men may stand in awe and not sin, since sin and punishment are linked together with chains of adamant.

Ver. 7. For in the multitude of dreams, and in many words,] i.e., As in the multitude of dreams, so in many words, &c. There may be some matter in some of either; but neither of them wants their vanities. Dreams are of various sorts. {See Trapp on "Ge 20:3"} Epicurus judged them all vain. The Telmisenses nulla somnia evacuabant, saith Tertullian, {a} made no dreams to be vain. But that some dreams are divine, some diabolical, and some natural, Peculiare solarium naturalis oraculi, as one speaketh, good symptoms and indications of the natural constitution, no wise man ever doubted. That of the philosopher {b} hath a truth in it, Iustum ab iniusto non somno, sed somnio discerni, that a good man may be distinguished from a bad, though not by his sleep, yet by his dreams in his sleep.

But fear thou God.] And so eschew this evil of fond babbling (in God's service especially), which is no less a vanity than plain doting, and procures Divine displeasure. Deum si quis parum metuit, valde contemnit. {c} He that fears not God's wrath is sure to feel it. {#Ps 90:11}

Ver. 8. If thou seest the oppression of the poor.] And so mayest be drawn to doubt of Divine providence, and to withdraw thine awful regard to the divine Majesty, to forego godliness, and to turn fiat atheist, as Diagoras and Averroes did.

Marvel not at the matter.] Nil admirari prope res est una Numici. {a} A wise man wonders at nothing; he knows there is good cause why God should allow it so to be, and gives him his glory. Opera Dei sunt in mediis contrariis, saith Luther: {b} God's works are effected usually by contraries. And this he doth ἵνα καὶ μάλλον θαυμάζηται, that he may be the more marvelled at, saith Nazianzen. Hence he commonly goes a way by himself, drawing light out of darkness, good out of evil, heaven out of hell, that his people may feelingly say, "Who is like unto thee, O Lord, glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders." {#Ex 15:11} "Verily there is a reward for the righteous; verily he is a God that judgeth in the earth." {#Ps 58:11}

For he that is higher than the highest regardeth.] And "wherein they deal proudly, he is above them," {#Ex 18:11} and overtops them; {#Ps 2:4} sets a day for them, and "sees that their day is coming." {#Ps 37:13} "The Most High cuts off the spirit of princes" {#Ps 76:12} -he slips them off, as one should slip off a flower between his fingers; or he cuts them off, as grapegatherers do the clusters off the vines; such a metaphor there is in the original—"He is terrible to all the kings of the earth," those dread sovereigns, those hammers of the earth and scourges of the world, {c} as Atilas styled himself; such as Sennacherib, whom God so subdued and mastered, that the Egyptians, in memory of it, set up his statue in the temple of Vulcan, with this inscription, Ἐμε τίς ὀρεῶν εὐσεβῆς εἶπο: {d} Let all that behold me learn to fear God. It was therefore excellent counsel that Jehoshaphat gave his judges: "Take heed what you do, for ye judge not for man, but for the Lord, who is with you in the judgment. Wherefore now let the fear of the Lord our God be upon you; take heed and do it." {#2Ch 19:6} Look upon him that overlooks all your doings, saith he, and then learn to sit upon the tribunal, in as great though not in so slavish a fear of doing wrong, as Olanes in the history did upon the flayed skin of his father Sisannus, nailed by Cambyses on the judgment seat; or as a Russian judge that fears the boiling caldron or open battocking; or the Turkish senate, when they think the great Turk to stand behind the arras {e} at the dangerous door. In fine, let the grandees and potentates of the earth know and acknowledge with Constantine, Valentinian, and Theodosius, three great emperors, as Socrates reports of them, that they are but

Christi vasalli, Christ's vassals; and that as he is Excelsus super excelsos, high above all, even the highest, so he hath other high ones at hand—viz., the holy angels, who can "resist the King of Persia," as Michael the prince did; {#Da 10:13} fright the Syrians with a panic terror; {#2Ki 7:6} smite the Assyrians with an utter destruction; {#Isa 37:36} deliver Peter from the hand of Herod, and from the expectation of the Jews. {#Ac 12:11} What a wonderful difference in the slaughter of the firstborn of Egypt! {#Ex 12:23-32} Tyrants shall be sure, sooner or later, to meet with their match. Look what a hand the Ephori had over the King of Sparta; the tribunes had over the Roman consuls; and the Prince Palgrave of Rhine ought, by the ancient orders, to have over the Emperor of Germany (Palatino haec dignitatis praerogativa est, ut ipsum Caesarem iudicare et damnare possit, quoties scilicet lis ei ab aliquo ordinum imperii movetur; { } the Palgrave hath power to judge and pass sentence upon the emperor himself, when any of the states of Germany do sue him at the law); the same and more hath God and his angels over the mightiest magnificoes in the world. Ver. 9. Moreover, the profit of the earth is for all,] viz., For all sorts of men, and for all kind of uses. Alma mater, terra ferax. "Then shall the earth yield her increase; and (therein) God, even our own God, shall bless us." {#Ps 67:6} "Can any of the vanities of the heathens give rain," or grain? No, neither. {#Jer 14:22} Can the earth bring forth fruit of herself? {a} So, indeed, our Saviour seems to say, "First the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear"; {#Mr 4:28} but then it is after the good husbandman hath sowed it, and God by his blessing given the increase. The drift of the Preacher here is to set forth the excellence of tillage first, and then to show the vanity of it. Tillage is the life and blood of a commonwealth; it is beyond all pecuniary possessions. Jacob had money and other fruits of the earth, and yet if Egypt, the world's granary, as one calls it, had not supplied them with grain, he and his might have perished. {#Ge 43:1,2}

The king himself is served by the field.] Not the lion, dragon, unicorn, &c. But the plough and the ship are the supporters of a crown. Some read it thus: Rex agro servit, The king is a servant to the field. {b} It concerns him to have care of tillage, plantation of fruits, breeding of cattle, &c., or else all will soon run to wrack and ruin. King Uzziah loved husbandry, and used it much. {#2Ch 26:10} In #Am 7:1, we read of "the king's mowings." And Pliny hath observed that grain was never so plentiful, good and cheap at Rome as when the same men tilled the land that ruled the commonwealth, Quasi gauderet terra laureato vomere scilicet et aratore triumphali.

Ver. 10. He that loveth silver shall not be satisfied with silver.] As he cannot fill his belly, nor clothe his back with it, so neither can he satisfy his inordinate appetite and desire after it, though he had heaped and hoarded it up, as the great Caliph of Babylon had—that covetous wretch, starved to death by Haalon, brother to Mango, the great Cham of Cataia, in the midst of his gold, silver, and precious stones, whereof, till then, he could never have enough. {a} Auri nempe fames parto fit maior ab auro, {b} A man may as soon fill a chest with grace as a heart with wealth. As a circle cannot fill a triangle, so neither can the whole world, if it could be compassed, possibly fill the heart of man. Anima rationalis caeteris omnibus occupari potest, impleri non potest: {c} The reasonable soul may be busied about other things, but it cannot be filled with them. Non plus satiatur cor auro, quam corpus auro, As air fills not the body, so neither doth money the mind. It cannot, therefore, be man's chiefest good, as mammonists make it, since it doth not terminate his appetite, but that although he hath never so much of it, yet is he as hungry after more as if he were not worth a halfpenny. Theophrastus brings in the covetous person first wishing—that he had a thousand sheep in his flock. And this when he had gotten, then, Pauperis est numerare pecus. He would have cattle without number. The Greeks derive their word for desire {d} from a root that signifieth to burn, Now, if one should heap never so much fuel upon a fire, it would not quench it, but kindle it the more. So here. Surely, as a ship may be overladen with silver, even unto sinking, and yet have compass and sides enough to hold ten times more, so a covetous wretch, though he hath enough to sink him, yet never hath he enough to satisfy him. Ver. 11. When goods increase, they are increased that eat them.] Servants, friends, flatterers, trencher men, pensioners, and other hangerons that will flock to a rich man, as crows do to a dead carcase, not to defend, but to devour it. Caesar perished in the midst of his friends, whose boundless hopes and expectations he was not able to satisfy. The King of Spain, were it not for the West India fleet, were never able to subsist, though he be by far the greatest prince in Christendom, gives for his motto, Totus non sufficit orbis, and hath his empire so far extended that he may truly say, Sol mihi semper lucet, The sun ever shines upon my dominions. {a} The Duke of Bavaria's house is so pestered with friars and Jesuits that, notwithstanding the greatness of his revenue, he is very poor, as spending all his estate on those Popish flesh flies, those inutiles et ribaldi (Lyra's words upon this text), useless, needless, ribaldry fellows. {b}

Whereunto I may add Cardinal Wolsey's pompous family, consisting of one earl, nine barons, knights and esquires very many, chaplains and other servants, besides retainers, at bed and board, no fewer than four hundred. Or, to see so much wealth, and to tumble in it; as Caligula the emperor was wont to do, contractandae pecuniae cupidine incensus, loving to handle his money, to walk upon it with his bare feet, and to roll among it with his whole body, as Suetonius relateth. {c} The like is reported of Heliogabalus, who also, besides what he did eat, is said to have provided himself, in case he should be in danger to be surprised by his enemies, silken halters to hang himself with, ponds of sweet water to drown himself, gilded poisons to poison himself with, &c.

Ver. 12. The sleep of a labouring man is sweet.] Sleep is the nurse of nature, the wages that she pays the poor man for his incessant pains. His fare is not so high, his care is not so great, but that without distemper or distraction he can hug his rest most sweetly, and feel no disturbance, until the due time of rising awakeneth him. {a} These labouring men are as sound as a rock, as hungry as hunters, as weary as ever was dog of day, as they say, and therefore no sooner laid in their beds but fast asleep, their hard labour causing easy digestion, and uninterrupted rest. Whereas the restless spirit of the rich wretch rides his body day and night; care of getting, fear of keeping, grief of losing, these three vultures feed upon him continually. He rolls a Sisyphus' stone; his abundance, like a lump of lead, lies heavy upon his heart, and breaks his sleep. Much like the disease called the nightmare, or epialtes, in which men in their slumber think they feel a thing as large as a mountain lying upon their breasts, which they can no way remove. His evil conscience soon lasheth and lanceth him, as it did our Richard III, after the murder of his two innocent nephews, and Charles IX of France, after the bloody massacre. God also terrifies him with dreams, throws handfuls of hell fire in his face, interpellat cogitantem, excitat dormientem, as Ambrose hath it, interrupts him while he is thinking, awakeneth him while he is sleeping, rings that doleful peal in his ears, that makes him start and stare, "Thou fool, this night shall thy soul be taken from thee." Veni miser in iudicium, Come, thou wretch, receive thy judgment.

Ver. 13. There is a sore evil.] Or, An evil disease, {a} such as breaks the sleep, hinc pallor et genae pendulae, item furiales somni et inquietas nocturna, {b} causing paleness, leanness, restlessness by night. This disease is the dropsy or bulimy of covetousness, as seldom cured as heresy, frenzy, jealousy, which three are held incurable maladies.

Riches kept for the owners thereof to their hurt.] Worldlings sit abroad upon their wealth, and hatch to their hurt, as the silly bird doth the eggs of the cockatrice. Riches are called "goods," but it hath been well observed that he that first called them so was a better husband husbandman than divine. Such a husband was he in the gospel, who reckoned upon "much goods laid up for many years." But how come these "goods" to prove evil to the owners but by the evil usage of them? Riches in themselves are of an indifferent nature, and it is through men's corruption, ut magna sit cognatio et nominis et rei divitiis et vitiis, that riches are weapons of wickedness—engines of evil. "He that getteth riches, and not by right, shall die a poor fool." {#Jer 17:11}

“ Dum peritura parat, per male parts perit.”

He that keepeth his riches—having no quick silver, no current money—when God calls him to part with them for pious and charitable uses, keepeth them to his own greatest hurt. For the rust of his canker eaten gold shall rise up in judgment against him at that great day. {#Jas 5:3}

They slip out of the hand, as the punting bird or wriggling eel. There is no hold to be taken of them—no trust to be put in them. They were never true to those that trusted in them. {See Trapp on "Pr 23:5"}

Ver. 15. As he came forth of his mother's womb, / q.d., If riches leave not us while we live, yet we are sure to leave them when we die. {a} Look how a false harlot leaves her lover when arrested for debt, and follows other customers; so is it here. And as dogs, though they go along with us in company, yet at parting they run every one to his own master. So do these to the world, when we come to leave the world. Death, as a porter, stands at the gate, and strips us of all our thick clay wherewith we are laden. {See Trapp on "Ec 2:22"}

To go as he came.] Like an unwelcome guest, or an unprofitable servant, a cipher, and excrement. Oh live, live, live, saith a reverend man, {b} quickly, much, long; so you are welcome to the world: else you are but hissed and kicked off this stage of the world, as Phocas was by Heraclius; nay, many {as #Job 27:23} who were buried before half dead, &c.

And shall take nothing of his labour.] Ne obolum quo naulum Charonti solvant. Some have had great store of gold and silver buried with them, and others would needs be buried in a monk's cowl, out of a superstitious conceit of speeding the better in another world; but it hath profited them nothing at all. {#Ec 9:10}

Ver. 16. And this also is a sore evil.] Malum dolorificum, so it will prove; a singular vexation, a sharp corrosive, when Balaam and his bribes, Laban and his bags, Nabal and his flocks, Achan and his wedge, Belshazzar and his bulls, Herod and his harlots, Dives and his dishes, &c., shall part asunder for ever, when they shall look from their death beds, and see that terrible spectacle, death, judgment, hell, and all to be passed through by their poor souls! Oh, what a dreadful shriek gives the guilty soul at death, to see itself launching into an ocean of scalding lead, and must swim naked in it for ever! Who, therefore, unless he had rather burn with Dives than reign with Lazarus, will henceforth reach out his hand to bribery, usury, robbery, deceit, sacrilege, or any such like wickedness or worldliness, which "drown men's souls in perdition and destruction?" {#1Ti 6:9} If rich men could stave off death, or stop its mouth with a bag of gold, it were somewhat like. But that cannot be, as Henry Beaufort, that rich and wretched cardinal found by experience; as the King of Persia told Constance the Emperor, who had showed him all the glory and bravery of Rome; Mira quidem haec, said he, sed ut video, sicut in Persia, sic Romae heroines moriuntur, {a} -i.e., These be brave things, but yet I see that as in Persia, so at Rome also, the owners of these things must needs die. Agreeable whereunto was that speech of Nugas, the Scythian monarch, to whom, when Michael Paleologus, the emperor, sent certain rich robes for a present, he asked, Nunquid calamitates, morbos, mortem depellere possent? -whether they could drive away calamities, sickness, death?—for if they could not do so they were not much to be regarded, {b}

The four monarchies are called the "four winds of heaven." {#Zec 6:3,4} And at the Pope's enthronisation a wad of straw is set on fire before him, and one appointed to say, Sic transit gloria mundi, - The glory of this world is but a blaze or blast.

Ver. 17. All his days also he eats in darkness,] i.e., He lives besides that he hath, and cannot so much as be merry at meat. Hence is much sorrow, wrath, and sickness, especially if spoiled of his goods, which he made his god; he is no less troubled than Laban was for his teraphim, or Micah for his idol. {#Jud 17:3} He is mad almost, and ready to hang himself for woe, having much fretting, foaming, fuming, anger, languor, ready to flee at God and men.

Ver. 18. It is good and comely for one to eat, &c.] Niggardice and baseness is an ugly evil, making a man, though never so rich, to be vilipended and despised of all. Nabal shall not be called Nadib—the vile person liberal, the churl bountiful. {#Isa 32:5} {See Trapp on "Ec 2:24"} {See Trapp on "Ec 3:12"}

Ver. 19. This is the gift of God.] A gift of his right hand, donum throni, non scabelli, - Godliness only hath contentedness. {#1Ti 6:6} The comfort of wealth comes in by no other door than by the assurance of God's love in bestowing it, and of his grace in sanctifying it. "God give thee the dew of heaven." {#Ge 27:28} Esau likewise had the like, but not with a "God give thee." A carnal heart cares not how, so he may have it; hence his so little comfort and enjoyment. A godly man will have God with it, or else he is all amort. Moses would not be put off with an angel to go along with them. Luther protested, when great gifts were offered him, that he would not be satisfied or quieted with those rattles. {a}

Ver. 20. For he shall not much remember, &c.] He vexeth not at the brevity or misery of his life, but looketh upon himself as a stranger here, and therefore if he can have a better condition, he "useth it rather," {#1Co 7:21} as if a traveller can get a better room in an inn, he will; if not, he can be content, for, saith he, it is but for a night.

Ver. 1. There is an evil that I have seen under the sun.] This wretched life is so pestered with evils that the Preacher could hardly cast his eye beside one or other of them. A diligent observer he was of human miseries, that he might hang loose to life and the better press upon others the vanity of doting upon it. One would wonder, surely, that our life here being so grievously afflicted, should yet be so inordinately affected; and that even by those that are "in deaths often," that have borne God's yoke from their youth, that have suffered troubles without and terrors within, and who, if they had hope in this life only, were, by their own confession, of all men the most unhappy. {#1Co 15:19} And yet so it is; God is forced to smoke us out of our clayey cottages, and to make life unto us to be nothing better than a lingering death, that we may grow weary of it, and breathe after a better, {a} where are riches without rust, pleasure without pain, youth without decay, joy without sorrow, Ubi nihil sit quod nolis, et totum sit quod velis, {b} where is all that heart can wish, &c. The skilful surgeon mortifieth with straight binding the member that must be cut off; so doth God fit us for our cutting off, by binding us with the cords of afflictions. "He crieth not when God bindeth him," {#Job 36:13} saith Elihu of hypocrites; a generation of men, than the which nothing is more stupid and insensible; {c} till at length, God making forcible entry upon them, doth violently break that cursed covenant that they have made with death and hell, dash the very breath out of their bodies with one plague upon another, turn them out of their earthly tabernacles, with a firma eiectio, and send them packing to their place in hell, from which they would not be stopped by all those crosses that, for that purpose, he cast in their way.

And it is common among men.] Proper to men, for beasts are not subject to this evil disease, and common to all sorts of men. One evil may well be common among many, when many evils are so commonly upon one. It happened to be a part of Mithridates' misery, that he had made himself unpoisonable. And Cato so felt this miserable life, ut causa moriendi nactum se esse gauderet, {d} that he was glad of an occasion to go out of the world.

Ver. 2. So that he wanteth nothing.] Nothing but everything, because he dare not make use of anything almost, but is tantalised by his own baseness. He famisheth at a full feast, he starveth at a fireside. And this is often repeated in this book, because it can never enough be observed and abhorred.

Yet God giveth him not power to eat thereof,] i.e., He withholdeth his grace from him, that he cannot use it to his comfort. Herein he is like a stag that hath great horns, but no courage to use them; or rather like an ass loaded with gold and victuals, but feeding upon thistles. Pray we, therefore, that God would together with riches, "give us all things richly to enjoy." {#1Ti 6:17} Vel mihi da clavem, vel mihi tolle feram. Either give me the key, saith one, or take away the lock. The Greeks describe a good householder to be κτητικον, φυλακτικον, κοσμητικον των υπαρχοντων, και χρηστικον, a good husband, as in getting, keeping and setting out what he hath to the best, so in making good use of it, for his own and others' behoof and benefit.

But a stranger eats it.] God so providing that if one will not, another shall; that if the owner will not eat, but sit piddling or sparing, a stranger, and perhaps an enemy, shall take away. That if men will not serve God with cheerfulness in the abundance of all things, they should fast another while, and be forced to serve their enemies in hunger and thirst and nakedness; and by the want of all be taught the worth of them, carendo quam fruendo {#De 28:15-68}

Ver. 3. If a man beget an hundred children.] As Ahab did half a hundred, after that God had threatened to cut off all his house, as it were in contempt of the divine threatening. And as Proculus Caesar got twenty maids with child in fifteen days' space, as Pliny {a} reports. Erasmus {b} mentioneth a maid of Eubcea, called Combe, that being married to a husband, brought him a hundred children. Like enough it might be luctuosa faecunditas, as Jerome {c} saith of Laeta, who buried many children.

And live many years.] So that he be trisaeclesenex, as Nestor was of old, and Iohannes de temporibus, a Frenchman, not many ages since, to whom I may add that old, old, very old man, {d} that died of late years, having been born in Henry VII's days, or Edward IV's.

And his soul be not filled with good.] Though he be filled with years, and filled with children, that may survive and succeed him in his estate, yet if he be a covetous wretch, a miserable muckworm, that enjoys nothing, as in the former verse, is not master of his wealth, but is mastered by it, lives beside what he hath, and dies to save charges—as the bee in Camden's Remains.

And also that he have no burial.] He leaves nothing to bring him honestly home, as they say; or if he do, yet his ungrateful, greedy heirs deny him that last honour, so that he is buried "with the burial of an ass," {#Jer 22:19} as Coniah; suffered to rot and stink above ground, as that Assyrian monarch, {#Isa 14:19,20} and after him Alexander the Great, who lay unburied thirty days together. So Pompey the Great, of whom Claudian the poet sings thus,

“ Nudus pascit aves, iacet en qui possidet orbem, Exiguæ telluris inops.”—

And a similar story about our William the Conqueror, and various other greedy engrossers of the world's good. See here the poisonous and pernicious nature of niggardliness and covetousness, that turns long life and large issue, those sweetest blessings of God, into bitter curses. And with it take notice of the just hand of God upon covetous old men, that they should want comely burial; which is usually one of their greatest cares, as Plutarch observeth. For giving the reason why old men, that are going out of the world, should be so earnestly bent upon the world, he saith, it is out of fear that they shall not have τούς θρεψοντάς και τούς θοψαντάς, friends to keep them while they are alive, and some to bury them when they are dead.

I say that an untimely birth.] I affirm it in the word of truth, and upon mature deliberation, that an untimely birth—not only a naked young child, as aforesaid, that is carried ab utero ad urnam, from the womb to the tomb, from the birth to the burial—but an abortive, that coming too soon into the world, comes not at all; and, by having no name, finds itself a name, as Pliny speaks of the herb anonymus.

{c} Jerome, Epist. 7.

{d} Parr.

Ver. 4. For he cometh in with vanity, &c.] As nothing, being senseless of good or evil. "And departeth in darkness," and is buried in hugger mugger. And his "name shall be covered," &c., that is, there is no more talk of this abortive.

Ver. 5. Moreover he hath not seen the sun.] A second privilege and prerogative of the poor abortive. None are so miserable, we see, but they may be comparatively happy. It is ever best to look at those below us, and then we shall see cause to be better contented.

This hath more rest than the other.] The grain that is cropped as soon as it appeareth, or is bruised in pieces when it lies in sprout, is better than the old weed, that is hated while it standeth, and in the end is cut down for the fire.

Ver. 6. Yea, though he live a thousand years.] Which yet never any man did; Methuselah wanted thirty-two of a thousand.—The reason thereof is given by Oecolampadius; "Quia numerus iste typum habeat perfectionis, ut qui constet e centenario decies revoluto," because the number of a thousand types out perfection, as consisting of a hundred ten times told. But there is no perfection here, saith he.

Yet hath he seen no good.] For, "all the days of the afflicted are evil," saith Solomon. {#Pr 15:15} And man's days are "few and full of trouble," saith Job. {#Job 14:1} "Few and evil are the days of my pilgrimage," saith Jacob, {#Ge 47:9} "and I have not attained to the days of the years of the life of my fathers." For Abraham lived one hundred and seventy-five years, and Isaac one hundred and eighty—near upon forty years longer than Jacob, but to his small comfort, for he was blind all that time; yet nothing so blind as the rich wretch in the text, qui privatus interno lumine, tamen in hac vita diu vult perpeti caecitatem suam, as one speaketh, who being blind as a mole, lies rooting and poring incessantly in the bowels of the earth—as if he would that way dig himself a new and a nearer way to hell—and with his own hands addeth to the load of this miserable life. As he hath done no good, so he hath seen or enjoyed none; but goes to his place (do not all go to one place?)—the place that Adam provided for all his posterity, the house appointed for all living, as Job calls it, {#Job 30:23} the congregation house, as one renders it. Heaven the apostle calls the congregation house {παναγαριον, #Heb 12:23} of the firstborn, whose names also are there said to be written in heaven: but covetous persons, as they are called "the inhabitants of the earth," {#Re 12:12} in opposition to those coelicolae, citizens of heaven, the saints; so their names are "written in the earth," {#Jer 17:13} "because they have forsaken the Lord, the fountain of living waters," and "hewed them out cisterns that can hold no water." {#Jer 2:13} What marvel, then, if they live long, and yet see no good? if they are driven to that doleful complaint that Saul made, "God hath forsaken me, and the Philistines are upon me," {#1Sa 28:15} -sickness, death, hell is upon me, I am even now about to make my bed in the dark, and all the comfort I can have from God is that dismal sentence, "This shall ye have of mine hand, ye shall lie down in sorrow." {#Isa 50:11} Lo, this is the cursed condition of the covetous churl; as he hath lived beside his goods, having jaded his body, broken his brains, and burdened his conscience, so he dies hated of God, and loathed of men; the earth groans under him, heaven is shut against him, hell gapes for him. {#1Co 6:8,9 Php 3:18} Thus many a miser spins a fair thread to strangle himself, both temporally and eternally. Oh that they would seriously think of this before the cold grave hold their bodies, and hot hell torment their souls! before death come with a writ of Habeas corpus, Let you have the body, and the devil with a writ of Habeas animam, Let you have the soul, as once to that rich fool.

Ver. 7. All the labour of man is for his mouth.] That is, For food and raiment, {as #1Ti 6:8} a little whereof will content nature, which hath therefore given us a little mouth and stomach, {a} to teach us moderation, as Chrysostom well observeth; to the shame of those beastly belly gods, that glut themselves, and devour the creatures, as if they were of kin to that Pope that was called Os porci, Mouth of a pig, fattening themselves like boars, till they be brawned, and having, as Eliphaz speaketh, collops in their flank. A man would think, by their greedy and great eating, that their throats were whirlpools, and their bellies bottomless; that they were like locusts, which have but one gut, the ass fish, that hath his heart in his belly, {b} or the dolphin, that hath his mouth in his maw, as Solinus saith.

And yet the appetite is not filled.] And yet what birds soever fly, what fishes soever swim, what beasts soever run about, are all buried in our bellies, saith Seneca. {c} Heliogabalus was served at one supper with seven thousand fishes and five thousand fowls. He had also six hundred harlots following him in chariots, and yet gave great rewards to him that could invent any new pleasure. His thirst was unquenchable, his appetite like the hill Aetna, ever on fire, after more. Now, as "in water face answereth to face," {#Pr 27:19} so doth the appetite of a man to man; we are all as irregular, if God suffer us to range.

{a} Dii boni. quantum hominum unus exercet venter! -Seneca. Deus homini angustum ventrem, &c. -Sergius PP.

{b} Aristot.

{c} Quicquid avium volitat, quicquid piscium natat, quicquid ferarum discurrit, nostris sepelitur ventribus

Ver. 8. For what hath the wise more than the fool?] Nothing at all in this vanity of human nature, that it needeth still new supply of nourishment to preserve it. When a wise man hath eaten, is he not again hungry? and must not his hunger again be satisfied as well as a fool's hunger? Indeed, as any man is more wise, he is more temperate: he eats to live, not lives to eat. He needs not much, nor is a slave to his appetite, or to his palate. He can feed upon gruel for a need, with Daniel; upon coleworts, with Elisha; upon a cake on the coals and a cruise of water, with Elijah; upon locusts and wild honey, with the Baptist; upon barley bread, with the disciples; upon a herring or two, as Luther, &c. This a fool can ill frame to. He eats as a beast with the old world—Τρωγοντες {#Mt 24:38} -and "feeds without fear"; {#Jude 12} he "caters for the flesh" {#Ro 13:14} and "overchargeth it with surfeiting and drunkenness"; {#Lu 21:34} he measureth not his cheer by that which nature requireth, but that which greedy appetite desireth, as if therein consisteth his whole happiness.

What hath the poor that knoweth to walk before the living,] viz., The poor wise man that lives by his wits can "serve the time," in St Paul's sense (if ever he meant it there, #Ro 12:11), and make an honest shift to rub through the world. What hath such a one more than a simpler man in this particular? Doth not his hunger return—his stomach crave new nourishment? Animantis cuiusque vita est fuga, saith the philosopher: Were it not for the repair of nutrition, the natural life would be soon extinguished.

Ver. 9. Better is the sight of the eyes, &c.,] i.e., As some sense it, Better it is to overlook dainty dishes than to overcharge the stomach with them; to fill the eyes than the belly; to gratify that than to pamper this: though that is a vanity too in the issue, and may prove a vexation of spirit—may breed inward inquietation; the best that can come of it is repentance and self-revenge, {#2Co 7:11} as in Epaminondas. Symmachus reads the words thus, Melius est providere, quam ambulare ut libet: Better it is to provide than to walk at random. The Septuagint thus, Melius est videre quod cupias, quam desiderare quod nescias: Better is it to see what thou desirest, than to desire what thou knowest not. The best expositors make it an answer to an objection: for, whereas the rich man might reply, Better see wealth than be always seeking it, better have it than hawk after it: the Preacher answers that misery may be somewhat mitigated by this means but never fully cured or cashiered.

Ver. 10. That which hath been is named already.] Or thus, That which is the name of it, hath been named already, {viz., #Ec 1:2,3} and it is known that it is Adam, or earthly man. The very notation of his name argues him mortal and miserable; whether he be wise or foolish, rich or poor, that alters not the case:— Homo sum, said one, humanum nihil a me alienum puto: I am a man, and therefore may not think strange of misery, whereunto I am born, as the sparks fly upward; {#Job 5:7} he that forgets not that he is a man, will not take it ill that evil befalls him, {a} saith another. When Francis, King of France, being held prisoner by Charles V, Emperor of Germany, saw the Emperor's motto, Plus ultra, More yet, written on the wall of his chamber, he underwrote these words, Hodie mihi, cras tibi: Today is my turn to suffer, tomorrow thine. The Emperor observed it and wrote underneath that, Fateor me esse hominem: I confess I am a man, and therefore subject to misery. {b} Metellus was by the Romans counted and called Felix, happy; so was Sulla, {c} but he proved true that holy proverb, "Better is the end of a thing than the beginning," for he died miserably of the lousy disease, that dashed all his former happiness. The Delphian oracle pronounced one Aglaus, a poor contented Arcadian, the only happy man alive. Solon preferred Tellus the Athenian, and Cleobis, and Bitus also, before rich Croesus, telling him further that he might be called rich and mighty but not blessed, till he had made a happy end; and so confuting his fond conceit of an imaginary felicity. {d} The Greeks, when they would call a man thrice miserable, they call him thrice a man. {e} The Hebrews, whereas they name a bee from the order of her working, a grasshopper from devouring, an ant from gnawing, an adamant from strokes bearing, a serpent from curious observing, a horse from neighing, &c, they give man his name Adam, from the dust whereof he was made, and Enoch, sorry-man, sick of a deadly disease, and so no way fit to "contend with God, who is much mightier than he," to require a reason of his judgments, which are sometimes secret, always just. God hath shut up all persons and things (as it were close prisoners) under vanity, by an irresistible decree. To strive against this stream, and by heaping riches, honours, pleasures, to seek to break prison and to withstand God's will, is lost labour. Misery need not go to find such out, they run to meet their bane; which yet will—as we say of foul weather—come time enough before it is sent for.

Ver. 11. Seeing there be many things that increase.] Seeing it is in vain to wrestle or wrangle with God, to seek to ward off his blow, to moat up one's self against his fire. Why should vain man contend with his Maker? Why should he beat himself to froth, as the surges of the sea do against the rock? Why should he, like the untamed heifer unaccustomed to the yoke, gall his neck by wriggling?—make his crosses heavier than God makes them, by crossness and impatience? The very heathen could tell him that,

“ Deus crudelius urit, Quos videt invitos succubuisse sibi.”
- Tibul. Eleg. 1.

God will have the better of those that contend with him: and his own reason will tell him that it is not fit that God should cast down the bucklers first: and that the deeper a man wades, the more he shall be wet.

Ver. 12. For who knoweth what is good for man.] He may think this and that to be good, but is, mostly, mistaken and disappointed. Ambrose hath well observed, that other creatures are led by the instinct of nature to that which is good for them. The lion, when he is sick, cures himself by devouring an ape; the bear, by devouring ants; the wounded deer, by feeding upon dittany, {a} &c.; tu ignoras,

O homo, remedia tua, but thou, O man, knowest not what is good for thee. "He hath showed thee, O man, what is good," saith the prophet; "and what doth the Lord require of thee, but this"—instead of raking riches together—"to do justly, and to love mercy, and"—instead of contending with him—"to humble thyself to walk with thy God." {#Mi 6:8}

For who can tell a man what shall be after him?] When the worms shall be scrambling for his body, the devils, haply, for his soul, and his friends for his goods. A false Jesuit published in print, some years after Queen Elizabeth's death, that she died despairing, and that she wished she might, after her death, hang a while in the air, to see what striving would be for her kingdom. {b} I loved the man, said Ambrose of Theodosius, for this, that when he died, he was more affected with care of the Church's good, than of his own. {c}

Ver. 1. A good name is better than precious ointment.] Yea, than great riches. {See Trapp on "Pr 22:1"} The initial letter {a} of the Hebrew word for "good" here is larger than ordinary, to show the more than ordinary excellence of a good name and fame among men. {Hebrew Text Note} If whatsoever David doeth doth please the people, if Mary Magdalen's cost upon Christ be well spoken of in all the churches, if the Romans' faith be famous throughout the whole world, {#Ro 1:8} if Demetrius have a good report of all good men, and St John set his seal to it, this must needs be better than precious ointments; the one being but a perfume of the nostrils, the other of the heart. Sweet ointment, olfactum afficit, spiritum reficit, cerebrum iuvat, affects the smell, refresheth the spirit, comforts the brain: a good name doth all this and more. For,

First, As a fragrant scent, it affects the soul, amidst the stench of evil courses and companies. It is as a fresh gale of sweet air to him that lives, as Noah did, among such as are no better than walking dunghills, and living sepulchres of themselves, stinking much more worse than Lazarus did, after he had lain four days in the grave. A good name preserveth the soul as a pomander; and refresheth it more than musk or civit doth the body.

Secondly, It comforts the conscience, and exhilarates the heart; cheers up the mind amidst all discouragements, and fatteth the bones, {#Pr 15:30} doing a man good, like a medicine. And whereas sweet ointments may be corrupted by dead flies, a good name, proceeding from a good conscience, cannot be so. Fly blown it may be for a season, and somewhat obscured; but as the moon wades out of a cloud, so shall the saints' innocence break forth as the light, and their righteousness as the noonday. {#Ps 37:6} Buried it may be in the open sepulchres of evil throats, but it shall surely rise again: a resurrection there shall be of names, as well as of bodies, at the last day, at utmost. But usually a good name comforts a Christian at his death, and continues after it. For though the name of the wicked shall rot, his lamp shall be put out in obscurity, and leave a vile snuff behind it, yet "the righteous shall be had in everlasting remembrance"; they shall leave their names for a blessing. {#Isa 65:15}

And the day of death, than the day of one's birth.] The Greeks call a man's birthday, γενεθλιον quasi γενεσιν αθλων; the beginning of his nativity, they call the begetting of his misery. "Man that is born of a woman, is born to trouble," saith Job. {#Job 14:1} The word there rendered born, signifieth also generated or concieved; to note that man is miserable, even as soon as he is "warm in the womb," as David hath it. {#Ps 51:5} If he lives to see the light, he comes crying into the world, a fletu vitam auspicatur; saith Seneca. {b} Insomuch as the lawyers define life by crying, and a stillborn child is all one as dead in law. Only Zoroaster is said to have been born laughing, but that laughter was both monstrous and ominous. {c} For he first found out the black art which yet profited him not so far as to the vain felicity of this present life. For being king of the Bactrians, he was overcome and slain in battle by Ninus, king of the Assyrians. Augustine, who relates this story, saith of man's first entrance into the world, Nondum loquitur, et tamen prophetat, ere ever a child speaks, be prophesies, by his tears, of his ensuing sorrows. Nec prius natus, quam damnatus, no sooner is he born, but he is condemned to the mines or galleys, as it were, of sin and suffering. Hence Solomon here prefers his coffin before his cradle. And there was some truth in that saying of the heathen, Optimum est non nasci, proximum quam celerrime mori: For wicked men it had been best not to have been born, or being born, to die quickly; since by living long they heap up first sin, and then wrath against the day of wrath. As for good men, there is no doubt but the day of death is best to them, because it is the daybreak of eternal righteousness; and after a short brightness, as that martyr said, gives them, Malorum ademptionem, bonorum adeptionem, freedom from all evil, fruition of all good. Hence the ancient fathers called those days wherein the martyrs suffered their birthdays, because then they began to live indeed: since here to live is but to lie dying. Eternal life is the only true life, saith Augustine.

Ver. 2. It is better to go to the house of mourning.] To the termining house, as they term it, where a dead corpse is laid forth for burial, and in that respect weeping and wailing, which is one of the dues of the dead, {a} whose bodies are sown in corruption, and watered usually with tears. It is better therefore to sort with such, to mingle with mourners, to follow the hearse, to weep with those that weep, to visit the heavy hearted, this being a special means of mortification, than to go to the house of feasting, where is nothing but joy and jollity, slaying oxen and killing sheep, eating flesh and drinking wine, yea, therefore eating and drinking, because tomorrow they shall die. Ede, bibe, lude, post mortem nulla voluptas. {b} What good can be gotten among such swinish epicures? What sound remedy against life's vanity? It is far better therefore to go to the house of mourning, where a man may be moved with compassion, with compunction, with due and deep consideration of his doleful and dying condition; where he may hear dead Abel by a dumb eloquence preaching and pressing this necessary but much neglected lesson, that "this is the end of all men, and the living should lay it to heart"; or, as the Hebrew hath it, "lay it upon his heart," work it upon his affections; inditurus est iliad animo suo, so Tremelius renders it, he will so mind it as to make his best use of it, so as to say with Job, "I know that thou wilt bring me unto death"; {#Job 30:23} and with David, "Behold, thou hast made my days as a span"; {#Ps 39:4,5} and as Moses, who when he saw the people's carcasses fall so fast in the wilderness, "Lord, teach us," said he, "so to number our days, as to cause our hearts" (of themselves never a whit willing) "to come to wisdom." {#Ps 90:12}

Ver. 3. Sorrow is better than laughter.] Here, as likewise in the two former verses, is a collation and prelation; "Sorrow," or indignation conceived for sin, "is better than laughter,"—i.e., carnal and profane mirth. This is παραδοξον αλλ ου παραλογον, as Nazianzen speaks in another case, a paradox to the world, but such as may sooner and better be proven than those paradoxes of the ancient Stoics. The world is a perfect stranger to the truth of this sacred position, as being all set upon the merry pin, and having so far banished sadness, as that they are no less enemies to seriousness, than the old Romans were to the name of the Tarquins. These Philistines cannot see how "out of this eater can come meat, and out of this strong, sweet"; how any man should reasonably persuade them to "turn their laughter into mourning, and joy into heaviness." {#Jas 4:9} A pound of grief, say they, will not pay an ounce of debt; a little mirth is worth a great deal of sorrow; there is nothing better than for a man to eat and drink and laugh himself fat: spiritus Calvinianus, spiritus melancholicus -a Popish proverb—to be precise and godly is to bid adieu to all mirth and jollity, and to spend his days in heaviness and horror. This is the judgment of the mad world, ever beside itself in point of salvation. But what saith our Preacher, who had the experience of both, and could best tell? Sorrow is better, for it makes the heart better; it betters the better part, and is therefore compared to fire, that purgeth out the dross of sin, to water, that washeth out the dregs of sin, yea, to eye water, sharp, but sovereign. By washing in these troubled waters the conscience is cured, and God's Naamans cleansed. By feeding upon this bitter sweet root, God's penitentiaries are fenced against the temptations of Satan, the corruption of their own hearts, and the allurements of this present evil world. These tears drive away the devil much better than holy water, as they call it; they quench hell flames, and as April showers, they bring on in full force the May flowers both of grace {#1Pe 5:5} and of glory. {#Jer 4:14} What an ill match therefore make our mirthmongers, that purchase laughter many times with shame, loss, misery, beggary, rottenness of body, distress, damnation, that hunt after it to hell, and light a candle at the devil for lightsomeness of heart, by haunting ale houses, brothel houses, conventicles of good fellowship, sinful and unseasonable sports, and other vain fooleries, in the froth whereof is bred and fed that worm that never dies? A man is nearest danger when he is most merry, said Mr Greenham. And God cast not man out of paradise, saith another reverend man, that he might here build him another, but that, as that bird of paradise, he might always be upon the wing, and if at any time taken, never leave groaning and grieving till he be delivered. This will bring him a paradise of sweetest peace, and make much for the lengthening of his tranquillity and consolation. {#Da 4:27} Oh, how sweet a thing is it at the feet of Jesus to stand weeping, to water them with tears, to dry them with sighs, and to kiss them with our mouths! Only those that have made their eyes a fountain to wash Christ's feet in, may look to have Christ's heart a fountain to bathe their souls in.

Ver. 4. The heart of the wise is in the house of mourning.] He gladly makes use of all good means of minding his mortality, and holds it a high point of heavenly wisdom so to do. Hence he frequents funerals, mingles with mourners, hears etiam muta clamare cadavers, makes every tomb a teacher, every monument a monitor, {a} lays him down in his bed as in his grave, looks upon his sheets as his winding sheet. Ut somnus mortis, sic lectus imago sepulchri. If he hears but the clock strike, sees the glass run out, it is as a death's head to preach memento mori to him; he remembers the days of darkness, as Solomon bids, {#Ec 11:8} acts death aforehand, takes up many sad and serious thoughts of it, and makes it his continual practice so to do, as Job and David did. The wiser Jews digged their graves long before, as that old prophet; {#IKi 13:30} Joseph of Arimathea had his in his garden to season his delights. John, Patriarch of Alexandria (surnamed Eleemosynarius, for his bounty to the poor), having his tomb in building, gave his people charge it should be left unfinished, and that every day one should put him in mind to perfect it, that he might remember his mortality. The Christians in some part of the primitive Church took the sacrament every day, because they looked to die every day. Augustine would not for the gain of a million of worlds be an atheist for half an hour, because he had no certainty of his life for so short a time. His mother, Monica, was heard oft to say, How is it that I am here still? {b} The women of the Isle of Man, saith Speed, {c} whensoever they go out of their doors, gird themselves about with the winding sheet that they purpose to be buried in, to show themselves mindful of their mortality. The philosopher {d} affirms that man is therefore the wisest of creatures, because he alone can number, — Bruta non numerant; this is an essential difference, -but especially in that divine arithmetic of so "numbering his days as to apply his heart to wisdom." {#Ps 90:12} This speaks him wise indeed, right in his judgment, right also in his affections. This will render him right in his practice too; as it did Waldus, the merchant of Lyons, who seeing one suddenly fall down dead before him, became a new man, and chief of those old Protestants, the poor men of Lyons, {e} called also Waldenses from this Waldus.

But the heart of fools is in the house of mirth.] {See Trapp on "Ec 7:3"}
 As the heart of the wicked is light and little worth, so it is their trade to hunt after lying vanities (as the child doth after butterflies), to "rejoice in a thing of nothing"; {#Am 6:13} he wiles away his time, either in "weaving spiders' webs or hatching cockatrice' eggs"; {#Isa 59:5} froth or filth {αφροσυνη, #Mr 7:22} is their recreation. Sad and serious thoughts they banish, and therefore love not to be alone. They hate to hear of that terrible word death—as Louis XI of France commanded his servants not once to mention it to him, though he lay upon his deathbed. They live and laugh as if they were out of the reach of God's rod, or as if their lives were riveted upon eternity, They can see death in other men's brows and visages, not feel it in their own bowels and bosoms. When they behold any laid in their graves, they can shake their heads and say, This is what we must all come to; but after a while all is forgotten, -as water stirred with a stone cast into it hath circle upon circle on the surface for present, but by and by all is smooth as before. As chickens in a storm haste to be under the hen's wing, but when that is a little over they lie dusting themselves in the sunshine; so it is here. Good thoughts fall upon evil hearts as sparks upon wet tinder; or if they kindle there, fools bring their buckets to quench them, run into merry company to drink, or otherwise drive away those troublesome heart qualms and melancholy dumps, as they call them. This is to excel in madness, &c. {See Trapp on "Pr 10:23"}

Ver. 5. It is better to hear the rebuke of the wise.] Sharp truth takes better with an honest heart than a smooth supparasitation. Seneca compares flattery to a song or symphony; but it is a syren's song, and our ears must be stopped to it; for like the poison of asps, it casts one into a sleep, but that sleep is deadly. Those that had the sudor Anglicus, or sweating sickness, died assuredly, if allowed to sleep; those, then, were their best friends that kept them waking, though haply they had no thank for it; so are wise and merciful reprovers. "Faithful are these wounds of a friend." {#Pr 27:6} {See Trapp on "Pr 27:6"} David was full glad of them; {#Ps 141:5} so was Gerson, who never took anything more kindly, saith he that writes his life, than to be plainly dealt with. The bee can suck sweet honey out of bitter thyme, yea, out of poisonous hemlock. So can a wise man make benefit of his friends, nay, of his enemies. It is good to have friends (as the orator said of judges), mode audeant quae sentiunt, so they dare deal freely. This an enemy will do for spite; and malice though it be an ill judge, yet is a good informer. Augustine, in an epistle to Jerome, approves well of him that said, There is more good to be gotten by enemies railing than friends flattering. These sing Satan's lullaby, such as casts into a dead lethargy, and should therefore be served as Alexander the Great served a certain philosopher whom he chased out of his presence, and gave this reason, Because he had lived long with him, and never reproved any vice in him; or as the same Alexander dealt by Aristobulus, the false historian, who had written a book of his noble acts, and had magnified them beyond truth, hoping thereby to ingratiate and curry favour: Alexander having read the book, cast it into the River Hydaspes, and told the author it were a good deed to throw him after, Qui solus me sic pugnantes facis. {a}

Ver. 6. For as the crackling of thorns under a pot.] Much noise, little fire; much light, little heat. So here is much mirth, little cause; a blaze it may yield, but is suddenly extinct; this blaze is also under a pot; the gallantry of it is checked with troubles and terrors; it is insincere many times; it is but the "hypocrisy of mirth," as one calls it. It is truly and trimly here compared to a handful of brushwood, or sear thorn, under the pot. Ecquando vidisti flammam stipula exortam, claro strepitu, largo fulgore, cito incremento, sed enim materia levi, caduco incendio, nullis reliquiis, saith Apuleius—a very dainty description of carnal joy, and agreeable to this text. And herewith also very well suits that of the Psalmist, "Before your pots can feel the thorns, he shall take them away with a whirlwind, both living, and in his wrath." {#Ps 58:9} Fools themselves are but thorns twisted and folded together; {#Na 1:10} "briars"; {#Mic 7:4} "brambles." {#Jud 9:14} Their laughter is also fitly compared to thorns, because it chokes good motions, scratcheth the conscience, harbours the vermin of base and baggage lusts. And as themselves, like thorns, shall be thrust away and utterly burnt with fire in the same place, {#2Sa 23:6,7} so their joy soon expireth, and proves to be rather desolation than consolation—as lightning is followed with rending and roaring, as comets outblaze the very stars, but when their exhaled matter is wasted, they vanish and fill the air with pestilent vapours. The prophet Amos telleth the wicked that "their sun shall go down at noontide." {#Am 8:9} Surely as metals are then nearest melting when they shine brightest in the fire, and as the fishes swim merrily down the silver streams of Jordan till they suddenly fall into the Dead Sea, where presently they perish, so it fares with these merry Greeks that flee {a} when they should fear, and laugh when they should lament. "Woe to you that laugh," {#Lu 6:25} saith Christ; how suddenly are they put out as the fire of thorns! {#Ps 118:12}

{a} To laugh in a coarse, impudent, or unbecoming manner.

Ver. 7. Surely oppression maketh a wise man mad,] viz., Till such time as he hath recollected himself, and summoned the sobriety of his senses before his own judgment—till he hath reasoned himself and prayed himself out of his distemper, as David ^{a} did in #Ps 73:16,17 Anger is a short madness, fury a frenzy; and who so apprehensive of an injury as the wise man? and who so wise as not sometimes to be overcarried by his passion to his cost? Oppression may express that from the meekest Moses which he may sorely repent, but knows not how to remedy. Anger displays reason in the wisest sometimes, and especially in case of calumny—for the eye and the good name will bear no jests, as the proverb hath it. A man can better bear a thong on the back than a touch on the eye. You shall find some, saith Erasmus, that if death be threatened, can despise it, but to be belied they cannot brook, nor from revenge contain themselves. How could we digest that calumny (might Erasmus well think then) that he basely casts upon our profession in his epistle to Bilibaldus? Ubicunque regnat Lutherus, ibi literarum est interitus: duo tantum quaerunt, censum, et uxorem: Wheresoever Luther prevails, learning goes down; wealth and wives is all they look after. How ill himself, with all his wisdom, could endure this kind of oppression, appears by his Hyperaspistes, and many other his apologies—for by his playing on both hands, Nec evangelicorum vitavit censuras, nec apud episcopos et monachos gratiam inivit, ^{ b } he was beaten on both sides, which made him little less than mad; and it was but just upon him. David's grief was that his enemies traduced and abused him without cause. Job and Jeremiah make the same complaint, and were much troubled. Defamations, they knew well, do usually leave a kind of lower estimation many times, even where they are not believed. ^{c} Hence Paul's apologies and self-commendation, even to suspicion of madness almost. Hence Basil, in an epistle ad Bosphorum Episcop: Quo putas animum meum dolore affecit fama calumniae illius quam mihi offuderunt quidam, non metuentes Iudicem perditurum omnes loquentes mendacium? Tanto videlicet ut prope totam noctem insomnem duxerim: With what grief dost thou think, saith he, did that calumny oppress my mind, which some (not fearing the Judge that shall destroy all them that speak lies) did cast upon me? Even so much that I slept not almost all the night; so had the apprehended sadness possessed the secrets of mine heart.

And a gift destroyeth the heart, / i.e., Corrupts it, makes it blind, and so destroys it; as the eagle lights upon the hart's horns, flutters dust in his eyes, and so by blinding him brings him to destruction. {d}

See #De 16:19. {See Trapp on "De 16:19"} Let a judge be both wise (for his understanding) and righteous (for his will), a gift will mar all, as it is there: it dazzleth the eyes, and maketh a wise man mad.

Ver. 8. Better is the end of a thing than the beginning.] No right judgment can be made of anything unless we can see the end of it. God seems oft to go a contrary way to work, but by that time both ends be brought together, all is as it should be, and it appears that he doth all things in number, weight, and measure. We may learn (saith Mr Hooper, {a} martyr, in a certain letter exhorting to patience) by things that nourish and maintain us, both meat and drink, what loathsome and abhorring they come unto, before they work their perfection in us: from life they are brought to the fire, and clean altered from what they were when they were alive; from the fire to the trencher and knife, and all to be hacked; from the trencher to the mouth, and as small ground as the teeth can grind them; from the mouth into the stomach, and there so boiled and digested before they nourish, that whosoever saw the same would loathe and abhor his own nourishment, till it come to perfection. But as a man looketh for the nourishment of his meat when it is full digested, and not before, so must he look for deliverance when he hath suffered much trouble, and for salvation when he hath passed through the strait gate, &c. Let the wise man look to the end, and to the right which in the end God will do him, in the destruction of his oppressors; and this will patient his heart and heal his distemper. We "have heard of the patience of Job, and what end the Lord made with him. Be ye also patient," you shall shortly have help if ye hold out waiting. "Mark the upright man, and behold the just, for"—whatsoever his beginning or his middle be—"the end of that man is peace." {#Ps 37:37} Only he must hold out faith and patience, and not fall off from good beginnings; for as the evening crowneth the day, and as the grace of an interlude is in the last scene, so it is constancy that crowneth all graces, and he only that "continueth to the end that shall he saved." Laban was very kind at first, but he showed himself at parting.

Saul's three first years were good. Judas carried himself fair, usque ad loculorum officium, saith Tertullian, till the bag was committed to him. Many set out for heaven with as much seeming resolution as Lot's wife did out of Sodom, as Orpah did out of Moab, as the young man in the Gospel came to Christ; but after a while they fall away, they stumble at the cross, and fall backwards. Now to such it may well be said, The end is better than the beginning. Better it had been for such never to have known the way of God, &c. Christ loves no lookers back. See how he thunders against them. {#Heb 10:26,27,38,39} So doth St Paul against the Galatians, because they "did run well," but, lying down in that heat, they caught a surfeit, and fell into a consumption.

And the patient in spirit is better than the proud, &c.] Pride is the mother of impatience, as infidelity is of pride. "The just shall live by faith" {#Hab 2:4} -live upon promises, reversions, hopes—wait deliverance or want it, if God will have it so. "But his soul, which," for want of faith to ballast it, "is lifted up," and so presumes to set God a time wherein to come or never come, {#2Ki 6:33} "is not upright in him." Some things he doth, as it were a madman, not knowing or greatly caring what he doth, saith Gregory. {b} He frets at God and rails at men—lays about him on all hands, and never ceaseth, till in that distemperature he depart the world, which so oftentimes himself had distempered, as the chronicler {c} concludes the life of our Henry II.

Ver. 9. Be not hasty in thy spirit to be angry.] The hasty man, we say, never wants woe. For wrath is an evil counsellor, and enwrappeth a man in manifold troubles, mischiefs, and miseries. It makes man like the bee, that vindictive creature, which, to be revenged, loseth her sting, and becomes a drone; or, like Tamar, who, to be even with her father-in-law, defiled him and herself with incest. "Cease, therefore, from anger, and forsake wrath: fret not thyself in anywise to do evil." {#Ps 37:8} Athenodorus counselled Augustus to determine nothing rashly, when he was angry, till he had repeated the Greek alphabet. Ambrose taught Theodosius, in that case, to repeat the Lord's Prayer. What a shame it is to see a Christian act like Hercules furens, or like Solomon's fool, that casts firebrands, or as that demoniac, {#Mr 2:3} out of measure fierce! That demoniac was "among the tombs," but these are among the living, and molest those most that are nearest to them.

For anger resteth in the bosom of fools.] Rush it may into a wise man's bosom, but not rest there, lodge there, dwell there; and only where it dwells it domineers, and that is only where a fool is master of the family. Thunder, hail, tempest, neither trouble nor hurt celestial bodies. See that the sun go not down upon this evil guest: see that the soul be not soured or impured with it, for anger corrupts the heart, as leaven doth the lump, or vinegar the vessel wherein it doth continue. {a}

Ver. 10. Say not thou, What is the cause? &c.] This, saith an interpreter, {a} is the continual complaint of the wicked moody and the wicked needy. The moody Papists would murder all the godly, for they be Canaanites and Hagarens. The needy profane would murder all the rich, for they are lions in the grate. Thus he. It is the manner and humour of too many, saith another, {b} who would be thought wise to condemn the times in an impatient discontentment against them, especially if themselves do not thrive, or be not favoured in the times as they desire and as they think they should be. And these malcontents are commonly great questionists. What is the cause? say they, &c. It might be answered, In promptu causa est, - Themselves are the cause, for the times are therefore the worse, because they are no better. Hard hearts make hard times. But the Preacher answers better: "Thou dost not wisely inquire concerning this"; q.d., The objection is idle, and once to have recited it, is enough to have confuted it. Oh "if we had been in the days of our forefathers," said those hypocrites in #Mt 23:30, great business would have been done. Ay, no doubt of it, saith our Saviour, whereas you "fill up the measure of your fathers' sins," and are every whit as good at "resisting of the Holy Ghost" as they were. {#Ac 7:51} Or if there were any good heretofore more than is now, it may be said of these wise fools, as it was anciently of Demosthenes, that he was excellent at praising the worthy acts of ancestors—not so at imitating of them. {c} In all ages of the world there were complaints of the times, and not altogether without cause. Enoch, the seventh from Adam, complained; so did Noah, Lot, Moses, and the prophets; Christ, the archprophet, and all his apostles; the primitive fathers and professors of the truth. The common cry ever was, O terapora! O mores! Num Ecclesias suas dereliquit Dominus? said Basil, -Hath the Lord utterly left his Church? Is it now the last hour? Father Latimer saw so much wickedness in his days, that he thought it could not be but that Christ must come to judgment immediately, like as Elmerius, a monk of Malmesbury, from the same ground gathered the certainty of Antichrist's present reign. What pitiful complaints made Bernard, Bradwardine, Everard, Archbishop of Canterbury (who wrote a volume called Obiurgatorium temporis, the rebuke of the time), Petrarch, Mantuan, Savanarola, &c.! In the time of Pope Clement V, Frederick king of Sicily was so far offended at the ill government of the church, that he called into question the truth of the Christian religion, till he was better resolved and settled in the point by Arnoldus de Villanova, who showed him that it was long since foretold of these last and loosest times, that iniquity should abound—that men should be proud, lewd, heady, highminded, &c. {d} {#1Ti 4:1 2Ti 3:1-4} Lay aside, therefore, these frivolous inquiries and discontented cryings out against the times, which, in some sense reflect upon God, the Author of times—for "can there be evil in an age, and he hath not done it?"—and blessing God for our gospel privileges, which indeed should drown all our discontents, let every one mend one, and then let the world run its circuits—take its course. Vadat mundus quo vult: nam vult vadere quo vult, saith Luther bluntly, -Let the world go which way it will: for it will go which way it will. "The thing that hath been, is that which shall be," &c. {#Ec 1:9,10} Tu sic debes vivere, ut semper praesentes dies meliores tibi sint quam praeteriti, saith a father, {e} -Thou shouldst so live that thy last days may be thy best days, and the time present better to thee than the past was to those that then lived.

Ver. 11. Wisdom is good with an inheritance,]{a} So is it without it, but not so good, because wealth is both an ornament, an instrument, and an encouragement to wisdom. Aristides, saith Plutarch, {b} slandered and made justice odious by his poverty, as if it were a thing that made men poor, and were more profitable to others than to himself that useth it. God will not have wealth always entailed to wisdom, that wisdom may be admired for itself, and that it may appear that the love and service of the saints is not mercenary and meretricious. But godliness hath the promises of both lives. And the righteous shall leave inheritance to his children's children. Or if he do not so, yet he shall leave them a better thing, for "by wisdom" (abstracted from wealth) "there is profit"; or, it is "more excellent," or "better," (as the Hebrew word signifies), as the apostle in another case, "And yet show I you a more excellent way" {#1Co 12:31} -viz., that graces are better than gifts; so here, that wisdom is better than wealth. And if Jacob may see "his children the work of God's hands," framed and fitted by the word of God's grace ("the wisdom of God in a mystery,") this would better preserve him from confusion, and "his face from waxing pale," than if he could make his children "princes in all lands"; {#Ps 45:16} yea, this will make him to sanctify God's name, yea, to 'sanctify the Holy One,' and with singular encouragement from the God of Israel. {#Isa 29:22,23}

Ver. 12. For wisdom is a defence, and money, &c.] Heb., A shadow; viz., to those that have seen the sun (as in the former verse), and are scorched with the heat of it—that are under the miseries and molestations of life. Wisdom in this case is a wall of defence and a well of life. Money also is a thorn hedge, of very good use, {#Job 1:10} so it be set without the affections, and get not into the heart, as the Pharisees' ενοντα did. {#Lu 11:41} Their riches were got within them, and, by choking the seed, kept wisdom out.

Wisdom giveth life to them that have it.] For "God is both a sun and a shield," or shadow. "He will give grace and glory." {#Ps 84:11} Life in any sense is a sweet mercy, but the life of "grace and of glory" may well challenge the precellency. No marvel, therefore, though wisdom bear away the bell from wealth, which, as it serves only to the uses of life natural, so, being misused, it "drowns many a soul in perdition and destruction," {#1Ti 6:9} and proves "the root of all evil"; {#1Ti 6:10} yea, it taketh away the life of the owner thereof. {#Pr 1:19} {See Trapp on "Pr 1:19"} It is confessed that wealth sometimes giveth life to them that have it, as it did to those ten Jews that had treasures in the field, {#Jer 41:8} and doth to those condemned men that can take a lease of their lives. But Nabal's wealth had undone him, if Abigail's wisdom had not interposed. And in the other life money bears no mastery. Adam had it not in paradise, and in heaven there is no need of it.

Ver 13. Consider the work of God, &c.] q.d., Stoop, since there is no standing out. See God in that thou sufferest, and submit. God by a crooked tool many times makes straight work; he avengeth the quarrel of his covenant by the Assyrian, that rod of God's wrath, though he thinks not so. {#Isa 10:5-7} Job could discern God's arrows in Satan's hand, and God's hand on the arms of the Sabean robbers. He it is that "killeth and maketh alive," saith holy Hannah; "he maketh poor and maketh rich, he bringeth low and lifteth up." {#Isa 2:6,7} All is done according to the counsel of his will; who, as he may do what he pleases, so he will be sure never to overdo; his holy hand shall never be further stretched out to smite, than to save. {#Isa 59:1} This made David "dumb, for he knew it was God's doing." {#Ps 39:2} "It is the Lord," said Eli, "let him do," {#1Sa 3:18} and I will suffer, lest I add passive disobedience to active. Aaron, his predecessor, had done the like before him upon the same consideration, in the untimely end of his untowardly children. {#Le 10:3} Jacob, likewise, in the rape of Dinah. {#Ge 34:5} Agnovit haud dubie ferulam divinam, saith Pareus on that text; he considered the work of God in it, and that it was in vain for him to seek to make that straight which God had made crooked. There is no standing before a lion, no hoisting up sail in a tempest, no contending with the Almighty. "Who ever waxed fierce against God and prospered?" {#Job 9:4} Who ever got anything by kicking against the pricks, by biting the rod which they should rather have kissed? See #Isa 14:27 Job 9:12,13 34:12-18. Set God before your passions, when they are up in a hurry, and all will be hushed. Set down proud flesh when it bustles and bristles under God's fatherly chastisements, and say soberly to yourselves, Shall I not drink of the cup that my Father, who is also my physician, hath put into mine hands; stand under the cross that he hath laid on my shoulders; stoop unto the yoke that he hangeth on my neck? Drink down God's cup willingly, said Mr Bradford the martyr, and at first when it is full, lest if we linger we drink at length of the dregs with the wicked. Ferre minora volo, ne graviora feram. That was a very good saying of Demosthenes, who was ever better at praising virtue than at practising it. Good men should ever do the best, and then hope the best. But if anything happen worse than was hoped for, let that which God will have done be borne with patience.

Ver. 14. In the day of prosperity be joyful.] Here we have some fair days, some foul—crosses like foul weather, come before they are sent for; for as fair weather, the more is the pity, may do hurt, so may prosperity, as it did to David, {#Ps 30:6} who therefore had his interchanges of a worse condition, as it was but needful; his prosperity, like checker work, was intermingled with adversity. See the circle God goes in with his people; {a} in that thirtieth Psalm David was afflicted; {#Ps 30:5} he was delivered and grew wanton; then troubled again; {#Ps 30:7} cries again; {#Ps 30:8,9} God turns his mourning into joy again. Thus God sets the one against the other, as it were, in equilibrio, in even balance, for our greatest good. Sometimes he weighs us in the balance and finds us too light, then he thinks best to make us "heavy through manifold temptations." {#1Pe 1:6} Sometimes he finds our water somewhat too high, and then as a physician, no less cunning than loving, he fits us with that which will reduce all to the healthsome temper of a broken spirit. But if we be but prosperity proof, there is no such danger of adversity. Some of those in Queen Mary's days who kept their garments close about them, wore them afterwards more loosely. Prosperity makes the saints rust sometimes; therefore God sets his scullions to scour them and make them bright, though they make themselves black. This scouring if they will scape, let Solomon's counsel be taken, "In the day of prosperity be joyful,"—i.e., serve God with cheerfulness in the abundance of all things, and reckon upon it, the more wages the more work. Is it not good reason? Solomon's altar was four times as large as that of Moses; and Ezekiel's temple ten times larger than Solomon's; to teach that where God gives much, he expects much. Otherwise God will "curse our blessings," {#Mat 2:2} make us "ashamed of our revenues through his fierce anger," {#Jer 12:13} and "destroy us after he hath done us good." {#Jos 24:20}

In the day of adversity consider.] Sit alone, and be in meditation of the matter. {#La 3:28} "Commune with your own consciences and be still," {#Ps 4:4} or make a pause. See who it is that smites thee, and for what. {#La 3:40} Take God's part against thyself, as a physician observes which way nature works, and helps it. Consider that God "afflicts not willingly," or "from his heart"; it goes as much against the heart with him as against the hair with us. {#La 3:33} He is forced of "very faithfulness" {#Ps 119:75} to afflict us, because he will be true to our souls and save them; he is forced to diet us, who have surfeited of prosperity, and keep us short. He is forced to purge us, as wise physicians do some patients, till he bring us almost to skin and bone; and to let us bleed even ad deliquium animae, till we swoon again, that there may be a spring of better blood and spirits. Consider all those precious passages, {#Heb 12:3-12} and then lift up the languishing hands and feeble knees. For your further help herein, read my treatise called "God's Love Tokens," and "The Afflicted Man's Lessons," passim.

{a} Circulus quidem est in rebus humanis. Deus nos per contraria eridit. -Naz., Orat. 7.

Ver. 15. All things have I seen in the days of my vanity,] i.e., Of my life, which is so very a vanity that no man can perfectly describe it, or directly tell what it is. He came somewhat near the matter that said it was a spot of time between two eternities.

There is a just man that perisheth in his righteousness.] The first man that died, died for religion. How early did martyrdom come into the world! How valiant for the truth and violent for the kingdom have God's suffering saints been ever since, preferring affliction before sin, and choosing rather to perish in their righteousness than to part with it! Ignatius triumphed in his voyage to Rome to suffer, to think that his blood should be found among the mighty worthies, and that when the Lord makes inquisition for blood, he will recount from the blood of righteous Abel, not only to the blood of Zaccharias, son of Barachias, but also to the blood of mean Ignatius. "Blessed are they that are persecuted for righteousness' sake," {#Mt 5:10} {See Trapp on "Mt 5:10"}

And there is a wicked man that prolongeth his life.] This, as the former event likewise, proves a great stumblingblock to many; to see good men perish, bad men flourish and live long in sin, with impunity, credit, and countenance, as Manasseh, that monster of men, who reigned longest of any king of Judah. Jeroboam lived to see three successions in the throne of Judah. Thus the ivy lives when the oak is dead. David George, that odious heretic, lived to a great age, and died in peace and plenty. Ann Stanhope, Duchess of Somerset, wife of the Protector, Edward Seymour, after she had raised such tragedies about precedence with Queen Catherine, and caused the ruin of her husband and his brother the admiral, died A.D. 1587, being ninety-nine years of age. {a} Length of days is no sure rule of God's favour. As plants last longer than sensitive creatures, and brute creatures outlive the reasonable, {b} so among the reasonable it is no news, neither should it trouble us, that the wickedly great do inherit these worldly glories longer than the best; it is all they are like to have, let them make them merry with it. Some wicked men live long that they may aggravate their judgment, others die sooner that they may hasten it.

Ver. 16. Be not righteous over much, neither make, &c.] Virtue consists in a mediocrity. Omne quod est nimium vertitur in vitium. A rigid severity may mar all. {a} "Let your moderation, το ετιεκες, be known to all men"; {#Php 4:5} prefer equity before extremity: utmost right may be utmost wrong. He is righteous over much that will remit nothing of his right, but exercise great censures for light offences; this is, as one said, to kill a fly upon a man's forehead with a beetle. Justice, if not mixed with mercy, degenerates into cruelty. Again, he is righteous more than is meet that maketh sins where God hath made none, as those superstitioſtdi of old, and the Papists to this day do with their "Touch not, taste not, handle not: which things have indeed a show of wisdom in will worship," &c. {#Col 2:21,23} Will worshippers are usually over wise, i.e., overweening, and also too well conceited of their own wisdom and worth. Hence it is that they cannot do, but they must overdo, {b} till "wearied in the greatness of their way," {#Isa 57:10} they see and say that it had been best to have held the king's highway, chalked out unto them by the "royal law," {#Jas 2:8} that "perfect law of liberty." {#Jas 1:25} Via regis temperata est, nec plus in se habens, nec minus; {c} the middle way is the way of God, neither having too much, nor yet too little. True it is, saith the heathen orator, {d} that nemo pius est qui pistatem caret, no man is godly, that is afraid of being so. But then it is no less true, and the same author speaks it, Modum esse religionis, nimium esse superstitiosum non oportere; {e} that there is a reason in being religious, and that men must see they be not superstitious. Solomon saith, that he that wrings his nose overhard, brings blood out of it. Pliny saith, he that tills his land too much, doth it to his loss. {f} Apelles said those painters were to blame, qui non sentirent quid esset satis, that could not see when they had done sufficient. {g} It is reported of the river Nile, that if it either exceed or be defective in its due overflowings of the land of Egypt, it causeth famine. {h} The planet Jupiter, situated between cold Saturn and hot Mars, Ex utroque temperatus est, et saluteris, saith Pliny, {i} partakes of both, and is benign and wholesome to the sublunary creatures.

Ver. 17. Be not wicked over much,] viz., Because thou seest some wicked men live long, and scape scot free for the present, as #Ec 7:15. For God may cut thee short enough, and make thee die before thy time—i.e., before thou art fit to die—and when it were better for thee to do anything rather than die, since thou diest in thy sins, which is much worse than to die in a ditch. Now they are too much wicked, and egregiously foolish, that "add rebellion to sin," {#Job 34:37} "drunkenness to thirst," {#De 29:19} "doing wickedly with both hands earnestly," {#Mic 7:3} refusing to be reformed, hating to be healed. These take long strides toward the burning lake, which is but a little before them. The law many times lays hold of them, the gallows claims its right, they preach in a Tyburn tippet, as they say; or otherwise, God cuts them off betime, even long before, as he knows their thoughts and dispositions long before. We used to destroy hemlock even in the midst of winter, because we know what it will do if suffered to grow. "Bloody and deceitful men shall not live out half their days." {#Ps 55:23} God cut off Eli's two sons in one day for their excessive wickedness; and further threatened their father, that there should not be an old man left in his house for ever. {#1Sa 2:32} Wicked men die tempore non suo, as the text is by some rendered. The saints die not till the best time, not till their work is done—and then God sends them to bed; the two witnesses could not be killed while they were doing it—not till that time, when if they were but rightly informed, they would even desire to die.

Ver. 18. It is good that thou shouldst take hold of this,] i.e., Of this golden mean, walking accurately by line and by rule, and continuing constant in thine integrity, not turning aside to the right hand or to the left. As for those that "turn aside unto those crooked ways" {#Ps 125:5} of being just too much by needless scrupulosity, or wicked excessively by detestable exorbitancy, "the Lord shall lead them forth with the workers of iniquity," as cattle led to the slaughter, or malefactors to execution; whereas, "he that feareth God shall come out of them all." He shall "look forthright," {#Pr 4:25} and shall have "no occasion of stumbling." {#1Jo 2:10} He shall also be freed from, or pulled as a "firebrand out of the fire." {#Zec 3:2}

Ver. 19. Wisdom strengtheneth the wise, &c.] Prudence excelleth puissance, and counsel valour. This made Agamemnon set such a price upon Ulysses; Darius, upon Zopyrus; the Syracusans, upon Archimedes; the Spartans, upon Leonidas, who, with six hundred men, dispersed five hundred thousand of Xerxes his host. {a} Those that are wise to salvation go ever under a double guard; the peace of God within them, the power of God without them. No sultan of Babylon or Egypt (who have that title from the Hebrew word here rendered mighty men) did ever go so well guarded. {See Trapp on "Pr 21:22"}

Ver. 20. For there is not a just man upon earth.] No, this is reserved for the state of perfection in heaven, where are "the spirits of just men made perfect." {#Heb 12:23} It was the cavil wherewith the Pelagians troubled St Augustine, whether it were impossible that by the absolute power of God a just man might not live on earth without sin? ^{a} But what have we to do here with the absolute power of God? His revealed will is, "That there is not a just man upon earth that doth good and sinneth not"; nay, that sinneth not, even in his doing of good. Our righteousness, while we are on earth, is mixed, as light and darkness, dimness at least, in a painted glass dyed with some obscure and dim colour; it is transparent and giveth good, but not clear and pure light. It is a witty observation of a late learned divine, ^{b} that the present tense in grammar is accompanied with the imperfect, the future with the preter-pluperfect tense; and that such is the condition of our present and future holiness. Our future is more than perfect, our present is imperfect indeed, but yet true holiness and happiness. {See Trapp on "Pr 20:9"}

Ver. 21. Also take no heed.] But be "as a deaf man that heareth not, and as a dumb man, in whose mouth there is no reproof." {#Ps 38:13} If thou answer anything, say as he in Tacitus did to one that railed at him, Tu linguae, ego vero aurium dominus, Thou mayest say what thou wilt, but I will hear as I wish; or as once a certain steward did to his passionate lord, when he called him knave, &c.:—"Your honour may speak as you please, but I believe not a word that you say, for I know myself an honest man." The language of reproachers must be read like Hebrew, backwards. Princes used to correct the indecencies of ambassadors by denying them audience. Certain it is, that he enjoys a brave composedness that sets himself above the flight of the injurious claw. Isaac's apology to his brother Ishmael, viz., patience and silence is the best answer to words of scorn and petulance, said learned Hooker. I care not for man's day, saith Paul. {#1Co 4:3} Non cum vanum calumniatorem, I regard not a vain slanderer, saith Augustine. Wicelius and Cochleus gave out that we Lutherans betrayed the Rhodes to the Turk, saith Melancthon. These impudent lies need no confutation, dicant ipsi talia quoad velint, let them tell such loud and lewd lies as many as they will. When a net is spread for a bird, saith Augustine, the manner is to throw stones at the hedge. These stones hurt not the bird, but she, hearing and fearing this vain sound, falls into the net. In like manner, saith he, men that fear and regard the vain sound of all ill words, what do they but fall into the devil's net, who thereby carries them captive into much evil, many troubles and inconvenience?

Lest thou hear thy servant curse thee.] Who should in duty speak the best of thee, though frample and froward, cross and crooked. {#1Pe 2:18} Or by "servant" understand base, inferior people, such as were Tobiah the servant, the Ammonite, and those "abjects" that "tare David's name, and ceased not." {#Ps 35:15}

Ver. 22. For oftentimes also thine own heart knows.] Conscience is God's spy, and man's overseer; and though some can make a sorry shift to muzzle her for a time, or to stop their own ears, yet ipsa se offert, ipsa se ingerit, saith Bernard; sooner or later she will tell a man his own to some tune, as they say; she will not go behind the door to let him know that he himself likewise hath cursed others, as now by God's just judgment others curse him. The conscience of our own evil doings, though hid from the world, should meeken us toward those that do amiss. See #Tit 3:3. Say to yourselves, —

“ Aut sumus, aut fuimus, aut possumus esse quod hic est.”

Either we are, or will be, or we are able to be what this is. The wrong that David had done to Uriah helped him to bear the barkings of that dead dog Shimei. Here, then, "Take no heed unto all words," &c., as in the former verse. For, nihil amarius quam id ipsum pati quod feceris, {a} there is nothing more bitter than to suffer that which thou hast done to others; because those sufferings sting the conscience with unquestionable conviction and horror, as is to be seen in Adonibezek, who acknowledged with a regret, a just remuneration. {#Jud 1:7}

Ver. 23. I said, I will be wise; but it was far from me.] Solomon here seems to say of wisdom, as Nazianzen doth of God the author of it, Tantum recedit, quantum capitur. Not that wisdom itself doth fly away, but because that they who have most of it do especially understand that it exceedeth the capacity of any one to be able to comprehend it (as Basil {a} gives the reason), so that they that think they have got demonstrations perceive afterwards that they are no more than topica aut sophisticae rationes, topical or sophistical arguments, as Lyra here noteth. Bonus quidam vir solebat esse solus, &c., saith Melancthon: a certain well meaning man was wont to walk and study much alone, and lighting upon Aristotle's discourse concerning the nature of the rainbow, he fell into many odd speculations and strange conceits; and, writing to a friend of his, told him that in all other matters, though dark and obscure, he had outdone Aristotle; but in the matter of the rainbow he had outdone himself. After this he came into the public schools, and disputed of that argument, Et tote prorsus coelo a veritate aberrabat suis phantasiis; {b} and then he came to see that he had been utterly out, and strangely miscarried by those phantasies which he had so strongly fancied.

Ver. 24. That which is far of and exceeding deep.] Not the minions of the muses, Mentemque habere queis bonam, et esse corculis datum est. {a} For though they should eviscerate themselves, like spiders, crack their sconces, or study themselves to death, yet can they not "understand all mysteries and all knowledge" {#1Co 13:2} in natural things, how much less in supernatural! whereas weak sighted and sand blind persons, the more they strain their eyes to discern a thing perfectly, the less they see of it, as Vives hath observed. {b} It is utterly impossible for a mere naturalist, that cannot tell the form, the quintessence, that cannot enter into the depth of the flower, or the grass he treads on, to have the wit to enter into the deep things of God, "the mystery of Christ which was hid" {#Eph 3:9,10} from angels till the discovery, and since that they are still students in it. David, though he saw further than his ancients, {#Ps 119:99} yet he was still to seek of that which might be known. {#Ps 119:96} Even as those great discoverers of the newly found lands in America, at their return were wont to confess, that there was still a plus ultra, something more beyond yet. Not only in innumerable other things am I very ignorant, saith Augustine, but also in the very Scriptures, multo plura nescio quam scio, {c} I am ignorant of many more things by odds than I yet understand. This present life is like the vale of Sciaessa, near unto the town called Patrae, of which Solinus saith, that it is famous for nothing but for its darksomeness, as being continually overcast with the shadows of nine hills that do surround it, so that the sun can hardly cast a beam of light into it. {a} Properemus ad coelestem Academiam, Let us hasten to the university of heaven, where the least child knows a thousand times more than the deepest doctor upon earth.

Ver. 25. I applied mine heart.] Circuivi ego et cot meum, so the original runs; I and my heart turned about, or made a circle to know, &c. He took his heart with him, and resolved, hard or not hard, to make further search into wisdom's secrets. Difficulty doth but whet on heroic spirits: it doth no whit weaken but waken their resolutions to go through with the work. When Alexander met with any hard or hazardous piece of service, he would say, Iam periculum par anime Alexandri, He ever achieved what he enterprised, because he never accounted anything impossible to be achieved. David was well pleased with the condition of bringing in to Saul the foreskins of a hundred Philistines. If a bowl run downhill, a rub in the way does but quicken it; as if up hill, it slows it. A man of Solomon's make, one that hath a free, noble, princely spirit, speaks to wisdom, as Laelius in Lucan did to Caesar,

And to know the wickedness of folly.] The "sinfulness of sin." {#Ro 7:13} Sin is so evil that it cannot have a worse epithet given it. "Mammon of unrighteousness," {#Lu 16:11} is the next odious name to the devil.

Even the foolishness of madness.] That by one contrary he might the better know the other. Folly may serve as a foil to set off wisdom; as gardeners suffer some stinking stuff to grow near their sweetest flowers.

Ver. 26. And I found more bitter than death.] Amantes amentes: Amor amaror, Plus aloes quam mellis habet. Knowest thou not that there is bitterness in the end? Heus scholastiae, said the harlot to Apuleius, Hark, scholar, your sweet bits will prove bitter in the close. {a}

“ Principium dulce est, at finis amoris amarus.”

The pomegranate, with its sweet kernels, but bitter rind, is an emblem of the bitter sweet pleasure of sin. It is observed of our Edward III that he had always fair weather at his passage into France, and foul upon his return. {b} Laeta venire Venus, tristis abire solet. The panther hides her head till she sees her time to make prey of those other beasts that, drawn by her sweet smell, follow her to their own destruction. {c} The poet's fable, that pleasure and pain complained one of another to Jupiter, and that, when he could not decide the controversy between them, he tied them together with chains of adamant, never to be sundered.

The woman.] The wanton woman, that shame of her sex. A bitch, Moses calls her; {#De 23:18} St Paul, a living ghost, a walking sepulchre of herself. {#1Ti 5:6} Cum careat pura mente, cadaver agit. "This I find," saith Solomon, where "I" is "I" with a witness; he had found it by woeful experience, and now relates it for a warning to others. Saith he—“ Quid facies facies veneris cum veneris ante?

Non sed eas, sed eas: ne pereas, per eas.”

Whose heart is snares and nets.] Heb., Hunters' snares; for she "hunteth for the precious life," {#Pr 6:26} and the devil, by her, hunts for the precious soul, there being not anything that hath more enriched hell than harlots. All is good fish that comes to these nets; but they are "taken alive by the devil at his pleasure" {#2Ti 2:26}

And her hands as bands.] To captivate and enslave those that haunt her, as Delilah did Samson, as the harlot did the young novice, {#Pr 7:22} as Solomon's Moabitish mistress did him, and as it is said of the Persian kings, that they were captivarum suarum captivi, { d} captives to their concubines, who dared to take the crown from their heads, or do anything to them almost, when others might not come near them uncalled upon pain of death {#Es 4:11}

Whoso pleaseth God shall escape from her.] As Joseph did, and Bellerophon, though with a difference: Joseph out of a principle of chastity, Bellerophon of continence. The continent person refrains either for love of praise, or fear of punishment, but not without grief, for inwardly he is scalded with boiling lust, as Alexander, Scipio, and Pompey were, when, tempted with the exquisiteness and variety of choicest beauties, they forbore. Vellem, si non essem imperator. I would if I were not a general. But now the chaste man, who is good before God—one whom he approves and takes pleasure in—is holy both in body and spirit, {#1Co 7:34} and this with delight, out of fear of God and love of virtue. God did much for that libidinous gentleman, who, sporting with a courtesan in a house of sin, happened to ask her name, which she said was Mary; whereat he was stricken with such a remorse and reverence, that he instantly not only cast off the harlot, but amended his future life. {e}

But the sinner shall be taken by her.] {See Trapp on "Pr 22:14"} The poet's fable, that when Prometheus had discovered truth to men, that had long lain hid from them, Jupiter, or the devil, to cross that design, sent Pandora, -that is, pleasure—that should so besot them, as that they should neither mind nor make out after truth and honesty.

So the Preacher here, having by diligence set open the door of truth, {a} cries, Venite, videte, Come and see my discoveries, in the making whereof I have been very exact, "counting one by one," ne mole obruerer, lest I should be oppressed with many things at once.

Ver. 28. Which yet my soul seeketh, but I find not.] There is a place in Wiltshire called Stonhenge, for various great stones lying and standing there together: of which stones it is said, {a} that though a man number them "one by one" never so carefully, yet that he cannot find the true number of them, but that every time he numbers them he finds a different number from that he found before. This may well show, as one well applies it, the erring of man's labour in seeking the account of wisdom and knowledge; for, though his diligence be never so great in making the reckoning, he will always be out, and not able to find it out.

One man among a thousand.] Haud facile iuvenies multis e milibus unum. There is a very great scarcity of good people. These are as Gideon's three hundred, when the wicked, as the Midianites, lie "like grasshoppers for multitude upon the earth," {#Jud 7:7,12} and as those Syrians, {#1Ki 20:27} they fill the country, they darken the air, as the swarms did the land of Egypt; and there is plenty of such dust heaps in every corner.

But a woman among all those have I not found,] i.e., Among all my wives and concubines, which made him ready to sing, Femina nulla bona est. There is no good woman. But that there are, and ever have been, many gracious women, see, besides the Scriptures, the writings of many learned men, De illustribus feminis. Concerning Illustrious Women. It is easy to observe, saith one, that the New Testament affords more store of good wives than the Old. And I can say, as Jerome does, Novi ego multas ad omne opus bonum promptas, I know many Tabithas full of good works. But in respect of the discovery of hearts and natures, whether in good or evil, it is harder to find out thoroughly the perfect disposition of a woman than of men; and that I take to be the meaning of this text.

Ver. 29. That God hath made man upright,] viz., In his own image—i.e., "knowledge" in his understanding part, "rightness" in his will, and "holiness" in his affections: {#Col 3:10} his heart was a lump of love, &c., when he came first out of God's mint, he shone most glorious, clad with the royal robe of righteousness, created with the imperial crown. {#Ps 8:5} But the devil soon stripped him of it; he cheated and robbed him of the crown, as we use to do children, with the apple, or whatsoever fruit it was that he tendered to Eve: Porrexit pomum et surripuit paradisum. {a} He also set his limbs in the place of God's image, so that now, Is qui factus est homo differt ab eo quem Deus fecit, as Philo saith, man is now of another make than God made him. Totus homo est inversus decalogus, Whole evil is in man, and whole man in evil. Neither can he cast the blame upon God, but must fault himself, and flee to the second Adam for repair.

But they have sought out many inventions.] New tricks and devices, like those poetic fictions and fabulous relations, whereof there is neither proof nor profit. The Vulgate Latin hath it, Et ipse se infinitis miscuit quaestionibus; And he hath entangled himself with numberless questions and fruitless speculations. See #1Ti 1:4 6:4, "doting about questions," or question sick. Bernard reads it thus, Ipse autem se implicuit doloribus multis, but he hath involved himself in many troubles, the fruit of his inventions, shifts, and shirking tricks. {see #Jer 6:19}

Ver. 1. Who is as the wise man?] q.d., He is a matchless man, a peerless paragon, outshining others as much as the moon doth the lesser stars. {a} Plato could say that no gold or precious stone doth glister so gloriously, ωσπερ αγαθων ανδρων νοος συμφραδμων, as the prudent spirit of a good man. "Thou art a prince of God amongst us," said the Hittites to Abraham. "Can we find such a man as this Joseph, in whom the Spirit of God is?" said Pharaoh to his counsellors. {#Ge 41:38} "Hast thou considered my servant Job, that there is none like him on the earth?" {#Job 1:8} "My servant Moses is not so, who is faithful in all my house," and shall be of my cabinet council. {#Nu 12:7} To him God said, Tu vero hic sta mecum, "But do thou stand here by me." {#Ex 34:5} Sapiens Dei comes est, saith Philo. Look how kings have their favourites, whom they call comites, their cousins and companions; so hath God. Nay, the righteous are

"princes in all lands," {#Ps 45:16} kings in righteousness; {#Mt 13:17 Lu 10:24} the "excellent ones of the earth," {#Ps 16:3} the worthies of the world, {#Heb 11:5} fitter to be set as stars in heaven, and to be continually before the throne of God. Chrysostom {b} calls some holy men of his time, ἀγγέλους, earthly angels; and speaking of Babylac the martyr, he saith of him, {c} Magnus atque admirabilis vir, He was an excellent and an admirable man, &c. And Tertullian, writing to some of the martyrs, says, Non tantus sum ut vos alloquar, I am not good enough to speak unto you. Oh that my life, and a thousand such wretches more, might go for yours! Oh, why doth God suffer me and other such caterpillars to live, saith John Careless, martyr, in a letter to that angel of God, Mr Bradford, as Dr Taylor called him, that can do nothing but consume the alms of the Church, and take away you, so worthy a workman and labourer in the Lord's vineyard. {d}

And who knoweth the interpretation of a thing?] Wise a man may be, and yet not so apt and able to wise others. Those wise ones that can wise others, so as to "turn them to righteousness, shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, yea, as the stars"; {#Da 12:3} they do so while upon earth. Wisdom makes their very faces to shine, as St Stephen's did, {#Ac 6:15} and as holy Job's, while he was in a prosperous condition. {#Job 29:8-10} Jobab he was then (the same, some think, that is mentioned #Ge 36:33), as when in distress his name was contracted into Job. And then, though himself were otherwise wise, he might want "an interpreter, one of a thousand"—for such are rare, every man cannot sell us this precious oil {#Mt 25:9} - "to show unto him his righteousness,"—that is, the righteousness of his own experience—how himself hath been helped and comforted in like case, or, to clear up to an afflicted Job his spiritual estate, and to show him his evangelical righteousness. Oh "how beautiful are the feet" of such an interpreter! "I have seen thy face," saith the poor soul to such, "as though I had seen the face of God." {#Ge 33:10}

A man's wisdom maketh his face to shine.] Godliness is venerable and reverend. "Holy and reverend is his name." {#Ps 111:9} God's image is amiable and admirable, Natural conscience cannot but stoop and do obeisance to it, What a deal of respect did Nebuchadnezzar and Darius put upon Daniel! Alexander the Great upon Jaddus the high priest! Theodosius upon Ambrose! Constantine upon Paphnutius, kissing that eye of his that was bored out for the cause of Christ! &c. Godly men have a daunting presence, as Athanasius had, and Basil, to whom when Valens the Arian emperor came, while he was in holy exercises, it struck such a terror into him that he reeled, and had fallen had he not been upheld by those that were with him. {e} Henry II of France being present at the martyrdom of a certain tailor, burnt by him for religion, was so terrified by the boldness of his countenance, and the constance of his sufferings, that he swore at his going away that he would never any more be present at such a sight. {f}

And the boldness of his face shall be changed.] Or, Doubled; his conscience bearing him out, and making him undaunted, as it did David, {#Ps 3} and the Dutch martyr Colonus, who, calling to the judge that had sentenced him to death, desired him to lay his hand upon his heart, and then asked him whose heart did most beat, his or the judge's? By this boldness Jonathan and his armourbearer set upon the garrison of the Philistines, David upon Goliath their champion, The Black Prince was so called, not of his colour, but of his valour and dreaded acts in battle. {g}

Ver. 2. To keep the king's commandment.] Heb., Mouth—i.e., the express word of command. Go not here by guess or good intention, lest you speed as that Scotch captain did, who, not expecting orders from his superiors, took an advantage offered him of taking a fort of the enemy's; for which good service he was knighted in the morning, but hanged in the afternoon of the same day for acting without orders. {a}

And that in regard of the oath of God.] Thine oath of allegiance to thy prince. This Papists make nothing of. Pascenius scoffs King James for the invention of it. They can swear with their mouths, and keep their hearts unsworn, as she in the comedy. ^{b} Mercatorum est stare iuramentis, say they at Rome. They can assoil men of their allegiance at pleasure, and slip their solemn oaths as easily as monkeys do their collars. And I would this were the sin of Papists only, and that there were not those found even amongst us that keep no oaths further than makes for their own turn, like as the Jews keep none, unless they swear upon their own Torah, brought out of their synagogues. ^{c}

Ver. 3. Be not hasty to go out of his sight.] Turn not thy back discontentedly, fling not away in a chafe; for this will be construed for a contempt, as it was in the Earl of Essex, A.D. 1598. Dissension occuring between the queen and him about a fit man for governor of Ireland, he, forgetting himself, and neglecting his duty, uncivilly turned his back, with a scornful countenance. She waxing impatient, gave him a cuff on the ear, bidding him be gone with a vengeance. He laid his hand upon his sword; the Lord Admiral interposing himself, he swore a great oath, that he neither could nor would swallow so great an indignity, nor would have born it at King Henry VIII's hands, and in great discontentment hasted from the court. But within a while after he became submissive, and was received again into favour by the queen, who always thought it more just to offend a man than to hate him. ^{a} The very Turks are said to receive humiliation with all sweetness, but to be remorseless to those that bear up. ^{b}

Ver. 4. Where the word of a king is, there is power.] Ibi dominatio. He hath long hands, and can reach thee at a great distance, as Mithridates did when with one letter he slew eighth thousand citizens of Rome that were scattered up and down his kingdom for trading's sake. ^{a} So Selimus the great Turk, in revenge for the loss received at the battle of Lepanto, was once in a mind to have put to death all the Christians in his dominions, in number infinite. ^{b} Charles IX of France is reported to have been the death of thirty thousand of his Protestant subjects in one year's time, A.D. 1572. See #Da 5:19.

And who may say unto him, What doest thou?] viz., Without danger. What safety can there be in taking a bear by the tooth, or a lion by the beard? I dare not dispute, said the philosopher to the Emperor Adrian, with him that hath thirty legions at his command, Neque in eum scribere, qui potest proscribere, nor write against him that can as easily undo me as bid it to be done. {e} Howbeit Elias, Micaiah, John Baptist, and other holy prophets and ministers have dealt plainly with great princes, and God hath secured them. John, Bishop of Salisbury, reprov'd the Pope to his face; and yet the Canonists say, that although the Pope should draw millions of souls to hell with him, none may dare to say unto him, What doest thou? But Philip the Fair made bold with his Holiness when he began his letter to him with Sciat Fatuitas Tua, &c. So did the barons of England in King John's days, when declaring against the Pope and his conclave, by whom they were excommunicated, they cried out thus in their remonstrance, Fie on such rascal knaves. {a} Adelmelect, Bishop of Sherborn, A.D. 705, reprov'd Pope Sergius sharply to his face for his adultery. {e} So did Bishop Lambert reprehend King Pepin for the same fault, A.D. 798. {f} And Archbishop Odo, King Edwin, burning his concubines in the forehead with a hot iron, and banishing them into Ireland. {g} Father Latimer dealt no less faithfully with King Henry VIII in his sermons at Court. And being asked by the king how he dared to be so bold to preach after that manner, he answered that duty to God and to his prince had enforced him to it; and now that he had discharged his conscience, his life was in his Majesty's hands, &c. Truth must be spoken, however it be taken. If God's messengers must be mannerly in the form, yet in the matter of their message to great ones they must be resolute. It is probable that Joseph used some kind of preface to Pharaoh's baker in reading him that hard destiny; {#Ge 40:19} such, likely, as was that of Daniel to Nebuchadnezzar, "My Lord, the dream be to them that hate thee," &c.; {#Da 4:19} or as Philo brings him in with an utinam tale somnium non vidisses, &c. But for the matter, he gives him a sound, though sharp interpretation.

Ver. 5. Whoso keepeth the commandment,] scil., The king's commandment. He that is compliant, and goes as far as he can with a good conscience in his obedience to the commands of his superiors, "shall feel no evil," i.e., he shall lack no good encouragement. {#Ro 13:3,4} Or if men slight him, God will see to him, {#Eph 6:7,8} as he did to the poor Israelites in Egypt, and to David under Saul. Mordecai lost nothing at length by his love and loyalty to God and the king. Sir Ralph Percy, slain upon Hedgely Moor, in Northumberland, by the Lord Montacute, general for Edward IV, would noways depart the field, though defeated, but in dying, said, I have saved the bird in my breast, meaning his oath to King Henry VI, for whom he fought. {a}

And a wise man's heart discerneth both time and judgment,] scil., When and how to obey kings' commands, the time, the means, and manner thereof, despatching them without offence to God or man. And this "a wise man's heart discerneth," saith the Preacher; it being the opinion of the Hebrews that in the heart especially the soul did keep her court, and exercise her noble operations of the understanding, invention, judgment, &c. Aristotle saith, Sine calore cordis anima in corpore nihil efficit, Without the heat of the heart, the soul does nothing in the body. The Scripture also makes the heart the monarch of this Isle of Man.

{a} Speed, 869.

Ver. 6. Because to every purpose there is time.] Therefore the wise man seeketh after that nick of time, that punctilio of judgment, that he may do everything well, and order his affairs with discretion. A well chosen season is the greatest advantage of any action, which, as it is seldom found in haste, so it is too often lost in delay.

Therefore the misery of man is great upon him.] Because he discerns not, apprehends not his fittest opportunity, hence he creates himself a great deal of misery. When Saul had taken upon him to sacrifice, God intimates to him by Samuel, that if he had discerned his time, he might have saved his kingdom. So might many a man his life, his livelihood—nay, his soul. "The men of Issachar" in David's days are famous for this, that they "had understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do," {#1Ch 12:32} their posterity are set below stork and swallow for want of this skill, {#Jer 8:7} and deeply doomed. {#Lu 19:44}

Ver. 7. For he knoweth not that which shall be.] Man's misery is the greater because he cannot foresee to prevent it; but he is suddenly surprised and hit many times on the blind side, as we say.

“ Nescia mens hominum fati sortisque futurae.”

Men are in the dark in regard to future events. God only knows them, and is thereby oft in Isaiah distinguished from the dunghill deities of the heathens. In his mercy to his people he gave them prophets to tell how long, and when these failed the Church heavily bewails it. {#Ps 74:9} Howbeit a prudent man "foreseeth an evil, and hideth himself." {#Pr 22:3} {See Trapp on "Pr 22:3"} By the strength of his mind, saith Ambrose, {a} he presageth what will follow, and can define what in such or such a case he ought to do. Sometimes he turns over two or three things in his mind together, of which conjecturing that either all may come to pass jointly, or this or that severally, or whether they fall out jointly or severally, he can by his understanding so order his actions as that they shall be profitable to him.

{a} Amb. De Offic., lib. i. cap. 38.

Ver. 8. There is no man that hath power, &c.] Death man is sure to meet with, whatsoever he miss of, but when he knows not neither. Of doomsday there are signs affirmative and negative, not so of death. Every one hath his own balsam within him, say some chemists, his own bane it is sure he hath. Ipsa suis augmentis vita ad detrimenta impellitur, {a} Every day we yield somewhat to death. Stat sua cuique dies, {b} Our last day stands, the rest run. Death is this only king, against whom there is no rising up {c} {#Pr 30:31} The mortal scythe is master of the royal sceptre, and it mows down the lilies of the crown as well as the grass of the field, saith a reverend writer. {a} And again, death suddenly snatcheth away physicians, oft as it were in scorn and contempt of medicines when they are applying their preservatives or restoratives to others, as it is reported of Gaius Julius, a surgeon, who dressing a sore eye, as he drew the instrument over it, was struck with an instrument of death in the act and place where he did it. Besides diseases, many by mischances are taken, as a bird with a bolt while he gazeth at the bow.

There is no discharge in war.] Heb., No sending either of forces to withstand death, or of messages to make peace with him. The world and we must part, and whether we be unstitched by parcels, or torn asunder at once, the difference is not great. Happy is he that after due preparation is passed through the gates of death ere he be aware, saith one. Whether my death be a burnt-offering of martyrdom, or a peace offering of a natural death, I desire it may be a freewill offering, a sweet sacrifice to the Lord, saith another.

Neither shall wickedness deliver.] No; it is righteousness only that delivereth from death. The wicked may make "a covenant with death," {#Isa 28:15} but God will disannul it. "Shall they escape by iniquity?" saith the Psalmist. What! have they no better mediums? No; "in thine anger cast down the people, O God." {#Ps 56:7} Every man should die the same day that he is born; the wages of death should be paid him presently; but Christ begs their lives for a season, he is the "Saviour of all men," {#1Ti 4:10} not of eternal preservation, but of temporal reservation, that his elect might lay hold on eternal life, and reprobates may have this for a bodkin at their hearts one day: I was in a fair possibility of being delivered.

Ver. 9. One man ruleth over another to his own hurt.] Not only to the hurt of his subjects, but to his own utter ruin, though after a long run haply. {#Ec 8:12,13} Ad generum Cercris, &c. What untimely ends came the kings of Israel to, and the Roman Caesars all, almost, till Constantine? Vespasianus unus accepto imperio melior factus est, Vespasian was the only one among them that became better by the office. While they were private persons there seemed to be some goodness in them, but no sooner advanced to the empire than they ran riot in wickedness; listening to flatterers, and hating reproofs, they ran headlong to hell, and drew a great number with them, by the instigation of the devil, that old man slayer, whose work it was to act and agitate them for a common mischief.

Ver. 10. And so I saw the wicked buried.] With pomp and great solemnity, funeral orations, statues, and epitaphs, &c., as if he had been another Josiah or Theodosius; so do men overwhelm this mouse with praises proper to the elephant, as the proverb hath it.

Who had come and gone from the place of the holy.] That is, From the place of magistracy, seat of judicature, where the holy God himself sits as Chief President and Lord Paramount. {#De 1:17 2Ch 19:6 Ps 82:1}

And they were forgotten in the city where they had so done.] A great benefit to a wicked man to have his memory die with him, which if it be preserved stinks in keeping, and remains as a curse and perpetual disgrace, as one very well senseth it. {a}

Ver. 11. Because sentence against an evil work, &c.] Ennarrata sententia, a published and declared sentence. So that it is only a reprieve of mercy that a wicked man hath; his preservation is but a reservation to further evil, abused mercy turning into fury. Morae dispendium faenoris duplo pensatur, saith Jerome {a} God's forbearance is no quittance; he will find a time to pay wicked men for the new and the old. "The Lord is not slow, as some men count slowness." {#2Pe 3:9} Or if he be slow, yet he is sure. {b} He hath leaden heels, but iron hands; the further he fetcheth his blow, or draweth his arrow, the deeper he will wound when he hitteth. {c} God's mill may grind soft and slow, but it grinds sure and small, said one heathen. {d} Tarditatem supplicii gravitate compensat, he recompenseth the delay of punishment with an eternity of extremity, saith another. He hath "vials of vengeance," {#Re 16:1} which are large vessels, but narrow mouthed; they pour out slowly, but drench deeply and distil effectually. Caveto igitur, saith one, {e} ne malam dilatura fiat duplicatum. Get quickly out of God's debt, lest ye be forced to pay the charges of a suit to your pain, to your cost. Patientia Dei quo diuturnior, eo minacior. {f} God will not always serve men for a sinning stock. Poena venit gravior quo magis sera venit. Adonijah's feast ended in horror; ever after the meal is ended comes the reckoning.

Therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set.] Heb., Is full. So full of wickedness that there is no room for the fear of God's wrath, till "wrath come upon them to the utmost." Intus existens prohibet alienum. God offers and affords them heart knocking time, {#Re 3:20} but they ram up their hearts, dry their tears, as Saul, and are scalded in their own grease, stewed in their own broth. The sleeping of vengeance causeth the overflowing of sin, and the overflow of sin causeth the awakening of vengeance.

Ver. 12. Though a sinner doth evil an hundred times.] Commit the same sin a hundred times over, which is no small aggravation of his sin, as numbers added to numbers are first ten times more, then a hundred, then a thousand, &c. And truly a sinner left to himself would sin in infinitum, which may be one reason of the infinite torments of hell; he can set no bounds to himself, till he become a brat of fathomless perdition; the devil commits that sin "unto death" every day, and oft in the day. Hisimps also resemble him herein. Hence their sins are mortal, saith St John, {#1Jo 5:17} rather immortal, as saith St Paul. {#Ro 2:5}

And his days be prolonged.] By the long sufferance of God, which is so great, that Jonah was displeased at it. {#Jon 4:1,2} Averroes turned atheist upon it. But Micah admires it, {#Mic 7:18} and Moses makes excellent use of it, when he prays, {#Ex 34:6-9} "O Lord, let my Lord, I pray thee, go along with us, for it is a stiff-necked people." As who should say, None but a god is able to endure this perverse people; my patience and meekness is far too short; and yet Moses, by God's own testimony, was the meekest man upon earth. That the vilest of men may live a long while is evident; but for no goodwill that God bears them, but that, heaping up sin, they may heap up wrath, and by abuse of Divine patience, be fitted for the hottest fire in hell, {#Ro 9:22} as stubble laid out drying, {#Na 1:10} or as grapes let hang in the sunshine, till ripe for the winepress of wrath. {#Re 19:15} Surely as one day of man's life is to be preferred before the longest life of a stag or a raven; so one day spent religiously is far better than a hundred years spent wickedly. Non refert quanta sit vitae diuturnitas, sed qualis sit administratio, saith Vives. The business is not how long, but how well any man liveth. Jerome reads this verse thus, Quia peccator facit malura centies, et elongat ei Deus, ex hoc cognosco ego, &c.: Because a sinner doeth evil a hundred times, and God doth lengthen his days unto him, from hence I know that it shall be well with them that fear God, &c. And he sets this sense upon it—Inasmuch as God so long spares wretched sinners, waiting their return, he will surely be good to pious persons. Symmachus, Aquila, and Theodotion read it thus: Peccans enim malus mortuus est, longa aetate concessa ei, An evil man sinning is dead, a long age being granted to him: dead he is in sin, though his days be prolonged.

Yet surely I know that it shall be well, J q.d., This shall not stagger me, or shake mine assurance of the Divine providence; for I know well that "yet God is good to Israel, to the pure in heart." {#Ps 73:1} And although they die young—as ὠκυμωροὶ οἱ θεοφιλεῖς, those whom God loves he soon takes to himself—yet it may be said of them, as Ambrose saith of Abraham, Mortuus est in bona senectute, eo quod in bonitate propositi permansit, He died in a good old age, because he died in a good sound mind. Or as Jerome saith of a godly young man of his time, that in brevi vitae spacio tempora virtutum multa replevit, { a } he lived long in a little time; for some men live more in a month than others do in many years. They that die soon, but in God's fear and favour, though as grapes they be gathered before they are ripe, and as lambs slain before they be grown, yet, besides the happiness of heaven, they have this benefit, they are freed from the violence of the winepress that others fall into, and escape many storms that others live to taste of. A good man, saith a late divine, {b} prolongs his days though he die young, because he is ripe before taken from the tree: he even falls into the hand of God that gathers him.

Ver. 13. But it shall not be well with the wicked.] (1.) Not always well, {#Isa 3:12} for "sin will be sure to find him out," {#Nu 32:23} and he that hath guilt in his bosom hath vengeance at his back. {a} Where iniquity breaks fast, calamity will be sure to dine, and to sup where it dines, and to lodge where it sups. When iniquity is once ripe in the field, God will not let it shed to grow again, but cuts it up by a just and seasonable vengeance. (2.) Not at all well; since prosperity slayeth these fools, and as sunshine ripens their sin, and so fits them for ruin. Hence Bernard calls it, Misericordiam omni indignatione crudeliorem. Poison in wine works more furiously. The fatter the ox, the sooner to the slaughter.

Neither shall he prolong his days.] See #Ps 55:23 Jer 17:11. He dies tempore non suo {#Ec 7:17} though he lives long; he dies before he desires, and when it were better for him to do anything than to die; since he hath "walked in a vain show, disquieting himself in vain," {#Ps 39:6} tumbling his tub to no purpose, lengthening out "his days as a shadow": the longer the shade, the nearer the sun is to setting. Ver. 14. There is a vanity which is done upon the earth.]

Symmachus reads it thus: Est difficile cognitu quod sit super terram, There is that done upon the earth that is hard to be understood. It hath gravelled great divines—as David, Jeremiah, Habakkuk {#Ps 73:3-9 Jer 12:1,2 Hab 2:4,5 La 3:33} -to see good men suffer, bad men prosper. But it is but upon the earth that this befalls: here God must meet with his people, or nowhere, and it is non nisi coactus, as that emperor said of himself, that he doth anything to their grief:

“ Ille dolet quoties cogitur esse ferox.”

An unruly patient makes a cruel physician. {a} And as for the wicked, it is but "upon earth" that they live in pleasure, and lie melting in sensual and sinful delights, "nourishing their hearts as in a day of slaughter." {#Jas 5:5} Once they shall hear with horror, "Son, remember that thou in thy life time receivedst thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things: but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented." {#Lu 16:25} The meditation of eternity would much mitigate this vanity. What is that to the infinite? said the old Lord Brook to a friend of his, discoursing of an incident matter very considerable, but was taken off with this quick interrogation of that wise and noble person. {b}

Ver. 15. Then I commended mirth.] A lawful lightsomeness and cheerfulness of heart, which maketh comforts to be much more comfortable, and troubles to be far less troublesome. Besides, acceptior est Deo grata laetitia quam diuturna quasi querula tristitia. {a} Cheerfulness is better pleasing to God than sourness and sullenness: this provokes him to anger, {#De 28:47} as that which puts a man under the reign of continual unthankfulness—"Is any man merry? let him sing" {#Jas 5:13} -makes him exceeding liable to temptations and perplexities, disableth him to make benefit of ordinances, indisposeth and unfitteth him for duties of active or passive obedience, takes off the wheels of the soul, and makes it as awkward as a limb out of joint, that can do nothing without deformity and pain.

Than to eat, and to drink, and to be merry.] Although it be the bread of sorrow that thou eatest, and the cup of affliction that thou drinkest, eat it, and drink it merrily. The Epicures held that a man might be cheerful amidst the most exquisite torments; (1.) In consideration of his honesty and fidelity, that he suffered for; (2.) In consideration of those pleasures and delights that formerly he had enjoyed, and now cheered up himself with the remembrance of. How much better may Christians do it in consideration of those unutterable joys and delights that they expect and hope for! Mendicatio pane hic vivamus, &c., saith Luther. We may well be content, nay merry, though we should beg our bread here, to think that we shall one day feast with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven.

Ver. 16. When I applied mine heart to know wisdom,] i.e., The wisdom and other excellencies of God shining plainly and plentifully in ruling the affairs, and ordering the disorders of the world to his own glory.

For also there is that neither day nor night seeth, &c.,] i.e., Perdus et pernox, by day and by night I busied myself in this search, so that a little sleep served my turn all the while. Nullus mihi per otium exiit dies, partem etiam noctium studiis vindico, saith Seneca; I studied day and night, and followed it with all possible eagerness. Thuanus tells of a countryman of his, whom he called Franciscus Vieta Fontenejus, a very learned man, that he was so set upon his study, that for three days together sometimes he would sit close at it, sine cibo et somno, nisi quem cubito innixus, nec se loco movens, capiebat, without meat or sleep, more than what for mere necessity of nature he took leaning upon his elbow. Solomon seems by this text to have been as sharp set for the finding out of the way of divine administration, and the true reason of divine dispensations. But he got little further than to see that it far exceeded all human capacity and apprehension. Maiores maiora noverunt, et Deus det vobis plus sapere quam dico, saith a father, when he said what he could to some one of God's works of wonder—i.e., They who are more learned know, and God grant you may understand more than I say.

Ver. 17. That a man cannot find out the work.] No, not the wisest that is; the very best empiric in this kind cannot. Let him labour never so much to find it, he shall but be tossed in a labyrinth, or as a wayfaring man in a desert. If a man cannot define anything because the forms of things are unknown, if he know not the creatures themselves, ab imo ad summum, from the lowest to the highest, neither shall he know the reasons and manner of them. {a} As a man may look on a trade, and never see the mystery of it; he may look on artificial things, pictures, watches, &c., and yet not see the art whereby they are made; as a man may look on the letter, and never understand the sense; so it is here, and we must content ourselves with a learned ignorance. Si nos non intelligimus quid quare fiat, debeamus hoc providentiae quod non fiat sine causa: {b} If we understand not why anything is done, let us owe this duty to Providence, to be assured that it is not done without cause.

Ver. 1. For all this I considered in mine heart.] He that will rightly consider of anything, had need to consider of many things; all that do concern it, all that do give light unto it, had need to be looked into, or else we fail too short.

“Sis ideo in partes circumspectissimus omnes.”

Even to declare all this.] Or, To clear up all this to myself. Symmachus rendered it, Ut ventilarem haec universa, that I might sift and search out all these things by much tossing and turning of the thoughts. Truth lies low and close, and must with much industry be drawn into the open light.

That the righteous and the wise.] These are terms convertible. The world's wizards shall one day cry out, Nos insensati, We fools counted their lives madness, &c.

And their works.] Or, Their services, actions, employments, all which together with themselves are "in the hand of God," who knows them by name, and exerciseth a singular providence over them, so that they are "kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation." "The enemy shall not exact upon him, nor the son of wickedness afflict him." {#Ps 89:22} What a sweet providence was it, that when all the males of Israel appeared thrice in the year before the Lord at Jerusalem, none of their neighbour nations, though professed enemies to Israel, should so much as desire their land. {#Ex 34:24} And again, that after the slaughter of Gedaliah, so pleasant a country—left utterly destitute of inhabitants, and compassed about with such warlike nations, as the Ammonites, Moabites, Edomites, Philistines, &c.—was not invaded nor replanted by foreigners for seventy years' time, but the room kept empty till the return of the naturals.

No man knows either love or hatred, &c.] That is, The thing he either loves or hates, say some interpreters, by reason of the fickleness of his easily alterable affections. How soon was Amnon's heart estranged from his Tamar, and Ahasuerus from his minion Haman, the Jews from John Baptist, the Galatians from Paul, &c.! But I rather approve of those that refer this love and hatred unto God—understanding them, θεοπροπος, in a divine manner—and make the meaning to be, that by the things of this life, "which come alike to all," as the next verse hath it, no man can make judgment of God's love or hatred towards him. The sun of prosperity shines as well upon brambles of the wilderness, as fruit trees of the orchard; the snow and hail of adversity lights upon the best gardens, as well as upon the wild waste. Ahab's and Josiah's ends concur in the very circumstances. Saul and Jonathan, though different in their deportments, yet "in their deaths they were not divided." {#2Sa 1:23} How far wide then is the Church of Rome, that borrows her marks from the market, plenty or cheapness, &c. And what an odd kind of reasoning was that of her champions with Marsh the martyr, {a} whom they would have persuaded to leave his opinions, because all the bringers up and favourers of that religion, as the Dukes of Northumberland and Suffolk for instance, had bad luck, and were either put to death, or in prison, and in danger of life. Again, the favourers of the religion then used had wondrous good luck and prosperity in all things, &c.

{a} Acts and Mon., fol. 14, 21.

Ver. 2. All things come alike to all.] {See Trapp on "Ec 9:1"} Health, wealth, honours, &c., are cast upon good men and bad men promiscuously. God makes a scatter of them, as it were; good men gather them, bad men scramble for them. The whole Turkish empire, saith Luther, is nothing else but a crust {a} cast by heaven's great housekeeper to his dogs.

And he that sweareth, as he that feareth an oath.] No surer sign of a profane person, than common and customary swearing. Neither any so good an evidence of a gracious heart, as not only to forbear it, for so one may do by education, and civil conversation, but to "fear an oath" out of an awful regard to the Divine Majesty. Plato and other heathens shall rise up and condemn our common swearers; for they, when they would swear, said no more but Ex animi sententia, {b} or if they would swear by their Jupiter, out of the mere dread and reverence of his name, they forbore to mention him. Clinias the Pythagorean, out of this regard, would rather undergo a mulct of three talents, than swear. The Merindolians, those ancient French Protestants, were known by this through all the country of Provence, that they would not swear, nor easily be brought to take an oath, except it were in judgment, or making some solemn covenant. {c}

Ver. 3. This is an evil.] Hoc est pessimum -so Jerome, the Vulgate, and Tremellius render it; this is the worst evil, this is wickedness with a witness, -scil., That since "there is one event to all," graceless men should thence conclude that it is a bootless business, a course of no profit to serve God. Hence they walk about the world with hearts as full as hell of lewd and lawless lusts. Hence they run a-madding after the pleasures of sin, which with a restless giddiness they earnestly pursue; yea, they live and die in so doing, saith the wise man here, noting their final impenitence, that hate of heaven, and gate to hell.

Ver. 4. For to him that is joined to all the living there is hope.] These are the words of those wicked ones, {a} whose lives and hopes end together, whose song is, Post mortem nulla voluptas, when life ends, there is an end of all. Is there not such language in some men's hearts, Who knows whether there be any such thing as a life to come? &c. Now I shall know, said that dying pope, {b} whether the soul of man be immortal, yea or no; and whether that tale concerning Christ have any truth in it. Oh, wretch!

So a living dog is better than a dead lion.] But so is not a living sinner better than a dead saint; for "the righteous hath hope in his death"; and they that "die in the Lord are blessed"; {#Re 14:13} how much more if they also die for the Lord! These "love not their lives unto the death." {#Re 12:11} but go as willingly to die as ever they did to dine, being as glad to leave the world (for a better especially) as men are wont to be to rise from the board, when they have eaten their fill, to take possession of a lordship.

{a} Ex primis per μμησιw eorum sermones. -Lav. Job., 24.

{b} Sic Benedic. IX., Alexand. VI., Leo. X.

Ver. 5. For the living know that they shall die.] Hence that proverb among us, As sure as death. Howbeit, that they think little of it to any good purpose, appears by that other proverb, I thought no more of it than of my dying day.

But the dead know not anything.] So it seemeth to those atheists that deny the immortality of the soul. But they shall know at death that there is another life beyond this, wherein the righteous shall be "comforted," and their knowledge perfected, but the wicked "tormented"; {#Lu 16:25} and with nothing more than to know that such and such poor souls as they would have disdained to have "set with the dogs of their flocks." {#Job 30:1} are now "sitting down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of God, and themselves thrust out into utter darkness," {#Lu 13:28} in tenebras ex tenebris infeliciter exclusi, infeliciter excludendi, {a}

Neither have they any more a reward.] What! not a "reward for the righteous?" {#Ps 58:11} Not a "certain fearful looking for of judgment, and fiery indignation which shall devour evildoers?" {#Heb 10:27} That were strange. But wicked men would fain persuade themselves so: Ut liberius peccent, libenter ignorant, { b } -"Of these things they are willingly ignorant." {#2Pe 2:5}

For the memory of them is forgotten.] This is true in part, but not altogether. Joseph was forgotten in Egypt, {#Ex 1} Gideon in Israel. {#Jud 9} Joash remembered not the kindness which Jehoiadah had done to him, but slew his son. {#2Ch 24:22} Nevertheless the "foundation of God stands firm, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his"; {#2Ti 2:19} and there is "a book of remembrance written before him for them that fear the Lord"; {#Mal 3:16} their "names are written in heaven," {#Lu 10:20} and "the memory of the just is blessed." {#Pr 10:7; see the note there}

{b} Bernard.

Ver. 6. Also their love and their hatred, &c.] Here is lie upon lie. The atheist, as he had denied knowledge to the dead, so here he denies affections, as love, hatred, envy, or zeal, as Jerome renders it. But it is certain that those that are dead in Jesus do very dearly love God, and hate evil with a perfect hatred. The wicked, on the other side, continue in that other world to hate God and goodness, to love such as themselves are, to stomach the happiness of those in heaven, &c.

Ver. 7. Go thy way, eat thy bread with joy.] Vade, iuste, go thy way, thou righteous man; live in cheerfulness of mind, proceeding from the testimony of a good conscience: so Lyra senseth the words. God's grace and favour turned brown bread and water into manchet and wine to the martyrs in prison. "Rejoice not thou, O Israel, for joy, as other people, for thou hast gone a whoring from thy God." {#Ho 9:1} Thou cutest thy bane, thou drinkest thy poison, because "to the impure all things are impure," and "without faith it is impossible to please God." "In the transgression of an evil man there is a snare (or a cord to strangle his joy with), but the righteous doth sing and rejoice." {#Pr 29:6} He may do so; he must do so. What should hinder him? He hath made his peace with God, and is rectus in curia. Let him be merry at his meals, lightsome and spruce in his clothes, cheerful with his wife and children, &c. "Is any man merry at heart?" saith St James; {#Jas 5:13} is he right set, and hath he a right frame of soul (εὐθυμεῖ)? is all well within? "Let him sing psalms"; yea, as a traveller rides on merrily, and wears out the tediousness of the way by singing sweet songs unto himself; so should the saints. "Thy statutes have been my songs in the house of my pilgrimage."

Ver. 8. Let thy garments be always white;] i.e., Neat, spruce, cleanly, comely. Or by a metaphor it may signify, Be merry in good manner, for they used to wear white clothing on festivals and at weddings, as Philo {a} witnesseth. At this day also the Jews come to their synagogues in white raiment the day before the calends of September, which is their New Year's tide. {b} Purple was affected by the Romans, white by the Jews. {see #Jas 2:2} Hence Pilate clad Christ in purple, {#Mt 27:28} Herod in white. {#Lu 23:11} Herod himself was "arrayed in royal apparel"; {#Ac 12:21} that is, in cloth of silver, saith Josephus, which, being beaten upon by the sunbeams, dazzled the people's eyes, and drew from them that blasphemous acclamation, "The voice of God, and not of man."

And let thine head lack no ointment.] That thou mayest look smooth and handsome. {#Mt 6:16,17} Ointments were much used with those eastern people in banquetings, bathings, and at other times. {#Lu 7:46 Mt 26:7} By "garments" here some understand the affections, {as #Col 3:8-12} which must "always be white," i.e., cheerful, even in times of persecution, when thy garments haply are stained with thine own blood. By the "head" they understand the thoughts, which must also be kept lithe and lightsome, as anointed with the oil of gladness. Crucem multi abominantur, crucem videntes, sed non videntes unctionem: crux enim inuncta est, saith Bernard. Many men hate the cross because they see the cross only, but see not the ointment that is upon it, for the cross is anointed, and by the grace of God's Holy Spirit helping our infirmities, it becomes not only light, but sweet—not only not troublesome, but even desirable and delectable. Martyr etiam in catena gaudet. {c} Paul gloried in his sufferings. His spirit was cheered up by the thoughts of them as by some fragrant ointment.

Ver. 9. Live joyfully with the wife whom thou lovest.] As Isaac, the most loving husband in Scripture, did with his Rebecca, whom he loved {#Ge 24:67} not only as his country woman, kinswoman, a good woman, &c., but as his woman; not with an ordinary or Christian love only, but with a conjugal love, which indeed is that which will make marriage a merry age, sweeten all crosses, season all comforts. She is called the wife of a man's bosom because she should be loved as well as the heart in his bosom. God took one of man's ribs, and, having built it into a wife, laid it again in his bosom, so that she is flesh of his flesh, yea, she is himself, as the apostle argues, and therehence enforceth this duty of love. {#Eph 5:28-31} Neither doth he satisfy himself in this argument, but adds there blow to blow, so to drive this nail up to the head, the better to beat this duty into the heads and hearts of husbands.

All the days of the life of thy vanity.] Love and live comfortably together, as well in age as in youth, as well in the fading as in the freshness of beauty.

Which he hath given thee, / i.e., The wife (not the life) which he hath given thee; for marriages are made in heaven, as the heathens also held. God, as he brought Eve to Adam at first, so still he is the paranymphe that makes the match and unites their affections. "A prudent wife is of the Lord," {#Pr 18:22} for a comfort, as a froward is for a scourge.

All the days of thy vanity, / i.e., Of thy vain, vexatious life, the miseries whereof to mitigate God hath given thee a suitable mate to compassionate and communicate with thee, and to be a principal remedy, for Optimum solarium sodalitiara, no comfort in misery can be comparable to good company, that will sympathise and share with us.

For that is thy portion.] And a very good one too, if she prove good, as, if otherwise, Aristotle {a} saith right: He that is unhappy in a wife hath lost the one half, at least, of his happiness on earth.

And in thy labour which thou takest, &c.] They that will marry shall have trouble in the flesh. {#1Co 7:28} Let them look for it, and labour to make a virtue of necessity. As there is rejoicing in marriage, so there is a deal of labour—i.e., of care, cost, and cumber. Is it not good therefore to have a partner, such a one as Sarah was to Abraham—a piece so just cut for him as answered him right in every joint?

{a} Arist. in Rhetor.

Ver. 10. Whatsoever thy hand finds to do, do it with thy might.] We were made and set here to be doing of something that may do us good a thousand years hence. Our time is short, our task is long, our master urgent, an austere man, &c.; work, therefore, while the day lasteth, yea, work hard, as afraid to be taken with your task udone. The night of death comes when none can work. That is a time not of doing work, but of receiving wages. Up, therefore, and be doing, that the Lord may be with you.

“ Praecipita tempus; mors atra impendet agenti.”

- Silius

Castigemus ergo mores et moras. The devil is therefore more mischievous because he knows "he hath but a short time," {#Re 12:12} and makes all the haste he can to outwork the children of light, in a quick despatch of deeds of darkness. Oh, learn for shame of the devil, as Latimer said once in another case, therefore to do your utmost, because "the time is short," or "rolled up," {a} as sails use to be when the ship draws nigh to the harbour. This argument prevailed much with St Peter to bestir him in stirring up those he wrote unto, because he knew that he must "shortly put off his tabernacle." {#2Pe 1:13,14} The life of man is the lamp of God, saith Solomon. God hath set up our lives, as Alexander, when he sat down before a city, did use to set up a light, to give those within to understand that if they came forth to him while that light lasted they might have quarter, as if otherwise, no mercy was to be expected.

{a} Συνεσταλμενος. {#1Co 7:29}

Ver. 11. That the race is not to the swift.] Here the Preacher proverb—what he had found true by experience—by the event of men's endeavours, often frustrated, that nothing is in our power, but all carried on by a Providence, which oft crosseth our likeliest projects, that God may have the honour of all. Let a man be as swift as Asahel or Atalanta, yet he may not get the goal or escape the danger. The battle of Terwin, in France, fought by our Henry VIII, was called the 'Battle of Spurs,' because many fled for their lives, who yet fell (as the men of Ai did) into the midst of their enemies. {a} At Musselburgh Field, many of the Scots running away, so strained themselves in their race, that they fell down breathless and dead, whereby they seemed in running from their deaths to run to it, whereas two thousand of them that lay all day as dead, got away safely in the night. {b}

Nor the battle to the strong.] As we see in the examples of Gideon, Jonathan and his armourbearer, David in his encounter with Goliath, Leonidas, who with six hundred men worsted five hundred thousand of Xerxes' host. "They shall be holpen with a little help." {#Da 11:34} And why a little? That through weaker means we may see God's greater strength. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord." {#Zec 4:6} This Rabshakeh knew not, and therefore derided Hezekiah for trusting to his prayers. {#Isa 36:5} What can Hezekiah say to embolden him to stand out? What? I say, saith Hezekiah, "I have words of my lips"—that is, prayer. Prayer! saith Rabshakeh, those are empty words, an airy thing; for "counsel and strength are for the war"; so some read the words, and not in a parenthesis, as our translation hath it.

Neither yet bread to the wise.] To the worldlywise. Those "young lions do lack and suffer hunger; but they that seek the Lord shall not want any good thing." {#Ps 34:10} Their daily bread day by day, panem demensi, " food convenient for them," {#Pr 30:8} they shall be sure of. "Dwell in the land, and do good, and verily thou shalt be fed," {#Ps 37:5} by virtue of a promise, and not by a providence only, as the young ravens are.

Nor yet riches to men of understanding.] Plutus is said by the poets to be blind, and fortune to favour fools. Of Pope Clement V the French chronicler saith, Papa hic ditior fuit quam sapientior; This pope was rather rich than wise. {c} Aristides was so poor, that he brought a slur upon Justice, saith Plutarch, as if she were not able to maintain her followers. Phocian also, Pelopidas, Lamachus, Ephialtes, Socrates, those Greek sages, were very poor. {d} Epaminondas had but one garment, and that a sorry one too. {e} Lactantius had scarce a subsistence. Many wise men have been hard put to it. Paupertas est philosophiae vernacula, saith Apuleius.

Nor yet favour to men of skill.] Rara ingeniorum praemia, rara item est merces, saith one, {f} Wit and skill is little set by, small regard or reward is given to it; whereas popular men should esteem it as silver, said Aeneas Sylvius, noblemen as gold, princes as pearls.

But time and chance happeneth to them all,] i.e., Everything is done in its own time, and as God by his providence ordereth it, not as men will; much less by haphazard, for that which to us is casual and contingent, is by God Almighty foreappointed and effected, who must therefore be seen and sought unto in the use of means and second causes. And if things succeed not to our minds, but that we "labour in the fire," yet we must "glorify God in the fire," and live by faith.

Accidit in puncto quod non speratur in anno.”

So are the sons of men snared in an evil time.] This is the reddition of the former proposition. As the fishes are taken, &c., so are graceless men snared, &c. Security ushers in their calamity: "When they say, Peace and safety, then sudden destruction breaks in upon them, as travail upon a woman with child, and they shall not escape." {#1Th 5:3} God made fair weather before Pharaoh till he was in the heart of the Red Sea. The old world, Sodom, Amnon, Belshazzar, Herod, the rich fool, were all suddenly surprised in the ruff of their jollity. Jerusalem had three years of extraordinary great plenty before her last utter destruction. {a} Philosophers tell us that before a snow the weather will be warmish; when the wind lies, the great rain falls; and the air is most quiet when suddenly there will be an earthquake.

Ver. 13. This wisdom also have I seen, / i.e., This fruit and effect of wisdom have I observed, that through the iniquity of the times, it is slighted and left unrewarded if joined with a mean condition.

And it seemed great unto me.] Though not unto the many, who value not wisdom, if meanly habited, according to its worth, consider not that that within that leathern purse may be a pearl of great price, and in those earthen pots abundance of golden treasure. "I know thy poverty, but thou art rich" {#Re 2:9} The cock on the dunghill understands not this: That which seems great to a Solomon, Multis pro vili sub pedibusque iacet. Stultorum enim plena sunt omnia.

Ver. 14. There was a little city.] Such as was Lampsacum, besieged by Alexander, and saved by Anaximenes; Rhodes, besieged by the great Turk; Rochelle, by the French king; Geneva, by the Duke of Savoy. This last, a little city, a small people surrounded with enemies, and barred out from all aid of neighbour cities and churches, yet is strangely upheld. {a} Well may they write as they do on the one side of their coin, Deus noster pugnatur pro nobis, Our God fights for us. {b}

Ver. 15. Now there was found in it a poor wise man.] Such as was Anaximenes at Lampsacum, {a} and Archimedes at Syracuse, of whose wisdom Plutarch testifieth, that it was above the ordinary possibility of a man, it was divine. {b} And of whose poverty Silius assures us, that he was

By his warlike devices and engines he so defended his city against Marcellus, the Roman general, that the soldiers called him Briareus and Centimanus, a giant invincible; there was no taking of the town, as Livy relates it. The city of Abel was delivered by a wise woman that was in it. {#2Sa 20:16-22} The city of Coecinum in the isle of Lemnos, by Marulla, a maiden of that city. {c} Hippos could not be taken while Augustine was in it; nor Heidelberg, while Pareus lived. Elisha preserved Samaria from the Syrians; and the prophet Isaiah, Jerusalem from the Assyrians. "They shall not shoot an arrow there, nor come before it with shields, nor cast a bank against it," saith the Lord. {#Isa 37:33} Jeremiah had preserved it longer, but that his counsel was slighted. Indeed he was a physician to a dying state,

“ Tunc etenim docta plus valet arte malum.”

Yet no man remembered that same poor man.] Had he been some Demetrius Phalereus, or suchlike magnifico, he should have had a hundred statues set up in honour of his good service. He should have heard, Saviour, saviour, as Flaminius the Roman general did, or, Father, father, as Huniades, after he had defeated Mesites the Turk. But being poor, he is soon set aside, and neither succoured nor honoured. This is merces mundi, the world's wages. The Dutch have a proverb, that a man should bow to the tree that hath sheltered him in a storm. But many well deserving persons have cause to complain, as Elijah did when he sat under the juniper; or as Themistocles did when he compared himself to a plane tree, whereunto his countrymen, in a tempest, would run for refuge; but when once took up, they would not only leave him, but pull the leaves from him. {d} Are you weary, said he once to them, of receiving so many good turns from one man?

Nevertheless the poor man's wisdom is despised.] Jerome reads it thus, Et sapientia pauperis quae despecta est, et verba eius quae non sunt audita; that is, And the wisdom of the poor man which is despised, and his words which are not heard. According to which reading, the sense is, wisdom is better than strength, yea, even the despised wisdom of the poor man, &c. The Septuagint and Vulgate read it, Quomodo ergo sapientia pauperis contempta est et verba eius non audita! How therefore is the wisdom of the wise man despised, and his words not heard! As making a wonder and a strange thing of it. Too often it befalls God's poor ministers, either to be rejected with scorn, or if heard, yet not regarded, much less rewarded, unless it be as Micaiah was by Ahab, and Jeremiah by his countrymen of Anathoth, Jesus Christ by the proud Pharisees, {#Joh 7:14,15,27} St Paul by the ungrateful Corinthians; {#1Co 4:7} "His bodily presence," said they, "is weak," his sermons without philosophy and rhetoric. {#2Co 10:10}

{a} Seneca.

Ver. 17. The words of wise men are heard in quiet.] The submissive words of a poor man speaking with good understanding, are rather heard than the big and boisterous words of proud fools. Fuit Nestorius homo indoctus, superbus, audax et magnae loquentiae, saith Zanchy. {a} Nestorius, the heretic, was an ignorant, proud, bold, big spoken man, and prevailed very much thereby with some silly simples. How much better Chrysostom, of whom it is said that he was graviter suavis, et suaviter gravis, gravely sweet, and sweetly grave, and he was much admired for it! Gentle showers and dews that distil leisurely, comfort the earth; when dashing storms drown the seed. The words of wise men are by one well compared to the river Indus, which is said both to sow the East, and to water it; for so it may be said of the words of the wise, that they are both semina et flumina, both seeds and rivers: seeds, because they sow goodness in their hearers; rivers, because they water that which is sown to make it to grow in them. {b} But the cry of fools is like a violent torrent, which washeth away that which it soweth, and doth not suffer it to continue in the ground.

More than the cry of him that ruleth among fools.] Tremellius reads it, cum stolidis suis, with his fools; i.e., cum suo stulto senatu, with his foolish counsellors, who do commonly comply with him, to obtrude, with great authority, his unreasonable and tyrannical edicts and mandates.

Ver. 18. Wisdom is better than weapons of war.] As David found it in his encounter with Goliath, Gideon in his stratagem against the Midianites, and our renowned Drake in dissipating that Invincible Armada, which being three years in preparing with incredible cost, was by his wisdom within a month overthrown and confounded, with the loss of one English ship only, and not a hundred persons. Romani sedendo vincunt. This was the glory of the Romans, that they conquered the world by wisdom, not by weapons.

Not Achilles, but Ulysses is termed πολιοπορθος, the sacker of cities; {a} Cyneas took mere towns by his policy than Pyrrhus by his prowess.

But one sinner destroyeth much good.] He may be as an Achan in the army, as a Jonah in the ship, a trouble-town, a common mischief, a traitor to the state; especially if he be an eminent man, as Jeroboam, that ringleader of rebellion, and Manasseh, who "made Judah also to sin," {#2Ki 21:11} and so brought such evil upon them, that whosoever heard of it, "both his ears tingled." {#Ec 9:12} Great men's sins do more hurt (1.) By imitation; for Regis ad exemplnm, &c.; (2.) By imputation, for plectuntur Achivi; the poor people pay for such men's faults, as they did for David's. {#2Sa 24:15-17} I shall close up this chapter with that memorable passage of a reverend writer, yet alive: If England's fears were greater, thy reformation may save it. {#Jer 5:1} If our hopes were greater, thy sin and security might undo it. {#Ec 9:18} One sinner destroys much good. I only add, how much more a rabble of rebels, conspiring to provoke God. Sure I am, we have great cause to wish for our country, as Ferus did for the Romish synagogue; I would we had some Moses, said he, to take away the evils, Non enim unum tantum vitulum, sed multos habemus, for we have not only one golden calf, but many among us.

Ver. 1. Dead flies cause the ointment, &c.] The Preacher had said that "one sinner destroys much good"; {#Ec 9:18} here he affirms the same of "one sin"; be it but a small sin, a peccadillo, no bigger than a few "dead flies" fallen into a pot of sweet odours, it is of that stinking nature, that it stains a good man's esteem, and blows his reputation. A great many flies may fall into a tarbox, and no hurt done. A small spot is soon seen in a swan, not so in a swine. Fine lawn is sooner and deeper stained than coarse canvas. A city upon a hill cannot be hid; the least eclipse or aberration in the heavenly bodies is quickly noted and noticed. If Jacob, a plain man, {a} deal deceitfully, the banks of blasphemy will be broken down in a profane Esau thereby. If his unruly sons falsify with the Shechemites, he shall have cause to complain, "Ye have made me to stink among the inhabitants of the land." {#Ge 34:30} If Moses marry an Ethiopian woman, it shall be laid in his dish by his dearest friends. {#Nu 12:1} If Samson go down to Timnah, the Philistines will soon have it by the end, "told" it will be "in Gath, published in the streets of Askelon." If David do otherwise than well at home, the name of God will soon stink abroad, {#2Sa 12:14} if Josiah go up unadvisedly against Pharaohnecho, and fall by his own folly, this "shall be his derision in the land of Egypt." {#Ho 7:16} The enemies of God will soon compose comedies out of the Church's tragedies, and make themselves merry in her misery. She is said to be "fair as the moon," {#So 6:10} which, though it be a beautiful creature and full of light, yet is she not without her black spots and blemishes; (Galileo used his telescope to discover mountains on her). These the Church malignant is ever eyeing and aggravating, passing by or depraving the better practices of God's people. As vultures they hunt after carcasses, {b} as swine they musk in the muck hill, as beetles they would live and die in horse dung. It must be our care as much as may be to maintain our reputation, to cut off all occasion of obloquy, to be "blameless and harmless," {#Php 2:15} fair to the eye and sweet to the taste as that tree in paradise; without blemish from head to foot, as Absalom was; Non aliunde noscibiles quam de emendatione vitiorum pristinorum, {c} as Tertullian saith of the Christians of his time, known from all others by their innocence and patience. That was a good choice, for this purpose, that he himself made, Malo miserandum quam erubescendum, {d} I had rather be pitied than justly reproached. Strive we should to be as Paul was, a "good savour," {#2Co 2:14} and not to go out, as they say the devil doth, in a stench.

Ver. 2. A wise man's heart is at his right hand.] He doth his business discreetly and dexterously, he is handy and happy at it. And as he "ordereth his affairs with discretion," {#Ps 112:5} so he doth his affections too, reining them in with his right hand, and not suffering them to run riot, as the fool doth oft to his utter ruin. As the wise man's "eyes are in his head," {#Ec 2:14} so his "heart is at his right hand"; he hath it at command, to think of what he will when he will; it is as a hawk brought to the falconer's lure; or as a horse that is taught his postures. Hence he keeps his credit untainted, he retains the reputation of a wise man, he rightly owns that honour that the Italians arrogate to themselves, in that proverbial speech of theirs; Italus sapit ante factum, Hispanus in facto, Germanus post factum -i.e., The Italian is well advised before the deed done, the Spaniard in, the German after it.

But a fool's heart at his left.] At his left side, so it may be rendered, where nature placed it; he never yet sorrowed as those Corinthians did, {#2Co 7:9} to a transmutation, {a} to a thorough change both of mind and manners; his heart is yet still in the old place, he follows the course of depraved nature, he is a perfect stranger to the life of God.

Or his heart is at his left hand, J i.e., He rashly rusheth upon business without due deliberation, and doth it awkwardly, as with the left hand, and like a bungler, invita Minerva, et collachrymantibus Musis, he brings it to no good upshot. See an instance of this in Hanun and his counsellors; {#2Sa 10:2-4} Ahab and his clawbacks; {#1Ki 22:6} Antichrist and his adherers. Bellarmine bewails it in these words: Ab eo tempore, quo per vos Papa Antichristus esse coepit, non modo non crevit eius imperium, sed semper magis ae magis decrevit (Lib. iii. de Pap. Rom.

c. 2,3): Ever since you Protestants have made the Pope to be Antichrist, his authority hath not only not increased, but still more and more decreased. Or thus, His "heart is at his left hand"; that is, he puts away reason and wisdom from himself—as, for the most part, those things which men dislike are put away with the left hand. {b} Thus Junius expounds it.

{b} Ut quae aversantur homines fere sinistra depelluntur.

Ver. 3. Yea, also when he that is a fool walketh, &c.] In his very gait, gestures, looks, laughings, &c., he bewrays his witlessness, as Jehu did his furiousness, by the manner of his marches. {#2Ki 9:20} "He winketh with his eyes, speaketh with his feet, teacheth with his fingers, frowardness is in his heart," &c. {#Pr 6:13,14} {See Trapp on "Pr 6:13"} {See Trapp on "Pr 6:14"} Such a froward fool was Julian the apostate, as Nazianzen describes him, with his colli crebrae conversiones, oculi vagi, pedes instabiles, &c., frequent turning of his neck, tossing up his head, wild eyes, wandering feet, &c. And such were those "haughty daughters of Sion, that walked with stretched forth necks and wanton eyes, mincing and making a tinkling as they went"; {#Isa 3:16} their haughtiness and haughtiness spake them little better than harlots.

And he saith to every one that he is a fool.] Upon the matter he saith it, though he say nothing. It is said that a fool, while he holds his tongue is held a wise man; {#Pr 17:28} that is, if neither by his tongue nor any other part of his body he discover himself: but that can hardly be, since folly flows from man as excrements do from sick folk, and they feel it not, will hardly be persuaded of it. Symmachus, Jerome, and others, refer the last he in this sentence not to the fool himself, but to every one else whom he looks upon as so many fools like himself; {a} ex suo ingenio universos iudicans, judging of others according to his own disposition. For as the philosopher saith, Qualis quisque est tales existimat alios {b} such as any one is, the same he thinks others to be, and as men muse so they use, whether it be for the better or the worse. Jacob could not imagine that his sons were so base as to make away their brother Joseph, but said, "Surely some evil beast hath devoured him." {#Ge 37:32} Joshua never suspected the false Gibeonites, nor the rest of the disciples Judas, when our Saviour said, "What thou dost, do quickly"; and again when he said, "One of you shall betray me." On the other side, fools conceit the whole world to be made up of folly; as the Lacedemonians once, neminem bonum fieri publicis literis columna incisus sanxerunt, {c} scored it upon their public posts that there was none good, no, not one; as Claudius and Caligula, being themselves notorious whoremongers, would not be persuaded that there was any chaste person upon earth; {d} as the devil charged God with envy, which is his own proper disease. {#Ge 3:5} The old proverb saith, The mother seeks the daughter in the oven, as having been there some time herself. I daresay, quoth Bonner, that Cranmer would recant if he might have his living, {e} so judging of another by himself.

Ver. 4. If the spirit of thy ruler rise up, &c., leave not thy place.] Thine office, duty, and obedience; a metaphor from military matters.

A soldier must not start from his station, but keep to the place assigned him by his captain; {a} so here, “ Perdidit arma, locum virtutis descruit, &c.”—Horat.

Others render it, "Do not persist in thy place," do not stand to affront anger, but go aside a little out of sight, as Jonathan, when his father had thrown a javelin at him, went forth shooting. {See Trapp on "Ec 8:3"}
{See Trapp on "Pr 15:1"}

Ver. 5. As an error which proceedeth from the ruler.] Or, An ignorance, as Jerome renders it; ως ακουσιον—so the Septuagint—as a thing unwillingly done. An error, an infirmity it must be called, because committed by great ones; but in true account it is a gross evil, the very pest of virtue and cause of confusion—viz., the advancement of most unworthy and incapable persons, and that for the prince's pleasure sake, because he will seem absolute. An earl of Kildare was complained of to our Henry VIII, and when his adversary concluded his invective with, Finally, all Ireland cannot rule this earl, the king replied, Then shall this earl rule all Ireland; and so, for his jest sake, made him deputy. {a}

{a} Heyl. Geog., p. 506.

Ver. 6. Folly is set in great dignity.] Sedes prima et vita ima, {a} these suit not. Dignitas in indigno est ornamentum in luto. Royalty itself, without righteousness, is but eminent dishonour. When a fool is set in dignity, it is, saith one, {b} as when a handful of hay is set up to give light, which with smoke and smell offendeth all that are near. When as the worthy sit in low place, it is as when a goodly candle (that on a table would give a comfortable and comely light) is put under a bushel.

And the rich in low place,] i.e., The wise, as appears by the opposition, who, in true account, are the only rich, {#Jas 2:5} "rich in faith," {#1Ti 6:18}; "rich in good works," {#Lu 12:21}; rich to Godward, who hath highly honoured and advanced them, though vilipended and underrated by men; digni etiam qui ditentur; worthy they are also to be set in highest places, as being drained from the dregs, and sifted from the brans of the common sort of people. Dignity should wait upon desert, as it did here in England, in King Edward VI's days, that aureum saeculum, in quo honores melioribus dabantur; as Seneca {c} hath it, that golden age in which honours were bestowed on those that best deserved them. But in case it prove otherwise, as it often doth—the golden bishopric of Carthage fell to the lot of leaden Aurelius, and little Hippo to great St Augustine; Damasus, the scholar, was advanced to the see of Rome when Jerome, his master, ended his days in his cell at Bethlehem—yet virtue is its own competent encouragement, and will rather choose to lie in the dust than to rise by wickedness. Cato said he had rather men should question why he had no statue or monument erected in honour of him, than why he had. The wise historian observed that the statues of Brutus and Cassius, eo praefulgebant quod non visebantur; {d} were the more glorious and illustrious, because they were not brought out with other images in a solemn procession at the funeral of Germanicus. God pleaseth himself, saith Basil, in beholding a hidden pearl in a disrespected body. {e} A rich stone is of no less worth when locked up in a wicker casket, than when it is set in a royal diadem.

Ver. 7. I have seen servants upon horses,] i.e., Servile souls, base spirited abjects, slaves to their lusts, homines ad servitutem paratos, as Tiberius said of his Romans, natural slaves born to be so, as the Cappadocians, {a} "brute beasts made and taken to be destroyed." {#2Pe 2:12} Hi perfricant frontem et digniores se dicunt quam Catonem, qui praetores fierent, as Vatinius did. These set a good face upon it many times, and leap into the saddle of authority, ride on strong and shining palfreys, {b} ride without reins in the prosecution of their ambitious ends, till, unhorsed, with Haman, they that were erst a terror become a scorn. {See Trapp on "Pr 30:22"}

And princes walking as servants upon the earth.] In Persia at this day the difference between the gentleman and the slave is, that the slave never rides, the gentleman never goes on foot; they buy, sell, confer, fight, do all on horseback. When Doeg, Saul's herdsman, the Edomite, and Tobiah, the servant, the Ammonite, were got on cock horse, there was no ho! with them, but they would needs ride to the devil. When Justinian II was emperor, Stephen the Persian being made Lord High Chamberlain, grew to that height of insolence that he presumed to chastise with rods the emperor's own mother, as if she had been some base slave. In the year of grace 1522 the boors of Germany rose up against their rulers, and would lay all level, that servants might ride cheek by jowl, as they say, with princes. {c} Sed miserabilis et lamentabilis tandem huius stultitice exitus fuit, {d} saith Lavater: But these fools paid dear for their proud attempt; and after a miserable slaughter of many thousands of them, were sent home by the weeping cross, ad beatos rastros, benedictum aratrum, sanctamque stivam, {e} as Bucholcerus phraseth it, to handle again (instead of guns and swords) their blessed rakes, plough staves, and horse whips. Their general, Muncer, was tortured to death, being so mated and amazed that he was not able to repeat his creed, &c.

Ver. 8. He that diggeth a pit shall fall into it.] As heedless huntsmen do. He that being of base beginning, and unmeet for government, seeks to set up himself upon better men's ruins, and where he finds not a way to make it, shall fall from his high hopes into remediless misery; as he hath made a match with mischief, so he shall have his belly full of it. As he hath conceived with guile, so

(though he grow never so big) he shall bring forth nothing but vanity, and worse. {#Job 15:35}

And whoso breaketh an hedge.] The hedge of God's commandments, as our first parents did, to come to the forbidden fruit. A serpent bites such, {#Pr 23:32} and the poison cannot be gotten out. Others sense it thus (and I rather incline): He that seeks to overthrow the fundamental laws and established government of a commonwealth, and to break down the fences and mounds of sovereignty and subjection, shall no less (but much more) imperil himself than he that pulls up an old hedge, wherein serpents, snakes, and adders do usually lurk and lie in wait to do mischief. Wat Tyler the rebel dared to say that all the laws of England should come out of his mouth. {a} Stratford uttered somewhat to the like sense in Ireland. Our good laws are our hedges; so our oaths—ορκος quasi ορκος. Let us look to both, or we are lost people. Det Deus ut admonitio haec adeo sit nobis omnibus commoda quam sit accommoda.

{a} Speed.

Ver. 9. Whoso removeth stones shall be hurt therewith.] So he that attempteth to loose and remove the joints and pieces of a settled government, there is danger that, like Samson, he will be crushed in the ruin. So one {a} gives the sense of it: He that goeth about to remove a ruler out of his place, and to divide a settled government that is at unity in itself, undertaketh a dangerous piece of business. As he undertaketh a desperate work, such shall his reward be. It is evil meddling with edged tools, &c., saith another interpreter. {b} Some by "stones" here understand landmarks, which to remove was counted sacrilege among the Romans, and worthy of death. {c} What are they guilty and worthy of, then, that abrogate the good old laws of a land, or the good old ways of God, that have given rest to so many souls? {#Jer 6:16} {See Trapp on "Pr 26:27"}

And he that cleaveth wood shall be in danger thereby,] viz., Of breaking his tools, if not his shins, especially if he be a bungler at it. This is to the same sense with the three former similitudes. Cyprian makes use of this text against schismatics, reading it thus: Scindens ligna periclitabitur in eo si exciderit ferrum, { d} He that cleaveth wood shall be endangered thereby, if that the iron fall off. Jerome by "wood" here understands heretics, as being unfruitful and unfit for God's building, and makes this note upon it, Quamvis sit prudens et doctus vir, {e} &c. Although he be a wise and a learned man, who with the sword of his discourse cutteth this knotty wood, he will be endangered by it, unless he be very careful.

Ver. 10. If the iron be blunt.] Pliny {a} calls iron the best and worst instrument of man's life, and shows the many uses of it, as in ploughing, planting, pruning, planing, &c., but abominates the use of it in war and murdering weapons. Porsena enjoined the Romans, Ne ferro nisi in agricultura uterentur; saith he, that they should not use iron but only about their husbandry. The Philistines took the like order with the disarmed Israelites, {#1Sa 13:19} among whom swords and spears were geasen; shares and coulthers they allowed them, but so as that they must go down to the Philistines for sharpening. Gregory compares the devil to these Philistines, blinding and blunting men's wits and understandings, "lest the light of saving truth should shine unto them." {#2Co 4:4} These edge tools, therefore, must be whetted by the use of holy ordinances, and much strength put to, great pains taken, virtutibus corroborabitur (so the old translation hath it). But when all is done, he must needs be obtusus acutus, which seeth not that wisdom is profitable to direct; that is, that (whether the iron be blunt or sharp, whetted or not whetted, more strength added or not added) it is wisdom that rectifies all, or the benefit of rectifying is wisdom. "There is none to that," as David said of Goliath's sword.

{a} Lib. xxxiv, cap. 14.

Ver. 11. Surely the serpent will bite without enchantment.] It is for want of wisdom that the babbler, or tongue master (as the original hath it), is nothing better than the most poisonous serpent; nay, in some respects, worse; for one serpent stings not another, as backbiters do their best friends. And whereas serpents may be charmed, or their poison kept from the vitals, contra sycophantae morsum non est remedium, as the proverb hath it, there is no help to be had for the biting of a sycophant: his tongue is "full of deadly poison," saith St James. {#Jas 3:8} Again, serpents usually hiss and give warning (though the Septuagint here read non in sibilo, the Vulgate, in silentio, in silence and without hissing, for without enchantment), so doth not the slanderer and detractor. He is a silent serpent, and like the dogs of Congo, which bite, but bark not. {a} And therefore, as all men hate a serpent and flee from the sight of it, so will wise men shun the society of a slanderer. And as any one abhors to be like to that old serpent the devil, so let him eschew this evil.

{a} Purchas's Pilgrim.

Ver. 12. The words of a wise man's mouth are gracious.] Heb., Are grace; they are nothing but grace, so the French translator hath it; {a} such as render him gracious with God and men, so Lyra glosseth it, as being usually "seasoned with salt, and ministering grace to the hearers." {#Col 4:6}

But the lips of a fool swallow up himself.] Suddenly, utterly, unavoidably, as the whale did Jonah, as the devouring sword doth those that fall under it, as the grave doth all the living. How many of all sorts in all ages have perished by their unruly tongues, blabbing or belching out words Quae reditura per iugulum, as Pliny phraseth it that were driven down their throats again by the wronged and aggrieved parties! Take heed, saith the Arabic proverb, lest thy tongue cut thy throat; it is compared to "a sharp razor working deceitfully," {#Ps 52:3} which, instead of cutting the hair, cuts the throat. {b}

{a} Ne sont que grace.

{b} Cave ne feriat lingua tua collum tuum. -Scal. Ar. Prov.

Ver. 13. The beginning of his words are folly.] He is an inconsiderate idiot, utters incoherences, pours forth a flood of follies, his whole discourse is frivolous, futious. To begin foolishly may befall a wise man: but when he sees it, or hath it shoven unto him, he will not persist: "Once have I spoken," saith holy Job, "but I will not answer again: yea, twice, but I will proceed no further." {#Job 40:4,5} Much otherwise the fool, and because he will be dicti sui dominus {as #Ec 10:11} having lashed out at first, he launcheth further out into the deep, as it were, of idle and evil prattle. And if you offer to interrupt or admonish him, the end of his talk is mischievous madness, he blusters and lets fly on all hands, laying about him like a madman. And so we have here, as one {a} saith, the serpent, the babbler (spoken of in the eleventh verse), wreathed into a circle, his two ends, head and tail, meeting together. And as at the one end he is a serpent, having his sting in his head; so at the other end he is a scorpion, having his sting in his tail.

{a} Dr Jermin.

Ver. 14. A fool also is full of words.] A very wordy man he is, and a great deal of small talk he has: Voces susque deque effutit inanes, as Thuanus hath it, he lays on more words than the matter will well bear. {a} And this custom of his is graphically expressed by an imitation of his vain tautologies. "A man cannot tell," saith he, "what shall be after him; and what shall be after him, who can tell?" He hath got this sentence (that may well become a wise man, #Ec 6:12 8:7) by the end, and he wears it threadbare; he hath never done with it, misapplying and abusing it to the defence of his wilful and witless enterprises. Thus the ass in the fable would needs imitate the dog, leaping and fawning in like manner on his master, but with ill success. "The lip of excellence becomes not a fool" {#Pr 17:7} {See Trapp on "Pr 17:7"} {#Pr 10:19 17:27 Ec 5:3,7} {See Trapp on "Ec 5:3"} {See Trapp on "Ec 5:7"} But empty casks, we know, sound loudest, and baser metals ring shrillest; things of little worth are ever most plentiful. History and experience tell us that some kind of mouse breedeth one hundred and twenty young ones in one nest, ἀλλὰ λεοντα, whereas the lion and elephant bears but one at once; so the least wit yields the most words, and as any one is more wise, he is more sparing of his speeches. Hesiod saith that words, as a precious treasure, should be thriftily husbanded, and warily wasted. Christians know, that for every wasted word account must be given at the great day. {#Mt 12:37} {See Trapp on "Mt 12:37}

{a} Boni oratoris est sermonem habere rebus parem. -Plut.

Ver. 15. The labour of the foolish wearieth every one of them.] While he laboureth in vain, and maketh much ado to little purpose. He meddleth in many things, and so createth himself many crosses; he will needs be full of business, and so must needs be full of trouble, since he wants wit to manage the one and improve the other. "Thou art wearied in the greatness of thy way." {#Isa 57:10} And again, "Thou art wearied in the multitude of thy counsels," {#Isa 47:13} saith God to such as had "wearied him also with their iniquities, and made him to serve with their sins." {#Isa 43:24} Yea, even then, when they think they have done him very good service. Thus Paul, before his conversion, persecuted the saints so eagerly, and was so mad upon it, as himself speaketh, {#Ac 26:11} that, like a tired wolf, wearied in worrying the flock, he lay panting as it were for breath; and when he could do no more, yet "breathed out threatenings." {#Ac 9:1} Thus Bonner would work himself windless almost in buffeting the martyrs, and whipping them with rods, as he did Mr Bartlet Green, Mr Rough, and many others. {a} So the philosophers wearied themselves and their followers in their wild disquisitions after, and discourses of tile chief happiness; which, because it lay not in their walk, therefore ab itinere regio deviantes ad illam metropolim non potuerunt pervenire, saith Cassian; wandering from the King of heaven's highway, they could never be able to get to that metropolitan city, called Jehovahshammah, or "the Lord is there." {#Eze 48:35} "They wandered in the wilderness in a solitary way; they found no city to dwell in." {#Ps 107:4} Fools many times beat their wings much, as if they would fly far and high, but with the bustard, {b} they cannot rise above the earth; or if they do, they are soon pulled down again by the devil to feed upon the worst of excrements, as the lapwing doth, though it hath a coronet on the head, and is therefore fifty made a hieroglyphic of infelicity. {c}

Ver. 16. Woe to thee, O land, when thy king is a child,] s.c., In understanding, though not in years, such as was Shechem, {#Ge 34:19, Neque distulit puer} and Rehoboam. {#1Ki 14:21 2Ch 13:7} Solomon was a child king; so was Josiah, Uzziah, our Edward VI; and yet it was well with the land in their days.

“ Hic regum decus et iuvenum flos, spesque honorum, Deliciae saeculi, et gloria gentis erat.”

As Cardan sings of King Edward in his epitaph, {a} As he was the highest, so I verily believe he was the holiest in the whole kingdom, saith Mr Ridley, martyr. And whilst things were carried on by himself, in his health time, all went very well here; and si per leges fas illi fuisset omnia proprio nutu et voluntate regere, if by the laws of the land he might have done all himself without officers, all should have been far better done, saith Mr Cartwright upon this text. By "child" is here therefore meant a weak or wicked king, that lets loose the golden reins of government, is carried by his passions, lieth heavy upon his subjects. See #Isa 3:6, compared with #Ec 10:13. Such princes are threatened as a plague to a people, {#Le 26:17} and they prove no less. This childhood of theirs is the maturity of their subjects' misery; the land itself is woe, and woe itself the land, as one expositor observed from the word, נ, here used, which signifieth both woe and land. See #Job 34:30.

And the princes eat in the morning.] As children use to call for food as soon as they have rubbed sleep out of their eyes. If the king is a child, the state officers will be loose and luxurious; yea, like morning wolves, will devour the prey, and "nourish themselves as in a day of slaughter." {#Jas 5:5} The morning is a time to seek God, and search for wisdom, {#Pr 8:17} to sit in counsel, and despatch business, as was the manner of Moses, {#Ex 18:13} and of the ancient Romans. Scipio Africanus was wont before day to go into the capitol, in cellam Iovis into Jupiter's chapel, and there to stay a great while quasi consultans de republica cum Iove, saith Gellius, {b} as if he were consulting with Jupiter, concerning the public welfare; whence his deeds were pleraque admiranda admirable for the most part, saith that heathen author.

Ver. 17. Blessed art thou, O land, &c.] Ita nati estis ut bona malaque vestra ad Remp. pertineant. You governors are of such condition as that your good or evil deeds are of public concernment, saith he in Tacitus. {a} It is either wealth or woe with the land, as it is well or ill governed.

When thy king is the son of nobles.] Well born and yet better bred; for else they will be noti magis quam nobiles, notable or notorious, but not noble {b} Our Henry I (surnamed Beauclerc) was often heard to say that an unlearned king was no better than a crowned ass. {c} Sure it is that royalty without righteousness is but eminent dishonour, gilded rottenness, golden damnation. Godly men are the excellent ones of the earth, {#Ps 16} the Beraeans were more noble, {d} or better gentlemen, than those of Thessalonica, non per civilem dignitatem, sed per spiritualem dignationem, not by civil, but by spiritual dignity; without which riches, revenue, retinue, high birth, &c., are but shadows and shapes of nobleness. "Since thou hast been precious in my sight, thou hast been honourable," saith God, {#Isa 43:4} who is the top of good men's kin, as religion is the root. But for want of this it was that Jehoiakim, though royally descended, is likened to an ass; {#Jer 22:19} and Antiochus, though a mighty monarch, is called a "vile person." {#Da 11:21}

And thy princes eat in due season for strength, &c.] Being modest and moderate, not diffluent and debauched. Great men should not "cater for the flesh," {#Ro 13:11-14} but so serve the body that the body politic may be served by it, and the Lord by both. Did ever any one see King Dejotarus dancing or drunken? saith Cicero, {e} and this he holds to be a singular commendation. Ver. 18. By much slothfulness the building decayeth.] So doth the commonwealth not sheltered with good government; for, as the householder is in his house, so is the magistrate in the city, and the king in his dominions. In his palace he may see a pattern of his kingdom, a draught of his city. Especially if it be, as George Prince of Anhalt's was, ecclesia, academia, curia, a church, a university, and a court. For the better despatch of civil businesses, there was daily praying, reading, writing, yea, and preaching too, as Melanchthon and Scultetus report. {a} Here was no place for sloth and sluggishness within this most pious prince's territories. His house was built of cedar beams, {#So 1:17} of living stones; {#IPe 2:5} his polity a theocracy, as Josephus saith of the Jewish Government; and of his people it might be said, as Polydor Virgil saith of the English, Regnum Anglicae regnum Dei. Oh, the blessednesses of such a country!

And through idleness of the hands the house droppeth, &c.] Stillicidia praecedunt ruinam, de poenas gravissimas, leviores, saith Jerome. If course be not timely taken, the house will run to ruii for want of people or reparation; so will that person that takes not warning by lighter punishments. Surely, as one cloud follows another, till the sun disperseth them, so do judgments—greater succeed lesser, till men, meeting God by repentance, disarm his wrath.

Ver. 19. A feast is made for laughter, and wine maketh merry.] Slothful governors, Regni dilapidatores (so our Henry III was called for his pride and prodigality), {a} are all for feasting and frolicking. See #Pr 31:4 Da 5:3,4. This cannot be maintained without money, for the getting and gathering in whereof the poor people are peeled and polled, and rich men's gifts are received, to the perverting of justice by those corrupt rulers, qui vili precio nihil non humile et vile parati sunt facere, as Gregory Thaumaturgus speaketh in his note upon this verse.

But money answereth all things.] It gives a satisfactory answer to whatsoever is desired or demanded. Seneca saith, circa pecuniam multum vociferationis est, that about money there is much noise, great crying; but though never so nmch, never so great, money answereth all—it effects all. {b} What great designs did Philip bring to pass in Greece by his golds the very oracles were said, ψιλιπιξειν, to say as Philip would have them: Antipater non tenuis fuit pecuniae, et ideo praevalidae potentiae, saith Egesippus; {c} he was a well moneyed man, and therefore a very mighty man. The Hebrew, or rather Chaldee, word {d} used for money {#1Ch 29:7 Ezr 8:27} signifies to do some great work, because money is the monarch of the world, and therein bears most mastery. Among suitors (in love and in law especially) money drives the bargain and business to an upshot.

The present government is ever grievous, and nothing more usual than to grudge against it; {a} but take heed of wishing hurt to rulers (thought is not free), much more of uttering it, though in higger mugger. Kings have long ears, heavy hands; walls also and hedges have ears. Some may overhear thee, as Mordecai did the two traitors, {#Es 2:22} or thou mayest unwittingly and unwillingly betray thyself, as our gunpowder plotters.

That which hath wing, &c.] It was a quill, a piece of a wing, that discovered that hellish plot. Wilful murder and treason will out by one means or other. Those two traitors sent by Mohammed to kill Scanderbeg, falling out between themselves, let fall something that brought all to light and themselves to punishment. {b} The like befell that gentleman of Normandy that confessed to a priest his intent to have killed King Francis. {c}

Ver. 1. Cast thy bread.] Thine own well gotten goods. Alms must not be given, said a martyr, ^{a} until it have sweat in a man's hand. "Let him labour, working with his hands," saith the apostle, "that he may have to give to him that needeth." ^{#Eph 4:28} And the bountiful man giveth of his bread to the poor, saith Solomon. ^{#Pr 22:9} God hateth to have ex rapina holocaustum, a sacrifice of things got by rapine and robbery; ^{#Am 2:8} "With such sacrifices God is not well pleased." Wherefore, if thou hast of thine own, give; if not, better for thee to gratify none than to grate upon any, saith Augustine. When our Henry III (an oppressing prince) had sent a load of frieze ^{b} to the friar minors to clothe them, they returned the same with this message, that he ought not to give alms of what he had rent from the poor, neither would they accept of that abominable gift. ^{c} The Hebrew word signifying alms signifies properly justice, to intimate that the matter of our alms should be goods justly gotten. ^{d} Hence also the Jews call their alms box Kuphashel tsedaka, the chest of justice. Into this box or basket, if thou cast but bread (so it be thy bread), brown bread, such as thou hast, and then wait for the Lord, when he will return from the wedding with a full hand, thou shalt be fed supernae mensae copiosis deliciis, as one saith, with the abundant dainties of the heavenly table.

Upon the waters.] Heb., Upon the face of the waters, where it may seem clearly cast away; as seed sown upon the sea, ^{e} or a thing thrown down Avon, as we say, no profit or praise to be had by it. Or upon the waters, i.e., upon strangers (if necessary) whom we never saw, and are never likely to see again. Or, "upon the waters," i.e., upon such as being hunger bitten, or hardly bestead, do water their plants, being fed "with bread of tears." ^{as #Ps 80:5} To this sense Munster renders the words thus, Mitte panem tuum super facies aquas, sc., emittentes, Cast thy bread upon faces watered with tears; or, "upon the waters," upon the surface of the waters, that it may be carried into the ocean, where the multitude of waters is gathered together; so shall thine alms, carried into heaven, be found in the ocean of eternity, where there is a confluence of all comforts and contentments. Or, lastly, "upon the waters," i.e., in loca irrigua, upon grounds well watered—moist and fertile soil, such as is that by the river Nile, where they do but throw in the seed, and they have four rich harvests in less than four months; {f} or as that in the land of Shinar (where Babel was founded, #Ge 11:1-9), that returns, if Herodotus and Pliny may be believed, the seed beyond credulity. {g}

For thou shalt find it after many days.] Thou shalt "reap in due time, if thou faint not": slack not, withdraw not thy hand, as #Ec 11:6. Mitre panem, &c., et in verbo Domini promitto tibi, &c., saith one; Cast thy bread confidently, without fear, and freely, without compulsion; cast it, though thou seem to cast it away; and I dare promise thee, in the name and word of the Lord, Nequaquam infrugifera apparebit beneficentia, {h} that thy bounty shall be abundantly recompensed into thy bosom. "The liberal soul shall be made fat, and he that watereth shall be watered himself." {#Pr 11:25} {See Trapp on "Pr 11:25"} See also my Common Place of Alms. Non pereunt sed parturiunt pauperibus impensa, That which is given to the poor is not lost, but laid up. Not getting, but giving, is the way to wealth. {#Pr 19:17} Abigail, for a small present bestowed on David, became a queen, whereas churlish Nabal was sent to his place.

Ver. 2. Give a portion to seven, and also to eight.] A portion—i.e., a good deal, a fair proportion—to a good many; as B. Hooper did to his board of beggars, whom he fed every day by course, serving them by four at a mess, with whole and wholesome food. {a} Or give a portion, i.e., a part, such as thou canst well part with, not stretching beyond the staple, lest ye mar all, while "others are eased, and you burdened, but by an equality," &c. {#2Co 8:13,14} Give to him that asketh, saith our Saviour {#Lu 6:30} -scil., according to his necessity, and thine ability. Give with discretion. {#Ps 112:5} Have a special respect to the family of faith, {#Ga 6:10} those "excellent ones of the earth," in whom was David's "delight." {#Ps 16:3} The Jews, from this text, grounded a custom of giving alms to seven poor people every day, or to eight at utmost, if they saw cause. But here is a finite number put for an infinite, as when Christ bade Peter forgive his brother "seventy times seven times," and as {#Mic 5:5} "seven shepherds and eight principal men" signify so many shepherds, both teachers and rulers, as shall sufficiently feed the flock of Christ, and defend it from enemies.

For thou knowest not what evil shall be upon the earth.]

Therefore lay in lustily; or rather, lay out liberally, and so lay up for a rainy day. Thou mayest be soon shred of thy goods, and as much need other men's mercy as they now need thine. Sow, therefore, while thou hast it, that thou mayest "reap again in due season." "Water, that thou mayest be watered again." {#Pr 11:25} "Lay up for thyself a good foundation against the time to come." {#1Ti 6:18} Lay out thy talent; work while the tool is in thine hand. Make friends with thy mammon. Say not, as one rich churl did, when requested to do somewhat toward his minister's maintenance, The more I give, the less I have. Another answered that he knew how to bestow his money better. A third old man said, I see the beginning of my life, but I see not my latter; I may come to want that which I now give. Thou mayest do so, saith Solomon here, and by thy tenacity thou art very likely to do so; but wilt thou know, O man! how thou mayest prevent this misery, and not feel what thou fearest "Give a portion to seven," &c. Part, therefore, freely with that which thou art not sure to keep, that thou mayest gain that which thou art sure never to Lose."he that giveth to the poor shall not lack." {#Pr 28:27}

{a} Acts and Mon., fol. 1368.

Ver. 3. If the clouds be full of rain.] As the sun draws up vapours into the air, not to retain them there, but to return them to the earth, for its relief, and the creatures' comfort, so those that have attracted to themselves much riches should plentifully pour them out for the benefit of their poorer brethren. Clouds, when full of great and strong rain, as the word here signifies, pour down amain; and the spouts run, and the eaves shed, and the presses overflow, and the aromatic trees sweat out their precious oils; so should rich men be ready to distribute, willing to share. But it happens otherwise, for commonly the richer the harder; and those that should be as clouds to water the earth, as a common blessing, are either "waterless clouds," as St Jude hath it, or at best they are but as waterpots, that water a few spots of ground only in a small garden. The earth is God's purse, ^{a} as one saith, and rich men's houses are his storehouses. This the righteous rich man knoweth, and therefore he "disperseth," as a steward for God; "he giveth to the poor; his righteousness," and his riches too, "endureth for ever." ^{#Ps 112:9} Whereas the wicked rich man retaineth his fulness to rot with him; he feedeth upon earth like a serpent, and striveth, like a toad, to die with much mould in his mouth, and is therefore bidden by St James to "weep and howl for the miseries that are coming upon him," for his cursed hoard of evilgotten and worse kept goods. The rottenness of his riches, the canker of his cash, the moth of his garments, "shall be a witness against him, and eat up his flesh as fire." ^{#Jas 5:1-3} He shall be sure to be arraigned as an arrant thief, as a cursed cheat; for that, having a better thing by him, he brings a worse; ^{#Mal 1:14} and being a rich man, he makes himself poor, lest he should do good to the poor. As Pope Alexander V said of himself that when he was a bishop he was rich, when a cardinal he was poor, and when he was pope he was a beggar. I should sooner have believed him if he had said as his successor, Pius Quintus, did, Cum essem religiosus, sperabam bene de salute animae meae; cardinalis factus extimui; pontifex creatus pene despero. ^{b} When I was first in orders, without any farther ecclesiastical dignity, I had good hopes of my salvation; when a cardinal, I feared myself; but now that I am pope, I am almost out of hope.

And if the tree fall toward the south,] i.e., Which way soever it groweth, it bears fruit; so should rich men be rich in good works, ^{#1Ti 6:18} and being fat olive trees, they should be, as David, ^{#Ps 52:8} green olive trees, full of good fruits. Or thus: Trees must down, and men must die; and as trees fall southward or northward, so shall men be set either at the right hand of the judge, or at the left, according as they have carried themselves towards Christ's poor members. ^{#Mt 25:31-46} Up, therefore, and be doing while life lasteth, and so lay hold upon eternal life. Mors atra impendet agenti. Where the boughs of holy desires and good deeds are most and greatest, on that side, no doubt, the tree will fall; but being fallen, it can bear no fruit for ever.

Ver. 4. He that observeth the wind shall not sow.] In sowing of mercy, he that sticks in such objections and doubts as carnal men use to frame out of their covetous and distrustful hearts, neglects his seedtime, by looking at winds and clouds, which is the guise of a lewd and lazy seedsman. A word in season, saith Solomon, so a charitable deed in season, "how good is it!" He that defers to do good in hope of better times, or fitter objects, or fewer obstacles, or greater abilities, &c., it will be long enough ere he will do anything to purpose. When God sets us up an altar, we must offer a sacrifice; when he affords us an opportunity, we must lay hold on it, and not stand scrupling and casting perils, lest we lose the sowing of much seed, and reaping of much fruit; lest we come with our talent tied up in a napkin, and hear, Thou idle, and therefore evil servant.

Ver. 5. As thou knowest not what is the way of the Spirit.] Or, Of the wind, as some render it, grounding upon the former verse—q.d., Why should any so observe the wind, the nature whereof he so little understands, {#Joh 3:8} and the inconstancy whereof is grown to, and known by, a common proverb? But by spirit I rather think is meant the soul, as by bones the body. Who can tell when and how the body is formed, the soul infused? The body is the "soul's sheath," {#Da 7:15 margin.} an abridgment of the visible world, as the soul is of the invisible. The members of the body were made all by book, {#Ps 139:16} "and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth," that is, in the womb: as curious workmen, when they have some choice piece in hand, they perfect it in private, and then bring it forth to light for men to gaze at. What an admirable piece of work is man's head piece!—God's masterpiece in this little world—the chief seat of the soul, that cura divini ingenii, as one calls it! {a} There is nothing great on earth but man, nothing in man but his mind, said the philosopher. {b} Many locks and keys argue the price of the jewel that they keep; and many papers wrapping the token within them, the worth of the token. The tables of the testament—First, Laid up in the ark; secondly, The ark bound about with pure gold; thirdly, Overshadowed with cherubims' wings; fourthly, Enclosed with the veil of the tabernacle; fifthly, With the compass of the tabernacle; sixthly, With a court about all; seventhly, With a treble covering of goats', rams', and badgers' skins above all—must needs be precious tables. So when the Almighty made man's head, the seat of the reasonable soul, and overlaid it with hair, skin, and flesh, like the threefold covering of the tabernacle, and then encompassed it with a skull of bones, like boards of cedar, and afterwards with various skins, like silken curtains, and, lastly, enclosed it with the yellow skin that covers the brain, like the purple veil, which Solomon calls the "golden ewer," {#Ec 12:6} he would doubtless have us to know it was made for some great treasure to be put therein. How and when the reasonable soul is put into this curious cabinet, philosophers dispute many things, but can affirm nothing of a certainty: as neither "how the bones do grow in the womb," how of the same substance the several parts—as bones, nerves, arteries, veins, gristles, flesh, and blood—are fashioned there, and receive daily increase. This David looks at as a just wonder. {#Ps 139:14,15} Mirificatus sum mirabilibus operis tuis, {c} saith he, I am fearfully and wonderfully made: and Galen, a profane philosopher, could not but hereupon sing a hymn to man's most wise Creator, whom yet he knew not.

Even so thou knowest not the work of God, / i.e., The rest of his works of creation and providence, which are very various, and to us no less unknown than uncertain. Do thou that which God commandeth, and let things occur as they will, there is an overruling hand in all for the good of those that love God. "Trust therefore in the Lord with all thine heart, and lean not to thine own understanding." {#Pr 3:5} "Hide not thine eyes from thine own flesh." {#Isa 58:7} He that doeth so shall have many a curse. The apostle useth a word for liberality, {d} which properly signifieth simplicity; and this he doth in opposition to that crafty and witty wiliness of the covetous, to defend themselves from the danger, as they take it, of liberality.

Ver. 6. In the morning sow thy seed, &c.] At all times be ready to every good work, {#Tit 3:1} as the bee is abroad as soon as ever the sun breaks forth. Sow mercy in the morning, sow it likewise in the evening, as those bountiful Macedonians did, to the shame of those richer but harder Corinthians, sending once and again to Paul's necessities. {#2Co 8:3 Php 4:16} Oh, sow much and oft of this unfailable seed into God's blessed bosom, the fruit whereof you are sure to reap at your greatest need. Men may be thankful, or they may not, Perraro grati reperiuntur; saith Cicero: it is ten to one if any cured leper turn again to give thanks. But "God is not unrighteous to forget your labour of love in ministering to his saints." {#Heb 6:10} Haply you may not sow and reap the same day, as the widow of Sarepta did: haply the seed may lie underground some while, and not be quickened except it die; but have patience, nothing so sure as a crop of comfort to those that are duly merciful. Up therefore and be doing, lose no time, slip no season; it is but a morning and an evening, one short day of life wherein we have to work, and to advance your blessedness. Sow therefore continually: blessed is he that "soweth beside all waters." Blessed Bradford held that hour lost wherein he had not done some good with his hand, tongue, or pen. {a} Titus remembering one day that he had done no good to any one, cried out, Amici, diem perdidit. Friends, I have wasted a day. And again, Hodie non regnavimus. Today we were not the master. We have lost a day, &c. This was that Titus that never sent any suitor away with a sad heart, and was therefore counted and called Humani generis deliciae, the darling of mankind, the people's sweetheart. The senate loaded him with more praises when he was dead than ever they did living and present.

Ver. 7. Truly the light is sweet.] The light of life, of a lightsome life especially. Any life is sweet; which made the Gibeonites make such a hard shift to live, though it were but to be hewers of wood and drawers of water. "I pray thee let me live," live upon any terms, said Benhadad, in his submissive message to that merciful nonsuch. {#1Ki 20:32} "If I have found favour in thy sight, O king, and if it please the king, let my life be given me at my petition," said that καλη και σοφη, that paragon of her time, Queen Esther. {#Ec 7:3} {a} Ebedmelech is promised "his life for a prey"; {#Jer 39:18} and so is Barak, as a sufficient reward of that good service he had done in reading the roll, for the which he expected some great preferment. {#Jer 45:5 36:1,2} The prophet chides him, and tells him he might be glad of his life in those dear years of time, when the arrows of death had so oft come whisking by him, and he had so oft straddled over the grave, as it were, and yet was not fallen into it. To maintain our radical humour, that feeds the lamp of life, is as great a miracle, saith one, as the oil in the widow's cruse, that failed her not. To deliver us from so many deaths and dangers as we are daily and hourly subject unto, is a mercy that calls for continual praises to the Preserver of mankind. But more, when men do not only live, but live prosperously, as Nabal did. {#1Sa 25:6} "Thus," said David to his messengers, "shall ye say to him that liveth," viz., in prosperity; which such a man as Nabal reckons the only life. The Irish use to ask what such a man meant to die? And some good interpreters are of the opinion, that the Preacher in this verse brings in the carnal churl objecting, or replying for himself against the former persuasions to acts of charity. Ah! saith he; but, for all that, to live at the full; to have a goodly inheritance in a fertile soil, in a wholesome air, near to the river, not far from the town; to be free from all troubles and cares that poverty bringeth; to live in a constant sunshine of prosperity, abundance, honour, and delight; to have all that heart can wish or need require—what a heavenly life is this! what a lovely and desirable condition! &c. "What man is he that desireth life, and loveth many days that he may see good?" saith David. {#Ps 34:12} I do, saith one; and I, saith another; and I, a third, &c., as St Augustine frames the answer. It is that which all worldlings covet, and hold it no policy to part with what they have to the poor for uncertainties in another world. In answer to whom, and for a cooler to their inordinate love of life, the Preacher subjoins—

Ver. 8. But if a man live many years and rejoice, &c.,] q.d., Say he live pancratice et basilice, and sit many years in the world's warm sunshine, yet he must not build upon a perpetuity, as good Job did, but was deceived, when he said, "I shall die in my nest," {#Job 29:18} and holy David, when he concluded, "I shall never be moved." {#Ps 30:6} For as sure as the night follows the day, a change will come, a storm will rise, and such a storm as to wicked worldlings will never be blown over. Look for it, therefore, and be wise in time. "Remember the days of darkness," that is, of adversity, but especially of death and the grave. The hottest season hath lightning and thunder. The sea is never so smooth but it may be troubled; the mountain not so firm but it may be shaken with an earthquake. Light will be one day turned into darkness, pleasure into pain, delights into wearisomeness, and the dark days of old age and death far exceed in number the lightsome days of life, which are but a warm gleam, a momentary glance. Let this be seriously pondered, and it will much rebate the edge of our desires after earthly vanities. "Dearly beloved," saith St Peter, "I beseech you, as pilgrims and strangers abstain from fleshy lust," &c., {#1Pe 2:12} q.d., The sad and sober apprehension of this, that you are here but sojourners for a season, and must away to your long home, will lay your lusts a-bleeding and a-dying at your feet. It is an observation of a commentator upon this text, that when Samuel had anointed Saul to be king, to confirm unto him the truth of the joy, and by it to teach him how to be careful in governing his joy, he gave him this sign, "When thou art departed from me today, thou shalt find two men at Rachel's sepulchre." {#1Sa 10:2} For he that findeth in his mind a remembrance of his grave and sepulchre, will not easily be found exorbitant in his delights and joys; for this it was, belike, that Joseph of Arimathea had his sepulchre ready hewn out in his garden. The Egyptians carried about the table a death's head at their feasts; {a} and the emperors of Constantinople, on their coronation day, had a mason appointed to present unto them certain marble stones, using these ensuing words

Ipse tibi tumulum me fabricare velis.”

“Choose, mighty sir, under which of these stones,
Your pleasure is, erelong, to lay your bones.”

{a} Isidor.

Ver. 9. Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth, / i.e., Do if thou darest; like as God said to Balaam, "Rise up and go to Balak" {#Nu 22:20} -that is, go if thou thinkest it good; go since thou wilt need to go; but thou goest upon thy death. Let no man imagine that it ever came into the Preacher's heart here, oleum camino addere, to add fuel to the fire of youthful lusts, to excite young people, unruly enough of themselves, to take their full swing in sinful pleasures. Thus to do might better befit a Protagoras, of whom Plato ^{a} reports, that he many times boasted, that whereas he had lived sixty years, forty of those sixty he had spent in corrupting those young men that had been his pupils; or that old dotterel in Terence, that said, Non est mihi, crede, flagitium adolescentem helluari, potare, scortari, fores effringere: I hold it no fault for young men to swagger, drink, drab, revel, &c. Solomon in this text, either by a mimesis brings in the wild younker thus bespeaking himself, Rejoice, my soul, in thy youth, &c., and then nips him on the crown again with that stinging "but" in the end of the verse; or else, which I rather think, by an ironic concession he bids him "rejoice," &c., yields him what he would have, by way of mockage and bitter scoff; like as Elijah jeered the Baalites, bidding them cry aloud unto their drowsy or busy god; or as Micaiah bade Ahab, by a holy scoff, go up against Ramothgilead and prosper; or as our Saviour bade his drowsy disciples, "Sleep on now, and take your rest," ^{#Mr 14:41} viz., if you can at least, or have any mind to it, with so many bills and halberds about your ears.

And let thine heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth.] In diebus electionum tuarum, so Arias Montanus reads it; In the days of thy choosings—that is, when thou followest the choice and the chase of thine own desires, and doest what thou wilt without control. ^{#Lu 12:45}

Walk in the way of thine heart.] Which bids thee eat, drink, and be merry, and had as lief be knocked on the head as do otherwise. Hence fasting is called an "afflicting of the soul"; and the best find it no less grievous to go about holy duties, than it is to children to be called from their sports, and set to their books.

And in the sight of thine eyes.] Those windows of wickedness, and loop holes of lust.

But know.] Here is that which mars all the mirth, here is a cooler for the younker's courage, sour sauce to his deserts, for fear he should surfeit. Verba haec Solomonis valde ernphatica sunt, saith Lavater. There is a great deal of emphasis in these words of Solomon. Let me tell thee this as a preacher, saith he; and oh that I could get words to gore the very soul with smarting pain, that this doctrine might be written in thy flesh!

That for all these things.] These tricae, as the world accounts them; these trifles and tricks of youth, which Job and David bitterly bewailed as sore businesses.

God will bring thee to judgment.] Either in this life, as he did Absalom and Adonijah, Hophni and Phinehas, Nadab and Abihu, or infallibly at thy death's day, which indeed is thy dooms day; then God will bring thee perforce, be thou never so loath to come to it; he will hail thee to his tribunal, be it never so much against thy heart, and against the hair with thee. And as for the judgment what it shall be, God himself shows it in #Isa 28:17, "Judgment will I lay to the line, and righteousness to the plummet, and the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding place." Where, what is the hail, saith one, but the multitude of accusations which shall sweep away the vain hope that men have, that the infinite mercy of God will save them, howsoever they live? And what is the hiding place, but the multitude of excuses which men are ready to make for themselves, and which the waters of God's justice shall quite destroy and overthrow? Young men, of all men, are apt to make a covenant with death, and to put far away from them the thought of judgment. But it moves them not so to do; for Senibus mors in ianuis, adolescentibus in insidiis, saith Bernard. Death doth not always knock at the door, but comes often like a lightning or thunderbolt; it blasteth the green grain, and consumeth the new and strong building. Now at death it will fare nothing better with the wild and wicked youngster, than with that thief, that having stolen a gelding, rideth away bravely mounted, till such time as being overtaken by hue and cry, he is soon afterwards sentenced and put to death.

Ver. 10. Therefore remove sorrow from thine heart.] One would have thought that he should have said rather, considering the premises, remove joy from thy heart, "Let thy laughter be turned to mourning, and thy joy into heaviness," {#Jas 4:9} turn all the streams into that channel that may drive that mill that may grind the heart. But by sorrow here, or indignation, as Tremellius renders it, the Preacher means sin, the cause of sorrow; and so he interprets himself in the next words, "Put away evil from thy flesh,"—i.e., mortify thy lusts.

For childhood and youth are vanity.] The Septuagint and Vulgate render it, Youth and pleasure are vain things. They both will soon be at an end.

Ver. 1. Remember now thy Creator.] Heb., Creators—scil., Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, called by Elihu, Eloa Gnosia, "God my makers," {#Job 35:10} and by David, the "Makers of Israel." {#Ps 149:2} So #Isa 54:5, "Thy makers is thine husbands." "Let us make man"; {#Ge 1:26} and, {#Ge 1:1} Dii creavit. Those three in one, and one in three, made all things; but man he made "fearfully and wonderfully"; {#Ps 139:14} the Father did it; {#Eph 3:9} the Son; {#Heb 1:8,10 Col 1:16} the Holy Ghost. {#Ps 33:6,104:30 Job 36:13 33:4} To the making of man a council was called. {#Ge 1:29} Sun, moon, and stars are but the "work of his fingers"; {#Ps 8:3} but man is the "work of his hands." {#Ps 139:14} "Thine hands have made me," or took special pains about me, "and fashioned me," saith Job. {#Job 10:8} Thou hast formed me by the book, saith David. {#Ps 139:16} Hence the whole Church so celebrates this great work with crowns cast down at the Creator's feet. {#Re 4:10,11} And hence young men also, who are mostly most mindless of anything serious, for childhood and youth are vanity, are here charged to remember their Creator—that is, as dying David taught his young son Solomon, to know, love, and "serve him, with a perfect heart, and a willing mind," {#1Ch 28:9} for words of knowledge in Scripture imply affection and practice. Tam Dei meminisse opus est quam respirare, To remember God is every whit as needful as to draw breath, since it is he that gave us being at first, and that still gives us ζωην και πνοην, "life and breath." {#Ac 17:25} "Let everything therefore that hath breath, praise the Lord," even so long as it hath breath; yea, let it spend and exhale itself in continual sallies, as it were, and egressions of affection unto God, till it hath gotten, not only a union, but a unity with him. Of all things, God cannot endure to be forgotten.

In the days of thy youth,] Augustus began his speech to his mutinous soldiers with Audite senem, iuvenes, quem iuvenem senes audierunt, You that are young hear me that am old, whom old men were content to hear when I was but young. And Augustine beginneth one of his sermons thus, Ad vos mihi sermo, O iuvenes, flos aetatis, periculum mentis, To you is my speech, O young men, the flower of age, the danger of the mind. To keep them from danger, and direct them to their duty, it is that the Preacher here exhorts them to remember God betimes, to gather manna in the morning of their lives, to present the firstfruits to God, whose "soul hath desired the first ripe fruits," {#Mic 7:1} and who will "remember the kindness of their youth, the love of their espousals." {#Jer 2:2} God of old would be honoured with the firstlings of men and cattle, by the firstfruits of trees, and of the earth, in the sheaf, in the threshingfloor, in the dough, in the loaves. He called for ears of corn dried by the fire, and wheat beaten out of the green ears, {#Le 2:14} to teach men to serve him with the primrose of their childhood. Three sorts there were of firstfruits: First, Of the ears of grain offered about the passover; secondly, Of the loaves offered about pentecost; lastly, About the end of the year, in autumn. Now of the first two God had a part, but not of the last. He made choice of the almond tree, {#Jer 1:11} because it blossometh first; so of Jeremiah from his infancy, Timothy from his mother's breasts, &c. He likes not of those arbores autumnales autumnal trees {#Jude 13} which bud at latter end of harvest. He cares not for such loiterers as come halting in at last cast to serve God, when they can serve their lusts no longer. The Circassians, a kind of mongrel Christians, are said {a} to divide their life between sin and devotion—dedicating their youth to rapine, and their old age to repentance. "But cursed be that deceiver," saith the prophet, "that hath a male in his flock, and yet offereth to the Lord a corrupt thing." {#Mal 1:14} Wilt thou give God the dregs, the bottom, the snuffs, the very last sands, thy dotage, which thyself and friends are weary of? Shall thine oil, which should have been fuel for thy thankfulness, increase the fire of thy lusts, and thy lusts consume all? {#Jas 4:3} How much better were it to sacrifice early, with Abraham, the young Isaacs of thine age? to bring as he did young rams unto the Lord, and even, while thou art yet a lad, a stripling, to "take heed to thy ways according to God's Word." {#Ps 119:9} Ye shall not see my face, saith Christ, as once Joseph, except you bring your younger brother with you.

While the evil days come not,] viz., Of old age and misery; for these are seldom separated. Senectus, ut Africa, semper aliquid novi adportat, As Africa is never without some monster, so neither is old age ever without some ailment. Multa senem circumveniunt incommoda, {b} Many are the inconveniences that do encompass an old man. Solet senectus esse deformis, infirma, obliviosa, edentula, lucrosa, indocilis, et molesta, saith Cato in Plutarch, {c} Old age useth to be deformed, weak, forgetful, toothless, covetous, unteachable, unquiet. Now shall any man be so besotted and bewitched as to make that the task of his old age which should be the trade of his whole life? and to settle his everlasting only surest making or marring upon so sinking and sandy a foundation? A ship, the longer it leaks, the harder it is to be emptied; a land, the longer it lies, the harder it is to be ploughed; a nail, the further it is driven in, with the greater difficulty it is pulled out. And shall any man think that the trembling joints, the dazzled eyes, the fainting heart, the failing hands, the feeble legs of strengthless, drooping, untractable, wayward, froward old age can break up the fallow ground, can ever empty and pluck out the leaks and nails of so many years flowing and fastening?

Ver. 2. While the sun, or the light, or the moon, &c.,] i.e., While greater and lesser comforts fail not; or before the sight of thine eyes grow dim, and as unfit to let in light as an old dusty window. The air to aged eyes seemeth dusty and misty, and the sun wadeth as the moon in a foggy evening, and the stars are out of sight; they "see through a glass darkly," as the apostle speaks in another case, {#1Co 13:12} they can know no kin without spectacles; the defluxion of rheum, {a} which trickleth down the nose and cheeks, being as it were the rain, the gathering of new matter, which continually distilleth, being as it were the returning of the clouds after the rain in a moist season, and waters into an emptied fountain. Some, with relation to the former verse, interpret the words thus: Let thy Creator be remembered while the "sun is not darkened"—that is, while youth continueth; or if not so, while "the light of the sun" is not gone—that is, while thy manhood lasteth; or if not so, while the "moon is not darkened,"—that is, while thine elder years are not spent; or if not so, while the "stars are not shut up," while the worst of old age hath not seized upon thee; for then "the clouds will return after the rain,"—that is, one grief comes upon the neck of another, "as deep calleth upon deep at the noise of the waterspouts." {#Ps 42:7} One affliction followeth and occasioneth another, without intermission of trouble, as one billow comes wallowing and tumbling upon another, or, as in April weather, one shower is unburdened, another is brewed. Hence some of the ancient patriarchs are said to have died old men, and full of years, -they had enough of this world, and desired to depart, as Abraham, Simeon, others. Hence the poets feign that Tithonus, when he might have had immortality here, he would not. And Cato protested, that if when old he might be made young again, he would seriously refuse it. {b}

{a} Watery matter secreted by the mucous glands or membranes, such as collects in or drops from the nose, eyes, and mouth, etc., and which, when abnormal, was supposed to cause disease; hence, an excessive or morbid 'defluxion' of any kind.

{b} Cic. de Senectute.

Ver. 3. In the day when the keepers of the house, &c., / i.e., The hands and arms, wherewith we defend the head and whole body—called a house also by St Paul—from harm and danger, and maintain our lives; which are therefore called the "lives of our hands," because upheld with the labour of our hands. {#Isa 57:10} These are fitly called keepers or guardians for their usefulness, and for their faithfulness too. Numa Pompilius consecrated the hands to faith; his successor, Tallus Hostilius, being a profane, perfidious person, and a condemner of all religion, as that which did but emasculate men's minds, and make them idle, brought in and worshipped two new gods, viz., Paver and Pallor—Fear and Paleness. {a} Like another Cain, "Sighing and trembling he was upon the earth," so the Septuagint renders that, . {#Ge 4:12} Not his hands only trembled, which is thought to be Cain's mark, {#Ge 4:15} but his heart too. {#Isa 7:2} Not with old age either, as here, but with the terrors of an evil conscience. But to return to the text. Old men are full of the palsy for the most part, and many other infirmities, which here are most elegantly described by a continued allegory. Men draw forth as lively as they can the pictures of their young age, that in old age they may see their youth before their eyes. This is but a vanity, yet may good use be made thereof. So contrarily the Preacher here draws out to the life the picture of old age, ^{b} that young men may see and consider it together with death that follows it, and "after death, judgment."

And the strong men shall bow themselves.] Nutabunt: the legs and thighs shall stagger and falter, cripple and crinkle under them, as not able to bear the body's burden. The thigh in Latin is called femur, a ferendo, because it beareth and holdeth up the creature, and hath the longest and strongest bone in the whole body. The leg hath a shinbone and a shankbone, aptly fitted for the better moving. The foot is the base, the ground and pedestal which sustaineth the whole building. These are Solomen's "strong men"; but as strong as they are, yet in old age they buckle under their burden, ^{c} and are ready to overthrow themselves and the whole body. Hence old men are glad to betake them to their third leg, a staff or crutch; Membra levant baculis tardique senilibus annis. Hence Hesiod calls them τριποδας. Let them learn to lean upon the Lord, as the spouse did "upon her beloved," ^{#So 8:5} and he will stir up some good Job to be "eyes to them when blind, and feet to them when lame, ." ^{#Job 29:15} Let them also pray with David, "Cast me not off in the time of old age, forsake me not when my strength faileth." ^{#Ps 71:9}

And the grinders cease, because they are few.] The teeth, through age, fall out, or rot out, or are drawn out, or hang loose in the gums, and so cannot grind and masticate the meat that is to be transmitted into the stomach, for the preservation of the whole. Now the teeth are the hardest of the bones, if that they be bones, ^{d} whereof Aristotle makes question. They are as hard as stones, in the edges of them especially, and are here fitly compared to millstones, from their chewing office. The seat of the teeth are the jaws, where they have their several sockets, into which they are mortised. But in old men they stand wetshod in slimy humonr, or are hollow and stumpy, falling out one after another, as the cogs of a mill, so that “Fragendus misero gingiva panis inermi.”—Juvenal.

And those that look out at the windows.] The eyes are dim, as they were in old Isaac and Jacob, A heavy affliction surely, but especially to those that have had "eyes full of adultery," ^{#2Pe 2:14} "evil eyes," windows of wickedness, for the conscience of this puts a sting into the affliction, is a thorn to their blind eyes, and becomes a greater torment than ever Regulus the Roman was put to, ^{e} when his eyelids were cut off, and he set full opposite to the sun shining in his strength; ^{f} or than that Greek prince that had his eyes put out with hot burning basins, held near unto them. ^{g}

Ver. 4. And the doors shall be shut in the streets.] The ears shall grow deaf, the hearing weak, which hearing is caused by two bones within the inside of the ear, whereof one stands still and the other moves, like the two stones of a mill.

And he shall rise up at the voice of the bird.] Being awakened by every small noise; and this proceeds not from the quickness of the hearing, but from the badness of sleeping. For as Jerome speaketh, Frigescente iam sanguine, &c. ^{a} The blood now growing cold, and the moisture being dried up, by which matters sleep should be nourished. The old man awakeneth with a little sound, and at midnight, when the cock croweth, he riseth speedily, ^{b} being not able often to turn his members in his bed. Thus he. Cocks crowing, saith another, unto old men is the scholar's bell, that calls them to think of the things that are in God's book every morning.

And all the daughters of music shall be brought low.] Old men, as they cannot sing tunably, but creak or scream (whence Homer compares them to grasshoppers, propter raucam vocem, for their unpleasant voice), so they can take no delight in the melodious notes of others, as old Barzillai confesseth; {#2Sa 19:35} they discern not the harmony or distinction of sounds, neither are affected with music. {c} They must therefore labour to become temples of the Holy Ghost (in whose temple there never wants music), and sing psalms "with grace in their hearts," for, Non vex, sed votum; non musica chordula, nen cor; non clamans, non amans, psallit in aure Dei.

{a} Jerome, on this verse.

{b} Αλεκτωρ dicitur, quia nos a lecto exsuscitat.

{c} Nam quae cantante voluptas? -Juvenal.

Ver. 5. Also when they shall be afraid of that which is high.] Hillocks or little stones standing up, whereat they may stumble, as being unsteady and unwieldy. High ascents also they shun, as being short winded; neither can they look down without danger of falling, their heads being as weak as their hams. Let them therefore pray for a guard of angels, putting that promise into suit. {#Ps 91:11} Let them also keep within God's precincts, as ever they expect his protection; and then, though old Eli fell, and never rose again, yet when they fall they shall arise, for the Lord puts under his hand. {#Ps 37:24} Contrition may be in their way, but attrition shall not. Let them fear God, and they need not fear any other person or thing whatsoever.

And the almond tree shall flourish.] The hair shall grow hoary, those church yard flowers shall put forth. The almond tree blossoms in January, while it is yet winter, and the fruit is ripe in March. {a} Old age shall snow white hairs upon their heads. Let them see that they be "found in the way of righteousness."

And the grasshopper shall be a burden.] Every light matter shall oppress them, who are already a burden to themselves, being full of gout, and other swellings of the legs, which the Septuagint and Vulgate point at here, when they render it, impinguabiter locusta, - The locusts shall be made fat. Let them wait upon the Lord, as that "old disciple Mnason" {#Ac 21:16} did, and then they shall "renew their strength, mount up as eagles, run, and not be weary, walk, and not faint," even then, when "the youth shall faint and be weary, and the young men utterly fall." {#Isa 40:30,31}

And desire shall fail.] "The lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life." {#1Jo 2:15} And this Cicero reckons among the commodities and benefits of old age, quod hominem a libidinis estu, velut a tyranno quodam liberet, - that it frees a man from the fire of lust. {b} It should be so doubtless, an old lecher being little less than a monster. What so monstrous as to behold green apples on a tree in winter? and what so indecent as to see the sins of youth prevailing in times of age among old decrepit goats? that they should be capering after capparis (καππαρίς), the fruit of capers, as the Septuagint and Vulgate render it here.

Because man goeth to his long home.] Heb., To his old home—scil., to the dust from whence he was taken; or to "the house of his eternity"—that is, the grave (that house of all living), where he shall lie long, till the resurrection. Tremellius renders it, in domum saeculi sui -to the house of his generation, where he and all his contemporaries meet. Cajetan, in demure mundi sui -into the house of his world; that which the world provides for him, as nature at first provided for him the house of the womb. Toward this home of his the old man is now on gait, having one foot in the grave already. He sits and sings with Job, "My spirit is spent, my days are extinct, the graves are ready for me." {#Job 17:1}

And the mourners go about the streets.] The proverb is, Senex bos non lugetur, - An old man dies unlamented. But not so the good old man. Great moaning was made for old Jacob, Moses, Aaron, Samuel. The Romans took the death of old Augustus so heavily, that they wished he had either never been born or never died. Those, indeed, that live wickedly die wishedly. But godly men are worthily lamented, and ought to be so. {#Isa 57:1} This is one of the dues of the dead, so it be done aright. But they were hard bestead that were fain to hire mourners; that as midwives brought their friends into the world, so those widows should carry them out of it. See #Job 3:8 Jer 9:17.

Ver. 6. Or ever the silver cord be loosed.] Or, Lengthened—i.e., before the marrow of the back (which is of a silver colour) be consumed. From this cord many sinews are derived, which, when they are loosened, the back bendeth, motion is slow, and feeling faileth.

Or the golden bowl be broken, / i.e., The heart, say some, or the pericardium; the brain pan, say others, or the pia mater, compassing the brain like a swathing cloth, or inner rind of a tree.

Or the pitcher be broken at the fountain.] That is, The veins at the liver (which is the place of sanguification, or blood making, as one calls it), but especially Vena porta and Vena cava. Read the anatomists.

Or the wheel be broken at the cistern, / i.e., The head, which draws the power of life from the heart, to the which the blood runs back in any great fright, as to the fountain of life.

Ver. 7. Then shall the dust return to the earth, &c.] What is man, saith Nazianzen, but Νοϋς και χους, soul and soil, breath and body; a puff of wind the one, a pile of dust the other; no solidity in either. Zoroaster and some other ancient heathens imagined that the soul had wings, that, having broken these wings, she fell headlong into the body, and that, recovering her wings again, she flies up to heaven, her original habitation. That of Epicharmus is better to be liked, and comes nearer to the truth here delivered by the Preacher, Coneretur fuit, et discretum est, rediitque unde venerat; terra deorsum, spiritus sursum, - It was together, but is now by death set asunder, and returned to the place whence it came, the earth downward, the spirit upward. See #Ge 2:7, "God made man of the dust of the earth," to note our frailty, vility, and impurity. Lutum enim conspurcat omnia, sic et caro, saith one, -Dirt defiles all things; so doth the flesh. It should seem so, truly, by man's soul, which, coming pure out of God's hands, soon becomes

Bernard complains, not without just cause, that our souls, by commerce with the flesh, are become fleshly. Sure it is, that by their mutual defilement, corruption is so far rooted in us now, that it is not cleansed out of us by mere death (as is to be seen in Lazarus, and others that died), but by cinerification, or turning of the body to dust and ashes.

The spirit returns to God that gave it.] For it is divinae particula aerae, an immaterial, immortal substance, that after death returns to God, the Fountain of life. The soul moves and guides the body, saith a worthy divine, {a} as the pilot doth the ship. Now the pilot may be safe, though the ship be split on the rock. And as in a chicken, it grows still, and so the shell breaks and falls off. So it is with the soul; the body hangs on it but as a shell, and when the soul is grown to perfection, it falls away, and the soul returns to the "Father of spirits." Augustine (after Origen) held a long while that the soul was begotten by the parents, as was the body. At length he began to doubt this point, and afterward altered his opinion, confessing inter caetera testimonia hoc esse praecipuum, that among other testimonies this to be the chief, to prove the contrary to that which he had formerly held.

Ver. 8. Vanity of vanities, saith the Preacher.] Who chose for his text this argument of the vanity of human things, which having fully proved and improved, he here resumes and concludes. See previous verses.

Ver. 9. And moreover, because the Preacher was wise.] He well knew how hard it was to work men to a belief of what he had affirmed concerning earthly vanities, and therefore heaps up here many forcible and cogent arguments; as, first, that himself was no baby, but wise above all men in the world, by God's own testimony; therefore his words should be well regarded. Οἱ σοφοὶ ἡμῶν δευτέρωσι, Our wise men expound today (said the Jews one to another), "Come, let us go up to the house of the Lord," &c. Cicero had that high opinion of Plato for his wisdom, that he professed that he would rather go wrong with him than go right with others. Averroes overly admired Aristotle, as if he had been infallible. But this is a praise proper to the holy penman, guided by the spirit of truth, and filled with wisdom from on high for the purpose. To them, therefore, and to the word of prophecy by them, must men "give heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place," &c. {#2Pe 1:19}

He still taught the people knowledge.] He hid not his talent in a napkin, but used it to the instruction of his people. "Have not I written for thee excellent things" (or three various types of books—viz., proverbial, penitential, nuptial) "in counsels and knowledge?" {#Pr 22:20} Synesius speaks of some that, having great worth in them, will as soon part with their hearts {a} as with their conceptions. And Gregory observeth, {b} that there are not a few who, being enriched with spiritual gifts and abilities to do good, dum solis contemplationis studiis inardescunt, parere utilitati proximorum praedicatione refugiunt, while they burn in the studies of contemplation only, do shun to seek by preaching to profit their neighbours. Solomon was none of these.

Yea, he gave good heed.] Or, He made them to take good heed; {c} he called upon them ever and anon, as our Saviour did upon his hearers, "Let him that hath an ear to hear, hear." Or as the deacons in Chrysostom's and Basil's time used to call upon the people, in these words, Oremus, attendamus, Let us pray, let us give heed.

And sought out.] By diligent scrutiny and hard study, beating his brains, as the fowl beats the shell to get out the fish, with great vehemence. The staves were always in the ark, to show, saith Gregory, that preachers should always meditate in their hearts upon the sacred Scriptures, that if need require they may without delay take up the ark, teach the people.

And set in order many proverbs.] Marshalled them in a fit method, and set others awork for to do the like. For, Regis ad exemplum, &c. Our Henry I, surnamed Beauclerc, had in his youth some taste of learning; and this put many of his subjects into the fashion of the book, so that various learned men flourished in his time, {d} as Ethan, Heman, Chalcola as Agur, and other compilers of proverbs did in Solomon's.

Ver. 10. The Preacher sought, &c.] He sought and sought, by pains and prayer. He knew the rule, Bene orasse, est bene studuisse, {a} To have prayed well is to have studied well. By prayer and tears St John got the book opened. {#Re 5:4} Luther got much of his insight into God's matters by the same means.

To find out acceptable words.] Verba desiderata; so Cajetan renders it. Verba delectabilia; so Tremellius. Verba expetibilia; so Vatablus. Delectable and desirable words, dainty expressions, that might both please and profit, tickle the ear, and with it take the heart. Such a master of speech was Paul, {#Ac 14:12} who thundered and lightened {b} in his discourses like another Pericles. Such a one was Apollos, that eloquent preacher, "mighty in the Scriptures," επιειν δεινωτατος, like another Phocion, a weighty speaker; such were many of the Greek and Latin fathers. Ambrose for one, whom when Augustine heard preach, Veniebant, saith he, in animum meum simul cum verbis quae deligebam, etiam res quas negligebam, There came into my mind, together with the words which I chiefly looked after, the matter which till then I made no reckoning of. Et res et verba. Both deeds and words. Philip Melanchthon could dress his doctrine in dainty terms, and so slide insensibly into the hearts of his hearers. Egit vir eloquens ut intelligenter ut obedienter audiretur; as Augustine {c} hath it; This eloquent man took pains that he might be heard with understanding, with obedience. The like might be said of Calvin, famous for the purity of his style and the holiness of his matter. Viret, in whose sermons singularem eloquentiam et in commovendis affectibus efficacitatem admirabar; saith Zanchy, {d} greatly admired at his singular eloquence and skill to work upon the affections by his elaborate discourses.

And that which was written was upright.] A corde ad cor, void of all insincerity and falsehood. {#Pr 8:8} Seducers come for the most part with pithanology—"by good words and fair speeches they deceive the hearts of the simple." {#Ro 16:18} But our Preacher's words are of another alloy, not more delicious and toothsome, than sound and wholesome, {#2Ti 3:16} proceeding from a right heart, and tending to make men upright, transforming them into the same image, and transfusing them into the divine nature.

Ver. 11. The words of the wise are like goads.] To rouse up men's drowsy and drossy spirits; to drive them, as the eagle doth her young ones with her talons, out of the nest of carnal security; to awaken them out of the snare of the devil, who hath cast many into such a dead lethargy, such a dedolent disposition, that, like Dionysius the Heracleot, they can hardly feel sharpest goads, or needles thrust into their fat hearts—"fat as grease." {#Ps 119:70} St Peter so preached that his hearers were "pricked at heart." {#Ac 2:37} St Stephen so galled his adversaries that they were "cut to the heart." {#Ac 7:54} And before them both, how barely and boldly dealt John Baptist and our Saviour Christ with those enemies of all righteousness, the Pharisees, qui toties puncti ac repuncti, nunquam tamen ad resipiscentiam compuncti, as one saith of them (who like those bears in Pliny, or asses of Tuscany, that have fed on hemlock), were so stupified that no sharp words would work upon them or take impression in their hearts, so brawny were their breasts, so horny their heart strings!

And as nails.] Such as shepherds fastened their tents to the ground with. Jael drove one of these tent nails through Sisera's temples, and laid his body as it were listening what was become of the soul. {#Jud 4:21} Now, as nails driven into pales do fasten them to their rails, so the godly and grave sentences of teachers—those "masters of assemblies"—do pierce into men's hearts, to unite them unto God by faith, and one to another in love. Our exhortations truly should be strong and well pointed, not only to wound as arrows, but to stick by the people as forked arrows, that they may prove, as those of Joash, "the arrows of the Lord's deliverance." And surely it were to be wished, in these unsettled and giddy times especially, that people would suffer such words of exhortation, as, like goads, might prick them on to pious practice, and, like nails, might fix their wild conceits, that they might be steadfast and immoveable, stablished in the truth, and not whiffed about with every wind of doctrine. But we can look for no better, so long as they have so mean an esteem of the ministers, those "masters of the assemblies" (whose office it is to congregate the people, and to preside in the congregations), which are given from one shepherd, the arch-shepherd {#1Pe 2:25} of his sheep, Jesus Christ, who in the days of his solemn inauguration into his kingdom, "gave these gifts unto men"—viz., "some to be apostles, some evangelists, some pastors, some teachers," &c. {#Eph 4:11}; What a mouth of blasphemy then opens that schismatical pamphleteer, {a} that makes this precious gift of Christ to his spouse, this sacred and tremendous function of the ministry, to be as mere an imposture, as very a mystery of iniquity, as arrant a juggle as the Papacy itself!

{a} The Compas. Samarit.

Ver. 12. And further, by these, my son, be admonished.] By these divine directions and documents, contained in this short book, wherein thou shalt find fulness of matter in fewness of words Or "by these," that is, by the Holy Scriptures, which, according to some interpreters, are called in the former verse "lords of collections," because they are as lords paramount above all other words and writings of men that ever were collected into volumes. Odi ego meos libros, saith Luther, {a} I do even hate the books set forth by myself, and could wish them utterly abolished, because I fear that by reading them some are hindered from spending their time in reading the sacred Scriptures. Of these it is that the Psalmist saith, "Moreover by them is thy servant warned"—or clearly admonished, as the word signifies—"and in doing thereof there is great reward."

{#Ps 19:11}

Of making many books there is no end.] Ambition and covetousness sets many authors awork in this scribbling age, Scribimus indocti doctique, &c. Presses are greatly oppressed, and "every fool will be meddling," that he may be a fool in print. Multi mei similes hoc morbo laborant, ut cum scribere nesciant, tamen a scribendo temperare non possunt: Many are sick of my very disease, saith Erasmus; that though they can do nothing worthy of the public, yet they must be publishing; hence the world so abounds with books, even to satiety and surfeit, many of them being no better than the scurf of scald and scabby heads.

And much study is a weariness to the flesh.] Jerome renders it Labor carnis, a work of the flesh. They will find it so one day to their sorrow, that are better read in Sir Philip than in St Peter, in Monsieur Balsac's Letters than St Paul's Epistles. The Holy Bible is to be chiefly studied, and herein we are to labour even to being exhausted; to read till, being overcome with sleep, we bow down as it were to salute the leaves with a kiss, as Jerome exhorted some good women of his time. {b} All other books, in comparison of this, we are to account as waste paper, and not to read them further than they some way conduce to the better understanding or practising of the things herein contained and commended unto our care.

Ver. 13. Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter,] scil., Touching the attainment of true happiness. Let us see (for a perclose of all) where and how it may be had. Shall I tell you in two words, saith the Preacher? I will so, and see that ye mark it. In the original, the word rendered conclusion here hath the first letter bigger than the rest, to stir up the greater attention to that which follows, since in this short sentence is contained the sum of all divinity. {Hebrew Text Note}

Fear God and keep his commandments.] Bear an awful respect to the Divine Majesty, a reverential fear; and from this principle obey God in every part and point of duty. Do this, and live for ever. Do it in an evangelical way, I mean; for we can do it now no otherwise. Wish well to exact obedience, as David doth in #Ps 119:4,5, "Oh that I could keep thy commandments accurately"; and woe is me that I cannot! And then be doing as thou canst; for affection without endeavour is like Rachel, beautiful but barren. Be doing, I say, at everything, as well as at anything; for thou must not be funambulus virtutum, as Tertullian phraseth it, one that goeth in a narrow tract of obedience. No; thine obedience must be universal, extending to the compass of the whole law (which is but one copulative, as the schools speak). And then, beati sunt qui praecepta faciunt, etiam si non perficiunt, {a} they are blessed that do what they can, though they cannot but underdo. And, in libro tuo scribuntur omnes qui quod possunt faciunt, et si quod debent, non possunt. {b} They are surely written all in God's book that do what they can, though they cannot do as they ought. I cannot let slip a note given by one that was once a famous preacher in this kingdom, and still lives in his printed sermons. The Book of Ecclesiastes, saith he, begins with "All is vanity," and ends with "Fear God and keep his commandments." Now, if that sentence were knit to this, which Solomon keepeth to the end, as the haven of rest after the turmoils of vanity, it is like that which Christ said to Martha, "Thou art troubled about many things, but one thing is necessary." That which "troubleth" us Solomon calls vanity; that which is "necessary" he calls the fear of God. From that to this should be every man's pilgrimage in this world. We begin at Vanity, and never know perfectly that we are vain till we come to fear God and keep his commandments.

For this is the whole duty of man.] Heb., This is the whole man—q.d., He is not a complete man; he loses all his other praises that fears not God. It is the very nature and essence of man to be a reasonable creature. Now, what more reasonable than that God should be feared and served? What more irrational than irreligion? See #2Th 3:2. And what is man without true grace but praestantissimum brutum, as one saith, a very fair beast?

{b} Bernard.

Ver. 14. For God shall bring every work into judgment.] Full loath is sinful flesh to come to judgment; but (will they, nill they), come they must, "God will bring them." Angels will hale them out of their hiding holes. Rocks and mountains will then prove a sorry shelter, since rocks shall rend and mountains melt at the presence of the Judge. Let us therefore judge ourselves, if he shall not judge us, and take unto us words against our sins, if we will not have him to take unto him words against our souls. {#Ho 14:2} And then, Ira vivamus, ut rationem nobis reddendam arbitretour, saith the heathen orator, Let us so live as those that must shortly be called to an account. For who can tell but that he may suddenly hear as that Pope did, and was soon after found dead, Veni, miser, in iudicium, Come, thou wretch, receive thy judgment. Let this be firmly believed and thoroughly digested, and it will notably incite us to the fear and service of God. This some heathens knew. Zaleucus Locrensis, in the preface to his laws, hath these words: Hoc inculcatum sit, esse Deos, et venturum esse summum et fatalem illum diem: Remember to press often upon the people these two things; first, That there are gods; next, To these gods an account of all must be given. The Areopagites at their council were wont diligently to inquire what every one of the Athenians did, and how he lived, that men knowing and remembering that once they must give an account of their lives, though but to earthly judges, might embrace honesty. {a}

With every secret thing.] For at that day of "Revelation," as it is called, we must all appear—or be made transparent, translucent, and dear, like a perfectly transparent body, as the word there signifies—before the judgment seat of Christ; {#2Co 5:10} all shall be laid naked and open, the books of God's omniscience and man's conscience also shall be then opened, and secret sins shall be as legible in thy forehead as if written with the brightest stars or the most glittering sunbeams upon a wall of crystal. Men's actions are all in print in heaven, and God will at that day read them aloud in the ears of all the world.

Whether it be good or evil.] Then it shall appear what it is, which before was not so clear; like as in April both wholesome roots and poisonable reveal themselves, which in winter were not seen. Then men shall give an account—(1.) De bonis commissis, of good things committed unto them; (2.) De bonis dimissis, of good things neglected by them; (3.) De malis commissis, of evils committed by them; (4.) Lastly, De malis permissis, of evils done by others, suffered by them when they might have hindered it.

Here (as also at the end of Lamentations, Isaiah, and Malachi) many of the Hebrew Bibles repeat the foregoing verse, Turn thou us unto thee, O Lord, &c., yet without points, lest anything should seem added thereby to the holy Scriptures. {Hebrew Text Note} The reason hereof read in the end of the prophecy of Isaiah. {See Trapp on "Isa 66:24"}

Song of Solomon

Ver. 1. The song of songs.] Not a light love song—as some profane persons have fancied, and have therefore held it no part of the sacred canon—but a most excellent Epithalamium, a very divine ditty, a heavenly allegory, a mystical marriage song, called here the Song of Songs, as God is called the God of gods, {#De 10:17} as Christ is called the King of kings, {#Re 19:16} as the Most Holy is called the Holy of holies, to the which the Jewish doctors liken this canticle, as they do Ecclesiastes to the holy place, and Proverbs to the court, to signify that it is the treasury of the most sacred and highest mysteries of holy Scripture. {a} It streams out all along under the parable of a marriage, that full torrent of spiritual love that is between Christ and the Church {b} "This is a great mystery," saith that great apostle. {#Eph 5:32} It passeth the capacity of man to understand it in the perfection of it. Hence the Jews permitted none to read this sacred song before thirty years of age. Let him that reads think he sees written over this Solomon's porch, "Holiness to the Lord." {c} Procul hinc, procul este profani, nihil hic nisi castum. If any think this kind of dealing to be too light for so grave and weighty a matter, let them take heed, saith one, that in the height of their own hearts they do not proudly censure God and his order, who in many places useth the same similitude of marriage to express his love to his Church by, and interchangeably her duty toward him, as in #Ho 2:19 2Co 11:2 Eph 5:25, with #Eph 5:22-24, where the apostle plainly alludeth and referreth to this song of songs in sundry passages, borrowing both matter and frame of speech from hence.

Which is Solomon's.] He was the penman, God the author. Of many other songs he was both author and instrument. {#1Ki 4:32} Not so of this, which therefore the Chaldee paraphrast here entitleth "songs and hymns," in the plural, for the surpassing excellence of it, "which Solomon the prophet, the King of Israel, uttered by the spirit of prophecy before the Lord, the Lord of all the earth." A prophet he was, and is therefore now in the kingdom of heaven, notwithstanding his foul fall, whereof he repented. For as it is not the falling into the water that drowns, but lying in it, so neither is it the failing into sin that damns, but dying in it. Solomon was also King of Israel, and surpassed all the kings of the earth in wealth and wisdom, {#2Ch 9:22} yea, he was wiser than all men. {#1Ki 4:31} And as himself was a king, so he made this singular song, as David did the 45th Psalm, "concerning the King," Christ and his spiritual marriage to the Church, who is also called Solomon, {#So 3:11} and "greater than Solomon." {#Mt 12:42} If, therefore, either the worth of the writer or the weightiness of the matter may make to the commendation of any book, this wants for neither. That is a silly exception of some against this song, as if not canonical, because God is not once named in it; for as oft as the bridegroom is brought in speaking here, so oft Christ himself speaketh, who is "God blessed for ever." {#Ro 9:5} Besides, whereas Solomon made "a thousand songs and five," {#1Ki 4:32} this only, as being the chief of all, and part of the holy canon, hath been hitherto kept safe when the rest are lost, in the cabinet of God's special providence, and in the chest of the Jews, God's faithful library keepers. {#Ro 3:2 Joh 5:39} It being not the will of our heavenly Father that any one hair of that sacred head should fall to the ground.

Ver. 2. Let him kiss me with the kisses of his mouth.] It must be premised and remembered that this book is penitus allegoricus et parabolicus, as one saith, allegorical throughout, and aboundeth all along with types and figures, with parables and similitudes. Quot verba, tot sacramenta, So many words, so many mysteries, saith Jerome of the Revelation, which made Cajetan not dare to comment upon it. {a} The like may be truly affirmed of the Canticles; nay, we may say of it in a special manner, as Possevinus doth of the whole Hebrew Bible, tot esse sacramenta, quot literae, tot mysteria, quot puncta, tot arcana, quot apices. so much is sacred, how many books, so much is mysterious, how many marked with vowel points, so much is secret, how many marked vowels. {b} Hence Psellus in Theodoret asketh pardon for presuming to expound it. But difficilium facilis est venia; et, in magnis voluisse sat est: In hard things the pardon is easy, and in high things let a man show his goodwill and it sufficeth. The matter of this book hath been pointed at already; as for the form of it, it is dramatic and dialogistical. The chief speakers are not Solomon and the Shulamite, as Castalio makes it, but Christ and his Church. Christ also hath his associates, those friends of the bridegroom, {#Joh 3:29} viz., the prophets, apostles, pastors, and teachers, who put in a word sometimes; as likewise do the fellow friends of the bride—viz., whole churches, or particular Christians. The bride begins here abruptly, after the manner of a tragedy, through impatience of love, and a holy impotence of desire after, not a union only, but a unity also with him whom her soul loveth. "Let him kiss me," &c. Kissing is a token of love, {#1Pe 5:14 Lu 7:45} and of reconciliation. {#2Sa 14:33} And albeit καταφιλειν ουκ εστι φιλειν, as Philo observeth, love is not always in a kiss—Joab and Judas could kiss and kill, Caveatur osculum Iscarioticum, consign their treachery with so sweet a symbol of amity {#1Pe 1:22} -yet those that "love out of a pure heart fervently," do therefore kiss, as desiring to transfuse, if it might be, the souls of either into other, and to become one with the party so beloved, and in the best sense suaviated. {kissed} That, therefore, which the Church here desireth, is not so much Christ's coming in the flesh—that "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners had spoken in times past unto her by the prophets, would now speak unto her by his Son," {#Heb 1:1,2} as some have sensed it—as that she may have utmost conjunction to him, and nearest communion with him, here as much as may be, and hereafter in all fulness of fruition. "Let him kiss me," and so seal up his hearty love unto me, even the "sure mercies of David." "With the kisses of his mouth"; not with one kiss only, with one pledge of his love, but with many—there is no satiety, no measure, no bounds or bottom of this holy love, as there is in carnal desires, ubi etiam vota post usum fastidio sunt. Neither covets she to kiss his hand, as they deal by kings, or his feet, as they do the pope's, but his "mouth"; she would have true kisses, the basia, the busses of those lips, whereinto "grace is poured," {#Ps 45:2 and wherehence those words of grace are uttered} {#Mt 5:2-12} "He openeth his mouth with wisdom, and in his lips is the law of kindness." {#Pr 31:26} Hence her affectionate desires, her earnest pantings, inquietations, and unsatisfiabilities. She must have Christ, or else she dies; she must have the "kisses of Christ's mouth," even those sweet pledges of love in his Word, or she cannot be contented, but will complain, in the confluence of all other comforts, as Abraham did, "Lord God, what wilt thou give me, seeing I go childless?" {#Ge 15:2} or as Artabazus in Xenophon did, when Cyrus had given him a cup of gold and Chrysantas a kiss in token of his special favour, saying that the cup that he gave him was nothing so good gold as the kiss that he gave Chrysantas. The poet's fable, that the moon was wont to come down from her orb to kiss Endymion. It is a certain truth that Christ came down from heaven to reconcile us to his Father, to unite us to himself, and still to communicate unto our souls the sense of his love, the feeling of his favour, the sweet breath of his Holy Spirit.

For thy love is better than wine.] Heb., Loves. The Septuagint and Vulgate render it ubera, thy breasts; but that is not so proper, since it is the Church that here speaks to Christ, and by the sudden change of person shows the strength and liveliness of her affection, as by the plural "loves," she means all fruits of his love, righteousness, peace, joy in the Holy Ghost, assurance of heaven, which Mr Latimer calls the deserts of the feast of a good conscience. There are other dainty dishes at that feast, but this is the banquet, this is "better than wine," which yet is a very comfortable creature, {#Ps 104:15} and highly set by. {#Ps 4:7} Plato calls wine a music, miseriarum humanarum μαλακτικά, the chief allayments of men's miseries.

Ver. 3. Because of the savour of thy good ointments.] Or, To smell to, thy ointments are best. Odoratissimus es. As the panther casts abroad a fragrant savour; as Alexander the Great is said to have had a natural sweetness with him by reason of the good temperament of his body; so, and much more than so, the Lord Christ, that sweetest of sweets. He kisseth his poor persecuted people, as Constantine once kissed Paphnutius's lost eye; {a} and departing, for here he comes but as a suitor only till the marriage be made up in heaven, he leaves such a sweet scent behind him, such a balmy verdure, as attracts all good hearts unto him, so that where this all-quickening carcase is there would "the eagles be also." {#Mt 24:28} The Israelites removed their tents from Mithcah, which signifies sweetness, to Hashmonah, which signifies swiftness; {#Nu 33:29} to teach us, saith one, that the saints have no sooner tasted Christ's sweetness, but they are carried after him presently with incredible swiftness. Hence they are said to have "a nose like the tower of Lebanon," {#So 7:4} for their singular sagacity in smelling after Christ, and to flee to the holy assemblies, where Christ's odours are beaten out to the smell, "as the clouds," or "as the doves to their windows." {#Isa 60:8} For what reason? they have "their senses habitually exercised to discern good and evil," {#Heb 5:14} and "their love abounds yet more and more in knowledge and in all judgment." {#Php 1:9}

Thy name is an ointment poured forth.] There is an elegant allusion in the original between Shem and Shemen—that is, name, and ointment. And Christ hath his name both in Hebrew and Greek from ointment; {b} for these three words in signification are all one, Messiah, Christ, Anointed. See the reason, #Isa 61:1, "The spirit of the Lord,"—that oil of gladness {#Heb 1:9} -"is upon me, because he hath anointed, and appointed, me to preach good tidings to the meek"; #2Co 2:2,14-16, &c. Now when this is done to the life, when Christ crucified is preached, when the Holy Ghost in the mouth and ministry of his faithful servants shall take of Christ's excellencies, as it is his office to do, {#Joh 16:14} and hold them out to the world; when he shall hold up the tapestry, as it were, and shew men the Lord Christ, with an Ecce virum, Behold the man, that one mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus; {#1Ti 2:5} see him in his natures, in his offices, in his works, in the blessed effects of all; this cannot but stir up wonderful loves in all good souls; with hearty wishes, that "if any one love not the Lord Jesus Christ, he may be Anathema Maranatha," {#1Co 16:22} accursed upon accursed, and put over to God to punish.

Therefore the virgins love thee,] i.e., All that are adjoined to me in comely sort, as chaste damosels to their mother and mistress. The elect and faithful are called virgins for their spiritual chastity. They are God's hidden ones, as the word {c} here used signifieth, as they are called; {#Ps 83:3} they are not defiled with the corruptions that are in the world through lust, for they are virgins; {#Re 14:4} else the bride would not suffer them about her. {#Ps 45:14} Of Queen Elizabeth it is said, that she never suffered any lady to approach her presence of whose stain she had but the least suspicion. {d} "These follow the Lamb wheresoever he goeth," (ib.), as the other creatures follow the panther for his sweet odours; as birds of prey are carried after carcases. "Whom having not seen, yet ye love," and can do no less, {#1Pe 1:8} "because he first loved you," and hath "shed abroad his love in your hearts by his holy Spirit." {#1Jo 4:19 Ro 5:5} Amate amorem illius, oh love his love, saith Bernard, and cry out with Ignatius, Ο ερωξ ο εμοξ εσταυρωται, My love was crucified. If the centurion in the Gospel were held worthy of respect because he "loved our nation," said those Jews, "and built us a synagogue," {#Lu 7:5} what shall we say of Christ, who "loved us, and washed us with his own blood" &c.? {#Re 1:5} "Herein was love," &c. And should not love be the whetstone of love? {e} should we not reciprocate? shall we be worse than publicans? shall not the love of Christ constrain us? &c. {#2Co 5:14}

Ver. 4. Draw me.] Those very virgins, though they love Christ, and are affected with his incomparable sweetness, to the slighting of earthly vanities, and all tasteless fooleries of this present life, yet are they sensible of sundry obstacles and back-biasses, which cause them to call for help from heaven, "Draw me," &c., scil., by the effectual working of thy mighty Spirit, and by "the cords of kindness," {#Ho 11:4} that irresistible grace of thine, whereby thou dost fortiter; but yet suaviter; powerfully, but yet sweetly work upon the wills of them that belong to thee; and by a merciful violence pull them out of Satan's paws, yea, bring them from the jaws of hell to the joys of heaven. {#Jer 31:3}

We will run after thee.] We will not only follow thee, as the straw follows the jet, or as iron the loadstone, as the seaman's needle doth the north pole, or as the hop in its growing follows the course of the sun from east to west, winding about the pole, and will rather break than do otherwise; but we will "fulfil after thee," {a} as Caleb did; {#Nu 14:24} we will "run after thee," as David did; yea, we will so "run," {#Ps 119:32} that we may obtain, "finish our course, and receive our crown," {#2Ti 4:7,8} whereof we shall not fail, if we run regularly, run forthright, {#Pr 4:25} run after Christ, as the Church here promiseth to do, and not step before him, as Peter presumed to do, and therefore heard, "Get thee behind me, Satan." {#Mt 16:23} Christ is our "forerunner, gone before us into heaven." {#Heb 6:10} We must "come after him," {#Lu 9:23} press his footsteps, {#1Pe 2:21} follow him close, {#Mt 16:24 Eph 5:1} and, having him ever in our eye, "run with patience the race that is set before us." {#Heb 12:1,2} Rubs and remoras {delays} we shall be sure to meet with, but that must not make us stop or step back. Christ ran with a courage, though he ran with the cross upon his shoulders all the way. "Gird up your loins," {#1Pe 1:13} and do likewise. Run to get the race, said blessed Bradford to his fellow sufferers, you are even almost at your journey's end. If there be any way to heaven on horseback, it is by the cross. Look to the joy that is set before you, as Christ did; "steal a look from glory," as Moses did, απεβλεπε, {#Heb 11:26} "lest ye be wearied and faint," or "loosened," εκλυομενοι, {#Heb 12:3} as the nerves are in a swoon or palsy. "Lift up the hands that hang down, and the feeble knees." {#Heb 12:12} Lift up your feet, as Jacob did, {#Ge 29:1, marg.} after the vision at Bethel, and take long strides to Christ. Think thou hearest him say, as Cicero did once to his friend, Quamobrem, si me amas tantum, quantum profecto amas, si dormis, expergiscere; si stas, ingredere; si ingrederis, curre; si curris, advola. Credibile non est quantum ego in amore et fide tua ponam, { b } i.e., Wherefore if thou lovest me, as I am sure thou dost, if thou be asleep, wake thyself; if thou standest still, set forward; if thou art upon thy way, run to me; if thou art a-running, fly to me: little dost thou think how much I set by thy love and faithfulness. Therefore haste, haste, haste. "The joy of the Lord shall be thy strength," {#Ne 8:10} so that thou shalt "walk and not be weary, run and not faint." {#Isa 40:31}

The king hath brought me into his chambers.] Into the bridechamber of heaven, and hath "made me sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus," mine head and husband, {#Eph 2:6} yea, into the inward part of the bedchamber, as the word here used signifieth, {#So 3:4} there to have familiarity with him, that I may be filled with his graces, {#Joh 1:16} and bring forth fruit to God. {#Ro 7:4}

We will be glad and rejoice in thee.] Be glad inwardly, and rejoice outwardly; not in thy love tokens so much as in thyself. Vix diligitur Iesus propter Iesum. They that rejoice in anything but Christ, "rejoice in a thing of nought" (#Am 6:13, with #So 1:4-6). The beginning of epistles and letters anciently was Gaudete in Domino, rejoice in the Lord.

We will remember thy love.] Or, Rehearse it. Men cannot but think and speak much of what they love and like. If David's "heart be inditing a good matter," a song of love, his "tongue" will soon be the "pen of a ready writer." {#Ps 45:1,2} And as people, when drunk with wine, wherein is excess, are apt to sing and shout; so those that are filled with the Spirit cannot but utter those magnalia Dei, the wonderful works of God, {#Ac 2:11} yea, express their spiritual jollity in "psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs." {#Eph 5:18,19}

The upright love thee.] Heb., Uprightness; the abstract for the concrete, as pride for proud, {#Jer 50:31} rebellion for rebellious. {#Eze 2:7} This seemeth to be added to exclude hypocrites, those hangers on. They seem to love God, none more, but it is from the teeth outward only; and Christ may well say to them, as she did to Samson, "How canst thou say thou lovest me, when thy heart is not with me?" {#Jud 16:15} Their hearts are upon their covetousness, then when with their mouths they make love, {#Eze 33:31} as the eagle hath his eye upon the prey when he soareth highest toward heaven. They follow Christ more for the loaves than for love, {#Joh 6:26} they "serve not God, but serve themselves" {#Ro 16:18} upon him; they serve him for gain, as children will not say their prayers unless we promise them their breakfasts. Sincerity is an utter enemy to sinisterity.

{b} Cicero, Epist. Fami'.

Ver. 5. I am black, but comely.] Heb., Black as the morning, or day dawning, which hath light and darkness, dimness at least, mixed together. It is not Ἡὼς ῥοδοδάκτυλος, wherein there is more light than darkness, but κροκοπέπλος, wherein there is more darkness than light, as the grammarians distinguish. {a} This morning light is lovely, though not pure; so is the Church comely, though not dear. The coy daughters of Jerusalem might make a wonderment, that so black a dowdy, as the Church appeared to them that saw not her inward beauty, should ever hope to have love from the "fairest among men." We read how Aaron and Miriam murmured against Moses, who was "fair to God," {b} because of the brown skinned woman whom he had married. {#Nu 12:1} For answer to whom the spouse here grants that she is black, or blackish at least:—(1.) As having some hypocrites in her bosom, that as that blasted grain {c} {#Mt 13:25} smutcheth and sullieth the better sort; (2.) As being not fully freed from sin till after death. Sin is dejected, indeed, in the saints, but not utterly ejected while they are here. For what reason? It is in them as the spots of the leopard, not by accident, but by nature, which no art can cure, no water can wash off, because they are not in the skin, but in the flesh and bones, in the sinews and the most inward parts. Howbeit the Church is freed from the damning and domineering power of sin. And whereas (3.) She is looked upon as "black," {#Job 30:30 La 4:8 Jer 8:21} because of her afflictions, those fruits of sin, and seems to have lain among the pots, as the Psalmist hath it, places where scullions use to lie, and so are black and collied, yet shall she be "as the wings of a dove that are covered with silver," &c. {#Psa 68:13} Though she "sit in darkness, the Lord shall give her light." {#Mic 7:8} And as black soap makes white clothes, so do sharp afflictions make holy hearts, where God is pleased to set in with his battle door, as that martyr said. {d} Puriores caelo afflictione facti sunt, saith Chrysostom of those that were praying for Peter. {#Ac 12:13-17} And "some of them of understanding shall fall, to try them, and to purge, and to make them white," saith the prophet of those suffering saints. {#Da 11:35} The face of the Church is never so beautiful as when it is washed with its own tears; as some faces appear most orientally fair when they are most instamped with sorrow. Christ did so. {#Isa 52:14}

But comely.] Or, Goodly, lovely, desirable, delectable, viz., for my double righteousness, those righteousnesses of the saints, {#Re 19:8} imputed and imparted. Hence the Church may better sing than Sappho did—

“*Si mihi difficilis formam natura negavit,
Iustitia formae damna rependo meae.
Ingenio formae damna rependo meae.*”—Ovid. Epist.

As the tents of Kedar, as the curtains of Solomon.] Kedar signifieth black; and the Kedarens, a people of Arabia, descended from Ishmael, dwelt in black tents, made of hair cloth, and had no other houses; {e} they also dwelt not far from the Ethiopians, or blackmoors. {#2Ch 21:16}

As the curtains, &c.,] i.e., As his costly tapestry and other sumptuous household stuff, whereof read #1Ki 10:1,2, &c. Josephus {f} also makes mention of the Babylonish rich furniture wherewith Solomon's rooms were hanged. These are to set forth the Church's comeliness, as the other did her homeliness. Let none be despised for his outward meanness; for within that leathern purse may be a pearl. Christ himself was hidden under the carpenter's son and a poor outside. {#Isa 53:2}

Often under the surface lies hidden the vesture of wisdom.

Ver. 6. Look not upon me, because I am black.] "Look not upon me," viz., with a lofty look, with a coy countenance; fix not your eyes upon mine infirmities and miseries so as to disdain me, or to disesteem me for them. Blackish I am, I confess, tanned, and discoloured. The old Latin translation renders it "brown"—lovely brown we call it; belle brunette, the French; others "somewhat black,"—q.d., My blackness is not so much as you may think for; judge not, therefore, according to the appearance; stumble not at my seeming deformities. A faithful man may fall far, but the seed abideth in him; the new nature cannot be lost; the oil of God's Spirit, wherewith he is anointed, setteth the colours, which are of his own tempering, so sure on, and maketh them cleave so fast together, that it is impossible he should ever return to his own hue, to be coal black, as before. Howbeit he is subject to much affliction, anguish, and distress, as it were to the scorching of the sun; and that, with many that have not senses exercised to discern good and evil, renders him despicable; but that should not be. Of Queen Elizabeth it is said that she hated, no less than did Mithridates, such as maliciously persecuted virtue forsaken of fortune; ^{a} as when a deer is shot, the rest of the herd push him out of their company.

Because the sun hath looked upon me.] By "sun" here some have understood the Sun of righteousness, whom, when the Church looks intently upon, she is bedazzled, and sees her own nothingness, in comparison to his incomparable brightness. Others by "sun" here will have original sin to be meant; which, indeed, hath brought the blackness of darkness upon the spirit of our minds, and bored out the eye of our understandings. The same original depravity they understand by the following words, "Sons of the same mother"; and by being "kindled with wrath," they understand sin increasing and raging, as it were; and by appointing the Church to "keep other vineyards," they understand the committing of the works of the flesh and the deeds of darkness with which she was, as it were, holden, so that she could do nothing else till the Lord had loosed her out of these chains. But they do best that by "sun" in this place understand the heat of persecution, and the parching of oppression, according to #Mt 13:6,21 La 1:6,13,14, &c. What bonfires were here made in Queen Mary's days, burning the dear saints of God to a black coal, lighting them up for tapers in a dark night, as they did in Nero's days! After John Huss was burnt, his adversaries got his heart, which was left untouched by the fire, and beat it with their staves. The story of the Maccabees' persecutions, prophesied of in #Da 11:32-35, and recorded in #Heb 11:35 to the end, is exceeding lamentable. Opposition is—as Calvin wrote to the French king— evangelii genius, and ecclesia est haeres crucis, saith Luther. ^{b} The Church hath its cross for its inheritance. "All that will live godly in Christ Jesus," if they be set upon it so to do, "shall suffer persecution"; there is no avoiding it. ^{#2Ti 3:12} When Ignatius came to the wild beasts, Now, saith he, I begin to be a Christian, and not till now. That Christian, saith Mr Bradford, hath not yet learned his A B C in Christianity that hath not learned the lesson of the cross, ^{c} &c.

Omnis Christianus crucianus. {d} This the worldling cannot away with; and although he "make a fair show in the flesh," or επιπροσωπησαι, "set a good face" on it, as the word signifies, as if he had set his face toward Sion, yet when it comes to a matter of suffering, he stumbles at the cross, and falls backwards. He will not "suffer persecution for the cross of Christ." {#Ga 6:12} He looks at the Church with a vulture's eye, as though he would behold nothing in her but corruption and carrion. He makes an ill construction of her infirmities, and will not stick to say, if he have a mind to shake her off, that she is black and despicable, that she provides but poorly for her followers, that the great ones favour her as little as the lords of the Philistines did David, &c. Cicero veram religionem splendore imperii, gravitate nominis Romani, maiorum institutis, et Fortunae successibus metitur, {e} Cicero's marks of the true religion were the largeness of the Roman empire, their spreading fame, their ancestors' ordinances, and their singular success. The Papists have the like arguments for proof of their Church. But what saith Luther? Ego non habeo aliud contra Papae regnum robustius argumentum, quam quod sine cruce regnat: {f} I have no stronger argument against the Pope's kingdom than this, that he reigns without the cross.

My mother's children were angry with me, / i.e., Worldly men, that are of the same human race that I am; these fretted at me, as Moab did at Israel, because they were of a different religion, {#Nu 22:3,4} or as Tobiah and his complices did at Nehemiah and his Jews. {#Ne 6:1} It was quarrel enough to Jerusalem that it would not be miserable. Hypocrites and heretics especially are here understood, as some conceive, such as pretend to be children of the Church, and her greatest friends as the Donatists would be the only Christians, and after them the Rogatian heretics called themselves the only catholics. So did the Arians, and so do the Papists, whose anger against the true children of the Church is far hotter than Nebuchadnezzar's oven after it had been seven times heated for those three constant worthies. Hypocritis nihil est crudelius impatientius et vindictae cupidius, saith Luther, who had the experience of it, plane sunt serpentes, &c.: There is not a more cruel creature, more impatient and vindictive, than a hypocrite. He is as angry as an asp, as revengeful as a serpent, &c. He is of the serpentine seed, and carries the old "enmity," {#Ge 3:15} Cain's club.

{#Ge 4:8 Jo 3:12} "Your brethren that hated you, that cast you out for my name's sake, said, Let the Lord be glorified." {#Isa 66:5} Here was a fair glove drawn upon a foul hand. In nomine Domini incipit omne malum, In the name of God began all wickedness, was grown to a proverb here in times of Popery. {g}

They made me the keeper of the vineyards.] No marvel, therefore, that I am sunburnt, since I have "borne the burden and heat of the day"; {#Mt 20:12} it hath been my task to keep out boars, foxes, and other noisome creatures; yea, it hath been my lot to be put upon some servile offices—as those poor vinedressers were {#2Ki 25:12} -not so suitable to my place and station assigned me by God; yea, although I am "dead with Christ from the rudiments of the world, yet as though living in the world," I have by these impostors and impositors been made to dogmatise (δογματιζεσθε) after the commandments and doctrines of men. {#Col 2:20,22}

But mine own vineyard have I not kept,] q.d., Being burdened with human rights and traditions, and having been the "servant of men," {#1Co 7:23} I have departed from the duty that God prescribed unto me. Sane bene, "Full well truly have I rejected or slighted the commandment of God, that I might keep men's tradition." {#Mr 7:9} Thus she shames and shents {hesitates} herself; she blusheth and bleedeth before the Lord for her carelessness in duty. Yea, she tells the world the true reason of her present blackness; somewhat she had to say against others, but most against herself. "After I was made known to myself," {h} said Ephraim—scil., by looking in the glass of God's law—"I repented." {#Jer 31:19} Get thee this law, as a glass to look in, said Mr Bradford, so shalt thou see thy face foul arrayed, and so shamefully saucy, mangy, pocky, and scabbed, that thou canst not but be sorry at the sight thereof. Thus he. {i} Physicians, in some kind of unseemly convulsions, wish their patients to look themselves in a glass, which will help them to strive the more, when they shall see their own deformities. It is fit we should oft reflect and see "every man the plague of his heart," {#1Ki 8:38} the "error" {#Ps 19:12} of his life, keeping our hearts soft, supple, and soluble; for softness of heart discovers sin, as blots do run abroad and seem biggest in wet paper. When the cockatrice's egg is crushed, it "breaks out into a viper." {#Isa 59:5}

Ver. 7. Tell me, O thou whom my soul loveth.] The sins of God's elect turn to their good— Venenum aliquando pro remedio fuit, saith Seneca, {a} poison is by art turned into a medicine—make them cry more upon Christ, love him more with all their soul, desire more earnestly to be joined unto him, use all holy means of attaining thereunto; and that with such affection, that when others are at their rest or repast, the Christian can neither eat nor rest, unless he be with Christ.

Where thou feedest.] This Book of Canticles is a kind of pastoral, a song of a beloved concerning a beloved. The Church therefore gives, and Christ takes oft herein upon himself, the term and office of a loving and skilful Shepherd, that feeds his flock daily and daintily, feedeth them among the lilies and beds of spices, makes them to "lie down in green pastures, and leads them beside the still waters" {#Ps 23:2} -his Word and sacraments; makes them also to lie down at noon, i.e., as the chief pastor of his sheep, he wholly ordereth them in all their spiritual labours, toils, and afflictions, giving them safe repose in the hottest seasons. {#Isa 49:10} See #Eze 34:13 Joh 10:1,2 1Pe 5:2 Jer 30:10,13.

For why should I be as one that turneth aside,] q.d., This would be no less to thy dishonour than my disadvantage, if I miscarry, thou wilt be no small loser by it. To urge God with the respect of his own glory lying now at stake, is a most effectual way of speeding in prayer. "If thou destroy this people, what will the Egyptians say?" {#Ex 32:12} how will the very banks of blasphemy be broken down, and they speak evil of thee with open mouth? If the Canaanites beat us, "what shall become of thy great name, ." {#Jos 7:9} Interpone, quaeso, tuas preces, apud Deum pro me, et ora Christum cuius est causa haec, ut mihi adsit: quam si obtinuerit, mihi obtenta erit: sin veto causa exciderit, nec ego eam obtinere potero: atque ita ipse solus ignominiam reportabit. {b} Please pray for me, saith Luther to a friend of his that feared how it would fare with him when he was to appear at Augsburg before the cardinal; pray for me to Jesus Christ, whose the cause is, that he would stand by me: for if he carry the day, I shall do well enough; as, if I miscarry, he alone will undergo the blame and shame of it.

By the flock of thy companions.] Why should I have fellowship with thy pretended fellows, and so incur the suspicion of dishonesty. Christians must "abstain from all appearance of evil," {#1Th 5:23} shun and be shy of the very shows and shadows of sin, Quicquid fuerit male coloratum, as Bernard hath it, whatsoever looks but ill favouredly; "providing for things honest, not only in the sight of the Lord, but in the sight of men; and avoiding this, that no man should blame us," {#2Co 8:20,21} avoiding it, στελλομενοι, as shipmen shuns a rock or shelf, with utmost care and circumspection. Joseph would not breathe in the same air with his mistress, nor John the evangelist with the heretic Cerinthus, but "sprang out of the bath" {c} as soon as he came into it. St Paul would not give place by subjection to those false brethren, "no, not for an hour," {#Ga 2:5} lest the truth thereby should suffer detriment. Constantine would not read the Arians' papers, but tear them before their eyes. And Placilla the empress besought her husband, Theodosius senior, not once to confer with Eunomius, lest being perverted by his speeches he might fall into heresy. {d} Memorable is the story of the children of Samosata, that would not touch their ball, but burnt it, because it had touched the toe of a heretical bishop, as they were tossing it and playing with it.

Ver. 8. If thou know not, O thou fairest among women.] So Christ is pleased to style her, who erst held and called herself black and sunburnt. {#So 1:5} Nothing more commends us to Christ than humility and lowly mindedness. {#1Pe 3:5} The daughter of Zion, for this is likened to "a comely and delicate woman," her enemies to shepherds with their flocks. {#Jer 6:2,3} False prophets also have their flocks, seducers drag disciples after them. {#Ac 20:30} Faciunt favos et vespae, faciunt Ecclesias et Marcionitae, saith Tertullian; wasps also have their honeycombs; apes imitate men's actions. These conventiclers the Church must studiously decline, and not viam per avia quaerere, seek truth by wandering through the thicket of errors, as Junius saith one in his time did, who confessed he had spent twenty-two years in trying religions, pretending that Scripture, "Prove all things." The spouse is here directed by the archshepherd to repair to the foddering places, to frequent the public assemblies, to tread in that sheep track, the footsteps of the flock, the shepherds' tents. There Christ hath promised to feed his lambs (that have golden fleeces, precious souls), to call them by name, as he did Moses, {#Ex 33:12,17} Cornelius {#Ac 10:1,2}, &c., to "teach them great and hidden things, such as they knew not," {#Jer 33:3} to give them spiritual senses, ability to examine what is doctrinally propounded to them, to try before they trust—for all Christ's sheep are rational, they "know his voice from the voice of a stranger" {#Joh 10:5} -to be fully persuaded of the truth that they take up and profess, {#Col 2:2 Lu 1:1} to feel the sweetness and goodness, the life and power of it within themselves, {#Col 1:9 Job 32:8} to hate false doctrines, and those that would persuade them thereunto, {#Ps 119:104} buzzing doubts into their heads. {#Ro 16:17 Joh 10:5} So that, though man or angel should object against the truth they have received, they would not yield to him. {#Ga 1:8,9} They know that Satan can, and doth, "transform himself into an angel of light," {#2Co 11:14} and can act his part by a good man also, as he did by Peter once and again, {#Mt 16:23 Ga 2:11-13} and as he did in our remembrance by Mr Archer, a holy man, who yet held and broached hellish opinions. Swenckfeldio non defuit cor bonum, sed caput regulatum, saith Bucholcerus: Swenckfeldius had a good heart, but a wild head, and so became a means of much mischief to many silly, shallow headed people, whom he shamefully seduced. This to prevent, Christ hath given gifts to men; pastors and teachers after his own heart; guides, to "speak unto them the word of God," {#Heb 12:7} to "set in order for them acceptable words, "words of truth that may be as "goads, and as nails fastened by those masters of the assemblies which are given from one Shepherd": {#Ec 12:10,11} in fine, to "take heed to themselves, and to all the flock over the which the Holy Ghost hath made them overseers, to feed the Church of God which he hath purchased with his own blood," {#Ac 20:28} that they might go in and out, and find pastures, such as will breed life, and life in more abundance. {#Joh 10:9,10}

Go thy way forth by the footsteps of the flock.] Add endeavour to thy desire; up and be doing: for affection without action is like Rachel, that ancient shepherdess, beautiful, but barren. "Get thee forth therefore by the footsteps of the flock"; tread in the same track that good old Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, David, Paul, &c., did, who followed the Lamb whithersoever he went. Keep to that "good old way," the way that is called holy, "and ye shall find rest to your souls." {#Jer 6:16} Walk in the footsteps of faithful Abraham, and ye shall one day rest in the bosom of Abraham. "Walk in the same spirit," in the same footsteps with Paul and Titus, {#2Co 12:18} so shall you shortly and surely "receive the end of your faith, the salvation of your souls." {#1Pe 1:9}

And feed thy kids.] The Church also is a shepherdess, as were Laban's and Jethro's daughters, and hath a little little flock of young goats, that is, of green Christians, who are to be fed with "the sincere milk of the word, that they may grow thereby." {#1Pe 2:2}

Beside the shepherds' tents.] Turn to the undershepherds, the godly ministers, and so "return to the great Shepherd and Bishop of your souls." {#1Pe 2:25} Hold you close to these, and "hold fast the form of wholesome words," {#2Ti 1:13} and linger not after unsound and unsavoury doctrines, so rife abroad—those murdering morsels that fat men indeed, but it is to the day of slaughter. Silly sheep do eat no grass more greedily than that which rots them. "But thou, O man of God, fly these things, and from such stand off." {#1Ti 6:5,11}

Ver. 9. I have compared thee, O my love, &c.] My pastoral love, or shepherdess companion, my fellow friend, or familiar associate in the function of spiritual feeding; my neighbour, or next, as the Greek renders it. For the saints are not only like unto Christ, {#1Jo 3:2} but also next unto him, {#Lu 22:30} yea, one with him, {#Joh 17:21} and so above the most glorious angels, {#Heb 1:14} as being the spouse, the bride; whereas angels are only servants of the bridegroom: and as being the members of Christ, and so in a nearer union than any creature. This the devil and his angels stomached, and so fell from their first principality.

To a company of horses.] Or, To my troop of horses in the chariots of Pharaoh. The saddle horse his, the chariots Pharaoh's, saith an interpreter. "What is this, but that the spirit of strength and speed it is Christ's; and the untoward flesh, which is to be drawn by the same divine Spirit, it is of the world, and the very chariot of Satan. Soul and body, as wheels and axle, do run which way the devil drives, till the stronger man Jesus have freed our chariot nature from that power of hell, and joined himself by his own Spirit unto our nature, that so, with Ezekiel's chariot, it may go forth and return as his divine Spirit directeth." Thus he. {a}

{a} Clapham.

Ver. 10. Thy cheeks are comely,] i.e., Thy whole face, by a synecdoche, though the cheeks are instanced, as being the seat of shamefacedness modesty, and beauty—such as was found in Esther, whose son, Artaxerxes Longimanus, was held the fairest man alive; {a} Aspasia Milesia, the wife of Cyrus, who was styled καλη και σορη, fair and wise and the Lady Jane Grey, whose excellent beauty was adorned with all variety of virtues, as a clear sky with stars, saith the historian, {b} as a princely diadem with jewels. Hence she became most dear to King Edward VI, who appointed her his successor. But nothing so dear to him, nor so happy in her succession, as the Church is to Christ, who lively describes her inward beauty, which he looks upon as a rich pearl in a rude shell, or as those "tents of Kedar" aforementioned, {#So 1:5} which though coarse and homely for the outward hue, yet, for the precious gems, jewels, and sweet odours that were couched in them, were very desirable.

With rows of jewels.] A metaphor from fair women richly adorned. Holy women may be costly attired, gratior est pulchro, &c., though Seneca thinks that he was in an error that said so, since virtue needs no garnish, but is magnum sui decus, et corpus consecrat, its own greatest glory, and consecrates the body wherein it dwelleth. St Peter also prescribes ladies an excellent dress. {#1Pe 3:3,4} Tertullian comes after with his Vestite vos serico pietatis, &c., Clothe yourselves with the silk of piety, with the satin of sanctity, with the purple of purity. Taliter pigmentatae Christum habebitis amatorem, Being thus arrayed and adorned, you shall have Christ to be your suitor.

Thy neck with chains, J scil., Of pearl or precious stones, that is, of heavenly graces drawn all upon that one thread of humility, which is the ribbon or string that ties together all those precious pearls. Humility is των αρετων θησαυροφυλακιον, saith Basil, the treasurers of the rest of the virtues. It is συνδεσμος των αγαθων, saith Chrysostom, the bond of all good things, the "bond of perfection," as St Paul saith of charity. Hence St Peter's word, εγκομβωσασθε, {#1Pe 5:5} Be ye clothed with humility, comes of κομβος, for a knot; and it signifies not only alligare, to knit the graces together, and to preserve them from being made a prey to pride, but also innodare, say some, to tie knots, as delicate and curious women use to do of ribbons to adorn their necks, or other parts; as if humility was the knot of every virtue, and the ornament of every grace. On the contrary, pride is said to "compass evil men about as a chain," {#Ps 73:6} which, oh how ugly and unseemly is it on the neck of beauty, back of honour, head of learning!

Ver. 11. We will make thee borders of gold with studs of silver.] We, the whole Trinity, will join together, as we do in all our works ad extra, in framing for thee these glorious ornaments, in putting upon thee our own comeliness, {#Eze 16:11-14} in increasing and embellishing thy graces, thy pure gold of holiness, with silver specks, studs, or embroidery. Thus the spouse promiseth, to make his bride, though he find her fair and fine, much fairer and finer by an addition of more and more graces and gifts, both ordinary and extraordinary, till she be "transformed into the same image from glory to glory." He will spare for neither gold nor silver to beautify her, such is his abundant love unto her. He clothes her with the particoloured {a} garment of a great variety {b} of graces, and this he borders with gold, and bespangles with silver. Her clothing is of "wrought gold," far more stately and costly than that of Esther in all her beauty and bravery; than that of Dionysius, whose mantle was sold to the Carthaginians for a hundred and twenty talents; {c} than that royal robe of Demetrius, King of Macedonia, that was so massive and magnificent that none of his successors would ever wear it, Propter invidiosam impendii magniflcentiam, for the unparalleled sumptuousness thereof.

Ver. 12. While the king sitteth at his table, &c.] Heb., At his round table, or ring sitting. In accubitu circulari: in orbem enim antiquitus ad mensam sedebant. "Send and fetch him, for we will not sit round till he come hither." {#ISA 16:11} The manner of the Turks to this day is to sit around at meat on the bare ground, with their legs gathered under them. {a} By the king is here meant "Messiah the prince," {#Da 9:25} "Christ the Lord." {#Ac 2:36} Et omnes sancti in circuitu eius, All his saints sit round about him; {#Ps 76:11} as the twelve tribes were round about the tabernacle; {#Nu 2:2} as the twenty-four elders are round about the throne {#Re 4:4} -they are "a people near unto him"; {#Ps 148:14} they are those "Blessed that eat and drink with him in his kingdom," {#Lu 14:15} first of grace, and then of glory. And while they thus sit with their King—a sign of sweetest friendsbp and fellowship—it was held a great honour and happiness to "stand before Solomon" {#1Ki 10:8} in his circled session.

My spikenard sendeth forth the smell thereof.] Saith the Church; that is, my faith is actuated, and all mine other graces exercised and increased, at the Lord's table, that heavenly love feast: Ubi cruci haeremus, sanguinem sugimus, et inter ipsa redemptoris nostri vulnera figimus linguam, {b} whereat we climb the cross, as it were, suck Christ's blood, "suck honey out of the rock," {#De 32:13} feed heartily and hungerly upon his flesh, as eagles do upon the slain. {#Mt 24:28} This Luther calls crapulam sanctam, a gracious gormandise; {c} whiles we lean upon his bosom and "feed without fear"; sending forth our sweet odours, our pillars of incense, by lifting up many a humble, joyful, and thankful heart to him, living by his laws, and being a savour of life to others. But what shall we think of those that stink above ground, poison the very air they breathe upon, defile the visible heavens, which must therefore be purged by the fire of the last day; and by their rotten communication and unclean conversation spread their infections, and send the plague to their neighbours, as those Ashdodites, Gittites, and Ekronites did. {#ISA 5}

Ver. 13. A bundle of myrrh is my well beloved, &c.] The bride proceeds to return all the glory to her bridegroom (of all that good that he had praised her for before) by a second similitude here, and by a third in the next verse; for in this argument she thinks she can never say sufficient. It is the manner of maids to wear nosegays of sweet flowers in their bosoms, and to make no small account of them. Myrrh is marvellous sweet and savoury (#Ps 45:8 Pr 7:17. See Plin., lib. xii., cap. 15, 16), but nothing so sweet as the Lord Christ is to those that have spiritual senses; Whom therefore the spouse here placeth between her breasts, that there hence the sweet savour may ascend into her nostrils. Again, Myrrh hath a bitter root; {#Mr 15:23} Christ seems bitter at first because of afflictions, but if "we suffer with him, we shall also reign together with him." {#2Ti 2:12} Thirdly, Myrrh was very precious; hence the wise men offered it to Christ at his birth. {#Mt 2:11} Christ is of that esteem with his people, "elect and precious," {#1Pe 2:6} that, as wise merchants, they make a thorough sale of all to purchase him. {#Mt 13:44-46} Lastly, Myrrh is of a preserving nature, and was therefore made use of at funerals. {#Joh 19:39} In like sort Christ, as he doth by his Spirit's heat, exsiccate, or dry up the superfluity of our degenerate nature, whereby body and soul is preserved to eternal life; so, after our bodies are turned to dust, he still preserves a substance, which he will raise again at the last day. Hence the saints are said to "sleep in Jesus," to be "dead in Christ," who shall "raise our vile bodies, and make them like unto his own glorious body," {#Php 3:21} in beauty, brightness, grace, favour, agility, ability, and other angelical excellencies.

He shall lie all night between my breasts.] This is Christ's proper place: "My son, give me thine heart." Christ should "dwell in the heart by faith." {#Eph 3:17} But too too often he is shut out, and adultery found between the breasts; {#Ho 2:2} there they carried the signs of their idolatry (as Papists now do their crucifixes), to testify that the idol had their hearts. But what saith Mr Bradford, martyr, in a certain letter? ^{a} As the wife will keep her bed only for her husband, although in other things she is content to have fellowship with others, as to speak, sit, eat, drink, go, &c.; so our consciences (which are Christ's wives) must needs keep the bed—that is, God's sweet promises—alonly for ourselves and our husband to meet together, to embrace and laugh together, and to be joyful together. If sin, the law, the devil, or anything would creep into the bed, and lie there, then complain to thy husband Christ, and forthwith thou shalt see him play Phinehas's part, &c. And again, in another letter, Think on the sweet mercies and goodness of God in Christ. Here, here is the resting place—here is the spouse's bed, creep into it, and in your arms of faith embrace him. Bewail your weakness, your unworthiness, your diffidence, and you shall see he will turn to you. What said I?—you shall see? Nay, I should have said, you shall feel, he will turn to you, &c. ^{b}

Ver. 14. My beloved is unto me as a cluster of camphire.] "My beloved," and "unto me." This particular application is the very quintessence and pith of faith. Η πιστις ιδιοποιει ται τον Χριστον. It is the property of true faith to individuate Christ, to appropriate him to herself, as if he were wholly and solely hers. She adjudgeth him in special to herself, with "My beloved," "My strength, and my Redeemer," "My Lord, and my God." This, when Thomas did, "Now thou believest," said our Saviour. ^{#Joh 20:29} Were it not for this word of possession, mine, the devil might say the Creed to as good purpose: as any of us. He believes there is a God and a Christ; but that which torments him is, he can say my to never an article of faith. Wicked men likewise may Credere Deum, et Deo, sed non in Deum; they may hear with joy, and have a taste, yea, and apply the promises, but they do it presumptuously and sacrilegiously; because they accept not Christ upon Christ's terms, take not whole Christ in all his offices and efficacities—would have him as a Saviour but not as a Sovereign—they make not a total resignation of themselves to Christ as Paul did ^{#Ga 2:19,20}

As a cluster of camphire.] Or, As the cypress berry, within its white flower—sweet, pleasant, and very fragrant. {a} They that talk here of the island Cyprus are as far from the sense as that island is from Engedi, which was a place in the land of Canaan, in the tribe of Judah, near unto the Dead Sea. Here fled David one time when Saul pursued him; and here Jehoshaphat had that notable victory over his enemies by the power of prayer. {#2Ch 20:1-28} This was a fruitful soil for gardens and vineyards. {#Eze 47:10} Now the cypress tree, as also other aromatic trees, grow best in vineyards; and the Church, forgetting herself, as it were, and transported with love to Christ, heaps up thus one similitude upon another. Amor Christi est ecstaticus, neque iuris se sinit esse sui. R. Solomon Jarchi doth out of their Agada note that this cophir in the text is a tree that bringeth fruit four or five times yearly. Christ is that tree of life, that yields fruit every month, {#Re 22:2} being more fruitful than the lemon tree, or the Egyptian fig tree, that bears seven times a year, as Solinus reporteth. {b} Our English Bibles call it camphire, which being smelled unto, doth naturally keep under or weaken carnal lust, saith one. Now, if that should be here intended, how fitly is it here placed among the vines of Engedi, that is a medicine for bridling lust too soon stirred up by wine, which one well calls lac Veneris, the milk of Venus:—

“ Et Venus in vinis, ignis ut igne, furit.”

Even Venus in wine, so rages fire by fire.

{a} Plin., lib. xii. cap. 14.

{b} Sol., cap. 45.

Ver. 15. Behold thou art fair, my love.] Or, My fellow friend. {as #So 1:9} And as she is his love, so he is her beloved, {#So 1:16} and as he commends her, so she him no less. This should be all the strife between married couples, who should outstrip the other in mutual melting heartedness, and all loving respects either to other, in all passages, carriages, and behaviours whatsoever between them; accustoming themselves, as here, to speak kindly and cheerfully one to the other. This is that which will infinitely sweeten and beautify the married estate; it will make marriage a merry age, which else will prove a marriage. And here let "husbands learn to love their wives, as Christ loved the Church," {#Eph 5:25} celebrating her beauty in a song, repeating her just praises, to show his heartiness therein, and inviting others with an Ecce, Behold, to the due contemplation thereof. "Behold, thou art all fair, my love! behold, thou art fair!" Non est ficta aut frigida haec laudatio, This is no feigned or frigid commendation, but such as proceeds from entire affection, and breathes, abundance of goodwill. Full well might the prophet tell the Church, "Surely, as the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee." {#Isa 62:5} And again, "The Lord thy God will rejoice over thee with joy; he will rest in his love (and seek no further), he will joy over thee with singing." {#Zep 3:17} The Church had acknowledged {#So 1:5} that she was "black," or at least blackish, and yet, by way of apology too, she had pleaded that she was "comely," and so not to be slighted. But Christ affirms her "fair," yea, "twice fair," yea, the "fairest among women"—sic suum cuique pluchrum, so doth he even "err in her love," as the wise man phraseth it {#Pr 5:9} -as himself is said to be the "fairest among men," {#Ps 45:2} where the Hebrew word likewise is of double form—Thou art fair, thou art fair above the sons of Adam, to note out double, that is, excellent beauty, such as draweth love and liking. {a} Now it is a maxim in the civil law, Uxor fulget radiis mariti, The wife shineth with her husband's beams, so doth the Church with Christ's graces, wherewith she is decked, as Rebecca did wish Isaac's jewels. Read #Eze 16:2-5, &c., and you will see that all the Church's beauty is borrowed. The maids that were brought to Ahasuerus, besides their own native beauty, they were first purified and perfumed before he chose one {#Es 2:3} But here it is otherwise altogether, for when the Church was "in her blood, in her blood, in her blood"—three several times it is so said, that we might the better observe it, and be affected with it—Christ "sanctified and cleansed her with the washing of water by the word, that he might present her to himself a glorious church, holy and without blemish." {#Eph 5:26,27} But a bloody spouse she was to him, who "loved her, and washed her with his blood." {#Re 1:5}

Thou hast doves' eyes.] Sweet, amiable, single, and chaste. In the eyes beauty sits, and shines more than in any part of the body besides, γλαυκωπις βοωπις, &c., apud Homerum. The Turks tell their desperate devotees of beautiful women, with full eyes, in their fools' paradise; and thereby hearten them on to bold attempts. {b} The Hebrews say that in oculis, loculis, poculis, the heart of a man shows itself. The Church is here said not to have eagles', vultures', foxes', apes' eyes, but doves' eyes. Now,

“ Felle columba caret, rostro non caedit, et ungues

Possidet innocuos, puraque grana legit. ”

The dove hath her name in the Hebrew, {c} from a root that signifieth to oppress and make a prey of any, as poor people, strangers, fatherless, &c., {#Jer 50:16} because, belike, this creature is subject to the prey and spoil of hawks; when pursued, they save themselves by flight, not fight; -the prophet Jonah was so called, as some think, quod columbae instar aufugeret, because he fled as a dove, when God sent him to Nineveh, but not with the wings of a dove—sometimes sitting in their dove cotes they see their nests destroyed, their young ones taken away and killed before their eyes, never offering to rescue or revenge, which all other fowls seem in some sort to do. This is very applicable to the persecuted Church, as may be seen in the Lamentations and Martyrologies. In Greek, the dove hath her name from her exceeding love to her mate and young ones. {d} Κουουσι γαρ αλληλους, saith Aristotle, they kiss one another; the Church likewise kisseth Christ, and is interchangeably kissed of Christ, {#Ps 2:12 So 1:2} being drawn together by a mutual dear affection, as the apostle's word {e} imports. {#Heb 11:13} As if at any time the dove and her mate fall out and fight; shortly after,

“ Quum mode pugnarunt, iungunt sua rostra columbae,
Quarum blanditias, verbaque murmur habet. ”

Differences may arise between Christ and his spouse (she may thank herself, for he grieves her not willingly {#La 3:35} — Ille dolet quoties cogitur esse ferox), and some household words she may have from him; but soon after he takes her "into the wilderness, and speaks to her heart," {#Ho 2:14} yea, he takes her unto his wine cellar, {#So 2:4} then when one would think he should carry her into a dungeon rather. He kisses her, as doves do one another, with the "kisses of his mouth"; then when one would think he should, upon such high provocations, kick her, nay, kill her, then he shows her matchless mercy, such as no man would show his wife. {#Jer 3:1,22} "For he is God, and not man," yea, such a "sin pardoning" God as never was heard of. {#Mic 7:18} If there be but a dove's eye in the heads of any of his, a columbine simplicity, if simple to do evil, bunglers at it, and have nothing to say in defence of it when it is done, {#Ro 16:19} the amends is made; and love with her long mantle "covers a multitude of sins." {#Pr 10:12}

Ver. 16. Behold thou art fair, my beloved, yea, pleasant.] Behold thou art fair, my love, &c., said he to her {a} It were fitter a fair deal for me to say so to thee, saith she here to him, since all my beauty is but borrowed of thee; it is but a spark of thy flame, a drop of thine ocean. If I shine at all, it is with thy beams only; if I be any whit comely, it is with the comeliness that thou hast put upon me. Christ as a man (how much more as God blessed for ever?) was "fairer" by far "than all the children of men," {#Ps 45:2} because free from sin, and "full of grace and truth," as in #Eze 28:7 there is mentioned "beauty of wisdom." And the heathen philosopher {b} could say, that if moral wisdom (how much more spiritual?) could be seen with mortal eyes, it would draw all men's hearts unto itself. But besides his inward beauty, which was inconceivable, inasmuch as in him, as in a temple, the fulness of the Godhead dwelt bodily, that is, personally, in the body of Christ, there was a most fair form and a divine face. He had a good complexion, and such a comely countenance as did express a divinity in him. If St Stephen's face, when he stood before the council, shone like an angel's face, {#Ac 6:15} and if his eye could pierce the heavens, {#Ac 7:55} how much more may we think Christ did? True it is, that by reason of his sufferings in the flesh, "his visage was marred more than any man's, and his form more than the sons of men." {#Isa 52:14} And "he had no form nor comeliness"—viz., in the eyes of his perverse countrymen, who when they saw him they could discern no such beauty wherefore they should so desire him; "He was despised and rejected of men," For what reason? "He was a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief," which had so drank up his spirits, and furrowed his fair face, that at little past thirty years of age he was reckoned to be towards fifty; he seemed to the Jews to be much older than he was indeed, as some are of the opinion. See #Joh 8:57.

Yea, pleasant.] Sweet as a flower, sweet as a honeycomb, {c} Mell in ore, melos in aure, iubilum in corde, "sweet to the soul, and health to the bones." {#Pr 16:24} He that hath once but lightly tasted how sweet the Lord Christ is, doth soon disrelish, yea, loathe, in comparison, all this world's homely fare, tasteless fooleries.

“ Clitorio quicunque sitim de lento levarit, Vina fugit, gaudetque meris abstemius undis.”
- Ovid. Met. lib. 15.

Yea, our bed is green.] Our bridal bed, which was wont to be decked with garlands and green boughs. Or, "our bedstead"—so it may be rendered—"is green," made of green and growing timber, as Christ's house is built of living and thriving stones. {#1Pe 2:5} There is a perpetual greenness—the fruit of the vegetative Spirit of God within them—upon all Christ's olive trees. {#Ps 52:8} And these "green things must not be hurt." {#Re 9:4} Or if they be by a wound at the root, so as that they suffer a fit of barrenness, or seem to be sapless, yet they shall revirescere, recover their former greenness, as the Philippians did, and had a new spring after a sharp winter; they had deflourished for a time, but now reflourished. {ανεθαλευτε, #Php 4:16}

{a} Inter Romanos dicebatur; Tu Caius ego Caia. Between Romans it was said, You are Gaius since I am Gaia. So here the spouse, I am Japha, because thou art Japhe. Joppa, a fair haven town, had its name from this root; like as "the fair heavens," {#Ac 27:8} and the beautiful "gate." {#Ac 3:2}

Ver. 17. The beams of our house are cedar,] Not my, but our house, as before, our bed, and after, our galleries. All is common between the bridegroom and the bride—bed, board, house, all. It should be so between married couples, who should not have several purses, interests, &c., but both bring in what they have or get to the common hive. The Church is Christ's house, and every faithful soul is God's building; {#1Ti 3:15 Heb 3:6} he "plants the heavens, and lays the foundation of the earth, that he may say to Zion, Thou art my people." {#Isa 51:16} The great Architect of the world doth as wonderful a work in converting a soul to himself as he did in setting up this goodly edifice of the universe. This stately structure of the new creature he makes of the best materials, cedar, cypress, boratine, &c. A mud wall may be made up of dirt, straw, stones of the street, &c.; not so a stately palace, a marble monument. Solomon's temple was built of cedar wood; so was the temple of Diana of the Ephesians, as Vitruvius testifieth: the devil will needs be God's ape. He knew that cedar is a tree strong and durable; and for the dryness of it, the timber chawneeth not, rotteth not; yea, it hath a property to preserve other things from putrefaction. A late writer observeth of it that viventes res putrefacit et perdit, putridas autem restituit et conservat. {a} The Church is also stable, and cannot be ruined; it is founded upon a rock; the elect cannot be finally deceived the faithful ministers, by preaching law and gospel, kill the quick Pharisee, and quicken the dead publican; {#Ro 7:9 2Co 2:16} they "declare unto man his righteousness," {#Job 33:23} and show him how he may be "found in Christ" (viz., when sought for by the justice of God), "not having his own righteousness," {#Php 3:9} those filthy garments, {#Zec 3:4} but the bride's "fine white linen, and shining," {#Re 19:14} and after a few turns taken here with Christ in the terrace or galleries of the Church militant made of fir, he shall have places given him in heaven, to walk among "those that stand by"; {#Zec 3:7} that is, among the seraphim, as the Chaldee paraphrast expounds it.

Ver. 1. I am the rose of Sharon.] The Greek renders it, "the flower of the field," that grows without man's labour, having heaven for its father, earth for its mother. So had Christ, "made of a woman," "manifested in the flesh," without father as man, without mother as God. {#Heb 7:3 9:11} The tabernacle of Christ's human nature—so called because therein "the fulness of the Godhead dwelt bodily" {#Col 2:9} -was "not made with hands"; that is, not by man's help; it was "not of this building," by the power of nature. But as matter in the beginning of time was taken from man to make a woman, so matter in the fulness of time was taken from woman to make the man

Christ Jesus. And as Eve was a true woman without woman, so Christ was a true man without man. He is called filius hominis, but it is only of the feminine gender. He is the "flower of the field," as here; the "stone cut out without hands"; {#Da 2:45} the phoenix that hath no parents; the pearl that is not made through any earthly copulation, but is begotten of the dew of heaven. For as pearls are bred in shell fishes of a celestial humour, so was Christ, by heavenly influence, in the Virgin's womb. But let us weigh the words as they are commonly rendered. Sharon was a most fruitful place, situated under the hill Lebanon, {#1Ch 27:29} coupled with Carmel for excellence, {#Isa 35:2} not more afield than a fold for flocks. {#Isa 65:10} To a rose, that queen of flowers, here growing doth the Lord Christ fitly compare himself. This flower delights in shadowy places—and thence borroweth its name {a} in the original; it is orient of hue, cold of complexion, but passing redolent, and of comfortable condition. Such a flower is Jesus, saith an expositor {b} here, most delighted in temperate places, for hue white and ruddy, the chiefest of ten thousand; a cooler to the conscience, but passing savoury, and comfortable to the distressed patient.

And the lily of the valleys.] Or, "Low places," which are most fat and fertile. Christ is both rose and lily, which two put together make a gallant show, and beautify the bosoms of those that bear them; but nothing like as Christ doth those that have him dwelling in their hearts by faith. These flowers do soon fade, and lose both beauty and sweetness; but so doth not Christ or his comforts. Tam recens mihi nunc Christus est, ac si hac hora fudisset sanguinem, saith Luther, Christ is as fresh to me now as if he had shed his blood this very hour. He purposely compareth himself to a vine, to a door, to bread, and many other excellent and necessary creatures, everywhere obvious, that therein (as in so many optic glasses) we may see him, and be transformed into him. For this it is also that he here commends himself, not out of arrogance or vain affectation of popular applause, but for our sakes doubtless, that we may take notice of his excellencies, and love him in sincerity. The spouse also praiseth herself sometimes, not out of pride of her parts, but to show her thankfulness to Christ, from whom she had them.

{b} Clapham.

Ver. 2. As the lily among the thorns.] The lily is white, pure, and pleasant, having six leaves (and thence its name {a} in Hebrew), and seven golden-coloured grains within it. The 45th Psalm (of like argument with this song) is dedicated to him that excelleth upon Shoshannim, or upon this six-leaved flower, the lily. Moreover, the chief city of Persia was called Shushan, from the multitude of lilies growing there. {b} Here Alexander found fifty thousand talents of gold; the very stones of it are said to have been joined together with gold. {c} The Church is far richer, and fuller of beauty and bravery, but beset with thorns, such as Abimelech was; a right bramble indeed, that grew in the base hedge row of a concubine, and scratched and drew blood to purpose. Wicked men are called briers, {#Mic 7:4} thorns twisted and folded, {#Na 1:10} that hurt the earth and those that handle them. Indeed, they cannot "be taken with hands," but the "man that shall touch them must be fenced with iron and the staff of a spear." But God shall "thrust them all away," scil., into hell, and "they shall be utterly burnt with fire in the same place." {#2Sa 23:6,7} In the mean space, "who will set the briers and thorns against me in battle?" saith the Lord Christ, being jealous for his spouse with a great jealousy {#Zec 1:14} -who dare do it? "I would march against them, I would burn them together." {#Isa 27:4} Sin or Sinai, a thorny place in the desert, where it rained down quails and manna from heaven, was a type of the Church flourishing in the midst of her enemies, "like a lily among thorns."

So is my love among the daughters,] i.e., False sisters, quae dicuntur spinae propter malignitatem morum; dicuntur filiae, propter communionem sacramentorum, saith Augustine; {d} these are called thorns for the malignity of their manners, and daughters for their profession and outward privileges. These prick, sting, and nettle the Church; they cannot but do their nature, till God take an order with them, till he "bind them in bundles, and cast them into the furnace." {#Mt 13:40} But as the lily is fresh and beautiful, and looks pleasantly (even that wild lily that we call woodbine) though among thorns; so should we amidst trouble. God hedgeth us about with these briers, that he may keep us within compass; he pricks us with these thorns, that he may let out our ill humours. O felices tribulos tribulationum! {e} O happy thorns of tribulation, that open a vein for sin to gush out at! "Be not weary, my son, of God's correction," saith Solomon. {#Pr 3:11} Ne eius castigationes ut spinas quasdam existimes tibi molestas, so Kabvenaki renders and expounds that text. Feel not God's corrections troublesome to thee, as thorns in thine eyes, or prickles in thy sides. Especially since, as Gideon, by thrashing those churls of Succoth with thorns and briers of the wilderness, "taught" them better behaviour; {#Jud 8:16} so God deals by his people. His house of correction is his school of instruction. {#Ps 94:12} See my Love Tokens, p. 144, 145, &c. God sets these thorns, as he did those four horns {#Zec 1:18-21} to afflict his people which way soever they fled. Howbeit, when they had pushed them to the Lord, there were four carpenters set a-work to cut them short enough for ever doing any further hurt. {#Zec 1:19-21}

Ver. 3. As the apple tree among the trees, &c.] Among wild trees, moss begrown trees, trees that bring not forth food for men, but mast for hogs. Such is every natural man. {#Ro 11:24} "Ephraim is an empty vine, he beareth fruit to himself," {#Ho 10:1} paltry hedge fruit. Oaks bring forth apples, such as they are, and acorns. But what saith our Saviour; #Joh 15:2, "Every branch in me that beareth not fruit, he taketh away"; and "without me ye can do nothing." {#Joh 15:5} That is a true saying (though Spiera the expositor censures it for a cruel sentence), Omnis vita infidelium peccatum est, et nihil bonum sine summo bono, {a} The whole life of an unbeliever is sin, neither is there anything good without Christ the chiefest good. Here he is fitly compared by the Church to an "apple tree," which yields both shade and food to the weary and hungry traveller, furnisheth him with whatsoever heart can wish or need require. Christ is cornucopia, a universal good, all-sufficient and satisfactory, proportionable, and every way fitting to our necessities. It is not with Christ as with Isaac, that had but one blessing, for "in him are hid all the treasures of wisdom," {#Col 2:3} and whatsoever worth. So that, as a friend of Cyrus in Xenophon, being asked where his treasure was, answered, οπου Κυρος φιλος, where Cyrus is my friend; so may a Christian better answer to the like question, σου Κυριος φιλος, where the Lord Christ is my friend; for as sine Deo omnis copia est egestas, without Christ all plenty is scarcity, so with him there can be no want of anything that is good. "In the fulness of his sufficiency he is in want, "saith Job of a wicked man. Contrariwise the godly, in the fulness of his want, is in an all-sufficiency; because he is in Christ, who hath filled παντα εν πασι {#Col 3:11} -the neuter gender, not only all the hearts of his people, but all things; he hath filled up that emptiness that was before in the creature, and made it satisfactory.

I sat down under his shadow with great delight.] Heb., I delighted and sat down. The Church, being scorched with troubles without and terrors within, ran to Christ for shelter, and found singular comfort. {#Ps 91:1 Isa 25:4} Tua praesentia, Domine Laurentio ipsam craticulam dulcem fecit, saith an ancient. Philip, Landgrave of Hesse, being a long time prisoner under Charles V, was demanded what upheld him all that time? Respondit, divinas martyrum consolationes se sensisse, he answered, that Christ came in to him with such cordials as kept up his spirits above belief. There be divine comforts that are felt by the suffering saints that others taste not of, nor themselves neither at other times. When the child is sick, out come the preserves and deserts; never sits he so much on his mother's lap and in her bosom as then.

And his fruit was sweet to my taste,] i.e., His word and promises, which I rolled as sugar under my tongue, and sucked therehence more sweetness than Samson did from his honeycomb. {#Ps 19:10 119:103 Jer 15:16} Luther said he would not live in paradise if he might without the Word, at cum verbo etiam in inferno facile est vivere, saith he, {b} but with the Word he could live even in hell itself. True it is that those that have not the spouse's palate find no such sweetness in Christ or his promises. Most men are so full gorged with the devil's dainties, so surfeited with sin's deserts, that they find no more relish in the good Word of God than in the white of an egg, or in a dry chip. These feed upon that now that they must, without repentance, digest in hell; {c} there will be bitterness in the end. Whereas they that, by sucking those full strutting breasts of consolation, the promises, have "tasted and seen how good the Lord Christ is," as their souls are satisfied with fat things, full of marrow, with the very best of the best, {#Isa 25:6} so he shall make them to "drink abundantly of the river of his pleasures," {#Ps 36:8} he shall take them into his wine cellar and fill them with gladness.

Ver. 4. He brought me to the banqueting house.] Heb., To the house of wine, where he giveth me that which is better than apple drink, as #So 2:3. As the sufferings of Christ abound in us, so our consolation also aboundeth by Christ. {#2Co 1:5} The lower that ebb the higher this tide, as is to be seen in the martyrs, who went as merrily to die as ever they did to dine; sang in the flames, and felt no more pain than if they had lain upon beds of roses. This their persecutors counted stupidity and vainglory; but they knew not the power of the Spirit and the force of faith. As Mr Philpot told scoffing Morgan, who, coming to confer with him, asked him, "How know you that you have the Spirit of God?" Mr Philpot answered, "By the faith of Christ which is in me." "Ah! by faith," quoth Morgan: "do ye so? I think it is the spirit of the buttery which your fellows have had that have been burned before you, who were drunk the night before they went to their death, and I think went drunk unto it." Whereunto Philpot replied, "It appears, by your communication, that you are better acquainted with the spirit of the buttery than of God. Methinks you are liker a scoffer in a play than a reasonable doctor to instruct one. Thou hast the spirit of illusion and sophistry, which is not able to countervail the spirit of truth. Thou art but an ass in the things of God, &c. God shall surely rain fire and brimstone upon such scornors of his word and blasphemers of his people as thou art." {a} The like censure was passed upon Nicholas Burton, martyr, in Spain, who, because he went cheerfully to the stake, and embraced death with all gladness and patience, his tormentors and enemies said that the devil had his soul before he came to the fire, and therefore his sense of feeling was past. {b} These carnal creatures meddle not with the true Christian's joy, neither know they the privy armour of proof, the joy of faith, that he hath as an aes triplex about his heart, making him insuperable, and "more than a conqueror." {#Ro 8:37} True grace hath a fortifying, comforting virtue which the world knows not of; like as true gold comforts and strengthens the heart that alchemy gold doth not. And as a man that by good fare, and plenty of the best wines, hath his bones filled with marrow and his veins with good blood, and a fresh spring of spirits, can endure to go with less clothes than another, because he is well lined within, so it is with a heart that by oft feasting with Christ in his ordinances, and by much reading and ruminating upon the Scriptures, called here the banqueting house or wine cellar, as most are of the opinion, hath got a great deal of joy and peace, such a one will go through troubles and make nothing of them—yea, though outward comforts utterly fail. {#Hab 3:17,18}

And his banner over me was love.] As a standard erected, as a banner displayed, so was the "love of Christ shed abroad in her heart by the Holy Ghost," {#Ro 5:15} who had also, as a fruit of his love, set up a standard in her against strong temptations and corruptions, {#Isa 59:19} and thereby assured her of his special presence; like as where the colours are, there is the captain—where the standard, there the king. The wicked also have their banners of lust, covetousness, ambition, malice, under which they fight, as the dragon and his viperous brood, {#Re 12:7} against Christ and his people; but they may read their destiny, #Isa 8:9,10, "Associate yourselves, O ye people!" stand to your arms, repair to your colours, yet "ye shall be broken in pieces; gird yourselves, and ye shall be broken in pieces." "Take counsel together, and it shall come to nought, &c., for God is with us"; Immanuel is our general and how many do you reckon him for? as Antigonus once said to his soldiers that feared their enemy's numbers. Surely "if Christ be for us," and he is never from us, {#Mt 28:20} but as Xerxes was wont to do, he pitcheth his tent and sets up his standard in the midst of his people, as once in the wilderness, "who can be against us?" {#Ro 8:31} And though many be, yet "no weapon that is formed against the Church shall prosper"; how should it, since she hath such a champion as Christ, who is in love with her, and will take her part, fight her quarrel? "and every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn." {#Isa 54:17} As the eclipsed moon, by keeping her motion, wades out of the shadow and recovers her splendour, so it shall be with the spouse—yea, she shall be able to answer those that reproach and cast dirt upon her for her keeping close to Christ's colours and suffering hardship for him, as the Emperor Adrian did the poet Florus, who sat on an ale bench and sang,

“ Nolo ego Caesar esse

*Ambulare per Britannos
Rigidas pati pruinas, &c.*”

*I do not wish to be Caesar,
To walk through the Britians
To endure the rigours of hoar frost,*

The witty emperor replied upon him, as soon as he heard of it—

“ Nolo ego Florus esse

*Ambulate per tabernas;
Latitare per popinas,
Pulices pati rotundos.*” {c}

I do not wish to be Florus

To walk through taverns;
To lie low through the bistro,
To endure round flees.

Ver. 5. Stay me with flagons.] Not with cups or bowls only, but with flagons, larger measures of that wine that was set before her in Christ's wine house. "Comfort me with apples," such as fall from Christ's apple tree, spoken of in the former verse, the precious mellifluous promises, which are sweet, like the apples of the garden of Eden, as the Chaldee here hath it. 'Bolster me up' with these; for I am even sinking and swooning with an excess of love, with an exuberance of spiritual joy in God my Saviour, such as I can hardly stand under. Stay me therefore, saith she to the ministers, those pillars to "support the weak," {#Ga 2:10} and to "comfort the feeble minded." {#1Th 5:14} "Stay me, or sustain me, with flagons, comfort me with apples." Solinus {a} tells of some near the river Ganges that live odore pomorum sylvestrium, by the smell ^{b} of forest apples, which is somewhat strange.

For I am sick of love.] Surprised with a love qualm, as an honest virgin may be, meeting her love unawares, enjoying him in the fulness of joy, and fearing the loss of his company for a long season. This is timor amicalis, which Lombard ^{c} thus describeth, Ne offendamus quem diligimus, et ne ab eo separemur; The fear of love is, lest we should offend him whom our soul loveth, and so cause him to withdraw. Hic timor transit in charitatem, saith Gregory, This fear passeth into love, and overwhelms the spirit sometimes. This was it that made Jacob, when he saw nothing but visions of love and mercy, cry out, "How dreadful is this place!" This made that mixture of passions in those good women, that, coming to look for Christ, departed from the grave "with fear and great joy." From this cause it was that Bernard, for a certain time after his conversion, remained as it were deprived of his senses by the excessive consolations he had from God. ^{d} Cyprian ^{e} writes to his friend Donatus, that before his conversion he thought it impossible to find such raptures and ravishments as now he did in a Christian course. He begins his epistle thus, Accipe quod sentitur antequam discitur, &c.; Augustine ^{f} saith the like of himself. What inconceivable and unutterable ecstasies of joy, then, may we well think there is in heaven, where the Lord Christ perpetually, and without intermission, manifesteth the most glorious and visible signs of his presence and seals of his love! He pours forth all plenteous demonstrations of his goodness to his saints, and gives them eyes to see it, minds to conceive it; and then fills them with exceeding fulness of love to him again, so that they swim in pleasure, and are even overwhelmed with joy—a joy too big to enter into them, they must "enter into it." ^{#Mt 25:21} Oh pray! pray with that great apostle that had been in heaven, and seen that which eye never saw, that "the eyes of your understanding being enlightened, you may know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, and what is the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints." ^{#Eph 1:18 3:19} A glory fitter to be believed than possible to be discoursed. ^{g} "An exceeding excessive eternal weight of glory." ^{#2Co 4:17} Such a weight, as if the body were not upheld by the power of God, it were impossible but it should faint under it. How ready are our spirits to expire here, when any extraordinary unexpected comfort befalls us! The Church is "sick of love." Jacob's heart fainted when he heard of Joseph's life and honour in Egypt. The Queen of Sheba was astonished at Solomon's wisdom and magnificence, so that she had no spirit more in her. Viscount Lisley, in Henry VIII's time, died for joy of an unexpected pardon. What then may we think of those in heaven? And should not we hasten in our affections to that happy place? Oh do but think, saith one, though it far pass the reach of any mortal thought, what an infinite, inexplicable happiness it will be, to look for ever upon the glorious body of Christ, shining with incomprehensible beauty, far above the brightest cherub, and to consider that even every vein of that blessed body bled to bring thee to heaven! Think of it, I say, and then exhale thyself in continual sallies, as it were, of most earnest desires "to be dissolved αναλυσαι, and to be with Christ, which is far the better." {#Php 1:23} As in the meanwhile, let thy soul sweetly converse with him in all his holy ordinances, but especially at his holy table, where he saith unto thee, as once to Thomas, "Reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side, and be not faithless, but believing." Let thy soul also there reciprocate and say, "My Lord and my God!" "Whom have I in heaven but thee? and in earth, none in comparison of thee." {#Ps 73:25} "Rabboni," "Come quickly."

Ver. 6. His left hand is under my head, and his right hand doth embrace me.] As if she should have said, I called unto you, my friends, to relieve and raise me, falling into a spiritual swoon; but behold the "consolation that is in Christ, the comfort of love, the fellowship of the Spirit, the bowels and mercies of my dear husband": {#Php 2:1,2} he hath fulfilled my joy, he hath prevented your help, or at least he hath wrought together with the means, and made it successful. You have stayed me with flagons, but he hath "restored my soul": {#Ps 23:2} you have bolstered me up with apples, but when that would not do, he hath put "his left hand under my head," as a pillow to rest upon, and "with his right hand he hath embraced me," as a loving husband cherisheth his sick wife, and doth give her all the help he can. {#Eph 5:29} The whole virtue and power of the ministry cometh from Christ. They do their worthy endeavour to stay and underprop our faith: but that notwithstanding we shall soon fall to the ground, if Christ put not to both his hands to keep us up. We stand in need of whole Christ; and having him to support us, we cannot fall finally, because fall we never so low, we shall arise, "for the Lord puts under his hand"; {#Ps 37:24} his goodness is lower than we can fall; he circleth his saints with amiable embracements, and none can pull them out of his hands. Jacob undergird Rachel till she died upon him, "died on his hand." {#Ge 48:7} The good Shunammite held her son till he died on her lap. But the love sick Church, "whether she lives or dies, she is the Lord's"; {#Ro 14:8} and whoso liveth and believeth on him cannot die eternally. But when Christ himself died, though soul and body were sundered for a season, yet neither of them were sundered from the Godhead whereunto they were personally united; so is it here: death may separate soul and body, but cannot separate either of them from Christ. And as "Christ being raised from the dead, dies no more," {#Ro 6:9} so neither doth any one that is "risen with him." {#Col 3:1} Christ may as easily die at the right hand of his heavenly Father as in the heart of a true believer.

Ver. 7. I charge you, O ye daughters of Jerusalem.] A vehement obtestation, or rather an adjuration, I charge you, and that by an oath, taken from the manner of country speech. For in this whole chapter the allegory is so set, as if the feast or meeting were made and represented in a country house or village. These daughters of Jerusalem, therefore, the particular congregations, and all faithful men and women, {as #Lu 23:28} are straitly charged, and as it were in conscience bound by the Church, the "Mother of us all," {#Ga 4:26} not to disease or offend, much or little, her well beloved spouse that "resteth in her love," {#Zep 3:17} and "taketh pleasure in the prosperity of his servants," {#Ps 35:27} "until he please"—that is, not at all: for he is not a God that taketh pleasure in wickedness, {#Ps 5:4} his holy Spirit is grieved by it. {#Eph 4:30} Or, "until he please"; that is, till he waken of his own accord. Be not over hasty with him for help, but hold out faith and patience; let him take his own time, "for he is a God of judgment, and waiteth to be gracious." {#Isa 30:18} If through impatience and unbelief you set him a day, or send for him by a post, he will first chide you before he chide the waves that afflict you, as he dealt by his disciples that wakened him ere he was willing. {#Mr 4:37-40} Those that are suddenly roused out of a deep and sweet sleep are apt to be angry with those that have done it. Great heed must be taken by ourselves, and God's charge laid upon others, that nothing be "spoken or done amiss against the God of heaven." {#Da 3:29} "Their sorrows shall be multiplied that hasten after another god." {#Ps 16:4} "The Lord shall trouble thee, thou troubler of Israel." {#Jos 7:25} "Do ye provoke the Lord to wrath? are ye stronger than he?" {#1Co 10:22} Will ye needs try a fall with him? {#Ps 18:26} "Hath ever any yet waxed fierce against God and prospered?" {#Job 9:4} Surely, as Ulysses's companions told him, when he would needs provoke Polydamas, so may we say much more to those that incense the Lord to displeasure,

"It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." {#Heb 10:31} Had men the feet of roes and hinds of the field, they could not outrun his wrath; witness Jonah. Or if they could, yet the roes and hinds, those loving creatures, {#Pr 5:19} would be swift witnesses against them for their baseness and disloyalty, since they do such things as those poor creatures would not. See #De 30:19 Isa 1:2. Be thou instructed therefore, O Jerusalem, lest Christ's soul be disjointed from thee, lest, as well as he loves thee now, "he make thee desolate, a land not inhabited." {#Jer 6:8} Let him be that love of thine, as she here emphatically calls him, that taketh up thy whole heart, soul, and strength, with a love, not only of desire, but of complacency, with a God-like love. True it is that we cannot, neither are we bound to love God, in quantum est diligibilis, so much as he is loveable, for so God only can love himself; but we must love nihil supra, aeque, or ntra, nothing more, or so well, or against God. Other persons we may love with his allowance, but it must be in him, and for him, as our friends in the Lord, our foes for the Lord. Other things we may also love, but no otherwise than as they convey love to us from Christ, and may be means of drawing up our affections unto Christ. This true love will keep us from doing anything wilfully that may disease or displease him; it will also constrain the daughters of Jerusalem to "abide with the roes and with the hinds of the field," so some read this text, as Rachel did by her father's herds, to glorify Christ in some honest and lawful vocation, and not to vex him by idleness and unprofitableness, since, as punishment hath an impulsive, so love hath a compulsive faculty.

Ver. 8. The voice of my beloved! behold!] An abrupt passage, proceeding from a pang of love, whereof she was even sick, and now lay languishing, as it were, at Hope's Hospital, lingering and listening, hankering and hearkening after her beloved. Of the ear we use to say that it is first awake in a morning. Call one that is asleep by his name, and he will soon hear and start up. Christ "calls all his sheep by their name," {#Joh 10:3} and they "know his voice," {#Joh 10:4} so well are they versed in his Word, and so habitually are their senses exercised, {#Heb 5:14} yea, they know his pace. For—

Behold he cometh,] viz., To "make his abode with me," according to his promise; {#Joh 14:23} to fulfil with his hand what he had spoken with his mouth, as Solomon phraseth it in his prayer. {#1Ki 8:15} Christ sends his voice as another John Baptist, a forerunner, and this no sooner sounds in the ear, and sinks into the heart, than himself is at hand to speak comfort to the conscience. {#Ps 51:8} He thinks long of the time till it were done, as the mother's breast aches when it is time the child had suck.

He comes leaping upon the mountains, skipping upon the hills.] Look how the jealous eagle, when she flieth highest of all from her nest, and seems to seat herself among the clouds, yet still she casts an eye to her nest where are her young ones; and if she see any come near to offend, presently she speeds to their help and rescue. So doth the Lord Christ deal by his beloved spouse. Neither mountains nor hills shall hinder his coming; neither the sins of his people nor the world's opposition. As for the former, Christ blots out the "thick cloud," as well as the "cloud"; {#Isa 44:22} that is, enormities as well as infirmities. He casts all the sins of his saints into the bottom of the sea, which can as easily cover mountains as mole hills. And for the second, "Thou art more glorious and excellent than the mountains of prey," meaning, than all the Church's enemies, called, for their ravenousness, mountains of lions and leopards. {#So 4:8} The stout hearted are spoiled, &c. {#Ps 76:4,5} And "who art thou, O great mountain? before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain." {#Zec 4:7} And whereas man's soul hath naturally many mountains of pride and profaneness in it—"there is that leviathan, and creeping things innumerable," {#Ps 104:26} as the Psalmist saith of the sea—and for his body there is not a vein in it that would not swell to the height of the highest hill to make resistance to the work of grace; every such "mountain and hill is made low before the Lord Christ"; {#Isa 40:4} and "every high thing cast down that exalts itself against the knowledge of God." {#2Co 10:5} He coaxes with authority, and reigns over all impediments.

Ver. 9. My beloved is like a roe or a young hart,] viz., For sweetness and swiftness, as in the former verse. His help seems long, because we are short. In the opportunity of time he will not be wanting to those that wait for him. The lion seems to leave her young ones till they have almost killed themselves with roaring and howling; but at last she relieves them; and hereby they become the more courageous. God seems to forget his people sometimes, but it is that they may the better remember themselves, and remind him. He seems, as here to have taken a long journey, and to be at a great distance from them, whenas indeed he is as near us as once he was to Mary Magdalene after his resurrection; but she was so bleared she could not see him. If he at any time absent himself for trial of our faith and love to him, and to let us know how ill we can be without him, yet he is no further off than behind some wall or screen. Or if he get out of doors from us, yet he looks in at the window, to see how we take it, and soon after shows himself through the lattice, that we may not altogether despond or despair of his return. Yea, he flourisheth or blossometh ^{a} through the lattices, like some flower or fruit tree that, growing under or near unto a window, sends in a sweet scent into the room, or perhaps some pleasant branches, to teach that Christ cometh not to his without profit and comfort to their souls.

Ver. 10. My beloved spake, and said.] Heb., Answered and said. She had sighed out, belike, some such request unto her beloved as David did, {#Ps 90:13} "Return, O Lord, how long!" Lovers' hours are full of eternity. He replieth, Even now, my love; behold, here I am for thy help. "Now will I rise, now will I be exalted, now will I lift up myself." {#Isa 33:10} Rise thou, therefore, out of the ashes wherewith thou hast been covered, {#La 3:16} and come away to a better condition. Or, rise out of sin, wherein by nature thou sittest. {#Lu 1:79} "Stand up from the dead," come away to Christ, and he "shall give thee light." {#Eph 5:14} "Come, for the master calleth," as they said to blind Bartimeus. {#Mr 10:49} "Come, for it is high time to come, since now is our salvation nearer than when we believed." "The night is far spent, the day is at hand." {#Ro 13:11,12} "The winter is past, the flowers appear." Up, therefore, and come with me to my country house, as it were to take the pleasure of the spring tide. In heaven there is a perpetual spring; and here the saints have handsel of heaven, those "firstfruits of the Spirit," even as many as are "holy brethren, partakers of this heavenly calling." {#Heb 3:1}

Ver. 11. For, lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone.] In winter the clouds commonly "return after the rain." {#Ec 12:2} A shower or two doth not clear the air; but though it rain much, yet the sky is still overcast with clouds; and as one shower is unburdened another is brewed. Lo, such is the doleful and dismal condition of such as are not effectually called by Christ. Omnis illis dies hybernus est, it is ever winter with them; no spring of grace, no sunshine of sound comfort. It is with such as it was with Paul and his fellow sailors, when, "as neither sun nor stars in many days appeared, and no small tempest lay on them, all hope that they shall be saved was then taken away." {#Ac 27:20} All the hope is that God, who by his all-quickening voice "raiseth the dead, and calleth things that are not as if they were," {#Ro 4:17} that calleth those "his people that were not his people, and her beloved which was not beloved." {#Ge 9:25} Together with his voice, there goeth forth a "power," {as #Lu 5:17} as when he bade Lazarus come forth, he made him rise and come away; so here. Of carnal, Christ makes us a people created again; {#Ps 102:18 Eph 2:10} of a wild ass colt he makes a man, {#Job 11:12} and of a hollow person (as empty and void of heart as the hollow of a tree is of substance) he makes a solid Christian, fit to be set in the heavenly building. This is as great a work as the making of a world with a word. God "plants the heavens, and lays the foundation of the earth, that he may say to Zion, Thou art my people." {#Isa 51:16} Hence Christ is called "the beginning of the creation of God." {#Re 3:14} And the apostle in #Ro 5:10 argues from vocation to glorification as the lesser.

Ver. 12. The flowers appear on the earth.] Here we have a most dainty description of the spring or prime time—prin-temps, as the French call it—far surpassing that of Horace and the rest of the poets, who yet have shown themselves very witty that way. For the sense; by "flowers" (made rather to smell than to feed upon) are understood, saith an interpreter, the firstfruits of the Spirit, whereby the elect give a pleasant smell; and therein lieth sweetness of speech, and words going before works, even as flowers before fruits. For the which cause, as the apostle exhorteth that our speech be gracious always, "ministering edification to the hearer," {#Col 4:6} so the prophet calls it a "pure language," which the Lord will give to as many as love him, as are called according to his purpose. {#Zep 3:9}

The time of the singing of birds is come.] Hic autem garritus avium plurimum facit ad veris commendationem, this chirping of birds makes much to the spring's commendation, saith Genebrard. How melodiously sing the ministers of the gospel, while they are unto God's people as "a very lovely song of one that hath a pleasant voice." {#Eze 33:32} It is mel in ore, moles in aure, to the elect, as it was to Augustine, who, coming to hear Ambrose, had his ears tickled, his heart touched; so had that unlearned Corinthian, {#1Co 14:25} and the whole city of Samaria, wherein there was "great joy" at the receiving of the gospel. {#Ac 8:8} "Behold we bring you good tidings of great joy to all people," {#Lu 2:10} said those angels to the shepherds that sang Christ into the world, and from whom the preaching of the gospel was afterwards taken and given to the ministers, whose proper office it is "to publish peace, to bring good tidings of good." "Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice; with the voice together shall they sing." {#Isa 52:7,8} If they do otherwise to any, if they sing doleful accents to guilty persons, if the voice of these gospel birds be to such, like that of Abijah to Jeroboam's wife, "I am sent to thee with heavy tidings," {#1Ki 14:6} they may thank themselves. To fall out with the minister is as great folly, as if some fond people should accuse the herald or the trumpet as the cause of their war; or as if some ignorant peasant, when he sees his fowls bathing in his pond, should cry out of them as the causes of foul weather. What do faithful ministers do more—what can they do less, if they will be true to their souls?—than tax men's sins, foretell their judgments? This when they do, it is diversely taken. Ravenous and unclean birds, like the ravens of Arabia, screech horribly, scratch terribly. Turtles and doves ^{a} (whose voice is here said to be heard in the land when other birds are sweetly singing) come in with a mournful tone, mixed with a groaning sadness (whence also the turtle hath its name, scil., a sono quem edit, per onomatopaeiam), and may well serve to set forth the unutterable groans of gracious spirits grieving for their sins, mourning bitterly ^{#Zec 12:10} over Christ crucified before their eyes, ^{#Ga 3:1} and evidently set forth by their faithful ministers (so that they need no other crucifix to draw tears from them) "tabering upon their breasts with the voice of doves," ^{#Na 2:7} yea, smiting upon their breasts, with the penitent publican, and saying, or rather sighing, out each for himself, "Lord be merciful to me a sinner." And here affert solatium lugentibus suspiriorum societas. ^{b} It is a heavenly hearing when a church full of good people, wrought upon by their godly preachers, send up a volley of sighs to God; and as "hinds by calving," so they by weeping "cast out their sorrows," ^{#Job 39:3} such as show their hearts to be as so many Hadadrimmons. Augustine ^{c} persuades a preacher so long to insist upon some needful point, until by the groans and looks of his hearers he perceive that they understand it, and are affected with it. Such hearers Paul had at Athens, that wept as he did; ^{#Ac 20:37} but this is but few men's happiness. Turtle doves are rare birds in our land.

Ver. 13. The fig tree putteth forth her green figs, and the vines with the tender grapes, &c.] These two trees put forth their fruits first, when other trees for the most part put forth first flowers, and then fruits ^{a} in their season. Pliny ^{b} numbers the fig tree among the trees of quick nature. And our Saviour ^{#Lu 21:29,30} makes the shooting forth of the fig tree to be a sign of summer's approaching. When himself came hungry to that fig tree, ^{#Mt 21:19} he thought to have found something on it more than leaves only; for though the time of figs was not yet (that is, of ripe figs, ^{#Mr 11:13}), yet grossuli, green figs, at least, he looked for, those untimely figs that she casteth when she is shaken by a mighty wind; {#Re 6:13} his hunger would have made somewhat of them. It was at Bethphage (that house of green figs, as the word {c} signifieth), or near unto it, that he cursed this barren fig tree, {#Mr 11:1,13} and therefore cursed it, because it answered not his expectation. It behoves us, therefore, not only to make a flourish of goodly words, with Naphtali, but to be fruitful boughs, with Joseph, being filled with the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ unto the glory and praise of God. {#Php 1:11} Joseph is a fruitful bough, {#Ge 49:22} that is, of the vine, saith the Chaldee paraphrast there. But it may be Jacob meant it of the Egyptian fig tree, whereof Solinus reporteth that it beareth fruit seven times a year. {d} Pull off one fig, and another presently puts forth. {e} Now, if the fig tree slack not her duty, but laboureth quickly to bring forth her firstfruit, that so again and again she may be more fruitful, how much more should we hasten the fruits of holiness, break off our sins, and be abrupt in our repentance, {#Da 4:27} cut the cart ropes of vanity, and cast away the deeds of darkness, {#Ro 13:12} bring forth fruits meet for repentance, parallel to it and tantamount, such as were to be seen in the penitent thief that suffered with our Saviour? Aaron's rod was not sooner changed from a withered stick into a flourishing tree, than he was from a barren malefactor into a fruitful professor; for see what a deal of fruit he bears in an instant; he confesseth his own sin, rebuketh his companion, giveth a good testimony unto Christ, and prays that Christ would remember him when he came into his kingdom. This encouragement, among many others we have, that Christ will bless our very buds {f} {#Isa 44:3} -see the Geneva translation. He will taste of our green figs, of our tender grapes, which, if not yet of a good taste, yet because they give a good smell, as this text hath it, they are well resented. Christ, when he comes into his garden, takes all he finds well aworth. He "gathereth his myrrh with his spice; he eats not only of his honey, but of his honeycomb; and drinks not only of his wine, but of his milk." {#So 5:1}

Ver. 14. Oh, my dove! that art in the clefts of the rock.] The dove is meek, mournful, simple, sociable, fearful, beautiful, faithful to her mate, fruitful, neat, so is the Church. And because the dove is sought after by birds of prey, therefore she builds in strong and steep places, in clefts of rocks, in the sides of "the hole's mouth," as Jeremiah hath it. {#Jer 48:28} The Church also is forced many times to "flee into the wilderness," {#Re 12:6} into the further parts of the world, and hide itself in corners, to avoid persecution. So many, so mighty, and so malicious are the Church's enemies, that she dare scarce peep out or appear abroad with the dove, but she is in danger to become hawk'smeat. Hence Hilary saith of the primitive Christians, that they were not to be sought in tectis et exteriori pompa, in palaces and outward pomp, but rather in deserts and in mountains, and "in dens and caves of the earth," as the apostle also hath it. {#Heb 11:38} Concerning the Christian congregation in Queen Mary's time, saith Mr Foxe, {a} there were sometimes forty, sometimes a hundred, sometimes two hundred came together, as they could, in some private place in London, for mutual edification. They are utterly out, therefore, that hold that the true Church must be evermore glorious and conspicuous for her outward splendour. She is soon like the moon in her eclipse, which appeareth dark towards the earth, but is bright and radiant in that part which looks toward heaven. The Papists would have this moon always in the full. However if she show but little light to us, or be eclipsed, they will not yield she is the moon. And yet (except it be in the eclipse) astronomers demonstrate that the moon hath at all times as much light as in the full. But oftentimes a great part of the bright side is turned to heaven, and a lesser part to the earth. And so the Church is ever conspicuous to God's eye, though it appear not always to ours.

In the secret places of the stairs.] Whither thou art retired, as for security, so for secrecy, that thou mayest the more freely, and without suspicion of hypocrisy, pour out thy heart before me, and seek my protection. Or, where thou liest close out of modesty, or conscious of infirmity, not daring to show thy face.

Shew me thy face.] Or, Let me see thy countenance; leave none of thy particular congregations or members behind thee, but present yourselves before the Lord. "Come boldly to the throne of grace," {#Heb 4:16} in "full assurance of faith." {#Heb 10:22} Quid enim per faciem nisi fidem qua a Deo cognoscimur, saith Gregory upon this text. What can we understand by the face but faith, since by it we are known of God, and "without it, it is impossible to please God; for he that cometh to God"—that shows his face before the "King, eternal, immortal, invisible," &c., {#1Ti 1:17} must come in his best—"must believe that he is"—scil., optimus maximus, and more particularly—"that he is a rewarder of all that diligently seek him," {#Heb 11:6} that seek him out, as the Greek {b} hath it, viz., that fetch him out of his retiring room, as the Syrophenisse, by the force of her faith did, {#Mr 7:24-30} and as the spouse here would never give him over till she had recovered him out of the country, and drawn from him this sweetest invitation to go along with him, and incitation to make bold with him.

Let me hear thy voice.] In holy exercises, preaching, prayer, conference, &c. See here how the Lord Christ woos attendance, solicits suitors. "The Father seeketh such to worship him." {#Joh 4:24} "Hitherto ye have asked me nothing," saith the Son; nothing to what you might have done, and should do well to do hereafter. "Ask that your joy may be full." {#Joh 16:24} Pray that ye may joy; "draw waters with joy out of this well spring of salvation." Ply the throne of grace; follow your work close. It was more troublesome to Severus the emperor—to Christ you may be sure it is—to be asked nothing of his courtiers, than to grant them much. "Ask, and you shall have," saith Christ. And is he not worthily miserable that will not make himself happy by asking?

Sweet is thy voice.] Because uttered by "the Spirit of grace and supplication," whose very breath prayer is, and without whom prayer is no better than a "sounding brass or tinkling cymbal."

And thy countenance is comely,] scil., By reason of the image of God repaired in thee, clearly shining in thy heart and life. This renders thee comely indeed, so that I am the better to see thy face, and to hear thy voice. To lovers nothing can be more pleasing than mutual converse and conference.

Ver. 15. Take us the foxes, the little foxes, / i.e., The heretics and schismatics. For as fox cubs will be foxes one day, and of little will become great; so schismatics, if not timely taken, will turn heretics. Whence it is that the apostle, in #1Co 11:18,19, having said, "I hear that there be divisions, or schisms, among you," he presently subjoins, "For there must be also heresies among you," God having so foreappointed and foretold it, "that they which are approved may be made manifest among you." Now these heretics and schismatics are fitly called foxes, both here and #Eze 13:4. Herod is also called a fox, {#Lu 13:32} as being a sect master, {#Mt 22:16} and as it is thought, to still the noise of his conscience, a Sadducee—first, For their craft; secondly, For their cruelty. Foxes are famous for their craftiness, even to a proverb—‘As subtle as a fox’—

They are passing cunning to deceive those that hunt them, feigning themselves simple when there is nothing more subtle, and looking pitifully when taken in a snare, but it is only that they may get out; there is no trusting to their looks, for Vulpes pellem mutat; non naturam, saith the proverb, The fox may alter his countenance, but not his condition. And for cruelty, besides the harm foxes do among lambs and fowls—for, lacking meat, they feign themselves dead, and so the birds, hasting down as to a carcass, volucres rapiunt et devorant, saith Isidore, {a} they seize upon the birds and devour them—they are noted here to mar the vineyards, Vulpes vitibus maxime nocivae, saith one. And for grapes, the fox loves them exceedingly—yea, though they be but tender and unripe. Hence the Latins call him Legulus, a gatherer—namely, of grapes; and we ironically say of a man, the fox loves no grapes, he will not eat them, but it is because he cannot get them; howbeit, by his leering one may know he loves them. Heretics and schismatics are therefore to be taken by the vinedressers—that is, detected, refuted, and if need be, "delivered up to Satan," {#1Ti 1:20} by the ministers, chased out of the vineyard, and pursued to death, if incorrigible, by the magistrate, as Jehu dealt by the Baalites, and after him Josiah. The sword is put into their hands for such a purpose, {#Ro 13:4} and our Saviour with a civil whip expelled those Church foxes, the money merchants, giving therein a taste of that civil authority which he naturally derived from David, as one observeth. The apostles, being convented before civil authority about matters of religion, never pleaded, You have no power to meddle with us in these things that belong to Jesus Christ. No; their plea was only the justness of their cause, their obedience to God, &c. This heretics can never make good. Well they may pretend that they suffer for righteousness sake, and style themselves, as the Swenckfeldians did, the confessors of the glory of Christ! Well they may cry out, as that heretic Dioscorus did in the Council of Chalcedon, 'I am cast out with the fathers, I defend the doctrine of the fathers, I transgress them not in any point! Well they may seem to be ambitious of wearing a Tyburn tippet, as Campian, and cry out with Gentilis, the Anti-trinitarian, that he suffered death for the glory of the most high God! {b} "He that hateth dissembleth with his lips," saith Solomon of such subtle foxes, "and layeth up deceit within him. When he speaketh fair believe him not, for there are seven abominations in his heart." {#Pr 26:24,25} Heretics are notably cunning and no less cruel, as the Arians and Donatists were of old, the Papists, Socinians, and others of the same brand to this day. These "foxes have holes"; {#Mt 8:20} they cunningly creep, or shoot themselves into houses by their pithanology and counterfeit humility, they "lead captive silly women," {#2Ti 3:6} and by them their husbands; they take them prisoners, as the word signifies, and then make prize of them; {#2Pe 2:3} they bring them into bondage and devour them, as St Paul saith of those deceitful workers, the foxes of his time; {#2Co 11:13,20} they fraudulently foist in false doctrines, {#2Pe 2:1} heresies of perdition, and so corrupt the vineyard as the master of the vineyard complains, {#Jer 12:10} "shipwreck the faith," {#1Ti 1:19} "subvert whole houses," {#Tit 1:11} and are therefore to be taken, or clubbed down as pests and common mischiefs to mankind—to the younger sort especially, those tender grapes which they chiefly covet and catch at. And here, in hunting of these cruel crafties, that counsel would be taken that Saul gave the Ziphites concerning an innocent man that deserved it not: "Go, I pray you, prepare ye and know and see his place where his haunt is, and who hath seen him there, for it is told me that he dealeth very subtly. See, therefore, and take knowledge of all the lurking places where he hideth himself." {#1Sa 23:22,23}

{b} Se pro gloria Altissimi Dei pati.

Ver. 16. My beloved is mine, and I am his.] Hitherto the Church hath related Christ's words to herself and others. Now she shuts up the whole discourse with praise of Christ here, and prayer to him in #So 2:17. In praising him, she preacheth her own blessedness in that spiritual union, that mystical marriage that is between them, "My beloved is mine," &c.—q.d., I am sure he is mine, and I can boldly speak it. Many lay claim to him which have no share in him; they deeply affirm of him, but have no manner of right to him; their faith is but fancy, their confidence presumption; they are like that madman of Athens that claimed every rich ship that came to shore, whereas he had no part in any; or Haman, who hearing that the king would honour a man, concluded, but falsely, that himself was the man; like idolatrous Micah, they conceit that God will bless them for the Levite's sake, {#Jud 17:13} which was no such matter; and like Sisera, they dream of a kingdom, whereas Jael's nail is nearer their temples than a crown. The condition of such self-soothers and self-seekers is nothing different from his, that, dreaming upon a steep place of some great happiness befallen him, starts suddenly for joy, and falling down with the start, breaks his neck at the bottom. The true believer is upon a far better ground; his faith is "unfeigned," his hope is "unfailable." He "knows whom he hath trusted," he "knows and believes the love that God hath to him"; {#1Jo 4:16} he hath gotten a full grip of Christ, and is sure that "neither death nor life, &c., shall separate him from Christ." He hath comprehended him, or "rather is comprehended of him." {#Php 3:12} Christ hath laid hold on him by his Spirit, and he hath laid hold on Christ by faith, the property whereof is to put on close to Christ, and Christ to him; yea, to unite us to Christ, so that "he that is joined to the Lord is one spirit"; {#1Co 6:17} as truly one as those members are one body which have the same soul, or as man and wife are one flesh; as they two are one matrimonial flesh, so Christ and his people are one mystical Christ. {#1Co 12:12} Well, therefore, may the Church here glorify Christ, and glory in her own happiness by him, saying, "My beloved is mine," and I am sure of it, and cannot be deceived, for "I am his"; all that I am is his—I have made a total resignation of my whole self unto him, and have put him in full possession of all. "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." {#Ga 2:20} Christ is all-sufficient to me, and I am altogether his. His is as a covenant of mercy, mine of obedience, wherein I do as it were by indenture, with highest estimations, most vigorous affections, and utmost endeavours, bestow myself upon him, and I accept of whole Christ in all his offices and efficacies.

He feedeth among the lilies.] Before she was to seek, and goes to Christ to be resolved where he fed. {#So 1:7} Now, after more intimate communion with him, she is able to resolve herself and others where he feeds his flock—viz., "among the lilies"; that is, in sweet and soft pastures, {#Ps 23:2} in those "mountains of spices," {#So 8:14} those "beauties of holiness," the glorious ordinances wherein Christ feeds his people, and feasts them daily and daintily, pleasantly and plentifully, with the best of the best, "fat things full of marrow, wines on the lees well refined," {#Isa 25:6} to the gladdening of their hearts and greatening of their faith, so that they "grow up as the lilies," {#Ho 14:5} as the "calves of the stall," {#Mal 4:2} "as the willows by the water-courses." {#Isa 44:4} And as lilies are not more beautiful than fertile, Una radiae quinquagenos saepe emittente bulbos, { a } yea, the dropping of the lily will cause and beget more lilies; so the lily white saints will be working upon others, and bringing them to Christ, as Andrew did Peter, and Philip, Nathaniel. {#Joh 1:41,45} True goodness is generative; charity is no churl.

Ver. 17. Until the day break, and the shadows flee away.] Until that day dawn, {a} that last and glorious day, when Christ the Sun of righteousness shall appear, and chase away the shadows of sin and misery wherewith I am here benighted.

Turn about, my beloved.] And though thou leave me for a time, as "thou art a God that hidest thyself," {#Isa 45:15} yet never forsake me, but let thine heart be ever upon me, and thine hand ready to help at a dead lift.

Yea, be thou like a roe or a young hart.] Come sweetly and seasonably to my relief and succour. To set thee a time were to set the sun by my dial. But when thine own time is come, then "come, Lord Jesus, come quickly," be as nimble as a roe or young hart upon the mountains of Bether, called elsewhere "Bithron," beyond Jordan, {#2Sa 2:29} which mountains were much hunted by hunters. Mountains of division, some render it, and one {b} descants thus: The spouse of Christ in that heavenly marriage song calleth him a young hart on the mountains of division. Tell me, then, whither will you go for truth, if you will allow no truth but where there is no division?

Ver. 1. By night on my bed I sought him whom my soul loveth.] She had not a name good enough for him, she therefore makes use of this powerful periphrasis. Before he had been "her beloved," but now "the love of her soul," because now he had withdrawn himself. It was night with her now; she "walked in darkness, and had no light," as #Isa 50:10, and as before daybreak the darkness is greatest, so was it now with the woeful spouse. She was indeed upon her bed of ease, but to her in this case it was a little ease, a bed of unrest; her soul was tossed and troubled with solitary seeking, longing and looking after him whom "her soul loved." "By night," therefore, or "night after night," sundry nights together, as some read it, "she sought and sought," being constant, instant, and indefatigable in the search; she sought him early and earnestly, with utmost attention and affection, with her "whole heart and soul," {#Jer 29:13} according to the measure of her love to him, which was modus sine modo, as Bernard hath it. Now whatsoever a man loves, that he desires, and what he desires, that he seeks after, especially if he apprehend some singular worth in it. "In Christ are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge." {#Col 2:3} He is "better than rubies," saith Solomon, "and all the things that may be desired are not to be compared unto him." {#Pr 8:11} Hence the good soul seeks him as eagerly as the mammonist seeks silver, the ambitionist honour, the famished man bread, the condemned prisoner a pardon, or as one that seeks for a lost jewel, he overlooks all till he hath found it; Christ I must have, saith she, whatever it cost me—this gold cannot be bought too dear. She longeth sore, as David did, saying, "Oh that one would give me of the water of the well of Bethlehem!" {#1Ch 11:17} Oh for a blessed armful of the babe of Bethlehem! such as Simeon once had; give me Christ or else I die. None but Christ, none but Christ. All is but dung and dross to Christ. {#Php 3:8} God offered Moses an angel to go along with them in the wilderness; he would have no angel, nor stir a step unless God himself would conduct them. Barak would not march without Deborah, &c.

I found him not,] i.e., I had not so full a presence nor so fast hold of him as I desired. He had got behind the wall or the window, as in the former chapter, and, Joseph like, concealed his love out of increasement of love, as also that he may stir up strong affections after him in the hearts of his people, for he well enough knows how to commend his mercies to us, as Laban did his daughter Rachel to Jacob—by holding us off—by suspending us for a season. Even barren Leah, when unloved and unlooked on, becomes fruitful; and the drowsy spouse, when she misseth her beloved, becomes restless till she have recovered him. "In their affliction they will seek me early." {#Ho 5:15} Affliction excites devotion, and makes the saints seek again with a redoubled diligence, as here. See #Ps 78:34,35. It fares with the best sometimes as it did with St Paul and his company in the shipwreck, {#Ac 27:20} when they saw neither sun nor stars for many days and nights together. In this dismal and disconsolate condition, if they can but cast anchor and pray still for day, Christ will appear (as here, #So 3:3), and all shall clear up; the day will dawn, and the daystar appear in their hearts. "Mourning lasteth but till morning," {#Ps 30:5} and "the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak, and not lie: it will surely come, it will not tarry." {#Hab 2:3} But what shall we do in the meanwhile? may some say. How shall we sustain our spirits, since "hope deferred makes the heart sick?" "Though it tarry, wait for it," saith the prophet. Have patience, and learn to "live by faith. The just shall live by his faith." {#So 3:4} We are usually too hasty, and do antedate the promises. Neither will any reason satisfy us, unless we may have all Christ's sweetness at once, and at present. Excellent is that discourse that Mr Bradford the martyr makes in a consolatory letter to a good woman that was troubled in conscience. {a} You are not content, saith he, to kiss Christ's feet, with Magdalen, but you would be kissed even with the kisses of his mouth. You would see his face, with Moses, forgetting how he biddeth to seek his face, {#Ps 27:8} yea, and that for ever, {#Ps 105:4} which signifieth no such sight as you desire to see in this present life, which would see God now face to face, whereas he cannot be seen but covered under something, yea, sometime in that which is clean contrary unto God, as to see his mercy in his anger, &c. How did Job see God, but, as ye would say, under Satan's cloak? &c. You know that Moses, when he went to the mount to talk with God, he entered into a dark cloud; and Elias had his face covered when God passed by. Both these dear friends of God heard God, but saw him not. But you would be preferred before them. See now, my dear heart, how covetous you are. All, be thankful! be thankful! But, God be thanked, your covetousness is Moses' covetousness. Well, with him you shall be satisfied. But when? Forsooth when he shall appear, &c. God would have his people discontentedly contented with what measures of grace and feelings they have attained unto, and to know that tota vita boni Christiani sanctum desiderium est, { b} the whole life of a good Christian is a holy desire after more, and that those very pantings, inquietations, and dissatisfaction cannot but spring from truth of grace and some taste of Christ.

{b} Bernard.

Ver. 2. I will rise now, and go about the city, &c.] The holy city Jerusalem, whither "the tribes went up, the tribes of the Lord, unto the testimony of Israel." {#Ps 122:4} There was the likeliest place to find Christ; there his parents found him once, after three days' search, {#Lu 2:46} sitting in the temple; there he dwelt among men; there he gave gifts unto men, and therehence he went forth abroad the whole world, "conquering, and to conquer." {#Re 6:2} Here, therefore, the spouse seeks him among the people of God, and in his word and ordinances. She knew well that he fed his flock among those lilies, used to go down into that his garden of spices {#So 6:1,2} to take a turn amidst those golden candlesticks, {#Re 1:13} to take a view of his wedding guests, {#Mt 22:11} yea, to eat and drink in their presence, and to teach in their streets. {#Lu 13:26} Abroad she gets, therefore, and that presently.

I will rise now.] Saith she, lest I lose mine opportunity; for if so, I may seek it with tears, and go without it with sorrow. Men may purpose, promise, and expect a time of healing and curing, when they shall be deceived, and find a time of trouble. {#Jer 14:17} "Many, I say unto you, shall seek to enter, and shall not be able," {#Lu 13:24} yea, "they shall go with their flocks, and with their herds, to seek the Lord; but they shall not find him: he hath withdrawn himself from them." {#Ho 5:6} They came too late, belike; they sought not the Lord while he was to be found (vel sero, vel certe non serlo querebant); they called not upon him while he was near; they stayed till he was out of call; {#Pr 1:28} till he was resolved to return either no answer at all, or such a sad answer as the Jews had from him, because they stood out their day of grace: "Ye shall seek me, and shall not find me: and where I am, thither ye cannot come." {#Joh 7:34} And again, "I go my way, and ye shall seek me, and shall die in your sins." {#Joh 8:21} Oh, dreadful sentence! The Church herself here, though never so dear to Christ, seems to some to be guilty of sloth and slackness in seeking after Christ, and doing it in her bed (as loath at first to disease herself), or in holding him while she had him, if, while she was sleeping, he slipped away from her side. The wise virgins also were napping and nodding, {#Mt 25} and holy Augustine {a} confesseth that he could not answer that clear text, whereby he was called out of his sinful course. "Awake, thou that sleepest, and stand up from the dead," &c., but only by that wish of the sluggard, Modo et ecce modo, Sinite paululum, &c. A little more sleeps, a little more slumbers, &c.; little, and yet sleeps, in the plural. Thus, Modo et modo non habent modum, et Sinite paululum ibit in longum, as that father hath it. Somewhat it was, surely, that makes the Church resolve, as here, "I will rise now," or "Let me rise now"; I will stir up the gift of God that is in me; I will stir up myself to take better hold of Christ. Here is a tacit taxing herself for some former slackness, after her former enjoyments and familiar intercourse with Christ. We are too ready, after we have run well, to lie down and take cold, which may cause a consumption; to please ourselves in unlawful liberties, when we have pleased the Lord in lawful duties. Hezekiah, after his notable service, both of prayer and thanksgiving, fondly over-shoots himself to the Babylonish ambassadors. Jonah, after his embassy, faithfully discharged, to the Ninevites, breaks forth into anger against the Lord. Peter, being commended by Christ for the profession of his faith, fell presently so far wide, that he heard, "Get thee behind me, Satan." {#Mt 16}

I sought him, but I found him not.] For trial and exercise of her faith and constance. "Then shall ye know, if ye follow on to know the Lord." {#Ho 6:3} So then shall we find, if we follow on to seek Christ, fetching him out of his hidingplace, as the woman of Canaan did. For he would have hid himself, saith the text, but he could not, for a certain woman, &c. {#Mr 7:24,25} And as she set him out, so she followed him close, refusing to be either said nay, or sit down with silence or sad answers. The like did Jacob. {#Ge 32} He wrestled with might and slight. He would have a blessing whether God would or no, as we may say with reverence. "Let me go," saith God. No, thou shalt not, saith Jacob. "Let me alone, that I may destroy this people." No, by no means, saith Moses. In seeking of Christ, faith is not only importunate, but even impudent, {#Lu 11:8} {b} and threatens heaven, as Nazianzen said of his sister Gorgonia. If he have lost his mercy, she will find it for him. {#Isa 63:15} If he look strange and stern, she will both know him, and claim him amidst all his austerities. #Isa 63:16, "Art not thou our father?" If he be gone never so far, she will "follow hard after him," {#Ps 63:8} so David's phrase is; even as hard as her old legs will carry, as Father Latimer said; with "Return, for thy servant's sake. We are thine." {#Isa 63:17,19} O Lord, saith the Church in Habakkuk, "Art not thou from everlasting, my God, and mine Holy One?" It was a bold question, but God assents to it in a gracious answer, ere he went further. We shall not die, say they abruptly. {#Hab 1:12} Nay, "after two days"—for so long, it may be, he will hold us off, to try how we will hold out seeking—"he will revive us; in the third day he will raise us up, and we shall live in his sight." {#Ho 6:2} Or if we should die in this waiting condition, and in a spiritual desertion, yet we could not miss heaven, because he hath said, "Blessed are all they that wait for him." {#Isa 30:18}

Ver. 3. The watchmen that go about the city found me,] i.e., The angels, who are God's watchmen {a} over the world, and are so called somewhere in Scripture, as also ministering spirits, guardians of the saints, &c. But here I conceive are meant either those princes of the world, strangers to the mystery of Christ, {#1Co 2:8} and therefore can tell no tale nor tidings of him. For what reason? They are of Gallio's religion, which is no better than a mere irreligion, {#Ac 18:15} being de regione magis solliciti quam de religione, as one saith: or else, the officers and ministers of the Church, set as "Watchmen upon Jerusalem's walls, with charge never to hold their peace, day nor night." {#Isa 62:6} But they, alas! prove too too oft "blind watchmen, dumb dogs; sleeping, lying down, loving to slumber." {#Isa 56:10} And such it seems were these here, by the small directions they gave the Church, or intelligence of her best beloved. Howbeit, because the priests' lips should preserve knowledge, and they are given for guides to God, {#Heb 13:17} however they prove, she repairs to them, or rather, lighting upon them, inquires for Christ.

Saw ye him whom my soul loveth?] They that love Christ in sincerity, are apt to imagine that others also do love him no less than they. So much worth they find in him, that they wonder how any can do otherwise than affect and admire him. This made Mary Magdalene, who "loved much," to ask the gardener, for so she took him to be, what he had done with the Lord's body, {#Joh 20:15} whereabout she thought he had been as solicitous as herself. So the Church here, Have you seen him? when they perhaps were perfect strangers to him. But be they as they will, they should have known and loved the Lord Jesus Christ, upon pain of utter cutting off, {#1Co 16:22} and whether they do or do not, they shall know that she loves him; Quis enim celaverit ignem? For who can hide fire in his boston, or musk in his pocket? The love of Christ cannot possibly be concealed. A man may as easily hide the wind with his fist, and the ointment of his right hand, which bewrayeth itself, as Solomon speaketh in another case. {#Pr 27:16} He that "believes with his heart, will confess with his mouth." {#Ro 10:10} Christ's true worshippers are marked "in their foreheads." {#Re 7:3} Antichrist's limbs receive his mark "in their hands," {#Re 13:16} which they can cover or discover, as they see the occasion. We have also many political professors among us, who for want of true love to Christ, either run away in the plain field, {#Heb 10:36-39} and so incur the danger of martial law; or else, under a colour of discretion, fall back into the rearward: the battle is sharp, and it is not good to be too forward. "But is this thy love to thy friend?" as he said to Hushai the Archite. David's parents and brethren came down to him to the cave of Adullam, though to their great danger; {#1Sa 22:1} and Basil being blamed for his forwardness to appear for his friend in danger, answered, Ego aliter amare non didici. A friend is made for the day of adversity.

Ver. 4. It was but a little that I passed from them.] It is probable that, lighting upon these watchmen, she promised herself much counsel and comfort from them, but was disappointed. It pleaseth God many times to cross our likeliest projects, that himself alone may be leaned upon. The poor soul in distress is apt to knock at the creature's door for comfort, to shark abroad, and to look this way and that way, as David did, for help. Yea, many use the means as mediators, and so fall short of Christ. It is a good note that one {a} makes upon this text, that she was a little past the watchman; which shows, saith he, that the Lord delays comfort, to draw his Church, through all his means, from the lowest to the highest, where she findeth in short time comfort; but many times not till she is past, that they might not attribute it to the excellence of the means, but unto God.

But I found him whom my soul loveth.] Christ, as he therefore threateneth that he may not be put to punish, {b} so he therefore hides himself, otherwise, that he may come in again to his people with more comfort: and his usual time to come in to them is, when they have well-nigh done looking after him, as he dealt by those two that were travelling to Emmaus, {#Lu 24:13} when they have hanged up their hopes and their harps together, and are ready to cast away their confidence, and to leave looking any longer. "When the Son of man comes"—viz., with an answer to his people's prayers, which they have now even given up for lost labour—"shall he find faith upon the earth?" {#Lu 18:8} i.e., Will anybody ever think that, having stayed so long, he would yet come at last? Christ loves to comfort those that are forsaken of their hopes, and to give a blessing to those times and means whereof we despair. The pains cannot be cast away which we resolve to lose for Christ.

I held him, and would not let him go.] She held him with both hands earnestly; for faith hath two hands, one receiving Christ from God, the other giving the believer to God. With both she holds Christ—"the king is held in her galleries" by the bonds of love, by the cords of kindness, {#So 7:5} he is even held prisoner in her company—but especially with the former. She holds him as Jacob did, {#Ge 32:26} though with much conflict. The devil strikes hard at her hand, and would make her loose her hold. Hence faith is fain to tug and wrestle, even till it sweat again. And therefore Paul calls it to εργον, the difficult "work of faith," {#1Th 1:3} because the believer hath such ado to hold his own. If he cannot hold with his hands, he will make use of his teeth—as it is reported {c} of Cynegirus, that noble Athenian, and of our Sir Thomas Challoner, {d} in the wars of Charles V—any shift he will make rather than part with Christ, whom his soul loveth: having fastened on the tree of life, rather than drown, he is resolved to pull it up by the very roots. Let God fight against him with his own hand, and offer, as it were, to kill him, yet he will hang on still; he will trust, in an angry God, in a killing God, as Job; and as Jacob, he will wrestle, and not let go, though alone, and in the night, and upon one leg. "Lo! this is the generation of them that seek him, of them that seek thy face": this is Jacob; {#Ps 24:6} these be "Israelites indeed." {#Joh 1:47}

Until I had brought him into my mother's house.] That is, Into my conscience, say some—where faith dwelleth, and Christ by faith. {#Ro 10:10 Ga 4:19} Into the synagogues of the Jews, say others, or into the congregations of the Gentiles. They do best that understand it of the Catholic Church, the supernal Jerusalem, that "Mother of us all," figured by Sarah, {#Ga 4:24,26} where Christ hath most delightful dwelling, a comfortable commoration, and, as it were, conjugal cohabitation with his spouse, chamber fellowship. {#Jud 15:1}

Ver. 5. I charge you, O ye daughters of Jerusalem.] As a further fruit of her revived faith, she renews her contestation and charge of sanctification of life, such as becometh the gospel; that Christ, whom she resolves now to retain with her, be not provoked by sin to leave his people. {#Nu 32:15} And in this vehement adjuration, no doubt, saith an interpreter, but the Church had a special regard to the custom used then, and yet even at this day used among us—namely, that songs are sung before the bride chamber, and certain noises of instruments brought to wake the bride and bridegroom from sleep.

{See Trapp on "So 2:7"}

Ver. 6. Who is this that cometh out of the wilderness?] "Who is this?" say the angels, those friends of the bridegroom, as some will have it, admiring the Church's high expressions, and continual ascensions in her affection to Christ. But I rather think it is the voice of the bridegroom himself, ravished with the beauty and sweetness of his spouse, and wondering at his own comeliness put upon her; as well he may, for quantum mutatur ab illa. {a} Such a change he hath wrought in her, as never was known in any. {#Eze 16:6-14} Moses married an Ethiopian woman, and could not change her hue. David married a scornful dame, a mocking Michal, and could not mend her conditions. Job's wife continued to be, as it is said of Helena, after the Trojan troubles caused by her, η παλαι γυνη, the same woman still—no changeling she: but the Church and all her genuine children are strangely altered and metamorphosed—as the apostle's word is {#Ro 12:2, μεταμορφωσθε} -and this change is not moral, formal, merely mental, temporal, partial, but spiritual, real, universal, both in respect of subject and object; for it is an entire change of the whole man, from the whole service of Satan to the living and true God, in sincere obedience to the whole law, the whole course of his life throughout. A change so conspicuous and so stupendous, that not only strangers take notice of it, ξενιζονται, strange at it, {#1Pe 4:4} and marvel much at the matter, saying, Who is this? {#Mt 21:10} What is come to the man of late, that now it is, Ego non sum? But Christ himself stands wondering at his own work, as he did once in Nathanael, "Behold an Israelite indeed" {#Joh 1:47} -an Ishmaelite by nature, but an Israelite by grace, as Gether, {#1Ch 7:17 2Sa 17:3} and as before that in Araunah, that famous Jebusite. {#2Sa 24:18 Zec 9:7}

That cometh out of the wilderness, J scil., Of this world, fitly called a wilderness, for the paucity of good people in it—the wilderness of Judea, where John preached was so called, because but thinly inhabited—and plenty of bears and boars, lions and leopards, and other wild creatures, whereunto wicked men for their savageness are commonly compared in Scripture. This ascending of the Church out of the world, as Israel did out of Egypt, and their orderly marching through the wilderness into the promised inheritance is worthily called a wonderful separation. {#Ex 33:16} And as that angel that appeared to Manoaah, by ascending up in the flame of the altar, is said to do wondrously, {#Jud 13:19,20} so do the saints by their daily devotions, as so many pillars of smoke, elationibus fumi, aspiring to eternity, and coming up, as Cornelius's prayers and alms did, "for a memorial before God." {#Ac 10:4} And albeit their best performances are as smoke, black and sooty in regard to infirmities and imperfections, yet they have a principle in them to carry them upward; they have also the high priest of the New Testament, not to present them only, but to perfume and scent them, as it is here, with myrrh and frankincense, and sweetest powders of the spice merchant—that is, with the merit and mediation of his own most precious passion, {#Heb 9:24} those sweet odours poured as out of vials into the prayers of saints, {#Re 5:8 8:4} and so making both them and their services acceptable to his Father. And as he promised, {#Joh 12:32} that "being lifted up" himself by the cross to the kingdom, he would "draw all his to him"; so we see it fulfilled in the saints, those heavenly eagles, soaring out of sight—lowly in their speeches, lofty in their actions, but especially in their affections carried above all earthly objects, {#Col 3:2} and not content till they are gotten home to heaven; their commoration is here, their conversation above. These heavenly stars, though seen sometimes in a puddle, though they reflect there, yet they have their situation in heaven. These birds of paradise, though they may touch happily upon earth, yet they are mostly upon the wing, and those outward comforts and creatures are to them but scalae et alae, "wings, and wind in their wings," {#Zec 5:9} to carry them upward. Let shallow men wonder at worldly things, as the disciples did at the huge and fair stones of the temple; {#Mt 24:1-3} let them be nailed fast to the earth, as Sisera was by Jael; let them ever bow downward, as that woman in the gospel that had a spirit of infirmity; let them grovel and go upon their bellies and feed upon earth, as the serpent. {#Ge 3:14} The saints are of another alloy; their "civil conversation (πολιτευμα) is in heaven," {#Php 3:20} their political bent, aim, and fetch is for heaven; they are immortalitatis candidati, as the ancients called Enoch and Elias; they do paradisum mente deambulare, as Jerome bids the young hermit take a turn ever and anon in paradise, and after some serious thoughts of that blessed place they break out as Monica, Augustine's mother did, into a Quid hic facio? What make I here? why hasten I not home to mine own country? They send up many pious ejaculations, many holy sallies, and as it were egressions of soul, many a humble, joyful, and thankful heart to God. Mittunt preces et lachrymas cordis legatos, as he saith, pillars of prayers, volleys of hearty wishes they send up continually, laying up treasure in heaven, and thinking long of the time or ere they get thither.

Ver. 7. Behold his bed, which is Solomon's, &c.] Or, Behold the bed of Solomon, as the Greek, explaining the Hebrew, hath it. Solomon was a famous figure of Christ; of his bed we read nothing, but may well conceive it was, as everything else about him, stately and costly, and thereby is meant here heaven, say some, whither the Church is brought in ascending in the preceding verse, and by the valiant warders they understand the angels, those mighties. {#Ps 103:20} But because they are said to be "valiant men of Israel," I rather assent to those that think the godly ministers are here meant by the "mighties," and the Church by Christ's "bed," where he reposes and "resteth in his love," {#Zep 3:17} lodging "between her breasts." {#So 1:13} There is nothing more sure than that the blessed angels do watch over the Church. {#Heb 1:14} What a guard by them had Jacob at Mehanaim, {#Ge 32:1,2} where they made a lane for him, as the word imports, to provide for his safety! The like we may say of Elisha at Dothan, and various others. I doubt not, saith one, but as the angels waited at Christ's sepulchre, so for his sake they watch also over our graves, called our beds. {#Isa 57:2} Howbeit here understand we it of the ministers of the word that "watch for men's souls," and are frequently called watchmen. Sixty of them they are said to be, because a great number, as the Levites were scattered up and down the tribes of Israel, as salt is strawed thick upon flesh to keep it from putrifying. Ye are the salt of the earth {#Mt 5:13-16} And "valiant" they are said to be, for valour and courage invincible is necessary to a minister who shall be sure to be put hard to it, and therefore had need to be, as Athanasius was, an adamant for his resolute stout carriage, and to partake with the diamond in the high priest's breastplate for hardness and hardiness in standing to and for the truth. Israelites also they ought to be Jews inwardly, not scoffing Ishmaelites, profane Edomites, false Philistines, but the valiants of Israel, such as David's band of worthies was; {#1Ch 11:10-12:37} faithful and godly patterns of piety such as will "take heed to themselves and to the flock," waiting upon the Lord's work and "watching for men's souls as they that must give account," &c. {#Heb 13:17} It is a great matter to be of Christ's bodyguard. Remember what David said of Abner. {#1Sa 26:15}

Ver. 8. They all hold swords, being expert in war.] They not only bear arms, but can handle them. Young Jether wore a sword, but he durst not draw it, {#Jud 8:20} or strike with it when he should have killed Zeba and Zalmunna. Themistocles said of the Eretrians, a cowardly people, that they were like the sword fish, which hath a sword indeed, but wants a heart. {a} Such white livered soldiers, such faint hearted swordmen our Solomon hath no need of; our Gideon will not employ them so far as to break a pitcher or to bear a torch. {#Jud 7:3} The fearful and unbelieving shall never set foot in his kingdom, much less be esquires of his body; those in that office must hold fast the faithful word, that sword of the Spirit, that twoedged sword, far beyond that of Goliath, and yet David said there was none to that, that they may be able and apt by sound doctrines both to exhort the tractable and to "convince the gainsayer." {#Tit 1:9} Those that either cannot or will not do thus, are no way fit to be of Christ's guard, because they are more likely to betray him into the hands of his enemies than to defend him from them, to act a Judas's part than a Peter's, who manfully cut off Malchus's ear, and chose rather to be held temerarious than timorous. Jeremiah complains of the pastors of his time that they were "not valiant for the truth," {#Jer 9:3} they had no spiritual metal in them; but as harts and stags have great horns and strength, but want courage, so it was with these. St Augustine professeth this was it that heartened him, and made him to triumph in his former Manicheism, that he met with feeble opponents, and such as his nimble wit was easily able to overturn. If gainsayers be not powerfully convinced, how will they set up their crests and cry victoria! If they be not stoned with arguments, {b} how will they start up and outstare the truth! There must be, therefore, skill and will in all her champions. They must also every man have his sword upon his thigh, and be ready for an assault. Seneca reports of Caesar that he had quickly sheathed his sword, but never took it off. And Suetonius tells us that he would never tell his soldiers of any set time of removal or onset, that he might never find them unready, {c} Christ expects the like care and courage in his ministers, lest the proverb be verified on them, ungirt, unblest.

And because of fear in the night.] Lest evil should befall Solomon, as it did Ishbosheth, who was slain upon his bed by the sons of Rimmon; lest deeds of darkness be done in a land of light, and while the watchmen slack their duty, the rulers of the darkness of this world break in and play their pranks. While men slept, tares were sown by the evil man. {#Mt 13:25}

Ver. 9. King Solomon made himself a chariot.] Hic locus lubricus est et difficilis. This is a hard text, saith one. It had been easier, perhaps, if commentators had not made it so hard. The word rendered chariot, is by others rendered a bridechamber, a bed, a throne, a palace. The Hebrew word is found in this place only; {a} it hath the name of fairness and fruitfulness. Rabbi Solomon saith it is thalamus honorificus, a bedchamber of honour, whereby we are to understand again the Church, as we did by "bed" in the former verse. She is oft compared to a house, here to a bridechamber, and Solomon's bridechamber, which must needs be supposed very trim, and set forth to the best. It is further set forth here by the causes: efficient, Solomon himself; material, cedar, silver, gold, &c.; formal, paved with love; final, for himself first, and then for the daughters of Jerusalem. First, Solomon himself made it, though a king. Stupenda sane dignatio, a wonderful condescension. The Church is Christ's own "workmanship," his "artificial facture," or creature (as the Greek word signifieth, #Eph 2:10, ποιημα), that masterpiece of his architecture, wherein he hath showed singular skill, by erecting that glorious fabric of the new man, that "new heaven and new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness." {#2Pe 3:13} For "he planteth the heavens and layeth the foundations of the earth, that he may say to Zion, Thou art my people," that he may "rejoice in the habitable part of God's earth," {#Pr 8:31} that he may say, "I will dwell in them, and walk in them, and I will be their God, and they shall be my people." {#1Co 6:16} Christ wrought the centurion's faith, as God; he wondered at it, as man. God wrought, and man marvelled; he did both to teach us where to bestow our wonder. Paul prays for his Ephesians, that their eyes might be enlightened to see the power that wrought in them. {#Eph 1:18}

Of the wood of Lebanon.] {See Trapp on "So 1:17"} The saints are the Church's materials. {#Ro 1:7 1Co 1:2} "The precious sons of Zion are comparable to fine gold." {#La 4:2} "Her Nazarites are purer than snow, whiter than milk, more ruddy than rubies; their polishing is of sapphire." {#So 3:7} And yet Bellarmine is not ashamed to say, Nos etiamsi credimus in ecclesia inveniri omnes virtutes, & c. {b} Although we doubt not but that all virtues are found in the Church; yet that a man may be absolutely called a member of that true Church spoken of in Scripture, we hold not that any inward virtue is required, but only an external profession of the faith, and participation of the sacraments. Belle hoc convenit Ecclesiae Romanae, saith a learned man. {c} This description suits very well with the Church of Rome. For certainly if there be any virtuous persons in that Church, id eis convenit per accidens, it is by mere accident, and not as they are in that Church, but as they dissent from it; like as Cicero saith wittily of the Epicureans, that if any were good among them, it was merely from the goodness of their nature, for they taught and thought otherwise. And as Peter Moulin said of many of the priests of France, that they were for their loyalty not beholden to the maxims of Italy; and yet Bellarmine hath the face to say, Sunt quidem in Ecclesia Catholica plurimi mali, sed ex haereticis nullus est bonus: {d} Among Papists there are many bad men, but among Protestants not one good man is to be found.

Ver. 10. He made the pillars thereof,] i.e., The faithful ministers, called "pillars," {#Ga 2:9} and that, Atlas-like, bear up the pillars of it. {#Ps 75:3} Those that offer violence to such, Samson-like, they lay hands upon the pillars to pluck the house upon their own heads. Yea, they attempt to pull stars out of Christ's hand, {#Re 1:16} which they will find a work not feasible.

Of silver.] For the purity of matter, and clearness of sound; for their beauty, stability, and incorruption. Let ministers hereby "learn how they ought to behave themselves in the house of God, which is the Church of the living God, the pillar and ground of truth." {#1Ti 3:15}

The bottom thereof of gold.] Understand it either of God's Word, which is compared to the finest gold, or of that precious grace of faith, the root of all the rest; whence it is laid by St Peter as the bottom and basis, the foundation and fountain of all the following graces: #2Pe 1:5, "Add to your faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge," &c. They are all in faith radically. Every grace is but faith exercised; hence we read of the "joy of faith," the "obedience of faith," the "righteousness of faith," &c. She is the mother grace, the womb wherein all the graces are conceived. Hence the bottom of Christ's fruitful bed, the pavement of his glorious bride chamber, the Church, is here said to be of gold; that is, of faith, which is called gold, {#Re 3:18 1Pe 1:7} "that the trial of your faith" (or your well tried faith, for it seems to be a Hebraism), "being much more precious than that of gold." And here, Melius est pallens aurum quam fulgens aurichalcum, {a} gold, though paler, is better than glittering copper. The faith of God's elect is far more precious than the shining sins {b} of the beautiful abominations of mere moralists. Suppose a simple man should get a stone, and strike fire with it, and thence conclude it a precious stone; why, every flint or ordinary stone will do that. So to think one hath this golden grace of faith, because he can be sober, just, chaste, liberal, &c.; why, ordinary heathens can do this. True, gold will comfort the fainting heart, which alchemy gold will not. Think the same of faith.

The covering of it of purple.] I am of their mind that expound it of Christ's blood, wherewith, as with a canopy, or a kind of heaven overhead, the Church is covered and cured. {#Re 5:9,10 7:14 Ro 6:3,4} Purple was a rich and dear commodity among them. {#Pr 31:22 7:5 Mr 15:17 Lu 16:19} The precious blood of Christ is worthily preferred before gold and silver. {#1Pe 1:18,19}

The midst thereof being paved with love.] For Christ loved us, and washed us with his blood. {#Re 1:5} He also fills his faithful people with the sense of his love, who therefore cannot but find a great deal of pleasure in the ways of God, because therein they let out their souls into God, and taste of his unspeakable sweetness; they cannot also but reciprocate and love his love. So the bottom, the top, and the middle of this reposing place are answerable to those three cardinal graces, faith, hope, and love. {#1Co 13}

For the daughters of Jerusalem.] This chariot or bridal bed he made for himself, he made it also for the daughters of Jerusalem; for all his is theirs, union being the ground of communion. As we must do all for Christ—according to that, Quicquid agas propter Deum agas; and again, Propter te, Domine, propter te; choice and excellent spirits are more taken up with what they shall do for God than what they shall receive from God—so Christ doth all for us, and seeks how to seal up his dearest love to us in all his actions and achievements. "Christ's death and bloodshed," saith Mr Bradford, "is the great seal of England, yea, of all the world, for the confirmation of all patents and perpetuities of the everlasting life whereunto he hath called us. This death of Christ, therefore, look on as the very pledge of God's love towards thee, &c. See, God's hands are nailed, they cannot strike thee; his feet also, he cannot run from thee. His arms are wide open to embrace thee, his head hangs down to kiss thee; his very heart is open, so that therein look, nay, even spy, and thou shalt see nothing therein but love, love, love to thee. Hide thee, therefore, lay thine head there with the beloved disciple, join thee to Christ's chariot, as Philip did to the noble eunuch's. This is the cleft of the rock wherein Elias stood. This is for all aching heads a pillow of down," &c. {c}

Ver. 11. Go forth, O ye daughters of Zion, / i.e., All ye faithful souls which follow the Lord Christ, the Lamb that stands upon Mount Zion. {#Re 14:1,4} Ye shall not need to go far—and yet far ye would go, I daresay, to see such a gallant sight as King Solomon in his royalty: the Queen of Sheba did—behold he is at hand, "Tell ye the daughters of Zion, Behold, thy King cometh," &c. {#Mt 21:5} Go forth therefore, forth of yourselves, forth from your friends, means, all, as Abraham did, and the holy apostles, confessors, and martyrs, and as the Church is bid to do, "forget also thine own people, and thy father's house." {#Ps 45:10} Good Nazianzen was glad that he had something of value—to wit, his Athenian learning—to part with for Christ. Horreo quicquid de meo est, ut meus sim, saith Bernard. He that will come to me, must go utterly out of himself, saith our Saviour. All St Paul's care was, that he might be found in Christ, but lost in himself. Ambula in timore et contemptu tui, et ora Christum, ut ipse tun omnia faciat, et tu nihil facias, sed sis sabbatum Christi, saith Luther, {a} Walk in the fear and contempt of thyself, and rest thy spirit in Christ; this is to go forth to see King Solomon crowned, yea, this is to set the crown upon Christ's head. When Queen Elizabeth undertook the protection of the Netherlands against the Spaniard, all princes admired her fortitude; and the king of Sweden said, that she had now taken the diadem from her own head, and set it upon the doubtful chance of war. {b} He that forsakes all for Christ, and puts himself by faith under his protection, submitting to the sceptre of his kingdom, and "sending a lamb to this ruler of the land," {#Isa 16:1} in token of homage and fealty, his "eyes shall see the King in his beauty"; and instead of a Vivat Rex, Let the king live, he shall break forth into this glorious acclamation, "The Lord is our judge, the Lord is our lawgiver; the Lord is our king, and he will save us." {#Isa 33:17,22} It was St Augustine's wish that he might see Romam in flore, Paulum in ore, et Christum in corpore, Rome, as of old, flourishing; Paul, as he did once, preaching; and Christ, as in the days of his flesh, going up and down doing good. There are those who hold, that by Solomon crowned here is meant Christ incarnated, taking flesh, as a crown, off his mother Mary; and that this was "the day of his espousals," when "the Word was made flesh," and "the day of the gladness of his heart," when he "rejoiced in the habitable part of God's earth,"—that is, in the human nature, wherein the fulness of the Godhead dwelt bodily—"and his delights were with the sons of men." {#Pr 8:31} Some understand it to be the crown of thorns set upon him by his mother, the synagogue. Others, the resurrection, and that name above all names {#Php 2:9} that he got by his death. I am of Mercer's mind, who expounds it to be that glory which Christ hath when he is preached up as the sole and absolute Saviour, and so believed on in the world, {#1Ti 3:16} that the obedience of faith is yielded unto him. When faith and obedience make a perfect pair of compasses, then Christ's head is compassed with a crown. Faith, as the one foot, is pitched upon the crown of Christ's head; while obedience, as the other, walks about in a perfect circle of good duties, "whereby he is made glad." {#Ps 45:8}

Ver. 1. Behold thou art fair, my love, behold thou art fair.] Thou art, thou art; and I am much taken with it, so that I cannot but set an Ecce admirantis Behold, wonder at it, upon it. I am so rapt and ravished; yea, I would that others also should behold it, and be enamoured with it. As the Church called upon her daughters of Zion, in the last verse of the former chapter, to go forth and see her Bridegroom in all his bravery, and to help to crown him; so here interchangeably, Christ calls upon all sorts to contemplate his beautiful bride in all the "comeliness that he hath put upon her," {#Eze 16:14} and that crown of twelve stars that he hath set upon her head, {#Re 12:1} so that "in everything she is enriched by him, and cometh behind in no gift." {#1Co 1:5,7}

Thou hast doves' eyes.] Particularly Christ commendeth her eyes, hair, teeth, lips, temples, neck, and breasts. He that would praise another, is careful to take in whatsoever of him may be thought praiseworthy. Christ only is able to give his Church her due commendation; because he only "knows all men, and needeth not that any should testify of man, for he knoweth what is in man." {#Joh 2:24,25} All others that shall undertake such a business had need say, as Mr Bradford the martyr saith of that peerless King Edward VI; So many things are to be spoken in commendation of God's graces in this child—who yet was but one of those many that make up the Church; but yet such a one, that as he was the chiefest, so I think the holiest and godliest in the realm of England, saith the same blessed Bradford—that as Sallust writes of Carthage, I had rather speak nothing than too little, in that too much is too little. {a} An exact face, saith Pliny, is seldom drawn but with great disadvantage; {b} how much more when a bungler hath it in hand? In which regard Alexander the Great forbade his portraiture to be painted by any other than Apelles, or to be carved by any other but Lysippus, men famous in those faculties. Behold here one that goes far beyond them both (the greatest artisan in the world), pencilling out to the life, and setting forth a complete character of his dearest spouse, whom he had "in his heart to die and to live with," {#2Co 7:3} as the high priest had the twelve tribes, {#Ex 28:29} and St Paul his Corinthians, though "the more he loved, the less he was beloved." {#2Co 12:15} But to come to her particular praises—"Thou hast doves' eyes," that is, fair, full, clear, chaste. {See Trapp on "So 1:15"} Eyes the true Church hath, and those both opened and enlightened. {#Ac 26:18} She cries not up ignorance as the mother of devotion, neither doth she send forth blind guides, to require blind obedience, as the Popish Padres do with their novices; to put out the eyes of those poor misled and muzzled ignoramuses, and to lead them blindfold into the midst of their deadly enemies, as Elisha did the Syrians into Samaria. The Church here described hath (as Solomon's wise man) her eyes in her head; yea, she hath two eyes, when the rest of the world hath but one (as the Chinese vainly brag of themselves), {c} a praise proper to the Church of Christ. She lifteth not up her eyes unto idols, {#Eze 18:6} but to the Holy One of Israel, {#Isa 17:7} her eyes are doves' eyes. Every child of Christ's Church hath a spiritual eyesight, an insight into the mystery of Christ, communication of Christ's secrets, "the mind of Christ." {#1Co 2:16} She hath no blind children; for, though born blind, yet Christ hath anointed them with his eye-salve, {#Re 3:18} and given both light and sight. But by "eyes" here we are chiefly to understand pastors and ministers, those "seers," as they were called of old, {#Isa 9:9} those "lights of the world," {#Mt 5:14-16} "burning and shining lights," {#Joh 5:35} as the Baptist was called, whose office is to be to God's people "instead of eyes," {#Nu 10:31} and "to open the eyes of the blind, to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan to God," &c. {#Ac 26:18}

And these are to have doves' eyes, seeking to present unto Christ every man chaste and pure in the simplicity of the gospel. {#2Co 11:2,3}

Within thy locks.] Seemly tied up and covered, as the word imports, without pride or affectation; not laid out, as the manner is, of vain and unshamefaced women, but thick, fair, and modestly made up, to show the Church's modesty and humility, which is the knot of every virtue, and ornament of every grace, as St Peter's word, εγκομβωσασθε, holds it forth. {#1Pe 5:5}

Their hair is as a flock of goats, &c.] They are fat and well liking; and so their hair lay smooth, slick, and shining. By the Church's hair here may be meant the community of true Christians, that, being as the hair innumerable, do adhere to Christ as to their head, and have a promise that not one hair of that sacred head shall fall to the ground; and that if any son of Belial shall offer to shear or shave them, he shall answer it as dearly as the Ammonites did the like abuse done to David's ambassadors. {#2Sa 10:3,4}

Ver. 2. Thy teeth are like a flock of sheep, &c.] Handsome teeth set forth a woman very well, and they are then held handsome when they are (1.) Even and well matched; (2.) Fair and white; (3.) Thick and full. All this we have here daintily set forth in an allegory. And by teeth the Chaldee paraphrast will have meant (and I dissent not) the priests and Levites of the law, the pastors and preachers, think I, of the Church; who, as they must be "eyes" to see, so they must be "teeth" in another regard—viz. (1.) To chew; (2.) To bite. First, They must champ and chew the children's meat for them, as good nurses, such as Paul was, {#1Th 2:7} and before him Isaiah. {#Isa 28:9} Whom shall he teach knowledge, and whom shall he make to understand? Not the wise and prudent, not conceited persons, that make divinity only a matter of discourse, or come to hear only to exercise their critics, and to sit as judges on their ministers' gifts. But such as are "weaned from the milk, and drawn from the breasts." And how will he do to deal with such, and to "divide the word aright" {ορθοτομεν, #2Ti 2:25} to them? He will praemansum cibum in os indere, mollify their harder meat for them, that it hurt not the tender toothless gums of these weanlings, weaklings "Precept," saith he, "shall be upon precept, precept upon precept, line upon line, line upon line, here a little, and there a little." They shall have it as they can take it, neither will he put that upon them that is not fit for them. They shall have milk, and not strong meat; or if they have, it shall be ready chewed for them. Our Saviour spake "as the people could hear," {#Mr 4:33} and not as he could have spoken. "If we have spoken to you," saith he, "of earthly things" (that is, of spiritual matters under earthly similitudes borrowed from wind, water, &c.) "and ye believe not, how shall ye believe if I tell you of heavenly things?" {#Joh 3:12} that is, of more sublime matters and mysteries of eternal life. Ministers must stoop to their hearers' capacities, and not be up in their altitudes, or deliver their discourses in a high language, in a Roman English, &c. For what is that but to "beat the air," to lose their labour, and to be "as barbarians to their hearers?" &c. Non oratorum filii sumus, sed piscatorum; nec verborum πευροχη, sed Spiritus επιδειξει, said that great divine to Libanius the rhetorician. We are not orators, but preachers; neither come we with "excellence of words," but with "evidence of the Spirit and of power," and "by manifestation of the truth, commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God." {#ICo 2:4 2Co 4:2} This is preaching; the art whereof plus operis habet quam ostentationis, as Quintillian saith of the art of grammar, is not a matter of show, but of service. And to the ears of that which St Peter calls "the hidden man of the heart," the plain song always makes the best music.

But, secondly, As ministers must masticate the children's meat, and make it fit for eating, so they are bound to bite—that is, to "rebuke sharply" {a} those that are unsound in their faith, or enormous in their practice; {#Tit 1:13} to gore their very souls with smarting pain, and to sting their consciences to the quick, with the forked arrows of biting reproofs and unquestionable convictions. "Thine arrows are sharp in the hearts of the king's enemies, whereby the people fall under thee." {#Ps 45:5} Ministers must not only whet their teeth against the wicked (as boars do their tusks when provoked), but set their teeth in the sides of those boars that root up the vineyard, and those foxes that destroy the grapes. Thus the ancient prophets pricked and pierced the hearts of their hearers; so did the holy apostles, St Peter for instance. He so handled the matter that they were punctually "pricked at heart" ^{b} ^{#Ac 2:37} they felt the nails wherewith they had crucified Christ sticking fast in their own spirits, and driven home to the head by that "Master of the assembly." ^{#Ec 12:11} Penitence and pain are words of one derivation, and are very near of kin. Hardly will men be made to repent till touched to the quick, till the Preacher do mordaci radere vero, ^{c} deal plainly and roundly with them, stab them to the heart with the menaces of the law, and lay them for dead at Christ's feet, that he may revive them, as the pelican doth her young ones with her blood. It is said of Chrysostom, that he took the same liberty to cry down sin that men did to commit it. ^{d} Of Mr Bradford, that as he did earnestly persuade to a godly life, and sweetly preach Christ crucified, so he did sharply reprove sin, and zealously impugn errors. Of Mr Perkins, that he came so close in his applications, that he was able almost to make his hearers' hearts fall down, and their hairs to stand upright. This was preaching indeed, preaching in the life of it. I know well that most men are sick of a Noli me tangere, and are apt to hate him that reproveth in the gate. As loath they are to be searched as Rachel, when she sat upon the idols; to have their lusts mortified, as David was to have Absalom executed. "Handle him gently, for my sake," &c. Cannot preachers meddle only with toothless truths, say they, as Balak bade Balaam neither curse nor bless at all. But why hath Christ given his ministers teeth, but to bite and be bitter against sin and wickedness? personal invectives, indeed, proceeding from private grudge, he allows not. Spiritus Christi nec mendax, nec mordax. The Spirit of Christ is neither deceitful nor caustic. The rule here is,

“Parcere nominibus, dicere de vitiis.”

“To space by names, is to say concerning the crimes.”

Of Erasmus it is said that he was Mente et dente potens, sharp with discretion. Every minister should be so; and his doctrine should distil as honey, as the property whereof is to purge wounds, but to bite ulcers; ^{e} it causeth pain to exulcerate parts, though of itself sweet and medicinable.

That are even shorn.] The commendations of a set of teeth, whereof before. (1.) Even they must be and well matched; so should ministers be "likeminded, having the same love; being of one accord, and of one mind," {#Php 2:2} serving the Lord with one shoulder, {#Zep 3:9} not shouldering one another, and striving for precedence, but content with a parity, and in giving honour, going one before another. The six branches in the golden candlestick joined all in one, and the cherubims in the temple looked one toward another, which some think signified the agreement and oneness that should be between the ministers of the gospel.

Which came up from the washing.] (2.) Fair and white, washed in the king's bath of Christ's blood, famous and eximious for their extraordinary and exemplary holiness. It is their office to be fullones animarum, to make and keep white the fleeces of their flocks, the people's souls. And therefore themselves had need be as Jerusalem's Nazarites were, #La 4:7, "Purer than snow, whiter than milk," &c.

Whereof every one bears twins.] Gemelliparae. It must be ministers' care to bring many to God, whom they may one day present with, Here am I, and the children whom thou hast given me. Aaron's sons, by generation, are said to be Moses' sons by institution and instruction. {#Nu 3:1} See #Ga 4:19 1Co 4:15. "Happy is the man that hath his quiver full of them."

Ver. 3. Thy lips are like a thread of scarlet.] Which hath two comely properties, small and ruddy. A thin lip is a sign of eloquence; {#Job 12:20} Pitho sits upon it. As, on the other side, a thick lip is an uncircumcised lip, {#Ex 6:12} a polluted lip. {#Isa 6:5} Scarlet or coralline lips are counted a great grace, as white, black, bluish lips are held no small deformity. The Church's lips are her Christian confessions, whether to God or men. To God, when she acknowledgeth his favours (and so covereth his altar with the calves of her lips), or confesseth her sins with all the aggravations, bringing them forth as they did the vessels of the sanctuary, {#Ezr 8:34} by tale and by weight, bewailing and begging pardon for all their transgressions in all their sins, as the words are. {#Le 16:21} To man she confesseth when she makes a wise and bold profession of the truth; not "afraid with any amazement," {#1Pe 3:6} but ready to "resist even unto blood." {#Heb 12:4} The tabernacle was covered over with red (and the scarlet where would fain persuade us that she takes up that colour for the same intent), to note that we must stand to the profession of the truth, even to effusion of blood. This confession of the mouth {#Ro 10:10} is set forth here by lips red as scarlet, because it must be lively, not fady or frigid, but full of faith, and dyed in Christ's blood. It is also described by a thread of scarlet, because, as a thread, it must be drawn out to the full length, and not cut off, so long as life lasteth, for any fear or other by respect whatsoever. Surely, as Augustine said of the feast of Pentecost, Gaudet produci haec solennitas; so may we say of Christian confession, It rejoiceth to be held out to the last breath. And as the silk worm stretcheth forth herself before she spin, and ends her life in her long wrought clue, so it is with the faithful confessor.

And thy speech is comely.] Because grave and gracious, framed in Scripture phrase as much as may be, and therefore comely and delectable. Loquamur verba Scripturae, utamur sermone Spiritus Sancti, &c., said that incomparable man Peter Ramus; Let us speak the very words of Scripture, let us make use of the language of the Holy Ghost, and for ever abominate those logodaedali, learned asses, that profanely disdain at the stately plainness of God's blessed book, and that think to correct the divine wisdom and eloquence with their own infancy and sophistry. It is the Church only that speaks handsomely, because holily, and as the oracles of God. {#1Pe 4:11} She is, as one well saith of Basil, suaviter gravis, et graviter suavis, nihil habens affectatae loquacitatis, sweetly grave, and gravely sweet, neither troublesomely talkative nor sinfully silent; verborum parca, sententiarum dives, as another {a} saith of Livy, few words, but full of matter.

Thy temples are like a piece of a pomegranate.] A pomegranate hath many grains within his case, and a little round circle or crown without upon his head. Now these grains being sweet in taste, and red in colour, are orderly set one by another, and point up, and as it were look up altogether unto the crown; to intimate thus much, say Beda and Haimo, that the children of the Church must grow on still toward the mark, not only when they enjoy the sweet taste of pleasant prosperity, but also when they bear the red colour of bloody persecution; and, consenting in a kind of conformity and perfect peace, they must point up altogether with the finger of faith to Christ, and look up continually with the eye of love to their head, Christ, who, being first crossed, is now come to be crowned with honour and glory. Some do explain this "piece of a pomegranate," when it is cut, to signify the reverend and modest countenance of the Church, as fearing and taking heed lest she should speak or do amiss, or blushing, if she hath failed. Others expound it of the good works of God's people—compared to an "orchard of pomegranates" {#So 4:9} -beautiful and comely, but yet imperfect; like as there is no pomegranate that hath not one rotten grain in it.

{a} Casaub.

Ver. 4. Thy neck is like the tower of David, / i.e. Fair and forcible — erectum et celsum, upright and lofty. It betokeneth the invincible courage and comfortable carriage of the Church, not "giving place to her enemies by subjection, no, not for an hour." {#Ga 2:5} "Many a time have they afflicted me from my youth, may Israel now say, yet never have they prevailed against me," &c. {#Ps 129:1-4} Neither shall the gates of hell ever do it. She shall set her feet in the necks of her enemies; but her neck (as the horse's, #Job 39:19) shall be clothed with thunder, so long as, with outstretched neck, she "looks up unto the hills from whence cometh her help" {#Ps 121:1} -even those everlasting hills {#Ge 49:26} where her David, the Lord Christ, dwells as in a tower, and from thence succours her, as the people said once to David. {#2Sa 18:3} Besides the fresh supply {a} of his free Spirit, {#Php 1:19} fortifying their hearts against the tyranny of sin and terror of hell, he hath furnished for her a most admirable armoury—viz., the sacred Scriptures—with armour that is polished and prepared for most necessary uses. {b} So that the saints are those true Argyraspides, as Alexander's old soldiers were called: for defence they have, besides that privy armour of peace with God {#Php 4:7} and joy in the Holy Ghost, {#Ne 8:13} the breastplate of righteousness, the girdle of truth, the shield of faith, and shoes of patience; and for offence, they have the sword of the Spirit and darts of prayer. {#Eph 6:14-16}

All weapons of mighty men.] Meet for such, and not for mean men; and all to be fetched out of the armoury of the Scriptures by our Saviour's own example. {#Mt 4:4} The Word of God hath a power in it to quail and quell all our spiritual enemies, far better than that wooden dagger, that leaden sword of the Papists—their holy waters, crossings, medals, relics, &c. This the devil knows, and therefore sets his Antichristian instruments on work to take away this armoury from the common people (as the Philistines took away all weapons from the Israelites), and to give this wicked advice, as Bristow {c} did, to get heretics out of their weak and false tower of holy Scriptures into the plain field of councils and fathers, &c.; which if they should do, as we trust they never shall, yet we dare be bold to say, with learned Whitaker, Patres in maximis sunt nostri, in multis varii, in minimis vestri. {d} The Fathers, in most material points, are for us, and not them. As for the Papists, we know how disdainfully they reject the Fathers when they make against them. Bellarmine {e} saith, To Irenaeus, Tertullian, Eusebius, and Luther, I answer, Omnes manifesti haeretici sunt, They are all manifest heretics. When anything in Gregory, or other ancients, pleaseth them not, the gloss upon that saith, Hoc non credo, I do not believe this, or sets Palea chaff, upon it; or Hoc antiquum est, This is in old time, and happened in illo tempore at that time. And Cornelius Mus, on Rom. 3, speaks out the sense of the whole rabble of them, Plus uni Pontifici crederem, quam mille Augustinis; I would sooner believe one Pope than a thousand Augustines. How much better that learned Picus Mirandula {f} (a Papist too), Simplici potius rustico et infanti et aniculae magis quam Pontifici Maximo et mille Episcopis credendum est, si isti contra Evangelium, illi pro Evangelio faciant; We should sooner and rather believe a plain countryman, an infant, or an old wife, than the Pope and a thousand bishops, if the former speak or do according to the Scripture, the latter against it. And what a strong neck had Luther, scorning to stoop to Antichrist's yoke, when he professeth that if the Pope, as Pope, should command him to receive the communion in both kinds, he would but receive in one kind, though he were otherwise very earnest to have it administered in both, according to the Gospel, lest he should seem to receive the mark of the beast!

Ver. 5. Thy two breasts are like two young roes, &c.] From the neck he descendeth to the breasts, and by these descriptions of beauty in all parts (for the rest are to be understood, though not here specified) is signified, that the spirit of regeneration worketh upon the whole man in all manner of virtue. Holiness in the heart, as the candle in the lantern, appears in the body, and every member thereof. Spirit, soul, and body are sanctified throughout, {#1Th 5:23} like as the most holy place, the sanctuary, and the outer court of Solomon's temple, were filled with the cloud. The Church's breasts here are said to be fair, full, and equally matched. Hereby some understand the two testaments, those "breasts of consolation," {#Isa 66:11} fair and full, strutting with "sincere milk," that her children may all suck and be satisfied—viz., batten, grow up, and increase with the increase of God, to a full stature in Christ. {#1Pe 2:2} These breasts are also suitable and equal, as twins. The two testaments are so in sundry respects; for, as the Old Testament hath four sorts of books—viz., legal, historic, wisdom, prophetic, so hath the New in a due proportion. Answerable to the legal are the evangelical; to the historical are the Acts of the Apostles; to the wisdom or dogmatic are the epistles—wherein, as St Paul principally presseth faith, so St Peter hope, and St John charity—and to the prophetic, Apocalyps, ut sic mira sit conformitas, saith Bonaventure, non solum in continentia sensuum, sed in quadriformitate partium, so that there is a wondrous conformity of one testament to another, not only in the similarity of sense, but in the quadriformity also of parts. And this was mystically set forth, saith he, by Ezekiel in his vision of the wheel with four faces, and this wheel within a wheel, implying the Old Testament in the New, and the New Testament in the Old.

Ver. 6. Until the day break, and the shadows flee away,] i.e., Till that last and great day of the Lord dawn, that "day of refreshing," {#Ac 3:19} that day of consolation, as the Syriac hath it, {#Joh 11:24} when "everlasting joy shall be upon the heads of all believers; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away." {a} Till that blessed time, Christ, in answer to his spouse's request, {#So 2:17} promiseth to get him "to the mountains of myrrh"; that is, not to heaven, as some sense it, but to his Church militant, frequently called God's holy mountain, and here "mountains of myrrh, and hills of incense," as in allusion to Mount Moriah, whereon the temple was builded, so especially in reference to the prayers and good works of the saints, those evangelical sacrifices wherewith God is well pleased. Some there are that, comparing this with #So 2:17, make these to be the Church's words; that as there she requested speedy help of Christ in the time of her sorrow, so here in like temptation she fleeth for refuge to the "mount of myrrh, and hill of frankincense," to the holy ordinances where she hopeth for comfort.

{a} Benuchama. {#Isa 35:10}

Ver. 7. Thou art all fair, my love.] Christ, having graciously answered his spouse's petition with a promise of his gracious presence with her and providence over her, proceeds in her commendation. A perfection of parts he here grants her, though not of degrees, a comparative perfection also in regard of the wicked, whose "spot is not the spot of his children." {#De 31:5} He calls her his spouse in the next verse. The Hebrew word {a} imports that, being dressed in all her bride attire, she is all fair, and hath perfection of beauty, {#Jer 2:32} and is all glorious within and without, not having spot, wrinkle, or any such thing, but holy and spotless. {#Eph 5:26,27} Fair he called her before, {#So 4:1} but new,

All fair.] And therefore "the fairest among women," a suitable mate for him who is "fairer than all the children of men." {#Ps 45:2} Not but that she hath, while here, her infirmities and deformities, as the moon hath her blots and blemishes but these are ut naevi in vultu Veneris; these serve as foils to set off her superexcellent beauty, or rather the superabundant grace of Christ, who "seeth no sin in Jacob"; that is, imputeth none but freely accepteth his own work in his people, and sweetly passeth by whatsoever is amiss in them. Perfection is what they breathe after, and that which is already begun in them; they have the firstfruits of the Spirit, and all their strife is to "attain to the resurrection of the dead"; that is, to that perfection of holiness that accompanieth the state of the resurrection. {#Php 3:11}

There is no spot in thee, / i.e., None in mine account none such as the wicked are full of {See Trapp on "De 32:5"} -no leopard spots that cannot be washed away with any water. Faults will escape the best man between his fingers: Nimis angusta res est nusquam errare, In many things we offend all. {#Jas 3:2} But as David saw nothing in lame Mephibosheth but what was lovely, because he saw in him the features of his friend Jonathan; so God, beholding his offending people in the face of his Son, takes no notice of anything amiss in them. They are, as that tree of paradise, {#Ge 3:6} fair to his eye, and pleasant to his palate; or as Absalom, in whom there was no blemish from head to foot, so are they irreprehensible and without blemish before the throne of God. {#Re 14:5}

Ver. 8. Come with me from Lebanon, &c.] Or, Thou shalt come with me—by way of promise. And it is doubled for more certainty; q.d., Nothing shall hinder thee, but thou shalt indeed come with me, and enjoy my continual presence. This she had begged hard for in the former chapters, and this she is now sweetly assured of, with a new largesse of love sealed up in the kindest compellation, "spouse," which signifies the wife married and already joined to her husband. Yea, in the next verse he calleth her both "sister" and "spouse." The nearest affinity is spouse, and the nearest blood sister. Thus Christ is better to his people than their prayers—better than their hopes. Hezekiah asked one life; God gave him two, adding fifteen years to his days. David asked life, and God "gave him life for ever and ever." {#Ps 21:4} "Hitherto ye have asked me nothing," {#Joh 16:24} saith Christ; that is, nothing to what I am ready to give you. He stands disposed to his suitors, as Naaman did toward Gehazi. {#2Ki 5:22,23} Gehazi asked but one talent. Nay, take two, saith Naaman; one is too little, take two. And he pressed him, and heaped them upon him. God deals with his servants as the prophet did with that widow, when he bade her borrow vessels, and the cruse never ceased running till there was no room. {#2Ki 4:1-7} Or as he dealt with the Shunammite in the same chapter, when he bade her ask what she needed, and she found not anything to request at his hands; he sends for her again, and makes her a free promise of that which she most wanted and desired, and tells her that God would give her a son.

From Lebanon, look from the top of Amana.] Or Abanah, as the river running under it was called. {#2Ki 5:12} And Strabo saith, {a} that it was a mountain forcibly possessed by many tyrants. Of Shenir and Hermon, see #De 3:9. These all were haunted with wild beasts, even Lebanon also, {#2Ki 14:9} though otherwise a pleasant and plentiful place. {#De 3:25} Hereby is signified, that the Lord Christ from all parts will call and collect unto himself a people; and although he find them lions and leopards, as here, untameable and untractable, he will soon subdue them to the obedience of the faith, so that "the lion shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard lie down with the kid." {#Isa 11:6} All bloodiness and rapine shall be laid aside, as it was with the wild beasts in Noah's ark. Thus Paul, that ravening wolf of the tribe of Benjamin, {#Ge 49:27} is made to "preach the faith which once he destroyed." {#Ga 1:23} Thus the ancient Britons, our forefathers, though like that demoniac in the Gospel, "fierce above measure," and inhospitable savages, so that the Romans could not come at them, Christo tamen subditi, saith Tertullian; yet they were easily subdued by Christ; and then sensim evanuit feritas indies, exulavit immanitas, corruit crudelitas, {b} saith one, they were suddenly and strangely altered—not civilised only, but sanctified. So was Justin Martyr, Cyprian, Augustine, Vergerius, Latimer, Julius Palmer, that Popish priest of Canterbury, who said mass on one day, and the next day after came into the pulpit and made a long sermon against it, desiring the people to forgive him, for he had betrayed Christ, &c. As long before him, in Wyckliffe's days, and by his means, one that was the Pope's chaplain renounced him, professing that he came out of his order, as out of the devil's nest, &c. And although not a scholar in Oxford would look upon the good Bishops Ridley and Cranmer, prisoners in Bocardo, but generally set against them, yet the whole body of that university gave a glorious testimony under their public seal of Wyckliffe's religious life, profound learning, orthodox opinions, exquisite writings, all furthest from any stain of heresy. {c} See what Christ can do where he pleaseth to come in by his mighty Spirit.

Ver. 9. Thou hast ravished mine heart, &c.] Thou hast caught it, and carried it from me, so that I am least master of it; for Animus est potius ubi amat, quam ubi animat, {a} The heart is the place where it loves, and not where it lives. The Hebrew is, "Thou hast behearted me" (as we say, one is beheaded, behipt, &c.). Thou hast robbed me of my heart, and laid thyself in the room; thy love is fixed in the table of my heart, so the Chaldee expoundeth it. Excellently spake he, {b} who called the Holy Scripture Cor et animam Dei, the heart and soul of God: and another {c} father is bold to say, Cor Pauli, est cor Christi, Christ and Paul had exchanged hearts as it were. For, "we have the mind of Christ," {#1Co 2:16} saith he, -communication of Christ's secrets. And surely when the saints hide Christ's words in their hearts, as his mother Mary did, when they give themselves wholly up to it, as the Macedonians did, so that the word of Christ, "indwells richly in them in all wisdom," {#Col 3:16} and he by his Spirit putteth "his laws into their minds," so that they assent unto them, and "into their hearts," {#Heb 8:10} so that they consent unto them, and have the comfort, feeling, and fruition of them, then is his heart ravished with his own handiwork; then is he so far in love with such a soul, as that, Esther like, she may have anything of the King. "The King is not he that can do anything against you"; {#Jer 38:5} Christ saith seriously so. His heart is become a very lump of love toward his sister, as nearest unto him in consanguinity, his spouse is nearest also in affinity, Sanctior est copula cordis, quam corporis. Christ is endeared to his people in all manner of nearest relations. For whosoever shall do the will of his Father, the same is his brother, and sister, and mother; {#Mt 12:50} "And in every nation he that feareth God, and worketh righteousness, is accepted of him." {#Ac 10:35}

With one of thine eyes.] With that single eye of thine, {#Mt 6:22} that looks on me singly abstracted from all other things, and affects thine heart with pure love to me for myself, more than for my Love Tokens; that eye of faith that looks up to my mercy seat, yea, that pierceth heaven, as St Stephan's bodily eye did, he being "full of the Holy Ghost, looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw Jesus standing on the right hand of God." {#Ac 7:55} Heaven is so high above the earth, that it is a just wonder that we can look up to so admirable a height, and that the very eye is not tired in the way. But faith hath a visive faculty peculiar to itself; it is the evidence of things not seen, {#Heb 11:1} while it "looks not at the things which are seen"—scil., with the eye of sense—"but at the things that are not seen," viz., but by the eye of faith, {#2Co 4:18} whereby Moses "saw him who is invisible." {#Heb 11:27} Let as many as would "behold the King in his beauty," study Moses' optics, get a patriarch's eye, "see Christ's day afar off," as Abraham did, and "set him at their hand," as David. {#Ps 16:11} "So shall the King greatly desire their beauty," yea, set them at his right hand with the queen, his spouse, in gold of Ophir. {#Ps 45:9,11} But then Christ must see their chain of obedience, as well as their eye of faith, even the whole chain of spiritual graces linked one to another. These are the daughters of faith, and good works, the products of them, are the fruits of faith. As chains adorn the neck, so do true virtues a true Christian; these as chains are visible and honourable testimonies of a lively faith, which works by love. These make the true Manlii Torquati {See Trapp on "So 1:10"}

{c} Chrysost.

Ver. 10. How fair is thy love.] Heb., Loves, in the plural, noting not only their multitude, but excellence also, such as do far preponderate all carnal affections. These are said to be inexpressibly fair and lovely (noted by the exclamation and repetition here used, as if words were too weak to utter it), because (1.) It is undissembled—a man may paint fire, but he cannot paint heat; a man may dissemble actions in religion, but he cannot dissemble affections—(2.) It is rare, and in respect of common Christians it may be said, as in #Eph 3:19, to "pass knowledge," since most have little of the life of it in their breasts, less of the light and lustre of it in their lives.

How much better is thy love than wine.] This same she had said of him in #So 1:2. Now he returns it upon her, as is usual among lovers. He had confessed himself ravished with her love. {#So 4:9} Now here he shows why he was so. He found her not lovely only, but loving; he had made her so, and now takes singular delight and complacency in his own work, as once he did in his work of creation. He well perceived that he had not lost his love upon his Church, as David did upon his Absalom, as Paul did upon his Corinthians (of whom he complains, that the more he had loved, the less he was beloved), as Job upon his miserable comforters, whom he compares to the brooks of Tema, that in a moisture swell, in a drought fail. {#Job 6:15-17} But Christ finds no such fickleness or false heartedness in his beloved—he had love for love; and as he had been a sweet friend to her, so was she to him. Her love was better than the best wine (which yet is both costly and comfortable), yea, than all the delights that this life can afford; so much is implied by "wine" here, and so he is pleased to esteem it. Unworthy she of so kind acceptance of that little she can do this way, if she do not her utmost; if she cry not out with her son David, "I will love thee dearly," or entirely, with mine utmost bowels—with the same tenderness of affections as is in mothers towards the fruit of their bodies, so the Hebrew word signifies. {#Ps 18:1} And again, "I love" (so he abruptly expresseth himself by a passionate pang of love), "because the Lord hath heard the voice of my supplications," &c. {#Ps 116:1} He saw, and we may all see, so much cause to love the Lord, as that he must needs be a monster, and not a man, that loves not the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity. It was a miracle that those worthies in Daniel should be in the midst of a fiery furnace, and not burn. It is no less that men should be in the midst of mercies on all hands, and not love Christ. It would be as great a wonder men should fail here, as for a river to run backwards. "I have drawn them by the bands of love, by the cords of a man," {#Ho 11:4} that is, with reasons and motives of love befitting the nature of a man, of a rational creature. But most men, alas! (and those that profess to be the children of the Church too), move like the river Araris, backward or forward, who can tell? {a} This is to give Christ vinegar for wine; this is as lukewarm water to his nice and nauseating stomach. {#Re 3:16} There is a prophecy reported in Telesphorus, that Antichrist shall never overcome Venice, nor Paris, nor London. But we have a more certain word, and let us take heed, lest for our lukewarmness Christ spew us out of his mouth. What hath been the opinion and fear of some not inconsiderable divines, that Antichrist, before his abolition, shall once again overflow the whole face of the west, and suppress the whole Protestant Churches for a punishment of their loss of their first love, I pray Christ to avert.

And the smell of thine ointments, than all spice!] That is, Of thy sweet graces actuated and exercised. {#Ps 89:20 Joh 1:20,27} It was an aggravation of the fall of Saul, that he fell "as though he had not been anointed"; {#2Sa 1:21} so for the saints to fall from their first love or from their own steadfastness. Such a dead fly will cause their once sweet ointments to send forth a stinking savour. {#Ec 10:1} Corruptio optimi est pessima. The best things are the worst things I corrupt.

Ver. 11. Thy lips, O my spouse, drop as an honeycomb.] Heb., Drop the honeycomb. So Christ calls the doctrines and prayers of the Church, her thanksgivings, confessions, conferences, &c., which are things most pleasing to Christ, and do much comfort and edify the faithful. That golden mouthed preacher did so please the people, that it was grown to a proverb, Better the sun shine not, than Chrysostom preach not. Bilney the martyr, a little before he was burned, entreated much on that text, {#Isa 43:2} "Fear not; when thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burnt, neither shall the flame kindle upon thee"; so that some of his friends present took such sweet fruit thereby, saith Mr Foxe, {a} that they caused the whole sentence to be fair written in tables, and some in their books; the comfort whereof in several of them was never taken away from them to their dying day. The same author saith {b} of Bishop Ridley, martyr, that he usually preached every Sunday and holiday, to whose sermons the people resorted, swarming about him like bees, and coveting the sweet juice of his heavenly doctrine. How pleasant and profitable to Latimer was the private conference he had with Bilney! and the like benefit had Ridley by Bradford, Luther by Staupicius, Galeacius by Peter Martyr, Junius by a countryman of his not far from Florence. Οο και απο γλωττης μελιτος γλυκιων ρεεν αυδη. {c}

Honey and milk are under thy tongue.] The language of Canaan is thy proper dialect; for Canaan was a land that flowed with milk and honey—with things both pleasant and profitable. Yea, I doubt not, saith an interpreter, but that under these terms the Holy Ghost meaneth fit food, as well for strong men as for weak ones in the Church. Milk most properly belongs to children; {#ICo 3:2 Heb 5:12,13} and honey to them of more strength, as examples of the word and reason itself teacheth sufficiently, in Jonathan, {#ISa 14:27} and John Baptist. {#Mt 3:4} By these comparisons also may well be understood the good housekeeping that is in Christ's Church. Honey and milk she hath ever at hand. And why hath he put these provisions under her tongue, but that she should look to lip feeding? {#Pr 10:22} Let our words be "always with grace." {#Col 4:6} Mel in ore, verba lactis, this becomes the Church's children. Fel in corde, fraus in factis, is for those brats of fathomless perdition, that have adders' poison under their lips, {#Ps 140:3} that being "in the gall of bitterness and bond of perdition," show themselves by their words and actions to be the sons of the sorceress, the seed of the adulterer and of the whore, whose lips also drop the honeycomb, but her end is bitter as wormwood. {#Pr 5:3,4 Isa 57:3}

And the smell of thy garments is like the smell of Lebanon.] Which was passing pleasant, by reason of the odoriferous and sweet smelling trees that grew there. Now what are these garments but the Church's inward graces, say some; outward behaviour, say others, which is most gracious, amiable, and sweet, as far above all worldly grace as the smell of Lebanon is above the savour of common woods.

Ver. 12. A garden inclosed is my sister, my spouse.] Fair and sweet he had before affirmed her; now, because “Lis est cum forma magna pudicitae.”

The quarrel is with her great form of modesty. Fair women have many that wish them and lie in wait for them. Εἰ μὲν καλὴν, εἰς κοίτην, said he to his friend, dissuading him from marriage. {a} If she be fair, she will lightly be common. Christ therefore here commends her for her purity and chastity, and shows that she was so hedged and defenced by discipline and government, that none could come at her to hazard her virginity, no more than they could enter into a well walled garden. She openeth the gates, that the righteous nation which keepeth the truth may enter in; {#Isa 26:2} those which subscribe with their hands unto the Lord; {#Isa 44:5} that when he shall say, Who is on my side? who? do heartily avouch him for their God; {#De 24:18} that fly to her as a cloud, and flock to her as a flight of doves. {#Isa 60:8} As for the unclean, or anything that defileth, she hath her porters on purpose to keep them out; {#2Ch 23:19 Re 21:27} no dirty dog shall trample on her golden pavement. {#Isa 5:2,35:8-10 62:8 1Co 5:11-13} It was not permitted to a dog to enter into the Acropolis or tower at Athens, for his heat in venery and for his ill favour, saith Plutarch. {b} Goats likewise, saith Varro, come not there, lest they should hurt the olive. Irish air will sooner brook a toad or snake to live therein than the true Church, if she may freely exercise her power, scandalous and heretical persons. Papists teach that the Catholic Church consisteth of good and bad; and that a man may be a true member thereof, though he have no inward virtues. {c} We confess that in all particular congregations there are hypocrites, as appears in the parable of the tares, of the net, &c. But yet we deny that the holy Catholic Church mentioned in the creed hath a mixture of good and bad, since she is the chaste spouse of Jesus Christ, who owneth no wicked man or hypocrite in her; for how should he love such, unless it be with a common, not with a conjugal, love, so as he loved that tame young man, {#Mr 10:21} whom he pitied as a self-deceiver, like as we pity moderate and devout Papists. In Christ's garden, as there is no ground but what is specially good, set apart for the purpose, fit for him to sit and walk in for his recreation—my well beloved hath his orchard in a very fruitful hill, {#Isa 5:1} in a cornucopia country—so it is furnished and filled with the choicest fruits and flowers, plants of renown, and pleasant trees, yielding fruit according to their kind. And though all cannot bear cinnamon and balsam, yet as in Spain there is said to be nihil infructuosum, nihil sterile, nothing barren or unfruitful, so all that "are planted in the house of the Lord, do flourish in the courts of our God; they do still bring forth fruit in old age, they are fat and flourishing"; {#Ps 92:13,14} they are both actnosi and fructuosi, "neither barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ." {#2Pe 1:8} And indeed how can it be otherwise with God's garden, whenas he "himself keeps it, and watereth it every moment; lest any hurt it, he keepeth it night and day." {#Isa 27:3} God fenceth it with his omnipotent arm, keepeth it from the wild boar and other devoratory evils, as Tertullian phraseth it, better than the garden of Eden was kept with the flaming sword. And whereas the Church may seem to lie open to all incursions, this verse shows that it hath a well within it and a wall without it. Yea, himself is a "wall of fire round about Jerusalem," {#Zec 2:5} in allusion to the custom of those Eastern countries where, by reason of the great number of wild beasts, shepherds and travellers guard themselves by making great fires round about their night lodgings to keep off their approach.

A spring shut up, a fountain sealed.] A precious purling current of grace, "a spring of water whose waters fail not," {#Isa 58:11} and whereof "whosoever drinketh shall never thirst" {#Joh 4:14} For which end it is carefully shut up, nay, sealed, that the "stranger meddle not with his joy," and that the envious man stop not up this wellspring with earth, as the Philistines served Isaac; or cast bags of poison into it, as the spiteful Jews did once in this kingdom, and were therefore banished hence for ever. It was wittily said of Polydor Virgil, Regnum Angliae, regnum Dei, the kingdom of England is the kingdom of God. He meant because God seemed to take special care of it, as having walled it about with the ocean, and watered it with the upper and nether springs, like that land which Caleb gave his daughter. Hence it was called Albion, quasi Olbion, the happy country, whose valleys are like Eden, saith our English chronicler, {#d} whose hills are as Lebanon, whose springs are as Pisgah, whose rivers are as Jordan, whose walls are the ocean, and whose defence is the Lord Jehovah. Foreign writers have termed our country "the granary of the western world," "the fortunate island," "the paradise of pleasure, and garden of God." All this may much more fitly be applied to the Catholic Church. If Judea were called the "glorious land" because of God's presence there, {#Da 11:16} and an "island," though part of the continent, because surrounded with God's powerful protection, {#Isa 20:6} and the commonwealth of Israel Θεοκρατεία by Josephus, a God-like polity, what shall we think of that "Jerusalem above, that is the mother of us all"; of those sealed saints; {#Re 7:3,4} this "sealed fountain," sealed up as to keep it filth free, that no camels stir up the mud, nor great he-goats foul it with their feet, {#Eze 34:18} so to denote an excellence—as in #Isa 28:25, hordeum signatum is put for excellent barley—and a propriety, "who hath also sealed us, and given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts," {#2Co 1:22} like as the merchant sets his seal upon his goods, and marks them for his own?

Ver. 13. Thy plants are as an orchard of pomegranates.] By plants are to be understood either particular churches or several saints. These are those shoots or sprouts {a} that spread abroad God's paradise—that the word here used, and nowhere else in Scripture, save #Ec 2:5 Ne 2:8 so called for the curious variety and excellence of all sorts of precious and pleasant trees there growing; some for profit, as pomegranates, which are known to be healthful and preservative, some for pleasure; and these again were either more common and copious in Jewry, as camphires and spikenards— plurals both in the original, for the plenty of them in those parts—or more rare and costly, as those mentioned in the next verse.

Ver. 14. Nard.] Called in #Mr 14:3 Joh 12:3, "spikenard very costly," or rather, as some learned men will have it, nard of Opis, a town near Babylon, where grew the most precious spikenard, and whence it was transported to other places. {a} Of this plant, see Pliny, lib. xii. c. 11; as of cypress or camphire, lib. xii. c. 14; of saffron, lib. xii. c. 15; of calamus, lib. xii. c. 23; of cinnamon and myrrh, lib. xii. c. 23, 19. For pomegranates, {See Trapp on "So 4:3"} for camphire, {See Trapp on "So 1:14"} Saffron is in the Hebrew carcom: Shindler saith it should be read carcos with samech; and so it will exactly agree with κροκος, crocus, the one likely coming of the other. Our English comes of the Arabic zaphran, so called by the yellow colour. Calamus or sweet cane is a precious aromatical reed bought and brought out of far countries, as appeareth by #Jer 6:20 Isa 43:24. Cinnamon was very rare in Galen's time, and hard to be found, except in princes' storehouses. {b} Pliny reports that a pound of cinnamon was worth a thousand denarii, -that is, 150 crowns of our money. As for those trees of frankincense, myrrh, and aloes, &c., Brightman thinks they betoken tall and eminent Christians, as calamus and cinnamon, shrubs of two cubits high or thereabouts, do Christians of a middle stature; and nard and saffron, herbs that scarce lift up themselves above the ground, represent those of a lower rank and lesser degree of holiness; which yet have all of them their place in God's garden, and their several sweetnesses; the Spirit of grace being magnus in magnis, nec parvus in minimis, as Augustine hath it, -Great in God's greater children, and not little in the least. And though there be diversity of gifts, yet are they from one Spirit, as the diverse smells of pleasant fruits and chief spices are from the same influence, and the divers sounds in the organs from the same breath. The Spirit of grace are those two golden pipes, {#Zec 4:12} through the which the two olive branches empty out of themselves the golden oils of all precious graces into the candlestick, the Church. Hence grace is called the "fruit of the Spirit"; {#Ga 5:22} yea, "Spirit"; {#Ga 4:17} and albeit, "as the man is, so is his strength," as they said to Gideon; and God hath his children of all sizes, -babes, young men, old men; {#1Jo 2:13} yet Philadelphia, with her "little strength," may "keep Christ's word, and not deny his name" (while those churches that had more strength are not so commended), and in "that little strength I have set open a door for thee," even the door of heaven, wide enough so that none could shut it. {#Re 3:8} Why, then, should any "despise the day of small things?" God, who "hath begun a good work, his hands shall finish it: and he that hath laid the foundation, shall in due time bring forth the topstone thereof with shouting, crying, Grace, grace unto it." {#Zec 4:7-10} An infant of days shall proceed from degree to degree, till he be like the Ancient of days; and "those that be planted in the house of the Lord, shall once flourish in the courts of our God. They shall still bring forth fruit in old age: they shall be fat and flourishing." {#Ps 92:13,14} The seeds of the cypress tree are so very small, that they can scarce be seen with eyes, et tamen in iis tanta est arbor, tamque procera, {c} and yet in some one of them is potentially so large and so tall a tree. Despair not therefore of further measures, but aspire still to perfection. {#Php 3:12,13 Heb 5:14} The blessing on man in the first creation was, "increase and multiply," in the second, "grow in grace." {#Isa 61:3,11} And remember that growth is not always to be measured by joy, and other accessory graces. These sweet blooms may fall off when fruit comes on, &c.

Ver. 15. A fountain of gardens, a well, &c.] Or, O fountain of the gardens, &c. For they do best in mine opinion that make this to be the Church's speech to Christ, grounded upon his former commendation of her. And it is as if she should say, Callest thou me, Lord, a garden enclosed, a spring shut up, a fountain sealed? True it is I am the garden which thine own right hand hath planted, walled, watered, &c., but for all that I am or have, the entire praise belongs to thee alone. All my plenty of spiritual graces, all my perennity of spiritual comforts, all my pleasance and sweetness, is derived from thee, no otherwise than the streams of Jordan are from Mount Lebanon; "all my springs are in thee," as in their well head. Certam est nos facere quod facimus, sed ille facit, ut faciamus, saith Augustine. True it is that we do what we do; but it is as true that Christ maketh us to do what we do; for "without him we can do nothing"; {#Joh 15:5} "in him is our fruit found": {#Ho 14:8} it is he that "works all our works in us." {#Isa 26:12} Hence it is that the Church is nowhere in all this book described by the beauty of her hands or fingers, because he alone doth all for her. The Church of Rome, that will needs hammer out her own happiness (like the spider climbing up by a thread of her own weaving, and boasting with her in the emblem, Mihi soli debeo I own to myself alone.), shows thereby of what spirit she is. That wretched monk died blasphemously who said, Redde mihi aeternam vitam quam debes, Pay me heaven which thou owest me. And what an arrogant speech was that of Vega, Caelum gratis non accipiam, I will not have heaven of free cost? Haec ego feci, haec ego feci, shows men to be no better than mere faeces, said Luther wittily. This I have done, and that I have done, speaks them dregs, and dogs that shall stand without doors. {#Re 22:15} Hear a child of our Church speaking thus of himself: {a}

“ *Fabricius studuit bene de pietate mereri;
Sed quicquid potuit, gloria, Christe, tua est.* ”

This was matrissare, to be like his mother, whose motto hath ever been, Non nobis Domine, -" Not unto us, Lord, not unto us, but to thy name give the praise." {#Ps 115:1} If I be thy garden, thou art my fountain, from whence, unless I be continually watered, all will be soon withered, and I shall be as one that inhabiteth the parched places in the wilderness, in a salt land, and not inhabited. {#Jer 17:6} In the island of St Thomas (on the back side of Africa), in the midst of it is a hill, and over that a continual cloud, wherewith the whole island is watered, {b} Such is the Lord Christ to his Church, {#Ho 14:5-7} which therefore, as Gideon's fleece, must needs be wet and moist, when all the earth besides is dry and desolate, as the mountains of Gilboa, or as St David's in Wales, which is said to be a place neither pleasant, fertile, nor safe.

A well of living.] Or, A pit of living and life giving waters, {c} Christus et coelum non patiuntur hyperbolen, A man cannot say too much in commendation of Christ and his kingdom; hence the Church here cannot satisfy herself. A fountain she calls him, a well, a stream, such as "makes glad the city of God," even that "pure river of the water of life proceeding out of God's throne." {#Re 22:1 Eze 47:6} Gregory makes this fountain to be the Scriptures, which, he saith, are like both to a fountain and to a pit. Some things in them are plain and open, and may be compared to a spring which runs in an open and eminent place. Other things therein are dark and deep, and like unto a pit, that a man must dive into, and draw out with hard labour.

And streams from Lebanon.] Watering the whole Church (as Jordan did the Holy Land), and tasting no doubt of that sweetness mentioned before; {#So 4:11} even as we see by experience, saith one, that the waters that come out of the hills of some of the islands of Molucca taste of the cinnamon, cloves, &c., that grow there.

Ver. 16. Awake, O north wind; come, thou south, &c.] These winds she supposeth to be asleep, because they blew not. Rupertus calls the winds Mundi scopas, the world's besoms, because God makes use of them to sweep out his large house, and to purge the air. The Spirit of God first purgeth, and then watereth the faithful, whom the Church here calleth her garden, though, indeed it be Christ's, by reason of the nigh conjunction that is between him and her, {#Eph 5:30} so that they both make but one mystical Christ. {#1Co 12:12} Now, we all know that to a complete garden are necessary (1.) That it be well enclosed; (2.) Well planted; (3.) Well watered; (4.) That it be amoena caeli aspiratione perflabilis, well situated for wind and air; (5.) That it be fruitful and profitable. The Church's garden hath every one of these good properties, as appears here; and for the fourth, Christ is all the diverse winds, both cold and hot, moist and dry, binding and opening, north and south, fit for every season. What wind soever blows it blows good to the Church, for Christ speaks to them, as David did to his captains, "Do this young man no hurt; handle him gently for my sake." The sun may not smite him by day, nor the moon by night. {#Ps 121:6} The nipping north of adversity, the cherishing south wind of prosperity, must both make for him.

That the spices thereof may flow out.] That I may be some way serviceable to God and profitable to men. She knew that in God's account to be idle is all one as to be evil, {#Mt 25:26} to be unthankful is to be wicked. {#Lu 6:35} Paulum sepultae distat inertiae, celata virtus, {a} could one poet say; and another,

“ Vile latens virtus: quid enim submersa tenebris

*Proderit, obscuro veluti sub remige puppis,
Vel lyra quae reticet, vel qui non tenditur arcus?*” {b}

Christ had made his Church a garden of sweetest sweets. Her desire is therefore that her fruits being rightly ripened, her graces greatedened and made mature by the benign breath of the Holy Ghost (compared here, as elsewhere, to the several winds), their sweetness may be dispread, and conveyed to the nostrils of such as have "their senses habitually exercised to discern good and evil." {#Heb 5:14} As for others, their heads are so stuffed with the stench of the world, that great muck hill, and themselves so choked up with earth, as Core and his complices were, that they cannot resent or savour the things of the Spirit; but, as vultures, they hunt after carrion carcasses, and as tigers they are enraged with the sweet smell of the Church's spices.

Let my beloved come and eat his pleasant fruits.] For "who plants a vineyard or orchard, and eats not of the fruit thereof?" {#1Co 9:7} The garden is Christ's: the precious graces of his Spirit and all acts of grace, those pleasant fruits are all his. He alone is the true proprietary: "for of him, and through him, and to him are all things." {#Ro 11:36} Of him, as the efficient cause; through him, as the administering cause; and to him as the final cause. Well therefore may it follow, "to whom be glory for ever." Christ counts the fruits that we bear to be ours, because the judgment and resolution of will whereby we bear them is ours. This he doth to encourage us. But because the grace whereby we judge, will, and work aright, comes from Christ, ascribe we all to him, as the Church doth in the former verse; and presenting him with the best fruits, as they did Joseph, {#Ge 43:11} say as David, and after him Justinian, {c} τα σα εκ των σων σοι προσφερομεν, "Of thine own have we given thee." {#1Ch 29:14}

Ver. 1. I am come into my garden.] So ready is the Lord Christ to fulfil the desires of them that fear him. {#Ps 145:19} Sometimes he not only grants their prayer, but fulfils their counsel, {#Ps 20:4} fits his mercy ad cardinero desiderii, as Augustine {a} hath it, lets it be to his, even as they will. Or if he cross them in the very thing they crave, they are sure of a better; their prayers they shall have out either in money or money's worth. Christ, though he be a God that hideth himself, yet he scorns to say unto the seed of Jacob, "Seek ye me in vain"; {#Isa 45:15,19} that is enough for the heathen idols. {#Isa 45:16,18} He is not like Baal, who, pursuing his enemies, could not hear his friends; or as Diana, that being present at Alexander's birth, could not at the same time rescue her Ephesian temple from the fire. He is not like Jupiter, whom the Cretans painted without ears, as not being at leisure to attend small matters; {b} and whom Lucian the atheist feigneth to look down from heaven through certain crevices or chinks at certain times; at which time, if petitioners chance to pray unto him, they may have audience, otherwise not. No, no; "the eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and his ears are always open to their prayers." {#Ps 34:15} Flectitur iratus voce rogante Deus. Basil compares prayer to a chain, the one end whereof is linked to God's ear, and the other to man's tongue. Sozomen saith of Apollonius, that he never asked anything of God in all his life that he obtained not. And another saith of Luther, Iste vir potuit apud Deum quod voluit. That man could do what he would with God; it was but ask and have with him.

I have gathered my myrrh with my spice,] i.e., I have highly accepted thy graces and good works: these are to be gathered only in Christ's garden. Hedge fruits and wild herbs, or rather weeds, are everywhere almost to be had. Moral virtues may be found in a Cato, who was homo virtuti similimus, a man as like virtue as may be, saith Velleius. {c} And he adds, but I am not bound to believe him, Qui nunquam recte fecit, ut facere videretur; sed quia aliter facere non poterat, that Cato never did well that he might seem to do so, but because he could not do otherwise than well. But why then, might a man have asked the historian, did your so highly extolled Cato take up the trade of griping usury? Why did he so shamefully prostitute his wife, so cowardly kill himself? Was it not because he lived in the wild world's waste, and grew not in the Church's garden, hence his fruits were not genuine? His moral virtues are but shining sins, beautiful abominations, a smoother way to hell. Civil honest men are but wolves chained up, tame devils, swine in a fair meadow, &c. Operam praestant, natura fera est, as the civil law saith of those mixed beasts, elephants and camels, they do the work of tame beasts, yet have the nature of wild ones. They are cried up for singularly honest as ever lived by such as are strangers to the power of godliness, and aliens from the commonwealth of Israel; like as in Samaria's famine, a cab of doves' dung was sold at a great rate, and an ass's head at four pound. But Christ, and such as have the mind of Christ, are otherwise minded: they look upon an unregenerate man, though sober, just, chaste, liberal, &c., as a "vile person," and upon all their specious works as "dead works"; whenas contrarily they "honour them that fear the Lord," {#Ps 15:4} and set a high price, as Christ here doth, upon their good parts and practices. Myrrh and spices, or aromatic fruits, are but dark shadows and representations of them.

I have eaten mine honeycomb with mine honey.] As it were crust and crumb together: not rejecting my people's services for the infirmities I find cleaving unto them, but accepting what is good therein, and bearing with the rest, I take all well aworth, and am as much delighted therewith as any man is in eating of honey, whereof he is so greedy that withal he devours the comb too sometimes. Christ feedeth, saith an expositor {d} here, upon all the fruits of his garden; he so much delighteth in it as he eateth not only the honey, as it were the most excellent duties or works of the Church, {#Heb 13:15,16,21} but also the "honeycomb," as it were the baser services and fruits of his Spirit, of least account: that he receiveth of all sorts most sweetly mingled together, both the common and daily fruits of godliness, understood in "milk," and the more rare of greater price, as solemn fasts and feasts, signified by "wine"; both which he drinketh together, that is, accepteth of them all.

Eat, O friends.] That is, O you holy angels (saith the former interpreter), which as my nobles, accompany me, the King of glory, in heaven, and have some communion with me in the gifts I bestow on you. Mr Diodate also thinks the same: but I rather incline to those that by Christ's friends here understand those earthly angels, the saints, {#Joh 15:14 Isa 41:8 Jas 2:23} whom he cheereth up and encourageth to fall to it lustily, and by a sancta crapula, as Luther calls a holy gluttony, to lay on, to feed hard, and to fetch hearty draughts, till they be even drunk with loves, as the Hebrew here hath it, being ravished in the love of God, where they are sure to find it, as in honey pots, the deeper, the sweeter. Such as so eat, are called Christ's friends, by a specialty, and such as so drink, his beloved, as Gregory here well observeth; and they only do thus that hear the Word with delight, turn it in succum et sanguinem, concoct it, incorporate it, as it were, into their souls, and are so deeply affected with it, that like drunken men, they forget and let go all things else, that they may retain and practise it. These are "not drunk with wine, wherein is excess, but filled with the Holy Ghost." {#Eph 5:18}

Ver. 2. I sleep, but my heart waketh.] It was no sound sleep that she took. She did not snort aloud in the cradle of security, as those do whom the devil hath cast into a deep lethargy, but napped and nodded a little, and that by candlelight too, as those wise virgins did; {#Mt 25:5} she slept with open eyes as the lion doth, she slept but half-sleep; the spirit was willing to wake, but the flesh was weak and overweighed it, as it fared with those sleepy disciples. {#Mt 26:41} Fain would this flesh make strange that which the Spirit doth embrace. O Lord, how loath is this loitering sluggard to pass forth into God's path! said Mr Sanders {a} in a letter to his wife, a little before his death, with much more to like purpose. As in the state of nature, men cared not for grace, but thought themselves well enough and wise enough without; so, in the state of grace, they are not so careful as they should. Heaven must be brought to them, they will scarce go seek it. {#1Pe 1:13} And as the seven tribes are justly taxed by Joshua for their negligence and sloth in not seeking speedily to possess the land God had offered them, {#Jos 18:2} so may the most of God's people be justly rebuked for grievous security about the heavenly Canaan. They content themselves with a bare title, or hang in suspense, and strive not to full assurance; they follow Christ, but it is, as the people followed Saul, trembling; they are still troubled with this doubt, or that fear, and all because they are loath to be at the pains of "working out their salvation." {#Php 2:12} Something is left undone, and their conscience tells them so. Either they are lazy and let fall the watch of the Lord, neglecting duty, or else they lose themselves in a wilderness of duties, by resting in them, and by making the means their mediators, or by pleasing themselves (with the Church here) in unlawful liberties, after that they have pleased the Lord in lawful duties. The flesh must be gratified and such a lust fulfilled. A little more sleep, a little more slumber in Jezebel's bed, as Mr Bradford was wont to phrase it. {b} Solomon must have his wine, and yet think to retain his wisdom. {#Ec 2:3} Samson must fetch a nap on Delilah's knees, till God, by his Philistines, send out summons for sleepers, wake them in a fright, cure security by sorrow, as physicians use to cure a lethargy by casting the patient into a burning fever. Cold diseases must have hot and sharp remedies. The Church here found it so. And did not David, when he had sinned away his inward peace and wiped off, as it were, all his comfortables? {#Ps 51}

It is the voice of my beloved that knocketh.] She was not so fast asleep, but that the "hidden man of the heart," as St Peter calls him, {#1Pe 3:4} was awake, and his ears erect and attentive, so that she soon heard the first call or knock of Christ; whose care was to arouse her, that though she slept awhile through infirmity of the flesh, yet she might not "sleep the sleep of death," {#Ps 13:3} die in her sins, as those Jews did. {#Joh 8:21} In the sweating sickness (that reigned for many years together in this kingdom), those that were suffered to sleep (as all in that case were apt to do), died within a few hours. The best office therefore that any one could do them, was to keep them waking, though against their wills. Similiarly our Saviour, solicitous of his Church's welfare, and knowing her present danger, comes calling and clapping at the door of her heart, and sweetly woos admission and entertainment, but misseth it. He knocketh and bounceth by the hammer of his Word and by the hand of his Spirit, {#Re 3:20 2Pe 1:13} and if the Word work not on his people, they shall "hear the rod, and who hath appointed it," {#Mic 6:9} that they may by some means be brought to summon the sobriety of their senses before their own judgments, and seeing their danger, to go forth and shake themselves, as Samson did. {#Jud 16:9,12,14}

Open to me, my sister, my love, &c.] What irresistible rhetoric is here! what passionate and most pithy persuasions! Ipsa suada, credo, si loqui posset, non potuisset εμφοτικωτερως, ubi quot verba tot tela, quae sponsae animum percellant, fodicent, lancinent. She was not so dead asleep, but that she could hear at first and tell every tittle that he said. And this she doth here very finely and to the full, that she may aggravate against herself the foulness of her fact in refusing so sweet an offer, in turning her back upon so blessed and so bleeding an embracement. The terms and titles he here giveth her are expounded before. Undeiled or perfect, he calleth her for her dove-like simplicity, purity, and integrity.

For mine head is filled with dew:] i.e., I have suffered much for thy sake, and waited thy leisure a long while; and must I now go look my lodging? Dost thou thus requite (repulse) thy Lord, O thou foolish woman and unwise? Is this thy kindness to thy friend? Woe unto thee, O Jerusalem, wilt thou not be made clean? when shall it once be. {#Jer 13:27} It is the ingratitude that makes the saint's sins so heinous, which otherwise would be far less than other men's, since his temptations are stronger and his resistance is greater. Oh, when God's grace shall come sueing to us, nay, kneeling to us; when Christ shall come with hat in hand and stand bareheaded, as here, and that in foul weather too, begging acceptance and beseeching us to be reconciled, and we will not, what an inexcusable fault is this!

Ver. 3. I have put off my coat.] Thus the flesh shows itself not only weak but wayward, treacherous, and tyrannical; rebel it doth in the best, and reign it would if it might be suffered. This bramble would feign be playing Rex, King, and doth so at other times, till he be well buffeted, as St Paul served it, {#1Co 9:27} and brought into subjection. But what a silly excuse maketh the Church here for herself? "Trouble me not, for I am in bed," as he said to his friend. {#Lu 11:7} My clothes are off, my feet are washed, and I am composed to a settled rest. But are you so? might Christ have regested. And is that the part and posture of a vigilant Christian? Might it not better have beseemed you to have had your loins girt up, your lamp in your hand, and yourself to have waited for your Lord's return, that when he came and knocked you might have opened unto him immediately? {#Lu 12:35,36} Or, being got to bed, must you needs mend one fault with another? Is it such a pains to start up again and let in such a guest, as comes not to take anything from you, but to enrich you much more than once the ark did Obed Edom? And in this sense some take those words in the former verse, "for mine head is filled with dew," as if Christ came unto her, full of the dew of blessings, to enrich her. Sure it is that Christ is no beggarly or niggardly guest. His "reward is with him"; he brings better commodities than Abraham's servants did to Laban, or the Queen of Sheba to Solomon—even purest gold, whitest raiment, sovereign eye salve, anything, everything, that heart can wish, or need require. {#Re 3:17,19} How unworthily therefore deal they, and how ill do they provide for themselves that either deny or delay to entertain him, when either by the motions of his Spirit, by the words of his mouth, or by the works of his hands, he knocks at the doors of their hearts, and would come in to them! How do they "make void or reject the counsel of God against themselves" with those unhappy lawyers, {#Lu 7:30} being ingrati gratiae Dei, as Ambrose speaketh, and judging themselves unworthy of everlasting life, with those perverse Jews! {#Ac 13:46} Who can say it is otherwise than righteous that Christ should regeest one day upon such ungrateful Gadarenes, "Depart from me ye wicked"; that such as say to him, as Felix did once to Paul, "Go thy way for this time; when I have a convenient season I will call for thee," {#Ac 24:26}; should hear from him, Get you to the gods whom ye have chosen, for I will not help you, &c.; and that those that would not obey this sweet precept, "Open to me," &c., "Come down, Zaccheus, for today I must abide at thy house," {#Lu 19:5} should have no other left to obey but that dreadful "Go ye cursed," &c. The Church here did but lust awhile and linger, when she should have been up and about; and she soon rued it dearly, bewailed it bitterly. Now, what was it that she did? Did she rate Christ for coming at such unseasonable hours? did she answer him currishly, or drive him front her door? No, surely; but only pleads excuse, and pretends inconvenience. She had put off her clothes, washed her feet, &c. A great char she had done; and it would have undone her doubtless to have dressed her again, and set her fair feet on the foul ground. There is none so wise as the sluggard. {#Pr 26:16} He hath got together a great many excuses, which he thinks will go for wisdom; because by them he thinks to sleep in a whole skin. Sin and shifting came into the world together. But what saith the apostle? Surely his counsel is most excellent, and worthy of all acceptation, "See that ye refuse not him that speaketh," {#Heb 12:25} scil., By his blood, Word, sacraments, motions of his Spirit, mercies, &c. "Look to it," as the Greek hath it, "that ye refuse not," παραιτηθησθε, "that ye shift him not off" by frivolous pretences and idle excuses, as those recusant guests did, {#Mt 22:5} as Moses would have done; {#Ex 3:11,14 4:1,10} and Jeremiah. {#Jer 1:6} So again, #Heb 2:3, "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" He saith not, if we reject, renounce, persecute; but if we neglect, let slip, undervalue, &c. If, when God "sends forth his mercy and his truth," {#Ps 57:3} and looks that we should send a lamb to that Lamb of God, the ruler of the land; {#Isa 16:1} we send messages after him, saying, "We will not have this man to rule over us"; {#Lu 19:14} we break his cords, those "cords of love," {#Ho 11:4} and kick against his heart; and instead of serving him, "make him to serve with our sins, and even weary him with our iniquities." {#Isa 43:24} How shall we escape? What hill shall hide us What will ye do in the end thereof?

Ver. 4. My beloved put in his hand by the hole.] Or, He let fall his hand from the hole, {a} where he was lifting at the latch, or seeking to put by the bar; he took it so unkindly to be so ill answered, that he departed in displeasure, and would be no further troublesome. "Sleep on now," quoth he, {as #Mr 14:41} "and take your rest." He that will hear, let him hear, and he that hath a mind to forbear, let him forbear. {#Eze 3:27} but at his own peril; the best that can come of it is repentance, that fair and happy daughter of an ugly and odious mother. {b} Delicata res est Spiritus Dei, saith one, The Spirit of God is a delicate thing; and he that grieves that holy thing whereby he is sealed, by giving way to a spirit of sloth and slumber, may lose his joy of faith, and go mourning to his grave. And although with much ado he may get assurance of pardon, yet his conscience will be still trembling, as David's, {#Ps 51} till God at length speak further peace. Even as the water of the sea after a storm is not presently still, but moves and trembles a good while after the storm is over. Take heed, therefore: Cavebis autem si pavebis Moreover, if you are terrified, you will beware. {#Ro 11:21} But to take the words as they are here translated, "My beloved put in his hand by the hole"; that is, he touched mine earthly heart by his Holy Spirit; and notwithstanding my discourteous dealing with him, left a sweet remembrance of himself behind him. As he would not away, but continued still knocking till he had an answer, so, though the answer pleased him not, yet he called not for his lovetokens back again, he cast her not off, as Ahasuerus did Vashti—no, "he hates putting away"; {#Mal 2:16} but as the sun with his bright beams follows the passenger that hath turned his back upon it, so deals Christ by his backsliding people. {#Jer 3:22} Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life, {#Ps 23:6} saith David; follow me, though I forsake mine own mercies, saith Jonah. {#Jon 2:8} And as the same sunbeams do convey the heat and influence thereof to the earth, thereby calling out the herbs and flowers, and healing those deformities that winter had brought upon it, so doth Christ, that sun of righteousness, arise (to his servants that are benighted with sin and sorrow) "with healing in his wings"; that is, with the gracious influence of his Holy Spirit, conveying the virtues of his blood to their consciences, and causing them, as by a new spring of holy desires and endeavours, to reflourish. {#Php 4:10}

And my bowels were moved for him.] They rumbled, tumultuated, and made a humming noise, as the Hebrew hath it. She means that she had no rest in her spirit, her heart (that chiefest of the bowels, or inwards) did even quake and ache within her; her thoughts afflicted her, she was greatly disquieted, and all "for him," for the unkindness she had offered him, or concerning him, or over him, as those penitentiaries in Zechariah, that "looked upon him whom they had pierced, and" (by an instinct of the spirit of grace poured plentifully upon them) "mourned for him," or over him, till their hearts became a very Hadadrimmon, and fell asunder in their bosoms like drops of water, and all for the indignities and injuries they had done to Christ. This is a sorrow according to God; {c} or, as God would have it, {#1Co 7:9} this is a repentance never to be repented of. {#So 5:10} This is that rainbow which, if God see shining in our hearts, he will remember his holy covenant. The Church here, for instance. That she sorrowed after a godly sort appears by those seven signs set down in #2Co 7:11, and here in this chapter exemplified and evidenced. "I sleep"; "there is indignation." But "my heart waketh"; there is "apology," or clearing herself. "I arose to open"; there is "study," or "carelessness," and diligence. "My soul failed when he spake"; there is her "zeal." "I called on him, I sought him"; there is her "vehement desire." "The watchmen found me; they smote me, they unveiled me"; there is her "self-revenge," while she shrank not from any danger, but bearing patiently the Lord's indignation, because she had sinned against him; she followed him through thick and thin, in the night, among the watch, &c., followed him hot afoot, and would not rest till she had recovered him. Lo, this is the guise of a godly heart; it runs into sin sometimes, but riseth again soon after by repentance; it is at as much unrest, till reconciled to God, as he that hath broke a bone till it be well set again. Whenas a profane Esau can sell his birthright (and with it his title to heaven), and when he hath so done, he can "eat, and drink, and rise up, and go his way," {d} without any the least remorse or regret. {#Ge 25:34} Wicked men grow worse and worse, saith the apostle, and take long strides towards hell, as if they feared it would be full ere they come there. Some seek to out sin one another, like unhappy boys, that strive who shall go furthest in the dirt. Noluit solita peccare, He does not wish to make sin a habit, saith Seneca; Et pudet non esse impudentes, And it is not permitted to be shameless, saith Augustine. Sin hath woaded {e} an impudence in their faces; "their spot is not the spot of God's children." {#De 32:5}

{e} To dye, colour, or stain with woad, sometimes (in dyeing) as a ground for another colour.

Ver. 5. I rose up to open to my beloved.] This was repentance from sin, as that in the former verse was repentance for sin. To repent, and yet to lie still in sin, is to repent with a contradiction, saith Tertullian; Optima et aptissima poenitentia est nova vita, saith Luther. A new life is the best repentance. Up gets the Church, when once soundly sensible of her sin; and, leaving her bed of carnal security, makes after Christ with all her might, with a redoubled diligence, to make some amends for her former negligence. Nunquam sero, si serio. Late though it were ere she started and stirred, yet better late than not at all. We are too much after witted for the most part, post masters, Epimetheuses; we see not our folly (but cry with him, In crastinum seria), till we have smarted for it, and then wish, O mihi praeteritos, &c.

And my hands drop with myrrh.] That is, with the testimonies of his sweetness left behind him on the lock handles, the better to allure her to his love. Philip Beroaldus, {a} and many others, tell us of a very precious unguent Cinnamimum, because made of cinnamon and other sweet odours; whose chief commendation is, that the very smell thereof, if a man carries it about him, draws any woman, though passing by and minding other things, to draw nigh to him. What truth is in this relation I know not; but sure it is, that the smell of the gospel, and those spiritual blessings which the presence of Christ had left behind it, did notably attract and draw after him the Church's affections. Goodness is of itself attractive. The Greeks call it καλον from καλειν, and Αγαθον from αγαν θεειν; because it doth, as it were, invite and call to it, and every man is willing to run after it. {b} Christ puts a secret instinct into his people to do so; like as nature hath put an instinct into the bee, the stork, and other creatures. And as the needle in a sundial that hath been touched with an adamant, though it may be forced this way and that way, yet it rests not till it look toward the north pole; so the soul that hath aliquid Christi something of Christ in it, that hath been once hand fasted to Christ by a lively faith, though for a season it may, by the malice of Satan working with corruption, suffer some decays of her first love, be drawn aside by some lust, and enticed so as to fall from former steadfastness; {#Jas 1:14 2Pe 3:17} yet after a while her thoughts will work, and the sweet remembrance that Christ hath left behind him, will make her to say, "I will go and return to my first husband, for then it was better with me than now." {#Ho 2:7}

Ver. 6. I opened to my beloved, but my beloved had withdrawn himself and was gone.] Or, "He was gone, he was gone"; a passionate complaint for his departure, which lay so much the heavier upon her spirit, because, by her unworthy usage of him, she had foolishly occasioned it. "Fools, because of their transgression, and because of their iniquity, are afflicted." And when affliction comes with a sting in the tail, it is very grievous. But then they "cry unto the Lord in their trouble; he saveth them out of their distress; he sendeth his word and healeth them," {#Ps 107:17-20} he sendeth for them by his Spirit, and brings them back again into his own bosom, "that his banished be not expelled from him," {#2Sa 14:14} though to themselves and others they may for the present seem to be as "water spilled on the ground, that cannot be gathered up again." Those fragrant footsteps and heart attracting stamps of his favour, that sweet smelling myrrh, mentioned in the former verse, had so eneagered and edged her affections, that she could not rest till she had recovered him. She opened unto her beloved, and, presuming upon his patience, was in good hope to have had him at hand; but patientia loesa fit furor; Christ will not always bear with our evil manners, {a} "but hide his face from us, like as we have behaved ourselves evil in our doings." {#Mic 3:4} And whereas spiritual desertions are of three sorts, (1.) Cautional, for preventing of sin, as Paul's seems to be; (2.) Probational, for trial and exercise of grace, as Job's; (3.) Penal, for chastisement of spiritual sloth and sluggishness, as here in the Church; this last is far the heaviest.

My soul failed when he spake.] Or, Because of his speech, that sweet speech of his when he so passionately wooed her. {#So 5:2} Then he could have no audience nor admittance; now, if he would but offer himself he might be sure of both. The word spoken doth not always presently take effect in the hearers, but lies long as the seed under a clod, till Christ the good husbandman come with some temptation, as with his clotting beetle, and give it room to rise. Then as the water casts up her dead after a time, so do their memories cast up that which seemed buried therein, by the help of the Holy Ghost, their remembrancer. {#Joh 14:26 Joh 2:22} The new birth of some, the recovery of others out of their relapses, is like the birth of the elephant, fourteen years after the seed is inserted into the womb. Peter remembered Christ's words and repented. {#Mt 26:75} If we remember not what hath been preached unto us, all is lost. {#ICo 15:2} If we leak, {b} and let slip, actum est de nobis. The deed is by us. {#Heb 2:1} If we keep the word, the word will keep us. {#Pr 6:22}

I sought him.] So soon as recovered out of my swoon, I set to seek him. The Church went not to bed again to sleep as before, neither stays she longer within than to cast her veil or her scarf over her head; without any further dress, abroad she gets to seek him whom her soul loveth. She sought him by serious and set meditation of the word and promises; but after all that toil and travail she took therein she found him not. This is the greatest grief that can befall a good heart in this present world; it is to such little better than hell itself. "Thou didst hide thy face and I was troubled" saith David. {#Ps 30:8} Non frustra praedicant mentes hominum nitere liquido die, coacta nube flaccescere, saith Symmachus. Men's minds are either clear or cloudy, as the weather is; but more truly, good men's minds are as God's countenance is. It is with the godly in desertion, as with vapours drawn up by the sun, which, when the extracting force of the sun leaves them, fall down again to the earth. And as in an eclipse of the sun there is a drooping in the whole frame of nature; so it is with the saints, when Christ withdraws himself. Hell itself is said to be a separation from his presence; the pain of loss there is worse than the pain of sense, the tears of hell are not sufficient to bewail the loss of heaven. Laetemur igitur in Domino, sed caveamus a recidivo. {c}

I called him, but he gave me no answer.] And it was but just, for she had dealt so by him. {#So 5:2} Christ loves to retaliate. Such a proportion many times one may see between sins and punishments, that you may say, such a sin brought forth this affliction, it is so like the father. Howbeit, "his ear is not heavy that he cannot hear; but your iniquities have hid his face from you that he will not hear." {#Isa 59:1,2} And this the saints take, as well they may, for a sore affliction, {#La 3:8} when to all other their miseries, he addeth this, that he will not come at them, that he casteth out their prayers, that he deals by them as the lioness doth by her young ones, which she seems sometimes to leave, till they have almost killed themselves with roaring. This is to make them more careful another time. None look at the sun but when it is in the eclipse; neither prize we, for the most part, God's loving countenance till we have lost it. In this case, the course is to set up a loud cry after him, as Micah did after his gods. {#Jud 18:23} Or rather as the Church here doth after her beloved, in many strong cries and bitter tears, continuing instant in prayer. {#Ro 12:12} The Greek word {d} imports a metaphor from hunting dogs, that do not stop pursuing the game till they have got it. For encouragement, see the happy success the Church here had; and further, take that saying of Brentius, Etiamsi fides tua nec lucem hominibus, nec calorem cordi tuo afferat, tamen non abiecit Christus, modo incrementum ores, i.e., Although thy faith, as smoking flax, yield neither light to others nor heat to thine own heart, yet Christ will not cast thee off, so thou pray for more and follow thy work close till thou have gotten it.

Ver. 7. The watchmen that went about the city, &c.] {See Trapp on "So 3:3"} The ministers that walk the round, that watch for men's souls, {#Heb 13:17 Isa 61:6} that know how to "time a word," {#Isa 51:4} these smote her with the tongue, they buffeted her by just and sharp reproofs for her negligence, they unveiled her for being abroad at that time of night (which she needed not to have been, but for her own slothfulness), they dealt little better with her, than as if she had been some light and lewd woman; and all this they might well do out of zeal to God, and godly jealousy for her soul's good—unless it were that hypocrisy of jealousy exercised by the false apostles over the Galatians; {#Ga 4:17} not pastors, but impostors; not overseers, but by seers, {a} potius grassatores, quam custodes, ἡμονθμῶς tamen sic dicti, cut throats rather than keepers, wicked men taking upon them to be watchmen, church officers in name, but church robbers in deed. Such were those {#Isa 66:5} that hated and cast out the true worshippers, under a pretence of "Let the Lord be glorified." Such a one was Diotrephes, that prating {b} prelate, that villanously entreated God's faithful people. {#3Jo 9,10} And such is that man of sin, that antichrist of Rome, who, for so many hundred years together, hath smitten with the fist of wickedness, hath wounded and drawn blood from Christ's dearest spouse, and despoiled her of her veil; that is, laboured to disprivilege her, and deprive her of that purity and soundness of doctrine that he hath committed unto her, as a means to hold her in the duty of all holy obedience and subjection unto him. {#1Co 11:5,6,10} Of these false friends and deadly enemies the Church here heavily complains, and might well have proceeded against them, as those six martyrs burnt by Harpsfield, Archdeacon of Canterbury, when Queen Mary lay a-dying. One of those six that were then burnt, and those were the last, John Cornford, stirred with a vehement zeal of God when they were excommunicated, pronounced sentence of excommunication against all Papists in these words: In the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by the power of his Holy Spirit, and authority of his holy catholic and apostolic Church, we do give here into the hands of Satan, to be destroyed, the bodies of all those blasphemers and heretics that do maintain any error against his most holy Word, or do condemn his most holy truth for heresy, to the maintenance of any false church or feigned religion; so that by this thy most just judgment, O most mighty God, against thine adversaries, thy true religion may be known, to thy great glory and our comfort, and the edifying of all our nation. Good Lord, so be it. {c}

Ver. 8. I charge you, O daughters of Jerusalem.] Being evil entreated by her enemies, she turns her to her friends, those damsels or daughters of Jerusalem. See #So 2:7 3:5. So the Lord Christ, being tired out with the untractableness of his untoward hearers, turns him to his Father. {#Mt 11:25,26} Kings, as they have their cares and cumpers above other men, so they had of old their friends, by a specialty, as Hushai was David's friend, {#2Sa 15:37} to whom they might ease themselves, and "take sweet counsel." {#Ps 55:14} The servants of God are "princes in all lands"; {#Ps 45:16} and as they have their crosses not a few, so their comforts, in and by the communion of saints. The very opening of their grievances one to another doth many times ease them, as the very opening of a vein cools the blood. Their mutual prayers one with and for another prevail much, if they be fervent, or thorough well wrought, {a} as in this case they likely will be; for as "iron whets iron, so doth the face of a man his friend." {#Pr 27:17} And as ferrum potest quod aurum non potest, iron can do what sometimes gold cannot do—an iron key may open a chest wherein gold is laid up—so a meaner man's prayer may be more effectual sometimes than a better man's for himself. His own key may be rusty, or out of order, and another man's do it better. Hence the Church is so importunate with the daughters of Jerusalem—who were far behind her in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ, as appears by that which follows—to commend her and her misery to Christ, to tell him, wherever they meet with him, "Behold, she whom thou lovest is sick," thy Church—in whom thy love is concentrated, as it were, and gathered to a head—doth even languish with love, and is in ill case. "Tell him," saith she. "What shall ye tell him?" as the Hebrew hath it. An earnest and passionate kind of speech, somewhat like that in Hosea, "Give them, O Lord. What wilt thou give them?" {#Ho 9:14} as if she should say, Would you know what you should tell him even that which followeth, that "I am sick of love." See #So 2:5.

{a} ενεργουμενη. {#Jas 5:16}

Ver. 9. What is thy beloved more than another beloved?] This capital question is here doubled for the more vehemence, as also for the strangeness of the matter, wherein they desire much to be better informed, and the rather because she so straightly chargeth, or rather sweareth them. Something they must needs think was in it more than ordinary, since good people do not use to be hot in a cold matter. But as in the Revelation, whensoever heaven opened, some singular thing ensued; so when the saints be so serious in a business, sure it is of very great concernment. Great matters are carried with great movings: as "for the divisions of Reuben there were great thoughts of heart," {#Jud 5:15,16} great impressions, great searchings. It is a common saying, Admiratio peperit philosophiam, wonderment at the works of God, set men awork to inquire into the natural causes of them. Similarly, these damsels of Jerusalem, friends to the Church, little knowing the love of the spouse to Christ, which passed their knowledge, {#Eph 3:18,19} and yet willing to comprehend with all saints the several dimensions thereof. First, they acknowledge her, amidst all her miseries, to be the "fairest among women." {#So 1:8} As gold is gold, though found in the dirt, or cast into the furnace, and stars have their glory, though we see them sometimes in a puddle, in the bottom of a well, nay, in a stinking ditch. Secondly, They propound to her two most profitable questions: the one concerning his person, whereof we have here a very lively and lofty description, both generally and in his parts. The other concerning the place of his abode, and where he may be had, {#So 6:1} to the which she makes answer, {#So 5:2} and so her faith begins to revive, {#So 5:3} which was the blessed effect of this their gracious communication. Conference in all arts and sciences is a course of incredible profiting. Est aliquid quod ex magno viro vel tacente proficias, the very sight, nay, thought of a good man oft doth good; how much more when he openeth his mouth with wisdom, and in his tongue is the law of kindness! {#Pr 31:26} And surely it is a fine art to be able to pierce a man that is like a vessel full of wine, and to set him a-running. {#Pr 20:5} Elihu would "speak that he might be refreshed." {#Job 32:20} It would be an ease to him, it would be a great benefit to others, as the mother is in pain till the child hath sucked, and the child not at quiet till he hath done so. "Foolish and unlearned questions" about those things whereof we can neither have proof nor profit, we are bound to "avoid," {#2Ti 2:23} knowing that they do "gender strifes," and breed crudities, fill men with wind, and make them question sick. {#1Ti 6:4} But profitable questions are frequently to be propounded with a desire to learn, and resolution to practise, as the Virgin Mary demanded of the angel, {#Lu 1:34} the disciples of our Saviour, {#Joh 16:17,19-24} and he resolved them, which he refused to do for the Jews that asked him the same question, {#Joh 7:35,36} because not with the same mind and desire. So that frolic self-seeker, with his fair offer of following Christ, was rejected, when those that had more honest aims and ends heard, "Come and see." {#Mt 8:19,20 Joh 1:46} These daughters of Jerusalem do not, therefore, ask because they were utterly ignorant of Christ, but (1.) That they might hear the Church what she had to say of him, as they that love Christ love to hear talk of him; his very name is mel in ore, melos in aure, &c.; (2.) That by her discourse they might better their knowledge; for the very angels know not so much of this mystery, but they would know more, and do therefore curiously pry into it. {#1Pe 1:12} Yea, to these very "principalities and powers in heavenly places is made known by the Church the manifold wisdom of God" in contriving man's salvation by Christ; they cannot but see an abundance of curious variety in this divine wisdom, such as is to be seen in the best pictures or textures, as the apostle's word, πολυποικιλος, importeth.

{#Eph 3:10}

Ver. 10. My beloved is white and ruddy, &c.] Love lacks no rhetoric to lay forth the thing beloved in liveliest colours. "White and ruddy!" What can be more laudable and lovely? What can come nearer to a perfect symmetry, to a sound and sure constitution and complexion? Sure it is that these two, being comelily mixed, do make the most beautiful or orient look or colour; see the prophet's description of the Nazarites, #La 4:7. And note, saith an expositor, that the Holy Ghost joineth both these together—the whiteness making the ruddiness more fresh and fair, and the ruddiness discerning the whiteness from paleness of face, or phlegmatic complexion. Sed sunt in his mysteria investiganda, saith another, itaque candor refert divinam Christi naturam, rubor humanam. White and red may signify Christ's Godhead and manhood. God is called the "Ancient of days"; {#Da 7:9} his "head and his hairs are white like wool, as white as snow." {#Re 1:14} Man had his name Adam of the red earth, out of which he was taken. {#Ge 2:7} Christ also, the second Adam, became red with his own blood, whereby he "purchased the Church" {#Ac 20:28} -a bloody spouse she was unto him—and paved for her "a new and lively way into the most holy place"; {#Heb 10:20} upon the battlements whereof he hangs out still (as once that warlike Scythian did) a white flag of grace and mercy to penitent persons, that humble themselves at his feet for favour; but a red flag of justice and severity to those his enemies that will not have him to rule over them—in token whereof his raiment is said to be red, {#Isa 63:1-3} his vesture dipped in blood. {#Re 19:13}

The chiefest among ten thousand.] Heb., Vexillatus prae decem millibus; that is, famous and conspicuous among and above many, as "Saul was higher than the people by the head and shoulders," as the Hachmonite was the chief of David's mighties; {#1Ch 11:11} or, "the standardbearer of ten thousand." Now the goodliest, and with it the ablest, men used to carry the banner or standard. Christ standeth "for an ensign of the people," {#Isa 11:10} and hath ten thousand times ten thousand standing before him, following him wheresoever he goeth, {#Re 7:9,14} and singing, "We will rejoice in thy salvation, and in the name of our God (vexillabimus) we will set up our banner." {#Ps 20:6} The Church's design here is to hold out Christ as altogether matchless and incomparable, that there is none like him in the earth, as God said of Job; {#So 1:8} to teach us to esteem him, as the people did David, more worth than ten thousand others; {#2Sa 18:3} to set him upon the chief chariot, and to give him the sole command of all, as Pharaoh dealt by Joseph. And as the sun, moon, and eleven stars in Joseph's vision did obeisance to him, so let our souls, bodies, all our temporal, natural, moral, and spiritual abilities, be subject and serviceable to Christ, who, if he be the chiefest of ten thousand, ought to have as much love as ten thousand hearts put into one could hold.

Ver. 11. His head is as the most fine gold.] Here she begins her particular praise of his various parts; and here she may seem to speak with the tongues of men and of angels, performing, as lovers used to do, that for him which he had done for her before, {#So 4:1-4, &c.} though all she could say falleth far short of him; and well she might say after all, as Nazianzen sometime said of Basil, 'There wants but his own tongue to commend him with'; Loquimur de Deo non quantum debemus, sed quantum possumus. In speaking of Christ's excellencies, men may speak what they can; they cannot possibly speak so much as they ought, they cannot hyperbolise. If any shall think the Church doth here, he must needs be of those that either know him not, or are not able to judge aright of his worth, as once Cicero {a} said of Crassus and Antony, the orators. Nusquam Origines non ardet, sed nusquam est ardentior, &c., saith Erasmus.

{b} Origen is never but earnest; howbeit he is never more earnest than when he discourseth about Christ; in other things he may seem to excel others, but in this he excelleth himself. The same we may well say of the Church in this place, in setting forth the surpassing purity and perfection of her spouse: Quem manibus propriis finxit cordata Minerva. And first she makes his head to be of the finest and firmest gold—Fess-gold, so the Arabic, from the Hebrew, calleth it; and the land of Fess seemeth to be named of such gold there. David's Michtam, or Golden Psalm, comes from one of the words here used; for in the original thus it is, "His head is most glistening gold, yea, most solid gold"; {c} that is, his deity which dwells in him is most pure and glorious—for "the head of Christ is God" {#1Co 11:3} -and that fulness of grace which is communicated to his human nature is wondrously beautiful, and so sets it forth as black curled locks do a fresh countenance.

“Spectandus nigris oculis, nigroque capillo est.”

Ver. 12. His eyes are as the eyes of doves by the rivers of water, &c.,] i.e., they are full of all innocence, singleness, and chastity; {See Trapp on "So 1:15"} {See Trapp on "So 4:1"} where Christ had attributed the very same to the Church, who is his image and glory, as the woman is of the man, {#1Co 11:7} the very looking glass of his dignity and reflex of his comeliness. His eyes are elsewhere said to be as a "flame of fire," {#Re 1:14 Da 10:6} sharp and terrible, such as pierce into the inward parts, and need no outward light. Here they are as the "eyes of doves," casting an amiable, gracious, joyful, and comfortable look upon his Church. As his "eyes behold, his eyelids try the children of men" {#Ps 11:4} -the one points out his knowledge, the other his critical descant—so he casteth an eye of singular providence and tender affection upon his afflicted people. "I have seen, I have seen," saith he, "the sufferings of my people; I know their sorrows, and am come down to deliver them." {#Ex 3:7,8} His "eye affects his heart," and his heart sets his hand to work for their help and safety. In #Eze 1:8, we read of faces, eyes, wings, hands, &c., all to express the sufficiency of God's providence for all means of help; see #Ps 33:18,19 34:16. The Church is like the land of Canaan, which is said to be "a hind which the Lord careth for: the eyes of the Lord are always upon it." {#De 11:11} He seeth that loveliness in her that he overlooks all, as it were, to look upon her; he beholds that worth in her that the buzzards of the world cannot ken. Therefore the "world knows us not," respects us not, "because it knew not him," {#1Jo 3:1} saw "no such beauty that they should desire him." {#Isa 53:2} Nicostratus in Aelian, himself being a cunning artisan, finding a curious piece of work, and being wondered at by one, and asked by one what pleasure he could take to stand gazing as he did on the picture, answered, Hadst thou mine eyes, thou wouldst not wonder, but rather be ravished, as I am, at the inimitable art of this piece. Similarly, had men those dove like single eyes that Christ and his people have, "washed in milk," that is, in milk white waters, cleansed from the dust of sinful prejudice, and "fitly set," as a precious stone in the foil of a ring, or as the precious filling stones in the holy ephod, {#Ex 25:7} they would "kiss the Son" and admire his spouse; whereas, for want of spiritual eyes, the northern proverb is verified, "unkent, unkist," unknown, unrespected.

Ver. 13. His cheeks are as a bed of spices, / i.e., Comely and pleasant to the sight, sweet also to the smell; areolis similes, aromatum plenis; flourishing with a goodly, comely, fresh, and sweet beard; so declaring his face not only to be gracious and amiable, but also full of gravity, glory, and majesty. There are those who would have all these things to be taken literally about Christ's natural body, and that here is set down his prosopograpohy; but this was written long before Christ was incarnated, and therefore it must needs be meant in a metaphorical and allegorical sense, hard to be explained. Ego quid de singulis statuam fateor me nescire, saith a learned interpreter. Allegorically to handle all these is not in my purpose or power, saith another: since the graces of Christ, as they cannot well be expressed, so, by reason of our weakness, they cannot better be declared. The drift of the Holy Ghost is to paint out unto us the spiritual and heavenly love of his Church to Christ, who doth not and cannot satisfy herself with any words or comparisons of this kind; and, secondly, to stir up our heartiest and liveliest affections to him that hath such a world of worth and wealth in him. As the worth and value of many pieces of silver is in one piece of gold, so all the petty excellencies scattered abroad in the creatures are united in Christ; yea, all the whole volume of perfections which is spread through heaven and earth is epitomised in him. Why do we not then make out to him, and despise all for him with Paul? Why do we not, with David, chide ourselves and others for loving vanity and seeking after leasing? {#Psa 4:2} "How long wilt thou go about, O backsliding daughter," {#Jer 31:22} and fetch a compass? knowest thou not that "the Lord hath created a new thing in the earth? a woman shall compass a man"; {#Isa 7:14} that is, "a virgin shall conceive and bear a son," even the man Christ Jesus, in whom it pleased the Father that there should dwell all fulness. {#Col 1:19} Make we therefore straight paths for our feet; {#Heb 12:13} let us go speedily to Christ, {#Zec 8:21} as bees do to a meadow full of flowers; as merchants do to the Indies, that are full of fruits and spices, that we may return from him full fraught with treasures of truth and grace.

His lips, like lilies, dropping sweet smelling myrrh,] i.e., His word and doctrine is white, sweet, pleasant, far spreading as lilies, sweet to the smell, and yet bitter to the taste as myrrh, no way pleasing to the flesh, which it mortifieth, calling upon men to repent, reform, walk by rule, strive to enter in at the strait gate, resist unto blood, striving against sin. "These things are good and profitable to men," as the apostle speaks in another case, {#Tit 3:8} but they naturally care not to hear about them. Drop not ye, say they; we like not your lilies dropping myrrh and nitre; let those drop or prophesy that preach pleasing things. We like your lilies, but care not for your myrrh; or, if we smell it, we like not to taste of it, because little toothsome, however it may be wholesome. See #Mic 2:6.

Ver. 14. His hands are as gold rings set with the beryl.] Or, Chrysolite; Heb., Tarshish, whence our word turkeis, as it may seem, a precious stone, of colour blue like the sky, or, as others say, green like the sea. Asher was graven upon this stone, who dwelt near the sea. {#Ex 28:20} Some write, that in former times this stone was most usually set in such rings as lovers did use to give one to another, or in marriage rings; because of the power that was thought to be in it to procure and continue love and liking one of them towards another. Whatsoever stone it is, whether a beryl, chrysolite, carbuncle, hyacinth, onyx (for all these ways it is rendered), the Church's meaning is, that all the works of Christ, whether in the state of humiliation or of exaltation—for redemption we have by his abasement, application of it by his advancement—are most rare, dear, precious, and glorious, as numbers of rings filled with all manner of costly stones; they are acceptable and honorable before God and man. And like as great men are known by their rings and rich jewels, so is Christ by his saints, the work of his hands. {#Isa 64:8}

His belly is as bright ivory, overlaid with sapphires.] Heb., His bowels, in the dual—meaning his breast and belly, and there the heart and lights, those seats of the will and affections; here, the liver, stomach, entrails, which serve for nutrition and generation. By all this we may well understand Christ's inward affections outwardly manifested. These are true and sincere, as bright and white "ivory"; they are also hearty and heavenly, as "sapphires"; various also and manifold, sicut sapphiri caeruleae sunt, his bowels yearn towards his afflicted people, his heart is turned within him, his "repentings are kindled together"; {#Ho 11:8} so the poet, “Ingemuit miserans graviter, dextramque tetendit.”—Virg.

Ver. 15. His legs are as pillars of marble.] A sign of Christ's firmness in his kingdom, works, word, and government, saith a learned expositor, and of his strength to trample upon his enemies, as also of his united power to accomplish the course of his threefold office. Pillars both bear up the building and beautify it; neither can anything be more sure and solid than these, if set upon a firm foundation. The pillars here mentioned are said to be "set upon fine gold"—that is, upon a foundation both fine and firm, for gold hardly rusteth or cankereth; whence it was likely that Tithonus and his son Memnon, when they built the city of Susa, in Persia, they joined the stones together with gold, as Cassiodorus writeth: Christ's power is founded upon his divine nature; and this is the rock upon which the Church is built, and whereby it is set in safety from all miseries and molestations, satanic or secular. The gates of hell shall not prevail against her. Christ and the father are one; therefore none shall take her out of his hands. God hath "laid help upon one that is mighty," {#Ps 89:19} even upon Emmanuel, the mighty strong God, as he is called, {#Isa 9:6} "declared to be the Son of God with power according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead," {#Ro 1:4} that your "faith and hope might be in God." {#1Pe 1:21} Trust perfectly therefore to, or hope to the end, {a} "for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus": {#1Pe 1:13} since he is "able to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him." {#Heb 7:25}

His countenance is as Lebanon.] His aspect, his look, or general view—i.e., whatsoever of himself Christ is pleased to manifest and lay open unto us is pleasant and delightful, goodly and glorious, excellent and eximious, choice as the cedars, that are chosen before other trees; and why? {See Trapp on "So 1:17"}

Ver. 16. His mouth is most sweet.] Heb., His palate—that is, his word and promises, which are, as it were, the breath of Christ's mouth—is all sweet. This she had celebrated before, {#So 5:13} but, as not satisfied therewith, she repeats it, and rolls it again as sugar under her tongue. She doubles this commendation, to show that that is the chief lovely thing in Christ, his word; this fruit she had found sweet unto her palate, {#So 2:3} and she spareth not to set it forth, as here, the second time, Mallemus carere, &c. We had rather be without fire, water, bread, sun, air, &c, saith a Dutch divine, than that one sweet sentence of our blessed Saviour, "Come unto me all ye that are weary," &c.

Yea, he is altogether lovely.] Totus totus desiderabilis, wholly amiable, every whit of him to be desired. Moses thought him so, when he preferred the "reproach of Christ," the worst part of him, the heaviest piece of his cross, before "all the treasures in Egypt," that treasure chest of the world. {#Heb 11:26} Those of this world see no such excellence and desirableness in Christ and his ways, {#Ps 22:6,7} nor can do, till soundly shaken; "I will shake all nations, and then the desire of all nations"—that is, Christ—"shall come," {#Hag 2:7} with stirring affections, saying, {as #Isa 26:9} "With my soul have I desired thee in the night; yea, with my spirit within me will I seek thee early." Lo, this is the voice of every true child of the Church; and these "desires of the righteous shall be satisfied." {#Pr 10:24}

This is my beloved, &c., / q.d., You may see I have cause to look after him; neither can you do better than to do likewise: howsoever, when you see him, do my errand to him. {as #So 5:7} And here we have most excellent rhetoric, which, in the beginning of a speech, requires τα ηση, milder affections; in the end of it, τα παθν, stronger passions, that may leave deepest impressions.

Chapter 6

Ver. 1. Whither is thy beloved gone? &c.] All Christ's disciples are ζητητικοι, inquisitive after the "truth that is in Jesus," {#Eph 4:21} and are fellow helpers to it. {#3Jo 8} There is also nescio quid divinum in auscultatione, as one well noteth; that is, a strange and strong energy or forcibleness in hearing, whether publicly or in private conference, Christ and his excellencies displayed and discoursed of. Let but his name, as an ointment, be poured out, and the virgins can do no less than love him. {#So 1:3} These daughters of Jerusalem are, by hearing the Church describing her spouse, and painting him out in lively colours, fired up to a holy contention in godliness, and, might they but know where to have him, they would be at any pains to "partake of the benefit." {#ITi 6:2} They wondered at first why she should make such ado about Christ; but when they conversed a while with her, and had heard her speak with such affection and admiration, they are turned, and will now go seek him with her. God is pleased many times to water the holy meetings and conferences of his people with blessing, beyond expectation or belief. We should frame ourselves to an easy discourse of the "glory of Christ's kingdom, and talk of his power." {#Ps 145:8,9} Our tongues in this argument should be "as the pen of a ready writer," {#Ps 45:1} that we may be able to speak oft to one another, with profit and power in the best thing. {#Mal 3:16} Little do we know what a deal of good may be done hereby. Mr Foxe, speaking of God's little flock in the days of Henry VIII, saith: In such rarity of good books and want of teachers, this one thing I cannot but marvel and muse at, to note in the registers, and consider how the Word of God did multiply so exceedingly among them; for I find that one neighbour, resorting and conferring with another, eftsoons, with a few words of their first or second talk, did win and turn their minds to that wherein they desired to persuade them touching the truth of God's Word and sacraments, &c. {a} In all ages such as were ordained to eternal life "believed"; {#Ac 13:48} after that they had "heard the word of truth they believed, and were sealed." {#Eph 1:13} Contrariwise, reprobates either refuse to hear the Church preaching Christ, {#Joh 8:47} or else they hear and jeer—as Pilate, with his What is truth?—in mere mockery {b} {#Joh 18:38} hear and blaspheme, {#Ac 13:45} or, at best, hear and admire, and that is all. They leave the Word where they found it, for anything they will practise. They think they do a great char to sit out a sermon, and then commend it. But wisdom's children will not only "justify" her, {#Mt 11:19} but also "glorify" her. {#Ac 13:48} They will "seek the Lord and his strength, seek his face evermore"; {#Ps 105:4} seek him in his holy temple; seek him in and with the Church, as here. They know that extra Ecclesiam nulla salus. The Church is "the pillar and ground of truth," {#1Ti 3:15} inasmuch as, by her ministry, the authority, dignity, knowledge, virtue, and use of the truth of the gospel, is preserved in the world, and "held out," {#Php 2:16} as the hand holds forth the torch, or the watchtower the light, and so the haven to the weather beaten mariners.

That we may seek him with thee.] For he is not like to seek long that seeks alone, there being a notable tie to constancy in the communion of saints. Surely, as sincerity is the life of religion, so society is the life of sincerity. The Philippians had no sooner received the gospel, but they were in fellowship, to a day. {#Php 1:5}

{a} Acts and Mon., fol. 750.

{b} Irridentis vox, non interrogantis.

Ver. 2. My beloved is gone down into his garden.] Now she can tell where Christ is, and inform others who before was to seek of him, and sought information from others. Post tenebras lux is the Church's motto. "Though I sit in darkness, the Lord shall give me light"; he will, with the temptation, give the issue—a way to get out of it, as the moon wades out of a cloud, as the seed gets up from under a clod. And see how forward she is to share; her friends shall know all that she can tell them. There is no envy in spiritual things, because they may be divided in solidum. in the whole. One may have as much as another, and all alike. Yea, God's people know that the "manifestation of the Spirit is given them to profit withal," {#1Co 12:7} and that it is not pouring out, but want of pouring out, that dries up the streams of grace, as that of off. {#2Ki 4:6} What is meant by Christ's garden? {See Trapp on "So 4:16"} He is said to go down to it, in allusion to the situation of Jerusalem, which was on a hill, their gardens being below in the fruitful valleys. Christ came down to his Church; he "descended into the lower parts of the earth"; that is, into his mother's womb; {#Eph 4:9 Ps 139:15} yea, he "emptied himself" {a} of all his excellencies, and took upon him the form of a servant, yea, of an evil servant that was to be beaten. Yea, more, he "humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross." {#Php 2:9} Oh, humble Saviour, whither wilt thou descend? Facinus vincire civem Romanum. {b} It was much for the Son of God to be bound, more to be beaten, most of all to be slain. Quid dicam in crucem tolli, &c. Well might the apostle say, "He humbled himself"

To the beds of spices,] i.e., To the particular churches, or to the companies of believers. These beds or rows of renewed souls, Christ, as a good gardener, treadeth out, soweth, planteth, watereth, fenceth, filleth with sundry gifts and graces.

To feed in the gardens, and to gather lilies.] Like as men go to their gardens, either to make merry, as we say, or to gather fruits. So Christ here, either to "eat his pleasant fruits," {#So 4:16} his people's holy performances, better to him than any Ambrosia, and then to "gather his lilies," to transplant them into heaven. Pascitnr Christus, quando suorum virtutes videt, saith one. Lilia decerpit, quando optimum quemque ex hac vita traducit: Christ "feedeth in the gardens," when he beholdeth the virtues of his people. He "gathereth lilies" when he translateth good souls into his kingdom above.

Ver. 3. I am my beloved's, &c.] Or, I am for my beloved, and he is for me; i.e., for me only. He resteth in his love, and I in mine. We will seek no further. And here her faith reviveth who in her late temptation and desertion was in a mist, and could not read her own graces, {a} {See Trapp on "So 2:16"} It reviveth, I say, and fetcheth out Christ, that had hid himself, as that brave woman did. {#Mr 7:24,25}

Ver. 4. Thou art beautiful, O my love, as Tirzah.] A most neat and elegant city, where the kings of Israel kept their courts. A place of pleasure it was, as the very name imports; hence the Greeks translate it here good pleasure, {a} like as the Italians call a city of theirs Placenza. Of the Church's exquisite beauty much hath been said before. Let it ever be remembered that all her beauty is but borrowed. {#Eze 16:14} Uxor fulget radiis mariti, as they say in the civil law. Isaac, when he was to marry Rebecca, sent her jewels aforehand, that, having them, she might be more lovely in his eye. So doth Christ the spirit of faith, and other graces, besides the imputation of his own perfect righteousness, that he may delight in his spouse. And albeit she had so discourteously dealt with him, {as #So 5:3} and thereupon he had stepped aside for a while; yet that she might know that he was still the same, without shadow of change, and that he "hated putting away," {#Mat 2:16} meeting her again, he doth marvellously commend her, that is, his own graces in her, and all is as well as ever between them. Homo agnoscit, Deus ignoscit: it is but acknowledging the debt, and Christ will soon cross the book, and cancel the handwriting. {#Col 2:14} Quem poenitet peccasse, pene est innocens, - Repent, and the amends is made. "Return, ye backsliding children, and I will heal your backslidings." {#Jer 3:22}

Comely as Jerusalem.] That "city of the great king," great among the nations, and "princess among the provinces," {#La 1:1} the glory of the whole earth; Urbium totius Orientis clarissima, saith Pliny, {b} the most famous of all the cities of the East. Orbis totius lumen, as another calls it; yea, an earthly paradise, as Josephus, solique coelique fertilitate omnes civitates superans - a city compact together. {#Ps 122:3} The Church is all this in Christ's esteem, and though the least, yet "not the least among the princes of Judah," as it is said of Bethlehem in a different respect. {#Mic 5:2 Mt 2:6}

Terrible as an army with banners, / i.e., Of invincible faith and spiritual courage: terrible also and full of majesty, either to draw hearts or to daunt them; as Nazianzen saith of Athanasius, that he was magnes et adamas, a lodestone in his sweet gentle drawing nature, and yet an adamant in his resolute stout carriage against those that were evil and erroneous. How terrible were the Israelites, encamped and bannered in the wilderness, unto the Moabites, Canaanites! &c. {#Ex 15:14-16 Ps 48:5,6} And the like may be said of the Hussites in Bohemia, when all Germany were up in arms against them, and worsted by them; of the Britons under the conduct of Germanus, fighting against a mighty army of Pelagian Picts and Saxons in this kingdom, and prevailing only by the three times pronouncing the word Hallelujah. {c} Of the Protestants in France at the siege of Mountalban, where the people of God using daily humiliation, immediately before their sallying forth, sang a psalm, which when the enemy heard, they would so quake and tremble, crying, They come, they come, as though the wrath of God had been rushing out upon them. {d} God is both van and rear in the Church's army. "The Lord will go before you, and the God of Israel will be your reward." {#Isa 52:12} Even he that is "the great, the mighty, and the terrible God"; {#Ne 9:32} so that although, Loricatus incedat Satan, et cataphractus, as Luther hath it, Satan, muster up all his forces, tyrants, heretics, &c., that invade the Church and assault her on all sides, yet they shall find her invincible: Oppugnatur, sed non expugnatur. "Many a time have they afflicted me from my youth, may Israel say, yet they have not prevailed against me." {#Ps 129:1,2} Populus Rom. saepe proelio victus, nunquam bello, saith Florus. The people of Rome lost many battles, but were never overcome in a set war; at the longrun they crushed all their enemies. So the Church. Nay, it may be truly affirmed of her, that she conquereth, even then, when she is conquered; as Christ overcame as well by patience as by power. So that more truly it may be written upon her gates, that is at this day upon the gates of Venice, Intacta manet, Let them remain intact, because it was never yet subdued by any enemy.

Ver. 5. Turn away thine eyes from me.] Or, Turn thine eyes right upon me; so {#So 6:13} he calls, "Return, return, O Shulamite"; and then the sense is, Look up unto me by faith. "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth." {#Isa 45:22 31:1,42:18} But to keep to our translation. Christ had before confessed himself ravished with one of her eyes; and here he saith the same in effect. Stupenda sane dignatio, a wonderful condescension. We use to say, Majesty and love cannot meet or cohabit: {a} because love is the abasing of the soul to all services. But it is otherwise in Christ: majesty and love, even unto ravishment, meet in his holy heart. If the Church be sick of love toward him, he would she should know that he is overcome with love towards her, and that there is no love lost between them.

Thy hair is as a flock of goats, &c.] Grazing upon, and gazing from Gilead—q.d., I like thee as well as ever I did, thy late relapse notwithstanding; for I find thee more humble, watchful, thankful for a Saviour, merciful to others, desirous of the state of perfection, &c. And as a limb once broke, and well set again, knits and grows stronger there than in any other place; so by thy late falling in some sort from me, I find thee more firmly fastened unto me. Thus God changeth, saith one, our grievously wounds into beauty spots, and maketh the horrible sting of Satan to be a pearl pin to pin upon us the long white robe of Christ, and to dress us with the garment of gladness. {#So 4:1-6} And observe here an addition of some other parts described, and a more full description of some of the former: to show that his love was no whit diminished, but rather increased. Something it was surely that made Mr Foxe, the martyrologue say, that he got by his infirmities, and lost by his graces.

Ver. 8. There are threescore queens, and fourscore, &c.] Or as some read it, hypothetically, Be there sixty queens, and eighty concubines, which were secondary wives—usurary, the lawyers call them, that had right to the bed, but no rule in the family—and virgins, or waiting gentle women without number; although there be of other sorts never so many, yet "My dove," albeit but one, is an "only one," and beloved accordingly. {see #Jer 31:20} For the allegory here—some go one way to work, some another. Let there be never so great a number, saith one, of peoples and nations, of churches and assemblies, which challenge my name and love, and perhaps by their outward prosperities may seem to plead much interest in me, and much worth in themselves, yet "My dove," &c. Others think, that by "queens" are meant true believers; by "concubines," hypocrites and formal professors; and by "virgins," profane persons, that have not yet so much as a form of godliness. The first are the fewest, and the last are the greatest number. Lastly, There are those who make "queens," "concubines," and "virgins," to signify three different sorts or degrees of true Christians in the Catholic Church, which yet is but one. Some have made but small progress in piety; these are compared to "virgins," and are the far greater in number: Some are got further onward, and are of better proof; these are like "concubines," and do exceed the "queens" in number; quo enim perfectiores, eo pauciores. Some again are eminent and eximious Christians; these are queens, and have more close communion with Christ: and to this highest degree we must all aspire and endeavour, striving to perfection. Nature, art, grace, do all proceed from less perfect to more perfect. We read in Scripture of a Christian's conception, {#Ga 4:19} birth, {#1Pe 1:23 2:2} childhood, {#1Co 3:1,2 1Jo 2:13} youth, or well grown age, {#Eph 4:13} old age. {#Ac 21:16} Mnason was a gray-headed experienced Christian, a father. {#1Jo 2:13} All must exact of themselves a daily growth, and be still bringing forth fruit in their old age, {#Ps 92:13,14} so shall the king take pleasure still in their beauty; so shall he one day set them upon his right hand, as place of dignity and safety, in gold of Ophir. {#Ps 45:9,11}

Ver. 9. My dove, mine undefiled is but one.] For though all the afore named may be called spouses, yet they all make but one. "He that hath the bride (not brides) is the bridegroom," saith the Baptist. And this is "a great mystery," saith Paul, "but I speak concerning Christ and the Church," not churches. {#Eph 5:32} Una ecclesia, quia ex una fide, per unum Spiritum nascitur; saith Epiphanius. "Beware therefore of the concision" {#Php 3:2} -that is, of those that make divisions, and cut the Church in minutula frustula, as Augustine saith of the Donatists, into little pieces, and sucking congregations, making separations. {a} Peter himself was blamed for this, {#Ga 2:11,12} and others branded for profligate professors. "These are they that separate themselves, sensual, having not the Spirit." {#Jude 19} The primitive Christians were famous for their unity, animo animaque inter se miscebantur; saith Tertullian. The very heathens acknowledged that no people in the world did hold together, and love one another, so as Christians did. As the curtains of the tabernacles were joined by loops, so were they by love; and as the stones of the temple were so close cemented together, that they seemed to be all but one stone, so was it among them. Neither need we wonder, since Christ's dove is but one; neither is there any such oneness or entireness anywhere as among the saints. Other societies are but as the clay in the toes of Nebuchadnezzar's image: they may cleave together, but not incorporated one into another.

She is the only one of her mother, / i.e., Of the world, say some; of the flesh, say others: but they say best that expound it of Jerusalem, "that is above, the mother of us all." {#Ga 4:26} Epiphanius makes faith and religion the mother of the Church.

The daughters saw her, and blessed her, / i.e., Called and counted her blessed above all other people. "Happy art thou, O Israel! Who is like unto thee, O people saved by the Lord?" &c. {#De 33:29} And yet at that time they seemed to be nothing so happy as the Moabites, Edomites, &c., as being in a very unsettled condition in the wilderness. So David, What one nation in the earth is like thy people, like Israel? {#2Sa 7:23} Oh "blessed is the people whose God is the Lord." {#Ps 144:15} Est Ecclesiae Scoticae privilegium rarum prae multis in quo eius nomen apud caeteros fuit celebre, &c. {b} It is the singular privilege of the Church of Scotland, and they are deservedly famous for it, that for this fourscore years and upwards they have kept a unity, together with purity of doctrine, without heresy, or so much as schism. This "the daughters"—other Christian reformed churches—"have seen and blessed her; yea, the queens and concubines, and they praised her."

Ver. 11. I went down into the garden of nuts.] Or, Nutmegs. Tremellius and those that follow him render it the well dressed, or pruned gardens. These are the particular churches and various saints, Christ's mystical and spiritual garden, that need much pruning and trimming. Of all possessions, Nulla maiorem operam requirit, saith Cato, none requireth so much pains to be taken with it as a garden or orchard. Grain comes up and grows alone, ripeneth and cometh to perfection, the husbandmen sleeping and waking, "he knows not how." {#Mr 4:27} But gardens must be dressed, trimmed, pruned, pared almost every day, or else all will be out of order. Christ, therefore, as a careful gardener, ἀρει, καθαιρει, Putat, purgat, amputat, weeds, lops, prunes his garden. {#Joh 15:2} Be careful, therefore, saith a worthy divine: Christ walks in his garden, spies how many raw, unripe, undigested prayers, &c., hang on such a branch; what gum of pride, what leaves or luxuriant sprigs and rotten boughs there are, and with his pruning knife cuts and slashes where he sees things amiss, &c. Thus he. Neither may we think that Christ doth this or any of this in ill-will, but out of singular love and faithfulness to our souls, which else would soon be woefully overgrown with the weeds of wickedness, as a neglected garden. The wicked God never meddleth with, as I may so say, till he come with his axe to hew them down to the fire; because he finds them incorrigible. "Let him alone," {#Ho 4:17} saith God concerning Ephraim; and "why should ye be smitten any more, since ye revolt more and more?" {#Isa 1:5} They have a great deal of freedom for present, but the end is utter extirpation. Non surget hic afflictio {#Ne 1:9} they shall totally and finally be consumed at once.

To see the fruits of the valley.] Green valley plants—that is, the humble spirits which "tremble at God's word," and present him with the "first ripe fruits, which his soul desireth." {#Mic 7:1}

And to see whether the vine flourished.] These vines and pomegranates are the faithful, who are compared to these trees, for the plenty and sweetness of their fruits. Christ came to see whether the former were flowering, and the latter budding; to see if there were any hopes of ripe fruit in due time; for he liketh not those outlandish plants, that every year bud and blossom, but never bring any fruit to its perfection. No. When he hath done all that can be done for his vineyard, he looks for fruit. {#Isa 5:2 Mt 21:34} "For who," saith he, "planteth a vineyard, and eateth not of the fruit thereof?" {#1Co 9:7} Danda igitur est opera ut huius agricolae votis respondeamus. Answer Christ's expectation, or else he will lay down his basket, and take up his axe. {#Lu 13:7}

Ver. 12. Or ever I was aware, my soul, &c.] Heb., I knew not. So Christ speaketh after the manner of men. And it is as if he should say, I could not conceive that my people were in so good a forwardness, as indeed I found them; for they have over and above answered mine expectation, being "full of goodness," as those believing Romans, {#Ro 15:14} "filled with all knowledge," and always abounding in the work of the Lord; from whom therefore they shall be sure to receive "a full reward." {#2Jo 8} Or thus, "I know not," that is, I perceived not that the vines flourished, the pomegranates budded, that all was ripe and ready; therefore I withdrew myself for a season, O my spouse; and therein I dealt with thee no otherwise, than as good gardeners and vinedressers do, who coming (perhaps before the time of fruit) to look for fruit, and finding none, depart for present, till a more convenient season. But that thou mayest know my dear love and tender care of thy comfort, behold my haste to call thee to thy former feelings again. For dicto citius, I say more quickly, "my soul set me on the chariots of Amminadib," who may seem to be some famous chariot driver of Solomon's, that could outdrive all the rest. There is another sense given of these words, and perhaps a better. For by some these are thought to be the words of the Church confessing her ignorance. I knew not, Lord, saith she, that thou wast gone down into the garden to do those things. I thought rather that thou hadst departed in great anger against me for my negligence; and therefore I sought thee carefully, I made out after thee with all my might; my soul made me like the chariots of Amminadib; Amor addidit alas, I drove furiously till I had found thee. I was like unto those two women in Zechariah, that "had wings, and wind in their wings." {#Zec 5:9} This was well; that missing her spouse, she followed so hard after him. "My soul cleaveth after thee," saith David, {#Ps 63:8} thereby showing his love, constance, and humility. But then that was not so well; that she so far mistook Christ, as to think that he went away from her in deep displeasure, and kept away from her, as loathing her company. Such hard conceits of Christ, and heavy conceits we are apt to have of ourselves, as if he had forsaken us, because we cannot presently find him, whenas he is only gone down in his garden to prune it, or to see how things thrive there, as if he had cast off the care of us; because, finding us too light, he "make us heavy (as there is need) with manifold temptations." {#1Pe 1:6} We are therefore "judged of the Lord, that we may not be condemned with the world": {#1Co 11:32} He leaves us on the other side the stile (as fathers sometimes do their children), and then helps us over when we cry. To say God hath cast us off, because he hath hid his face, is a fallacy fetched out of the devil's topics. Non est argumentum aversi Dei quemadmodum diabolus interpretatur, sed potius paternae ipsius benevolentiae, saith learned Lavater. {a} It is not an argument of God's wrath and displeasure, as the devil would make it, but rather of his fatherly love and affection; he hides his love, as Joseph did, out of increasement of love. And yet how apt are we to say in this case, with those malcontents in Malachi, In quo dilexisti nos? Wherein hast thou loved us? and with those Israelites in the wilderness, "Is God among us?" as if that could not be, and they athirst. {#Ex 17:7} "O my Lord," said Gideon, "If the Lord be with us, why then is all this evil befallen us?" {#Jud 6:12} And, "Lord God," said Abraham, when he had received many gracious promises, "what wilt thou give me, seeing I go childless?" {#Ge 15:1,2} We see then how ready the best of us are to cast the helve after the hatchet, as they say; and, like little children, because we may not have what we would, sullenly to say, God loves us not, and we will not have what he thinks good to give unto us. "My soul refused comfort," saith he in #Ps 77:2; and "I said, My hope and my strength is perished from the Lord: remembering mine afflictions and my misery, the wormwood and the gall." {#La 3:18,19} This our folly and fault we must confess to Christ, as the Church here doth; and beseech him, by his Spirit, to teach us better things, that we may not mistake the cause of our calamities, and make them heavier than God meant them, by our frowardness and impatience. Pondus ipsa iactatione incommodius sit, saith Seneca.

{a} Lavat. in Prov. iii.

Ver. 13. Return, return, O Shulamite.] The Church is so called from her peace and perfection with God in Christ. Brightman gathers from this word, that the Church of the Jews in special is meant (the Church in general being usually before signified by the daughters of Jerusalem), and applies it to the recalling of the Jews, according to #Ro 11:25, &c., which is yet to be fulfilled. Solomon's wife, saith another, was after his name called the Shulamite, according to #Isa 4:1. And as Christ in this book is named Solomon, so the Church is called Shulamite, to show the communion that she hath with him; and therefore also the forming of the Hebrew word is rather passive than active. That which she is again and again called upon to do, is to return. It seems she had so posted apace after Christ (as on swift chariots, #So 6:12), that she had gone quite beyond him.

He therefore, as it were by houting and shouting to her, calls her back. How easily we overshoot and run into extremes, may be seen in Peter, {#Joh 13:9} and the Galatians. {#Ga 4:9,10} It is best to hold the golden mean. Howbeit, as in falling forward, is nothing so much danger as backward; so he that is earnest in good, though he may overdo, and carry some things indiscreetly, yet is he far better than a lusk or apostate, especially if he afterwards return and discern, and hearken to better counsel. But some are so set upon it, that, like a man that is running a race, though you give them never so good advice, they will not stay to hear it. Of these the proverb is verified, "He that hasteth with his feet, sinneth" {#Pr 19:2} {See Trapp on "Pr 19:2"}

That we may look upon thee.] Or, Contemplate thee with complacency and delight. This is the speech of the bridegroom and his friends. The Church, though in her fright and grief for want of her beloved, though unveiled and evil entreated by the watchmen, &c., and so not so slightly as at some other times, yet wanted not that beauty that made her desirable; like as some faces appear most oriently beautiful when they are most instamped with sorrow, and as the sky is most clear after a storm.

What will ye see in the Shulamite? as it were the company of two armies.] Ready to join battle, or maintaining civil war within her. For in the Christian conflict, the very same faculties are opposed; because in every faculty "the flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh, and these are contrary the one to the other." {#Ga 5:17} These maintain civil broils within the Shulamite (as the two babes did in Rebecca's womb), so that she cannot do what she would. And this the apostle spake by woeful experience, as appears from #Ro 6:15,21. Something lay at the fountain head, and stopped it. There is a continual contest with spiritual wickednesses about heavenly privileges {a} {#Eph 6:12} Put fire and water together, there is no quiet till one of them get the victory. So in sicknesses. Let a man have a strong disease and a strong body, he shall never have any rest as long as they both continue in their strength. When Christ was born, all Jerusalem was troubled. When Paul came to Ephesus, "there arose no small stir about that way"; {#Ac 19:23} so when grace is wrought once, there is somewhat to do within, though till then all was jolly, quiet. When cold saltpetre and hot brimstone meet they make a great noise; so do the flesh and spirit in their skirmishes and encounters. Now these two duellers meet and fight in every faculty of the soul; as hot and cold do in lukewarm water; as light and darkness meet in the morning light; or as wine and water in a cup mixed with both. In the wicked one faculty may, and sometimes doth, oppose another; as sensual appetite may resist natural reason, &c. But in such as are sanctified, the understanding is against the understanding, the will against the will, &c., as the sick patient both wills and nills those physical slobber sauces. But Satan is not so "divided against himself." {#Lu 11:18} No more is the flesh. It is in the Shulamite only, and in every part of her, that this conflict is found which maketh her cry out with Rebecca sometimes, "If it be so, why am I thus?" and with Paul, "Wretched creature that I am!" &c.

Chapter 7

Ver. 1. How beautiful are thy feet with shoes, &c.] Before he had described her from head to foot; now back again, from foot to head, taking in ten parts of his spouse, concerning whom—such was his love—he thought he could never say sufficient. He begins at the lowest and most abject part, the feet, not without admiration of them. O quam pulchri sunt pedes tui! "Oh, how beautiful are thy feet with shoes!" A temporal calling honours our profession; so some understand it. Others make the meaning to be, the Church's being "shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace"; {#Eph 6:15} ready pressed to "run with patience the race that is set before her." {#Heb 12:1} To run is active; to run with patience is passive. This prince's daughter (Atalanta-like) can only skill of this "running with patience," as being shod with Tachash skin, {#Eze 16:10} bestowed upon her by her spouse, as a love token, that is, with sound affections and holy actions. Whereas wicked men are carried captive by the devil, as the Egyptians once were by the Assyrians, {#Isa 20:4} "naked and barefoot," and so "perish from the way." {#Ps 2:12}

O prince's daughter.] Thou that hast him for thy father "in whose hands are all the corners of the earth," and is supreme King of the universe. This is such a privilege and preferment as St John stands amazed at. {#1Jo 3:1} "Behold," saith he, qualem et quantum, "what manner of love the Father hath showed unto us, that we should be called the sons" and daughters "of God Almighty." {#2Co 6:18} All privileges are summed up in this; and in #Joh 1:12 it is called a power or prerogative {a} royal; it is to be of royal blood of heaven; it is to be an heir of God and co-heir with Christ. Kings can make their firstborn only heirs, as Jehoshaphat. {#2Ch 21:3} But all God's children are firstborn, and so "higher than the kings of the earth." {#Ps 89:27}

The joints of thy thighs are like jewels, &c.,] i.e., Thy loins are compassed with the belt of truth; for so some render it, The compassing of thy thighs or loins. And here, if ever, ungirt, unblest. "Gird up therefore the loins of your minds"; {#1Pe 1:13} gird yourselves and serve God. {#Lu 17:8} Girding implies readiness, nimbleness, handiness, handsomeness. A loose, discinct, and diffluent mind is unfit for holy actions.

Ver. 2. Thy navel is like a round goblet, &c.] There are those who expound this text as the two sacraments. The navel is baptism, that nourisheth newborn babes in the womb of the Church. See hence the use of it, even to infants, who can receive nourishment by the navel, though they can neither take nor chew nor suck meat with hand or mouth. Note this against Anabaptists, saith Mr Cotton upon these words, this navel never wants liquor; there is a continual matter of instruction and comfort to be fetched from baptism against all temptations. A Christian, saith Chrysostom, should never step out of doors, or lie down in his bed, or go into his closet, but he should remember that word, Abrenuncio, I forsake the devil and all his works, &c. Luther tells of a certain holy virgin, that used to quench the devil's fiery darts with the water of baptism: for as often as she was tempted to do anything not beseeming her profession, she would resist the devil, steadfast in the faith, and stop his mouth with this short but full answer, Christiana sum, I am a Christian; I have been "baptized into the death of Christ"; I have also "put on Christ by baptism"; I am a votary, the vows of God are upon me, &c. But what a horrible shame is that to the Papists, and what a sore stumblingblock must it needs be to the poor Jews that live among them, that in Rome a Jewish maid may not be admitted into the stews of whoredom, unless she will be first baptized? This is related and bewailed by Espencaeus, {a} a moderate Papist.

Thy belly is like an heap of wheat, set about with lilies.] Some understand hereby that other sacrament of the Lord's Supper, called a "heap of wheat," for its store of excellent nourishment; and said to be "set about with lilies"—that is, with Christians, white and of holy conversation. Basil calls such, stars of the world and flowers of the churches {b} Chrysostom calls them earthly angels, and saith that they were puriore coelo, purer than the heaven in their common conversation, but especially when they came to the Lord's table—that dreadful {c} table, as he calleth it—whereunto all must come with the best preparation they can make, wash and be clean—wash their hands in innocence before they compass God's altar, wash their "hearts," {#Jer 4:14} their "feet." {#Joh 13:10} "He that is washed (sc., for the outside) needeth not save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit"; an allusion to those that, having bathed their bodies, foul their feet by going out of the bath, and so are fain to wash them again. The inwards and the feet in a sacrifice were to be washed above the rest, because the entrails contain the excrements, and the legs tread in the dirt. The soul is apt to gather soil by meddling with earthly things, though lawful; how much more to be defiled with the soot of sin, as if she had "lain among the pots." All Christ's Nazarites, his votaries, must come to his feast "purer than snow, whiter than milk," &c., {#La 4:7} since at this sacrament they do renew the nuptials of Christ, and take a corporal oath to cleave close to him with full purpose of heart all the days of their lives. As for those that presume to come unpreparedly, that want their wedding garment, they are no otherwise bidden to the feast of the King than Haman was to Queen Esther's. Sin brought to the Sacrament petitions against a man, as Esther did against Haman at the banquet of wine; {#Es 7:2,6} pick out that time, and he shall find God no less angry than Haman did Ahasuerus. For "this is that which the Lord hath said, I will be sanctified in all them that draw near unto me." Of communicants, God seems to say, as Solomon did of Adonijah, "If he show himself a worthy man, there shall not one hair of him fall to the earth: but if wickedness be found in him, he shall die." {#IKi 1:52}

Ver. 3. Thy two breasts are like two young roes.] Fresh and lusty, even and equal. Understand the two Testaments; hereunto resembled for their perfect agreement, amiable proportion, and swift running all the world over in a short time. Eusebius saith, that the doctrine of both Testaments was presently after our Saviour's resurrection carried abroad into all countries, as it were, upon eagle's wings. The like may be said of Luther and his colleagues in Germany at the first Reformation there, which, as lightning, was soon seen from one end of the heaven to the other. "So mightily grew the Word of God and prevailed." {#Ac 19:20} {See Trapp on "So 4:5"}

Ver. 4. Thy neck is as a tower of ivory.] Most smooth, white, and upright. Some do hereby understand magistrates, that support the State, as the neck doth the head. "I bear up the pillars of it," saith David. Others will have the ministers meant, who, being aloft in the Church, are to the same instead of watch towers or towers of defence. And especially then when they are in their pulpits—called towers in the Hebrew {#Ne 8:4} -reading and expounding God's law unto his people.

Thine eyes like the fishpools in Heshbon.] Glazed with tears of compunction and compassion— Nam faciles motus mens generosa capit -and well cleared to look into her own heart and life. Tears instead of gems were the ornaments of David's bed, saith Chrysostom. And surely that sweet singer never sang more melodiously than when his heart was broken most penitentially. {#Ps 6} {#Ps 51} Thus birds in the spring sing most sweetly when it rains most sadly; and tears of true contrition are pillulae lucis, pills made on purpose to clear the eyesight. When John wept, the sealed book was set open to him; Lilium lachryma sun seritur. Light is sown for the righteous.

Thy nose is as the tower of Lebanon, &c.] Si verborum faciem consideremus, quid poterit magis dici ridiculum? saith Titleman upon the words: If we look upon the outside only of this text, what may seem to have been spoken more ridiculous? Is it so great a commendation to have a nose like a tower? That which we must herehence learn is, that seeing Christ is now risen again, and ascended up into heaven, we ought to bear our noses aloft, as it were, savouring things of the Spirit of Christ, discerning things that are excellent, and by a spiritual sagacity aspiring to eternity.

That looketh toward Damascus.] The chief city of Syria, having its name from the bloody excursions of thieves, as Peter Martyr ^{a} thinks; or else, as others, from the blood of righteous Abel there spilled, whence the place was called Damsech, "a bag of blood."

^{a} Pet. Mart. in 1 Reg. xvi.

Ver. 5. Thine head upon thee is like Carmel.] This head is Christ himself, for he is the sole head of his Church: "God hath put all things under his feet"—hence he is here compared to Carmel, because he is high over all—"and given him to be head over all things"—that is, over all persons—"to the Church." ^{#Eph 1:18,22} Angels are under Christ as a head of government, of influence, of confirmation, not of redemption, as the saints are. The angels are great friends to the Church, but not members of it. ^{#Heb 2:16} The Church Christ sanctified and washed with his blood. ^{#Eph 5:26} Not so the angels. He was but a poor patron of the Pope's headship that said—and, as he thought, very wisely too—that he had read in some vocabulary that Cephias signified a head, therefore Peter was head of the Church. But if that should have been granted him, yet it would not follow that the Pope is therefore so too; for Bellarmine, ^{a} a better scholar by far, is forced to say, Forte non est de iure divino Rom. pontificem Petro succedere, perhaps it is not by any divine right that the Pope succeedeth Peter. And again, Rom. pontificem Petro succedere non habetur expresse in Scripturis, it is not expressly set down in the Scriptures that the Pope succeedeth Peter.

And the hair of thine head like purple.] Which was the colour of kings and princes. The saints—called here the hair of the Church's head for their number or multitude—are "princes in all lands"; ^{#Ps 45:16} yea, they are kings in righteousness, as Melchisedec was a king, but somewhat obscure. Compare #Mt 13:17 Lu 10:24. "Many righteous," saith one, "Many kings," saith the other, "have desired to see those things that ye see," &c.

The king is held in the galleries, / i.e., There is no king in the world so great and glorious but might find in his heart to be tied to these walls, and to be held prisoner in the sight of thee and thy bravery; like as King James, coming first into the public library at Oxford, and viewing the little chains wherewith each book there is tied to its place, wished that if ever it were his destiny to be a prisoner, that library might be his prison, those books his fellow prisoners, those chains his fetters. {#Ps 138:4,5 119:72} {b} The Psalmist shows by prophesying that even kings, coming to taste the excellence of the comforts of godliness, and to feel the power of God's Word, should sing for joy of heart, and greatly acknowledge the excelling glory of Christ's spouse the Church. See David's desire. {#Ps 27:4 Ps 84} Constantine and Valentinian, two emperors, called themselves Vasallos Christi, as Socrates reports, the vassals of Christ. And Theodosius, another emperor, professed that it was more honour and comfort to him to be membrum ecclesiae, quam caput imperii, a member of the Church, than head of the empire. Nay, Numa, second king of Rome, though but a heathen, held it a higher honour to serve God than to reign over men. {c} Some interpreters by the king here understand Christ, coveting the Church's beauty, {#Ps 45:11} and held fast bound unto her in the bands of pure affection, of spiritual wedlock.

Ver. 6. How fair and how pleasant art thou, O love, for delights.]
Emphatica haec admodum sunt, cum toties exclamatio ponatur, saith one. This is a most emphatic exclamation, proceeding from admiration, and importing that all he could say of her was too little. Well might the prophet say, "As the bridegroom rejoiceth over his bride, so doth thy God over thee." {#Isa 62:5} Hence he can make no end here of commending her; but, having finished one praise, he presently begins another. This yields infinite matter of comfort to the saints, that Christ loves them so dearly, prizeth them so highly, praiseth them so heartily. Howbeit, let not them hereupon "turn again to folly," {#Ps 85:8} or give way to carnal security. Laetemur in domino, sed caveamus a recidivo. Argue not from mercy to liberty—that is the devil's logic—but from mercy to duty, as those good souls do. {#Ezr 9:13,14} Having received such and such, both privative and positive favours, should we again break thy commandments? There is so much unthankfulness and disingenuity in such an entertainment of mercy, that holy Ezra thinks heaven and earth would be ashamed of it. "Shall we continue in sin that grace may abound?" saith the apostle. {#Ro 6:1} And it is as if he should say, that were most unreasonable, and to a good heart, impossible. A man may as well say the sea burns, or fire cools, as that assurance of Christ's love breeds careless and loose living. They that hold so, know not the compulsive power of Christ's love, {#2Co 5:14} nor what belongs to the life of God {#Eph 4:18}

Ver. 7. This thy stature is like to a palm tree.] This thy whole stature and feature of body, that hath been already portrayed and described particularly and piecemeal, is "like to a palm tree," strong and straight, fresh and flourishing, so that thou mayest say with the palm in the emblem, Nec premor, nec perimor. Pliny, Aristotle, Plutarch, and Gellius have written of the palm tree, that it is always green, bearing pleasant fruit; and that it will not bow downward or grow crooked, though heavy weights be hanged upon it. The Church is all this and more; ever green, even in the winter of affliction, when the oak loseth her leaves {See Trapp on "So 1:16"} full of the "fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ, unto the glory and praise of God." {#Php 1:11} {See Trapp on "Php 4:14"} {See Trapp on "Php 4:11"} Neither can she be long kept under by any pressure of persecution or heavy affliction, Premi potest, opprimi non potest. As Paul, when stoned, started up with Sic petitur caelum, sic, sic oportet intrare. Tyrants might curse the saints, as he did that cried out to those ancient confessors, O miseri, num vobis desunt restes et rupes? O wretches, cannot you hang or drown yourselves, but that I must be thus troubled with you to put you to death?—but crush them they never could. The valour of the patients, the savageness of the persecutors, have striven together, till both, exceeding nature and belief, bred wonder and astonishment in beholders and readers. Hence Trajan forbade Pliny to seek after Christians; but if any were brought to him, to punish them. Antoninus Pius set forth an edict in Asia, that no Christian should be persecuted; for, said he, it is their joy to die— they are conquerors, and do overcome you, &c.

Trucidabantur et multiplicabantur, saith Augustine of the ancient martyrs: they were martyred, and yet they were multiplied. Plures efficitur quoties metimur, saith Tertullian, the more we are cropped, the more we are increased; as the lily is increased by its own juice that flows from it. {a} Hence {#Re 7:9} the saints that by their victorious faith overcame the world, are brought in with palm branches in their hands, in token of victory. Plutarch tells us that the Babylonians made three hundred and sixty commodities of the palm tree, and did therefore very highly honour it. The world hath a great deal of benefit by the Church, could they but see it; for absque stationibus non staret mundus, were it not for the saints, "a short work would the Lord make upon the earth, and cut it short in righteousness." {#Ro 9:28} And great is the gain of godliness, even a hundredfold here, and life eternal hereafter. Who would not then turn spiritual merchant? who would not pass from strength to strength, and "flourish in God's house like a palm tree," {#Ps 92:12} till he attain to the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ? {#Eph 4:13}

And thy breasts to clusters of grapes.] Not well fashioned only, {as #Eze 16:7} but full strutting with milk, yea, with wine, plenty and dainty, to lay hunger and slake thirst, to nourish and cherish her children, even as the Lord doth the Church. {#Eph 5:29} {See Trapp on "So 4:5"}

{a} Plin.

Ver. 8. I said, I will go up to the palm tree, &c.] I said it, and I will do it; for Christi dicere est facere, together with Christ's word there goes forth a power, as it did. {#Lu 5:17} David said he "would confess his sins," and "take heed to his ways," {#Ps 32:5 39:1} and accordingly he did it. Shall Christ purpose and promise mercy to his people, and not perform it? Is he yea and nay? {#2Co 1:19} Can he say and unsay? Doth not the constant experience of all ages fully confute any such fond conceit of him? The saints will not lie, {#Isa 63:8} Christ cannot. {#Tit 1:2} {a} He will not suffer his faithfulness to fail, nor alter the thing that is gone out of his lips. {#Ps 89:33} All his sayings are the issue of a most faithful and right will, void of all insincerity and falsehood. Now when Christ promiseth to climb his palm tree, and to take hold of the boughs thereof, he meaneth that he will dwell most familiarly with his Church, even in the branches thereof, pruning and trimming it, and accepting the fruits of his Spirit in his spouse. Or thus, he will so join himself unto his Church, as he may cause her to be fruitful; he will lay hold on her boughs, which are very fit and apt to climb, so covertly and elegantly noting the work of spiritual generation. The effect follows.

Now also thy breasts shall be as clusters of the vine.] Whatsoever they have been heretofore, now at this time, and for ever hereafter, they shall be delightful to me, and nourishable to thy children, who shall "suck and be satisfied." {#Isa 66:11} Albeit some interpreters of good note conceive that all this is nothing else but a figurative description of Christ's perfect conjunction with his Church in the kingdom of heaven, and of the unspeakable pleasure which Christ will take in her for ever.

And the smell of thy nose like apples, / i.e., The breath that comes out of thy nostrils is sweet as spice apples. The breath that the Church draweth into her lungs, and sends out again, is the spirit of grace, without which she can as little live as we can without air. This sweet spirit is the joy of her heart and the breath of her nostrils, and thereby she draws many into her company. If that be true that one here noteth, that the fruit of the palm partaketh of the nature both of the grape, having a sweet and pleasant juice, and of the apple, for pleasant meat, it may well signify that the Word of God is both meat and drink to the soul.

Ver. 9. And the roof of thy mouth like the best wine.] Her word and doctrine (for the palate is an instrument of speech), often before commended by Christ, and here again, like as she comes over it in him the second time. {#So 4:13,16} {See Trapp on "So 4:13"} {See Trapp on "So 4:16"} This he resembleth to the best and most generous wine. Such the word of God's grace is to those that have spiritual palates, that do not carry fel in aure, - their galls in their ears (as some creatures are said to do), that have their ears healed (as Demosthenes said of his Athenians), and their inward senses habitually exercised to discern good and evil. The doctrine of the Church seems to some bitter and grievous; it goeth down like the waters of Marah, or that water that caused the curse in case of jealousy. {#Nu 5:12-31} It becomes a savour of death unto them, as the viper is killed with palm branches, and vultures with oil of roses. {a} But this is merely their own fault; for "doth not my word do good to them that are good?" saith the Lord. {#Mic 2:6} Excellently St Augustine, Adversarius est nobis, quamdiu sumus et ipsi nobis: quamdiu tu tibi inimicus es, inimicum habebis sermonem Dei, - God's Word is an enemy to none but to such as are enemies to themselves, and sinners against their own souls. This holy word in the mouths of God's ministers is like Moses's rod, which, while held in his hand, flourished, and brought forth almonds; but, being cast to the ground, it became a serpent. The application is easy. {See Trapp on "So 1:2"}

For my beloved.] These are Christ's words; but he speaks as if the Church spake, to show her great affection, that had dedicated all her good things to him. Some read it thus, which "goeth straight to my well beloved"; q.d., It is such excellent wine as I would wish it, or send it even to the dearest and best friend I have, even to her that I love as myself, if not before myself. Or thus, "which springs and sparkles in the cup." See #Pr 23:31.

Causing the lips of those that are asleep to speak.] "Utterance" is called a "gift," {#1Co 1:5,7} and dumb Christians are blame worthy as well as dumb ministers. We should all strive to a holy ability and dexterity of savoury discourse. And for this end the word of Christ should dwell richly in us in all wisdom: our hearts should indite a good matter, that our tongues might be as the pen of a ready writer. Let there be a good treasure within our hearts, and the law of kindness will soon be in our lips; for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. Graceless men are gagged by the devil; they cannot so much as lisp out one syllable of good language; if they attempt it, they show themselves but bunglers, and say Sibboleth for Shibboleth; you may soon see they speak by rote, and not by experience. But those that have well drunk of this wine of the Word, made effectual by the Spirit, talk lustily, yea, their tongues never cease talking and preaching forth the praises of him who hath drawn them out of darkness into his marvellous light: they speak "as the Spirit gives them utterance." {#Ac 2:4,11,14} Those that were in a dead sleep of sin, are soon set to work to "awake and sing." {#Isa 26:19} This should stir us up to study the Word of God, and therehence to learn language. The 119th Psalm is by David set before it as a poem of commendation, mentioning it in every verse, testimonies, laws, statutes, &c. Like as when a book is set forth, verses of commendation are oft prefixed. Such another, but far shorter, is that in #Ps 19:7-11. The Holy Ghost doth so much the more highly there extol it, because men are wont to have it in very light account, and to hold it a disparagement to be eloquent and mighty in the Scriptures.

{a} Pausanias, Aristot.

Ver. 10. I am my beloved's.] I see I am so, saith the spouse, by that ample commendation that he hath now again given me, notwithstanding all my former failings in duty towards him. There fall out some failings out between married couples sometimes; but then they fall in again: they cannot agree together haply so well at first, but being well pieced again, they love better than before. So is it here. The sins we commit make no change in Christ, no substantial alteration. For, first, Upon the same grounds he chose us, he loves us still. He chose us freely, because he would; he chose us for his love, and loves us for his choice. Secondly, There is the same bent of mind and frame of heart towards him remains in us still. And therefore, as there is a transient act of sin passeth from us, so a transient act of chastisement for sin may pass from him. Christ "looked upon Peter," after his denial, with the same familiarity as before. Jehoshuah the high priest, though he were so ill-clothed, and had Satan at his right hand to accuse him, yet he "stood before the angel." {#Zec 3:1} Christ did not abhor his presence nor reject his service. Ephraim, repenting after his revolt, is re-entertained with all sweetness. {#Jer 31:20} {See Trapp on "So 2:16"} {See Trapp on "So 6:3"}

And his desire is towards me.] His desirous affection; he loves me as passionately as any woman doth her dearest husband; {#Ge 3:16} his love to me is wonderful, passing the love of women. "His desire is so toward me," that, as Livia, by obeying her husband Augustus, commanded him, and might have what she would of him, so may I of Christ. Compare #Ge 4:7 Isa 45:11. The Church here well understood the latitude of that royal charter, and makes it a prop to her faith and a pledge for her perseverance.

Ver. 11. Come, my beloved, let us go forth into the field.] Being now fully assured of Christ's love, she falls to praying. She makes five requests unto him in a breath as it were: (1.) That he would "come"; (2.) "Go forth with her into the field"; (3.) "Lodge with her in the villages"; (4.) "Get up early to the vineyards"; (5.) "See if the vine flourish, pomegranates bud," &c. And further promiseth that there she will "give him her loves." Assurance of Christ's love is the sweetmeats of the feast of a good conscience, said Father Latimer. Now, it were to be wished that every good soul, while it is banqueting with the Lord Christ by full assurance, as once Esther did with Ahasuerus, would seasonably bethink itself what special requests it hath to make unto him, what Hamans to hang up, what sturdy lusts to subdue, what holy boons to beg, &c. How sure might they be to have what they would, even to the whole of his kingdom! Suitors at court observe their mollissima fandi tempora, their fittest opportunities of speaking, and they speed accordingly. A courtier gets more many times by one suit than a tradesman can do with twenty years' painstaking. So a faithful prayer, made in a fit season, "in a time when God may be found," as David hath it, {#Ps 32:6} is very successful. Beggary here is the best trade, as one said. Common beggary is indeed the easiest and poorest trade: but prayer is the hardest and richest. The first thing that she here begs of him is, that he would "come," and that quickly, and this we all daily pray, "Thy kingdom come," both that of grace and the other of glory. The Jews also, in their expectation of a Messiah, pray almost in every prayer they make, "Thy kingdom come," and that "Bimherah Bejamenu," quickly, even in our days, that we may behold the King in his beauty. Let our hearts' desire and prayer to God be for those poor seduced souls that they may be saved; and the rather because "they have a zeal of God and his kingdom, but not according to knowledge," {#Ro 10:1,2} as also because their progenitors prayed hard for us; and so some take it to be the sense of the spouse's second request here, "Let us go forth into the field," that is, into the world, for the field in the parable is the world; {#Mt 13:38} let us propagate the gospel all abroad, and send forth such as may "teach all nations," {#Mt 28:19} and reveal "the mystery that hath been kept secret since the world began, that obedience may be everywhere yielded to the faith." {#Ro 16:25,26}

Let us lodge in the villages.] That is, In the particular churches; for, vilissimus pagas, est palatium eburneum, in quo est pastor et credentes aliqui, saith Luther, {a} the poorest village is to Christ and his spouse an ivory palace, if there be but in it a godly minister and some few believers. Melanchthon, going once upon some great service for the Church of Christ, and having many fears of the good success of his business, was much cheered up and confirmed by a company of poor women and children whom he found praying together for the labouring Church, and casting it by faith into Christ's everlasting arms. {b}

Ver. 12. Let us get up early to the vineyards.] Heb., Let us morning it. Manicemas (that is, Gellius' {a} word), Let us be up early and at it. Here she promiseth not to be found henceforth unready, drowsy, sluggish, but night and day to watch and attend that hour, and to inquire and learn out all the signs and tokens when she may come to be perfectly knit to Christ. But it is worthy of our observation that she would neither go any way nor do anything without Christ's company, for she had lately felt the grief of being without him, though but "for a small moment," as the prophet hath it. She had felt herself that while in the suburbs of hell as it were. She therefore holds him as fast as the restored cripple did Peter and John; {#Ac 3:11} she cleaves as close to him as Ruth did to Naomi; or Elisha did to his master Elijah, when now he knew he should be taken from his head. {#2Ki 2:2} She seems here to speak to Christ as once Barak did to Deborah, "If thou wilt go with me, then I will go; but if thou wilt not go with me, I will not go." {#Jud 4:8} And whereas she seemeth, as the forwarder of the two, to excite and exhort Christ to "get up early to visit the vines," &c., we may not imagine any unwillingness in him to the performance of his office as "shepherd and bishop of our souls," {#1Pe 2:25} or any need on his part to be quickened and counselled by her, as Manoah was by his wife, or Aquila by Priscilla, whence she is set before him, {#Ro 16:3} for "who hath directed the Spirit of the Lord, or being his counsellor hath taught him?" {#Isa 40:13} But the Church requesteth these things of Christ for her own encouragement and further benefit; that having his continual presence and fellowship, she may the more cheerfully and successfully go on with her duty. So when we press God with arguments in prayer, it is not so much to persuade him to help us, "for the Father himself loveth you," {#Joh 16:27} saith Christ, and needs no arguments, σποι δοντα και αυτον οτσυνειν, {b} to incite or entice him to show us mercy, as to persuade our own hearts to more faith, love, humility, &c., that we may be in a capacity to receive that mercy that of his own accord he hath for us, and even waits to confer upon us. {#Isa 30:18} Look how a man that would make a bladder capacious to hold sweet spices, blows it and rubs it, and blows it, and rubs it many times over to make it hold the more: so it is here. And as when a man that is in a ship plucks a rock, it seems as if he plucked the rock nearer the ship, whenas in very deed the ship is plucked nearer the rock: so when God's people think they draw God to them with their arguments, in truth they draw themselves nearer to God, who sometimes ascribeth that to us which is his own work, that we may abound more and more. Certum est nos facere quod facimus, sed ille facit ut faciamus. {c} True it is that we do what we do, but it is he that giveth us to do what we do in his service. The bowls of the candlestick had no oil but that which dropped from the olive branches.

Whether the tender grape appear.] Heb., Open, and so prove itself to be a grape, which in the bud can hardly be discerned. True grace may be doubted about as long as it is small and feeble. Weak things are oft so obscured with their contraries that it remaineth uncertain whether they be or no. He that cried out, and that with tears, "I believe, Lord, help mine unbelief" {#Mr 9:24} -that is, my weak faith—could not well tell whether he had any faith at all or not. Add growth to grace, and it will be out of question. Meanwhile that is a sweet promise, "I will pour my Spirit upon thy seed, and my blessing upon thy buds." {#Isa 44:3} And again, "Thus saith the Lord, As the new wine is found in the cluster, and one saith, Destroy it not, for a blessing is in it, so will I do for my servants' sake, that I may not destroy them all." {#Isa 65:8}

And the pomegranates bud forth.] {See Trapp on "So 4:13"}

There will I give thee my loves, / i.e., The fruition of my graces, and fruits of thy faith, thanks, good works, &c. And this is that which Christ requireth of us all—viz., that we bestow all our loves upon him, even the liveliest and warmest of our affections. Love him we must truly, that there be no halting, and totally, that there be no halving. Hold him we must "better, dearer to us than ten sons," &c., and communicate all our loves to him as best worthy. What he gives us back again we may bestow upon others; we may love other things, but no otherwise than as they convey love to us from Christ, and may be means of drawing our affections unto Christ. We must love all things else as they have a beam of Christ in them, and may lead us to him; accounting that we rightly love ourselves no further than we love the Lord Jesus Christ with a love of complacence.

{c} Augustine.

Ver. 13. The mandrakes give a smell.] Loves and mandrakes grow both upon one Hebrew root and Tremellius renders it not mandrakes, but lovely flowers, yielding a savour pleasant to the eye, and sweet to the smell. The Chaldee paraphrast calleth it balsam. (Legesis August. lib. xxii. contra Faust. Manichaeum, cap. lvi.; Jun. in #Ge 30:14; Drus. in fine Comment. in Ruth). Aben Ezra saith that mandrakes are fragrant, and yield a pleasant savour; that they have head and hands like unto a man. But how they should be good to cause conception he wondereth, since by nature they are cold. Augustine saith that he made trial, and could not find any such operation to be in them, and that Rachel coveted them merely for their rarity, beauty, and sweetness. There is enough of these in the Church to draw all hearts unto her; but that many men have brawny breasts and horny heart strings.

And at our gates are all manner of pleasannts] Or, Delicacies, precious and pleasant commodities whether fruits, metals, gems, jewels, quicquid in deliciis habetur; whatsoever is excellent and exquisite in any kind; this is the import of the Hebrew word. There is nothing of any worth but it is to be found in the Church. Her wise merchants, not content with the pearl of price, seek out other "goodly pearls," common gifts, which also have their use and excellence, (#Mt 13:45,46) they "learn to maintain good works, or honest professions for necessary uses; these things are good and profitable to men" {#Tit 3:8,14} Some think that the Holy Ghost here alludeth to the order of old, and still in use, of strawing the wedding house doors with sweet smelling flowers; others to the customs of those that have orchards, to lay up their fruits over the gate house.

New and old.] As a good storer, that hath plenty and variety wherewith to please all palates, new for delights, and old for wholesomeness. The good scribe, well instructed to the kingdom of heaven, "throweth out {a} of his treasury things new and old,"—new for the unlearned, and old for the stronger stomach. Some delight in the sweetness of things, as in new wine. David tells them the Word is sweeter than live honey dropping from the honeycomb. Others say "the old is better," are all for profit, as elder people; he tells them there it is better than gold. {#Ps 19:10} In the Church's storehouse men shall be sure to meet with all that heart can wish, or need require.

Which I have laid up for thee, O my beloved!] Propter te, Domine, propter te, "Because of you, O God, because of you," is the Church's motto. As all his springs are in her, and all his offices and efficacies for her, so all that she has and is, is only for him, and a great deal more she could beteen him. Let Ephraim, that "empty" vine, "bear fruit to himself," {#Ho 10:1} and those hypocrites {#Zec 7:5} fast to themselves; Christ's hidden ones hide all for him, set up and seek him in all they do or suffer, are wholly devoted to his whole service. {b}

Ver. 1. Oh that thou wert as my brother.] Heb., Who will give thee for a brother to me?—q.d., Men may give me many other things, but God alone can give me thy brotherhood, love, and communion, which I wish above all, saith the bride here. "Spiritual blessings in heavenly things in Christ" {#Eph 1:3} are chiefly to be desired and endeavoured after. Quaerite primum bona animi, saith philosophy, Seek first the good things of the mind. Quaerite primum regnum Dei, saith divinity, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness": and then other things shall seek you, shall be cast into the bargain as it were. Let the "many say, Who will show any good?" David prefers one glance from God's countenance before all the world's wealth. {#Ps 4:7} "Oh that Ishmael might live in thy sight," said Abraham. Oh that he might be "written among the living in Jerusalem," be an heir of life truly so called, for Aeterna vita vera vita! {a} "The Lord make his face to shine upon you," said the priests to the people. {#Nu 6:24,25} "Grace be to you, and peace," saith Paul; whatever else be wanting, "Covet earnestly the best things," saith he. {#1Co 12:31} "With all thy getting, get understanding," saith Solomon. {#Pr 4:7} He desired wisdom above wealth; and despatched the temple in seven years' time, whenas he was thirteen years ere he finished his own house, as holding it a work of less haste and care. Elisha begs a "double portion": the spouse {#So 2:5} calls for whole "flagons"; nothing less would content her. The prophet Isaiah chides men for laying out their money on "that which is not bread," {#Isa 55:1,2} or but panis lapidosus, bread made of gravel; and our Saviour bids, "Labour not for the meat that perisheth, but for the meat that endureth to eternal life." {#Joh 6:27} Mors privare potest opibus, non operibus: these die not with us (as Hortentius's orations did with him), but follow us to heaven when we die, and shall be "found to praise, honour, and glory at that day." {#1Pe 1:7} Hence the Church so earnestly desireth here to have more close conjunction and consociation with Christ "as a brother"; yea, as a most natural and kind hearted brother that had "sucked the breasts of her mother," that had been her collocatus, and so more inwardly affected toward her, as Joseph was toward his brother Benjamin. {#Ge 43:29,30,34} In sum, she wisheth that she may feel Christ dwelling in her heart; that he would remove all impediments of their happy conjunction, and hasten the accomplishment thereof in heaven.

When I should find thee without (or at the door), I would kiss thee.] As the bride was wont to do the bridegroom, receiving and welcoming him with all comely familiarity and sweetness. "Kiss the son," and covet his kisses. {#Ps 2:12 So 1:2} Be not ashamed or afraid to perform all duties of a holy love and sound obedience towards him. He was not ashamed of us, when we had never a rag to our backs. {#Eze 16:3-13} He stretched the skirt of his love over us, and said unto us, "Live"; when he might well enough have loathed to look on us. {ib. #Eze 16:6}

Yea, I should not be despised.] Heb., They should not despise me; or if they did, yet they should not dishearten me from duty. "If this be to be vile, I will be yet more vile," said David to his mocking Michal. {#2Sa 6:22} We may not suffer ourselves to be mocked out of our religion. Barren Michal hath too many sons that scorn the holy habit and exercises; but they shall be plagued, as their mother was, with continual fruitlessness; they shall also one day—viz., when they are in hell—behold those with envy whom now they behold with scorn; as the scoffers of the old world, from the tops of the mountains that could not save them, beheld Noah's ark floating upon the waters. It is as impossible to avoid, as necessary to contemn, the lash of lewd tongues, whether by bitter scoffs or scurrilous invectives, as full of scorn commonly as the wit of malice can make them. The Church here resolveth so to deport herself, as that none shall have cause to contemn her; or if they do, bravely to slight all contumelies and contempts for her conscience, taking them as crowns and confirmations of her conformity to Christ.

{a} Aug., De Pec. Mort., lib. i. cap. 11.

Ver. 2. I would lead thee and bring thee.] With solemnity and joy. She speaks it twice, as fully resolved to do it; and hereby to bind herself more straitly to a performance, I would not only kiss thee at the door, but bring thee into the house. Many are strict abroad and in company, but much too loose at home and in their own houses; follow these stage players to their dressing rooms, where they disrobe themselves, and you shall soon see what they are. Heed must be taken, say the very heathen, Aedibus in propriis quae prava aut recta gerantur. Religion admits not of that distinction between a good man and a good governor. If you will be for the public, be good in private; bear your own fruit, work in your own hives, reform your own hearts and houses, man your own oars, and make good your own standing. Cato could say that he could pardon all men's faults but his own. {a} And Augustus, going about to redress some abuses in the state, was upbraided with his own domestic disorders. Abraham had a well ordered family; so had Joshua, {#Jos 24:15} David. {#Ps 101} And although his house were not so with God, yet that was all his desire. {#2Sa 23:5} And he well knew that it was the care, not the cure, of his charge that he stood charged with. {b} Noah may bring the Lord Christ into his house, and labour to set him up in the hearts of his children, speaking persuasively to that purpose; but when all is done, God must "persuade Japheth," and speak to his heart. Now this the Lord doth, Monendo potius quam minando, docendo quam ducendo. Hence the Church in the next words cries out,

Thou shalt instruct me.] For so the text is to be rendered. Thou who art the arch-prophet, a teacher sent from God, anointed and appointed for the purpose to put divine learning into us, "thou shalt instruct or learn us." Now, quando Christus magister, quam cito discitur quod docetar? saith Augustine. Christ is a quick teacher; and all his scholars are very forwardly. Nescit tarda molimina gratia Spiritus Sancti, saith Ambrose. God's people must needs be well taught, because they are "all taught of God." {c}

I would cause thee to drink of spiced wine.] Such as we call Iprocras, which, besides the nature and strength of the wine itself, hath, by the mixture of many spices with it, great power and pleasantness, to the comforting of the heart, and satisfying of the smell. And this was the διδασκτρον Minervale, recompense, that Christ should have for teaching her. She resolveth to testify her thankfulness by her obedience, rendering unto him such fruits of faith and holiness as should be sweetened and spiced with his own Spirit in her, and should exceedingly delight him. Contrary to these λιπαρα και λαμπρα, these "dainty and goodly fruits," {#Re 18:14} are those nasty and naughty ones, {#Isa 5:4} that, besides their stench, are so offensive to the taste that they cannot be eaten, they are so naught. {#Jer 24:2} Wicked men's grapes are of gall, and their wine is venom; {#De 32:32,33} both their natures and practices are abominable.

{b} Curam exegeris, non curationem. -Bern.

{c} Θεοδιδασκτολ. {#Joh 6:45}

Ver. 3. His left hand should be under my head.] Or, prayerwise, Let his left hand, &c. Conscious and sensible of her own inability, she begs the benefit of both Christ's hands, and all little enough—his whole power and providence to support and relieve her.

“ Una est in tenui mihi re medicina, Iehovae

Cor patrium, os verax, omnipotensque manus."

{See Trapp on "So 2:6"}

Ver. 4. I charge you, O daughters of Jerusalem.] {See Trapp on "So 2:7"}

Why should you stir up?] What shall you get by it? or what reason can ye give for it? But lust is headlong, and considers not what an "evil and bitter thing sin is." {#Jer 2:19} Besides, it so blears the understanding that a man shall think he hath reason to be mad, and that there is great sense in sinning.

Ver. 5. Who is this that cometh up from the wilderness? {See Trapp on "So 3:6"} There are continual ascensions in the hearts of God's people while here. And whereas the men of this world, "which have their portion here," {#Ps 17:14} animus etiam incarnaverunt, as Bernard complaineth, and are borne downward to hell by their own weight; the saints of God are ever aspiring, and do "groan, being burdened," as knowing that "while they are at home in the body," such a home as it is, "they are absent from the Lord," {#2Co 5:4,6} from their heavenly home. Either Egypt was not Moses's home, or but a miserable one; and yet, in reference to it, he called his son, born in Midian, Gershom—i.e., a "stranger there." If he so thought of his Egyptian home, where was nothing but bondage and tyranny, what marvel though the saints think of that home of theirs above, and hasten to it in their affections, where is nothing but rest and blessedness?

Leaning upon her beloved.] For otherwise she could not ascend, as unable to sustain her steps. {#Jer 10:23} The Church, as the vine, is the most fruitful, but the weakest of all trees, and must have a supporter; hence she "leans upon her beloved," which phrase, beside recumbency, denotes a more than ordinary familiarity, qua solent amantes in sinus amasiorura se proiecere, like as lovers throw themselves sometimes into their sweethearts' arms or bosoms. {a} Now thus to lean upon Christ is an act of faith, of "the faith of God's elect." Others seem to lean upon Christ, but it is no otherwise than as the apricot, which leaneth against the walls, but is fast rooted in the earth. So these lean upon Christ for salvation, but are rooted in the world, in pride, filthiness, &c., and though they make some assays, yet, like the door upon the hinges, they will not come off. See the folly and confidence of these wretched men (the same Hebrew word signifies both, and may both ways be taken, #Ps 49:13) graphically described by the prophet, "The heads thereof judge for reward, and the priests thereof teach for hire, and the prophets thereof divine for money; yet will they lean upon the Lord, and say, Is not the Lord among us? none evil can come upon us." {#Mic 3:11} These men perish by catching at their own catch, hanging on their own fancy, making a bridge of their own shadow; they will not otherwise believe but that Christ is their sweet Saviour, and so doubt not but they are safe, when it is no such matter. They grow aged and crooked with such false conceits, and can seldom or never be set straight again. These must know that to rely upon Christ is to be utterly unbottomed of a man's self, and of every creature; and so to lean upon Christ alone, that if he fail thou sinkest, if he set not in thou art lost for ever. Papists think that as he that standeth on two firm branches of a tree is surer than he that standeth upon one; so he that trusteth to Christ and his own works too. But it must be considered, first, That he which looketh to be justified by the law is fallen from grace; "Christ is of no effect" unto him. {#Ga 5:4} He will not mingle his purple blood with our puddle stuff, his rich robes with our tattered rags, his eagles' feathers with our pigeons' plumes. There can be but one sun in heaven, Sol quasi solus, and they set up rush candles to the sun that join other saviours to this Sun of righteousness. Secondly, He that hath one foot on a firm branch, another on a rotten one, stands not so sure as if wholly on that which is sound. Away then with all such mock stays. See the fruit of creature confidence, #Job 6:17 8:15, and know that no man trusts Christ at all that trusts him not alone. He that stands with one foot on a rock, and another foot on a quicksand, will sink and perish as certainly as he that standeth with both feet on a quicksand. See #Ps 6:2 2:5,6.

I raised thee up under the apple tree, &c.] Here the bride answereth to the bridegroom's question, Who is this? or, What woman is this that cometh up from the wilderness? &c., that goes in a right line to God, leaning on her beloved, that will not break the hedge of any commandment to avoid any piece of foul way? I am she, saith the Church, even the very same that raised thee up under the appletree, &c., viz., by mine earnest prayers. When thou wast asleep under the apple tree, and I had straightly charged the damsels of Jerusalem not to disquiet thee by their sins, yet I took the boldness to arouse thee, and say, as in #Ps 44:23, "Awake; why sleepest thou, O Lord? Arise, cast us not off for ever"; and with those drowning disciples, "Master, carest thou not that we perish?" Sometimes, saith one, God seems to lose his mercy, and then we must find it for him, as #Isa 63:10, sometimes to sleep, and then we must waken him, quicken him. {#Ps 40:17 Isa 62:7} God will come, but he will have his people's prayers lead him, as in #Da 10:12, "I am come for thy words." Christ himself is the apple tree here mentioned, as #So 2:3. Though there are that interpret it as the cross, that tree whereon he "bare our sins in his own body." {#1Pe 2:24} Others better, of the tree of offence, the forbidden fruit. {#Ge 2:16,17} And that when Eve tasted of that fruit, which they herehence conclude to have been an apple, though the word be more general, Nux enim pomum dicitur, then, as Christ's mother, she brought him forth, by believing the promise there made unto her, that Messiah of her seed should break the serpent's head. Look how the Virgin Mary conceived Christ when she yielded her assent. When the angel spake to her, what said she presently? "Be it as thou hast said," let it be even so. She yielded her assent to the promise, that she should conceive a son, and she did conceive him. So Eve believed the promise of pardon and salvation, she "saw it afar off, was persuaded of it, and embraced it," {#Heb 11:13} and is therefore said here to bear and bring forth Christ, yea, to travail of him with sorrow, as the word signifies; for as there is no other birth without pain, so neither is the newbirth. Those that have passed through the narrow womb of repentance, and been born again, will say as much. See #Isa 26:17. If God broke David's bones, and the angel's back, saith one, he will break thy heart too, if ever he save thee. No sound heart ever went to heaven, as, in another sense, none but sound could ever come thither. Cot integrum cor scissum, " Rend your hearts."

Ver. 6. Set me as a seal upon thine heart, / i.e., Be thou as "a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God." {#Heb 2:17 Ex 28:21,29} Remember me for good, and make mention of me to thy father. Have me also in precious esteem, as great men have the signets upon their right hands; and as whatsoever is sealed with a seal, that is excellent in its own kind, as in #Isa 28:25, hordeum signatum, excellent barley. Christ wears his people as a signet, or as great men wear their jewels, to make him glorious in the eyes of men; neither will he be plundered of them by the Church's enemies; to touch them is to "touch the apple of his eye," {#Zec 2:8} that tenderest piece of the tenderest part. The proverb is, Oculus et fama non patiuntur iocos; The eye and the good name can bear with no jests. As the saints are in Christ's heart, ad commoriendum et convivendum, so they are also "upon his arm"; so that if they do out come and say in any danger or difficulty, "Awake, awake, put on strength, O arm of the Lord; awake as in the ancient days," &c. {#Isa 51:9} he will "redeem his people with his arm"; {#Ps 77:15} yea, with his "outstretched arm," {#Ex 6:6} that is, with might and open manifestation of his love; he will "awake as one out of sleep, and like a man that shouteth by reason of wine." {#Ps 78:65}

For love is strong as death.] And yet death is so strong that it passeth over all men, {#Ro 5:12} and devoureth them as sheep; {#Ps 49:14} as a rot it overruneth the whole flock, having for its motto Nulli cedo, I yield to none. Only love is "strong as death," nay, stronger. Jonathan would have died for the love of David, David of Absalom. Arsinoe interposed herself between the murderers' weapons, sent by Ptolemy, her brother, to kill her children. Priscilla and Aquila for St Paul's life laid down their own necks. {#Ro 16:4} Paul was "in deaths often" for Jesus' sake. Those primitive martyrs "loved not their lives unto the death." {#Re 12:11} Certatim gloriosa in certamina ruebantur, saith Sulpicius; they were prodigal of their dearest lives, and even ambitious of martyrdom, that thereby they might seal up their entire love to the Lord Jesus. If every hair of mine head were a man, I would suffer death in the opinion and faith that I am now in, said John Ardley, martyr, to Bishop Bonner. {a} Ignis, crux, bestiarum conflictationes, ossium distractiones, &c. Let me suffer fire, cross, breaking of my bones, quartering of my members, crushing of my body, and all the torments that men or devils can devise, so I may enjoy my Lord Jesus Christ, saith holy Ignatius, whose motto was Amor meus crucifixus, My love was crucified. Love is itself a passion, and delights to show itself in suffering for the party beloved; yea, though it were to pass through a thousand deaths for his sake. And this is here yielded as a reason why the spouse first awakened Christ, and now desires to be so nearly knit unto him, to be "set as a seal upon his hand, yea, upon his heart." "The love of Christ constrained" her, and lay so hard upon her, that she could do no less than beg such a boon of him, than covet such a courtesy as a compensation of her dearest love to him. And surely to account Christ precious as a tree of life, although we be fastened to him as to a stake to be burned; this is love; and this our labour of love cannot be in vain in the Lord.

Jealousy is cruel as the grave.] Or, Zeal is hard as hell. This follows well upon the former, for, Non amat qui non zelat, saith Augustine. {b} Zeal is the extreme heat of love and other affections for and toward any whom we esteem; burning in our love to him, desire of him, delight in him, indignation against any that speak or do aught against him. The object of zeal is either man, as #2Co 7:7 Col 4:17; -Basil, venturing himself very far for his friend, and by some blamed for it, answered, Ego aliter amare non didici, I cannot love a man, but I must do mine utmost for him; or, secondly, God, as #Joh 3:17 2Co 7:11 Re 3:19. And here our love will be, and must appear to be fervent, desire eager, delights ravishing, hopes longing, hatred deadly, anger fierce, fear terrible, grief deep, deeper than those black deeps (a place so called) at the Thames' mouth, whereinto Richard III caused the dead bodies of his two smothered nephews to be cast, being first closed up in lead, &c. {c}

The coals thereof are coals of fire.] Or, Fiery darts that set the soul all on a light fire, and turn it into a coal or lump of love to Christ. The word here used is elsewhere taken for fiery thunderbolts, {#Ps 78:48} and for brass tipped arrows, that gather heat by motion, {#Ps 76:3,4} also for a carbuncle or burning fever. {#De 32:24} The Church had said before, more than once, that she was "sick of love"; here she feels herself in a fever, as it were, or as if her liver were struck through with a love dart, by that "spirit of judgment and of burning" {#Isa 4:4} kindling this flame of God, as she calls it here, upon the hearth of her heart. The word signifies the consuming flame of God; and zeal may be very fitly so called. For as it comes from above, even from the Father of lights, as the fire of the altar did, so it tends to him, and ends in him; it carries a man up, as it were, in a fiery chariot, and consumes his corruptions by the way. It quencheth also those fiery darts of the devil (as the sunbeams will put out the kitchen fire), and sets the tongue awork, as the Holy Ghost set on fire the apostles' tongues, {#Ac 2:2-4} whenas wicked men's tongues, full of deadly poison, are yet further "set on fire from hell"; {#Jas 3:6} yea, the whole man to work for God and his glory, as Elias with his Zelando zelavi (he sucked in fire with his mother's breast, as some have legended). St Paul is mad for God (so some misjudged him, #2Co 5:13), as ever he had once been against him. {#Ac 26:11} Peter was a man made all of fire, walking among stubble, saith Chrysostom. And of one that desired to know what manner of man Basil was, it is said, there was presented in a dream a pillar of fire with this motto, Talis est Basilius; such a one is Basil. Such also was Savonarola, Farel, Luther, Latimer, that bold Valiant for Truth, who, when he was demanded the reason why there was so much preaching, and so little practised, answered roundly, deest ignis, the flame of God is wanting in men's hearts.

Ver. 7. Many waters cannot quench love.] Water was proven long since to be above fire, in that ancient contest between those two nations about the precedence and precellence of their gods, the one worshipping fire and the other water. But though there be "gods many," and "lords many," yet to the Church there is but "one Lord," and to him she will go through thick and thin, through fire and water. Her love to him is such as no good can match it, no evil overmatch it; it cannot be quenched with any calamity; nay, it is much kindled by it, as fire in the smith's forge, or as lime that is the hotter for the water that is cast upon it. Elias would have water poured on the sacrifice (covered therewith), that the power of God might the more appear in the fire from heaven. Similarly Christ suffers the ship of his Church to be covered sometimes with waves of persecutions and afflictions, that the strength of their love to him may be the more manifested, and the "thoughts of many hearts may be revealed." {#Lu 2:35} It is easy to swim in a warm bath, and every bird can sing in a summer's day, but to swim to heaven (as Queen Elizabeth did to her throne) through a sea of sorrows, to sing (as some birds will do in the spring) most sweetly, then when it rains most sadly, that is a true trial indeed. Many will embark themselves in the Church's cause in a calm, that, with the mariners in the Acts, will flee out of the ship in a storm. Many will own a prospering truth, a blessing ark, but he is an Obed Edom indeed that will own a persecuted, tossed, banished ark, an ark that brings the plague with it. God sets a high price on their love that stick to him in affliction, as David did on those men that were with him at Gath, those Cherethites and Pelethites that stuck to him when Absalom was up. {#2Sa 15:18} And notwithstanding their recent rebellion at Ziklag, he takes them to Hebron with him (where he was to be crowned), that as they had shared with him in his misery, so they might partake of his prosperity. Lo, thus likewise deals our heavenly David with all his fellow sufferers. He removes them at length from the ashes of their forlorn Ziklag to the Hebron of heaven. And at the general judgment, in that great amphitheatre of men and angels, Christ will stand forth and say, "Ye are they that continued with me in my temptations, and I appoint unto you a kingdom," &c. {#Lu 22:28,29}

Neither can the floods drown it.] Surgit hic afflictio {#Ne 1:9} This is not a vain repetition; but serves to show that no persecution, tribulation, anguish, though never so grievous—though the devil should cast out of his mouth water enough to carry us down the stream {a} {as #Re 12:15} -shall be able to separate the saints from the love of Christ. {#Ro 8:35}

If a man would give all the substance of his house, &c.,] i.e., To buy this love of me, or to get it from me, I should cry out with Peter, "Thy money perish with thee," or with Luther, "Contemptus est a me Romanus et favor et furor," I care neither for Rome's favour nor fury. When they offered to make him a cardinal if he would be quiet, he replied, No, not if I might be Pope. And when they consulted about stopping his mouth with money, one wiser than the rest cried out, Hem! Germana illa bestia non carat aurum, Alack! that German beast cares not for money. Galiacius Caracciolus, {b} that noble Italian convert, left all for the love of Christ, and went to live a poor obscure life at Geneva. Where, when he was tempted to defect for money, he cried out, Let their money perish with them, who esteem all the gold in the world worth one day's society with Jesus Christ and his Holy Spirit. And cursed be that religion for ever, that by such baits of profit, pleasure, and preferment, seeks to draw men aside from the way of truth and holiness. The Papists propose rewards to such as shall relinquish the Protestant religion and turn to theirs: as in Augsburg, where they say there is a known price for it of ten florins per year, and in France, where the clergy have made contributions for the maintenance of apostate ministers. {c} Stratagema nunc est Pontificum ditare multos ut pii esse desinant, saith one {d} that was no stranger to them: It is a cunning trick that the popes have taken up to enrich men, that they may rob them of their religion. And though Luther would not swallow that hook, yet there are those that will, not a few. Tell men a tale of utile, usefulness, promise them preferment, and you may persuade them to anything. Fac me Pontificem et ero Christianus, said one Pammachius, a heathen, once to the Pope: Make me a bishop, and I'll turn Christian. But, as one said of Papists, that they must have two conversions ere they come to heaven—one from Popery and another from profaneness (like as grain must be first threshed and then winnowed)—so this money merchant, this preferment proselyte might have been a Christian at large, had he had his desired bishopric; but Christ never favoured any such self-seeking followers; {#Mt 8:20 Joh 6:26} their love he knows to be no better than meretricious and mercenary. It is a sad thing that any Augustine should have cause to comphdn, Vix diligitur Iesus propter Iesum, that scarce any man loves Christ but for his rewards; like the mixed multitude that came up with Israel out of Egypt, for a better fortune; or those Persians that, in Mordecai's days, for self-respect became Jews. All God's people should be like those Medes in Isaiah that "regarded not silver, and as for gold they delighted not in it." {#Isa 13:17} Christ's love should be "better to them than wine" {#So 1:2} and when in exchange for it, the devil doth offer them this world's good, they should answer him as the witch of Endor did Saul, "Wherefore layest thou a snare for my soul to cause me to die?" {#Isa 28:9} or, as the vine and fig tree in Jotham's parable answered the rest of the trees, "Should I leave my fatness and sweetness," {#Jud 9:11} derived unto me from Christ, and so go out of God's blessing into the world's warm sun? God forbid that I should part with my patrimony, as Naboth said; take an apple for paradise, as Adam did; lose the love of Christ for the world's blandishments, &c.

{d} Joh. Bapt. Gell., dial. 5.

Ver. 8. We have a little sister.] Thou, Lord, and I have such a sister—sc., the Church of the Gentiles, known to thee, and afore appointed to conversion, as James speaketh in that first Christian council, {#Ac 15:18} from the beginning of the world; unknown to me—more than by hearsay from the holy prophets, who "prophesied of the grace that should come" {#1Pe 1:10} unto her—but not unloved or undesired. Now, therefore, as a fruit of my true love unto thee, such as no floods of troubles can quench or drench, no earthly commodity can compass or buy off, I desire not only to deliberate with thee about the enlargement of thy kingdom, by the accession of the elect Gentiles thereunto, but also by making, as I may say, large and liberal offers, set forth my care and study for their eternal salvation. See the like affection in St Paul toward his countrymen the Jews, proceeding from that full assurance that he found in himself. {#Ro 8:38,39 9:1} And learn we to pray as earnestly for their conversion as they have done for ours; longing after them from the very heart rooted in Jesus Christ, {as #Php 1:8} and turning to the Lord, that they may sooner find compassion. It is Hezekiah's reason, and a very remarkable one {#2Ch 30:9}

And she hath no breasts, / i.e., She is not yet Nubilis apta viro, marriageable and fit for Christ, to be presented as a chaste virgin unto him; she wanted such paranympths as Paul was to do it for her. {#2Co 11:2} She had not an established ministry to nurse up her children with it. And at this same pass was the old Church at first, not only small, but unshapen. {#Eze 16:7,8} A society of men without the preaching of the Word is like a mother of children without breasts. All the Church's children must "suck and be satisfied"; {#Isa 66:11} they must desire the sincere milk of the Word and grow thereby, {#1Pe 2:2} not like the changeling Luther speaks of, ever sucking, never battling. Such shall be made to know that their mother hath verbera as well as ubera -rods as well as dugs. Their father will also repent him, as once David did of his kindness to Nabal, and take up his old complaint, #Isa 1:2, "I have nourished and brought up children, and they have rebelled against me. The ox knoweth his owner," &c., the most savage creatures will be at the beck and check of those that feed them; disobedience, therefore (under means of grace especially), is against the principles of nature. It is to be "like the horse and mule," yea, like the young mule, which hath no sooner done sucking her dam's teats, but she turns up her heels and kicks her.

What shall we do for our sister.] Love is not more cogitative than operative, and delights to be doing for the beloved. "I love the Lord," &c., "What shall I render unto him? I will pay my vows," &c. {#Ps 116:14} Jonathan will disrobe and strip himself even to his sword and belt for David, because he "loved him as his own soul." {#ISA 18:3,4} Shechem will do all that can be done for his beloved Dinah. The Macedonians will over do it for their poor brethren; Paul's love to the Jews was like the ivy, which if it cleave to a stone or an old wall, will rather die than forsake it. {#Ro 9:3} He tells his Hebrews of their labour of love. {#Heb 6:10} All love is laborious.

In the day when she shall be spoken for.] Or, Wherein speech shall be had concerning her, viz., for a husband for her; how we may best prefer her in marriage. The care of disposing young people to fit yoke fellows, lay upon their parents and other kindred, The Church, as an elder sister, shows herself solicitous, and propounds the matter to Christ, as the only best husband for her, the partition wall being broken down.

Ver. 9. If she be a wall, we will build upon her, &c.] Christ answers, If she be, as she ought to be, strong and well grounded in the faith, able to bear a good weight laid upon her, as a wall, pillar, and ground of truth, not sinking or fainting under the heaviest burden of these light afflictions, which are but for a moment, but patient and perseverant in the faith unto the death, then will I do all for her that may be done, to make her happy. This speech is somewhat like that of Solomon concerning Adonijah, "If he show himself a worthy man," &c. {#IKi 1:52}

We will build upon her a palace of silver.] The whole blessed Trinity will have a hand in building the Church of the Gentiles upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone. {#Eph 2:20} God "plants the heavens, and lays the foundation of the earth, that he may say to Zion, Thou art my people." {#Isa 51:16} None can come to Christ except God the Father draw him. {#Joh 6:44} Christ the second person is both "author and finisher of our faith." {#Heb 12:2} The Holy Ghost is "the same Spirit of faith" in David and Paul, {#2Co 4:13} and is received by "the hearing of faith." {#Ga 3:2} He is "the God of all grace," {#2Pe 1:19} antecedent, concomitant, subsequent. We have nothing of which any of us can say, Mihi soli debeo., I am not bound to God for it.

And if she be a door, &c.] As she is "the house of God, and gate of heaven." {#Ge 28:17} If she will open the "everlasting doors to the King of glory," {#Ps 24:7} and open "a great door and effectual" to his faithful ministers, {#1Co 16:9} who come to "build her for a habitation of God through the Spirit." {#Eph 2:22} If she open the gates, "that the righteous nation, which keepeth the truth, may enter in," {#Isa 26:2} then will the Lord Christ "enclose her," board her, and beautify her with fair, sweet, and strong cedars, as with curious and costly wainscot, which shall be monimentum, munimentum, ornamentum, &c. But all this is promised upon the condition that she be a wall and a door, that is, that she receive and retain Christ with her; for otherwise she can claim nothing. He may desert her without breach of covenant, as he did the old Church, and many particular Churches of the New Testament now under the Turk, for their perfidy and apostacy. The Church of Rome, though utterly revolted, yet lays strong claim to Christ still; and concludes, "I sit as a queen, and shall see no sorrow. Therefore shall her plagues come in one day. For, strong is the Lord God who judgeth her." {#Re 18:7,8} {See Trapp on "Re 18:7"} {See Trapp on "Re 18:8"} About the year of grace 1414, Theodoricus Urias, an Augustine friar in Germany, said that the Church of Rome was, even so long since, become ex aurea argenteam, ex argentea ferream, ex ferrea terream, superesse ut in stercus abiret, {a} of gold silver, of silver brass, of brass iron, of iron clay. There remains nothing now, but that of clay she become dung, to be swept out of doors with the besom of destruction.

{a} Jac. Revius, De Vit. Pontif., p. 229.

Ver. 10. I am a wall; and my breasts like towers.] If she be a wall, saith Christ. I am a wall, saith this Church of the Gentiles; I will carefully keep the doctrine of truth committed unto me, I will stand firm in the faith, being founded upon the rock of ages. And whereas lately I was looked upon as breastless, {#So 8:8} now my breasts are fashioned, {#Eze 16:7} yea, they are grown far greater than those of mine elder sister's; so that they look "like towers." The Church of the Gentiles, though little at first, and scarce considerable, yet after Christ's ascension, was marvellously increased and multiplied; so that she herself stood amazed to see her children come from far, flying to her as a cloud, most swiftly, and in such flocks, as if a whole flight of doves, driven by some hawk or tempest, should scour into the columbary, and rush into the windows. {#Isa 60:8}

Then was I in his eyes as one that found favour.] Heb., Peace: even as that Jerusalem Shulamite; nothing inferior to the old Church; yea, before her in this, that she for present is fallen off, and "through her fall, salvation is come unto the Gentiles, for to provoke them to jealousy." {#Ro 11:11} But when God shall have united these two sticks, {#Eze 37:19} and made way for those kings of the east, {#Re 16:12} then it shall be said of Jacob and Israel, "What hath God wrought?" {#Nu 23:23}

Ver. 11. Solomon had a vineyard in Baalhamon.] So hath Christ in a "very fruitful hill." {#Isa 5:1} Solomon's vineyard must needs be of the best, for he abounded both with wealth and wit, to make it so. He let it also to farm for a very great rent, which showeth the fruitfulness of it, so many vines set for so many silverings. {#Isa 7:23} But Solomon's vineyard falls far short of Christ's (wherewith it is here compared in many respects). For as it is nothing so fruitful, so he was fain to let it out to vinedressers. He could not dress and manure it himself, keep it in his own hands, as his father David his; {#1Ch 27:27} neither could he take all the fruit, for the tenant also must live, and reason good. If Solomon have a thousand, the poor labourers may well have two hundred. But I, saith Christ here, neither let out the Church, my vineyard, but look to it myself, though I have a great deal of pains with it; nor suffer any part of the profits to go from me, so jealous I am of mine inheritance, being ever in the midst of it.

Ver. 12. My vineyard, which is mine, &c.] And therefore most dear unto me, for ownness makes love. Patriam quisque amat: non quia pulchram, sed quia suam. {a} Every man loves his own things best. The Church is Christ's own by a manifold right, by donation, conquest, purchase—not with silver and gold, but with the dearest and warmest blood in all his heart. {#1Pe 1:18} No wonder therefore though she be always before him; though he look carefully to her that cost him so dear, that he trust not others with her, as Solomon was forced to do; but whomsoever he employs about her—"for we are labourers together with God," saith the apostle; "ye are God's husbandry" {#1Co 3:9} -himself is ever one. Ipse adest et praeset, he is present and president. "Feed my sheep," said he to Peter, but do it for me, as the Syriac translator, respecting the sense, adds there. {#Joh 21:15} "Take not unto thee the instruments of a foolish shepherd," {#Zec 11:11} that is, forcipes et mulctram, as an ancient saith, like those that are more intent, attensioni gregis quam attentioni, fisco quam Christo. Peter must not do any of this, much less must he "lord it over God's inheritance," as his pretended successors do, with whose carcasses therefore Christ shall shortly dung his vineyard, and water the roots of his vines with their blood. He must look to lip feeding, and, when himself is converted, "strengthen his brethren"; neither must he intervert or take to himself any part of the fruits, as Solomon's farmers did. He may not seek his own things, but the things of Jesus Christ. "Paul may plant, and Apollos water," but, since it is "God that gives the increase," let God reap all the glory; they shall also "reap in due season, if they faint not," if they grow not "weary of well doing." {#Ga 6:9} {See Trapp on "So 8:11"}

{a} Seneca.

Ver. 13. Thou that dwellest in the gardens, / i.e., O thou Church universal, that dwellest in the particular churches, frequently called gardens in this book. The French Protestants at Lyons called their meeting house paradise.

The companions hearken to thy voice.] The angels, so some interpret it, learn of the Church, and profit in the knowledge of the "manifold wisdom of God" in man's redemption. {#Eph 3:10 1Co 11:10 1Pe 1:12} Or rather, thy fellowChristians, thine obedient children, that will hearken to their mother's counsel. No sooner can she say, "Hear and give ear, be not proud, for the Lord hath spoken it," but they "give glory to the Lord their God," {#Jer 13:15,16} glorify his Word, {#Ac 13:48} set to their seals, {#Joh 3:33} dispute not Christ's commands, but despatch them; Illi garriant, nos credamus, said Augustine of heretics that would not be satisfied. The philosophers called the Christians credentes, believers, by way of reproach; because they believed God upon his bare word. "We believe and know," saith Peter. {#Joh 6:69} And "we believe and speak," saith Paul after David. {#2Co 4:13} And we believe and practise, as Noah, and those other worthies did, {#Heb 11:7} laying faith for a foundation of all their doings and sufferings in and for the Lord, like as {#Ezr 6:4} the foundation of the temple was laid with "three rows of great stones, and a row of new timber." This is the guise of the Church's children; they are soon persuaded to believe and obey their mother, whom they look upon as the pillar and ground of truth.

Cause me to hear it.] {See Trapp on "So 2:14"} Tremellius renders it, Fac ut me audiant, Cause them to hear me: deliver nothing to them for truth but what is consonant to my word of truth; let all thy doctrines bear my stamp, come forth cum privilegio, carry mine authority. What said Augustine to an adversary—it was Faustus the Manichee, I thing—What matter is it what either thou sayest or I say to this or that point Audiamus ambo quid dicit Dominus, Let us both hear what God saith, and sit down by it.

Ver. 14. Make haste, my beloved.] Heb., Flee, or speed thee away, as Amaziah said to Amos, "Go, flee thee away into the land of Judah." {#Am 7:12} And as a senator of Hala in Suevia wrote to Brentius, Fuge, fuge, Brenti, cito citius citissime, Make all possible speed, haste, haste, haste; so the Church is at it here, with her "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly." {#Re 22:20} O mora! Christe, veni. Oh delay, Christ come. Thus, as this book began with a wish, so it ends. Tota vita boni Christiani sanctum desiderium est: {a} The whole life of a good Christian is a holy wish. He loves, and longs, and looks for Christ's second appearance, and even spends and exhales himself in continual sallies and egressions of affection unto him in the meanwhile. He hath taken some turns with Christ upon those "mountains of spices,"—so heaven is called for its unconceivable height and sweetness; he hath tasted of the grapes of this celestial Canaan; hence he is as eager after it as once the Gauls were after Italy, when they had once tasted of the sweet wine of those grapes that grew there. {b} The old character of God's people was, they waited for the consolation of Israel, Christ's first coming. Now they long as much for his second as the espoused maid doth after the marriage, as the apprentice for his freedom, the captive for his ransom, the traveller for his inn, the mariner for the haven,

"looking for, and hasting {c} the coming of that day of God." {#2Pe 3:12}

Isaiah

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. The vision of Isaiah.] That which was not unfitly affirmed of a modern expositor, ^{a} that his commentaries on this prophecy of Isaiah are mole parvi, eruditione mangni, small in bulk, but great in worth, may much more fitly be spoken of the prophecy itself, which is aureus quantivis precii libellus, worth its weight in gold. A "great roll" or "volume" it is called, ^{#Isa 8:1} because it is magnum in parvo, much in a little; and it is said there to be "written with a man's pen," that is, plainly and perspicuously; so little reason was there that John Haselbach, professor at Vienna, should read twenty-one years to his auditors upon this first chapter only, and yet not finish it. ^{b} I confess there is no prophecy but hath its obscurity—the picture of prophecy is said to hang in the Pope's library like a matron with her eyes covered—and Jerome saith that this of Isaiah containeth all rhetoric, ethics, and theology. But if brevity and suavity, which Fulgentius maketh to be the greatest graces of a sentence—if eloquence of style, and evidence of vision may carry it with the reader, here they are eminently met in this seraphical orator, of whom we may far better say than the learned critic doth of Livy, Non ita copiosus ut nimius; neque ira suavis ut lascivus; nec adeo lenis ut remissus: non sic tristis ut horridus; neque ita simplex ut nudus; aut adeo comptus ut affectata compositione calamistris videatur inustus. Par verbis materia, par sententia rebus, &c. ^{c} A courtier he was, and a master of speech; a man of noble birth, and as noble a spirit; not the first of the holy prophets, and yet worthily set in the first place—as St Paul's Epistle to the Romans is for like cause set before the rest—because in abundance of visions he exceedeth his fellows; and in speaking of the Lord Christ, he delivereth himself more like an evangelist than a prophet, and is therefore called the evangelical prophet. ^{d} In the New Testament he is cited by Christ and his apostles sixty different times at least; and by the more devoted heathens he was not a little respected, as appeareth by the history of that Ethiopian eunuch. ^{#Ac 8:26-40}

The vision.] That is, The several visions or doctrines so certainly and clearly revealed to him by God, as if he had seen them with his bodily eyes. See #Isa 2:1 Na 1:1. For they are not to be hearkened to who hold that these seers, the prophets, understood not their own prophecies, {#1Pe 1:10,11} though it is true that those "holy men of God spake as they were moved," acted, and powerfully carried on (φερομενοι) to see and say as they did, by the Holy Ghost. {#2Pe 1:21}

Of Isaiah.] Which signifieth "God's health." He would indeed have healed that perverse people to whom he was sent; but they "would not be healed," as he sadly complaineth, {#Isa 44:4 53:1} turning them over to God with a Non convertentur; They will not repent, let them therefore perish. When there is no hope of curing, there must be cutting.

The Son of Amoz.] Who likewise was a prophet, say the Hebrews, and of royal extraction.

Which he saw.] Not which I saw; thus he speaketh for modesty sake. Luther {e} wittily saith, that Haec ego feci, haec ego feci, shows men to be nothing else but faeces, dregs.

Concerning Judah and Jerusalem.] The inhabitants whereof lived in God's good land, but would not live by God's good laws; to them was objected, as afterwards to the Athenians, Eos scire quae recta sunt, sed facere nolle, that they knew what was right, but had no mind to do it, though this and other prophets used their best oratory in inviting those of them that did rebel, inciting those that did neglect, hastening those that did linger, and recalling those that did wander, to sue out their pardons, and make their peace with their Maker.

In the days of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah.] And longer too, if that be true which the Hebrews tell us, that at the age of one hundred twenty-six years he was sawn asunder by Manasseh (his grandson by the mother's side) with a wooden saw. {f} Sure it is that Manasseh was a most bloody persecutor, and perhaps not inferior to Dioclesian, in whose days such cruelty was exercised toward the Christian bishops and others, Ut totum orcurm dicas in orbem effusum, ubi nemo nisi tortus vel terror sit, {g} as if hell had been broken loose, and all men turned either torturers or tortured.

Ver. 2. Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O earth.] Exordium patheticum! Moses-like, he calleth heaven and earth, brutas illas mutasque creaturas, to record against God's rebels, whose stupendous stupidity is hereby taxed. {#De 4:26,30:19 31:28} Heaven and earth do hear and obey God's voice, for "they are all his servants," {#Ps 119:91} keeping their constant course. Only man, that great heteroclitite, {a} breaketh order, and is therefore worse than other creatures, because he should be better.

For the Lord hath spoken it.] So #Jer 13:15, "Hear and give ear; be not proud: for the Lord hath spoken it." Jehovah, whose voice "shaketh not the earth only, but the heavens also," {#Heb 12:26 Ps 104:32} at whose dreadful presence mountains melt, rocks rend asunder, and the whole fabric of heaven and earth is astonished, horribly afraid, and very desolate; {#Jer 2:12} this great Jehovah—whose name is great among the heathen. {#Mal 1:11} The Pythagoreans used to swear by τετρακτην, Quaternity, the name Jehovah consisting of four letters in the Hebrew, which also they called πηγην αεναου φυσεως, the fountain of eternity—Aphihu, even he hath spoken, or 'is about to speak'—scil., by my mouth and ministry. {b} "Hear now this, O foolish people, and without understanding; which have eyes, and see not; which have ears, and hear not: fear ye not me? saith Jehovah. Will ye not tremble at my presence?" &c. {#Jer 5:21,22} "Hear, ye deaf, and look, ye blind, that ye may see." {#Isa 42:18} Thus must ministers preach to the conscience, cut to the quick, rouse up themselves and wrestle with their hearers, goring their very souls with smarting pain, while they speak "as the oracles of God," {#1Pe 4:11} with all gravity and authority.

I have nourished and brought up children.] Or, Advanced, exalted them. Brevicula verba, sed causa querulandi maxima; a short but sharp contest. {c} God had adopted, educated, and advanced the people of Israel; but "Jesurun waxed fat, and kicked," as young mulets, when they have sucked, lift up the heel and kick the dam's dugs, as hawks when fully fed forget their master.

And they have rebelled against me.] Or, Transgressed, blasphemed. Rebellion is a kind of blasphemy, {#Nu 15:30,31 Eze 20:27} and unthankfulness is, as one saith, an accumulative sin, a voluminous wickedness. Many sins are bound up in it, as Cicero saith of parricide. Solon would make no law against parricide, because he thought none would be so vile as to commit it. Lycurgus would make no law against ingratitude for like reason.

{a} A person that deviates from the ordinary rule; an 'anomaly'.

Ver. 3. The ox knoweth his owner.] Yea, helpeth him; whence these creatures are called iumenta a iuvando, and the ass hath his name in Greek {a} from his usefulness. Yea, the most savage creatures will be at the beck and check of those that feed them. Disobedience, therefore, is against the principles of nature, and God's rebels fall below the stirrup of reason, yea, of sense, so great cause was there that our prophet, tantas tragoedias ageret, should begin his sermon with such a solemn contestation, "Hear, O heavens," &c. O coelum, O terram! "But Israel doth not know"—quo est stupore. He needeth to be set to school to these dullest of creatures to learn the knowledge of God and of his will, of himself and his duty. Oh, the brutish ignorance of many profligate professors! "They are a people of no understanding." {#Ps 53:4} So #Isa 44:18.

My people doth not consider.] Though "them only have I known of all the families of the earth," {#Am 3:2} culling and calling them, owning and honouring them, adopting and accepting them for my people, when I had all the world before me to choose in, {#De 10:14,15} yet they value not my benefits; they stir not up themselves, as the Hebrew word signifieth, to apprehend them, and to be affected with them. All is lost that I have laid out upon them. Unthankfulness is as a grave, which receiveth dead bodies, but rendereth them not up again without a miracle. But "should ye thus requite the Lord, O foolish people and unwise?" {#De 32:6} {See Trapp on "De 32:6"}

{a} ενος from ονημι.

Ver. 4. Ah sinflul notion.] Hoi goi chote. He beginneth his complaint with a sigh, as well he might, when he saw that the better God was to them, the worse they were to him; like springs of water, which are then coldest when the sun is hottest; like the Thracian flint, which is said to burn with water, and to be quenched with oil, or like that country where drought maketh dirt, and rain dust. {a} Ah gens peccatrix! Oh, thou that art wholly made up of mischief, as Aaron once said of their forefathers in the wilderness, that they were "wholly set upon wickedness," {#Ex 32:22} and as the prophet saith, "What is the transgression of Jacob? is it not Samaria? and what are the high places of Judah? are they not Jerusalem?" {#Mic 1:5}

A people laden with iniquity] Great and grievous offenders, {b} guilty of many and mighty (or long) sins, {#Am 5:12} quorum amplitudine praegravanfur, yet not sensible of their burden; not heavyladen, {as #Mt 11:28} nor labouring to be delivered of that hedgehog that woundeth and teareth them in their tender inside.

A seed of evildoers.] A race of rebels, a seed of serpents: Mali corvi malum ovum: such as were as good at resisting the Holy Ghost as ever their fathers had been; {#Ac 7:51} generation after generation they held it out, and were no changelings then, neither are to this day.

Children that are corrupters.] Or, Destroyers, dingthrifts, ασωτοι quasi ασωστοι, destroy goods, such as the Roman prodigal, who gloried that of a large patrimony left him by his parents, he had now left himself nothing praeter coelum et caenum; or that other in the Gospel, who had drawn much of his portion through his throat, and spent the rest on harlots. Lo! such ill husbands for their souls were these Jews here spoken of, seipsis assidue facti deteriores, while they woefully wasted their time and strength in the pursuit of their lusts: "cursed children." {#2Pe 2:14}

They have forsaken the Lord.] Which is such a foul enormity, as good Jeremiah thinks the very heaven sweateth at, and the earth groaneth under. {#Jer 2:12,13}

They have provoked unto anger.] As if they had a mind to wrestle a fall, and try masteries with him. The Vulgate rendereth it, They have blasphemed. {See Trapp on "Isa 1:2"}

They are gone away backward.] A lienaverunt se retrorsum, certatim exardescentes in apostasiam; as the moon when fullest of light getteth farther off from the sun. They had turned upon God the back and not the face, by a shameful apostasy, even then when they frequently trod his courts, {#Isa 1:12} and departed not thence, haply, any otherwise than the Jews at this day do, out of their synagogues with their faces still toward the ark, like crabs going backward.

{a} Siccitas dat lutum, imbres pulverem. — Plin,

{b} Gens quae non nisi peccare didicit. -Sculi. Secura et petulans. -Piscat. #Lu 15:30.

Ver. 5. Why should ye be stricken any more?] This was the heaviest stroke that ever Judah felt from the hand of God; like as Ephraim's sorest judgment was, "He is joined to idols, let him alone" {#Ho 4:17} -q.d., He is incorrigible, irreclaimable, let him go on and perish: I'll not any longer foul my fingers with him. Oh fearful sentence! To prosper in sin is a grievous plague, and a sign of one given up by God. To be like the smith's dog, whom neither the hammers above him, nor the sparks of fire falling round about him can awaken, is to be in a desperate condition. To wax worse by chastisements, {as #2Ch 28:22} is a sure sign of reprobate silver, {#Jer 6:30} of a dead and dedolent disposition. {#Eph 4:18} God as a loving father, verba, verbera, beneficia, supplicia miseuerat, had done all that could be done to do them good; but all would not do: such was their obstinace.

The whole head is sick, and the whole heart is faint.] Head, heart, feet; princes, priests, and common people, as they had all sinned, so they all had their payment. Sin is a universal sickness, like those diseases which physicians say are corruptio totius substantiae, a corruption of the whole substance. And national sins bring national plagues, wherein all sorts suffer, as they did in the days of Ahaz, de quibus haud dubie loquitur hic propheta, saith Scultetus: though others think the prophet here speaketh rather of those miseries inflicted upon Judah by Hazael king of Syria {#2Ki 12:17,18} and by Joash king of Israel, {#2Ki 14:8-14} wherein all sorts had their share—none escaped scot free.

Ver. 6. From the sole of the foot.] Totum est pro vulnere corpus, The whole body politic was deadly diseased, and it was our prophet's unhappiness to be the physician to a dying state; Tunc etenim docta plus valet arte malum.

There is no soundness.] Nec sanitas in corpore, nec sanctitas in corde. Heu, heu, Domine Deus. Neither soundness in body nor soundness in heart, Alas, alas oh God, God.

But wounds, and bruises, and putrifying sores.] And those also such as would not be cured, but called for cutting off. Immedicabile vulnus ense recidendum est.

They have not been closed.] Neither will be. Non est malagma imponere, say the Septuagint here. You will not endure to have them searched or suppled: what hope therefore of healing? If the Sun of righteousness shall shine upon us with healing under his wings, we must repent and believe the gospel. {#Mr 1:15}

Ver. 7. Your country is desolate.] Here the prophet speaketh plainly, what before, parabolically. Thus many times the Scripture explaineth itself. {#Job 7:3-9}

Your cities are burnt.] So that there is sometimes but an hour's time, inter civitatem magnam et nullam, saith Seneca, between a fair city and a heap.

Your land, strangers devour it.] That is, enemies; in which sense also a harlot is called "a strange woman," seemingly a friend, but really an enemy: {a} she will destroy his peace who is overcome by her.

In your presence.] To your greater grief. Witness the experience hereof in our late stripping and desolating times, whereof we have here a kind of theological picture.

{a} Zar; "alienum" significat et "hostem."

Ver. 8. And the daughter of Zion.] Jerusalem, which is called the daughter of Zion, say some, because standing at the foot of that hill as a daughter; it comes out from between the feet, being also cherished and tendered by God as his daughter. Howbeit, as dear as she was to him, she fell into deep distress when she became undutiful. Abused mercy turneth into fury.

Is left as a cottage in a vineyard.] As a shed or booth, whereof after the vintage there is little use or regard.

As a lodge in a garden of cucumbers.] Or, Melons, which, when ripe, lie on the ground. So, saith one, do God's ripest and best servants, being humble, and meanly conceited of themselves.

As a besieged city.] Besieged, though at a distance; as Rome was at the time when Saguntum was beleagured.

Ver. 9. Except the Lord.] Jehovah, the Essentiator et Induperator, the Maker and Monarch of the universe.

Had left unto us a very small remnant.] Which he reserved for royal use; pulling them as "a brand out of the fire," {#Zec 3:2} or as "two legs or a piece of an ear taken by the shepherd out of the mouth of a lion." {#Am 3:12} The apostle, after the Septuagint, rendereth it "a seed," {#Ro 9:29} in allusion to store seed kept by the husbandman; and there hence inferreth that the elect Jews shall by faith in Christ be freed from the tyranny of Satan and terror of hell. And this is here alleged for an allay to those foregoing dreadful declarations of bygone and direful menaces of future desolations; so loath is the Sun of righteousness to set in a cloud; surely in the midst of judgment he remembereth mercy—

“ *Quamvis cecidere trecenti,
Non omnes Fabios abstulit una dies.* ”—Ovid.

We should have been as Sodom.] Those five cities of the plain are thrown forth for an example. {#Jude 7} Lot was no sooner taken out of Sodom but Sodom was taken out of the world and turned into a sea of salt. {#De 29:23} So MeroZ, {#Jud 5:23} some city likely near the place where that battle was fought, hath the very name and memorial of it utterly extinct.

Ver. 10. Hear the word of the Lord, ye princes of Sodom.] Having mentioned Sodom and Gomorrah, {#Isa 1:9} he maketh further use thereof, probrosa hac appellatione auditores suos conveniens; sharpening up his hearers in this sort, whom he knew he should not wrong at all by so calling them. {see #Eze 16:46,48} Non tam ovum ovo simile; like they were, both princes and people, to those of Sodom and Gomorrah; (1.) In their ingratitude toward God; (2.) In their cruelty toward men. Our prophet, therefore, is "very bold," as St Paul also testifieth of him, {#Ro 10:20} fearing no colours, although for his boldness he lost his life, if at least that be true which Jerome {a} out of the Rabbis telleth us—viz., that this prophet Isaiah was sawn asunder, first, Because he said he had seen the Lord; {#Isa 6:1} secondly, Because he called the great ones of Judah princes of Sodom, &c., giving them a title agreeable to their wicked practices. The like liberty of speech used Athanasius toward Constantius; Agapetus toward Justinian; Johannes Sarisburiensis toward the Pope, &c.

{a} Jerome in Isa. i.

Ver. 11. To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices.] All which, without faith and devotion, are no better than mere hypocrisy and illusion. It is, saith Oecolampadius, as if one should present his prince with many carts laden with dirt, or as if good meat well cooked should be brought to table by a nasty sloven, who hath been tumbling in a jakes. They are your sacrifices and not mine, and though many and costly, yet I abhor such sacrificing Sodomites as you are, neither shall you be a button the better for your pompous hecatomb {a} and holocausts. {b} Your devotions are placed more in the massy materiality than inward purity, and therefore rejected. Go ye and learn what that is, "I will have mercy, -so faith, repentance, new obedience, -and not sacrifice." {#Mt 9:13} You stick in the bark, rest in the work done; your piety is potius in labris quam in fibris nata -a mere outside, shells, nut kernels, shows, and pageants, not heart workings, &c. Una Dei est, purum, gratissima victima, pectus.

Into full of the burnt offerings.] I am even cloyed and loathed with the sight of them.

And of the fat of fed beasts.] Though ye bring the very best of the best, yet you do worse than lose your labour, cast away your cost, for therein ye commit sin. {#Pr 15:8} Displeasing service is double dishonour, Deus homines istis, ut vocant, meritis praefidentes aversatur.

I delight not in the blood of bullocks, &c.] He "that killeth an ox," unless withal he kill his corruptions, "is as if he slew a man. He that sacrificeth a lamb, as if he cut off a dog's neck," &c. {#Isa 66:3} Those miscreants in Micah who offered largely for a licence to live as they list, are rejected with scorn. {#Mic 6:7}

{a} A great public sacrifice (properly of a hundred oxen) among the ancient Greeks and Romans, and hence extended to the religious sacrifices of other nations; a large number of animals offered or set apart for a sacrifice.

{b} A sacrifice wholly consumed by fire; a whole burnt offering.

Ver. 12. When ye come to appear before me.] Heb., To be seen; else all had been lost. Hypocrisy is very ostentous, it would be noted and noticed; whereas true devotion desireth not to be seen of any save him who seeth in secret.

Who hath required this at your hand?] This is God's voice to all superstitious will-worshippers and carnal gospellers. "Friend, how camest thou in hither?" Who sent for thee to my service? Who hath forewarned this generation of vipers to flee from the wrath to come? What hast thou to do to take up my name? &c., {#Ps 50:16} to tread my courts, to pollute my presence? "This is the gate of the Lord, into which the righteous" only "should enter." {#Ps 118:20} "The sacrifice of the wicked is abomination; how much more when he bringeth it with a wicked mind." {#Pr 21:27}

To tread my courts.] Or, Trample on; {as #Isa 63:3} to foul it, and wear it out with their feet, {a} as in some places marble crosses graven in pavements of Popish churches, with indulgences annexed for every time they are kissed, are even worn by the kisses of the devouter sex especially. {b} Diodate noteth here that a phrase is picked out on purpose to show that these false appearances were rather acts of profane contempt than of right religion. The Greeks gave such honour to their temples that they durst not tread on the threshold thereof, but leap over it. The priests at their solemn services cried aloud εκας εκας οστις αλιτρος, Gressus removete prophani. The Jews at this day, before they come to the synagogue, wash themselves, and scrape their shoes with an iron fastened in a wall at the entrance. The Habassines, a mongrel kind of Christians in Africa, do neither walk, nor talk, nor sit, nor spit, nor laugh in the church, nor admit dogs into the churchyards. Sed quorsum haec omnia? to what end is all this, without an honest care to lift up pure hands and holy hearts in God's presence? See #Jer 7:3,4,9-11.

Ver. 13. Bring no more vain oblations.] Vain, because unacceptable, ineffectual, unsubstantial. Epitheton argumentosum, saith Piscator. Lip labour is lost labour, for God is not mocked with shadows of service; his sharp nose easily discerneth and is offended with the stinking breath of the hypocrite's rotten lungs, though his words be never so scented and perfumed with shows of holiness. Hence it is added, Incense is an abomination unto me,] sc., Because it stinketh of the hand that offereth it. Incense of itself was a sweet and precious perfume, compounded of the best odours and spices. In the incense of faithful prayer also, how many sweet spices are burnt together by the fire of faith, as humility, hope, love, &c., all which come up for a memorial before God, through the merits and mediation of Jesus Christ. {#Heb 9:24} But it is otherwise with the wicked, whose carnal heart is like some fen or bog, and every prayer thence proceeding is as an evil vapour reeking and rising from that dunghill. Never did those five cities of the plain send up such poisonous smells to heaven, which God, being not able to abide, sent down upon them a counter poison of fire and brimstone.

I cannot away with.] Heb., "I cannot," by an angry aposiopesis; "I cannot"—that is, I cannot behold, bear with, or forbear to punish, as Oecolampadius maketh the supply to be.

It is iniquity.] Or, An affliction, a grievance. {as #Joh 5:6} Yea, it is a "vexation," as some render the next word—viz., "your solemn meeting."

Ver. 14. Your new moons.] These were commanded to be kept, to mind them of God's governing of all things, as from whom come all alterations and changes, and so to teach them to rely on his providence at all times and turns. This they thought not on, and are therefore turned off with contempt.

Your appointed feasts.] Or rather your set meetings, whether for feasts or fasts.

My soul hateth.] Not all his senses only were offended, but his very soul also, which is an emphatic speech, and an argument of his hearty detestation. Hypocrisy is hateful to men, much more to the holy God. When Bernardine Ochin offered the Cardinal of Lorrain his service in writing against the Protestants, he slighted him with greatest scorn, because he knew he had dissembled and played the hypocrite. The other Papists should have dealt in like sort with Bolsecus, that twice banished and thrice apostate friar and physician, whom they basely hired to write the lives of Calvin and Beza, alleging him in all their writings as canonical.

They are a trouble unto me.] Or, A burden, a cumbrance, God, though he be not weary of bearing up the whole world, yet under this burden he buckles as it were, and elsewhere complains that he is pressed under it as a cart is pressed that is full of sheaves. {#Am 2:13}

Ver. 15. And when ye spread forth your hands.] This was the ancient guise and garb in extraordinary and most earnest prayer, especially to spread forth the arms, and lay open the hands as it were, to receive a blessing from the Almighty. {#Ex 9:23 Ps 44:20 143:6 1Ki 8:22,38}

I will hide mine eyes from you.] Tanquam a teterrimo cadavere, quod oculos et nasum ut occludatis faciat. The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and his ears are open to their cry; but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil, {#Ps 34:15,16} his pure eyes cannot behold them with patience. {#Hab 1:13}

Yea, when ye make many prayers.] As hoping to be heard for your much babbling. The Turks pray constantly five times a day. The Jews pronounce daily a hundred benedictions. The Papists pray more by tale than by weight of zeal. The wild Irish pray for a blessing on their theft also.

I will not hear.] Your prayers are as jarring in mine ears, as if divers distracted musicians should play upon divers bad instruments so many several tunes at one time, or as if so many dogs should set up a howl together. {#Ho 7:14; see the note there} Take thou away from me the noise of thy songs (those black sanctus), for I will not hear "the melody of thy viols." {#Am 5:23} The Jews at this day conclude their Sabbath with singing, or caterwauling rather, which they continue as long as they can, for the ease of souls departed; and with it they pray many times over and over that Elijah would hasten his coming, even the next Sabbath, if he please, to give them notice of the Messiah's coming. All this is lost labour.

Your hands are full of blood.] Ac proinde horrorem mihi incutiunt; Hands imbrued in blood are horrible to behold. Should he who hath assassinated the king's son, come to him with a petition presently upon it? and should not pure hands be everywhere lifted up to God without wrath and without doubting? {#1Ti 2:8} By "blood" here may be meant not only injustice and oppression of the poor, but all other sins also allowed and wallowed in. When "blood toucheth blood," {#Ho 4:2} one foul sin is added to another.

Ver. 16. Wash ye, make ye clean.] "Wash your hearts from wickedness, that ye may be saved"; {#Jer 4:14} "yea, cleanse your hands, ye sinners, and purify your hearts, ye double minded." {#Jas 4:8} But how is that done? "Be afflicted, and mourn, and weep," &c. {#Jas 4:9} Ye cannot wash your bloody hands in innocence; wash them therefore in tears, which are a second baptism of the soul where it is rinsed anew. And surely, as the sins of the old world, so of this little world, need a deluge. Set to work, therefore, and God will soon set in with you. Wash yourselves with the tears of true repentance, and God will wash you with the blood of his Son; only be sure to do your work thoroughly—wash hard, rub, rinse; we have inveterate stains, which will hardly be got out till the cloth be almost rubbed to pieces; and as an error in the first concoction is not mended in the second, nor of the second in the third, so if a man's humiliation hath not been sound, his reformation cannot be right. "Wash," therefore, and then Put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes.] Away with that abominable thing that is so grievous to all my five senses, yea, to my very soul, as is above said. Sin is in Scripture called pollution, leprosy, contagion, vomit of a dog, wallowing of a swine in the mire, &c., and must therefore be rid and removed out of the heart and life, or we cannot find favour.

Cease to do evil.] This is first to be done: depart from evil, and do good; break off your sins by repentance, and be abrupt in the work; sow not among the thorns, cast away all your transgressions, &c. The prophets, pressing moral duties in this sort, do it as explainers of the law: they did but unfold and draw out that arras which was folded together before.

Ver. 17. Learn to do well.] Turn over a new leaf, take out a new lesson. "Be thou instructed, O Jerusalem, lest God's soul depart from thee." {#Jer 6:8} Deliver thyself wholly up to his discipline; religion is the best learning— Philosophia sacra; to know Christ and him crucified is as much as St Paul cared for; Deum cognoscere et colere to know and honour God, is the whole duty of man; add this to the former. Negative goodness profiteth not.

Seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, &c.] Look to the duties of the second table, those of your own particular places especially; exercise your general calling in your particular, and think not to set off with God by your sacrifices for your oppressions: "I will have mercy, and not sacrifice." Primo praecepto reliquorum omnium observantia praecipitur, saith Luther. All God's laws were in David's sight, {#Ps 119:168} all his ways in God's sight. What a good justicer and householder both he was, see #Ps 101

Relieve the oppressed.] Heb., Righten the soured or leavened.

Judge the fatherless; plead for the widow.] These are God's own clients. {#Ex 22:22}

Ver. 18. Come now, let us reason together.] In the Greek Church, at the beginning of divine service, the deacon cried out, Sacra sacris, Holy souls to holy service. {a} God will not treat with this people till purified, till resolved upon better practices; as when he is content, by a wonderful condescension, to make them even as judges in their own cause. The Vulgate rendereth it, but not so well, Et venite et arguite me {see #Isa 5:3 Jer 2:9 Mic 6:1-3}

Though your sin be of scarlet.] Blood red, {as #Isa 1:15} and of a double dye; sins in grain, enormia et horrenda, such as ye may well think will never wash out. {b}

They shall be white as snow, / i.e., You shall be fully freed of the guilt and filth of your most heinous offences by the blood of my Son: sc., Not your peccadilloes only shall be remitted, but your many and mighty sins, quae coccini, quae vermiculi instar sunt. But what meant that mad philosopher, Anaxagoras, to affirm that snow was black? {c} "Purge me with hyssop" (wash me by the blood of sprinkling from the sting and stink of sin), "and I shall be clean; wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow." {#Ps 51:7} {d} Cleaner I shall be than the picked glass, whiter than the driven snow. The law, saith one, {e} is like a glass wherein we see our spots; but the gospel is like the laver {#Ex 38:8} which was made of the women's looking glasses, whereby they might both see their faces and also wash out their spots; for it was both a glass to look in, and a laver to wash in, and this typified Christ. {see #1Jo 1:7 Re 1:1}

Though they be red like crimson.] Which is, say the Rabbis, of a deeper colour than the former.

They shall be as wool.] Which naturally is exceeding white in those countries. {#Ps 147:16} Scultetus noteth that God here promiseth not only pardoning, but purging grace also.

Ver. 19. If ye be willing and obedient.] If ye love God and keep his commandments; {#Ex 20:6} if ye love to be his servants; {#Isa 56:6} willing in all things to live honestly. {#Heb 13:18} Tantum velis et Deus tibi praecurret. {a} Say thou canst not open the door, yet be lifting at the latch; ever holding that of Augustine, Nolentem praevenit Deus ut velit, volentem subsequitur ne frustra velit. {b} It is God that worketh in us both to will and to do of his own good pleasure. {#Php 2:13} Augustine, after Paul, stood so much for free grace, that the Papists say he yielded too little to freewill.

Ye shall eat the good things of the land.] Ye shall, and not strangers for you. {as #Isa 1:7} The Easterlings shall not eat thy fruit, nor drink thy milk. {as #Eze 25:4} Thine enemies shall not eat thy grain, nor the sons of the stranger drink thy wine; but they that have gathered it shall eat it and praise the Lord, and they that have brought it together shall drink it in the courts of my holiness. {#Isa 62:8,9} Godliness hath a cornucopia; religion is the right palladium {c} of a nation. The heathen poet could acknowledge that, as long as Rome stood religious, so long she continued victorious and prosperous; as, on the contrary,

Hesperiae mala luctuosae. ”—Horat.

Italy was undone by irreligion. The Greek empire had not fallen from the Paleologi to the Turks had the Christian verity stood firm in Constantinople. Cicero confesseth that the instruments by which the Romans subdued the world were not strength and policy, but religion and piety. {d} Wherefore also Maecenas in Dio Cassius adviseth Augustus παντη παντως, by all means and at all times, to advance the worship of God, to cause others to do the same, and not suffer innovations in religion.

Ver. 20. But if ye refuse and rebel.] The Romans sent the Carthaginians caduceum et hastam, that they might take their choice of peace upon submission, or war upon refusal so to do. Similarly dealeth the Lord by this people here. {#De 30:19}

Ye shall be devoured with the sword.] War is threatened, which is, saith one, the slaughter house of mankind, and the hell of this present world; and that we may not think that these are but big words, brute thunderbolts, it is added for confirmation,

For the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.] Now whatsoever he hath spoken with his mouth, he will surely make good with his hand, as Solomon phraseth it in his prayer. The original hath it, "For the mouth of the Lord hath spoken"—q.d., Let his Word stand for a law with you. Justinian telleth us in his Institutes, that it was a prerogative belonging to the Roman emperor, Quicquid principi placuerit, legis habet vigorem, Whatsoever he pleased be bid be done was a law. And the French kings' edicts or proclamations always end with these binding words, Car bel est nostre plasir, For such is our pleasure, and we look to be obeyed. May not the King of kings say so much more?

Ver. 21. How is the faithful city.] Here beginneth, as some think, a new sermon; and it beginneth, as Jeremiah's Lamentations do, with an Ecack, "How!" a particle of admiration mixed with grief {a} -q.d., Proh pudor! proh dolor! Oh shameful! oh doleful! What a strange business is this! and how unworthily is this matter carried! Here is a city so altered that ye can scarce know her to be the same. Ye may seek Jerusalem in Jerusalem and not find her; tota est iam Roma lupanar. {b} See #Eze 16:15,23 23:3-21.

Become an harlot?] In meretricem; not a privy harlot only, but a prostituted harlot, a very prostibulum meretrix meretricissima, utpote quae cubile dilatavit {#Isa 57:3} Tibias devaricavit {#Eze 16:28} Such a trite harlot is the great whore of Babylon at this day, whose faithfulness was once famous all the world over. {#Ro 1:8} But now, O quantum haec Niobe! One of her own sons once complained that of gold she was become silver, of silver brass, and that she was ready to degenerate into dirt, and worse. {c}

It was full of judgment.] Top full. Sad that it was so. Fuimus Troes. It is a misery to have been happy.

Righteousness lodged there.] Not in Melchizedek's days only, who was king of righteousness, according to his name, and king also of Salem, afterwards called Jerusalem, but also in the reigns of David, Solomon, Jehoshaphat, and other good princes. But now no such matter—nay, the contrary, like as the Prince of Orange his country is fertile of all fruits save oranges, whence the French proverb, En Orange it n'y a point de oranges. {d}

But now murderers.] Hierapolis was become a very Poneropolis, the city of God a den of thieves, or, as the Papists maliciously say of Geneva, a professed sanctuary of roguery. By murderers here may be meant persecutors of the pious, and oppressors of the poor man, whose livelihood is his life. {Mr 12:40 Lu 8:43} A poor man in his house is like a snail in his shell; crush that, and you kill him.

Ver. 22. Thy silver is become dross.] Heb., Drosses, a proverbial kind of speech, deciphering apostasy. It is as if the prophet had said, There is nothing pure in thee, nothing sincere or simple: sed omnia fallacia, omnia fucata, omnia inquinata; but all things are deceitful, degenerate, and corrupt. Dross looketh like silver, and is nothing less. Wine mixed, or marred, with water hath the name of wine, when it is nil nisi vappa. Hypocrites are mere seemers, {Jas 1:26} jugglers, {Job 13:16} having a form of knowledge, {Ro 2:20} a form of godliness. {2Ti 3:5} Fair professors they are, and foul sinners. But be not deceived; God is not mocked; he is a faithful metallary, saith a Father, and will easily find out men's mixtures. It is to be feared that be hath yet a further controversy with this nation for our hateful hypocrisy and apostasy, for where now, alas! is our ancient fervour and forwardness—our heating and whetting one another. Oh, how dull and diluted are we! &c.

Ver. 23. Thy princes are rebellious.] Or, Revolters, apostates. There is an elegance in the original, such as this prophet is full of: Ac si dicas primi sunt pravi vel perversi. So saith Calvin here: Episcopi may be called Aposcopi, Cardinales Carnales vel Carpinales, carpet men; Canonici Cenonici, Praepositi praeposteri, &c. This note A Lapidè is very angry at— et lapides loquitur.

And companions of thieves.] While they not only suffered such to go unpunished, but also shared with them. {as #Ps 50:18} Cato complained that in his time some thieves stood at the bar in cold irons, when others, and worse, sat on the bench with gold chains about their necks. The bold pirate told Alexander to his teeth that he was the arch-pirate of the world. And what shall we think of Pope Alexander, who, in 1505 AD, sent a bull of pardons for many, dispensing thereby with such as kept away, or by any fraud had gotten the goods of other men, which they should now retain still, without scruple of conscience, so as they paid a rateable portion thereof to his Holiness's receivers? {a} And at this day Popish priests will absolve a thief of his wickedness, if they may have half with him of the stolen goods. {b}

Every one loveth gifts.] Not only taketh; although in taking also the Greek proverb saith, ουτε παντα, ουτε παντη, ουτε παρα παντων, great care and caution should be used. Olim didici quid sint munera, said a grave man. See #De 16:19.

And followeth after rewards.] As a hunter his game, or a merchant his gain, or a martialist his enemy. Sectantur retributiones -i.e., Collidunt inter se indices, saith the Chaldee paraphrast: The judges conspire, saying one to another, Help thou me in judging against the poor, and I will do as much for thee another time.

They judge not the fatherless.] Because friendless, penniless. Sed pupillos laedere, est pupillam oculi Dei contingere.

Neither doth the cause of the widow come before them.] The widow cannot speak for herself (in the original she hath her name from dumbness), and hath no money to make room for her. Hence her cause is slighted.

I will ease me; I will avenge me.] As it is an ease to a full stomach to disgorge, and as to a vindictive person revenge is very sweet.

“ Est vindicta bonum vita iucundius ipsa.”

So—but in a way of justice—God delighteth {d} in the destruction of his stubborn enemies. {#De 28:63 Eze 5:13 Pr 1:26}

And purely purge away thy dross.] Et expurgabo, ut purificativum, scorias tuas. The wicked are the dross of the state, {#Ps 119:119} and wickedness is the dross and dregs of the soul. {#Pr 17:3 27:21} God promiseth her to purge out both, to separate the precious from the vile, to reform and refine all—a metaphor from metallaries.

And I will take away all thy tin.] Thine hypocrisy: for tin hath a show of silver, but it is not so—nay, it is a deadly enemy to gold and silver, saith one, {a} making them hard and brittle. It is also a tyrant over them, and will hardly be separated from them. Hereby are figured your most noted, rooted, and inveterate sins.

Thou shalt be called.] Thou shalt have the name and the note, the comfort and the credit of such a one.

The city of righteousness.] Wherein dwelleth righteousness; or the city of the righteous—of Jesus Christ, the righteous One {#1Jo 2:2} and of his people, which shall be all righteous. {#Isa 60:21} Thou shalt be a very Jehovahshammah. {#Eze 48:35}

The faithful city.] As once thou wast. {#Isa 1:21}

Ver. 27. Zion shall be redeemed in judgment.] Or, By judgment executed on her enemies, who are also God's enemies. {#Isa 1:24}

And her converts.] Such as were Manasseh, made of a lion a lamb; Matthew, of a publican an evangelist; Paul, of a Pharisee an apostle; Justin, of a philosopher a martyr; Cyprian, of a rhetorician, and, as some think, a magician, a most famous bishop; Augustine, of a Manichee a champion of the Church; Petrus Paulus Vergerius, of the Pope's Nuncio a zealous preacher at Zurich. That I speak not of Peter Martyr's converts in Italy, Earl Martinens, Marquess Caracciolus, Lacisius, Tremellius, Zanchius, and other great divines. Bucer was first wrought upon by Luther's sermon, preached before the emperor at Worms, and so from a Dominican became a famous Protestant. Bilney was converted by reading Erasmus' translation of the New Testament, for the eloquence of it, and particularly by that sweet sentence, #1Ti 1:15. Latimer was converted by blessed Bilney, as he calleth him, from a stiff Papist to a stout professor of the truth; Julius Palmer the martyr by reading Calvin's Institutions; Dr Sibbes by a sermon preached by Mr Paul Bains; Mr Whately by Mr Dod. {a}

In righteousness.] Or, By God's faithfulness in fulfilling his promises, whereby they are made partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust. {#2Pe 1:4}

Ver. 28. And the destruction.] Heb., The shivering or shattering. Tremellius rendereth it, the fragments or scraps—sc., of the dross above mentioned; these shall be broken and burnt together.

Shall be together.] As well the sinners in Zion, or hypocrites, as the transgressors or notorious offenders, shall be destroyed without distinction. Such as "turn aside unto their crooked ways"—stealing their passage to hell, as it were—the Lord shall "lead them forth with the workers of iniquity," with openly profane persons. {#Ps 125:5} The angels also shall bundle them up together to be burnt. {#Mt 13:30}

Ver. 29. For they shall be ashamed of the oaks.] Pudefient et Peribunt; they shall be ashamed of their false ways of worship, but not with a godly shame, such as was Ephraim's, {#Jer 31:19} that made him say, "What have I to do any more with idols." {#Ho 14:8 Eze 16:61 36:31 Da 9:5 2Th 3:14} Of this holy shame Chrysostom saith that it is the beginning of salvation, {a} as that which drives a man into himself makes him fall low in his own eyes, shame and shent himself in the presence of God, seek for covering by Christ, that the shame of his nakedness may not appear. {#Re 3:18,19} But the shame here mentioned is of another nature, unseasonable, unprofitable, not conducing at all to true repentance, such as was that of Cain, and of those Jews in #Jer 2:26, and of reprobates at the resurrection. {#Da 12:2}

Which ye have desired.] Or, Have delighted in, as adulterers do sin their sweet sin, as they call it.

And the gardens.] Where you have wickedly worshipped Priapus or Baalpeor. {b}

{b} Alludit verecunde ad scortationem, quae est in idolorum cultu. -Oeclamp.

Ver. 30. For ye shall be as an oak.] Peccato poenam accommodat; By oaks they sinned, and by a withering {a} oak is their punishment set forth: as also by a garden that wanteth water, wherein everything fadeth and hangeth the head, as suffering a marasm. Well might God say, #Ho 12:10, "I have multiplied visions, and used similitudes by the ministry of the prophets," such as are very natural, plain, and proper.

{a} Infelicissime marcescetis et exarescetis. -Jun.

Ver. 31. And the strong shall be as tow.] The idol is here called the strong one, either by an irony, sicut siquis scelestum bonum virum dicat, as if one should say to a knave, You are a right honest man: or else according to the idolater's false opinion of it, and vain expectation of it: like as in #2Ch 28:23, the gods of Damascus are said to have "smitten" or "plagued" Ahaz: not that they did so indeed (for an idol is "nothing in the world," and this strong in the text is weak as water, #Jer 10:5 2Co 8:4), but he thought they did so like as the silly Papists also think of their male saints and female saints, whereof they have not a few, but are shamefully foiled and frustrated; besides that they are here and elsewhere threatened with unquenchable fire. Jerome, following Symmachus, for "tow," hath the "refuse of tow," which is quickly kindled.

And the maker of it.] Or, And his work—that is, all your pains taken to no purpose in worshipping your idols, and bringing your memories, as they are called, and presents to them.

And they shall both burn together.] As one saith of Aretine's obscene book, that it is opus dignum quod cremetur cum authore,

{ a } fit for nothing but to make a bonfire to burn the author of it in. The beast and his complices shall be cast alive into the burning lake. {#Re 19:20}

And none shall quench them.] Hell fire is unquenchable. {#Isa 30:33 Mt 3:12} This Origen denied, and is therefore justly condemned by all sound divines.

{a} Boissard. Biblioth.

Ver. 1. The word that Isaiah the son of Amoz saw.] An august title or inscription, such as is not to be found in the whole book again, unless it be in the former chapter. There, alas! he had laboured in vain, and spent his strength for nought, and in vain. {as #Isa 49:4} Howbeit, he will try again, as considering that he had lost many a worse labour; and although his report were not believed, {#Isa 53:1} yet he would bestow one more sermon upon them, the short notes and general heads whereof we have in this and the two following chapters: I say, the general heads, for Calvin in his preface to this book telleth us, that it was the manner of the holy prophets to gather a compendious sum of what they had preached to the people, and the same to affix to the gates of the temple, that the prophecy might be the better viewed and learned of all, after which it was taken down by the priest, and put into the treasury of the temple, for the benefit of after ages.

Ver. 2. And it shall come to pass, &c.] {See Trapp on "Mic 4:1"} where we shall find that that prophet hath the same words with this αυτολεξει. So hath Obadiah the same with Jeremiah, St Mark with St Matthew, St Jude with St Peter, the blessed Virgin in her Magnificat with holy Hannah in her Canticle, &c.

Ver. 3. And many people shall go and say, &c.] {See Trapp on "Mic 4:2"} where we shall find that that prophet hath the same words with this αυτολεξει. So hath Obadiah the same with Jeremiah, St Mark with St Matthew, St Jude with St Peter, the blessed Virgin in her Magnificat with holy Hannah in her Canticle, &c.

Ver. 4. And he shall judge among the nations, &c.] {See Trapp on "Mic 4:3"} where we shall find that that prophet hath the same words with this αυτολεξει. So hath Obadiah the same with Jeremiah, St Mark with St Matthew, St Jude with St Peter, the blessed Virgin in her Magnificat with holy Hannah in her Canticle, &c.

Ver. 5. O house of Jacob.] So #Mic 2:7, "O thou that art called the house of Jacob, and the house of Israel." {#Isa 5:7} Thou that art "called a Jew, and makest thy boast of God." {#Ro 2:17} This Rupertus maketh to be the voice and advice of the converted and Christian Gentiles to the Jews; others, of our prophet to his perverse countrymen to join with the Gentiles, or rather to go before them as worthy guides in heavenly ways, and not to lie behind those whom they have so much slighted. {a}

Let us walk in the light of the Lord.] That is, in the law of the Lord (for Lex est Lux, Law is light, #Pr 6:23) and not by the sparks of our own tinder boxes, {#Isa 50:11} not by the rush candle of philosophical prescriptions. Let us "walk in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost." {as #Ac 9:31}

{a} Per simulationem provocat. -Oecolamp.

Ver. 6. Therefore thou hast forsaken thy people.] Or, But thou hast, &c. By a sad apostrophe {a} to God, he sets forth the Jews' dereliction and destruction irrecoverable, together with the causes of it, their impiety, cruelty, &c., but especially their contempt of Christ and his kingdom. Let us beware and be warned by their example. {#Ro 11:7-10} To be forsaken of God is the greatest mischief. Lay hold upon him, therefore, with Mary Magdalene, and say, Nobiscum, Christe, maneto: Extingui lucem nec patiare tuam.

Because they be replenished from the East.] Or, They are fuller than the East—that is, more superstitious than the Syrians and Mesopotamians, Balaam's countrymen. Ethnicismum illis improperat. Josephus {b} tells us, that a little before Christ came in the flesh, Herod had brought into Judea many superstitions of the Gentiles; and it appeareth by the first of Maccabees, that the Greeks had their schools at Jerusalem; and by the gospel, that the Pharisees held Pythagoras's transanimation, and many other pagan traditions.

And are soothsayers like the Philistines.] These were west of Judea. {#Isa 9:12} The Syrians before, and the Philistines behind. These were great soothsayers and sorcerers, and the Jews were tainted with that contagion, as sin is more catching than the plague. The vanity of this practice Cicero saw when he said, potest augur augurem {c} videre et non ridere?

And they please themselves {d} in the children of strangers.] They applaud and approve of their customs and commerces. Some think they are there taxed of paederasty, or sodomy, and that they boasted of it, as that odious Johannes a Casa did in print.

{a} Δεινότης est in apostrophe.

{b} Antiq., lib. xvi. cap. 10.

{c} Augurium, quasi avigerium.

{d} Adhaeserunt. -Vulg. In usu habent. -Chald.

Ver. 7. Their land also is full of silver.] They had forsaken the fountain of living waters, and now they hew them out broken cisterns; they have made their gold their god, which is a more subtle kind of idolatry, {#Col 3:5} dum sibi ipsis numen quoddam larariura constant. But though their houses were full of silver and gold, their hearts were not; for they were vexed with the curse of dissatisfaction. {#Ec 5:10}

Neither is there any end of their treasures.] Josephus saith that there was a world of money found at Jerusalem when taken by the Romans; so there was at Constantinople when taken by the Turks; and therefore taken, because the inhabitants could not find in their hearts to part with it, though for their own defence.

Their land also is full of horses.] And their hearts of creature confidence, -trust in the arm of flesh; as Josephus testifieth that the Jews were this way very faulty about the time of the last devastation.

Ver. 8. Their land also is full of idols.] As Babylon, "a land of idols"; {#Jer 50:38} as Athens, "wholly given to idolatry"; {#Ac 17:16} as China is said to have in it at this day a hundred thousand gods. And what shall we think of Popish idols? The word here rendered idols signifieth nihilitates, nothingness; for an idol is nothing in the world. {#1Co 8:4}

They worship the work of their own hands.] Scelestum el immane facinus, dirum scelus et execrandum; effraenata et praeceps amentia. See #Isa 44:15,18.

Ver. 9. And the mean man boweth down.] There is a general conspiracy, and they are altogether become abominable. Lords and lowlies, kings and captives, all sorts were idolaters. Some render it, "Shall be brought down, and shall be humbled." God loveth to retaliate, to abate and abase man's pride, by pulling down whatsoever height or strength they confide in.

Therefore forgive them not.] A pious prayer doubtless, proceeding from true zeal, which is an extreme heat of all the affections for God's glory. Ut pius sit in Deum, durus sit in proximum, saith Oecolampadius. Like another Elias he maketh intercession to God against Israel, {#Ro 11:2} whom he saw to be incorrigible, and their sin to be irremissible, their judgment unavoidable.

Ver. 10. Enter into the rock, and hide thee, J q.d., Do if thou canst; go where thou thinkest thou mayest be most secret and secure; but God's hand will surely find thee and ferret thee out, as it did the five kings of Canaan, hid in the cave of Makkedah, {#Jos 10:16,17} and as it did the wretched Jews, who were by the Romans pulled out of their privies and other lurking holes to the slaughter, at the last destruction of Jerusalem. Hoc autem perpetuo invenies apud peccatores, saith Oecolampadius here. This is ever usual with sinful persons, to desire to flee from God, but he meeteth them at every turn, as he did Adam, Cain, Jonah, &c. The safest way is to flee from God's anger to God's grace. Bloodletting is a cure of bleeding, and a burn a cure against a burn; and running to God is the way to escape him, as to close and get in with him that would strike you, doth avoid the blow. {a}

For fear of the Lord, and for the glory.] Heb., From before the fear of the Lord, and from the glory of his majesty; so the Chaldean and Roman for cesare {b} called. See #2Th 1:10, which seemeth to be taken from this text.

{a} Dr Rain.

{b} A mnemonic term for the first mood of the second figure of syllogisms, in which the major premiss and the conclusion are universal negatives, and the minor a universal affirmative.

Ver. 11. The lofty looks of man shall be humbled.] Ipsi antea tumidi et cervicosi Deum ultorem agnoscent. God shall bring down the haughty from their lofty tops where they have perched themselves, and shall take them a link lower, as they say; pride must have a fall, and no wonder; for whereas other sins flee from God, pride lets fly at him, and hence it is he is so utter an enemy to it.

And the Lord alone shall be exalted.] This the heathens also understood; and therefore the Romans would never receive the God of Israel, saith Augustine, ^{a} because they understood that he would be worshipped alone. Let the gods of the heathens be good fellows; the true God is a jealous God, and will not share his glory with another.

In that day.] Nempe statis quasi comitiis ^{#Isa 2:17} at the set time. It implieth also, saith one, that God will keep his time to a day. We have a like saying ourselves, A day breaks no square; but it is not so with God. ^{#Ex 12:40,41} The firstborn were slain at midnight, because just then the four hundred or four hundred and thirty years of their sojourning in Egypt were expired. "In that night was Belshazzar slain," ^{#Da 5:30} because then exactly the seventy years of their captivity were ended.

^{a} De Consen. Evang., lib. i. cap. 18.

Ver. 12. For the day of the Lord of hosts shall be upon every one that is proud.] These he "knoweth afar off"; ^{#Ps 138:6} these he "resisteth" as it were in battle array; ^{#Jas 4:6} these he "casteth down to the ground." ^{#Ps 147:6} One of the seven wise men of Greece said that God made it his business to humble the proud, and to lift up the lowly.

Ver. 13. And upon all the cedars of Lebanon.] Which was to the north. Ab Aquilone nihil boni.

That are high and lifted up.] No man's might or height, whether of state or of stature, can secure him in the day of God's displeasure.

And upon all the oaks of Bashan.] Which was to the east, by which way the Chaldees were to come upon them.

Ver. 14. And upon all the high mountains.] Optimates et dynastas designat. Hereby he meaneth the grandees and magnificoes, and all that are puffed up with an opinion of their own power or policy.

Ver. 15. And upon every high tower.] In these the Jews trusted, as sure help in time of distress, but all in vain.

Ver. 16. And upon all the ships of Tarshish.] Or, Of the Mediterranean Sea, the ships whereof were of great bulk and burden, and perhaps were garnished and inlaid with curious pictures, called here pictures of desire:

“Pictasque innare carinas.”—Virg.

Ver. 17. And the loftiness of man shall be.] This is oft inculcated, and all little enough to abate and abase the pride of people, and to "bring down every high thought that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and the obedience of Jesus Christ." {#2Co 10:5} This holy fisherman, that he might catch souls, spreads his net, dilates his discourse, telling the proud person over and over what to trust to.

Ver. 18. And the idols he shall utterly abolish.] Their names shall be cut off out of the land, and they shall no more be remembered, {#Zec 13:2} unless it be with shame and detestation. {#Eze 16:61 Ps 16:4 Ho 14:8 Isa 30:22}

Ver. 19. And they shall go into the holes.] See #Isa 2:10.

Ver. 20. In that day a man shall cast his idols.] Though never so much worth either for weight or workmanship, for value or elegance; he shall pollute what before he had perfumed. {#Isa 30:22}

To the moles and to the bats.] Caeci caeca caecis, having their eyes opened in that extreme danger; as the mole hath, they say, when the pangs of death are upon her. These, ashamed of their vain confidences, and hasting to hide themselves, shall cast their idols into bycorners, saying, {#Isa 30:22} "Get you hence." Moles do all their mischief by working underground, so saith Epiphanius do heretics; but if once they be above ground, they are weak and contemptible creatures. Bats have wings as a bird, and teeth as a beast, being both and yet neither. Such are our vespertilian {bat-like} professors, time serving gospellers, who should do well to cast away either their wings or their teeth; and loathing this bat-like nature, be what they are, either birds or beasts.

Ver. 21. To go into the clefts of the rocks.] See #Isa 2:10. Only here the double repetition of this dreadful judgment is very emphatic, and may serve to teach preachers to inculcate upon their hearers God's severity against sinners, and to remind them much of those last things, death, judgment, hell. Utinam ubique de his dissemeretur; saith Chrysostom, that excellent preacher. Oh that these things might resound from all pulpits!

Ver. 22. Cease ye from man.] Man or means, human helps and creature comforts; think not that these can secure you from an angry God, or moat you up against his fire. Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his dust, in that very day his golden thoughts perish. {#Ps 146:3,4} {See Trapp on "Ps 146:3"} {See Trapp on "Ps 146:4"}

Whose breath is in his nostrils.] Every moment ready to puff out, as the Emperor Jovinian's did; a good emperor, but he reigned only seven months, being stifled, as it is thought, with the smell of his bedchamber newly white-limed, wherein he had commanded a great fire to be made on a cold night. {a} Hence Jerome; -Jovinian, who succeeded Julian the apostate in the empire, whenas yet he had scarce tasted of the goodness of it, factore prunarum suffocatus interiit, {b} died suffocated with the stench of hot burning coals, declaring to all men what a poor thing man is in his greatest power. The Cardinal of Lorrain was lighted to his lodging and to his long home both at once by a poisoned torch; Pope Adrian IV was choked by a fly getting into his windpipe, A.D. 1159. {c}

For wherein is he to be esteemed?] All his power without God is but weakness, all his wisdom folly, all his plenty poverty. What is man, saith a father, but soul and soil? {d} Breath and body; a puff of wind the one, a pile of dust the other—no solidity in either. Abstinet ergo vos ab ipso homine—nam quanti est? What reckoning is to be made of him?

Ver. 1. For, behold.] This is also part of the former sermon, though made the beginning of another chapter; for of our prophet that is some way true which Petrarch saith of Livy, viz., that he wrote many books, Quos in decades non ipse sed fastidiosa legentium scidit imperitia, which not himself, but others without any great skill divided into decades—sc., chapters.

The Lord—doth take away.] Heb., Is taking away—i.e., He will surely and suddenly do it, and thereby pave a way to the utter ruin of all. For as it was a sign Samson meant to pull down the house when he pulled away the pillars, so that God is about to ruin a state when he plucketh away those that are the shores and props of it.

The stay and the staff.] Validum et validam, {a} so some render it, the Miriams as well as the Moseses. {#Mic 6:4} Others, {b} baculum et bacillum, the staff and the little staff: all the supports and stays of the State, both great and small, one with another; cease ye therefore from man. {as #Isa 2:22}

The whole stay of bread.] Sustenance as well as supporters, Quicquid alimento aut munimento esse poterat.

{b} Piscator.

Ver. 2. The mighty man, and the man of war.] Such as were David's mighties; Hannibal; Fabius Maximus, of whom the poet, Hic patria est, murique urbis stant pectore in uno; Scipio Africanus, of whose death when Metellus heard, he ran out into the public forum and cried out, Concurrite cives, urbis vestrae moenia corruerunt; Come forth and consult what is to be done, for your city is undone.

The judge and the prophet.] When God gathereth such by clusters as it were, some evil is at hand; as when men pull up their hedges and fences, it is open tide.

And the prudent.] Heb., The diviner: such as have their eyes in their head, {#Ec 2:14} their hearts at their right hands, {#Ec 10:2} that judiciously pondering things past, can prudently order things present, and providently foresee to prevent dangers likely to ensue.

And the ancient.] With whom is wisdom and counsel. {#Job 32:4,6,7}

Ver. 3. The captain of fifty.] One of the least and lowest commanders in war; such also shall fail, and therefore all must needs fall to wreck and ruin. This Epaminondas when he was dying foresaw at Thebes, and therefore counselled his countrymen to make peace upon any terms. {a}

And the honourable.] Heb., The man eminent in countenance; Sept., Θαυμαστον, a man of respect and authority. In the eyes of Augustus Caesar sat such a rare majesty, as a man could hardly endure to behold them without closing of his own.

And the cunning artificer.] Such as was Hiram, whom for honour's sake Solomon called father; Archimedes, and such others who are of great use to a State, for making of engines and instruments.

And the eloquent orator.] Heb., Skilled in charms. Quintilian describes an orator thus: Vir bonus dicendi peritus, A good man well spoken. Ille regit dictis animos et pectora mulcet, He carrieth the people which way he pleaseth. The Athenians called such δημαγωγους, and set a high price upon them, as they did on Pericles, Demosthenes, Phocion, &c. {b}

{a} Plutarch.

{b} Intelligentem, meditatam et gravem orationem. -Oecolamp.

Ver. 4. And I will give children to be their princes.] Si non annis, at animis; If not with years but with life, such as were Ahaz, Manasseh, the four last kings of Judah, the calamity of that kingdom. {a} Princes that are witless, wilful, weak, or wicked, are the people's woe; {#Ec 10:16} this childhood of theirs is the maturity of their subjects' misery. {#Job 34:30}

And babes shall rule over them.] Sept., Mockers; some render it foxes, others effeminate persons, but babes is best. Such a one was Rehoboam, and Honorius the Emperor, who when he heard that his city of Rome was taken by Alarichus, grieved most of all for the loss of a certain bird which was there kept for him, and by him called "Rome." Indignum sane, Regem aves praeferre urbibus, saith the historian.

Ver. 5. And the people shall be oppressed, one by another.] The greater devouring the lesser, as fishes do. How should it be otherwise, when there is either no government, or not that which is good; but all things turned, as here, topsy turvy, without any respect to age, order, or dignity, and “Scinditur ineertum studia in contraria vulgus.”—Virg.

This dissension is the mother of dissolution, saith Nazianzen. This dissipation and perversion of order and manners is the forerunner of utter desolation and subversion.

Ver. 6. When a man shall take hold of his brother.] This is a further mischief that government shall go a-begging, and scarce one be found that shall hold it worth having. The Venetians have magistrates called Proegadi, because at first men were prayed to take the office, and not many would accept of it; this was the case here. Men are naturally ambitious of ruledom—the bramble thinks it a goodly thing to reign over the trees—but they may soon have enough of it, and be forced to cry out, as he once did of his diadem, O rills pannus! O base rag, not worth taking up at a man's feet!

Thou hast clothing.] Fit for a prince; some badge of honour, and such apparel as may procure thee respect; for “Hunc homines decorant, quem vestimenta decorant.”

Let this ruin be under thy hand.] That is, by a hypallage, {a} let thy hand be under this ruin, that is, under this desolate and ruined State, to raise it up and repair it.

{a} A figure of speech in which there is an interchange of two elements of a proposition, the natural relations of these being reversed.

Ver. 7. In that day shall he swear, saying.] It is come to pass in some places at this day, Ut ambigant prudentiores, otium, an officium aliquod Reip. sint persecuturi, that wise men doubt whether they had best bear office or not; but true goodness is public spirited, though to private disadvantage.

I will not be an healer,] i.e., A ruler. I will not be a binder up, ^{a} or a surgeon, for this State is no better than a great spittle; the whole head is sick and the whole heart heavy, &c. I dare not therefore meddle with it, since it is incurable, incorrigible. The Septuagint render it, I will not be thy prince. A king hath his name in Greek from healing, ^{b} as Plutarch observeth, because he is to be the physician or surgeon of the commonwealth.

In mine house is neither bread nor clothing.] I have not for mine own, much less for you. A prince had need to be well underlaid, that he may not need to pill and poll his subjects, or in judging to gape after gain.

^{a} In caducum parietem non inclinabo.

^{b} 'Αναζ from ακος medela cure.

Ver. 8. For Jerusalem is fallen.] Therefore I will not meddle, since it is a very sad thing to be physician to a dying State, quando conclamatum est, when men are forsaken of their hopes.

Because their tongue and their doings are against the Lord] They set their mouths against heaven, and like so many wolves they howl upwards; they lay the reins on the neck, and let their unruly tongues run riot. And as they talk so they act, doing "wickedly with both hands earnestly," against the author of their being and well being.

To provoke the eyes of his glory.] His eyes run to and fro through the earth; and all the wickedness in the world is committed before his face This they know, and yet go on in sin, as if they did it on purpose to provoke him, and to see what he can do. Oecolampadius noteth, that God's eyes are here mentioned, because men are easily provoked to anger by a hurt in the eye. And Junius here observeth that God's eyes are called the eyes of his glory, because as he is glorious in himself, so he is either to be glorified by us, or else he will surely glorify himself upon us, such especially as are obstinate and impudent, as here.

Ver. 9. The show of their countenance doth witness against them,] q.d., You may see by their very looks what lewd lowlies they are. Their cruelty, pride, envy, hypocrisy, mulieorsity sitteth and showeth itself apparently in their faces and foreheads. Wisdom maketh the face to shine, saith Solomon; et ipse aspectus viri boni delectat. Good men look lovely, saith Seneca, as did that angel of God, John Bradford, quoth Dr Taylor, martyr; not so Cain, when discontented at God, and displeased at his brother; {#Ge 4:6} he scowled and looked like a dog under a door, as we say. The thoughts are oft known by the countenance; and the heart is printed upon the face. Damascen calleth the eyes the exact images of the imaginations? {a} And the Italians have a proverb, that a man with his words close and his countenance loose, may travel undiscovered what he is, or goes about, all the world over. The word here used for "show" or "trial," doth in Hithpael signify to make a man's self unknown.

And they declare their sin, as Sodom.] They tell it out. {as #Jud 14:16} And as the shameless Sodomites said to Lot, Bring them out to us that we may know them. {#Ge 19:5} See the like impudence in Lamech; {#Ge 4:23,24} in Lot's two daughters. {#Ge 19:36,37} This impudent naming of their incestuous brats, as begotten by their own father, showeth that they declared their sin, as Sodom, where they had lived and learned it.

They hide it not.] So #Eze 24:7. Her blood is in the midst of her; she set it upon the top of a rock, as it were a-sunning; she poured it not upon the ground, to cover it with dust. See #Jer 2:25.

Woe to their soul.] To their very soul. All wickedness hath a woe hanging at the heels of it, but especially that which is grown impudent, a noon day devil. The Septuagint here have it thus: Woe to their soul, for that they have taken evil counsel; saying, Let us bind the just One, for that he is not for our purpose or profit. Wherein they do insinuate the mystery of Christ's passion, saith Oecolampadius, and do manifestly tax their own nation. Epiphanius {b} testifieth of the Jews at Tiberias, after the last destruction of Jerusalem, that it was usual with them, when any of their dear friends or kindred were at the point of death, to whisper these words secretly into their ears, Crede in Iesum Nazarenum crucifixum, Believe in Jesus of Nazareth, whom our chieftains crucified, for he it is who shall come to judge thee at the last day. Now if this be true, how great is the obstinace and impudence of that perverse people, who still sin against such strong convictions!

{b} Epiphan. apud Lonicer. in Theat. Histor. p. 96.

Ver. 10. Say ye to the righteous.] Tell them so from me, saith God, for their comfort and encouragement. Zuinglius when he had preached terror to the wicked was wont to add, Probe vir, hoc nihil ad te. All this concerneth not thee, O thou godly man. When the dogs in a house are beaten, the children will be apt to fright and cry; so when the wicked are threatened, good men are apt to be troubled. Say therefore to such, and let them know assuredly,

That it shall be well with him.] Heb., That good sc., shall betide him, whatever befalleth others God shall be with the good; {#2Ch 19:11} "Yet God is good to Israel, to the pure in heart." {#Ps 73:1 Ec 8:12}

For they shall eat the fruit of their doings.] They shall "reap in due time if they faint not"; they shall eat of the fat, and drink of the sweet. {#Isa 25:6} See #Isa 65:13 Pr 14:14, {See Trapp on "Isa 65:13"} {See Trapp on "Pr 14:14"}

Ver. 11. Woe to the wicked.] This sentence should ever sound in the wicked man's ears for a powerful retentive from wickedness, considering the evil consequence thereof, that doleful ουαι ουαι; woe and alas for evermore! And when thou art making, saith one, a covenant with sin, say to thy soul, as Boaz said to his kinsman, "At what time thou buyest it, thou must have Ruth with it." {#Ru 4:4} If thou wilt have the pleasure of sin, the ways of wickedness, thou must also have the vengeance and wrath of God with it, and let thy soul answer as he here doth: No, I may not do it; I shall mar and spoil a better inheritance; I shall inherit a curse, &c. Look, saith Mr Bradford, {a} martyr, to the tag tied to God's law, the malediction, which is such as cannot but make us to cast our currish tails between our legs, if we believe it.

It shall go ill with him.] Utcunque sibi de rebus praesentibus gratuletur. {b} Though he stroke himself on the head, saying, I shall have peace, though I walk in the imaginations of my heart, to add drunkenness to thirst. {#De 29:19} Tell him from me, saith God, Evil, sc., shall betide him; yea, "an evil, an only evil," awaiteth him, {#Eze 7:5} let him look for it.

The reward of his hands shall be given him.] He shall reap as he sowed, drink as he brewed. {#Ga 6:7,8}

Ver. 12. As for my people.] Now the "people of my wrath, and of my curse"; Loammi, discovenanted, discarded.

Children are their oppressors.] Rulers he calleth them not, as being too good a name for them, but "oppressors"; and these were boys and women—i.e., such as were no wiser than children, nor had any more command of their passions than weak women, and were therefore unfit for government. Brunhild, the wife of Sigebert, king of Metz, Fridegund, the wife of Chilperic, and Katherine Medicis, wife of Henry II, are said to be the furies of France. {a} What work they made in that kingdom in their generations, by abusing their husbands' love and authority, histories are full. The like did Jezebel in Israel, Athalia in Judah, and Dame Alice Pierce here in England in King Edward III's days. This woman being the king's concubine, and presuming on his favour, whom in his old age she had subdued, grew so insolent, that she imprisoned Sir Peter la Mare, Speaker for the Parliament; intermeddled with courts of justice, and other offices, where she herself would sit to effect her desire, {b} which, though in all who are so exalted, are ever excessive, yet in a woman most immoderate, as having less of discretion, and more of greediness. Heliogabalus in a merriment set up a senate of women; but then their ordinances were correspondent, as what attire each woman should use, how they should take place, when salute, &c. But these in the text, working upon their husbands' impotencies, who were children, in the sense that Shechem, the son of Humor, is so called {#Ge 34:19} — neque distulit puer, a lad or a boy, because swayed not by right reason—but by blind affection, exacted of the poor people unreasonable tributes and pensions for the maintenance of their pride and luxury. Est haec ingens plaga, saith one; this is a great mischief to a State, such as Greece and Rome sometimes groaned under. Diophantus, the son of Themistocles, once boasted that he ruled all Greece, because he ruled his mother, she ruled his father, and he ruled Greece. Cato also complained, Mulieres regunt nos, nos Senatum, Senatus Romam, Roma orbem; our women, said he, rule us, we rule the senate, the senate the city, and the city the whole world.

O my people, they which lead thee.] {c} Or, Those that bless thee and pronounce thee happy, saying as do thy false prophets, those flatterers, because thou hast with thee the oracles and ordinances of God, the ceremonies and sacrifices, praising thee therefore, and promising thee all happiness, soothing thee up in thy sins, &c. Qui ducunt te, seducunt; who lead and seduce you, false guides they are, and Destroy the way of thy paths.] Heb., They swallow up—that is, they hide from thee thy duty, and so harden thee in thy sin.

{a} Heyl. Cosmography.

{b} Dan. Hist., p. 257.

{c} Qui beatificant te, who blesses you.

Ver. 13. The Lord standeth up to plead.] Or, To debate, {#Job 9:3 Pr 25:8,9} to argue the case, and to hear pleas. He is content, for the clearing of his justice and conviction of sinners, to submit his courses unto scanning. See #Isa 5:3. Iudicate quaeso, Judge, I pray you. {so #Jer 2:9} Wherefore I will yet plead with you, and with your children's children will I plead. But when that is done,

He standeth to judge the people.] And the Lord will enter into judgment. {#Isa 3:14} Three various words are here made use of for judgment, to show, saith Oecolampadius, that God hath been, is, and shall be Judge, and that in his judgment, nihil relinquetar inexpensum, nothing shall be left unconsidered.

Ver. 14. The Lord will enter into judgment with the ancients.] With the princes and rulers, each of which shall have cause to cry out,

“ Iudex ante fui, nunc iudicis ante tribunal Sistor.”

For ye have eaten up the vineyard.] Vos, non caret emphasi, "Ye," even "ye" that should have preserved it, and wrought in it, have depastured and destroyed my vineyard, that is, my Church, {as #Isa 5:17} or poor men's possessions, through your extortions and oppressions.

And the spoil of the poor is in your houses.] You are taken επι αυτοφωρω, {a} in the very act of your theft, as Cacus was, and Verres, &c.

{a} Deprehensi estis in furto. -Oecolamp.

Ver. 15. What mean you, that you beat my people to pieces?] Heb., What to you? all in a word, short and sharp—q.d., What reason had you, what authority to do thus? That was a witty answer that was given once here to the Pope's exactor, who pleaded that all churches were his, and therefore he might call for what sums he pleased; a nimble disputant replied that all churches were the Pope's in a sense, viz., Tuitione sed non fruitione; defensione, non dissipatione -i.e., to defend them, but not to destroy them. If God give any man power, it is for "edification, and not for destruction." {#2Co 13:10}

And grind the faces.] Holding their noses to the grindstone, as we say—by hard usage. See on #Mic 3:3.

Saith the Lord God.] Dixit Dominator Dominus; he who is higher than the highest, and being Lord of hosts, hath those at hand that are higher than they. {#Ec 5:8}

Ver. 16. Moreover the Lord saith.] He hath this other saying to the other sex, for the maintaining of whose pride and luxury their husbands and paramours exercised such cruelty, as before, in the reign of Henry II, King of France, A.D. 1554. Many were burned

there for religion, as they said, but indeed to satiate the covetousness, and support the pomp of Diana Valentina, the king's mistress, to whom he had given all the confiscation of goods made in the kingdom for cause of heresy. {a}

Because the daughters of Zion.] The court ladies.

Are haughty.] Elatae, h. e., superbia inflatae, puffed up with pride, first in heart, and then in habit; for pride will bud. {#Eze 7:10}

And walk.] Women should keep the house, saith Paul. {#Tit 2:5} Sarah was in the tent, {#Ge 17:9} and these professed to be her daughters, but were nothing like her, Modestia enim a superbia triumphata est.

With stretched forth necks.] Like cranes or swans, that they might show their fair foreheads, whereas nature hath given the submiss and modest visages.

And wanton eyes.] Heb., Lying or deceiving, viz., by their lewd, lascivious looks, twinkling and making signs. Some render it facie cerussata, with their painted faces, and counterfeit visages, whereby, to the reproach of their Maker, they would seem fairer than they are.

Walking and mincing as they go.] Or, Tripping or tabering, with an affected gait, after the manner of dancers. Or ruffling in their silks and taffetas, with which last word the original seems to have affinity. Others derive it from taph, a little child, and render it instar parvulorum ambulans, they take short steps, as little ones do, so nice they are in their gait and garb; elaborata quadam concinnitate gressum modulantes. {b}

Making a tinkling with their feet.] Going as if they were shackled, or as young colts that are to be broken and brought to a pace. Some think they wore bells about their legs, or spangles on their pantofles. Pope Sixtus Quartus was wont to give his harlot, Tyresia, pantofles covered with pearls.

{a} Hist. of Council of Trent, p. 387.

{b} Minutim et numerose passus conserunt. -Jac. Revius.

{c} A slipper; formerly applied very variously, app., at one time or another, to every sort of indoor slippers or loose shoes; esp. to the high-heeled cork-soled chopins; also to outdoor overshoes or goloshes; and to all manner of Oriental and non-European slippers, sandals, and the like.

Ver. 17. Therefore the Lord will smite with a scab the crown of the head.] He will not only pull off their rich pantofles off their feet, but also their lovely locks from off their heads, with scabs and scales, perhaps caused by some foul disease, as the lues venerea or plica polonica. {a}

And will discover their secret parts.] Not having a rag left to cover them with, while stripped of all by the enemy; they are driven away as those Egyptians were, {#Isa 20:4} naked and barefoot, even with their buttocks uncovered, to the shame of Egypt; or as the Albigenses in France at Carcassona had quarter for their lives given them by the Popish bishops and other cruciates {b} that persecuted them, but on this condition, that both men and women should depart the town stark naked in the view of the whole army. {c}

{c} Rivet. Jesuit. Vapul.

Ver. 18. The Lord will take away the bravery.] All the following bravery; for the prophet as punctually and particularly threateneth all down, as if he had lately seen the ladies' wardrobes in Jerusalem. And if this vanity of gallantry be so blameworthy in a woman, who is naturally ζῶον φιλοκοσμον, addicted to fine attire, how much more in a man, who shall turn lands into laces, and embroider his cloak with woods and parks and lordships, lining it, haply, with obligations and bonds and statutes?

Of their tinkling ornaments, &c.] Here and in the following verses we have an inventory of the ladies' gallantry, such as made the mighty men fall in the war. {#Isa 3:25,26} This was the fruit of their twinkling eyes and tinkling ornaments. Vatablus saith that the Spanish women did wear bells about their heels when they danced.

And the round tires like the moon.] Lunata monilia crescent shaped collars—Statius.

Ver. 19. And the chains and the bracelets, &c.] The particulars of all their bravery we can say little unto upon certainty, since we are at this day ignorant of what ornaments and habiliments were then in use; and besides, the names here given unto them are such as the Jews themselves can hardly tell what to make of. It is a sad thing that the gauds and gaities of this age and country are such and so many, as that not six or seven verses, but so many whole chapters might be easily taken up in inventorying them. Lysander, a heathen, will rise up in judgment against many among us; for he would not allow his daughters to wear gorgeous attire, saying it would not make them so comely as common. That is very remarkable that is reported ^{a} of Mr Foxe the martyrologue, that when a son of his, returning from his travels into foreign parts, came to him in Oxford, attired in a loose, outlandish fashion, Who are you? said his old father, not knowing him. He replied, I am your son. Oh, what enemy of thine, said he, hath taught thee so much vanity? The Hebrew word, beghed, for a garment, comes from baghad, which signifies to deal perfidiously or treacherously, { #Isa 21:3 } perhaps because it is tegumentum et testimonium, not more a covering of man's shame than a testimony of his first sin in falling from God. So that a man or woman hath no more cause to brag about his fine clothes, or to be proud of them, than a thief of a silk rope, or than one hath of a plaster laid to his filthy Sore.

Ver. 21. {See Trapp on "Isa 3:19"}

Ver. 22. {See Trapp on "Isa 3:19"}

Ver. 23. {See Trapp on "Isa 3:19"}

Ver. 24. And there shall be instead of sweet smell, stink.] Ex illuvie et sordibus captivitatis et carceris. Martial and Marcellinus tell us of a natural stench the Jews have, such as made the Emperor Aurelius, coming among some of them, and annoyed with their ill savour, to cry out, O Marcomanni, O Quadi, O Sarmatae, &c., O Marcomans, Quades, and Sarmatians, at length I have met with those that are more nasty and loathsome than you are. ^{a} These dainty dames are threatened with dirty doings in captivity and prison, such as should render them odious.

And instead of a girdle, a rent.] Or, Rags; or, a beating. The Vulgate rendereth it a cord.

And instead of well set hair.] Heb., Work of even or smooth setting, or trimming, Τριχολασται, or hair trimmers, were anciently noted for effeminate. Pompey is taxed in history for that he did unico digitulo caput scalpere, scratch his well set hair with his little finger only.

Baldness.] Pro crispanti crine calvitium, et pro fascia pectorali cilicium. Pride is so hateful to God that such as are guilty of it seldom escape his visible vengeance.

And burning instead of beauty.] Burning; that is, sun burning.

{a} Ammian. lib. ii.

Ver. 25. Thy men shall fall by the sword.] For suffering and favouring the women's excesses, such as are today naked breasts and shoulders Abhorred filth! Our King Henry VI at such a sight cried, Fie, fie, ladies, in sooth you are to blame, &c.

Ver. 26. And her gates shall lament.] Because unfrequented. {#La 1:4}

And the king desolate.] Swept and wiped of all; not, as once, with her turrified head {a} and stretched forth neck.

Sitteth upon the ground.] As a sad mourner. Money was coined by Vespasian with a woman sitting at the root of a palm tree, and this inscription, Iudaea capta. The Jews captured.

{a} πυργουν κεφάλην.—Nazian.

Chapter 4

Ver. 1. And in that day,] sc., That day of desolation. {#Isa 3:26}

Seven women,] i.e., Many women. See the like #Zec 8:23. The women had been grievously threatened, {#Isa 3:16-24} the men also for their sakes, {#Isa 3:25,26} and yet the prophet hath not done with them. So heinous is sin in either sex.

Shall take hold of one man.] Who themselves were wont to be sued unto by many men; and perhaps were not content with their own husbands when they had them alive, but were sick of a pleurisy.

We will eat our own bread, &c.] Whereas the husband giveth to his wife food, raiment, and due benevolence: these would crave the last only, which yet they could not do neither in this sort but by laying aside woman-like modesty.

Only let us be called by thy name.] As wives used to be by their husbands' names, both among the Jews and other nations, as Mary Cleophas, Mary Zebedee, &c. Solomon's wife was after his name called Shulamite; {#So 6:13} and the Roman ladies were wont to say to their husbands, Ubi tu Caius, ibi ego Caia. Where you are Gaius there I am Gaia.

To take away our reproach.] Of want of husbands and children. See #Ps 78:63 Jud 11:36,37 Jer 30:17.

Ver. 2. In that day the branch of the Lord.] Here the prophet draweth to a close of this excellent sermon, and he concludeth it as he began, with a gracious promise of the coming and kingdom of Christ, and of the felicity of his subjects, which consisteth, first, In their sanctity; {#Isa 4:3,4} secondly, In their security. {#Isa 4:5,6} This is more amply set forth in #Isa 11:1-16

The branch of the Lord.] The Lord Christ, the consolation and expectation of Israel, called elsewhere the bud or "branch." {#Isa 11:1 Zec 3:8 6:12} {See Trapp on "Isa 11:1"} {See Trapp on "Zec 3:8"} {See Trapp on "Zec 6:12"} "The dayspring from on high," {#Lu 1:78} is by Beza rendered the branch from on high, and the branch of righteousness. {#Jer 23:5 33:15} The Jewish doctors also understand it of the Messiah; Istud germen quod de virga Iesse virore virgineo pullulavit, saith Bernard. The branch of the Lord he is called, saith Oecolampadius, because, being true God, he hath God to his Father in heaven; and the "fruit of the earth," because, being also true man, he had the Virgin to his mother on earth. Ecce habet incarnationis mysterium. Lo, here we have, saith he, the great mystery of "God manifested in the flesh." Others by the "fruit of the earth" here do understand the body of the Church, which is as the plant that groweth out of that branch.

Shall be beautiful and glorious, excellent and comely.] Heb., "Beauty and glory," "excellence and comeliness," or gayness and goodness, all in the abstract, and yet all too little. All this Christ is and more to his elect, who are here set forth by many titles, as "the escaped of Israel," {a} the "residue in Zion," the "remnant in Jerusalem," the "written among the living there," &c. Saepe autem ad paupertatem aut paucitatem redigitur ecclesia. Howbeit known to the Lord are all his, as well as if he had their names set down in a book.

{a} Evasores Israelis.

Ver. 3. He that is left in Zion.] See #Isa 4:2.

Shall be called holy.] Heb., Holy shall be said to him or of him: he shall have the name and note of a saint, the comfort and the credit of it. Christ's holiness shall be both imputed and imparted unto them: he shall both expiate their sins and heal their natures, pay their debts, and give them a stock of grace and holiness, so that men shall call them a "holy people." {#Isa 62:12}

Even every one that is written among the living.] Written in God's book of life, which is matter of greater joy than to have the devils subdued unto us; {#Lu 10:17} for a man may cast out devils, and yet be himself cast to the devil; {#Mt 7:22,23} but in God's book of life there are no blots, no crossings out, but "as many as are ordained to eternal life believe," and the same are "kept as in a garrison by the power of God through faith unto salvation." {#1Pe 1:4} The prophet seemeth here to allude to that custom in Jerusalem of enrolling the names of all the citizens. {#Ps 87:6} Christ Jesus is the Master of the Rolls in heaven, {#Re 13:8} wherein none are recorded but such as are designed "to glory and virtue." {#1Pe 1:2 2Th 2:13} All others are said to be "dead in trespasses and sins," {#Eph 2:1} and to be "written in the earth." {#Jer 17:13} Those priests that could not produce their genealogy were cashiered by the Tirshatha: {#Ezr 2:63} so shall those one day be by Christ whose names are not found written among the living in Jerusalem.

Ver. 4. When the Lord shall have washed away the filth.] The ordure or excrement: {a} sin is the excrement of the soul, the superfluity or garbage of naughtiness, the devil's vomit. From this abominable filth Christ hath "loved and washed his with his own blood, that he may make them kings and priests unto God and his Father." {#Re 1:5} He not only washeth his people from their sins, but taketh away their swinish natures, whereby they would else return to their former wallowing in the mire as so many Borboritae.

Of the daughters of Zion.] Whose pride in apparel, wantonness, luxury, &c., those peccadilloes, as they are commonly counted, are here rightly called filth and blood by these penitentiaries, whose property is to aggravate and lay load upon their former evil practices, which now swell like toads in their eyes; neither can they find words bad enough to call them by.

By the spirit of judgment.] By pouring upon them the clean water of the Holy Spirit, whereby also they are enabled to make a right judgment of things that are excellent or that differ, and to judge themselves worthy to be destroyed for their many and mighty sins.

And by the spirit of burning.] So called because it burneth up our corruptions, carnis vitia et carcinomata; and, secondly, Because it inflameth our hearts with a zeal for God's glory, making us all on a light fire, as Chrysostom saith that Peter was like a man made all of fire walking among stubble. And of one that desired to know what kind of man Basil was, it is said there was presented in a dream a pillar of fire with this motto, Talis est Basilius, Such a one is Basil.

Ver. 5. And the Lord will create.] For the safeguard and security of his peculiar people thus purified unto himself, {#Tit 2:14} and that they may serve him without fear in holiness and righteousness before him all and every day of their lives. {#Lu 1:74,75} God, rather than fail, will "create," as he did of old in Egypt and the wilderness, "a cloud by day, a flaming fire by night"; against heat, a "tabernacle"; against storm and rain, a "covert"; anything, everything that heart can wish or need require: dux erit et defensor, lux erit et consolator. He will be to all his "a sun and a shield; he will give grace and glory," &c. {#Ps 84:11 So 2:3}

Upon every dwelling place.] Upon every private house, and place of his people's abode: their walls are continually before him. {#Isa 49:16} He loveth to look upon their habitations, and will hedge them about. {#Job 1:10}

And upon her assemblies.] Or, Meeting places for God's services. Howbeit this is to be taken cum exceptione crucis: with the exception of the cross, the poor Protestants in France have not only been disturbed, but destroyed, at their church assemblies, by the Duke of Guise and other Popish persecutors. But the godly in such a case "glorify God in the very fire," and bear fruit in such a tempest by God's defence and benediction.

A cloud and smoke.] Or, A smokey cloud, alluding to that cloudy pillar {#Ex 13:21 14:19} which was a cloud by day and a fire by night to Israel: so is Christ a cooling refreshment to his own in the scorching day of temptation or trouble, and a comfortable lamp of light to direct and protect them through the wilderness of this world. The cloud was spread over them for a covering, {#Ps 105:39} and sometimes came between them and their enemies behind them; {#Ex 14:19} and this was done in Egypt, where was no rain: how then was there a cloud? God "created it."

For upon all the glory.] Israel is called "God's glory"; {#Isa 46:13} the "house of his glory"; {#Isa 60:7} "a crown of glory"; {#Isa 62:3} a "throne of glory"; {#Jer 14:21} God's ornament; the beauty of his ornament, and that set in majesty; {#Eze 7:20} his royal "diadem"; {#Isa 62:3} his "jewels," {#Mal 3:17} which he wears, as great men do their jewels, to make him glorious in the eyes of men; they are the signet on his right hand. {#Isa 49:5}

Shall be a covering] As the cloud covered the tabernacle, and as the rams' skins covered the ark from the violence of wind and weather; so will Christ the Church.

Ver. 6. And there shall be a tabernacle for a shadow.] Or, He shall be. Christ is a shelter and a shadow to his, whenas all worldly comforts are but as so many burning glasses, to scorch the soul more.

Chapter 5

Ver. 1. Now will I sing.] Now, or, Now I pray, as stirring up his hearers to attention; for here beginneth his third sermon. He had endeavoured, but with little good effect, to convince them of their detestable unthankfulness, apostasy, and other enormities, in prose. Now he resolves to try another course, and to be unto them as a poet rather than a prophet, if haply they might be taken by the sweetness of his verse, and loveliness of his voice. {#Eze 33:32}

“ *Metra parant animos, comprehendunt plurima paucis:
Aures delectant, pristina commemorant.* ”

True it is that poets, for the most part, are dulcissime vani, most sweetly vain, as Augustine said of Homer. And some have noted well concerning St Paul, that citing his countryman, Aratus (for he was a Cilician), he nameth him not, but only saith, "Certain of your own poets," {#Ac 17:28} notwithstanding the piety of his beginning, ‘Ἐκ Διὸς ἀρχόμεθα, or the divineness of his subject, the heavens—more sublime and pure matter than useth to be in the wanton pages of other poets. But our divine poet is of another alloy, and his holy song is of the same strain with that of Moses, of Deborah and Barak, of Hannah, of David, — qui noster Orpheus est, saith Euthymius, the "sweet singer of Israel," {#2Sa 23:1} -of Solomon with his Song of Songs; saving that this is lugubre carmen, saith Oecolampadius, et tragediae quam comediae similis, a lamentable ditty, and more like a tragedy than a comedy; for, though the prophet beginneth merrily, yet he endeth heavily; it is of "mercy and judgment" that he singeth.

To my well beloved,] i.e., To Christ, the Church's bridegroom, cuius amicus et administer sum, whose paranymph {advocate} I am and well wisher; {#Joh 3:29 2Co 11:2,3} some render it for my beloved, or in his defence.

A song.] Or, Poem, whereto this first verse is the proem or preface. A spiritual song it is, most artificially composed, and set out with the most exquisite skill that might be.

Of my beloved.] Of him whom my soul loveth; {as #So 1:7} Jonathan loved David (1.) With a love of union; {#Isa 18:1} (2.) With a love of complacence; {#Isa 5:19} (3.) With a love of benevolence. {#Isa 20:4} So doth a gracious heart love Jesus Christ. My Love was crucified, said Ignatius, {a} whose heart was even a lump of love.

Touching his vineyard.] That degenerate plant of a strange vine unto him, {#Jer 2:21} the plantation and supplantation whereof is here, first, Parabolically propounded; secondly, More plainly expounded. Some read it, "to his vineyard"; others, "for his vineyard." See #Mt 21:33,34 Mr 12:1,2 Lu 20:9,16.

My beloved.] See how oft he harps upon this sweet string, and cannot come off. What a man loveth he will be talking of, as the huntsman of his hounds, the drunkard of his cups, the worldling of his wealth, &c. Ten times in eight verses together doth St Paul mention the name of Jesus, {#1Co 1:1-4 7-10} showing thereby that it was to him mel in ore, melos in aure, iubilum in corde, the sweetest music.

Hath a vineyard.] So the Church is here {#Isa 5:7} and elsewhere frequently and fitly styled: Confert autem vineae, saith Oecolampadius. To a vineyard is the Church compared for sundry reasons; as the great care men take about it, {b} the great delight they take in it, the sweet fruits they expect from it, the great worth of its fruit, the little worth of its stem {#Eze 15:3} if it prove fruitless, the lowly and feeble condition thereof, the continual need it hath to be dressed, supported, sheltered, pruned. αρει, καθαρει, {#Joh 15:2} amputat, putat.

In a very fruitful hill.] Heb., In a horn the son of oil, that is, a horny hill, bowing like a halfmoon, and so exposed to the sunbeams all the day long. {c} Some say that Judea lieth in the form of a horn, like as the low countries do in the form of a lion, unde Leo Belgicus. The "son of oil," or "fatness," that is, exceeding fat; Judea is called Sumen totius orbis, the fruitful mother of all the earth, a land "flowing with milk and honey," {#Eze 20:6} a very cornucopia of all comforts. Basil telleth us that it was a tradition of great antiquity, that Adam, when he was thrust out of paradise, ut dolorem leniret, for a mitigation of his grief, chose Judea, that most fruitful country, for a place to dwell in; whence it is that Sodom and her sisters, which were a part of that country, are said to be "pleasant as the garden of God." {#Ge 13:10}

Ver. 2. And he fenced {a} it.] Maceria munivit; he hedged it in, or walled it about, protecting his people from the rage of enemies wherewith that country was begirt. God was "a wall of fire to them," {#Zec 2:5} and a wall of water to them, {as #Ex 14:22} whence their land, though part of the continent, is called "an island," {#Isa 26:6} not only because separated from other countries, but because secured and made media insuperabilis unda.

And gathered out the stones thereof.] He not only cast out the Canaanites, but flatly forbade idolatry, and all other wickednesses, παντα τα σκανδαλα, every scandal or rock of offence that might hinder their growth, or turn them out of the way. {#Heb 12:13}

And planted it with the choicest vine.] Heb., Sorek; the vines of which place {#Jud 16:4} may seem to be the best and choicest, like as now in Germany are the vines of Herbipolis. See #Jer 2:21. The saints of God are noble plants, and of choice spirits; they are the chiefest personages, and of highest account in heaven.

And built a tower in the midst of it.] For both beauty, defence, and convenience. This may be meant of Jerusalem, or the temple therein, that "tower of the flock," and the "stronghold of the daughter of God's people." {#Mic 4:8} Religion set up in the power and purity of it, is the beauty and bulwark of any place.

And also made a winepress therein.] For the pressing of the grapes, and saving of the vine; but, alas! that labour might have been saved for any grapes he got, or wine he made.

“ Fallitur augurio spes bona saepe suo.”

Little good is done many times by the most pressing and piercing exhortations and arguments used by God’s faithful prophets.

And he looked that it should bring forth grapes,] i.e., Good grapes, as little thinking ut opera perdatur et spes eludatur, to have lost all his care and cost, as he did. For who planteth a vineyard and eateth not of the fruit thereof? or who feedeth a flock and eateth not of the milk of the flock? {#1Co 9:7}

And it brought forth wild grapes.] Stinking stuff, as the word signifieth, that which was naught and noisome: grapes of Sodom and clusters of Gomorrah. {#De 32:32,33} He looked for the "fruit of the Spirit"; but behold the "works of the flesh" {#Ga 5:19} No whit answerable to his continual care, culture, and custody, they made him, as one saith, a contumacious and contumelious retribution. Thus the wicked answer Heaven’s kindness with an ungrateful wickedness.

Ver. 3. And now, O ye inhabitants of Jerusalem.] Here we have God’s plea before his sentence, and therein his appeal to them, and his indictment against them. First he appealeth to the Jews themselves, and maketh them judges in their own cause. So Nathan dealt by David, and Jesus by the wicked Jews of his time. {#Mt 21:40} Iudicate, quaeso, only "judge a righteous judgment," {#Joh 7:24} and then I dare report me to the conscience of any one among you, and will therehence fetch witness.

Between me and my vineyard.] With which I am now at variance. Sin is that hell-hag, {a diabolical or vile woman} makebait, {b breeder of strife} trouble town, that sets odds between God and his greatest favourites.

Ver. 4. What could have been done to my vineyard?] See the like angry expostulations, #Jer 2:5 Mic 6:3; when God hath done all that can be done to do wretched men good, they oft do their utmost to defeat him, and undo themselves. Quid debui facere Domino meo quod fecerim? said Augustine of himself, by way of penitent confession: quis ego, qualis ego? quid non mali ego? The cypress tree, the more it is watered, the less fruitful; so it is with many people. But God can no way be charged with their barrenness.

“ At Paris ut vivat regnetque beatus, Cogo posse negat.”—Horat.

Ver. 5. And now go to, I will tell you, &c.] God loveth to foresignify, to warn ere he woundeth, and to foretell a judgment ere he inflicteth it. This he doth that he may be prevented. {#Am 4:12} Prolata est sententia ut non fiat. Well might the Lord say, "Fury is not in me." {#Isa 27:3}

I will take away the hedge thereof.] Hedge and wall shall be taken away at once from an ungrateful people, and all laid open to the wrath of God and rage of enemies; it shall be next indeed. {#Ps 80:12,13} And what may be reasonably pleaded against God at such a time, when he may say to men, as Reuben did to his brethren, "Did not I warn you, saying, Sin not?"

It shall be eaten up, it shall be trodden down.] All shall run to ruin, as it did at Jerusalem by the Babylonians, but especially by the Romans; and as it did in Christendom about six hundred years after Christ's incarnation, when religion was become a matter of form, yea, of scorn; then the Saracens in the east, and the barbarous nations in the west, broke in and bore down all before them.

Ver. 6. And I will lay it waste.] Heb., Wasteness; I will utterly root it up and ruin it. Lege et lute; by law and dirt, wrath is come upon Jewry to the utmost. Lukewarm Laodicea was swallowed up by an earthquake, as Eutropius testifieth. The rest of these seven famous churches are overrun by the Turk. And our utter ruin, unless we repent, may be as plainly foreseen as if letters had been sent us from heaven to such a purpose.

It shall not be pruned nor digged, / sc., By such painful vinedressers as were wont both to dig and beg for it, as he in #Lu 13:8. Such labour shall now be no longer lost, such cost cast away no more. Cutting shall be used where there is no longer hope of curing.

But there shall come up briars and thorns.] Being bereft of the means of grace, they shall run into foul and flagitious practices, which shall ripen them for ruin. See #Heb 6:8.

I will also command the clouds.] The prophets and ministers.

That they rain no rain upon it.] No, not a small shower or mist. Non pluma dignabitur nedum imbre, saith Oecolampadius.

Ver. 7. For the vineyard, &c.] Exponit breviter mentem huius cantici. Here we have the parable expounded and applied: the Scripture is its own best interpreter; sometimes, as here and #Joh 7:39, the sense is annexed. The Rabbis have a saying, Nulla est obiectio in lege quae non habet solutionem in latere. Nothing is exposed in law which does not have a solution in parts.

His pleasant plant.] Delectabilis in patriarchis, infructifera in palmitibus. Heb., "His plant of delights," but now turned into the degenerate plant of a "strange vine" unto him. {#Jer 2:21} Good progenitors may have a bad offspring: the reason whereof is given by Augustine, {a} Homo liberos gignit ex carne vetusta et peccatrice, non ex spivitu, &c. Man begetteth children of the old and sinful flesh, and not of the Spirit.

And he looked for judgment, but behold oppression.] Or, Conspiracy; or, as some render it, a scab, a cleaving scab, such as a man cannot easily be rid or recovered from. And here in the original is excellent rhetoric past interpretation. It is as if we should say, a preacher, a prevaricator rather; a dispensation, a dissipation: the sound is almost the same the sense much different. There is a lawful use of rhetoric in divine discourses. Augustine confesseth that while he heard Ambrose for his eloquence only, together with his words which he loved, the matter which he at first cared not for, came into his mind: and while, saith he, I opened my heart to listen how trimly he spoke, I came to consider also how truly he spoke; gradatim quidem, even by decrees.

For righteousness, but behold a cry.] The clamour of the oppressed entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabbaoth, who heareth their groans, and beholdeth their grievances. {#Job 34:28 Ps 12:5 Jas 5:4}

“ Clamitat in coelum vex sanguinis et Sodomorum, Vex oppressorum, mercesque retenta laborum. ”

The twofold Ecce, " Behold oppression," "Behold a cry," showeth it to be an evil action with an accent, a wickedness with a witness. Aliam Hebroeorum labrusiam notat.

{a} Con. Pelag., lib. ii. cap. 9.

Ver. 8. Woe unto them that join house to house.] The prophet goeth on in the exposition of his parable, showing us some more of those wild or stinking grapes, with the sad effects thereof, to the end of the chapter. He beginneth with covetousness—that "root of all evil," as Paul calleth it, {#1Ti 6:10} that metropolis of all wickedness, as Bion—and throweth a woe at it, as do also sundry other prophets. Covetous persons are of the dragon's temper, who, they say, is so thirsty, that no water can quench his thirst. Covetousness is a dry drunkenness, saith one, an insatiable dropsy, and like hell itself, {#Isa 5:14} insatiabiliter cava guttura pandit; its never enough will be once alive with fire enough in the bottom of hell. Here they are brought in "joining house to house," as Shallum did at Jerusalem, {#Jer 22:13,14} as Nero did at Rome for the enlarging of his palace to a vast extent: whence that of the poet—

“ Roma domus fiet, Veios migrate Quirites, Si non et Veios oecupet ista domus. ”—Martial.

That lay field to field.] Encroaching upon others, and engrossing all to yourselves; as William the Conqueror did at New Forest, wherein forty-six parish churches were demolished, with the removing of all the inhabitants, to make room for beasts or dog's-game. But in true account—

“ Parva seges satis est: laudato ingentia rura, Exiguum colito. ”

The holy patriarchs were content to dwell in tents. Abraham's only purchase was a burying place. David in that Litany of his, as one calleth it, blesseth himself from those "men of God's hand who have their portion here." {#Ps 17:14} Christ biddeth us lay up treasures, and build tabernacles for ourselves in heaven; and having food and raiment, saith the apostle, let us therewith be content. {#1Ti 6:8}

*“ Discite quam parvo liceat producere vitam: Et quantum natura petat.”
- Lucan. Phar., lib. iv.*

If a man will study rather to satisfy his hunger than his humour, a little will serve. But it is as easy to quench the fire of Etna as the thoughts set on fire by covetousness. Unus Pelaeo iuveni non sufficit orbis. {a}

Till there be no place,] sc., Left unseized upon by you: Usque ad desitionem loci, no place or room for any other.

That they may be placed alone.] Man is a sociable creature, and not born for himself. Aristotle calleth him nature's good fellow; but the covetous wretch hath put off all humanity, and would have all to himself, be placed alone; and herein, as Ambrose rightly observeth, he is worse than the unreasonable creatures. Avis avibus se associat, saith he, pecus pecori adiungitur, piscis piscibus, Birds, beasts, and fishes sort and shoal together, and account it no loss, but a comfort, to be in company of their own kind. Solus tu homo, consortem excludis, includis feras: struis habitacula bestiarum, destruis hominum ;{ b} Only thou, O sorry man, shuttest out men like thyself, encloset for cattle, pullest down houses, settest up folds and sheep cotes, &c. And yet thou canst not live without poor labourers; only thou hatest to have them live by thee.

{a} Juvenal.

{b} Lib. de Naboth et Ahab., cap. 3.

Ver. 9. In mine ears, said the Lord of hosts.] Or, In the ears of the Lord of hosts—q.d., God well heareth and knoweth all your cunning contrivances, your coloured and cloaked covetousness, as it is called {#1Th 2:5 2Pe 1:3} The cries also of those poor whom you have by fraud or force unroosted and undone, is come into God's ears, {#De 15:9 24:15} and he will reckon with you, though by your greatness you can bear out your wrong dealing, because it is facinus maioris abollae. Yet God will arraign you one day for an Abaddon; and in the meanwhile,

Of a truth many houses shall be desolate.] You shall be driven out of your great and fair houses, aut a milite, aut a morte, either by the enemy or by death, who shall come upon you with a firmæ eiectione, forceful ejection and then the place of your habitation shall know you no more; a poor fool God will make of you. {#Jer 17:11 Lu 12:20} If many houses be not desolate, never trust him more—if they be not left for caddows and jackdaws {a} to dwell in.

{a} The common name of the daw (Corvus monedula), one of the smallest of the crow family, which frequents old buildings, church towers, etc.; it is easily tamed and taught to imitate the sound of words, and is noted for its loquacity and thievish propensities.

Ver. 10. Yea, ten acres of vineyard shall yield one bath,] viz., Of wine; a poor proportion—not a gallon of wine for an acre of ground planted with vines.

And the seed of an homer shall yield an ephah.] And no more. The earth shall yield but the tenth part of what was sown; so little joy shall you have either of your enlarged houses, or fields laid to fields by evil arts. Et signanter decem ponit iugera, saith Oecolampadius here; neither is it for nothing that the prophet saith ten acres of vineyard, &c., and that they shall have but the tith of their seed again, to teach them how angry God is with such as through covetousness refuse to pay their tithes duly and truly, &c.

Ver. 11. Woe unto them that rise up early.] Heb., The early risers, but for an ill purpose. O intolerandum flagitium, saith one, {a} homines inertiae, somnique plenissimos, &c.; O intolerable wickedness, that men so lazy, and more sleepy than dormice, should be up and at it so very early—they rise early to corrupt their actions, saith another prophet {#Zep 3:7} -and should have their brains crowing before day. Neither are they so soon up alone, but they call up others (as the Hebrew word here signifieth) to serve them, and sit with them on their ale bench; for they are good fellows, they say, and must have company.

That they may follow strong drink.] ^{b} Pursue it eagerly, as the worldling doth his gain, the hunter his game. Their motto is, Take away our liquor, ye take away our life. By strong drink, here understand any inebriating liquor, whereof, besides wine, the Italians have twenty distinct kinds, to please the gusto. Pliny ^{c} cries out, Hei mira vitiorum solertia inventum est quemadmodum aqua quoque inebriaret! Portentosum sane potionis genus, &c.

That continue unto night.] All the life long days these ale stakes stick to it, quaffing and carousing. Diem noctemque continuare potando nulli probrum, saith Tacitus of the old Germans. To drink whole days together is among them no disgrace, neither is it among many of their posterity to this day. About the midst of Queen Elizabeth's reign that cursed sin was first brought over into England, say some, out of the Low Countries; before which time there was neither general practice nor legal punishment of that vice in this kingdom. ^{d}

Till wine inflame them.] By which expression, Omnem ebriorum insaniam intelligit, saith Oecolampadius, he meaneth all the drunkard's mad pranks, when heated with wine, and yet more with lusts and passions; see #Pr 23:29-34. Tyrone the rebel, 1567, was such a drunkard, that to cool his body when it was immoderately inflamed with wine and whisky, he would many times be buried in the earth up to the chin. ^{e}

^{b} Studium ebrietatis illis obiecit,

^{c} Lib. xiv. cap. ult.

^{d} Fuller's Church History, p. 61.

^{e} Camden's Elisabeth, p. 89.

Ver. 12. And the harp and the viol.] To make themselves the more mad upon pleasure, they had their music of all sorts, that thereby they might banish all seriousness, and be lulled faster asleep in carnal security. Fescenninis cantibus omnia personabant, a practice still in use among drunkards, to drown the noise of their consciences; like as the old Italians, to drown the noise of the heavens when it thundered, were wont to ring their greatest bells, beat up their drums and tabors, &c; so #Am 6:4,6.

Are in their feasts.] Or, Are their feasts or drinkings.

But they regard not the work of the Lord.] That is, the first making, whether of themselves, to glorify God in some honest employment, and not to make drunkenness their occupation; or of other creatures, wherein they might find much of God, {a} as Pliny did in the music of the gnat, and the curious paint of the butterfly; as Galen did in the double motion of the lungs, called systole and diastole; but especially as David did in the contemplation of the universe, {#Ps 8:3} and as Mr John Dod did in the flower he had in his hand at Holdenby, where, being invited by an honourable person to see that stately house, he answered, In this flower I can see more of God than in all the beautiful buildings in the world. See #Ps 111:2 92:4 37:4. Thus if these drunkards had done, they would not have so abused God's good creatures. But "whoredom and wine, and new wine had taken away their hearts." {#Ho 4:11} Neither regarded they anything but the sparkling of the wine in the cup, {#Pr 23:31} and the beauty of the strange woman, {#Pr 23:33} in the fragrant of their beastly lust.

Neither consider the operation of his hands.] The present disposing of his creatures, either by way of mercy or judgment. They pass by his providences unobserved, his late judgments upon the ten tribes, {#Am 6:6} his heavy plagues hanging over their own heads, called his "work, and the counsel of the Holy One of Israel." {#Isa 5:19} Nihil omnino sapiunt nisi luxum suum, They mind nothing but their luxury and looseness.

{a} Saeculum est speculum reram invisibilium. -Trismeg.

Ver. 13. Therefore my people are gone into captivity,] i.e., They are sure to go. {so #Am 6:7}

Because they have no knowledge.] Heb., Propter non-scientiam; i.e., ut ita dicam, non-curantiam, For their brutish oscitancy and lack of consideration, as having buried their wits in their guts, and being miserably besotted by their daily sensualities. "Surely they are poor, they are foolish; for they know not the way of the Lord, nor the judgment of their God." {#Jer 5:4}

And their honourable men are famished.] Heb., Are men of hunger or famine; Congrua huic malo lues. They had abused their food and drink to surfeiting and drunkenness; now they shall know the worth of those good creatures by the want of them.

And their multitude dried up with thirst.] The common sort also shall taste of the common calamity; as they did very deeply, when besieged by Vespasian, for five months. {a} Ox dung was then a precious dish unto them, and the shreadings of pot herbs, cast out and trodden under foot and withered, were taken up again for nourishment; yea some, to prolong their lives, would not stick to eat up that which others had vomited and cast up; see #Isa 9:19,20.

{a} Joseph.; Egesip.

Ver. 14. Therefore hell hath enlarged herself, &c.] To swallow up those insatiable helluones and lurcones, drunkards and epicures; these swill howls and sensualists, Cerberi instar, triaguttura pandebant. Diotimus of Athens was surnamed Tunbowl, and young Cicero, Tricongius, because he could take off three bottles of wine at a draught. Therefore death and hell

Have opened their mouth without measure.] Hiante rictu amplissimo helluones istos absorbere, To devour such pests and botches of mankind. Oh that the carousers were persuaded, as Mohammed told his followers, that in every grape there dwelt a devil! And oh that they would foresee and prevent a worse punishment in hell than befell that poor Turk who, being found drunk, had a ladleful of boiling lead poured down his throat by the command of a certain pasha!

And their glory.] Their great ones, those men of honour. {#Isa 5:13}

And their multitude.] The meaner sort. Nos numeri sumus.

And their pomp.] Or, Their noise or tumult: their revel rout, as they call it, when they have drunk all the outs, and are now singing and hallooing.

Ver. 15. And the mean man shall be brought down, &c.] Here the prophet, before he comes to the third denunciation (for this part of the chapter, like Ezekiel's roll, is full of lamentation, and mourning, and woe, #Eze 2:10), inserteth three good effects of the forethreatened punishments: {a} -1. That the wicked shall be thereby tamed (in this verse); 2. That God's glory shall be asserted; {#Isa 5:16} and 3. That God's poor people shall be graciously provided for; {#Isa 5:17} see for this verse, #Isa 2:9.

And the eyes of the haughty.] See on #Isa 2:11.

{a} Piscat.

Ver. 16. But the Lord of hosts shall be exalted.] See #Isa 2:11.

And God, that is holy, shall be sanctified.] He shall be religiously acknowledged, approved of, and worshipped as an enemy to sin, and an upright judge, because of his most righteous judgments. {a} It shall be said, "Certainly there is a God that ruleth in the earth." {#Ps 58:11}

{a} Diod.

Ver. 17. Then shall the lambs feed after their manner,] i. e., Freely and quietly. By lambs here understand the godly poor—those lambs with golden fleeces—who shall be graciously provided for.

And the waste places of the fat ones.] Medullatorum, of those fat bulls of Bashan, who had oppressed the poor, and laid waste their dwellings, but are now served in like sort by the enemy.

Shall the strangers eat.] Such as had been strangers at home, because held captive in a far country, but are now returned, and repossessed of all.

Ver. 18. Woe unto them that draw iniquity.] That draw sin to them, as a beast draweth a cart after it. Here the prophet reproveth and threateneth such, saith an interpreter, {a} as sin without any strong temptation or occasion drawing them thereunto; yea, they draw sin to themselves as with ropes, et quodammodo velut invitum et repugnans cogunt, not remembering that sin haleth hell at the heels of it. Let such get from under sin's cart as soon as they can, otherwise they shall be "holden with the cords (punishments) of their iniquity; they shall die without instruction," &c. {#Pr 5:22} The devils, as they sinned without a tempter, so they perish without a Saviour. Cavete. Beware!

{a} Nihil agitantes nisi malum omni studio suo. -Jun. Qui data opera peccant. -Scultet, Ver. 19. That say, Let him make speed.] That jeer when they should fear, jest at God's judgments, and mock at his menaces, as if they were only bugbear terms, devised on purpose to frighten silly people, but that themselves had more wit than to regard them. This also was the guise of those atheists in later ages. {#Jer 17:15 Eze 12:23 Am 5:18 2Pe 3:3} Εμπακται, they made children's play of God's direful threats, as the Greek word signifieth. And that they may not plead ignorance, the apostle addeth, {#Isa 5:5} that they were "willingly ignorant"; they choked their natural light, and contradicted the testimony of their own consciences. Magna eorum hodieque seges est; such dust heaps are found in every corner.

And let the counsel of the Holy One of Israel.] Verba ludificantium Deum et prophetas, {a} These scoffers are here brought in deriding the very name whereby the holy prophets for more reverence sake commonly called the Lord, viz., "the Holy One of Israel." Or thus, God is the Holy One of Israel, which Israel we are; and thinkest thou that he will do us hurt? {b} Hereupon the prophet addeth,

{a} Μιμησις.

{b} Oecolamp.

Ver. 20. Woe unto them that call evil good, &c.] That can make candida de nigris, et de candentibus atra, and go about to invert the nature of things, and to change the very names of them; while they call—not out of ignorance or infirmity, but out of base calumny or gross flattery—evil good, and good evil; calling drunkenness good fellowship, covetousness good husbandry, prodigality liberality, swearing with a grace a gentleman-like quality, fornication a trick of youth, adultery an enjoyment of the fellow creature, as Ranters call it, &c. Thus the Athenians flattered their own vices, calling πορναια εταιρας, φιρους συνταξεις, φυλακας φρουρας των πολεων, &c.

Cicero ^{a} said it was an ill omen of the overthrow of the commonwealth, that the true names of things were lost; and in divinity it is a rule, Qui fingit nova verba, nova gignit dogmata, He that affecteth new terms would bring in new opinions. That saying of Luther was oft in Pareus's mouth, Theologus gloriae dicit malum bonum, et bonum malum. Theologus crucis dicit id quod res est. The theology of vain glory says good is bad and bad is good. The theology of popery says this because it is the problem. ^{b} Not long before our late unhappy troubles the martyrs of the Protestant religion were disgraced, the conspirators in the gunpowder treason excused in a sermon at St Mary's, Cambridge, by one Kemp of Queen's College. ^{c} The schools, press, and pulpit began to speak Italian apace, and to persuade to a moderation, to a reconciliation with Rome, which now was said to be a true Church, the Pope not Antichrist, &c. The great elixir called state policy hath, with some at least, so transmutive a faculty, as to make copper seem gold, right wrong, and wrong right. But let us pray, with good David in #Ps 119:66, "Teach me good judgment and knowledge"; give me senses habitually "exercised to discern between good and evil." ^{#Heb 5:14} And then take heed that we neither make censure's whip nor charity's cloak too long; we may offend in both.

^{a} In Catil.

Ver. 21. Woe unto them that are wise in their own eyes.] Wiser than David—as the proud prince of Tyre thought himself ^{#Eze 28:3} -or than any prophet of them all. This self-conceitedness is πασης της προκοπης εγκοπη, said that heathen, the hindrance of all true proficiency, and a mischievous marrer of good; here is a woe hung at the heels of it. And lest any should hold that to be a small matter, let them consider what befell Meroz after that bitter curse pronounced against it ^{#Jud 5:23} -the very name and memorial of it is utterly extinct and blotted out; as also what befell the barren fig tree when once cursed by Christ—it withered away suddenly, ^{#Mt 21:19,20} both root and branch, though naturally the fig tree is the most juiceful of any tree, and beareth the brunt of winter blasts.

Ver. 22. Woe unto them that are mighty to drink wine.] Iterate taxat hoc vitium, eo quod invaluerat. The prophet inveigheth against this vice a second time, because it was grown so common. Drunkards also are a sottish kind of creatures, and had therefore more than need to be double dealt with; like as physicians use to give double quantities to such as have palsies or epilepsies, so to awaken their dull, drowsy senses. Many of these sots take it for a great glory that they are mighty to drink wine; as did Darius King of Persia, who caused it to be written upon his tomb, I was a great hunter; I could also drink much wine, and bear it bravely. {a} This was, as one well saith, to glory in his shame; it being rather the commendation of a tun {b} than of a man, for a beast will scarce abide it, to be able to take in and contain much liquor. When Bonosus the drunken Roman had hanged himself, it went for a by-word Amphoram pendere non hominem, {c} that a tun or tankard hung there, and not a man. And when one was commended to King Alphonsus for a great drinker, and able to bear it, he answered that that was a good praise in a sponge, but not in a prince. {d} This, if Alexander the Great and Tiberius the Emperor—those great drinkers and encouragers of others to that vice—had well remembered, they would not have been so infamous as they are and will be to all posterity.

And men of strength.] Or, Valour. But to do what? Πινειν και βινειν μονον, {e} as the comedian hath it: To drink and do worse only. A goodly prize surely, a fair commendation. {e} Fortes esse et strenuos non contra hostes, sed ad exhauriendos calices; gigantes esse non ad bellandum, sed ad potandum. To be carpet knights, not of Mars, but of Bacchus, and fitter for a canopy than a camp.

To mingle.] Or, To pour in. Whether into their own wide gullets, or into the cup to make others drunk; for preventing whereof Minos, King of Crete, made a law that men should not drink one to another, εις μεθην, to drunkenness. So did Lycurgus at Lacedemon. And our King Edgar made an ordinance for putting pins in cups that none should quaff whole ones, or cause others to do so.

{b} A large cask or barrel, usually for liquids, esp. wine, ale, or beer, or for various provisions. Now less common than cask.

{c} Vopsic. in Bonosos.

{d} Gentiles ipsi risere tales athletas.

{e} Arist, in Ranis.

{f} Civilis est irrisio non carens sale. -Oecolamp.

Ver. 23. Which justify the wicked for reward,] q.d., Woe to such also, for even they both are abomination to the Lord {#Pr 17:15 Isa 1:23}

{See Trapp on "Pr 17:15"}

Ver. 24. Therefore as the fire devoureth the stubble.] For all the crimes aforementioned, and for that, to all the former they add this, that they have cast away the law of the Lord, and despised his Word.

As the fire.] Heb., The tongue of fire; that is, the top of the flame, which resembleth a tongue, that is also thin, broad, long, and of a fiery colour: "Setting on fire the course of nature, and is itself set on fire of hell." {#Jas 3:6}

Devoureth the stubble, and the flame consumeth the chaff.] Sin doth as naturally draw and suck judgments to it as the lodestone doth iron, as dry stubble and light chaff doth fire; suddenly and with no ado shall sinners be consumed, when God once taketh them to do; exorientur et exurentur.

So their root shall be rottenness.] In allusion to the vine {#Isa 5:1} which brought forth rotten grapes. {#Isa 5:4}

And their blossom shall go up as dust.] Shall vanish and come to nothing, as it needs must where the root is putrified. Of wild vines Pliny {a} saith, Ostentant fructum potius quam porrigunt, they rather make a show of fruit than yield any. And there are some vines, saith Varro, {b} whose fruit ever rotteth before it hath time to ripen. He meaneth they shall vanish in their greatest flourish of seeming felicity.

{a} Lib. xvi. cap. 27.

{b} Var. ap. Cas. Dion.

Ver. 25. Therefore is the anger of the Lord kindled.] For contempt of the law, but especially of the gospel, "wrath came upon" that wretched people of the Jews "to the utmost," {#1Th 2:16} or until the end, as some read it. They are to this day a people of God's wrath and curse, and become a woeful example of that rule, Atrocia delicta puniuntur atrocibus poenis, Heinous sins bring heavy punishments. This desolation of theirs (as Daniel prophesieth, #Da 9:27) shall continue to the end.

And he hath stretched forth his hand against them.] His mighty hand, as St James hath it, wherewith he oft leaveth bloody wales on the backs of the best when they provoke, but crusheth the wicked in pieces, and crumbleth them to shreds.

And hath smitten them.] Revenge is the next effect of anger.

And the hills did tremble,]^{ a } i.e., The highest among them; or, literally, the senseless hills seemed sensible of so great displeasure.

And their carcasses were torn in the midst of the streets.] What havoc there was made of men at the last destruction of Jerusalem, Josephus, Egesippus, Orosius, and Eusebius fully tell us. What with the extremity of famine, what with the fury of the sword, and what with sickness during the siege, there perished about 600,000 able men; or, as others say, 1,100,000, besides 97,000 carried captive. Titus, the Roman general, seeing the infinite number of carcasses of the Jews cast out unburied without the walls of the city was much grieved, and took God to witness that he was not the author of that calamity, but that the fault was altogether in those stubborn Jews, that held out the city against him. ^{ b }

For all this his anger is not turned away.] With those "froward ones God will show himself froward," ^{ #Ps 18:26 } and not give place to their pertinacity, till they have enough of it. It must be a humble submission that pacifieth God's wrath.

^{ a } Hyperbole.

^{ b } Josephus.

Ver. 26. And he will lift up an ensign.] That is, by his secret providence he shall bring on the enemy's army. The Roman forces are called God's armies, ^{ #Mt 22:7 } and Titus confessed that he only lent God his hand to execute his wrath on that rebellious people the Jews.

And will hiss unto them.] Bring them together with little ado, as pilots hiss for their ship boys, or shepherds whistle for their sheep to come about them.

From the end of the earth.] Rome was far remote from Jerusalem, and in the Roman army were likely many French, Spaniards, Italians, and perhaps Britons.

And behold they shall come with speed.] Sooner than those mockers imagined who said, "Let him make speed." {#Isa 5:19} Hence the enemy is compared to a swift eagle. {#De 28:49}

Ver. 27. None shall be weary nor stumble.] Though they come speedily, yet they shall none of them tire or turn out of the way, but come on with expedition, robusti, alacres, felices, probe armati, saevi {#Isa 5:27,28,29} being lively, lusty, happy, well appointed, fierce.

None shall slumber or sleep.] More than the necessity of nature requireth; they shall be no less vigilant than diligent.

Neither shall the girdle of their loins be loosed.] They may put up their swords sometimes, but not put them off at all, as it is said of Julius Caesar.

Nor the latchet,] i.e., So as to hinder their march.

Ver. 28. Whose arrows are sharp.] Or, Sharpened, sc., to wound the deeper.

Their horses' hoofs.] Judea was a stony country; but hard to hard will not easily break.

Ver. 29. Their roaring shall be like a lion.] At whose terrible roar the beasts of the field are said to stand as amazed.

They shall lay hold on the prey.] Not of wealth only, but of persons, and shall hold their own when they have gotten them.

Ver. 30. Like the roaring of the sea.] The noise whereof is so hideous, that the shrieking of the devil is set forth by it. {#Jas 2:19} {See Trapp on "Jas 2:19"}

And if one look into the land.] Or, To the earth below, behold darkness, &c., as if to the heavens, the light also there is darkened. Man cannot help them; God will not. To such straits of "an evil, an only evil," are such oft brought, as think themselves out of the reach of God's rod. Vae victis. Alas, having been conquered.

Chapter 6

Ver. 1. In the year that Uzziah died.] This was 1590 years from Noah's flood, say chronologers, where one {a} well observeth how divers things were done in this year within the Church, and without. The Gentiles in Greece, at the town of Eleum, behold their Olympic games; the prophet Isaiah in Judea beholdeth the glory of God, and heareth the trisagion of the blessed angels. So in the year of grace 1617 the Pope proclaimed a jubilee for the peace of Italy and Austria, &c. The Reformed Churches in Germany kept a jubilee likewise at the same time, in way of thankfulness to God for the gospel restored just a hundred years before by Luther, Zuinglius, and other reformers. {b}

I saw also,] sc., In spiritu et in ecstasi, In spirit and in a rapture. Some compare it with that vision which Ezekiel saw afterwards. {#Eze 1:4-28} This whole book is called 'the vision of Isaiah'; {#Isa 1:1} and why? {See Trapp on "Isa 1:1"} Est autem celeberrima haec prophetia, but this is a most famous prophecy of the utter excaecation and excision of the Jews; and is alleged against them by all the four evangelists, and by St Paul. {#Ro 11:8}

The Lord.] The Three in One, and One in Three: #Isa 6:8, "Who shall go for us?" Compare #Ge 1:26 3:22. See #Joh 12:41, where it is applied to God the Son; and #Ac 5:3,4, where to God the Holy Ghost. This Lord of all was seen by the prophet, not in his essence, or in the infinite excellence of his majesty, {#Ex 33:20 1Ti 6:16} but in some visible model of his glory; like as we cannot see the sun in rota, but in radiis, in the body of it, but in the beams only.

Sitting upon a throne.] Instar iudicis et vindicis, as a just judge and sharp revenger of this people's rebellions; and this throne is in the temple too, the place wherein they most of all trusted, crying, "The temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord." {#Jer 7:4} Lo, here they were to be sentenced, because they had cast away the law of the Lord of hosts, and despised the word of the Holy One of Israel. {#Isa 5:24}

High and lifted up.] Stately for sight, and lofty for site, as was Solomon's. {#IKi 10:18,20}

And his train filled the temple.] His train, or his skirts {c} -viz., of his robes. The Sept. and Chaldee have it, "The house was full of his glory." The sense is, saith Oecolampadius, that the least part of the divine majesty is greater than the greatest glory of men. {as #ICo 1:25} "He hath upon his vesture and on his thigh this name written, King of kings, and Lord of lords." {#Re 19:16} Here we can see but his back parts, his train and line. We need see no more that we may live. Zeuxis, the famous painter, drew in a table a fair temple with the doors open, and Venus going in, so as the beholders could behold but her back and her train, as not able to depaint her fair face and fore parts.

{c} Sirmata.

Ver. 2. Above it stood the seraphims.] Those heavenly salamanders that are all on a light fire with love to God and zeal of his glory. {#Nu 21:6 Isa 30:6} Fiery serpents, full of deadly poison, are also called seraphims, πρηστηρας the Greeks call them. That old serpent the devil can transform himself into an angel of light, At bonum erat tibi si ignifer magis esses quam lucifer, saith Bernard, in his third sermon upon this vision of Isaiah.

Each one had six wings.] So had those four beasts or living wights; {#Re 4:8} {See Trapp on "Re 4:8"} and observe that in the Revelation the Holy Ghost borroweth most of the elegancies and flowers found in the Old Testament to set out the story of the New in succeeding ages.

With twain he covered his face.] As with a double scarf, before God's surpassing brightness, that would put out their eyes else. When the lightning flasheth in men's eyes they clap their hands on their faces, so here do the angels. The moon never casteth less light than when she is nearest the sun. Sol reliqua sidera occultat, quibus et lumen suum faenerat; {a} sic et Deus gloriae {#Ac 7:2} Neither are any so humble as they who are nearest to God. Angels make their addresses with greatest self-abasements; what then should vile men do? worms and not men!

And with twain he covered his feet.] As conscious to themselves of a kind of comparative impurity, {#Job 4:18 15:15} and unworthiness so to stand before God—i. e., to minister unto him.

And with twain he did fly.] That is, he was ready to fly; velabant, et volabant; as Gabriel came to Daniel with weariness of flight {#Da 9:21} -that is, with incredible swiftness. Their six wings, say some, {b} might set forth a six fold motion, upward, downward, forward, backward, to the right hand or to the left—any way were they ready to fly where God would, ita ut celeritate superent ventos, falmina, solem, coelosque omnes, swifter than the wind, thunderbolt, sun, or any of the celestial orbs.

{a} Plin., lib. ii. cap. 6.

{b} A Lapide.—Perer.

Ver. 3. And one cried to another.] Hymnum cantant τρισάγιον, and that, as it may seem, by way of antiphony, as those did. {#Ex 15:1,21}

And said, Holy, holy, holy.] Hereby showing their earnestness and insatiability in praising God. {as #Jer 22:20 Mt 23:39} The ingemination importeth strong affection. Infinitis vicibus iterant, saith Procopius; the holy angels "have no rest," and yet they have no unrest either, "day and night, saying, Holy, holy, holy Lord God Almighty which was, and is, and is to come." {#Re 4:8} The ancient Rabbis, as R, Simeon Ben Joai, proved the trinity of persons from this text, saith Galatin, {a} appointing their posterity to repeat these words twice a day at least—viz., at the rising and setting of the sun, which also they do to this day, and when they do it they leap three times.

The whole earth is full of his glory.] Not the land of Judea only, but the wide world, {as #Ps 97:6,8 Isa 40:5} shall be full of God's glory, when the gospel shall be preached to all nations. This was for comfort to our prophet, that although his countrymen were cast off for their contumacy, yet he should not lose the fruit of his labours when once that "great mystery of godliness" was revealed; "God"—whom he had now seen upon the throne, and that purposely for his confirmation—"manifested in the flesh, justified in the spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory." {#1Ti 3:16}

{a} Lib. ii. cap. 1.

Ver. 4. And the posts of the door were moved.] Presently upon the angels' hymn this occurred, with such a force it was uttered, as it was at the time of our Saviour's resurrection, when the angel rolled back the stone and sat upon it there was a great earthquake. {#Mt 28:2} By the moving of the "posts" or thresholds was signified the destruction of the temple, when the smoke with which the house was filled, when it was burned down by the Chaldees, as also the just excaecation of the Jews. Their temple, that had been filled with the train of glory, is now filled with smoke going out of God's nostrils when he was angry. {#Ps 18:8 De 29:20}

Ver. 5. Then said I, Woe is me.] The ordinary fear of the faithful, when they had seen the Lord in his majesty. {#Ge 16:13 De 5:24 Heb 12:21 Jud 13:22} How shall the wicked then be able to stand before him at the last day?

For I am undone.] I am a dead man, since no man shall see God and live. {#Ex 33:20}

Because I am a man of unclean lips,] i.e., Of a foul nature and sinful practice; his original uncleanness, that filthy fountain and well spring of wickedness, made him cry out in this manner, Pollutior sum quam ut laudem Deum. Angels praise God, as I have heard them; but I, wicked wretch, am altogether unfit for such an employment. Infinite is the distance and disproportion between the high and holy God and me, a loathsome leper, a sordid wretch, &c. The nearer a man draweth to God, the more doth rottenness enter into his bones. {#Hab 3:16} "Now mine eyes have seen thee," saith Job, therefore I abhor myself and repent in dust and ashes. {#Job 42:6} "Depart from me, Lord," saith Peter, "for I am a sinful man," {#Lu 5:8} Gr., A man a sinner—that is, a compound or hodgepodge of dirt and sin. Quis tu, Domine? quis ego? said one; Tu abyssus essentiae, veritatis, et gloriae: ego abyssus nihili, vanitatis et miseriae, Who art Thou, Lord? and what am I? Thou art an abyss of essence, truth, and glory, and I an abyss of nothing, of sin, and of misery.

And I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips.] Whose language I have learned, with whose sinful practices I have too much symbolised, and in whose punishments therefore I am like to be involved; for there is a double danger to a man by conversing with the ungodly; (1.) Infection of sin; (2.) Infliction of punishment. Lot was the world's miracle, who kept himself fresh in Sodom's salt water.

Ver. 6. Then flew one of the seraphims unto me.] Relinquit chorum illum sanctissimum ut serviat polluto; He leaveth that holy company that he may do service to a poor polluted creature! The brightest angel in heaven thinketh not himself too good to serve the saints. {#Heb 1:14} If there come to us at any time a messenger, one of a thousand, to declare unto us our righteousness, to be unto us a minister of reconciliation, we are to receive him as an angel of God.

Having a live coal in his hand.] A coal from the altar, shadowing the merit and Spirit of Christ purging his people from all sin. The tongs whereby this live coal of Christ's righteousness is applied to the soul is the grace of faith. {#Ac 15:9}

Ver. 7. And he laid it upon my mouth.] Not to burn him, for all this was visional, but to expiate and purify his lips by the "spirit of judgment and of burning"; {#Isa 4:4} to fire him up to a holy contention in godliness, and to fit him yet further for his office, as the apostles were for theirs by cloven tongues of fire {#Ac 2:3,4}

And said, Lo, this hath touched thy lips.] To the sign words are used to make a perfect sacrament. And here the cautiousness of the angel is to be noted. He saith not, I have touched, but, lo, this coal hath touched thy lips. So Paul, "Yet not I, but the grace of God in me." {#1Co 15:10} So the good and faithful servant, Not I, but "Thy talent hath gained ten talents." {#Lu 19:16} The seraph was himself a burning creature, as his very name importeth; howbeit it was not the seraph but the retheph or burning coal that did the deed, that God might have all the glory.

Thine iniquity is taken away.] Sacraments take not away sin, but only testify that iniquity is purged by Christ alone, who hath merited justification and sanctification.

Ver. 8. Whom shall I send?] "Lay hands upon no man rashly," but with deliberation. The mystery of the Trinity is well observed by some in the following words, as by others this, that ministers serve not men, but the only true God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. {#1Co 4:1 2Co 5:21}

Who shall go for us?] {a} God knew whom he would send, but he will have the prophet offer himself; for he loveth a cheerful server, and ministers must take the oversight of God's flock, "not of constraint, but willingly." {#1Pe 5:2}

Here am I; send me.] This was right, and this was wrought in him, not by base fear of punishment, -as we read of one Balthus, a dumb man, that wandering in a desert, and met with a lion, he was struck with such exceeding fear and trepidation, that thereupon the string of his tongue was loosed, and he spake ever after— sed igne Dei tactus et actus est. {b} The seraph had comforted him, and this was the effect of it. The prophet, after the touch of the live coal, felt his gifts increased, his zeal kindled, and hence his forwardness thus to offer God his service. So ought such to do as find themselves fitted for the work: If thou hast not manchet, {c} said Bucer to Bradford, give the people barley bread, such as thou canst, it will be accepted. It is no small commendation to a man to addict himself to the ministry of the saints, as the house of Stephanas did, {#1Co 16:15} and to be to every good work ready {#Tit 3:1} -that is, forward and forthputting, cheerful and vigorous.

Ver. 9. And he said, Go and tell this people.] {a} Once my people, but now no more so, Loammi, but a people laden with iniquity, and so a people of my wrath and of my curse, no longer owned by me, but disavowed and abandoned, as their fathers once were. {#Ex 32:7}

Hear ye, indeed, but understand not.] This is that heavy and dreadful doom, whereunto for authority's sake is premised that glorious vision of the Lord sitting on his throne and passing sentence, together with the renewed mission of this prophet on so pleasing an errand. "Hear" ye shall for a mischief to you, but "understand" no more than the seats you sit on, or the pillars you lean against, because stupified, delivered up to a reprobate sense.

And see indeed, / sc., Both my words, {#Jer 2:31} and my works, when my hand is lifted up especially. {#Isa 26:11} See #Isa 42:18-20.

But perceive not, / sc., That the cause of your calamity is your sin, the end repentance, the author God, with whom, therefore, it is a righteous thing to punish you with spiritual blindness and hardness of heart, that ye may proceed and perish. Now, then, "if any be ignorant, let him be ignorant" for me. {as #1Co 14:38} And, "let him that is filthy be filthy still," or let him be yet more filthy {#Re 22:11} Abeat in malam crucem, as a father saith to his incorrigible child. See the like angry expressions, #Eze 20:39 Isa 50:11 Ps 81:12,13 Mt 23:32,34.

{a} Verba indignantis. -Piscat.

Ver. 10. Make the heart of this people fat, / sc., By preaching to them the Word of God, which, because they regard not, it shall become unto them a savour of death, as sweet ointments kill beetles, as a shrill voice hurteth weak ears, as lime is kindled by cold water cast upon it. Of such a fat heart beware. Fat things are less sensible, and fat hearted people are noted by Aristotle for dull and stupid. There is not a greater mischief can befall a man on this side hell than to be given up to a dead and dedolent disposition, such as was that of those {#Eph 4:18} of the Jews in Christ's time, and ever since, and of many Papists, who continue blind in the midst of so much light, and will not renounce those errors whereof they are clearly convinced.

And make their ears heavy.] Preach them to hell. This is an accidental effect of the word preached, and proceedeth from men's corruptions. {#Zec 7:11} But as a hard heart, so a heavy ear is a singular judgment. {#Ac 7:51} Antagoras, reciting his "Thebais," a book that he had made, among the Boeotians, and they little regarding him, he folded up his book, and said, Ye may well be called Boeotians, quia boum habetis aures, for ye have oxes' ears—playing upon the notation of their name. {a}

Lest they should see with their eyes, &c.] Or, That they may not see with their eyes, or hear, &c., but be as so many sots and stocks or statues, that have eyes and see not, &c., to their utter ruin and destruction. Neither is there any the least injustice in such a proceeding. An apprentice hath given him by his master a candle to light him to bed, which he abuseth to light him to game or drink. Hereupon his master taketh it from him, bloweth it out, and sendeth him darkling to bed, in the way whereto he breaketh his arms or his face by some fall: will any man blame the master, since the candle was his, and allowed for use? I think not. Think the like here.

And convert.] Which at times they would not, now they shall not; but having made a match with mischief, they shall henceforth have enough of it; they "love to have it so"; {#Jer 5:31} they "forsake their own mercies"; {#Jon 2:8} they are miserable by their own election.

And be healed,] i.e., Pardoned and purged. Atque hic pulchre exprimitur, saith one, ordo obtinendae salutis; and here is excellently set forth the order of obtaining salvation. For (1.) It is requisite that we have ears to hear, and eyes to see—not ears stopped, and eyes daubed up as these had; (2.) That what we hear and see, we understand with the heart—that is, that there be yielded thereunto both assent of the mind and consent of the will, this is faith; (3.) That we turn to the Lord by true repentance, and then we are sure of healing, which is by pardon of sin, and power against it.

Ver. 11. Then said I, Lord, how long?] sc., Shall this sad stroke upon the souls of this poor people last? Is there no hope of an end? Hast thou utterly cast off Israel? See here the good affection of godly ministers towards even obdurate and obstinate sinners; how deeply and dearly they oft pity them and pray for them, as did also Moses, Samuel, Paul.

Until the cities be wasted, &c.] Till these uncounselable and incorrigible refractories be utterly rooted out by the Babylonians first: and then by the Romans.

Ver. 12. And the Lord have removed men far away.] Judea lay utterly waste for seventy years, insomuch that after the slaughter of Gedaliah, when all—man, woman, and child—fled into Egypt, there was not a Jew left in the country. And in that last desolation by the Romans, such affliction befell them as never had been from the beginning, nor shall be to the world's end. {#Mr 13:19} After Titus had slain a million of them, and carried away captive ninety-seven thousand more, Adrian the emperor, for their sedition under Barchochach, drove all the Jews utterly out of Jewry, set a sow of white marble over the chief gate of Jerusalem in reproach of their religion, and by proclamation forbade them so much as to look toward that land from any high tower or mountain. {a} Howbeit, they afterwards obtained leave to go in once a year and bewail the destruction of their temple, giving a piece of money to the soldiers; and at this day, when or wherever they build a house, they use to leave about a yard square of it unplastered, on which they write, Zecher lechorban, The memory of the desolation. {b}

Ver. 13. But yet in it shall be a tenth,]{ a} i.e., Some elect left in the land for a reserve. And these are called a tenth—(1.) Because, as the tenths, they are consecrated to God; {#Le 27:30-32} (2.) Because but a few. So that God may say, as once of the cured lepers, "Where are the other nine?" Such were those that looked for the consolation of Israel when Christ came in the flesh, Zacharias, Simeon, Anna, the Marys, Joseph of Arimathea, the apostles, Peter's converts, &c.

And it shall return and shall be eaten.] Or, It shall, after its return again, be burnt up or removed; so they were to some purpose by the Romans. See on #Isa 6:12.

As a teil tree, or as an oak.] Trees that are durae ac durabiles, hard and long lasting; and although they lose their fruit and leaves, or be cut down, yet

Their substance is in them.] The substance of the matter, the sap remaineth in the trunk and root. {b} Some think there is an allusion in this text to a bank or causeway that went from the king's house to the temple, and was borne up with trees planted on either side of it; which trees, as they kept up the causeway, so do the godly the state. {#1Ch 26:16,18 1Ki 10:12 2Ch 9:11} Semen sanctum statumen terrae.

{a} It may be rendered God's tenth. But what meant Lyra to argue from hence that tithes are due to the Church?

Chapter 7

Ver. 1. And it came to pass.] This is not a superfluous transition, as Augustine {a} maketh it, but importeth that the following discourse is no less to be regarded than the foregoing.

In the days of Ahaz.] That sturdy stigmatic, under whom Isaiah was as Elijah under Ahab; and for the comfort of the godly, prophesied them most sweetly concerning Christ and his kingdom.

The son of Jotham, the son of Uzziah.] For whose sake, say the Rabbis, this wretch was thus relieved.

King of Judah.] Titularis, sed non tutelaris, titled but not titled, as it was once said of Culperic, King of France, utpote qui Reip. defuit, non praefuit.

That Rezin the King of Syria.] He is first named as being generalissimo; see of him #2Ki 15:37. He was King of Damascene and Coelesyria.

And Pekah King of Israel.] These two kings had each invaded Judah before with great success. {#2Ch 28:5,8} And heartened thereby, now they join their forces, thinking to make a full conquest, but were as much deceived and disappointed as were the Pope and Spaniard here in 1588; and more than once in Ireland, where Don Aquila with his Spaniards being beaten out, said in open treaty, that when the devil upon the mount showed Christ all the kingdoms of the earth and the glory of them, he did not doubt but he left out Ireland and kept it for himself.

Went up.] But not in God's name, Non Dei missu et nutu ut ante, sed proprio motu et ambitione.

But could not prevail against it.] Heb., Could not war—sc., with any good success. They came into the country like thunder and lightning, as duo fulmina belli, two thunderbolts of war, but went out like a snuff.

{a} In Pentat.

Ver. 2. And it was told the house of David, / i.e., the king and chief officers of the crown and court. Ill news flieth swift, and filleth all places.

Syria is confederate with Ephraim.] Though these two were oft at a deadly feud between themselves, yet they could combine for a mischief to God's people. So could the Herodians and Pharisees, Herod and Pilate, &c. The devil, doubtless, had a design by these two champions of his to have utterly rooted out the house of David (as he sought also afterwards to do by Herod, Caligula, and others), and so to have prevented Christ's being "made of the seed of Abraham according to the flesh"; {#Ro 1:3} but that could not be.

And his heart was moved.] Concussum est et conquassatum, Impiety triumpheth in prosperity, trembleth in adversity. Tullus Hostilius, that godless King of Rome, set up Pavor and Pallor for gods to himself. Saul and Ahithophel in distress despaired and despatched themselves; so did Demosthenes, Cato, and other heathen sages, who were without God in the world, and therefore without comfort. Sin maketh men timorous, {#Le 26:36} but righteousness bold. {#Pr 28:1 Ps 27:1} The Spirit of power and of a sound mind are fitly set together. {#2Ti 1:7}

Ver. 3. Then said the Lord unto Isaiah.] Wicked Ahaz shall have a prophet sent him with a promise, if it be but to leave him without excuse. There was also a godly party in the land, whose comfort was aimed at, and for whose sake Shearjashub was also taken along, as carrying comfort in this very name. Portendit enim omnes pios qui divini verbi satu generandi sunt salvos et incolumes fore, divinisque muneribus exornatos.

At the end of the conduit of the upper pool.] Where he is walking and talking about sending to Assyria for help. The place is pointed out for confirmation of the truth of the prophecy. So in the gospel the apostles are foretold where to fetch the ass, where to prepare the passover. This place was without the city, opposite the royal palace, the very same where afterwards Rabshakeh (the fugitive son of our prophet Isaiah, say the Rabbis, but without reason), railed upon the living God. This prophecy here and now delivered, might haply be some support to good Hezekiah under that trial. {#2Ki 18:13-37}

Of the fuller's field.] Fullers must have store of water, and room enough for the dressing and drying of their clothes. Ministers are by an ancient called Fullones animarum, Fullers of men's souls.

Ver. 4. Take heed, and be quiet.] Cave et quiesce; or as others render it, Vide ut sileas, see that thou say nothing; fret not, faint not, send no message to the Assyrian, rest by faith upon the Lord of hosts, get a blessed Sabbath of spirit, a well composed frame of soul, for in quietness and confidence consisteth thy safety, as #Isa 30:15.

Fear not, neither be fainthearted.] See on #Isa 7:2.

For the two tails of these smoking firebrands.] By a most elegant metaphor, he nameth not one of these two potentates as not worth naming, but calleth them in contempt a couple of firebrands, such as would do mischief but cannot, because but smoking and not burning, and but the tails of smoking firebrands neither, such as are smoking their last, and shall shortly be utterly extinct. In a word, they have more pride than power, being a mere flash.

Ver. 5. Because Syria, Ephraim, &c.] This was the fruit of their fury fuming out at their noses, {#Isa 7:4} and proving like smoke, which the higher it riseth, the sooner it vanisheth; or like the bubbles blown up into the air by children, into whose eyes they soon fall back again. There is no wisdom, nor understanding, nor counsel against the Lord. {#Pr 21:30} {See Trapp on "Pr 21:30"}

Ver. 6. Let us go up against Judah and vex it.] So they had done separately, and so they think much more to do jointly. Sed aliter

Deo visum est. There is a council in heaven that dasheth the mould of all contrary counsels upon earth. {as #Ps 2:4}

And let us make a breach therein for us.] Or, Let us divide it, and share it between us, or set a king over it that may be a vassal to us both. Thus the Pope gave away England primo occupaturo, to him that should first take it in Henry VIII's days; but he reckoned without his host, as they say.

Even the son of Tabeal.] A Syrian, likely, as Tabrimmon; {#1Ki 15:18} a good Rimmonite; {#2Ki 5:18} so Tabeal a good god. Rimmon was the Syrian's god. The Chaldee expoundeth it, good, or right for us.

Ver. 7. It shall not stand.] The counsel of the Lord, that shall stand {#Ps 33:11} when the world's wizards shall be taken in their own craftiness. {#1Co 3:19}

It shall not be.] All their projects are dashed by a word. Video, rideo, saith he that sitteth in heaven, {#Ps 2:4} I look and laugh; and wherein they dealt proudly, I am above them. {#Ex 18:11}

Ver. 8. For the head of Syria is Damascus.] Not Jerusalem, as they haply had contrived it; looking upon Jerusalem as a city fatally founded to bear rule, as one saith of Constantinople.

And the head of Damascus is Rezin.] Let him set his heart at rest, and not reach after the dominion of Judah; lest, falling from his high hopes, he lose that he hath already, and cry out with that ambitionist, Sic mea fata sequor.

And within threescore and five years,] sc., From the time that Amos foretold it, {#Am 5:27 7:8} that is, from the twenty-fourth year of Uzziah to the sixth of Hezekiah, whenas the ten tribes were carried away by Shalmaneser. {#2Ki 17:3-6} Thus Jerome out of Seder Olam. But I like better Piscator's computation, which is thus within sixty-five years, that is, from the fourth year of Ahaz, now current, to the twenty-third of Manasseh, when Ephraim ceased indeed to be a people by the command of Esarhaddon, son of Sennacherib; whereof see #Ezr 4:2.

Ver 9. And the head of Samariah, Remaliah's son.] In contempt he hath neither his name nor title of a king given him, but is fairly warned to keep within his bounds; he is not like to hold long that he hath. It is dangerous meddling with Jerusalem. {#Zec 12:2,3,6}

If ye will not believe, surely ye shall not be established.] Jehoshaphat said as much, {#2Ch 20:20} and our Saviour somewhat like. {#Joh 8:20} Isaiah saw the king and people still fluctuating and trembling, notwithstanding the divine promise, and telleth them what to trust to; unless they will trust in God, they will never be soundly settled. Faith quelleth and killeth distrustful fear, and maketh a man walk about the world like a conquerer. There is an elegance here in the original that cannot be translated. {a}

{a} Valde brevis sententia est, sed gravis admodum. -Oecolampadius.

Ver. 10. Moreover the Lord spake again unto Ahaz.] Wicked though he were, and under the power of unbelief, yet he shall see that he hath to do with a very gracious and longsuffering God, who, by a wonderful condescension, will needs give him a sign; Inauditum vero, dari signum incredulo. Christ would not so far gratify the unbelieving Pharisees, but calleth them an "evil and bastardly brood" for seeking a sign from heaven. {#Mt 12:39}

Ver. 11. Ask the sign of the Lord.] Not of any other God, to whom thou art addicted.

Thy God.] From whom thou hast deeply revolted; but of whom thou mightest upon thy return be graciously reaccepted.

Ask it either in the depth.] This was a fair offer to so foul a sinner; but all would not do—no, though he should have had a sight of heaven or of hell for a sign; and yet Bellarmine thinketh that one glimpse of hell were enough to work upon the most hard hearted sinner in the world, and to make him yield to anything.

Ver. 12. I will not ask.] All, lewd lowly! "I will not ask"; what a base answer was this of a bedlam Belialist! what a wretched entertainment of such an over bounding mercy! He doth upon the matter say, I will ask no asks; I will try no signs, I know a trick worth two off that; God shall for me keep his signs to himself; I crave no such courtesy at his hands; I can otherwise help myself, viz., by sending to the Assyrian. If the Lord could and would have helped, how happeth it that so lately no less than a hundred and twenty thousand of my subjects were cut off in one day by this Remaliah's son, as you contemptuously call him?

Neither will I tempt the Lord.] Or, Neither will I make trial of the Lord, as in the former note. Ambrose was mistaken who thought that Ahaz refused to ask or try the Lord, out of modesty and humility; rather it was out of perversity, or, at best, hypocrisy. Hic descendamus in nostras conscientias, saith good Oecolampadius. Here let us each descend and dive into his own conscience, to see whether we also have not matched Ahaz in his madness, or at least wise coasted too near upon his unkind usage of the Lord, by rejecting his sweet offers of grace and motions of mercy, by slighting his holy sacraments, those signs and seals of the righteousness that is by faith. Adsit fides, et aberit periculum. Let faith be near then danger is absent.

Ver. 13. Hear ye now, O house of David.] But shamefully degenerate from your thrice worthy progenitors, and strangely forgetful of God's promises for a perpetual succession; which if ye remembered and believed, ye would not be so causelessly terrified.

Is it a small thing for you.] How heartily angry is the prophet, how blessedly blown up in this case to so great dishonour done to God! We should be so too.

To weary men.] To vex and molest. The Septuagint have it, "to strive," or "wrestle ^{a} a fall with men." By men he meaneth himself and his fellow prophets, whom Ahaz and his courtiers slighted and misused. Let this comfort God's faithful ministers under the world's indignities and injuries. See #Mt 5:11,12.

But will ye weary, my God?] Whom I serve in my spirit, and now no more thy God ^{b} ^{as #Isa 7:11} since thou hast refused to be ruled by him; and that after manifest conviction and greatest importunity to bring thee to a better temper.

Ver. 14. Therefore the Lord himself shall give you a sign.] Give it you, ingratiis vestris, without your leave, of his own proffer. "If we believe not, yet God remaineth faithful." {#2Ti 2:13 Ro 3:3} The house of David was as it were great with child with Christ and with God's promises in him; therefore, to be sure, it could not be rooted out, as these two kings designed, before Christ were come into the world. Hence his wonderful conception and birth is made here a sign of his people's safety here and salvation hereafter. And had Ahaz and his people believed this latter, they would not have much doubted of the former, but rather argued with St Paul, "Having given us his Son, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?" {#Ro 8:32}

A sign.] A singular sign—a sign both from above and from beneath; for he joined lumen suae aeternitatis limo tuae mortalitatis, { a } the light of his eternity to the mud of thy mortality, as a father hath it. {#Joh 1:14 Php 2:6,7}

Behold.] A note of attention and admiration. One compareth it to the sounding of a trumpet before some notable proclamation; another to a hand in the margin pointing to some remarkable matter. So doth this Ecce to Christ's incarnation as a thing in God's decree and to his people's faith already present.

A virgin.] Hagnalmah, that famous virgin, { b } so long since spoken of; {#Ge 3:15} that female glory, the Virgin Mary, with whom the angel spake concerning man's salvation, {#Mt 1:18,23 Lu 1:27,35} as the devil before had done with the first woman, concerning the means of his destruction. Of this virgin mother the sybils are said thus to have prophesied also:—

“ Virginis in corpus voluit dimittere caelo

*Ipse Deus prolem, cure nuntiat Angelus almae
Matri, quae miseros contracta sorde levabit.*”

See more in Virgil's 4th Eclog., and Aug. de Civ. Dei, lib. x. cap. 27. Some tell us that when this blessed virgin brought forth there was seen at Rome about the sun the likeness of a woman carrying a child in her arms, and a voice heard saying, Pan, the great God, is born into the world.

Shall conceive and bear a son.] Shiloh, the son of her secundine {#Ge 49:10} the true Melchizedek, as man without father, and as God without mother. {#Heb 7:3 Lu 1:35} But how blank were the Jews when they saw the issue of their late Jewish virgin turned to a daughter! and how silly is that saying of theirs in their Tulum; {c} For our sins, which are many, the coming of the Messiah is deferred. Jachiades, upon those words in #Da 12:4, would have us believe that God sealed up the time of Christ's coming, revealing it to Daniel only. But why take they not notice that the very time of Messiah the prince's coming is set down by Daniel? {#Da 9:24-27} and since that time is long since past, let them either condemn the prophet of vanity, or else confess with us that Christ is come already.

And shall call.] Or, Thou (virgin) shalt call, as having the right of nomination.

His name Immanuel.] That is, God with us. {as #Mt 1:23} {See Trapp on "Mt 1:23"} Cuius nomen illius numen facile declarabit. Christ, indeed, was not called by this name Immanuel that we anywhere read of, as neither was Solomon by the name of Jedediah, {#2Sa 12:25,26} unless it be #Isa 8:8; but the import of this name is most truly affirmed and acknowledged to be fully made good in him.

{a} Bernard.

{c} Sanhed., cap. xi.

Ver. 15. Butter and honey shall he eat, / i.e., He shall be fed with children's meat, after the manner of other infants; for, as he shall take upon him our nature, so shall he also partake with us in our natural infirmities, feeding, as other children there did, on "butter and honey," {a} not able to discern good from evil, through want of judgment, till he came to be of discretion, {#Lu 2:52 De 1:39} that he might be in all things like unto us, and that we might once come "unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ"; {#Eph 4:13} that we might become "strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might"; able to "do all things through Christ, that strengtheneth us" {#Php 4:7} Stumble not at his weakness, but gather assurance of his love who so sweetly joined his majesty to our meanness—his might to our weakness, abasing himself to the shape and state of a feeble, weak, and helpless child.

{a} Noematica periphrasis.

Ver. 16. For before the child.] Hannagnar, this child Shear-jashub here present, {#Isa 7:3} the proper sign of this present deliverance {as #Isa 8:4-7} made so by occasion of the mention of Immanuel, that was to be born, many years after, of a virgin.

The land that thou abhorrest.] Or, By which thou art vexed. {as #Isa 7:6} Confer #Ex 1:12 Nu 22:3. So the Danes were abhorred by the English, the French by the Sicilians, as appeared by those bloody vespers.

Shall be left of both her kings.] Who shall be cut off by a seasonable vengeance. See this fulfilled {#2Ki 15:30 16:9} within a year or two of this prophecy.

Ver. 17. The Lord shall bring upon thee, &c.,] sc., In case thou believe not. Thou and thine shall perish, notwithstanding this present deliverance. The Lord will "destroy thee after that he hath done thee good." {as #Jos 24:20} Et cuius verbis credere noluisti, eius verberibus fidem habebis. Thou shalt soon have enough of the Assyrian, in whom thou wilt needs trust, and not in me. Him thou shalt call in for help against others; but he, having taken a taste of so fertile a soil and wealthy a state, shall at length overrun all, like as afterwards also the old Gauls did Italy, and the Saracens the Greek empire.

Ver. 18. The Lord will hiss for the fly, &c.] Out of Egypt and the confines. The people of which parts are fitly called flies, say expositors, for their numerosity, swiftness, stench, impudence, harsh language, ob vocis absonae stridorem. The country being hot, and lying low, aboundeth with flies and gnats, such as proud Pharaoh was vexed with.

And for the bee that is in Assyria.] That country is full of woods, and so of bees, to which also the Assyrians are fitly compared, as for their numerousness, their military skill and comely marshalling of their forces; their golden armour, their industry and constance in battle; so for their force and fury especially. Virgil, speaking of bees, saith—

“ Illis ira modum superat, laesaeque venenum

Inspirant stimulis, et vitam in vulnere linquunt. ”

See the Babylonical fierceness and cruelty graphically described. {#Jer 51:34} It was so much the greater, because sent for and set on they were by God’s hiss or whistle.

Ver. 19. And they shall come, and shall rest all of them.] As flies do upon flesh, and as bees upon trees. They shall seize all.

In the desolate valleys, &c.] Hereby is set forth, saith Calvin, that in no lurking place any of the Jews should be secreted or secured from their enemies, but that they shall range about and rage everywhere throughout the whole land. And, because all this is done at a "hiss," the backwardness of Christians is condemned, saith Musculus, who cannot by most earnest preaching of long continuance be brought to do as God requireth them.

Ver. 20. In the same day shall the Lord shave.] Not shear, but shave, with a razor, to set forth the calamity of war, which wasteth and taketh away all, and maketh clean work, as we use to say: Nihil in toto regno intactum reliquit, sed omnia a summo ad imum expilavit Assyrius. The Assyrian is here called God’s razor, because his instrument, to shave as he pleaseth, though haply by exceeding his commission {as #Zec 1:15} he might prove a "deceitful razor," {as #Ps 52:2} that, instead of shaving the hair, lanceth the flesh.

That is hired.] Whether by Ahaz himself, but for a better purpose, {#2Ki 16:7,8} not to harm, but to help, though it happened otherwise; or by God, who paid the Assyrian for his hire the lands of Israel and of Syria. See the like #Eze 29:18,19. Barbers use not their razors but for reward.

Beyond the river.] Euphrates, that ran between Syria and Assyria, but could not keep off the Assyrian destroyer.

The head, and the hair of the feet.] Elsewhere called "head and tail"; that is, high and low, prince and peasant.

And it shall also consume the beard.] (1.) The priests, {#Ps 133:2} as some sense it; or (2.) As others, all the comeliness and virility of the Jewish nation.

Ver. 21. A man shall nourish two sheep.] He that was wont to say, Mille meae Siculis errant in montibus agnae, { a } shall now be reduced to so great penury as to be glad of two sheep, and have scarce a young heifer left for his necessary subsistence, who was wont to have many ploughs going. They shall not now, as heretofore, "join house to house, and land to land"; they shall not keep race horses, or hunting dogs, &c.

{a} Virg. Eclog.

Ver. 22. For the abundance of milk.] Yielded him by his two cows, through the paucity of people, and plenty of grass.

He shall eat butter.] Eat his fill, since there are none to buy it from him; none to pull it out of his mouth.

For butter and honey shall every one eat.] Not delicacies and dainties, {as #Isa 5:12} but mean fare, such as he can get; as wild honey, such as the Baptist fed on.

Ver. 23. Where there were a thousand vines.] Which once were to the sensual Jews an occasion of drunkenness and forgetfulness of God. {#Isa 5:11,12} A Lapide on #Isa 5:2, telleth us that at Herbipolis in Germany there are abundance of vineyards, so that they have more wine there than water; and such huge wine vessels, that the vintners have doors in the sides of them whereby they enter, as Diogenes did into his tub, to make them clean and fit for their use.

Shall be briars and thorns.] Agri quondam vitibus consiti, erunt obsiti vepribus, et dumetis densissimis hirsuti.

Ver. 24. With arrows and with bows shall they come.] For their necessary defence against the wild beasts that haunt those desert places, propter densa ferarum lustra hominibus infesta. This was threatened. {#Le 26:22}

Ver. 24. And on all the hills that shall be digged, &c.] A good translation of a text is instead of a good commentary. Some very learned {a} render the words thus: And on the hills that had wont to be digged with mattock or spade, that no fear of brier or thorn might come thither, shall a place also be for sending in of oxen and the treading of lesser cattle; which shall range and graze freely, say they by way of gloss, after their wonted manner in those places, from whence they and their owners had formerly been ejected and excluded by the violent oppressions and undue enclosures of the richer and greater sort. {#Isa 5:17}

{a} Assemb. Annot.

Ver. 1. Take thee a great roll.] Or, Volume; so called either because it was rolled up together like the web upon the pin; or, as others, because it revealeth that unto us which otherwise we knew not. Blasphemous was that jeer of the Jews who called the evangel or gospel Aven gillaion, a volume of vanity. And no better was that of Bishop Bonner's chaplain, who called the Bible, that blessed book, in scorn, his "little pretty God's book." This one small piece of it is here styled grande volumen, a great roll, for the fulness of the matter in fewness of words.

And write in it with a man's pen.] That is, plainly and clearly, {a} that when it shall be fastened to the gate of the temple, or some way else be exposed to public view, "he that runneth may read it," {#Hab 2:2} and he that readeth may understand it. And not be so written as that was, {#Da 5:5,7} which none could read and unriddle but the prophet himself. Nor be, as Aristotle's Acroamatics, published and yet unpublished. {b}

Concerning Maher-shalal-hash-baz.] Make speed to the spoil, hasten the prey; words whereby God calleth the King of Assyria out of his country to take the spoil speedily of Syria and Samaria; both which groaned for his coming, and hanged for his mowing. This was afterwards given for a name to Isaiah's newly born babe, viz., at his circumcision; and that before two sufficient witnesses, who might attest both the child's name and the reason of it, which the prophet likely told them. Such another compound name was Shear-jashub, {#Isa 7:3} Zorobabel, Hagio-Christophorites, &c, and among us Keep-Sabbath, Hope-still, &c.

{a} Chald. vertit Scripturam claram {see #Isa 30:8}

{b} Εκδεδομενος και ουκ εκδεδομενος

Ver. 2. And I took unto me faithful witnesses.] So they might be, and yet not godly men; as Galba and our Richard III were said to be bad men, but yet good princes. Some think that this Uriah was the same with him that brought in the altar of Damascus. He had been better perhaps, but at last revolted; as did Demas, of whom Dorotheus saith that he became a priest in an idol temple at Thessalonica; and Damascen, who turned Mohammedan, as some write. Zechariah, the other witness, was a man of great eminence, as being grandfather, by the mother's side, to good Hezekiah.

Ver. 3. And I went unto the prophetess.] Prophets' wives were anciently called prophetesses; like as bishops' wives, saith A Lapede the Jesuit, were also called bishopesses, presbyters' wives, presbyteresses, deacons' wives, deaconesses. Jesuits have still their Jesuitesses, as majors their majoreesses, &c.

Maher-shalal-hash-baz,] q.d., Make haste, come away to so rich a booty, to the rifling and ruining of these two potent and opulent kingdoms. God hereby seemeth to speak of the Assyrian, as Cicero once did his friend, Si dormis, expergiscere: si stas, ingredere: si ingrederis, curre: si curtis, advola, &c. and at the calling of this child by his name, the prediction was remembered, and the thing ascertained.

Ver. 4. For before the child, &c.] That is, within a year or two; for it was an extraordinary thing that is reported of Maximilian the Emperor, that he was eight years old at least ere he spake anything, but afterwards he became a fluent and elegant speaker.

The riches of Damascus.] Riches do many times change their masters, and kingdoms are oft turned upside down, when they fall to persecuting the people of God especially, as did these Syrians and Israelites.

Before the king of Assyria.] Spoils taken from the enemy were and are usually carried in triumph before the conqueror.

Ver. 5. The Lord spake also unto me again, saying.] Heb., And the Lord further added to speak unto me. Here the Israelites, apart from the Syrians, are specially threatened with destruction, because they abandoned their brethren, the two other tribes, and trusted to confederacies and aids of foreign princes.

Ver. 6. Forasmuch as this people.] The ten revolted tribes, not worth the naming. {see #Isa 7:6}

Refuse the waters of Shiloah.] Slight and contemn the small means and strength of the Church: Humilem et obscurum stature regni Zionis.

That run softly] At the foot of Mount Zion, creeping and crooking, slowly and slyly; called therefore, as some think, the dragon's well. {#Ne 2:13} Caesar {a} saith the like of the river Araris, probably Sone; and the poet Claudian of the Nile,

“ *Lene fluit Nilus, sed cunctis amnibus extat
Utilior, nullas cofessus murmure vires.* ”

And rejoice in Rezin and Remaliah's son.] "Rejoice in a thing of nought," as Amos's expression is in #Am 6:13. The Hebrew here hath it thus: And joy is to Rezin, &c.; that is, the Syrians and Israelites both are much cheered up to see that Judah is at so great an under, and so easy to be overcome, as they think.

{a} De Bell. Gall., lib. i.

Ver. 7. Wow therefore behold the Lord bringeth.] They that slighted still running Shiloah, shall have the waters of Euphrates, strong and many, to overwhelm and swallow them up. God loveth to retaliate.

Even the king of Assyria and all his glory,] i.e., His armies and forces, wherein he glorieth. See #Isa 10:8 36:9.

And he shall.] Or, It shall, viz., the river Euphrates, whose exundation is here graphically described, and thereby depainted to the life; {a} the practice of tyrants in overrunning whole countries as by a deluge, as did the Assyrian of old, and as doth the great Turk at this day.

{a} Καθ' υποτυπωσιν.

Ver. 8. And he shall pass through Judah.] After Israel subdued; but yet with a difference, {as #Isa 27:7,8} for the Israelites and Syrians were utterly drowned with this proud flood, but the Jews were only drenched. It "reached but to the neck," their head was ever above water; and that because Immanuel, better than any Christopher, bore them up.

And the stretching out of his wings.] That is, of his immense forces; the Assyrian, by another allegory, being here compared to an eagle, which covereth her whole prey with her wings.

Shall fill the breadth of thy land, O Immanuel.] Shall surely, unless thou, O Lord Christ (who art king of this country by a specialty), shalt please to prevent it. Learn we likewise in all our straits or ailments to run to our Immanuel, and implore his help, remembering that he is God with us, he is a man amidst us, cum Patre dator, inter nos petitor, as Augustine hath it; he gives with the Father, he prays with the suitor; he will deliver and defend his subjects and suppliants.

Ver. 9. Associate yourselves, O ye people.] In confidence of her king Immanuel's succour (help) and support, the Church thus holily insulteth over her most active enemies, foretelling their utter subversion. "The virgin daughter of Zion" doth the like, {#Isa 37:22} as binding upon her invincible champion Immanuel, {#Isa 8:2,3} whose very name here putteth spirits into her, and maketh her take 'heart of grace,' as they say. Basil biddeth the Christians in time of persecution boldly bespeak their adversaries in these words, though somewhat otherwise rendered by the Septuagint, by mistake of a letter. If again ye prevail, ye shall yet again be vanquished. And truly of the Church it may be foretold better than of Troy—

*“ Victa tamen vinces, eversa que Troia resurges: Obruet hostiles illa ruina domes.”
- Ovid, Fast.*

Gird yourselves and ye shall be broken in pieces.] "Ye shall," "ye shall," without fail, though ye little believe it. It shall be done (as is therefore here so often threatened), as sure as the coat is on your back, or the heart in your belly.

Ver. 10. Take counsel together.] Do so if you will; but when all is done, the counsel of the Lord shall stand, and you shall consult nothing better than shame to yourselves.

Speak a word.] All these expressions serve to set forth the bitter hatred borne by these wicked ones against God's poor people, whom they sought by all means to mischief, but could not.

For God is with us.] Heb., Immanuel. That sweet name was to the godly party mel in ore, melos in aure, iubilum in corde, honey in the mouth, song in the ear, a joyful shout in the heart, and hence so oft recited; these heavenly birds, having got such a note, record it over and over.

Ver. 11. For the Lord spake thus to me with a strong hand.] That is, with his Spirit accompanying his word, and setting it home to my heart, that so I might speak from the heart to the heart. Some render it, taking me by the hand, {a} fidelis paedagogi instar, like a loving and faithful schoolmaster, and thereby pulling me back that I should not walk in the common road.

That I should not walk in the way of this people.] Not howl with those wolves, not tune my fiddle to the bass of the times, not follow a multitude to do evil, but rather to keep a constant countermotion to the many, and rather to go right alone than not at all. Cassianus {b} gives very good counsel, Vive ut pauci, ut cum paucis inveniri merearis in regno Dei, Live thou as but few else do, that with those few thou mayest be found in God's kingdom. Now, none can do thus but only they to whom the Lord both speaketh, and layeth hold also upon their hand that they be not "led away with the error of the wicked." {#2Pe 3:17}

{b} In Epist.

Ver. 12. Say ye not a confederacy.] A confederacy, a confederacy—scil., between Syria and Samaria—is made against us; this was vox populi, voice of the people, all the talk in those days, and everybody's mouth was full of it, and heart afraid of it. But say ye not so, comply not, consent not; chime not in with the spirits and speeches of other men. Away with all such despairing language. For help against which,

Ver. 13. Sanctify the Lord of hosts himself.] Even your sweetest Immanuel; non sanctificatur autem nisi in eam credatar; sanctify him, I say, by believing in your hearts and confessing with your mouths, {#Ro 10:9} and walking "as becometh the gospel, ... in nothing terrified by your adversaries." {#Php 1:27,28}

And let him be your fear.] That is, the object of your fear, {as #Ge 31:53 Ps 76:11} where God is called "Fear" by an appellative proper. So the Chaldee paraphrase frequently calleth God Dechilah. The Greeks call him Θεος, of Δεος, fear. Bernard saith well, God is to be feared as a Lord, honoured as a Father, loved as a spouse. This fear of God is a sovereign remedy against the fear of the creature, and is therefore here and elsewhere opposed to it. Surely, as one fire driveth out another, and as Moses' serpent swallowed up the sorcerers' serpents, so here.

Ver. 14. And he shall be for a sanctuary.] In quo serventur, et in lapidem, in quo firmiter stent pit: impii vero impingant, ruant et conterantur, a sanctuary of safety, a stone of stability, though to the wicked he prove otherwise—even a stone of offence to stumble them, and a snare to take them in for their hurt. Christ, as he is Piorum rupes, a rock of refuge to the godly; so he is reorum scopulas, a rock of revenge to dash in pieces the impenitent, as Valerius Maximus once said the tribunal of Lucius Cassius was. This was chiefly fulfilled in the time of the gospel. See #Ro 9:23 1Pe 2:6 Mt 21:42 Ac 4:11.

But for a stone of stumbling.] Petra perditionis, to all that refuse to be ruled by him and to rely upon him; with these froward ones he will show himself froward. {#Ps 18:26}

Ver. 15. And many among them shall stumble and fall.] So may God's elect, but not so as to be broken, because they cannot fall below a supporting hand of God. {#Ps 37:24} Utter prolapsion cannot possibly befall them.

And be broken, and snared, and taken.] The Septuagint here add of their own, And men shall be taken that are in a supposed safety, living as if they were out of the reach of God's rod.

Ver. 16. Bind up the testimony, seal the law, &c.] Et lateat, et lucent. let it both be hidden and be conspicuous. Let thy doctrine, saith God here to the prophet, contained in that great roll, {#Isa 8:1} or otherwise published (concerning Immanuel especially), be concealed from these profane scoffers, but imparted to my disciples that "sit down at my feet to receive my word." {#De 33:3} Those Jews in Christ's time had the testimony, that is, the gospel preached to them; but they were woefully blinded; so that when the Messiah, to whom all their odd signs so well agreed, was among them, they could by no means own him and receive him. {#Mt 2:5 Joh 1:11} That Italian translation of the New Testament which the Jews lately had, is, for their abuse of it, called in and taken from them. Pope Gregory IX caused their Talmud, wherein Christian religion is so much blasted, to be burned; and the like did Julius III about the year 1553.

Seal the law among my disciples.] Such as have been θεοδιδασκτοι, "taught of God," taught "as the truth is in Jesus." {#Eph 4:20,21} Seal the law, that "perfect law of liberty," the gospel, for such, for their behoof and support in these calamitous times.

Ver. 17. And I will wait upon the Lord.] I will patiently and peaceably submit to his holy will in the exercise of mine office, hoping that I shall be acknowledged and approved of him, though men reject me, and are for their obstinace deservedly rejected of God.

And I will look for him.] As it were with outstretched neck. Difficile opus et arduum! Difficult and arduous work! Good men find it more easy to bear evil than to wait till the promised good be enjoyed. {#Heb 10:36}

Ver. 18. Behold, I and the children whom the Lord.] That is, my disciples and converts, who have the same conflict with me. {#Php 1:30}

Are for signs and for wonders.] Hissed and hooted at as so many monsters by the mad world, even beside itself in point of salvation; and accounting the saints, as the Spaniards were wont to say of the Portuguese, Pocos et focos, few and foolish; and as the Turks count all fools to be saints, so the most count all saints to be fools. These shall one day cry, Nos insensati. We are fools.

Ver. 19. And when they shall say unto you.] The prophet's wholesome advice to his disciples. God had hid his face and withdrawn his favour from this people; therefore they would help themselves as they could, by doing as Saul did when forsaken of God, by running to witches and wizards, resolving with her in the poet—

“ Flectere si nequo superos, Acheronta movebo.”

That peep and that mutter.] Utter their predictions in broken and low language, grunting or grumbling them out in dark and doubtful expressions, as distrusting their own art.

Should not a people seek unto their God?] See #Jer 2:11 Mic 4:5. Our God is a rewarder of all that diligently seek him, or that "seek him out" {#Heb 11:6} -viz., when he hath withdrawn himself and hid his face. {as #Isa 8:17}

For the living to the dead,] q.d., Is that handsome? is it agreeable to right reason? O stultam commutationem! vocat nos Deus vivus, et nos recurrimus ad mortuos. {a}

{a} Oecolamp.

Ver. 20. To the law and to the testimonies.] Lo, this is the way, walk in it, for the commandment is a lamp, and the law is light. {#Pr 6:23} They have Moses and the prophets; {#Lu 16:29} these must be the men of our counsel, {#Ps 119:24} even these lively and life giving oracles, {#Ac 7:38} not dead idols or damned necromancers.

There is no light in them.] Either of truth or of comfort. Good expressions such kind of creatures may use, it may be; but si magicae, Deus non vult tales; si piae non per tales: their false lights serve but to light them into utter darkness. Happy was Oecolampadius, an excellent commentator upon this prophet, who made good the splendour of his own name, when (beside the light he lent to "the law and testimonies") he could lay his hand on his breast when he lay dying of the plague, and say, Here's plenty of light got from the Scripture.

Ver. 21. And they shall pass through it.] To and again, as uncertain of their way, and even at their wit's end.

When they shall be hungry.] Cum esurierit et efferbuerit, as a pot boiling casteth up scum.

And curse their king.] Ahaz, say some; Zedekiah, say others.

And their God.] As those Antichristians. {#Re 16:9} The Chinese whip their gods when they please them not.

And look upward.] As the hunger bitten wolf howls against heaven.
Ver. 22. Trouble and darkness, &c.] A huge heap of words all to one sense; to set forth their deepest distress without all hope of help.

Chapter 9

Ver. 1. Nevertheless the dimness shall not be such.] Dimness of anguish had been forethreatened. {#Isa 8:22} Now this is added for an allay, as being a promise of a mitigation of their misery, and yet further of Christ's incarnation, which is the sum of all the good news in the world. Evangelistam hic agit Isaias, non prophetam, saith one, {a} i.e., Isaiah here acteth the part of an evangelist rather than of a prophet. He foretelleth, saith another interpreter, {b} that as the Assyrians preyed upon Samaria and Galilee, so shall the Lord Christ also prey upon them spiritually, and for their greatest good. {#Isa 9:2} And as Tiglathpileser first carried away a few out of Galilee, lightly afflicting the land of Zebulon and the land of Naphtali, and then Shalmaneser, more grievously afflicting her, carried captive those and all the rest of the ten tribes; similarly Christ, first preaching in Galilee, converted and called from there various of his disciples, and afterwards, when he was lifted up from the earth, he drew all men unto him. {#Joh 12:32} He rode upon his white horse, the apostles, conquering the world, and to conquer. {#Re 6:2} And hence that sincere joy in the hearts of his servants, far exceeding that of harvest, which is not without great toil, or that of soldiers dividing the spoil, which is not achieved without confused noise and garments rolled in blood.

{#Isa 9:2,3,5} {c}

By the way of the sea.] The sea of Tiberias, {#Joh 21:1} or lake of Genesareth. {#Lu 5:1}

Beyond Jordan.] Or, Beside Jordan.

In Galilee of the Gentiles.] {See Trapp on "Mt 4:15"}

{a} Scult.

{b} A Lap.

{c} Oecolamp.

Ver. 2. The people that walked in darkness.] Liberationis lucem promittit. {See Trapp on "Mt 4:16"}

Ver. 3. Thou hast multiplied the nation.] Or, "Never since thou multipliedst this people, didst thou give them such joy"—i.e., such matter of joy as now thou intendest to do. Or thus, "Thou wilt multiply this nation, thou wilt increase their joy"; especially by sending thy Son, who is called "the gift," {#Joh 4:10} "the benefit," {#1Ti 6:2} such as wherein all discontents are soon swallowed up. Everlasting joy shall be upon the heads of the Lord's ransomed ones, they "shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away." {#Isa 35:10}

They joy before thee.] Pleasure there must be in the ways of God, because therein men let out their souls into God, the fountain of all good. Christ's chariot is paved with love. {#So 3:9,10}

According to the joy in harvest.] And a great deal more. {#Ps 4:7} They do "over abound exceedingly with joy." {#2Co 7:4} Joys they have "unspeakable, and full of glory." {#1Pe 1:8}

And as men rejoice when they divide the spoil.] Wherein the pleasure is usually more than the profit, {#Ps 119:162} and yet the profit oft very great too, {as #2Ch 20:25} and as at the sack of Constantinople, at the wealth whereof the Turks themselves wondered, and derided their folly that possessing so much they would bestow so little in the defence of themselves and their country. {a}

{a} Turkish History, fol. 345.

Ver. 4. For thou hast broken the yoke of his burden,] i.e., Thou hast disenthralled and delivered thy people from the burdensome yokes of their enemies, both corporal and spiritual; that taking thine easy yoke, thy light burden upon them, they might "serve thee without fear in holiness and righteousness before thee all the days of their lives." {#Lu 1:74} The Jewish doctors expound all this of Sennacherib's tyranny, and their deliverance therefrom. But the prophet intendeth a further matter {#Isa 9:6,7}

And the staff of his shoulder.] Wherewith he was beaten and bastinadoed. {thrashed} See #Isa 14:5.

The rod of his oppressor.] Metaphora ab agasonibus, a metaphor from horse drivers, who lay on without mercy. Whipping among the Turks hath been usually inflicted even upon the greatest bashaws of the court upon the least displeasure of the tyrant, especially if they be not natural Turks born. {a} The poor captives met with hard measure this way at Babylon; but Satan's slaves with much harder. Christ fitly noteth here that the rod wherewith the devil whippeth sinners is their own lusts and passions; yea, herewith they punish themselves, by his instigation, as the lion beateth himself with his own tail.

As in the day of Midian.] Beaten by Gideon. {#Jud 7:21} So "the day of Gibeah." {#Ho 9:9} "The day of Jerusalem." {#Ps 137:7} The battle of Agincourt, the Sicilian vespers, &c. Gideon, by the sound of trumpet and shining of lamps out of earthen broken vessels, overcame those Midianites; so by the trumpet of his Word and light of the gospel, carried through the world by weak instruments, hath Christ confounded his adversaries, {#Jo 2:14} as one fitly maketh the comparison. See it largely prosecuted in sixteen particulars in Cornelius A Lapide upon the text.

{a} Turkish History, 361.

Ver. 5. For every battle of the warrior, &c.] Great is the woe of war; when death hews its way through a wood of men, in a minute of time, from the mouth of a murdering piece, when fire and sword waste at pleasure. The birth of Christ comforteth against all the miseries of war; whereunto therefore it is opposed both here, and #Mic 5:1,2; {See Trapp on "Mic 5:1"} {See Trapp on "Mic 5:2"} Now, then, as the Israelites frightened and flighted the Midianites with saying, Hic Gideon, Here's Gideon; so may we our spiritual enemies by crying Hic Iesus; Hoc in signo vincemus. This is Jesus, lets us conquer under his standard. Here's Jesus; we are "more than conquerors through him that loved us."

But this shall be with burning,] i.e., With the fire of the Holy Ghost, saith Oecolampadius, burning up our corruptions, {as #Isa 4:4} and moulding us into a new man. Diodate senseth it thus: The world shall be filled with blood and wars, and at last shall be consumed with fire at the day of judgment.

Ver. 6. For unto us a child is born.] That child foretold of. {#Isa 7:14} Christ shall be born in the fulness of time, as sure as if he were born already. This was "good tidings of great joy to all people." {#Lu 2:10} The Hebrew beshar, for good tidings, cometh of bashar, for flesh; because, say some critics, there should be a taking of flesh, God manifested in the flesh, which should be the best tidings. Angels first brought it, and were glad of such an errand. Still they pry into this mystery, Trono capite et propenso collo {#1Pe 1:12} and can never sufficiently wonder to see that μεγας Θεος should be μικρον Βρεφος, the "great God, a little child"; regens sidera, sugens ubera; that he who ruleth the stars should be sucking at the breast; that the eternal Word should not be able to speak a word; that he that should come in the clouds should appear in clouts {a} {#Lu 2:12} in vilibus et veteribus indumentis, saith Ludolphus, in old tattered rags, in such clouts as we cover wounds and beggars' sores withal, say others. Well might Synesius call Christ viscerum ingentium partum, the birth of huge bowels. For the time of his birth, Christ living just thirty-six years and a half, saith one, and dying at Easter, it must needs follow that he was born about the middle of the month Tisri, which answereth to part of our September, at the Feast of Tabernacles, &c., to which feast the word εσκηνωσεν, in #Joh 1:14 probably alludeth.

Unto us a Son is given.] That "only begotten Son of God." {#Joh 3:16} begotten of the substance of his Father before all beginnings, after an unspeakable manner. The Scripture speaketh of it usually by way of circumlocution, {#Col 1:15 Re 19:12} or giveth us only some glimpse by way of similitude. {as #Heb 1:3} This eternal Son of God, the second person in the Trinity, assumed our nature. {#Heb 2:17} He "overtook" it, as the Greek word signifieth, as the shepherd doth his sheep that has run astray. A shepherd with a sheep upon his shoulder engraved upon the communion cup in the primitive times of the gospel, imported the same notion.

And the government shall be upon his shoulders.] The power and majesty of the kingdom is committed to him by his Father, {#Isa 22:22 Mt 28:18} and he hath strength enough to manage it. Princeps est baiulus Reip. The Hebrews call a prince Nassi, because, Atlas-like, he is to bear up the commonwealth, and not to overload his subjects. Christ, both as prince of his Church, and as high priest also, beareth up and beareth out his people, "helping their infirmities." {#Ro 8:26} {See Trapp on "Ro 8:26"}

And his name shall be called.] Heb., He shall call his name; (1.) God his Father shall; or, (2.) Every true believer shall call him and count him all this. And sure it is, had we but skill to spell all the letters in this name of Christ, it would be "a strong tower" {#Pr 18:10} unto us, better than that of David builded for an armoury, and completely furnished. {#So 4:4} Compare this text with #1Co 1:30, and see all our doubts answered. Are we perplexed? He is our "Wonderful, Counsellor," and "made unto us of God wisdom." Are we in depths of distress? He is "the mighty God," our "redemption." Want we grace and his image? He is the "everlasting Father," our "sanctification." Doth the guilt of sin sting us? He is the "Prince of peace," our "righteousness."

Wonderful.] Heb., A miracle or wonder, {b} viz., in all his counsels and courses, especially for his; glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders. {#Ex 15:11}

Counsellor.] The Septuagint here calleth him "the Angel of the great Council." He is set forth as clothed with a "garment down to the foot," {#Re 1:13} which is the dress of counsellors at law, who are therehence called gentlemen of the long robe. {#Re 3:17 Pr 8:14 Jer 32:19} But because counsellors are but subjects, it is added in Christ's style,

The mighty God.] Able to effect his own counsels for the behoof of his subjects. St Paul calleth him "the great God," {#Tit 2:13} and "God above all to be blessed for ever." {#Ro 9:5} God the potentate, so the Septuagint renders this text: God the giant, so Oecolampadius.

The everlasting Father.] The Father of eternity; "the King eternal, immortal." {#1Ti 1:17} Ferdinand the emperor, on his deathbed, would not acknowledge the title Invictissimus, most unconquerable, but commanded his counsellor to call him Ferdinand without more addition. Christ is also the Author of eternity to all his people whom he hath begotten again to an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for them. {#IPe 1:3,4}

The Prince of peace.] Pacis omnimoda, of all kinds of peace, outward, inward, or of country and of conscience, temporal and eternal. Of all these he is the Prince, as having full power to bestow them; for he is Son to the "God of peace"; {#Ro 16:20} he was brought from heaven with that song of peace; {#Lu 2:14} he himself purged our sins, and made our peace; {#Heb 1:3 Eph 2:14} returned up to heaven with that farewell of peace; {#Joh 14:27} left to the world the gospel of peace; {#Eph 2:17} whose ministers are messengers of peace; {#Ro 10:15} whose followers are the children of peace. {#Lu 10:6-9} Wherefore Christ doth far better deserve than our Henry VII did, to be styled the "Prince of peace." Especially since,

{a} "Swaddling bands," εσπαργανομενον. Induit sordes nostras, He condescended to our rags.

{b} παραδοξασμος.—Symmach. Ipsa admirabilitas. -A Lap.

Ver. 7. Of the increase of his government there shall be no end.] Here the mere final in the middle of the word Lemarbeh hath occasioned some to give many guesses at the reason of it; yea, to conceit many mysteries, where wiser men can find no such matter. It is a good note which one giveth here, viz., that the more Christ's government increaseth in the soul, the more peace there is. See #Isa 32:17 Ps 119:136.

To establish it.] Or, Support it, uphold it. Βασιλευς as if Βασις του λαου. A king hath his name in Greek from being the foundation of the people. This King of kings is only worthy of that name; he is not maintained and supported by us and our subsidies, but we by him, and by the supplies of his Spirit. {#Php 1:19} All our springs are in him. {#Ps 87:7}

The zeal of the Lord of hosts,] i.e., The philanthropy {#Tit 3:4} and free grace of God. {a} Dilexisti me, Domine, magis quam te, You love me, oh God, more than yourself, saith a father. Let us reciprocate, by being zealous of good works, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord. And when Satan telleth us of our no merits, tell we him that the "zeal of the Lord of hosts shall do it" notwithstanding.

{a} Non amat qui non zelat. He does not love him who is not zealous.

Ver. 8. The Lord sent a word into Jacob.] He sent it as a shaft out of a bow, that will be sure to hit. God loves to forewarn; but woe be to those that will not be warned. The Septuagint render it, The Lord sent a plague, or death, into Jacob; and indeed after the white horse followeth the red and the black. {#Re 6:2,4,5} Like as Tamerlane, that warlike Scythian, displayed first a white flag in token of mercy; and then a red, menacing and threatening blood; and then, lastly, a black flag, the messenger and ensign of death, was hung abroad.

And it hath lighted upon Israel.] (1.) They were not ignorant of such a word; {#Isa 9:9} (2.) They could neither avert nor avoid his wrath.

Ver. 9. And all the people shall know.] Know it they do already; but they shall know it by woeful experience. He that trembleth not in hearing, shall be crushed to pieces in feeling, said Mr Bradford, martyr.

That say in pride and stoutness of heart.] The poet could say of his Ajax—αἴηνορία δι μιν εκτα—His pride undid him. So doth it many a man; especially when come to that height that it fighteth against God, as here. When earthen pots will needs be dashing against the "rock of ages," and doing this or that al despito di Dio, as that profane Pope once said, whether God will or no; divine vengeance dogs at heels such desperadoes.

Ver. 10. The bricks are fallen down.] Not thrown down by Providence, but fallen down by fate or blind fortune. God is not so far honoured as once to be owned by these atheists, who think they can make their party good against him, and mend what he had marred, whether he would or not. Thus this giant-like generation; and the like impiety is in the corrupt nature of us all. For "as in water face answereth to face, so doth the heart of a man to a man," saith Solomon. {#Pr 27:19}

The sycamores are cut down, &c.] Another proverbial speech to the same purpose. Sycamores were then very common in that country, and little set by. {#1Ki 10:27} Now they are not to be found there, saith Jerome, as neither are cedars in Lebanon.

Ver. 11. Therefore the Lord shall set up the adversaries of Rezin.] In whom ye trust. He shall shortly be destroyed by the Assyrian, {#2Ki 16:9} and then your hopes shall hop headless, and make you ashamed.

And join his enemies together.] Heb., Mingle them—viz., in confederacy and agreement against him, though otherwise at odds among themselves.

Ver. 12. The Syrians before.] Under the conduct of the Assyrian, who hath slain their King Rezin, and made them his vassals.

And the Philistines behind.] Or from the west—westward.

And they shall devour Israel with open mouth.] The enemies of God's people are more savage and ravenous than wild beasts. Hence they are called in Scripture boars, bears, lions, leopards, unicorns, tigers, wolves, &c. Let us therefore bless us out of their bloody jaws, which having escaped, let us sing, "Blessed be God, who hath not given us as a prey to their teeth." {#Ps 124:6} The poor Indians cried out that it had been better their country had been given to the devils of hell than to those cruel Spaniards.

For all this his wrath is not turned away.] He still frowneth, and hath his hand up to smite, as angry people use to do.

Ver. 13. For the people turneth not unto him that smiteth them.] This were the only way to escape God, viz., to run in to him. There is no standing before a lion, no bearing up sail in a storm, no stouting it out with God Almighty. {#Am 4:6-11} {See Trapp on "Am 4:6"} {See

Trapp on "Am 4:7" } {See Trapp on "Am 4:8" } {See Trapp on "Am 4:9" } {See Trapp on "Am 4:10" }
{See Trapp on "Am 4:11" }

Ver. 14. Head and tail, / i.e., High and low {a} {as #Isa 9:15} Here he compareth Israel, non sine morsu, to a beast with a long tail, for the perverseness of their practices. Or else to the serpent amphisbaena, which stingeth both with head and tail.

Branch and rush.] Strong and feeble. A "branch," or bough, hath some tack in it; a "rush" is a spongy, unsubstantial substance.

Ver. 15. The ancient and honourable is the head.] Thus the Scripture frequently expoundeth itself. In a general calamity all fare alike, lords and losels.

And the prophet that teacheth lies, he is the tail.] Such, like dogs, do cauda adblandiri, soothe and smooth men up in their sins, and are the vilest of men. Quid enim contemptius et abiectius animo fingi potest quam assentari divitibus, linguamque venalim habere? Such also, as serpents, glide smoothly over the body, but sting with their tails.

Ver. 16. For the leaders of this people cause them to err.] By their ill counsel and example. Exempla enim non ibi consistunt, ubi cceperunt. The ancients placed the statues of their princes and patriots near the fountains, to show that they were the spring heads of good or evil to the public. Some read the words thus: Those that bless this people, viz., the false prophets, have been misleaders: ductores fuerunt seductores. Pope Plus II hath this memorable saying, Nihil excellenter malum in Ecclesia, Catholica patratum cuius prima origo a sacerdotibus non dependeat, in forte occulto quodam Dei concilio fiat. {a} Nothing exceedingly bad is done in the Catholic Church, unless it is first started by the priests, it becomes hidden in the plan of God.

And they that are led of them.] Or, Blessed by them.

Are destroyed.] Or, Swallowed up; or, Blindfolded. {b}

{a} In Hist. Auster.

{b} Objecti.—Tremel.

Ver. 17. Therefore the Lord shall have no joy in their young men.] Nay, he shall laugh at their destruction. {#Pr 1:26}

Neither shall have mercy on their fatherless and widows.] They are deceived therefore that, being unregenerate, hope to find favour with God merely for their adversity; and because they have their hell, as they call it, here, think to have heaven hereafter.

Because every one is an hypocrite and an evildoer.] That facies hypocritica of our nation is facies hippocratica, saith one; a mortal complexion, a sad prognostic.

And every mouth speaketh folly.] Or, Villany. Sapless, worthless, rotten, and stinking stuff. {#Eph 4:29}

Ver. 18. For wickedness burneth as a fire.] God will burn up these wicked Israelites, as once he did those sinful Sodomites; for unregenerate Israel is to him as Ethiopia, {#Am 9:7} when once scelera abierunt in mores, and there is a general defection of all sorts and states, God will make an utter riddance of them; he will fire the whole forest.

Ver. 19. Through the wrath of the Lord of hosts is the land darkened,] viz., By that pride of smoke, or vast pillar of smoke, mentioned #Isa 9:18. Tristem et miseram rerum faciem designat.

No man shall spare his brother.] Wickedness is cruel, and a man had as good deal with a cannibal as with a truly covetous wretch.

Ver. 20. And he shall snatch on the right hand, and be hungry.] Inexplebilem illorum avaritiam et rapacitatem notat. They shall rape and scrape by right or wrong, and yet as sick of a bulimy, or under the curse of dissatisfaction, they shall never have enough. {#Ec 5:10}
{See Trapp on "Ec 5:10"}

They shall eat every man the flesh of his own arm.] That is, They shall make a prey {a} of their nearest allies. Some understand the text of civil wars, which indeed are most unnatural; and concerning which one saith well, Dissidia nostra sunt amicorum dispendia, hostium compendia, et publica irae divinae incendia.

{a} Imbelles damae quid nisi praeda sumus?

Ver. 21. Manasseh, Ephraim; and Ephraim, Manasseh.] Snarling at and intertearing one another, as dogs, about the kingly dignity, or some other reasonless reason. Thus the prophet exemplifieth what he had spoken.

And they together shall be against Judah.] So Herod and Pilate could unite against Christ, {#Lu 23:7-9} and those that were at greatest enmity among themselves against the Church. {#Ps 83:5,8} So in Julian the apostate's time Jews and Gentiles combined against Christians; and in our days Papists and Lutherans against Calvinists. {a} How unworthily and impotently do the Lutherans of Suevia rail upon that holy man Oecolampadius, whose note it is upon this text, that these last dangerous times were foretold by St Paul. {#2Ti 3:1,2} Annon eosdem describunt Paulus et Iesaias? saith he: Do not Paul and Isaiah describe the same men? Bullinger observeth concerning the Anabaptists of Germany, that as they are at great odds among themselves, so they all agree against goldly ministers of the truth, to despise and disparage them to the utmost.

{a} In Syngram.

Chapter 10

Ver. 1. Woe unto them that decree unrighteous decrees.] Having denounced woe to wicked of all sorts, the prophet here threateneth wicked princes in particular, as the chief causes of God's judgments by their misgovernment. Periculosissimum prophetae factum, et cui seditionis dica scribi poterat! {a} This was boldly done of the prophet, and there wanted not those doubtless that would say it was sedition. Luther, for like cause, was called the trumpet of rebellion; sc., for declaring against the Pope's decrees and decretals, though never so unrighteous and vexatious; not much short of that made by Nero, Whosoever confesseth himself a Christian—so a Protestant—let him, without further defence of himself, be put to death as a convicted enemy of mankind!

And that write grievousness.] Or, And to the writers that write grievous things—viz., the public notaries, registrars, and other under officers; such as were those Persian scribes and posts, {#Es 3:12,13} who should, in such a case, have obeyed God rather than men.

{a} Scultet.

Ver. 2. To turn away the needy from judgment.] To put them beside their right, because indigent, and overweighed by the wealthy ones: Quorum aureae literae apud tales iudices possunt omnia.

And to take away the right.] Heb., To tear it away by force.

And that they may rob the fatherless.] Rob the spittle, as we used to say. Unrighteous ruledom is but robbery with authority. {a}

{a} Iudex iniustus latro cum privilegio est. -Columel., lib. i.

Ver. 3. And what will ye do in the day of visitation.] That is, of vastation by the Assyrians.

To whom will ye flee for help.] Who have denied help to the poor that fled unto you; but sped no better than the sheep that flee to the bush for defence in weather, where he is sure to lose part of his fleece.

And where will ye leave your glory?] Where will ye betrust or bestow your wealth, power, and worldly pomp, purchased by you at too dear a rate? who paid your honesty to get it— O magno emptas, et parum proficuas divitias! -and must now lose not it only, but your liberties and lives also, in the next verse.

Ver. 4. Without me they shall bow down under the prisoners,] i.e., Without any fault of mine. {#Ho 13:9} Or, as some render it, Ne corruat inter vinctos, et inter occisos cadant; that it, your glory, should not bow down under the prisoners, and they fall under the slain; i.e., that ye be not some of you captivated, and others slain by the enemy. And yet behold a worse matter.

For all this his anger is not turned away.] Endless torments will follow, unless ye prevent them by repentance, and all your present sufferings are nothing else but a typical hell. {a} Ecce quot mala a contemptu Dei proveniunt.

Ver. 5. O Assyrian, the rod of mine anger.] Or, Woe to the Assyrian; or, Heu Assur; Alas, the Assyrian! q.d., Alas, that I am forced by this sharp and iron rod to correct my people, whom I have bred so choicely! Dolentis vocem assumit Deus, saith Oecolampadius.

The rod of mine anger.] Or, My rod of anger. A rod of anger to beat the little ones, and a staff of indignation to bastinado the bigger and more stubborn. So Nebuchadnezzar is called the "hammer of the whole earth." {#Jer 50:23} Tamerlane called himself, The wrath of God, and the desolation of the world, {a} Attilas styled himself, King of Huns, Medes, Goths, Dacians; "The terror of the world, and God's scourge." The wicked are God's rod, said that martyr, whom, when he hath worn to the stump, he will cast into the fire. {b}

{a} Ira Dei ego sum, et orbis vastitas.

{b} Acts and Mon., fol. 1544.

Ver. 6. I will send him...I will give him a charge.] Non patefacta quidem voluntate, sed arcana providentia, I will stir him up by a secret providence, which, being nothing else but the carrying on of the divine decree, is that helm that turneth about the whole ship of the universe.

Against an hypocritical nation.] Pretenders only to religion, {see #Isa 9:17} qui toti ex hypocrisi sunt conflati, such as are wholly made up of hypocrisy: God was near in their mouth, and far from their reins. {#Jer 12:2} Nemo tam prope proculque Deo. {#Mt 15:8} Hot meteors they are. saith one, shooting, yet showing like stars; shaming goodness by seeming good; Virtutis stragulam pudefaciunt, as Diogenes said to Antipater, who, being vicious, wore a white cloak, the ensign of innocence. These are little better than devils wrapped up in Samuel's mantle; odious therefore to God, whom they would cozen of heaven, if they could tell how.

And against the people of my wrath.] Who are therefore the worse, and shall fare the worse, because they ought to have been better. Indignation and wrath shall he upon the Jew first, because of his privileges, and then upon the Gentile. {#Ro 2:9}

To take the spoil, and to take the prey.] As had been foretold in Maher-shalal-hash-baz's name. {#Isa 8:1}

And to tread them down like mire in the streets.] To make mortar of them, as we use to say: Gens simulatrix tota terrena, Is trodden under foot as unsavoury salt, which is not good enough for the dunghill.

Ver. 7. Howbeit he meaneth not so.] He is otherwise minded and affected than I am, and doeth my will merely beside and against his own will. As in applying of leeches the physician seeketh the health of his patient, the leech only the filling of his gorge, so is it when God turneth loose a bloody enemy upon his people; he hath excellent ends, which they think not on.

But it is in his heart to destroy and cut off.] This was to exceed his commission, which was only to "take the spoil, and to take the prey," {#Isa 10:6} not to cut off nations, and to make havoc of all. How much better our King Edward the Confessor, who, when his captains promised for his sake they would not leave one Dane alive, thought it better to lead a private and unbloody life than to be a king by such bloody butcheries. {a} Of Charles V, emperor, we read, that when Antonius Leva, and other of his chief commanders, commended Alexander the Great and Julius Caesar for their great exploits in overrunning and destroying nations not a few, to their great renown; and, on the other side, complained that Charles made not the like use of his power and victories as he might and ought to do for such a purpose, he gravely replied, that Alexander and Julius had, in waging wars, nothing else to aim at besides honour and glory, but that Christian princes were in all their enterprises to mind the glory of God and the salvation of their own souls. {b}

Ver. 8. For he saith.] Sennacherib saith. See #Isa 36:9,15,18,20 37:10,13,24,25. A great part of this whole book of Isaiah concerneth Sennacherib.

Are not my princes altogether kings?] Behold a right Pyrgopolynices, { a } whenas he was set to work by God, exalting himself both against God and man. And saith not the Pope the same when he claims to be Dominus feudi? lord paramount in spirituals and temporals; and when, in creating his cardinals, he useth these words, Estote confratres nostri, et principes mundi, Be ye fellow brethren to us and princes of the world? The Assyrian styled himself king of kings, and accounted his commanders equals to Hezekiah. {#Isa 36:9} So Cardinal Bellarmine held himself King James's mate.

{a} Perhaps he had made some of his chief commanders kings. Our Henry VI crowned Henry Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, King of the Isle of Wight.

Ver. 9. Is not Calno as Carchemish?] Here in a vaunt he reckoneth up six royal cities vanquished by himself and his ancestors; and boasteth how with a wet finger, as we say, he had taken in all the country between Nineveh and Jerusalem. Of the destruction of Calno and Hamath, see #Am 6:2.

Is not Hamath.] Afterwards called Antiochia.

As Arpad?] Hear how this proud braggard:

“Proiecit ampullas et sesquipedalia verba!”

Is not Samaria as Damascus?] Have not I subdued them both pari fortitudine et felicitate?

Ver. 10. As my hand hath found.] Nota fastum tyranni, Note the arrogance of this tyrant, saith A. Lapide. It was his hand did all, and not God's—like as afterwards Timotheus, the victorious Athenian, into whose toils cities were said to fall even as he was sleeping, telling his countrymen of his great successes, inserted ever and anon these words, Herein fortune did nothing—and then, his hand only found those kingdoms, as an obvious prey, which he did no more but meet, and it was taken.

“Dextra mihi Deus, et telum quod missile libro.”—Virg.

The kingdoms of the idols.] In despite of their tutelary deities, which indeed were but deunculi, petty gods, as the word here used (Elil) signifieth.

And whose graven images did excel them of Jerusalem.] Os ferreum! vah scelus! Prodigious blasphemy! This absurd collation and prelation of climb and dunghill idols before the true and living God is omnium mortalium execratione dignissima.

Ver. 11. Shall I not as I have done.] God is not in all this man's thoughts; himself doeth all that is done.

So do to Jerusalem.] Why, no; for "their rock is not as our rock," might God's people have replied., "our enemies themselves being judges." Vere magnus est Deus Christianorum, said a certain pagan truly. The God of the Christians is a great God above all gods. But the devil doeth all he can to drive us to despair.

Ver. 12. Wherefore.] Heb., And. A close connection: where pride is in the saddle, there destruction is on the crupper; {a} when the scum is at highest, it falls in the fire.

When the Lord hath performed.] When he hath sufficiently chastised his children by this rod of his wrath, he will cast it into the fire; {so #Jer 25} when other nations have drunk deep of the cup of the divine displeasure, Babylon shall suck up the dregs. What became of the primitive persecutors, and of such as were most active here in those dogdays of Queen Mary? See the Acts and Monuments of the Church.

Upon Mount Zion.] For there he usually beginneth; {#Jer 25:18 1Pe 4:17} his own he least of all spareth. {#Am 3:2}

I will punish the fruit of the stout heart.] His arrogant words and lofty looks, proceeding from the pride of his heart. But let himself tell what those fruits are.

{a} A leathern strap buckled to the back of the saddle and passing under the horse's tail, to prevent the saddle from slipping forwards.

Ver. 13. For he saith, By the strength of my hand, &c.] Viva haec est istius Veiovis Latialis, hoc est Pontificis pictura, saith Scultetus

—i.e., Here we have a lively picture of Antichrist, who speaketh great things and blasphemies, {#Re 13:5} arrogates to himself all power and wisdom, disposeth of kingdoms at his pleasure robbeth their treasures, &c.

Ver. 14. And my hand had found.] See #Isa 10:10.

As a nest.] Or, As in a nest, where a man need but only put in his hand and take out the birds or eggs, and hath none to withstand him.
Thrasonica Allegoria.

The riches of the people.] Whereon they sat abroad, as it were, but I have unnested and despoiled them. They meanwhile, as silly doves, saved themselves by flight, not fight; or else, sitting in their dove cots, saw their nests destroyed, young ones taken away and killed before their eyes, never offering to rescue or revenge.

Ver. 15. Shall the axe boast itself.] Is not God the architect and chief agent—the Assyrian only the instrument in his hand? What a madness, then, is it for him thus to vaunt and vapour? is the man in his right mind, think ye? How much better that victorious emperor, Charles V, who, instead of Caesar's Veni, vidi, vici, I came, I saw, I conquered, wrote Veni, vidi, sed Christus vicit! I came, I saw, but Christ conquers, Christ is the only conqueror.

As if the staff should lift up itself.] Or, When the rod is lift up, is it not wood, lignum inanime, sorry wood?

Ver. 16. Therefore shall the Lord...send among his fat ones,] i.e., Pingues, torosos et validos milites, his lusty and mastive soldiers, in whom he confided.

Leanness,] i.e., Luem, a plague to tame them, and take them down. See this fulfilled, #Isa 37:36.

And under his glory,] i.e., His huge army wherein he glorieth. What need we to fear the Turks, said Sigismund, the young king of Hungary, who need not at all to fear the falling of the heavens? which, if they should fall, yet were we able with our spears and halberds to hold them up from falling upon us. {a}

He will kindle a burning.] A plague parching up their vitals. The Hebrews say that the bodies of Sennacherib's soldiers were, by the stroke of an angel, so consumed and burnt up, as that their garments and weapons were not burnt at all.

{a} Turkish History, fol. 206.

Ver. 17. And the light of Israel shall be for a fire.] To Israel he shall be a comfortable light—to their enemies a consuming fire, as #Ex 14:24. Ecce idem iustis et fidelibus suavis, impiis autem gravis.

His thorns and his briars.] His army, which is so troublesome and vexatious to Israel. God will "go through them, he will burn them {a} together." {#Isa 27:4}

In one day, / i.e., In one night, being part of the natural day. So the Spanish Armada was quickly dispersed, which had been so many years in rigging and setting forward.

{a} Assyrios, quibus ut sentibus vepribusque cohorrebat terra. -Jun.

Ver. 18. And he shall consume the glory of his forest, / i.e., Of his army, cutting his way through a wood of men, and felling the very glory of his glory, even his best soldiers. All this God shall do to his stout warriors and stately princes.

Both soul and body, / i.e., Full and whole, both here and in hell. {a}

And they shall be as when a standard-bearer fainteth.] Heb., Melteth—i.e., through fear casting away his colours: soon after which the whole regiment is routed, and cannot be rallied.

{a} Ecce hic habes animam ardere. -Oecolamp.

Ver. 19. And the rest of the trees...shall be few.] Heb., A number; methe mispar, a poor few, and inconsiderable company, that may soon be told.

That a child may write them.] The Hebrews say that Sennacherib escaped home with ten only in his company.

Ver. 20. And it shall come to pass in that day.] Meras consolationes hic loquitur Deus, { a } saith Scultetus. Here God begins to speak pure comforts to his poor people. Here he setteth forth how he will be a lively light to Israel, like as he had been a devouring fire to the Assyrians.

Shall no more again stay upon him that smote them.] Piscator; ictus sapiet; they had paid for their learning, smarted for their creature confidence, and now they would be better advised, viz., under Hezekiah, than they had been under Ahaz. {#2Ki 16:10 Ho 14:3}

{a} Scultet.

Ver. 21. A remnant shall return, / scil., To the Lord by true repentance, from whom they had deeply revolted. But of these there is but as a "remnant"—a poor few—in comparison of the whole piece of cloth.

Ver. 22. Yet a remnant of them shall return, / i.e., Shall be saved from Sennacherib, but especially from Satan, that old man slayer. {#Ro 9:27,29 11:5} The greater part of the Jews were then cut off by the Assyrians; and so they are spiritually still by the evil spirits which hold them in their hardness of heart, and hinder them from embracing the Christian faith. But this befalleth them by God's holy decree {#Ro 9:27,28} and just judgment.

The consumption decreed shall overflow with righteousness, / i.e., The utter destruction of this perverse people, both temporal and spiritual, {#Ro 9:27} for the generality of them, is not to be accounted cruelty, but overflowing righteousness. For God could not in justice but thus rigorously deal with them; and then for his promise sake to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, reserving a "remnant," show favour to them again.

Ver. 23. For the Lord God of hosts shall make, &c.] Here the same thing is repeated, by way of asseveration, because not easily believed or digested, but would lie heavy as hard meat. "Behold the severity of God," {#Ro 11:22} and stoop to it.

Ver. 24. O my people that dwellest in Zion, be not afraid.] Quam paterne omnia. As a father bespeaketh his little son passing with him through a dark entry, &c.

He shall smite thee with a rod.] Chasten thee, but not slay thee. {a} Sinite virgam corripientem, ne sentiatis malleum conterentem.

And shall lift up his staff against thee.] Or, But he shall lift up his staff for thee, so some render it—i.e., God shall, and that "after the manner of Egypt," as of old he did for the fathers against Pharaoh.

{a} Non occidet te, quamvis vapulet. -Oecolamp.

Ver. 25. For yet a very little while.] Heb., A little little, or a little of a little. Yet a little modicum, and wrath shall be at an end. Oecolampadius rendereth it, Adhuc paululum, minus quam paululum. Hold out therefore faith and patience.

Ver. 26. And the Lord of hosts shall stir up a scourge for him.] Far worse than that rod. {#Isa 10:24} This scourge was that angel that slew so many Assyrians in a night, according to that "slaughter of Midian." {#Jud 7:22 Ps 83:9,11}

At the rock of Oreb.] Where Oreb was slain, like as was Sennacherib after this, in his temple at Nineveh.

And as his rod was upon the sea.] As Moses by his rod or staff held over the Red Sea made way for Israel, but brought destruction on the Egyptians. {#Ex 14:26}

Ver. 27. And the yoke shall be destroyed, because of the anointing.] That is, because or for the sake of Messiah the Prince, {#Da 9:25} the Lord Christ, our Σωτηρ and Sospitator; the foundation of all the Church's deliverances. The whole chapter following is a comment on this sweet promise.

Ver. 28. He is come to Aiath.] Elegans hypotyposis, a dainty description of Sennacherib's invasion into the land, and progress with his army toward Jerusalem, through the tribe of Benjamin.

He is passed to Migron.] Fourteen cities are here set down in order, as distressed by this Poliorceres, of whom it might be truly said, as it is now of the Grand Signor, that no grass groweth on that ground where he hath set his foot once,

At Michmash he hath laid up his carriages,] i.e., He shall; but the prophet speaketh of it as if presently done, or as if himself had been marching along with them.

Ver. 29. They are gone over the passages,] i.e., The straits, between two rocks. {#Isa 13:22}

Ver. 30. Lift up thy voice.] Heb., Hinni, i.e., claram vocem ede, eamque lugubrem, make a grievous outcry, eiula, quiritare; nam certa tibi imminet vastitas, for thou art undone.

O poor Anathoth.] Jeremiah's country; "poor," because plundered.

Ver. 31. Madmena is removed,] i.e., Fled for fear, as Gibeah. {#Isa 10:29}

Ver. 32. He shall shake his hand,] viz., At Jerusalem, as threatening her destruction; but she shall shake her head at him in contempt {#Isa 37:21} God oft lets his enemies go to the utmost of their tether, and then pulls them back to their tasks with shame enough, as he did Pharaoh.

Ver. 33. Behold, the Lord shall lop the bough,] i.e., Those of greatest state and stature in the Assyrian army.

And the haughty shall be humbled.] See #Isa 2:11,17.

Ver. 34. By a mighty one.] {a} That is, by an angel. {#Isa 37:36 Ps 78:25 89:5,6}

{a} Per magnificentum.

Chapter 11

Ver. 1. And there shall come forth a rod,] i.e., Christ shall be born; whom our prophet having called "the anointing" or Messiah, {#Isa 10:27} maketh him and his kingdom henceforward the chief matter of his discourse, to the end of his book. Here he beginneth with his nativity, calling him a rod or twig, springing, not out of the stock of David, but out of the stump of Jesse, a mean man, and that then, when the royal family was sunk so low as from David the king to Joseph the carpenter. Well might Chrysostom say that the foundation of our philosophy was humility. And another, {a} that at Bethlehem brake forth that well of salvation which, in the type, once David so thirsted after. {#2Sa 23:15}

And a Branch.] Or, The Nazarene born at Nazareth, saith Junius, which signifieth "a branch"; for so it was generally deemed; and our Saviour styleth himself Jesus of Nazareth; {#Ac 22:8} and on his cross they wrote Jesus of Nazareth, King of the Jews, wherein that prodigy, saith A. Lapide, seemeth to have fallen out concerning which the poet inquireth—

“ Dic quibus in terris inscripti nomine Regis

Nascantur flores. ”

Tell who is noted in the earth by the name of a King, Let him in flowers. For Nazareth he interpreteth a flower; or something flowery; and for shall grow, others render shall bud, or bear fruit.

{a} Scultet.

Ver. 2. And the Spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him.] After such a description of Christ's person, {as #Isa 11:1} follows here a declaration of his kingdom, which is set forth to be—first, Spiritual; {#Isa 11:2} secondly, Just; {#Isa 11:3-5} thirdly, Peaceable; {#Isa 11:6-9} fourthly, Ample, as made up of Gentiles and Jews. {#Isa 11:11, &c.}

Shall rest upon him.] His humanity shall be filled topfull with the gifts and graces of the Holy Ghost, to be as it were an everlasting treasure and cistern full of them for the use of the Church. {#Joh 1:16 3:34 Ac 2:33} And this was typified by the Holy Ghost descending in the likeness of a dove, at the time of his baptism, and resting upon him.

{#Mt 3:16 Joh 1:32,33} {a}

The spirit of wisdom and understanding.] These six princely virtues (for the schoolmen, misled by the Vulgate translation, falsely found their septiformem gratiam Spiritus Sancti) were eminently and transcendently in Christ; they should be also found in some measure in all rulers. {#De 1:16 Ex 18:25 1Ki 3:12 Le 19:35-37}

{a} Diodat. Annot.

Ver. 3. And shall make him of quick understanding.] Heb., It shall make him scent or smell—sc., by a singular sagacity and sharpness of judgment in smelling out a hypocrite, as Simon Peter did Simon Magus, who had deceived Philip, even unto baptism; but Peter soon found him out: how much more will Christ? His sharp nose easily discerneth and is offended with the stinking breath of the hypocrite's rotten lungs, though his words be never so scented and perfumed with shows of holiness. So for the innocence of the godly, when "being defamed they pray" as Paul, apologise and cannot be heard, as the primitive Christians; Christ will "bring forth their righteousness as the light, and their judgment as the noonday." {#Ps 37:6}

And he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes.] He cannot be deceived, as knowing all hearts, and as having all things naked and dissected before his eyes. {#Heb 4:13 Mt 9:12 Joh 2:24} Others judge by relation of others, and secundum allegata et probata -not so Jesus Christ; but he shall always proceed upon his own knowledge, and so pass a most righteous sentence. Oecolampadius thinks the prophet here alludeth to Solomon's sentence passed on the two harlots. {#1Ki 3:16-28}

Ver. 4. But with righteousness judge the poor, / i.e., The poor in spirit, those meek ones of the earth. So the Anabaptists of Germany called themselves, and said that now the promise must be fulfilled, "The meek shall inherit the earth"; whenas they by blood, rapine, cruel wars, seized on the possessions of others. And have we not now {a} among us many loaves of the same leaven, brats of the same breed, bloody in their positions and dispositions—the fifth monarchy men they call themselves. Christ Jesus (as he hath lately to his great praise, so still) preserve and bless us out of their bloody fingers, and from their prodigious principles and practices. He hath promised it here, and much more: thou shalt "give thy judgment to the king" (Christ), "and he shall deliver the poor" {#Ps 72:2} -viz., from all foes and persecutors.

And he shall smite the earth, / i.e., Earthly minded men, who are "of the earth, speak of the earth, and the earth heareth them." {#Joh 3:31} As the earth is cold and dry, so are they. As the earth is heavy, and beareth downward, so do they. As the earth keepeth down hot exhalations that naturally would ascend, so is it with such. And lastly, as the earth standeth still in the midst of heaven, and taketh no notice of the whole circumference that is carried around it, so are earthly men stupid and insensible, &c. Howbeit "by the rod of his mouth," that is, by the preaching of the gospel, Christ doth again secretly "smite the earth," that is, the consciences of carnal people, glued to the earth, making them sound heavily as a shawm. {b}

And with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked.] The devil and his deputies, Antichrist especially, {#2Th 2:8} and that with little ado, even with a blast of his lips only; as with his bare word he laid on their backs those soldiers that came to apprehend him.

{a} This was written May 1, 1657.

{b} A mediaeval musical instrument of the oboe class, having a double reed enclosed in a globular mouthpiece.

Ver. 5. And righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins.] Symbolum Regis hoc est, saith Scultetus. Kings and princes have their scita in scutis, their mottoes on their shields; so hath our king here, viz., "Righteousness and faithfulness"; and this is so manifest as if written on his girdle, {a} or belt, see #Re 19:16; where, for like cause, Christ's high titles are written "on his vesture, and on his thigh." Others by this expression understand Christ's alacrity and promptitude to vindicate his elect, and to punish the wicked, according to his promise, Vaticinatur de Christi solertia in obeundis regni Dei negotiis, ac tribuit illi cincturam, seu industriam spiritualem pro qualitate obeundae dispensationis. {b} Let us also, Christ-like, "gird up the loins of our minds; be sober, and hope perfectly." {#1Pe 1:13} Gird ourselves, and serve him, {#Lu 17:8} readily, nimbly, handsomely, and hardily. A loose, discinct, and diffluent (fluid) mind is unfit for God's service.

{a} The belt is put for a kingly ensign. Calvin. {#Job 12:18}

{b} Zeged.

Ver. 6. The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb.] Not worrying as he was wont, but made tame and tractable. Lo, such a blessed change is wrought in all true converts, as is to be seen in Paul, that wolf of the tribe of Benjamin, prophesied of by Jacob, {#Ge 49:27} as some hold. And the like may be said of Petrus Paulus Vergerius, once the Pope's nuncio, but afterwards a great preacher of the gospel. Hugh Latimer, once as obstinate a Papist as any was in England—they are his own words—but converted by blessed

Bilney, as he called him usually, he became a zealous promoter of the truth according to godliness, confessor general to all Protestants troubled in mind, and the treasury into which restored ill-gotten goods were cast, to be bestowed on the poor according to his discretion, {a}

And the leopard shall lie down with the kid.] As they did at the creation, and afterward in Noah's ark; all bloodiness and rapine laid aside. Those that love not one another out of a pure heart fervently, but are filled with envy, malice, debate, deceit, malignity, are none of Christ's subjects, nor fellow-citizens with the saints.

And a little child shall lead them.] That is, the child Jesus, say some interpreters, by the conduct of his Holy Spirit; or the apostles and other godly ministers, who were counted but as little children to the Pharisees and philosophers, called the grandees and "princes of this world." {#1Co 2:8} But they do best that understand it of such a tractableness and teachableness in Christians, that they can be content to learn of any one, though never so mean, that can better inform them. {b} See this in Apollos. {#Ac 18:26} Augustine, as himself witnesseth thus in one of his epistles, En adsum senex a iuvene coepiscopo, episcopus tot annorum a collega nondum anniculo paratus sum discere, I am here an old man, ready to learn from a young man, my coadjutor in the ministry; and so old a bishop, from one who hath scarce been a year in the service. Ver. 7. And the cow and the bear shall feed.] An allegorical description of greatest confidence and innocence, saith Junius. Bears are angry and vindictive creatures; so are the best by nature, {#Tit 3:3} till tamed and domesticated by God's distinguishing grace. As for those semiperfectae virtutis homines, as an ancient calls them, temporaries and hypocrites, who do only the outward works of duty, without the inward principle, it may be said of them, as the civil law doth of those mixed beasts, elephants, camels, &c., Operam praestant, natura fera est, they do the work of tame beasts, yet have the nature of wild ones.

Their young ones shall lie down together.] Heb., Their children, i.e., say some, {a} children after parents shall do thus, and their children after them from age to age; not revolting any more to barbarism.

And the lion shall eat straw.] Not men and other sensitive creatures, as now. {b} This, say the Chiliasts after some Rabbis, shall be literally fulfilled in that golden age of Christ's personal reign upon earth; a mere fancy, first vented by Papias, a man of some holiness, but ingenii pertenuis, of very little judgment, saith Eusebius.

Ver. 8. And the sucking child shall play upon the hole of the asp, &c.] There shall be no danger from calumniators and cruel crafties, asps and basilisks, {a} quorum in labris venenum sessitat {#Ps 140:4} These homines damnosissimi most damnable men shall have a new nature transfused into them; their malignities and mischievous qualities shall cease when once truly converted.

{a} A fabulous reptile, also called a cockatrice, alleged to be hatched by a serpent from a cock's egg; ancient authors stated that its hissing drove away all other serpents, and that its breath, and even its look, was fatal.

Ver. 9. None shall hurt.] Here the foregoing allegory is fully explained. In God's Holy Mountain—that is, in the Church—there shall be a holy, harmless, and a sweet harmony of hearts. The word among them shall be this, "Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another." {#1Jo 4:11} Some differences and jars there may occur among the best, as did between Paul and Barnabas, Jerome and Augustine, Luther and Zuinglius; but these last not long—at utmost but till they come to heaven; and the ground of such a distemper is, that we know but in part, and therefore love but in part. {#1Co 13:9} Oh pray for that blessed sight, {#Eph 1:17,18} and for a fuller comprehension of those several dimensions, {#Eph 3:18} that the "earth may be full of the knowledge of the Lord."

As the waters cover the sea,] i.e., The bosom and bottom of it, that God's word may dwell richly in us in all wisdom, and that the knowledge we have of it may be a transforming knowledge. {#2Co 3:18} Two or three words of God's mouth hid in the heart, and there mingled with faith, work such an evident and entire change in a man, saith Lactantius, {a} that you can hardly know him to be the same. Da mihi virum qui sit iracundus, maledicus, effraenatus, paucissimis Dei verbis tam placidum quam ovem reddam. Da cupidum, avarum, tenacem, &c. Give me a man that is angry., ill-spoken, unruly; with a few words of Almighty God, I will make him as meek as a lamb. Give me one that is covetous, an oppressive hold fast, a very Nabal, I will make him a Nadib; of a covetous churl a liberal person, of a viper a child, of a lecher a chaste man, &c. Lo, this is the fruit of the sound and saving knowledge of God and of his word, of ourselves and of our duties.

And in that day.] "In the day of Christ's power, or kingdom, the people shall be willing." {#Ps 110:3} "The isles shall wait for God's law." {#Isa 42:8} Multitudes of nations shall come crowding in to his greatest glory, {#Pr 14:2} and for the fulfilling of old Jacob's prophecy. {#Ge 49:10}

There shall be a root of Jesse.] See on #Isa 11:1.

Which shall stand for an ensign.] Or, Standard, whereto all the elect must assemble; and hereby is meant the preaching of the gospel.

Shall the Gentiles seek.] Ferventi studio, magno desiderio, non coacti; they shall fly thereto as the clouds, and as doves scour to their windows. {#Isa 60:8}

And his rest.] That is, his Church, with whom he resteth and resideth. {#Ps 132:8} He "resteth also in his love to his people, and rejoiceth over them with singing." {#Zep 3:17; {See Trapp on "Zep 3:17"}}

Ver. 11. The Lord shall set his hand again the second time.] Not to bring them back to the promised land, to Palestina, as once he did out of Egypt; that is but a rabbinical dream, not unlike that other—viz., that all Jews, in what country soever they are buried, do travel through certain underground passages till they come to their own country of Jewry. But with an outstretched hand he shall recover the remnant of his people that shall he left; so the poet,

Ver. 13. The envy also of Ephraim shall depart.] The fierce wrath or deadly feud that was between the ten revolted tribes of Judah, the like whereunto was between England and Scotland, and in England between the houses of York and Lancaster; in which last mentioned dissension were slain eighty princes of royal blood, and twice as many natives of England as were lost in the two conquests of France. ^{a} This emulation and hatred of Ephraim against Judah was to be abolished by Christ. ^{b} ^{#Eze 37:17} The disciples, being of various tribes, were all of one heart and of one soul. ^{#Ac 4:32} Neither was there any controversy at all among them, as one ancient Greek copy addeth to that forecited text. ^{c}

Ver. 14. But they shall flee upon the shoulders.] A metaphor from conquerors who pursue their enemies, and fall upon the bones of them, as we say. The meaning is, the Gentiles shall be converted to the Christian faith by the Jews—viz., by the apostles and other preachers of the gospel. See #Ge 49:8. Thus Philip was found at Azotus, or Ashdod; {#Ac 8:40} Peter at Joppa {#Ac 10:5} At Gaza and Askelon were many flourishing churches in the times of Athanasius and Chrysostom, saith Adrichomius. Brittannorum inaccessa Romanis loca, Christo patuerunt. {a} Inaccessible places of the Britains to the Romans were made open by Christ.

{a} Tertullian.

Ver. 15. And the Lord shall utterly destroy the tongue of the Egyptian Sea.] That is, by drying up, or driving away the waters, he shall open a way through the Red Sea, which representeth the form and fashion of a tongue. He alludeth to #Ex 14:22; for Christ being our Conduct, we do enter by baptism, as by the Red Sea, into the Church, and after this life present into the kingdom of heaven.

He shall shake his hand over the river.] The river Nile. The sense is, he shall remove all obstacles and impediments. This was fulfilled.

{#Ac 2:41}

With his mighty wind.] The Chaldee paraphraseth in eloquio prophetarum suorum, by the word of his prophets; quod apostolis non parum congruit, saith Oecolampadius, which very well agreeth to the apostles converting the elect, whom neither height nor depth could keep from "the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." {#Ro 8:39} The Jews expect, but in vain, that all these things should be fulfilled unto them in the letter by their Messiah, as once they were by Moses at the Red Sea.

And make men go over dryshod.] Without boat or boot.

Ver. 16. And there shall be an highway.] Agger, via strata, a causeway. {#Isa 7:3}

In the day that he came up out of the land of Egypt.] This signal deliverance was a clear type of our redemption by Christ. And this prophecy was fulfilled when thousands of the Egyptians were converted by Mark the evangelist and other preachers, as also when other nations forsook spiritual Egypt {#Re 11:8} and embraced the truth.

Chapter 12

Ver. 1. And in that day,] sc., When there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse. {as #Isa 11:1} Blessed be God for a Christ. {#Ps 96:1-13 Re 6:11}

Thou shalt say.] It is not a dumb kind of thank fulness that is required of the Lord's redeemed, but such as from a heart full of spiritual joy breaketh forth into fit words, such as are here set down in this ditty or directory.

I will praise thee.] The whole life of a true Christian is a holy desire, saith an ancient. It is, or should be surely, continua laetitia, et laus Dei, a continual hallelujah. Deo gratias was ever in Augustine's mouth. Laudetur Deus, laudetur Deus, in another's—i.e., Praised be God, praised be God. The saints here "with one mind and one mouth glorify God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ." {#Ro 15:6} The saints and angels do so in heaven incessantly, {#Re 4:10,11} hoc est iuge eorum negotiosum otium et otiosum negotium.

Thine anger is turned away.] My sins are forgiven me, and hence I am of so good cheer, though otherwise distressed. Feri, Domine, feri; a peccatis absolutus sum, said Luther; Strike while thou wilt, Lord, so long as my sins are pardoned. See #Ps 103:1-3.

And thou comfortedst me,] viz., With gospel comforts, which are strong and satisfying. I do "overabound exceedingly with joy in all our tribulation," saith Paul. {#2Co 7:4}

Ver. 2. Behold, God is my salvation.] Let such take notice of it as said when time was, there is no help for him in God; salvation itself cannot save him. "Behold," and "My": there is much matter in this adverb and that pronoun, saith an interpreter. {a} Behold, God is my Jesus; so Jerome readeth it. According to that of old Simeon "Mine eyes have seen thy salvation." And in this and the next verse salvation is thrice mentioned, so sweet it was to those that thus sang of it. {See Trapp on "1Co 1:8"}

I will trust, and not be afraid.] There is an elegance in the Hebrew that cannot be translated. This spiritual security floweth from faith; experience should both breed and feed it. See #Ps 46:3 2Co 1:10.

For the Lord is my strength.] Salvation properly denoteth the privative part of man's happiness, viz., freedom from evil; but it includeth also position in a good estate, and preservation therein while "we are kept by the power (or strength) of God through faith unto salvation." {#1Pe 1:5}

{a} Oecolamp.

Ver. 3. Therefore with joy shall ye draw water.] Joy is the just man's portion, and Christ is the never failing fountain whence by a lively faith he may infallibly fetch it. {#Joh 4:10,14 7:37} Christ was much delighted with this metaphor; see #Joh 1:16. Out of this fountain only may men quench their spiritual thirst after righteousness. Haec sola est aqua quae animas arentes, marentes et squalidas reficit, et recreat. {a} These wells of salvation are those "words of eternal life," {#Joh 6:68} the rich and "precious promises," {#2Pe 1:4} "whereby we are made partakers of the divine nature," and of the Holy Spirit, which is frequently and fitly compared to water in regard of (1.) Ablution; {#Eze 36:25} (2.) of Fructification; {#Job 8:11 Isa 35:6,7 44:3,4} and (3.) of Refrigeration. {#Ps 42:1 Ro 5:5} Some think the prophet here alludeth to those softly running waters of Shiloah, {#Isa 8:6} or to the rock water that followed them in the wilderness, or to that famous fountain, {#Nu 21:16-18} whence they drew waters with so much mirth and melody.

{a} Sanchez.

Ver. 4. And in that day shall ye say, Praise the Lord,] viz., With us and for us. Every true Confitebor tibi hath its confitemini Domino annexed unto it. The saints are unsatiable in praising God for the great work of their redemption, and do therefore call in help, all that may be.

Call upon his name.] Which is a special way of praising him, while we make him the object of our prayers, professing our distance from him, our whole dependence upon him, &c. See #1Ch 16:8 Ps 105:1.

Declare his doings.] Sept., His glorious things; those many miracles of mercy wrought in our redemption, which is a work much more excellent than that of making all things at first of nothing, keeping heaven still upon its hinges, and upholding the whole universe without a foundation. Magna sunt opera Dei creatoris, recreatoris autem longe maxima, saith Gregory.

Make mention that his name is exalted.] Or, Celebrate his name, which is high, far above all praise.

Ver. 5. Sing unto the Lord.] Or, Sing of the Lord. Sing a concise and short song, amputatis omnibus supervacaneis.

He hath done excellent things.] Heb., Excellence or majesty. All other spiritual blessings meet in our redemption by Christ, as the lines do in the centre, streams in the fountain.

This is known in all the earth.] Or, Let this be known; let all the world ring of it. As when the Argives were delivered by the Romans from the tyranny of the Macedonians and Spartans, the air was so dissipated with their acclamations and outcries, that the birds that flew over the place fell down amazed to the ground. {a}

{a} Plutarch.

Ver. 6. Cry out.] Heb., Hinni, neigh as horses do that are full fed, or fitted for fight. Iubila quantum potes, valide et totis viribus clama, claram et laectam vocem ede.

For great is the Holy One of Israel in the midst of thee.] Or, For the Holy One of Israel, who is great, is in the midst of thee. How shouldst thou then do otherwise than well?

Chapter 13

Ver. 1. The burden.] That is, the burdenous prophecy. It should not have seemed a burden, {#Jer 23:36} but it is a grievous burden to graceless persons to be told of their sins, and foretold of their punishments. {See Trapp on "Na 1:1"} {See Trapp on "Mal 1:1"}

Of Babylon.] Not that Babylon in Egypt (of which #1Pe 5:13, as some hold), now called Grand Cairo, the sultan's seat royal, but the metropolis of Chaldea, built by Semiramis about a hundred years after the flood, whither the Jews were to be carried captive, and concerning which calamity they are here aforehand comforted. See #Mic 7:8,16.

Ver. 2. Lift up a banner.] Deus hic quasi classicum canit; God, as chief general, gives forth his orders to the Medes and Persians. He is a "man of war," {#Ex 15:3} yea, the Lord victor of war, as the Chaldee there paraphraseth. See the like #Jer 50:2.

Upon the high mountain.] Where it may best be seen. Media is a mountainous country. Or, contra montem calignosum, against the dark mountain—i.e., Babylon, which, though situated in a plain, yet was tumoured up with her wealth and power, and seemed unmoveable. Famous this city was for a hortus pensilis, an artificial garden (made by Nebuchadnezzar for the pleasure of his wife Nicotris), which, hanging over the city, darkeneth it, {a} like as that continual cloud doth the island of St Thomas, on the back side of Africa.

Exalt the voice unto them, shake the hand.] Propinquos voce, longinquos significatione ad arma convocate; { b} give the alarm to those that are near hand and further off.

That they may go into the gates of the nobles.] Or, Of the munificent or bounteous lords; for such all nobles are, or ought to be. Our English word lord, contracted of the Saxon word laford, cometh of luef, to sustain or succour others.

{a} Strabo, lib. xvi.; Curtius, lib. v.; Josephus, lib. x.

{b} Junius.

Ver. 3. I have commanded my sanctified ones, / i.e., I have by my secret instinct stirred up and set on my Medes and Persians, {#Isa 13:17} whom in my decree I have set apart for this holy work of executing vengeance on the Babylonians.

I have also called my mighties.] My heroes, armed with my might.

Even them that rejoice in my highness.] Heb., Exultantes superbiae meos; my brave soldiers, whom I render victorious and triumphant.

Ver. 4. The noise of the multitude.] The Medes that come against Babylon are both numerous and streperous, as is here graphically described by an elegant hypotyposis. {a}

The Lord of hosts mustereth the host of the battle.] No marvel, then, that the forces are so many and mighty, for if he but stamp with his foot, all creatures are up in arms immediately.

{a} Vivid description of a scene, event, or situation, bringing it, as it were, before the eyes of the hearer or reader.

Ver. 5. They come from a far country.] Heb., From a land of longinquity.

Even the Lord, and the weapons of his indignation.] Ὀπολομαχους, "Vessels of wrath," the Septuagint render them; but in another sense, then, the apostle useth that expression concerning reprobates designed to destruction.

To destroy the whole land.] Or, The whole world, for so the Chaldees, in the pride of their empire, styled it. The Romans did the like. {#Lu 2:1} The Turks do the same at this day, such is their ambition.

Ver. 6. Howl ye.] "For the evils that are coming upon you" (as in #Jas 5:1). We may well say the same to mystical Babylon.

For the day of the Lord is at hand.] And yet it came not till over two hundred years after. Think the same of the day of judgment, and reckon that a thousand years with God is but as one day.

It shall come as a destruction from the Almighty.] Heb., Cleshod Mishaddai, an elegance that cannot be translated. Shaddai (God's name) signifieth a conqueror; say some; a destroyer; say others, which a conqueror must needs be, — Eundem victorem et vastatorem esse oportet. Here is threatened a devastation from the devastator.

Ver. 7. Therefore shall all hands be faint.] Base fear, that cowardly passion, shall betray them to the enemy, by expectorating their courage, and causing their hearts to fall into their heels, as we say. But this also cometh from the Lord of hosts, who is wonderful in counsel and excellent in working, for he ordereth the armour, {#Jer 50:25} and he strengtheneth or weakeneth the armies of either party. {#Eze 30:24} Whencesoever the sword cometh it is "bathed in heaven." {#Isa 34:5}

And every heart shall melt.] How much more shall wicked men's hearts do so at the day of judgment, when the powers of heaven shall be shaken. {#Lu 21:26} Alegoriae; haec veriora erunt in die iudicii cuius hic est typus.

Ver. 8. And they shall be afraid.]

“ Conturbabuntur—Innumerabilibus sollicitudinibus. ”

They shall be amazed one at another.] Amused, amazed, amated, as being at their wits' ends.

Their faces shall be as flames.] So #Jer 30:5,6, a voice of fear and trembling, every man with his hands on his loins, the posture of a travailling woman, and all faces turned into paleness. The prophet here alludeth, saith Musculus, to the face of a smith at dark night, when he standeth blowing his fire, for his face appears as if it had no blood in it, most wan and pale. Or, as others think, to a man frightened, who first looketh pale, the blood running to the heart to relieve it, afterwards, upon the return of the blood to the outward parts, he looketh red, and of a flame colour.

Ver. 9. Behold the day of the Lord cometh cruel.] So it shall seem to the enemies, because "an evil, an only evil, behold, is come," {#Eze 7:5} without mixture of mercy.

Ver. 10. For the stars of heaven shall not give their light.] {a} They shall have punishment without pity, misery without mercy, sorrow without help, mischief without measure, crying without comfort, &c., and all this shall be but a typical hell to them, a foretaste of eternal torments.

The constellations thereof.] Which yet some interpreters take for some single and signal star, magnam lucem magna sequuntur tenebrae.

The sun shall be darkened.] They shall neither have good day nor good night.

{a} Est hyperbole et hypollage.

Ver. 11. And I will punish the world.] That is, the Chaldean state; for they reckoned themselves κοσμοκρατορας, or lords of the world. See on #Isa 13:5. Or to show that, if the whole world should conspire against the Lord, he can as easily punish them as he did that rabble of rebels the old world. See #Da 4:17.

And lay low the haughtiness of the terrible.] Or, Of the roysters or tyrants.

Ver. 12. I will make a man more precious.] Quod rarum, carum. Men shall be reduced to a small number, not nobles only, sed triobolares homunciones, but peasants; nor shall any money be taken in exchange for lives.

Ver. 13. Therefore I will shake the heavens,] i.e., For the pride, arrogance, cruelty, and other impieties of these Babylonians, I will bring upon them tragic calamities and horrid confusions, so that they shall think that heaven and earth are blended together, and each be ready to say,

“In me omnis terraeque, polique, marisque, ruiua est.”

Ver. 14. And it shall be as the chased roe.] Or, "She," that is, Babylon, "shall be," when drunk with security, that usher of destruction, she shall be suddenly surprised. So strong were her walls and bulwarks, that she feared no irruption of the enemy; and so bold she bore herself upon her twenty years' provision laid in beforehand that she feared no famine by the straitness of a long siege. Herodotus telleth us that when Babylon was taken by Cyrus, some part of the city knew not of their condition till the third day after: the suddenness of their surprise must needs be very dreadful.

{a}

They shall every man,] i.e., All her confederates and presidaries.

{a} Herod., lib. i.; Arist. Polit., lib. ill.

Ver. 15. Every one that is found shall be thrust through.] This maketh them flee for it. Quis enim vult mori? prorsus nemo. Life is sweet, and men will rather flee than die.

Every one that is joined unto them.] Or, That is decrepid, worn out with old age. See #2Ch 36:17.

Ver. 16. Their children shall be dashed in pieces, &c.] As had been prayed and prophesied long before {#Ps 137:9} and this was but lex talionis. See #2Ch 36:17 La 5:11.

Their houses shall be spoiled, and their wives ravished.] As those three commandments, Thou shalt not kill, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not steal, are ranked together in the law, so they are commonly violated together in the lawless violence of war.

Ver. 17. Behold I will stir up the Medes.] Together with the Persians under the conduct of Darius and Cyrus.

Which shall not regard silver,] sc., For a ransom, but shall kill all they meet, though never so rich, and able to redeem their lives. {#Pr 13:8 Jer 41:8}

Ver. 18. Their bows also shall dash the young men.] They shall double destroy them. O barbaram crudelitatem! O cruel barbarian. {a}

And they shall have no pity on the fruit of the womb.] Quamvis adhuc teneri essent et fructus novelli, ripping up their mothers; {as #Am 1:13} or at the Sicilian Vespers; and as in the late Parisian and Irish massacres, which were the most prodigious horrid villanies that ever the sun saw.

Their eye shall not spare children.] In the massacre of Paris, a bloody Papist having snatched up a little child from one of the Protestants in his arms, the poor babe began to play with his beard, and to smile upon him. But he, more merciless than a tiger, stabbed it with a dagger, and so cast it all gory and bloody into the river. {b}

{a} Incredibilis sanguinis aviditas in milite bacchabitur.

{b} Acts. and Mon.

Ver. 19. And Babylon, the glory of kingdoms.] Those four great monarchies of the world had their times and their turns, their rise and their ruin. The Roman empire can scarce stand on its feet of clay; and by the death of the recent emperor, no King of Romans being nominated, is like to suffer great concussions.

Shall be as when God overthrew Sodom.] The destruction whereof was the greatest and most stupendous that ever we read of.

Ver. 20. Neither shall the Arabian pitch tent there.] The Scenites, {a} or vagrant shepherds of the Arabian Desert, that oft flitted for better pasture, shall shun Babylon as haunted with wild beasts, or rather with dragons and devils in the Revelation; all this is applied to, and shall be verified of, Rome. {#Isa 18}

{a} Hi Babyloniae contermini.

Ver. 21. But wild beasts of the desert.] Heb., Ijim, Ochim, &c. These are names of wild creatures unknown to us in these parts.

And satyrs.] Or, Devils in borrowed shapes and hideous apparitions.

Ver. 22. And the wild beasts of the islands.] Heb., Ijim—i.e., desolate places and far remote.

And her time is near to come.] Though two hundred years hence and more ere it commence. So "Babylon is fallen, is fallen" {#Re 19:2} that is, certo, cito, penitus -surely, shortly, utterly.

“ O mora! Christe veni.”

“O delay, Christ, be come.”

Chapter 14

Ver. 1. For the Lord will have mercy upon Jacob.] And therefore destroy Babylon. {as #Isa 13} Such is his love to his Church that for her sake, and in revenge of her wrongs, he will fall foul upon her enemies. Si in Hierosolymis fiat scrutinium, quanto magis in Babylon. {a}

And the strangers shall be joined with them.] Proselyted, especially when made partakers of the grace of the gospel.

{a} Bernard.

Ver. 2. For servants and for handmaids.] Their converts shall be willing to lay their hands under their feet, as we say, and glad to do them any service, like as Cyprian was for Caecilius, whom he called novae vitae parentem, parent of new life, and Latimer for Bilney, whom he called Blessed Bilney. See #Isa 49:23.

Ver. 3. That the Lord shall give thee rest, &c.] The Church hath her halcyons here; neither is she "smitten as those are that smote her, but in measure, in the branches," &c. God "stayeth his rough wind" {#Isa 27:8} that is, such afflictions as would shake his plants too much, or quite blow them down. Yea, whether south or north wind bloweth, all shall blow good to them {#So 4:16} Blow off their unkindly blossoms, and refresh them both under and after all their sorrow, fear, and hardship.

Ver. 4. That thou shalt take up this proverb.] Or, Taunting speech; {a} this exultatory and insultatory song, which upon the fall of Babylon shall be in every man's mouth.

How hath the oppressor ceased!] q.d., This is wonderful and beyond all expectation.

The golden city.] Or, Gold thirsty city. {b}

{a} Carmen, ελεγκτικον και ονειδιστικον.

{b} Aurata vel auri avida.

Ver. 5. The Lord hath broken the staff.] Wherewith these exactors cudgelled men, as so many beasts, into subjection and obedience.

And the sceptre.] Or Rod of the rulers who ruled with rigour.

Ver. 6. He that smote the people in wrath, &c.] This is the tyrant's epitaph; there is at their death a general joy, as was the time when the world was well rid of Tiberius, Caligula, Nero, Heliogabalus, &c. When Domitian died, the senate decreed that his name should be erased, that all his acts should be rescinded, and his memorial abolished quite for ever. When Caligula was cut off, his monies were all melted by the decree of the senate; {a} like as King Richard III's cognisance, the white boar, was torn from every sign, that his memory might perish. {b}

{a} Aurel. Victor.

{b} Speed.

Ver. 7. The whole earth is at rest, and is quiet.] Quiевit, conticuit.

{a} All is hushed that was used to be set in an uproar by these restless ambitionists.

They break forth into singing.] By a wide opening of the lips and lungs, as the word signifieth.

{a} ανεπαυστατο πεποιθος.—Sept.

Ver. 8. Yea, the fir trees rejoice at thee.] A notable metaphor, whereby sense and speech is attributed to senseless creatures; the trees once afraid to be felled are now freed from that fear. This tyrant was the terror of things on earth, and things under earth. Hence men and trees are said to rejoice, hell to be in a hurry, &c.

No feller is come up against us.] As was wont to do, for thy shipping, buildings, warlike engines, &c.

Ver. 9. Hell from beneath is moved for thee.] Infernus ab inferendo; shaal, from its unsatiableness, and continual craving. Here is an ironic and poetic representation of the King of Babylon's coming into hell, and his entertainment there; the dead kings rising from their places for reverence to receive him.

Even all the chief ones of the earth.] Heb., The he-goats, such as lead and go before the flock; such rhetoric as this we meet with in Lucian's Dialogues. Of Laurentius Valla, that great critic, who found fault with almost all Latin authors, one made this tetrastich;

“ *Nunc postquam manes defunctus Valla petivit,
Non audet Pluto verba Latina loqui.
Iupiter hunc caeli dignatus honore fuisset, Censarem linguae sed timer ipse sum.* ”
- Trithem.

From their thrones, / i.e., From their "sepulchres," saith Piscator. Ver. 10. Art thou also become weak as we?] Interrogatio sarcastica et insultabunda. Hast thou also a Hic situs est, here he lies, or Mortuus est, here he died, set upon thy tombstone? This if thou hadst forethought, thou wouldst have better behaved thyself while alive: the meditation of death would have been a death to thy passions, and an allay to thine insolencies. Virgil saith, if swarms of bees meet in the air, they will sometimes fight as it were in a set battle with great violence; but if you cast but a little dust upon them, they will be all presently quiet.

“ Hi motus animorum atque haec certamina tanta, Pulveris exigui iactu compressa quiescunt. ”
- Georg., lib. iv.

Had Nebuchadnezzar or his successors bethought themselves of their mortality and of death's impartiality, they would have been more moderate.

Ver. 11. Thy pomp is brought down to the grave.] Ipsaque iusta sepulta iacent, funeral rites, those dues of the dead, are wanting to thee. This was fulfilled in Belshazzar, slain at his impious feast, while he profaned the vessels of God's house to quaff in to the honour of Shac, his drunken god, and had no doubt variety of music. {a} See #Jer 51:39,41,47 Da 5:1,30.

The worm is spread under thee, and worms cover thee.] Pro linteamine tinea sternitur: pro lodice vermes superimponuntur. For sheets thou hast maggots, and for a coverlet, worms; and this the rather because, whereas the Assyrian kings, as Strabo {b} testifieth, and the Babylonian kings, as Herodotus, {c} were wont to be embalmed after their death, that they might keep sweet, Belshazzar was not so {#Isa 14:19,20}

{a} These feast days were called σακεα ημῆραι, like the Roman saturnalia.

{b} Lib. xv.

{c} Lib. i.

Ver. 12. How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer!] That is, not O Belzeebub, as some ancients, but, O Belshazzar rather, called Lucifer here, or the morning star, for his beauty and brightness; and as much wonder it was to see the Chaldean monarch at such an under, as to have seen Lucifer, the sun's constant companion, fallen from heaven. He was the terror of the world, and, as he thought, superior to fortune; yet a sudden and dismal change befell him. In the chariot of the Roman triumpher, there hung up a little bell and a whip, to put him in mind he might one day be whipped as a slave, or as an offender lose his head. Nemo confidat mimium secundis. Let no one rely on the least favours.

Ver. 13. For thou hast said in thine heart.] The natural heart is a palace of satanical pride; it is like unto the table of Adonibezek, at which he sat in a chair of state, and made others, even kings, to eat meat like dogs under his feet, with their thumbs cut off.

I will ascend into heaven.] Vide quomodo non satientur honore superbi. {a} Ambition, as the crocodile, grows as long as it lives, and is never satisfied.

Above the stars of God,] i.e., Above all the kings of the earth, or above the saints, {#Re 12:1} those earthly angels.

I will sit also upon the mount of the congregation.] I will sit upon the skirts of God's Church; yea, I will set my throne upon God's throne, and take up his room. See the like madness in Pharaoh; {#Eze 29:3} that proud prince of Tyre; {#Eze 28:2} Antiochus, surnamed Θεός; Herod; {#Ac 12:21-23} Caligula, Chosroes, Diocletian, Antichrist, of whom and his practices one cries out, O Lucifer out-deviled, &c. {#2Th 2:4} One of the Pope's parasites, Valladerius, saith of Paul V, that he was a god, lived familiarly with the Godhead, heard predestination itself whispering to him, had a place to sit in council with the most blessed Trinity, &c.

In the sides of the north.] In Mount Moriah, where the temple stood.

{a} Oecolamp.

Ver. 14. I will ascend above the height of the clouds.] Ut verbo dicam, ero summa et sacra maiestas.

“Attingit solium Iovis, et coelestia tentat.”

- Hor., lib. i. Ode 3.

Ver. 15. Yet thou shalt be brought down be hell.] To the counterpoint of thy haughtiest conceits, ad infimam erebi sedem. So a merry fellow said that Xerxes, that great warrior who took upon him to control the sea, was now mending old shoes under a shop board in hell.

To the sides of the pit,] i.e., Of the infernal lake: A tartesso in tartarum detrusus; {a} from the sides of the north, {#Isa 14:13} whither thou hadst pierced thyself, ad latera luci, to the sides of the pit, and to an odd corner of the burying place. This was a foul fall, and worse than that of Hermannus Ferrariensis, who, having been canonised for a saint, was thirty years after unburied, and burnt for a heretic by Pope Boniface VIII, {b} or that of Thomas a Becket, of whom, forty-eight years after he had been sainted, it was disputed among the doctors of Paris whether he were damned or saved? {c}

{b} Jac. Rev. Hist. Pontif., 195.

{c} Daniel's History, fol. 99.

Ver. 16. They that see thee shall narrowly look upon thee.] Shall look wishingly upon thee, as scarce believing their own eyes, for the strangeness of the thing.

Is this the man that made the earth to tremble?] The earth to quake, and men's hearts to ache? yea, sure, this is very he. At one end of the library at Dublin was a globe, at the other a skeleton, to show, saith mine author, that though a man be lord of all the world, yet he must die, nullusque fiet, qui omnia esse affectabat.

Ver. 17. That made the world as a wilderness.] Nero the tyrant came into the world an Agrippa, or born with his feet forward, and turned the world upside down ere he went out of it; so that the senate at last proclaimed him a public enemy to mankind, and condemned him to be drawn through the city, and whipped to death.

That opened not the house of his prisoners.] Or, That did not loose his prisoners homewards, but kept them in durance with prisoners' pittance. {#La 3:34}

Ver. 18. All the kings of the nations, J i.e., Very many of them have their stately pyramids, tombs, mausolean monuments erected, as among us at Westminster Henry VII's chapel is a curious and costly piece.

Ver. 19. But thou art cast out of thy grave, J i.e., Cast out and kept from thy grave. {a} This befell Belshazzar upon the surprisal of the city. {#Da 5:30} And the like also befell Alexander the Great dying at the same city; and our William the Conqueror, who having utterly sacked the city of Mants in France, and in the destruction thereof got his own, died shortly after at Rouen, where his corpse lay three days unburied—his interment being hindered by one that claimed the ground to be his. {b}

Like an abominable branch.] The matter is here set forth by three notable similitudes, such as this prophet is full of.

{a} Insepulta sepultura turpissime abiectus es. -Scult.

{b} Daniel's History, 42, 50.

Ver. 20. Thou shalt not be joined to them in burial, J i.e., To your equals, your fellow kings, in funeral state and pomp. Christians have an honest care, περι συνταφων, with whom they be buried, and where they are laid when dead, that as they lived together and loved together, so in their death they may not be divided. {#2Sa 1:23}

Because thou hast destroyed thy {a} land.] Tyrannised over thine own subjects also. So did Saul, Manasseh, Herod—who butchered about Bethlehem fourteen thousand infants, as some affirm, and his own son among the rest—Tiberius, that tiger, Nero, that lion, Commodus, who was, saith Oresius, cunctis incommodus, Charles IX of France, &c.

The seed of evildoers shall never be renowned.] The house of the wicked shall be overthrown, but the tabernacle of the upright shall flourish: {#Pr 14:11} {See Trapp on "Pr 14:11"} Et notanto hoc parentes, et a sceleribus se abstinento: ni sibi velint parcere, ut posteritat; parcant.

{a} The Septuagint read it, my land, and my people.

Ver. 21. Prepare another slaughter for his children.] For Belshazzar's posterity. This is God's charge to the Medes and Persians. See on #Isa 14:20.

Ver. 22. For I will rise up against him.] And therefore it is to no purpose for them to rise up to possess the land, and to fill the face of the world with cities, as #Isa 14:21. "I will overturn, overturn, overturn," &c., {#Eze 21:27} and who shall gainstand it?

Ver. 23. I will also make it a possession for the bittern.] Which is a kind of water fowl that maketh a hideous noise.

And I will sweep it with the besom of destruction.] Scopa vastatrice verram eam, Vatab. I will not brush them for ornament, but sweep them, or rather scrub them to their ruin by my Persian Praedones, whom I will set upon them. And here the Jewish Rabbis acknowledge that they came to understand this text by hearing an Arabian woman mention a broom or a besom in her language, to her maid. {a} Apollos, a learned teacher, may yet learn of a tent maker.

{a} Scopis non purgatoris sed perditoris. -R. David in Radic. וְסֵבֶל וְסֵבֶל.—Mercer. in Pagnin. Thesaur.

Ver. 24. The Lord of hosts hath sworn.] If he had but said it only it had been sure enough, for he cannot lie, he cannot deny himself; but when he sweareth anything we may build upon it, especially since he is Lord of hosts. He can do more than he will, but whatsoever he willeth shall undoubtedly be done; for what should hinder? Iuravit Iehovah, is the best assurance.

Ver. 25. That I will break the Assyrian in my Land.] Or, As in breaking the Assyrian in my land; for here, saith Junius, the overthrow of the Assyrian monarchy, which should shortly be, is given for a sign of the overthrow of the Babylonian.

Ver. 26. This is the purpose that is purposed.] Heb., The council that is consulted. Now there are many devices in the heart of man, but, when all is done, the counsel of the Lord, that shall stand. {#Pr 19:21}

Ver. 27. For the Lord of hosts hath purposed, and who shall disannul it?] Emphasin habet interrogatio. An excellent and unanswerable way of arguing from the irresistible will and almighty power of God; the like whereof is used by a certain Persian in Herodotus, in most elegant expressions, as Junius here noteth. {a}

{a} In Calliope.

Ver. 28. In the year that King Ahaz died.] A very good world's riddance. When Tiberius the tyrant died, some of the people offered sacrifice for joy; others in detestation of him cried out, Tiberium in Tiberim, Let Tiberius be thrown into Tiber. Think the like of Ahaz, that stigmatical Belialist. Howbeit, as bad as he was, the Philistines hearing of his death, hoped to find some advantage thereby against the Jews, who are therefore here encouraged.

Ver. 29. Rejoice not thou, whole Palestine.] That is, the Philistines, quos Iudaei animis armisque sibi infestissimos habuere. These were as bad neighbours to the Jews as the Dunkirkers now are to us. Uzziah had subdued them, {#2Ch 26:6} but Ahaz had been much damnified and despoiled by them, {#2Ch 28:18} and in the beginning of Hezekiah's reign they thought to have overrun all the country. Here therefore God's decree concerning them is published, for the comfort of his poor people, and it is this: Philistaeis non iabilandum sed eiulandum. Philistines must not be overjoyed, but rather "weep and howl for the miseries that are coming upon them."

Because the rod of him that smote thee is broken.] Because Uzziah is dead, and Ahaz hath had ill success against you through his own sinfulness and sluggishness; do not you thereupon take boldness to set up your crest, and think all is your own.

For out of the serpent's root.] Out of Uzziah's issue, Shall come forth a cockatrice.] Or, Basilisk, which is said to kill with his looks only; and hereby is meant Hezekiah, as also by the "fiery flying serpent," for thus he is called both for his fierceness and for his swiftness, two very commendable properties of a commander. Julius Caesar was in omnia praeceps, in all head first, very fierce, and with it notably nimble, witness his Veni, vidi, vici, I no sooner came, but overcame. The Hebrews from this text have a proverb, "Out of the serpent's root shall come forth a cockatrice," {a} i.e., one woe is passed, but behold a worse at hand.

{a} De radice colubri egredietur regulus, i.e., Afflictissimi, inter pauperes praecipui ac primi, atque adeo tolerandis calamitatibus nati.

Ver. 30. And the firstborn of the poor shall feed,] i.e., God's poor people shall; who though never so poor—as they were at a very low ebb under Ahaz—were God's "firstborn," and, in that respect, "higher than the kings of the earth." {#Ps 89:27}

And I will kill thy root.] See #Zep 2:4. {See Trapp on "Zep 2:4"}

Ver. 31. Howl, O gate.] Philistines are elsewhere taxed for flashy and foolish mirth {#Jud 16:23-30 2Sa 1:20,21} Here they are told they have more cause to fear than flear, to sigh than sing, to howl than hollo.

“Quis globus, O cives, caligiue, volvitur atra?

Hostis adest.”—Virg.

From the north a smoke,] i.e., Hezekiah's army raising a dust, and setting all in a combustion.

Ver. 32. That the Lord hath founded Zion.] Not Hezekiah, but Jehovah hath done it.

Chapter 15

Ver. 1. The burden of Moab.] A "burden," saith Jerome, ever betokeneth sad things to follow. A "vision" doth joyful, at last howsoever. The Chaldee paraphraseth thus: The burden of a cup of cursing for Moab to drink off. Moab was the brat of an incestuous birth, as his name also, De Patre, declareth. There is now no such nation; their very name is rooted out, ever since they were destroyed, first by Shalmaneser, as is here forethreatened, and then by Nebuchadnezzar {as #Jer 48} -where we meet with many like passages as here—so that they live but by fame only, as they are mentioned in Holy Scripture, but never for any good. Their destruction is foretold for a comfort to the poor afflicted Jews, to whom they were near allied, but very ill-affected.

Because in the night.] Nocte intempesta, {a} the night is dark and dreadful; or in the night, i.e., subito, derepente, praeter opinionem, suddenly, unexpectedly. These Moabites dwelt in a fruitful country, near to those five cities of the plain, and giving themselves up to loose and luxurious living, saith Jerome, they worshipped Chemosh or Bacchus; {b} as they had been incestuously begotten by Lot in his drink, so they proved accordingly. Ebrius te Pater genuit, said one to a desperate drunkard. Some think they are threatened with wasting in the night, in allusion to that dismal night work, and that deed of darkness, the begetting of their father and founder Moab. {#Ge 19:36,37} Whence other nations were wont to reproach the Moabites as children of the night, saith Jerome.

{b} Plutarch.

Ver. 2. He is gone up to Bajith, and to Dibon.] Two chief places of their idolatrous service, whereunto they ran in their distress; but all in vain. The like at this day do the Papists to their Ladies of Loretto, Sichem, &c., and the Turks to their Mohammed at Mecca (situated in the same country as once Moab, and perhaps in the same place with one of these idol temples) by troops and caravans; but they do worse than lose their devotion.

To weep.] And to pray too, {#Isa 16:12} but to no good purpose, for want of a right object, principle, motive, end. So afterwards the Romans, in a like exigent, cum coniugibus ac liberis iussi sunt a senatu supplicatum ire, pacemque exposcere Deum, omnia delubra implent, { a} &c.; they were by the senate commanded to go with their wives and children into the temples of their gods, and there to pray, make their peace, and to seek for aid.

Moab shall howl over Nebo, and over Medeba.] Cities surprised and sacked by the enemy. But this chapter is so much the more obscure to us, because the cities here mentioned are long since destroyed, and the Scripture setteth not forth the manner of their location or downfall.

On all their heads shall be baldness, and every beard cut off.] This was commonly done in those eastern parts, in times and in token of lamentation. {#Job 1:20 Eze 7:18} Alexander, mourning for the death of his friend Hephaestion, not only tore off his own hair, but clipped his horses' and mules' hair; yea, he plucked down also the battlements of the walls of the city, as Plutarch {b} writeth. Pudeat nos lachrymis delicta non abstergere, et spiritualia damna non deplorare, saith Oecolampadius. What a shame is it then for us Christians not to weep over our sins, and to bewail our spiritual wounds and wants!

{a} Liv., lib. iii.

{b} In Vita Pelopidae.

Ver. 3. In their streets they shall gird themselves with sackcloth.] Saccum et silicium non curat Deus. God careth not for these externals where there is not a heart sprinkled with the blood of his Son. "The sacrifice of the wicked is abomination; how much more when he bringeth it with a wicked mind?" {#Pr 21:27}

On the tops of their houses.] Thence, as it were, to require help from heaven.

Weeping abundantly.] Heb., Descending with weeping, like as with weeping they ascended; {a} they get nothing of their gods, though they cried to them. But he that goeth to the true God with an honest heart and lawful petitions is sure to speed. See #Isa 45:19.

{a} Miseros ergo Papicolas, qui et ipsi cum fietu ad divos divasque suas ascendunt, cum ululatu descendunt.

-Sculter.

Ver. 4. And Heshbon shall cry, and Elealeh.] See on #Isa 15:2.

The armed soldiers of Moab shall cry out.] As being faint hearted and unwilling to fight, because to no purpose.

His life shall be grievous to him.] Heb., His soul shall be ill-affected to him, or, for himself; that is, say some, all his care shall be for himself; let others shift as they can.

Ver. 5. My heart shall cry out for Moab.] Let others do as they will, saith the prophet here, I can do no less than bewail the woeful condition of Moab, bad though they be. {a}

“ *Tu quibus ista legis incertum est, Lector, ocellis:
Ipse quidem siccis scribere non potui* ”

His fugitives shall flee unto Zoar.] Whither once their father Lot fled for refuge; but it was too hot to hold him. Or, His fugitives shall cry to Zoar.

An heifer of three years old.] Which, being in her prime, loweth aloud, coelum mugitibus implens; so shall these fugitives set up their note, clamore fragoso boantes; as they pass through the countries they shall even break or rend themselves with crying.

{a} Heu quam doleo corde toto. -Oecol.

Ver. 6. For the waters of Nimrim shall be desolate.] What these waters of Nimrim were it doth not appear. Jerome saith that Nimrim is a town near the Dead Sea, where the waters are salt, and the country about it barren; so should the land of Moab now be forlorn and fruitless.

Ver. 7. Therefore the abundance they have gotten.] Here the prophet seemeth to tax the covetousness of the Moabites, qui coacervandis thesauris operam dederint, who made it their work to hoard and heap up riches.

And that which they have laid up.] Heb., Their visitation; that is, their treasures, which they often looked upon.

Shall they carry away to the brook of the willows.] The Moabites shall cast it into the water, as hoping there to find it again when the enemy was gone. Or, Shall they (the Assyrians) carry away to the valley of the Arabians, who were their confederates, and for such good offices spared (as Herodotus saith, lib. iii.), that they might keep and convey home for them the spoils they had taken from other nations. {a}
