Ver. 8. For the cry is gone round about, &c.] When the prophet thus describeth the mourning of the Moabites as excessive, and as a fruit of their unbelief, we must learn to moderate our mourning for outward losses and crosses, and that out of hope of God's mercy promised to his penitent suppliants.

The howling thereof unto Eglaim.] See on #Isa 15:2.

Ver. 9. For the waters of Dimon shall be full of blood.] Non tingentur solum, sed etiam inundabunt and the bloody enemy shall haply be heard to cry out, as once Hannibal did when he saw a pit full of man's blood, O formosum spectaculum! O brave sight! The very name Dimon signifieth bloody, so called, as some think, on this occasion instead of Dibon, the old name. {#Isa 15:2}

I will bring more upon Dimon, lions upon him that escapeth of Moab.] Heb., I will put additions upon Dimon, {a} i.e., additions of evils, viz., lions, and other like fierce and cruel creatures, which shall prey upon the Moabites there. {#Isa 35:9 2Ki 17:25} Some say by lion is here meant Nebuchadnezzar, {#Jer 4:7} fitly compared to a lion for his strength and swiftness. Certain it is that God hath in store plenty of plagues for evildoers; and if they escape one mischief, they shall fall into another; their preservation is but a reservation, except they repent.

Chapter 16

Ver. 1. Send ye the lamb.] For prevention of those lions, {#Isa 15:9} submit to Hezekiah, your right liege lord, a lamb, i.e., your appointed number of tribute lambs, in token of homage. {#2Sa 8:2 2Ki 3:4} But especially make your peace with God, the Ruler of the whole world, {#1Ch 29:12} by paying him homage and fealty, that there may be a lengthening of your tranquillity.

From Selo in the wilderness.] Otherwise called Petra (because beset with rocks), whence the country it stood in was called Arabia Petraea. {a} Some make it the head city of Moab, others of Edom, a place, it seemeth, that was full of cattle, and by king Amaziah, who took it, called Jokteel. {#2Ki 14:7}

{a} Strabo, lib. xvi.

Ver. 2. For it shall be, that, as a wandering bird, &c.] Or, Otherwise it shall be that as, {a} &c., i.e., except ye do as I have advised you, {#Isa 16:1} a double mischief shall befall you. (1.) Dissipation, as a wandering bird, &c.; (2.) Deportation, at the fords of Arnon, where ye shall be carried captive.

As a wandering bird.] See #Pr 27:8. {See Trapp on "Pr 27:8"}

{a} Alioqui fiet. -Jun.

Ver. 3. Take counsel, execute judgment.] Or, Make a decree, or deal equally and uprightly; shoew the like kindness to Abraham's posterity as he once did to your progenitor Lot, whom he rescued; or as Lot did to the angels whom, as strangers, he entertained, fac, inquam, quod suggero, dum subdo.

Make thy shadow as the night in the midst of noonday,] i.e., Shelter and shade my persecuted people, este illis securum perfugium, et iucundum refrigerium, protect them, refresh them, do all kind offices for them, which your fathers did not, but the contrary. {#De 23:3,4}

Ver. 4. Let mine outcasts.] Who are dear to me, {#Jer 30:17} though I may seem to have cast off the care of them. Outcasts they may be, but not castaways. See #Isa 52:5,6; "Persecuted, but not forsaken." {#2Co 4:9} "Bowels of mercy" must be "put on" towards godly exiles especially, who are Dei φυγάδες, and should therefore be dear to us.

For the extortioner is at an end.] Heb., Emunctor, the milker, or squeezer, or wringer out, {#Pr 30:33} so the Assyrian tyrant is called; as also Vastator et proculcator, the spoiler or plunderer; and conculcator, the oppressor or treader down, is consumed out of the land; and it shall not be long ere I fetch home my banished; be content therefore to harbour them awhile; herein thou shalt do thyself no disservice at all.

Ver. 5. For in mercy (or piety) shall the throne be established.] Hezekiah's throne shall, but especially Christ's, from whom ye may once have occasion to borrow that mercy which now you are called upon to lend to those outcasts of Israel.

And he shall set upon it,] i.e., He shall make it his business to relieve and right his people.

And seeking judgment.] Making inquisition after wrongs of such as dare not complain. The Grand Signor, they say, shows himself on purpose weekly abroad, for the receiving the poor's petitions and punishing the grandees of his court, by whom they are oppressed; whence also he styleth himself Awlem Penawh—i.e., the world's refuge.

And hastening justice.] Despatching and speeding causes.

Ver. 6. We have heard of the pride of Moab.] His harsh and haughty carriage toward God's poor people, though he were advised the contrary. {#Isa 16:1,3,4} Good counsel is but cast away upon a proud person. Now the Moabites were as much noted then for their pride as now the Spaniards are; and their pride appeared by their brags and threats. But

His lies shall not be so.] Or, His indignation is more than his strength, as Jerome rendereth it. His boastings and blusters shall come to nothing; his pride shall be his bane and break his neck.

Ver. 7. Therefore shall Moab howl for Moab.] One Moabite to another, or each within himself, ut solent desperantes.

For the foundations of Kirhareth.] Which shall be utterly razed and harassed. Kirhareth is interpreted the "city of brick walls," as was Babylon, or rather the "city of the sun," as Bethshemesh and Heliopolis, because there the sun was in a special manner worshipped.

Shall ye mourn.] Or, Roar, or mutter, or muse.

Ver. 8. For the fields of Heshbon languish.] As being decayed and destroyed; hence so great mourning in Moab. Their father and founder was begotten in wine, and themselves were likely great wine bibbers. Historians say that some of their cities were built by Bacchus. Fitly therefore are these drunken Moabites bereft of their vines, as those gluttonous Sodomites were of their victuals. {#Ge 14:11} The drunkard's motto is, Take away my liquor, and take away my life.

The lords of the heathen have broken down the principal plants thereof.] The great Turk causeth all the vines to be cut down wherever he cometh, because he read in the Koran that in every grape there dwelleth a devil.

Ver. 9. Therefore I will bewail with the weeping.] Defleo fletum (Paronomasia), that is, the misery of Jazer; or, I will with weeping bewail Jazer, and the vine of Sibmah.

For the shouting for thy summer fruits,] i.e., Thy joy and jollity over thy summer fruits, and over thine harvest, expressed by songs and shouts, do now fail and cease.

Ver. 10. And gladness is taken away.] Laetitia -i.e., quicquid laetificum erat, All matter of mirth is removed. Heb., Gathered up, or gathered in, as your harvest also is to your hand by the enemy.

Ver. 11. Wherefore my bowels shall sound {a} like an harp for Moab.] The "elect of God, holy and beloved, have bowels of mercy, tenderness, and kindness" toward their very enemies also, {#Col 3:12} whom they do oft pity more than they pity themselves, as Habakkuk did the Chaldeans' calamity, {#Isa 3:16} and as Daniel did Nebuchadnezzar's downfall. {#Da 4:19} Sicut cithara plectro tacta dat sonitum in funere funereum, As they have mournful music at funerals; {#Jer 9:17,20 Mt 9:23} or as the strings of a shawm sound heavily, so do my heart strings for miserable Moab. In a harp, if one string be touched, all the rest sound; so it should be with us in regard of fellow feeling. We should feel others' hard cords through our soft beds.

Ver. 12. That Moab is weary on the high place.] Tired out in his superstitious services, by all which he is not a button the better, but a great deal the worse.

But he shall not prevail.] This is every wicked man's case and curse; for "we know that God heareth not sinners." {#Joh 9:31} He will never accept of a good motion from a bad mouth. {#Isa 1} The very heathen could say,

Ver. 13. This is the word that the Lord hath spoken.] And is therefore sure and certain; for the word of the Lord "cannot be broken" {#Joh 10:35}

Since that time,] i.e., Since Balaam, hired by Balak (say the Hebrews), cursed not the Israelites as he would have done, but the Moabites, as he was made to do. Ex tunc.

Ver. 14. Within three years.] In which time the sins of the Moabites shall be full, and themselves ripe and ready for vengeance. Three years hence, therefore, sc., in the fourth year of King Hezekiah; for then came up Shalmaneser against Samaria, and it is probable that in his march thither he invaded and subdued these Moabites, that he might leave all safe behind him. A hundred years after which, or more, Nebuchadnezzar utterly ruined them, according to #Jer 48

As the years of an hireling,] i.e., Praecise, nec citius nec tardius, Three years precisely. This time Moab had to make his peace in; but he minded nothing less, and therefore deservedly perished. So, alas! shall all such infallibly as repent not within their three years' space! which perhaps may not be three months, or three days, saith Oecolampadius; I may add, three minutes; and yet, Ex hoc momento pendet aeternitas, Upon this short inch of time dependeth eternity. Up, therefore, and be doing. Stat sua cuique dies, &c.

Ver. 1. The burden of Damascus.] See #Isa 13:1.

Of Damascus.] That is, of the kingdom of Syria, the head city whereof was Damascus; and it was destroyed by Shalmaneser five or six years after this burdenous prophecy; the like whereunto, see #Isa 49:23 Am 1:2 Zec 9:1. It had been taken before by Tiglathpileser, {#2Ki 15:29} and hath been rebuilt since, {#Ac 9:2 2Co 11:32} being at this day a noble city of the East— civitas laetitiae et laudabilis, as Jeremiah calleth it. {#Jer 49:24,25}

And it shall be a ruinous heap.] It was so till re-edified, and inhabited by a new people.

Ver. 2. The cities of Aroer are forsaken,] i.e., The country beyond Jordan {#De 2:36} is desolated and depopulated—the Gadites and the Reubenites being also, together with the Syrians, carried captive by Tiglathpileser. {#1Ch 5:26}

Ver. 3. The fortress also shall cease from Ephraim.] Heb., Shall sabbatise, or rest. Ephraim, or the ten tribes, had joined with Syria in a confederacy against Judah; they justly therefore partake with them in their punishment.

Shall be as the glory of the children of Israel.] Poor glory now; but so their low condition is called ironically and by way of contempt, saith Oecolamp.

Ver. 4. The glory of Jacob shall be made thin.] Their multitudes wherein they gloried shall be greatly impaired.

And the fatness.] He shall be cast into a deadly consumption, know the consumption of a kingdom is poverty, and the death of it is loss of authority, saith Scultetus, wickedness being the root of its wretchedness, like as the causes of diseases are in the body itself.

Ver. 5. And it shall be as when the harvest man.] Their utter captivity is set forth by three lively similitudes, for better assurance, a very small remnant only left in the land. This by some ancients is alleged to show how few shall be saved—surely not one of ten thousand, said Simeon. And before him Chrysostom, {a} How many, think you, shall be saved in this city of Antioch? Though there be so many thousands of you, yet there cannot be found a hundred that shall enter into God's kingdom, and I doubt much of those too, &c.

In the valley of Rephaim.] Which was nigh to Jerusalem. {#Jos 15:8}
Nam similitudine populari propheta utitur. {b}

{a} Hom. iv. Ad Pop. Antioch.

Ver. 6. Yet gleaning grapes, &c.] See on #Isa 17:5.

Ver. 7. At that day shall a man look to his Maker.] The elect among the Israelites shall do so, having been whipped home as before. There is an elegance in the original, as there are many in this prophet, that cannot be translated. Here also, and in the next verse, we have a description of true repentance, the right fruit of affliction sanctified. Penitence and punishment are words of one derivation.

Ver. 8. And he shall not look to the altars.] As, having looked before to his Maker with a single eye, with an eye of adamant, that will turn only to one point. See on #Ho 14:8.

Ver. 9. Which they left for the children of Israel.] Which the enemy left, by a sweet providence of God; the like whereto see on #Zec 7:14.

Ver. 10. Because thou hast forgotten the God of thy salvation.] Thou hast disloyally departed from him, as a wife doth from her husband, though he were both able and ready to have saved thee.

Therefore shalt thou plant pleasant plants.] But all to no purpose. Hoc patres familias pro regula habeant aeconomica. There is a curse upon the wicked, though never so industrious. All will not do. God cannot abide to be forgotten.

And shall set it with strange slips,] {a} i.e., Rare and excellent ones, but for the enemies' use. {as #Isa 17:11 De 28:29}

Ver. 11. In the day thou shalt make thy plant to grow.] So #Pr 22:8, he that soweth iniquity shall reap vanity; and the more serious and sedulous he is at it, the worse shall it be with him. {#Ga 6:8}

But thy harvest shall be an heap.] This is a proverb among the Jews, to signify labour in vain.

In the day of grief and desperate sorrow.] Heb., Aegrae, sc., plagae; for grapes ye shall gather thorns, for figs, thistles.

Ver. 12. Woe to the multitude of many people.] Met to make up Sennacherib's army. Or, Oh the multitude, &c. The prophet wondereth, {a} as it were, at the huge multitude of the enemies, and their horrible noise.

Like the rushing of many waters.] Ob impetum et fremitum.

Ver. 13. The nations shall rush.] Or, Rustle. The Assyrians did so when they brake in. {#Isa 36:1-20}

But God shall rebuke them,] i.e., Chide them, smite them, and so set it on, as none shall be able to take it off.

And they shall flee far off.] Heb., He shall flee, viz., Sennacherib, who, was frightened with the slaughter of his soldiers by the angel, shall flee his utmost.

Ver. 14. And behold at eventide trouble.] Or, Terror—sc., within Jerusalem, besieged by Sennacherib's forces. But this mourning lasted but till morning. The time of affliction is ordinarily short; a day, or night; a piece of a night, as here; a "moment"; {#Isa 54:8} "a small moment." {#Isa 54:7} Or if longer, yet (1.) There are some breathing time between; (2.) There is much good got by it; (3.) It is nothing to eternity.

Before morning he is not.] He and his forces are all gone. The wicked, saith Oecolampadius here, at the eventide of their death have a hard tug of it; and in the morning of the resurrection they are not, or could wish they were not.

This is the portion of them that spoil us.] Epiphonema ad populum Dei. He closeth up his discourse with a word of comfort to all God's people; for whose sake also it is that all this is said against Assyria, Syria, and other foreign states, enemies to the Church.

Chapter 18

Ver. 1. Woe to the land.] To Ethiopia, described here, (1.) By the shady mountains wherewith it is surrounded; (2.) By the rivers wherewith it is watered. {a}

Which is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia.] Or, Which is along by the rivers, even Ethiopia, which also may be said to be "beyond the rivers," i.e., beyond the seven streams of Nile in respect of Jerusalem.

{a} Strabo.

Ver. 2. That sendeth ambassadors by the sea.] Heralds to defy the Assyrian, and to bid him battle, to their own ruin.

Even in the vessels of bulrushes.] Or, In paper barques well pitched. {a} These were much in use among the Ethiopians and Egyptians, both for expedition and also for safety against rocks, shallows, and falls of rivers.

Go, ye swift messengers.] Tirhaka's words to his heralds. See #2Ki 19:9.

To a nation scattered and peeled,] i.e., To the Assyrians, whose great forces are at this time scattered up and down in several countries, and therefore with more ease and safety to be set upon. Thus the Ethiopian pleaseth himself in the conceit of an easy conquest, but was quickly confuted; the Jews who trusted unto him were disappointed, and Sennacherib more enraged against Jerusalem.

To a people terrible.] The mauls {hammers} of mankind; but I shall chastise them. Thus he triumpheth before the victory, having already devoured Assyria in his hopes.

A nation meted out and trodden down.] Or rather meeting out and treading down. Or shortly to be meted out to conculcation or destruction.

Whose land the rivers have spoiled.] Or, The floods—inundations of enemies—shall spoil; or, Whose land the rivers—the Ethiopians who live by the rivers {#Isa 18:1} -do despise. For this chapter is not more short than dark, and diversely rendered and sensed.

Ver. 3. All the inhabitants of the world, see ye.] Or, Ye shall see when he lifteth up a banner on the mountains; and when he bloweth a trumpet, ye shall hear—i.e., ye shall shortly see the Assyrians returning from the conquest of the Ethiopian with glory and great joy; but what will the Lord do the while?

Ver. 4. I will take my rest, I will consider.] He will sit and bethink himself, as it were, how he may best bestow his poor people. The Assyrian shall go on with his great design for a while, and none shall interrupt him; but the Church meanwhile shall not be unprovided for.

Like a clear heat upon herbs.] Or, After rain which makes herbs and plants suddenly to sprout and shoot up again. God will not only look upon his people, but refresh them in troubles.

Ver. 5. For afore the harvest.] Or, Vintage.

When the bud is perfect, &c.] When the Assyrian, fleshed with his former victory, maketh full account that all is his own, God shall make his hopes to hop headless. He shall slaughter his forces, {as #Isa 18:6} branches and sprigs, great and small.

Ver. 6. They shall be left together.] They, that is, the Assyrians slain by the angel. {as #Ps 79:2 Isa 37:36}

The fowls shall summer upon them.] Both birds and beasts of prey shall have enough to feed upon the whole year about.

Ver. 7. In that time.] When the Assyrians are thus slain.

Shall the present be brought, / sc., By the Jews, who shall consecrate a considerable part of the spoils of the Assyrians, according to #Nu 31:28,47,50,54. Thankfulness for public deliverances is still due to the Most High: "Bring presents unto him that ought to be feared." {#Ps 76:11}

Chapter 19

Ver. 1. The burden of Egypt.] See #Isa 13:1.

Behold the Lord rideth.] Heb., Riding—sc., as a judge, or general of an army.

Upon a swift cloud, / i.e., Speedily, suddenly, and irresistibly. Clouds are rarely seen in Egypt, where it raineth not; but in #Eze 30:18 we read of a cloud that should cover Egypt. By "swift cloud" here some understand the Virgin Mary; others our Saviour's body, or human nature. And they further tell us, that as soon as the child Jesus was brought into Egypt, down fell all the idols there, as Dagon did before the ark. {a} This they ground upon the following words:—

And the idols of Egypt shall be moved at his presence.] Whereby I conceive is only meant that their gods should not be able to help them, and should therefore lose their authority, be discredited and decried.

And the heart of Egypt shall melt.] As it did, first when Sennacherib, and then when Nebuchadnezzar came against it.

{a} Hist. Scholast.

Ver. 2. And I will set the Egyptians against the Egyptians.] Commiscebo Egyptios inter se, I will embroil them in a civil war. This happened, saith Junius, under King Psammeticus, after the death of Sethon, about the end of Hezekiah's reign, or the beginning of Manasseh's, while Isaiah was yet alive. {a}

And kingdom against kingdom.] Or, Rectory against rectory; for as here in the heptarchy, so there the land was divided into many provinces or jurisdictions, even sixty-six, saith Ortelius.

{a} Herod., lib. ii. Diod. Sic., lib. i.

Ver. 3. And the spirit of Egypt shall fail.] Fail and falter; their wits shall not serve them, but be drained and emptied, as the Hebrew word here signifieth. By spirit, here understand their wisdom, learning, and sharpness, for the which they were famous among, and frequented by other nations. Moses was skilled in their learning. {#Ac 7:23} Pythagoras, Plato, Solon, Anaxagoras, and other philosophers got much by them. Mercurius Trismegist saith of Egypt, that it was the image of heaven, and the temple of the whole world. By spirit here, some understand their familiar spirits. {a} See #Le 19:31.

And they shall seek to the idols.] Whereof they had great store (so that they were derided by other idolaters), but their chief deity was Latona, saith Herodotus.

And to the charmers.] Who have their name in Hebrew from their low or slow speaking.

{a} Aug. De Civit. Dei, lib. viii. cap. 14.

Ver. 4. And the Egyptians will I give over.] Heb., Shut up—sc., as fishes in a pond.

Into the hand of a cruel lord.] Heb., Lords—viz., those twelve tyrants that reigned after Sethon, and were put down by Psammeticus, one of their own number, who afterwards reigned alone and with rigour. {a}

And a fierce king,] viz., Psammeticus, the father of that Pharaohnecho who slew Josiah. {#2Ki 23:29} This fierce king reigned fifty-four years, and by his harshness caused 200,000 of his men of war to leave him, and to go into Ethiopia.

{a} Herodot.

Ver. 5. And the waters shall fail from the sea,] i.e., Their sea traffic shall be taken from them, to their very great loss. Historians testify, that by frequent navigation out of the Bay of Arabia into India and Trogloditiae, the revenue of Egypt was so increased, that Auletus, the father of Cleopatra, received thence yearly twelve thousand and five hundred talents.

And the river shall be wasted and dried up,] i.e., The river Nile, which watereth Egypt and maketh it fruitful. See #De 11:9,10 Eze 29:3,9.

Imbribus, atque annis sicca fuisse novem.”

- Ovid. Art., lib. i.

Ver. 6. And they shall turn the rivers far away.] The Assyrians shall, or some of their own fond and vainglorious princes shall drain the river Nile at several passages and in several places, to the impairing of the river and the impeaching of the state. {a}

The reeds and flags shall wither.] These were of great use there; for of flags they made their barks and boats, mats also, wheels, baskets, &c.; of reeds they made their sails, ropes, paper, and a kind of juice serving them for food, {b} &c. As therefore the palm tree is to the Indians a cornucopia, yielding many commodities, so are reeds and flags to the Egyptians.

{a} Herodot., lib. ii.

{b} Plin., lib. xiii. cap. 11.

Ver. 7. The paper reeds by the brooks,] i.e., By the streams of Nile; for where this river arriveth not, is nothing but a whitish sand, bearing no grass but two little weeds called suhit and gazul, which, burnt to ashes, maketh the finest crystal glasses.

And everything sown by the brooks.] As far as Nile overflows is a black mould, so fruitful as they do but throw in the seed and have four rich harvests in less than four months.

Ver. 8. The fishers also shall mourn.] Because their trade decayeth, or they take pains to no purpose. {#Isa 19:10}

Ver. 9. They that work in fine flax shall be confounded,] sc., For want of materials, such as were wont to be sown by the brooks {#Isa 19:7 1Ki 10:28 Pr 7:16 Eze 27:7} (Plin., lib. ix. cap. 1).

They that weave networks.] Or rather whiteworks {a} -that is, white garments made of the fine flax of Egypt. These were much worn by nobles. {#Pr 7:16 Da 7:9} Whence also in Hebrew they have their name. {#1Ki 21:8 Ne 2:16 Ec 10:17, &c.}

{a} מִיְדוֹת, Albi seu candidati.

Ver. 10. And they shall be broken in the purposes thereof.] Heb., In the foundations, as #Ps 11:3. Purposes are the foundation of practices, but are oft disappointed.

And ponds for fish.] Heb., Ponds of fowl, stagna voluptaria (Tremellius), standing pools of desire. In Hebrew, the word used elsewhere for a pond or fish pool signifieth a blessing also. {a}

Ver. 11. Surely the princes of Zoan are fools.] Otherwise they would never have so ill-advised their king so to drain the river, for his pleasure, to the public detriment. Zoan was an ancient city in Egypt. {#Nu 13:22} The Septuagint and Vulgate versions call it Tunis. Here it was that Moses did all his wonders. {#Ps 78:12 Ex 7:8,9} Here Pharaoh's princes "took counsel, but not of God; and covered with a covering, but not of his Spirit, that they might add sin to sin." {#Isa 30:1}

The counsel of the wise counsellors is become brutish.] Such as was that of Machiavel, {a} the Florentine secretary, who proposeth Caesar Borgia, notwithstanding all his villanies, as the only example for a prince to imitate.

How say ye unto Pharaoh?] How can ye for shame say so of yourselves? Or quomodo dictatis Pharaoni? How can ye dictate or put such words as these into your king's mouth? What gross flattery is this?

I am the son of the wise.] Or, A son of "wise ones; as if wisdom were proper to you, and hereditary. The Egyptians cracked much of their wisdom, yet more of their antiquity, as if they were long before other people, yea, before the moon—as the Arcadians also boasted—and that their philosophy was very ancient. {b}

{a} De Principe, p. 185.

{b} Herod. lib. ii.—προσεληναοι, Lucian.—Plato in Timaeo.

Ver. 12. Where are they? where are thy wise men?] q.d., Vile latens virtus: if they have that wisdom they pretend to, let them predict thy calamities and help to prevent them. Mihi hominum prudentia similis videtur talparum labori non sine dexteritate sub terra fodientium, sed ad lumen solis caecutientium, {a} The world's wizards are like children, always standing on their heads and shaking their heels against heaven.

{a} Gasp. Ens.

Ver. 13. The princes of Zoan are become fools.] Wilful fools; this they are told twice over, because hardly persuaded to it. See #Isa 19:11.

The princes of Noph.] Called also Moph, {#Ho 9:6} and therehence Memphis, now Grand Cairo, famous once for the pyramids and monuments of the Egyptian kings.

Even they that are the stay of the tribes thereof.] Heb., The corners {a} of the tribes or rectories—that is, either the king and chieftains, as some sense it; or, as others, all the inhabitants of the country, from one corner thereof unto another. How these wise men of Egypt deceived others is not expressed; but probably they did it by approving and cherishing the superstition, impiety, and carnal security of the princes and people.

{a} The free states of Switzerland are called cantons—i.e., corners.

Ver. 14. The Lord hath mingled a perverse spirit.] Or, Given them to drink a spirit of giddiness. Heb., A spirit of extreme perversities; he hath stupified, and as it were intoxicated them with the "efficacy of error."

And they have caused Egypt to err in every work.] Psammeticus their king was twenty-eight years in besieging Azotus ere he could take it; and other things went on with them accordingly. {a}

{a} Herod., Euterp.

Ver. 15. Neither shall there be any work.] See on #Isa 19:14.

Ver. 16. In that day shall Egypt be like unto women.] Feeble and faint-hearted, nihil mascule aut fortiter facturi, sed mulieribus meticulosiores. See #Pr 28:1. {See Trapp on "Pr 28:1"}

Because of the shaking of the hand of the Lord.] When as yet he threateneth only; how much more when he striketh in good earnest? See #Isa 30:32.

Ver. 17. And the land of Judah shall be a terror unto Egypt.] For how should Egypt hope to speed better than Judea had done? How Sethon, King of Egypt, was put to his trumps, as we say, when Sennacherib invaded Egypt, imploring the aid of his god Vulcan, whose priest he was, see Herodotus, lib. ii.

Ver. 18. In that day.] When the gospel shall be there preached, whether by Mark the evangelist or others, as Clement, Origen, Didymus.

Five cities.] A considerable number of Egyptians.

Speak the language of Canaan.] Called the Jews' language, {#Isa 36:11,13} the Hebrew tongue, wherein were written the lively oracles of God. This language, therefore, the elect Egyptians shall learn, and labour for that "pure lip," {#Zep 3:9} to "speak as the oracles of God";

{#1Pe 4:11} "wholesome words"; {#2Ti 1:13} "right words"; {#Job 6:25} "words of wisdom"; {#Pr 1:6} "of truth and soberness"; {#Ac 26:25} to be examples to others, not only in faith and conversation, but also "in words and communication." {#1Ti 4:12}

And swear to the Lord of hosts.] Devote themselves to his fear and service, taking a corporal oath for that purpose as in baptism, {a} and other holy covenants, whereupon haply they might be enabled to speak with tongues, the holy tongue especially, as most necessary for Christians. Here then we have a description of a true Christian, not such as the Jesuits in their catechism give us, viz., A Christian is he who believeth whatsoever the church of Rome commandeth to be believed, swearing fealty to her.

One shall be called the city of destruction,] i.e., Nevertheless there shall be a few cities that shall despise Christian religion; and shall therefore be destroyed for neglecting so great salvation. It shall be easier for Sodom one day than for such. Others render the text Heliopolis, or the city of the sun, shall be accounted one, sc., of those five converted cities, and become consecrated to the Sun of righteousness. {b}

Ver. 19. In that day shall there be an altar to the Lord.] A spiritual altar for spiritual sacrifices. {as #Isa 19:20 Heb 13:10} Onias, the Jewish priest, who hereupon went and built an altar at Heliopolis in Egypt, and sacrificed to God there, was as much mistaken as the Anabaptists of Germany were in their Munster, which they termed New Jerusalem, and acted accordingly, sending forth apostles, casting out orthodox ministers, &c.

And a pillar in the border thereof.] That is, saith one, the gospels and writings of the apostles, that pillar and ground of truth, or a public confession of the Christian, faith. {#Ro 10:9} An allusion to #Jos 22:10,25. See #Zec 14:9,20,21.

Ver. 20. And it shall be for a sign and for a witness.] The doctrine of Christ's death is a clear testimony of God's great love and kindness to mankind. {#Ro 5:8}

For they shall cry unto the Lord for their oppressors.] As the Israelites sometimes had done under the Egyptian servitude. {#Ex 3:9}

And he shall send them a Saviour.] Not Moses but Messias, that great Saviour; {a} for God had laid his people's "help on one that is mighty." {#Ps 89:19} See #Tit 2:13.

Ver. 21. And the Lord shall be known to Egypt.] They shall both know the Lord Christ, and be known of him. {as #Ga 4:9} See #Ro 10:20.

And shall do sacrifice and oblation.] Perform "reasonable service," {#Ro 12:1} such as whereof they can render a reason. Not a Samaritan service, {#Joh 4:22} or Athenian {#Ac 17:23} -"Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship," &c. God will have no such blind sacrifices. {#Mal 1:8}

Yea, they shall vow a vow, &c.] That in baptism especially.

Ver. 22. And the Lord shall smite Egypt.] That he may bring it into the bond of the covenant. {#Eze 20:37 Heb 12:9 Ho 6:1}

He shall smite and heal it.] Heb., Smiting and healing. Una eademque manus, &c. Una gerit bellum monstrat manus altera pacem; as it was said of Charles V. Facit opus alienum ut faciat proprium {#Isa 28:20}

And shall heal them.] Pardon their sins, heal their natures, and make up all breaches in their outward estates.

Ver. 23. In that day there shall be an highway, &c.] All hostility shall cease, and a blessed unanimity be settled among Christ's subjects of several nations; hereunto way was made by the Roman empire, reducing both these great countries into provinces.

And the Egyptians shall serve.] Serve the Lord "with one shoulder." {as #Zep 3:9}

Ver. 24. In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt.] The posterity of Shem, Ham, and Japheth, shall concur in the communion of saints; the pale and partition wall being taken away.

Even a blessing in the midst of the earth.] The saints are so. Absque stationibus non staret mundus. If it were not for them, the world would soon shatter and fall in pieces.

Ver. 25. Whom the Lord of hosts shall bless.] Or, For the Lord of hosts shall bless, and then he shall be blessed, ^{a} as Isaac said of Jacob. ^{#Ge 27:33}

Blessed be Egypt, my people.] A new title to Egypt, and no less honourable. Vide quantum profecerit Egyptus flagellis, saith Oecolampadius, here, i.e., see how Egypt hath got by her sufferings. See #Isa 19:22. She who was not a people, but a rabble of rebels conspiring against heaven, is now owned and taken into covenant.

And Assyria, the work of my hands.] "For we are his workmanship created in Christ Jesus unto good works." ^{#Eph 2:10}

And Israel mine inheritance.] This is, upon the matter, one and the same with the former; every regenerate person, whether Jew or Gentile, is all these three in conjunction. Oh the $\mu\upsilon\tau\omega\mu\alpha\kappa\alpha\rho\iota\sigma\tau\eta\varsigma$, the heaped up happiness of all such! "Let Israel rejoice in him that made him; let the children of Zion be joyful in their king." ^{#Ps 149:2} "For the Lord her God in the midst of her is mighty; he will save, he will rejoice over her with joy; he will rest in his love, he will joy over her with singing." ^{#Zep 3:17}

^{a} Jun.

Chapter 20

Ver. 1. In the year that Tartan.] A certain commander under Sennacherib, ^{#2Ki 18:17} who came against Ashdod, among other cities of Judah, about the twelfth year of king Hezekiah.

Came to Ashdod.] Called also Azotus, ^{#Ac 8:40} and much praised by Herodotus in Euterpe.

When Sargon.] That is, Sennacherib most likely, who had seven names, saith Jerome, eight, say some Rabbis. Commodus, the Roman emperor, took unto himself as many names as there are months in the year, which also he changed ever and anon, but constantly-kept that of Exuperans, because he would have been thought to excel all men. {a} The like might be true of Sargon.

And fought against Ashdod, and took it.] Psammeticus, king of Egypt, had before taken it after a very long siege; now it is taken again from the Egyptian by the Assyrian, to teach them and others not to trust to forts and fenced cities. {b}

{a} Dion.

{b} Herod., lib. ii.

Ver. 2. At the same time spake the Lord.] Against Egypt and Ethiopia, whom he had comforted, #Isa 19:18,19, and yet now again threateneth; showing by an ocular demonstration {a} what miseries should befall them. This was done in Jewry; but the report thereof might easily come to these confederate countries, and the Jews, howsoever, were given hereby to see how vain a thing it was to trust to such confederates.

By Isaiah the son of Amoz.] Heb., By the hand of Isaiah, whom God used as a dispenser of this precious treasure.

Go, loose the sackcloth from off thy loins,] i.e., Thy thick rough garment, {b} such as prophets usually wore. {#2Ki 1:8 Zec 13:4 Mt 3:4} Or else thy sackcloth put on as a mourning weed, either for ten tribes lately carried captive, or else for the miseries ready to fall shortly upon thine own people.

And put off thy shoe from thy foot.] The Nudipedales in Moravia might as well avouch Isaiah for their founder as the Carmelites do Elias.

And he did so.] God is to be obeyed without hesitation: his commands, how unreasonable soever they may seem, are not to be disputed, but despatched.

Walking naked.] Not stark naked, but stripped as a prisoner, his mantle or upper garment cast off. See #1Sa 19:24 Ac 19:16 Mic 1:8.

Ver. 3. Like as my servant Isaiah.] Servants are either menial or magisterial. Prophets and preachers are of this latter sort.

Hath walked naked and barefoot three years, / i.e., Three days; a day for a year {as #Eze 4:4,5,6} Tremellius rendereth the text thus: Hath walked naked and barefoot for a sign and wonder of the third year against the Egyptians, and against the Ethiopians—that is, for a sign that the third year after this prophecy the forces of the Egyptians and Ethiopians under the conduct of Tirhaka shall be worsted, slaughtered, and carried captive by the Assyrian monarch. And this was preached not more to their ears than to their eyes, ad fidem faciendam, for more assurance.

Ver. 4. So shall the king of Assyria lead away.] As men used to lead or drive cattle, for so the Hebrew word Nahag denotes: so are poor captives led; and so shall the Lord also one day "lead forth with" or in company of "the workers of iniquity" (notorious offenders) all such as "turn aside unto their crooked ways," hypocrites and dissemblers; whenas "peace shall be upon Israel, upon the pure in heart." {#Ps 125:5}

Young and old.] Young men are for action, old men for counsel. {a} Εργα νεων, βουλαι δε τεροντων. {b} They were all carried away together in a sad and sorry condition, little better, and sometimes more bitter, than death itself.

Even with their buttocks uncovered.] Vel ad ludibrium, vel ad libidinem hostium, for the enemies either to scorn at, or to feed their filthy eyes upon. Thus and for such a purpose dealt the mitred fathers with the poor Albigenses, those ancient Protestants in France, when they had forced them to take quarter for their lives, voluerunt episcopi viros et mulieres nudos egredi, &c. The bishops wished the men and women to be led forth nude. And so Tilly dealt with the miserable citizens at the sack of Magdeburg; and much worse than so dealeth the devil with all his wretched captives, whom he driveth away hellward, naked and barefoot with their buttocks uncovered, the shame of their nakedness exposed to public view for want of the white raiment of Christ's righteousness that they might be clothed.

{#Re 3:18}

{b} Pindar.

Ver. 5. And they shall be afraid and ashamed.] They—that is, as many as confided in them—seeing themselves thus confuted, shall be abashed and terrified (perterrefient) at the fall of their confederates, and their own approaching calamity.

Ver. 6. And the inhabitant of this isle shall say, &c.] Judea, though part of the continent, is here called an isle or island, whereas it was indeed an inland; (1.) Because it was bounded on the west with the Midland Sea, and on the east with the lake of Gennesaret; (2.) Because it was beset with many enemies, and beaten upon by the waves of wars from all parts, but especially from Egypt and Babylon, which is called a sea; {#Isa 21:1 8:8} (3.) Because begirt with God's favour, power, and protection, which was greater security to it than the sea is to Venice {a} (which yet is media insuperabilis unda), or than wooden walls can be to any island.

Behold, such is our expectation, &c.] Here is their shame, and well it might be, for if Hezekiah relied not upon the Egyptian for help against the Assyrian, yet the people did, as Rabshakeh also could tell. {#2Ki 18:24}

And how shall we escape?] Here is their fear. {#Isa 20:5} How much more shall wicked men say thus at the last day?

{a} Venice is environed with her embracing Neptune, to whom she marrieth herself with yearly nuptials, casting a ring into the sea.

Chapter 21

Ver. 1. The burden of the desert of the sea, / i.e., Of Babylon, {#Isa 21:9} which is here called a sea, because situated by many waters, {#Jer 51:13,36} and the desert or plain of the sea, because it stood in a plain, {#Ge 11:2} or was to be turned into a desert. See #Isa 13:1-14:32 Jer 51. It is so often prophesied against; (1.) For the comfort of God's people, who were to suffer hard and heavy things from this city; (2.) For a caution to them not to trust in such a tottering state. A Lapidè saith, that about the time of this prophecy, Hezekiah was making a league and amity with Merodach, king of Babylon, to whose ambassadors he had showed all his treasures, and was well shent for it. {#2Ki 20:12} To take him off which design, the ruin of Babylon is here before prophesied.

As whirlwinds in the south {a} pass through.] Patentibus campis, ac locis arenosis, vehementissimo impetu cuncta prosternentes, without stop or stay, bearing down all before them, covering whole armies with sand sometimes, and destroying theirs.

So it cometh.] Or, So he cometh, that is, Cyrus with his armies; Vastator Babyloniae, he cometh fiercely and furiously.

From the wilderness.] From Persia, which is desert in many places, especially toward Babylon.

From a terrible land.] From Media, the people whereof were barbarous and brutish, skilful to destroy. Nitocris, queen of Babylon, feared a hostile irruption from this land, did her utmost to prevent it, but that would not be. {b}

{a} Pliny saith the greatest tempests at sea come from the South.

{b} Herodot.

Ver. 2. A grievous vision.] Heb., Hard, harsh, tyrannorum speculum: here is hard for hard; God loveth to retaliate. Babylon had been the "maul of the earth"; {#Jer 51:20} now a hard messenger is sent, a harsh vision is declared against her. They who do what they should not, shall hear what they would not; a burdenous prophecy, a grievous vision. This "treacherous dealer dealeth treacherously, and this spoiler spoileth," for so some read the next words.

The treacherous dealer dealeth treacherously.] Or, O thou treacherous dealer and notable spoiler: thou Elam, I mean; go up, thou Media, besiege. God oft maketh use of one tyrant to punish another; as here he stirreth up the Persians to plunder and waste the Babylonians. So the Persians were afterwards in like sort punished by the Macedonians, the Macedonians by the Romans, those Romans by the Huns, Vandals, Lombards, Saracens, Turks; all whom Christ shall destroy at his last coming.

Go up, O Elam, J i.e., Thou Persian. Elymais is properly that part of Persia that lieth towards Media. Here they are appointed their work 170 years before it was done; and Cyrus afterwards named as the chief doer.

All the sighing thereof have I made to cease.] Thereof, or of her, that is, of Babylon, not of Judea, which the prophet ever had in his heart, as some sense it; the sighing, quo ipsa, sua tyrannide et oppensione, cogebat alios flere et gemere, {a} that she forced from others, specially from God's oppressed people. Or, they shall not have long to sigh, for I will soon put an end to their lives.

{a} Vatab.

Ver. 3. Therefore are my loins filled with pains.] I, Babylon, or I, Belshazzar, am in a woe case. This is here set forth by a notable hypotyposis, ac si res ipsa iam tum gereretur, persona regis in se per mimesin assumpta, {a} acting Belshazzar's part. (as #Da 5:5,6, where we may read this prophecy punctually fulfilled)

I was bowed down at the hearing of it.] Belshazzar's senses were sorely afflicted: how much more shall it be so in hell? The prophet here elegantly imitateth his groans and outcries, O dolorem lumborum! O torsiones! O cordis amissionem! O tremorem et terrorem! {b} Oh the doleful woe and "alas" of the damned spirits!

{a} Zeged.

{b} Oecolamp.

Ver. 4. My heart panted.] Or, Fluttereth to and fro, as not able to keep in its place. Viro impio calamitatibus presso nihil desperatius est. Nothing is more hopeless and crest fallen than a wicked man in distress: for what reason? his life and hopes end together.

The night of my pleasure hath he turned into fear.] That dreadful and dismal night, {#Da 5} intended for a revelling night, and dedicated to the honour of Shac: but the handwriting on the wall and the irruption of the Persians marred the mirth.

Ver. 5. Prepare the table.] Insultat regi Balthasari, ac irridendo voces illius memorat. {a} Prepare the table, said Belshazzar. But more need he had to have said, Prepare the battle; set the army in array, &c. But this secure sot thought of no such matter. His destruction, though at hand, was hid from his eyes by the Lord, who

Caliginemque, affundit, ut ruant suas
Furenter in clades, sibi quas noxii
Accersierunt ultro, consiliis malis.* ”

Watch in the watchtower.] That we may revel the more securely.

Eat, drink.] Etiamsi Hannibal sit ad portas; Even if Hannabal is by the gates. Feed without fear, notwithstanding the siege.

Arise, ye princes, anoint the shield,] q.d., It would better become you, O Babylonian princes, so to do—viz., to stand to your arms—to furbish your shields, for your better defence against the Medes and Persians. {b} Some make these words to be the watchman’s warning, given upon the Persians entering the city.

{a} Zeged.

Ver. 6. For thus hath the Lord said unto me.] Confirming, by a prophetic vision, what I had foretold concerning the calamity of the Chaldees.

Ver. 7. And he saw,] scil., In a vision.

A chariot with a couple of horsemen.] Darius and Cyrus.

A chariot of asses and a chariot of camels.] Beasts of both sorts—both for burden and service—great store of them.

And he hearkened diligently, with much heed.] Attendit attente, attentissime, the watchman did who was set to watch in the vision.

Ver. 8. And he cried, A lion,] i.e., A stout and cruel enemy is upon us. Or, He cried as a lion, so some render it—that is, the watchman cried aloud, professing his utmost vigilance in performance of his duty.

Ver. 9. And, behold, here cometh a chariot o men.] Or, Behold, even now are gone in—that is Cyrus and Darius {as #Isa 21:7} have broken into the town, and surprised it.

And he answered and said.] He—that is, the watchman— numinis quodam afflatu commotus, by a divine instinct. or rather God himself.

Babylon is fallen, is fallen.] That is, Shall fall, certo, cito, penitus, certainly, speedily, utterly— ruit alto a culmine Troia. So shall shortly mystical Babylon, {#Re 18:8-19} as the Jesuits themselves, Ribera and A Lapide, confess; only they say this shall be toward the end of the world, when Rome shall become idolatrous, as though it were not so now. But what said Petrarch long since? There yet standeth near at hand a second Babylon, cito itidem casura, si vos essetis viri, which would soon be down, would you but stand up as men.

Ver. 10. O my threshing, and the corn of my floor.] That is, O my church and people, whom by so many tribulations I have hitherto been threshing, that I might sunder thee from the chaff, and make thee the "corn of the floor," or, as the Hebrew here hath it, "my son of the floor," and may lay thee up as pure grain in my garner. {a} See #Isa 28:27.

That which I have heard from the Lord of hosts,] viz., That you, my poor countrymen, shall be threshed for a while, and winnowed by Babylon. See #Isa 25:10 41:15 Jer 51:33 Mic 4:13. Ut cum triturando e gluma, et follibus suis utriculisque, triticum educitur, and that you shall at length be delivered from this grievous affliction; all this you may write upon as certain and infallible. I have herein told you not the dreams of mine own heart, but the very undoubted words of God himself.

Ver. 11. The burden of Dumah, / i.e., Of Idumea, ^{a} or of the Edomites. For burden, see on #Isa 13:1. This prophecy is the shorter the harder. The Jews apply this prophecy to Rome. They read for Dumah, Roma. The Romans they call the new Idumeans, and the Pope's kingdom the wicked kingdom of Edom. Some of them say that Julius Caesar was an Idumean; others that Aeneas came out of Idumea into Egypt; from thence into Lybia; thence to Carthage; thence to Italy, and that there he built Alba, out of which sprang Rome. The rise of this fiction seemeth to have been the destruction of the Jewish state by Titus and his Romans, who were thereupon for their cruelty by those Jews called Edomites.

He calleth to me out of Seir.] Or, One is calling to me out of Seir, which was a mountain possessed by the Edomites.

Watchman, what of the night?] ^{b} Interrogatio ironica est argue sarcastica -a scoffing question whereby the prophet is derided and upbraided with false foretelling a night of misery to the Edomites, whenas they felt no change, but enjoyed rather a lightsome morning; a fine time, as we say, of liberty and prosperity.

^{b} Custos, quid de nocte?

Ver. 12. The watchman said, The morning cometh, and also the night.] This is a short and sharp answer—q.d., say it be yet morning with you and clear day; yet, as sure as the night followeth the day, a change will come such as whereof you shall have small comfort. ^{a}

If ye will inquire, / sc., Of the Lord by me, whom you call watchman, in disdain; but I profess myself to be so—that is, to be a prophet, and do take it for an honour.

Inquire ye.] Do it seriously, and not sarcastically. "Be not ye mockers, lest your bonds be increased." ^{#Isa 28:22}

Return.] To God by true repentance.

Come.] Come over to us who are his people. And all this is delivered by an elegant Asyndeton ^{b} in short and quick terms, importing that haste must be made if the aforementioned danger shall be prevented. Habent aulae suum cito, cito; they must be nimble that shall find favour in the court of heaven. It is an unsafe thing always to begin to live. How many are taken away in their offers and essays before they have prepared their hearts to cleave to God! Castigemus ergo mores et moras. Up, therefore, and be doing, that the Lord may be with you.

b} A rhetorical figure which omits the conjunction.

Ver. 13. The burden upon Arabia.] As a burden upon a beast. These Arabians or Hagarens had assisted, likely, Tihakah the Ethiopian against Sennacherib, and are therefore set upon by him. Sure it is they were enemies to the Church. {#Ps 83:2-12}

In the forest shall ye lodge.] In the wide and wild woods, glad to lurk anywhere for safety—glad to quit your huts.

O ye travelling companies.] Ye troops of travellers.

Ver. 14. Brought water to the thirsty.] Or, Bring forth water wherewith to meet the thirsty; with your bread prevent those that flee; be speedy and spontaneous in your beneficence. "Blessed is the man that considereth the poor and needy"; {#Ps 41:1} qui praeoccupat vocem petitori -which preventeth the request of the poor beggar; so Augustine rendereth it.

Ver. 15. For they fled from the swords, &c.] Swords, bows, battle to all the rest. Crosses seldom come single. See on #Jas 1:2.

Ver. 16. Within a year, after the years of an hireling.] See on #Isa 16:14; before the year be come about.

All the glory of Kedar.] Whose tents {#Ps 120:5} were rude, but rich. {#So 1:5} {See Trapp on "So 1:5"}

Ver. 17. And the residue of the number of archers.] Heb., Of the bow, whereby these Kedarens lived much, as had also their ancestor Ishmael. {#Ge 21:20}

For the Lord God of Israel hath spoken it.] Who will surely see it done, and yet he loveth mercifulness, but can, less than Mithridates could, endure those who hate virtue forsaken of fortune, as they call it.

Ver. 1. The burden.] See #Isa 13:1.

Of the valley of vision,] i.e., Of Zion or Jerusalem, as the Septuagint express it, which is called first a valley, though set upon a knoll—first, Because environed with mountains; {#Ps 125:2} secondly, Because shortly to be laid low and levelled with the ground— ita ut vallis aut vorago dici posset.

Of vision.] So Jerusalem is called—first, Because there was God's visible or aspectable presence; secondly, Because it was a seminary of seers, as Jerome elegantly termeth it, not without some allusion, as it is thought, to Mount Moriah, whereon stood the temple, which signifieth vision; q.d., O Zion, thou wast Moriah, but now thou art Marah; thou wast the mountain of vision, but now thou art a valley of tears and of darkness; thou wast the temple of God, but now thou art a den of thieves.

What aileth thee now, that thou art wholly gone up to the house tops?] Luctus et salutis causa, saith Scultetus; there to lament thy distress, or else for safeguard in this distraction. Shouldst thou not rather go out to fight, than go up thus wholly and fully to the tops of thy terraces?

Ver. 2. Thou that art full of stirs.] Clamoribus fragosis, { a } How soon hast thou changed thy cheer and thy note? thy joyful acclamations into doleful exclamations?

Thy slain men are not slain with the sword.] Sed mortui ex anxietate; but are foreslain with fear, or, as others, by the visible vengeance of God, as Titus acknowledged at the last sack of that city, { b } and as the poet sang of Troy—

“ *Non tibi Tindaridis facies invisâ Lacaenae,
Culpatusve Paris; verum inclementia divum
Has evertit opes.* ”—Virgil.

{b} Joseph., lib. vii. cap. 16.

Ver. 3. All thy rulers are fled together.] Vagantur; As not knowing what to do, or whither to turn themselves.

All that are found in thee are bound together.] Either in fetters, {#Jer 52:11} or with fear. {#Ps 76:5}

Which have fled from far.] Or, They fly far away, even as fast and as far as they can out of danger.

Ver. 4. Therefore said I, Look away from me.] Ut luctui et lamentis me totum dedam; that unseen I may soak myself in the salt tears of sorrow for Zion.

Ver. 5. For it is a day of trouble, and of treading down.] Great is the woe of war; no words how wide soever can set forth to the full the distress and destruction thereof.

And of perplexity.] Mebusah samebucah, so the original elegantly, as in the last words of the verse, rythmically.

Breaking down the walls.] {a} According to #Isa 5:5.

{a} Dominus exparietavit. -Vatab.

Ver. 6. And Elam,] i.e., The Persians (great archers, as Corabo testifieth, lib. xvi.), as Kir standeth here for the Medians, {#2Ki 16:9} good at sword and buckler; called also Syromedians.

Uncovered the shield.] Kept covered till then for fear of rusting. These were desperate fellows, bloodily bent, skilful to destroy.

Ver. 7. Thy choicest valleys shall be full of chariots.] Iron chariots armed with scythes. These were, saith Vegetius, first a terror, and then a scorn.

In array at the gate,] sc., To force entrance into the city. {as #Jud 9:44,52}

Ver. 8. And he discovered the covering of Judah.] That is, he that is the enemy took the city; Hoc enim significat nudari operimentum -i.e., Protectionem Iudae; or, as others sense it, {a} God took away his protection, the rampart and defence of their country; {see #Ex 32:25 Nu 14:9 Mic 1:11} or the enemy destroyed the temple, wherein the Jews so foolishly confided. {#Jer 7:4}

To the armour of the house.] To anything but whom they should have looked unto. Our hearts are topped full of harlotry, ready to shift and shank in every by corner for comfort; to hang their hopes on every hedge, rather than to roll themselves upon God, "the hope of Israel."

{a} Zegeed., Diodat., Oecolamp.

Ver. 9. Ye have seen also...and ye gathered together, &c.] This they did when in distress, to prevent the enemy and provide for their own safety; and this they might well have done, had not God been neglected; this of all things he can least endure. "The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God" (#Ps 9:17; see #Isa 30:1).

Ver. 10. And ye have numbered.] This they did not till now, that they might make the city more defensible, and the better keep out the enemy. General Vere told the King of Denmark, that kings cared not for soldiers and warlike preparations until such times as their crowns hang on the one side of their head.

Ver. 11. Ye made a ditch also.] A new ditch, lest the old one should not suffice, to hold water for the besieged. All this was well and wisely done, had not the main matter been left undone. See #2Ch 32:3,5 2Ki 18:14,16. The community of the Jews were carnal, and trusted in the arm of flesh. Hezekiah also himself faltered, &c.

But ye have not looked unto the maker thereof,] i.e., To the author of that trouble, treading down, and perplexity {a} {#Isa 22:5} or, to the founder of Jerusalem, which, say the Rabbis, was one of those seven things which God had in his thoughts before he made the world.

{a} Oecolamp.

Ver. 12. And in that day did the Lord God of hosts call to weeping.] Ponit arma quibus civitates ab hostibus defenduntur, nempe arma poenitentiae. These are the best defensive weapons, which therefore God of his goodness calleth people to, or ere he punisheth them. He calleth them, I say, by his word and by his works, both ordinary and extraordinary, that his justice may be magnified, and every foul mouth stopped.

To weeping and mourning.] The walls of Zion cannot but stand firm if well tempered with the tears of true penitents.

And to baldness.] Forbidden in other cases, {#Le 19:27,28 21:5 De 14:1 Mic 1:16} called for in the practice of holy repentance, which hath nothing to do with despair. See #Ezr 9:3.

Ver. 13. And behold joy and gladness.] Or, But behold, see the madness of these cross grained creatures, who, to thwart the Almighty, in laetitiam et luxum prosiliunt, take a clean contrary course to what he had prescribed, as if they had done it on purpose.

Eating and drinking.] This was all they minded, or were good for, as we say. Gulonum non alia est cura quam cibum ingerere, digerere, egerere, saith Bernard. The belly god is set all on his paunch, as the ass fish hath his heart in his belly; as the spider is little else but belly; as the gulon (a beast so called) eateth that which he preyeth upon—if it be a horse, till all be devoured—ever filling his belly, and then emptying it, and then falling to it again till all be consumed; such a delight hath he in his appetite.

For to morrow we shall die.] So the prophets tell us, but we are wiser than to believe them; so the enemy threateneth us, but we are too well fortified to fear him; so it may happen, for we are all mortal; let us therefore make much of ourselves while we may.

“ Indulge genio, carpamus dulcia: nostrum est

Quod vivis: cinis et manes et fabula fiet.”

- Pers., Sat. v.

St Paul saith that the epicures of his time used the like atheistic expressions. {#ICo 15:32, see there} It is the guise of graceless wretches to jest out God’s judgments, and to jeer when they should fear.

{a} Per omne aevum genus grassabantur. -Sculpt.

Ver. 14. And it was revealed in mine ears.] It was told me for certain. God is absolute in threatening, because resolute in punishing; such is his hatred against scuffling epicures.

Surely this iniquity shall not be purged.] Heb., If it be ever purged, let me be never trusted again.

Till ye die.] That is, never; for "ye shall die in your sin," die eternally. Oh fearful! Pavete, cavete.

Ver. 15. Go, get thee unto this treasurer.] This is Actio Iesaiæ in Shebna, sicut Ciceronis in verrem. Shebna was a great courtier and an ill member, advanced likely by King Ahaz, and tolerated for a time by good Hezekiah, as Joab was by David, because he could neither will nor choose; or as Stephanus the Persian was by Justinian, the second emperor of Constantinople; who, being praefectus aulae likewise, set over the house, grew so insolent that he spared not the emperor's mother, though she were Augusta, but whipped her as if she had been his bond slave. ^{a} This Shebna is thought to have been an Egyptian, a Sochite, and of mean parentage.

“Asperius nihil est humili cum surgit in altum.”

Shebna likely was one of those jeering epicures above taxed, and now particularly threatened. Some for treasurer render fautor, adiutor; a favourer and helper, sc., of those profane scoffers, ^{#Isa 22:13} or of the enemies, with whom he underhand dealt and packed; he is therefore threatened to be ex-officed and sent packing into a strange country.

Ver. 16. What hast thou here?] What inheritance, possession?

And whom hast thou here?] sc., Of thy stock and kindred? ^{a} Art not thou a foreigner, a new man, an upstart mushroom? Why, then, dost thou cut thee out such a costly and stately sepulchre in Jerusalem, as if you were of the royal family, or as if you were sure to die here in thy nest? Will it not prove a true κενοταφιον, as the Greeks call it? Some conceive that for the safeguard of his tomb, and other trinkets, Shebna was one of those princes {#2Ki 19:2} that gave the king counsel to fortify so strongly. The Hebrews say that he likewise secretly kept correspondence with the enemy, that he might have a stake in store which way soever the dice chanced to turn; yea, that he treacherously agreed with the enemy to deliver the city into his hands; and therefore it was but time to take him a link lower, as Hezekiah did upon this prophecy of Isaiah. Some add, that for betraying the city he hoped to be made king there till his death, and therefore hewed him out a mausoleum or royal sepulchre there, and that among those of the house of David, say the Rabbis.

{a} Terrae filius. Son of the earth.

Ver. 17. Behold, the Lord will carry thee away, &c.] Or, Is casting thee out with casting, O thou mighty man. Not, God will carry thee away as a cock is carried, so the Vulgate translator hath it; which caused a learned interpreter to say he wondered whence this cock flew into the text.

And will surely cover thee.] As they used to do to condemned persons unworthy any longer to see the light, they covered their faces, {as #Job 9:24 Es 7:8} {See Trapp on "Job 9:24"} {See Trapp on "Es 7:8"}

Ver. 18. He will surely turn and toss thee.] Turn thee like a bowl, and toss thee like a ball. How and when this was fulfilled the Scripture relateth not. But the Talmudists tell us that Shebna, revolting to Sennacherib, was by him—after the execution done by God's angel upon his forces—carried to Nineveh, there tied to a horse tail, and drawn through briers and brambles till he died.

There shalt thou die.] Ingloria vita recedet. Spotswood, Archbishop of St Andrews, who had discouraged, and by degrees extirpated, many faithful ministers of Scotland, thought it seasonable, A.D. 1639, to repair into England, where he died; and so was fulfilled upon him the prediction of Mr Walsh, a famous Scottish minister, who, in a letter to the bishop, written long before, told him he should die an outcast. {a}

And there the chariots of thy glory.] Thy stately chariots, wherein thou delightest to be hurried up and down, these shall also die or cease; O domus regiae dedecus! O optimi regis opprobrium! -for so some read the words by an apostrophe to Shebna—O thou that art such a blur to thy good master, and such a disgrace to his house. {b} Shebna affected to bear as great a deportment almost as the king himself did, sed passus est manes suos, but he came to an ill end. So did the Duke of Guise in France; and so did here Cardinal Wolsey, Sir Thomas Moore, Sir Francis Bacon, &c.

Ver. 19. And I must drive thee from thy station.] This was done in part when, as of a great master of the court, chancellor, lord marshal, or lord high treasurer—for so many ways the word Sochem {#Isa 22:15} is rendered—he was made scribe or secretary, {#Isa 36:3} which was a far inferior place, but much more when all that befell him that is threatened, {#Isa 22:17,18} as it did, no doubt.

Ver. 20. I will call my servant Eliakim.] Such as honour God shall surely be honoured. He will call them to it, who else would choose to live and die in their self-contented secrecy, like as the sweet violet grows low to the ground, hangs the bead downward, and besides, hides itself with its own leaves.

Ver. 21. And I will clothe him with thy robe, / i.e., Vest him in thine honours and offices, thyself being laid by, and looked upon as an officiperda.

And he shall be a father.] A fit title for a ruler, as this text is a fit looking glass for a good counsellor.

Ver. 22. And the key of the house of David will I lay upon his shoulder.] Rulers have their back burdens.

“Fructus honos oneris: fructus honoris onus.”

The meaning is, he shall have chief authority under the king, together with dexterity and discretion to manage it aright. And herein Eliakim was a type of Christ. {#Re 3:7} Let us pray for such Eliakims as a common blessing.

Ver. 23. And I will fasten him as a nail.] Paxilli simile et concinnum et amabile est. {a} On a nail are hung utensils of the house—any such thing as cannot stand by its own strength. Eliakim was to be a common support to the people, but especially to his father's house.

And he shall be for a glorious throne.] He shall ennoble his whole stock and kindred.

Ver. 24. And they shall hang upon him.] As upon a nail.

The offspring and the issue.] All his allies, both great and small, shall be the better for him. He shall employ and prefer them. And this Shebna is told, the more to spite him.

Ver. 25. Shall the nail that is fastened.] So Shebna once seemed to be, but now it shall appear to be otherwise; for he shall fall, and with him all his dependants shall be ruined.

Chapter 23

Ver. 1. The burden of Tyre.] Heb., Tsor, whence came Tyre. It was the chief city of Phoenicia, the chief market of the East, a very microcosm or epitome of the whole world, for its wealth and wickedness. It was not far from Judea—our Saviour {#Mt 15:21} went from Galilee into the coasts of Tyre and Sidon—in whose misery she made herself merry, {#Eze 26:2} and is therefore here threatened with utter destruction.

Howl, ye ships of Tarshish,] i.e., Of Tartessus, in Spain, or of Tarsus, in Cilicia, St Paul's country, or of the main ocean.

For it is laid waste,] viz., By Nebuchadnezzar, and afterwards by Alexander the Great, who of an island made it part of the continent, and then razed it to the ground. {a}

So that there is no house.] Or thus: So that there is no house, nor coming in for those from Chittim, is made known to them.

{a} Plin., lib. v. cap. 19.

Ver. 2. Be still, ye inhabitants of the isle.] A nundinatorio strepitu quiescite, et plorate, Be quiet, and mourn.

Ver. 3. And by great waters the seed of Sihor, J i.e., Of Nile, by the overflowing whereof Egypt is made exceeding fertile, being stiled the "granary of the world." Tyre was much enriched by its store thereto transported through the midland sea, called here great waters.

Ver. 4. Be ashamed, O Zidon, J sc., Of Tyre, thy daughter and confederate.

For the sea hath spoken, even the strength of the sea.] Or, The seaport. By the sea and seaport we are to understand Tyre, who sat in the sea, as now Venice doth, and sovereigned it.

I travail not, nor bring forth children.] I send forth no colonies, as sometimes I have done. Pliny saith of Tyre, Olim partu clara urbibus genitis, Lepti, Utica, Carthagine, etiam Gadibus extra orbem conditis. {a} But now it was past that time of day with her.

{a} Plin., lib. v. cap. 19.

Ver. 5. As at the report concerning Egypt, J i.e., Concerning their overthrow once at the Red Sea. {#Ex 15:14} They are also shortly to be overrun by Nebuchadnezzar, to whom God hath promised Egypt, as his pay for his pains taken in taking Tyre.

Ver. 6. Pass ye over to Tarshish.] Tyrii migrate coloni, be packing any whither, and make any shift to save your lives, Ultra Sauromatas fugite hinc, &c. To Carthage many of them went, say some; and the Septuagint; for ships of Tarshish {#Isa 23:1} have ships of Carthage.

Ver. 7. Is this your joyous city?] q.d., So ye were wont to hold her, and to boast of her; but now it is somewhat otherwise. Cities die as well as men, {a} saith one. They also have their times and their turns, their rise and their ruin. Hic immoremur parum et pedem figamus oportet. Let this be duly considered, and an "abiding city" sought. {#Heb 12:14} The wicked may revel in this world, the godly only rejoice.

Whose antiquity is of ancient days.] Palaetyre, or the old town especially: and this was a piece of her silly glory;

“ Urbs fur illis Tyros priscis quae condita saeculis, Innumerosque suo repetens ab Agenore soles,

Aeternos demens spe praesumebat honores.”

{a} Ἐπιθνησκουσι και αι πολεις ωσπερ οι ανθρωποι.

Ver. 8. The crowning city.] Heb., The crowning or crowned: a city of kings, {a} as Cyneas once said of Rome, This is a style better befitting heaven and the crowned saints there.

Whose merchants are princes.] Little kings, as we say. So they are at Venice; so the Hogens Moghens of the Netherlands.

{a} Vidi civitatem regum. See the state of kings.

Ver. 9. The Lord of hosts hath purposed it.] Here the prophet sets forth both who had decreed the downfall of this famous and flourishing city; and why? See #Eze 27:5-7.

To stain the pride of all glory.] Ut faedet fastum omnis gloriae; to bring down the height of all haughtiness. This hath God Almighty decreed, and it shall stand. "Let us, therefore, have grace, whereby we may serve him with reverence and godly fear." {#Heb 12:28}

Ver. 10. Pass through the land as a river,] i.e., Hastily: {a} Abi praeceps, pack up and begone with all speed, be there never so many of you here at Tyre.

There is no more strength.] Heb., Girdle—that is, soldiery, or shipping, or sea to encompass it. Oecolampadius sets this sense upon the words, Non est ei cingulum reliquum, There is not so much as a girdle or such like lowly commodity left in Tyre, she had been so plundered.

Ver. 11. He stretched out his hand.] That "mighty hand" of his, {#1Pe 5:6} wherewith he spanneth the heavens, {#Isa 48:13} brought the Red Sea upon the Egyptians, {#Ex 14:26} and still shaketh the wicked out of the earth, as by a canvas. {#Job 38:13}

He shook the kingdoms.] Shook and shattered them—viz., by Nebuchadnezzar; the kingdom of Tyre especially, to the terror of others. {#Eze 26:15}

The Lord.] "That man of war." {#Ex 15:3} "Mighty in battle." {#Ps 24:8}

Hath given a commandment.] Bidding his forces fall on.

Against the merchant city.] Heb., Against, or concerning, Canaan; so he calleth Tyre the posterity of the old Canaanites, and a place of great merchandise. See #Ho 12:7.

Ver. 12. Thou shalt no more rejoice.] Heb., Exult, revel.

O thou oppressed.] Or, Ravished damsel, daughter of Zidon, hactenus intacta vi hostili, never till now subdued.

Arise, pass.] Asyndeton, q.d., Haste, haste.

Over to Chittim.] To Cyprus, Greece, Italy.

There also shalt thou have no rest.] Safety or shelter. Cain's curse was upon them; the visible vengeance of God followed them close at heels. See #De 28:65,66.

Ver. 13. Behold the land of the Chaldeans,] q.d., The Chaldees were once no such considerable people, but lay hid under the grandeur of the Assyrian monarchy, which did set them up. Howbeit in time the Assyrians at length were devoured by the Chaldees, Nineveh by Babylon; Filia devoravit matrem, as the proverb is. And why may not the like be done to Tyre? Others make this to be the prophet's speech to the Chaldees, Behold, O land of the Chaldees! This people, of Tyre, was not, however they boast of their antiquity, till the Assyrians, those monarchs of the world, founded it, Ut esset statio carinis, to be a fit place for shipping, or for barbarians. See #2Ki 17:24. Down with it, therefore; bring it to vastity. {a}

Ver. 14. Howl, ye ships of Tarshish.] He concludeth this prophecy of Tyre's downfall as he began. {#Isa 23:1} The inhabitants of Tarshish, or Tarsus in Cilicia, were great ship masters; they sent a navy of a hundred ships to Xerxes when he went against Greece.

Ver. 15. Tyre shall be forgotten, / i.e., Laid aside by God, as if not at all minded in her misery: slighted also and unfrequented by men, as a withered harlot.

Seventy years.] So long as the Jews, whom they jeered, were held captives in Babylon.

According to the days of one king, / i.e., The duration of the Babylonish monarchy, under Nebuchadnezzar, his son, and his son's son. {#Jer 27:7}

Shall Tyre sing as an harlot.] Ut meretrix, i.e., Mercatrix. Harlots fallen into some foul disease are abandoned; but recovering thereof, they seek, by singing and other allurements, to regain their paramours; so should Tyre deal by her old customers, being, as was once said of Helena after her return from Troy, ηη παλαι γυνη, no changeling, but as good as ever.

Ver. 16. Take an harp.] In bidding her do so, he foretellet that she shall do so—sc., ad ingenium suum redire, fall to her former practices.

Make sweet melody, &c.] The Tyrians were much addicted to music. {#Eze 26:13 28:13}

Ver. 17. The Lord will visit Tyre.] Bad though she be, he will graciously visit her, both by suffering her to grow rich again, as here, and by converting some of them to the faith of Christ. {#Isa 23:18} See it fulfilled, #Ac 21:3-5. Eusebius also telleth of many made martyrs there.

Ver. 18. It shall not be treasured.] Being once converted, they shall leave heaping and hoarding wealth, and find other use for it—viz., to feed and clothe God's ministers and poor people freely and largely.

And for durable clothing.] The Vulgate hath it Vestientur ad vetustatem.

Chapter 24

Ver. 1. Behold the Lord emptieth.] It must needs be a matter of some rare and marvellous consequence, that "Behold"—the "oh yes!" of the Holy Ghost—is thus set before.

The Lord emptieth,] i.e., Will empty; an idiom proper to God's prophets, who saw in the Spirit things to come as if they were even then done.

The earth.] Or, The land, sc., Of Jewry, by a woeful desolation, Lege et luge, by law and lament. Some hold it to be a metaphor from ships overloaded, which therefore must be disburdened; so was the land to be eased of her inhabitants, which she could hardly stand under.

And waste.] Making havoc of persons and things of worth.

Turneth it upside down.] Ferens, agens sursum deorsum omnia, turning all things topsy turvy, as they say.

Ver. 2. And it shall be, as with the people, so with the priest.] Or, Prince. Dignity and wealth hindereth him not; doth he esteem nobility or riches, or anything that fortifieth strength? Poverty or meanness findeth no favour with him. In a common calamity, all commonly share and fare alike.

Ver. 3. The land shall be utterly emptied.] See on #Isa 24:1.

For the Lord hath spoken this word.] And his words are not in vain. Doth he say, and shall he not do it? {#Nu 23:23}

Ver. 4. The earth mourneth and fadeth away.] Luxit et diffiuxit, waiileth and faileth; gallant rhetoric in the original, as this is a stately chapter all along: all the rollings of Demosthenes are but dull stuff compared to it.

The world languisheth.] As a sick man, so enfeebled that he cannot stand high alone.

Ver. 5. The earth also is defiled,]_{a} viz., With sin, and therefore so decayed; yea, the very visible heavens are defiled with man's sin, and shall therefore be purged by the fire of the last day; like as the vessels that held the sin-offering was to pass the fire.

Because they have transgressed the laws.] Natural and moral; those bounds and banks set to keep men within the compass of obedience: "but the unjust knoweth no shame," {#Zep 3:5} is lawless, aweless, yokeless, untameable, untractable as the wild ass colt, as the horse and mule, &c.

Changed the ordinances.] Or, Passed by the ordinances—sc., by sins of omission, as before by commission; so in #Heb 2:2, "every transgression and disobedience," i.e., every commission and omission.

Broken the everlasting covenant.] Disannulled, vacated the covenant founded in Christ, when coming unto his own, his own received him not; when the Pharisees and others, by slighting holy offers and ordinances of grace, "rejected the counsel of God against themselves." {#Lu 7:30} This last especially brought the curse. {#Isa 24:6} Some by laws here understand the judicial laws, by ordinances the ceremonial, and by everlasting covenant the Decalogue. Others by laws, the municipal laws of the commonwealth, by ordinances the laws of nations, as not to violate an ambassador, &c., by everlasting covenant the law of nature, which is that "light that lighteneth every man that cometh into the world." {#Joh 1:9}

Ver. 6. Therefore hath the curse devoured the earth.] The Chaldee and Vatablus render it the perjury—viz., in transgressing the laws, &c., which they had covenanted and sworn to observe; see #Ps 119:106. That dreadful curse of the Jews {#Mt 27:25} is come upon them to the utmost, devouring their land and desolating the inhabitants thereof. Though the curse causeless come not, yet God sometimes saith Amen to other men's curses, as he did to Jotham's upon the Shechemites. {#Jud 9:57} How much more to men's cursing themselves?

Ver. 7. The new wine mourneth.] As being spilled and spoiled by the enemy.

All the merry hearted do sigh.] Who were wont to sing away care, and to call for their cups.

Ver. 8. The mirth of tabrets ceaseth.] Quicquid laetitiarum fuit, in luctum vertitur.

Ver. 9. They shall not drink wine with a song.] Revel it as they had wont to do: non convivabuntur pergraecando. We use to call such merry griggs—that is, Greeks.

Ver. 10. The city of confusion.] Urbs desolanda, destined to desolation: whether it be Babylon, Tyre, Jerusalem, or any other. Mundum intellige in quo nihil nisi vanum, saith Oecolampadius: that is, by this city of vanity—so the Vulgate translathet it—understand the world; according to that of the preacher, "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity." Augustine, in the beginning of that excellent work of his, De Civitate Dei, maketh two opposite cities—the one the city of God, the other the city of the devil; the one a city of verity, the other a city of vanity.

Ver. 11. There is a crying for wine.] The drunkards weep, the ale stakes yell, because the new wine is cut off from their mouths. {#Joe 1:5}

All joy is darkened.] Heb., It is eventide with joy. As the air in the evening waxeth dark, so shall their mirth be turned into heaviness.

The mirth of the land is gone.] Together with their liquor. Wine is by Simonides called the expeller of sadness—Ἀμυντὸρ δυσπρόσυνατον.

Ver. 12. In the city is left desolation.] There is nothing of any worth left, but havoc made of all; it is plundered to the life, as now we phrase it. Since the Swedish wars custom is the sole mint master of current words.

Ver. 13. When thus it shall be in the midst of the land.] Or, For so it shall be in the land among the people, as in the beating of an olive tree, &c. En misericordiae specimen, still there is a remnant reserved for royal use; quando omnia passim pessum eunt. God never so punisheth but he leaveth some matter for his mercy to work upon. A church on earth he will ever have.

Ver. 14. They shall lift up their voice, &c.] Laudabunt Deum et laetabuntur: this elect remnant in all countries shall be filled with spiritual joy and peace through the belief of the truth, which shall vent itself by singing praises to God. And here we have the very mark of the true Church, which is to celebrate and profess the great and glorious name of the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.

For the majesty of the Lord.] Or, For the magnificence; that great work of his especially of divulging his gospel all the world over, and thereby gathering his Church out of all nations.

They shall cry aloud from the sea,] i.e., From the islands and transmarine parts, as we do now from Great Britain—"thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift"—calling to our neighbour nations, and saying,

Ver. 15. Glorify ye God in the fires.] In ipsis ignibus, in the hottest fires of afflictions, "rejoice in hope, be patient in tribulation"; praise God for crosses also: this is Christianorum propria virtus, saith Jerome.

In the isles of the sea.] Quicumque quocunque loco, et inter quoseunque sitis. {a}

{a} Jun.

Ver. 16. From the uttermost part of the land have we heard songs.] Or, Psalms, aliquid Davidicam. The martyrs sang in the fire. Luther in deep distress called for the 46th Psalm to be sung in contemptum diaboli, in despite of the devil.

Even glory to the righteous.] To Jesus the Just One. {#1Jo 2:2}

But I said, My leanness, my leanness.] The prophet's flesh was wasted and consumed with care and grief {a} for his graceless countrymen. See the like in David {#Ps 119:158} and Paul. {#Ro 9:1,2}

Woe unto me.] Or, Alas for me.

The treacherous dealers have dealt treacherously.] They have crucified the Lord of glory upon a desperate and deep malice, out of most notorious contumacy and ingratitude. This was with most treacherous treachery to deal treacherously; this was to "do evil as they could."

Ver. 17. Fear, and the pit, and the snare, are upon thee.] Metaphora a venatoribus, a metaphor from hunters, elegantly expressed in the original by words of a like sound. God hath variety of plagues at command; his quiver is full of shafts, neither can he possibly want a weapon to beat his rebels with. If the Amorites escape the sword, yet they are brained with hailstones {#Jos 10:11} If the Syrians get into a walled town, yet they are baned by the fall of a wall upon them. {#IKi 20:30}

Ver. 18. He who fleeth from the noise of the fear.] See #Am 5:19. {See Trapp on "Am 5:19"} And learn to fear God, the stroke of whose arm none may think to escape.

For the windows from on high are opened.] The cataract or sluices of the clouds, as once in the general deluge.

The foundations of the earth do shake.] Heaven and earth shall fight against them, and conspire to mischief them.

Ver. 19. The earth is utterly broken down.] This he had said before. Oil, if not well rubbed in, pierceth not the skin. Menaces must be inculcated, or else they will be but little regarded. Let preachers press matters to the utmost, drive the nail home to the head; not forbearing through faint-heartedness, nor languishing through lukewarmness.

Ver. 20. The earth shall reel to and fro like a drunkard.] As the inhabitants thereof had drunk in iniquity like water; {#Job 15:16} so they should now drink and be drunk with the cup of God's wrath.

And shall be removed like a cottage.] Or, Lodge, hut, or tent; so shall they be tossed and tumbled from one place to another.

And the transgression,] i.e., The punishment of your transgression. Observe here the wages and the weight of sin.

Ver. 21. The Lord shall punish the host of the high ones that are on high.] Altitudinis in excelso. Hereby he may mean the Jews, God's "firstborn, and therefore higher than the kings of the earth," {#Ps 89:27} though now for most part degenerated, and therefore in the next words also heavily threatened, for versum vicesimum primum secundus explicat, saith Scultetus.

Ver. 22. And they shall be gathered together, &c.] Id quod de poenis Iudaeorum intelligimus, saith an interpreter—that is, This we understand to be the punishment of the obstinate Jews, whose bodies after death were clapped up close prisoners in the grave, their souls held fast in hell till the last day; when after many days they shall be visited, i.e., in the whole man punished with eternal torments. Caveamus, si sapimus, a destinata peccandi malitia. Origen was certainly out when he argued from his text, that the damned in hell should after a time be visited, that is, delivered. There are that begin the promise at these words,

And after many days shall they be visited,] i.e., In mercy and favour {as #Isa 23:17} through Christ. This gracious visitation began in Israel, {#Lu 1:68} and then came abroad to the Gentiles also. {#Ac 15:14-17}

Ver. 23. Then the moon shall be confounded.] The glory of Christ's kingdom shall be so great, that in comparison to it the sun and moon shall cast no light. See #Isa 24:23 60:19.

When the Lord of hosts.] The Lord Christ, summus caelitem Imperator.

And before his ancients.] The whole Church and especially her officers, which are the glory of Christ. {#2Co 8:23}

Chapter 25

Ver. 1. O Lord, thou art my God.] Sunt verba fidelium in regno Christi, saith Piscator. These are the words of the subjects of Christ's kingdom, who in the end of the former chapter are called his ancients or elders. See #Re 4:4. But that of Oecolampadius I like better: More suo in iubulum et hymnum erumpit propheta. The prophet, as his manner is, breaketh forth into a joyful jubilation; and being ravished, and as it were rapt beyond himself with the consideration of such marvellous things, he first maketh a stop or breathing, and then sweetly celebrateth God's power, truth, justice, and mercy; the naked heart of it were seen, as it were in an anatomy, in the sending of his Son, and the benefits thereby; concerning which the apostles afterwards discoursing more plainly and plentifully, do yet make use of some passages in this chapter, as is to be seen. {#1Co 15:51-57 Re 7:10-17 21:24-27}

Thou art my God.] So to say ex animo is the very pith of true faith; the property whereof is to individuate God, and appropriate him to itself.

I will exalt thee.] This we do when we bless and praise him for his blessings. But what a mercy is it of so great a Majesty that he should count himself thus exalted and magnified by such worthless worms as we are! And how should this excite and edge us to so holy a service!

For thou hast done wonderful things.] In the world's creation, but especially in the Church's preservation.

Thy counsels of old.] Thy promises and threatenings are all fulfilled and verified; they are faithful and firm.

Ver. 2. For thou hast made of a city an heap.] Babylonem intelligit, say some. Narratur eversio urbis Romae, say others; the ruin of Rome is here foretold; which is therefore also, say they, called a palace of strangers; {a} because Antichrist with his adherents reigneth there. Jerome saith the Jews understand it to be Rome, which shall be in the end destroyed, and then their poor nation shall be relieved. {as #Isa 25:4} It may be so.

{a} Ασβεβον πολις.—Sept.

Ver. 3. Therefore shall the strong people glorify thee.] Will they nill they, they shall confess, as Julian did, that thou art too hard for them, and that thy Church is invincible. Thus God wringeth out of the mouth of the wicked a confession of his praises, and a counterfeit subjection. {#Isa 60:14}

Ver. 4. For thou hast been a strength to the poor,]& c. That is, thou hast protected thy poor people from the persecution of the Antichristian rout, saith Piscator. Great is God's mercy in succouring his oppressed ones. This is here set forth by a double comparison: first,

A refuge from the storm, a shadow {a} from the heat, &c.] Where the Church's enemies are compared to raging waters, that bear down all before them; God to a place of refuge to fly unto. Secondly,

{a} Christ is a shadow, &c., whereas all worldly comforts are but as so many burning glasses to scorch the soul more.

Ver. 5. As the heat in a dry place.] Where the insolence of these strangers from the life of God, the Antichristian rabble, the stir and ado they make, is resembled to a heat and drought that doth parch and scorch the godly; God's protection of his to a thick shadow.

The branch of the terrible ones shall be brought low.] Some read the text thus: As the heat is abated with a thick shadow, so the song or chanting of the terrible ones was abated. Others the whole verse thus: As the heat in a drought, thou hast brought down the stir of the strangers; heat, I say, with the shadow of a cloud; which (heat) did answer (a life) to the branches of the terrible ones. That is, say they, served well their turn, and was most commodious for the wicked, who think their branches spread and flourish when the godly are scorched with calamities.

Ver. 6. And in this mountain,] i.e., In the Church, {#Isa 2:2} God's court, {#Isa 24:23} as the table stood in the sanctuary.

Shall the Lord of hosts make.] Instead of that tree of life in paradise. See #Re 2:7.

Unto all people,] i.e., To the elect among all people, for reprobates are not worthy. {#Mt 22:8 Re 3:4}

A feast {a} of fat things.] The very best of the best. "Fat things, and marrow of fatness; wines," and the most refined; so that "the meek shall eat and be satisfied"; {#Ps 22:16} "Their soul shall delight itself in fatness." {#Isa 55:2} In the life to come, especially where there shall be solidum huius convivii complementum ac plena perfruitio. Meanwhile the saints have here, at the Lord's table especially, their dainties and junketting dishes, their celestial viands and most precious provisions: "fat things marrowed," as the Hebrew word is; not only full of marrow, but picked, as it were, and culled out of the heart of marrow. Wine, {b} first, in "the lees," that keepeth the smell, taste, and vigour, vinum cos, as they call it; {as #Jer 48:11} next, of "the finest and the best," such as at Lovain they call vinum theologicum, because the divines there, as also the Sorbonists at Paris, drink much of it. Jesus Christ, in his ordinances and graces, is all this, and much more. {#Pr 9:2 Mt 22:2} And yet men had rather, as swine, feed on swill and husks, {c} than on these incomparable delicacies.

Ver. 7. And he will destroy in this mountain, &c.] Absorbebit velum faciei, id est, faciem veli. Christ came "a light into the world, that whosoever believeth on him should not abide in darkness." {#Joh 12:46} Faith freeth from blindness; we no sooner taste of the bread of life by faith, but the veil of ignorance, which naturally covereth all flesh, is torn; and men are suddenly brought "out of darkness into a marvellous light." {#1Pe 2:9} This is the first eulogy and noble commendation of the doctrine of the gospel, light. There follow two more, viz., life and joy spiritual, {#Isa 35:6} which is the life of that life.

{#Isa 25:8}

Ver. 8. He will swallow up death in victory.] As the fire swalloweth the fuel, or as Moses' serpent swallowed up the sorcerers' serpents. The kisses of Christ's mouth have sucked out the sting of death from a justified believer; so that his heart doth live for ever, {as #Ps 22:6} and if so, then in death itself; which made Cyprian receive the sentence of death with a Deo gratias; as did also Bradford, and many more martyrs; accounting the days of their death their birthdays, and welcoming them accordingly. Jerome insults over death as disarmed and devoured: Illius morte tu mortua es: devorasti, et devorata es, &c. Ever since death ran through the veins of Jesus Christ, who is life essential, it is destroyed or swallowed up; like as the bee dieth when she hath left her sting in the wound. {a} Hence St Paul doth so crow over death, and, as it were, called it craven. {#1Co 15:55-57}

And the Lord God will wipe away.] A metaphor from a mother.

And the rebuke of his people.] Or, The reproach, their afflictions and persecutions, for which the world reproacheth them.

{a} Animasque in valnere ponunt. -Virg.

Ver. 9. Lo, this is our God, / sc., Jesus Christ, our sole Saviour, who is God blessed for ever, and our God by a specialty. Wait for him, for he waiteth to be gracious. {#Isa 30:18}

Ver. 10. For in this mountain.] In the Church. {as #Isa 25:6,7}

Shall the hand of the Lord rest, / i.e., Settle for their safeguard.

And Moab shall be trodden down, / i.e., Contumax quisque et perversus hostis Dei et Ecclesiae. {a} Piscator thinketh Papists are here meant by these Moabites, who were nearly allied to God's Israel, but ardeliones, bitter and brutish enemies, skilful only to destroy. {as #Eze 21:31}

As straw for the dunghill.] Or, As straw in Madmenah. {#Jer 48:2} God will make a hand of all his people's adversaries, as is here and in the following verses set forth by three several metaphors.

{a} Junius.

Ver. 11. And he shall spread forth his hands, &c., / i.e., He shall destroy them with greatest facility. The motion in swimming is easy, not strong; for strong strokes in the water would rather sink than support. Vatablus refers this to Christ stretching out his hands upon the cross, whereby he overcame Satan and hisimps.

Together with the spoils.] Or, Wiles of his hands, i.e., his wealth gotten by wretch and wile, as we say.

Ver. 12. Shall he bring down, &c.] To show that there is no strength against the Lord, the true πολιτορθος.

Chapter 26

Ver. 1. In that day.] Before the morrow, and while the mercy was yet fresh. We are not to take day for return of thanks, but to do it forthwith.

In that same day shall this song be sung.] As an evidence and effect of their spiritual joy and security, mentioned #Isa 25:9. "Is any man merry? let him sing psalms," {#Jas 5:13} and so set an edge upon his praises and thanksgivings. Thus Israel sang, {#Ex 15:1 Nu 21:7} "Spring up, O well; sing ye unto it." Thus, in the apostles' times, {#Ro 15:9} and afterwards Justin, Tertullian, Athanasius, others, voce praeiverunt, they go before with voices, gave the note. Constantine and Theodosius ever sang psalms with their soldiers before they gave battle. They knew that it is a good thing to sing praises to our God; it is pleasant, and praise is comely. {#Ps 147:1} {a}

We have a strong city.] The Church is invincible; hell gates cannot demolish it, whatever become of Moab's munitions. {#Isa 25:12}

Salvation will God appoint.] All manner of health, help, and safety. Satan cannot have so many means to foil and spoil the saints as Jesus—to whose sweet name our prophet here and elsewhere oft alludeth, as much delighted therewith—hath means to keep and hold them up.

For walls and bulwarks.] Pro muris et antemurali, for walls and rampart, or counterscarp. So Scipio was said to be fossa et vallum, the wall and trench to the Romans against Hannibal. If salvation itself cannot save Jerusalem, let her enemies triumph and take all. If her name be Jehovahshammah, as #Eze 48:35, "The Lord is there," let her enemies do their worst.

Ver. 2. Open ye the gates.] Room for the righteous, for such only are freemen of this city; {#Re 22:14} such only are written among the living in Jerusalem. {#Isa 4:3,4 Ps 118:19} And this seemeth spoken to those doorkeepers, the ministers, to whom God hath committed the keys of his kingdom, setting them as upon a watch tower to keep out enemies, and to let in the true citizens.

That the righteous nation which keepeth the truth.] Heb., The truths, or faiths, as Peter hath "godliness," {#2Pe 3:11} that both observeth Christ's law and preserveth it; "striving together for the faith of the gospel," {#Php 1:27} and accounting every particle of truth precious. {#Jude 3} And here we have a true definition of a right Church member. Civil righteousness is but a beautiful abomination.

If men lay not faith for a foundation to their virtue, {#2Pe 1:5} it is no better than a glistening sin.

Ver. 3. Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace.] Heb., Peace, peace—that is, a multiplied peace with God, with himself, and with others; or a renewed, continued peace, or a perfect, sheer, pure peace, as one senseth it. What the old translator here meaneth by his Vetus error abiit, is hard to say. An excellent description of true saving faith may be taken from this text; and Mr Bolton maketh mention of a poor distressed soul relieved by fastening steadfastly in his last sickness on these sweet words, saying that God had graciously made them fully good to him.

Because he trusteth in thee.] So far as a soul can stay on and trust in God, so far it enjoyeth a sweet peace and calm of spirit; perfect trust is blessed with perfect peace. We have a famous instance for this in our blessed Saviour. {#Joh 12:27,28} Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind; be sober, and hope perfectly for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ. {#1Pe 1:13}

Ver. 4. Trust in the Lord for ever.] To trust in God is to be unbottomed of thyself and of every creature, and so to lean upon God, that if he fail thee thou sinkest.

For in the Lord Jehovah.] Heb., For in Jah Jehovah; in him who is the all-powerful Essentialor and faithful promise keeper, &c. Here, then, look not downward, saith one, upon the rushing and roaring streams of miseries and troubles which run so swiftly under us, for then we shall be taken with a giddiness, &c., but steadfastly fasten on the power and promise of Jah Jehovah and ye shall be established.

Is everlasting strength.] Heb., The rock of ages, or, The old rock, so called of old, {#De 32:4,18,31} and so found to be from the beginning. Et quia in aeternum non mutat aut nutat ergapios, lieet montes et colles nutent {#Isa 54:10} The name of the Lord is a strong tower; {#Pr 18:10} a munition of rocks; {#Isa 33:16} rocks so deep no pioneer can undermine them; so thick, no cannon can pierce them; so high, no ladder can scale them.

Ver. 5. For he bringeth down those that dwell on high.] Even all adverse power, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God. {#2Co 10:5}

The lofty city he layeth it low.] This Museulus understands of Babylon, that towering city; as also of Rome, that spiritual Babylon, to which it was long since said—

“ Versa eris in cineres quasi nunquam Roma fuisses.”

Ver. 6. The foot shall tread it down.] He saith not the hand shall beat it down, but the foot shall spurn down this lofty city, even the feet of the poor and abject ones, as once Samson dealt by the Philistines, {#Jud 15:8} and as men use to spurn base and peasantly fellows that stand in their way. God can, and sometimes doth, to show his power and wisdom, make desolation itself to scale a fort. {#Am 5:10} Men thrust through, to rise up and set whole cities afire, {#Jer 37:10} bring to pass mighty things by base and abject means.

Ver. 7. The way of the just is uprightness.] Heb., Uprightnesses—that is, just and straight courses. They turn not aside to crooked and wry ways, as do the workers of iniquity, {#Ps 125:5} but hold on in an even way, without windings or writhings; {#Pr 4:26,27} the king’s highway to heaven is their road, and this leadeth them to that city of God. {#Isa 26:1,2}

Thou most upright dost weigh the path of the just.] Or, Thou dost by levelling make the just man’s path even. By thy preventing grace thou makest him just and upright, and by thy subsequent grace thou strengthenest and directest him, that he may run and not be weary, walk and not faint. {#Isa 40:31}

Ver. 8. Yea, in the way of thy judgments.] Rough though it be and rugged; even when thou hast wrought against us in the rigour of thy punishments, as one paraphraseth it; in the discipline of thy chastisements, as another. There are those who by this phrase understand the doctrine of the gospel, which teacheth another way of judging of a righteous man than the law doth, and such as the Church trusteth to alone, and to none other, scil., justification by faith in Christ Jesus.

And to the remembrance of thee,] i.e., to all the signs, gauges, and testimonials which thou hast given us of thy grace by thy word, sacraments, and work. {a}

{a} Diod.

Ver. 9. With my soul, &c., with my spirit.] Spirit, soul, and body must all be for God {a} {#1Th 5:23} all that is within us especially; {#Ps 103:1} the fat and inwards were consecrated to him; the heart is his bride chamber, his bed of spices. {#So 6:2} In the lives of the Fathers mention is made of a certain monk to whom, boasting of perfection, it was answered from heaven, Ills est perfectio, quae lunam, solem et canis iram Deo tribuit, id est COR; that is, perfection consisteth in giving the whole heart to God.

For when thy judgments are in the earth, &c.] God's judgments are the best schoolmasters. Queen Elizabeth learned much from Mr Ascham, but more from her affliction. Our Saviour himself learned something by the things which he suffered, εἰς ὧν παθεῖν ἐμαθεῖν. {#Heb 5:8} So do all his members; {#Eze 20:37} the worst are forced to say with Phlegyas—

“Discite iustitiam moniti, et non temnere numen.”

- Virg. Aeneid., lib. vi.

It was a true saying, in the general, of the proconsul to Cyprian at his martyrdom, though ill applied to him in particular, In sanguine tuo caeteri discent disciplinam, By thy punishment others shall learn wisdom. As when one scholar is whipped, the rest are warned. And as a thunderbolt falleth with the danger of few, but with the fear of all, so is it here.

{a} The wicked with all their soul rejoice to do evil. See #Eze 25:6. Attende quam non sit otiosa fides.

-Oecol.

Ver. 10. Let favour be shewed to the wicked, &c.] No fair means will work upon him, whatever foul may do. But as an evil stomach turneth good meat into bad humours, so here all is lost that is laid out upon them.

“Ungentem pungit, pungentem rusticus ungit.”

In the land of uprightness will he deal unjustly.] In the Church, where righteousness reigneth. Or, In a land of evenness he will wry and stray. Ye all know, saith holy Bradford in a certain letter of his, there was never more knowledge of God (viz, in good King Edward VI's days), and less godly living and true serving of God. It was counted a folly to serve God sincerely; and earnest prayer was not passed upon. Preaching was but pastime: communion was counted too common, &c. {a}

And will not behold the majesty of the Lord.] Or, And he shall not see the majesty of the Lord—sc., in his heavenly kingdom. {#Heb 12:14}

{a} Acts and Mon.

Ver. 11. Lord, when thy hand is lifted up, thou will not see,] i.e., Observe, consider, and take warning: let God's hand be never so high and glorious, so lifted up and exalted, yet these buzzards will not behold his majesty, {as #Isa 26:10} as being more blind than moles, more deaf than sea monsters they refuse to regard aught.

But they shall see and be confounded.] But yet, maugre their head, as one well paraphraseth the words, they shall be driven both to see and to acknowledge to their shame the great and mighty hand of God, his zeal for his people, and the fire of his wrath to consume his foes. See #Zec 1:15,19. Experientur suo magno malo; they shall to their cost feel the weight of God's hand, which, the higher it is lifted, the heavier it will light at length. Mrs. Hutchinson, that Jezebel of New England, as she had vented about thirty misshapen opinions there, so she brought forth about thirty deformed monsters. She and her family were after this—because they would not be reclaimed, but turned off admonition, saying, This is for you, ye legalists, that your eyes might be further blinded by God's hand upon us in your legal ways, &c.—slain, some say burnt, by the Indians, who never used to exercise such an outrage upon any. {a}

{a} Story of Sect. in New England, by Mr Weld, p. 44.

Ver. 12. Lord, thou wilt ordain peace for us.] Or, Lord, dispose peace for us.

For thou also hast wrought all our works in us.] Or, For us. Certum est nos facere quod facimus, sed Deus facit ut faciamus: without Christ we can do nothing. {#Joh 15:5} In him alone is our fruit found. {#Ho 14:8} It is well observed by a grave interpreter, that the Church in the Canticles is nowhere described by the beauty of her hands or fingers, because God alone worketh all her works for her, and had rather that she should abound in good works in silence than to boast of them at all.

Ver. 13. O Lord our God, other lords besides thee have had dominion over us.] Or, Have mastered us. Oh that men were so sensible of their spiritual servitude as thus to complain thereof to Jesus Christ! But, alas! they do nothing less for the most part, delighting on the devil's drudgery, which they count the only liberty, and dancing, as it were, to hell in their bolts.

Will we make mention of thy name.] For which end we would not be "the servants of men," much less the slaves of Satan, that basest of slaves, but the "freemen of Christ." {#1Co 7:22} "Where the spirit is, there is liberty"; {#2Co 3:17} and "if the Son set us free, we shall be free indeed." {#Joh 8:36}

Ver. 14. They are dead.] Those "other lords" of ours are. {#Isa 26:13} But seldom lieth the devil dead in a dike, saith our proverb: yet he and his agents have their deadly wound, and shall be trodden under our feet shortly. {#Ro 16:20} Oh groan in spirit after that sweet day of full redemption, &c.

Therefore thou hast visited.] Or, Because thou hast visited. Woe be to a person or people when God taketh them to do.

Ver. 15. Thou hast increased the nation, .] That righteous nation which keepeth the truth. {#Isa 26:2} Some render and sense the words thus: "Thou hast indeed increased the nation," sc., of the Jews; thou hadst done it (oh sweet mercy, I am the better to speak of it, and therefore I speak it twice), but thou wast "heavy laden," sc., with their sins: therefore thou hast removed it far unto all the ends of the earth. Who knoweth not what a dispersed and despised people the Jews are in all places, banished as it were out of the world by a common consent of nations. "Be not therefore high minded, but fear." {#Ro 11:20}

Ver. 16. Lord, in trouble have they visited thee.] Pulcherrimus afflictationum fructus, precandi ardor et assiduitas. Affliction exciteth devotion, as blowing doth the fire. Christ in his agony prayed most earnestly. {#Lu 22:44} Martha and Mary, when their brother Lazarus was sick, sent messengers to Jesus; {#Joh 11:3} Quos putas nisi suspiria continuata, nisi preces irremissas, saith Scultetus—i.e., what were those messengers but their continued groans and earnest prayers? See #Ho 5:15. {See Trapp on "Ho 5:15"} Prayer is the daughter of affliction, and the mother of comfort.

They poured out.] Freely and largely, and well watered. {as #1Sa 1:10 7:6,9,10} Not dropped, but poured; not prayers, but a prayer; one continual act: and as in the speaking of three or four words there is much efficacy in a charm, so their prayers were very prevalent.

A prayer.] Heb., A charm, a mussitation, a submiss and lowly speech. Spells and enchantments were conceived to be full of efficacy, containing much in few: think the same of prayer. But how much was he mistaken in this kind of charm or spell who would haunt the taverns, play houses, and whore houses at London all day: but he dared not go forth without private prayer in the morning, and then would say at his departure, Now, devil, do thy worst.

Ver. 17. So have we been in thy sight.] Heb, From thy face—i.e., by reason of thy wrath. So #2Th 1:9, "Who shall be punished from the presence of God," that is, of God himself present to their terror.

Ver. 18. We have been with child.] With various devices and hopes, which yet have miscarried and run aslope. See #Job 15:35. {See Trapp on "Job 15:35"}

We have as it were brought forth wind.] As did Queen Mary, to her own great grief and the disappointment of her expectants, -Dale, the promoter, for instance. Well, quoth he, at the apprehending of Julian living, you hope and hope, but your hope shall be aslope; for although the queen's conceptions should still fail, as they did, yet she that you hope for shall never come at it: for there is my lord cardinal's grace and many more between her and it. {a} But my lord cardinal's grace departed the very next day after Queen Mary, having taken, as it is thought, some Italian medicine, and Queen

Elizabeth succeeded in the throne, to the great joy of all good men.

Ver. 19. Thy dead men shall rise.] So shall not thine enemies. {#Isa 26:14} This may seem to be Christ's gracious answer to his poor desponding people; and it is, say some, argumentum a beata resurrectione sumptum, an argument taken from the happy resurrection of the righteous; the wicked also shall be raised at the last day, but not by the like means, nor for the like blessed purpose. {#Da 12:2} Some read the words thus: "Thy dead, my dead body shall live"; for the faithful, say they, are Christ's body; {#Eph 4:12} and therefore, to shew this, "my dead body" is here added by apposition, to show how the faithful, being dead and buried, are to be accounted of, even Christ's dead body, &c., and shall be raised at the last day by virtue of that mystical ration which still they hold with Christ. Hence they are said to "sleep in Jesus," to be "dead in Christ," who shall "change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself." {#Php 3:21} The Hebrews call a dead corpse Nephesh, i.e., a soul, {#Num 5:2 9:10 19:11 Hag 2:14} to note that it shall live again, and that the soul shall return to it. At this day also they call the churchyard Bethcaim, the "house of the living"; and as they return from the burial place, every one plucks off grass from off the ground twice or thrice, and casts it over his head, saying, florebunt de civitate tanquam faenum terrae, &c. {#Ps 92:12,13} so to set forth their hopes of a resurrection, {a} Neither need it seem "incredible" with any "that God should raise the dead" {#Ac 26:8} considering what followeth: (1.) "Together with my dead body shall they arise," i.e., with Christ's body raised as the "first fruits of them that sleep." {#1Co 15:20} One of the Rabbis readeth it, As my dead body, they shall arise. (2.) The force of Christ's all-powerful voice, saying, "Awake and sing ye that dwell in dust": arise and come away, lift up your heads, for your redemption is at hand. The resurrection is in the Syriac called the "consolation." {#Joh 11:24} (3.) "Thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead," i.e., Qua facilitate herbulas reficit Deus, eadem mortuos animare potest. God can as easily raise the dead as refresh the herbs of the earth with a reviving dew, when they were even scorched to death with the heat of the sun. See we not a yearly resurrection of grass, grain, flowers, fruits, every spring tide. And surely if nature can produce out of a small seed a great tree, or a butterfly out of a worm, or the beautiful feathered peacock out of a misshapen egg, cannot the Almighty raise our bodies out of dust, who first out of dust made them? Or can the condition of any people or person be so desperate that he is not able to help them out. The assurance of God's power, which shall show itself in the raising of the dead, is a most excellent argument to confirm us in the certainty of God's promises, seem they never so incredible to flesh and blood. Atque haec de Cantico.

Ver. 20. Come, my people.] Thus God lovingly bespeaketh his, as leading them by the hand to a hiding place of his providing. So he shut up Noah in the ark, secured Lot in Zoar, hid Jeremiah and Baruch when sought for to the slaughter, bade Daniel to go away and rest before those great troubles foretold. {#Da 12:13} Augustine and Paraeus died a little before Hippo and Heidelberg were taken, so did Luther before the bloody wars of Germany. For Mr Brightman a pursuivant was sent a day or two after he was buried. {a} The burying place is not unfitly called κοιμητηριον, a resting room to the saints; the grave a "bed"; {#Isa 57:2} the bier that carrieth men to it, Matteh, i.e., a pallet. {#2Sa 3:31} Lyra and others by "chambers" here understand the graves, {compare #Re 6:11 Joh 16:33} those chambers of rest, and beds of down, to the bodies of the saints until the last day. There are those who by "chambers" will have meant the closets of God's providence and protection, such as Pella was to the primitive Christians. Hitherto the saints are exhorted to retire till the storm be over, the enemy gone, the destroying angel passed over, {as #Ex 12:12} possessing their souls in patience.

As it were for a little moment.] Heb., A little of a moment. Nubecula est, cito transibit, as Athanasius said when persecuted by Julian, This storm will soon blow over, this indignation doth not transire, but pertransire, pass, but pass apace. {b}

{b} Sozom., lib. xv. cap. 5.

Ver. 21. For, behold.] This is as a crier to prepare attention.

The Lord cometh out of his place.] Here God compareth himself to a prince upon his throne, who goeth from his place of state into countries to quiet mutinies and rebellions among his people.

The earth also shall disclose her blood.] Murder shall out; oppression, whether by force or fraud, shall be certainly and severely punished. See #Job 16:8. See an instance hereof in leviathan, #Isa 27:1. Whether you understand it of the devil, that old man slayer, as many ancients do, or else the kings of the nations, and especially of the Turks, as some Rabbis.

Ver. 1. In that day.] The day of God's great assize, and of execution to be done on the enemy and the avenger. {#Isa 26:21} Now we know how well people are pleased when princes do justice upon great offenders.

The Lord with his sore, and great, and strong sword.] Heb., With his sword, that hard or heavy one, and that great one, and that strong one, that is, with his Word, saith Oecolampadius, who by leviathan here understandeth the devil, who is elsewhere also called the "serpent and the great dragon." {#Re 12:9 20:2} But they do better, in my judgment, who by leviathan here understand some great tyrant, acted by the devil against the Church, such as was Pharaoh; {#Eze 29:3} Sennacherib; {#Isa 8:7} or NebuchadneZZar; {#Jer 51:13} and at this day the Grand Signor, who hath swallowed up countries, as the leviathan or the whale doth fishes; for in the greatness of his empire is swallowed up both the name and empire of the Saracens, the most glorious empire of the Greeks, the empire of Trapezonum, the renowned kingdoms of Macedonia, Peloponnesus, Epirus, Bulgaria, Servia, Bosnia, Armenia, Cyprus, Syria, Egypt, Judea, Tunis, Algiers, Medea, Mesopotamia, with a great part of Hungary, as also of the Persian kingdom. His territories do somewhat resemble a long and winding serpent, as some learned men have observed; and for the slights and might which he useth against Christians still, who knows them not out of the Turkish story? God therefore will shortly take him to do, sharpening haply the swords of men, as he hath lately and marvellously done of the Venetians, as instrumental to ruin this vast empire, which laboureth with nothing more than the weightiness of itself.

And he shall slay the dragon that is in the sea.] i.e., In fluctuante huius saeculi aesluario. ^{a} Of the strange length of dragons, see Aelian., lib. ii. cap. 21, and Plin., lib. viii. cap. 14. In the last year of the reign of Theodosius, senior, there was a dragon seen in Epirus, of that vast size that when he was dead eight yokes of oxen could hardly draw him. By dragon, some understand the same with leviathan, viz., the whale or whirlpool. The dragon is never satisfied with blood, though never so full gorged; no more are persecutors.

^{a} Jun.

Ver. 2. In that day sing ye to her.] Or, Of her, a new song for a new deliverance. Haply this shall be done by the Christian Churches upon the conversion of the Jews, after the Turks' downfall; like as at the building of the second temple, the people sang and shouted, "Grace, grace unto it." ^{#Zec 4:7}

A vineyard of red wine,] i.e., Of rich and generous wine, Vini meri, non labruscarum, ut pure wine not wild, #Isa 5:12 Pr 23:31 Ge 49:22. By this red wine Oecolampadius understandeth Christ's blood, wherewith the Church is purged and beautified. Sanguis Christi venustavit genas meas, the blood of Christ made my eyes attractive, said a certain good woman, a martyr.

Ver. 3. I the Lord do keep it.] And then it cannot but be well kept. The matter is well amended with God's vineyard since ^{#Isa 5:5} the Lord is with you while ye are with him. ^{#2Ch 16:7} "The hand of our God is upon all them for good that seek him; but his power and his wrath is against all them that forsake him." ^{#Ezr 8:12} Do good, O Lord, unto those that be good, &c. As for such as turn aside unto their crooked ways, &c. ^{#Ps 125:4,5}

I will water it every moment.] God will be to his vineyard both a wall and a well, a sun and a shield, ^{#Ps 84:11} all that heart can wish, or need require. Of all possessions, saith Cato, none requireth more care and pains than that of vineyards. Grain comes up and grows alone, ^{#Mr 4:28} but vines must be daily dressed, fenced, supported, watered. Plantas tenellas frequentius adaquare proderit, saith Primasius. {a} Young vines must be often watered; God's vines shall not want for watering, though once he forbade the clouds to rain upon them. {#Isa 5:6} He hath not been wanting to England either for watching or for watering it. We may now much better say of it, than once Polydor Virgil did, Regnum Angliae Regnum Dei; the kingdom of England is the kingdom of God, he meant because none seemed to take care of England but God. He grant we may at length walk worthy of such a mercy! Amen. The Vulgate here rendereth it, but not so well, Repente propinabo ei, I will shortly drink to her.

Lest any hurt it.] Heb., Lest he visit on it, lest any profane person should rudely and unmannerly rush upon it, he guardeth it constantly.

{a} In Philip.

Ver. 4. Fury is not in me.] Whatever you may think of me, because of my many dreadful menaces, and your heavy calamities, Non est in me sed in vobis culpa istarum calamitatum, the fault is not in me but in yourselves; do you but mend, and all shall be soon well between us. It is but displeased love that maketh me chide or strike my dear children, lop my vines, Ut bonus vinitor vires luxuriantes falce Tatar et purgat; αρει, καθαρει; {#Joh 15:2} leaves and luxuriances must be taken off, or it will be worse. Better the vine should bleed than die; better be preserved in brine, than perish in honey. But assure yourselves, I am not implacable; as your sins have put thunderbolts into my hands, so by sound repentance you may soon disarm me.

Who would set the briars and thorns.] God's vineyard is not without briars and thorns, his field without tares, his Church without hypocrites, which prick God and his people, galling them to the heart. These he will make a hand of, take an order with, by treading them down and burning them up, especially if once they shall be so mad and mankind, as they say, as to bid him battle. See #Job 9:4.

I would burn them together.] Or, I will burn them out of it. See #2Sa 23:7. {See Trapp on "2Sa 23:7"}

Ver. 5. Or let him take hold of my strength, J i.e., Of mine arm, wherewith I am about to smite him, or to throw the fire of my wrath at him; let him by true repentance appease me, as submitting Abigail once did angry David; let him but meet me with entreaties of peace, and he shall have peace, yea, he shall be sure of it. See #Job 22:21. {See Trapp on "Job 22:21"} To run into God is the way to escape sin, as to close and get in with him that would strike you doth avoid the blow.

Ver. 6. He shall cause them that come to Jacob, J i.e., His proselytes; or, that come from Jacob, i.e., his posterity. Vitium haec conditio est, The condition of vines is such as that they must undergo cold blasts and hard winters; howbeit, at the return of the spring they recover their verdure, and flourish again. So shall the seed of Jacob: their dead shall live, {#Isa 26:19} and the mountain of the Lord shall be exalted above all mountains. {#Isa 2:2}

Ver. 7. Hath he smitten him, as he smote those that smote him?] No; for the one he smote to correction, the other to destruction—the one with the palm, of his hand, as a man smiteth his son, the other with his clutched fist, as one smiteth his slaver whom he careth not where he hits or how he hurts. Temporal evils are in the nature sometimes of a curse, sometimes of a cure. Hinc distinctio illa poenae in conferentem et nocentem, sive in suffocantem et promoventem; item in poenam vindictae, et poenam cautelae, sive in condemnantem et corregentem.

Ver. 8. In measure.] Heb., Modio i.e., exigua mensura, in a small measure (by peck peck), and as his people are able to bear; {#1Co 10:13} ad emendationem, non ad internecionem.

When it shooteth forth.] Or, In the branches; not at the root, as God smiteth at a wicked man, resolving to have him down. See here his different dealing with his own and others. Upon his children he doth but sprinkle a parcel of his wrath, some few sparks of his displeasure, but the wicked he utterly consumeth and burneth up with the fire of his indignation. {#Isa 42:25 66:15}

Thou wilt debate with it.] Deiudicabis, will give final judgment, thou wilt put a difference, or "discern between the righteous and the wicked." {#Mat 3:18}

He stayeth his rough wind, &c., / i.e., Such afflictions as would shake his plants too much, or quite blow them down. But he letteth out of his treasury, even he who "holdeth the winds in his fist," such a wind as shall make them fruitful, and blow away their unkindly blossoms and leaves. {a}

In the day of the east wind.] That boisterous and blasting and blustering wind, this Euroclydon. {#Ac 27:14}

Ver. 9. By this therefore shall the iniquity of Jacob be purged.] Hac re -i.e., deportations in Babyloniam, saith Piscator: "by this," that is, by their being carried captive into Babylon, as it was made a means to bring the elect to repentance. As one poison is antidotary to another, so is affliction to sin. Crosses are leeches to suck out the noxious blood, flails to thresh off our husks, files to brighten our graces, &c. Sanctified afflictions, said Mr Dod, are good promotions. "Corrections of instructions are the way of life," {#Pr 16:23} For though "not joyous but grievous at present, yet afterwards they yield the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them that are thereby exercised." {#Heb 12:11} It fareth with God's afflicted as it did once with those that had the sweating sickness in this land—if they slept, they died. To keep them waking, therefore, they were smitten with rosemary branches, whereat though they cried out, You kill me! you kill me! yet it proved a happy means to keep them alive. It was good for David that he was afflicted, {#Ps 119:71} it rid him of those two evil humours, high mindedness and earthly mindedness. {#Ps 131:1}

And this is all the fruit.] God's rod, like Aaron's, blossometh; and, like that of Jonathan, it hath honey at the end of it. A good use and a good issue of afflictions is ever to be prayed for. I read of a gracious man who, lying under great torments of the stone, would often cry out, The use, Lord, the use! And Mr Perkins, in like case, desired his friends to pray to God, not so much for ease of his pain, as for increase of his faith and patience. Perdidisti fructum afflictionum, said Augustine to some in his time, and it was a great loss doubtless.

To take away his sin.] The sin, not the man. See #Ps 99:8. A leprous or ulcerous member a man loves as it is his own flesh, {#Eph

5:29} though he loatheth the corruption and putrefaction that is in it; therefore he cuts it not off, but plastereth it; whereas a wart or wen {lump} he cutteth off as not his flesh: so here. {a}

When he maketh all the stones of the altar as chalk stones.] When he, that is, Jacob, in token of his true repentance, abandoneth all his mawmets (images) and monuments of idolatry, and them abolisheth and demolisheth so as never to be re-edified. The Jews, after the captivity, were so far from idolatry, that they would not admit a painter or carver into their city. And how zealous they were to keep their temple from such defilement, both in the time of Antiochus Epiphanes and of the Romans, histories show us.

Ver. 10. Yet, the defended city shall be desolate.] Or, But, or therefore, shall they suffer, ut ad saniozem mentem et ad frugem calamitosi redeant, that they may be thereby bettered. See on #Isa 27:9.

Ver. 11. For it is a people of no understanding.] Heb., Not a people of understandings—i.e., non sapiunt nisi plagis emendentur; they will not be wise without whipping; I must therefore handle them the more sharply and severely. Castigat Deus quem amat, etiamsi non amat castigare.

Therefore he that made them.] Deus factor eius et fctor. A fearful sentence! such as should frighten those, many Ignaros that say, God that made us will surely save us.

Ver. 12. In that day, / sc., When God shall have purged his people by his Word and by his rod.

The Lord shall beat off.] Or, Shall thresh. The ministry of the Word is God's flail to sever the chaff from grain—to single his out of the midst of wicked and profane worldlings. See the like of afflictions sanctified, #Isa 27:9.

And ye shall be gathered.] As ears of grain are for threshing.

One by one.] There is no thresher in the world, saith one here, that thresheth half so clean, for he loseth not one grain, See #Joh 17:12

10:3. Christ hath a care of every one particularly, and by the poll; some gather from hence that the calling of the Jews shall be general and universal.

Ver. 13. The great trumpet shall be blown.] Or, A blast shall be blown with a great trumpet. Tuba haec magna apostolica praedicatio est, saith Oecolampadius. This great trumpet is the gospel, the preaching whereof is of power to save those that perish, to put life into the dead. {#Joh 5:25}

Ver. 1. Woe to the crown of pride, to the drunkards of Ephraim.] Drunkenness is a sin, at the heel whereof hangeth many a woe. Some think it is a dry drunkenness that is here threatened—that there is a dry drunkenness as well as a wet; see #Isa 51:21 2Ti 2:26, ἵνα ἀνανηψωσι, that they may awake out of their drunken sleep—a drunkenness with prosperity, which made them proud and dissolute, even the king of Israel and his counsellors also, not considering that in maxima libertate minima est licentia; " it is not for kings to drink wine." {#Pr 31:4}

Whose glorious beauty is a fading flower.] Or, And to the fading flower of his goodly gallantry. Some conceive that the prophet here alludeth to the etymology of the word Ephraim, whereof see #Ge 41:42, but Ephraim was now declining and decaying.

That are overcome with wine.] Heb., Smitten, beaten, overmastered, as Sisera was by Jael's hammer, which hath its name from the word here used. {#Jud 4:22} Tremellius rendereth it, obtusis vino, to those that are blunted with wine, or beaten about the ears with it. {a}

{a} Κραπαλη, Crappula, παρα το παλλειν το καρα.

Ver. 2. Behold, the Lord hath a mighty and a strong one,] viz., Shalmaneser, king of Assyria. For whereas Ephraim might say, Who is there that can or dare pull off the flower of our goodly gallantry? God answereth that he hath at hand one that can do it, and do it with a turn of a hand, with little ado.

Ver. 3. The crown {a} of pride...shall be trodden under foot.] This noteth utmost ignominy. Finge ideam animo, saith one here; imagine you saw Shalmaneser pulling the crown from the king of Israel's head, throwing it to the ground, and then trampling on it. What brave rhetoric is here!

{a} The Romans pictured pride with a triple crown. On the first crown was written Transcendo; I excel, on the next, Non obedio; I do not submit, on the third, Perturbo I throw into confusion.

Ver. 4. As the hasty fruit.] Quasi primae et praematurae ficus, early maturing fruits much coveted and caught at.

Ver. 5. For a crown of glory, and for a diadem of beauty.] So he was to Judah—called here the "residue of his people"—during Hezekiah's days; a crown unfading, or a garland made of amaranth, {as #Ipe 1:4} which is, saith Clement, a certain flower that being hung up in the house, yet is still fresh and green. And as God is thus to his people, so, interchangeably, are they to him "a crown of glory," {#Isa 62:3} and "a royal diadem," (ib.); his "throne of glory"; {#Jer 4:21} "The beauty of his ornament." {#Eze 7:20}

Ver. 6. And for a spirit of judgment.] A sagacity more than ordinary, in regard whereof Solomon calleth the king's doom a divination, {#Pr 16:10} as is well observed.

And for strength to them, &c.] In this verse we have the description of a happy state, governed justly at home, and able abroad to resist any endeavour of the enemy. {a}

{a} Diod.

Ver. 7. But they also have erred through wine.] Judah had caught this disease of Ephraim, as the English are said to have done of the drunken Dutchmen. Sin is more contagious and catching than the plague. The Hebrew word importeth an alienation of mind. {#Pr 20:1 Ho 11:2,3,12 Jer 23:9} Vino sapientia obscuratur; Wisdom is voided by wine, said Alphonsus, King of Arragon.

They are swallowed up of wine, they are out of the way through strong drink.] Errarunt propter Shecar: they are bucked in beer; they are drowned in drink, like as George, Duke of Clarence, was drowned in a butt of malmsey {a} by his own election. Nam sicut athletico potore dignum erat, ut potando moreretur, elegit, saith mine author; for, being condemned to die by his brother King Edward IV, he chose that kind of death, as becoming to a stout drunkard.

They err in vision.] The prophets do.

They stumble in judgment.] The priests do, for they were to interpret the law, and to decide differences. Drunkenness in rulers is a capital sin, and maketh the land reel.

{a} A strong sweet wine, originally the product of the neighbourhood of Monemvasia (Napoli di Malvasia) in the Morea; but now obtained from Spain, the Azores, and the islands of Madeira and the Canaries, as well as from Greece.

Ver. 8. For all places are full of vomit and filthiness.] Vah, vah, vah: cum tu Narbone mensas hospitam convomeres, saith Cicero to Antony, who was not ashamed likewise to write, or rather to spew out a book concerning his own great strength to bear strong drink, and to lay up others who strove with him for the mastery. Cicero taxeth Julius Caesar for this foul custom; so doth Philo Caligula, and Suetonius Vitellius. {a}

Ver. 9. Whom shall he teach knowledge?] Quem docebit scientiam? Doceo governeth two accusative cases. Ministers must have (1.) Quem, Whom to teach; and (2.) Quid, What to teach—sc., knowledge. Isaiah had no want of knowledge, as being apt and able to teach; but he wanted a fit audience, as having to do with a sort of drunken sots that were unteachable, incapable. So, #Eze 47:11, when the waters of the sanctuary flowed, the miry places could not be healed. Think the same also of those that are drunk with pride {as #Isa 28:1} and self-conceitedness; who make divinity only a matter of discourse, or that come to sit as judges or critics on their ministers' gifts, &c. It will be long enough ere such will be taught anything. One may as good undertake to teach a young weanling void of understanding, and in some respects better, for these to their natural corruption and impotence have added habitual hardness and obstinace, to their sinews of iron, brows of brass, {#Isa 48:4} and what hope can there be of working upon such?

Ver. 10. For precept must be upon precept.] Children are of weak understanding and of short memories, and, Hebraei dicunt hisce verbis infantilitatem significari, they must also have short words and sentences prescribed unto them (such as are kau and flau) and inculcated upon them, that something at least may stick. So must most of our hearers, or little good will be done. {#De 6:7} Thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children. Heb., ‘Thou shalt whet, or repeat them by often going over the same thing,’ as the knife goeth over the whetstone till it be sharp. But very many of our common hearers are not only unteachable, but untameable, deriding sound doctrine, and making a mocking stock of their godliest ministers. And so some very good expositors— haec ερωνικως et μμητικως a propheta dici tradunt -make these words here recited to be the scoffs and taunts of those profane mockers, {#Isa 28:14,22} which they put upon the prophet; q.d., We have nothing but rule upon rule, precept upon precept, &c. Zau lazau, kau lakau; the very sound of the words carrieth a jeer, like as scornful people by the tone of their voice and rhyming words scorn at such as they despise. Thus this good prophet became the drunkard’s song. Any man may be witty in a biting way, and those that have the dullest brains have commonly the sharpest teeth to that purpose. Rightly said the comedian:

Qui, nisi quod ipse fecit, nihil rectum putat. ”
 - Terent.

Ver. 11. For with stammering lips, &c.] With a lipping lip. Heb., With scoffs of lip, or with language of mocks. Surely God scorneth the scorners, {#Pr 3:34} for he loveth to retaliate, and proportion choice to choice, {#Isa 66:3,4} device to device, {#Mic 2:1,3} frowardness to frowardness, {#Ps 18:26} scoffing to scoffing. {#Pr 1:25,26}

And with another tongue.] Lingua exotica, such as they shall be no whit the better for. See #1Co 14:21. We read of John Elmar, Bishop of London in Queen Elizabeth’s reign, that on a time when he saw his audience grow dull in their attention to his sermon, he presently read unto them many verses of the Hebrew text, whereat they all started, admiring what use he meant to make thereof; then showed he them their folly, that whereas they neglected English, whereby they might be edified, they listened to Hebrew, whereof they understood not a word; and how justly God might bring in Popery again, -with Latin service, blind obedience, and dumb offices, -for their contempt of the gospel.

Ver. 12. To whom he said, This is the rest,] i.e., The ready way to "find rest to your souls" {as #Mt 11:28,29} -sc., by obeying my precepts, and embracing my promises.

Wherewith ye may cause the weary to rest,] i.e., Me, who am pressed by your sins, {#Am 2:13} and wearied out with your iniquities, {#Isa 43:24} or your poor brethren, tired with miseries, or your own souls, laden with sin guiltiness.

Ver. 13. But the word of God was unto them precept upon precept, &c.,] i.e., A derision, {as #Isa 28:10} therefore henceforth; hearing they shall hear and not understand: Sic Sanniones Deus punit.

That they may go, and fall backward.] Ut vadant et cadant retrorsum, tanquam turpiter ab hoste superati et resuperati, laid flat on their backs, brought to remediless ruin. This came of their obstinace; though not intentionally, yet eventually.

Ver. 14. Wherefore hear the word of the Lord.] Stand forth and hear your doom, ye that jeer when you should fear, as if you were out of the reach of God's rod.

Ye scornful men.] Heb., Ye men of mockage, ye who mock at the word of God by your words, deeds, and gestures; quales sycophantas quotidie videmus, of which sort we find not a few today. Such dust heaps as these we have in every corner—men that have turned religion not only into a form, but also into a scorn, accounting the wisdom of God foolishness. These St Peter calleth scoffers—εμπακται, -or such as make sport with the word. {#2Pe 3:3} And the prophet here—uno verbo multa peccata exprimit, dum illusores nominat -in calling them mockers, calleth them all that naught is.

That rule the people.] Such as Shebnah now was, and afterwards Tobiah, {#Ne 2:19} Herod, Domitian, Julian, Sir Thomas Moore, &c.

Ver. 15. Because ye have said,] i.e., Ye have thought and reckoned so, but without your host, as they say; {#Jer 6:19} Hear, O earth; behold, I will bring evil upon this people, even the fruit of their thoughts.

We have made a covenant with death.] Nos ab omni male sumus sectrissimi: Thrasonicae hyperbolae -we are shot free, and shall escape scot free. Becket's friends advised him, for his security, to have a mass in honour of St Stephen, to keep him from the hands of his enemies. He had so, but it saved him not, as not to have been dipped in Lethe Lake could save the son of Thetis from death, &c.

And with hell are we at agreement.] Heb., We have made provision, or taken order, egimus cantum. The prophets tell us a tale of death and hell, but we shall yet dance upon their graves; and for hell, we fear it not. The lion is not so fierce as he is painted, nor the devil so black as he is represented. Diabolo optime convenit cum lurconibus. Good fellows shall have good quarter with the devil, say our modern atheists. But what a mad fellow was that advocate in the court of Rome, mentioned by Bellarmine, who, lying at his last gasp almost, and being called upon to repent and cry to God for mercy, prayed thus: O Lord, I have much desired to speak one word unto thee before I die, not for myself, but for my wife and children, ego enim propero ad inferos, neque est ut aliquid pro me agas, for I am hasting to hell; neither is there anything to be done by thee for me. And this he spoke, saith Bellarmine, {b} who was by and heard it, with as much confidence as if he were but travelling to the next town.

When the overflowing scourge shall pass through.] To sweep away such as are drowned in drunkenness, and dread no danger.

It shall not come to us.] Whatever the prophets prate; let them say as they please, we will believe as we list.

For we have made lies our refuge.] A poor refuge; for, tenu mendaciam pellucet, lies are so thin, they may be seen through; but it may be that they called their false refuges lies, not because they held them so, but because the prophets called them so, whereas to themselves they seemed prudent counsels.

{b} De Arte Mor., lib. ii. cap. 10.

Ver. 16. Therefore thus saith the Lord God.] This is purposely prefaced for the support of the faithful, when they should hear the ensuing dreadful denunciations, and see them executed. We cannot beat the dogs, but the children will be ready to cry.

For a foundation a stone.] Firm and fast, opposed here to the fickle stays and vain fastnesses of wicked worldlings. This foundation stone is Christ, {#Ro 9:33 10:13} not Hezekiah, as the Jews would have it; or Peter, as the Papists. See Peter to the contrary, {#1Pe 2:6} and Paul. {#1Co 3:11}

He that believeth shall not make haste,] viz., To help himself as he can, since God defers his help; as did faithless Saul, Ahaz, these Jews, {#Isa 28:15} those Bethulians, that set him a time, and sent for him by a post as it were. David stayed God's leisure for the kingdom; those in Esther for deliverance; and those other in the Hebrews for the accomplishment of the promises. {#Heb 10:35} Hold out faith and patience. We know not what we lose by making haste, and not holding up our hand, as Moses did to the going down of the sun.

Ver. 17. Judgment also will I lay to the line.] Or, I will set out judgment by line, and justice by plummet; that is, I will proportion your punishments to your offences, as it were by line and by level, that the wicked may have their due, and the godly sustain no damage. See #2Ki 21:12,13 Am 7:8. Calvin saith that by this expression, borrowed from builders, the Lord here showeth that when the corner stone before spoken of shall be laid, the Church of the faithful built thereupon shall rise up to a fair and uniform built temple in the Lord, according to #Eph 2:20.

And the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies.] Or, Shovel away, or, quasi furcillis extrudet, shall fork away, or burn up your vain confidences, as he destroyed the Egyptians by hail mingled with fire.

And the waters.] See #Isa 28:15 Mt 7:27.

Ver. 18. And your covenant with death shall be disannulled.] See #Isa 28:15. God shall shoot at such with an arrow suddenly; {#Ps 64:7} and when they shall say, Peace and safety, then shall sudden destruction come upon them, as travail upon a woman with child, and they shall not escape. {#1Th 5:3} They made a covenant with death and hell, but death and hell make no covenant with them. Thus it befell the rich fool; {#Lu 12:20} Alexander the Great, whom his parasites flattered into a fond conceit of an immortality; and Pope Sylvester the second, who dealt with the devil for the popedom, and was persuaded by him that he should never die till he sang mass in Jerusalem; but when he saw how he was cheated, and that he must die, he cried out,

“ Ah miser! aeternos vado damnatus ad ignes.”

Ver. 19. From the time that it goeth forth it shall take you.] This was opposed to their fond conceit of impunity, or at least immunity, for a long season; {#Isa 28:15} the most secure are soonest surprised.

And it shall be a vexation, &c.] Vexatio dabit intellectum, Luther, after the Vulgate, rendereth it, sententiam prophetae non male exprimens. See #Isa 26:9. The cross is the best tutor.

Ver. 20. For the bed is short.] Here the prophet seemeth to some to threaten them for their lectulorum luxus {#Am 6:4} their beds of ivory, whereon, when well whittled, they once stretched themselves at full length, and slept out their drunkenness; but when brought to Babylon, the case should be otherwise with them. Diodate saith that these are figurative and proverbial terms, importing that all means and devices they can use will no way defend them. God's wrath is such as none can avert or avoid.

Ver. 21. As in Mount Perazim.] See #2Sa 5:20. God usually sitteth amidst his people in his mercy seat, or throne of grace; neither ariseth he to punish them till much provoked, and then he may possibly deal as severely with them as he did with the Philistines at Mount Perazim, or with the Amorites in the valley of Gibeon. {#Jos 10:10} But then he doth "his work, his strange work, and brings to pass his act, his strange act"—i.e., That which is neither his wont nor his delight. {#La 3:33 Mic 7:18 Eze 33:11} To fall foul upon his people by his plagues and judgments, goeth as much against the heart with him as against the hair with them. And besides, by doing this his "strange work," he maketh way for the doing of his own proper work. {#1Co 11:32}

Ver. 22. Now therefore be ye not mockers.] For those are the worst of men; ^{#Isa 28:14} pests, the Septuagint commonly render them; abjects and castaways David calleth them, and yet they proudly disdain others, and far their betters, as thimbles full of dust, and the goodly braveries of their scorn. But shall they escape by this iniquity?—shall they carry it away so? In no wise. For

Their bands shall be made strong.] ^{a} "Their sorrows shall he multiplied," and they shall have more load of miseries and mischiefs laid upon them, though now they mock at God's menaces as uttered in terrorem, only for fray-bugs, ^{b} and at his ministers as false prophets. Among many other memorable examples of God's judgments upon such out of God's blessed book, the Acts and Monuments of the Church, and other histories, Nicholas Hemingius relateth a story of a lewd fellow in Denmark, A.D. 1550, which usually made a mock at religion and the professors of it. And on a time coming into a church where a godly minister was preaching, by his countenance and gestures showed a great contempt against the Word; but as he passed out of the church, a tile fell upon his head and slew him in the place. How much more mercifully dealt almighty God with that miller in Leicestershire, who, sitting in an alehouse on a Sabbath day with one of his companions, said to him, I hear that bawling Hooker is come to town, let us go and hear him, we shall have excellent sport; and accordingly they went on purpose to jeer him. But it pleased God the sermon so wrought upon him, that, being pricked at the heart, he went to Mr Hooker, entreating him to tell him what he might do to be saved, and afterwards went with him to New England. ^{c} By sins men's bands are made strong, as by repentance they are loosened. Videte ergo ut resipiscatis mature. ^{d}

Ver. 23. Give ear, and hear my voice; hearken, &c.] Being to assure the faithful of God's fatherly care of their safety and indemnity amidst all those distractions and disturbances of the times; he calleth for their utmost attention, as knowing how slow of heart and dull of hearing the best are; how backward to believe, {#Lu 24:25} and apt to "forget the consolation," παρακλησις. {#Heb 12:5} {See Trapp on "Mt 13:3"}

Ver. 24. Doth the plowman plow all day to sow?] {a} Or, Every day. Doth he not find him somewhat else to do besides? Sua sunt rebus omnibus agendis tempora, novandi, arandi, occandi, aequandi, serendi, metendi, colligandi et excernendi grani, et suae rationes singulis. And shall not the only wise God afflict his people with moderation and discretion? Yea, verily; for he is "a God of judgment, and waiteth to be gracious." {#Isa 30:18} We are no longer ploughed than needs; and whereas we may think our hearts soft enough, it may be so for some grace; but God hath seeds of all sorts to cast in, the wheat and the rye, &c., and that ground which is soft enough for one, is not for another. God, saith Chrysostom doth like a lutanist, who will not let the strings be too slack, lest they mar the music; nor suffer them to be too hard stretched or screwed up, lest they break.

Ver. 25. When he hath made plain.] Laid it level and equal.

Doth he not cast in the fitches?] See on #Isa 28:24.

The appointed barley.] Hordeum signatum. Whatsoever is sealed with a seal is excellent in its own kind; so are all God's sealed ones. {#Eph 4:30}

Ver. 26. For his God doth instruct him to discretion.] Being a better tutor to him than any Varro de agricultura, Cato de re rustica, Hesiod, in his Works and Days; Virgil's Georgics; or, Geonomica Constantino inscripta. Some read the verse thus: "And he beateth it out according to that course that his God teacheth him"; that is, according to the judgment of right reason. God is to be praised for the art of agriculture. How thankful were the poor heathens to their Saturn, Triptolemus, Ceres, &c.

Ver. 27. For the fitches are not threshed out, &c.] So are God's visitations diversely dispensed. He proportioneth the burden to the back, and the stroke to the strength of him that beareth it, sparing his afflicted as a man spareth his son that serveth him. Thus "Epaphroditus was sick nigh unto death," but not unto death; and why? See #Php 2:27. Some of the sweet smelling Smyrnians were in prison "ten days," and no more. {#Re 2:10}

Ver. 28. Bread corn is bruised.] Yet not mauled or marred. That of Ignatius is well known, Commolor dentibus ferarum ut purius Domino panis fiam.

Because he will not ever be threshing it.] As he is not ever sowing mercies, so he will not always be inflicting miseries.

Nor bruise it with his horsemen.] Or, With his horses' hoofs.

Ver. 29. This also cometh forth from the Lord.] As doth likewise πανα δοσις αγαθη, και παν δωρημα τελειον. {#Jas 1:17}

Which is wonderful.] Qui mirificuts est consilio, et magnificus opere.

Chapter 29

Ver. 1. Woe to Ariel, to Ariel,] i.e., To the brazen altar, {#Eze 43:15,16} called here Ariel, or God's lion, because it seemed as a lion to devour the sacrifices daily burnt upon it. Here it is put for the whole temple, {a} which, together with the city wherein it stood, is threatened with destruction.

The city where David dwelt.] Both Mount Moriah, whereon stood the temple, and Mount Zion, whereon stood the palace. Both Church and State are menaced with judgments, temporal in the eight first verses, and spiritual in the eight next. The rest of the chapter is no less consolatory than this is comminatory.

Add ye year to year,] i.e., Feed yourselves on with these vain hopes, that years shall run on always in the same manner. See #2Pe 2:4 Eze 12:22.

Let them kill sacrifices.] And thereby think, but falsely and foolishly, to demerit God to themselves, as that emperor did, who, marching against his enemy, sacrificed, and then said, Non sic Deos coluimus ut ille nos vinceret, {b} We have not so served God that he should serve us no better than to give our enemies the better of us. See #Isa 58:3 Jer 7:21 Ho 9:1.

Ver. 2. Yet I will distress Ariel.] Though a sacred place. Profligate professors are the worse for their privileges. The Jew first. {#Ro 2:9}

And it shall be unto me as Ariel, / i.e., It shall be full of slain bodies, as the altar is usually full of slaughtered beasts, and swimmeth, as it were, in blood. So #Jer 12:3 Isa 34:6. Arias Montanus giveth this sense: ‘Jerusalem, which once was Ariel, that is, a strong lion, shall now be Ariel, that is, a strong curse, or a rain of malediction.’

Ver. 3. And I will camp against thee round about.] I will bring the woe of war upon thee—a woe that no words, how wide soever, can possibly express. See this accomplished. {#2Ki 25:4}

And will lay siege.] As the captain general of the Chaldees.

Ver. 4. And thou, shalt be brought down.] From those lofty pinnacles of self-exaltation whereunto thy pride hath perched thee.

And speak out of the ground.] Humillime et submissime, thou shalt speak supplication, with a low voice (as broken men), who wast wont to face the heavens, and speak in spite of God and men, speak big words, bubbles of words. See #Jer 46:22.

And thy voice shall be as one that hath a familiar spirit.] Cuius vox est gracilis, flebilis, hiulca, confusa, gemebunda.

Out of the ground.] As the devil at Delphi did.

Ver. 5. Moreover, the multitude of thy strangers.] Thy foreign auxiliaries; these shall do thee no good, but be blown away as with a whirlwind.

It shall be at an instant, suddenly.] The last siege and sack of Jerusalem was so by a specialty, as is to be read in Josephus. And some interpreters understand this whole chapter of the times of the New Testament, because our Saviour and St Paul do cite some places herehence, and apply the same to those their times, not by way of accommodation only, but as the proper and true sense of the text. {as #Mt 15:8,9 Ro 11:8 1Co 1:19}

Ver. 6. Thou shalt be visited with thunder and earthquake,] i.e., Fragosis, repentinis, vehementibus, et immedicabilibus plagis, with rattling, sudden, violent, and unmedicinal miseries and mischiefs, as if heaven and earth had conspired thine utter undoing. Some apply this to the prodigies that went before the last devastation of Jerusalem whereof see Joseph., lib. vii. cap. 12.

Ver. 7. Shall be as the dream of a night vision.] Both in regard of thee to whom this siege and ruin shall happen beyond all thought, judgment, and expectation, as also in respect of the Chaldees themselves, who will never be satisfied with tormenting thee, {as #Isa 29:8} and yet shall fail of what they hope for too. {a} Spes mortalium sunt somnia vigilantium, saith Plato.

Ver. 8. It shall be as when.] See on #Isa 29:7.

Ver. 9. Stay yourselves, and wonder.] Sistite gradum, stand still, and stand amazed at this people's stupendous stupidity and desperate security. Piscator rendereth the text thus: Cunctantur, itaque admiramini; deliciantur, itaque vociferamini. They delay (to return), therefore wonder ye at it; they sport at it, but cry ye out, as lamenting their folly. {#Eze 9:4, where the original is very elegant} Some translate the words thus: Obstupefacite vos ipsi, et sitis stupidi, et excaecate vos ipsi et sitis caeci, stupify yourselves and be stupid; blind yourselves and be blind; do so, I say, for you will do so undoubtedly. And here begin their spiritual miseries. See #Isa 29:1 6:9,10.

They are drunk, but not with wine.] But yet with that which is much worse, viz., with a spirit of stupidity; {#Isa 29:10} they are not only drunk with a dry drunkenness, but deadly sick of a lethargy, being dulled in their understandings, lulled asleep in their sinful practices, ready to fly in the face of one that shall offer to awake them. Other drunkenness a man may sleep out, sleep himself sober, as Noah did; not so here, as Nazianzen {a} well observeth upon this text.

Ver. 10. For the Lord hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep.] By a judiciary hardness he hath rolled a stone upon your hearts, and given you up to a reprobate sense. He hath cast you into a dead lethargy, a dedolent disposition; so that "because of the blindness of their hearts," this people are "past feeling," {#Eph 4:18,19} and because they have wilfully winked, he hath even dashed out their eyes, bereaving them of the light against which they rebelled, {#Job 24:13} so that they have neither sight nor light, lemosorum instar oculos mentis concretos habent; they are miserably benighted.

The prophets, &c.] A blind seer is a monster. How could these, thus blindly led, avoid the ditch of destruction?

Ver. 11. And the vision of all is become unto you, &c.] The Scriptures were so to the scribes and elders of the people, who although, when Herod asked them of the Messiah, they could give such descriptions of him as agreed to none but the babe of Bethlehem, {#Mt 2:5,6} yet would they by no means be drawn to believe in his name. And the like woeful obstinace is found in the Rabbis and other Jews to this day. The like spiritual judgment hath befallen the Papists also, both the learned and unlearned; and yet one of them sticks not to tell us to our heads, that our damnation is so plainly and plentifully set down in our own English Bibles, that no man needeth to doubt of it who hath but a book, and can read English. Thus, who so bold as blind Bayard? who so blind as those that will not see?

Ver. 12. And the book is delivered to one that is not learned.] Heb., Knoweth not to read. By the learned is meant, say some, the rulers in Church and State; by the unlearned, the common people: all were in a pickle. Nicodemus had oft read in this our prophet, in Ezekiel and elsewhere, of regeneration, though not under that term; but how little he understood it, see #Joh 3:4,9 And what a buzzard is Bellarmine himself in some such fundamentals as whereof it is a shame for a very child to be ignorant! I must needs confess, said a learned Papist to the Bishop of Cavaillon, that I have often been at the schools of Sorbonne in Paris, where I have heard the disputations of the divines, but yet I never learned so much as I have done by hearing these young children at Merindol posing one another before the bishop about points of religion. The poor men of Lyons in France were enlightened when the great doctors were blinded and besotted in their superstitious tenets and practices. {a}

{a} Acts and Mon, 865.

Ver. 13. Because this people draweth near to me, &c.] For their putid hypocrisy and outsidedness in God's service, they were given up by him to be further hardened by the devil, and to have their necks possessed by an iron sinew, Hypocritis nihil stupidius. {See Trapp on "Mt 15:8"}

Their fear towards me.] See on #Mt 15:9.

Ver. 14. Therefore, behold, I do a marvellous work,] scil., By infatuating these masters in Israel, and bereaving their wise men of their wisdom. This was a greater marvel than to take sight from the eye, whiteness from the swan, sweetness from sugar, &c.

For the wisdom of their wise men shall perish.] And worthily, since they either hid their candle under a bushel, or else their learning hung in their light, while it better served them to devise a thousand shifts to elude the truth, than their pride would suffer them once to yield and acknowledge it. This the prophet speaketh of the Pharisaiical and rabbinical wisdom; and the apostle fitly extendeth it to the wisdom of the Gentiles, {#1Co 1:19} calling both the Pharisees and philosophers "Princes of this world" for their learning, but yet denying that they knew anything to any purpose at all. {#1Co 2:8}

“ Si Christum nescis, nihil est si cratera noscis.”

Ver. 15. Woe unto them that seek deep to hide.] That carry two faces under a hood, as all formalists and double-minded persons do, desirous to deceive the world, and, if it were possible, God himself also, with their pretences and professions, and to cozen him of heaven.

To hide their counsel.] Their cunning contrivances, ut ita libere in omnes veneres et scelera ruant.

From the Lord.] Which cannot be, because he is all eye, and the searcher of hearts; he is intimo nostro intimior nobis, and will bring to light the hidden things of darkness. {#1Co 4:5}

Their works are in the dark.] Out of sight, but not out of the light of his countenance. {#Ps 90:8} Deo obscura liquent, muta respondent, silentium confitentur. "All things are naked and open before the eyes of him with whom we have to do." {#Heb 4:13} Sin not therefore in hope of secrecy; Si non caste tamen caute, will prove too short a covering.

And say, Who seeth us? and who knoweth us?] God doth, to be sure, whoever doth not; hold this fast against that natural atheism which is in us all. See #Eze 9:9 Ro 3:18. {See Trapp on "Ro 3:18"}

Ver. 16. Surely your turning of things upside down.] Heb., Invertere vestrum. Your denying the divine providence and omniscience, whereby ye go about to pervert the whole course of nature, and to put all into a confusion.

Shall be esteemed as the potter's clay.] Shall be confuted by a very familiar comparison. Calvin readeth it thus: "Shall be esteemed as the potter's clay," i.e., is as easily effected as he maketh a vessel at his pleasure.

For shall the work say of him that made it, He made me not?] It should say so upon the matter, by denying his knowledge of it. The watchmaker knoweth every pin and wheel in it; so the heartmaker knoweth every turning and winding in it, were they more than they are.

Ver. 17. Is it yet not a very little while?] Nonne adhuc paululum paululum; or, A hundred years hence the Gentiles shall be called by the preaching of the apostles (for here beginneth the consolatory part of this chapter; see on #Isa 29:1); and that is but a very small time with God. He speeds away the generation, that he may finish the calling of his elect, and so put an end to all.

And Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field.] Heb., Lebanon shall be turned into Carmel, the wide world; the wide waste of the Gentiles, {confer #Isa 42:15} the elect among them shall be made God's husbandry or vineyard, {#Eph 2:12 Ro 11:17} et e contra, Carmelus fiet Libanus. {a}

The fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest.] The obstinate Jews, with their seeming fruitfulness, shall be rejected. Lo, here is a turning of things upside down that you dream not of; this is that marvellous work, #Isa 29:14.

{a} Sylvestria corda electorum inter gentes. -Piscator

Ver. 18. In that day shall the deaf hear the words of the book,] i.e., The deaf and blind Gentiles being by the preaching of the gospel drawn out of darkness into God's marvellous light, shall see and hear that which eye never saw nor ear heard, neither hath entered into the heart of any natural man to conceive. {#1Co 2:9} They shall first be enlightened; secondly, to be cheered. {#Isa 29:19 Ac 13:48 Ro 14:17}

The words of the book.] The Holy Scriptures, that book which the proud would not read, the ignorant could not. {#Isa 29:11,12}

Shall see out of obscurity.] See the Saviour, as Simeon; see that blissful vision. {#Eph 1:18,19} See #Job 9:3-9.

Ver. 19. The meek also shall increase their joy in the Lord.] All sincere converts, such especially as have mastered and mortified their unruly passions and are cured of the fret, these shall add joy; these shall have joy upon joy, they shall "overabound exceedingly with joy." {#2Co 7:4}

The poor among men.] The poor in spirit. These shall greatly rejoice, both for the mercy of God to themselves, and for the justice of God exercised upon others. {#Isa 29:20,21}

Ver. 20. For the terrible one is brought to nought.] This is part matter of the just man's joy; where observe the contrary characters given to the godly and the wicked; those are said to be lowly, meek, poor in spirit; these to be tyrants, scorers, sedulous in sin, publicans, incorrigible, such as turn aside the just, &c. {#Isa 29:20}

And all that watch for iniquity.] Surgunt de nocte latrones; they also break their sleep to devise mischief; {#Ps 36:4 Mic 2:1} but they should watch for a better purpose, {#Mr 13:37} as Seneca also could say, and Pliny, Qui vitam mortalium vigelium esse pronunciat; { a } who calleth man's life a watch.

Ver. 21. That make a man an offender for a word.] When he meant no hurt, or by perverting and misconstruing his speeches. Thus they sought to trap Christ in his speeches; and thus they dealt by many of the martyrs and confessors. To say, the Lord, and not our Lord, is called by Stephen Gardner symbolum haereticorum, a note of a heretic. {a} Dr Storie's rule to know a heretic was, they will say, the Lord, and we praise God, and, the living God. {b} Robert Cook was abjured for saying that the blessing with a shoe sole was as good as the bishop's blessing. {c} Another for saying that alms should not be given until it did sweat in a man's hand. {d} Mrs Catismore for saying that when men go to offer to images, they did it to show their new gear; and that images were but carpenters' chips; and that folks go on pilgrimage more for the green way than for devotion. {e} Philip Brasier for saying that when any miracle is done, the priests anoint the images, and make men believe these images sweat in labouring for them, &c. {f} "Every day they wrest my words," saith David of his enemies. {#Ps 56:5} As the spleen is subservient to the liver, to take from it only the most putrid and feculent blood; so do detractors pick out the worst of everything, to lay it in a man's dish, or allege it against him.

And lay a snare for him that reproveth.] {See Trapp on "Am 5:10"} Freedom of speech used by the Waldenses in blaming and reproving the vices and errors of great ones, effecit ut plures nefariae affingerentur eis opiniones, a quibus ornino fuerant alieni, made them hardly thought and spoken of. {g}

Ver. 22. Who redeemed Abraham., / sc., Out of his idolatry, that pulled him as a brand out of Ur of the Chaldees. {#Jos 24:2,3} The Rabbis say that his father Terah was a maker and seller of images.

Concerning the house of Jacob,] i.e., The calling of the Jews. Compare #Ro 11:2-5.

Ver. 23. The work of mine hands.] "Created in Christ Jesus unto good works"; {#Eph 2:10} and now sanctifying God's name in their hearts and lives, and walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comforts of the Holy Ghost. Thus, as it were, ex professo, doth the prophet Isaiah here handle the doctrine of regeneration, which, and other like places, while Nicodemus had not noted, he was worthily reprov'd. {#Joh 3:9,10}

Ver. 24. They also that erred in spirit.] Erroneous opinions, and muttering against ministers, are here instanced as two special obstacles to effectual conversion. Those that relinquish not these two evils are far enough from God's kingdom, and yet today nothing is more ordinary; hence so few converts, so many apostates.

Ver. 1. Woe to the rebellious children.] Vae filiis desertoribus, vel apostatis, so he boldly calleth the politicians of his time, the counsellors of state, Shebna and others, who gave good Hezekiah ill counsel to send to Egypt for help {a} when Sennacherib invaded him. Well might St Paul say, "Esaias is very bold." {#Ro 10:20} Consurgens enim, proceres inquit, quid hoc rei est quod oceptatis? male omnia factum! vae vobis, vae reipublicae toti! Such another bold court preacher was Elias, Amos, John Baptist, Chrysostom, Latimer, Dearing, &c. See Latimer's letter to King Henry VIII after the proclamation for abolishing English books, Acts and Mon., fol. 1591, where we may see and marvel at his great boldness and stoutness, saith Mr Foxe, who, as yet being no bishop, so freely and plainly, without all fear of death, adventuring his own life to discharge his conscience so boldly, to so mighty a prince, in such a dangerous case, against the king's law and proclamation, set out in such a terrible time, dared take upon him to write and to admonish that which no counsellor dared once speak unto him in defence of Christ's gospel, &c.

That take council, but not of me.] Though I am "the wonderful Counsellor," {#Isa 9:6} and though they profess to be my children, but unruly, rebellious ones. I must needs say, they are such as, like petty gods within themselves, run on of their own heads, and "lean to their own understanding," {#Pr 3:5} as if I were nothing to them, or as if Consilii satis est in me mihi were their motto. See the like folly, #Jos 9:14.

That cover with a covering.] {b} But it will not reach. {#Isa 28:20} God will make the strongest sinew in the arm of flesh to crack, and the fairest blossoms of human policies to wither.

That they may add sin to sin,] i.e., Thereby adding sin to sin. {#De 29:19 Job 34:37} {See Trapp on "De 29:19"} {See Trapp on "Job 34:37"}

Ver. 2. That walk to go down into Egypt.] This they were flatly forbidden to do. But state policy doth sometimes carry it against express Scripture, to the formalising and enervating of the power of truth, till at length they have left us a heartless and sapless religion, as one well observeth. This is no thriving course certainly; here we have a dreadful woe hanged at the heels of it. The Grecian Churches first called in the Turks to their help, who distressed them, and then, through fear of the Turks, A.D. 1438, sent and subjected themselves to the Bishop of Rome, that they might have the help of the Latin Churches; but shortly after they were destroyed, their empire subdued, &c., teaching all others by their example not to trust to carnal combinations, not to seek the association of others in a sinful way.

Ver. 3. Therefore shall the strength of Pharaoh be your shame.] They that consult not with God "consult shame to their own houses"; {#Heb 2:10} and because they despise him, they shall be lightly esteemed. {#Isa 2:30} When any came to Bacon and Burleigh, Queen Elizabeth's gravest counsellors, with a project or design of raising her revenue, or promoting her interest, they would ask him how much reputation would redound unto her by it. Moses, who was faithful in all God's house, had the like care of God's glory, {#Ex 32:10,12} and is therefore renowned to all posterity. But these apostates in the text, for carnal policy and contempt of God, are justly branded and threatened with disgrace and disappointment.

Ver. 4. For his princes were at Zoan.] Where Pharaoh kept his court, and Moses had done his miracles.

And his ambassadors came to Hanes.] This was, saith Jerome, a famous city in the utmost part of Egypt, toward Ethiopia. Oecolampadius saith it lay beyond Egypt. So far did these men travel and trouble themselves in seeking foreign help, when they might have stayed at home to better purpose.

Ver. 5. They were all ashamed of a people that could not profit them.] Either could not or would not, for fear of provoking the Assyrian, so potent and formidable a prince. When Queen Elizabeth undertook to protect the Netherlanders against the Spaniard, the King of Sweden, hearing of it, said, that she had taken the crown off her own head and set it on the head of Fortune.

Ver. 6. The burden, / i.e., The gifts and presents wherewith the Hebrews' beasts were laden to carry southward, to hire help from Egypt. A man's gift maketh room for him. {#Pr 18:11} Philip was wont to say, that he doubted not of taking any town or tower, if he could but thrust into it an ass laden with gold. But these Jewish ambassadors lost both their labour and their treasures, carried upon the shoulders of many young asses, and upon the bunches of camels, to a very great quantity. See what a present was sent to a poor prophet, even of every good thing of Damascus forty camels' burden, {#2Ki 8:9} and guess by that what a deal of wealth went now to Egypt to procure help.

Into the land of trouble and anguish.] That great and terrible wilderness of Arabia, wherein were "fiery serpents and scorpions," {#De 8:15} and other fell creatures not a few. Through that "waste howling desert" {#De 32:10} that lay between Judea and Egypt, travelled these beasts with their burdens; but all was labour in vain, and cost cast away, because God was not of the counsel.

Ver. 7. For the Egyptians shall help in vain, and to no purpose.] Heb., In vanity and inanity. Such are creature comforts if relied on, a very magnum nihil.

Therefore have I cried.] But could not get audience.

Their strength is to sit still.] To bide at home, and "behold the salvation of the Lord"; for the prophet here seemeth to relate to that in #Ex 14:14. "Contented godliness is great gain," saith the apostle, {#1Ti 6:6} and quiet godliness is great strength, saith the prophet here. "Their strength is to sit still." As good sit still, saith our English proverb, as rise and fall. The word here rendered strength is rahab, which signifieth pride and power, and is sometimes put for Egypt herself. {#Ps 87:4} Hence the Vulgate translation here is, superbia tantum est, quiesce. Egypt is but a flask or a piece of proud flesh; she is all in ostentation, but will not answer thine expectation; therefore keep home and be quiet. Others, rendering the text as we do, set this sense upon it, Your Rahab, or Egypt, is to sit still, and to hold your content; by so doing you shall have an Egypt. Whatever help you may think to have that way, you shall have it, and better, this way, si tranquillo et sedato sitis animo, if you can compose yourselves and get a sabbath of spirit.

Ver. 8. Now go, write before them in a table, and note it in a book.] He had proclaimed it before, {#Isa 30:7} but with ill success. Now he is commanded to commit it to writing, for a testimony against them to all posterity, viz., that they had been told in two words what were their best course to take for their own security and safeguard; but they thought it better to trot to Egypt than to trust in God. Now, therefore, if they suffer and smart, as they must, for their contempt and contumacy, the blame must be laid upon themselves alone. Who else can be faulted, whenas they were so fairly forewarned?

Ver. 9. That this is a rebellious people.] Isaiae concepta verba praeit Deus; God dictateth to the prophet Isaiah what very words he shall set down. So he did to Moses, to Jeremiah, {#Jer 36:4} to Habakkuk, {#Hab 2:2} to John the divine. {#Re 14:13} The whole Scripture was inspired by God; not for matter only, but for words also; {#2Ti 3:16} and is therefore more than a bare commonitory or warning, as Bellarmine calls it, a kind of storehouse for advice in matters of religion. We account them the surest rule of life, {a} the divine beam, and most exact balance. {b} But the Papists see well enough that while the authority of the Scriptures standeth, the traditions of their Popes cannot be established, which they account the touchstone of doctrine and foundation of faith. And in favour of their unwritten verities, as they call them, they tell us, but falsely, that Christ commanded his apostles to preach, but not to write.

Lying children.] And therefore not God's children. {#Isa 63:8}

{a} Divina statera. -Aug.

{b} Exactissima trutina -Chrysost.

Ver. 10. Which say to the seers, See not, &c.] Strange impudence! but in thus reciting their words, the prophet rather expresseth their spirit than their speeches. And yet it may be that the politicians of those times blamed the prophets, Isaiah and the rest, as pragmatic, for interposing and meddling in state matters, and pressing the law so strictly, since in cases of necessity, as now it was, they must make bold to borrow a little law of the Holy One of Israel.

Speak unto us smooth things.] Heb., Smoothnesses, toothless truths, and such as may speak you no meddlers.

Ver. 11. Get ye out of the way.] If that be the way which you so much insist upon, warp a little, remit of your rigour. Religiosum opertet esse, sed non religentem. Let a religious man work but not to be bound.

Cause the Holy One of Israel to depart from us.] Desinat ille nos per prophetas obtundere; let us hear no more of him: molest us not with so many messages from him. See #Mic 2:6.

Ver. 12. Wherefore thus saith the Holy One of Israel.] The prophet doth on purpose repeat this title, so much disrelished by them, to cross them. Ministers must not be men pleasers.

Ver. 13. Therefore this iniquity shall be unto you,] q.d., Your commonwealth is tumbling down apace, and ye are hastening the utter ruin of it, as if ye were ambitious of your own destruction, which will be, as sudden, so total. {#Isa 30:14}

Ver. 14. And he shall break it as the breaking of a potter's vessel.] Collige ex hoc loco, saith Oecolampadius, gather we may from this text that remediless ruin will befall such as resist the Holy Ghost, and sin against light.

Ver. 15. The Holy One of Israel.] A style much in the mouths of God's prophets in those times. But what great arrogance is it in the Pope to take unto him the title of his Holiness!

In returning and rest shall ye be saved.] This is the same in effect with that before. {#Isa 30:7} Preachers must be instant, stand to their work, and not be baffled out of their unpleasing messages. The Septuagint here have it, Si conversus ingemueris, tunc salvaberis.

Ver. 16. But ye said, No.] We will not return or rest. This is a golden rule of life, In silentio et spe fortitudo vestra; but these refractories would have none of it, they knew a better way to work than all that came to. Politicians are like tumblers, that have their heads on the earth and their heels against heaven. Cross-grained they are for the most part to all good.

For we will flee upon horses.] Whereof Egypt was full, and for which it was famous of old, and so is yet, for the Mamelukes' horses especially.

Therefore shall ye flee.] But in another sense, sc., fusi fugatique ab hoste, with the enemy at your heels.

Ver. 17. One thousand shall flee.] See #De 32:30, with the note.

Until ye be left as a beacon.] Heb., A mast—i.e., a very poor few, or all alone, shred of all you had. This was fulfilled when Sennacherib wasted the country, even to the very walls of Jerusalem. Paucitatem salvandorum nobis insinuat, saith Oecolampadius.

Ver. 18. And therefore will the Lord wait that he may be gracious unto you.] This is a wonderful condescension—i.e., God tarrieth looking for thee to show thee mercy, as Mr Bradford {a} rendereth it; if thou wert ripe, he is ready. But never think that he will lay cordials upon full and foul stomachs, saith another grave divine; {b} that he will scarf thy bones before they be set, and lap up thy sores before they be searched. God chooseth the fittest times to hear and help his suppliants, {#Isa 49:8 Ps 69:13} opportunitatem opitulandi expectat. Be patient, therefore, brethren, until the coming of the Lord. {#Jas 5:7} Let your equanimity, your longanimity, {patience} be known to all men; the Lord is at hand. {#Php 4:5}

And therefore will he be exalted.] He will get up to his tribunal or throne of grace, that if ye repent ye may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need. {#Heb 4:16}

For the Lord is a God of judgment,] i.e., He is a wise God, that knoweth best when to deal forth his favours, and where to place his benefits.

Blessed are all they that wait for him.] Wait his leisure, et non cerebri sui sectantur consilia, and seek not to get off by indirect courses. Those, though they should die in a waiting condition, yet cannot but be happy, because God hath said here, "Blessed are all they that wait for him."

{a} Serm. of Repent.

{b} Dr Harris.

Ver. 19. For the people shall dwell in Zion, &c.] Or, For thou, the people of Zion that dwell in Jerusalem, shalt weep no more;

“ Flebile principium melior fortuna sequetur.”

At the voice of thg cry.] Thou shalt pray; thou shalt also hear the Word of God, {#Isa 30:20,21} and reform thy life; {#Isa 30:22} so shall good be done unto thee.

When he shall hear it, he will answer thee.] Yea, before, {#Isa 65:24} before thy prayer can get from thy heart to thy mouth, it is got as high as heaven.

Ver. 20. And though the Lord give you the bread of adversity.] Though he hold you to hard meat, and give you but prisoner's pittance, so much as will keep you alive only, and that you eat your meat with the peril of your lives; Emendicato pane hic vivamus, saith Luther; in our Father's house is bread, God's plenty.

Yet shall not thy teachers be removed into a corner.] Non alis se induent, they shall not take wing and fly from thee. The ministry is a sweet mercy, under what misery soever men do otherwise groan and labour. Corporeal wants are not much to be passed on, so the spiritual food be not wanting: a famine of the word is the greatest judgment. {#Am 8:11} When the gospel was first preached there was great scarcity of bodily food, {#Re 6:6 Ac 11:28} but that was scarce felt by those holy souls who did eat their meat, such as it was, with gladness and singleness of heart, accounting that bread and cheese with the gospel was good cheer. {a}

Thine eyes shall see thy teachers.] A description of holy hearers; their eyes are intent on the preacher's, their ears erect, their whole course conformed to the rule, quando lapsus tam in proclivi est {b} {#Isa 30:21} their dearest sins abandoned. {#Isa 30:22} Oh, for such hearers in these days!

“ Apparent rarè nantes in gurgite vasto. ”

{a} Greenham.

{b} Scultet.

Ver. 21. And thine ears shall hear a word behind thee.] Quum a tergo tuo dicent, when they shall say behind thee—viz., thy teachers: a metaphor, say some, from shepherds driving their sheep, and whistling them in when ready to stray. {a}

When ye turn to the right hand, or to the left.] Heb., When ye right hand it, and when ye left hand it. It is hard to hold the king's highway chalked out in the word, without swerving—to walk accurately, and as it were in a frame; yet this must be done, and all exorbitancies carefully shunned. Hereunto the word preached is a singular help: God by his Spirit also sends for us in our strayings, and sets us right again. There will be upon any miscarriage, singultus cordis, sobbing of heart, an upbraiding or rising of heart, as it is termed by Abigail; {#Isa 25:31} the Spirit will come in with his secret and sweet voice, both correcting and directing pro re nata for unfolding affairs.

Ver. 22. Thou shalt defile also the covering.] Thou shalt pollute the idols which thou hadst perfumed. Such a change is wrought in people by the Word preached, as is to be seen in all the reformed churches; cavete ab idolis, beware of idols.

Thou shalt cast them away as a menstruous cloth.] Ut mulierem laborantem ex mensibus, as a labouring woman from her period. {a}

Thou shalt say unto them, Get thee hence.] Apage, Abi in malam crucem. Men should heartily hate sin by them committed: dealing by it as Amnon did by Tamar; and as heartily desiring to forego it, as to have it forgiven; to part with it, as to have it pardoned. See #Ho 14:8. {See Trapp on "Ho 14:8"}

Ver. 23. Then shall he give the rain of thy seed.] Or, For thy seed, or to thy seed. A figurative description of God's superabundant blessings, viz., the spiritual blessing, saith Diodate. This was fulfilled in the letter, under Hezekiah and Ezra: in the figure, under Christ.

In that day shall thy cattle feed.] This branch properly belongeth to the next verse. The Bible was not distinguished into verses till of late years; and it is not done very skilfully in some places, as this for one. Versuum in Scripturis sectiones pio quidem, at tumultuario Roberti Stephani studio excogitatae, imperitissime plerunque, texture dissecant. {a}

{a} Scultet.

Ver. 24. Shall eat clean provender.] Such plenty there shall be of corn that the cattle shall have of the best threshed out and winnowed. The Vulgate hath it, commistum migma, whereby it is understood diversity of grains mingled together, as in horse bread.

Ver. 25. Rivers and streams of waters.] To moisten them and make them fertile.

When the towers fall] i.e., Sennacherib's great princes, who were as towers and bulwarks.

Ver. 26. Moreover, the light of the moon, &c.] i.e., Very great shall be your joy upon that slaughter of Sennacherib's army: the sun and moon also seeming to rejoice with you by their extraordinary outshinings.

In the day that the Lord bindeth up the breach.] Sunt allegoriae sive similitudes quae instituto mire conveniunt. {a}

{a} Hyperius.

Ver. 27. Behold, the name of the Lord cometh from far.] That is, an angel cometh from heaven to destroy the Assyrians: or, The name of the Lord, that is, Maiestas Dei nominatissimi, the glorious and renowned God himself.

Burning with anger.] Or, At the nose, which burneth with a grievous flame.

His lips are full of indignation, and his tongue, &c.] Est pulchra hypotyposis irae Dei, a gallant description of God's anger, which yet is nothing else but his most just will to punish sin. These things and the like are spoken concerning God ανθρωποπαθως, and must be understood Θεοπρεπως. Rash anger, as it dispossesseth a man of his soul, wit, and reason, so it disfigureth his body with firiness of the eyes, inflammation of the face, stammering of the tongue, gnashing of the teeth, a very harsh and hateful intension of the voice, &c. Hence angry men were counselled, in the heat of their fit, to look themselves in a glass, &c. God is here brought in as thus angry, more humano. Let us take heed how we provoke him to wrath:

Ver. 28. And his breath as an overflowing stream.] God can blow men to destruction, {#Job 4:9} for they are but dust heaps; yea, his breath, as an irresistible torrent, beareth all before it. The prophet had compared God's fierce wrath to a raging fire; now he further compareth it here, 1. To a flood; 2. To a fan; 3. To a bridle.

To sift the nations with a sieve of vanity,] i.e., Ad perdendas gentes in nihilum, as the Vulgate here hath it, To destroy the nations, and to bring them to nothing.

Ver. 29. He shall have a song.] As, after the passover eaten, they sang a hymn; so, after the Assyrian destroyed, there shall be a different sound heard in their several camps. Apud utrosque audietur sonus, et strepitus, sed diversa admodum ratione: so was fulfilled that of our prophet. {#Isa 65:13,14}

As in the night when a holy solemnity is kept.] Pintus saith, that the night before some solemn sacrifice, the Jews usually spent in jollity and singing. They still conclude their Sabbath with singing, or caterwauling {a} rather, which they continue as long as they can, for ease of the defunct souls.

{a} Any hideous, discordant howling noise.

Ver. 30. And the Lord shall cause his glorious voice.] Hence some gather that Sennacherib's soldiers were destroyed by the angel, not without a mighty storm and tempest, accompanied with dreadful thunder and lightning. See the like threatened to all wicked ones, #Job 27:20-22.

Ver. 31. Which smote with a rod.] #Isa 10:5. Now he is broken in pieces with God's iron rod, {#Ps 2:9} Iustissimae talionis exemplum.

Ver. 32. And in every place where the grounded staff shall pass.] Virga fundata, seu inflxa; God's rod or staff, wherewith he beateth the Assyrians, shall pierce their flesh, and stick in it, make deep welts, yea, stick in their very bowels, as Ehud's dagger did in Eglon's guts. And this shall be done with little ado too.

It shall be with tabrets and harps.] Quasi per ludum, non tormentis bellicis.

And in battles of shaking will he fight with it.] Levi quadam velitatione bellica, by skirmishings only.

Ver. 33. For Tophet is ordained.] Heb., Tophteh which some derive of Pathah, to entice or seduce, because hell draweth customers; and is called also infernus ab inferendo, from the great resort that is to it. But others fetch the name from toph, a drum, because those idolaters who sacrificed their children to Moloch or Saturn, in the valley of Hinnom, struck up drums to drown the cries of those poor tortured children. Hence it is here used for hell, together with that eternity of extremity which the damned there endure; and this the Assyrians are here threatened with, yea, their very king, whose preservation from the stroke of the angel was but a reservation to a worse mischief here and hereafter. For patentes potenter torquebunter; great men, if not good, shall be greatly tormented; and the more they have of the fat of the earth, the more they are sure to fry in hell. Such, therefore, had need to add true grace to their high places, else they shall prove but as a high gibbet to bring them to more disgrace in this world, and torment in the next.

Of old.] Heb., From yesterday. Hence some infer that hell torments are always fresh and new, as if they had begun but yesterday; and "every sacrifice there is salted with fire," {#Mt 9:49} that is, it burneth, but consumeth not; fire being of a burning, but salt of a preserving nature.

He hath made it deep and large.] Capacious enough to receive a world full of wicked ones. {#Ps 9:17}

The pile thereof is fire and much wood.] Hell fire is no metaphorical thing, but a material, true, proper, real, and corporeal fire. {#Mt 18:9 25:41 Lu 16:23} For vehemency of heat, saith Augustine, it exceedeth ours as far as our fire doth exceed fire painted on the wall. That friar said too little of it who said that one might feel it burn seven miles off. Etna, Vesuvius, Pietra Mala (which is a mountain in the highest part of the Apennines that perpetually burns), come not near it. Some gross Papists have imagined Etna to be the place of purgatory. Odilo, abbot of Cluniscum, persuaded Pope John XIX that he had there seen the tormented souls wailing: whereupon that pope appointed the feast of All-souls.

The breath of the Lord, as a stream of brimstone.] This formidable fire, then, is fed with most tormenting temper, rivers of brimstone, and kindled with the breath of the Almighty throughout all eternity. Simile quiddam videmus in thermis, ubi sulphureae scaturigines magno fremitu effervescunt. Some resemblance hereof we have in the hot baths, &c.

Chapter 31

Ver. 1. Woe to them that go down to Egypt for help.] The prophet saw them set upon it to send down to Egypt; he therefore addeth another woe to such refractories, and layeth before them more reasons to dissuade them from doing so: a good precedent for preachers. Oecolampadius rendereth it, O descendentes, O ye that go down to Egypt, &c. Oh ye are a wise company of you, and full well ye have done it!

But they look not to the Holy One of Israel.] They trust not God at all, that not alone. He that stands with one foot on a rock, and another foot upon a quicksand, will sink and perish as certainly as he that stands with both feet on a quicksand. See #Ps 62:5,6.

Ver. 2. Yet he also is wise.] Yea, he is "the only wise God," whatever the world's wizards think of him or of themselves. They counted the voyage down to Egypt the wisest way; ^{a} and to rest altogether upon God, to be altogether impolitic as the case now stood. Egypt also, they knew, was famous for wisdom, ^{#Isa 19:11,12} but considered not how God had fooled them, ^{#Ex 1:10,12} and taken those foxes in their own craft. ^{#ICo 3:19}

And will bring evil.] To those evil counsellors especially,

“Ἦδε κακη βουλη τω βουλευσαντι κακιστη”

^{a} Tacita antiithesis in qua latet Antanaclasis.

Ver. 3. Now the Egyptains are men, and not God.] Poets fain that in the Trojan war one god fought against another.

“Mulciber in Troiam, pro Troia stabat Apollo.”

But the Jews could not imagine that these Egyptians, in whom they confided, were fit matches for God, and able to deal with him. "Who would set those briars and thorns against me in battle I would go through them, I would burn them together." ^{#Isa 27:4}

And their horses flesh, and not spirit.] God is Lord of hosts; and as the Rabbis well observe, he hath his cavalry and his infantry, or his horse and his foot; his upper forces and his lower, ready pressed. "The chariots of God are twenty thousand, even thousands of angels," ^{#Ps 68:17} and what can the Egyptian horse do against such worthy warriors?

Ver. 4. Like as the lion and the young lion.] That they may trust in God, and not in the arm of flesh, the prophet setteth before them under two fit similitudes, the power of God, ^{#Isa 31:4} and the mercy of God. ^{#Isa 31:5} These are the Jakin and the Boaz, the two main pillars and supports of trust in God. Procopius here noteth that the lion, when he preyeth, first roareth so terribly, that he thereby amazeth both the cattle and their keepers, and then he falleth upon them and teareth them in pieces; so doth God first roar, that is, threaten by his prophets, and then he destroyeth such as obstinate themselves in a sinful course.

Ver. 5. As birds flying, so will the Lord of hosts.] This is the second similitude; the eagle, when she flieth highest of all from the nest, and seemeth to set herself among the clouds, still keeps her eye on her nest, so that if any come near her young ones to offend them, she makes all possible speed for their defence. Such an eagle is Almighty God, {#De 22:11} such a hen is Jesus Christ. {#Mt 23:37 Ps 91:1,2} The Church is God's nest; who dare meddle with it? Sennacherib had threatened to destroy nest and young ones together, because he had done so elsewhere, and none dared wag the wing at him, {#Isa 10:14} but he found it otherwise here. {#Isa 37:33}

Ver. 6. Turn ye unto him.] Vos apostatae Iudaei. You apostate Jews. He runs far that never turneth again, we say; ye have revolted and run away from God with all your hearts, doing evil as ye could. Oh turn again to him, ex profundo imoque corde ad illum redite, let there be a proportion between your sin and your repentance. Turn ye unto me, usque ad me, all out as far as to me, give not the half turn only; with all your heart. {#Joe 2:12} "Take heed lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief in departing from the living God." {#Heb 3:12} Ἀπιστία parit ἀποστοίαν

Ver. 7. For in that day,] scil., Of your effectual conversion; {#Isa 30:22} or, when the Assyrian shall assault you, then you shall see the vanity of your idols, and of all human helps. {#Isa 2:20,22}

Ver. 8. Then shall the Assyrian fall.] Fall in his forces, flee in his person; but evil shall hunt that violent man to destroy him. {#Ps 140:11}

Not of a mighty man.] Or, Of a mean man, but of an angel.

And his young men shall be discomfited.] Heb., Shall be unto melting; they shall melt away. {#Isa 14:16} Vide hic, saith A Lapidé; see here how this world is nothing else but a perpetual ruin of all kinds and conditions of men.

Ver. 9. And he shall pass over to his stronghold.] To Nineveh, never thinking himself safe till he come thither.

And his princes shall be afraid of the ensign.] Lifted up by God's angels in the slaughter of their fellows.

Whose fire is in Zion.] Who keeps house there, sumpta metaphora a re oeconomica. An exact metaphore from domestic affairs. There he had his fire and his chimney, sc., in the temple, from whence also came this destruction to the enemy. {#Ps 76:2,3} {See Trapp on "Ps 76:2"} {See Trapp on "Ps 76:3"}

Chapter 32

Ver. 1. Behold a king.] Hezekiah in the type, Christ in the antitype.

Shall reign in righteousness.] Regiment without righteousness, is but robbery with authority.

And princes shall rule in judgment.] Not as Shebna, and those others placed in by wicked Ahaz, do now, while the king is young, and not so well able to weed them out. Evil junior rulers are a great mischief to a state. Nerva was a good emperor, and so was Aurelian; but so bought and sold by bad counsellors and inferior magistrates, that the people were in a worse case than when they were under Nero. Hezekiah would see to his princes that they were right; Christ hath none about him but such; "All his people are righteous," {#Isa 60:21} his "ministers" and "officers" especially. These are "princes in all lands," {#Ps 45:16} yea, they are "kings," because "righteous ones"; {#Mt 13:17 Lu 10:24} ministers especially are plenipotentiaries under Christ. {#Mt 18:18,19 Joh 20:23}

Ver. 2. And a man shall be,] i.e., Each man of those forementioned princes, or, That man, viz., Hezekiah. How much more "the man Christ Jesus" shall be a comfort to distressed consciences, an absolute and all-sufficient Saviour! such as his people may trust unto for safety here, and salvation hereafter.

Ver. 3. And the eyes of them that see shall not be dim.] Or, Shall not be closed; they shall not wink or be wilfully ignorant, shutting the windows lest the light should come in, or seeking straws to put out their eyes with, as Bernard expresseth it, Festucam quaerunt unde oculos sibi eruant.

And the ears of them that hear shall hearken.] They shall listen to Christ's word as for life; they shall draw up the ears of their souls to the ears of their bodies, that one sound may pierce both; they shall hear what the Spirit speaketh to the churches.

Ver. 4. The heart also of the rash.] Heb., Of the hasty ones, such as are headlong and inconsiderate, that weigh not things, that say not, What shall we do in the end thereof?

And the tongue of the stammerers.] That once did but bungle at holy discourse, pronouncing as it were Sibboleth for Shibboleth, and marring a good tale in the telling; as not understanding either what they say, or whereof they affirm. {#ITi 1:7}

Shall be ready to speak plainly.] Shall be forward to speak fruitfully, having a holy dexterity therein. The Corinthians are commended for their utterance; {#ICo 1:5} they could express themselves fitly, and they would do it freely.

To speak plainly.] Heb., Neat or clear words; limpida, nitida; a metaphor from clear or fair weather.

Ver. 5. The vile person shall be no more called liberal.] Benefici et magnifici domini. That sapless fellow Nabal shall no more be called Nadib, that is, bountiful benefactor, or gracious lord. Of Archbishop Bancroft was made this couplet:

“Here lies his Grace in cold clay clad,
Who died for want of what he had.”

In Ahaz's time the worst of men got honours and offices. Hezekiah would look to that. Dignity shall henceforth wait upon desert, and flattery shall be utterly out of fashion and request at court. Our old English Bibles have it thus: A niggard shall not be called a gentle or gentleman.

Nor the churl said to be bountiful.] The holdfast, whose logic is all little enough to conclude for himself, shall not be called a Magnifico. The Vulgate Latin hath it, Neque fraudulentus appellabitur maior.

Ver. 6. For the vile person will speak villany.] Why then should he be advanced to great places why should he be smoothed and soothed up with high titles? "The adversary and the enemy is this wicked Haman," said Esther. {#Isa 7:6} Before, some had stiled him noble, others great, and some perhaps virtuous; only Esther giveth him his own— Pessimus iste, "That most wicked Haman"; so, "Go, tell that fox," saith our Saviour; and God shall smite thee, "thou whited wall," saith St Paul to Ananias, &c. Nomina rebus consentanea imponentur. A spade shall be called a spade, a fool a fool; there shall not be nomen inane, crimen immane, sedes prima et vita ima, ingens autoritas et nutans stabilitas, &c. {a}

And his heart will work iniquity.] Exegesis flagitiosi, the true portraiture of an evil magistrate, Iudex locusta civitatis est malus. An evil judge is the locust of the state.

{a} Bernard.

Ver. 7. The instruments also of the churl are evil.] There is an elegance in the original, Cuius lepos in vertendo perit. {a} By his instruments or vessels are meant, say some, his evil arts and deceits of all sorts; or, as others hold, his subordinate officers and teasers.

Even when the needy speaketh right.] Right or wrong, he is sure to be undone; the doing of anything or of nothing he findeth alike dangerous.

{a} Scalig.

Ver. 8. But the liberal deviseth liberal things.] Beneficus beneficia cogitat: munificentius consultat, et consulit, in opposition to the churl, {#Isa 32:7} He is of a public spirit, and studieth how and where to do most good. Augustus Caesar was for this called Pater patriae; Father of fathers, Charles the Great, Pater orbis; Father of the world, Claudian thus bespake Honorius—

“ Tu civem patremque geras, tu consule cunctis, Non tibi; nec tua te moveant, sed publica damna. ”

“You manage the state and your household, you advise everyone,
But not yourself; neither stir yourself, but damage the public state.”

And by liberal things shall he stand,] One would think he should fall rather; but he knows what he does, and that not getting but giving, not hoarding but distributing, is the way to thrive.

Ver. 9. Rise up, ye women that are at ease.] Secure sedentes, ye court ladies, whose pride hath brought on the wars; {#Isa 3:25} or, ye hen hearted Jews, Αχηδες ουκ ετ Αχαιοι; or, ye lesser cities and villages of Judah, rise up, and rouse up yourselves, ad exhibendum honorem verbo Dei, In honour of God’s holy Word. {#Jud 3:20}

Ver. 10. Many days and years shall ye be troubled.] A just punishment of your former security, which usually ushereth in destruction. Days above a year your calamity shall last, by the invasion of the Assyrians, but not two full years; take that for your comfort.

For the vintage shall fail.] War makes woeful work and waste.

Ver. 11. Tremble, ye women.] Adhortatio ad poenitentiam, saith Hyperius; an exhortation to repentance, {a} not unlike that of St James, {#Jas 4:9,10} "Afflict yourselves, and weep and mourn; let your laughter be turned into mourning, your joy into heaviness."

Ver. 12. They shall mourn for the teats.] That is, for their grain and wine. The heathens called Ceres their goddess of plenty, πολυμασθον, Mammosam, full teated. Some sense it thus, Let them (infants) mourn for the teats denied them in this day of humiliation, {#Jon 3:5,6} or so dried up that there is no milk for them. Others render it, Beating upon their breasts, Plangentēs pectora palmis.

Ver. 13. Upon the land of my people shall come up thorns.] Here the prophet proceedeth to denounce the destruction of the land that should one day come by the Babylonians; and yet he foretelleth that afterwards God shall receive them into favour, and restore unto them such a kingdom as wherein righteousness and peace shall meet and mutually salute.

In the joyous city.] Or, Revelling city. See #Isa 22:2,13 Zep 2:15.

Ver. 14. The multitude of the city shall be left.] For the city shall be left of its multitude.

The forts and towers.] Heb, Ophel and Bachan. The Hebrews tell us that these were two high towers in Jerusalem; now they were to be dismantled and lie waste.

Ver. 15. Until the Spirit be poured upon us from on high.] Donec Dominus dignabitur suum favorem et gratiam denuo nobis impertiri, Till God shall please once more to impart unto us his grace and favour. So he sets them no certain time of restoration; as desirous thereby to stir them up to pray continually, and to bring forth fruits worthy amendment of life. This effusion of "the Spirit upon all flesh" {#Joe 2:28} -that is, of the best thing upon the basest—is a very great mercy.

And the wilderness be a fruitful field.] Heb., A Carmel. Such a change worketh the Spirit of grace—it maketh barren hearts fruitful, and manifesteth hypocrites, whatever they seem, to be no better than wild trees that bear no good fruit.

Ver. 16. Then judgment shall dwell in the wilderness.] In this and the next verse, he setteth forth the sweet effects of God's Spirit in the saints, in hypocrites also, when once they come to be converted; these are "righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." {as #Ro 14:17} By "righteousness" and "judgment" there is to be understood the righteousness of faith, together with all those good works, the fruits thereof—obedience, I mean, which Luther was wont to call fidem incarnatam Faith incarnate.

Ver. 17. And the work of righteousness shall be peace.] Peace both of country and of conscience; none other but this last can last for ever.

Quietness and assurance for ever.] Such as the world giveth not, such as the wicked meddleth not with. The cock on the dunghill knoweth not the worth of this jewel; it is the new name that none knoweth but he who hath it. Oh this blessed "quietness and assurance for ever," this "boldness and access with confidence by the faith of him," {#Eph 3:12} having a full certainty, {#Lu 1:4} yea, a confident glorying and boasting, {#Ro 5:3} so as to stand upon interrogatories, {#1Pe 3:21} such as are those, {#Ro 8:35-37} and to have God to make answer. {as #Isa 43:25}

Ver. 18. And my people shall dwell in a peaceable habitation.] Great peace have all those that love God's law, and nothing shall offend them. {#Ps 119:165} Peace shall be within their walls, and prosperity within their palaces. From this and the next verse one well gathereth that, when the heart lieth lowest, it lieth quietest; in loco humili humills erit civitas, sc., Dei.

Ver. 19. When it shall hail, coming down on the forest.] When reprobates—here compared to a forest or tall wood—shall be hail beaten, that is, grievously plagued, as those Egyptians once were, {#Ex 9:22,26} it shall be hale, or well, with the elect. The Church, as a city that standeth in a low bottom, is secure and safe, her afflictions also working together for her good. In humbling her, God remembereth her, for his mercy endureth for ever. {#Ps 136:23}

Ver. 20. Blessed are ye that sow beside all waters.] Conclusionem texit ipse propheta. The prophet concludeth with an exclamation, as admiring the happiness of such as should live till the commonwealth should be thus restored; but especially when Christ should come in the power and purity of his ordinances, filling his people with the fruits of righteousness, and fattening them for the purpose with those waters of the sanctuary, as Nile doth the land of Egypt, &c. Oh, the heaped up happiness of such! O terque quaterque beati! Say, "They sow in tears, yet they shall reap in joy"; {#Ps 126:5} say, They "send thither the feet of the ox and the ass," those laborious and useful creatures, to ear the ground, and fit it for receipt of seed; {#Ps 144:14} they "shall surely eat the fruit of their labours"; {#Ps 128:2} they "shall reap in due time if they faint not." {#Ga 6:9} His faecunda sine dubio messis indulgentiae orietur; saith Arnobius; their "labour cannot be in vain in the Lord." {#1Co 15:58}

Ver. 1. Woe to thee that spoilest.] Minatur vastationem vastatori Sennacherib, vel Antichristo, quem praesignat. {a} Sennacherib and Antichrist are here threatened.

And thou wast not spoiled.] Thou abusest thy present peace, and the riches of God's goodness and patience toward thee, to fall foul upon others unprovoked.

And dealest treacherously.] This some {b} understand of Sennacherib. See #2Ki 18:14,17. Others of Shebna and other traitors in Jerusalem, who dealt underhandedly with the enemy against Hezekiah, and might haply meet with the like meed as he did who betrayed the Rhodes to the Turks, who flayed him and salted him. Or at least as Charles IV's agents did from Philip, Duke of Austria, who paid them the sum he promised them, but in counterfeit money, saying that false coin is good enough for such false knaves as they had showed themselves to be.

Thou shalt be spoiled.] Of kingdom, and life, and all, by thy treacherous sons. {#Isa 37:38}

“ Siquis quod fecit patitur, iustissima lex est.”

See #Jud 7:11. {See Trapp on "Jud 7:11"} And fear thou God, who loveth to retaliate, to pay wicked men home in their own coin, to fill them with their own ways, to overshoot them in their own bow, &c. Vae ergo vastatoribus: one time or other God will be even with such.

{a} Oecolam.

{b} Ibid.

Ver. 2. O Lord, be gracious unto us.] Brevicula sed pulchra precatio, a short but sweet prayer of the prophet, teaching thereby the people to put the promise in suit, and to do it effectually, using a thong of strong arguments, as here is much in few.

Be thou their arm.] Here the Church seemeth to pray for her children, as they before had prayed for her. Plena eat affectibus haec precatio.

Every morning.] Heb., In the mornings—that is, speedily, seasonably, continually, and for Christ's sake, Voce enim "matutinis" allusum adiuge sacrificium {a} {#Ex 29:39-41}

{a} Scultet., Piscat.

Ver. 3. At the noise of the tumult the people fled,] i.e., The Assyrian soldiers shall flee at the coming of the angel, with a hurry noise in the air for greater terror; {a} but he shall give them their passport. This their confidence was the fruit of prayer.

At the lifting up of thyself.] If God do but "arise" only, "his enemies shall be scattered; and all that hate him shall flee before him." {#Ps 68:1} {See Trapp on "Ps 68:1"}

Ver. 4. And your spoils shall be gathered.] The spoil of the Assyrian's camp now become yours. {as #1Sa 30:20}

Like the gathering of caterpillars.] Quae ad hominum concursum omnes repente disperguntur; which are soon rid, when men set themselves to destroy them.

Ver. 5. The Lord is exalted.] He hath made him a name, gained abundance of honour.

For he dwelleth on high.] Whence he can pour down plagues at his pleasure on his proud enemies, and fill Zion with judgment and righteousness.

Ver. 6. And wisdom and knowledge shall be the stability of thy times.] Thy times, O Hezekiah; but especially, O Christ. Or, the stability of thy times and strong safeguard shall thy wisdom and knowledge be. "By his knowledge"—that is, by faith in him—"shall my righteous servant" (Jesus Christ) "justify many"; {#Isa 53:11} but these are also sanctified by him. The fear of the Lord is their treasure; they "hold faith and a good conscience, which some, having put away, concerning faith, have made shipwreck." {#1Ti 1:19} {See Trapp on "1Ti 1:19"}

The fear of the Lord is his treasure.] The spirit of this holy fear rested upon Christ, {#Isa 11:2} and good Hezekiah was eminent for it, not for civil prudence only. This was flos regis, the fairest flower in all his garland; this is solidissima regiae politiae basis, as one {a} saith, the best policy, and the way to wealth.

{a} Paradin. in Symbol.

Ver. 7. Behold their valiant ones.] Or, Their heralds, messengers. Heb., Hen Erelam, behold their Erel, or their Ariel {#Isa 29:1,2} -that is, their altar, shall they (i.e., the Assyrians) cry without, sc., in mockery, twitting the Jews with their sacrifices as no way profitable to them. So the profane Papists, when they murdered the poor Protestants at Orleans, sang in scorn, Judge and revenge my cause, O Lord. Others, Have mercy on us, Lord. And when in the late persecution in Bohemia various godly nobles and citizens were carried to prison in Prague, the Papists insultingly cried after them, Why do ye not now sing, "The Lord reigneth?" {a}

The ambassadors of peace.] That went for peace, having for their symbol Pacem te poscimus omnes, We all demand peace from you, but could not effect it.

Weep bitterly.] So that they might be heard before they entered the city. Vide quam vivide, See here how lively things are set forth, and what a lamentable report these ambassadors make of the state of the country, and the present danger of losing all.

Ver. 8. The highways lie waste.] And byways are more frequented, through fear of the enemy.

He hath broken the covenant.] Irritum factum est pactum. He took the money sent him, but comes on nevertheless, though he had sworn the contrary. {#2Ki 18:14,17} It is said of the Turks at this day, that they keep their leagues—which serve, indeed, but as snares to entangle other princes in—no longer than standeth with their own profit. {a} Their maxim is, There is no faith to be kept with dogs, whereby they mean Christians, as the Papists also say, There is no faith to be kept with heretics, whereby they mean Protestants. But why kept not Uladislaus, King of Hungary, his faith better with Amurath, the great Turk? or our Henry III with his barons, by Papal dispensation? Vah scelus! vae periuris.

He hath despised the cities.] And will not take them for his subjects. He scorneth the motion.

He regardeth no man.] He vilipends and slights all jewels generally.

{a} Turkish History, 755.

Ver. 9. The earth mourneth and languisheth.] {a} Or the land luget et languet. Thus they go on in their doleful relation: Miserrima sunt omnia, atque miseranda. What sad work hath Antichrist made of late years in the Christian world? what desolations in all parts?

Lebanon is ashamed and hewn down, Sharon is like a wilderness.] East, west, north, and south of the land are laid waste by the enemy and the avenger, that "boar out of the wood," that "bear out of the forest." {#Ps 80:13}

{a} Metaphora Prosopopoetica.

Ver. 10. Now will I rise, saith the Lord, now.] Now, now, now. Emphasin habet ingeminatio vocis "nunc." This "now," thrice repeated, importeth both the opportunity of time and God's readiness to relieve. Cum duplicantur lateres, venit Moses, When things are at worst, they will mend, we say.

Now will I lift up myself.] Who have hitherto been held an underling, and inferior to the enemy.

Ver. 11. Ye shall conceive chaff, ye shall bring forth stubble.] Gravidi estis stramiue, parietis stipulum. So did Pharaoh, Antiochus, Julian, &c. So doth Antichrist and his champions, notwithstanding his bloody alarms to them, such as was that sounded out in the year 1582.

Ease, rota, ponto, funibus, igne neca.”

And that other of the King of France not many years since, exhorting him to kill up all the Protestants per Galliam stabulantes, the very words of the Pope's bull, that had any stable room in France.

Your breath as fire shall devour you.] Shall blow up the fire that shall consume your chaff and stubble. Your iniquity shall be your ruin. {#Eze 18:3-9} Turdus sibi malum cacat. Hic est gladius quem ipse fecisti: This is a sword of thine own making, said the soldier to Marius, when he ran him through with it.

Ver. 12. And the people shall be as the burning of lime.] As hard chalk stones, which, when burnt to make lime crumble to crattle.

As thorns cut up.] Sear thorns, that crackle under a pot, and are soon extinct. The Hebrews tell us that the Assyrian soldiers were burned by the angel with a secret fire—that is, with the pestilence, as Berosus, cited by Josephus, {a} witnesseth; and our prophet hinteth as much in many passages.

{a} Lib. x. cap. 2.

Ver. 13. Hear, ye that are afar off.] Longinqui, propinqui. God's great works are to be noted and noticed by all. The Egyptians heard of what God had done to the Assyrian army, and memorised it by a monument, as Herodotus {a} relateth.

Ver. 14. The sinners in Zion are afraid.] At the invasion of the Assyrian. Those that formerly fleared and jeered God's prophets and their menaces, now fear and are crest fallen, ready to run into an auger hole, as we say. It is as natural for guilt to breed fear and disquiet, as for putrid matter to breed vermin. Sinners, especially those in Zion, where they might be better, and are therefore the worse a great deal, have galled consciences, and want faith to fortify their hearts against the fear of death or danger; and hence those pitiful perplexities and convulsions of soul in the evil day. What wonder if, when they see all on fire, they ring their bells backwards? If, instead of mourning for their sins and making peace with God, as they ought to do, they mutter and growl against him, as these hypocrites do, for his too great severity?

Fearfulness hath surprised the hypocrites.] The Jews were a hypocritical nation. {#Isa 9:17} Epiphanius, when he left Constantinople, said that he left three great things behind him, viz., a great city, a great palace, et ingentem hypocrisin, and a great deal of hypocrisy. That facies hypocritica hypocritical faces of our nation is that facies hippocratica which physicians speak of, of a spent dying man, that looks ghastly. It is a mortal complexion, a sad prognostic. Oh that these frozen hearts of ours, since they must have a thaw or it will be worse, might melt here, and be unsoldered from hypocrisy, that we might be saved, though so as by fire, rather than to be reserved to be thawed with everlasting burnings, the portion of hypocrites. {#Mt 24:51} So might we "dwell with everlasting burnings," that is, with the knowledge of God's terrible presence and sight of his great judgments, whereof the hypocrites of the world are afraid, because this fire melteth off their paint, and threateneth to wash off their varnish with rivers of brimstone.

Who among us shall dwell?] Or, Who of us can but fear a devouring fire?

Ver. 15. He that walketh righteously,] q.d., Though you cannot, yet there are those that can, viz., "those that are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." Surely to such there is "no one condemnation." {#Ro 8:1} Christ standeth as a screen between the wrath of God and his elect, for whose sake also this paschal lamb was once for all roasted in the fire of his Father's indignation, whereby they are not only "delivered from the wrath to come," {#1Th 1:10} but also have "boldness and access with confidence by the faith of him." {#Eph 3:12 2:18}

He that walketh righteously.] Through whose whole life righteousness runneth as the woof doth through the web, as the blood doth through the veins, &c.

And speaketh uprightly.] Heb., Evennesses. Non blasphema, impudica, fescennina; not the language of hell, but of Canaan. See #Jas 3:2.

That despiseth the gain of oppressions.] The Mammon of iniquity; wealth gotten by force or fraud. A public person especially, as he should have nothing to lose, so he should have nothing to get; he should be above all price or sale. Nec prece nec precio, Neither by prayer nor request, should be his motto.

That shaketh his hands from holding of bribes.] He doth not only not do wrong, but not receive a gift, whereby he may be engaged or inclined to do it.

That stoppeth his ears from hearing of blood.] He not only does not shed it, but refuseth to hear any communing about such a business.

That shutteth his eyes from seeing of evil.] Lest his heart should thereby be betrayed, for vitiis nobis in animum per oculos est via, could a heathen {a} say. By the eyes evil getteth into the heart; by looking cometh lusting; and millions die of the wound in the eye.

{a} Quintil., Declam.

Ver. 16. He shall dwell on high.] Extra iactum, out of the gunshot, the reach of evils and enemies. Or in heaven shall he dwell with God in safety who is to the wicked a consuming fire. {#Isa 33:14}

His place of defence shall be the munitions of rocks.] Rocks within rocks; rocks beneath, above rocks; rocks so deep no pioneer can undermine them, so thick no cannon can pierce them, so high no ladder can scale them, &c.

Bread shall be given him; his waters shall not fail.] He shall have all that his heart can wish, or need require.

Ver. 17. Thine eyes shall see the King in his beauty.] Hezekiah in his pristine state and lustre; yea, more glorious and renowned than ever before. Jerome understandeth it of Christ reigning gloriously in heaven, and the saints looking from thence should see the earth afar off as little and contemptible, and say, “ O quam angusti sunt mortalium termini!

O quam angusti sunt mortalium animi!”

Augustine wished that he might have seen these three things, Romam in flore, Paulum in ore, Christum in corpore, Rome in the flourish, Paul in the pulpit, Christ in the body of flesh. Venerable Bede came after him, and wished rather that he might see his King, Christ, in his beauty, as he is now at the right hand of his Father, far outshining the brightest cherub in heaven.

Ver. 18. Thine heart shall meditate terror.] But thou shalt now think of it as "waters that are past," calling to mind what speeches among those late distractions had fallen from thee. {a}

Where is the scribe?] Or, The muster master of the Assyrian army? Verba sunt insultantium et exultantium, saith Piscator; they are the words of God's people insulting over the enemy, now overthrown and dispersed. See the like done by the apostle. {#1Co 1:10}

Ver. 19. Thou shalt not see a fierce people.] Or, Look not upon a fierce people; or, as some render it, a barbarous people, of a stammering tongue, that thou canst not understand. Such as are most of the schoolmen. Seven years, said one, are but sufficient to understand the barbarisms of Scotus upon Lombard. But rather look upon Zion.

Ver. 20. Look upon Zion, the city of our solemnities.] Where God is daily and duly served, and is therefore her shield and exceeding great reward. {#Ge 17:1} If that heathen king, hearing of his enemies' approach while he was sacrificing, could answer, Εγω δε θυω, I am serving my gods, and therefore fear not their force, how much more cause had Zion to be confident, and to sing. {as #Ps 46:1-7} See #Ps 48:12,13.

Ver. 21. But there the glorious Lord will be.] The Church must needs be invincible, because the glorious Lord is her champion, or "will do gallantly for us," as the words may be rendered. Her name is Jehovahshammah. {#Eze 48:35} The Lord is there, and how many reckon we him at? He alone is a potent army. {#Isa 52:12}

A place of broad rivers and streams.] Such as Mesopotamia was, or the garden of God. Or, He shall be instead of broad rivers, &c., even a river that shall not be drawn dry or sucked out, as Euphrates was by Cyrus when he took Babylon; a river that shall not fail the dwellers by, as Nile once at least did Egypt, for nine years together

“ Creditur Aegyptus caruisse iuvantibus arva

Imbribus; atque annis sicca fuisse novem.”

- Ovid, Art., lib. i.

but shall fill its banks and shores perpetually, and keep a full stock of streams and waters.

Wherein shall go no galley, nor gallant ship, / i.e., None of the enemy's navies shall annoy it. England had the experience of this in that famous 1588, when the seas were turreted with such a navy of ships, as her swelling waves could hardly be seen; and the flags, streamers, and ensigns so spread in the wind, that they seemed to darken even the sun; but the glorious God defeated them.

Ver. 22. For the Lord is our judge.] Ours in all relations, therefore we shall not die or do amiss. See #Hab 1:12, with the note. Our Judge will do us right; our Lawgiver will give us the best direction. See #Ne 9:13, with the note. Our King will see to our safety: "Let the children of Zion be joyful in their King." {#Ps 149:2}

Ver. 23. Thy tacklings are loosed.] Thy shipping, O Assyrian, is wrecked and dissipated. Ubi per furias tentoria; per vela, vexilla intelliguntur. The prophet elegantly expresseth the matter in seamen's terms.

Ver. 24. And the inhabitant shall not say, I am sick.] sc., By reason of the long and strait siege. None shall be so lame, {#Isa 33:23} or sick and in pain (as here), but that he shall be in case to pursue and prey upon the enemies.

The people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity.] Jehovah Rophe, or the physician, shall heal them on both sides, make them whole every whit. This is a most sweet promise, and highly to be prized by all that are heirs of the promises.

“ Optandum est ut sit mens sana in corpore sano.”

Chapter 34

Ver. 1. Come near, ye nations.] In this chapter and the next, the prophet, for the terror of the wicked, and comfort of the godly, summeth up what he had said before concerning the destruction of the enemies and the restoration of the Church. Eusebius, ^{a} with many other ancients, will have this chapter to be understood to be the end of the world and the last judgment; and further saith that Plato hath taken this place of the prophet Isaiah into his writings, and made it his own. Litera vero huius vaticinii de extremo iudicio non loguitur; but this cannot be the literal sense of the text, saith Scultetus. The Jewish doctors will needs understand these two chapters as a prophecy of their return into the Holy Land, when once Idumea shall be destroyed; and for this they allege #La 4:22, which yet proveth it not.

^{a} De Praep. Evang., lib. xi.

Ver. 2. For the indignation of the Lord is upon all nations.] Is, or shall be, upon all the Church's enemies, whether of former or latter time; even his "boiling wrath," as the Word signifieth.

He hath utterly destroyed them.] Or, He will make an anathema of them, as #Isa 34:5, the "people of my curse," devoted to destruction.

Ver. 3. Their slain also shall be cast out.] Buried with the burial of an ass, ^{#Jer 22:19} which Cicero somewhere calleth sepulturam insepultam and unburied grave. This may also befall such as for God's sake are slain all the day long; but to them it is no such judgment: Coelo tegitur qui caret urna.

And their stink shall come up out of their carcasses.] They stink alive as goats, as whited tombs, as walking dunghills; and now their dead carcasses also shall stink above ground.

And the mountains shall be melted with their blood.] Iuste omnino, because they moistened the earth with the blood of God's people, and dunged the land with their dead carcasses.

Ver. 4. And all the host of heaven shall be dissolved.] Inusitati supplicii atrocitas sic designatur. So great shall be the slaughter of the nations, that the heavenly bodies shall seem to be sensible of it, and amazed at it, and the whole heaven to be rolled together as a scroll, lest it should be forced to behold it. In a bloody fight between Amurath III, King of Turks, and Lazarus, Despot of Servia, many thousands fell on both sides; the Turkish histories, to express the terror of the day, vainly say that the angels in heaven, amazed with that hideous noise, for that time forgot the heavenly hymns wherewith they always glorify God.

Ver. 5. For my sword shall be bathed in heaven.] Heb., Drunk, or drenched—i.e., In coelo decretum est ut inebrietur; whencesoever the sword comes, it is bathed in heaven, hath its commission from God (#Jer 47:6,7; see #Jer 46:9), and as a drunken man reeleth to and fro, so the sword, when once in commission, roveth up and down, and rideth circuit usually. {#Eze 14:17}

Behold, it shall come down upon Idumea,] i.e., Upon the Edomites, who were assidui et acerrimi hostes Iudaeorum, bitter enemies to the Jews, though both nations came from Isaac, both were circumcised; so are now the Romish Edomites to the Churches of Christ, with whose blood they are red all over. {#Re 17:6} The Hebrews understand here by Idumea, Rome.

Ver. 6. The sword of the Lord is filled with blood, &c.] That is, It maketh clean work, as the blood and fat were in sacrifices consumed, {#Le 1:16,17} and this execution was no less pleasing to God than some solemn sacrifice.

For the Lord hath a sacrifice in Bozrah.] The metropolis of Idumea; Ptolemy calleth it Botsra. And it prefigured Rome, saith Piscator, the chief city and seat of Antichrist's kingdom.

Ver. 7. And the unicorns shall come down.] Monocerotes, qui interimi possunt, capi non possunt, creatures of untameable fierceness; or rhinoceros, as the margin hath it—he meaneth the great ones.

Ver. 8. For the controversy of Zion,] i.e., Of the Church, both Jewish and Christian, saith Piscator. {compare #Re 18:2}

Ver. 9. And the streams thereof shall be turned into pitch.] Like the lake of Sodom, which is near to Idumea, and whereof Josephus {a} writes, that an ox, having all his legs bound, will not sink into it, the water is so thick and pitchy. Strabo, though a stranger to this prophecy, attesteth the accomplishment of it. Lyra saith that in some part of Idumea there is still ascending a smoke of fire and brimstone, as out of Mount Etna in Sicily. {b} And Hyperius thinketh that the Edomites are here further threatened with hell torments. It should seem so by the next words.

{b} Geog., lib. xvi.

Ver. 10. It shall not be quenched night nor day; the smoke of it shall go up for ever.] See #Re 14:11,18:18 19:3. And observe how John the divine picks out the choicest passages of the Old Testament, and polishes therewith his Revelation.

None shall pass through it for ever,] i.e., Incolendi animo, to dwell there; passengers did pass through it, and wondered at God's dreadful judgments thereon. {#Jer 49:17}

Ver. 11. The cormorant and the bittern shall possess it.] God cannot satisfy himself in saying what he will do to the Edomites, because they had dealt by revenge, and had taken vengeance with a despiteful heart to destroy the Church, for the old satanical hatred. {as #Eze 25:15} He will turn in those animalis faeda, fera et terribilia, to dwell in their land; whereby is noted extreme devastation, which is here in many exquisite words (more propemodum poetico) described.

And he shall stretch out upon it.] So that men shall in vain think of rebuilding and repeopling it.

Ver. 12. They shall call the nobles thereof to the kingdom.] The Venetians have magistrates called pregadi; because at first men were prayed to take the office, and to help to govern the State: but here were none left for such a purpose.

Ver. 13, A court for owls.] Or, Ostriches. See on #Isa 34:11.

Ver. 14. The wild beasts of the desert.] Heb., Ziim et jiim. See #Isa 13:21,22, where these monstrous creatures are said to dance: whence Basil noteth, that men learned of devils to dance, and another {a} saith that a dance is a circle, the centre whereof is the devil, the circumference all his angels.

And the satyr shall cry to his fellow.] Heb., The rough or hairy one. Chald., Daemones inter se colludent, the devils shall play among themselves; Satan is a rough harsh spirit; so are his. See #Le 17:7.

{a} Conr. Clingius.

Ver. 15. There shall the great owl make her nest.] Heb., Kippoz. The Hebrews themselves agree not what creatures these are here mentioned, so far are they fallen from the knowledge of the Scripture. Their tale about Lilits, once Adam's first wife, but now a screech owl or an evil spirit, is not worthy the mentioning.

Ver. 16. Seek ye out of the book of the Lord.] Sciscitamini ex libro Domini, the Holy Bible, which Bishop Bonner's chaplain called, in scorn of the martyrs, Your little pretty God's book. Another Bohemian blasphemer for Biblia called it Vitlia, which in the Bohemian language signifieth vomit. But let us search the Scriptures—and particularly this prophecy commanded to be written in a book {#Isa 30:8} -and compare the truth of these predictions with the events.

None shall want her mate.] Some write of the asp, he never wandereth alone without his companion; and none of these birds of desolation want their mate; so craft and cruelty do ever go together in the Church's enemies.

Ver. 17. And he hath cast the lot for them, / i.e., For those creatures of prey aforementioned.

From generation, / i.e., For many generations.

Chapter 35

Ver. 1. The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them.] The Edomites, and other enemies, have had their part. It hath been sufficiently said, "Woe unto the wicked, it shall be ill with him; for the reward of his hands shall be given him." And now the prophet is bidden to say to the righteous, to tell him so from the Lord, that it "shall be well with him; for the reward of his hands shall be given him." {#Isa 3:10,11} The "wilderness" and the "desert," that is, the poor people of God that have been oppressed and slighted in this world, shall be restored into a happy and flourishing estate. The Church shall have her halcyon days under Hezekiah, but especially under Christ, she shall have it both in temporals and spirituals. {#Isa 35:2}

Ver. 2. The glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it, the excellency of Carmel, &c.] Outward blessings shall be heaped upon God's people; even all that heart can wish, or need require.

They shall see the glory of the Lord.] Spiritual blessings in heavenly things in Christ Jesus shall be conferred upon them also, even every good gift and perfect giving from the Father of lights,

“ *Qui icturatos intexit floribus hortos,
Quique iubet rutilis albescere lilia campis.* ”

Ver. 3. Strengthen ye the weak hands,] q.d., Cheer up, my hearts; be of good courage, and God shall strengthen your hearts, all ye that hope in the Lord. Comfort ye also one another with these words, and build up each other in your most holy faith; and I will show you how, and in what terms, you shall do it.

Ver. 4. Say to them that are of a fearful heart,] Inconsideratis; to them that consider not the promises, but "forget the consolations," {#παράκλησις, #Heb 12:5} so poring upon their sins, that they see not their Saviour.

Behold, your God will come with vengeance.] He will tread Satan under your feet shortly. {#Ro 16:20}

Even your God with a recompense.] Diabolo par pari retribuet Christus, saith Jerome: Christ will be even with the devil. He had got one of Christ's disciples—Judas; and, to cry quittance, Christ got one of his—Paul. Cyprian was wont thus to comfort his hearers, Veniet Antichristus, sed superveniet Christus, Antichrist will come, but Christ will not be long behind him.

Ver. 5. Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened.] This was fulfilled corporally in cures wrought by Christ, {#Mt 9:27 11:5} and spiritually in the preaching of the gospel by the efficacy of his Spirit. {#Ac 26:18 16:14} Apollonius Tyanaeus could never do such miracles, nor any other. This showeth that Jesus of Nazareth was the true Messiah.

Ver. 6. Then shall the lame man leap as an hart.] As that impotent man did, {#Ac 3:8} and those Loripedes {#Heb 12:13}

And the tongue of the dumb sing.] As good old Zacharias did, {#Lu 1:64} not so much for his speech restored, or his son received, as for his Saviour now at hand; and as did those that sang, "He hath done all things well; he maketh both the deaf to hear, and the dumb to speak," {#Mr 7:37} yea, to utter the great things of God, and to speak good of his name. Lo here, saith Luther, miracles to confirm the gospel to be of God, against those that deride his ministers, saying, They cannot make so much as a lame horse sound: for all they in whose hearts it taketh effect, of blind are made to see, of deaf to hear, of lame to go, and of dumb to speak.

For in the wilderness shall waters break out.] This, and that which followeth in the next verse, Junius maketh to be the matter of their song—viz., the grace of God abundantly communicated to his Church. See #Joh 7:38,39. The Jews dream that when their Messiah cometh, the Red Sea shall again be divided and the rock cloven, much water gushing out, &c. Thus they work themselves into the fool's paradise of a sublime dotage, by misunderstanding this text. Ver. 7. And the parched ground, &c.] See on #Isa 35:6.

Ver. 8. And an highway shall be there,] i.e., In the Church of Christ.

And a way.] εν δια δυνου, The king's highway to heaven, arcta et ampla; latet et lucet.

The way of holiness.] Or, The way of the sanctuary.

But it shall be for those.] Those beneficiaries of Christ mentioned in #Isa 35:5,6; the ransomed of the Lord. {#Isa 35:10}

The wayfaring men, though fools.] Simple Christians.

Shall not err.] Miss their way, or miscarry in it.

Ver. 9. No lion shall be there.] The devil, that roaring lion, nor his acturaries, tyrants and heretics, shall haunt these holy highways. God will preserve his people from all devoratory evils, as Tertullian calleth them, {#2Th 3:3} "that wicked one, the devil, shall not once touch them," {#1Jo 5:18} so as to thrust his deadly sting into them.

Ver. 10. And the ransomed of the Lord.] Those happy ones. {#De 33:29}

Shall return.] To the Lord, from whom they had deeply revolted.

With songs.] As they were wont to do in their sacred solemnities.

And everlasting joy upon their heads.] As an unfadeable crown; {#1Pe 1:5 5:4} they shall pass from the jaws of death to the joys of heaven. {a}

Joy and gladness, / i.e., Outward and inward, say some.

And sorrow and sighing.] Their joys shall be sincere and constant.

Ver. 9. The writing of Hezekiah.] Scriptum confessionis, a song of thanksgiving set forth by Hezekiah, and here inserted by the prophet Isaiah, as a public instrument and lasting monument of God's great goodness to him in his late recovery; such a thankful man is worth his weight in the gold of Ophir. Heathens in such a case were wont to hang up tables in the temples of their gods. Papists build chapels, erect altars, hang up memories, as they call them, and vow presents to their he saints and she saints. But among us, alas! it is according to the Italian proverb, {a} When the disease is once removed, God is utterly defrauded:

“Aegrotus surgit, sed pia vota iacent.”

We may he wondered at, not without cause, as the Emperor Constantine marvelled at his people that were newly become Christians: I marvel, said he, how it comes to pass that many of my people are worse now than before they were Christians.

{a} Sciapato il morbo, fraudato il sancto.

Ver. 10. I said in the cutting off of my days.] When I looked upon myself as a dead man. Here he telleth us what passed between God and him while he lay desperately sick. The utmost of a danger escaped is to be recognised and recorded. This will both instruct the judgment, enlarge the heart, and open the mouth.

I shall go to the gates of the grave.] He maketh the grave to have gates, either by a poetic fiction, or else by a proverbial expression. So "the gates of death." {#Ps 9:13 107:18 1Sa 2:6}

I am deprived of the residue of my years,] sc., That I might have lived in a natural course. Vox haec queritantis quidem est: Quis enim vult mori? prorsus nemo. Nature shunneth death as its slaughter man.

Ver. 11. I said, I shall not see the Lord.] In the glass of his ordinances, his love whereunto made Hezekiah so loath to depart; as also his delight in the communion of saints, and his desire to do more good among them on all occasions. This made good Paul "in a strait" also. {#Php 1:23,24} I loved the man, said Theodosius concerning Ambrose, for that when he died he was more solicitous of the Church's welfare than of his own.

Even the Lord.] Non videbo Iah Iah. I shall not see the Lord of the Lord, Deum Dei, vel Deum de Deo, { a} -that is, Christ in the flesh, as I had well hoped to have done: so some sense it. Others say he redoubleth the word "Jah" to express his ardent affection to God's service, and to intimate his desire of life to that purpose. {#Isa 38:22}

{a} Leo Castrius.

Ver. 12. Mine age is departed.] Or, My generation, or my habitation: here I have no settled abode, no continuing city, but am flitting, as a shepherd's shed.

I have cut off like a weaver my life.] By my sins I have shortened my days. {as #Ge 38:7,10} Or rather, God as a weaver that hath finished his web, cutteth me out of the loom of life. We know what the poets fain of the fates, “Clotho colum baiulat, Lachesis trahit, Atropos occat.”

He will cut me off with pining sickness.] Or, From the thrum, for the same Hebrew word signifieth both, because of the thinness and weakness of it.

From day even to night.] So that by night I shall be dead, as they story of the Ephemeroibii and as Aristotle writes that the river Hypanis in Thracia every day bringeth forth little bladders out of which come certain flies, which are thus bred in the morning, fledged at noon, and dead at night.

Ver. 13. I reckoned until morning.] And then, at utmost, I thought there would be an end of my life and pain together; for what through troubles without and terrors within, he was in a woe case, even as if a lion had broke all his bones. Hoc sentinnt qui magnis febribus aestuant, saith an interpreter. Now, whereas some say all die of a fever, let us take care we die not of a cold shaking fit of fear.

Ver. 14. Like a crane or a swallow, so did I chatter.] Ita pipiebam; peraptae sunt similitudines. Broken petitions coming from a broken heart are of singular avail with God. {#Ps 51:17} Ah Pater brevissima quidem vex est, sed omnia complectitur, saith Luther—i.e., Ah, Father, is a short prayer, but very complexive and effectual. So is the prayer here recorded.

O Lord, I am oppressed; undertake for me.] {a} Miserere mihi misero. Hezekiah, though a most holy man, begged pardon at his death, and flees to Christ, his surety. So did Augustine (he prayed over the seven penitential psalms) and Fulgentius, and Archbishop Ussher. Some render it Pertexe me, weave me out, lengthen my life to its due period.

Ver. 15. What shall I say?] This he seemeth to speak in a way of wondering at God's goodness in delivering him from so great a death. The like doth the apostle in #Ro 8:31, "What shall we then say to these things?"

He hath both spoken unto me, and himself hath done it.] He no sooner bade me be well, but he made me so. {a} Thus he attributeth his recovery to the most faithful promise of God, and not to the lump of figs, &c.

I shall go softly all my years in the bitterness of my soul.] Or, I shall go quietly and cheerfully all my years after my soul's bitterness—sc., When it is past and gone. {b}

Ver. 16. O Lord, by these things men live.] By thy promises so performed "the just do live by faith," and live long in a little while; for life consisteth in action, and some live more in a day than others do in a year. An elephant liveth two hundred years, saith Aristotle; three hundred and fifty, saith Philostratus; and yet man, though of much shorter a continuance, is not inferior to an elephant. For this is not the best thing in nature, saith Scaliger, to live longest, but to live to best purpose. Now, man's life is a way to life eternal. Other creatures have what they live for: not so man, while here.

And in all these things is the life of my spirit.] The godly esteem of life by that stirring they find in their souls; else they lament as over a dead soul.

So wilt thou recover me.] Or, Hast thou recovered me?

Ver. 17. Behold, for peace I had great bitterness.] Mar Mar; the approach of death was to this good man bitter bitterness, and yet Christ had taken away from him the sting or gall of death, so that he might better say than Agag did, "Surely the bitterness of death is past," or than Lucan doth of the Gauls and Britons.

—“Animmque capaces Mortis.”

“Life and spacious corpse.”

But thou hast in love to my soul.] Or, Thou hast embraced my soul out of the corrupting pit. Complectendi verbum, affectum plane paternum, et stadium iuvandi singulare exprimit.

For thou hast cast all my sins behind thy back.] As an old overworn evidence, that is out of date, and of no use. Here it is well noted that we must set our sins before our face, if we would have God to cast them behind his back. {#Ps 50:21 51:3}

Ver. 18. For the grave cannot praise thee,] i.e., Palam et cum aliis, openly and exemplarily. See #Ps 6:5. {See Trapp on "Ps 6:5"} David desires to live for no other end, and so Hezekiah, than to be glorifying of God.

They that go down into the pit.] Of the grave; so of despair. It is a sin for any man to say, I am a reprobate, for it keeps him in sin, and cuts the sinews of endeavour.

Ver. 19. The living, the living, he shall praise thee.] Those that live the life of nature, if withal they live the life of grace, and so are living living, and not "dead while they live": for the wicked cannot praise God; they can say God a thank, and that is all. But as it is with the hand dial—the finger of the dial standeth at twelve, when the dial hath not moved one minute; so though their tongues are forward in praises, yet their hearts stand still. What they do this way is but "dead work."

The father to the son shall make known.] And for this end parents may desire to live longer. Hezekiah did his part, no doubt, by wicked Manasseh, who also at length repented and was saved.

Ver. 20. The Lord was ready to save.] Heb., The Lord to save. Servati sumus ut serviamus. Hezekiah was the better for his sickness: God had brought health out of it, as he doth out of all his, by bringing the body of death into a consumption.

Therefore we will sing my songs.] Quales quaeso illi? saith Scultetus; what kind of songs would he sing in the house of the Lord and in the hearing of all the people, as long as he had a day to live? Surely this here recorded among and above the rest, though it set forth his queritations and infirmities: Deprimunt se sancti ut Deus exaltetur. The saints gladly abase themselves, if thereby God may be exalted.

Ver. 21. Let them take a lump of figs.] Commenciatur hic usus medicinae. The patient must pray, but withal make use of means; trust God, but not tempt him. {See Trapp on "2Ki 20:7"}

Ver. 22. {See Trapp on "2Ki 20:8"}

Chapter 39

Ver. 1. See #2Ki 20:12 &c. {See Trapp on "2Ki 20:12"} &c.

Chapter 40

Ver. 1. Comfort ye, comfort ye my people.] Hitherto hath been the comminatory part of this prophecy: followeth now the consolatory. Here beginneth the gospel of the prophet Isaiah, and holds on to the end of the book. The good people of his time had been forewarned by the foregoing chapter of the Babylonian captivity, Those in later times, not only during the captivity, but under Antiochus and other tyrants, were ready to think themselves utterly cast off, because heavily afflicted. See #Isa 40:27 of this chapter, with #La 5:22. Here, therefore, command is given for their comfort, and that gospel be preached to the penitent; the word here used signifieth, first to repent, then to comfort. {#Isa 15:35 Isa 12:24} This our prophet had been a Boanerges, a thundering preacher, all the fore part of his life. See one instance for all, {#Isa 24} where, Pericles-like, fulgurat, intonat, totam terram permiscet, &c. Now toward his latter end, and when he had one foot in the grave, the other in heaven, he grew more mellow and melleous, as did likewise Mr Lever, Mr Perkins, Mr Whately, and some other eminent and earnest preachers that might be named, setting himself wholly in a manner to comfort the abject and feeble minded; which also he doth with singular dexterity and efficacy. This redoubled "Comfort ye," is not without its emphasis; but that which followeth {#Isa 40:2} is a very hive of heavenly honey. {a}

Ver. 2. Speak ye comfortably.] Speak to the heart, as #Ge 34:3 Ho 2:14. Cheer her up, speak to her with utmost earnestness, that your words may work upon her and stick-by her; do it solidly, not frigidly.

That her warfare is accomplished.] Militiam, not malitiam, as the Vulgate hath it; the word signifieth also a set term of time. See #Da 9:2 Ga 4:4. God hath limited the saints' sufferings. {#Re 2:10} Some by warfare here understand that hard and troublesome pedagogy of Moses' law, that yoke importable, {#Ac 15:10} taken away by Christ.

That her iniquity is pardoned.] Heb., Her iniquity is accepted: perfectam esse poenam eius, so Piscator rendereth it. She might be under God's hand, though her sins were pardoned. The palsyman heard, "Son, thy sins are forgiven thee," some while before he heard, "Take up thy bed and walk."

That she hath received of the Lord's hand double,] i.e., Abundantly and in a large measure, satis superque, so much as to her merciful Father seemeth over and above, more than enough. "She hath received double for all her sins": and yet death is the just hire of the least sin. {#Ro 6:23} But this is the language of God's compassions rolled together and kindled into repentings; Jerusalem herself was of another judgment. {#Ezr 9:13} "Our God hath punished us less than our sins," and yet he reckoneth that we "fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ." {#Col 1:24}

Ver. 3. The voice of him that crieth.] See #Mt 3:3 Joh 1:25, {See Trapp on "Mt 3:3"} {See Trapp on "Joh 1:25"} but Luke citeth this text more fully than the other evangelists, applying it to the Baptist crying in the wilderness—sc., of Judea, where he first preached, or, as some sense it, in the ears of a waste and wild people. Hereby is meant the world, saith one, {a} void of God's grace, barren in all virtue, having no pleasing abode, nor sure direction of any good way in it, being full of horror and accursed.

{a} Diod.

Ver. 4. Every valley shall be exalted.] Terms taken from the custom of princes coming into a place—viz., to have their way cleared, and passages facilitated. See on #Mt 3:3.

Ver. 5. And the glory of the Lord shall be revealed,] i.e., Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, {#Jas 2:1} shall appear in the flesh. Some interpreters understand this whole sermon, ad literam, concerning Christ and redemption wrought by him, yet with an allusion to the Jews' deliverance out of Babylon; for this was a type of that, like as Cyrus also was of Christ.

Ver. 6. The voice.] Or, A voice—sc., in vision.

What shall I cry? All flesh is grass.] This is taught by every philosopher, saith Sasbout: but never is it taught effectually till cried to the heart by God's Word and Spirit, for which reason also it is not uttered here without a preparative, by way of dialogue, to stir up to attention.

All flesh is grass.] Not only as grass, but is grass: we are all but dying men; death hath already taken hold of us, and doth every day feed upon us insensibly. To live is but to lie dying. The Jews at this day, when they return from burying a corpse, cast grass over their heads; either to signify that all flesh is grass, or else their hope of a resurrection.

And all the goodness thereof.] Anything eximious or excellent in man must needs vanish, when the glory of the Lord is revealed. {#Isa 40:5} The sight of God makes all else little.

As the flower of the field.] Which is more apt to be blasted, cropped, or trodden down, than the flower of the garden.

“ *Esse, fuisse, fore, tria florida sunt sine flore:
Nam simul omne perit, quod fuit, est, et erit.* ”

Ver. 7. Because the Spirit of the Lord bloweth upon it.] Or, when the breath of the Lord bloweth upon it. God can easily blow men to destruction, dissipate them as so many vile dust heaps. {#Job 4:9 34:14,15 Ps 104:29 Da 2:34,35 Zec 4:6}

Surely the people is grass.] Have we not heard; have we not seen from the beginning; doth not every day's experience seal to it, that all flesh is grass? yea, hath not God oft heard our attestations? We shake our heads, we confess it is true, &c., and yet we lay it not rightly to heart, though so deeply assevered and assured us.

Ver. 8. But the word of our God shall stand for ever,] q.d., Though the elect also as well as others are grass, frail and fading creatures, yet the grace of God wrought in their hearts by the gospel is stable and lasting. See #1Pe 1:23. {See Trapp on "1Pe 1:23"} And so necessary is this whole doctrine here delivered, that the ministers of the gospel are commanded here not to write it only, but to speak it: nor that only, but to cry it also with all possible affection and power of enforcement.

Ver. 9. Oh Zion, that bringest good tidings.] That evangelist. The gospel is the sum of all the good news in the world. Christ's incarnation (bisher; the word here used, cometh of bashar; which signifieth flesh), was "glad tidings of great joy to all people." {#Lu 2:10}

Get thee up into the high mountain.] Zion was itself a high mountain, yet is bidden to ascend into a higher, for the better promulgation of the gospel.

Lift it up, be not afraid,] viz., For persecution, which is evangelii genius, the evil angel that doggeth the gospel at the heels, as Calvin wrote to the French king.

Behold your God.] Behold the Messiah, who hath been so long expected, is now exhibited.

Ver. 10. Behold, the Lord God will come with strong hand.] Or, The Lord God will come against the mighty {a} -i.e., Christ against the devil and his agents, whom he shall vanquish, and give them their due. See #1Jo 3:6 Mt 12:29 Joh 12:31 Col 2:15 Heb 2:14).

And his arm shall rule for him.] Or, His arm shall rule over him—i.e., over Satan.

{a} Piscat., Diod.

Ver. 11. He shall feed his flock like a shepherd.] That good Shepherd shall, the Lord Jesus. {#Joh 10:11} See #Ps 23:1, {See Trapp on "Ps 23:1"}

He shall gather the lambs with his arm.] The Lord hath a great care of his little ones, like as he had of the weaker tribes. In their march through the wilderness, in their several companies or brigades, he put a strong tribe to two weak tribes; as Judah to Issachar and Zebulon, lest they should faint or fail.

Ver. 12. Who hath measured the waters.] Who but God alone. Totus est in hoc libro, ut confirmet nos in fide. God made heaven, earth, and sea, in number, weight, and measure, as an architect; therefore he wanteth neither power nor wisdom to work in and for his people.

And comprehended the dust of the earth in a measure.] In a tierce, or in "three fingers"; for he spoke before of the "hollow" and "span of God's hand."

Ver. 13. Who hath directed the Spirit of the Lord?] Who was then of his council when he made the universe? None but his own essential wisdom. {#Pr 8:30} See #Ro 11:34,35. {See Trapp on "Ro 11:34"} {See Trapp on "Ro 11:34"}

Ver. 14. With whom took he counsel?] See #Isa 40:13.

Ver. 15. Behold, the nations are as the drop of a bucket.] Quota igitur es tu istius guttae particula? What a small parcel art thou then of that small drop? saith an ancient.

As the small dust of the balance.] That weigheth nothing; yea, all men together laid in the balance with vanity itself will ascend or tilt up. {a} {#Ps 62:9}

He taketh up the isles as a very little thing.] Or, He taketh up and throweth away the isles as powder.

{a} Mira igitur superbiae nostrae stultitia. -Oecolamp.

Ver. 16. And Lebanon is not sufficient to burn.] So infinitely great is God; so absolutely insufficient is man to give God satisfaction. Let those think on this who talk of setting off with God, and of making amends, by their good deeds, for their bad.

Ver. 17. All nations before him are as nothing.] Agnosce ergo virium tuarum ουδενειαν. See therefore thine own nothingness, and learn to vilify, yea, to nullify thyself before God, as Agur, {#Pr 30:2} and as David, who was a worm and no man {#Ps 22:6} Reiectamentum hominis et nullificamen populi, {a}

{a} Tertul.

Ver. 18. To whom then will ye liken God?] A sin which the Jews were exceeding prone unto, and would be tempted to, when in captivity at Babylon; here therefore they have an antidote provided beforehand. The voice of the gospel is, "Little children, keep yourselves from idols." {#1Jo 5:21} {See Trapp on "1Jo 5:21"}

Ver. 19. The workman melteth a graven image.] That may be afterward graven and gilded over.

And casteth silver chains.] To fasten it to the place; or, he raileth it in. Et nisi homini Deus placuerit, Deus non erit, saith Tertullian. Numa, second king of Romans, saw this great vanity, and therefore forbade images of the gods in temples. {a} So do the Turks at this day to the shame of Papists' idolomania.

{a} Plutarch. de Isid. et Osir.

Ver. 20. He that is so impoverished—chooseth a tree.] Which therehence may well say, —

“ *Olim truncus eram ficulnus, inutile lignum,
Cum faber incertus scamnum, faceretne Priapum,
Maluit esse Deum; Deus inde ego:*” —

He chooseth a tree that will not rot.] Which yet is hard to do; the cypress tree is most likely. But what goodly gods were those that could not keep themselves from rotting.

A cunning workman.] Somewhat better than he who made the ugly rood of Cockram, whereof when they complained to the Mayor of Doncaster, he advised them to clap a pair of horns on the head of it, and then instead of a god, it would make an excellent devil.

Ver. 21. Have ye not known? have ye not heard?] Both Jews and Gentiles went against the light; the former of the word, the latter of their own consciences, in thus "changing the glory of the incorruptible God into the similitude of a corruptible creature." {#Ro 1:23} Their ignorance was wilful and affected; some render this text, "Will ye not know? will ye not hear?" Idolaters are brutish and blockish; they that make them are like unto them.

Ver. 22. It is he that sitteth upon the circle of the earth.] As sovereign, and is he fit to be portrayed? In Thebes, a town of Egypt, they painted God in the likeness of a man blowing an egg out of his mouth, to signify that he made the round world by his word. {a} Others set him forth as an emperor with a globe in one hand, and a light bolt in the other. Peucer and others tell us, that if there were a path made round the circle of the earth, an able footman might easily go it in nine hundred days.

{a} Plut. in Numa.

Ver. 23. That bringeth princes to nothing.] After their part acted here a while, they go off the stage of life, and are seen no more. Augustus Caesar said, that his life was nothing else but a kind of a comedy; and that he had acted his part, as became him, and therefore, at his death, he called for a Plaudite. applause.

Ver. 24. Yea, they shall not be planted.] They are like grass, that is neither planted nor well rooted; but as weeds that grow on the top of the water, vel tanquam podii folium, quod mane candidum, meridie purpureum, vespere caeruleum aspicitur. {a}

And he shall blow upon them.] Two fits of an ague shook to death great Tamerlane, in the midst of his preparations for the conquest of Turkey.

{a} Jerome.

Ver. 25. To whom then will ye liken me?] See #Isa 40:18,19.

Ver. 26. Lift up your eyes on high.] Who is there, saith a heathen, {a} that looketh up toward heaven, and presently perceiveth not that there is a God? we may well add, and an Almighty God? Why then should the vanities of the heathen come in competition with him? or why should Jacob say, "My way is hid from the Lord," &c., {as #Isa 40:27} as if God neglected them, or were weary of helping them. {#Isa 40:28}

And behold who hath created these things.] Without tool or toil. {#Isa 40:28} And shall the creature be worshipped rather than the Creator, "God blessed for ever."

That bringeth out their host by number.] As if he had them set down in his muster rolls. Astronomers take upon them to number and name the chiefest of the stars; reliquas nomenclationi Dei permitttere coguntur. Abraham could not number them, {#Ge 15:5} and yet Aratus and Eudoxus vainly vaunted that they had done it.

{a} Cicero.

Ver. 27. How sayest thou, O Jacob, and speakest, &c., J q.d., Fie for shame, what unbecoming language is this for such! Doth God know and order the stars, and hath he cast away the care of his people Never think it; let it be enough, and too much, for a heathen to say, —

“ *Saepe mihi dubiam traxit sententia mentem,
Curarent super; terras, an nullus inesset
Rector, et incerto fluerent mortalia casu.* ”
- Claudian.

And my judgment is passed over, J q.d., I thought I should have had a day of hearing ere this; sed comperendinor.

Ver. 28. He fainteth not, nor is weary.] Or, He is neither tired nor toiled, viz., as earthly judges may be. And his own people, for thinking otherwise of him, are here taken up as tartly as those idolaters before, {#Isa 40:21} with, "Hast thou not known? hast thou not heard?"

There is no searching of his understanding.] Submit to him therefore as to the only wise God. This the very heathens taught men to do, as Plutarch. {a}

Ver. 29. He giveth power to the faint.] How then should he himself faint? or why should any good man's heart fail him? The Jews among their benedictions (whereof they are bound to say a hundred every day), have this for one, Blessed be God who giveth power to the faint.

Ver. 30. Even the youths shall faint.] All that trust to their own strength shall tire out. Like as the hare, that trusteth to the swiftness of her legs, is at length overtaken and torn in pieces; when the coney, that flieth to the holes in the rocks, doth easily avoid the dogs that pursue her.

Ver. 31. Shall renew their strength.] Heb., Shall change, quotidie seipsis fortiores prodeuntes. By the new "supplies of the Spirit," {#Php 1:19} they shall pass from strength to strength. {#Ps 84:7} "They shall mount as eagles." {see #Ps 103:5} R. Saadiah saith, that every tenth year the eagle mounteth up to the orb of the sun, singeth her wings there, and so reneweth her age, till she be a hundred.

Chapter 41

Ver. 1. Keep silence before me, O islands,] i.e., O islanders (so the Hebrews called all that were beyond sea to them), with whom God, being about to contest, calleth for silence that he may be heard. The people of Rome could hardly digest a Σιωπησατε, or keep silence from their emperor Adrian, as too severe; {a} but when God thundereth it, men wriggle into their holes as so many worms.

And let the people renew their strength.] Come as strong as they can into the court, with their best advocates and arguments, since they are to debate the cause concerning their religion.

Let them come near together in judgment.] This is a wonderful condescension. En in quantum se demittat Deus!

{a} Dio in Adrian.

Ver. 2. Who raised up the righteous man from the east?] Who but myself? Which of your idols can boast of such a man as Abraham was, like as I can?

Called him to his foot.] Making him follow his call with a blind obedience, for he winked and put himself into God's holy hand, to be led at his pleasure. He "knew not whither he went," {#Heb 11:8} nor much cared, so long as he had God by the hand, or might follow him as a guide, step after step.

He gave the nations before him.] #Ge 14:14. His posterity also prevailed exceedingly. And thus God stoppeth the mouths of those idolaters who insulted over the Israelites, because afflicted and subdued by other nations, as Cicero doth in his oration for Quintus Flaccus, extolling therefore their idols above the true God.

Ver. 3. He pursued them, and passed in safety.] He got an unbloody victory over the four kings, not losing a man of all those unexpert soldiers. This was a great mercy, if not a miracle. War is usually utrique triste; no matter who wins a sorrow, victory is oft like a golden fishhook, which, lost or broken, cannot be paid for with that it taketh.

Ver. 4. Who hath wrought and done it?] Here the Gentiles should have answered for God, which because they did not, but were senselessly silent, therefore he answereth by a description of himself.

Calling the generations from the beginning.] Giving them their being, and having them at a beck.

I the Lord, the first, and with the last.] πρωτος τε και υστατος, εν τε μεσοι σιν. This was anciently believed concerning God, as Plato {a} testifieth. A te principium tibi desinet. {b}

{a} De Leg., lib. iv.

{b} Virgil.

Ver. 5. The isles saw it.] The heathens were convinced by the former arguments, yet not converted; they were afraid, and yet they came together to confirm themselves mutually in their abominable idolatries.

Yea, they drew near.] As it were, to justify their idolatries before the Lord. Such is the desperate obstinace of obdurate sinners. Pharaoh menaced Moses, even during that palpable darkness. The Philistines were afraid when they saw the ark of the covenant brought into the field, and yet they encourage one another to fight against Israel. {#Isa 4:8,9} The thief on the cross was under the arrest of death, and yet railed. Felix trembled, and yet expected a bribe from St Paul. There is a cold sweat sitteth on all the limbs of Antichrist at this day, and yet they repent not of their idolatries, nor murders, nor sorceries, nor fornication, nor thefts, {#Re 9:20,21} but defend them all they can.

Ver. 6. They helped every one his neighbour.] Thus those desperate idolaters did from the first. Eusebius {a} telleth us, that in the seventh year of Abraham, Ninus, the founder of Nineveh, set up an image of his father Belus, which was worshipped after his death. So did other princes, by his example, not moved with God's mercies showed to Abraham, who worshipped the true God alone, setting up altars to him wherever he came.

Ver. 7. So the carpenter encouraged the goldsmith.] Because no small gain was brought hereby unto these craftsmen. {#Ac 19:24,25} The Jewish doctors tell us that Terah, the father of Abraham, was an image maker at Ur of the Chaldees, till God called him thence. Hyperius saith, that all these words are to be taken as pronounced with derision and contempt, that so the vanity of idols may the more plainly be perceived, since they have no more worth than is given them by their worshippers.

Ver. 8. But thou, Israel, art my servant.] And it was for thy sake, and for thy settlement, that I have dealt so long with those odious idolaters, whom else I would not once look toward nor commune with, as he said, #2Ki 3:14.

The seed of Abraham, my friend.] This style was a higher honour to Abraham than if God had engraven his name in the orbs of heaven. {See Trapp on "Jas 2:23"} Hushai was David's "friend," and Augustus vouchsafed to give Virgil the name of "Amicus." This was a special favour, but not like that in the text.

Ver. 9. Thou whom I have taken from the ends of the earth,] sc., In the loins of Abraham thy progenitor.

And called thee from the chief men thereof.] Called thee and culled thee out of the grandees of the Chaldees, the rich, the potent, and the honourable, separate from the common sort, setting thee above the kings of the earth. {#Ps 89:27}

Ver. 10. Fear thou not, for I am with thee.] Cordialibus, ut ita dicam, verbis, Deus hoc eloquitur, - As long as a child hath his father by the hand, he feareth none. Quid timet hominem homo in sinu Dei positus? -What should he who lieth in God's own bosom fear any man alive? Is not God's presence security sufficient?

I will strengthen thee; I will help thee, &c.] I will, I will, I will. Oh the rhetoric of God! Oh the certainty of the promises!

With the right hand of my righteousness,] i.e., My righteous right hand, that shall right all thy wrongs.

Ver. 11. Behold, all that were incensed against thee.] These and the following precious promises the Jews misapply to the coming and kingdom of their Messiah, the Papists to their hierarchy. Let every true servant of God take them home as spoken to himself; every promise droppeth myrrh and mercy.

Ver. 12. Even them that contended with thee.] Heb., The men of thy contention—thy contentents, such as this eristical age hath more than a good many. By the Quakers' wild fancies and rude practices we may see how cross-grained these people are in contradicting everything. Many men's spirits, saith one, today lie like that haven in #Ac 27:12, toward the south-west and north-west, two opposite points.

Ver. 13. For I the Lord thy God will hold thy right hand.] As a tender father taketh his dear child by the hand, in dirty or dangerous ways especially, lifting him over; so the saints are said to sit down at God's feet, {#De 33:3} or to stand between his legs, as little ones do.

Ver. 14. Fear not.] This is oft inculcated, for better confirmation and comfort. Our Saviour may seem to have hence his "Fear not little flock." It is no easy matter to cheer up afflicted consciences. Luther saith it is as hard a matter as to raise the dead. Hence this frequent "Fear not."

Ver. 15. I will make thee a new sharp thrashing instrument having teeth.] Traham, aut tribulam in omnem partem probe dentatam. Such as those eastern countries did use, to mash in pieces their rougher and harder fodder for their cattle, or rather to thresh out their harder grain with, {#Isa 28:25,28} or to torture men with. {#2Sa 12:31}

Thou shalt thresh the mountains.] Thy lofty and mighty enemies. This was fulfilled in the Maccabees, but especially in the apostles, subduing the nations to the obedience of the faith. See #2Co 10:4.

Ver. 16. Thou shalt fan them.] But find nothing in them of any solidity. The heart of the wicked is little worth.

And thou shalt rejoice in the Lord.] As the sole doer of all; for it is he that subdueth the people under us, and doeth all our works for us.

{#Isa 26:12}

Ver. 17. When the poor.] When such as are "poor in spirit," sensible of their utter indigence, shall blessedly hunger and thirst after righteousness, showing themselves restless and insatiated without it.

And there is none.] None to be found in the doctrine of the Pharisees, philosophers, or friars.

Ver. 18. I will open rivers in high places.] Rather work miracles, as once in the wilderness, {#Ex 17:6,7} than my poor people shall want necessary support and succour (help).

Ver. 19. I will plant in the wilderness the cedar, &c.] That is, saith Lyra, I will give variety of graces to my people.

And the box tree.] {a} That groweth of itself in wild places, saith Diodate, to signify that the Church will always have worldly wild plants mixed and growing in it. Box is always green indeed, and full of leaves, but it is of an ill smell, et semen habet omnibus invisum animantibus, {b} and of a worse seed.

{a} Per varia ligna varietatem gratiarum insinuat. — Oecol.

{b} Sphinx, Philos.

Ver. 20. That they may see, and know, and consider.] Heb., Lay. Lay it upon their heart, which natural men are very hardly drawn to do. The best are so backward, that an Ezekiel may hear, "Son of man, behold with thine eye, and hear with thine ears, and set thine heart upon all that I shall show thee," &c., {#Eze 40:4} and Haggai calleth upon the good people of his time to "consider" and better "consider." {#Hag 1:5,7}

Ver. 21. Produce your cause, saith the Lord.] He had dealt with the heathens, and convinced them; now have at their gods: and their best proofs are called for.

Bring forth your strong reasons.] Heb., Your bony arguments, argumenta trabalia; but, alas! they had none such.

Saith the king of Jacob.] Not the God of Jacob; for that was now the matter in question, whether he were God, or the heathen deities. And because they were silent, and to seek {a} of such arguments, he helpeth them to a couple.

{a} το ζητούμενον.

Ver. 22. Let them bring forth, and show what shall happen.] By such arguments as these, Cleanthes in Cicero {a} testifieth, though himself were a heathen, that the deity might be known. And whereas it may be objected that the Delphic devil had foretold things to come, it is answered, that the devil cannot foretell all future things, nor anything infallibly, and of himself; but either as it is revealed unto him by God, as was Ahab's fall at Ramoth Gilead; or as he foreseeth it in the causes, signs, or prophecies of Holy Scripture, wherein he is not a little skilled.

{a} Lib. ii. De Nat. Deorum.

Ver. 23. Show the things that are to come.] This first argument is much insisted on. God alone can properly predict; and Testimonium divinitatis est veritas divinationis. {a} Cato Major was wont to say, that he wondered how one diviner could look upon another and not laugh, as knowing themselves to be no better than deceivers of the people.

Yea, do good or evil.] Good to your friends, evil to your foes. This is the second argument, and it is unanswerable. If it be objected, that this the devil can do, and hath done, the answer is; (1.) that idols can do neither good nor evil, (2.) no, nor yet devils; but the good they do their clients is a mere juggler, and the evil they do to any is by divine permission. See Cyprian's Fourth Treatise, De Vanitate Idolorum.

{a} Tertul. Apol., cap. 20.

{b} Vide etiam, Aug. De Civlt. Dei, lib. ii. cap. 22, 25, &c.

Ver. 24. Behold, ye are of nothing.] Hence Paul took that assertion of his; {#1Co 8:4} "we know that an idol is nothing in the world." For the matter of it, it is true, wood is wood, and stone is stone; but the relation and signification which is fastened thereunto, is nothing at all: all the being of an idol is nothing but the idolater's imagination.

And your work of nought.] Or, Of the basilisk or viper; it will do you to death.

An abomination is he that curseth you.] Papists, therefore, must needs be abominable idolaters. Dr Rainolds's work, De Idololatria Romana, is yet unanswered. Weston writes that his head ached in reading it.

Ver. 25. I have raised up one from the north.] Here God beginneth to prove that he can do both those things, whereof the heathen vanities could do neither. This one in the text is Cyrus, say some; Christ, say others, by whom God here foretelleth that he will punish his enemies, but do good to his Church and chosen.

He shall call upon my name.] Or, Proclaim my name.

Ver. 26. Who hath declared?] Who, besides myself, ever did or could predict such a thing? If any other hath done it, we will do him right, called him a god.

Ver. 27. The first shall say to Zion.] Or, I first said to Zion. I first brought her that good tidings by my prophets.

Ver. 28. For I beheld, and there was no man.] None to say anything for these dumb idols, why I should not pass a definitive sentence against them. It is, therefore, this—

Ver. 29. Behold they are all vanity.] #Jer 10:3,15.

Their works are nothing.] See #Isa 41:24.

Are wind and confusion.] Or, Emptiness; Heb., Tohu. Nothing in themselves, and yet of sufficient efficacy to inflict vengeance on their worshippers.

Chapter 42

Ver. 1. Behold my servant.] Cyrus partly, but Christ principally {#Mt 12:18} {See Trapp on "Mt 12:18"} {#Php 2:7} A servant he was, yet not menial, but magisterial; that he was one or other is admirable, and well deserveth an Ecce Behold.

Whom I uphold.] That he faint not under the weight of his Mediatorship, and the importable burden of my wrath, which he must suffer for a season. Some render it "whom I lean upon." See #2Ki 5:18 7:2,13.

Mine elect, or choice one.] Cyrus was so. {#Isa 43:10 Joh 6:27,29 10:36} See the notes on #Mt 12:18. Cyrus was so singular a man, saith Herodotus, {a} that no Persian ever held himself worthy to be compared unto him. And of his court Xenophon {b} hath this memorable saying, that though a man should seek or choose blindfold, he could not miss of a good man. How much more truly may this be spoken of the Lord Christ and his people?

In whom my soul delighteth.] εὐδοκησέ. God affected Cyrus, {#Isa 45:3,4 44:28} but nothing so well as Christ. {#Mt 3:17 17:5} Once God repented him that he had made man; but now it is otherwise.

He shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles.] Who shall all cry, "Grace, grace unto it," to see mercy rejoicing against judgment. See on #Mt 12:18.

{a} Herod., lib. iii.

{b} Xenoph. Cyrop., lib. viii.

Ver. 2. He shall not cry, nor lift up.] See on #Mt 12:19. Cyrus was a very mild and gentle prince, so that his Persians called him their father, but his son, Cambyses, their lord, as Herodotus {a} recordeth. Christ's government {b} is much more gentle; he will not by a loud and terrible voice frighten broken spirits, or rule them with rigour, &c. Christians must likewise put away all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamour. And "be ye kind one to another, tender hearted." {#Eph 4:31,32} This is to be like unto Christ—all whose actions, whether moral or mediatory, were either for our imitation or instruction.

{a} Lib. iii.

{b} Cyrus umbra, Christus Sol ipse.

Ver. 3. A bruised reed shall he not break,] i.e., A contrite heart, {#Ps 51:17} in whom there shall appear to be anything of Christ, though never so little: that are faithful in weakness, though but weak in faith, as he was who cried out, Lord, I believe, help mine unbelief; {#Mr 9:24} and another, Invoco te fide quamvis languida, fide tamen. {a} See on #Mt 12:20.

He shall bring forth judgment unto truth.] Unto victory, saith the evangelist, after the Septuagint. Truth will prevail, sincerity proceed to perfection. "The righteous also shall hold on his way: and he that hath clean hands shall be stronger and stronger." {#Job 17:9} Where there is truth of grace, there will be victory. Bernard never went from God without God. And holy Bradford would never give over any good duty till he found something coming in—as in confession, till his heart melted; in begging pardon, till it was quieted; in seeking grace, till it was quickened, &c.

{a} Cruciger.

Ver. 4. He shall not fail, nor be discouraged.] Non erit tristis nec turbulentus; so the Vulgate hath it. He shall be master of his passions, and keep an even state of his looks and motions, whatever befall, as they report of Socrates. He shall not knit his brows, or chide—which was Eli's fault, {#Isa 3:13} but is Christ's commendation—so Lud. de Dieu rendereth it. He shall not make to smoke (so Junius from #Isa 42:3), nor shall he bruise any one.

Until he have set judgment.] See on #Isa 42:3.

And the isles shall wait for his law.] Heb., Shall with desire expect his doctrine.

Ver. 5. Thus saith God the Lord, he that created the heavens, and stretched them out.] Heb., And they that stretched them out; noting the Trinity in unity. {as #De 6:4} Some pagans concluded the world must needs have had a beginning, otherwise we could not know whether the egg or the bird, the seed or the plant, the day or the night, the light or the darkness, were first.

Ver. 6. I the Lord have called thee.] To the Mediatorship.

And will hold thine hand.] Working wonders by thee, and with thee.

And will keep thee.] That thou be not crucified till thine hour be come, and that thou despair not when thou sufferest.

And give thee for a covenant of the people,] i.e., For that "angel of the covenant," {#Mat 3:1} and that thou mayest reconcile all the elect in one body to me by thy cross, &c. {#Eph 2:16}

For a light to the Gentiles.] See #Isa 9:2.

Ver. 7. To open the blind eyes.] By the preaching of the gospel. {#Ac 26:18 2Co 4:4-6 Re 3:18}

To bring out the prisoners from the prison.] To free poor souls from the tyranny of sin and terror of hell. This should make us say to Christ, as one did once to Augustus for a deliverance nothing so great, Effecisti, Ceesar, ut viverem et morerer ingratus, Let me do mine utmost, I must live and die in thy debt.

Ver. 8. I am the Lord.] I, and no heathen petty god, as I have plainly and plentifully proved, nemine contradicente.

That is my name.] God, though he be above all name (when Manoah inquired after his name, the answer was, It is wonderful—i.e., far above thy conception), yet here we have his proper name, Jehovah, which is also called his glory, because incommunicable to any creature.

And my glory will I not give to another.] To his Son Christ he hath given it, {#Joh 17:2} who, although he is Alius, another yet he is not Aliud different from the Father, but of the same nature and essence. God hath given being to all things, life to many, sense to others, reason to men and angels, his glory he will not give to any.

Excellently hereupon Bernard, ^{a} My glory I will not, &c.; what then wilt thou give us, Lord? what wilt thou give us? My peace, saith he, I give you; my peace I leave unto you. It is enough for me, Lord; I thankfully take what thou leavest, and leave what thou keepest to thyself, &c.

Ver. 9. Behold, the former things are come to pass.] The prophecies are fulfilled.

Before they spring forth, I tell you of them.] Therefore I am the true God undoubtedly, and the doctrine of my prophets is true assuredly, veriora quam quae ex tripode. Siquidem Satan etsi semel videatur verax, millies est mendax, et semper fallax.

Ver. 10. Sing unto the Lord a new song.] The disputation being ended, and God having clearly got the better, the prophet singeth this gratulatory song, and calleth upon others to bear a part with him therein, and especially for Christ and his benefits before mentioned.

Ye that go down to the sea, / i.e., That dwell toward the west of Judea.

Ver. 11. Let the wilderness.] Ye that dwell eastward. It was called the wilderness, because but thinly inhabited.

The villages that Kedar doth inhabit.] The most fierce and savage people, cicurated and civilised by the gospel preached among them, as it is with us at this day, whose ancestors were most barbarous and brutish, as Cicero ^{a} testifieth.

Let the inhabitants of the rock.] Or, Of Petra, the chief city of Arabia Petraea.

^{a} De Nat. Deor.

Ver. 12. Let them give glory.] See #Isa 42:10.

Ver. 13. The Lord shall go forth as a mighty man.] Or, As a giant. And here, by an elegant hypotyposis, ^{a} the fierce wrath of God against his foes is set forth to the life, and appointed also to be sung for a second part of the ditty—viz., Christ's conquest over sin, death, and hell, whereby we are made "more than conquerors."

He shall cry, yea, roar.] Iubilabit atque etiam barriet; he shall make a hideous and horrible noise, such as the Roman soldiers did of old when they began the battle, and as the Turks do at this day on purpose to frighten their enemies. {b}

{a} Vivid description of a scene, event, or situation, bringing it, as it were, before the eyes of the hearer or reader.

{b} Vegetius.

Ver. 14. I have long time holden my peace.] As a travailing woman biteth in her pain as long as she is able. So had God, for causes best known to himself, forborne a long while to appear for his people and to avenge them of their enemies. But now Patientia laesa fit furor: Deique patientia quo diuturnior, est minacior. Now down goeth Dagon and the devil's whole kingdom before this jealous giant.

Now will I cry like a travailing woman.] Which when she can bear no longer, sets up her note, and is heard all the house over. This is very comfortable. God is pained, as it were, for his people—in all their afflictions he is afflicted; he longs for their deliverance, which therefore shall not be long ere it come.

Ver. 15. I will make waste mountains and hills.] I will rather invert the order of nature, and mingle heaven and earth together, than my Church shall want seasonable help. I will also remove all obstacles by sending fire upon the earth, {#Lu 12:49} and bring every high thought into a holy obedience. {#2Co 10:5}

Ver. 16. And I will bring the blind by a way.] This was fulfilled, in the letter, to the Jews brought back from Babylon, where they had been close prisoners, and, in the mystery, to all Christ's converts—more especially to that blind boy presented to Bishop Hooper, martyr, the day before his death, at Gloucester, where the boy had not long before suffered imprisonment for confessing the truth. {a}

I will make darkness light before.] By bringing them out of darkness into my marvellous light. {#1Pe 2:9}

{a} Acts and Mon.

Ver. 17. They shall be greatly ashamed.] Heb., Be ashamed with shame; because disappointed and defeated, as the Papists oft have been when they have fought against Protestants, in that Bellum Hussiticum in Germany especially; and yet Bellarmine hath the face to say that the Catholics were never yet worsted by the heretics, as they call us, in a set battle.

Ver. 18. Hear, ye deaf; and look, ye blind.] Ye who, as so many sea monsters or deaf adders, will not hear, and as so many blind moles will not see, by a petulant blindness, and of obstinate malice; such were the scribes and Pharisees, who winked hard with their eyes, and wilfully shut the windows, lest the light should come in unto them. See more of this in the notes on #Isa 6 Isa 29.

That ye may see.] In nature, Caecorum mens oculatissima est. We read of Didymus Alexandrinus, that though blind, yet he wrote commentaries; and of two of Archbishop Ussher's aunts, that being blind from their cradles, they taught him first to read, such was their readiness in the Scriptures. But this was rare; and in spirituals it is otherwise, till God enlighten both organ and object.

Ver. 19. Who is blind, but my servant?] Who so blind as he that will not see? Israel was God's peculiar, and had the light of his law, yet were blind as beetles.

Or deaf, as my messenger?] The priests and Levites. {#Mal 2:7} Such were the Papist dolts till awakened by the Reformation.

Who is blind as he that is perfect?] The elders of the people, who arrogated to themselves perfection {a} {#Isa 65:5 Ro 2:17-20}; as likewise the Popish perfectists, the Jewish doctors with their pretended Mashlamnuthas, and the Turkish Mussulmans—i. e., perfectionaries.

{a} Buxtorf. Tiber. p. 5.

Ver. 20. But observest not,] viz., For holy practice.

But he heareth not.] viz., For any good purpose, he heareth not "what the Spirit saith to the churches."

Ver. 21. The Lord is well pleased; he will magnify his law, &c.] Or, To magnify his law and make it honourable—sc., by recompensing so highly those that observed it; this he did for his "righteousness' sake"—i.e., of his free grace and fidelity; but these are none such, they are practical Antinomians, and to me to the diametrically opposite.

Ver. 22. But this is a people robbed and spoiled.] And all too little, unless they were better. Jerome expoundeth this of the destruction of the Jews by the Romans, after their voluntary blindness and malice showed against Christ, at what time they were pulled out of holes and privies, spoiled, slaved, sold thirty a penny.

Ver. 23. Who among you will give ear to this?] Magna nimirum haec sunt, sed paucis persuasa. We shall have much ado to make you believe these things, though your liberties, lives, and souls lie upon it.

Ver. 24. Who gave Jacob for a spoil?] Omnia magno adfectu sunt pronuntianda, debentque singula membra huius orationis expendi. This is a very remarkable passage. Let us cry out, "Oh the severity!" and beware. Cavebimus autem si pavebimus. Moreover, we will beware if we are terrified.

Ver. 25. And it hath set him on fire.] When the country was wasted, the city and temple burnt and ruined. Read Josephus, Lege, inquam, et luge. I say read and weep.

And he laid it not to heart.] This was worse than all the rest. Like a sleepy man (fire burning in his bed straw) he crieth not out, when others haply lament his case, that see afar off, but cannot help him.

Chapter 43

Ver. 1. But now, thus saith the Lord.] Here the prophet comforteth those with the gospel whom he had frighted with the law, saith Oecolampadius.

That created thee, O Jacob.] By a new creation, especially. {#Isa 29:23 Eph 2:10 2Co 5:17} Magna sunt opera Dei creatoris, Dei recreatoris longe maxima. {a} The work of redemption is far beyond that of creation.

And he that formed thee, O Israel.] As the potter formeth to himself a vessel of honour, and distinguisheth it from other vile and sordid vessels; so have I dealt by thee.

I have redeemed thee.] A mercy much celebrated in this book, and for very great reason.

I have called thee by thy name.] Which was no small favour. See #Ex 33:17 Ps 147:4. Some think he alludeth to his giving Jacob the name of Israel, when he had wrestled with God and prevailed.

Thou art mine.] I have adopted thee, which is no small honour. {#1Jo 3:1} Meus es tu, you are mine, may very well be the new name spoken of, {#Re 2:17 Ho 2:23} better than that of sons and of daughters, {#Isa 56:5} See it displayed #1Pe 2:9.

{a} Augustine.

Ver. 2. When thou passest through the waters.] Fire and water, we say, have no mercy when once they get above us; extreme calamities are hereby denoted. {#Ps 66:12} But God's gracious presence kept the bush from burning—burn it did, but was not consumed, through "the good will of him that dwelt in it" saith Moses {#De 33:16} -the Israelites in the Red Sea from drowning. {#Ex 14:28,29} His presence made the fiery furnace a gallery of pleasure; the lion's den a house of defence; the Leonine prison a delectable orchard, as that Italian martyr phrased it; the fiery trial a bed of roses, as another, Tua praesentia, Domine, Laurentio ipsam craticulam dulcem feeit. Jerome of Prague and other martyrs sang in the very flames. Blessed Bilney, being condemned to be burned for the testimony of Jesus, when he was comforted by some against the extremity of the fire, put his hand toward the flame of the candle burning before them, and feeling the heat thereof, Oh, said he, I feel by experience, and have learned by philosophy, that fire by God's ordinance is naturally hot. But yet I am persuaded by God's Holy Word, and by the experience of some spoken of in the same, that in the flame they felt no heat, and in the fire no consumption. I constantly believe, that howsoever the stubble of this my body shall be wasted by it, yet my soul and spirit shall be purged thereby; a pain for the time, wherein notwithstanding followeth joy unspeakable; and here he much treated on this text, "Fear not, when thou passest through the waters," &c. So that some of his friends there present took such sweet benefit therein that they caused the whole said sentence to be fair written in tables, and some in their books, the comfort whereof in varions of them was never taken from them to their dying day. {a}

{a} Acts and Mon., fol. 923.

Ver. 3. I gave Egypt for thy ransom.] Quasi victimam piacularem a Sennacheribo mactandam loco Iudcea, in exchange for thee; so the Septuagint render it. This was done when Tirhakah, king of Egypt and Ethiopia, was beaten by Sennacherib, who was then making towards Jerusalem, which he had already devoured in his hopes. {#Isa 37:9} Thus, "The righteous is delivered out of trouble, and the wicked cometh in his stead." {#Pr 11:8} Saul and his people were afflicted by the Philistines, that David might escape. {#1Sa 23:27,28} The Canaanites were rooted out, to make room for the Israelites. Charles V, and Francis, the French king, after a mutual agreement to root out Lutheranism, fall together by the ears, and the Church all the while hath her halcyons. So the Turks and Persians are at deadly feud, to the great safeguard of Christendom; and the Popish party are as a bulwark between those Mohammedans and the Protestants.

Ver. 5. I will bring thy seed from the east.] From all coasts and quarters. This was a type of the Church in the New Testament; see #Mt 8:11 Joh 11:52 Joh 10:16 Ga 3:28; this was also a type of the last resurrection. See #Re 20:13.

Ver. 6. I will say to the north, Give up.] I will do it with a word of my mouth, Ipse dixit, et facta sunt. He himself said and is was done.

{a}

Bring my sons from far, and my daughters.] That is, say some, my stronger and also weaker children, of what size or sex soever. Souls have no sexes.

Ver. 7. Even every one that is called by my name,] i.e., My sons and my daughters, {#Isa 43:6 2Co 6:18} such as have Christian for their name, and Catholic for their surname.

I have created him for my glory.] See on #Isa 43:1.

Yea, I have made him,] i.e., Advanced him, {a} as #1Sa 12:6.

{a} Feci, i.e., magnum effeci. -Pisc.

Ver. 8. Bring forth the blind people.] Such as were blind and ignorant, but now are enlightened.

And the deaf.] Such as were cross and rebellious, but now are tractable and obsequious. {#Isa 42:7,16}

Ver. 9. Let all the nations.] See #Isa 41:1.

And shew us former things.] Much less can they show us things future. Varro calleth all the time before the flood αδηλον, obscure, because the heathens had no certain relation of anything then done. And Diod. Siculus acknowledgeth that all that was written among them before the Theban and Trojan wars was little better than fabulous. The gods of the Gentiles had not so much as any solid knowledge of things past, neither could they orderly and perfectly set them forth by their secretaries.

It is truth,] scil., That there is but one true God. Phocylides did say so, εις μονος εστι Θεος, & c. Socrates suffered for holding this truth at Athens. Plato held the same, but dared not speak out. These are his words: It is neither easy to find out the maker of all things, nor safe to communicate to the common people what we have found out of him. Here, for fear of the people, he detained the truth in unrighteousness. And the like did Seneca, whom Augustine accuseth, quod colebat quod reprehendebat; agebat quod arguebat; quod culpabat, adorabat {a} that he worshipped those gods whom he disliked and decried.

{a} De Civit. Dei, lib. vi. cap. 10.

Ver. 10. Ye are my witnesses.] He taketh to witness of this great truth in question, not heaven, earth, sea, &c., but his people, among whom he had given in all ages so many clear arguments and experiments of his divinity, his oracles and miracles for instance.

And my servant whom I have chosen,] i.e., Christ, saith the Chaldee paraphrast; the prophet Isaiah, say others; or, which is more likely, Cyrus, who is called God's elect servant, {#Isa 42:1} and his testimony concerning God is to be read in #Ezr 1:3, "The Lord God of Israel he is God." Every true believer doth as much, if not more; for "He that believeth hath set to his seal that God is true," {#Joh 3:33} hath given him a testimonial, such as is that in #De 32:4, "A God of truth, and without iniquity, just and right is he." Such a sealer was Abraham, {#Ro 4:20} and "such honour have all his saints."

That ye may know and believe and understand.] That ye may have a "full assurance of knowledge," {as #Lu 1:4} and a "full assurance of faith." {#Heb 10:22}

Ver. 11. I, even I, am the Lord.] This redoubled I is emphatic and exclusive.

And beside me there is no Saviour.] They are gross idolaters, therefore, that set up for saviours the saints departed.

Ver. 12. I have showed, when there was no strange God among you.] See #De 32:12. {See Trapp on "Ex 34:14"}

Therefore ye are my witnesses.] See on #Isa 43:10.

Ver. 13. Yea, before the day was I am he.] The "Ancient of days," yea, the eternal The God of Israel was long before Israel was in being.

And there is none that can deliver out of my hand.] So Nebuchadnezzar vainly vaunted, but was soon confuted. {#Da 3:15,17,29}

I will work, and who shall let it?] Angels may be hindered. God can come between their essence and their executive power, and so keep them from doing what they would. In fire there is the substance and the quality of heat; between these God can separate, as he did in the Babylonish fire. {#Da 3:22-25} But who shall hinder the Most High?

Ver. 14. Thus saith the Lord, your Redeemer.] For their greater comfort and confirmation, the prophet purposely premiseth to the promise of deliverance from Babylon these sweet attributes of God, each of them dropping myrrh and mercy.

For your sakes I have sent to Babylon, and have brought down.] Or, I will send, and I will bring down.

All their nobles.] Heb., Bars. {#Ps 147:13} Bars noblemen should be, to keep out evils, and to secure saints; but these were crossbars, &c.

Whose cry is in the ships.] Or, Whose outcry is to the ships, whereby they thought to save themselves, but could not, because Cyrus had drained and dried up their river Euphrates. Tremellius rendereth it, The Chaldees with their most famous ships.

Ver. 15. I am their Lord.] More of God's holy attributes are here heaped up for like reason, as in #Isa 43:14.

Ver. 16. Which maketh a way in the sea.] Or, That made a way in the sea, &c.—sc., When your fathers came out of Egypt. Why, then, should you doubt about deliverance?

Ver. 17. Which bringeth forth the chariot and horse.] Or, Who brought forth the chariot and horse, the army and the power, viz, Pharaoh's forces. {#Ex 14:4,9,23}

They are quenched as tow.] {a} Heb., As a candlewick made of flax quickly quenched with water poured on it. See how easily God can confound his foes.

Ver. 18. Remember ye not the former things,] sc., In comparison of those things I shall now do for you by Cyrus, but especially by Christ, who is that way in the wilderness, and that running rock. {#1Co 10:4 Isa 43:14}

Ver. 19. Shall ye not know it?] Or, Do ye not perceive it? He speaketh of it as present and under view.

And rivers in a desert.] As once when I set the flint abroad. {#Ex 17:6 Nu 20:8,11 Ps 105:41} By this way in the wilderness, and rivers in the desert, understand the doctrine of the gospel, and the comforts of the Spirit. {#Joh 7:38,39}

Ver. 20. The beasts of the field shall honour me,] i.e., In their kind they shall. So shall brutish and savage persons when tamed and turned by the word of God's grace. The malignities of all creatures are in man; as Plato {a} also observed, In doloso enim est vulpes, in crudeli leo, in libidinoso amica lute sus, &c. Gregory, {b} by dragons, here understands profane and carnal people; by owls or ostriches, hypocrites. These being converted shall sing hallelujahs to

God; but let them take heed that they turn not, with the dog, to their own vomit again, &c. {#2Pe 2:22} For,

{a} De Rep., lib. iii.

{b} Mor., lib. xxxi. cap. 5.

Ver. 21. This people have I formed for myself.] Even the Gentiles now as well as the Jews.

They shall show forth my praise.] They shall "preach forth (εξαγγελιητε) the virtues, or praises, of him who hath called them out of darkness into his marvellous light." {#1Pe 2:9}

Ver. 22. But thou hast not called upon me, O Jacob.] During the captivity they prayed not to any purpose, as Daniel also acknowledgeth: {#Isa 9:13} "All this evil is come upon us, yet made we not our prayer before the Lord our God, that we might turn from our iniquities and understand thy truth." Nevertheless, of his free grace, God brought them back again.

But thou hast been weary of me, O Israel.] Accounting my service a burden, and not a benefit. See on #Mal 1:13.

Ver. 23. Thou hast not brought me, &c.] Not me, but a god of thine own framing, {a} Such a one as would take up with external heartless services, formal courtings and compliments.

{a} Non Mihi sed deo fictitio.

Ver. 24. Thou hast bought me no sweet cane.] Or, Calamus, whereof see Plin., lib. xii. cap. 22.

Neither hast thou filled me with the fat.] The heathens had a gross conceit that their gods fed on the steam that ascended from their fat sacrifices; and some Jews might haply hold the same thing. See #De 32:38 Ps 50:13.

But thou hast made me to serve with thy sins.] With thine hypocrisy and oppressions especially. {#Isa 1:11-15} The Seventy render it, "Thou hast stood before me in thy sins," as outbraving me. Thou hast tried my long patience, in seeing and suffering thy sins, to my great annoyance. So Diodate paraphraseth.

And hast wearied me.] Exprimit rei indignitatem cum iniquitate coniunctam. God had not wearied them, but they had wearied him sufficiently. Some make these to be the words of Christ to his ungrateful countrymen,

Ver. 25. I, even I, am he.] Gratuitam misericordiam diligentissime exprimit. God diligently setteth forth his own free grace, and greatly glorieth in it, showing how it is that he freeth himself from trouble and them from destruction, viz., for his own sake alone.

That blotteth out thy transgressions.] Heb., Am blotting out, constantly and continually I am doing it. As thou multiplieth sins, so do I "multiply pardons." {#Isa 55:7} So #Joh 1:29, "He taketh away the sins of the world"; it is a perpetual act, like as the sun shineth, the spring runneth. {#Zec 13:1} Men gladly blot out that which they cannot look upon without grief. Malum enim semel delere quam perpetuo dolere, so here we are run deep in God's debt book; but his discharge is free and full. {a}

For mine own sake.] Gratis et propter me. Let us thankfully reciprocate, and say, as he once did, Propter te, Domine, propter te, For thy sake, Lord, do I all.

And will not remember thy sins.] Discharges in justification are not repealed or called in again. {b} Pardon proceedeth from special love and mercy, which alter not their consigned acts.

{a} Dulcis Metaph. One may with a pen cross a great sum as well as a little.

Ver. 26. Put me in remembrance,] sc., Of thy merits, if thou hast any to plead. Justiciaries are here called into judgment, because they slighted the throne of grace.

Ver. 27. Thy first father.] Adam, or Abraham, say some.

And thy teachers.] Heb., Thine interpreters, orators, ambassadors—that is, thy priests and prophets.

Ver. 28. Therefore I have profaned the princes of the sanctuary.] Or, Of holiness; that is, those that under a pretence of religion affected a kind of hierarchy, as did the scribes and Pharisees, who,

with the whole Jewish state, were taken away by the Romans, both their place and their nation, as they had feared. {#Joh 11:48}

Chapter 44

Ver. 1. Yet now hear.] Hear a word of comfort after so terrible a thunder crack. {#Isa 43:28} But there it is bare "Jacob" and "Israel" who are threatened; here it is "Jacob my servant," and "Israel whom I have chosen"; it is "Jeshurun," or the "righteous nation," who are comforted. And because we forget nothing so soon as the consolations of God, as is to be seen in Christ's disciples, and those believing Hebrews; {#Isa 12:5} therefore doth the prophet so oft repeat and inculcate them, like as men use to rub and chafe in ointments into the flesh, that they may enter and give ease.

Ver. 2. Thus saith the Lord that made thee.] See on #Isa 43:1,7,21, and observe how this chapter runneth parallel with the former; yea, how the prophet, from Isa 40 to Isa 66, doth one and the same thing almost, labouring to comfort his people against the Babylonian captivity, and to arm them against the sin of idolatry, whereunto, as of themselves they were overly prone, so they should be sure to be strongly tempted among those idolaters.

And thou, Jeshurun.] Thou who art upright or righteous, with a twofold righteousness, viz., imputed and imparted. The Septuagint renders it Dilecte or Dilectule, my dearly beloved.

Ver. 3. For I will pour water upon him that is thirsty.] Or, Upon the thirsty place; hearts that hunger and thirst after righteousness. {#Mt 5:6} {See Trapp on "Mt 5:6"}

I will pour my spirit and my blessing.] When God giveth a man his Holy Spirit, he giveth him blessing in abundance; even all good things at once, as appeareth by #Mt 7:11 Lu 11:13. Here are three special operations of the Spirit instanced: 1. Comfort; 2. Fruitfulness; 3. Courage for Christ. {#Isa 44:5}

Ver. 4. As willows by the water courses.] Not only as the grass, but by a further growth, as the willows, which are often looped, sed ab ipso vulnere vires sumunt, but soon thrust forth new branches; and though cut down to the bottom, yet will grow up again; {a} so will the Church and her children.

Ver. 5. One shall say, I am the Lord's.] When God seemeth to cry out, Who is on my side? who? then the true Christian, by a bold and wise profession of the truth, answereth as here. After the way that they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, said that great apostle. We are Christians, said those primitive professors; and some of them wrote apologies for their religion to the persecuting emperors, as did Justin Martyr, Athenagoras, Arnobius, Tertullian, Minutius Felix, and others. The recent famous reformers Zuinglius, Luther, Musculus, &c., had been Franciscans, Augustinians, Dominicans; but relinquished those superstitious titles and gave up their names to Christ and his truth. I knew a nobleman, saith Mr Burroughs, {a} who, when he came into jeering company of great ones, would begin and own himself one of those they call Puritans—a nickname then put upon the godly party, and so odious to the profaner sort, that the same author elsewhere telleth us of a scholar in Queen's College, who professed he had rather suffer the torments of hell, than endure the contempt and scorn of the Puritans.

Subscribe with his hand.] Or, Write on his hand, I am the Lord's.

And surname himself.] So Christian is my name, said an ancient, and Catholic my surname.

{a} On Hosea.

Ver. 6. Thus saith the Lord.] Here and in the subsequent verses we have an evident and excellent testimony of the unity of the true God, and vanity of idols.

Ver. 7. And who, as I, shall call, and shall declare it?] These are alleged by God as arguments or demonstrations of his deity, praedicare, et indicare et ordinare, to call his elect (styled here his ancient people, populum aeternum) to foretell them things to come, and to order all occurrences for their eternal good.

Ver. 8. Have I not told thee from that time?] Ever since I made thee mine ancient people, well affected to old truths, and distasting novel opinions.

Is there a God besides me?] Vehementi spiritu hoc quaerit, et gravitate magna respondet, There is no God, no other God: I know not any. This was spoken by the prophet, say some, in the days of Ahaz, that notorious idolater.

Ver. 9. And their delectable things.] Their idols and puppets, which they so dearly affect and take so great delight in. He speaketh thus, saith Diodate, because that idolatry is a kind of spiritual concupiscence, and unchaste or disordered love, like as fornication or adultery.

And they are their own witnesses, &c.] Or, Even themselves are their own witnesses to their shame, that they neither see nor know aught.

Ver. 10. Who hath formed a god that is profitable for nothing?] q.d. Who but a madman? ειδωλομανης, such as was Julian the apostate, called therefore Idolian by some.

“ Quis furor est, quae tanta animas dementia ludit?”

- Sedullus.

What can be more ridiculous, {a} saith Basil, than for man to go about to make God? And yet Popish priests take upon them so to do: which made Averroes abhor Christianity, and wish that his soul might rather be among the philosophers.

{a} Quis haec ludibria non derideat? -Lact.

Ver. 11. Behold all his fellows.] His fellow fools.

Shall be ashamed.] They may be, well enough, of their madness: they shall be, sure enough, of their disappointments.

And the workmen, they are of men.] Not of angels or the heavenly virtues, saith Oecolampadius, but vile varlets.

Let them all be gathered together.] As were, at Ephesus, Demetrius and his associates. {#Ac 19:24,25}

Yet they shall fear.] As Tullus Hostilius did with his new gods Pavor and Pallor: as Papists do with their Valentine, Antony, Sebastian, &c., whom they worship as the senders of such and such diseases.

Ver. 12. The smith with the tongs, &c.] He lively setteth forth the weakness of the workmen, that thereby may be understood the weakness of the idols, since they cannot help in the least those that take such pains about them. All these things must be taken as spoken with utmost scorn and stomach.

And fashioneth it with hammers.] He knocks and works his idol in manner as he doth his coulter or ploughshare.

With the strength of his arms.] Tanto conatu tantas nugas agit, cum sit calidus in re frigida: he much troubleth himself about such trifles. Hoc agunt ut nihil agant.

Ver. 13. The carpenter stretcheth out his rule.] As did the carpenter of Cockram, who yet made but an ill-shaped rood, and was forced to sue for his money. {a} Mrs Catismore suffered in King Henry VIII's days for saying that images were but carpenters' chips; and yet they are no better. That is a remarkable saying of Seneca, Ridiculum est genu posito, &c. It is a ridiculous thing to worship images, and yet to slight the man that made them.

And maketh it after the figure of a man.] God made man after his own image; and man, to be even with God, will needs make him after his image. {b}

{a} Acts and Mon., fol. 1340.

Ver. 14. He heweth him down cedars.] Choice wood, yet but wood. Qualis igitur inde Deus consurgat?

And the rain doth nourish it.] Not the idol; for it can do nothing toward the production of that matter whereof it is made. Some have observed that the four sorts of trees here mentioned are all of them fruitless, and growing in woods.

Ver. 15. Then shall it be for a man to burn.] The chips at least shall, and the offal.

Yea, he maketh a god, and worshippeth it.] Quod Dei est, trunco tribuit.

Ver. 16. He burneth part thereof in the fire.] Which is to far better purpose than the other part made into an idol.

I have seen the fire,] i.e., I have felt it. One sense puts forth another.

Ver. 17. He falleth down unto it, and worshippeth it.] Do not Papists even the same, whatever they pretend in defence of their idolatry? See #Re 9:20. {See Trapp on "Re 9:20"} So loath they are to have their asses' ears to be seen.

Ver. 18. They have not known nor understood.] How should they, say, when infatuated and given up to an injudicious mind, or reprobate sense, as those? {#Ro 1:28}

For he hath shut their eyes.] Heb., Daubed up their eyes from seeing, their hearts from understanding.

“ Mons oblita Dei, vitiorumque oblita caeno.”

Ver. 19. Shall I fall down to the stock of a tree?] This the besotted Papists do to this day, by the command of the Council of Trent. But before that Council so decreed it, Ludovicus Vives, a learned Papist, confessed that there could no other difference be found of paganish and Popish worship before images, but only this, that names and titles were altered—viz., we cry Jehovah, and they Jupiter; we, Mary, they Diana; they, Minerva, we Katharine, &c. And here I bethink me of what Luther, on the ninth commandment, writeth of a base and beastly woman: *Quae ut falleret eiusmodi superstitionis quendam fatuum cultorem, pubem suam totondit, et illi porrexit, suadens quod essent capilli S. Catharinae trans mare advecti. Credidit ille cuculus, et pro reliquiis osculandos praebuit et venerandos: et ecce quid fit? coepit etiam miracula operari pubes illa turpitudinis.

Ver. 20. He feedeth on ashes,] i.e., He seeketh comfort of his idol, but findeth as little as he doth nourishment who feedeth upon ashes.

A seduced heart hath turned him aside.] And hence it is that he is brought to deify a thing so contemptible. From this expression, note that man is the cause of evil to himself, and is so blinded by his own default that he cannot so much as once think seriously of his soul's health. His deluded heart, that hath so oft deceived him, may well say to him, as the heart of Apollodorus the tyrant seemed to say to him, who dreamed one night that he was flayed by the Scythians and boiled in a caldron, and that his heart spake to him out of the kettle, 'Εγω σοι τούτων αιτια, It is I that have drawn thee to all this.

Is there not a lie in my right hand?] i.e., "An idol that is nothing in the world," and nothing it can do for me. How then are images fit to be laymen's books, being unprofitable, lies, and teachers of lies?

{#Jer 10:8 16:19 Hab 2:18}

Ver. 21. Remember these, O Jacob and Israel,] i.e., Remember these abominable idolaters, and enjoy their madness: learn wisdom by their folly.

Thou shalt not be forgotten of me.] Or, Forget me not, as some render it. Scultetus addeth that whereas many sacred sentences are written upon our walls, this ought to be written upon our hearts; O Israel, forget me not.

Ver. 22. I have blotted out, as a thick cloud, thy transgressions, and, as a cloud, thy sins.] God blotteth out, or wipeth away, the thick cloud as well as the cloud, enormities as infirmities: like as the sun dispelleth fogs and mists with his bright beams. Think of this sweet similitude, together with that other in #Mic 7:19, "Thou wilt cast all our sins into the bottom of the sea," and then despair if thou canst. The sea by its vastness can drown mountains as well as mole hills; and the sun by his force can scatter the greatest mist, as well as the least vapour. So here.

Ver. 23. Sing, O ye heavens; for the Lord hath done it.] It is usual both with the prophets and the apostles, when they mention the great work of man's redemption, typified by that famous deliverance from Babylon, to break forth into praise and thanksgiving to God, the sole author thereof. See #Ps 68:1 89:1 93:1 95:1 96:1 97:1 98:1 99:1 100:1 Isa 12:5,6 Ro 7:24,25 1Co 15:56,57 1Ti 1:17 Re 5:11,12 Here is hinted, that so very great is the benefit of our redemption, that it might well affect heaven and earth, and all things high and low.

Ver. 24. Thus saith the Lord, thy Redeemer.] All this God had said oft before, see #Isa 42:5; but, for the further confirmation of some who were unsettled by the contrary predictions of some vain diviners and wizards, he saith it over again.

Ver. 25. That frustrateth the tokens of the liars.] Their false prognostics of the long lastingness of the Babylonian empire, and therefore no likelihood of the Jews' enlargement.

And maketh diviners mad.] Diviners, the Latins call soothsayers and such fellows, by a term that is altogether too good for them. Quum sint potius diabolici, saith Piscator, since they are rather devils incarnate than divines. By a like form of speech Alsted {a} said of his Germans, that if the Sabbath day should be named according to their observing of it, Daemoniacus potius quam Dominicus diceretur.

That turneth wise men backward.] The world's wizards, who approved of that which the diviners affirmed, judging according to outward appearance, &c.

{a} In Encyclop.

Ver. 26. That confirmeth the word of his servant,] i.e., Of myself and other prophets, saying the same with me.

That saith to Jerusalem.] Who then shall gainsay it? Is not God's word his will, and his will his work?

Ver. 27. That saith to the deep, Be dry,] i.e., That will put it into the heart of Cyrus to dry up Euphrates, and so to take Babylon; which, according to some, is here called the deep or abyss, because situated in a plain well watered with various rivers, had wealth at will, and many princes who ran into her, as rivers do into the sea.

And I will dry up thy rivers.] This Basil {a} expounds of the end of the world.

{a} Hex., lib. ii.

Ver. 28. That saith of Cyrus.] One hundred and seventy years, at least, before he was born.

Thou art my shepherd,] i.e., Princeps meus beneficus. Coresh, in the Persian tongue, signifieth food, saith Scaliger; and then there might be some allusion here to his name in calling him a "shepherd," or feeder.

Chapter 45

Ver. 1. To his anointed,] i.e., To his appointed and enabled one, to subdue many nations. Xenophon, in his first book De Cyropaed., gives us a list of them. Cyrus subdued, saith he, the Syrians, Assyrians, Arabians, Cappadocians, Phrygians, the Lydians, Carians, Phoenicians, Babylonians, the Bactrians, Indians, Cilicians, Sacians, Paphlagonians, Maryandines, and many other nations. He also had dominion over the Asiatics, Greeks, Cyprians, Egyptians, &c. He vanquished, saith Herodotus, {a} what country soever he invaded. And what wonder, when God himself, as here, "held," or "strengthened his right hand," and "loosed the loins of kings" that were his adversaries—that is, disarmed and disabled them; for it is he alone who strengtheneth and weakeneth the arm of either party. {#Eze 30:24} Et nemo vir magnus sine afflatu divine unquam fuit, saith Cicero. {b} God transferreth kingdoms, and setteth up kings. {#Da 2:21}

To open unto him the two leaved gates.] Or, Doors. Whether doors of houses or gates of cities, all shall fly open before him. {as #Ac 12:10}

{a} Lib. i.

{b} De Nat. Deor., lib. ii.

Ver. 2. And make the crooked places even.] Or, The hilly places level.

I will break in pieces the gates of brass.] This God would do, that his temple might be built; {compare #Isa 44:28} but in the New Testament, Christ throweth the gates of hell off their hinges, like another Samson, that he may build his Church. {#Mt 16:18} And it is this Aedificabo Ecclesiam meam I will build my church, that hath made all the stir in the world.

Ver. 3. And I will give thee the treasures of darkness.] All that Croesus, that rich king, had amassed, and other princes, but especially Babylon (#Jer 50:37 51:13. See Strabo, lib. xv.; Plin. xxxiii. cap. 3. #Da 5:3). Pliny saith that Cyrus brought out of Asia, which he had subdued, as much treasure as amounteth in our money to three hundred millions. And yet this same Cyrus was within few years after made as poor as Irus; for being in Scythia, and there making show of his great riches at a feast, he was on the sudden slain, and spoiled of all by Tomyris, queen of that country. {a}

Ver. 4. For Jacob my servant's sake.] That the enemies of my people being subdued, they may have some breathing while, and liberty to live quietly in their own country. For which purpose also, it was the will of God that this prophecy of Isaiah should be made known to Cyrus, for the good of the Jews, that he might favour them; and so it was, as appeareth by #Ezr 1:2, and by Josephus, Antiq., lib. xi. cap. 1.

I have even called thee by thy name.] Thy name of honour; {a} for Cyrus signifieth the "sun," saith Plutarch; "Lord," say others, in the Persian; as in Hebrew it seemeth to signify an heir, or possessor. Some derive our word sir from it. Cyrus was at first called Achzadat and Spaco, being the son of Cambyses, a noble Persian, and Mandane, the daughter of Astyages, king of Medes. The name of Cyrus he took when he entered upon the kingdom; and that from Cyrus, a river of Persia, as some hold. {b}

I have surnamed thee.] Or, I have entituled thee, scil., My shepherd, mine anointed, &c.

Though thou hast not known me,] scil., Savingly. For albeit he knew the true God in part, and acknowledged him to be great above other gods; yet he forsook not his idols, saith Jerome, and therefore perished miserably by the hands of the Scythians. Nevertheless, others {c} are of the opinion, that he was instructed by Daniel, and brought to a true belief, as was also Darius.

{c} Scultet.

Ver. 5. I am the Lord, and none else.] None of thy Persian gods, to whom thou didst offer solemn sacrifice, both at the beginning of thy reign, and likewise at thy death, if Zenophon ^{a} may be believed, saying, Iupiter patriae et Sol, &c., magnas ago vobis gratias, quod vestram de me curam intellexi, &c.

Though thou hast not known me.] Or, When as yet thou wast altogether ignorant of me. That he afterwards believed the immortality of the soul, Cicero testifieth in his Cato Major; and that he believed in Christ for the salvation of his soul, Scultetus thinketh, because he was a type of Christ; as was also Solomon, saith he; which to me is one good argument that he was saved.

{a} Xenoph., Cyr. lib. i. and viii.

Ver. 6. That they may know from the rising of the sun,] i.e., All the world over, by thy proclamation. ^{#Ezr 1:1,2}

That there is none besides me.] Quia nihilum praeter me: ego Dominus et nihil ultra, so Oecolampadius rendereth it, and saith further that it is oppido profunda sententia, a very profound sentence, teaching us that where God is not, there is nothing; for in him we are, move and live, and it is he who worketh all in all things.

Ver. 7. I form the light, and create darkness,] sc., By withdrawing the light whence darkness succeedeth; so doth misery when God withholdeth mercy. But what an odd, or rather mad conceit was that of the Manichees, that there were two beginnings of things—a good one, and an evil! that the latter was the God of the Old Testament, and the former of the New! that the God of the Old Testament did good by accident and occasionally, but created evil of himself, even evil of sin! for so they mistook this text, which is to be understood as evil of punishment only, ^{see #Am 3:6 La 3:38} which he inflicteth on evildoers for the manifestation of his justice and power, ac propterea recte, et non male eo pacto quo per nos mala male flunt. ^{a}

I make peace, and create evil.] Evil, that is, war, by a specialty, and κατ' αυτονομασίαν, Omega nostrorum Mors est, Mars Alpha malorum. Sin, Satan, and war have all one name; evil is the best of them. The best of sin is deformity, of Satan enmity, of war misery.

{a} Vide Aug. contra Julian., lib. iii. cap. 8.

Ver. 8. Drop down, ye heavens, from above.] A prayer of the poor captives in Babylon, say some, for a speedy performance of their promised deliverance; and this the rather because else Christ could not come of them, teach in their country, work miracles, and fulfil the office of a mediator, as the prophets had foretold. Whereunto God immediately answereth: I, the Lord, have created him, or will create him, that is, send him in due time, doubt ye not. Others make it a description of Cyrus's just and happy reign; see the like of Solomon. {#Ps 72:6,7} And indeed Cyrus is famous in heathen histories for his wisdom, justice, temperance, magnanimity, and liberality. It is not the custom of Cyrus to hoard up money, saith Xenophon, {a} for he taketh more delight in giving than in getting or possessing. But it seemeth rather to be a command from God of plenty and prosperity, opposite to that countermand. {#Isa 5:6} The Papists apply it to Christ and his mother, and hence their roaring out of Rorate in their solemn service, a month before the feast of the nativity, and then they call for their carousing cups.

Ver. 9. Woe unto him that striveth with his Maker.] That contends with him, {#Ro 9:20} or presumes to prescribe to him, as some impatient spirits among the captives may seem to have done. We may not measure God's dealings by our models, nor murmur against his counsels; since his holy will is the most perfect rule of right.

Let the potsherd strive with the potsherds of the earth.] And not dash against the rock of ages; let him meddle with his match, and not "contend with a mightier than he," {#Ec 6:10} What though God create him darkness and evil, {as #Isa 45:7} let him wait upon God for better times, and not think to mend himself by murmuring against his Maker as too severe.

Shall the clay say, &c.,] q.d. This were an intolerable petulance.

Or thy work, it hath no hands?] Or, He hath no hands, sc., to fashion me aright. Thus the work seemeth to make answer to the clay; for as the clay said to the potter, Quid fecisti, What hast thou made? so the work saith, by way of jeer, he hath no hands, sc., to make me as he should have done.

Ver. 10. Woe unto him that saith to his father.] Are these fit words to a father? Is it not an impious morosity to talk unto him in this sort, Why hast thou begotten me at all? or if at all, why not rich, fair, wise? &c.

And to the woman,] i.e., To his mother, {as #Isa 49:15} but such as he can hardly find in his heart to call mother.

Ver. 11. Thus saith the Lord, &c.,] q.d., Leave off such insolent and unbecoming language, and learn of me about what ye should rather busy yourselves.

Ask me of things to come.] Me, and not your wizards. Have recourse to "my prophets; believe them, and ye shall prosper." Let your patient mind be known to all men; the Lord is at hand for your deliverance.

Command ye me.] This is a wonderful expression, and doth notably set forth the power of prayer. Luther, it seemeth, well understood the latitude of this royal charter, saith one, {a} when praying for the recovery of a godly useful preacher who was far gone in a consumption, among other passages he let fall this transcendent rapture of a daring faith, "Let my will be done," but then he falls off sweetly, "My will, Lord, because thy will."

{a} Mr Burr.

Ver. 12. I have made the earth,] q.d., I am the mighty maker and monarch of the world; therefore pray on, and patiently wait for a gracious answer, "he that believeth maketh not haste."

Ver. 13. I have raised him up,] i.e., Cyrus. {#Ezr 1:1}

And I will direct all his ways,] sc., When he cometh against the Babylonians, Lydians, &c., on mine errand. But when moved by his ambition, he invaded Scythia, and cruelly wasted the country, God took no further charge of him; as I may say, He that is out of God's precincts, is out of his protection.

Ver. 14. Thus saith the Lord, The labour of Egypt.] Here he turneth his speech to Cyrus, promising him that he should be no loser by his generous carriage toward the poor people of God, his captives, whom he freely dismissed without ransom. {#Isa 45:13} God's retributions are more than bountiful.

Men of stature.] {a} The Arabians are reported to have been goodly personable men by Agatharchides, {b} an ancient writer, from whom Plutarch and Pliny borrowed much.

They shall come over unto thee.] Commodissime dicemus promissionem hanc referendum ad tempus revelati Evangelii. This was fulfilled chiefly when the gospel was preached, and nations thereby converted. {c} See #Ps 45:8 149:6-8. The bonds of the Holy Spirit are stronger than adamant, saith Ambrose.

Surely God is in thee.] Or, With thee; and hence thou, O Cyrus, so prevailest and prosperest. Thus these conquered kings shall supplicate and say to Cyrus.

And there is none else, there is no God.] Hence Mohammedans seem to have taken that which, out of their Alchoran, they daily proclaim in their mosques or meeting houses, "There is no god but God, and Mohammed his counsellor." Thus those kings; but what saith the prophet?

Ver. 15. Verily thou art a God that hidest thyself.] {a} As thou art invisible, and dwellest in light inaccessible; so in thy dispensations thou goest a way by thyself, and thy judgments are unsearchable. "Thou hidest thyself," and standest off a while sometimes from the help of thy poor people, but wilt appear to them and for them in due time. The Septuagint here translate Tu es Deus et nesciebamus, Thou art God, and we knew thee not. And this the fathers interpret concerning Christ; and hence the Jews seem to have drawn that speech of theirs, "Christ when he cometh, no man knoweth whence he is."

{a} Haec approbatio est Prophetarum. -Scullet.

Ver. 16. That are makers of idols.] The word rendered idols, signifieth properly Tormina, cruciatus, pains, and throes, and straits. Idolaters heap up sorrows to themselves, and terrors of conscience. See #Ps 16:4. {See Trapp on "Ps 16:4"}

Ver. 17. But Israel...with an everlasting salvation.] By Cyrus they were not so, for not long after, Antiochus afflicted them, Herod got the sceptre from them, the Romans came and took away both them and their nation; but the Israel of God were, and are still, saved by Jesus, with an everlasting salvation.

Ver. 18. He created it not in vain.] Therefore never think that he will forsake it, or not take care of his Church therein, for whose sake he made it at first, and still upholdeth it "by the word of his power." {#Heb 1:3} Now, if God created not the earth in vain, much less the heavens—wherein he hath showed his greater skill {#Heb 11:10} {See Trapp on "Heb 11:10"} -but that his people might there inhabit for ever. And here it is that they shall be "saved in the Lord with an everlasting salvation"; yea, they "shall not be ashamed or confounded, world without end." {#Isa 45:17}

Ver. 19. I have not spoken in secret.] As the sibyls did out of their dens; as the idol priests did out of their holes and underground vaults; as heretics and seducers, who creep into corners and there vend their false wares, as Vincentins Lirinensis long since observed. (Epiphanius fitly compareth them to moles, who do all their mischief by working underground.) But God, as he delivered his law openly on Mount Sinai, so his gospel he commanded to be preached "on the house top," and in Mount Zion. Christ "spoke openly" to the world. {#Joh 18:20} Truth seeketh no corners: "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ." {#Ro 1:16} But what was this word that was delivered so plainly and perspicuously?

Seek ye me.] And for your encouragement ye shall not do it "in vain"; for I am "a rewarder of all those that diligently seek me." {#Heb 11:6} Let heathen deities disappoint and delude those that seek to them; Jacob's God scorneth the motion. He is better to his people than their prayers, better than their hopes; and when, with Gehazi, they ask but one talent, he, like Naaman, forceth them to take two.

I the Lord speak righteousness; I declare the things that are right.] Or, Even. So doth not the devil, but things sinful and obscene; as human sacrifices, promiscuous uncleannesses, ut in nefariis Priapi et Veneris sacris. Contrariwise, "all the words of God's mouth are in righteousness; there is nothing froward or perverse in them." {#Pr 8:8}

Ver. 20. Ye that are escaped of the nations.] That have escaped the sword of Cyrus, and well proved how little your gods can do for you.

That set up the wood of their graven image.] Qui levant lignum, carrying them in pomp and procession upon their shoulders, as Papists now do their pictures, their breaden god especially, and crying to it, "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of Sabbaoth!"

Ver. 21. Who hath declared this?] sc., That the people of God should be set at liberty by Cyrus.

Ver. 22. Look unto me, and be ye saved.] While the moon looketh directly upon the sun, she is bright and beautiful; but if she once turn aside and be left to herself, she loseth all her glory, and enjoys but only a shadow of light, which is her own; so while men look to Christ, the "Sun of righteousness," and toward the "stars in his right hand."

For I am God, and none else.] This Judas Maccabeus acknowledged in his ensign, wherein this motto was written, Mi Camoca Belohim Iehovah, i.e., "Who is like unto thee among the gods, O Lord?" from the capital letters of which motto he took his name Maccabi. {a}

{a} Godw., Heb. Antiqu.

Ver. 23. That unto me every knee.] I will be known and obeyed all the world over, sc., by Christians. Of the Jews Jerome noteth, quod mentis superbiam demonstrantes genu non flectunt, that they bow not the knee in God's service, but only stand up at times.

Ver. 24. Surely shall one say.] This shall be the Christian confession, "In the Lord have I righteousness," &c.

—"Righteousness," i.e., mercy to those that come over to him, and strength to enable them to come, as the sea sendeth out waters to fetch us to it.

Ver. 25. Shall be justified.] By faith in Christ. {#Ro 5:1}

And shall glory.] Having peace of conscience they shall "glory in tribulation." {#Ro 5:1,3} Note this against merit mongers.

Chapter 46

Ver. 1. Bel is bowed down.] Jupiter Belus (as Pliny {a} calleth him), Babel's chief God, is now become a prey to the Persians, and might be to them of as great worth as was Nebuchadnezzar's solid gold image dedicated in Dura. {#Da 3:1,2} This great golden image some think to be the same that is here called Nebo or Nebuchadnezzar. Others think it to be Apollo Deus vaticinus. Tremellius rendereth it, the prophesying or oracular God. Jeremiah seemeth to call him Merodach. {#Jer 51:2} Dagon the Septuagint render him, but not well.

Your carriages were heavy laden.] Tam estis dii graves.

{a} Lib. vi. cap. 26.

Ver. 2. They stoop.] The Babylonians, together with their idols; ridiculous gods, that could be thus plundered, carried captives, borne on the backs of asses.

But themselves are gone into captivity.] Heb., And their soul went into captivity; that is, their idols, that were dear unto them as their very souls.

Ver. 3. Which are borne by me from the belly.] You do not bear me, as they do their idols in procession and otherwise; but I bear you, and so have done from the first, and shall do the last; like as the tender mother doth her beloved babe, or as the eagle doth her young upon her wings. {#Ex 19:4 De 32:11}

Ver. 4. And even to your old age I am he.] The mother beateth not her child in her bosom, when grown to some size. The eagle beateth her young out of the nest when able to prey upon their own wing; {a} but God dealeth better a great deal with his, whom he never casteth off; as neither doth he his labouring and languishing Church, upon whom the ends of the world are come.

I have made, and I will bear, even I will carry.] God himself will do it; "I" is emphatic and exclusive.

“ Et si gratissima semper

Munera sint author quae preciosa facit.”

How sweet should this precious promise be unto us, and how sovereign against the fear of want in old age! Plutarch giveth this for a reason why old men are so covetous, viz., because they fear they shall not have τούς θρησκοντας και τούς θαψοντας, such as will keep them while they live, and such as will bury them decently when dead. The Lord here assureth all his that he will see to their support and sustentation as long as life lasteth, yea, for spirituals as well as temporals. This was no small comfort to old David, {#Ps 71:18} to Dr Rivet and others; and well it might. See #Ps 48:14. {See Trapp on "Ps 48:14"}

{a} Idem faciunt equi calcibus et canes morsu.

Ver. 5. To whom, {a} then, will ye liken me? {b} &c.,] q.d., To which of your paramours? for here the Lord returneth to his discourse against idolaters and their idols, earumque inanitatem et inopiam demonstrat, inveighing against them with no less stomach and indignation than a jealous husband against his adulteress's gallants. Let every godless person, who idoliseth his lusts, think he heareth God thus bespeaking him, as in this text.

{b} Ibid.

Ver. 6. They lavish gold out of the bag.] They spare for no cost. Nebuchadnezzar did not in that vast Colossus. {#Da 3:1} Canutus bestowed upon a cross his whole annual entrado, or revenue. He also gave a hundred talents of silver and one of gold for St Augustine's arm, which he bestowed on Coventry as a memorial of his blind zeal. The Lady of Loretto hath her churches so stuffed with vowed presents and memorials, as they are forced to hang their cloisters and churchyards with them. {a}

{a} Sandys's Relation.

Ver. 7. They bear him upon their shoulders.] As the Papists' breamen god, furfuraceum illud numen, is, at this day, borne about to be adored; whereas the true God "beareth up all things by the word of his power." {#Heb 1:3}

Yea, one shall cry unto him.] As they did to Baal in Elijah's days; and the Cretans to their Jupiter, whom they therefore pictured without ears.

Ver. 8. Remember this.] Suffer me not to press these things so oft upon you to no purpose.

And show yourselves men.] Roboramini, Fortify your hearts by the word of God and true reason, renewing your good resolutions oft against this senseless sin of idolatry.

Bring it again to mind.] Heb., Bring back to heart, turn short again upon yourselves, recognise your iniquities, and be humbled.

Ver. 9. Remember the former things of old.] Again he calleth upon them to remember who had so foully forgot themselves in the days of Ahaz and Manasseh, and would do so again in Babylon, where they kept not themselves from idols. Papists unman themselves, or otherwise they could not be such gross idolaters.

Ver. 10. Declaring the end from the beginning.] This foretelling of things future is a precellency in God above idols that he much standeth upon.

I will do all my pleasure.] What God pleaseth to do, there is no question but he is able to do. But they are out who argue from God's power to his will.

Ver. 11. Calling a ravenous bird, / i.e., Cyrus, who was 'hawk-nosed,' and came swiftly to seize upon Babylon like a falcon, or some such ravenous bird. So Nebuchadnezzar is called an "eagle"; {#Jer 48:40} Xenophone testifieth that Cyrus had in his standard a golden spread eagle, as had after him the Persian kings, and likewise the Romans. See #Mt 24:28. {See Trapp on "Mt 24:28"}

Ver. 12. Hearken unto me, ye stouthearted.] Ye cruel Chaldeans; and here some begin the next chapter.

That are far from righteousness.] And therefore not far from ruin.
{#Ps 119:155}

Ver. 13. I will bring near my righteousness.] I will suddenly right my wronged people, by Cyrus my servant, but especially by Christ my Son. Therefore it followeth,

I will place salvation in Zion for Israel, my glory.] Or, In Israel, my magnificence—i.e., Now which of your idols can do thus for their worshippers?

Chapter 47

Ver. 1. Come down.] From thy lofty top and towering state, as the head city of the world. {a}

Sit in the dust.] {b} As a mourner. {#Job 2:8 42:6} So Judea, being subdued by Vespasian, was pictured upon money coined by him as a handmaid sitting on the ground. Sic ruet alto a culmine Roma!

O virgin daughter of Babylon.] Thou that hast never yet been subdued. So Venice hath for her motto, ‘Intacta maneo’; so Cologne-upon-Rhine is called ‘the virgin city.’

Thou shalt no more be called tender and delicate.] So as queens use to be—Cleopatra, for instance.

{a} Sic transit gloria mundi., So fleeting is the glory of the world.

{b} Cyrillus wrote εν τῷ ὀκτώτῃ.

Ver. 2. Take the millstone.] As the most abject slaves used to do, qui in pistrinum trudebantur. Neither is this an end of thy sorrows; for out of the mill house thou must be carried captive into a far country, and therefore, in order thereunto, Uncover thy locks.] Cast away thy diadem.

Make bare thy leg.] Denuda turpitudinem, the Vulgate rendereth it; that thou mayest pass through the waters naked and squalid into captivity.

Ver. 3. Thy nakedness shall be uncovered.] Thou shalt be stripped, and worse dealt with—the ordinary lot of women prisoners. At the sack of Magdeburg by Monsieur Tilly, ladies, gentlewomen, and others, like beasts and dogs, being naked and coupled together, were led into the woods, and there ravished. Such as resisted, the soldiers stripped naked, whipped them, cropped their ears, and so sent them home again.

I will not meet thee as a man.] But as a lion rather; thou shalt have vengeance without mixture of mercy. See #2Sa 7:24 Isa 13:6 27:7,8 Ho 5:14. Men use sometimes to deal favourably with women, but they shall not do so with thee. {a}

Ver. 4. As for our Redeemer, &c.] This comes in by way of parenthesis, for the comfort of God's poor people.

Ver. 5. Sit thou silent.] Here he threateneth Babylon with loss of her former fame; she shall be buried in obscurity and oblivion, as out of sight and out of mind, no longer called the 'lady of kingdoms,' but a wretched drudge, ut de Hecuba tradunt tragici.

For thou shalt no more be called.] Heb., Thou shalt not add to be called. Oecolampadius senseth it thus, Thou wast wont to be called the lady of kingdoms, now they shall call thee, Non adiecies, as desperate and irrecoverable. And why?

Ver. 6. I was wroth.] See on #Zec 1:15.

I have polluted mine inheritance.] God is his people's inheritance, and they are his; but now, for their sins, he had dealt with them as with a profane and unclean thing.

Thou didst show them no mercy.] Heb., Thou didst set them no bowels. Cruelty cries for vengeance. See #Jer 50:17 51:24.

Upon the ancient.] Who should have been borne with for their age and weakness.

Ver. 7. I shall be a lady for ever.] Presumption precedeth destruction. {#Ps 10:6 Re 18:7}

So that thou didst not lay these things to thy heart.] The daughter of pride is security, and pleasure is her niece. {#Isa 47:8}

Nor didst remember the latter end of it.] Heb., Her latter end. Memorare novissima tua, et in aeternum non peccabis. See #La 1:4. Ver. 8. Thou that art given to pleasure.] Delisatula; It is not good to take pleasure in pleasure; no, not to go as far here as we may. Verecunda sunt omnia initia peccati, Sin seemeth modest at first, &c.

Thou sayest in thine heart, I am, / sc., The lady of the world. Heathen Rome was called by the heathens, Terrarum dea gentiumque. Rome Papal saith as much. {#Re 17:4}

And none else besides me, / i.e., None worth speaking of. The Jesuits brag in like sort of their transcendent learning, and profess skill beyond the periphery of possible knowledge.

I shall not sit as a widow, / i.e., Be bereft of my monarchy, which is, as it were, my husband.

Neither shall I know the loss of children.] I shall not cease to subdue countries and kingdoms, which are added unto me as so many children.

Ver. 9. But these two things shall come upon thee in a moment.] Accidit in puncto, &c. Babylon was suddenly taken in one night, as the prophet had foretold, {#Isa 21:9} and as the history testifieth {#Da 5:30} Periit inter pocula.

For the multitude of thy sorceries.] Thy taking upon thee to divine of each man's life and fortune by the stars and horoscope, for which profession the Chaldeans were famous. But what a madness was it in Cardanus, who by the like skill went about to demonstrate that it was fatal to our Saviour Christ to die the death of the cross. {a}

{a} Alsted. Encycl., lib. xxx. cap. 10.

Ver. 10. Thou hast trusted in thy wickedness.] God calleth that "wickedness" which they counted wisdom.

None seeth me.] Ne Deus quidem novit rationes mess. Graceless men, having hid God from themselves, think also to hide themselves from God.

Thy wisdom and thy knowledge.] Thy magical arts and practices. Quantus artifex pereo? quadrabit in te peritum et periturum.

Ver. 11. Therefore shall evil come upon thee.] An evil, "an only evil," {as #Eze 7:5} both unexpected and inexpiable; such as thou canst neither avoid nor abide.

Ver. 12. Stand now with thine enchantments.] {a} Try thine utmost skill, and let us see what thou canst do for thyself. This is spoken in way of derision.

Wherein thou hast laboured from thy youth.] But found them to be no better than toilsome toys, quae nec ignorantibus nocent, nec scientibus iuvant, Against judiciary astrology, see Aug. De Civ. Dei, lib. v. cap. 1-5.

Ver. 13. Thou art wearied in the multitude of thy counsels.] As all such are sure to be, with a woe to boot, as "take counsel, but not of God; and that cover with a covering, but not by his Spirit, that they may add sin to sin" {#Isa 30:1} Thus do those vain astrologers, that pretend to read men's fates and fortunes in the heavens, velut in Minervae peplo, and thence to foretell good and evil. But experience frequently confuteth them, as it did Abraham the Jew, who foretold by the stars the coming of their Messiah, A.D. 1464; and Albumazar, a Mohammedan wizard, who predicted an end of the Christian religion, A.D. 1460 at utmost. A great flood was foretold by these diviners to occur in the year 1524, cum planetae comitia in piscibus celebrarent. This caused the prior of St Bartholomew's, in London, wise manlike, to go and build him a house at Harrow-on-the-hill, for his better security. {a}

Stand up, and save thee.] Save thee if they can: but Belshazzar found they could not, though he called for them all, {#Da 5:7,8} and they likely had promised him an everlasting monarchy—as some did the Romans imperium sine fine, but falsely; for now the Roman empire is at a very low ebb, and who shall be emperor is much questioned. {b}

{a} Hollinsh. in 1524.

{b} This was written, Sept. 19, 1637.

Ver. 14. Behold, they shall be as stubble.] As dried stubble. {#Na 1:10}
{See Trapp on "Na 1:10"}

They shall not deliver themselves.] Much less others.

There shall not be a coal to warm at.] Like a fire of flax, which is soon extinct, and leaves no embers or cinders behind it. In a spiritual sense, it may be said of most of our hearts and houses as here, There is not a coal to warm at. Deest ignis, as Father Latimer was wont to say; the fire of zeal is wanting, that flame of God. {#So 8:6}

Ver. 15. Thus shall they be unto thee with whom thou hast laboured.] But all in vain; viz., with thy wizards and diviners, those deceivers of the people, concerning whom Cato once said, Potest Augur Augurem videre et non ridere? {a} Can those fellows look one on another and not laugh, when they consider how they deceive people, and cheat them of their moneys? Hence they are called merchants also in the next words, as some think, qui non tam coeli rationem quam coelati argenti ducunt. {b} Such money merchants hath mystical Babylon also not a few. {#Re 18:11} Non desunt Antichristo sui Augures et malifici, saith Oecolampadius; Antichrist hath those abroad that trade with him and for him; these shall be "cast alive with him into the burning lake," {#Re 19:20} and though they wander, yet not so wide as to miss hell.

{a} Cic. De Divinat., lib. ii.

{b} Cic. orat. iv. in Ver.

Chapter 48

Ver. 1. Hear ye this, O house of Jacob.] Ye stiffnecked of Israel, and "uncircumcised in heart and ears, who do always resist the Holy Ghost," {#Ac 7:51} to you be it spoken; for to the "Israelites indeed" enough hath been said of this subject already.

Which are called by the name of Israel] {a} Sed nomen inane crimen immane. Ye are "called Jews, and make your boast of God," {#Ro 2:17} having a form of knowledge, {#Ro 2:20} and of godliness, {#2Ti 3:5} and that is all; the voice of Jacob, but the hands of Esau. Let such fear Jacob's fear, "My father perhaps will feel me, and I shall seem to him as a deceiver; and I shall bring a curse upon me, and not a blessing." {#Ge 27:12} It is sure enough.

And are come forth out of the waters {b} of Judah,] i.e., Out of the bowels, {as #Ge 15:4} as waters out of a spring. {#De 33:28 Ps 68:26} Judah was the tribe royal: hence they so gloried, and remained "ruling with God, and faithful with the saints," when other tribes revolted.

Which swear by the name of the Lord.] And not of Baal.

And make mention of the God of Israel.] Who was near in their mouths, but far from their reins. {#Jer 12:2 Ps 50:16} Religionem simulabant, cum in cute essent nequissimi. Arrant hypocrites.

But not in truth, nor in righteousness,] i.e., Without faith and sound conversion.

Ver. 2. For they call themselves of the holy city.] Inhabitants of Jerusalem and men of Judah; yea, they swore by their city and temple, as appeareth in the gospel, and cried out, ad ravim usque, "The temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord," {#Jer 7:4} like as the Romists now do, The Church, the Church, glorying in the false and empty title of Roman Catholics. Sed grande est Christianum esse, non dici, saith Jerome; and it is a great vanity, saith the poet,

“Respicere ad fumos et nomina vana Catonum.”

And stay themselves.] As far as a few good words will go. See on #Mic 3:11.

The Lord of hosts is his name.] So said these hypocrites, bearing themselves bold upon so great a God, who had all creatures at his command.

Ver. 3. I have declared the former things.] This God had said oft before; but being now to conclude this comfortable sermon, he repeats here the heads of what had been spoken in the seven foregoing chapters.

Ver. 4. Because I knew that thou art obstinate.] Heb., Hard, obdurate; therefore do I so inculcate these things, if by any means I may mollify thee. Hypocrites are harder to be wrought upon than other sinners.

And thy neck is an iron sinew.] Thou art utterly averse from, yea, adverse to any good; no more bended thereunto than if the body had for every sinew a plate of iron.

And thy brow brass.] Sinews of iron argue a natural impotence, and somewhat more; but brows of brass impudence in evil; quando pudet non esse impudentes, when men are shameless in sin, setting it "upon the cliff of the rock," {#Eze 24:7} and "declaring it as Sodom."

{#Isa 3:9}

Ver. 5. I have even from the beginning, &c.] See #Isa 48:3. It is probable that there were many among the Jews who, when they saw themselves to be so punished, and the heathen prospered, would be ready to think that the God of Israel either could not or would not do for his people, as those devil gods did for theirs. For their help, therefore, under such a temptation, God was pleased to foretell his people what good or evil should betide them, and accordingly to accomplish it.

Ver. 6. Thou hast heard, see all this.] Here God extorteth from them a confession of the aforesaid truth, and urgeth them to attest and publish it.

Ver. 7. They are created now, J i.e., They are now brought to light by my revelations and predictions.

Behold, I knew them.] By my gods or diviners, or by my natural sagacity.

Ver. 8. Yea, thou heardest not; yea, thou knewest not.] "Yea," so oft used here, is very emphatic, and showeth how hardly sinners are borne down, and made to believe plain truths where they are prepossessed with conceits to the contrary.

And wast called a transgressor from the womb.] Ever since thou madest and worshippedst a golden calf in the wilderness, {See Trapp on "Ps 58:3"} and art still as good at resisting the Holy Ghost as ever thy fathers were. {#Ac 7:51}

Ver. 9. For my name's sake will I defer mine anger.] Heb., Prolong it. Here he setteth forth the cause of his patience toward so perverse a people, viz., the sole respect to his own glory, whereof he is so tender, and so loath to be a loser in. Propter me faciam.

And for my praise.] The praise of my might and mercy.

That I cut thee not off.] Which I would do, "were it not that I feared the wrath of the enemy, lest thine adversaries should behave themselves strangely, and lest they should say, Our hand is high, and the Lord hath not done all this." {#De 32:27}

Ver. 10. Behold, I have refined thee, but not with silver.] Much less as gold, which is wont to be fined most exactly, and to the uttermost, because these precious metals will not perish by fire. But thou hast more dross in thee than good ore; therefore I have refined thee with favour, {#Ps 118:18} Ne totus disperires, lest I should undo thee; for if thy punishment should be commensurate to thine offence thou must needsly perish. {a}

I have chosen thee in the furnace of affliction, J i.e., In affliction, which is as a furnace or crucible. See #Eze 20:37.

{a} Non agam summo iure tecum. -Jun.

Ver. 11. For mine own sake, even for mine own sake.] This is oft repeated, that it may once be well observed. Bene cavet Spiritus

Sanctus ubique in Scripturis ne nostris operibus salutem tribuamus; it is Oecolampadius's note upon the first verse of this chapter, i.e., the Holy Ghost doth everywhere in Scripture take course that we ascribe not our safety to our own works. See on #Isa 43:13.

For how should my name be polluted?] As it will be by the blasphemous heathens, who else will say that their gods are fortiores et faventiores, more powerful and more merciful than the God of the Hebrews. Thus the Turks at this day, when they have beaten the Christians, cry up their Mohammed as mightier than Christ.

And I will not give my glory to another.] Press this in prayer: it is an excellent argument. {#Ex 32:12 Jos 7:9 Ps 79:9,10 115:1,2} The saints, after all other arguments used, hunc quasi arietem admovent, mind God of his glory engaged, and then doubt not to prevail with him.

Ver. 12. I am he.] Heb., Hu; this the Rabbis make to be one of the names of God. Sanchez here observeth, that by this threefold "I" is meant the holy Trinity: the deity of Jesus Christ is rightly proved from this text, compared with #Re 1:11 22:13.

Ver. 13. My hand hath also laid the foundation of the earth.] My left hand, say the Rabbis, as "my right hand spanned the heavens"; that is, meted them out as a workman doth his work. {a} God did but "call unto them" both, "and they stood up together." Vain therefore and needless was the disputation of the Samerites and the Hillelites among the Jews, whether was first created the heaven or the earth?

Ver. 14. The Lord hath loved him, / i.e., Cyrus. He so loveth his people that for their sakes he loveth all their benefactors and well wishers. See #Ge 12:3.

He will do his pleasure.] See #Isa 43:14.

Ver. 15. I have brought him.] Heb., Made him to go, or caused him to come, who of himself had no such mind to come on such a design. Herodotus telleth us that Cyrus had once resolved to abandon the siege of Babylon as unfeasible: but God altered his mind, as we here read, and prospered his work.

Ver. 16. Come ye near unto me and hear this.] God calleth often for audience, as knowing our dulness and crossness, our oscitance and inadvertence: a good mirror for ministers.

I have not spoken in secret.] See #Isa 41:26.

From the time that it was, there am I,] viz., At the creation. {as #Pr 8:22,23} Or, I have from everlasting been the author of that counsel by which all these things have had, as it were, their first beginning; and afterwards, in their appointed time, I have brought them forth by my power. {a}

And now the Lord God and his Spirit hath sent me,] i.e., Me, Isaiah the prophet, whose writings should therefore be prized and believed by us as most authentic and authoritative, because he was commissioned by the blessed Trinity.

{a} Diod.

Ver. 17. I am the Lord thy God which teacheth thee to profit.] And do therefore so oft call upon thee to hear me, not for any benefit to myself, but to thee alone. And the truth is, in all the commandments of God, if they were open to us, if we did see the ground of them, we should see there were so much reason for them, and so much good to be got by them, that if God did not command them, yet it would be best for us to practise them.

Which leadeth thee by the way that thou shouldest go.] Heb., Making thee to tread in the way thou shalt walk, carefully choosing thy steps for thee, and setting thy foot right: thus "he led Joseph like a sheep," {#Ps 80:1} and "Israel through the deep, as a horse in the wilderness, that they should not stumble." {#Isa 63:13} Thrice happy are the saints in such a guide. "The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord, and he delighteth in his way." {#Ps 37:23}

Ver. 18. Oh that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments.] See the like wishes, #De 32:29 5:29 Ps 81:13, implying that so they might have redeemed many sorrows, escaped many miseries.

Then had thy peace been as a river] "Great peace have all they that love God's law, and nothing shall offend them," {#Ps 119:165} they shall have a confluence of all comforts and contentments: yet ever with an exception of the cross, as need requireth.

And thy righteousness as the waves of the sea.] Which are perpetual, fluctus fluctum trudit.

Ver. 19. Thy seed also had been as the sand.] As was promised to Abraham, and performed to his posterity; such a μυριομακαριστης there is in godliness, and in doing of God's commandments so great reward.

His name should not have been cut off.] As it was of old among the heathens (see Horace, Juvenal, Martial, &c.), and is at this day among the Turks, who usually swear, Iudaeus sim si fallam, &c. See #Zec 8:13. {See Trapp on "Zec 8:13"}

Ver. 20. Go ye forth of Babylon.] The word among the Jews that despaired of ever returning from Babylon: but the prophet, by an unexpected alarm, commandeth them to return, showing how and why they should do so, and carrieth himself no otherwise than as if he had been a captain in the midst of those captives, &c.

Ver. 21. And they thirsted not when he led, &c.] Your fathers did not of old: nor shall you now in your return homeward. The Jews tell us of many miracles then wrought also, but we read of no such matter in Ezra; and we know that God's pilgrims shall want no necessary accommodation: that he will be sure to see to.

Ver. 22. There is no peace, saith the Lord, unto the wicked.] Babylon's best days are past: therefore go ye forth of her. {#Isa 48:20} The wicked of what nation soever that hearken not to God's commandments, {as #Isa 48:18} well they may have a truce, but no true peace certainly. That which they have is pax infida, pax incerta {a} (as that of the Romans with the Samnites), a peace no peace; and how can it be better so long as their wickednesses and witchcrafts are so many? {#2Ki 9:22} Tranquillitas illa tempestas erit; as after a south wind arose Euroclydon, {#Ac 27:13,14} so, after a false peace, storm and tempest everlasting: this shall be the portion of their cup {#Ps 11:6} See #Isa 57:20,21.

Chapter 49

Ver. 1. Listen, O isles, unto me, / i.e., Ye foreigners; for wicked Israel will not, and therefore have no true peace. {#Isa 48:22 Ps 119:165}

Unto me.] Understand it of Isaiah, but especially of Christ: for from hence to the end of this book, as the Jewish doctors also acknowledge, are visions and sermons set down concerning Christ's twofold kingdom, viz., of patience and of power. See #Ac 13:47 2Co 6:2 Re 7:10.

The Lord hath called me from the womb.] Called me and qualified me, appointed and anointed me to the office of a mediator. Thus those that attend not, though never so remote, are deeply guilty before God. {#De 18:18,19 Ac 3:22,23}

Ver. 2. And he hath made my mouth like a sharp sword.] He hath added efficacy to my doctrine, and will protect my person till I have finished the work that he gave me to do.

And made me a polished shaft.] That, being well pointed, will pierce at a distance, and either prick converts at the heart, {as #Ac 2:37} or cut refractories to the heart. {as #Ac 7:54} Christ will pursue his enemies both with the terrors of his words, his mouth being "made like a sharp sword," and with the plagues of his hands, being made like a polished shaft.

Ver. 3. Thou art my servant, O Israel, / i.e., O Christ, who best deservest to be called by that name, who art also the head of the elect, that Israel of God. {#Ga 6:16}

Ver. 4. Then said I: I have laboured in vain.] I have done little more than preached my hearers to hell. The Pharisees and the lawyers "rejected the counsel of God against themselves"; {#Lu 7:30} they would not be forewarned to "flee from the wrath to come"; {#Mt 3:7} to "escape the damnation of hell." {#Mt 23:33} Our Saviour lost his sweet words upon them: so did the prophet Isaiah upon his untoward countrymen, who refused to be reformed, hated to be healed. Nothing was unconquerable to his pains, who had, as one saith of Jul. Scaliger, 'a golden wit in an iron body'; but this matter was not malleable: hence he spake to them to as little purpose as Bede did when he preached to a heap of stones. Hence his complaint: {#Isa 53:1} "Who hath believed our report?" He might haply hope at first, as holy Melanchthon did, that it was impossible for his hearers to withstand the evidence of the gospel: but after he had been a preacher a while, it is said he complained that ‘old Adam was too hard for young Melanchthon.’ Rev. Mr Greenham, besides his public pains in season and out of season, was wont to walk out into the fields, and to confer with his neighbours as they were at plough. But Dry Drayton, the place where he was minister many years, though so often watered with his tears, prayers, and pains, was little the better for all: the generality of his parish remained ignorant and obstinate, to their pastor’s great grief, and their own greater damage and disgrace. {a} Hence the verses,

But sheep full lean, &c.”

He might well cry out, as many also do at this day, Eheu, quam pingui macer est mihi taurus in arvo! Our people, alas! are like Laban’s lambs or Pharaoh’s kine; they are even ministorum opprobria. But if ministers toil all night and take nothing, it is to be feared, saith one well, that Satan caught the fish ere they came at their net.

Yet surely my judgment is with the Lord.] He will do me right, and reward me howsoever. The physician hath his praise and pay, though his patient dies; the lawyer hath his fee, though his client’s cause miscarry. Curare exigeris, non curationem, saith Bernard to a friend of his, It is the care, not the cure of your charge that is charged upon you. Jeremiah was impatient, and would preach no more; {#Jer 20:9} but that might not be. Mr Greenham left Dry Drayton, upon friends’ importunity, and moved to London, but he afterwards repented it. Latimer, speaking of a certain minister who gave this answer why he left off preaching, Because he saw he did no good, ‘This,’ saith Latimer, ‘is a naughty, a very naughty answer.’

{a} Mr Fuller’s Church Hist.

Ver. 5. To bring Jacob again to him.] To convert and reduce him to the fold: this is the proper work of the arch-shepherd. {#1Pe 2:25 3:18 5:4} Men may speak persuasively, but Christ alone can persuade the heart. Meum est docere, saith Cyril, rostrum auseultare, Dei vero perficere.

Though Israel be not gathered,] viz., By God's Word, which is his "arm"; {#Isa 53:1} or, will not be gathered. {as #Mt 23:37}

Yet I shall be glorious in the eyes of the Lord.] Who will reward me κατα τον κοπον και ου κατα τον καρπον, according to my pains, and not according to my success; {a} yea, it is more than probable that such as patiently persist in the work of the ministry, though few or none be converted thereby, shall have a greater measure of glory than those that see much fruit of their labours, and so have their honeycomb here to feed on.

{a} Secundum laborem, non secundum proventum. -Bern.

Ver. 6. I will also give thee for a light to the Gentiles.] De vocatione gentium illustre testimonium; and to this purpose it is cited by Paul and Barnabas. {#Ac 13:47 Joh 12:46 Lu 1:78,79}

That thou mayest be my salvation.] Vide quam Deo cordi et curae sit salus nostra, cum eam vocat suam. {a} See how God mindeth and fancieth our salvation, when he calleth it here "his salvation."

{a} A Lapid.

Ver. 7. To him whom man despiseth.] Christ was extremely despised in the state of his humiliation; {#Isa 53:2,3} his soul was filled with scorn and contempt; {as #Ps 123:3,4} he was heartily hated.

To him whom the nation abhorreth.] Jerome saith that, to this day, that execrable nation curseth Christ three times a day in their synagogues, and professeth that if their Messiah should come, rather than the Gentries should share with them in his benefits, they would crucify him over and over.

To a servant of rulers.] Christ was basely used by the rulers of the Jews, who never left till they had nailed him to the tree, which was a slave's death among the Romans.

Kings shall see and arise, princes also shall worship.] As did Constantine, Theodosius, Valentinian, Charles the Great, &c., who called themselves vasallos Christi, the vassals of Christ.

And he shall choose thee,] i.e., He shall declare that he hath chosen thee to be the Saviour of his people.

Ver. 8. In an acceptable time.] Heb., In a time of my good pleasure, or good will—i.e., when of free grace I am pleased to send thee into the world, and to cause the gospel to be preached all abroad, thereby declaring myself fully appeased with the "men of my good will," as the elect are called. {#Lu 2:14 2Co 6:2}

Have I heard thee?] Or, Will I hear thee—sc., interceding; and will I help thee—sc., conflicting.

And give thee for a covenant,] i.e., For a mediator of the new covenant, which is ratified by thy blood: as was signified by the book sprinkled with the blood of the slain sacrifice.

To establish the earth.] Had not Christ undertook the shattered condition of the world to uphold it, it had fallen about Adam's ears.

To cause to inherit the desolate heritages,] i.e., Heaven, forfeited by us in our first parents; or, as others, the countries of the nations now converted.

Ver. 9. That thou mayest say to the prisoners,] i.e., To such as lie hampered and enthralled in the invisible chains of the kingdom of darkness. To these Christ saith, Be refreshed with the light of saving knowledge, and with the liberty of the sons of God.

They shall feed in the ways.] As cattle do, that are removed from place to place; they shall have a subsistence till they get home to their Father's house, where is "bread enough."

Ver. 10. They shall not hunger nor thirst.] A sufficiency the saints have, even of outward comforts, if not a superfluity; and for inward, sunt nobis pascua, pocula, et panis coelestis, they "shall not want"; {#Ps 23:1} yea, they shall "over exceedingly abound." {#2Co 7:4} So little cause is there for the Jew to jeer us as poor and forlorn; spiritual alimony we are sure of, and bread and water with the gospel are good cheer. See #Re 7:16.

Neither shall the heat nor sun smite them.] As #Ps 121:6. {See Trapp on "Ps 121:6"}

For he that hath mercy on them.] He saith not, Pastor, but Miserator, a sweeter title.

Even by the springs.] See #Ps 23:3. {See Trapp on "Ps 23:3"}

Ver. 11. And I will make all my mountains.] I will remove all rubs, and lay all level: pacifica erunt omnia, faecunda et suavia; who would not then take up Christ's so easy a yoke? &c.

Ver. 12. Behold, these shall come from far.] The Jews from all parts, whither they have been dispersed, the elect from all quarters of the earth. {#Mt 8:11} {See Trapp on "Mt 8:11"}

And these from the land of Sinim.] Or, Of the Sinites—that is, of the Chinese, saith Junius and others, whom the Greek geographers call Sinois, a very populous nation. Botterus saith that there are reckoned seventy millions of men, which are more than are to be found in all Europe; and who knows but many of those of the ten tribes of Israel are there? {a}

{a} Arias Mont., Osorius, A Lapide, Mr Cotton.

Ver. 13. Sing, O heavens.] {a} The prophet having thus foretold the saints' happiness in and by Christ, cannot hold, but breaketh forth into God's praises, calling into concert all creatures which since the fall have lain bedridden, as it were, looking with outstretched neck for their full deliverance. {#Ro 8:23}

For the Lord hath comforted his people.] This is just matter of general joy.

Ver. 14. But Zion said.] The Church hath her vicissitudes of joy and sorrow; mercies and crosses are interwoven; God checkereth his providences white and black; he speckleth his work. {as #Zec 1:8}

The Lord hath forsaken me.] No, never: Non deserit Deus, etiamsi deserere videatur; non deserit etiamsi deserat, {a} God may withdraw, but not utterly desert his; he may change his dispensation, not his disposition toward them.

My Lord hath forgotten me.] My Lord still, though little enjoyed at present. So #Ps 22:1. Plato could say that a man might believe, and yet not believe. "I believe," saith he in the gospel, "help mine unbelief"—that is, my weak and wavering faith.

{a} Augustine.

Ver. 15. Can a woman forget her sucking child?] It were a wonder she should grow out of kind as to be so unkind. The mother fasteth that her child may eat, waketh that he may sleep, is poor to make him rich, slighted to make him glorious. Occidar mode imperet, said she in story. God's love to his is more than maternal. All the mercies of all the mothers in the world being put together would not make the tithes of his mercy. David saith much, {#Ps 103:13} "as a father pitieth his children," &c. Great was Jacob's love to Benjamin, David's to Absalom, so that Joab upbraideth him with it. {#2Sa 19:6} But God here saith more, "Can a woman forget," &c. The harlot could not yield to have her child divided. Arsinoe interposed her own body between the sword of the murderer and her dear children. Melanchthon telleth of a countess of Thuringia, who being compelled by her husband's cruelty to go into banishment from her children, when she took leave of her eldest son she bit a piece of his cheek out, amoris notam cruento morsu imprimens, and so marked him for her own. {a} This is somewhat; but what is all this to the infinite? Was there ever love like God's love in sending his Son to die for sinners? Christ himself wondereth at it; {#Joh 3:16} this was a sic so, without a sicut, just as, there being nothing in nature wherewith to parallel it. See #Ro 8:32.

Yea, they may forget.] They may put off natural affection, as some did in times of Popish persecution; Julius Palmer's mother for instance. King Edward the martyr was basely murdered by his own mother. Egelred succeeded him, and much mourned for his brother, being but ten years old, which so enraged his mother, that taking wax candles, which were readiest at hand, she therewith scourged him so sore, that he could never after endure wax candles to be burnt before him.

Ver. 16. Behold, I have graven thee.] {a} So that as oft as I look upon mine own hands I cannot but think on thee. We read of one who had written the whole history of Christ's Passion upon the nails of his hands in small letters. The "signet on his finger" a man cannot lightly look beside. See #So 8:6 Jer 22:24. Some think here is alluded to that precept given by God, of binding the Commandments to their right hand. {#De 6:8}

Thy walls are continually before me.] The Lord doth so delight in his servants, that their "walls are ever in his sight," and he loveth to look upon the houses where they dwell. See on #Ps 87:6.

Ver. 17. Thy children shall make haste.] People shall come in amain to the Church. Nescit tarda molimina Spiritus Sancti gratia. God can make a nation to conceive and bring forth in a day. {#Isa 66:8} How quickly was the gospel divulged and darted all the world over, as the beams of the sun! so in the late blessed Reformation begun by Luther.

And they that made thee waste.] Tyrants and heretics shall be cashiered. {as #Zec 13:2} Fiat, fiat. Let it happen, let it happen.

Ver. 18. Lift up thine eyes round about, and behold.] As those use to do which look upon ought with wonder and delight.

Thou shalt surely clothe thee with them, as with an ornament.] The good sons of Zion are a great honour to their mother, as the two Scipios were to Cornelia; and as that elect lady's children were to her. {#2Jo 2} A godly man is a gallant man, but the wicked are botches and blots to a Church.

Ver. 19. For thy waste and thy desolate places.] Heb., Thy wastenesses and thy desolations. The true Church then may lie waste and desolate and not be so gloriously visible, as the Papists falsely say it always is.

Shall even now be too narrow.] A metaphor from cities that being overcrowded send out colonies into other countries.

And they that swallowed thee up.] See #Isa 49:17.

Ver. 20. The children.] Heb., The children of thine orbity; such as are not yet received into the Church.

Give place to me that I may.] People shall offer violence to heaven, and the "violent shall take it by force": valde avide et quasi ambitiose accessuri sunt. Ezekiel describeth the Church of the New Testament to be very large and spacious, and yet she shall be so crowded as is a bee hive, out of the mouth whereof the bees oft hang in heaps for want of room within.

Ver. 21. Then shalt thou say in thine heart.] Est artificiosa fictio, et color rhetoricus.

A captive, and removing to and fro.] The condition of God's Church on earth—to be afflicted and tossed from post to pillar, having no settled abode; as neither had the ark, but was transportative, till settled at length in Solomon's temple.

Ver. 22. Behold, I will lift up my hand, &c., / i.e., I will call them by the gospel, which is the power of God to salvation to all believers. {#Ro 1:16}

And they shall bring thy sons in their arms, / sc., When they bring them to be baptized. Respicit ad puerilem conditionem: yet some expound it metaphorically, as #De 32:10 Ho 11:3.

Ver. 23. And kings shall be thy nursing fathers.] Such were David, Solomon, Hezekiah, Josiah, Constantine, Theodosius, Placilla, Queen Elizabeth, &c.

They shall bow down to thee.] They shall give thee civil worship, and low obeisance, and that for Christ's sake, who is thine head and husband, and dwelleth in thee.

They shall bow down to thee, &c.] Such honour hath every saint through Christ. The Pope's parasites would hence ground his holding out his feet to be kissed; yea, his treading upon kings and emperors. But Peter would none of this; {#Ac 10:25,26} so little cause had that Pope to cry out, Et mihi et Petro. Interpreters do rightly note that in these and the like texts, the prophet alludes to the manner of the Persians, among whom those that would speak unto the king, did first kiss the pavement that the king had trodden upon. {a} Hence Martial,

The ancient Christians also, to honour and hearten their confessors, and such as suffered imprisonment for the truth's sake, did use to kiss their hands, yea, to cast themselves down at their feet. Tertullian, writing to some of the martyrs, saith, Non tantus sum ut vos alloquar; I am not good enough to speak unto you. He telleth also of some in his time, that they did reptare ad vincula martyrum, creep to the bands of the martyrs in way of honour to them.

Ver. 24. Shall the prey be taken from the mighty?] Not unless he be out matched and over mastered. The heathens were wont to ask, Who can wring a club out of Hercules's hand, or a lightening bolt out of Jove's? The captive Jews here seem to ask, Who can deliver us from the Babylonians, who have both might and right for them? for we are their lawful captives, and we see not how we can be set at liberty. Thus they thought at least, if they spoke not as much, not looking at all to the power and faithfulness of God, sed ad praesentium rerum spectra, ac hostium potentiam. Those that look downward on the rushing and roaring streams of miseries and troubles which run so swiftly under them, shall be sure to be taken with a giddiness, &c., but such as steadfastly fasten on the power and promise of God all-sufficient, shall be established.

Ver. 25. But thus saith the Lord.] Here is a full answer to the former objection, as God doth usually in the Scripture frame answers to men's thoughts; the law is spiritual and heart reaching.

And I will contend with him that contendeth with thee.] I will overpower the devil and thy most headstrong lusts, bringing thee out of his slavery, so that thou shalt be able to do all things through Christ who strengtheneth thee. {#Php 4:13} Thy temporal enemies also, thy persecutors, shall feel my power, as did Pharaoh, Nero, Diocletian, Julian, &c. See on #Ge 12:2.

Ver. 26. And I will feed them that oppress thee with their own flesh.] Which yet "no man ever hated, but nourisheth and cherisheth it." {#Eph 5:29} But Zion's enemies should one destroy another, and be put to such straits as the Jews were in the siege of their city by Titus, that they fed upon their own flesh, and the flesh of their children. {a} So hard a thing it is "to kick against the pricks"; quae in coelum expuunt, in faciem ipsorum recidunt.

And they shall be drunk with their own blood.] Yea, drowned in it, as was Attila king of Huns, {b} Felix, Count of Wartenburg, a great warrior and bloody persecutor of the Lutherans, who was choked in his own blood, and Charles IX of France, to whom a certain poet thus rightly speaketh, “*Naribus, ore, oculis, atque auribus undique, et ano,

Et pene, erumpit qui tibi, Carle, cruor,
Non tuus iste cruor, sanctorum at caede cruorem
Quem ferns hausisti, concoquere haud poteras.*”

{a} Alterum ut alterius mactatum sanguine cernas.

Chapter 50

Ver. 1. Where is the bill of your mother's divorcement.] Heb., Abscession. This bill was called by the Greeks Ἀποστασιον: but none such could here be produced or proven as given by God to the Jewish state; but that the disloyalty was theirs, and their dereliction on their part. God had neither rejected them though innocent, (as some husbands did their wives out of a peevish and selfish humour), nor sold them though obedient, as some fathers did their children, for payment of their debts; for he is neither debtor to any nor non-solvent. {#Ro 11:35,36}

Behold, for your iniquities have ye sold yourselves.] O duram servitutum! O miseram necessitatem! "You have sold yourselves," as Ahab did, to work wickedness, {#1Ki 21:20} and therefore I have justly sold and abandoned you into the hands of your enemies. {#Jud 2:13,14 3:7,8 Ps 44:11,12}

Is your mother,] i.e., The synagogue, whereunto the Jews do yet still adhere as to their mother; and the Lord did then acknowledge himself to be her husband, but now he hath worthily cast her off.

Ver. 2. Wherefore, when I came, was there no man?] Christ "came unto his own, but his own received him not." {#Joh 1:11} This was condemnation, {#Joh 3:19} their rebelling against the light of the gospel; this was the great offence, the damning sin, the very cause of their utter rejection.

Is my hand shortened at all?] Or rather, Have not you, by your obstinace and incredulity, transfused, as it were, a dead palsy into the hand of Omnipotence? "He could do there no mighty work because of their unbelief": {#Mr 6:5} of so venomous a nature is that cursed sin.

Behold, at my rebuke I dry up the sea.] I have done it, you know, {#Ps 106:9} and can do it again. Be not therefore "faithless, but believing." {#Joh 20:27}

Ver. 3. I clothe the heavens with blackness.] I did so in that three days' darkness in Egypt, {#Ex 10:21,22} and shall do so again at the time of my passion. I can therefore, doubtless, deliver you, not only from Babylon, but from sin, death, and hell, by giving you an entrance into heaven by the waters of baptism, and by bringing you out of darkness into my marvellous light. {#1Pe 2:9}

And make sackcloth their covering.] Ita ut coelum pullata veste obtensum fuisse dixeris. So #Re 6:12.

Ver. 4. The Lord God.] Heb., The sovereign self-being.

Hath given me.] Me, Isaiah; but much more Jesus Christ, the arch-prophet of his Church, who "spake as never man spoke." {#Joh 7:46} See #Mt 7:28,29 Lu 4:22. "Grace was poured into his lips," {#Ps 45:2} and it was no less poured out of his lips, while together with his words there went forth a power, and he could persuade as he pleased; for what reason? "God had blessed him" (ib.).

The tongue of the learned.] A learned and elaborate speech it had need to be that shall affect the heart. {#Mt 13:52} Not every dolt can do it; but he who is "an interpreter, one among a thousand" {#Job 33:23} who can speak as the oracles of God, {#1Pe 4:11} sell oil to the wiser virgins, {#Mt 25:9} "comfort the feebleminded, support the weak, be patient or forbearant toward all men." {#1Th 5:14} O quam hoc non est omnium! Such a choice man, thus taught of God, is worth his weight in gold. Such a one was Luther, such was Latimer (who was confessorgeneral to all Protestants troubled in mind), Bradford, Greenham, Dod, Sibbes, &c.

That I might know how to speak a word in season.] Tempestivare, to time or season a word, to set it "on the wheels," as Solomon phraseth it, {#Pr 25:11} that it may be "as apples of gold in pictures of silver," not only precious for matter, but delectable for order. {#Ec 12:10} Surely such a speaker "hath joy by the answer of his mouth; and a word spoken in his season how good is it!" {#Pr 15:23} This is the right medicine for the soul (as heathens also hammered at), far beyond all philosophical discourses, or any other consolatiunculae creaturulae, as Luther fitly expresseth it.

He awakeneth morning by morning.] {a} He constantly calleth me up betime, as a master doth his scholar to his book and business, for the which the morn is fittest. Christ's indefatigable assiduity in teaching his perverse countrymen, left them without all excuse. {#Joh 15:22}

To hear as the learned,] i.e., Attentively, as those that would be learned, and are therefore φνληκooι, desirous to hear. Aristotle calleth hearing 'the learned sense.'

{a} Indesinenter me informat Spiritu, non autem per momenta, ut omnes prophetas alios. -Jun.

Ver. 5. The Lord God hath opened mine ear.] Removing all lets, and making the bore bigger, as it were, thereby speaking home to my heart, and making me morigerous and obedient, against all affronts and misusages. For here our Saviour setteth forth his active obedience, as in the next verse his passive.

Ver. 6. I gave my back to the smiters.] Ecce pro impio pietas flagellatur, &c., saith Ambrose. {a} "Behold the man" (as Pilate once said), "the just" man scourged "for the unjust," {#1Pe 3:18} wisdom derided for the fool's sake, truth denied for the liar's sake, mercy afflicted for the cruel man's sake, life dying for the dead man's sake. What are all our sufferings to his? how oft have we been whipped, depiled, despitefully spat upon, &c., for his sake? Oh that I might have the maidenhead of that kind of suffering! said one of the martyrs in the Marian times; for I have not heard that you have yet whipped any. Bishop Bonner afterwards, with his own hands, whipped some, and pulled a great part of their beards off.

I hid not my face from shame and spitting.] That is, from shameful spitting. See #Mt 26:48 27:30. {See Trapp on "Mt 26:48"} {See Trapp on "Mt 27:30"} Discamus etiam hoc loco, saith Oecolampadius; Learn here also what is the character of a true Christian minister, namely, to express Christ to the world as much as may be, viz., by apt utterance, seasonable comforts, divine learning, ready obedience, constant patience, exemplary innocence, discreet zeal, &c.

{a} De Temp. Ser., 114.

Ver. 7. For the Lord God will help me.] And again, #Isa 50:9, "Behold, the Lord God will help me." This lively hope held head above water "Hope" we also "perfectly—or, to the end—for the grace that is to be brought unto us at the revelation of Jesus Christ." {#1Pe 1:13}

Therefore shall I not be confounded.] Heb., Ashamed, notwithstanding the shame they seek to cast upon me. {#Isa 50:6} I am as marble, to which no dirt will stick.

Therefore I have set my face as a flint.] Or, As steel (which is medulla slve nucleus ferri, saith Pliny). I have steeled my countenance. {as #Lu 9:51} See #Eze 3:8,9. So did Luther when he resolved to appear at Worms before the emperor, though he were sure to encounter as many devils there as were tiles upon the houses. {a} See #Ac 21:13.

{a} Acts and Mon., 776.

Ver. 8. He is near that justifieth me,] i.e., God the Father will shortly clear up mine innocence, and declare me to be the son of God (my only crime now), "with power by the resurrection from the dead." {#Ro 1:4}

Who will contend with me?] So #Joh 8:46 Ro 8:33,34, where the apostle Paul, as a stout soldier and imitator of Christ, the "Captain of his salvation," useth the same argument, and teacheth us to do likewise.

Ver. 9. Behold, the Lord God will help me.] See #Isa 50:7.

Who is he that shall condemn me.] {a} If Libanius could say of his friend Basil (though of a different religion), Let but him praise me, and I care not who dispraiseth me; how much better might Christ, and may every good Christian say the same of God!

Lo, they shall all wax old as a garment.] The scribes and Pharisees (those old cankered carles) shall; for of them Jerome, Cyril, and others understand it. The Romans—according as they feared, and therefore crucified Christ {#Joh 11:48} -came upon them, and took away both them and their nation.

The moth shall eat them up,] i.e., They shall be irrecoverably ruined, being once laid aside by God as an old wornout garment, which is made thereby food for moths. Thus it befell Pilate (saith Lyra here), banished by Tiberius; and thus it befell the priests, who were burned by Titus in the temple; who also added that it was fit that those which served in the temple should perish together with it.

Ver. 10. Who is among you that feareth the Lord?] This question implieth that there were not many such among them. See the like, #Ho 14:9.

That obeyeth.] The fear of God frameth the heart to the obedience of faith. {#Ec 12:13}

That walketh in darkness, and hath no light.] That, being for the time deserted, are in a mist; so as that ye cannot read your own graces, see your own comforts, but walk in darkness though children of light, and are in such a state as Paul and his company was, {#Ac 27:20} when they saw neither sun nor stars for many days together, but were almost past hope.

Let him trust in the name of the Lord.] Let him do as those above mentioned did, cast anchor, even in the darkest night of temptation, and pray still for day, and it will dawn at length. Before daybreak the darkness is greatest; so is it oft in this case. Here then, as a child in the dark clasps about his father, so let the poor deserted soul about God. Distrust is worse than distress; and although the liquor of faith is never pure in these vessels of clay, without the lees of distrust; yet true faith will trust in God where it cannot trace him, and by an assurance of adherence, at least, get to heaven through mourning. As Christ was taken up in a cloud, or as the kine that carried the ark went right, but they lowed as they went.

And stay upon his God.] As the vine doth upon some support. Faith hath a catching quality at whatsoever is near to lay hold on; like the branches of the vine, it windeth about that which is next, and stays itself upon it, spreading further and further still. Fides est quae te pullastrum, Christum gallinam facit, saith Luther.

Ver. 11. Behold, all ye that kindle a fire.] That instead of relying upon God, would relieve yourselves by carnal shifts and fetches, a fire of your own kindling, or rather sparks of your own tinderboxes, strange fire, and not that of God's sanctuary. Or say they be your own good works you trust to. Like as the phoenix gathereth sweet odoriferous sticks in Arabia together, and then blows them with her wings, and burns herself with them.

That compass yourselves about with sparks.] Away with those tinder boxes of yours. What are your sparkles but such as are smitten out of a flint, which (1.) Yields no warmth or good light; (2.) Are soon extinct; (3.) Nevertheless, you are sure to "lie down in sorrow," to be "cast into utter darkness," where you shall never see the light again till you see the whole world all on a light fire at the last day.

Walk in the light of your fire.] Do so if ye think it good; but your light shall be put out into darkness and worse; like as lightning is followed by rending and roaring thunder.

This shall ye have of my hand.] This I will assure of; and having spoken it with my mouth, I will fulfil it with my hand.

Ye shall lie down in sorrow.] As sick folk, who being in grievous pain, would fain die, but cannot. Cubatam ibitis, ad ignes, ad dolores et cruciatus. You shall make your beds in the bottom of hell, as it is said of the king of Babylon, {#Isa 14:11} and as of Pope Clement V it was reported, that upon the death of a nephew of his, whom he had sensually abused, he sent to a certain magician to know how it went with his soul in the other world? {a} The magician showed him to the messenger as lying in hell in a bed of fire. Whereupon the Pope was so struck with horror, that he never held up his head more, but soon after died also.

Chapter 51

Ver. 1. Hearken unto me, ye that follow after righteousness.] Heb., Ye that pursue or follow hard after it, as Paul did. {#Php 3:13,14} The speech is directed to those Jews that embraced the gospel; persuading them to persist in the faith, "in nothing terrified by their adversaries," since Almighty God would keep and help them, as he had done faithful Abraham and Sarah, their ancestors; to whom also he would of stones raise up sons {a} in the conversion of the Gentiles, and could do it as easily as he had hewed the Hebrews, that great nation, out of aged Abraham, and superannuated Sarah; who are here compared to a dry rock, and a deep pit.

And to the hole of the pit whence ye were digged.] Est honesta periphrasis actus coniugalis. The word here used is of the same root with Nekebah, the female kind of all creatures.

{a} Banim Meabanim.

Ver. 2. Look unto Abraham your father.] "Look" and again "look." "Hearken" and again "hearken." These poor Jews, before the coming of Christ in the flesh, were vino somnoque sepulti, drunk with the cup of God's fury, {#Isa 51:17} and so fast asleep, that they needed to be thus roused and raised up to the hope of better times, which now were at hand.

And unto Sarah that bare you.] By the force of her faith also, {#Heb 11:11} her son Isaac was emeritae fidel filius. Now these domestic examples are alleged to assure them that God could do the like again in respect of spiritual children, Abraham's right seed. {#Ga 4:22-31}

For I called him alone.] Be not ye therefore troubled at your aloneness.

And blessed him, and increased him.] God's benediction is his benefaction; the Pope's is not so; fumos vendit, fumo pereat.

Ver. 3. For the Lord shall comfort Zion.] (As once he did Abraham) by multiplying her children, giving her good store of converts. These were the apostles and the primitive Christians, those earthly angels, who made the world, which before was as a waste wilderness, to become a most pleasant and plentiful paradise. Chrysostom somewhere calleth them angels, and saith that they were puriores coelo afflictione facti, more clear than the azured sky.

Joy and gladness shall be found in them.] See #Isa 35:10.

Thanksgiving, and the voice of melody.] Paul as the precentor sweetly sings and gives the note to us all, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us," &c. {#Eph 1:3-7}

Ver. 4. Hearken unto me.] See on #Isa 51:2.

For a law shall proceed from me, / i.e., The gospel of grace, that "perfect law of liberty," "the law of the spirit of life." {#Ro 8:2}

And I will make my judgment to rest.] I will firmly and irrevocably establish the government of my word and Spirit in the Church for a secure guide to bring it to eternal life. Some {a} render it thus, "My judgment," i.e., my gospel, shall be for a light of the people, whereby I will give rest. So that here is a double effect of the gospel, viz., saving light, and peace of conscience.

{a} Diod.

Ver. 5. My righteousness,] i.e., My faithfulness, or my Son, that Sun of righteousness, is already on the way, {a} and will be with you forthwith.

And mine arm shall judge the people,] i.e., All that set themselves against the Lord and against his Christ, {#Ps 2:2} these shall feel his power to their perdition, even the force of both his arms.

The isles shall wait upon me.] They shall stretch out their souls as a line (so the word importeth), and direct them toward Christ.

And on mine arm shall they trust,] i.e., On my power, or on my gospel promises.

{a} Iam amodo iter ingressa est. -Hyper.

Ver. 6. Lift up your eyes to the heavens.] Man hath a muscle more than ordinary to draw up his eyes heavenward.

And look upon the earth beneath.] How fast and firm it standeth. {#Ec 1:4} Yet the whole engine shall be changed. {#2Pe 3:10}

Shall die in like manner.] Or, Like a louse, as some render it.

But my salvation shall be for ever.] The gospel, together with the spiritual benefits thereby, shall outlast heaven and earth.

Ver. 7. Hearken unto me.] See on #Isa 51:2.

Ye that know righteousness.] With a knowledge apprehensive, and affective also.

The people in whose heart is my law.] And not in your heads only.

Fear ye not the reproach of men.] Tertullian thinketh that our Saviour alludeth to this of Isaiah in #Lu 6:22. We should not be scoffed out of our religion, but patiently suffer "cruel mockings."

Ver. 8. For the moth shall eat them up.] They shall be crushed before the moth, {#Job 4:19} that is, easily be destroyed, and their own consciences shall grub upon them too throughout all eternity.

But my righteousness shall be for ever.] Bear therefore bravely all contumelies and contempts of men.

Ver. 9. Awake, awake, O arm of the Lord.] God had promised what his holy arm should do for his people, {#Isa 51:5} now they beg of him to use it, and bestir himself for their relief and rescue; and this they do magno affectu atque animi impetu, heartily wishing the coming of Christ and the declaration of the gospel to their salvation.

Awake, as in the ancient days.] God seemeth sometimes to be asleep, and we must wake him; to delay, and we must quicken him; to have lost his compassions, which yet never fail, and we must find them for him.

Art not thou it that hath cut Rahab?] Or, Hewed Egypt with thy ten plagues successively, though she were a proud and potent state.

And wounded the dragon.] Or, Crocodile; that is, Pharaoh, {#Ps 74:14} whom thou didst put to pain, even the "pains of a travailing woman" (as the word signifieth), when he sank "as a millstone in the mighty waters."

Ver. 10. Art not thou it which hath dried the sea?] And canst not thou do as much again for thy poor people? This is an excellent way of arguing with God in prayer—viz., from his ancient acts.

Ver. 11. Therefore the redeemed of the Lord, &c.] This is God's answer, as some; or the good people's confidence, as others, that God would deliver them now, as he had done their forefathers from Pharaoh.

And everlasting joy.] As a fair and precious crown. {#2Ti 4:8} Some make it a metaphor from those that carry heavy burdens on their heads; St Paul calleth it a "weight of glory."

They shall obtain joy.] See #Isa 35:10.

Ver. 12. I, even I, am he that comforteth you.] This is certainly an answer to that supplication, {#Isa 51:10} and it comprehendeth a reprehension and an expostulation about their pusillanimity, which was more than womanly. Therefore it followeth,

Who art thou?] {a} Heb., Thou woman, thou hen hearted creature.

That thou shouldest be afraid of a man?] Heb., Sorry man, ab homine misero, aerumnoso, damnato ad mortem, ab hoste faeneo, An enemy of clouts, as we say. We trouble ourselves oft through ignorance; in the dark everything scares us.

{a} At, not Atta.

Ver. 13. And forgettest the Lord thy maker.] Thou considerest not wisely (1.) How fearfully and wonderfully thou art made; (2.) What a mighty power God put forth in the creation of the whole world; all which he will rather unmake again than thou shalt want seasonable help.

And hast feared continually every day.] Peior est morte timor ipse mortis.

And where is the fury of the oppressor?] q.d., It is but fury, and not power, and that not illimited neither; for "in the thing wherein they deal proudly, I am above them." {#Ex 18:11}

Ver. 14. The captive exile hasteneth that he may be loosed,] i.e., Deliverance is even at the next door by; or, it is a description, saith Diodate, of the believers' readiness in answering with the motion of their hearts to God's calling and deliverance.

Ver. 15. For I am the Lord thy God, that divided the sea.] Or, I the Lord thy God am he that stilleth the sea when the waves of it roar; how much more then can I curb and control the rage of man! "Surely," saith David, "the wrath of man shall praise thee: the remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain"; where the Septuagint have it, It shall keep holiday to thee, εωραζει σοι.

Ver. 16. And I have put my words in thy mouth.] O Isaiah, my servant; but especially, O Christ, my Son.

That I may plant the heavens, &c.] God doth as great a wonder, in saying to Zion, "Thou art my people," in the work of renovation, as if he had made a new world. "Whosoever is in Christ is a new creature," or a new creation. {#2Co 5:17} Christ is called, "The beginning of the creation of God." {#Re 3:14} Some, by "planting the heavens and laying the foundation of the earth" here, understand the state of the gospel, called by St Peter a "new heaven and a new earth"; and the same, they say, is called by our Saviour "regeneration" in #Mt 19:28, "Ye which have followed me in the regeneration," &c.; and by the author to the Hebrews, "The world to come." {#Heb 2:5}

Ver. 17. Awake, awake.] Suscita te, suscita te. As the Church had stirred up the arm of the Lord to awake, {#Isa 51:9} so here he doth the Church, cheering her up, and, as it were, drinking to her in a cup of nepenthe, after her bitter cup of gall and aloes, which she had drunk to drunkenness, and had none to guide her, {#Isa 51:18} as a drunken man had need to have.

That hast drunk at the hand of the Lord.] Herein happy yet, that God had a hand in the mingling of thy cup; who, being a wise and gracious physician and father, would be sure not to overdo; for "he knoweth our frame, he remembereth that we are dust." {#Ps 103:14}

The cup of his fury.] Or, His cup of poison; {#De 32:24,33} so thou mistakest it, and therefore sputterest as if poisoned indeed. {#La 3:19}

Thou hast drunk the dregs.] Crassamentum, that thick stuff that settleth in the bottom, and usually is reserved for the worst of wicked ones, {#Ps 75:8} while the saints sip only of the top of the cup. {a} See #Eze 23,34.

Of the cup of trembling.] Poeuhtm horrifieentissimum bibisti, exsuxisti, The cup of concussion or horror, as a just punishment of thy cup of slumbering and security, wherein thou hadst before caroused. {#Isa 29:9,10}

Ver. 18. There is none to guide her.] This was a point next the worst, as we say. She was without prudent and pious magistrates and ministers, or other friends to advise her; and so she was δισκακοδαίμων—twice miserable. Christ hath promised all his, "I will not leave you destitute," or orphans.

Among all her sons.] Who should see to their aged parents and sublevate them, as pious Aeneas did, and as Scipio, who thence had his name; but Zion's sons were themselves in a dreadful plight, {#Isa 51:20} and in an ill case to relieve their mother.

Ver. 19. These two things are come unto thee.] As they seldom are separated; as some write of the asp, that he never wanders alone without his companion.

Who shall be sorry for thee?] Condole and comfort thee.

Desolation and destruction, and the famine and the sword,] i.e., Desolation by famine, and destruction by the sword; or, as some will have it, desolation by famine and sword, and want of consolation. {as #Isa 51:18}

By whom shall I comfort thee?] By whom but by myself, when thou art at thy greatest under, and even forsaken of thy hopes. See #Isa 51:12.

Ver. 20. Thy sons have fainted.] Fame, macie, tabe, vulnere, utterly disabled to relieve thee. {#Isa 51:18}

As a wild bull in a net.] Taken in a toil, where he struggles and strives, foams and fumes, but cannot get out.

Ver. 21. Thou afflicted and drunken.] With a dry drunkenness, which thou canst not so easily sleep out. {#Isa 51:17}

Ver. 22. Behold I have taken.] Though man could not. Where human help faileth, divine help beginneth.

Thou shalt no more drink it.] i.e., Not of a long time, till thy last devastation by the Romans.

Ver. 23. But I will put it into the hand of them that afflict thee.] Who shall drink it not to drunkenness only, as thou hast done, but unto madness. {#Jer 25:10} Belshazzar and his Babylonians did so; the revenging hand of God was afterwards upon Antiochus, Vespasian, and his children; Antichristians drink of the wine of God's wrath. {#Re 14:10}

Bow down.] This passage setteth forth their extreme cruelty and thrasonical insolence. But the case shall be altered. {#Re 3:9}

Chapter 52

Ver. 1. Awake, awake.] Pluck up thy best heart, as we say, and rouse up thyself to receive the sweet promises; for as man's laws, so God's promises favour not them that are asleep, but awake and watchful.

O Jerusalem, the holy city.] Thou that hast been brought through the fire; being refined as silver is refined, and tried as gold is tried. {#Zec 13:9}

There shall no more come into thee.] Or, Against thee, i.e., I will not suffer tyrants to vex thee, or profane ones to harbour with thee. See #Isa 35:8.

Ver. 2. Shake thyself from the dust.] Wherein thou layest along when trampled on. {#Isa 51:23}

Arise, and sit down, O Jerusalem.] Rather, Arise, sit up, O Jerusalem. It hath been noted before, that when Vespasian had subdued Judea, money was stamped with a woman sitting in the dust, with this inscription, Iudaea subacta.

Loose thyself from the bonds of thy neck.] From thy spiritual servitude especially. {as #Lu 1:74 Ro 6:19} Shake the devil's yoke from off thy neck, gestague monilia sponsae et libertatis, and get on the spouse's ornaments.

Ver. 3. For thus saith the Lord.] Thus he pleadeth the cause of his people. {#Isa 51:22}

Ye have sold yourselves for nought.] Heb., Ye were sold for nought. I had not so much as thanks for you from the enemy; {a} no more hath he from the devil: and yet a letter was framed in Hildebrand's days as sent from the devil, wherein he kindly thanked the Popish clergy for the many souls they daily sent him to hell by their negligence and wickedness. {b}

And ye shall be redeemed without money.] Heb., Without silver. So were we. {#1Pe 1:18}

{b} Mat. Paris. Hist., A.D. 1072.

Ver. 4. And the Assyrian oppressed them without cause.] Nulla iniuria lacessitus. So did the primitive persecutors, the Christians of those times, though they were non aliunde noscibiles quam ex vitae integritate, saith Justin Martyr; eminent for their innocence, as Pliny also in his epistle to Trajan the emperor testifieth. What hurt had the Israelites ever done to malicious Moab that he was irked at them? {#Nu 22:3} or the Hebrews to the Assyrians, that they should oppress them?

Ver. 5. Now, therefore, what have I here?] Cui bono? To what purpose or profit? For what wealth or worth suffer I my poor people to lie captives here at Babylon? Or, as others {a} sense it, what make I here any longer at Jerusalem when my poor people are in durance at Babylon? Why hasten I not to help them out?

They that rule over them, make them to howl,] i.e., The Chaldeans, and after them the Romans, and then the scribes and Pharisees, by "binding heavy burdens grievous to be borne, and laying them on men's consciences." {#Mt 23:4}

And my name continually every day (or, all the day long) is blasphemed.] That is all I get by the bargain.

Ver. 6. Therefore my people shall know my name,] sc., That I am Jehovah; {as #Ex 6:3} the God of Amen, {#Isa 65:16} who "will not suffer my faithfulness to fail, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my mouth." {#Ps 89:33,34} And it shall therefore be so because my name—that nomen maiestativum -hath been blasphemed and vilified. God's people fare the better for their enemies' insolencies.

That I am he that doth speak: behold, it is I.] Or, That it is I that do speak, saying, Lo, here I am. This some understand to be the second person in the Trinity, the eternal Son of the eternal Father, called "the Word," {#Joh 1:1} and there are those who give us this rule—Where the Old Testament bringeth in God appearing and speaking, we are to understand it always to be the second person. See #Joh 12:37-42.

Ver. 7. How beautiful!] Quam amaeni, i.e., amabiles! How amiable or desirable. Interrogatio admirantis et exultantis.

Upon the mountains.] Whence they may best be heard, {as in #Jud 9:7} saying, as there, "Hearken unto me, that God may hearken unto you." Our Saviour, that arch-evangelist, who, as some, is here first and chiefly meant by Mebassher, him that bringeth good tidings, "seeing the multitudes, went up into a mountain," {#Mt 5:1} which is said to be in the tribe of Naphtali, and called Christ's Mount to this day. His apostles afterwards travelled and trudged on foot over hills and dales—what a compass fetched Paul! {#Ro 15:19} Intervallum illud est milliariorum Germanicorum, 350, so that he might better be called, than afterwards George Eagles the martyr was, Trudge-over-the-world—to preach the gospel and to plant churches, to whom their feet, though fouled and worn—how much more their faces?—were deemed delectable and debonnaire. {#Ga 4:14 Ac 10:21} The Pope, Peter's pretended successor, holdeth forth his feet to be kissed, but preacheth not; or not peace, but war, which he stirreth up by his roaring bulls.

Of him that bringeth good tidings.] Whosoever he be that preacheth the gospel, that chief work of a minister. {#Ro 10:15} Of Mr John Dod it is written, and I know it to be true, that he was very evangelical, striving first to make men see their lost condition clearly—for, said he, sense of misery must go before sense of mercy—and then largely and excellently opening the promises, and the grace of God in Christ according to the gospel, looking at that as the most effectual preaching. Some, said he, labour still to keep men under terrors, loading them with threatenings, &c., lest they should not be humbled enough: but the gospel worketh true humiliation, not the law; it ariseth from sense of sin and misery joined with hope of mercy. The damned have terror and sense of misery enough, but that doth not humble them.

That publisheth peace.] The gospel is a doctrine of peace, {#Eph 2:17} whose author is the "God of peace," {#1Co 14:33} whose ministers are "messengers of peace," {#Ro 10:15} whose followers are the "children of peace." {#Lu 10:6-11} If any know not how they came by their peace, but are like the Israelitish women, quick of delivery, before ever the midwife (the minister) can come at them, they have cause to suspect their peace.

That bringeth good tidings.] As before, but never enough, mentioned and memorised. Some critics {a} tell us that the Hebrew word here used, signifying also flesh, showed that the incarnation or taking flesh should be generally good news to the whole world, even the best tidings. The old church had επαγγελίαν, the "promise"; we have ευαγγελίαν, the "joyful tidings."

That publisheth salvation.] Publicantis Iesum, so some {b} have rendered it: the concrete for the abstract.

That saith to Zion, Thy God reigneth.] Maugre the malice of earth and of hell. This is the sum of all the good news in the world. It is happy that Christ liveth and reigneth, said a godly man, for else I had utterly despaired.

{a} Bishop Andrews.

Ver. 8. Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice.] Heb., The voice of thy watchmen—sc., " Thy God reigneth"; or, as in the following verse, "Break forth into joy," &c.

They lift up the voice, they sing together.] As having "no greater joy than that their children walk in the truth," {#2Jo 4 1Th 3:8} and the contrary.

For they shall ^{a} see eye to eye.] And be able to say, as #1Jo 1:1, "That which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon" (and what so sure as sight?) "declare we unto you."

Ver. 9. Break forth into joy.] This is the subject matter of gospel ministers' discourses: they shall call upon God's people to rejoice, ^{#Isa 52:9,10} and to repent, ^{#Isa 52:11,12} and shall show them that it is as well a sin not to rejoice as not to repent.

Ver. 10. The Lord hath made bare his holy arm.] Nudavit, id est, exeruit, in answer to your prayer. ^{#Isa 51:9} God oft answereth his praying people ad cardinem desiderii, ^{a} as Augustine saith, letteth it be to them even as they will. Scanderbeg ever fought against the Turks with his arm bare, and that with such fierceness that the blood did oftentimes burst out of his lips. It is written that he, with that bare arm of his, slow three thousand Turks in the time of his wars against them. ^{b}

Shall see the salvation of the Lord.] Shall see it and sing of it. ^{#Isa 52:9}

^{b} Turk. Hist., fol. 287.

Ver. 11. Depart ye, depart ye, go ye out, &c.] Here we have a double repetition redoubled, and all little enough to bring them out of Babylon (not half, as may be probably thought, returned, which was no small prejudice to those that did), and us out of this wicked world; whereunto we are so affixed and addicted that nothing can sunder us but an extraordinary touch from the hand of Heaven. "Save yourselves from this perverse generation." ^{#Ac 2:40} "Enter not into the path of the wicked, and go not in the way of evil men: avoid it, pass not by it, turn from it and pass away." ^{#Pr 4:14,15, a parallel place}

Be ye clean, ye that bear the vessels of the Lord.] Id est, qui gestatis arma, instrumenta, adeoque insignia Christi; all ye true believers who are made spiritual priests, ^{#Re 1:6} and especially all ye holy ministers who, as mystagogues, handle the law, ^{#Jer 2:8} and administer the sacraments, being yourselves choice vessels of honour to "bear Christ's name unto his people." {#Ac 9:15} See #2Ti 2:21.

Ver. 12. For ye shall not go out with haste.] Neither with fright nor flight shall ye depart, as once ye did out of Egypt. And this spiritually denoteth the mature deliberation and calm mind with which believers do forsake the world to follow Christ. {a}

For the Lord will go before you.] He will be unto you both van and rear. The Lord is a man of war, {#Ex 15:3} yea, he alone is a whole army of men, as here.

{a} Diod.

Ver. 13. Behold, my servant shall deal prudently.] Or, Shall prosper. {#Isa 53:10} Here some, {a} and not unfitly, begin the next chapter, which hath Christ also for its subject, as the Chaldee paraphrast and some old Jewish doctors acknowledge. Johannes Isaac, a Jew, was converted by reading it. This I confess ingenuously, saith he, that that chapter brought me to the faith of Jesus Christ. And well it might; for, taken together with these three last verses, it is an entire prophecy, or rather a history of Christ's person and acts, both in the state of his humiliation and exaltation.

He shall be exalted and extolled, and be very high.] This great advancement was the consequence of his great abasement. {#Php 2:6-11} His human nature, wherein he suffered so for our sakes, hath, by virtue of the union with the Deity, these high prerogatives: (1.) An exuberance and excess of glory. {#Eph 1:21} (2.) The grace of divine adoration together with the Deity. {#Heb 1:6 Php 2:9} (3.) Power over all things for his people's use. {#Mt 28:18} (4.) Judiciary power, to be judge of all. {#Ac 17:31}

Ver. 14. As many were astonished at thee,] viz., At thine abasement first, and then at thine advancement thereupon. All things in Christ are admirable; well, therefore, might he be called "Wonderful." {#Isa 9:6}

His visage was so marred more than any man.] Partly through the anguish of his mind at his Passion and on the cross, and partly also by the misuse of his body, while they made totum pro vulnero corpus, by their scourging, scratching, racking on the tree, piercing, buffeting, &c.

And his form more than the sons of men.] Plusquam filii Adae, more than those of the common sort; whereas naturally his body, being of the finest temperament, and no way diseased, could not but be very beautiful. See #Ps 45:2. {See Trapp on "Ps 45:2"}

Ver. 15. So shall he sprinkle many nations.] With his doctrine, {#Eze 20:46 Am 7:16} or with his blood, that blood of sprinkling. See #Heb 10:22. Or with water in baptism, wherein sprinkling is sufficient.

Kings shall shut their mouths at him.] As being astonished at his prudence and prosperity. {#Isa 52:13} They shall also silently and reverently submit to his sceptre, and to the laws of his kingdom, with all humble observance.

For that which had not been told them.] The mystery of the gospel so long time concealed. {#Ro 15:21 16:25}

Shall they see,] viz., With the eyes of their faith, God enlightening both organ and object.

And that which they had not heard.] Gospel truths. See #1Co 2:9. {See Trapp on "1Co 2:9"}

Chapter 53

Ver. 1. Who hath believed our report?] q.d., The Gentiles, some of them, even of their potentates, have believed our report concerning the Messiah: {#Isa 52:13-15} but, Lord, how few Jews will give credit to what we have said? Albeit this chapter may not unfitly be called "The Gospel of Jesus Christ according to Isaiah"; {a} and things are here set down so plainly that Augustine thinks they need no exposition; yet those buzzards, the later Rabbis, cannot, or rather will not, see that the prophet speaketh here all along concerning Christ; but do strangely writhe, wring, and wrest his words to a wrong sense, applying them, some to Moses, some to Ezra, some to Joshua, the son of Josadak, &c. John Isaac, indeed, the Jew, confesseth of himself, as hath been said before, that by pondering upon this chapter he was converted to the Christian religion. The like we read of some few others in Andreas Bayna and Cornelius a Lapide. But the Jews themselves will tell you, falsely and maliciously, that such pretended proselytes are not of them, but poor Christians hired by us to impersonate their part. Such a thick veil is still before their eyes, such a hard hoof upon their hearts, till God pleases, by his own holy arm made bare, to remove it. "They could not"—that is, they would not—"believe." {#Joh 12:39}; "They have not all"—nay, scarce any in comparison—"obeyed the gospel," {#Ro 10:16} but blasphemously call it Avengelaion, a volume of vanity, scorning to be saved by a crucified God, although by mighty miracles wrought among them he showed himself to be the Son of God, and an arm to save all who believe in his name. {#Joh 12:37}

And to whom is the arm of the Lord?] i.e., His gospel, which is his power to salvation, {#Ro 1:16} and is hid only to them that perish. {#2Co 4:3}

{a} Lib. i. De Consens. Evang., cap. 31.

Ver. 2. For he shall grow up before him as a tender plant.] His beginning shall be mean and despicable. See #Isa 11:1, with the notes. God hid his Son under the carpenter's son; this the Jews much stumbled at, {#Mt 13:55,57 Lu 24:1 Joh 7:27,41,52 1Co 1:23} that Christ should come without sightly show or state. {a} But they should have known that his kingdom is not of this world. Some of their Rabbis can say, In regno Messiae nihil mundanum. In the reign of the Messiah, nothing is worldly.

He hath no form or comeliness.] How could he? say, when his fair face was covered, sanguine, sputo, spinis, lachrymis, with blood black and blue, swelths, spittle, tears, scratches, so that Pilate, wondering at it, said, "Behold the man," q.d., he is not dealt with as a man; but being in greatest misery, he deserveth to be pitied.

And when we shall see him.] Here the prophet taketh upon him the person of a carnal Jew, who judged of Christ according to his outward appearance. {#Joh 7:14} But what saith the Chaldee proverb? Ne spectes cantharum vel urceum, sed id quod in eo est. Look not on the pitcher, but on the liquor that is contained in it.

And when we shall see him there is no beauty.] Heb., And we shall see him, and no sight or sightliness.

That we should desire him.] And yet he was a man of desires, yea, the "desire of all nations," {#Hag 2:7} all over desirable: {#So 5:16} but so he is only to such as have their "senses exercised to discern good and evil." {#Heb 5:14}

Ver. 3. He is despised and rejected of men.] Heb., Desitus virorum, one at whom the nature and name of man endeth; as we would say, the very lift and fag end of mankind, nullificamen hominis, { a} a worm and no man, not held so good as wicked Barabbas, but crucified between two thieves, as worse than either of them, and made nothing of. {#Mr 9:12} This is so plainly here set forth that some of the Jewish doctors, Aben Ezra for one, whenas they cannot rightly distinguish between the two comings of Christ, the one in humility and the other in glory, duos construunt Christos, they make us up two Christs, the one the son of Joseph, to whom agree those things which the Scriptures speak of concerning Christ's meanness and sufferings; the other, the son of David, to whom they apply those things that are written concerning the glory, majesty, and triumphs of Christ. {b}

A man of sorrows,] q.d., Made up of sorrows. {c} Atque hic mirus artifex est propheta; and here the prophet showeth singular skill in describing Christ's state of humiliation through all the degrees of it. And faith is much happier in finding out his cross, blood, nails, tomb, and all, than ever Helen was, or any Popish relic monger, and in making use of them too, to better purpose than that Popish convent of friars do, who have hired those places of the Turk, built temples, altars, and silver floors in honour of the passion.

And acquainted with grief.] Heb., Knowing of infirmity, or inured to it. See #Heb 4:15. The Greek Litany hath, "By thine unknown sorrows and sufferings, good Lord, deliver us."

And we hid as it were our faces from him.] Or, And he hid as it were the face from us, viz., as one for his loathsomeness, his low condition, ashamed to be seen. The Jews, in the Talmud, {d} question, What is the name of Messiah? Some answer, Hhenara, leprous; and he sitteth among the poor in the gates of Rome, carrying their sicknesses.

He was despised.] Double despised; and for the unworthiness of the things, this is repeated.

And we esteemed him not,] J i.e., We contemned and derided him.

{a} Jun., Tertul.

{b} Genebrard.

{c} Ex doloribus conflatus, caused from his sorrows.

{d} Sanhedrin.

Ver. 4. Surely he hath borne our griefs.] He took our infirmities natural, though not sinful; or, He suffered for our offences. And his satis sufficient passion is our satisfaction, as Luther phraseth it. He suffered, saith Peter, "the just for the unjust." He "bore our sins in his own body on the tree." {#1Pe 2:24} He, the true scape goat, "taketh away the sins of the world," {#Joh 1:29} bearing them into the land of forgetfulness. This is his continual act, and this should be as a perpetual picture in our hearts. "Surely" he did all this for us; iuramentum est vere. This surely or truly is an oath, for better assurance and satisfaction to any doubting conscience. For which cause also the same thing is said over again, {#Isa 53:5} and herewith agreeth that of the apostle in #1Ti 1:15, "This is a sure saying, and worthy of all men to be received, that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners."

Yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God,] J sc., For his own deserts, and not for ours. We looked upon him as a deceiver, a winebibber, a blasphemer, and one that wrought by Beelzebub, &c., and therefore we crucified him.

Smitten {a} of God.] Percussus Dei, saith the Syriac. The apostle saith, "God spared not his Son"; {#Ro 8:32} and because the creature could not strike a stroke hard enough, himself was "pleased to bruise him." But that this was done for his own proper sins, and in a way of vengeance, was a gross mistake.

And afflicted.] Or, Humbled. He was "stricken," "smitten," "afflicted." But then afterwards he was "exalted," "extolled," and "made very high." {#Isa 52:13} We also who "suffer with him shall be glorified together," and in a proportion. {#2Ti 2:12}

{a} Flagellatum a Deo, Whipped by God.—Theodotion.

Ver. 5. But he was wounded for our transgressions.] Not for his own; for he "knew no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth"; nevertheless he took upon him whatsoever was penal that belonged to sin, that we might go free. He was content to be in the winepress that we might be in the wine cellar.

He was bruised for our iniquities.] Εαυτον αφηκεν εις βελεμνον, as Anacreon did upon a worse occasion.

“ Cernis ut in toto corpore sculptus amor!”

O love, that love of his! as Bernard speaketh; let it bruise our hard hearts into pieces, grind them to powder, and make them fall asunder in our bosoms like drops of water. Let us propagate our thankfulness into our lives, meditating returns answerable in some proportion to our Saviour's sufferings.

The chastisement of our peace was upon him.] They which offered burnt offerings of old were to lay their hand upon the head of the beast, thereby signifying the imputation of our sins unto Christ, and that we must lay hand on him by faith, if we look for any comfort by his death and passion. {a}

And with his stripes we are healed.] By the black and blue of his body after he was buffeted with dry blows; and by the bloody welts left on his back, after he had been scourged, which was a punishment fit for dogs and slaves. Nero they threatened to scourge to death, as judging him rather a beast than a man. But what had this innocent Lamb of God done? And why should the physician's blood thus become the sick man's salve? We can hardly believe the power of sword salve.

{a} Oh that as Christ was crucifixus, crucified, so he were cordifixus. held fast in the heart.

Ver. 6. All we, like sheep, have gone astray.] Gone of our own accords, as "longing to wander"; {#Jer 14:10} to wander as sheep, lost sheep, than the which no creature is more apt to stray, and less able to return. "The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib. "The very swine accustomed to the trough, if he go abroad, yet at night will find the way home again. Not so the silly sheep. "Lo, ye were all as sheep going astray," saith Peter, "but are now returned unto the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls." {#1Pe 2:25}

We have turned every one to his own way.] Quo variae errorum formae innuuntur, dum suas quisque opiniones sectatur. Each one, as he is out of God's way, so hath his own by way of wickedness to wander in; wherein yet, without a Christ, he cannot wander so far as to miss hell.

And the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all,] i.e., Of all his elect. The iniquity of us all he hath made to meet on him, so the Hebrew hath it; or, To light on him, even the full weight of his wrath and dint of his displeasure, for our many and mighty sins imputed unto him. Let the Jew jeer at this and say, that every fox must pay his own skin to the flayer; let the Romanist reject imputed righteousness, calling it putative, by a scoff; there is not anything that more supporteth a sinking soul than this "righteousness which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith." {#Php 3:9} This manus Christi, as nailed to the cross, is the only medicine for a sin sick soul, believe it.

Ver. 7. He was oppressed, and he was afflicted,] Heb., It, the punishment of our sin, was exacted; and he, being our surety, was afflicted. Or, It was exacted, and he answered, i.e., satisfied.

Yet he opened not his mouth.] Though he "suffered, the just for the unjust," {#1Pe 3:18} with the unjust, upon unjust causes, under unjust judges, and by unjust punishments. Silence and sufferance was the language of this holy Lamb, "dumb before the shearer," insomuch as that Pilate wondered exceedingly. The eunuch also wondered when he read this text, #Ac 8:32, and was converted. And the like is related of a certain earl called Eleazar, {a} a choleric man, but much altered for the better by a study of Christ and of his patience. "I beseech you, by the meekness of Christ," saith Paul; and Peter, who was an eyewitness of his patience, propoundeth him for a worthy pattern. {#1Pe 2:23} Vide mihi languidum, exhaustum, cruentatum, trementum, et gementem Iesum tuum, et evanescet omnis impatientiae effectus. Christ upon the cross is as a doctor in his chair, where he readeth unto us all a lecture of patience.

He is brought as a lamb to the slaughter.] Or, As a sheep that is led to the slaughter, which, when we see done, we should think of Christ, and see him as it were in an opera glass. The saints of old did so in their sacrifices; and this was that hidden wisdom David speaks of, #Ps 51:8; the ceremonial law was their gospel.

And as a sheep before her shearer is dumb.] The word Rachel signifieth an ewe. {#Ge 31:38 32:14} This ewe hath brought forth many lambs, such as was Lambert and the rest of the martyrs, who, to words of scorn and petulance, returned Isaac's apology to his brother Ishmael, patience and silence; insomuch as that the persecutors said that they were possessed with a dumb devil. {b} This was a kind of blasphemy.

Ver. 8. He was taken from prison and from judgment.] Absque dilatione et citra iudicium raptus est, sc., ad crucem, so Vatablus rendereth it. He was hurried away to the cross without delay, and against right or reason, {a} Or, as others, he was taken from distress and torment into glory when he had cried, Consummatum est, It is finished; and, Father, into thy hands I commit my spirit. The Seventy render it somewhat otherwise, as may be seen, #Ac 8:33. The apostle Peter explaineth it, #Ac 2:24.

And who shall declare his generation?] Or, Who can reckon his age or his race? Or, Who can utter or describe his generation? i.e., the wickedness of the men of those times he lived in. Or, the history of his life and death. Some understand it to be his eternal generation.

{#Pr 8:24,25} Others of his incarnation, that great "mystery of godliness." Quantus enim Deus quantillus factus est homo! Others {b} of his holy seed, his cross being fruitful, and his death giving life to an innumerable generation. {#Re 7:9}

For he was cut off out of the land of the living.] Quasi arbor saevis icta bipennibus; as a tree that is hewn down. {#2Ki 6:4}

For the transgression of my people.] Our iniquities were the weapons, and ourselves the traitors, that put to death the Lord of life; Judas and the Jews were but our workmen. This should draw dreary tears from us. {#Zec 12:10}

{a} Inaudita causa for an unheard reason.

{b} Augustine.

Ver. 9. And he made his grave with the wicked, / i.e., He should have been buried among malefactors had not rich Joseph begged his body. Or, His dead body was at the disposal of wicked ones, and of rich men or rulers, the Jews and Pilate, at his death.

And with the rich.] The same, say some, with wicked. And indeed Magna cognatio ut rei sic nominis, divitiis et vitiis. Rich men are put for wicked rich. {#Jas 5:1} And how hardly do rich men enter heaven! Hyperius thinks that the two thieves crucified together with Christ were rich men, put to death for sedition; and Christ was placed in the midst, as their chieftain; whence also that memorable title set over his head, "King of the Jews."

Because he had done no violence.] Or, Albeit he had done, &c., notwithstanding his innocence and integrity.

“ Nec te tun plurima Pentheu

Labentem textit pietas. ”

Ver. 10. Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him.] Singula verba hic expendenda sunt cum emphasi, saith one. {a} Here every word hath its weight, and it is very sure that the apostles and evangelists, in describing the mysteries of our salvation, have great respect as to this whole chapter of Isaiah, so especially to these three last verses. And it must needs be that the prophet, when he wrote these things, was indued with a very great Spirit; because herein he so clearly setteth forth the Lord Christ in his twofold estate of humiliation and of exaltation, that whereas other oracles of the Old Testament borrow light from the New, this chapter lendeth light to the New in several places.

He hath put him to grief.] Or, He suffered him to be put to pain. See #Ac 2:23 4:28. God the Father had a main hand in his Son's sufferings, and that out of his free mercy, {#Joh 3:16} for the good of many.

When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin.] Compare #2Co 5:20, "He made him sin for us that knew no sin." Our sins were laid upon him, as the sins of him that sacrificed were laid upon the beast; which was thereby made the sinner, as it were, and the man righteous. Christ's soul suffered also. {#Mt 26:38} It was undequaque tristis, surrounded with sorrows, and heavy as heart could hold. This sacrifice of his was truly expiatory and satisfactory. Compare #Heb 10:1,2.

He shall see his seed.] Bring many sons to God, {#Heb 2:10,13 Isa 53:8} a holy seed, the Church of the New Testament to the end of the world, {#Ps 72:17} filiabitur nomine eius. The name of Christ shall endure for ever; it shall be begotten as one generation is begotten of another. There shall be a succession of Christ's name, till time shall be no more. {b}

And the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand.] He came to send fire on the earth, which while he lived upon earth was already kindled. {#Lu 12:49} This some interpret as the gospel, which how wonderfully it spread and prospered, the evangelical and ecclesiastical histories testify.

{a} Hyper.

Ver. 11. He shall see of the travail of his soul.] Or, Because his soul laboureth, he shall see (his seed), and be satisfied. A metaphor from a travailing woman. Compare #Ac 2:24 Joh 16:21.

And shall be satisfied.] {a} As a parent is in his dear children, or a rich man in the sight of his large farms and incomes. If therefore we would gratify and satisfy Christ, come by troops to the ordinances.

By his knowledge,] i.e., By the lively light and impression of faith. {as #Joh 17:3 Ac 25:23 26:18 Joh 6:69} Faith comprehendeth in itself these three acts—knowledge in the understanding, assent of the will, and trust of the heart; so that justifying faith is nothing else but a fiducial assent, presupposing knowledge. The Popish doctors settle the seat of faith in the will, as in its adequate subject, that they meanwhile may do what they will with the heart, and with the understanding. To which purpose they exclude all knowledge; and as for confidence in the promises of Christ, they cry it down to the utmost, and everywhere expunge it by their Indices Expurgatorii; for a bare assent, though without wit or sense, is sufficient, say they; and Bellarmine defendeth it, that faith may better be defined by ignorance than by knowledge.

Shall my righteous servant.] Jesus Christ, "the just one." {#1Jo 2:2} "Jehovah our righteousness." {#Jer 23:6}

Justify many,] i.e., Discharge them from the guilt of all iniquity by his righteousness imputed unto them. This maketh against justification by works. Cardinal Pighius was against it; so before him was Contarenius, another cardinal. And of Stephen Gardiner it is recorded, that he died a Protestant in the point of man's justification by the free mercies of God and merits of Christ. {b}

For he shall bear their iniquities.] Baiulabit; that, by nailing them to his cross, he may expiate them.

{a} Saturabitur salute fidelium quam esurivit.

{b} Fuller's Church Hist.

Ver. 12. Therefore I will divide him a portion with the great.] Or, I will give many to him. {#Ps 2:8} Some sense it thus: I will give him to conquer, plunder, and spoil the evil spirits; {as #Col 2:15} and this he shall have for a reward of his ignominious death, and his intercession for some of his enemies, whom he conquered by a new and noble kind of victory, viz., by loving them and by praying for them.

And he was numbered with transgressors.] So he became a sinner, though sinless: 1. By imputation; 2. By reputation.

And he bare the sins of many.] Not of all, as A. Lapide here would have it, because all are many, &c.

And made intercession.] For those that with wicked hands crucified him; {#Lu 23:34 Ac 2:23} so for others still. {#Heb 7:25}

Chapter 54

Ver. 1. Sing, O barren, thou that didst not bear.] O Church Christian, O Jerusalem that art above, the mother of us all, the purchase of Christ's passion, {#Isa 53} to whom thou hast been a bloody spouse, {#Ac 20:28} an Aceldama or field of blood, {#1Pe 1:18,19} he hath paid dear for thy fruitfulness. As the blood of beasts applied to the roots of trees maketh them sprout and bear more fruit, so doth the blood of Christ, sprinkled on the roots of men's hearts, make them more fruitful Christians, as it did the Gentiles whose hearts were purified by faith. {#Ac 15:9 Ga 4:27} The grain of wheat that fell into the ground and died there, abode not alone, but brought forth much fruit. {#Joh 12:24}

For more are the children of the desolate.] The Christian Church, made up of Jews and Gentiles, shall have a more numerous and glorious offspring than ever the synagogue had. Sarah shall have more issue than Hagar, Hannah than Peninnah.

Ver. 2. Enlarge the place of thy tent.] Thus he speaketh after the custom of those countries wherein was frequent use of tents; neither is it without a mystery, since we are all strangers in this world, neither have we here any continuing city. Justin Martyr saith {a} of the Christians of his time, that every strange land was to them a country, and every country a strange land. They looked upon themselves as citizens of the new Jerusalem.

{a} Epist. ad Diog.

Ver. 3. For thou shalt break forth, / i.e., Bring forth abundantly, and beyond belief. Margaret Countess of Henneberg, brought forth at a birth in Holland three hundred and sixty-five children, one skull whereof I have seen, saith mine author, no bigger than a bead or bean. {a} The Church brought forth three thousand at one birth, {#Ac 2:41} and some whole nations at another. {#Isa 66:8 Ro 10:18}

And thy seed shall inherit the Gentiles.] Shall spiritually become lords of the world, peopling it with a new and holy generation of such as "seek God's face, this is Jacob." {#Ps 24:6} This text the Jews and millenaries carnally construe.

{a} Fuller's Hist. of Cambridge, p. 28.

Ver. 4. Fear not, for thou shalt not be ashamed.] As widows and barren women wont to be. Thou hast been "without God and without Christ in the world"; but henceforth thou shalt be "married to him who is raised from the dead, that thou mayest bring forth fruit unto God." {#Ro 7:4} Ipse enim quod vult iubet, et dat quod iubet. {a} When you would and should be certain and quiet in conscience, saith Mr Bradford, martyr, in a sweet letter of his to a woman troubled in mind, then should your faith burst through all things until it come to Christ crucified, and the eternal sweet mercies and goodness of God in Christ. Here, here is the bridal bed, here is your spouse's resting place; creep into it, and in your arms of faith embrace him. Bewail your weakness, your unworthiness, your diffidence, &c., and you shall see he will turn to you. What said I, you shall see? Nay, I should have said, you shall feel he will turn to you. {b}

{b} Acts and Mon., 1490.

Ver. 5. For thy Maker is thine husband.] {a} Heb., Thy Makers. {#Job 35:10} {See Trapp on "Job 35:10"} De sancta Trinitate dictum, saith Junius. Isaac hath the name of the most loving husband we read of in holy writ; but his love to Rebecca was not comparable to this of Christ to his Church, {#Eph 5:25,26} where I doubt not but the apostle Paul had respect to this passage in Isaiah.

The Lord of hosts is his name.] Therefore thou, his wife, art sure of protection and provision, of all things necessary "to life and godliness"; for he "hateth putting away," {#Mal 2:16} and will bear with more than any husband else would. {#Jer 3:1 Joh 13:1} Surely "as the heaven is high above the earth, so great is his mercy toward them that fear him" {#Ps 103:11}

The God of the whole earth.] Of the Church universal.

{a} Mariti tui factores tui.

Ver. 6. For the Lord hath called thee.] Or, Recalled thee.

As a woman forsaken, grieved in spirit.] Because forsaken. This the Lord, out of his conjugal affection, cannot endure.

And a wife of youth.] Which can least of all bear such a rejection, as being in her prime, and likely to be a long time desolate and disconsolate. If the Church in this condition can but say, as that Duchess Dowager of Milan once did, Sola facta solum Deum sequor; he will say, as in #Jer 2:2, "I remember thee, the kindness of thy youth, the love of thine espousals."

Ver. 7. For a small moment have I forsaken thee.] I have made thee believe so, at least, by suffering thee to "fall into manifold temptations," {#Jas 1:2} but for thy greatest good: {#Heb 12:11} as (1.) For probation; (2.) For prevention; (3.) For purgation; (4.) For preparation to mercy. And although it should last as long as life, yet that were but for a moment. For what is life but a spot of time between two eternities? And God therefore taketh liberty to do it, because he hath such an eternity of time to reveal his kindness in; time enough for kisses and embraces. But usually God taketh off the smarting plaster as soon as it hath eaten away the proud flesh.

But with great mercies.] Heb., With great tender mercies, such as the mother beareth towards the babe of her own body. {#1Ki 3:16} God's mercies are more than maternal.

Will I gather thee.] Or, Take thee up. {#Ps 27:10} {See Trapp on "Ps 27:10"}

Ver. 8. In a little wrath.] God can let forth his wrath in minnums, in little bubbles, as the word here rendered "wrath" properly signifieth. This wrath to the saints is but love displeased, and soon pacified again.

I hid my face from thee.] God sometimes concealeth his love out of increasement of love; he departeth from us, but then turneth again and looketh through the chinkers, as that martyr phraseth it, to see how we take it. Fathers leave their children, saith one, the other side the stile, and help them over when they cry; they seem to leave them sometimes in a throng, and then reach them the hand again upon their complaint. So is it here. To say God hath cast me off because he hath hid his face, is a fallacy fetched out of the devil's topics. When the sun is eclipsed, foolish people may think it will never recover light; but wise men know it will. As, during the eclipse, though the earth wanteth the light of the sun for a time, yet not the influence thereof; for the metals that are engendered in the heart of the earth are concocted by the sun at the same time; so doth God's favour visit men's hearts in the power, heat, and vigorous influence of his grace, when the light and comfort of it is intercluded. {a}

But with everlasting kindness.] See a like elegant antithesis, with a double hyperbole to boot in #2Co 4:17.

{a} Dr Goodwin.

Ver. 9. For this is as the waters of Noah.] #Ge 9:9,11.

For as I have sworn, / i.e., I have said it. God's word is as good as his oath. See the like, #Ex 32:13 Ge 12:7.

So have I sworn.] And given thee the sacraments for thy confirmation, like as I gave him the rainbow.

Ver. 10. For the mountains shall depart.] See #Mt 24:35 Ps 46:2.

But my kindness shall not depart from thee.] This sweet promise comforted Olevian at the point of death. Although sight, hearing, speech depart from me, said he, yet God's lovingkindness shall never depart. This was somewhat like that of David in #Ps 73:26, "My flesh and my heart faileth: but God is the strength of my heart, and my portion for ever."

Neither shall the covenant of my peace.] God is in a league with his people, offensive and defensive, such as was that of Jehoshaphat with Ahab, and this covenant is a hive of heavenly honey.

Ver. 11. O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted.] This is the Church's style and state in this present life: Ecclesia est haeres crucis, The church's cross clings, saith Luther. None out of hell have suffered more than saints.

Behold, I will lay thy stones with fair colours.] So that thou shalt be a city of pearl, having for thy foundation the Lord Christ, {#1Co 3:11} for thy windows, the holy prophets, apostles, and other faithful preachers, by whose ministry thou shalt receive the light of true knowledge, {#Da 12:3} and for thy walls and gates the divine protection. See #Re 21:11-21. All this is to be understood as the spiritual excellence of the Church, which is begun in this life, and to be perfected in the life to come.

And lay thy foundations with sapphires.] Compare #Ex 24:10, where Moses and the eiders are said to have "seen the God of Israel; and there was under his feet as it were a paved work of a sapphire stone, and as it were the body of heaven in its clearness." To show that God had now changed their condition, their bricks made in their bondage to sapphire, their lying and sooting among the pots into the wings of a dove covered with silver, and her feathers of pure gold.

{as #Ps 68:13}

Ver. 12. And I will make thy windows of agates.] Or, Of crystal, which is purus et durus.

And thy gates of carbuncles.] Which are of a flame colour.

And all thy borders.] That is, all thy bordering cities, say the Rabbis. As Plutarch saith of the neighbouring villages of Rome, in Numa's time, that sucking in the air of that city they breathed righteousness, may be much better affirmed as the Church.

Ver. 13. And all thy children shall be taught of the Lord.] Outwardly, by his word; inwardly, by his Spirit: and here he explaineth that which he had spoken before concerning gems and jewels. The glory of the Church consisteth not in outward splendour, but in inward virtues and gifts of the Holy Ghost, which are found only in God's disciples.

Ver. 14. In righteousness shalt thou be established.] Righteousness is here opposed to oppression. Regiment without righteousness, is but robbery with authority.

For thou shalt not fear.] Or, That thou mayest not fear.

And from terror.] Tyranny is terrible.

For it shall not come near thee.] See #Ps 32:6. {See trapp on "Ps 32:6"}

Ver. 15. Behold, they shall surely (or sedulously) gather together,]{ a} Heb., He shall, gathering, gather together, i.e., the enemies, as one man. Some understand it as heretics and hypocrites, who shall dwell together with the Church, so they render it; but shall be evil affected toward it, but to their own ruin,

Whosoever shall gather together against thee.] Qui accolit tecum contra te. Such are those renegade Jesuits that run over to the Lutherans, pretending to be converts, when it is only to keep up the bitter contention that is between them and us.

{a} Commorabuntur.

Ver. 16. Behold, I have created the smith that bloweth the coals,] i.e., The devil, say some; rather his imps and instruments, those kindle coals and tools of his.

And I have created the waster to destroy.] Those brats of Abaddon. I have determined their evil doings, overruling the same, and directing them to a good end.

Ver. 17. No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper.] But shall be, as the poets feign of Ajax's sword, which so long as he used against men, his enemies, served for help and defence; but after he began to abuse it to the harm of harmless beasts, it turned into his own bowels.

And every tongue thou shalt condemn.] As the eclipsed moon, by keeping her motion, wades out of the shadow, and recovers her splendour, so shalt thou when slandered. See #Ps 37:6. {See Trapp on "Ps 37:6"}

This is the heritage.] Given them freely, and for perpetuity.

And their righteousness.] The clearing up of their wronged innocence.

Chapter 55

Ver. 1. Ho, every one that thirsteth.] Sitit sitiri Dominus, saith Nazianzen, {a} the Lord even thirsteth to be thirsted after; he "seeketh such to worship him as will worship him in spirit and in truth." {#Joh 4:23} Hence this present proclamation, "Ho, every one," of what nation soever, that is duly affected with the preceding discourse of Christ's all-sufficiency to save, {#Isa 53:11,12} and the church's glory and safety. {#Isa 54:11-17}

That thirsteth.] That, being scorched and parched with the sense of sin and fear of wrath, brayeth and breatheth after true grace and sound comfort, as the hunted hind doth after the waterbrooks; {#Ps 42:1,2} {See Trapp on "Ps 42:1"} {See Trapp on "Ps 42:2"} as David did after the water of the well of Bethlehem; {#2Sa 23:15,16} as the Lamb of God did when roasted in the fire of his Father's wrath, he cried aloud, Sitio, I thirst. {#Joh 19:28 Ps 22:11,16}

Come.] Non passibus sed affectibus itur ad Christum. Repent, and believe the gospel. {#Mr 1:15} Repentance is here set out by a word of activity. "Come, buy," &c. The frame of a true repenting heart is in an active coining posture, fitted for any service, when the wicked "pine away in their sin," {#Eze 33:10} and so perish eternally. {#Ps 9:17}

To the waters.] To Christ the fountain of living water, upon which you had turned your backs. {#Jer 2:13} Ortelius telleth us that in Ireland there is a certain fountain whose water killeth all those beasts that drink thereof, but harms not the people that usually drink it. Christ also is "set for the fall and rising again of many in Israel." {#Lu 2:34} His ordinances are a savour of life to some, and of death to others. {#2Co 3:16}

And he that hath no money.] Or, Money's worth. Many would come to Christ, but they would come with their cost; wherefore they run up and down to borrow money from the creatures or from the ordinances, using the means as mediators, and sharking in every bycorner for comfort; but men may be starved before they buy, if they go this way to work; for these in themselves are broken cisterns, empty granaries, and

In the Lord Christ is all fulness, {#Joh 1:16} not of plenty only, but of bounty also. To this fountain, if we bring but our empty vessels well washed, {#Jer 4:14} we shall return well refreshed, and replenished with good things, when the proud self-justiciary shall be sent empty away, and shall not once taste of wisdom's dainties {#Pr 9:2-5}

Buy.] Emite, i.e., comparate et comedite, get Christ "with all your gettings"; get him, whatever else you go without; part with all you have to compass this "pearl of price." {#Mt 13:44,46 16:24,25} This gold cannot be too dearly bought. {#Re 3:18} Heus saeculares, comparete vobis Biblia, animae pharmaca, saith Chrysostom by a like expression.

And eat.] That is, believe; hic enim edere, est credere, and this water, this wine, may be eaten also: nec enim rigat tantum sed et cibatur. Christ is to his, water to cool them, wine to comfort them, milk to nourish them, bread to strengthen them; he is all that heart can wish or need require. They who have once "tasted how good the Lord is" cannot but thirst after him, and be unsatisfiable. Optima demonstratio est a sensibus. Eat therefore; it is a virtue here to be a holy glutton.

Yea, come.] Heb., And come; come and come; yea come, come, come; linger not, loiter not, frame not excuse, strain not courtesy, hang not off by a sinful bashfulness; it is good manners to fall to your meat.

Buy wine and milk.] Anything, everything that is good and comfortable, for Christ is all and in all. {b} As the worth and value of many pieces of silver is in one piece of gold, so all the petty excellencies scattered abroad in the creatures are united in Christ. Apollonius writeth, that in the court of Aeta, King of Colchis, were three fountains, which flowed, one with milk, another with wine, and a third with honey. {c} Christ is all this, and more, in one. And of believers it may better be said than Justin {d} doth of the Scythians, Lacte et melle vescuntur: nihil alienum concupiscunt, &c.; they feed upon milk and honey; they desire nothing more than what they have; vines they have none, but gods they have, as they use to glory. Nazianzen and Jerome tell us that anciently in some churches they used to give to those proselytes whom they baptized wine and milk, grounding upon this text by a mistake.

Without money and without price.] All things for nothing, gratis. This is doubled and trebled for the comfort of poor trembling consciences. Christ is "rich to all that call upon his name"; {#Ro 10:12} none giveth to him; {#Ro 11:35} but he to all his freely, {#Isa 43:25} for the praise of his glorious grace. {#Eph 1:6} It is his good pleasure to do so. {#Lu 12:32} And if so, what can man, devil, or any distrustful heart, say against it?

{b} πάντα εν πασιν. {#Col 3:11}

{c} Argonaut, lib. iii.

{d} Lib. ii.

Ver. 2. Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread?] Heb., For not bread; for that which can no more feed you than those husks could the hungry prodigal. {#Lu 15:16}

“ *Turpe est difficiles habere nugas:
Et stultus labor est ineptiarum.*”—Martial.

The saying of the Roman general to the soldier that kept the tents, when he should have been fighting in the field, Non amo nimium diligentes, I love not those that are too diligent, will be used of God, if, when he calleth us to the care of higher things, we busy ourselves only about matters of an inferior alloy. Surely, as Domitian the emperor spent his time in catching flies, and Artaxerxes in making hafts for knives, so do most men in trifles and lying vanities, neglecting the one thing necessary (with Martha), and preferring, as those Gergesites in the Gospel, haram domesticam arae Dominicae, a swine sty before a sanctuary. Between such and true believers there is as much difference as is between substantial merchants who deal in rich commodities, and those nugivenduli Agyrtae, who sell gaudes, rattles, and trangums; as is between spiders that catch flies, and eagles that hunt after hares and herons; as is between fowlers that follow after quails, and children that run after butterflies. Had men but tasted of God's bread, they would never set such a price upon dove's dung. Had they drunk of Christ's wine, (which is beyond the best nectar or ambrosia), they would never thirst again after the world's delights; {#Joh 4:14} which are such as whereof a man may break his neck before his fast. {#Ec 1:8}

“ Clitorio quicumque sitim de fonte levarit, Vina fugit, gaudetque meris abstemius undis. ”
- Ovid. Metam., lib. xv.

And your labour for that which satisfieth not.] The world is full of pomp and pleasure, {#1Jo 2:15} and yet it satisfieth not, because it is full of nothing but of emptiness; the creature is now, ever since the fall, as the husk without the grain, the shell without the kernel; yea, "the world passeth away and the lusts thereof," {#1Jo 2:17} for a man cannot make his heart long to delight in the same things, but ipsa etiam vota, post usum, fastidio sunt, we loathe after a while what we greatly lusted after, as Amnon did Tamar. Therefore "love not the world," {#1Jo 2:15}; "labour not for the meat that perisheth," {#Joh 6:27} but hasten heavenward, saying, as that pilgrim did, who, travelling to Jerusalem, and by the way visiting many brave cities, with their rare monuments, and meeting with many friendly entertainments, would say eftsoons, I must not stay here, this is not Jerusalem.

Hearken diligently unto me.] Heb., Hearing, hear—i.e., Hear as for life, with utmost attention of body, intention of mind, and retention of memory.

And eat ye that which is good.] Not only hear the word of God, but eat it; turn it in succum et sanguinem, into juice and blood, digest it, incorporate it into your souls, {#Jas 1:21} for it is the heavenly manna that hath all manner of good tastes in it, and properties with it. {#2Ti 3:16}

And let your soul delight itself in fatness.] Talis est doctrina et gratis evangelica quae mentem saginat et impinguat, A good soul feedeth on the fat, and drinketh of the sweet, that is found in the precious promises. {#Ps 36:8 63:5}

Ver. 3. Incline your ear.] Hear with all your might. Alphonsus, King of Arragon, is renowned for his attentive hearing; so is our King Edward VI, who usually stood and took notes on all the sermon. Origen chideth his hearers for nothing so much as for their seldom coming to hear God's Word, and for their careless and heedless hearing it when they did come; whence their slow growth in godliness.

Hear, and your souls shall live.] God hath ordained—as it were to cross the devil—that as death entered into the world through the ear, by our first parents listening to that old man-slayer, so should life enter into the soul by the same door, as it were. "The dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live." {#Joh 5:25} The Romanists hold not hearing so absolutely needful—the mass only they make a work of duty, but the going to sermons but a matter of convenience, and such as is left free to men's leisures and opportunities without imputation of sin. {a}

And I will make an everlasting covenant with you.] Heb., I will cut out unto them a covenant of perpetuity. A covenant is a cluster of promises solemnly made over.

Even the sure mercies of David.] Or, Firm, faithful. The Greek {#Ac 13:34} hath it, "The holy things," or the "venerable things of David," that is, of Christ, for the ratifying and assuring whereof it was necessary that Christ should rise from death and enter into glory; for which purpose Paul allegeth this text. See #Ac 13:34.

{a} Spec. Europ.

Ver. 4. Behold, I have given him,] i.e., Christ, called David, {#Isa 55:3} because typed out by David, promised to him, and sprang of him.

For a witness.] To teach and testify his Father's will and counsel, {a} at which, being his eternal wisdom, he had been present. See #Re 3:14.

A leader and commander to the people.] Of Christ's priestly office had been spoken in #Isa 53:12, here of his prophetic and princely. These were frequently set forth even in the Old Testament; by the crown or golden plate on the high priest's head was signified Christ's kingly office; by the breastplate, his priestly; and by the bells, his prophetic.

Ver. 5. Behold, thou shalt call a nation.] Yea, all nations that yet dwell in darkness and in the shadow of death, being utterly ignorant of God and his will, of themselves and their duties; but now, when they "shall know God, or rather be known of him," they shall run to Christ, yea, and "fly as a cloud," and flock into the church, as doves scour into their columbaries, rushing into the windows. {#Isa 60:8}

Because of the Lord thy God.] Through the mighty operation of his Spirit by the preaching of his Word. The philosophers, though never so able, could hardly persuade some few to embrace their tenets. Plato went thrice into Sicily to convert Dionysius, but could not do it; Socrates could not work upon Alcibiades, nor Cicero upon his own son, because God was not with them, nor was willing to glorify his Son Christ by them, as he did afterwards by his holy apostles.

Ver. 6. Seek ye the Lord while he may be found.] Seek not his omnipresence—for that ye need not do, since he is not far from any one of us {#Ac 17:27} -but his gracious presence, his face and favour; seek to be in the fear of the Lord and in the comforts of the Holy Ghost, in communion with him, and conformity unto him, and give not over till you find it. Seek him seriously, seek him seasonably. There is a time when men shall seek the Lord with their flocks and herds, and yet not find him, when once he hath withdrawn himself from them. {#Ho 5:6}

Call ye upon him while he is near.] In a time of acceptance, {#Ps 32:6} before he hath sworn that he will not be spoken with. {#Ps 95:11} God is but a while with men in the opportunities of grace. {#Pr 1:24,28}

Ver. 7. Let the wicked forsake his way.] Or else never think of finding favour with God, or of calling upon him to any purpose. The leper's lips should be covered according to the law: a good motion from an ill mouth will never take with God.

“ *Pura Deus mens est, pura vult mente vocari:
Et puras iussit pondus habere preces.* ”

And the unrighteous man his thoughts.] See #Jas 4:8. {See Trapp on "Jas 4:8"} A Pilate may wash his hands, a Pharisee cleanse the outside of the platter. Castae manus sunt, sed mens habet piacula, said a heathen, who saw by the light of nature that clean hands and foul hearts did not suit well.

And let him return unto the Lord.] {See Trapp on "Zec 1:2"} {See Trapp on "Joe 2:12"} {See Trapp on "Joe 2:13"}

For he will abundantly pardon.] He will multiply to pardon: as we multiply sins, he will multiply pardons. God in Christ mollis est et misericors, not an "austere man," implacable, inexorable, but multis ad ignoscendum, as the Vulgate here rendereth it; and Fulgentius {a} thus descanteth upon it, In hoc multo nihil deest, in quo est omnipotens misericordia et omnipotentia miserecors, &c. In this much nothing is wanting—how can there? say—since there is in it omnipotent mercy and merciful omnipotence. A pardon, of course, he giveth us for involuntary and unavoidable infirmities; this we have included in that general pardon which we have upon our general repentance. And for other sins—be they blasphemies {#Mt 12:13} -God hath all plasters and pardons at hand, and ready made and sealed, for else we might die in our sins while the pardon is in providing. He hath also hanged out his tables, as I may say, in the holy Scriptures, showing what great sinners he hath pardoned, as Adam, that arch-rebel, Manasseh, who was all manner of naughts, David, Peter, Paul, Magdalene, &c. The Lord Hungerford of Hatesby was beheaded in Henry VIII's time. The Lord Thomas Cromwell, a better man, but executed together with him, cheered him up and bade him be of good comfort; For, said he, if you repent, and be heartily sorry for that you have done, there is for you also mercy with the Lord, who, for Christ's sake, will forgive you; therefore be not dismayed. {b} God seemeth to say to sinners, as once the French King Francis I did to one that begged pardon for some ill words spoken against his majesty, Do thou learn to speak little, so to sin no more, and I will not fail to pardon much; I can remit whatsoever you can commit, never doubt it.

{b} Acts and Mon., 109.

Ver. 8. For my thoughts are not your thoughts,] q.d., You may think it impossible, likely, that such great and grievous sinners as you have been should ever be received to mercy. But what talk you of your thoughts? Mine are infinitely above them, neither may you measure my mercies by your own models. Bring broken and bleeding hearts to my mercy seat, and I shall soon think all the meritorious sufferings of my Son, all the promises in my book, all the comforts of my Spirit, all the pleasures of my kingdom, but enough for you.

Ver. 9. For as the heavens are higher than the earth.] And that is no small deal; see the note on #Ps 103:11,12. Lo, such is the proportion that my mercy beareth to your mercy, even the very best of you, that the heaven doth to the earth—i.e., that a most vast circumference doth to one little point or centre.

Ver. 10. For as the rain cometh down.] Simile omnium elegantissimum pariter et notissimum. Of the use and efficacy of fit similitudes: {See Trapp on "Ho 12:10"}

Ver. 11. So shall the word be that goeth out of my mouth.] The Word in general, but especially the word of promise, it shall surely give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater, comforts of all sorts both for the present and for the future. Only we must see that we be good ground, and then pray "that the heaven may hear the earth." {as #Ho 2:21}

But it shall accomplish that which I please.] It shall produce the sweet fruits of righteousness. {#Ro 8:13,14} There is, saith a good author, a certain shell fish that lieth always open towards heaven, as it were looking upward and begging one fruitful drop of dew, which being fallen, it shutteth presently, and keepeth the door close against all outward things till it hath made a pearl of it. In reading or hearing the promises, if we open our shells, our souls, the heaven will drop the fruitful dew of grace to be employed worthily in making pearls of good works and solid virtues. "Who is she that cometh out of the wilderness to join herself to her well beloved?" {#So 6:9}

Ver. 12. For ye shall go out with joy, / sc., Out of your spiritual bondage, worse than that of Babylon.

The mountains and the hills.] The mute and brute creatures, as they seem to groan together with the faithful, {#Ro 8:21,22} so here, by a prosopopeia, they are brought in as congratulating and applauding their deliverance.

Ver. 13. Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree.] There shall be a blessed change of men and of manners. Those who before were stark naught, or good for naught, yea, vexatious and mischievous, {a} shall become fruitful and beneficial. The fir tree is good for many uses; the myrtle brings berries of excellent taste, as Pliny tells us. The Chaldee thus paraphraseth here, Just men shall rise up instead of sinners, and such as fear the Lord in the room of the unrighteous. Sed cave ne hic somnies, saith Oecolampadius, but be warned you dream not, as some do, that in this world and before the day of judgment the wicked shall all be rooted out, for there will always be Cains to persecute Abels, &c.

And it shall be to the Lord for a name, / i.e., For an honour: it shall be much for his glory, which is the end that he propoundeth to himself in all that he doeth. And well he may, since— (1.) He is not in danger of doing anything through vain glory; (2.) He hath none higher than himself to whom to have respect.

For an everlasting sign.] In monumentum non momentaneum; Heb., For a sign of perpetuity or eternity.

That shall not be cut off.] Or, That it, the Church, shall not be cut off.

{a} Spinis paliurus acutis. -Virg. Eclog.

Chapter 56

Ver. 1. Thus saith the Lord, Keep ye judgment, and do justice,] i.e., Repent ye, as ye were exhorted, {#Isa 45:6,7} and "bring forth fruits meet for repentance," {#Mt 3:8} "for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." {#Mt 3:2 Tit 2:12} Christ came to "call sinners to repentance," {#Mr 2:17} and to good works of all sorts, which are here called judgment and justice, as he himself is here called not only God's salvation, but his righteousness.

Ver. 2. Blessed is the man that doeth this.] And by it lays hold on that—i.e., that performeth the duties of both tables, of piety and of charity; that maketh conscience of keeping the Sabbath especially. The Fourth Commandment standeth fitly in the heart of the Decalogue, and between the two tables of the law, as having an influence into both.

From polluting it.] Either by corporal labour or spiritual idleness: spending the holy time holily.

And keepeth his hand from doing any evil.] That is, righteous as well as religious: not yielding his members as instruments of unrighteousness unto sin. {#Ro 6:13}

Ver. 3. Neither let the son of the stranger.] If a proselyte, let not him add extra words to the covenant of grace in Christ, and say, It belongeth not to me. Let not him turn the back of his hand to the promise, as if he were not concerned in it, because no Jew born; for now the wall of partition is by Christ to be broken down, and the rigour of that old prohibition taken away. {#Ac 10:34,35 Ga 3:28 Col 3:11 Eze 47:22}

Neither let the eunuch.] {See Trapp on "Mt 19:12"}

Ver. 4. For thus saith the Lord.] Who "comforteth those that are cast down," {#2Co 7:6} those that are forsaken of their hopes. {#Jer 30:17}

That keep my Sabbaths.] Which whoso do not are worthily deemed to have no true goodness in them at all.

And choose the things that please me.] Choose them upon mature deliberation and good advice; as Moses did; {#Heb 11:25} by a free election, {as #Ps 119:30} so showing themselves wise eunuchs, such as have their name παρα το εν νουν εχειν, as Scaliger deriveth it—i.e., well-minded men, egregie cordati homines, {a}

And take hold of my covenant.] By a lively faith which is said to have two hands, one wherewith she layeth hold on Christ, and another whereby she giveth up herself unto him, and although the devil rap her on the fingers for so doing, yet she is resolute and holds her own.

{a} Ennius.

Ver. 5. Even unto them will I give in mine house.] In the Church of the New Testament. {#Eph 2:19-21}

A place.] Heb., A hand. A door keeper's place in God's house is worth having; {#Ps 84:10} this was that one thing that he so dearly begged. {#Ps 27:4}

And a name.] That new name, {#Re 2:17} that power or prerogative-royal—that heavenly honour, Nonnus there calleth it—viz., "to be the sons of God," {#Joh 1:12} and so to be "called," {#1Jo 3:1} to have both the comfort and the credit of it: this is nomen in mundo praestantissimum; none to this, {#2Co 6:18} for "if sons, then heirs." {#Ro 8:16,17}

Ver. 6. Also the sons of the stranger that joineth.] Relinquishing his heathenish superstition, and devoting himself to my fear. The Levites had their name from the word here used; and leviathan, whose scales and parts are so fast joined and jointed together.

To love the name of the Lord, to be his servants.] Plato could say, Parere legibus est Deo servire: et haec summa est libertas, To obey the laws, is to serve God; and this is the chiefest liberty, this is perfect freedom. But Plato never knew what it was to love to be God's servant. Lex voluntarios quaerit, saith Ambrose. {a} All God's soldiers are volunteers, all his people free hearted; {#Ps 110:3} they wait for his law. {#Isa 42:8 De 10:12}

Every one that keepeth the Sabbath.] See on #Isa 56:2.

{a} In Psalm i.

Ver. 7. Even them will I bring unto my holy mountain,] i.e., Into my Church, and Church assemblies. Query, Whether eunuchs and strangers were made partakers of all holy services in the second temple, according to the letter? Sure we are that that holy eunuch, {#Ac 8:26-40} and the rest of the Gentiles, had and still have free admission under the gospel.

And will make them joyful in mine house of prayer.] By their free access unto me, and all good success in their suits. Pray "that your joy may be full." {#Joh 16:24} "Draw water with joy out of this well of salvation." {#Isa 12:3} "Rejoice evermore," and that you may so do, "pray without ceasing." {#1Th 5:16,17}

Their burnt offerings and their sacrifices shall be accepted upon mine altar.] Their evangelical sacrifices of prayer, praise, alms, obedience, &c., shall be accepted through Christ, {#Heb 13:10,15} who is the true altar that sanctifieth all that is offered on it. {#Re 8:3,4}

For mine house shall be called, &c.] See on #Mt 21:13.

Ver. 8. Which gathereth the outcasts of Israel.] According to that ancient promise of his. {#De 30:4} None of his shall be lost for looking after; he will "fetch back his banished," as that witty woman said. {#2Sa 14:14}

Yet will I gather others to him.] Strangers, eunuchs, all mine "other sheep that are not yet of this fold," {#Joh 10:16} together with all my stragglers; those that are relapsed will I recover.

Ver. 9. All ye beasts of the field, come to devour.] Statim quasi vehementer ira accensus, &c. All upon the sudden, as one much enraged against the wicked priests especially, as greatest traitors to the state, the Lord thundereth and threateneth terribly. By the beasts here called for, we may understand the Babylonians, Grecians, Syrians, Egyptians, but especially the Romans, who made clean work of them, whenas they were grown extremely wicked, and even ripe for ruin, as Josephus witnesseth. See #Jer 50:17.

Ver. 10. His watchmen are blind; they are all ignorant.] Invehit in Pseudepiscopos, such as were, and are still in part, the popish clergy; those of the ninth age especially, and not much better a little before Luther stickled: blind leaders of the blind, lamentably ignorant, as the Bishop of Dunkeld, in Scotland, for instance, who professed that he knew neither the New Testament nor the Old. So Bishop Albert, reading the Bible, and being asked by a nobleman what book it was he read; I know not, said he, what book it is, but all that I read in it is contrary to our religion. {a} As for the other ill qualities of the watchmen here inveighed against, Hugo the cardinal said, that the devil had two daughters, Covetousness and Luxury; the former he had heretofore married out to the Jews, the latter to the Gentiles; but now the monks and priests had gotten them both from their old husbands and taken them for their own use. The Hebrew critics have observed, that the word here rendered watchmen, hath a tzaddi larger than ordinary, to show what odious creatures such are as are here described. {Hebrew Text Note}

They are all dumb dogs that cannot bark, / i.e., Will not deal plainly and faithfully with men's souls; but either preach not at all, or placentia only, toothless truths. Pliny {b} tells of the dogs in Rome that were set to keep the capitol; because, when the Gauls scaled it, the dogs being fed too full, lay sleeping, and did not give warning, they not only hanged them up, but every year on that day of the year, hanged up certain dogs in the city for exemplary justice; yea, crucified them alive upon an older tree. Let dumb dogs and parasitical preachers, treacherous to men's souls, take heed they be not one day hanged in hell.

Sleeping, lying down, loving to slumber.] Non dormiunt solum, sed dedita opera dormiunt; {c} so full they have farced themselves, and so deeply drunk they are, that they sleep soundly, though lions roar, and wolves worry the poor flock, and that many times far enough from the fold, wherein they show themselves to be worse than Ulysses' swine herd, of whom Homer saith—

“ουδε συβωτη
Ἦνοαεν αυτοθι κοιτος ιων απο κοιμηθηναι,”

That he would not be drawn to sleep from his swine sty.

{c} Somnolentia pastorum luporum est gaudium.

Ver. 11. Yea, they are greedy dogs that can never have enough.] Heb., Strong of soul, or of appetite; they know not to be satisfied. Lac et luna, is that they look for; the "instruments of a foolish shepherd," forcipes et mulctra, the shears and milk pail are in their hand; {#Zec 11:15} they eat the fruit and drink the milk; {as #Eze 25:4} yea, they eat the fat, and tear the claws in pieces. {#Zec 11:16} Albertus Magnus complained heavily of the covetousness of pastors in his time. Temporalia colligunt per se, spiritualia seminant per alios saith he on #Mt 10:16; {a} they take little pains, but care not how much profit they make. He that made Fasciculus temporum, doth the like. Another modern writer fitly applieth that to them, which Oedipus in Sophocles saith of Tiresias the heathen prophet—i.e., that he looked only to his gain, but was little seen in his profession. Such a one was Balaam; {#Jude 11} such were those false prophets; {#Eze 13:2,3} the covetous Pharisees; {#Lu 16:14} the false apostles, {#Ro 16:18} called dogs; {#Php 3:2} such as had a greedy worm under their tongues, and could never be satisfied.

Μονον δεδορκε, την τεχνην δ εφουτυφλος,”

And they are shepherds that cannot understand.] The dust of covetousness hath even put out their eyes. As it fared with the blind {a} and greedy Pharisees, Avidi a non videndo, the world is a pearl in their eyes; they cannot see God, nor skill of their office. Tremellius rendereth it nesciunt docere; they know not to teach, as being choked haply with a fat benefice—a common practice of the Pope.

They all look to their own way.] Mind their own commodity, whereby they are led up and down, as an ox may be all aground over by a bottle of hay.

{a} Midas secundum Etymologiam Graecam caecus est. Midas, according to Greek mythology, was blind.

Ver. 12. Come ye.] The wicked have their "come ye," as well as the godly. {#Isa 2:3} {See Trapp on "Isa 2:3"}

I will fetch wine.] A pastor should be no winebibber or ale-stake. {#1Ti 3:8} Ebrietas in se culpas complectitur omnes. Drunkenness is a soul fault in any man, saith Petrus Ravenas, but in a minister it is a sacrilege, especially if he draw on others to it, as here, and as the Popish priests do at Paris and Lovain, where the best wine is called vinum theologicum, the wine of theologians, and they used to lengthen out their drunken computations.

And tomorrow shall be as this day.] Words of profane secureness and dissoluteness. See #Isa 22:13 Pr 23:35.

Chapter 57

Ver. 1. The righteous perisheth.] So the world deemeth, but not rightly, for "the righteous hath hope in his death," when "the wicked dying is driven away in his wickedness" {#Pr 14:32} -by "him that had the power of death, even the devil" {#Heb 2:14} -having been "through fear of death all their lifetime subject to bondage." The Lacedaemonians all the time of their life adored death. The righteous can defy death, with Paul, and sing, Death, where is thy sting? hell, where is thy victory? He is not "killed with death," as Jezebel's children were; {#Re 2:23} but dieth in peace, though he die in battle, as Josiah did, of whom some interpret this text.

And no man layeth it to heart.] Heb., Upon his heart, that it may sink and soak into it, so as to be soundly sensible of God's holy hand and end in such a providence. See #Isa 5:12. There is a woe to oscitancy and stupidity of this kind.

And merciful men.] Heb, Men of piety or pity, such as all righteous persons are. They have received mercy, and they can show it; {#Col 3:12} they have steeped their thoughts in the mercies of God, which have dyed theirs as the dye fat doth the cloth.

Are taken away.] Heb., Gathered, as grain is into the garner, or fruit into the storehouse; so they into Abraham's bosom. As men gather flowers, and candy them, and preserve them by them, so doth God his pious ones.

No man considering.] None of those debauched ones {#Isa 56:12} to be sure of. These are glad to be rid of the righteous, as the Sodomites were of righteous Lot; as the heathen persecutors were of the martyrs, whom they counted καθαρματα, the "sweepings of the world, and the offscourings of all things." {#1Co 4:13}

That the righteous is taken away from the evil to come.] As was Methuselah a year before the flood; Jeroboam's best son, before the downfall of his father's family; {#1Ki 14:12,13} Josiah before the captivity and first destruction of Jerusalem; {#2Ki 22:20} James before the second; {#Ac 12:2} Augustine a little before the sack of his city Hippo, by the Vandals. Felix Nepotianus qui haec non vidit, saith Jerome. Stilico said, that when Ambrose was dead great changes would follow; and it happened accordingly. Luther was taken away in peace, {a} a little before the calamity of Germany, which he foretold, for contempt of the gospel. Pareus died a little before Heidelberg was taken, futuro malo substractus. Mr Brightman was buried a day or two before the pursuivant was sent for him. God had housed him, as he had Lot before the storm; hid him, as he had done Moses in the hole of the rock, till the tempest was blown over; dealt by him, as once by Daniel, {#Da 12:13} who was bid to go away and rest before those great clashings and confusions should come, which had been foreshown to him. Howbeit this is not generally so; for Jeremiah lived to see the first destruction of Jerusalem, John the Evangelist the last. Mr Dod and many other holy men outlived our recent unhappy wars, and deeply shared in them. But usually God taketh away his most eminent servants from the evil to come. As when there is a fire in a house or town men carry out their jewels; οκυμοροι οι θεοφιλεις, saith an ancient, {b} the best die first commonly. The comfort is, that though as grapes they be gathered before they are ripe, and as lambs, slain before they be grown, yet this benefit they have, that they are freed from the violence of the winepress that others fall into, and they escape many storms that others live to taste of.

{b} Dion., Prus. Orat. 28.

Ver. 2. He shall enter into peace,] i.e., Into heaven, where the righteous—however looked upon as lost {#Isa 57:1} -shall have "life and peace," {#Ro 8:6} joy and bliss, {#Mt 25:21,23} rest and peace, {#Re 14:13} and this απαρτι amodo, strait upon it so soon as ever they are dead; from henceforth forthwith their souls have happiness inconceivable. As for their bodies,

They shall rest in their beds.] So their graves are called, by an elegant metaphor, like as the bier that carrieth to it is called matteh, a couch, {#2Sa 3:31} the burying place, a dormitory, {a} or place to sleep in, and the resurrection an awakening. {#Ps 17:15} To this bed Moses went up when his Father bade. He died ad os Iehovae according to the word of God, {#De 34:5} which the Jewish doctors {b} expound as though God did take away his soul with a kiss, like as the loving mother kisseth the child, and then layeth it down to sleep. Rhodinus, a Dutch divine, when he perceived he should die, desired to be laid in another bed, which he called his bed of rest, and upon which he had long before written this verse— {c}

In this short bed of the grave shall be laid up the infinite miseries of many years; the bodies of the saints shall, by rotting, be refined, their precious dust preserved, till at last it arise incorruptible. O dieculam illam!

Each one walking in his uprightness.] Or, Walking before him, or right over against him; that is, keeping equipage with him, as when one friend walketh with another.

{a} κομητηριον.

{b} Maimonid.

{c} Melch. Adam.

Ver. 3. But draw near hither, ye sons of the sorceress.] Here "Esaias is very bold," as the apostle saith of him in another case, {#Ro 10:20} and maketh it appear that he was none of those dumb dogs he had rated at in the former chapter. The Jews gloried much in their pedigree and descent from Abraham, and that they were "born of the free woman." He telleth them flat and plain that they were witches' children, whores' sons, a bastardly brood, {a} as our Saviour afterwards called them, a race of rebels, a seed of serpents, shamefully degenerate from their praiseworthy progenitors.

{a} γενεα μοιχαλιδ.

Ver. 4. Against whom do ye sport yourselves?] You that are the wits, the merry Greeks of the times, that, instead of "trembling at God's word," and humbling before him, hold it a goodly thing to gibe and jeer at it, to mock and scoff at those that preach it. {#2Ch 36:16 Isa 5:18,19 22:13 28:14,22} These were their game stocks, and the matter of their mad mirth. Neither is it any otherwise to this day; for the world ever was, and will be still, beside itself in point of salvation. {a} Not the sinful Sodomites only, but Lot's sons-in-law, who should have learned better, laughed him to scorn for his good counsel. {#Ge 19:14} Ridetur cum suo Iehova. Lot is counted but a lob, and bid to keep his breath to cool his broth. Erasmus is blamed for his dry scoffs at Capito and other reformers; but Parsons, the Jesuit, is able to put Rabshakeh, Thersites, and Lucian himself to school for railing, deriding, and scurrilous language.

Against whom make yea wide mouth, and draw out the tongue?]

By such base gestures did they show their contempt of the prophets, as they thought; but indeed, and as it was construed, of God himself. See #Ex 16:8 Nu 16:11 Lu 10:16 1Th 4:8. Look how unskilful hunters, shooting at wild beasts, do sometimes kill a man; so profane persons, shooting at God's ministers, hit him. If we be served in like sort as those of old were—if we be for "signs and for wonders in Israel," as Isaiah and his fellows were {#Isa 8:18} -if in mockage they imitate our language, as they did good Jeremiah's, crying at him, "The burden of the Lord, the burden of the Lord" {#Jer 23:38} -if they blow their noses at us, as they did at our Saviour, {εμωκτηριζον, #Lu 16:14} taunt and reproach us, as they did Paul, {#Ac 17:32} set us upon a stage {b} to be laughed and hooted at, as they did those worthies of whom the world was not worthy {#Heb 10:33 1Co 4:9} -let us not strange or startle at the matter, as if some new thing had befallen us; but "rejoice, and be exceeding glad; for so persecuted they the prophets that were before us" {#Mt 5:12 1Pe 4:14} {See Trapp on "1Pe 4:14"}

Ver. 5. Inflaming yourselves with idols.] That it might appear that there was good cause of so much sharpness, and that he did them no wrong. He painteth them out in their colours to the life: Incalescitis, id est, concumbitis; while ye commit folly and filthiness with your idols, ye are all "adulterers, as an oven heated by the baker; your baker sleepeth all the night, in the morning it burneth as a flaming fire." {#Ho 7:4,6} And as the love of harlots is oft hotter than that of husband and wife, so superstition many times outdoeth true religion.

Slaying the children.] A barbarous practice, taught them by that old man slayer. Careless parents do little less, whom, therefore, Bernard calleth peremptores potius quam parentes, rather parricides than parents.

Ver. 6. Among the smooth stones of the stream is thy portion.] Pars et sors tua. A poor portion it is, but such as thou art well apaid of, viz., thine altars and thine idol service, and settest up in my place. How exceeding devout in their way are some misled and muzzled Papists, those of the weaker sex especially, in the service of their god, Mauzzim, in the honour of their too admired relics, which they esteem no less than the people of the isle Ceylon, in the East Indies, did their consecrated ape's tooth, which being got from them, they offered an incredible mass of treasure to recover it.

Should I receive comfort in these?] Or, Should I not ease myself of these? {as #Jer 5:9}

Ver. 7. Upon a lofty and high mountain.] In all places hast thou poured out thy whoredoms, setting thy sin "upon the cliff of the rock," as it were sunning, so shameless art thou grown.

Thy bed,] i.e., Thy temples and altars; as likewise do the mass mongers to this day.

Ver. 8. Behind the doors also, and the posts.] Where my law should have been written. {#De 6:9 11:20}

Hast thou set up thy remembrance?] Thy idols and monuments of idolatry, such as Papists now call memories and laymen's books.

Thou hast discovered thyself] Thy nakedness, like a meretrix meretricissima, divaricasti tibias {as #Eze 23:29} Omnibus modis te comparans ut impudentissimum scortum, prostituting thyself as a most impudent harlot, prodigiously lascivious.

Ver. 9. And thou wentest to the king.] The King of Assyria, who styled himself the Great King, to whom Ahaz both sent and went. {#2Ki 16:8,10}

With ointment.] Heb., With oil—that is, with balsam, such as Judea only afforded, and was therefore highly esteemed in other countries.

And didst debase thyself even unto hell.] By crouching and cringing to those foreign states in a most submissive and servile way, as Ahaz had done with his, "I am thy servant and thy son," {#2Ki 16:7} to the dishonour of God, and to the reproach of Israel, who was God's "firstborn, higher than the kings of the earth." {#Ps 89:27}

Ver. 10. Thou art wearied in the greatness of thy way.] Great pains thou hast taken to small purpose, and yet thou thinkest and hopest, but groundlessly, that Thou hast found the life of thy hand.] A sure way of subsistence; thy desired help and safety.

Ver. 11. And of whom hast thou been afraid or feared?] q.d., Not me surely, as thou oughtst; but thy fellow creatures, whom thou shouldst have looked upon as so many mice.

That thou hast lied,] i.e., So basely flattered the Assyrian.

Have I not held my peace?] i.e., Borne with thee, more than any else would ever have done? And yet my lenity is even worse than lost upon thee.

Ver. 12. I will declare thy righteousness,] i.e., Thine unrighteousness, by an irony; {a} or, Thy righteousness secundum dici, non secundum esse, thine hypocrisy.

For they shall not profit thee.] Nay, they shall undo thee.

{a} Antiphrasis ironica.

Ver. 13. When thou criest, let thy companies deliver thee.] "Thy companies"; Heb., Thy gathered ones, or troops. See #De 32:37,38 Jud 10:13,14. {See Trapp on "Jud 10:14"}

But the wind shall carry them all away.] The wind of God's power shall scatter them, quisquiliarum in morem.

Ver. 14. And they shall say.] Or, And it shall be said. This is further added, for the comfort of those that trusted in God, that they shall have a smooth and clear passage home. This is literally meant of their return from Babylon; but mystically of the recollection of the Church out of the captivity of the devil and power of sin.

Ver. 15. For thus saith the high and lofty One.] Higher than the highest; so high, that he is said to "humble himself to behold things done in heaven"; {#Ps 113:6} to look out of himself upon the saints and angels there. He is a God, saith one, whose nature is majesty, whose place is immensity, whose time is eternity, whose life is sanctity, whose power is omnipotence, whose work is mercy, whose wrath is justice, whose throne is sublimity, whose seat is humility.

That inhabiteth eternity.] Gigas saeculorum, saith the Syriac. The apostle Paul hath a like stately description of almighty God, {#1Ti 6:16} who yet is above all name or notion, and must be thought of as one not to be thought of. Herein he is most unlike to men, who the higher they are, the less they look after the poor afflicted.

I dwell in the high and holy place.] In "the light which no man can approach unto." {#1Ti 6:16} In the holy place of the material temple, which was without windows, there burned lights perpetually, to represent the celestial lights; but in the most holy place there was no light at all, to show that all outward light is but darkness being compared with that light which God inhabiteth, and which is inaccessible.

With him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit.] In the lowest hearts he dwelleth, as well as in the highest heavens. A broken heart is God's lesser heaven; here he dwelleth with delight. Not that the affliction of a man's spirit is pleasing to God, but the separation of sin from the soul. When the solder that joineth a sinful action and the heart together is dissolved, this pleaseth the Lord.

To revive the spirit of the humble.] As this very text hath done many a one.

Ver. 16. For I will not contend for ever.] It soon repenteth the Lord concerning his servants. Et pro magno peccato parum supplicii satis est patti. {a} See #Ps 103:9.

For the spirit would fail before me.] Heb., Would be overcovered —sc., tenebris ac terroribus, it would even sink and faint away. When the child swoons in the whipping, God lets fall the rod, and falls akissing it, to fetch life into it again. {#Jer 31:20} As the rule in medicine is still to maintain nature, so doth he their spirits by cordials.

{a} Terent.

Ver. 17. For the iniquity of his covetousness.] Or, Of his concupiscence, the sin of his nature. But covetousness is a wickedness with a witness, the "root of all evil." {#1Ti 6:10} Timon could say that there were two sources of all sin, viz., απληστιαν και φιλοδοξιαν, covetousness and vainglory.

And he went on frowardly in the way of his own heart,] i.e., Excaecotus sequitur animale suum spiritum, he, blindling, blundered on, without fear or wit, cross grained and irreclaimable.

Ver. 18. I have seen his ways.] His ways of covetousness, crossness, &c. I could be as cross as he for the heart of him, {#Ps 18:26} but I will heal him,] q.d., I see these froward children will lay nothing to heart; frowns will not humble them, blows will not benefit them; if I do not save them till they seek me, they will never be saved. Therefore I will work for mine own name's sake. See #Eze 20:8,14,22,44.

And restore comforts unto him, and to his mourners.] To those that mourn in secret for his sins and miseries; {#Eze 9:4 Mt 5:4} and to others for their sakes, ratione consortii.

Ver. 19. I create the fruit of the lips, / i.e., I speak peace to my people by the mouths of my faithful ministers, applying and setting home the promises; and this I do most magnificently and mightily.

Peace, peace.] See on #Isa 26:3.

Ver. 20. But the wicked are like the troubled sea.] Whose surges are not more lofty than muddy. The sea is of itself unquiet and troublesome, much more when tossed with winds and tempests; so wicked men, when it is at best with them, are restless; but under terrors and temptations, they cast up the mire and dirt of desperation and blasphemy, as did Cain, Judas, Julian, Latomus, &c. God in afflictions marks men out; and then conscience will prey upon them, as Simeon and Levi did upon the Shechemites when sore. Then, {as #Pr 5:12} men shall cry out, "How have I hated instruction, and my heart despised reproof!" Then, {as #Ge 42:21} afflictions are to the soul as storms are to the sea, or as earthquakes to the ground, which reveals a great deal of filth. Vatablus rendereth the text thus, Impii autem Euripi instar fremunt. Now Euripus ebbeth and floweth seven times a day, and must needs therefore be in continual motion and agitation. Mr Dod {a} was wont to compare wicked men to the waves of the sea: those which were of a great estate were great waves, said he; those that were of small estate were small waves; but all were restless as waves. {#Job 20:20}

{a} His Life in Mr Clark.

Ver. 21. There is no peace.] A truce there may be for a time, and a seeming peace; but it is pax infida, pax incerta, {a} peace, no peace. The sea may seem sometimes still, but it is never so; no more are the wicked. And this is twice here affirmed for more assurance; like as he had twice said, "I will heal them"; {#Isa 57:18,19} and as he had promised peace, peace to the mourners (ib.), who, having soaked themselves in godly sorrow, are washed from their wickedness by the blood of Jesus Christ; and being justified by faith, have peace with God. This is a peerless pearl, which no cock on the dunghill ever knew the worth of.

Chapter 58

Ver. 1. Cry aloud.] Heb., Cry with the throat, or, With full throat. {as #Jer 12:6} {a} Plenis faucibus, voce sonora, et quasi tubali: Set up thy note; not only say to the wicked, "It shall be ill with him," {#Isa 3:11} there is no peace to him, {#Isa 57:21} but cry it aloud.

Spare {b} not.] Singulae particulae habent emphasin; use utmost intention of spirit and contention of speech. Thou hast to do with a hypocritical nation, than which kind of people nothing is more stupid, more uncounsellable, or impenitent; for how should such repent as have converted conversion itself into a form, yea, into sin? Bestir thee therefore against these deaf sea monsters. Sic clames ut stentora vincere possis. If a man's house be on fire, we must not speak softly, as loath to awaken him: Sir, your house is on fire.

Lift thy voice like a trumpet.] Non ut tibia, sed ut tuba; not as a pipe for delight, but as a trumpet alarm against sin and Satan. As all the country was filled with the sound of that trumpet at the giving of the law, {#Ex 19:16} and as all the world shall hear the sound of that trumpet of God {#1Th 4:16} when the law shall be required, so let the preacher's voice be a summons to speedy repentance, or else to unavoidable judgment. There is one {c} that descanteth thus upon the words: Various things there are, saith he, that sound louder than a trumpet—the sea, the thunder, or such like—yet he saith not, lift up thy voice as the sea, or as the thunder, but as "a trumpet"; because a trumpeter, when he sounds his trumpet, he winds it with his mouth, and holds it with his hands; and so a preacher, which is a spiritual trumpeter, must not only, by preaching well, sound forth the word of truth with his mouth, but also, by doing well, he must support and hold it up with his hands, and then doth he "lift up his voice as a trumpet."

And show my people their transgressions.] Let God's watchmen cast away the inverse trumpets of Furius Fulvius, which sounded a retreat when they should have sounded an alarm; but deal freely and faithfully with men's souls, taking the same liberty to cry down sin that men take to commit sin.

{c} Dr Playfair on #Mt 5:19.

Ver. 2. Yet they seek me daily.] In pretence at least; and this, their dissembled sanctity, double iniquity, is one of those great transgressions of theirs, against which thou must declaim, yea, proclaim hell fire, in case they amend it not.

And delight to know my ways.] They seem to do so, by frequenting mine ordinances, and attending to my priests, whose lips preserve and present knowledge.

As a nation that did righteousness.] But it is but as a nation that did it; they had but a "form of knowledge," {#Ro 2:20} and a "form of godliness." {#2Ti 3:5} Eiusdem farinae nobiscum sunt religiosi quidam in speciem, saith Oecolampadius: the Church is still full of such hypocrites, that only act religion, play devotion, wherein they may outdo better men, for the external part of religion and pretence of zeal, as the Pharisees in the Gospel fasted more than the disciples, wansing their visages, and weakening their constitutions with much abstinence. The sorcerers of Egypt seemed to do as much as Moses; so do these as much or more than sound Christians. The apostles were as deceivers, and yet true, {#2Co 6:8} but these are as true, and yet deceivers.

They ask of me the ordinances of justice.] As not willing to deviate; but they are ever learning, yet never come to the knowledge of the truth.

And take delight in approaching to God.] Which yet no hypocrite can do from the heart; {#Job 27:10} for God is light and holiness, and therefore hated by the blind and foul hypocrite, {#Joh 3:20} all whose devotions are effects rather of art and parts than of the heart and grace; hence God abhorreth them, for he "desireth truth in the inward parts." {#Ps 51:6}

Ver. 3. Wherefore have we fasted, say they, and thou seest not?] Here they begin to bluster, and their hypocrisy to blister out at their lips. {a} God, they held, was not a little beholden to them, and now also in arrears with them. For as that heathen emperor {b} said once of his gods, Non sic deos coluimus, ut iste nos vinceret, We have not served our gods, that they should serve us no better than to allow our enemies to get the better of us; so were these proud pretenders ready to say of God Almighty, We have better deserved than to be so served; rated by these prophets, and evil entreated by our enemies; beaten on both sides. A rich chapman, that hath had a good stock and trading, is loath to be a journeyman again; he will be trading, though it be but for pins; so we, bankrupt in Adam, yet will be doing, and think to be saved for a company of poor beggarly duties, dead prayers, formal fastings, &c., and to set off with God by our good deeds for our bad, as the Papists do, and not a few ignorants among us.

Behold, in the day of your fast.] Which is called a day of restraint, because therein you should amerce yourselves and abridge yourselves of all sorts of delights.

Ye find pleasure.] Ye find your own desire, pleasure, or will; {c} ye gratify your flesh, pursue your sinful lusts and purposes. Grande malum propria voluntas, saith Bernard, qua fit ut bona tua tibi bona non sint. A man's own will or pleasure proves a great evil to him many times, making his good duties (fastings, prayers, and the like) no way good to him. In vain is the body macerated, if men's lusts be not mortified.

And exact all your labours,] i.e., Your debts and dues with rigour and extremity, not considering that utmost right is utmost wrong; and that, howsoever, you should take another time for such work. Feriis iurgia amovento, brawl not on a holiday, was one of the laws of the Twelve Tables in Rome.

{b} Antonin., Philos. Referente.

{c} Chephets significat id quod libet.

Ver. 4. Behold.] Take notice whence it is, that ye so miscarry in your services, and leave muttering against me.

Ye fast for strife and debate.] Or, Unto strife and debate—i.e., On your fast days ye contend and quarrel; being hungry, you are angry, as emptiness whetteth choler. Sed quid prodest pallor in ore, si sit livor in corde? to what purpose is a pale face and a spiteful spirit? and what is a humbling day without a humbled heart! not only an irreligious incongruity, but a high provocation; like Zimri's act, when all the congregation were weeping before the door of the tabernacle. Get thee behind, saith Jehu to the messenger, "what hast thou to do with peace?" Confessions and prayers are our messengers; but if the heart be not broken, there is no peace to such wicked.

And to smite with the fist of wickedness, J scil., Your servants or your debtors, as #Mt 18:28. They should have had, on such a day especially, Pacem cum hominibus, cum vitiis bellum (which was Otho II's motto), Peace with men, and war with their wickednesses.

Ye shall not fast as ye do this day.] For ye fast not to God, {#Zec 7:5,11,12} but bear fruit to yourselves, like that "empty vine" Ephraim, {#Ho 10:1} and so are not a button the better for all you do; #Jer 14:12, "When they fast, I will not hear their cry."

To make your voices to be heard on high.] Out of ostentation of devotion; but secrecy here were a better argument of sincerity. Or, do you think to be heard on high, i.e., in heaven, for such outside services?

Ver. 5. Is it such a fast that I have chosen?] No; for God hates that mar-good formality; and displeasing service is double dishonour.

A day for a man to afflict his soul, J i.e., His body a whole day at least, from evening till evening, {#Le 23:32} or from morning till evening. {#Jud 20:26 2Sa 3:35} Yet so as that nature be chastised, not disabled for service; and that we take not the more liberty afterwards to pamper the flesh which we have pined, as those dames of Athens did in their Thesmophoria, a feast of Ceres, to the which they prepared themselves with fasting; but after that took their liquor more freely than was fit {a} And as the Turks do at this day in their solemn fasts; they will not so much as taste a cup of water, or wash their mouths with water all the day long, before the stars appear in the sky; but then they lay the reins in the neck and run riot. {b}

Is it to bow down the head as a bulrush?] While the heart is unbowed, and stands bolt upright. Hypocrites, like bulrushes, hang down their heads for a day, while some storm of trouble is upon them; but when a fair sunshine day is come to dry it up again, they lift up their heads as before. Fitly, saith a grave divine, is formality compared to a bulrush; the colour is fresh, the skin smooth; he is very exact that can find a knot in a bulrush; but if you peel it, what is under but a kind of spongy, unsubstantial substance, of no use in the world worth the speaking of. Such are hypocrites; a fair outside, specious pretences of piety, &c., all the rest not worth a rush. Pictures, saith another, are pretty things to look on, and that is all they are good for. Christ looked on, and loved the young Pharisee, &c.

And to spread sackcloth and ashes under him?] The Jews did so usually in their solemn mournings. {#Es 4:3 Jer 6:26} The heathens also did the like. {#Jon 3:5 Mt 11:21}

Wilt thou call this a fast?] Is it not a mere mock fast, as was that of the Pharisees? and is that of the Papists, who pride themselves that day with opinion of merit, for their mere outward abstinence. Some Protestants also fast; but they had need to send, as God speaks, for mourning women, that by their cunning they may be taught to mourn, {#Jer 9:17} and for reformation (the main business of a fast) they mind it not.

And an acceptable day to the Lord.] Heb., A day of goodwill or well liking, therefore called elsewhere a day of atonement or expiation, and hath most excellent promises made to it. {#Joe 2:12,18} Only there must be withal a turning from wicked works; without which God seeth no work or worth in a fast, {#Joh 3:10} nor can it be an acceptable day to the Lord.

{a} Rous's Archaeol. Attica.

{b} Turkish History, 777; Voyage into the Levant.

Ver. 6. Is not this the fast that I have chosen?] There is a threefold fast, from meat, mirth, sin; this last crowns both the former, and yet we say not (as the Papists falsely say we hold) that fasting is no more but a moral temperance, a fasting from sin, a matter of policy.

To loose the bands of wickedness,] i.e., Iuramentum, literariam cautionem, vincula, carceres, servitutem; the unjust bonds and obligations of usurers and oppressors, whereby poor non-solvents were imprisoned or embondaged. These are also here further called "heavy burdens" and "yokes," as elsewhere "nets"; {#Ps 10:9} that is, saith Chrysostom, bonds, debts, mortgages.

And to let the oppressed go free.] Heb., The bruised or broken, scil., in their estates.

And that ye break every yoke.] Cancel every unjust writing, say the Septuagint. They took twelve in the hundred in Nehemiah's time; this was a yoke intolerable. "I pray you let us leave off this usury," saith he. {#Isa 5:10} At this day the Jews are in all places permitted to strain up their usury to eighteen in the hundred upon the Christians; {a} but then they are used, as the friars, to suck from the meanest, and to be sucked by the greatest.

Ver. 7. Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry?] Thine "own bread" it must be, and that especially whereof thou hast on the fast day abridged thyself; for what the rich spare on such a day the poor should spend. Hereby (1.) Men's prayers shall speed the better; {#Ac 10:4} (2.) They shall make God their debtor; {#Pr 19:17} (3.) That is best and most pleasing alms to God that is given in Church assemblies; for (1.) It is an ordinance of God, and a Sabbath duty; {#1Co 16:1,2} (2.) Christ there sitteth, and seeth the gift and mind of every almsgiver, {#Lu 21:1,2} setting it down in his book of remembrance. {#Mat 3:16}

And that thou briny the poor that are cast out.] Scilicet tanquam rebelles, as those poor Albigenses were in France, and their posterity lately in Piedmont; the Protestant Lorainers, proscribed for religion by their duke, and entertained by the state of Strasburg, at the earnest suit of the ministers there, till they could be conveniently provided for elsewhere, there being some thousands of them, which, till then, were forced to feed upon hips, haws, leaves of trees, and grass of the field. {a}

That thou cover him.] Duties of the second table only are here enjoined, because they are excellent evidences of true piety and pure religion. {#Jas 1:27}

And that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh.] Thy poor brother, who is of the same nature with thee, and is as capable of grace and glory as thyself. Learn to see Christ in thy poor petitioner, and thou wilt the sooner yield. {#Mt 25:34-40} Consider also what is said of him that "shutteth up his bowels of compassion" from his necessitous brother. {#1Jo 3:17}

{a} Scultet. Annal.

Ver. 8. Then shall thy light break forth as the morning.] He saith not "shall appear," but "shall break forth," ut velocitatem et copiam dantis exprimeret, saith Chrysostom, that he might express the swiftness and bountifulness of God the giver of it.

And thy health shall spring forth speedily.] "The Sun of righteousness shall arise unto thee with healing under his wings."

{#Mal 4:2} {See Trapp on "Mal 4:2"}

And thy righteousness shall go before thee.] Thou shalt have the comfort and credit of thy bounty and charity, which is oft called "righteousness," as in #Ps 112:9 Da 4:24 Ac 10:35.

And the glory of the Lord shall be thy rereward,] i.e., The glorious Jehovah shall see to thy safety. See #Ps 27:10. {See Trapp on "Pr 27:10"} See also #Isa 52:12.

Ver. 9. Then shalt thou call, and the Lord shall answer.] Thou shalt have the royalty of his ear, easy access to, and all best success at, the throne of grace; no such cause to complain, as thou didst, {#Isa 58:3} that thy prayers were lost.

If thou take away from the midst of thee.] E meditullio tui, from thy very heart, by an inward reformation; si animo, opere, et sermone aversaberis inhumanitatem, {a} if thou heartily hate cruelty and act accordingly.

The yoke.] As #Isa 58:6.

The putting forth of the finger.] The finger of that wicked fist, {#Isa 58:4} or that finger wherewith thou threatenest thy servants, or pointest at others in scorn or disdain, as the proud Pharisee seemeth to have done at the poor publican, when he said, I am not as that fellow. {#Lu 18:11}

And speaking vanity.] Or, Violence, as the Chaldee here talk concerning the wringing and wronging of others. All this must be done, or else no hope that God will hear prayers; look to it. See #Ps 66:18. {See Trapp on "Ps 66:18"}

{a} Jun

Ver. 10. And if thou draw out thy soul {a} to the hungry.] Not thy sheaf only; relieving the necessitous out of deep commiseration, and couldst part with thy very life also for them, if duly called thereunto. Compassion excelleth alms and outward works of mercy; for when one giveth an alms, he giveth something without himself; but by compassion we relieve another by somewhat within and from ourselves.

And satisfy.] Not save him alive only by a scant allowance, -prisoners pittance.

Then shall thy light arise in obscurity.] Thou shalt abound with blessings of all sorts. See my Commonplace of Alms.

And thy darkness be as the noontday.] In agone et horrore morris erit tibi consolatio et spes salutis ac lucis. God will make thy bed in all thy sickness, and comfort thee at the hour of death.

{a} Ex animo, liberaliter, hilariterque

Ver. 11. And the Lord shall guide thee.] Or, Lead thee, as thou ledest the harbourless outcast into thine house. {#Isa 58:7}

And satisfy thy soul in drought.] As thou didst satisfy the poor hungry man's soul. {#Isa 58:10} See #Ps 33:19 Pr 28:27. {See Trapp on "Ps 33:19"} {See Trapp on "Pr 28:27"}

And make fat thy bones,] i.e., Cheer up thy heart, for a sorrowful spirit drieth up the bones. {#Pr 17:22} The Vulgate translation hath it, He will deliver or set free thy bones, scil., from bands and fetters, as thou hadst loosed or set free thy poor brethren from their bands and yokes. {#Isa 58:6}

And thou shalt be like a watered garden.] "Filled with the fruits of righteousness," and with spiritual consolations, "unspeakable and glorious joys."

And like a spring of water, whose waters fall not.] Similitudines et allegoriae magnam habent gratiam. Who would not now turn spiritual purchaser?

Ver. 12. And they that shall be of thee.] Thy posterity, that have taken their being and beginning from thee.

Shall build the old waste places.] Heb., The wastes of antiquity, i.e., the ruinous places of Jerusalem. The apostles, also, as master builders, and others as builders together with them, have a happy hand in rearing the fair fabric of the new man, that "hidden man of the heart." See #Eph 2:20-22.

And thou shalt be called, The repairer of the breach.] The father of thy country, the repairer of peace, the restorer of lost liberty, &c. Such honour had Nehemiah of old; Hunniades of late, who, having overthrown Mesites, the Turkish general, at his return into the camp a wonderful number of the poor captives came, and falling at his feet and kissing them, gave God thanks for their deliverance by him; some called him the father, some the defender of his country; the soldiers, their invincible general; the captives, their deliverer; the women, their protector; the young men and children, their most loving father. He again, with tears standing in his eyes, courteously embraced them, rejoicing at the public good; and himself giving most hearty thanks to God, commanded the like to be done in all the churches of that province, &c. {a} On the contrary, our Henry III, for his ill managing of matters, was called Regni dilapidator, destroyer of the kingdom; and Richard III, the calamity of his country.

{a} Turkish History, 269.

Ver. 13. If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath.] If thou abstain from journeys and all secular businesses as much as may be. {#Eze 22:26} Otherwise God will sue thee upon an action of waste; and the superstitious Jew will rise up and condemn thee, who if in his journey he be overtaken by the Sabbath he must stay, though in the midst of a field or wood, though in danger of thieves, storms, or hunger, he may not budge.

From doing thy pleasure on mine holy day.] Plutarch thought Sabbath was from Sabbos a name of Bacchus, that signifieth to live jocundly and jovially. The Sabbath that many pleasure mongers keep may well have such a derivation, and their Dies dominicus the Lord's day, be called Dies daemoniaeus; the Devil's day, for they make it as Bacchus' orgies rather than God's holy solemnity, as doing thereon things no day lawful, but then most abominable.

And call the Sabbath a delight.] Counting it so, and making it so. The Jews call it Desiderium dierum, the desirable day. They meet it with these words, Veni sponsa mea, Come, my spouse. Of old, they blessed God for it, {#Ne 9:14} and gave the whole week the denomination from it; {#Lu 18:12} they strictly and spiritually kept it: but now they think the Sabbath is not sufficiently observed except they eat and drink largely, and give themselves to other sensual delights. {a} After dinner, the most of their discourse is about their usuary, and other worldly businesses, &c. They pray indeed, but it is that Elias would hasten his coming, even the next Sabbath if he please, that he might give them notice of the Messiah's coming, &c. Let us take heed of being weary of the Sabbath, and wishing it over, as they did. {#Am 8:5 Mal 1:12,13} Walk into God's garden, taste how good the Lord is in his ordinances, feel a continual increase of sweetness in the pleasure and dainties of holy duties, whereof we have such variety that we cannot easily be sated: so little need is there that we should, with the Rabbis, expound this delight in the text, of dainty and delightful meats to be eaten on this day.

The holy of the Lord, honourable.] And therefore "honourable" because "holy"; as it is said also of the "Lord of the Sabbath"—"Holy and reverend is his name." {#Ps 111:9} "A holy convocation" the Sabbath is called. {#Le 23:3} See #Le 19:30 26:2. Let us sanctify this holy rest, else it will degenerate into idleness, which is a sin any day (one of Sodom's sins), but on the Lord's day a double sin. Better not do our own work any day, than not God's work on his day. Debet tutus dies festivus a Christiano expendi operibus sanctis, saith Rob. Groshead, Bishop of Lincoln: {b} The whole Sabbath should be spent in holy duties. Debemus die Dominico solummodo spiritualibus gaudiis repleri; we should be in the Spirit on the Lord's day, and be filled with spiritual delights only, saith the Council of Paris, held A.D. 829. Christ hath for this purpose made us a "holy nation, and a kingdom of priests" {#Ex 19:6}—that is, holy and honourable; and God hath sanctified it for a day of blessing to those that sanctify it. {#Ex 20:11 Eze 20:12} He hath called it "an everlasting covenant" by way of eminence, {#Ex 31:16} as if nothing of God's covenant were kept if this were not kept holy.

Not doing thine own ways.] Ea tantum facias quae ad animae salutem pertinent, saith Jerome, Those things only are then to be done that pertain to thy soul's health—works of piety, of charity, and of necessity, none else. Tantum divinis cultibus serviamus, saith Augustine. What meant, then, that good King Edward VI—and where were those that should have better instructed him, Cranmer, Ridley, &c.—to deliver to his council these articles following:—That upon Sundays they intend public affairs of the realm, despatch answers to letters for good order of the state, and make full despatches of all things concluded in the week before; provided that they be present at common prayer, &c. {c}

Nor speaking thine own words.] These words of vanity or vexation, {#Isa 58:9} but words of wisdom and sobriety suitable to the holiness of the day.

{a} Buxt., Synog.

{b} In Decalog. praec. 3.

{c} Life of Edward VI. by Sir J. Heywood.

Ver. 14. Then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord.] Find such inexplicable sweetness in communion with God, use of his heart ravishing ordinances, meditation on his word and works, especially that of our redemption, as far far exceedeth all the dirty delights of profane sensualists and Sabbath breakers. {#Job 27:10 Pr 14:10}

And I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth.] Yea, upon the heights of heaven, where thou shalt keep an everlasting Sabbath, in which all Sabbaths meet, and whereof there is no evening; -ανεσπερος ημερα.

And feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father,] i.e., With heavenly manna, such food as eye hath not seen, ear heard, or mouth of natural man ever tasted.

For the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.] The Lord, cuius ego sum os et organon, will certainly do all this; you may build upon it.

Chapter 59

Ver. 1. Behold, the Lord's hand is not shortened.] That their fasts were not regarded, their Sabbath keeping rewarded, {#Isa 58:3,14} their prayers answered, {#Isa 59:1,2} according to expectation, the fault is not at all in God, saith the prophet, as if he were now grown old, impotent, deafish, or bison, as they were apt to conceit it, but merely in themselves, as appeareth by the following catalogue of sins, which he therefore also, in his own and their names, confesseth to God, and assigneth for the cause of their so long lasting calamity.

Ver. 2. But your iniquities have severed,] i.e., Have set you at a very great distance (hinted also by the redundancy of speech that is here in the original), or rather defiance. {#Ps 5:5 Pr 15:29 29:13} Nothing intricates our actions more than our sins, which do likewise ensnare our souls, while they are as a wall of separation between God and us, {#Eze 43:8} and as an interstitium, such as is the firmament that divideth the upper and the lower waters. {#Ge 1:6}

And your sins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear.] Crudelem modicum intemperans aeger facit. {a} Sin is as a devil in the air, saith one, to hinder our prayers; turning from sin will charm the devil, and make him fall from heaven.

{a} Mimus.

Ver. 3. For your hands are defiled with blood.] The prophet well knew that these perverse Jews would stand upon their justification, and put God to his proofs, as their posterity also did, {#Jer 2:35} catalogum ergo bene longum textit; therefore he here brings in a long bead roll of their sins, wherein their hands, lips, heart, feet, &c., were found guilty of high offence. See #Isa 1:15.

Your lips have spoken lies.] Those very "lips" of yours that have uttered prayers, have muttered lies. See #Jas 3:10.

And your tongue hath muttered perverseness.] How this was done, none hath better set forth than the prophet Jeremiah {#Jer 9:3-8}
Ver. 4. None calleth for justice.] Mindeth the judges of their duty, but rather connive, colloque, partake, &c. The Chaldee hath it, 'There is none that delivereth the poor and needy.'

They trust in vanity.] As those did; {#Jer 7:4} making a bridge of their own shadows, they fall into the brook.

They conceive mischief, &c.] This is taken out of #Ps 7:14 Job 15:35; {See Trapp on "Ps 7:14"} {See Trapp on "Job 15:35"} Heb., Going great with grievance, and bringing forth vexation.

Ver. 5. They hatch cockatrice' eggs, / i.e., Poisonous and pernicious designs; there are that interpret it of false doctrines, as destructive to men's souls, as cockatrice' eggs eaten, or but broken, would be to their bodies. As the bird that sitteth on the serpent's eggs, by breaking and hatching them, bringeth forth a perilous brood to her own destruction, so here.

And weave the spider's web.] Good for nothing but to catch flies. The natural man is ever either weaving spider's webs, which are futiles and fragiles, or hatching cockatrice' eggs. Vanity or villany is his whole study and practice.

Ver. 6. Their webs shall not become garments.] "Garments" quasi gardments; one use of them being to guard our bodies from the injury of wind and weather. Wicked devices and false doctrines profit not those that are therein occupied. {as #Heb 13:9} In the day of God's wrath, they will prove but as a coat of cobweb.

Their works are works of iniquity.] Here ministers may learn roundly to reprove the sins of the people.

Ver. 7. Their feet run to evil, &c.] They trot apace toward hell; they take long strides, as if they feared lest hell should be full before they come thither.

And they make haste to shed innocent blood.] This is taken from #Pr 1:16, and fitly applied by St Paul to the whole race of mankind, {#Ro 3:15} since by nature there is never a better of us; we are all in a pickle: Ecce hic telas arantarum et ova aspidum explicat. {a}

Wasting and destruction are in their paths.] A metaphor from torrents or tempests; or from a pestilence that sweepeth all, as now it doth at Genoa, and as it did not long since at Naples.

{a} A Lapide.

Ver. 8. The way of peace they know not.] Like salamanders, they love to live in the fire of contention, to swim against the stream with the trout, to sow sedition, as the devil, &c.

Shall not know peace.] Shall not know what it meaneth.

Ver. 9. Therefore is judgment far from us.] Here followeth the complaint of the godly party, together with their confession; this they knew well to be the readiest way to get off with comfort. God, say they here, hath neither avenged us on our enemies, nor showed us favour; he letteth our foes deal with us as we have dealt one with another.

We wait for light, but behold obscurity.] We promised ourselves a better estate, but 'the matter mendeth with us,' quoth that martyr, 'as sour ale doth in summer.'

Ver. 10. We grope for the wall like the blind.] We are altogether to seek, utterly destitute of good counsel or advice; neither can we enjoy those comforts that we have.

We are in desolate places as dead men.] As "free among the dead," free of that company. {#Ps 88:5} Leo Judae rendereth it, We are in our graves as dead carcasses; Piscator thus, In fatness (that is, in the abundance of all things) we are as dead men.

Ver. 11. We roar all like bears.] Fremimus, ac gemimus. The bear, when hurt or robbed, runs into his den and roareth; doves, when bereft of their mates, sit solitary and groan; so do we, indesinenter et intime gemimus, make pitiful moan; and that is all we can do.

Ver. 12. For our transgressions are multiplied before thee.] When complaints end in confessions, it is right—the medicine worketh kindly. Some furious fools have brutish and fell affections, full of rage; when in pain or grief, they fly upon God and man, and all that comes next hand, hoping to ease themselves, not by confession or reformation, but by revenge.

And our sins testify against us.] ^{a} Sin put a sting into their cresses, and hence it was they lay so heavy. This brought such roarings and groanings upon them, and that also when salvation was looked for.

For our transgressions are with us.] They lie like a load of lead upon our consciences, where they are yet unpardoned.

And as for our iniquities, we know them.] Our consciences are burdened with them, and we feel the terrors of God in our souls. Conscientia nihil aliud est quam cordis scientia; Conscience is the reflection of the soul upon itself. See #1Co 4:4. So here, "As for our iniquities, we know them"—namely, by a second act of the understanding, whereby, after we think or know a thing, we think what we think, and know what we know, and this is properly the action of conscience.

^{a} Heb., Peccatum respondit—i.e., Peccatorum unumquodque.

Ver. 13. In transgressing and lying against the Lord.] Or, Dealing disloyally with him. This is to lay on load, to be full in the mouth, to enter into particulars, and to confess them all with utmost aggravation.

Ver. 14. And judgment is turned away backward.] Nihil amplius ex aequo et bono agitur; all is out of order, causes are carried the contrary way.

Truth is fallen in the streets.] When the disputation at Oxford with Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer, martyrs, was finished, Weston, the prolocutor, triumphed with Vicit veritas, whereas he should rather have said, Vicit potestas -not truth, but force, hath carried it. In the convocation at Paul's about the same time, when Philpot and other good men argued for the truth against the Popish prelates, it was said that those distressed ministers had the Word for them, but the prelates had the sword on their side, and would therefore get the better. {a}

{a} Acts and Mon., 1300.

Ver. 15. Yea, truth faileth.] See #Isa 59:13.

And he that departeth from evil maketh himself a prey.] Praedae pater; is like to suffer for his singularity and preciseness. The luxurious Ephesians once made this decree, Ουδεις ημων ονηιστος εστω, Let there be never a sober man allowed to live among us. The Athenians were wont to cast good men out of their commonwealth by an ostracism. Thraseaes was commanded by Nero to die, because he was a better man than was fit to live in so loose an age. Josephus saith, that before the last destruction of Jerusalem, religion was not only a matter of form, but of scorn. Bede reporteth of the ancient Britons, immediately before their destruction by the Saxons, that they were come to that height of wickedness as to cast odium in religionis professores tanquam in adversarios, hatred upon professors of religion, looking upon them as their adversaries.

Ver. 16. And wondered.] The Vulgate hath it, Aporiatus est.

That there was no intercessor.] No interposer {as #Job 36:31} that would stickle for truth and right, as did Nehemiah, Athanasius, Luther, &c.

Therefore his arm brought salvation...and his righteousness,] i.e., Christ, the power of God, and the wisdom of God {a} {#1Co 1:24,30}

{a} Jun.

Ver. 17. For he put on righteousness as a breastplate,] i.e., Christ did; and so must every Christian, {#Eph 6:14} where the apostle Paul soundeth the alarm, and describeth his weapons as here, defensive and offensive, alluding likely to this text.

Ver. 18. Fury to his adversaries,] viz., The devil and his agents, his people's adversaries.

Ver. 19. So shall they fear the name of the Lord.] Christ shall get him a great name, as a renowned conqueror.

When the enemy shall come in like a flood.] When they shall pour out a deluge of evils upon the Church. {#Re 12:15}

The Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him,] i.e., Against strong temptations, corruptions, persecutions. The motto shall be, as once Christus nobiscum: state. stand with our Christ.

Ver. 20. And the Redeemer.] Shall come to the Israel of God.

That turn from transgression.] See #Ro 11:26. {See Trapp on "Ro 11:26"}

Ver. 21. My Spirit which is upon thee, and my words.] The efficacy of the Word is by the Spirit, the expression of the Spirit by the Word; both are here promised to the Church as her true goods. {#Isa 30:20,21 Job 14:16,17} It is with the Word and Spirit as with the veins and arteries in the body; as the veins carry the blood, so the arteries carry the spirits to quicken the blood.

Chapter 60

Ver. 1. Arise.] Thou, O my Church, that now liest in pulvere vastitatis, as a forlorn captive, rouse up thyself, change both thy countenance and condition; Tanquam libera ac laeta ad novum nuncium; up, and look up, I have joyful tidings for thee.

For thy light is come.] Christ, who is $\alpha\tau\omicron\phi\omega\varsigma$ —light essential. {#Joh 12:46}

And, the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee.] The glorious gospel of grace. {#2Co 3:7 4:4}

Ver. 2. For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth.] As once it did Egypt, {#Ex 10:21} when there was light in the land of Goshen. So is there in the Church, when all the world besides lieth buried in a fog of ignorance and a bog of wickedness. Rhodes is always located in the sun. {a} The separation of the saints in light is a wonderful separation. {#Ex 33:16}

But the Lord shall arise upon thee.] The Lord Christ, who is "the true light," {#Joh 1:9} "the light of the world," {#Joh 8:12} "the Sun of righteousness." {#Mal 4:2} {See Trapp on "Mal 4:2"}

{a} Semper in sole sita est Rhodos.

Ver. 3. And the Gentiles shall come to thy light.] The apostles, those shining luminaries, were Christ's Δαδουχοι, holding forth the light of life to all people, as Simeon said. {#Lu 2:34,35} And we may well say, as our Saviour did, {#Lu 4:21} This day is this Scripture fulfilled in our ears, and made good to our hearts, praised be his holy name throughout all eternity.

And kings to the brightness of thy rising.] As did our King Lucius, who is reckoned to be the first Christian king; our Constantine, the first Christian emperor; our Edward VI, the first reforming prince, and many others. Facit hoc contra Anabaptistas, qui exclusos putant reges ab ecclesia. {a}

{a} Scultet.

Ver. 4. Lift up thine eyes.] As from a watchtower; for so Zion signifieth.

All they gather themselves together, &c.] See #Isa 49:18.

Thy daughters shall be nursed at thy side.] Like sucking children, they shall suck, and be satisfied. {#Isa 66:11} The Vulgate version here hath surgent for sugent; as it hath unus de similibus for unus e millibus {#Job 33:23} and evertit for everrit {#Lu 15:8} with other such gross mistakes not a few.

Ver. 5. Then thou shalt see and flow together.] Or, Thou shalt break forth as a river; or, Thou shalt shine. {a}

And thy heart shall fear.] At first, at least, to see such a confluence of people unto thee.

And be enlarged.] With joy, upon better consideration.

Because the abundance of the sea,] i.e., The multitude of the islanders, and such as dwell by the sea side, which are noted for the worst of men, whence the proverb, Maritimi mores. Such are we Britons.

Ver. 6. The multitude of camels shall cover thee,] i.e., Of such peoples as usually ride upon camels, viz., the Arabians and the adjacent countries; these shall come flocking and flowing to the Church with their precious and pleasant riches.

The dromedaries.] A lesser and lower kind of camels, commended for their swiftness. {#Jer 2:23} We call slow people dromedaries by antiphrasis, and for this, that they can travel four days together without water. Bajazet, beaten by Tamerlane, fled for his life, and might have escaped, had he not stayed to water his mare by the way, which thereupon went the more slowly, and was overtaken by the Tartars.

They shall bring gold and incense.] This the ancients interpret as those wise men from the east, {#Mt 2:11} which was indeed a small essay of this prophecy. But why should the Papists call them the three kings of Cullen?

And they shall shew forth the praises of the Lord.] This is more than all their rich gifts. A thankful {a} man is worth his weight in the gold of Ophir.

{a} Gratanti animo.

Ver. 7. All the flocks of Kedar,] i.e., The Kedarenes and Nebateans with their flocks, whereof they had abundance; and they now had hearts to "honour the Lord with their substance, and with the best of their increase." See #Isa 23:17,18.

Ver. 8. Who are these that fly as a cloud?] Which flieth more swiftly than any bird, and covereth the sky far and near. Deus bone, quam multi catervatim accurrunt! saith the Church here; wonderful! what trooping and treading upon the heels one of another is here! {a}

And as the doves to their windows.] To their columbaries, whereinto they scour and rush gregatim, et mira pernecitate, especially if they have young ones there, or else are driven by some hawk or tempest. {b} God's people are free hearted; {#Ps 110:3} they serve the Lord with cheerfulness. {#Ps 100:2} Amor enim alas addit: and well might Plato descant upon the word, Ον θνητοι μεν Ερωτα, Αθανατοι δε περωτα καλουσι, whom men call love, the immortal call winged.

{a} Confertis agminibus.

Ver. 9. Surely the isles shall wait for me.] They shall come off freely, et non quasi angariati ad auditum verbi et sacramentorum usum. And this is taken to be God's answer, {a} declaring the cause of that wonderful concourse. {#Isa 60:8}

And the ships of Tarshish first,] i.e., With the first, or, In the beginnings, as the Vulgate hath it. The islands were converted as soon as any, as this of Britain is said to have been by Joseph of Arimathea. Omnium provinciarum prima Britannia publicitus Christi nomen reeepit, saith Sabellicus, {b} Of all proviucues, Britain first embraced the faith of Christ. From the which also, as we first of all the ten kingdoms {#Re 17:7,12} revolted to the Pope, so we were the first that shook off that yoke; our Henry VIII being the first that broke the neck of the Pope's usurped authority.

Because he hath glorified thee.] By his gracious presence, and the sanctification of his Spirit by the Word.

{a} Huic admirationi Messias ipse respondet.

{b} Ennead. 7, lib. v.

Ver. 10. And the sons of strangers shall build up thy walls.] By preaching and writing for the truth, as did many famous Greek and Latin doctors; and since them, not a few of all nations.

And their kings shall minister unto thee.] As did Cyrus and Darius; but especially Constantine the Great (who cared not what he bestowed upon the Church, and was therefore, in a jeer, by the heathens called Pupillus, as if he needed a guardian to order his expenses), Valentinian, Theodosius, Honorius, Justinian. Our Edward VI, ^{a} besides the much good he did at home, sent at one time five thousand pounds to relieve Protestants beyond seas. Queen Elizabeth sent both men and means in abundance to the relief of the French and Hollanders.

^{a} His Life, by Sir John Heywood, p. 115.

Ver. 11. Therefore shall thy gates be open continually.] Such shall be thy spiritual security, and so great the resort unto thee

And that their kings may be brought.] Led captive, saith the Chaldee, sc., to the obedience of faith, ^{as #Ps 149:8} or, Led in state; so others.

Ver. 12. For the nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish.] They are utterly out then, who hold that men may be saved in what religion soever, so be it they lead an honest life. And Pope Julius III is justly accused of sacrilege for stamping money with his own image and this inscription, "The nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish."

Ver. 13. The glory of Lebanon.] The best cedars there, in allusion to the building of the material temple by Solomon, and afterwards by Ezra; q.d., Whatsoever is good in the world, either in understanding, virtue, or doctrine, shall be sanctified and employed for the building up of the Church.

The fir tree, the pine tree, and the box tree.] Which from those that would, but cannot, bring better, shall be well accepted.

And I will make the place of my feet glorious,] ie., My Church, when at lowest, and the members thereof, even the meanest of them. Hence also Christ's name, "King of kings and Lord of lords," is written "on his thigh," i.e., on his lower parts. ^{#Re 19:16}

Ver. 14. The sons also of them that afflicted thee.] When once they shall return and discern between the righteous and the wicked, ^{as #Mal 3:18} there shall be a strange alteration wrought in them, as was in Paul, Cyprian, Vergerius, Latimer, and others.

Shall bow themselves at the soles of thy feet.] Such was the custom of the Easterlings; and this, the Popish writers say, is fulfilled in their vicegod, as we may, in the worst sense, best call him. The first that held forth his feet to be kissed was Dioclesian the Tyrant. {a}

{a} Eutrop.

Ver. 15. Whereas thou hast been forsaken and hated.] The primitive Christians suffered Odio humani generis, saith Tacitus, {a} through the general hatred conceived against them; and non tam crimen quam nomen puniebatur, saith another, their very name was odious.

I will make thee an eternal excellency.] Here in part, but hereafter in all perfection. God so favoured the first orthodox Christian emperors, ut cum illorum pietate, Dei liberalitas certare videretur, That God's liberality might seem to strive with their piety.

{a} Lib. xv.

Ver. 16. Thou shalt also suck the milk of the Gentiles.] Satiaberis divitiis populorum, saith the Chaldee. Thou shalt be satisfied with the riches of the peoples.

And shalt suck the breast of kings, / i.e., With kingly dainties and delicacies, saith Zanchez after the Rabbis.

Ver. 17. For brass I will bring gold, / i.e., I will beautify my Church with far greater gifts of my Spirit than now. The New Jerusalem (which signifieth, say some, the state of the Church in this world), when it shall be refined to the utmost, is all of gold, and these golden times are yet to come.

Thine exactors.] Or, Overseers; thy bishops, say the Septuagint.

Ver. 18. Violence shall no more be heard in thy land.] The full accomplishment of this is not to be expected here.

But thou shalt call thy walls Salvation, / sc., When thou hast got the great gulf {#Lu 16:26} between thee and thine enemies.

And thy gates Praise.] God will continually come to thee with new benefits, and thou shalt go forth to meet him with thanksgiving. {#Ps 89:16}

Ver. 19. The sun shall be no more.] God shall be thy sun and shield, thy solace and safety. {#Ps 84:11} The light of his loving countenance shall be lifted up upon thee, and this shall be better to thee than all outward comforts.

Ver. 20. Thy sun shall no more go down.] Thy joy shall no man take from thee; thou shalt have a habitual cheerfulness.

Ver. 21. Thy people also shall be all righteous.] Professional saints at least they shall all be, -saints by calling; some of them also shall be really righteous and religious, justified by the merit, and sanctified by the Spirit of Christ. And these together make up a true visible Church, such as was that of Corinth and of Sardis. A mixture there will be to the world's end.

They shall inherit the land for ever.] Those that are righteous indeed, are heirs of the world together with faithful Abraham. The meek shall inherit the earth; and as for the poor in spirit, theirs is the kingdom of heaven. {#Mt 5:3,5}

The branch of my planting.] So may some be that yet bear no fruit. {#Joh 15:2}

The work of my hands.] By regeneration. {#Eph 2:10} And so are such as are sanctified by habitual infusion, and not by baptismal profession only. In both sorts God is glorified.

Ver. 22. A little one shall become a thousand.] Three thousand were added to the Church in one day, {#Ac 2:41} five thousand in another. {#Ac 4:4} Homo ille tricubitalis, as Chrysostom calleth Paul, that little man, and least of all the apostles, what great pains took he! how many churches planted he! how many thousand souls gained he to Christ! See what a circuit he set, and what a deal of work he despatched at one bout. {#Ro 15:18-20} Here was minimus in mille, the least out of a thousand, as it is here. Think the like of the rest of the apostles, as also of Luther, Melancthon, Ferullus, &c. Mr Foxe telleth us that many were made to see the falsities of Popery by reading Chaucer; more by reading Erasmus's Colloquies.

I the Lord will hasten it in his time.] Heb., In its time—that is, in the time of the New Testament; but most completely and gloriously at the resurrection shall all these things that are foretold be accomplished.

Chapter 61

Ver. 1. The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me.] Christ had graciously promised to accomplish his people's happiness in its due time. {#Isa 60:22} Here he showeth how and when he will do it—viz., by himself, anointed and appointed by his heavenly Father to be "Messiah the Prince"; {#Da 9:25} "Christ the Lord"; {#Ac 4:26} Priest, prophet, and king of his Church; a Saviour ex professo, consecrated as the priests of old were, first with oil, and then with blood. So was he (1.) By the Holy Spirit, invisibly at the first instant of his conception, and visibly, at his baptism; (2.) By his own blood sprinkled upon him at his circumcision, but especially at his Passion, which was another baptism. {#Mt 20:23 Lu 12:50}

Because the Lord hath anointed me.] Prae, consortibus et pro consortibus {#Ps 46:7} "Above thy fellows," and also for thy fellows, as some render that text. See #Joh 1:33 3:34 Lu 4:18 Ac 10:38 Heb 1:8 Ps 105:15 2Co 1:21,22 1Jo 2:20,27. "Only unto every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gifts of Christ"; {#Eph 4:7} "but God gave not the Spirit unto him by measure," {#Joh 3:34} he had it in an abundant and transcendent manner, "good measure, pressed down, shaken together, and running over," even as much as his human nature was capable of. Let the saints love him for this, {#So 1:2} and labour to be more and more made partakers of his holiness, for "of his fulness we all receive grace for grace"; {#Joh 1:16} a perfection in some sort answerable to Christ's own perfection. There are those who observe in this text, and not amiss, the mystery of the Holy Trinity—viz., God the Father anointing his Son Christ with the Holy Ghost. See the like at Christ's baptism. {#Mt 3:16} See Trapp on "Mt 3:16"}

To preach good tidings unto the meek.] "To preach." This referreth to Christ's prophetic office; as doth "binding up the broken hearted" to his priestly, and "proclaiming liberty to the captives," to his kingly office. To these three offices as God he was consecrated—set apart for a mediator; {as #Ex 30:30} and as man he was qualified, as before. That which Christ came to preach was good tidings, goodspel or gospel, as we call it, the best news that ever came into the world. {#Lu 2:10} This he came and preached not in his own person only, but by his prophets and apostles, {#Eph 2:17} in whom he spake, {#2Co 13:3} and before all whom himself preached the first gospel to our first parents, {#Ge 3:15} even the gospel of grace.

Unto the meek.] Or, Lowly; for humility and meekness are sorores collectaneae, twin sisters. There are those poor that are gospelised—viz., the poor in spirit, sensible of their utter indigence and nothingness; {#Mt 5:3} whereby also our Saviour proveth himself to John's disciples, sent unto him for the purpose, to be the true Messiah foreshown by Isaiah, and foreshadowed in him. {#Mt 11:5 Lu 7:22}

He hath sent me to bind up the broken hearted.] This Christ doth as a fit high priest, sensible of our miseries. {#Heb 4:15} He hath manum medicare, hand of healing, he is the true Samaritan; not the physician only, but the surgeon of his people, cataplasmans et obligans, {a} plastering and binding up their wounds given them by the devil, that wicked thief, then when the priest and the Levites—the law—had passed them by, and yielded them no help at all.

The broken hearted.] Broken with the sense of sin and fear of wrath; so broken as if all their bones were rattling within their skin. This was David's case, {#Ps 51:8} and this he pleads, as one in case and capacity for mercy. {#Ps 51:17} He knew well enough that God poured not the oil of his mercy, save only into broken vessels; for whole vessels are full vessels, and so this precious liquor would run over, and be spilt upon the ground.

To proclaim liberty to the captives.] Liberty from the tyranny of sin, and terror of hell. This Christ doth as a king, with great power. {#Joh 8:32,34,36 Ro 6:17,18 Col 1:13 2Ti 2:26}

And the opening of the prison,] i.e., Of hell, called here koach from lakach, to receive, because it is capacious, and still taking in more company; sic infernus dicitur ab inferendo, ut aliqui volunt.

{a} Pangit et ungit ut sanet.

Ver. 2. To proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord.] The new and true jubilee, or year of releasement, called here in the Hebrew the year of good will, like as the elect are called the men of God's good will. {#Lu 2:14} This year is now, {#2Co 6:2} and the present now must be embraced and improved, since God is but a while with men in the opportunities of grace; which opportunities are headlong, and, once past, irrecoverable.

And the day of vengeance of our God.] Tribulation to them that trouble his people. {#2Th 1:6,7} Gog and Magog shall down in that day; all humans be hanged up at that royal feast, at the last day especially. {#Lu 19:27}

To comfort all that mourn.] This Christ did both by word and deed, and this must all his ministers do: "Comfort the feeble-minded"; {#1Th 5:14} not burdening men's consciences with human traditions and merit of works. Popery is a doctrine of desperation.

Ver. 3. To appoint unto them that mourn in Zion.] {a} Here is showed how it is that Christ comforteth his people, sc., by clearing up their consciences from the stain and sting of sin, and by healing their natures, causing them to grow in grace as trees of righteousness, well rooted and well fruited.

To appoint unto them,] sc., Comfort. {as #Isa 61:2}

To give unto them beauty for ashes.] {b} Cidarim pro cinere, lusum pro luctu, risum pro rictu, &c., to turn all their sighing into singing, all their musing into music, all their sadness into gladness, all their tears into triumphs. But then those that would rejoice with "joy unspeakable," must stir up sighs that are unutterable, for even Christ himself favos post fella gustavit, tasted first of the sour, and then of the sweet.

That they may be culled.] Have the comfort and the credit of growing Christians, full of goodness, and filled with all knowledge, able also to admonish one another, as were those Romans, {#Ro 15:14} to their eternal commendation. See #Joh 15:5-8 Php 1:11.

That he might be glorified.] As indeed he is by one gracious action performed by a fruitful Christian, more than by all his works of creation and providence.

{a} Apud Hebraeos ornatus est in verbis. among the Hebrews, it was furnished in the words, יְקַנְּנוּ and וְהָיָה. (Original had final ך not ך for second Hebrew word. Editor.)

{b} רָפָא for רָפָא.

Ver. 4. And they shall build the old wastes.] Desolationes saeculi, the Gentiles that have long lain forlorn and desolate, as ruined houses; or the wild waste, shall, by the apostles and other doctors of the Church, be brought to Christ, and built up in holiness.

And they shall repair.] The same thing is four different times said over for better assurance, and to set forth the miracle.

Ver. 5. And strangers shall stand and feed your flocks,] i.e., Shall be very well pleased to serve you, so they may serve the true God with you: yea, being proselyted, they shall become eminent pastors and teachers of the gospel; such as were Justin Martyr, Cyprian, Augustine, &c.

Shall be your ploughmen.] See #1Co 3:9.

Ver. 6. But ye shall be named the Priests of the Lord.] Or, Princes of the Lord, as the word is used #2Sa 8:18. See #Ex 19:6 Re 1:6 1Pe 2:9 Ro 12:1 Heb 13:15.

Ye shall eat the riches of the Gentiles.] Ye shall have the double honour of countenance and maintenance.

Ver. 7. For your shame ye shall have double,] i.e., Plentiful reparation, double damages, as Job had. {#Isa 42:10,12}

And for confusion they shall rejoice.] Your grief shall be turned into joy, as our Saviour somewhere saith. See #Mt 5:12.

Everlasting joy shall be unto them.] They shall be everlastingly merry; not so much for the double honour done to themselves, as for the enlargement of God's kingdom, and the increase of his people, with whom they shall spiritually rejoice and reign for ever.

Ver. 8. For I the Lord love judgment, &c.] One rendereth it roundly thus, For I the Lord love right; I hate rapine by iniquity—q.d., therefore I will right and repay the wrongs and damages done to my people. Neither is it for any one to think to expiate his bad deeds by his good, to set off with God, and to make him amends. In the times of Popery, indeed, men were taught so to do; they were persuaded that God would accept rapinam in holocaustum, and they practised accordingly: as did the French fury Brunbildis, who founded many colleges; and our King Stephen, who built many monasteries: eo scilicet beneficio maleficia sun expiaverunt, saith mine author. How much better Selymus, the great Turk, who, being on his death bed moved by Pyrrhus, his favourite, to bestow the great wealth taken from the Persian merchants in various places of his empire upon some notable hospital for relief of the poor, refused so to do, and forthwith commanded restitution thereof to be made to the rightful owners. {a}

And I will direct their work in truth,] i.e., In sincerity: there shall be good actions and good aims; which two make a good Christian. Some render the words thus, And I will give them according to their work in truth; making "in truth" to be God's oath—q.d., truly and without all doubt, I will perform my promises: you have mine oath and my covenant both for your better assurance.

{a} Turkish History, fol. 567.

Ver. 9. And their seed shall be known among the Gentiles,] i.e., Shall be noted and noticed for eximious and exemplary: non aliunde noscibiles quam ex vitae emendatione, {a} as it was said of the primitive Christians, famous among the very heathens for their holy conversation. Pliny giveth a very honourable testimony of their innocence in his second epistle to Trajan. Those that stood with the Lamb had his Father's name in their foreheads; {#Re 14:1} they led convincing lives, so that their friends could never sufficiently praise them, nor their foes justly find any fault with them. Such a one was Luther, Bucer, Bradford, &c. Christians should shine as lamps, show forth the power of godliness in their whole practice, do more than others possibly can do, {#Mt 5:47} that all may see and say, "These are the seed that the Lord hath blessed," these are his darlings, his earthly angels. What a shame was it to those flagitious Jews that it should be asked, "Are these the people of Jehovah?" {#Eze 36:20} And the like to profligate professors, that Papists should say, Are these your new gospellers? For certain, said one, {a} when he had read Christ's sermon in the mount, either this is not gospel, or we are not right gospellers.

{b} Linaker.

Ver. 10. I will greatly rejoice in the Lord.] Me beatam! quare dolerem? Oh happy am I, said the Church; why should I be troubled at ought: why should not I over abounding exceedingly with joy who have such rich and precious promises? gaudium in re, gaudium in spe; gaudium de possessione, gaudium de promissione, &c. -i.e., Joy in hope and joy in hand, joy in possession and joy in reversion, &c., as Bernard sweetly. When once a soul enjoyeth God, it is quiet, as a bee that is got into her hive, or a bird got into her nest, or the dove into the ark; nay, it is triumphant, as "more than a conqueror."

For he hath clothed me with the garments of salvation.] By salvation and righteousness, Jerome here understandeth Christ our Saviour and Justifier, whom we are bidden also to put on. {#Ro 13:14 Ga 3:27 Re 12:1}

As a bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments.] Tanquam sponsum qui sacerdotem refert ornatu, so Piscator rendereth it: as a bridegroom bravely arrayed; like a priest, os humerosque Deo similis. {a}

And as a bride adorneth herself with jewels.] Mundo suo, With her ornaments, habiliments. Heb., Implements. The Church is here compared to a bridegroom for her strength and constancy, saith Cyril; and again, to a bride for her fruitfulness, beauty, and glory, here begun, and hereafter to be perfected. There is in this verse a double elegance in the Hebrew that cannot be translated.

Ver. 11. For as the earth bringeth forth her bud.] Hic rursum loquitur Christus, saith Piscator: here Christ speaketh again, giving us to understand that piety is planted by God in the hearts of his people. We are God's husbandry, saith the apostle; see #Mr 3:26-28. The Church is Christ's garden. {#So 5:1} Howbeit it is with holy affections as with exotic noble plants; this country is not so kindly for them, being but a stepmother to them; therefore must they be much watered and cherished, &c. We have a gracious promise that our hearts shall be like watered gardens, {#Isa 58:11} and that if we quench not the Spirit, but quicken and cherish it, there shall flow out of our belly, that is, out of the bosom and bottom of our souls shall flow rivers of living water, {#Joh 7:38} better than those that watered the garden of Eden; so that we shall be filled with the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ unto the glory and praise of God. {#Php 1:11}

Ver. 1. For Zion's sake will I not hold my peace.] Habes hic orationem prophetae sanctissimam, saith Oecolampadius. Here we have the prophet's oration, yea, here we have the prophet's panegyric, to the Church, saith Hyperius, {a} by way of congratulation for her felicity and dignity in Christ, her head and husband; as also his resolution to be earnest and importunate with God and men for her deliverance and restitution. Terentius, that noble general under Valens the emperor, asked nothing but that the Church might be freed from Arians; and when the emperor tore his petition, he said that he would never ask anything for himself if he might not prevail for the Church.

Until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness.] Till Christ come in the flesh, if I should live so long; as long as I have any being howsoever, {#1Ti 6:14} and after that by my writings, which shall continue to the world's end.

Ver. 2. And the Gentiles shall see thy righteousness.] The prophet here very artificially turneth his speech to the Church herself, as if he would pronounce his panegyric in her presence; and presently celebrateth her dignity and happiness herein, that the Gentiles should worship her, and be joined unto her. Some read it, "And the Gentiles shall see thy righteous One,"—i. e., Christ, who came from the Jews, was preached to the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up to glory. {#1Ti 3:16}

And thou shalt be called by a new name,] viz., Hephzibah, i.e., My darling; and Beulah, i.e., A married woman. {#Isa 62:4} There are that by this new name will have to be understood the name of sons and daughters of the Almighty. {#Re 2:17 2Co 6:18} Others the name of the Church Catholic. And others, again, the honourable name of Christians, which yet is at this day in Italy and at Rome a name of reproach, and usually abused to signify a fool or a dolt, as Dr Fulk proveth out of their own authors. {a}

{a} Fulk, Rhem. Test. on Acts xi.

Ver. 3. And thou shalt be a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord.] Or, A glorious crown by the hand, the good hand, of the Lord upon thee. The saints are God's glory.; {#Isa 46:13} the house of his glory; {#Isa 60:7} a crown of glory and a royal diadem here: the throne of glory; {#Jer 14:21} the ornament of God; {#Eze 7:20} the beauty of his ornament, and that also set in majesty (ib.) Oh learn and labour to live up to such high preferment.

Ver. 4. But thou shalt be called Hephzibah,] i.e., My delight is in her; as if Christ should say to his Church, {as #Jud 14:3} Tu mihi sola places, {a} Thou art mine only joy. The Lord taketh pleasure in them that fear him. {#Ps 147:11} Let us reciprocate, {b} love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity; not only with a love of desire, {as #Ps 42:1,3} but also of delight and complacency, solacing ourselves in the fruition of him, {as #Ps 16:5,6} and of his people, these "excellent ones of the earth" who were David's Hephzibam, {#Isa 62:3} in whom was "all his delight."

{a} Ovid. De Arte Am.

Ver. 5. For as a young man marrieth a virgin, so shalt thy sons marry thee.] This translation (saith one who preferreth the Vulgate, 'The young man shall dwell with the virgin'), marreth the sense, since it is improper to say of sons that they shall marry their mother. But I say, that the Church never flourisheth more, than when the son marrieth the mother, and doth his utmost to beautify and amplify her. See #2Co 11:2.

And as the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee.] Communicating with our souls his sweetest favours in his ordinances, as in the bridal bed, and making us to be conceived with the fruits of righteousness to everlasting life. It is, therefore, a most unworthy thing, that men should go a whoring from under him, {#Ho 4:12} and seek to themselves among the creatures alias delicias et amasias, other sweethearts.

Ver. 6. I have set watchmen upon thy walls,] i.e., Angels, say some, who are called "watchers, "; {#Da 4:13,33} {See Trapp on "Da 4:13"} {See Trapp on "Da 4:33"} prophets and pastors, say others, who are as "watchmen upon the walls," to admonish thee by their preaching, and to preserve thee by their prayers to God. {#Isa 21:11 Eze 13:17 31:7}

Which shall never hold their peace.] Never but be either praying or preaching. {as #Ac 6:4 De 33:10} Augustine desired that death might find him aut precantem nut proedicantem. Of Paul's incessance, see #Ac 20:31 1Th 3:10.

Ye that make mention of the Lord.] Or, Ye that are the Lord's remembrancers, that jogged him as it were, and remind him of his people's necessities and miseries. The kings of Israel, Persia, and of other nations, had their Mazkirim, or remembrancers, to mind them of those matters that concerned the weal public, and to these he here alludeth. All the saints are such like officers, and must be active.

Keep not silence.] Be still sueing and soliciting.

Ver. 7. And give him no rest.] Heb., No silence; the same word as before, to quicken their diligence, and to set forth the necessity of the work. "Continue instant in prayer"; {#Ro 12:12} give not in, but persevere, without remission or intermission.

Till he establish, till he make Jerusalem a praise.] Till he send the Messiah, who may restore Zion, set up and illustrate his Church, &c. Such lawful petitions from honest hearts have unmiscarrying returns.

Ver. 8. The Lord hath sworn by his right hand,] i.e., By his almighty power, or, as Oecolampadius holdeth, by his Son, "by whom he made the world," and "upholdeth all things." {#Heb 1:2,3}

Surely, I will no more give thy corn to be meat for thine enemies.] Or, If I do, yet I will give you to "suffer with joy the spoiling of your goods, as knowing in yourselves that ye have in heaven a better and an enduring substance." {#Heb 10:34} Spiritual security and safety, from the devil and all the enemies of our souls, is also signified by this similitude of protection against corporal enemies and plunderers, saith Piscator.

Ver. 9. But they that have gathered it shall eat it.] A sufficiency of outward comforts they shall be sure of, together with righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost; so much, at least, as shall support their spirits. Mr Paul Bain {a} saith thus of himself, I thank God in Christ, sustentation I have, but suavities spiritual, I taste not any.

Shall drink it in the courts of my holiness.] He alludeth to their manner of feasting before the Lord, when they brought thank offerings; and the like is still done by us at the Eucharist, or Lord's Supper especially.

{a} Bain's Letters.

Ver. 10. Go through, go through the gates.] Thus the prophet bespeaketh the teachers and keepers of the Church, with great alacrity of spirit, and most ardent affection; being, as it were, in a spiritual rapture. That which he exhorteth them to do, is rightly and faithfully to teach the people; and next, to take out of the way stumblingblocks, {as #Isa 57:14} such as are heresies, soul offences, &c., to the scandal of the weak, and scorn of the wicked.

Lift up a standard for the people,] q.d., Certa et solida urania constituite; settle all things fast and firm, that all men may be sure of their way, and what they ought to follow. It was a sad complaint of holy Melanchthon, Quos fugiamus habemus: quos sequamur, non intelligimus; but this lasted not long with those first famous reformers, whom the Lord soon set in a course.

Ver. 11. Behold, thy salvation cometh,] i.e., Christ thy Saviour. {as #Lu 2:30}

Behold, his reward is with him.] See on #Isa 40:10. The three "beholds" in this verse should be well weighed.

And his work before him,] i.e., That which he worketh for us and in us, rewarding the work of his own free grace.

Ver. 12. And they shall call them the holy people.] Profane persons, therefore, and persecutors of holiness, are not to be reckoned among the people of the Lord. Are not all the Lord's people holy? said those rebels; but that helped them not.

And thou shalt be called, Sought out.] Or, Much set by, contrary to that of #Jer 30:17; "This is Zion that none seeketh after."

Chapter 63

Ver. 1. Who is this that cometh from Edom?] It had been said, in #Isa 62:11, "Behold, thy salvation (thy Saviour) cometh." Here, therefore, by an elegant hypotyposis, {a} the Sionidae, or saints, are brought in wondering at his coming in such a garb, and asking, Who is this? What gallant conqueror have we here? Edom, or Idumaea, signifieth red; Bozrah, (the chief city of Idumaea), a vintage. {compare #Isa 63:2} It may very well be also that this prophecy was uttered in vintage time, and therehence haply might grow the comparison here used. John the divine, representing to us Christ's coming to judgment, useth the same simile. {#Re 19:13} Some also of good note, do understand this prophecy of Christ's triumphing over all his and our enemies (the Romish Edomites especially), at the last day.

With dyed garments.] Heb., Leavened, i.e., drenched, {b} besmeared.

This that is glorious in his apparel.] Which is the more glorious, because laced or embroidered with the blood of his enemies.

Walking in the greatness of his strength.] Fortiter grassans, walking and stalking, going in state, gressu grallatorio, emperor like, so as Epaminondas marched before his army; which, when Agesilaus, king of Spartans beheld, he cried out, O virum magnificum! {c} O that is a gallant man! "Ye shall see the Son of man coming with great power!" saith Christ.

I that speak in righteousness.] Christ's answer, q.d., " Fear not, little flock"; this strange garb and gait of mine portendeth no hurt but good to you; to whom whatsoever I have faithfully promised, I will powerfully perform. As King of Zion, I will

“ Parcere subiectis et debellare superbos.”

At the last day also I will "come to be glorified in my saints, and to be admired in all them that believe." {#2Th 1:10} See #Re 19:11.

Mighty to save.] Suficiens ad salvandum, sive Magister ad salvandum, a Master to save. This those lepers had learned, and therefore cried, "Jesus, Master, have mercy on us." {#Lu 17:13}

{a} Vivid description of a scene, event, or situation, bringing it, as it were, before the eyes of the hearer or reader.

{b} Metaph. a massa conspersa.

{c} Plutarch. in Epam.

Ver. 2. Wherefore art thou red in thine apparel?] The wondering Church had proposed two questions in #Isa 63:1 -viz., Who that was? and why so bloodied? To the first she had an answer in few, but very full in #Isa 63:1. To the second, she here again presseth for an answer; and the rather because, candor magis quam cruor, clemency would better beseem a Saviour than cruelty. {a}

{a} Augustine.

Ver. 3. I have trodden the winepress alone.] I, the sole and all-sufficient Saviour of my Church, have executed God's just vengeance upon all her enemies, spiritual and corporal; {compare #La 1:15 Re 14:19,20 19:15} and this with as much ease as men tread grapes in a winepress.

And of the people there was none with me.] Christ maketh use of men for the beating down of Satan's strongholds; but the power whereby it is done is from Christ alone. {#2Co 10:4,5 4:7} Papists, who will needs share with Christ and make him but a half Saviour, have no share in his salvation.

For I will tread them in mine anger.] I have already done it; and I will much more at that great "day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God." {#Ro 2:5} See #Re 19:20,21.

And their blood shall be sprinkled.] Or, Was sprinkled. Their blood; not his own. The Fathers, therefore, and others who interpret this text of Christ's passion, were mistaken. There is one among the rest who thus descants upon this verse, but not so well. The wild bull, saith he, of all things cannot abide any red colour. Therefore the hunter, for the time being standing before a tree, puts on a red garment; whom, when the bull seeth, he runs hard at him, as hard as he can drive. But the hunter slipping aside, the bull's horns stick fast in the tree; as when David slipped aside, Saul's spear stuck fast into the wall: such a hunter is Christ. Christ standing before the tree of his cross, putteth on a red garment dipped and dyed in his own blood, as one that cometh with red garments from Bozrah. Therefore the devil and his angels, like wild bulls of Bashan, run at him; but he, saving himself, their horns stick fast in the cross; as Abraham's ram, by his horns, stuck fast in the briers. Thus he.

Stain my raiment.] Heb., Pollute it; for other blood polluteth, {#Isa 59:3 La 4:14} but "the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin." {#1Jo 1:7}

Ver. 4. For the day of vengeance is in mine heart.] Or, Was in mine heart. Hence I made such havoc. Christ is the "Lord God of recompenses," {#Jer 51:56} and the "Lord God of revenges"; {#Ps 94:1} he is "jealous and furious," {#Na 1:2; see the note there} his feet, wherewith he treadeth down his enemies, are "like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace." {#Re 1:15} Oh, "it is a fearful thing to fall into the punishing hands of this living God." {#Heb 10:31}

And the year of my redeemed is come.] Their joyful jubilee. It is hail with the saints when ill with the wicked. The deliverance of those is oft the destruction of these.

Ver. 5. And I looked, and there was none to help.] See on #Isa 59:16.

Ver. 6. Make them drunk in my fury.] I will give them large draughts of my displeasure. {as #Ps 75:9} I will infatuate and utterly disable them to rebel and resist; yea, I will make them drunk with their own blood, as with new wine. {#Isa 49:26 Re 16:6} {See Trapp on "Re 16:6"}

The perverse Jews, at the last destruction of their city, became a famous instance, being buried, as it were, in a bog of blood.

And I will bring down their strength.] Or, Their blood, as it is rendered #Isa 63:3, eo quod vita et virtus hominis in sanguine, { a} because life and strength is in the blood.

{a} Oecolam.

Ver. 7. I will mention the lovingkindnesses of the Lord,]{ a} scil., As an aggravation of Israel's great unkindness and unthankfulness to so liberal a Lord, so bountiful a benefactor. Good turns exaggerate unkindness; and men's offences are increased by their obligations. See #De 32:7,14.

According to his mercies, &c.] Which are such as words are too weak to utter; hence this Copia verborum, and all too little. See the like, #Eph 2:5,7.

Ver. 8. For he said, Surely they are my people, children that will not lie,] q.d., I presume they will not; it were a foul shame for them if they should deceive my expectation, deal disloyally, show themselves deceitful in the covenant. The officers of Merindol, in France, answered the Popish bishop that moved them to abjure, that they marvelled much that he would offer to persuade them to lie to God and the world. And albeit that all men by nature are liars; yet they had learned by the Word of God that they ought diligently to take heed of lying in any matter, be it never so small. Also that they ought diligently to take heed that their children did not accustom or use themselves to lie, and therefore punish them very sharply when they took them with any lie, even as if they had committed a robbery; for the devil is a liar, &c. Here the bishop rose up in a great anger, and so departed. {a}

{a} Acts and Mon., 866.

Ver. 9. In all their afflictions he was afflicted.] See #Ex 3:7,9 Jud 10:16 Zec 2:8 Ac 9:4 Jer 31:20. O God, we may better say, than the poet did of Augustus—

“ *Est placidus, facilisque parens, veniaequae paratus:
Et qui fulmineo saepe sine igne tonat.
Qui rum triste aliquid statuit, fit tristis et ipse:
Cuique fere poenam sumere poena sua est.* ” {a}

And the angel of his presence saved them,] i.e., Jesus Christ, who is called the "face of God"; {#Ex 33:14,15} "the image of the invisible God"; {#Col 1:15} whom whoso "hath seen, hath seen the Father also"; {#Joh 14:9} he "who is in the bosom of the Father"; {#Joh 1:18} and as an everlasting priest mediateth and ministereth in the presence of his Father, making request for us; {#Heb 9:24 Re 8:3} that "angel of the covenant." {#Mal 3:1}

And he bare them.] As parents do their young children.

And carried them.] As eagles do their young. See #Ex 19:4 De 32:11. {See Trapp on "De 32:11"}

{a} De Ponto, ii., Eleg. 2.

Ver. 10. But they rebelled, and vexed his Holy Spirit.] By sinning against light, checks of conscience, motions of the Spirit, mercies without measure, &c. Junius thinketh this a clear place for proof of the Trinity in unity.

So he was turned to be their enemy.] This was an ill turn for them; abused mercy turneth into fury; with the froward God will wrestle.

{#Ps 18:26}

Ver. 11. Then he remembered,] i.e., Israel remembered the days of old; Heb., Of antiquity, the days of yore, as some old translations have it. See #Ps 89:50, &c.

Saying, Where is he that brought them up out of the sea?] q.d., How is it that he is not now to be found, as then he was for the succour of his poor people? They had "vexed his Holy Spirit," and therefore he withdrew himself. See #Ho 5:6.

With the shepherd of his flock.] Or, Shepherds—as some ancient copies had it—viz., Moses and Aaron. {#Ps 77:20}

Where is he that put his Holy Spirit within him?] But this Holy Spirit they had vexed, {#Isa 63:10} and now they sorrowfully inquire after. Delicata res est Spiritus Sanctus; ita nos tractat, sicut tractatur, saith a father—i.e., The Spirit of God is a delicate thing; he deals with us, as we deal by him.

Ver. 12. That led them by the right hand of Moses with his glorious arm.] Or, That made his gallant arm to go at Moses' right hand.

Dividing the water before them.] So that pseudo Moses—the devil likely—made many overly credulous Jews of Crete believe that he would do for them whom he beguiled into the midst of the sea, to their destruction, 434 AD. {a} Some are of the opinion that this affectionate prayer was purposely penned by the prophet, for the use of those poor Jews, who, after the coming of Christ, and manifestation of the gospel, should see themselves to be rejected by God and his Church, and should now beg to be owned again; Cui sane instituto omnia, magis quam dici queat, conveniunt, saith Hyperius; the ensuing petitions suit very much.

{a} Funccius.

Ver. 13. That led them through the deep.] Which threatened to swallow them, but indeed preserved them; so doth every main affliction.

As a horse in the wilderness.] Or, As a horse goeth in the plain, when led by his rider, in qua non est lutum vel lapis, where there is neither mire to stick in, nor stone to stumble at. See #Ps 106:9-11

Ver. 14. As a beast goeth down into the valley,] i.e., Gently and leisurely, {a} according to that known saying—

“*Ascendente tuo, vel descendente caballo,
Vox ait ista, Fave; vox ait illa, Cave.*”

The Spirit of the Lord caused him to rest.] Or, Led them until he brought them to rest.—scil., in the promised land.

To make thyself a glorious name,] q.d., So thou mayest do again, if thou please to show mercy unto us. Name is here put for fame or renown.

{a} Leniter et commode.

Ver. 15. Look down from heaven.] Affectus dolentium atque ardentem petentium scite exprimuntur; a pathetic and pithy prayer.

And behold from the habitation of thy holiness, &c.] They pray otherwise now than when the temple stood; {#Ps 121:1} now they look higher, and oh that they would do so! The modern Jews pray thus daily; but because not from a right principle, they are not heard.

Where is thy zeal?] Thine ancient fervour and forwardness in vindicating thy people, and being avenged of their enemies.

The sounding (rumbling or yearning) of thy bowels, &c.] Sometimes God seemeth to lose his mercy, and then we must find it for him, as here; sometimes to sleep or delay, and then we must waken, quicken him. {#Ps 40:17 Isa 62:7}

Are they restrained?] Chrysostom {a} exhorteth people, whether God grant or not, to pray still; for when God denies, it is as good as if he grants. And if we pray for any temporal mercy, the very ability to pray is better than the thing we pray for; for "whosoever calleth upon the name of the Lord shall be saved."

{a} Hom. 30, in Genes.

Ver. 16. Doubtless thou art our Father.] Though thou frownest and withdrawest. The people of God saw that he was angry, that their hearts also were hard; yet they thought they should know him amidst all his austerities, and they make to him for help. And, doubtless, help the Jews might yet have, could they seriously say, as here, "Certainly thou art our Father," and would no longer rest upon carnal things, boasting of Abraham their father, circumcision, and other external privileges.

Though Abraham be ignorant of us.] Ipsi nunc sua quiete fruuntur; they are at rest, and know nothing of our affairs. The monks tell us that the saints departed see things done here in the face of God as in a glass. But this is a mere fiction of theirs. See #Ps 27:10 2Ki 22:20. Augustine {a} saith of his mother Monica, deceased, that she did now no longer yield him comfort, because she knew not what befell him. The greatest Popish clerks themselves confess that the invocation of saints departed had neither precept, promise, nor precedent in the book of God. Moreover, they cannot determine how the saints know our hearts and prayers, whether by hearing, or seeing, or presence everywhere, or by God's relating or revealing men's prayers and needs unto them. All which ways some of them hold as possible or probable, {b} and others deny and confute them as untrue. {c} The Syriac and Arabic render the text thus: Thou art our Father, we are ignorant of Abraham, and we acknowledge not Israel. Thou, O Lord, art our Father, &c. Agreeable whereunto is that of the heathen, Contemno minutos istos Deos, modo Iovem mihi propitium habeam, I care not for those petty gods, so that Jupiter will stand my friend. And that better saying of a devout Christian,

“ Una est in trepida mihi re medicina, Iehovae

Cor patrium, os verax, omnipotensque manus. ”

- Nathan. Chytraeus.

It hath been well observed that the defeat given to the Spanish fleet, A.D. 1588, happened to be on St James's day, whom the Spaniards pray to as their patron or saint tutelar.

Thy name is from eternity, / i.e., This name of thine, "Our Redeemer." Some read the text thus: Our Redeemer is from of old thy name. Our redemption was not of yesterday, but verily foreordained before the foundation of the world. {#1Pe 1:20}

{c} Morton's Appeal, lib. ii. cap. 12, sect. 5.

Ver. 17. O Lord, why hast thou made us to err from thy ways? &c., / i.e., Given us up to error and obstinace? Why dost thou thus punish sin with sin, for the illustration of thy justice and jealousy against us, who have rebelled and vexed thine Holy Spirit? {#Isa 63:10} Oh, be pleased to deal with us rather according to thy mercy.

"Return for thy servants' sake," the good people that are yet left among us; give us hearts of flesh, and lead us in the way everlasting. Here observe that God's best children may find in themselves hardness of heart, {#Ho 4:16} yet not total, but mixed with softness and tenderness in every part, so that though they resist, neglect, profit not as they might do—through pride, worldliness, voluptuousness, {#Mt 13:22 Lu 21:34} hypocritical hiding of any sin, {#Ps 32:3,4 Pr 28:14} letting fall the watch of the Lord {#2Ch 32:25} -yet it is not done with full consent, but with reluctance now, and repentance afterwards.

The tribes of thine inheritance,] q.d., Wilt thou abhor thy people in covenant with thee, and abandon thine own inheritance? How few are there that thus urge the seal, and enter a suit with the Lord!

Ver. 18. The people of thine holiness have possessed it but a little while,] viz., In respect of that perpetuity promised them by thee; {#Ge 17:8,26:3 28:13 Ex 32:13} besides the many calamities that have befallen us, whereby we have had small enjoyment of this thine inheritance. All the days of the afflicted are evil, {#Pr 15:15} their life lifeless, and not to be reckoned on.

Our adversaries have trodden down thy sanctuary.] This they did in the days of Antiochus, but especially about the time of our Saviour's incarnation; when the sceptre departed from Judah, Pompey with his army entered into the sanctuary; Herod got the government, the Romans set up their ensigns and statues in the holy of holies, &c. This desolation of the second temple the Jews do here bewail; but we have cause to rejoice, for that by Christ the whole world is now become a temple, and every place a goodly oratory. {#1Ti 2:8}

Ver. 19. We are thine.] And shouldst thou then deal with us as some profane, idolatrous nation? See here the holy boldness of faith standing upon interrogatories, {#1Pe 3:21} and filling her mouth with arguments of all sorts.

Thou never barest rule over them.] No such reason or relation is there of children, servants, subjects, wherefore they should thus be favoured and we disowned. {#Am 3:2 Isa 63:17}

Chapter 64

Ver. 1. Oh that thou wouldst rend the heavens.] That thou wouldst lie no longer hid there, as to some it may seem; but making thy way through all impediments and obstacles, thou wouldst powerfully appear for our help, as out of an engine. Utinam lacerares coelos et descenderes. {a} Some take the words for a hearty wish that Christ would come in the flesh; others that he would make haste and come to judgment, late fisso coelo ad percullendum impios. The metaphor seemeth to be taken from such as being desirous suddenly and effectually to help others in distress, to break open doors, and cast aside all lets, to make their way to them.

That the mountains may flow down.] As in #Jud 5:5. By "mountains" some understand the enemy's kingdoms.

{a} Lyra. Alex. Ales.

Ver. 2. As when the melting fire burneth.] So let the mountains burn and boil at thy presence. Aristotle {a} reporteth that from the hill Etna there once ran down a torrent of fire, that consumed all the houses thereabout. The like is recorded of Vesuvius, and of Pietra Mala, a mountain in the highest part of the Apeninnes, which perpetually burneth; so Hecla and Hogla, in Iceland.

{a} De Mundo, cap. 6.

Ver. 3. When thou didst terrible things.] Or, As when thou didst &c.; as thou didst of old for our forefathers.

Which we looked not for.] See #De 4:32,33, where God himself extolleth them.

Ver. 4. For since the beginning of the world men have not heard,] scil., The mysteries of the gospel revealed by the Spirit; whereunto the angels also desire to look, as the apostles witness. {#1Co 2:9 1Pe 1:12}

Neither hath the eye seen, O God, besides thee.] Or, A God beside thee, i.e., That can do as thou doest.

For him that waiteth for him.] For "them that love him," saith the apostle. It is by faith and hope that we wait upon God; now Faith, Hope, and Charity are near of kin, and never severed. All that truly love God are well content to wait for him, yea, to want, if he see it fit, being desirous rather that God may be glorified, than themselves gratified.

Ver. 5. Thou meetest him that rejoiceth and worketh righteousness.] That doth thy work diligently and with delight; that being acted by thee, acteth vigorously for thee. Tantum velis, et Deus tibi praeoccurrent, saith an ancient, as the prodigal's father met him upon the way. If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good things of the land, {#Isa 1:21} which that we may be, Nolentem praevenit Deus ut velit, volentem subsequitur ne frustra velit, { a} God worketh in us both to will and to do of his own good pleasure. Howbeit he expecteth that we should go as far as we can naturally, if ever we look that he should meet us graciously. Though the miller cannot command a wind, yet he will spread his sails, be in the way to have it, if it come.

In those is continuance, / i.e., In those sins of ours; and shall we be saved? Or, In those ways of thine, thy ways of mercy and fidelity, is permanence; therefore we shall be saved, our sins notwithstanding.

{a} Augustine.

Ver. 6. But we are all as an unclean thing.] Both our persons and our actions are so; for "who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean?" What a mercy is it then that God should look upon such walking dunghills as we are, and accept the work of our hands?

And all our righteousnesses are as filthy rags.] {a} Or, As a coat of patches, a beggar's coat, vestis centonum, vestis e vilibus paniculis consuta. Heb. A cloth of separations, a matyry rag, a menstruous clout, nauseous and odious, such as a man would loathe to touch, much more to take up. Such are our best works as they proceed from us; when there springeth up any sweet fountain of grace within us, our hearts closely cast in their filthy dirt, as the Philistines dealt by Isaac; they drop down from their impure hands some filth upon that pure web the Spirit weaveth, and make it a menstruous cloth. Where, then, are justiciaries, our merit mongers? &c. Those that seek to be saved by their works, Luther fitly calleth the devil's martyrs; they suffer much, and take great pains to go to hell. We are all apt to weave a web of righteousness of our own, to spin a thread of our own to climb up to heaven by, but that cannot be. We must do all righteousnesses, rest in none but Christ's, disclaiming our own best as spotted and imperfect.

And we all fade as a leaf.] That falleth to the ground in autumn. The poet could say, “Οιηπερ φυλλων γενεη, τοιηδε και ανδρων.”—Hom.

And our iniquities, like the wind, have taken us away.] Out of thy presence; and will hurry us to hell, if thou forefend not.

Ver. 7. And there is none that calleth upon thy name, / i.e., Very few; {a} for that God had then a praying people, this very prayer declareth; but they were drowned in the multitude, being scarce discernible.

That stirreth up himself to take hold of thee.] That rouseth up himself and wrestleth with God, laying hold on him by faith and prayer, resolved to retain him. Let us go forth, as Samson did, and shake up ourselves against that indevotion and spiritual sloth that will creep upon us in doing good. See for this Mr Whitfield's Help to Stirring Up, an excellent treatise, written upon this text.

For thou hast hid thy face from us.] Or, Though thou hast hid thy face, Ne tuis quidem ferulis caesi resipuimus.

{a} Apparent rari nantes in gurgite vasto.

Ver. 8. But now, O Lord, thou art our father.] Or, Yet now, O Lord, thou art our father; therefore "we shall not die," say they, {#Heb 1:12} boldly, but warrantably. See on #Isa 63:16.

We are the clay, and thou art our potter.] This was grown to a proverb among the heathens also, Κεραμος ο ανθρωπος, Man is a clod of clay; πηλος κομψως πεφυραμενος, A piece of clay neatly made up, saith Arian upon Epictetus. Fictus ex argilla et luto homulus, {a} saith Cicero. And Nigidius was surnamed Figulus, or the Potter, saith Augustine, because he used to say that man was nothing else but an earthen vessel. See #2Co 4:7 5:1.

We are all the work of thy hands.] Both as made and remade by thee; therefore despise us not. {#Job 10:8,9 Ps 138:8} Look upon the wounds of thy hands, and forsake not the work of thine hands, prayed Queen Elizabeth.

{a} Orat. ad Pison.

Ver. 9. Be not wroth very sore, O Lord.] Neither overly much nor overly long, but "spare us, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him." This is commended for the best line in all Terence—

“ Pro peccato magno paululum supplicii satis est Patri.”

Ver. 10. Thy holy cities are a wilderness.] And is that for thine honour. "Behold, see, we beseech thee."

Ver. 11. Our holy and our beautiful house.] The Church riseth higher and higher in her complaints to God; we must do likewise.

Where our fathers praised thee.] Their own praises there they mention not, as not holding them worth mentioning.

Ver. 12. Wilt thou refrain thyself for these things?] Or, Canst thou contain thyself at these things? No, he cannot; witness his answer hereunto. {#Isa 65:1} The obstinate Jews do in vain still recite these words in their synagogues, as Jerome here noteth.

Wilt thou hold thy peace?] And by thy silence seem to consent to the enemy's outrages and our calamities? Habet acrimoniam, saith Hyperius. There is some sharpness in these short questions; and yet because they were full of faith and fervency, they were highly accepted in heaven.

And afflict us very sore?] Heb., Usque valde? Unto very much, or unto extremity.

Ver. 1. I am sought of them that asked not for me.] I am sought—that is, I am found, {a} {as #Ec 3:6} or, I am sought to by those that asked not of me—viz., by the Gentiles, who knew me not, inquired not of me. See #Ro 10:20,21, where the apostle, than whom we cannot have a better interpreter, expoundeth this verse of the calling of the Gentiles, and the next verse, of the rejection of the Jews. And herein "Esaias was very bold," saith St Paul; so bold, say Origen and others, that for this cause, among others, he was sawn asunder by his unworthy countrymen. See on #Isa 1:10.

I am found of them that sought me not.] The first act of our conversion then, the infusion of the sap, is of God; our will prevents it not, but follows it. See #2Co 3:5 Ro 8:7 Joh 6:44 1Co 12:3 De 29:3,4 Ps 36:10. Note this against the patrons of nature, freewill men, Papists especially, who not only ascribe the beginning of salvation to themselves, in co-working with God in their first conversion, but also the end and the accomplishment of it, by works of condignity, meritorious of eternal life.

I said, Behold me, behold me.] We are not easily aroused out of that dead lethargy into which sin and Satan hath cast us; hence this "Lo I, lo I." And here we have both God's answer to the Church's prayer, {#Isa 64:12} and the scope of the whole book, as Oecolampadius observeth, set down in the perclose—viz., the coming in of the Gentiles, and the casting off of the Jews for their many and mighty sins. {#Am 5:12}

{a} Piscat.

Ver. 2. I have spread out my hands.] As preachers use to do, {#Pr 1:24 Ac 26:1} or as those that invite and beckon others to themselves with the hand. See #Mt 11:28.

Unto a rebellious people.] Whose destruction therefore is of themselves, since they will not be ruled, reclaimed.

After their own thoughts.] Which were evil, only evil, continually so. A toad may as easily spit a cordial, as a natural man think a good thought.

Ver. 3. A people that provoketh me to my face.] As it were for the nonce, in despite and defiance of me. Siquis me in faciem depalmaret, vix indignius essera laturus: I could almost as well bear a blow on the face.

And burneth incense upon altars of brick.] {a} Erected on the house tops. {#2Ki 23:12 Zep 1:5} They should have offered on the golden altar only. {#Ex 30:3-5}

{a} Lateres—per meosin cum contemptu.

Ver. 4. Which remain among the graves.] Which use necromancy and consult with devils—as Saul did, and died for it—contrary to #De 18:11. See #Isa 8:19 Mr 5:5. {See Trapp on "Isa 8:19"} {See Trapp on "Mr 5:5"} This they had learned from the heathens, with whom it was common, as Tertullian teacheth.

And lodge in the monuments.] As believing that there they should dream dreams divinary, or have revelations in the night. By such ill arts as these, Timotheus Herulus made himself bishop of Alexandria, A.D. 467; and Boniface VIII duped Celestine V of the Popedom, A.D. 1295. Some {a} render it, that lodge with the kept ones, i.e., with their idols, which they were fain to keep, for fear they should be stolen.

That eat swine's flesh.] Which was flatly forbidden; {#Le 11:7} and which those martyrs in the Maccabees would rather die than do. But these belly gods, who, like swine, had their souls only to keep their bodies from putrifying, securely violated this plain law—gratifying their lusts, and making their gut their god.

And broth of abominable things is in their vessels.] They had animos in patinis, catinis, calicibus, &c. Therein they kept the broth of their swine's flesh, {b} which they offered, and in offering eat of. But what saith one from this text? Men must not only abhor the devil's beef, but his broth too; all occasions, appearances.

{a} Jun., Piscat.

Ver. 5. Which say, Stand by thyself; come not near to me.] These Jews were all manner of naughts, and therefore worthily rejected by God; necromancers, idolaters, epicures, gross hypocrites, as here their words, full of pride and contempt of others, show them to be. Such were the Pharisees with their sanctior sum quam tu {#Lu 7:39} the monks and mass priests among the Papists, and the Brownists with their broad leaves of formal profession among us. From #Mt 18:19, because Christ promiseth not doing for them that ask, except they agree on earth, Brownists peremptorily conclude that they ought not to pray with them that do not consent with them in their opinions; nor will they pray with their own wives and children, though never so pious, if they do not meet in the same centre of conceits. {a}

These are a smoke in my nose, a fire that burneth all the day,] i.e., A continual offence to me, as smoke is to the nose and eyes, {#Pr 10:26} and shall be perpetually tormented by me in the hottest fire of hell; whereof hypocrites are the freeholders, and other sinners are but tenants as it were to them, while they are said to have their portion with the devil and hypocrites. Some think he hinteth at their smoking and sacrificing in their gardens and groves. {#Isa 65:3}

{a} Abbott's Trial of Church Forsakers, p. 148.

Ver. 6. Behold, it is written before me.] Heb., Before my face, as your sins were committed to my face, {#Isa 65:3} which, therefore, I shall surely remember and punish.

But will recompense, even recompense.] Certo, cite, penitus, - surely, severely, suddenly; you may write upon it.

Ver. 7. Your iniquities, and the iniquities of your fathers together.] Your "vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers," {#1Pe 1:18} whom you have striven to out sin. {#Ge 15:16 Mt 23:32,35,36 27:25 1Th 2:15,16}

And blasphemed me upon the hills.] Or, Reproached or dishonoured me. Displeasing service is double dishonour, because men dishonour God in that wherein they pretend (or presume at least) to please him. Such are all Popish will-worshippers; neither will it help them to plead the example of their forefathers, for here that of the prophet Ezekiel {#Eze 20:18} should take place, "Walk ye not in the ways of your fathers."

Therefore will I measure into their bosom.] Or, Lap; very largely. See #Ps 79:12 Lu 6:38. I will pay them home, for the new and the old together.

Ver. 8. Thus saith the Lord.] This he saith in effect, I will not destroy the righteous with the wicked, but still reserve a "seed," a remnant; and this he setteth forth by a fine and fit comparison; even as the husbandman, if he find any wine in the cluster, that is, any life or sap in the vine, cutteth it not down utterly.

So will I do for my servants' sake.] Few though they be, even as one cluster of grapes upon a vine, yet because they are botri mustei, clusters full of new and sweet wine, full of the juice of piety, they shall be preserved.

Ver. 9. And I will bring forth a seed out of Jacob.] The good husband keeps some of his corn for seed; which, though it be not much, yet it will come to much.

And mine elect shall inherit it, / i.e., Reinhabit the land, a type of the last conversion of the Jews to Christ. {#Ro 11:25,26}

Ver. 10. And Sharon shall be a fold of flocks.] The fieldlings shall be folds, and I will feed them daily and daintily {#Ps 23:1} with my graces and blessings. Sharon is a very sweet and fruitful quarter, reaching from Caesarea of Palestine to Joppa; Achor is also a very rich vale near Jericho northward, {#Jos 3:16} their first footing in the promised land. By both these they are assured that they shall want for nothing, and least of all for the Word of God, the food of their souls,

Ver. 11. But ye are they that forsake the Lord.] Or, As for you, that have forsaken the Lord to observe lying vanities, and so are miserable by your own election, {#Joh 12:8} you shall be yet more miserable at the great day of judgment especially, of which some take this following part of the chapter to be meant and intended. Then these improbi et reprobi shall be sure to smoke for it; then they shall return and discern between the righteous and the wicked; yea, the judge himself shall show them a manifest difference. {#Isa 65:13-16}

That forget my holy mountain,] i.e., My temple and pure worship, which ye slight and neglect, q.d., There is no new wine in your cluster, but rather gall and deadly poison; therefore it shall be otherwise with you.

That prepare a table for that troop.] As the Israelites feasted before the Lord; {#De 16:14,15} so in an apish imitation did the heathens before their idols; {#Jud 9:27 Eze 18:6,7 1Co 8:10} and of them these superstitious Jews had learned to do the like, in the days of Ahaz and Manasseh, who degenerated into his grandfather Ahaz, as if there had been no intervention of a Hezekiah.

For that troop.] So the prophet speaketh, as pointing to their idols, whereof they had great store. Gad (here used) and Menni (rendered number here likewise), some interpret fortune and fate; others, Jupiter and Mercury. The Septuagint, for "to that number," hath "to the devil." Oecolampadius thinks the prophet alludeth to the Pythagorean numbers, and especially to the number of four (τετρακτος), which they superstitiously observed. Others say, the Jews symbolised with the heathens in drinking to their idols by number. To such an idol they would drink so many cups, and that was called a drink offering to that number. Hence Antiphanes in Athenaeus {a} saith,

{a} Lib. x.

Ver. 12. Therefore I will number you to the sword.] Est elegans paronomasia: I will give you up to the sword by number and tale, to the end that none of you may escape. God usually retalieth, and proportioneth number to number. So, choice to choice; {#Isa 66:3,4} jealousy to jealousy, provocation to provocation; {#De 32:21} device to device; {#Mic 2:1,3} frowardness to frowardness. {#Ps 18:26}

And ye shall all bow down to the slaughter.] As you used to bow down to your idols.

Because when I called, ye did not answer.] See on #Pr 1:24.

But did evil before mine eyes.] Did evil things as you could; {#Jer 3:5} with both hands earnestly. {#Mic 7:3}

Ver. 13. Behold, my servants shall eat, but ye shall be hungry.] Lepidas antitheses ponit. You have spent your meat and drink upon idols; therefore ye shall fast another while, yea, you shall feed upon the fierce wrath of God in hell, and drink deep of that cup of his that hath eternity to the bottom.

But ye shall be ashamed.] Your hopes and hearts failing you together, ye shall pine away in your iniquities. {#Eze 24:23}

Ver. 14. Behold, my servants shall sing.] "In the transgression of an evil man there is a snare," or a cord to strangle his joys with; "but the righteous doth sing and rejoice." {#Pr 29:6} {See Trapp on "Pr 29:6"}

And shall howl.] When ye come to hell especially, where is wailing, and yelling, and gnashing of teeth.

Ver. 15. And ye shall leave your name for a curse.] So that when mine elect shall denounce my curse against any one, they shall say, God make thee such another as was such a cursed wretch. See #Jer 24:9 29:22 44:8 Zec 8:13, {See Trapp on "Zec 8:13"} Iadaeus sim si fallo, say the Turks at this day; As hard-hearted and unhappy as a Jew, say we.

And call his servants by another name.] Jews inwardly, Israelites indeed, Christians, a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people. {#1Pe 2:9} The wicked, when they die, go out in a snuff, leave a stench behind them, as they say the devil doth when he goeth out of a room; but when the saints depart, they leave a sweet smell behind them, as those lamps do that are fed with aromatical oil. Yea, it is more than probable that in the next world we shall look upon Bradford and such with thoughts of extraordinary love and sweetness through all eternity, as Bonner and such with execration and everlasting detestation.

Ver. 16. That he who blesseth himself in the earth, &c.] Or, That blesseth, either himself or any other.

Shall bless himself in the God of truth.] Heb. Shall bless in the God of Amen—that is, say some, in Christ, who is "Amen, the faithful and true witness," {#Re 3:14} in whom all the promises are, Yea, and Amen, {#2Co 1:20} and who was wont often to say, Amen, amen. Others render it thus, Benedicat sibi per Deum firmi, shall bless himself by the God of the firm or faithful people, founded and rooted in God, so as that "the gates of hell shall not prevail against them."

Shall swear by the God of truth.] Or, By the God of the firm and faithful people, as before.

Because the former troubles are forgotten.] Remembered no otherwise than "as waters that are past." See #Zec 10:6. {See Trapp on "Zec 10:6"}

Ver. 17. For, behold, I create new heavens and a new earth.] I am making of a new world—that is, gospel times, called a "new creation," {#2Co 5:17} and "the world to come"; {#Heb 2:5} heaven beforehand. {#Mt 3:2} The consummation hereof we are to expect at the last day, {#2Pe 3:13 Re 21:1,5} when the "former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind," because the Lord, who made heaven and earth, shall "bless his people out of Zion" {#Ps 134:3}

Ver. 18. But be glad and rejoice for ever.] What can ye be less than everlastingly merry when you consider your gospel privileges, which are such as may well swallow up all discontents, and make you "more than conquerors," and that is triumphers?

For, behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing.] Creo talem Ierusalem ut sit ei nomen tripudium, et populus eius vocetur gaudium. {a} Hence it appeareth that these things are not to be taken according to the letter, but of "Jerusalem which is above, that mother of us all."

{a} Oecolamp.

Ver. 19. And I will rejoice in Jerusalem.] Well may Jerusalem then rejoice in God, who as in all her afflictions he is afflicted, so he taketh pleasure in the prosperity of his people.

And the voice of weeping.] See #Isa 35:10 51:12 Re 21:4.

Ver. 20. There shall be no more thence an infant of days.] This verse, as some others, had been easy, had not commentators made it so knotty. There shall be no more thence—that is, from Jerusalem {#Isa 65:19} -an infant of days, or a child for days; viz., that shall so die by an untimely death, for longevity is the blessing here promised.

Nor an old man that hath not filled his days.] That hath not lived his utmost, satur dierum, as Abraham.

For the child shall die an hundred years old,] i.e., He that is now a child, shall live till he be so many years old. Note this against those that otherwise understand the words, and have therehence fished out many frivolous crotchets too long here to be related.

But the sinner, being an hundred years old, {a} shall be accursed.] And the more accursed because so long lived, and yet dieth in his sin, going down to the grave with his bones full of the sins of his youth. See #Ec 8:12,13. {See Trapp on "Ec 8:12"} {See Trapp on "Ec 8:13"}

{a} Hinc proverb, Puer centum annorum.

Ver. 21. And they shall build houses and inhabit them.] The contrary whereunto is threatened against the wicked. {#De 28:30-68} God's people are freed from the curse of the law, from the hurt, if not from the smart of afflictions.

Ver. 22. They shall not build, and another inhabit.] They shall not provide for posterity alone, but live a long while to take benefit of their own labours.

For as the days of a tree are the days of my people,] i.e., Robusti atque diuturni; they shall be hearty, healthy, and long lasting, {#Ps 52:9 92:13} even as if they had eaten of that tree of life in paradise.

Ver. 23. They shall not labour in vain.] As wicked men shall. {#Le 26:14-20 De 28:15-68 Hag 1:6} {See Trapp on "Hag 1:6"}

Nor bring forth for trouble.] Bring forth children to the murderer, {#Ho 9:13} to the great grief and trouble of their poor parents.

Ver. 24. And it shall come to pass, that before they call I will answer.] Mirabilis certe promissio, a wonderful promise, verily, saith Scultetus. The prayers of the saints do sooner pierce from their hearts to heaven, than they can find way from their hearts to their mouths. So David found it; {#Ps 32:5} and Daniel; {#Da 10:12} and that prodigal. {#Lu 15:18,20} Our Saviour, who came out of the bosom of the Father, gives two reasons (1.) "The Father himself loveth you," {#Joh 16:27} and love is liberal; (2.) "The Father knoweth before ye ask, that ye have need of all these things." {#Mt 6:32}

And while they are yet speaking, I will hear.] Thus he heard those praying Israelites at the meet at Mizpeh, {#Isa 7:6} David, {#Ps 6:8,9} Daniel, {#Da 9:21} Cornelius, {#Ac 10:3} and his company; {#Ac 10:44} Luther, when he came leaping out of his study, where he had been praying, with Vicimus! vicimus! in his mouth; the day is ours, we shall carry the cause.

Ver. 25. The wolf and the lamb shall feed together.] Heb., As one. {a} See #Isa 11:6. There shall be a holy harmony of hearts, and all good agreement among Christ's subjects, when they come to heaven especially.

And dust shall be the serpent's meat.] He shall be held in to his first condemnation. {#Ge 3:14} The devil also, that old serpent, shall be limited to the heel of the saints; the head he shall not touch; he shall be tied up to his own meat—viz., that unquenchable fire prepared for him and his angels from the beginning.

They shall not hurt, &c.] See on #Isa 11:9.

{a} Antipathiam in sympathiam convertent. -A Lapide.

Chapter 66

Ver. 1. Thus saith the Lord.] The same he saith in effect here in this last chapter that he had done in the first, rejecting the Jews' vain confidence in their temple and sacrifices, and showing that he was neither confined to their temple nor contented with their sacrifices, so long as the hidden man of the heart and the spiritual worship was wanting—so long as they neglected his laws and served their own lusts. {#Isa 66:3}

Heaven is my throne.] Coelum est solium meum; there do I manifest the most glorious and visible signs of my presence; there I am in a special manner worshipped according to mine excellent greatness; and there my courtiers have a more ardent zeal for me than those flatterers had for Darius. {#Da 6:7}

The earth is my footstool.] So it should be ours, since God hath in Christ "put all things under our feet." {#Ps 8:6} The earth hath its name in Hebrew from treading upon; and terra a terendo, these earthly things should be trampled on as base and bootless.

Where is the house that ye build unto me?] q.d., A house indeed I commanded to be built for me, but not to hold me, or there to keep me cooped up as in a cell, that, you should therehence conclude, The temple, God's house, shall never perish; therefore neither shall we. You must know that I am intra, et extra, et supra, et circa, et infra omnia, within and without, and above and about, and beneath all things.

“ Enter praesenter Deus hic et ubique potenter.”

This the heathens knew. Empedocles said that God was a circle, the centre whereof is everywhere, the circumference nowhere. This the Turks acknowledge, by building their mosques or temples open at the top, to show that God is nowhere circumscriptively and definitively, but repletively everywhere. He is higher than heaven, saith Bernard, deeper than hell, larger than earth, broader than the sea: he is nowhere, and yet everywhere, yet he is everywhere all-present. The heavens have a large place, but they have one part here and another there; but the Lord is totally present wheresoever present, not commensurable by any place whatsoever.

Ver. 2. For all those things hath my hand made.] And could not I, then, have made myself a house without your help if I had listed or needed? Required I a temple for any other use or purpose but for the furtherance of your faith in Christ and love one to another? "These things have I made," yet these all I regard not in comparison. But

To this man will I look,] viz., With special intimation of my care and kindness—q.d., To thee be it spoken, I have an eye to thee.

Even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit.] Sept., Humble and quiet, {a} Vera Sabbata agens, that being poor in spirit hath a Sabbath of spirit, comforting himself in the Lord his God: to such God looketh. He cannot look upwards, saith one, because he hath none above him; nor on either side, because he hath none equal unto him: therefore he is said to look down, and that also upon the humble and broken-hearted, with singular delight and complacence. Humilitas est thronus sapphirinus in quo Deus cum maiestate residet.

And trembleth at my word,] viz., With a filial fear flowing from faith in Christ, trembling at the threatenings before they come into execution. This is a point of singular prudence, for God therefore threateneth that he may not inflict punishment: but ‘they that tremble not in hearing, shall be crushed to pieces in feeling,’ said that martyr. What, then, will be the end of such as hear the menaces of God’s mouth no otherwise than they do the stories of foreign wars or the predictions of a prognostication, which they think may come to pass, and it may be not?

Ver. 3. He that killeth an ox is as if he slew a man.] Unless, together with his ox, he kill his corruptions, and lay fast hold upon Christ (who himself was sacrificed for us, #1Co 5:7) by a lively faith. Heathens sacrificed men to Saturn; dogs also, and swine, and other unclean creatures, to their other dunghill deities. Mass priests do the like by their cruelty, hypocrisy, idolatry, impudence, luxury: their prayers, therefore, fastings, penances, pilgrimages, &c., are not accepted.

He that sacrificeth a lamb.] Unless with it he sacrifice his lusts, and look to "the Lamb of God, slain from the beginning of the world."

As if he cut off a dog’s neck.] Heb., As if he necked a dog, {a} that is, decolled him, beheaded him for sacrifice: this was absolutely forbidden. {#De 23:18} The Athenians also suffered not a dog to enter into their tower dedicated to Minerva, for his heat in venery and ill savour, saith Plutarch. {b}

He that offereth an oblation.] Unless with it he present his body for a sacrifice holy and acceptable unto God. {as #Ro 12:1}

Is as if he offered swine's blood.] Blood was not to be offered at all in an oblation or meat offering, but meal, oil, wine; {#Le 2} much less swine's blood. See #Le 11:7.

He that burneth incense.] In honour of me, unless his heart ascend up withal in those pillars of sweet smoke, as Manoah's angel did in the smoke of the sacrifice.

Is as if he blessed an idol,] i.e., Gave thanks to an idol (called here by a name that signifieth vanity or vexation) as if he were a god: in doing whereof God holdeth himself less dishonoured than by their hypocritical services performed to himself. {#Eze 20:39}

Yea, they have chosen their own ways.] Which must needs be naught: Nemo sibi de suo palpet. {c} Are ye not carnal and walk as men, saith Paul that is, as naughty men. Horreo quicquid de meo est, ut meus sim.

{a} Excerebraret. -Vulg.

{b} Plut., Ελληνικ.

{c} Bernard.

Ver. 4. I also will choose their delusions.] As they have had their will, so will I have mine another while. I will make them to perish by their mockeries, idque ex lege talionis. See #Isa 65:11,12. They thought to dupe me by an outside service; but it shall appear that they have duped themselves when I bring upon them mercedem multiplicis petulantiae eorum, as Piscator rendereth it, the reward of their manifold petulancies and illusions.

And will bring their fear upon them.] Inducam nivem super eos qui timuerunt a pruina. They have feared the coming of the Chaldees, and come they shall. So their posterity feared the Romans, {#Joh 11:48} and they felt their fury. See #Pr 10:24. {See Trapp on "Pr 10:24"}

Because when I called, &c.] See #Isa 65:12.

Ver. 5. Hear the word of the Lord, ye that tremble, &c.] Here is a word of comfort for you, who, being lowly and meek spirited, are more apt to be trampled on and abused by the fat bulls of Bashan: where the hedge is lowest, those beasts will leap over; and every crow will be pulling off wool from a sheep's sides.

Your brethren.] By race and place, but not by grace.

That hated you.] For like cause as Cain hated Abel, {#1Jo 3:12} for trembling at God's judgments while they do yet hang in the threatenings.

And cast you out.] Either out of their company, as not fit to be conversed with, {#Isa 65:5} or out of their synagogue by excommunications, as fit to be cut off: see #1Th 2:14. Papists at this day do the like; whence that proverb, In nomine Domini incipit omne malum. Ye begin in a wrong name, said that martyr, when they began the sentence of death against him with "In the name of God. Amen."

Let the Lord be glorified.] With suchlike goodly words and specious pretences did those odious hypocrites palliate and varnish over their abominations: they would persecute godly men, and molest them with Church censures, and say, "Let the Lord be glorified." So do Papists and other sectaries deal by the orthodox. Becket offered, but subdolosly, to submit to his sovereign salvo honore Dei, so far as might stand with God's glory. {a} The conspirators in King Richard II's time endorsed all their letters with "Glory be to God on high, on earth peace, good-will towards men." The Swenckfeldians styled themselves, The Confessors of the glory of Christ; and Gentiles, the Anti-Trinitarian, when he was called to answer, said that he was drawn to maintain his cause through touch of conscience and when he was to die for his blasphemy, he said that he did suffer for the glory of the most high God; so easy a matter it is to draw a fair glove upon a foul hand. Some for "Let the Lord be glorified," render it, Gravis est Dominus, The Lord is burdensome, or heavy; and they parallel it with those sayings in the Gospel, "This is a hard saying": "Thou art an austere man"; "We will not have this man to reign over us," &c.

But he shall appear to your joy.] Parallel to that, "Your sorrow shall be turned into joy." How did some of the martyrs rejoice when excommunicated, degraded, &c.

{a} Speed, 508, A.D. 1386.

Ver. 6. A voice of noise from the city.] This is a prophetic description of the last destruction of Jerusalem and the temple by the Romans. {a}

A voice from the temple.] Wherein they so much gloried, where they had oft heard Christ and his apostles preaching repentance unto life; but now have their ears filled with hideous and horrid outcries of such as were slain even in the very temple, which they defended as long as they were able, and till it was fired. That which Josephus {b} reporteth of Jesus, the son of Ananis, a plain country fellow, is very remarkable, viz., that for four years together before the last devastation, he went about the city day and night, crying as he went, in the words of this text almost, A voice from the east, a voice from the west, a voice from the four winds, a voice against Jerusalem and the temple, a voice against all the people, Woe, woe, woe to Jerusalem; and thus he continued to do, till at length, roaring out louder than ordinary, Woe to Jerusalem and to me also, he was slain upon the wall with a stone shot out of an engine, as Josephus reporteth.

That rendereth recompense to his enemies.] So they are here called who pretended so much to the glorifying of God. {#Isa 66:5} False friends are true enemies.

{a} Diod.

{b} Lib. vii. Belli., cap. 12.

Ver. 7. Before she travailed, she brought forth.] Quum nondum parturiret peperit; understand it of Zion, or of the Church Christian, which receiveth her children, that is, converts, suddenly on a cluster before she thought to have done, and in far greater numbers than she could ever have believed. {a} That lady that brought forth as many at a birth as are days in the year {b} was nothing to her: nor those Hebrew women. {#Ex 1:10}

She was delivered of a man child.] For the which there is so great joy, {#Joh 16:21} and which is usually more able and active than a woman child. So, good and bold Christians, strong in faith; unless he meaneth Christ himself, saith Diodat, who is formed by faith in every believer's heart. {#Ga 4:19}

{a} Subito ac simul. Suddenly and at the same time.

{b} Margaret, Countess of Henneburg.

Ver. 8. Who hath heard such a thing? who hath seen such things?] The birth of a man would seem a miracle, were it not so ordinary, miracula assiduitate vilescunt; but the birth of a whole nation at once, how much more!

Shall the earth be made to bring forth in one day?] Yes, if the day be long enough, as among the Hyperboreans, of whom it is written that they sow shortly after the sun rising, and reap before the sunset; because the whole half year is one continual day with them. {a} But the words here should be rather read, Can a land or a country be brought forth in one day? a nation be born at once? Cardinal Pool abused this scripture in a letter to Pope Julius III, applying it to the bringing in of Popery again here so universally and suddenly in Queen Mary's days. So he did also another, when at his first return hither from beyond sea, he blasphemously saluted the same Queen Mary with those words of the angel, "Hail, Mary, full of grace, the Lord is with thee."

Ver. 9. Shall I bring to the birth, and not cause to bring forth?] i.e., Shall I set upon a work and not go through with it? God began and finished his work of creation. Christ is both "author and finisher" of his people's faith. {#Heb 12:2} The Holy Ghost will sanctify the elect wholly, "and keep them blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." {#1Th 5:23} Nescit tarda molimina Spiritus Sancti gratia, saith Ambrose. Otherwise his power and mercy would not equally appear to his people in regeneration, as the power and mercy of the Father and the Son in creation and redemption.

Ver. 10. Rejoice ye with Jerusalem.] As friends use to do with her that is newly made a mother. {#Lu 1:58}

Rejoice for joy with her.] Out of the Church there is no solid joy. See #Ho 9:1. {See Trapp on "Ho 9:1"} Others may revel, the godly only rejoice; their joy is not that of the mouth, but of the heart— nec in labris nascitur sed fibris; it doth not only smooth the brow, but fills the breast; wet the mouth, but warm the heart, &c.

Ver. 11. That ye may suck, and be satisfied with the breasts of her consolations.] Zion is not only a fruitful mother, but a joyful nurse. God giveth her the blessings both of the belly and of the breasts; and these breasts of hers are full strutting with the sincere milk of the word, that rational milk, {#1Pe 2:2} the sweet and precious promises of the gospel. These "breasts of consolation" we must suck, as the babe doth the mother's dug, as long as he can get a drop out of it, and then sucks still till more cometh. Let us suck the blood of the promises, saith one, as a dog that hath got the blood of the bear—he hangs on, and will hardly be beaten off. Let us extort and oppress the promises, saith another, descanting upon this text, as a rich man oppresseth a poor man, and getteth out of him all that he hath; so deal thou with the promises, for they are rich—there is a price in them; consider it to the utmost, wring it out. The world layeth forth her two breasts, or botches rather, of profit and pleasure, and hath enough to suck them, though they can never thereby be satisfied. And shall alma mater Ecclesia, the nourishing mother of thye Church want those that shall milk out and be delighted with the abundance of her glory?

Ver. 12. Behold, I will extend peace to her.] This and the following promises are the delicious milk spoken of before—scil., pax copiosa et perennis, peace as a river, as the waters cover the sea; joy unspeakable and full of glory, God's fatherly care, motherly affection, &c., all that heart can wish, or need require.

Like a river.] As Euphrates, saith the Chaldee.

Like a flowing stream.] Or, Overflowing as Nile—

“ Qui cunctis omnibus extat Utilior.”—Claudian.

Ye shall be borne upon her side.] Humanissime et suavissime tractabimini, ye shall be borne in the Church’s arms, laid to her breasts, set in her lap, dandled on her knees, &c. Hac similitudine nihil fieri potest suavius. See #Nu 11:12.

Ver. 13. And as one whom his mother comforteth.] Her darling and dandling, especially when she perceiveth it to make a lip and to be displeased: mothers also are very kind to, and careful of, their children when they are grown to be men: {a} as Monica was to Augustine, and as Matres Hollandicae, the mothers in Holland, of whom it is reported, Quod prae aliis matribus mire filios suos etiam grandaevos ament, ideoque eos vocant et tractant ut pueros. See #Isa 46:4. {See Trapp on "Isa 46:6"}

{a} A. Lapide in #Isa 54:13.

Ver. 14. And when ye see this, your heart shall rejoice.] Videbitis, gaudebitis; you shall see that I do not give you good words only, but that I am in good earnest; ye shall know it within yourselves, in the workings of your own hearts. {as #Heb 10:34}

And your bones shall flourish like an herb,] i.e., They shall be filled again with moisture and marrow. See #Eze 37:10,11. You shall be fair liking and reflourish.

And the hand of the Lord,] i.e., His infinite power; tantum beneficiorum in piis operatrix, the efficient cause of all these comforts.

Ver. 15. For, behold, the Lord will come with fire.] With hell fire, say the Rabbis here; with the fire of the last day, say we, whereof his particular judgments are as pledges and preludes.

And with his chariots like a whirlwind.] As he did, when he sent forth his armies, the Romans, and destroyed those murderers, the Jews, and burnt up their city. {#Mt 22:7} And when they would have rebuilt their city and temple under Julian the apostate, who, in hatred to Christians, animated them thereunto, balls of fire broke forth from the earth, which marred their work, and destroyed many thousands of them.

Ver. 16. For with fire.] Than which nothing is more formidable.

And with his sword.] Which is no ordinary one. {#Isa 27:1}

Ver. 17. In the gardens.] Where these idolaters had set up altars, offered sacrifices, and had their ponds, wherein, when they were about to sacrifice, heathen like, they washed and purified themselves one after another, and not together, which they held to be the best way of purifying. This they did also, not apart and in private, but in the midst, ut hoc modo oculos in nudis lavantium, praesertim muliercularum, corporibus pascere, that they might feed their eyes with the sight of those parts which nature would have hid; for your pagan superstitions were oftentimes contrary to natural honesty.

{a}

Behind one tree in the midst.] Or, as others render it, After; or, Behind Ahad, which was the name of a Syrian idol, representing the sun, as Macrobius telleth us, calling him Adad. {b}

Ver. 18. For I know (or, I will punish) their works and their thoughts.] Or, Yea, their thoughts which they may think to be free. See #Jer 6:19.

It shall come to pass that I will gather.] It is easy to observe that this chapter consisteth of various passages interwoven the one within the other; of judgments to the wicked, of mercies and comforts to the godly, &c.

All nations and tongues.] A plain prophecy of the calling of the Gentiles to the kingdom of Christ; for which purpose the miraculous gift of tongues was bestowed upon the apostles.

And they shall come and see my glory, / i.e., In Christ, who is the brightness of his Father's glory; and in sending of whom the glory of his truth, wisdom, power, justice, and goodness shone forth as the sun at noon.

Ver. 19. And I will set a sign among them.] This sign may very well be that visible pouring out of the gifts of the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost, under the symbol of wind and fire, {#Ac 2:2-4} {a} together with the signs and wonders whereby the apostle's doctrine was confirmed. Others make this sign to be the profession of the Christian faith. Some also, the doctrine of the gospel, and especially the sacraments.

And I will send those that escape of them,] i.e., The apostles and their fellow helpers, such as were Barnabas, Silas, Luke, &c.

To Tarshish, Pul.] To all parts of the world, east, west, north, and south.

That draw the bow.] The Mosches or Muscovites, say the Septuagint; the Turks, saith one of the Rabbis. {See Trapp on "Re 9:15"} {See Trapp on "Re 9:16"} {See Trapp on "Re 9:17"}

{a} Scultet.

Ver. 20. And they shall bring all your brethren.] Now become all your brethren in Christ: Sanctior est copula cordis quam corporis, Religion is the strongest tie.

Upon horses, and in chariots, and in litters,] i.e., With much swiftness and sweetness; though sick, weakly, and unfit for travel, yet rather in litters than not at all. The apostles "became all things to all men, that they might gain them to Christ."

Ver. 20. And they shall bring all your brethren.] Now become all your brethren in Christ: Sanctior est copula cordis quam corporis, Religion is the strongest tie.

Upon horses, and in chariots, and in litters,] i.e., With much swiftness and sweetness; though sick, weakly, and unfit for travel, yet rather in litters than not at all. The apostles "became all things to all men, that they might gain them to Christ."

Ver. 21. And I will also take of them for priests and for Levites.] For evangelical pastors and teachers, who have a distinct function and employment in the Church of the New Testament, as the priests and Levites had in that of the Old, to teach, instruct, and edify God's people.

Ver. 22. For as the new heavens.] So shall there be a true Church and a ministry for the good of my people to the world's end. It shall not be taken away, as is the Jewish polity and hierarchy.

Ver. 23. And it shall come to pass, that from one new moon to another.] God shall be served with all diligence and delight. In the kingdom of Christ here, but especially in heaven, it shall be holiday all the week, as we say; a constant solemnity, a perpetual Sabbath. King Edgar ordained that the Lord's day should be kept here in England from Saturday nine of the clock till Monday morning. ^{a} The Ebionites kept the Saturday with the Jews, and the Sunday with the Christians. But here it is foretold—and we see it fulfilled—that all flesh, i.e., all the faithful, whether Jews or Gentiles, shall not only keep every day holiday, ^{#ICo 5:8} by resting from sin and rejoicing in God, but shall also, both "in season and out of season," have their Church meetings for holy services, worshipping God—from day to day, and from month to month, as the phrase is ^{#Es 3:7} -in spirit and in truth, and having the continual feast of a good conscience.

^{a} Acts and Mon.

Ver. 24. And they shall go forth and look upon the carcasses.] Rhetoricians tell us that in the introduction to a discourse τα ηθη milder affections, suit best to insinuate; but in the conclusion τα παθη, passionate passages, such as may leave a sting behind them and stick by the hearers. This art the prophet here useth, for being now to period his prophecy, he giveth all sorts to know what they shall trust to. The godly shall go forth, i.e., salvi evadent, liberi abibunt; they shall have safety here, and salvation hereafter. "They shall also look upon the carcasses," &c.; they shall be eye-witnesses of God's exemplary judgments executed on the wicked, that would not have Christ to reign over them, ^{#Re 19:21} who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the glory of the Lord and from the presence of his power. ^{#2Th 1:9} This the righteous shall "see, and fear, and laugh at them," ^{#Ps 52:6} giving God the glory of his justice and goodness. Some think they shall have at the last day a real sight of hell, and the damned there, ^{#Re 14:10} and this may very well be. Oh that wicked men would in their daily meditations take a turn or two in hell, and so be forewarned to flee from the wrath to come! Is it nothing to have the worm of conscience ever grabbing upon their entrails, and the fire of God's vengeance feeding upon their souls and flesh throughout all eternity? Oh that sternity of extremity! Think of it seasonably and seriously, that ye never suffer it. The Jewish masters {a} have, in some copies, wholly left out this last verse, as in other copies they repeat—both here and in the end of Ecclesiastes, Lamentations, and Malachi—the last verse save one, which is more sweet and fuller of comfort; and that for this reason, that the reader may not be sent away sad, and so fall into desperation. But of that there is no such danger, since most people are over slight in their thoughts of hell torments, regarding them no more than they do a fire painted on the wall, or a serpent wrought in arras. And besides, non sinit in Gehennam incidere, Gehennae meminisse, saith Chrysostom: to remember hell, is a good means to preserve us from it. This verse hath sufficient authority from our Saviour's citing of it. {#Mr 9:44} {See Trapp on "Mr 9:44"} Plato {b} also—if that be anything—in his description of hell, which he calleth πυριφλεγετων, a fiery lake, saith the same as here—that their worm dieth not, neither is their fire quenched. He might possibly have read Isaiah as he had done Moses. It is thought, Laertius telleth us, that he travelled into Egypt, where he conversed with some Hebrews, and learned much of them. {c}

And they shall be an abhorring to all flesh,] i.e., All good men abominate them now as so many living ghosts, walking carcasses, {#Eph 2:2 Pr 29:27} and shall much more at the last day, when they shall arise again to everlasting shame and contempt. {#Da 12:2}

Jeremiah

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. The words ^{a} of Jeremiah.] Piscator rendereth it Acta Ieremiae, The Acts of Jeremiah, as we say, "The Acts of the Apostles," which book also, saith one, might have been called in some sense The Passions of the Apostles, who were for the testimony of Jesus "in deaths often." And the same we may safely say of Jeremiah, who, although he were not omnis criminis per totam vitam expers -which yet great Athanasius ^{b} affirmeth of him—that is, free from all fault, for he had his outbursts, and himself relateth them, yet he was Iudaeorum integerrimus -as of Phocion it is said that he was Atheniensium integerrimus -a man of singular sanctimony and integrity; good of a little child, a young saint, and an old angel; an admirable preacher, as Keckerman ^{c} rightly calleth him, and propoundeth him for a pattern to all preachers of the gospel. Nevertheless, this incomparable prophet proved to be a man of many sorrows, πολυπαθεστατος, as Isidor Pelusiot, ^{d} a most calamitous person, as appeareth by this book, and one that had his share in sufferings from, and fellow sufferings with, his ungrateful countrymen, as much as might be. Nazianzen saith most truly of him, that he was the most compassionate of all the prophets; ^{e} witness that pathetical wish of his, #Jer 9:1-3, "Oh that my head were waters," &c.; and that holy resolve, #Jer 13:17, "But if ye will not hear it, my soul shall weep in secret places for your pride, and mine eye shall weep sore and run down with tears, because the Lord's flock is carried away captive." It was this good man's unhappiness to be a physician to a dying state—

“Tunc etenim docta plus valet arte malum.”

Long time he had laboured among this perverse people, but to very small purpose, as himself complaineth, ^{#Jer 27:13,14} after Isaiah, ^{#Isa 49:4} whom he succeeded in his office as a prophet, some scores of years between, ^{f} but with little good success. For as in a dying man his eyes wax dim, and all his senses decay, till at length they are utterly lost, so fareth it with commonwealths, quando suis fatis urgentur, when once they are ripe for ruin; the nearer they draw to destruction, the more they are overgrown with blindness, madness, security, obstinace, such as despiseth all remedies, and leaveth no place at all for wholesome advice and admonition. Lo, this was the case of those improbi et reprobi -"reprobate silver shall men call them" {#Jer 6:30} -with whom our prophet had to do. Moses had not more to do with the Israelites in the wilderness than Jeremiah had with these "stiffnecked and uncircumcised in heart and ears," {#Ac 7:51} as good at "resisting the Holy Ghost" as ever their fathers were. The times were not unlike those described by Tacitus, concerning which Casaubon saith, Quibus nulla unquam aut virtutum steriliora, aut virtutibus inimiciora, that no times were ever more barren of virtues, or greater enemies to virtues. And to say sooth, how could they be much better, when the book of the law was wanting for over sixty years, and the whole land overspread with the deeds of darkness? Josiah indeed, that good young king—by the advice of this prophet Jeremiah, who was younger than himself, but both full of zeal {g} -did what he could to reform both Church and state, but he, alas! could not do it; the Reformation in his days was forced by him, and their was foul work in secret, as appeareth by Zephaniah, who was our prophet's contemporary; it met with much opposition both from princes, priests, and people, who all had been woefully habituated and hardened in their idolatry under Manasseh and Ammon. Unto which also, and other abominations not a few they soon relapsed when once Josiah was taken away, and his successors proved to be such as countenanced and complied with the people in all their impieties and excesses. This prophet therefore was stirred up by God to oppose the current of the times and the torrent of vices; to call them to repentance, and to threaten the seventy years' captivity, which because they believed not, neither returned unto the Lord, came upon them accordingly, as is set forth in the end of this prophecy. Whence Procopius, Isidor and others, have gathered that, besides this prophecy and the Lamentations, Jeremiah wrote the first and second book of Kings. {h} But that is as uncertain as that he was stoned to death by the Jews in Egypt, or that the Egyptians afterwards built him an honourable sepulchre, and resorted much unto it for devotion sake; whenas R. Solomon thinketh, from #Jer 44:28, that Jeremiah together with Baruch, returned out of Egypt unto Judea, and there died.

The son of Hilkiah.] The high priest who found the book of the law, say the Chaldee paraphrast and others; but many think otherwise, and the prophet himself addeth,

Of the priests that were at Anathoth.] "Poor Anathoth," {#Isa 10:30} renowned as much by Jeremiah as little Hippo was afterwards by great Augustine, bishop there. The Targum tells us that Jeremiah was one of the twenty-four chieftains of the temple. {i} A priest he was, and so an ordinary teacher, before he acted as a prophet; but his countrymen of Anathoth evil entreated him.

In the land of Benjamin.] Some three miles from Jerusalem.

Ver. 2. Unto whom the word of the Lord came in the days of Josiah.] Woe be to the world because of the word! The Lord keepeth count what preachers he sendeth, what pains they take, and how long, to how little purpose they preach unto a people. He saith that it was "The word of the Lord," for authority sake, and that none might despise his youth, since he was sent by the "Ancient of days."

In the thirteenth year of his reign.] Eighteen years then he prophesied under good Josiah, who was to blame, doubtless, in not sending to advise with this or some other prophet before he went forth against Pharaohnecho; sometimes both grace and wit are asleep in the holiest and wariest breasts.

Ver. 3. It came also in the days of Jehoiakim.] Called at first Eliakim by his good father Josiah, from whom he degenerated, cutting Jeremiah's roll with a penknife and burning it, {#Jer 36:23} at which his father's heart would have melted. {#2Ch 34:27}

Unto the end of the eleventh year of Zedekiah.] Jehoahaz and Jehoiakim are not mentioned, because their reign was so short, hardly half a year. By this computation it appeareth that Jeremiah prophesied forty years at least. And the Holy Ghost setteth a special mark (as a reverend writer ^{a} hath well observed) upon those forty years of his prophesying, ^{#Eze 4:6} where, when the Lord summeth up the years that were between the falling away of the ten tribes and the burning of the temple, three hundred and ninety in all, and counteth them by the prophet's lying so many days upon his left side, he bids him to lie forty days upon his right side, and bear the iniquity of the house of Judah forty days, a day for a year. Not to signify that it was forty years above three hundred and ninety between the revolt of the ten tribes and the captivity of Judah (for it was but three hundred and ninety exactly in all), but because he would set and mark out Judah's singular iniquity by a singular mark; for that they had forty years so pregnant instructions and admonitions by so eminent a prophet, and yet were impenitent to their own destruction.

Unto the carrying away of Jerusalem.] He thought, belike, when he prefixed this title, that he should have prophesied no more, when once Jerusalem was carried captive; but it proved otherwise, for he prophesied after that in Egypt; ^{#Jer 44:24} yet not forty years also after the captivity, as the Jews have fabled. Nor is it so certain that for that prophecy he was slain by Pharaohophra (whom Herodotus ^{b} calleth Apryes, and saith he was a very proud prince), as some have reported.

^{a} Lightfoot's Harmony: Chron. of Old Test.

^{b} Lib. ii. in fine.

Ver. 4. Then the word of the Lord came unto me.] The Lord is said to come to Baalam, Abimelech, Laban, &c.; but he never concredited his word to any but to his holy prophets, of whom it is said, as here, "The word of the Lord came to them."

Ver. 5. Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee,] viz., With a knowledge not intuitive only, but also approbative. Verba notitiae apud Hebraeos secum trahunt affectum.

I sanctified thee.] Infusing grace into thy heart—as afterwards also into the Baptist’s {#Lu 1:15} -and setting thee apart in my secret purpose to this sacred office of a prophet, as afterwards also God did Paul to the apostleship. {#Ga 1:15}

And I ordained thee a prophet.] Magna semper fecerunt qui Deo vocante docuerunt, saith Luther. They have always done great things, whom God hath called to teach his people; quod est contra eos qui Ecclesiam ruituram putant nisi et ipsi doceant, saith Oecolampadius. This text maketh against such as think that the Church must needs suffer, unless they (though uncalled) turn teachers.

Unto the nations,] i.e., First, To the Jews, qui fere in Gentiles evaserant, who were little better than Gentiles; so papagans are called pagans. {#Re 11:2} Secondly, To foreigners, of and to whom he prophesied. {#Jer 44:30 46:1 47:1 48:1 49:1 50:1} Thirdly, To people of all times, who may and must be instructed by this book; which is such as was highly set by, and cited in the Old Testament by Daniel, Ezekiel, Nehemiah, Ezra, Obadiah (who taketh most of his prophecy out of him); as in the New by our Saviour, {#Mt 21:5,9,13,16,33,42 Mr 11:9,10,17} Matthew the Evangelist, {#Mt 2:6,18} Paul; {#2Co 6:2,16-18 10:17 Heb 8:5,8-12 10:5-10,16,17,30,37,38} John the divine. {#Re 2:6-8 15:3,4}

Ver. 6. Then said I, Ah, Lord God!] Verbum angustiae. The old Latin hath it A, A, A, whereby is noted, say some, a threefold defect—scil., of age, of knowledge, and of eloquence; but that is more subtle than solid. True worth is ever modest; and the more fit any man is for whatsoever vocation, the less he thinketh himself; forwardness argueth insufficiency.

Behold, I cannot speak.] Heb., I know not to speak, i.e., aright, and as I ought. Tanto negotio tam instructum oratorem me non agnosco. Jeremiah was an excellent speaker, as well appeareth by these ensuing homilies of his, which show that he was suaviter gravis, et graviter suavis (as one saith of Basil), a grave and sweet preacher, one that could deliver his mind fitly, and dared to do it freely. Hence some of the Jews judged our Saviour to have been Jeremiah propter dicendi agendique gravitatem et parrhesian, for his gravity and freedom of speech. Nevertheless Jeremiah, in his own opinion, "cannot speak"; that is, was no way fit to speak. So Moses is at it with his "Who am I?," {#Ex 3:11} whereas none in all Egypt was comparably fit for such an embassy. It was a usual saying of Luther, Etsi iam senex, et in concionando exercitus sum, &c. Although I am now an old man, and an experienced preacher, yet I tremble as oft as I go up into the pulpit.

For I am a child.] Epiphanius saith that Jeremiah was not even over fourteen or fifteen when he began to prophesy. Samuel also, and Daniel, began very young. So did Timothy, Origen, Cornelius Mus, a famous preacher, say his fellow Jesuites, at eleven years of age. Archbishop Ussher was converted at ten years old, preached early, and so continued to do for sixty years, or nearly so. {a} Mr Beza was likewise converted at sixteen years old (for the which, as for a special mercy, he giveth God thanks in his last will and testament), and lived a preacher in Geneva to a very great age.

{a} His Life and Death, by Dr Bern.

Ver. 7. Say not, I am a child.] Plead no excuses, cast no perils; never dispute, but despatch; never reason, but run, {a} depending for direction and success upon God alone, in whom are all our fresh springs, and from whom is all our sufficiency, &c. Paul was a most unlikely piece of wood to make what he was afterwards called, a Mercury, {#Ac 14:12} yet God made use of him. {#Ac 9:13-15}

For thou shalt go to all that I shall send thee.] Whether kings or captives, lords or losels. He preached before Jehoiakim concerning the office of a king, and threatened him with the burial of an ass; {#Jer 22:18,19 36:30} he dealt plainly with the princes who beat him, and with the priests who stocked him with all sorts, to his great cost; he was a heroic and unexpugnable spirit; so are not many in these times, Verbi Dei truncatores et emasculatores, men pleasing preachers.

{a} God loveth not quarists, but currists, said Luther.

Ver. 8. Be not afraid of their faces.] Look they never so big, as did Henry VIII upon Latimer and upon Lambert, who yet told him his own; as did Stephen Gardiner upon Dr Taylor, martyr, but had as good as he brought. {a} The majesty of a man, as also his wrath, showeth itself in his countenance; and young men especially are apt to be baffled and dashed with fierce looks.

For I am with thee to deliver thee.] On one sort or another; thy crown, be sure, no man shall take from thee; thy perpetual triumph thou shalt not lose.

{a} Acts and Mon.

Ver. 9. Then the Lord put forth his hand and touched my mouth.] This was a very great favour and a sweet settlement to the hesitating prophet. The like visible sign for confirmation was given to Isaiah; {#Isa 6:7} to Ezekiel; {#Eze 2:8 3:2,3} and to John the divine; {#Re 10:10} how much are we bound to God for his word and sacraments?

Behold, I have put my words in thy mouth.] And in thy mind also, together with good courage for the better uttering of them. Fear not, therefore, though thou be, as thou objectest, infantissimus et infirmissimus; but "go in this my might," and preach lustily.

Ver. 10. See, I have this day set thee over nations,] scil., With authority to use the same liberty in reprovng their sins that they take in committing them. Fear not the highest (for I have set thee over them), but look upon them as so many mice; for what are they more in comparison of me and of thee, who hast from me thy mission and commission? zeal in well doing showeth a man to be right, like as such are living fish as swim against the stream.

To root out, and to pull down,] i.e., To denounce destruction to evildoers, and then I will effect it. Elisha hath his sword, as well as Hazael or Jehu, {#1Ki 19:17} and vengeance for the disobedient is every whit as ready in God's hands as in his minister's mouth. {#2Co 10:6} See #Ho 6:5. {See Trapp on "Ho 6:5"} #Joh 20:23. But what a mercy of God to the Church was it that the same day that Pelagius, that arch-heretic, was born in Britain, Augustine, the great confuter of that heretic, should be born in Africa—Providence so disposing that the poison and the antidote should come into world together. {a}

To build, and to plant.] As a co-worker with God for the good of souls, by preaching Christ unto them, as this prophet doth notably in a most divine and stately strain, setting him forth in his coming, covenant, offices, benefits, &c., as the only foundation and lively root of hope.

{a} Dempster, Hist. Scot.

Ver. 11. Jeremiah, what seest thou?] It was great kindness and familiarity thus to parley with him, and to call him by his name.

And I said, I see a rod of an almond tree.] Which hath its name in Hebrew from watching, because it watcheth, as it were, to bud and bear before other trees, even in the deep of winter, and when it is at coldest. Hereby the prophet is animated, though but young, and assured that he shall have the fruit of his so early labours. God careth not for those arbores autumnales {#Jude 12} trees which bud not till the latter end of harvest. The truth of all his predictions is designed, though little believed by the most; the speediness also of their performance, {#Jer 1:12 Eze 7:10,11} a good comment upon this text. The sins of God's people, saith one, are sooner ripe than of the heathens, because they have the constant light and heat of his Word to hasten their maturity. This was typified by the basket of summer fruits, and by the almond tree in this text. As the almond tree, saith another, hath a bitter rind, but a sweet kernel, so hath affliction sanctified; and again, as the almond tree is made more fruitful by driving nails into it, letting out a noxious gum that hindereth the fruitfulness thereof, so is a good man made better by afflictions. {a}

Ver. 12. Thou hast well seen.] Heb., Thou hast done well to see, i.e., so to see.

For I will hasten my word.] Heb., Amigdalaturus sum, I am watching upon the evil, to bring in the Chaldeans, as I have threatened. See the like elegant allusion, #Am 8:1,2. Nemesis a tergo; punishment is at the heels of sin.

Ver. 13. What seest thou?] By these questions his attention is stirred up, that he may the better observe the matter of his preaching, which is here represented by a second vision.

I see a seething pot.] Heb., Ollam ebullitam, A pot blown up. This boiling pot is Jerusalem besieged by the Chaldeans, and we are the flesh, say those deriders of this prophecy of Jeremiah; {#Eze 11:3} but they found it to be just so shortly after. And then their profane hearers might well have bespoke them, as the heart of Apollodorus the tyrant seemed to say to him, who dreamed one night that he was flayed by the Scythians and boiled in a caldron; and that his heart spake to him out of the kettle, Εγω σοι τούτων αιτια, It is I that have drawn thee to all this.

And the face thereof, / i.e., That part of the pot that is next the fire, and heated therewith.

Ver. 14. Out of the north an evil shall break forth, / i.e., From Chaldea, which is north from Judea. Gregory moraliseth the text thus: Man's mind is this pot; that which from the north sets it on fire is the devil, by inflaming it with evil lusts, and then he sets up his throne therein. {a} As,

Ver. 15. And set every one his throne.] Judging such as in those very gates had unjustly judged others. See this performed, #2Ki 24:4 25:6 Jer 52:9

Ver. 16. And I will utter my judgments against them, / sc., By those northern princes. But first by thee, and Zephaniah, and Huldah, &c., if haply they will repent, that I may repent of the evil. God therefore threateneth that he may not punish.

Who have forsaken me, and burnt incense.] These sins differ in degrees, and are all found among the Papists.

Ver. 17. Thou therefore gird up thy loins, / q.d., Thou hast, I must needs say, a hard task of it. But hard or not hard, it must be done, {a} or thou art undone. About it therefore and play the man, plucking up thy best heart, as we say, and acting vigorously. Stir up the gifts of God that are in thee, and exercise thy talents committed unto thee. Verbi minister es: hoc age.

Be not dismayed at their faces, lest.] Ne conteritor, ne te conteram. {b} Be not afraid of them, lest I fright thee worse, to thy ruth and utter ruin. Excellently Bernard, If I deal not faithfully with you, you will be damnified, but I shall be damned. Let me suffer anything rather than be guilty of a sinful silence, said that heroic

Luther. But Melanchthon, his colleague, was so timorous, that Luther was fain to chide him many times. And Calvin, in an epistle of his to John Sleidan, prayeth God to furnish him with a more noble spirit, ne gravem ex eius timiditate iacturam sentiat posteritas, lest posterity should rue for his timidity. Calvin himself, in his last speech to his fellow ministers on his death bed, speaketh thus: When I first came to this city (Geneva), the gospel indeed was here preached, but things were very far out of order, as if Christianity consisted wholly in the casting down of images, &c. There were also not a few wicked fellows who put me hard to, setting themselves against me to their utmost. But the Lord our good God did so steel me and strengthen me, who am naturally fearful and dastardly, that I stoutly withstood them, and went on with the work of reformation; to his glory alone be it spoken. {c} Melanchthon also admired that courage in Luther that he could not find in himself; for besides many passages of his in his epistles that way tending, one time when he saw Luther's picture, he uttered this verse immediately,

“Fulminia erant linguae singulae verba tuae.”

{a} Perquam difficile est, sed ita lex iubet.

{b} Antanaclasis.

{c} Melc. Ad. in Vit. Calvin, p. 106.

Ver. 18. For, behold, I have made thee this day a defenced city,] i. e., Impregnable, inexpugnable, the bulwark of truth, {a} as one said of Basil, such as could not be battered. And of Ambrose Stilico the earl said, that he was the walls of Italy. Peter and John are called pillars; {#Ga 2:9} Athanasius the Church's champion, “Ille velut pelagi rupes immota resistis.”—Virg.

Against the kings of Judah, against the princes, &c.] There was a general defection of all sorts; and Jeremiah was to declaim against them all, and proclaim their utter destruction in case they repented not. Well might Luther say, for he had the sad experience of it, Praedicare nihil aliud est quam totius mundi furorem in se derivare, To preach is nothing else but to derive upon a man's self the rage of all the world. He met with some even at Wittenberg, where he lived, who were so wicked and uncounsellable, that the four elements could not endure them. {b} So did good Jeremiah, &c.

{a} της ἀληθείας προβολον.

{b} Ut iam quatuor elementa ferre nequeant.

Ver. 19. They shall not prevail against me.] They shall not take thy crown from thee, no, nor thy precious life; for thou shalt survive them. So Luther died in his bed, defying the malice of Rome and of hell.

For I am with thee.] And what can all the wicked do against one minister armed with God's presence and power?

Chapter 2

Ver. 1. Moreover, the word of the Lord came to me, saying.] The prophet being thus called and confirmed, {as #Jer 1} sets forthwith upon the work. Est autem hoc caput plenum querelae, et quasi continuum pathos. In this chapter the Lord heavily complaineth of Jerusalem's unworthy usage of him, convincing them thereof by sixteen different arguments, as A Lapidè hath observed; and all little enough; for they put him to his proofs, as is to be seen. {#Jer 2:35}

Ver. 2. Go thou and cry.] For if I myself should do it immediately from heaven, my stillest rhetoric would be too loud for them. {#De 5:27,28}

I remember thee.] Who hast forgot thy first love and loyalty to me. Or, "I remember," that is, I put thee in mind of the kindness that hath been between us. Augustus might have some such meaning in those last words of his to his wife when he lay a dying, 'O Livia, remember our marriage, and adieu.' It is thought she had a hand in setting him going, and that she was too familiar with Eudemus the physician. Qui specie artis frequens secretis, saith Tacitus. Peccatum est deicidium.

The kindness of thy youth.] When thou camest out of Egypt after me, and wast espoused unto me at the giving of the law. We use highly to prize nettle buds when they first put forth, so doth God our young services. Others render it thus: I record the mercy showed to thee in thy youth, and the love of thy espousals—sc., whenas I loved thee because I loved thee, and for no other reason. {#De 7:7,8}

When thou wentest after me in the wilderness.] God takes it kindly when men will choose him, and his ways in affliction, as did Moses. {#Heb 11:25} "Who is this that cometh from the wilderness"—from troubles and afflictions—"leaning on her beloved?" {#So 8:5}

Ver. 3. Israel was holiness unto the Lord.] A people consecrated and set apart for his peculiar; {#Ex 19:5 Ps 114:2} holy with a federal holiness at least.

And the firstfruits of his increase.] Yea, his "firstborn," and therefore, "higher than the kings of the earth." {#Ps 89:27} All God's people are so. {#Heb 12:23 Jas 1:18}

All that devour them shall offend.] Rather thus: All that devoured them trespassed—evil befell them; witness the four latter books of Moses.

Ver. 4. Hear ye the word of the Lord.] This is often inculcated in both Testaments, to procure attention. "I received of the Lord, that which also I delivered unto you." {#1Co 11:23} "This we say unto you by the word of the Lord." {#1Th 4:15} Thus to preach, is to preach cum privilegio, with authority.

Ver. 5. What iniquity have your fathers found in me?] How unreasonable was their apostasy! and how senseless is your pleading from their example! Nothing is more irrational than irreligion.

That they are gone far from me.] Are ye weary of receiving so many benefits by one man? said Themistocles to his ungrateful countrymen.

And have walked after vanity.] An idol is nothing at all, but only in the vain opinion of the idolater.

And are become vain,] scil., " In their imaginations"; {#Ro 1:21} as vain as their very idols. {#Ps 115:8}

Ver. 6. Neither said they.] In their minds, or with their mouths. That signal deliverance was obliterated, and even lost upon them. Plerique omnes sumus ingrati. {a}

Through a land of deserts and of pits.] Per terrain campestrum et sepulchralem, where we talked of making our graves; neither was it any otherwise likely, but that God gave us pluviam escatilem et petram aquatilem, {b} all manner of necessaries.

{a} Cicero.

{b} Tertul.

Ver. 7. And I brought you into a plentiful country.] You lived in my good land, but not by my good laws; you had aequissima iura, sed iniquissima ingenia, most just laws but most foul nature, as was said of the Athenians; as if I had hired you to be wicked, so have you abused my mercies to my greatest dishonour.

Ver. 8. The priests said not, {a} Where is the Lord?] Ignorant they were, and idle. They would not be at the pains of a serious inquisition after God and his will; though he be a "rewarder of all that diligently seek him." {#Heb 11:6}

And they that handled the law.] That expounded and applied it. A metaphor from such as are trained in the war, who are said tractate bellum, to handle their arms.

The pastors also transgressed against me.] What marvel, therefore, that the people did so too? For, as in a fish, the corruption of it beginneth at the head; so here.

And the prophets prophesied by Baal.] And taught others to worship idols. We see then, it is nothing new that stars fall from heaven, that church chieftains should fall from God, and draw others after them. It went for a proverb, a little before Luther stirred, Qui theologum seholasticum videt, videt septem peccata mortalia, He that seeth a divine, seeth the seven deadly sins.

Ver. 9. I will yet plead with you,] i.e., Debate the case with you, and set you down by sound reason. So he did to our first parents when they had sinned; but doomed the serpent without any more ado.

Ver. 10. For pass over the isles of Chittim.] The western parts of the world—Greece, Italy, Cyprus, &c.

And send unto Kedar.] The eastern parts, where dwell Kedarens, Arabians, Saracens, &c.

Ver. 11. Hath a nation changed their gods?] No; they are too pertinacious in their superstitions. Xenophon saith it was an oracle of Apollo, that those gods are rightly worshipped which were delivered them by their ancestors; and this he greatly applaudeth. Cicero also saith, that no reason shall ever prevail with him to relinquish the religion of his forefathers. That monarch of Morocco told an English ambassador, that he had lately read St Paul, and that he disliked nothing in him but this, that he had changed his religion.

{a}

Which yet are no gods.] Sed hominum figmenta et ludibria daemonum. But are the invention of men and mockery of demons. When Hercules came into a temple, and found the image or statue of Adonis in it, he pulled it down with this expression, Certe nil sacri es, Sure thou art no god; the like may be said of all idols.

But my people have changed their glory,] i.e., Their God, of whom they might glory, saying, {as #De 32:31} "Their rock is not as our rock, our enemies themselves being judges."

{a} Heyl., Cosmography.

Ver. 12. Be astonished, O heavens!] A poetic and pathetic expression. Compare #De 32:1 Isa 1:2.

Be horribly afraid.] Horripilamini portento malitiae, quod iam dicturus sum; be aghast at such a prodigious wickedness.

Be very desolate.] As the sun seemed to be, when at the death of Christ he hid his head in a mantle of black, which made, they say, {a} the heathen astrologer break out into these words, Either the God of nature suffereth, or else the world is at an end.

{a} Dionys.

Ver. 13. For my people have committed two evils.] Contrary to those two good things that I have commanded them, viz., "Depart from evil, and do good." {#Ps 34:14} Lust doth first ἐξέλκειν, draw a man from God, and then it doth δολοῦν, deceive him with a bait of the creature. {#Jas 1:14}

They have forsaken me, the fountain of living water.] The all-sufficient, ever-flowing, over-flowing well spring of all welfare. {#Jas 1:17} Trismegist, a heathen, could say, {a} Respicite O mortales, et respiscite, et ad fontem vitae recurrite, Look back, O mortals, and repent, and run back again to the fountain of life. Seneca also saith, that sin is so foul a thing, that he would not commit it, though he could hide it from men, and get pardon of it of God; for that were to turn his back upon God, the chief good, &c. How well might Bullinger {b} say, that Seneca alone had left to posterity more sincere divinity than all the books of almost all the schoolmen.

And hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns.] Such, and no better, are all idols, human helps, creature comforts, friends, means, merits, &c.; what are they all but cisterns, that hold but muddy rainwater at best? but then, being broken cisterns, riven vessels, what hold they else but limum et lapides, mud and gravel? Such cisterns, therefore, to hew out, what is it better than industrious folly, laborious loss of time? to say no worse of it. Now

“ *Turpe est difficiles habere nugas:
Et stultus labor est ineptiarum.* ”

{a} Dialog. 7.

{b} Comment. in #Ro 1:19. So little reason was there that Alex. Hales should be called first Fons vitae, font of life, and then Doctor Irrefragabilis, irresistible teacher.

Ver. 14. Is Israel a servant?] sc., Bought with money. {a}

Is he a homeborn slave?] Verna, a slave by birth; q.d., if he be either of the two, he may thank himself. He was my son, nay, my spouse, if he could have kept him so; but he hath sold himself to commit wickedness, and I have therefore sold him into the hands of the Chaldeans. Lo! this is the product of his forsaking me, the fountain of living waters, &c.

{a} Servus empticius, purchased slave.

Ver. 15. The young lions roared upon him, and yelled, / i.e., The King of Babylon and his forces, more fierce and fell than young lions. Would any take the Church's picture? saith Luther; {a} then let him paint a silly, poor maid, sitting in a wood or wilderness, compassed about with hungry lions, wolves, boars, and bears; for this is her condition in the world.

And they made his land waste, / i.e., They shall shortly so make it.

Ver. 16. Also the children of Noph and Tahapanes.] Two chief cities of Egypt, the inhabitants whereof were said to be most effeminate and servile fellows; {a} even these shall overtop thee, knock thee down, as an ox by a blow on the brain pan, and make havoc of those things that thou holdest the chiefest and most desirable.

{a} Herodot., lib. ii.

Ver. 17. Hast thou not procured this to thyself?] The same may the Lord say to every sufferer: and further add, "Did not I warn you, saying, Sin not against the child?" {#Ge 42:22} Oh, do not this abominable thing! your iniquities will undoubtedly be your ruin, &c.

When he led thee by the way.] The way that is called holy, the highway to heaven; fitly here opposed to those byways of carnal wisdom, mentioned in the following verses.

Ver. 18. And now what hast thou to do in the way of Egypt?] Why trusteth thou to carnal combinations, which thou hast formerly found to lack in success? wilt thou never be warned of these broken cisterns? or hast thou a mind to be ground to powder between those two millstones of Egypt and Assyria, after whom thou hankerest? #Ps 146:3, David having entered a caveat against creature confidence, persuades people to trust in God alone. See also #Ps 62:8-10.

To drink the waters of Sihor, / i.e., Of Nile, called Sihor, of its blackness or muddiness; {a} and in Greek, Μελας, black. To drink the waters of it here is to draw the Egyptian forces to thine assistance, and, as some think, to partake with them in their superstitions.

To drink of the water of the river, / i.e., Of Euphrates, that river by an eminence.

{a} Limosus est Nilus et oblimat Aegyptum.

Ver. 19. Thine own wickedness shall correct thee.] Erudiat te malitia tua; let thine own wickedness, with the sad consequents thereof, teach thee better things. {as #Jer 6:8} Let it for shame, let it παθων δε τε νηποις εγνω, let smart make wit. {#Isa 28:19 Pr 29:15}

Know therefore, and see.] Learn at least by sad experience, for thou hast paid for thy learning. Piscator ictus sapiet.

That it is an evil thing and bitter.] So all sin will prove in the issue, and when the bottom of the bag is turned upward. There will be "bitterness in the end," as Abner said to Joab. {#2Sa 2:26} Laban will show himself at parting howsoever. Tamar will be more hated than ever she was loved: Amor, amarior; plus aloes quam mellis habet.

“Laeta venire Venus, tristis abire solet.”

Drunkenness is sweet, but wormwood is bitter. These inhabitants of Jerusalem were made drunk, but with wormwood; {#La 3:15} they found that sin was a Dulc-aclum, {a} a bitter sweet—sweet in the mouth, but bitter in the maw, {stomach} as that book in the Revelation; like Adam’s apple, or Esau’s pottage, or Jonathan’s honey, or Judas’s thirty pieces, whereof he would fain have been rid, but could not; they burned like a spark of hell fire in his hand, but especially in his conscience. The devil, with the panther, hideth his deformed head till the sweet scent have drawn other beasts into his danger, and then he devoureth them. Did we but consider what sin will cost us at last, we dare not but be innocent.

Ver. 20. For of old time I have broken thy yoke.] Or, For when of old I broke thy yoke, &c.—sc., in Egypt; {#Ps 81:5,6,10} while the deliverance was fresh, thou hadst very good resolutions.

And thou saidst, I will not transgress.] Or, I will not serve, sc., other gods. Good words, hadst thou been as good as thy word. But what followeth?

When upon every high hill, and under every green tree, &c.] No sooner did her old heart and her old temptations meet, but they presently fell into mutual embraces. When men have made good vows, let them be as careful to make good their vows unto the Lord.
{#Ps 76:11}

Thou wanderest, playing the harlot.] Thou runnest to madding and gadding after idols, εἰδωλομανης.

Ver 21. Yet I had planted thee a noble vine.] Heb., A sorek, or with slips of sorek. {#Jud 16:4} See #Isa 5:3, a parallel text; #Ex 15:17 Ps 44:3 80:9.

Wholly a right seed.] That should have yielded a right crop, but it proveth otherwise. Nec votis respondet avari agricolae.

How then art thou turned into the degenerate plant?] How is it that slips of sorek prove slips of Sodom? {#De 32:32} See on #Isa 5:4,7.

Ver. 22. For though thou wash thee with nitre.] Much used of old by fullers and neat laundresses, say Isidore and Athanasius, {a} now not known in these parts; apothecaries use saltpetre instead of it. Sin leaveth behind it a deep stain, so ingrained that it will hardly ever be gotten out, not at all by blanching, extenuating, excusing, &c., or by any legal purifications, hypocritical lotions. All which notwithstanding,

Thine iniquity is marked before me.] Nitet iniquitas tua, splendet instar auri, {b} It glisters like gold before me, whose eyes thou canst not blind or blear with any of thy colourable pretexts and pretences.

Ver. 23. How canst thou say, I am not polluted?] q.d., With what face? but that sin hath woaded an impudence in thy face.

I have not gone after Baalim.] The whole crew of heathen deities—lords or masters, the word signifieth—which Cicero ^{a} saith were but men; their temples were their sepulchres, and their religion superstition. He further wisheth that he could as easily discern the true religion as discover the false.

See thy way in the valley.] Of Ben-Hinnom, where thou hast sacrificed thy children to Moloch, thy chief Baal—that is, say some, to the sun, as to the universal cause, strongly concurring to the generation of their children so sacrificed. ^{b}

Thou art a swift dromedary.] That runneth amadding after her mate; so dost thou after idols. Compare #1Co 12:2.

^{a} De Nat. Deor.

Ver. 24. A wild ass used to the wilderness.] Untameable and untractable, ^{#Job 39:8} especially when proud and in the heat of lust, as these were after their idols.

That snuffeth up the wind.] When she windeth the male; so this people when acted by a spirit of fornications.

In her month they shall find her, / i.e., In her last month, when she is so big with young that she cannot wield herself. So sinners, be they never so stubborn, so stiff and high in the instep, that there is no dealing with them, yet when they are in straits and distresses it will be otherwise. God, said Mr Marbury, is fain to deal with wicked men, as men do with frisking jades in a pasture, that cannot be taken up till gotten to a gate; so till he seize upon them by some judgment or summons to die, &c.

Ver. 25. Withhold thy foot from being unshod, &c.] Cease thy vain vagaries to the wearing out of thy shoes, and exposing thyself to extreme thirst; or rather take a timely course to prevent captivity, and the miseries that attend it. ^{#Isa 20:2,4 47:2}

But thou saidst, There is no hope,] viz., Of reclaiming us; we are resolved on our course, and will take our swing in sin whatsoever come of it. {#Isa 28:14,15 57:10} Some grow desperately sinful, saith a reverend modern writer, {a} like those Italian senators that, despairing of their lives, when upon submission they had been promised their lives, yet being conscious of their villany made a curious banquet, and at the end thereof, every man drank up his glass of poison and killed himself; so men, feeling such horrible hard hearts, and privy to such notorious sins, they cast away souls and all for lust, and so perish woefully, because they lived desperately and so securely.

{a} Mr Shepherd's Sincere Convert, 222.

Ver. 26. As the thief is ashamed when he is found.] As usually he is at length, notwithstanding all his sleights and wiles. That was a cunning thief indeed of whom Dio writeth in the life of Severus. Bulas he calleth him, an Italian, who having gotten together six hundred such as himself, robbed many in Italy under the emperor's nose for two years together; and although he was diligently sought for by the emperor and his armies, yet he could not be caught. Visis enim non videbatur; non inveniebatur inventus, deprehensus non capiebatur, saith the historian; he was too hard for them all.

So is the house of Israel ashamed.] They are, or ought to be so; but

“ Nihil est audacius illis

Deprensus: vires animosque a crimine sumunt. ”

Ver. 27. Saying to a stock, Thou art my father,] i.e., My God. {#Isa 44:17} We are not the children of fornication, said those boasting Jews; {#Joh 8:41} that is, we are not idolaters, who say, as here, to a stock, Thou art my father. The Samaritans they called bastards.

But in the time of their trouble they will say, Arise, and save us.] Thus in their month they will be found. {#Jer 2:24} When they had run themselves barefoot in following their lovers, {#Jer 2:25} who answered their expectation with nothing but fear, and sent them away with shame instead of glory, then God was thought upon and sought unto. Let us make God our choice, and not our necessity, and labour to maintain such constant cause with him, that he may know our souls in adversity, and not turn us off, as he doth these, with,

Ver. 28. But where are thy gods that thou hast made thee?] Thou hast sure no need of my help. Quasi tu huius indigeas patris. See the like, #Jud 10:14. {See Trapp on "Jud 10:14"}

For according to the number of thy cities are thy gods.] Enough of them thou hast, and near enough. The Papists also have their tutelar saints, to whom they seek more than to God himself. And when the Ave Mary bell rings, which is at sunrise, noon, and sunset, all men, in whatever place, house, field, street, or market, do presently kneel down and send up their united devotions to heaven by an Ave Maria. {a}

{a} Spec. Europ.

Ver. 29. Wherefore will ye plead with me?] Putting me to my proofs. Is not the case clear enough? Will ye not yield to reason? See on #Jer 2:19.

Ye all have transgressed against me.] And yet ye have the face to ask, as in #Jer 16:10, "What is our iniquity, or what is our sin that we have committed against the Lord?" And to say, as in #Ho 12:8, "In all my labours they shall find none iniquity in me: that were sin." See there.

Ver. 30. In vain have I smitten your children.] My hammers have but beaten cold iron; ye are incorrigible, irreformable. See #Isa 1:5.

{See Trapp on "Isa 1:5"}

Your own sword hath devoured your prophets.] As it did in the days of Ahaz, Joash, Manasseh, of whom Josephus {a} saith, that he slew some prophet of God every day.

Like a destroying lion.] Cum saevitia summa, exuta omni humanitate. Ye have pulled them limb meal, and caused them to die piece meal.

{a} Lib. x. cap. 4.

Ver. 31. O generation, see ye the word of the Lord,] q.d., O generation, rather leonine than human! as #Jer 2:30. "See ye the word"; I say not to you, Hear; no more than I would to a savage beast; for ye have no ears to hear reason; but see with your eyes, for so even beasts can do. See now, and say sooth.

Have I been a wilderness unto Israel?] Such as is described before. {#Jer 2:6} Or, Have I not rather been a paradise unto you, and a storehouse of all accommodations and comforts? It well appeareth that they have wanted nothing but thankful hearts, by this, that fulness hath bred forgetfulness; for so stout they are grown by reason of their great wealth, that they will not come at me, nor acknowledge my sovereignty over them, but will needs be petty gods within themselves. We are lords, say they, and will not now take it as we have done. The ancient Greek rendereth it, We will not be ruled.

Ver. 32. Can a maid forget her ornaments?] Not lightly or easily, as minding them many times more than is meet, and then their ornaments are but the nest of pride; and while they think to gain more credit by their garments than by their graces, they are much mistaken.

Yet my people have forgotten me, days without number,] i.e., Time out of mind, whenas God should be remembered at every breath we draw, since from him we have ζωην και πνοην, "life and breath," as the apostle saith elegantly. {#Ac 17:25} But into such a dead lethargy hath sin cast most people, that God is forgotten by them, and his service neglected.

Ver. 33. Why trimmest thou thy way to seek love?] Cur bonificas? so Calvin rendereth it why dost thou make good thy way? that is, set a good gloss upon it, even the best side outwards. The same word is used of Jezebel's dressing her head. {#2Ki 9:30} What need this whorish trick and trimming, if all were right with thee?

Therefore also hast thou taught the wicked ones thy way.] Heb., The wicked women—for the word is feminine—those she-sinners may learn immodesty of thee, who are meretricissimae. And for this it is that thou art pointed at with the finger as it were. {#Jer 2:34,35}

Ver. 34. Also in thy skirts.] In the skirts of thy garments. Heb., In thy wings—an allusion, say some, to birds of prey, which stain their wings with the blood of lesser fowls.

Is the blood of the souls.] The life blood of innocent poor ones, of prophets especially. {#Jer 2:30}

I have not found it by secret search.] Non in suffosione, as Calvin rendereth it, as an allusion to #Ex 22:2.

But upon all these.] That is, In propatulo, in public view. Or, Super haec omnia, because they told thee of thy faults.

Ver. 35. Yet thou sayest, Because I am innocent.] Antiquum obtines; thou standest still upon thy justification. This doubleth thy fault. Homo agnoscit, Deus ignoseit. The best way is to plead guilty: confess, and go free.

Ver. 36. Why gaddest thou {a} about so much to change thy way?] Or, Changing thy way; as hoping some way to mend thyself. Keep home, and trust God; go further, and fare worse. Creatures were never true to those that trusted them.

{a} Cur cursitas?

Ver. 37. Yea, thou shalt go from him.] Or, From hence, into captivity.

With thine hands.] Lamenting, as did Tamar. {#2Sa 13:19}

For the Lord hath rejected thy confidence.] Where the beginning is carnal confidence, the end is shame, of any business, even of this life.

Chapter 3

Ver. 1. They say.] Vulgo dicitur, saith the Vulgate; Dicendo dicitur, say others. They say, and they say well, for they have good law for it. {#De 24:4} But I am above law, saith God, and will deal with thee, not according to mine ordinary rule, but according to my prerogative. Thou shalt be a paradox to the Bible; for I will do that in favour of thee, which I have inhibited others in like case to do, and that scarce any man would do, though there were no law to inhibit it, as one here paraphraseth.

Shall not the land be greatly polluted?] Great sins do greatly pollute, that of adultery especially, for this is a heinous crime; yea, it is an iniquity to be punished by the judges. {#Job 31:11}

But thou hast played the harlot; yet return to me.] Haec est Dei clementia insuperabilis; God's mercy is matchless. No man, no god, would show mercy as he doth. {#Mic 7:18 Mal 3:7 Zec 1:3} He followeth after those that run from him, as the sunbeams do the passenger that goeth from them; and as it is sweetly set forth by our Saviour in those three parables of the lost coin, the lost sheep, and the lost son. {#Lu 15:3-32} Paul alloweth of Mark, {#2Ti 4:11} though before he had refused him, {#Ac 15:38} and willeth others to entertain him. {#Col 4:10,11} Let none despair that hath but a mind to return to God, from whom he hath deeply revolted. There is a natural Novatianism in the timorous conscience of convinced sinners, to doubt and question pardon for sins of apostasy and falling after repentance. But this need not be, we see here. Pernicious was Ahithophel's counsel to Absalom, "Go in to thy father's concubines"; this he judged such an injury as David would never put up; yet "return again to me, saith the Lord," and all shall be well between us.

Ver. 2. And see where thou hast not been lien with.] Pouring out thy spiritual whoredoms, as Papists now do with their crosses, chapels, pictures, set up in all places.

In the ways thou hast sat for them.] For thy customers and copse mates, like a common strumpet. See #Ge 38:19 Eze 16:24,25,31.

As the Arabian in the wilderness.] As highway robbers wait for and waylay passengers, making it thy trade.

Ver. 3. Therefore the showers have been withholden.] Drought and dearth have ensued upon thy sin. By showers here understand the former rain, called also the seeds' rain. {#Isa 30:23}

And there hath been no latter rain.] That commonly came a little before harvest, and was much desired.

And thou hadst a whore's forehead.] Quam pudet non esse impudentem; {a} that can blush no more than a sackbut. We have heard, saith a reverend writer, of virgins, which at first seemed modest, blushing at the motions of an honest love, who, being once corrupt and debauched, have grown flexible to easy entreaties to unchastity, and from thence boldly lascivious, so as to solicit others, so as to prostitute themselves to all comers, yea, as the casuists complain of some Spanish brothels, {b} to an unnatural filthiness. The modest beginnings of sin will make way for immodest proceedings. Let men take heed of that αδιατρεψια, i.e., invirecundia, shamelessness, that Caligula liked so well in himself, and that the heretics, called Effrontes, professed. It is a hard thing to have a brazen face and a broken heart.

{b} Dr Hall's Remedy of Profan., p. 179.

Ver. 4. Wilt thou not from this time cry unto me?] And is not this extreme impudence? Hast thou a face thus to collogue? Hypocritis nihil impudentius; hypocrites are impudent flatterers; they would, if they could, cheat God of his heaven.

Thou art the guide of my youth,] i.e., My dear husband. {#Pr 2:17} Fair words are light cheap, and may make fools fain; but God is not to be so courted and complimented.

Ver. 5. Will he reserve his anyer for ever?] Will he not? {#Na 1:2} and is there not good reason he should do so, so long as you speak and do evil things as you can, obstinately persisting in thy sinful practices? He that repenteth with a contradiction, saith Tertullian, God will pardon him with a contradiction. Thou repentest, and yet continuest in thy sins. God will pardon thee, and yet send thee to hell: there is a pardon with a contradiction.

As thou couldst,] i.e., To thine utmost. Nolunt solita peccare, saith Seneca of some; they strive to outsin themselves and others.

Ver. 6. The Lord also said unto me in the days of Josiah.] This is the beginning of a new sermon, as most hold. Josiah was a religious prince, and a zealous reformer; and hypocrisy reigned exceedingly in his days, as we see here: and as holy Bradford in his letters complaineth that it did likewise in King Edward VI's days, who was our English Josiah, among the great ones especially, who were very corrupt.

She is gone up upon every high mountain, / sc., Ever since Solomon's mind began to be corrupted, {#1Ki 11:4} and now she smarteth for it; yet is not Judah warned by her example.

Ver. 7. And I said after she had done.] Or, Yet I said; but I lost my sweet words upon her.

Ver. 8. And I saw.] That which others could not so easily discern—viz., their hypocrisy and hollow heartedness, their incorrigibleness also, and refusing to be warned by what had befallen their brethren. God looked that Israel's corrections should have been Jerusalem's instructions, and that by their lashes she should have been lessoned, which because she was not he is highly displeased, and speaks of it here in a very angry dialect.

Yet her treacherous sister Judah feared not.] But slighted the kindness of such a caution, and despised the counsel that was written to her in her sister's blood.

But went and played the harlot also.] Being therefore the worse, because she should have been the better of the two.

Ver. 9. And it came to pass through the lightness of her whoredom.] Or, better, Through the vocalness of it; the loudness of her lewdness. Heb., the voice or noise of her whoredom, the fame and bruit of it, for it is spoken of far and near.

And committed adultery with stones and with stocks.] Haec fere omnia in caecum, erroneum, meretriciumque Papatum apte hodie torqueri possunt. Do not idolatrous Papists even the same?

Ver. 10. Hath not turned unto me with her whole heart.] Josiah did, but the people did not, as soon appeared, when in the next king's reign they fell off as fast as leaves do in autumn. And so they did here, when Queen Mary set up Popery.

Ver. 11. The backsliding Israel hath justified herself.] That is, she is less guilty and faulty of the two; because Judah sinned against more means and mercies, and because she received not instruction by her sister's destruction; therefore shall she feel what she feared not at a distance; therefore shall she taste of Israel's rod because she would not hear it; she that would not tremble at her sister's divorce, must herself be divorced, and be judged as "women that break wedlock," {#Eze 16:38} "bearing her own shame for her sins that she had committed, more abominable than theirs." {#Eze 16:52}

Ver. 12. Go and proclaim these words toward the north,] i.e., Toward Assyria and Media, into which countries the ten tribes had been carried captive. And although they cannot hear thee, yet in time this prophecy may be brought to their hearing; and the men of Judah, meanwhile, may be wrought upon thereby.

And I will not cause mine anger to fall upon you.] Heb., I will not make my face to fall: I will not further frown upon you, or deal hardly with you.

I will not keep anger for ever.] Heb., I will not keep for ever. There is nothing that a man is more ready to keep than his wrath. Therefore the Hebrews put keep, for keep wrath. {#Ps 103:9 Le 19:18 Jer 3:5}

Ver. 13. Only acknowledge thine iniquity.] Thus favour is promised to the ten captivated tribes, sed per modulum unius paenitentiae, but upon condition of their true repentance, one part whereof is confession of sin. {#Pr 28:13 Ps 32:4} When thy sins and God's wrath meeting in thy conscience, saith one, make thee deadly sick, then pour forth thy soul in confession; and as it will ease thee, as vomiting useth to do, so also it will move God to pity, and to give thee cordials and comforts to restore thee again. {a}

Ver. 14. Turn, O backsliding children.] See on #Zec 1:3.

For I am married unto you.] And, as "I hate putting away," {#Mal 2:16} so I can receive to favour a wife that hath been disloyal, {#Jer 3:1} and after a divorce.

And I will take you one of a city,] i.e., Though but a few, {#Isa 10:11,12 17:6 24:3} all the rest hardening their hearts by unbelief. This hath been principally fulfilled in the days of the gospel.

Ver. 15. And I will give you pastors according to my heart.] God gives faithful pastors oft for the sake of but a few that are there to be converted: Et vilissimus pagus est palatium eburneum, in quo est pastor et credentes aliqui, saith Luther, {a} The poorest village is an ivory palace, if there be but in it a pastor and some few believers. Such pastors as God here promiseth (and more largely describeth, #Jer 23 Eze 34), are special gifts of God: "I will give you pastors." David, after he had discomfited the Amalekites, sent gifts to his friends in Judah. {#Isa 30:26} Great Alexander, when he had prevailed at the river Granicus, and was now ascended into the upper parts of Asia, sent back many gifts to assure them of his love in Macedonia. The like doth God to his Church by sending them pastors, with such two adjuncts as are here—(1.) Adherent, his own approbation; (2.) Inherent, skill to teach the people. See #Eph 4:8. {See Trapp on "Eph 4:8"}

{a} Luth., tom. iii. p. 81.

Ver. 16. They shall say no more, The ark, &c.] When the gospel shall be preached, the ancient ceremonies shall be abolished. {a} This was not so easily believed, and is therefore here again and again assured.

{a} Paulus ea vocat stercora et rudera.

Ver. 17. They shall call Jerusalem,] i.e., The Church Christian.

The throne of the Lord.] The throne of glory; {#Jer 4:2} so #Ex 17:16, because the hand upon the throne of the Lord—that is, say some, Amalek's hand upon the Church, which is elsewhere also called the temple of God.

Neither shall they walk any more, &c.,] i.e., Not at random, but by rule. {#Eph 5:15} Heb., Not any more after the sight of their heart—i.e., as themselves thought good, but as God directeth them.

Ver. 18. In that day shall the house of Judah walk with the house of Israel.] All the elect shall be reunited in Christ; unless we shall understand it of the last reduction of the nation into one. {#Isa 11:13 Eze 37:16,22 Ho 1:11}

And they shall come together out of the land of the north,] i.e., Out of the place of their captivity, whereby was figured our spiritual captivity, &c.

Ver. 19. But I said, How shall I put thee among the children?] How, but by my free grace alone, since thou hast so little deserved it? For the causes of our adoption, see #Eph 1:5,6.

And give thee a pleasant land.] The heavenly Canaan, which is here fitly called "a land of desire" or "delight," a heritage or possession of godliness, a land of the hosts or desires of the nations.

And I said, Thou shall call me, My Father.] And My Father, affectionately uttered, is an effectual prayer. Ah! Pater brevissima quidem vox est, sed omnia complectitur; saith Luther—i.e., Ah! Father is but a little word, but very comprehensive; it is such a piece of eloquence as far exceedeth the rollings of Demosthenes, Cicero, or whatsoever most excellent orator.

Ver. 20. Surely as a treacherous wife, &c.] This ye have done, but that is your present grief, and now you look upon your former disloyalties with a lively hatred of them, holding that the time past of your life may suffice to have wrought the will of the Gentiles, &c.

Ver. 21. A voice was heard upon the high places.] Where they were wont to worship idols, now they weep for their sins, and pray for pardon.

For they have perverted their ways.] This is it that now draweth from them prayers and tears. See #Jer 31:18 La 5:14. Oi nalanu, chi chattanu. Woe worth us that ever we thus sinned. Some understand those words, "A voice is heard," as showing God's readiness to hear penitent sinners as soon as they begin to turn to him, even before they speak, as the father of the prodigal met him, &c.

Ver. 22. Return, ye backsliding children.] Give the whole turn, and not the half turn only. So #Ac 2:38, Peter said to them that were already pricked at heart, "Repent ye," even to a transmentation; and #Jer 3:19, "Repent ye, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out." Repent not only for sin, but from sin too; be thorough in your repentance; let it be such as shall never be repented of. {#2Co 7:10} It is not a slight sorrow that will serve apostates' turn; it must be deep and downright.

And I will heal your backslidings.] Pardon your sins, and heal your natures. "I will love you freely," and cause your broken bones to rejoice. {#Ho 14:4 Isa 19:22} Oh sweetest promise! What wonder, then, that their hard hearts were forthwith melted by it into such a gracious compliance as followeth.

Behold, we come to thee.] See #Zec 13:9. {See Trapp on "Zec 13:9"}

Ver. 23. Truly in vain is salvation hoped for from the hills.] Heb., Truly in vain from the hills, the multitude, the mountains: it is like to that in #Ho 14:3, "Asshur shall not save us; neither will we say any more to the works of our hands, Ye are our gods." {See Trapp on "Ho 14:3"}

Truly in the Lord our God.] They trust not God at all that trust not God alone.

Ver. 24. For shame hath devoured the labour of our fathers.] That shameful thing, Baal hath done it; {#Jer 11:13 Ho 9:10} he hath even eaten up our cattle and our children, of whom, if any be left, yet there is nothing left for them. And this we now see, long and last, paenitentia ducti, et nostro male edocti, having bought our wit, and paid dear for our learning. And may not many ill husbands among us say as much of their drunkenness and wantonness? See #Pr 5:9-12.

{See Trapp on "Pr 5:9"} {See Trapp on "Pr 5:10"} {See Trapp on "Pr 5:11"} {See Trapp on "Pr 5:12"}

Ver. 25. We lie down in our shame.] We that once had a whore's forehead, {#Jer 3:3} and seemed past grace, are now sore ashamed of former miscarriages, yea, our confusion covereth us, {as #Ps 44:15} because "we have sinned against the Lord our God, we and our fathers, from our youth unto this day, and have not obeyed the voice of our God." Lo, here a dainty form and pattern of penitent confession, such as is sure to find mercy. Haec sane omni tempore Christiana est satisfactio, non meritoria aliqua Papistica atque nugivendula. {a} Only we must not acknowledge sin with dry eyes, but point every sin with a tear, &c.

Chapter 4

Ver. 1. If thou wilt return, O Israel.] As thou seemest willing to do, and for very good reason. {#Jer 2:22-24} Thou art but a beaten rebel, and to stand it out with me is to no purpose; thou must either turn or burn. Neither will it help thee to return fairly, for I love truth in the inward parts, and hate hypocrisy, halting, and tepidity. If therefore thou wilt return,

Return unto me.] Return as far as to me; not from one evil course to another, {#Jer 2:36} for that is but to be tossed as a ball from one of the devil's hands to the other, but "to me with thy whole heart," seriously, sincerely, and zealously; for Non amat, qui non zelat. To a tyrant thou shalt not turn, but to one that will both assist thee, {#Pr 1:23} and accept thee. {#Zec 1:2}

And if thou wilt put away thine abominations out of my sight,] i.e., Thine idols out of thine house and out of thine heart. {#Eze 14:3,4}

Then shalt thou not remove.] But still dwell in the land and do good; feeding on faith, as Tremellius rendereth that #Ps 37:3.

Ver. 2. And thou shalt swear, The Lord liveth.] Not by Baal shalt thou swear, or other idols, but by the living God, or by the life of God. The Egyptians once swore by the life of Pharaoh, as the proud Spaniards now do by the life of their king. But, to speak properly, none liveth but the Lord, and none should be sworn by but he alone, an oath being a proof of the divine power, which one worshippeth. The Pythagoreans used to swear by πεπρακτην, Quaternity, which they called παγαν αενναου φουσεως, the fountain of eternal being; and this doubtless was the same with τετραγραμματον, Jehovah.

In truth, in judgment, and in righteousness.] Vere, rite, et iuste: {a} (1.) In truth, {#Ro 9:1} that is, to that which is true, lest we fall into perjury. {#Le 19:12} And (2.) Truly, agreeable both to the intentions of our mind, not deceitfully, {#Ps 24:2} and agreeable also to the intentions of him that ministereth the oath, and not with mental reservations, as Romish priests oft swear.

In judgment.] Or, Considerately, duly weighing the conditions and circumstances, not rashly and unadvisedly, {#Le 5:4 Isa 14:39} as those that swear in heat and choler, swear when they should fear. {#De 10:20 28:58} The Romans used that most considerate word arbitror; when the jurors said those things which they knew most certainly. {b} The Grecians, when they would swear by their Jupiter, out of the mere dread and reverence of his name, forbore to mention him. And the Egyptians bore such respect to Mercurius Trismegistus, that they held it not lawful to pronounce his name lightly and rashly. This is check to many swearing pseudo-Christians. Such also as swear in jest, will, without repentance, go to hell in earnest. The ancient form of taking and imposing an oath was, Give glory to God. {#Jos 7:19 Joh 9:24}

And in righteousness.] (1.) Promising by oath lawful and possible things only, not making an oath a bond of iniquity. {#ISA 25:21,22 28:10} (2.) Careful to perform what we have sworn, though to our own hindrance. {#Ps 15:4}

And the nations shall bless themselves in him.] Or, Shall be blessed in him—that is, in that God to whom thou returnest, and by whom thou thus swearest. They shall turn to God by thine example, and hold themselves happy in such a good turn.

{a} Tremel.

{b} Suidas.

Ver. 3. Break up your fallow ground.] Novellate vobis novale. Tertullian rendereth it, Renovate vobis novamen novuum, put off the old man, and put on the new. See #Ho 10:11. {See Trapp on "Ho 10:11"} By the practice of repentance, runcate, extirpate, root up and rid your hearts and lives of all vile lusts and vicious practices. The breaking up of sinful hearts may prevent the breaking down of a sinful nation.

Sow not among thorns,] i.e., Cares and lusts of life, fitly called thorns, because (1.) They prick and gore the soul; (2.) Harbour the old serpent; (3.) Choke the word. There is no looking for a harvest in a hedge: stock them, and stub them up therefore; {#IPe 2:1 Jas 1:21} do not plough here, and make a trench there, &c.

Ver. 4. Circumcise yourselves to the Lord.] There is a twofold circumcision, corporis et cordis, outward and inward: that without this availeth nothing. {#Ga 6:15} See the inward described #Col 2:11. It is the putting off the old Adam with his actions. It is purgatio animae et aliectio vitiorum, saith Origen; the cleansing of the soul, and the casting away of sin, that filthy foreskin, that "superfluity of naughtiness." {#Jas 1:21} It is a wonderful work of the Holy Spirit wrought by the Word upon the saints at their first conversion, whereby corruption of nature is wounded, beloved sins cast away with sorrow, and the sinner received into an everlasting communion with God and his saints. Those that are not thus circumcised are not Israelites, but Ishmaelites; whereas Jether, though by nature an Ishmaelite, {#1Ch 2:17} yet, being thus inwardly circumcised, he was, for his faith and religion, called and counted an Israelite. {#2Sa 17:25} See #Php 3:3-5.

And take away the foreskin of your heart.] Not of the flesh only, {see #1Pe 3:21} as the carnal Israelite, who rests in the work done, glorious in outward privileges, neglects the practice of religion and power of godliness, pursueth him that is born after the Spirit, the Israelite indeed, &c., and is therefore disprivileged, hated, and defied by God, as Goliath, that uncircumcised Philistine, was by David, "dead in sins and the uncircumcision of the flesh," {#Col 2:13} subject to utter excision, {#Ge 17:14} as having no portion in Christ nor in Canaan. Take away therefore the foreskin of the heart; stick not in the bark, pare not off the foreskin of the flesh only, off with the whole "body of sin"; {#Col 2:11} begin at Adam's sin, bewail that; then set upon the beloved sin, out with that eye, off with that hand, "cast away all your transgressions" with as great indignation as angry Zipporah did her child's foreskin. Take unto you for this end the sword of the Spirit, the Word, sharper than those stones that she made use of; {#Ex 4:25} consider the threats—these will work faith, and that will work fear—apply the promises, {#De 30:6 Eze 36:26,28} doubt not God's power, but pray him to thrust his holy hand into your bosoms, and to fetch off the filthy foreskin that is there. Lo, this is the way, walk in it.

And burn that none can quench it.] When once it hath caught your thorns. {#Jer 4:3}

Ver. 5. Declare ye in Judah.] As if the prophet should say, I do but lose my labour in calling upon you to mortify your corruptions and to cast away all your transgressions. Uncircumcised ye are in heart and ears, and so will be. Now therefore stand upon your guard against the approaching enemy, and defend yourselves, if at least you are able, from the evil that is coming upon you. Moat up yourselves against God's fire. {#Jer 4:4}

Ver. 6. Set up the standard towards Zion.] All this seemeth to be ironically spoken. {as #Jer 4:5}

For I will bring evil from the north,] i.e., From Babylon. Ab aquilone nihil boni. There is also another Babylon spoken of in the Revelation, which to the true Church hath of long time been lerna malorum; and so the poor persecuted Protestants in Poland feel at this day. Roma radix omnium malorum.

Ver. 7. The lion is come up from his thicket,] i.e., Nebuchadnezzar from Babylon, where he lieth safe, sicut leo in vepreto, and will shortly show himself for a mischief to many people, who shall feel his force and fierceness.

Ver. 8. For this, gird you with sackcloth.] Repent, if at least it be not too late, as the next words hint that now it was.

For the fierce wrath of the Lord is not turned back from us.] Or, Because the fierce wrath of the Lord will not turn from us; it will have its full forth. See #Zep 2:2. {See Trapp on "Zec 2:2"}

Ver. 9. The heart of the king shall perish.] His courage shall be quailed, and he shall be strangely crestfallen. This was fulfilled in Zedekiah, who sought to save himself by flight, but could not.

Ver. 10. Surely thou hast greatly deceived this people,] sc., By those false prophets. {#Jer 4:9} Compare #1Ki 18:22-29 Eze 14:9. This God doth as a just judge, punishing sin with sin. The words may be rendered as a question, "Hast thou indeed thus deceived this people?" Is it possible that thou shouldst have an active, or so much as a permissive, hand in such a business?

Whenas the sword reacheth unto the soul,] i.e., To the heart, it goes as far as it can. Capulo tenus abdidit ensem. See #Ps 69:11.

Ver. 11. A dry wind of the high places.] Ventus urens et exsiccans, as the north wind is. Understand hereby the King of Babylon, {as #Jer 4:6} blasting and wasting all before him.

Not to fan, nor to cleanse.] But to dissipate and destroy.

Ver. 12. Even a full wind from those places.] An impetuous and stiff wind, such as shall carry away chaff, and grain, and all.

Now also will I give sentence against them.] Heb., Utter judgments with them—i.e., I will speak no more by my prophets, but by my judgments.

Ver. 13. Behold, he shall come up as clouds.] Swiftly and numerously.

His horses are swifter than eagles.] Which, though the biggest of all fowls, yet fly with greatest speed.

Woe unto us, for we are spoiled.] This he premiseth fitly to his exhortation to repentance; {#Jer 4:14} q.d., We are utterly undone, if repentance prevent not.

“ Currat ergo paenitentia, ne praecurrat sententia.”

Ver. 14. O Jerusalem, wash thine heart from wickedness.] Which defileth it worse than any leprosy, {a} or jakes, doth the body. {#Mr 7:19,20,23} Thy hands thou often wastest, and other outward parts, placing therein no small religion, thou canst not wash them in innocence; wash them therefore in tears, and when thou hast so done, cry to God with Augustine, Lava lachrymas meas Domine: ipsae enim lachrymae sunt lachrymabiles; Wash my very tears, Lord, for they are lamentable ones. Beg of him to bathe thy soul in the blood of his Son, to wash thee thoroughly from thine iniquity, and to cleanse thee from thy sin. {#Ps 51:2}

That thou mayest be saved,] i.e., Have safety here, and salvation hereafter.

How long shall thy vain thoughts lodge within thee?] {b} Heb., In the midst of thee, in the very heart of thee. Creep in they will, but why should they lodge there? why should the devil be at inn with us? be any man's bedfellow, as he is the angry man's? {#Eph 4:26} David oft "communed with his own heart, and his spirit made diligent search" for such vagrants. {#Ps 77:6} Scopabam spiritum meum, {c} so some render it, I swept out my spirit. Carnal hearts are stews of unclean thoughts, slaughter houses of cruel and bloody thoughts, exchanges and shops of vain and vile thoughts, a very forge and mint of false political undermining thoughts, yea, oft a little hell of confused and black imaginations. They had need therefore to be carefully cleansed, and kept with all custody. Grace beginneth at the centre, and from thence goeth to the circumference. God and nature begin at the heart; art begins with the face and outward lineaments; so doth hypocrisy at outward paintings and expressions; it cleanseth the outside of the cup and platter, when the inside is full of ravening and wickedness. {#Lu 11:39}

Ver. 15. For a voice declareth from Dan.] Which was first called Laish, then Dan, and after that, in honour of Tiberius Caesar, Caesarea Philippi. {a} It was the utmost bound of Israel northward; and therehence came a rumour of the enemy entering and making his first impression into the land, and so, by Mount Ephraim, to the Jews of Jerusalem. This Jeremiah, by a spirit of prophecy, foretelleth long before, against their vain confidence of better.

And publisheth affliction.] The same Hebrew word signifieth vanity or iniquity in the verse aforegoing. Sin is the mother of misery and molestation.

{a} Joseph. Antiq., lib. xviii.

Ver. 16. Make ye mention to the nations,] i.e., To the Jews, who haply are called the nations, because once better accounted of than all nations. Thus the saints are called "All things," {#Col 1:18} and the Rabbis have a saying, that those seventy souls which came down to Egypt with Jacob, were more worth than all the seventy nations of the world besides.

That watchers are come.] Nebuchadnezzar's body guard, say some. Heb., Notserim—i.e., Nebuchadnezzarenes. {a} Others give a better reason of the word from the next verse.

And give out their voice against the cities of Judah.] While they invade them cum barritu militari, with a horrid and horrible noise, such as the Turks use today also when they set upon any city to storm it.

{a} Sicut a Caesare Caesariani, a Praetore Praetoriani.

Ver. 17. As keepers of a field, are they against her.] They have straitly besieged her, so that there is no escaping their hands.

Ver. 18. Thy way and thy doings have procured these things unto thee.] This is like as we use to say to our children when they have taken cold or got any harm, This is your gadding and dabbling in the dirt, your going in the snow, your eating of fruit, &c.

This is thy wickedness,] i.e., Merces malitiae; the wages of thy wickedness, the fruit of thy folly.

Because it is bitter.] Thou hast given God a bitter pill, as it were, that went to his heart; and now he hath given thee as bitter a potion, that reacheth unto thine heart.

Ver. 19. My bowels, my bowels!] So, "My head, my head"; {#2Ki 4:19} "My leanness, my leanness." {#Isa 24:16} Thus the prophet here, to express his inexpressible grief for the calamities of his people.

I am pained.] As a woman in travail; Doleo instar parturientis.

At the very heart.] Heb., At the walls of my heart; scil., to see, in spirit, the city walls surprised.

My heart maketh a noise in me.] Saltitat et palpitat, ut in pavidis et percussis fieri solet, leaps and throbs.

I cannot hold my peace.] Heb., I will not.

Because thou hast heard,] i.e., I have heard in the spirit, and am affected with it, as if already come.

Ver. 20. Destruction upon destruction.] Fluctus fluctum trudit; one mischief upon another, the sword after famine, captivity after a siege.

For the whole land is spoiled.] Or, Plundered; which word we first heard of in the Swedish wars.

Ver. 21. How long shall I see the standard?] Sad sights and doleful ditties are common in times of war.

And hear the sound of the trumpet.] Tubam turbamque hostiurn.

Ver. 22. For my people is foolish, they have not known me.] To know and to worship God aright, is the only true wisdom, saith Lactantius. {a}

They are wise to do evil, but to do good they have no knowledge.] In terrenis lyncei, in caelestibus talpae. Wise the wicked are in their generation, subtle and sly; but so is the serpent, or the fox. The swine that wandereth can make better shift to get home than the sheep can to the fold. They have received "the spirit of this world"; {#1Co 2:12} the devil also worketh effectually in them, as a smith in his forge. {#Eph 2:2} Hence they are "wise to do evil." Elymas was a sorcerer, subtle fellow, but the devil's child, and so the more dangerous. {#Ac 13:10} Magnum ingenium et magna tentatio, saith Vincentius Lirinensis, concerning Origen, who had a great wit, but proved a great scandal to the Church. The devil covets to be adorned by thee, said Augustine to one that was wittily wicked. Surely as jet gathereth dross and refuse things to itself, but lets go gold and precious things; so do the world's wizards.

{a} Lib. iii. cap. 30.

Ver. 23. I beheld the earth, and, lo, it was without form, and void.] Tohu vabohit {as #Ge 1:2} sightless and shapeless. Sermo est hyperbolicus, all was in a confusion. What shall it, then, be at the last day?

Ver. 24. I beheld the mountains, and, lo, they trembled.] War is a woe that no words, how wide soever, can sufficiently utter.

And all the hills moved lightly.] As being lightened of their burden, saith a Rabbi, trees and houses.

Ver. 25. I beheld, and, lo, there was no man.] But all killed, captived, or fled. Judaea lay utterly waste for seventy years; insomuch that after the slaughter of Gedaliah, when all, men, women, and children, fled into Egypt, there was not a Jew left in the country.

And all the birds of the heavens were fled.] Birds were given men for food, medicine, and delight, as companions of his life; therefore it is reckoned, both here and #Jer 9:10, as a judgment to lose them.

Ver. 26. At the presence of the Lord, &c.] Who was the chief agent; as Titus the Roman emperor also acknowledged after he had destroyed Jerusalem: Non se id fecisse dixit, sed Deo iram suam declaranti manus suas accommodasse; {a} he said it was not he that had done it, but that he had only lent his hands to God, justly displeased at that nation.

{a} Suidas.

Ver. 27. Yet I will not make a full end.] God kept the room empty all those seventy years, till the return of the natives.

Ver. 28. Because I have spoken it, &c.] Quod scrips; scrips, said Pilate, I will not alter it. See the like, #Eze 24:13,14.

Ver. 29. Every city shall be forsaken.] See #Jer 4:25.

Ver. 30. Though thou rendest thy face with paint.] Jezebel-like, {#2Ki 9:30 Eze 23:40}

In vain shalt thou make thyself fair, / i.e., Seek to ingratiate with the Chaldees, by submitting to them, and worshipping their idols.

Thy lovers will despise thee.] As an old withered strumpet, and now out of date. See #Eze 16:36 23:22.

Ver. 31. As of her that bringeth forth her first child.] Primiparae: such have greatest pains, and least patience oft.

For my soul is wearied because of murderers.] Once her paramours, her sweethearts. There is nothing got by comorting with idolaters. The Duke of Medina's sword knew no difference between Papists and Protestants in 1588, and that they should have found had the Spaniard then prevailed.

Chapter 5

Ver. 1. Run to and fro.] Spatiamini, scrutamini. Go as many of you as ye please; the verbs are plural.

In the streets of Jerusalem.] Where it was strange there should be such a rarity of righteous ones. But "the faithful city was now become a harlot." {#Isa 1:21} Like as Rome is at this day.

“Tota est iam Roma lupanar.”

“Now all Rome isa brothel.”

She had a Mancinel, a Savonarola, and some few other Jeremiahs, to tell her her own; but she soon took an order with them. The primitive Christians called heathens pagans; because country people, living in pagis -that is, in hamlets and villages—were heathenish for most part, after that cities were converted, and had many good people in them; but Jerusalem here afforded not any one hardly.

If you can find a man,] i.e., A godly, a zealous man. For homines permulti, viri perpauci, saith Herodotus: {a} there is a great paucity of good people. Diogenes is said to have sought for a good man in Athens with a lantern and candle at noonday. And once, when he had made an O yes in the market place, crying out, ‘Ακουσατε ανδρες, Hear, O ye men; and thereupon company came about him to hear what the matter was, he rated them away again with this speech, Ανδρας εκαλεσα, ου καθαρματα, I called for men, and not for varlets. Job was a man, every inch of him. {See Trapp on "Job 1:1"} So was Moses, that "man of God"; Daniel, that "man of desires"; John Baptist, "than whom there arose not a greater among all that were born of woman"; Paul, that little man but who did great exploits; Athanasius and Luther who stood out against all the world, and prevailed. {b} But "not many" such; blessed be God that any such. Cicero observeth that scarce in an age was born a good poet. And Seneca saith, such as Clodius was, we have enough: but such as Cato are hard to be found. The host of Nola being bid to summon the good men of the town to appear before the Roman censor, got him to the churchyard, and there called at the graves of the dead: for he knew not where to call for a good man alive. {c} God himself sought for a man that might stand up in the gap, but met not with any such one. {#Eze 22:30}

And I will pardon it.] Sodom's sins cried loud to God for vengeance; so did now Jerusalem's. But had there been but a voice or two more of righteous and religious persons there, their prayers had outcried them. A few birds of song are shriller than many crocitating birds of prey.

Ver. 2. And though they say, The Lord liveth, / i.e., Albeit they talk religiously, as those pretenders also did, {#Isa 66:5} and make a great flaunt, as if some great matter, with Simon Magus, {#Ac 8:9} yet they are arrant hypocrites, and therefore odious to me who desire "truth in the inward parts." {#Ps 51:6} These neither "say the truth," nor "do" it. {#1Jo 3:10}

Ver. 3. O Lord, are not thine eyes upon the truth?] And can these painted hypocrites hope ever to please thee? how much are they mistaken?

Thou hast stricken them, but they have not grieved.] As being "past feeling," of a dead and dedolent disposition; like naughty boys, which are the worse for a whipping; or Solomon's drunkard, who is beaten, but never the better. {#Pr 23:35} There is no surer sign of a carnal Israelite, of a profligate professor, than to be senseless or incorrigible under public judgments.

Ver. 4. Therefore I said, / i.e., I thought with myself.

Surely these, / scil., That swear falsely, and refuse to be reformed, &c.

Are poor.] Of the rascality, under law, base and beggarly, who neither know God's will, nor hold themselves much bound to do it. Of the poorer sort in Swethland it is reported, that they do always break the Sabbath, saying that it is for gentlemen only to keep that day.

Ver. 5. I will get me unto the great men.] Who have been better bred, and abound with leisure, and other helps to holy living.

But these have altogether broken the yoke.] Of God, of the law, and of discipline. These are lawless and awless, and think they may lay the reins in the neck, and run riot.

Ver. 6. Therefore a lion of the forest shall slay them.] So Nebuchadnezzar is called for his cruelty, a wolf for his voracity, and a leopard for his slyness and swiftness. All the malignities of other creatures meet in the Church's enemies.

Ver. 7. How shall I pardon thee for this?] How with the safety of mine honour and justice? Swearing then by creatures (us by our Lady, by St Anne, by this light, &c.), or by idols, (as by the mass, by the rood, &c.), or by qualities (as by faith, troth, &c.), is not so small a sin as many deem it, since God maketh here a great question how he can pardon it. For why? it is a forsaking of him, a giving away his honour to another, a disgrace done to a man's self—since we always "swear by the greater," {#Heb 6:16} and a means to procure his utter ruin, without God's greater mercy. {#Am 6:14 Zep 1:3-5} Men sport themselves with oaths, as the Philistines did with Samson, which will at last pull the house about their ears. {#Zec 5:4}

When I fed them to the full, they then committed adultery.] Fulness in good men oft breeds forgetfulness, and in bad men, filthiness. Gula vestibulum luxuriae; gluttony is the gallery that incontinence walketh through. The Israelites ate and drank, and rose up to play—scil., with their Midianitish mistresses—to the provoking of God's fierce wrath. Fulness of bread made way to Sodom's sin. Lunatics, when the moon is declining and in the wane are sober enough; but when full, more wild and exorbitant. Ceres and Bacchus are great friends to Venus, &c. Watch therefore, and feed with fear.

And assembled themselves by troops.] Heb., They trooped themselves; such was their impudence.

Ver. 8. They were as fed horses,]{ a} As stallions and stone horses, that are ππομανεις, mare mad, as the Septuagint have it.

{a} Libido effrons et plus quam pecuina.

Ver. 9. Shall I not visit for these things?] i.e., Shall I not take cognizance of them, and punish them surely and severely?

Ver. 10. Get ye up upon her battlements, and destroy.] Ascendite et excindite; up and lay about you lustily. A commission granted out to the enemy, to execute divine vengeance; God can never want a weapon to beat his rebels with.

But make not a full end.] See #Jer 4:27.

For they are not the Lord's.] He disowneth them, and giveth them primo occupaturo, to him that shall first seize them; as the Pope took upon him to do this kingdom of England, in the days of Henry VIII, whom he had excommunicated and deprived.

Ver. 11. For the house of Israel and the house of Judah.] Both Aholah and Aholibah are stark naught; I renounce them therefore, and shall take no further charge of them. And for what reason?

Ver. 12. They have belied the Lord.] Or, They give the Lord the lie—as Montfort, Earl of Leicester, gave his sovereign, Henry III, ^{a} the lie. Every unbeliever doth as much, upon the matter; ^{#1Jo 5:10} see the note there, Nam etiamsi non semper ore obloquitur, factis tamen obluatur, ^{b}

And said, It is not he,] scil., That speaketh, but the prophets speak their own dreams and fancies. Or, as some render the text, He is not; there is no God to reward us if we do well, or to punish us if we do worse. See my Commonplace of Atheism.

Ver. 13. And the prophets shall become wind.] All their threats and bugbear terms (devised on purpose to frighten silly people, who are no wiser than to believe them) shall come to nothing; they are but bullatae nugae, bruta fulmina, ^{a} bubbles of words, brute lightbolts; both they and their menaces shall vanish together, they shall blow over.

Thus shall it be done unto them.] The evils that they foretell shall befall themselves, not us; et nos male mulctabimus ipsos, and we will see them soundly punished for false prophets. Poor Jeremiah was ill-handled among them many times, as we shall see in sundry chapters following. Hoc fuit οιδακτρον, &c.

{a} δνεμολια βαζεις—Hom.

Ver. 14. Because ye speak this word.] Ungodly men shall one day answer, with all the world on fire about their ears, for all their hard and haughty speeches. {#Jude 15} They shall find that neither their own words are wind, but such as they shall give a sad account of; nor the prophet's words wind, unless it be to blow them into the bottomless lake, and to torment their consciences, haply in the meanwhile more than wind doth men's bodies, when gotten once into the veins or bowels.

Behold, I will make my words in thy mouth fire.] That is somewhat worse than wind. Oh fear this fire! vengeance is in readiness for the disobedient; {#2Co 10:5} every whit as ready in God's hand as in the minister's mouth. See #Zec 1:6. {See Trapp on "Zec 1:6"}

Ver. 15. It is a mighty nation, it is an ancient nation.] As ancient as Nimrod, the first founder of that first of the four monarchies. {#Ge 10:8} Hence Babylon is called "the land of Nimrod," {#Mic 5:6} whom the poets call Saturn, and his son and successor, Jupiter, Belus.

A nation whose language thou knowest not.] For the Babylonians spake Syriac, {#Da 2:4} as did also the Jews afterwards—viz., after the captivity in Babylon, where they learned of it, and lost their own language.

Ver. 16. Their quiver is an open sepulchre.] As holding arrows that wound deadly, and that shall despatch many, being drenched in their gall.

Ver. 17. And they shall eat up thy harvest.] Partita gladio, partita gala. Consider the calamity of war, and take course to prevent it.

Ver. 18. I will not make a full end with thee.] In the midst of judgment, God remembereth mercy. See #Jer 4:27 5:10. Howbeit, from this text some gather, that now in this last captivity of theirs, God hath made a full end with the Jews, and that "wrath is come upon them to the utmost," or to the end εις τελος, as the Greek hath it. {#1Th 2:16}

Ver. 19. Wherefore doeth the Lord our God all these things unto us?] Why? Could not they yet tell? And had they not been oft enough (if anything were enough) told wherefore? But they were never willing to hear on that ear. Some of our hearers turn the deaf ear, and say, What tell you us of these terrible things, &c. Many sit before us as senseless as the seats they sit on, the pillars they lean to, the dead bodies they tread upon.

So shall ye serve strangers.] God loves to retaliate.

Ver. 20. Declare this in the house of Jacob, &c.] Cease not to ring it in their ears, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear; for it is a rebellious people, and of the number of those who wink willingly, that they may not see when some unsavoury potion is ministered to them, {a} as Justin Martyr expresseth it.

Ver. 21. Hear now this, O foolish people.] They were strangely stupefied, and were therefore thus rippled up. Those that are in a lethargy must have a double quantity of physic to what others have.

And without understanding.] Heb., Without a heart. Cor sapit et pulmo loquitur; &c.: The heart is the symbol and seat of wisdom. See #Ho 7:11. {See Trapp on "Ho 7:11"}

Which have eyes, and see not, &c.] See #Isa 6:9 42:20. Which have not senses habitually exercised to discern good and evil. {#Heb 5:14}

Ver. 22. Fear ye not me? saith the Lord.] What! not me, whom the sea itself, that tumultuous and unruly creature, feareth and obeyeth? See #Ps 65:7 93:4.

Who have placed the sand for a bound to the sea.] A weak bound for so furious an element. Vis maris infirmissimo sabuli pulvere cohibetur. But so I will have it; and then who or what can gainstand it? Now, who can but be moved at such miracles? Know you not that I can soon make your arable, satiable? and that I can shake the earth as oft as there is a tempest in the ocean, since the earth is founded not upon solid rocks but fluid waters? See #2Pe 3:5.

By a perpetual decree.] Heb., By an ordinance of antiquity or of perpetuity, clapping it up close prisoner.

Ver. 23. But this people have a revolting and rebellious heart.] ^{a} Cor recedens et amaricans; gone they are, and return they will not. Apostates are dangerous creatures, and mischievous above others; witness Julian, once a forward professor; Lucian, once a preacher at Antioch; Staphylus and Latomus, once great Lutherans, afterwards eager Popelings. Harding was the target of Popery in England, saith Peter Moulin, against which he had once been a thundering preacher in this land, wishing he could cry out against it as loud as the bells of Oseney. The Lady Jane Grey, whose chaplain he had sometimes been, gave him excellent counsel in a letter; but he was revolted and gone past call. ^{b}

^{b} Acts and Mon., fol. 1291.

Ver. 24. Neither say they in their hearts.] God understands heart language, and expects a tribute there.

Let us now fear the Lord.] Fear him for his goodness, as well as for his greatness. ^{#Jer 5:22} See #Ho 3:5. ^{See Trapp on "Ho 3:5"}

That giveth rain.] Which God decreeth, ^{#Job 28:26} prepareth, ^{#Ps 147:8} withholdeth; ^{#Am 4:7} bestoweth ^{#De 28:12 Mt 5:41} for a witness ^{#Ac 14:17} of his general goodness ^{#Mt 5:45} and special providence, as a good householder. ^{#Ac 14:17}

He reserveth unto us the appointed weeks of harvest.] Which, if he should deny us but one year only, how easily might he starve us all! See his love, and fear his name.

Ver. 25. Your iniquities have turned.] See on #Isa 59:2 1:2.

Ver. 26. For among my people are found wicked men.] This was as bad as to find a nettle in a garden, unchastity in a virgin, or the devil in paradise. All the Lord's people are or ought to be holy.

They lie in wait.] Or, Watch; or, Prey. See on #Mic 7:2.

They set a trap, they catch men.] To spoil them or slay them. Such a one was Otto, the Pope's Muscipulator (as the story styleth him), i.e., micecatcher, sent hither by Gregory IX to rake and take away our money. Tetzelius, sent by Leo X into Germany, was another.

Ver. 27. As a cage is full of birds, so are their houses full of deceit,] i.e., Of ill-gotten goods, which will prove no such catch in the close, as they count upon.

Ver. 28. They are waxen fat, they shine.] Pingues, nitidi sunt; cutem curant ut Epicuri de grege porci; fat they are, and fair-liking, slick, and smooth.

Yea, they overpass the deeds of the wicked.] They outsin others. Or, as some sense it, they escape better than others. {#Ps 73:5}

Ver. 29. Shall I not visit?] See #Jer 5:9.

Ver. 30. A wonderful and horrible thing.] Res stupenda et horrenda; an abhorred filth, such as may well draw from us a Heu, heu, Domine Deus

Is committed in the land.] Heb., In this land, where men are therefore the worse, because they should be better.

Ver. 31. The prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule.] The chief priests bearing rule in the causes and consciences of the people, had suborned their abettor's ambitious prophets, who applauded their greatness for preferment, teaching the people to doat on the titles of Moses' chair, high priests, the temple of the Lord, &c., as if there were not many a goodly box in the apothecary's shop without one drachm of any drug therein. Such false prophets were those Pharisees, factors for the priests with their corban; {#Mt 15:5} and such also for the Pope are the Jesuits and seculars, which differ only as hot and cold poison, both destructive to the state.

What will ye do?] Alas! what will become of you at last? {a}

{a} Aposiopesis de extremo tam deploratae politiae exterminio.

Chapter 6

Ver. 1. O ye children of Benjamin.] These were the prophet's countrymen, for Anathoth was in that tribe; so was also part of Jerusalem itself. He forwarneth them of the enemy's approach, and bids them begone. The Benjamites were noted for valiant, but vicious. {#Jud 19:16,22-25 Ho 9:9 10:9}

And blow the trumpet in Tekoah.] A place that had its name from trumpeting; so there is an elegance in the original. See the like, #Mic 1:10,14. It was twelve miles from Jerusalem, and six from Bethhaccerem. Here dwelt that wise woman bridled by Joab. {#2Sa 14:2}

Set up a sign of fire.] A beacon, or such as the cross of fire is in Scotland, where (for a signal to the people when the enemy is at hand) two firebrands set across, and pitched upon a spear, are carried about the country. {a}

{a} Life of Edward VI, by Sir F. Heywood.

Ver. 2. I have likened the daughter of Zion to a comely and delicate woman.] Certatim amatae bucolicae puellae; some fair shepherdess, to whom the kings with their armies make love (but for no love), that they may destroy and spoil her.

Ver. 3. The shepherds.] See on #Jer 6:2.

Ver. 4. Prepare ye war against her.] Say those Chaldean sweethearts. This is their wooing language, like that of the English at Musselburgh.

Let us go up at noon.] Let us lose no time; why burn we daylight by needless delays?

Ver. 5. Let us destroy her palaces.] Where we shall find all precious substance; we shall fill our hands with spoil. {as #Pr 1:13}

Ver. 6. For thus hath the Lord of hosts said,] q.d., It is he who setteth these Chaldean warriors to work, and giveth them these words of command. So Totilas, Gensericus, and others, were the scourge in God's hand, as now also the Turks are.

She is wholly oppression.] She was full of judgment, righteousness lodged in her; but now nothing less.

Ver. 7. As a fountain casteth out her waters.] Incessantly and abundantly. In Ieremia est continua quasi declamatio contra peccatum, &c.

Before me continually.] This showeth their impudence.

Ver. 8. Be thou instructed.] Affliction is a schoolmaster, ^{a} or rather an usher to the law, which the apostle calleth a schoolmaster to Christ. Affliction bringeth men to the law, and the law to Christ. Affliction is a preacher, saith one; "Blow the trumpet in Tekoah"; what saith the trumpet? "Be instructed, O Jerusalem."

Lest my soul depart from thee.] Heb., Be loosed or disjointed; lest I loathe thee more than ever I loved thee, and so thy ruin come rushing in, as by a sluice.

^{a} Maturant aspera mentem.

Ver. 9. They shall thoroughly glean the remnant.] They shall make clean work of them. ^{as #Jud 20:45}

Ver. 10. To whom shall I speak and give warning?] Heb., Protest —q.d., I know not where to meet with one teachable hearer in all Jerusalem.

Behold, their ear is uncircumcised.] Obstructed and stopped with the "superfluity of naughtiness," worse than any ear wax, or thick film overgrowing the organ of hearing. Tanquam monstra marina, surda aure Dei verba praetereunt.

The word of the Lord is unto them a reproach.] They take reproofs for reproaches. ^{as #Lu 11:45}

Ver. 11. Therefore I am full of the fury of the Lord, / i.e., Of curses and menaces against this obstinate people. ^{as #Jer 4:19}

I am weary with holding in.] As hitherto I have done, and could still in compassion, but that of necessity I must obey God's will, and be the messenger of his wrath. It is a folly to think that God's ministers delight to fling daggers at men's breasts, or handfuls of hell fire in their faces. Non nisi coactus, said he.

I will pour it forth.] I will denounce it, and then God will soon effect it. See on #Jer 1:10.

Ver. 12. With their fields and wives together.] These are mentioned as most dear to them; who could haply say as he did—

Secure chara coniuge posse frui.”

Ver. 13. Every one is given to covetousness.] Avet avaritia, eager for greed, is coveting covetise or excessively; crieth still, Give, give, with the horse leech; of which creature Pliny {a} observeth, and experience showeth, that it hath no through passage, but taketh much in, and letting nothing out, breaks and kills itself with sucking. So doth the covetous man.

Every one dealeth falsely.] Heb., Each one is doing falsehood, as if that were their common trade.

{a} Lib. xi. cap. 34.

Ver. 14. They have healed also the hurt of...slightly.] Heb., Upon a slight or slighted thing. Secundum curationem mali leviculi; {a} as men use to cure the slight hurts of their children by blowing on them only, or stroking them over. Thus these deceitful workers dealt by God's people, dallying with their deep and dangerous wounds, which they search not, neither cauterise, according to necessary severity.

Saying, Peace, peace.] Making all fair weather before them, whenas the storm of God's wrath was even breaking out upon them, such a storm as should never blow over.

{a} Secundum leviculum. -Jun.

Ver. 15. Were they at all ashamed] Their shamelessness was no small aggravation of their sin. Ita licet multas abominaciones commiserunt Papistae sine verecundia, verecundari tamen non possunt, saith Dr John Raynolds. {a} Papists are frontless and shameless. Dr Story, for instance:—I see nothing, said he, before the parliament in the beginning of Queen Elizabeth, to be ashamed of, so less I see to be sorry for; but rather because I have done no more,

&c.; wherein he said there was no default in him, but in the higher powers, who much against his mind had laboured only about the young and little sprigs and twigs, whiles they should have struck at the root and rooted it out, meaning thereby the Lady Elizabeth, whom also he afterwards daily cursed in his grace before his meal. And concerning his persecuting and burning the Protestants, he denied not but that he was once at the burning of an earwig (for so he termed it) at Uxbridge (Mr Denley, martyr), where he tossed a faggot at his face as he was singing psalms, and set a spiny evergreen bush of thorns under his feet, a little to prick him, &c. {b}

Ver. 16. Stand ye in the ways and see.] Duly deliberate and take time to consider whether you are in the right or not.

Ask for the old paths.] Chalked out in the Word, and walked in by the patriarchs. Think not, as some do today, by running through all religions to find out the right; for this is viam per aria quaerere, as Junius phraseth it; to seek a way where none is to be found. How many religions are there now among us! So many men, so many minds. Non est sciens hodie qui novitates non invenit, as one complained of old. He is nobody that cannot invent a new way; but as old wine is better, so is the old way; hold to it therefore. Quod primum verum, {a} That which was first is true; but beware of new truths that cannot be proven to be old. {as #1Jo 2:7}

Saepius in fraudes incidet ille suns.”

But they said, We will not walk therein.] So #Jer 6:17, "But they said, We will not hearken." See the like resolute answers, #Jer 22:21 44:16, savouring of a self-willed obstinace. It is easier to deal with twenty men's reasons than with one man's will. A wilful man stands as a stake in the midst of a stream, lets all pass by him, but he stands where he was. Luther saith of some of his Wittembergians, that so great was their obstinace, so headstrong and headlong they were, that the four elements could not bear it. Jeremiah seems here to say as much of his Jerusalemites. See #Jer 6:18,19.

{a} Alnar. Pelagius.

Ver. 17. Also I set watchmen over you, / i.e., Priests and prophets to watch for your welfare.

Hearken to the sound of the trumpet.] See on #Jer 6:8.

We will not hearken.] See on #Jer 6:16.

Ver. 18. Therefore hear, O ye nations.] For this people will not hear me, though I speak never so good reason. Scaliger {a} telleth us that the nature of some kind of amber is such that it will draw to itself all kind of stalks of any herb, except basilisk, a herb called capitalis, because it makes men heady, filling their brains with black exhalations. Thus those who by the fumes of their own corrupt wills are grown headstrong, will not be drawn by that which draweth others who are not so prejudicated.

What is among them?] What their sins are; or, Quid in eos -sc., constituerim; what I have resolved to bring upon them; {b} or, Quae in eis, know, O congregation (of the saints) which art among them.

{a} Exercit. 140, Num. xii.

Ver. 19. Hear, O earth.] In case none else will hear.

Even the fruit of their thoughts.] Why, then, should any man think that "thought is free?" Free they are from men's courts and consistories, but not from God's eye, law, or hand.

Ver. 20. To what purpose cometh there to me incense?] *Cui bono, so long as it smelleth of the foul hand that offereth it, so long as you think to bribe me with it? See #Isa 1:14.

From Sheba.] Whence the Greeks seem to have their word σεβειν, to worship; and the Arabians call God—the adequate object of divine worship—Sabim, and a mystery, Saba.

And the sweet cane.] Heb., Cane the good. The Septuagint render it cinnamon; and the Vulgate, calamus; of which see Pliny, lib. xii. cap. 22.

From a far country.] From India, saith Jerome. Haec omnia bene in nostros Papistas quadrabunt.

Ver. 21. Behold, I will lay stumblingblocks.] {a} Heb., Stumblements—i.e., occasions, preparations, and means to work their ruth and ruin; what these are, see #Jer 6:22.

{a} Strages -sc., et clades in quas incident et corrueunt., Slaughter and defeat in which they fell and were ruined.

Ver. 22. Thus saith the Lord.] It is not in vain that this is so oft prefaced to the ensuing prophecies. Dictum Iehovae The word the Lord is very emphatic and authoritative.

Behold, a people cometh from the north.] This the prophet had oft foretold for forty years together; sed surdis fabulam, but he could not be believed.

Ver. 23. They shall lay hold on bow and spear.] To destroy et eminus et comminus, both afar off and at hand.

Their voice roareth like the sea.] Which is so dreadful, that the horrible shriekings of the devils are set out by it {#Jas 2:19}. {a} They who would not hear the prophet's sweet words, shall hear the enemies roaring in the midst of their congregations. {#Ps 74:4}

{a} φρισσοισι.

Ver. 24. Our hands wax feeble.] He modestly reckoneth himself among the rest, though the "arms of his hands were made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob," {#Ge 49:24} and his "heart was fixed, trusting in the Lord." {#Ps 112:7}

Ver. 25. Go not out into the field.] Since there is "no peace to him that goeth out, nor to him that cometh in"; {#2Ch 15:5} but

“Luctus ubique, pavor, et plurima mortis imago.”

“Everywhere grief, panic and the images of the most dead.”

Ver. 26. Gird thee with sackcloth, and wallow thyself in ashes.] The very heathens do so when in danger of a merciless enemy:

Veniam irarum coelestium poscentes, saith Livy, {a} seeking the pardon of their sins and the favour of their gods.

{a} Lib iii.

Ver. 27. I have set thee for a tower and a fortress.] Or, A fortified watch tower have I made thee among my people—i.e., to spy out and discover their dispositions and affections.

Ver. 28. They are all grievous revolters.] Heb., Revolters of revolters. Chald., Princes of revolters, archrebels. Jeremiah, God's champion, such as was wont to be set forth completely armed at the coronation of a king in this nation, findeth and reporteth them such here, and proveth it.

Walking with slanders.] Trotting up and down as pedlars, dropping a tale here and another there, contrary to #Le 19:16.

They are brass and iron.] Base and drossy, false and feculent metals. Silver and gold they would seem to be, a sincere and holy people; but they are malae monetae, base coinage, a degenerate and hypocritical generation. Adulterini sunt, nihil habentes probi, as Theodoret hath it here; naught, and good for nought; not unlike those stones brought home in great quantity by Captain Frobisher in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. He thought them to be minerals and of good worth; but when there could be drawn from them neither gold nor silver, nor any other metal, they were cast forth to repair the highways. {a}

They are all corrupters.] Of themselves and of others.

{a} Camden's Elisabeth, 189.

Ver. 29. The bellows are burnt.] The prophet's lungs are spent; all their pains spilt upon a perverse people. See #Eze 24:6,12,13. Jeremiah had blowed hard, as a smith or metallary doth with his bellows; he had suffered, as it were, by the heat of a most ardent fire in trying and melting his ore; he had used his best art also by casting in lead, as today they do quicksilver, to melt it the more easily, and with less loss and waste; but all to no purpose at all. Let us, to the wearing of our tongues to the stumps, preach never so much, men will on in sin, said Bradford. {a}

The lead is consumed.] All the melting judgments which, as lead is cast into the furnace to make it the hotter, God added to the ministry of the prophets to make the Word more operative, they will do no good.

The founder melteth in vain.] Whether God, the master founder, or the prophets, God's co-founders or fellow workmen, as the apostle calleth them. {#1Co 6:1}

The wicked are not plucked away.] Or, Their wickednesses; they will not part with their dross, or be divorced from their dilecta delicta, beloved sins. The vile person will speak villany, and his heart will work iniquity, to practise hypocrisy, and to utter error against the Lord. {#Isa 32:6}

{a} Mr Case's Treatise of Afflictions.

Ver. 30. Reprobate {a} silver shall men call them.] Dross and refuse, rather than pure metal; "silver" they would seem to be, but their hypocrisy shall be made known to all men, who shall count them and call them "reprobate," because impurgabiles and inexpiabiles, uncounsellable and incorrigible; {b} a sure sign of reprobation, as Aquinas noteth from #Heb 6:7,8.

For the Lord hath rejected them.] As refuse and counterfeit, such as will not pass in payment. {c} Hence they are to be cast into Babylon's iron furnace (quasi antro Aetnaeo et Cyclopico adhuc decoquendi), a type of that eternal fire of hell prepared of old for the devil and reprobates.

{a} Αδοκτιμος, unapproved.

{b} Jerome, Lyra.

{c} Deus est sapiens nummularius, God is a wise banker.

Chapter 7

Ver. 1. The word that came to Jeremiah.] A new sermon, but to the same purpose as the former. See on #Jer 1:2. Toto libro idem argumentum sursum deorsum versat. {a}

{a} Oecolamp.

Ver. 2. Stand in the gate of the Lord's house.] The east gate, which was the most famous and most frequented of the people, and therefore fittest for the purpose.

And proclaim there this word.] Stand there with this word (as once the angel with a terrible sword did at the porch of paradise) to excommunicate, as it were, this hypocritical people; and do it verbis non tantum disertis sed et exertis, plainly and boldly.

Ver. 3. Amend your ways and your doings.] Heb., Make good your ways, sc., by repentance for and from your sins, and by believing the Gospel. Defaecantur enim mores, ubi medullitus excipitur evangelium. Amendment of life is an upright, earnest, and constant endeavour to do all that God commandeth, and to forbear what he forbiddeth.

Ver. 4. Trust ye not in lying words.] Or, Matters, sc., that will deceive you. The ships Triumph or Good Speed may be ventorum ludibrium, mocked by the wind and miscarry upon the hard rocks or soft sands; so fair shows and bare titles help not. Vatinius, that wicked Roman, professed himself a Pythagorean: {a} and vicious Antipater wore a white cloak, the ensign of innocence. This was virtutis stragulum pudefacere, said Diogenes wittily, to put honesty to an open shame.

The temple of the Lord, the temple—are these,] i.e., These buildings, or these three parts of the temple, viz., the most holy place, the sanctuary, and the outer court. To these are made the promises of God's perpetual residence; {#Ps 132:14} therefore we are safe from all danger while here we take sanctuary. See #Mic 3:11. The Romish crew, in like manner, have nothing in their mouths so much as the Church, the Church, the Catholic Church; {b} and therein, like oyster wives, they outcry us. Many also among ourselves cry, "The temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord," who do yet nothing care for the Lord of the temple. They glory in external privileges, and secure themselves therein, as the Jews fable that Og, King of Bashan, escaped in the flood by riding astride upon the ark without. But what profiteth it

“ Respicere ad phaleras, et nomina vana Catonum?”

Esse Christianum grande est, non videri, saith Jerome. It is a great privilege to be a Christian, but not to seem only to be so; an empty title yieldeth but an empty comfort at last.

{a} Cic. in Vatinium.

{b} Ecclesiam ad ravim usque crepant catholicam.

Ver. 5. For if ye thoroughly amend your ways.] If ye thoroughly execute judgment; if ye be serious in the one, and sedulous in the other. See #Jer 7:2.

Ver. 6. If ye oppress not the stranger, &c.] Turtures amat Deus, non vultures. See on #Isa 1:23.

Ver. 7. Then will I cause you to dwell in this place.] Not else. God's promises are with a condition, which is as an oar in a boat or stern of a ship, and turns the promise another way.

Ver. 8. Behold, ye trust, &c.] See on #Jer 7:4.

Ver. 9. Will ye steal, murder, &c.] Heb., Will ye stealing steal, murdering murder, &c.—i.e., drive a trade with the devil by these foul practices allowed and wallowed in, quasi examen malorum facinorum nihil obsit, modo domum Dei ingrederemini, as if you could set off with me, and make amends by your good deeds for your bad.

Ver. 10. And come and stand before me in this house.] This was worse than to do as the Circassians, a kind of mongrel Christians of the Greek Church of this day, who, as they baptize not their children till the eighth year, so they enter not into the Church, the gentlemen especially, till the sixtieth year, but hear divine service standing without the temple—that is to say, till through age they grow unable to continue their rapines and robberies, to which sin that nation is exceedingly addicted. {a}

And say, We are delivered,] i.e., Licensed. Hoc idem dicunt qui cogitationes inter peccata non numerant, saith Oecolampadius.

{a} Breerwood's Enquiry.

Ver. 11. Is this house, which is called by my name.] Is it become impiae gentis arcanum? as Florus afterwards spitefully called it; or a professed sanctuary of roguery? as the Papists maliciously say of Geneva; or a receptacle of all abominations? ^{a} as Pompey's theatre in Rome was once said to be.

Become a den of robbers?] To such it should have been said by the porters, Gressus removete profani. In the mystical sacrifices of Ceres, no profane person was to be admitted, for the priest going before uttered these words, εκας εκας οστις αλιτρος—that is, be packing every wicked person. So the Roman priests had their procul, O procul este, profani.

^{a} Arx omnium turpitudinum.

Ver. 12. But go ye now.] Non passibus sed sensibus. Summon the sobriety of your senses before your own judgments, and consider what I did of old to Shiloh, a place no less privileged than yours, and wherefore I did it, and be warned by their woes. Alterius perditio, tua sit cautio; seest thou another shipwrecked, look well to thy tackling. Reason should persuade, and therefore lodgeth in the brain; but when reason cannot persuade, example should, and mostly will.

Ver. 13. And now, because ye have done.] Worthily are they made examples to others, that will not take example by others; that will not aliena frui insania, make benefit of other men's miseries.

Rising early.] As good husbands use to do; and as Plutarch reporteth of the Persian kings, that they had an officer to call them up betimes, and to mind them of their business.

Ver. 14. Therefore will I do unto this house.] Which ye fondly think that I am bound to hold and uphold. The disciples also seem to have had a conceit that the temple and the world must needs end together; hence that mixed discourse of our Saviour—now of one, and now of another. ^{#Mt 24:2 Jer 7:3} ^{See Trapp on "Jer 7:3"}

Ver. 15. And I will cast you out of my sight.] Heb., From against, or over against my face.

As I have cast out your brethren.] For your instance and admonition I hanged them up in gibbets, as it were at your very doors but nothing would warn you.

Ver. 16. Therefore pray not thou for this people.] For I am unchangeably resolved upon their ruin, and I would not have thy prayers, those honeydrops, spilt upon them. Their day of grace is past, their sins are full, the decree is now gone forth, and it is irreversible, therefore pray not for this deplored people; there is a sin unto death, and who knows but their sin was such? Sure it is the prophet was silenced here, and that was a sad symptom.

Neither lift up cry.] Verbum aptum precibus est; lift up is a very fit expression, and the word rendered cry comes from a root ^{a} that signifieth clamare voce contenta et efficaci, to set up the note to some tune, as we say.

Neither make intercession to me.] Interdicit ei ne intercedat. Here and elsewhere God flatly forbids the prophet to pray. See #Jer 14:7,11; and yet he is at it again. ^{#Jer 7:19-22} So #Ex 32:11-13, Let me alone, saith God. The Chaldee there hath it, Cease thy prayer; but Moses would not. These were men of prayer, and could truly say of themselves, as David once did, ^{#Ps 109:4} But I gave myself to prayer. Where the Hebrew hath it, But I, prayer; as if he had been made up of it, and had minded little else. The Lord also, they knew, was a prayer hearing God. "Oh thou that art hearing prayers"—so the Hebrew hath it ^{#Ps 65:2} -always hearing some, and ready to hear the rest. Our God is not like Jupiter of Crete, that had no ears; nor as those other heathen deities of whom Cicero sadly complaineth to his brother Quintus in these words: I would pray to the gods for those things, but that they have given over to hear my prayers. Jeremiah could upon better ground pray, than ever he in Plato did, “Ζευ βασιλευ τα μεν εσθλα,” ^{b} &c.

In English thus:

"Great God, the good thou hast to give,
Whether we ask't or no,
Let's still receive: no mischief thrive
To work our overthrow."

^{a} Ranan; unde ranae, ut aliqui volunt.

^{b} Plat. in Alcibiad.

Ver. 17. Seest thou not what they do?] ^{a} And hast thou yet a heart to pray for them? and should I yet have a heart to pity them? There is only this hope left sometimes, that something God will yield to the prayers of his people, even when he is most bitterly bent against them.

“ Flectitur iratus, voce rogante, Deus. ”

Ver 18. The children gather wood.] {a} All sorts, sizes, and sexes are as busy as bees:

“ Sed turpis labor est ineptiarum. ”

Oh that we were so intent, with united forces, to the worship of the true God of heaven! Vae torpori nostro. Oh take heed of industrious folly! dispirit not yourselves in the pursuit of trifles, &c.

To make cakes.] Popana, {b} cakes stamped with stars.

To the queen of heaven, J i.e., To the heavenly bodies, and, as some will have it, to the moon in special. The Hebrews have a saying, that God is to be praised in the least gnat, to be magnified in the elephant, but to be admired in the sun, moon, and stars. And if the Jews in the text had stayed here, who could have blamed them? but to deify these creatures was gross idolatry, and an inexpiable sin. Epiphanius {c} telleth us of certain heretics called Collyridians, that they baked cakes and offered them to the Virgin Mary, whom they called the queen of heaven. And do not the Papists to this day the very same, saying that hyperdulia {d} is due unto her? not to speak of Bonaventure's blasphemous Lady psalter; Bernard Baubusius, the Jesuit, hath set forth a book in praise of the Virgin Mary, by changing this one verse—a thousand twenty and two ways, according to the number of the known stars. The Jesuits commonly write at the end of their books, Laus Deo et beatae Virgini, Praise be given to God and to the blessed Virgin; but this is the badge of the beast. Let us say, Soli Deo gloria; Glory only to God, and yet not in the sense of that Persian ambassador, who, whensoever his business lay with Christians, was wont to have Soli Deo gloria very much in his mouth; but by soli he meant the sun, whom he honoured for his god. Why the women here, and #Jer 44:19, should be so busy in kneading cakes to the moon, these reasons are given:—(1.) Because the moon was a queen; (2.) Because the women at their labour were most beholden to the moon, who by her great moisture mollifies the pregnant, and makes the passage easy for their delivery. This custom of offering cakes to the moon, saith one, {e} our ancestors may seem not to have been ignorant of; to this day our women make cakes at such times, yea, the child is no sooner born but called cake bread. Add, that the Saxons did adore the moon, to whom they set a day apart, which to this day we call Monday. The same author {f} telleth us, that he who not long since conquered the Indies, persuaded the natives that he had complained of them to their moon, and that such a day the goddess should frown upon them; which was nothing else but an eclipse, which he had found out in the almanac.

Ver. 19. Do they provoke me to anger?] i.e., Hurt they me by their provocations? or hope they to get the better of me, and to cause me to lay down the bucklers first? Surely, as Ulysses's companions said to him, when he would needs provoke Polydamas, may we better say to such as provoke the Almighty,

Or as the wise man, "Contend not with him that is mightier than thou"; meddle with thy matchman.

Ver. 20. Mine anger and mine fury.] A very dreadful doom, denounced against these daring monsters. Those that provoke God to anger shall soon have enough of it. It is a fearful thing to fall into the punishing hands of the living God {#Heb 10:31} Oh keep out of them!

Ver. 21. Put your burnt offerings to your sacrifices, and eat flesh.] Congerite, ingerite, digerite, egerite. Take away all your sacrifices, wherewith ye fondly think to expiate your sins, and feast your carcasses with them; for I wot well that you offer them to me, ventris potius gratia quam internae pietatis, rather of gourmandise than good devotion. You have therefore my good leave to make your best of them; for I account them no other than ordinary and profane food, such flesh as is bought and sold in the shambles. So their meat offering {#Le 2:5} is in scorn called "their bread for their soul," or life; {#Ho 9:4} that is, for their natural sustenance. And no better are the elements in the Lord's Supper to the unworthy receiver, whatever he may promise himself by them.

Ver. 22. For I spake not unto your fathers.] Videlicet solum aut simpliciter. Only clearly and candidly I gave them not those holy rites as the substance of my service, or that ye should thus hold them up against my threats for your rebellions, as a buckler of defence. Sacrifices without obedience nec placent nec placant Deum. neither may they please nor placate God.

Ver. 23. But this thing I commanded them,] i.e., I principally commanded them, giving them therefore first the decalogue, and then afterwards the ceremonial law, which was, or should have been, their gospel.

Ver. 24. But they hearkened not, nor inclined.] So cross grained they were, and thwart from the very first.

In the imagination of their evil hearts.] In sententia animi sui pessimi. {a} Heb., Aspectu cordis -so #De 19:9.

They went backward, and not forward.] As crab fish do; as vile apostates, in peius proficiunt, grow every day worse than other, being not only averse but adverse to any good, they daily "grow worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived," seipsis indies facti deteriores. Islebius first became an Antinomian, and the father of that sect, and then a Papist, and lastly an atheist and epicure, as Osiander testifieth. While he was an Antinomian only, he many times promised amendment, being convinced of his error, but performed it not. After that he condemned his error, and recanted it in a public auditory, and printed his recantation; yet when Luther was dead, he not only licked up his former vomit, but fell to worse, as aforesaid. {b}

Ver. 26. Yet they hearkened not unto me.] This God speaketh to the prophet, as weary of talking to them any longer, since it was to no better purpose.

Ver. 27. But they will not hearken unto thee.] Howbeit speak—"whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear"—for a testimony against them.

Ver. 28. This is a nation.] A heathenish nation, such as they use to reproach with this name, Goi, and Mamzer Gojim, that is, bastardly heathens.

Nor receiveth correction.] Or, Instruction.

Ver. 29. Cut off thine hair, O Jerusalem.] In token of greatest sorrow and servitude. {#Job 1:20 Isa 15:2 Eze 27:31} Tu, dum servus es, comam nutris? said he in Aristophanes. The word here rendered "hair" is nezir, which signifieth a crown, and there hence the Nazarites had their name, {#Nu 6:2,5} intimating thereby haply that their votaries should be as little accepted as were their sacrifices.

{#Jer 7:21}

And forsaken the generation of his wrath.] Who are elsewhere called "the people of his curse," and "vessels of wrath, fitted for destruction."

Ver. 30. They have set their abominations in the house.] So do those now that broach heresies in the Church.

Ver. 31. To burn their sons and their daughters.] Haply in a sinful imitation of Abraham or Jephthah; or else after the example of the Canaanites {#De 12:31} and other heathens, who thus sacrificed to the

But the valley of slaughter.] Or, Gehaharegah; for the great slaughter that the Chaldees shall make there. Ecce congrua poena peccato, saith Oecolampadius.

For they shall bury in Tophet.] It shall become a polyandrium, or common burial place, till there be no place or room left.

Ver. 33. And the carcasses of this people,]{ a} Their murrain carcasses, as the Vulgate rendereth it.

Shall be meat for the fowls of the heaven.] Whereby we may also understand the devils of hell, saith Oecolampadius.

Ver. 34. Then will I cause to cease.] Laetitia in luctum convertetur, plausus in planctum, &c. Their singing shall be turned into sighing, their hollowing into howling, &c.

The voice of the bridegroom.] No catches or canzonets shall be sung at weddings; no Epithalamia.

Chapter 8

Ver. 1. At that time they shall bring out the bones.] They shall not suffer the dead to rest in their graves, maxime propter ornamenta in sepulchris condita, chiefly for the treasure the Chaldees shall there look for. See #2Ch 36:19 Ne 2:3; Joseph. Antiq., lib. xiii. c. 15. #Apc Bar 2:24. For extremity of despoite also, dead men's bones have been digged up. Pope Formosus was so dealt with by his successor, Stephanus VI, {a} and many of the holy martyrs by their barbarous persecutors. Cardinal Pool had a purpose to have taken up

King Henry VIII's body at Windsor, and to have burned it, but was prevented by death. {b} Charles V would not violate Luther's grave, though he were solicited so to do when he had conquered Saxony. But if he had, it had been never the worse with Luther; who, being asked where he would rest, answered, Sub coelo: coelo tegitur qui caret urna. Under the sky: the sky is the covering for those who lose their funeral urn. Of all fowl, we most hate and detest the crows; and of all beasts the jackals, a kind of foxes in Barbary; because the one digs up the graves and devours the flesh, the other picketh out the eyes of the dead.

Ver. 2. And they shall spread them before the sun.] Whom these idolaters had worshipped while they were alive, and thought they could never do enough for, as is hinted by those many expressions in the text.

Whom they have loved, and whom they have served, &c.] Innuitur poena talionis, saith Piscator. Their dead bodies shall lie unburied in the sight of these their deities, who could do them no good either alive or dead.

Ver. 3. And death shall be chosen rather than life.] Vae victis. Alas O survivors, they being captives, and sorely oppressed, shall sing that doleful ditty,

“ O terque quaterque beati

*Queis ante ora patrum, Solymae sub moenibus altis
Contigit oppetere.*”

Oh how happy were they that perished during the siege, or in the surprisal of the city! Life indeed is sweet, as we say; and man is a life loving creature, said that heathen; but it may happen that life shall be a burden and a bitterness. How oft doth Job unwish it, and how fain would Elijah have been rid of it! So little cause is there that any good man should be either fond of life, or afraid of death.

Ver. 4. Shall they fall, and not arise?] Or, When men fall, will they not arise? Or, Will not one that hath turned aside return? To fall may befall any man; but shall he lie there, and not essay to get up again?

To lose his way may be incident to the wisest; but who but a fool would not make haste to get into the right way again Errare humanum est: perseverare, diabolicum. To error is human, to continue erring is devilish. And yet these stubborn Jews refuse to rise or return.

Ver. 5. Why then is this people of Jerusalem? &c.] Why else but because they are void of all true reason, and quite beside themselves in point of salvation? Their pertinace, or rather perversity, in sinning is altogether insuperable. Monoceros interimi potest, capri non potest. The unicorn is able to be killed, the billy goat can not.

They hold fast deceit.] They hold close to their false prophets, or rather a false heart of their own hath deceived them. {as #Jer 8:11} A deceived heart hath turned them aside. {as #Isa 44:20; see there}

Ver. 7. Yea, the stork in the heaven knoweth her appointed times.] These souls, though wanting reason, know well when to change quarters, whether against summer, as the stork, turtle, and swallow, or against winter, as the crane.

But my people know not the judgment of the Lord.] Whether his summer of grace offered, or his winter of punishment threatened; to embrace the one or to prevent the other. See a like dissimilitude and opposition, #Isa 1:3.

Ver. 8. How do ye say, We are wise?] If ye were so, ye would never say so. "Surely I am more brutish than any man," said holy Agur. {#Pr 30:2} This only I know, that I know nothing, said Socrates. Neither know I so much as this, that I know just nothing, said a third. How could these in the text say, "We are wise," when the fowls of the air outwitted them? Compare #Job 35:11.

The law of the Lord is with us.] Vox est Pharisaeorum. The voice is of the Pharisees. So the Jesuits to this day (as of old the Gnostics) will needs be held the only knowing men. The empire of learning belongeth to the Jesuits, say they; a Jesuit cannot be a heretic. Iungantur in unum, dies cum nocte, lux cum tenebris, { a } &c., May they join into one, day with night, light with darkness &c, i.e., Let day and night be jumbled together, light and darkness, heat and cold, health and sickness, life and death; so may there be some likelihood that a Jesuit may be a heretic, saith one of them. The Church is the soul of the world, the clergy of the Church, and we of the clergy, saith another.

Lo, certainly in vain made he it,] i.e., The law, for any good use that this people or their leaders put it to. See #Ho 8:12 Ro 2:17-25.

{a} Casaub. ex Apologista.

Ver. 9. The wise men are ashamed.] They have cause to be ashamed of their gross ignorance and folly, {#Jer 8:7,8} and greater cause than ever humble Augustine had to say, Scientia mea me damnat, My knowledge undoeth me.

Lo, they have rejected the word of the Lord.] As to any holy practice, their knowledge is only apprehensive and notional, not affective and practical.

And what wisdom is in them?] q.d., None worth speaking of; they lose their civil praises, because not wise to salvation.

Ver. 10. Therefore will I give their wives.] For a punishment of their rejecting my Word, which ought to be received with all reverence and good affection. {a} The Turks do so highly respect the Koran (which is their Bible), that if a Christian do but sit upon it, though unwittingly, they presently put him to death.

For every one, &c.] See #Jer 6:13.

{a} Dilher. Elect., lib. i. cap. 2.

Ver. 11. For they have healed.] See #Jer 6:14.

Ver. 12. Were they ashamed?] See #Jer 6:15.

Ver. 13. I will surely consume them, saith the Lord.] Textitur hic quasi tragoediae scena. Constructed here just as a theatre tragedy. Here followeth a kind of tragedy, saith an expositor; God is brought in threatening, the prophet bewailing, the people despairing, and yet bethinking themselves of some shelter and safeguard, if they knew where to find it, &c.

There shall be no grapes on the vine, nor figs.] But instead thereof I will "give them waters of gall to drink." {#Jer 8:14} Tremellius and Piscator read it thus: There are no grapes on the vine, nor figs on the fig tree, yea, the leaves are fallen; that is, say they, there is no power of godliness found among them, no, not so much as any profession, neither fruit nor leaf.

And the things that I have given them shall pass away.] I will "curse their blessings," {#Mal 2:2} and destroy them after that I have done them good. {#Jos 24:2-13}

Ver. 14. Why do we sit still?] Here the people speak (see on #Jer 8:13), being grievously frightened upon the coming of the Chaldees, and thereupon consulting what course to take; but all would not do. {#Jer 8:16}

Let us be silent.] Sic silent pavidī mures coram fele. So they were as a panic struck mouse in the eyes of a cat.

For the Lord our God hath put us to silence.] Hath expelled our courage and stopped our mouths.

And hath given us water of gall to drink.] Succum cicutae, juice of hemlock, our bane, our death's draught; so that now we know, by woeful experience, what an evil and bitter thing sin is; for a drop of honey we have now a sea of gall.

Ver. 15. We looked for peace, but no good came.] Our false prophets have merely deluded us. So poor souls, when stung by the friars' sermons, were set to penances and good deeds, which stilled them for a while, but could not yield them any lasting comfort. The soul is still ready to shift and shank in every bycorner for ease; but that will not be till it comes to Christ.

Ver. 16. The snorting of his horses was heard from Dan.] See #Jer 4:15. This caused in the Jews' hearts a motion of trepidation. {cf. #Job 39:20} It is the privilege of believers in nothing to be terrified by their adversaries, {#Php 1:28} but with the horse spoken of, {#Job 39:22} to mock at fear, and not to turn back from the dint of the sword.

Ver. 17. Behold, I will send serpents, cockatrices,] i.e., Chaldees, no less virulent than serpents, as violent as horses. Serpentum tot sunt venena quot genera, tot perniciēs quot species, tot dolores quot colores, saith an ancient. {a} Serpents are of several sorts, but all poisonous and pernicious. The basilisk or cockatrice here instanced

(the worst sort of serpents, say the Septuagint here) goeth not upon the belly, as other serpents, but erect from the middle part, and doth so infect the air, that by the pestilent breath coming therefrom fruits are killed, and men being but looked upon by it, and birds flying over it; stones also are broken thereby, and all other serpents put to flight.

And they shall bite you.] There is an elegance in the original. {b}

{a} Isidor., lib. xii. cap. 2.

{b} Diod., Piscator.

Ver. 18. When I would comfort myself, &c.] Or, as some render it, O my comfort against sorrow, i.e., O my God; others, My recreation is joined with sorrow.

Ver. 19. Behold, the voice of the cry.] This was it that broke the good prophet's heart, the shrieks of his people.

Is not the Lord in Zion?] {a} Thus in their distress they leaned upon the Lord, {as #Mic 3:11} and inquired after him, whom in their prosperity they made little reckoning of.

Why have they provoked me to anger?] q.d. The fault is merely in themselves, who have driven me out from among them by their idolatries.

Ver. 20. The harvest is past, the summer is ended.] They had set God a time, and looked for help that summer at farthest; but the Lord, as he never faileth in his own time, so he seldom comes at ours. Let us think we hear our poor brethren in Piedmont, Poland, Pomerania, complaining to us in this sort, and be excited to help them by our prayers and reliefs, &c.

Ver. 21. For the hurt of the daughter of my people am I hurt, I am black.] Or, I go in black, mourner like; for I am denigrated and contemned for bewailing my people's misery, who neither feel nor fear hurt.

Ver. 22. Is there no balm in Gilead?] Yes, surely, there or nowhere; in Gilead grew a balsam, good to make salves for all sores, they say. This balsam grew there only in two large gardens, which belonged to the king. The nature of the tree could not abide iron, but presently died if cut never so small a depth; they used, therefore, glass, bone knives, sharp stones, to get the gum out of the tree.

Is there no physician there?] Or, No surgeon there, where this medicinal simple so aboundeth but this people's sorrow is immedicable, their disease desperate— docta plus valet arte malum. The learned is more strong by the knowledge of evil. The balm of the soul is prayer, saith the Chaldee paraphrast; is repentance, saith Jerome; is Christ applied by faith, say we. Sanguis medici est curatio phrenetici. The blood of the doctor is the cure of the mad. To this almighty Physician no disease can be incurable.

Chapter 9

Ver. 1. Oh that mine head were waters.] Mira sermonis transfiguratione utitur propheta, A wonderful wish of this weeping prophet, and to be taken up by God's faithful ministers, considering the woeful condition of their perishing people, posting to perdition. Pia est illa tristitia, et si dici potest, beata miseria, Appease this sadness and if able to be said, bless this woe, saith Augustine; {a} this is a sweet sorrow, a blessed misery. Such waters will be turned into wine, at the wedding day of the Lamb; for which purpose also they are kept safe in God's bottle. {#Ps 56:8}

And mine eyes a fountain of tears.] That there might be a perennity of them. The same word in Hebrew signifieth both an eye and a fountain; both because the eye is of a watery constitution, and for that our eye should trickle down and not cease for our own and other men's sins and miseries. {#La 3:49} Athanasius by his tears, as by the bleeding of a chaste vine, is said to have cured the leprosy of that tainted age. {b}

{a} Epist. 545.

Ver. 2. Oh that I had in the wilderness a lodging place.] Some sorry shed, such as those worthies had who dwelt in dens and caves of the earth, {#Heb 11:38} such as Athanasius had, who lived, say some, six years in a well without the light of the sun, forsaken of friends, and everywhere hunted by enemies; such as the ancient hermits and monks had, who, because they lived in caves and subterranean holes, they were named Mandrites ^{a} and Troglodites. A godly man desireth to converse as much as may be with God, and as little as may be with men, unless they were better. Lot had little joy of Sodom; ^{#2Pe 2:7,8} Aaron of the Israelites: "Thou knowest," saith he to Moses, "that this people is wholly set upon wickedness"; ^{#Ex 32:22} and indeed so is the whole world. ^{#Job 5:19 2:10} Hence good men are oft put upon David's wish, "Oh that I had the wings of a dove." ^{#Ps 55:6} Or if that "Oh" will not set them at liberty, they take up that "Woe" of his to express their misery, "Woe is me that I sojourn in Mesech." ^{#Ps 120:5} Who will give me a traveller's lodge in the wilderness, that I might leave my people, whose wicked courses are a continual eyesore and heartbreak unto me?

For they are all adulterers.] Both corporal and spiritual.

An assembly of treacherous.] A pack of perfidious wretches; a rabble of rebels conspiring against heaven. ^{#Isa 1:4}

^{a} Mandrae signifieth caves or holes.

Ver. 3. And they bend their tongues like their bow for lies.] To the impeaching of others in their name, state, and life. I read that in Italy, at this day, they have a pocketstone bow, which, held under a cloak, shoots needles with violence to pierce a man's body, yet leaveth a wound scarce discernible. ^{a} Lo, such is an evil tongue, and such mischief it may do a man.

But they are not valiant for the truth.] Truth is no part of their profession; and courage in a good cause they have none. Of the most we may say, as of harts and stags, they have great horns, but to little purpose; or as Themistocles said of the Eretrians, ^{b} that they were like the swordfish, which hath a sword indeed, but not a heart to make use of it.

And they know not me, saith the Lord.] The low apprehensions men have of God, make their hearts work so poorly after him. ^{#Ps 9:10}

^{a} Il Mercurio Italico.

{b} Plutarch.

Ver. 4. Take ye heed every one of his neighbour.] Since there is scarce any to be trusted. The poets tell us, that when Pallas had taught people to build a house, Momus found this fault with it, that it was fixed to a place and not set upon wheels; to the end that if men liked not their neighbourhood, they might remove at pleasure. A good neighbour is a rare bird. {a}

And trust ye not in any brother.] See #Mic 7:5,6, with the notes.

For every brother will utterly supplant.] {b} Singula verba hic habent pondus et pathos ingens. Here each word hath its weight, each syllable its substance.

{a} Non hospes ab hospite tutus. No guest is entertained by a host.—Ovid.

{b} Fratrum quoque gratia rata est. -Ovid.

Ver. 5. They have taught their tongues to speak lies.] They are artists at it, and can tack one lie to another very handsomely. {#Ps 119:69} {See Trapp on "Ps 119:69"}

Ver. 6. Thine habitation is in the midst of deceit,] i.e., Of deceitful persons, who have honey in their tongues, but gall in their hearts; Aliud in labris, aliud in fibris. Another in the vat, another in the glass.

They refuse to know me.] Ut liberius peccent, libenter ignorant; they are wilfully ignorant, {#2Pe 3:3,5} so wedded and wedged they are to their fraudulent practices.

Ver. 7. Behold, I will melt them and try them.] I will cast them into the fiery crucible of sharp affliction. A metaphor from metallaries. See #Jer 6:29.

For how should I do for the daughter of my people?] i.e., How should I do otherwise? What can I do less to them though they are my people, since they are so shamelessly, so lawlessly wicked? An unruly patient maketh a cruel physician; a desperate disease must have a desperate remedy.

Ver. 8. Their tongue is as an arrow shot out.] It is both a bow {#Jer 9:3} and a shaft, and that a slaughtering shaft, as some copies have it here; Culter iugulans, a murdering knife, some render it. {a} So #Ps

42:10. As with a murdering weapon in my bones, mine enemies reproach me. Reckon thou, saith one, Sennacherib and Rabshakeh among the first and chiefest kill Christs, because ever an honest mind is more afflicted with words than with blows.

It speaketh deceit.] See #Ps 52:2. {See Trapp on "Ps 52:5"}

He speaketh peaceably, but in his heart he layeth his wait.] Such a one was the tyrant Tiberius and our Richard III, who would use most compliments and show greatest signs of love and courtesy, to him in the morning, whose throat he had taken order to be cut that evening. {b}

{a} Junius, Piscator.

{b} Dan. Hist., 249.

Ver. 9. Shall I not visit them?] See on #Jer 5:9.

Ver. 10. For the mountains will I take up a weeping.] Accingit se Tropheta ad luctum. Jeremiah was better at weeping than Heraclitus, and from a better principle. Lachrymas angustiae exprimit Crux: lachrymas poenitentiae peccatum: lachrymas sympathiae, affectus humanitatis, vel Christianitatis: lachrymas nequitiae, vel hypocrisis vel vindictae cupiditas. Jeremiah's tears were of the best sort.

Because they are burnt up.] The Rabbis tell us, that after the people were carried captive to Babylon, the land of Jewry was burnt up with sulphur and salt. But this may well pass for a Jewish fable.

Both the fowl of the heaven.] See #Jer 4:25.

Ver. 11. And I will make Jerusalem heaps.] So small a distance is there, saith Seneca, between a great city and none. The world is as full of mutation as of motion.

And a den of dragons.] Because she made mine house a den of thieves. {#Jer 7:11}

Ver. 12. Who is the wise man, that he may understand this?] This who and who, denoteth a great paucity of such wise ones, as consider common calamities in the true causes of them, propter quid pereat haec terra, for what the land perisheth, and that great sins produce grievous judgments. The most are apt to say, with those Philistines, It is a chance; to attribute their sufferings to fate or fortune, to accuse God of injustice, rather than to accept of the punishment of their iniquity.

And who is he to whom the mouth of the Lord hath spoken?] q.d., Is there never a one of your prophets that will set you right herein? but the dust of covetousness hath put out their eyes, and they can better sing Placentia than Lachrymae, &c.

Ver. 13. And the Lord saith.] Or, Therefore the Lord saith, q.d., Because neither yourselves know, nor have any else to tell you, the true cause of your calamities; hear it from God's own mouth.

Ver. 14. But have walked after the imagination of their own heart.] Than the which they could not have chosen a worse guide, since it is evil, "only evil," and "continually" so. {#Ge 6:5} {See Trapp on "Ge 6:5"}

Which their fathers taught them.] See #Jer 7:18.

Ver. 15. Behold, I will feed them with wormwood,] i.e., With bitter afflictions. Et haec poena inobedientiae fidei respondet. And this penalty answers to disobedient faith. The backslider in heart shall be filled with his own ways; {#Pr 14:14} he shall have his belly full of them, as we use to say. See #Jer 8:14.

Ver. 16. And I will scatter them also among the heathen.] As had been forethreatened. {#De 28:15-68 Le 26:14-39} But men will not believe till they feel. They read the threats of God's law, as they do the old stories of foreign wars, and as if they lived out of the reach of God's rod.

Ver. 17. Consider ye.] Intelligentes estote. Is not your hard heartedness such as that ye need such a help to do that wherein you should be forward and free hearted? The Hollanders and French fast, saith one, {a} but, without exprobration be it spoken, they had need to send for mourning women, that by their cunning they may be taught to mourn.

And call for the mourning women.] In planetum et omne pathos faciles, {b} such as could make exquisite lamentation, and cunningly act the part of mourners at funerals, so as to wring tears from the beholders. These the Latins called Praeficas, quia luctui praeficiebantur; because they had the chief hand in funeral mournings; for the better carrying on whereof they both sang doleful ditties, {see #2Ch 35:25} and played on certain heavily sounding instruments, {#Mt 9:23} whence the poet—

“Cantabit maestis tibia funeribus.”—Ovid.

“He will play with the pipe by a gloomy funeral.”

{a} Spec. Bel. Sac., 209.

{b} Ut flerent oculos erudiere suos.—Ovid.

Ver. 18. And let them make haste, and take up a wailing for us.] Of this vanity or affectation God approveth not, as neither he did of the Olympic games, of usury, of that custom at Corinth, {#1Co 15:29} which yet he maketh his use of.

Ver. 19. For a voice of wailing is heard out of Zion, How are we spoiled!] {a} Quis tragoediam aptius et magis graphice depingeret? What tragedy was ever set forth, and in more lively expressions?

Ver. 20. Yet hear the word of the Lord, O ye women.] For souls have no sexes, and ye are likely to have your share as deep as any in the common calamity. You also are mostly more apt to weep than men, and may sooner work your men to godly sorrow than those lamentations.

Ver. 21. For death is come up into our windows,] i.e., The killing Chaldees break in upon us at any place of entrance, doors or windows. {#Joe 2:9 Joh 10:1} The ancients give us warning here to see to our senses—those windows of wickedness—that sin get not into the soul thereby, and death by sin.

Ver. 22. Speak, Thus saith the Lord.] Heb., Speak, it is the Lord's saying; and therefore thou mayest be bold to speak it. So #1Th 4:15, "For I say unto you in (or, by) the word of the Lord."

And as the handful after the harvestman.] Death shall cut them up by handfuls, and lay them heaps upon heaps.

Ver. 23. Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom,] q.d., You bear yourselves bold upon your wisdom, wealth, strength, and other such seeming supports and deceitful foundations, as if these could save you from the evils threatened. But all these will prove like a shadow that declineth—delightful, but deceitful; as will well appear at the hour of death. Charles V, whom, of all men, the world judged most happy, cursed his honours, a little before his death, his victories, trophies, and riches, saying, Abite hinc, abite longe; get you far enough, for any good ye can now do me. Abi, perdita bestia, quae me totum perdidisti; begone, thou wretched creature, that hast utterly undone me, said Cornelius Agrippa, the magician, to his familiar spirit, when he lay dying. So may many say of their worldly wisdom, wealth, &c.

Let not the wise man glory.] Let not those of great parts be headstrong, or top heavy; let them not think to wind out by their wiles and shifts.

Let not the mighty man glory.] Fortitudo nostra est infirmitatis in veritate cognitio, et in humilitate confessio. {a}

Nor the rich man glory in his riches.] Since they avail not in the day of wrath. {#Zep 1:18} {See Trapp on "Zep 1:18"}

{a} Augustine.

Ver. 24. But let him that glorieth, glory in this.] And yet not in this either, unless he can do it with self-denial and lowly mindedness. "Let him glory only in the Lord," saith Paul. The pride of virginity is as foul a sin as impurity, saith Augustine; so here.

Ver. 25. That I will punish all them, &c.] Promiscuously and impartially.

That are circumcised.] Some read it, The circumcised in uncircumcision. Unregenerate Israel, notwithstanding their circumcision, are to God as Ethiopians. {#Am 9:7}

Ver. 26. That are in the utmost corners.] Heb., Praecisos in lateribus, polled by the corner; {a} which was the Arabian fashion, saith Herodotus. See #Jer 49:32.

For all these nations are uncircumcised, / scil., In heart, though circumcised in the flesh, as now also the Turks are.

{a} Tempora circumradunt.

Chapter 10

Ver. 1. Hear ye the word which the Lord speaketh.] Exordium simplicissimum, saith Junius. A very plain preface calling for attention; (1.) From the authority of the speaker; (2.) From the duty of the hearers.

O house of Israel.] The ten tribes, long since captivated, and now directed what to do, say some; the Jews, say others: and in this former part of the chapter, those of them that had been carried away to Babylon with Jeconiah.

Ver. 2. Learn not the way of the heathen.] Their sinful customs and irregular religions—mere irreligious. {a}

And be not dismayed at the signs of heaven.] Which the blind heathens feared and deified; and none did more than the Syrians, the Jews' next neighbours. Of the vanity of judicial astrology, see on #Isa 47:13. He who feareth God needs not fear the stars; for "all things are yours," saith the apostle. {#1Co 3:21} Mulcasses, King of Tunis, a great star gazer, foreseeing by them, as he said, the loss of his kingdom and life together, left Africa that he might shun that mischief; but thereby he hastened it, A.D. 1544. God suffereth sometimes such fond predictions to fall out right upon men for a just punishment of their curiosity.

For the heathen are dismayed at them.] Therefore God's people should not, if it were for no other reason but that only. See #Mt 6:32. Let Papists observe this.

{a} See Selden. De Diis Syris.

Ver. 3. For the customs of the people {a} are vain.] Their rites confirmed by custom; their imagery, for instance, a very magnum nihil, whether ye look to the efficient matter, form, or end of those idols.

For one cutteth a tree out of the forest.] See #Isa 40:2 44:12-17, which last place Jeremiah here seemeth to have imitated.

{a} Caeremoniae populorum,

Ver. 4. They deck it with silver and with gold.] Gild it over to make it sightly; goodly gods there while. See #Isa 4:4.

That it move not.] Ut non amittat, saith Tremellius: that it lose not the cost bestowed upon it.

Ver. 5. They are upright as the palm tree.] Which is straight, tall, smooth, and in summo profert fructus, and beareth fruits at the very top of it.

Ver. 6. Forasmuch as there is none like unto thee.] None of all these dii minutuli, these dunghill deities, are worthy to be named in the same day with thee.

Thou art great.] God is great; {#Ps 77:13} greater; {#Job 33:12} greatest; {#Ps 95:3} greatness itself. {#Ps 145:3} He is a degree above the superlative. Think the same of other his names and attributes, many of which we have here mentioned in this and the following verses; which are therefore highly to be prized, and oft to be perused. Leonard Lessius, a little before his death, finished his book concerning the fifty names of almighty God; often affirming, that in that little book he had found more light and spiritual support under those grievous fits of the stone which he suffered, than in all his voluminous commentaries upon Aquinas's sums, which he had well nigh fitted for the press. {a}

{a} Ex Vita Lessii.

Ver. 7. Who would not fear thee, O King of nations?] Tremble at thy transcendent greatness, thy matchless majesty, power, and prowess? See #Mal 1:14 Re 15:4 Ps 103:19. {See Trapp on "Mal 1:14"} {See Trapp on "Re 15:4"} {See Trapp on "Ps 103:19"}

Forasmuch as among all the wise men of the nations.] Who used to deify their wise men and their kings.

Ver. 8. But they are altogether brutish and foolish.] The wise men are, for that, when they knew there was but one only true God—as did Pythagoras, Socrates, Plato, Seneca, &c.—they "detained the truth in unrighteousness," and taught the people to worship stocks and stones. {#Ro 1:21-23} The nations are, because they yield to be taught devotion by images under what pretext soever.

Considerentur hic subterfugia Papistarum. Let them regard this strategem of Popery. Pope Gregory first taught that images in churches were laymen's books, a doctrine of devils.

Ver. 9. Silver spread into plates.] See #Isa 40:19.

Is brought from Tarshish.] From Tarsus or Tartessus; {#Eze 27:12} from Africa, saith the Chaldee. Idolaters spare for no cost.

And gold from Uphaz.] The same with Phaz; {#Job 28:17} or with Ophir, as some; Aurum Obzyrum.

They are all the work of cunning men.] Quaerunt suos Phidias et Praxiteles: but how could those give that deity which themselves had not?

Ver. 10. But the Lord is the true God.] Heb., Jehovah is God in truth, not in conceit only, or counterfeit.

He is the living God, and an everlasting king.] See on #Jer 10:6.

At his wrath the earth shall tremble.] The earth, that greatest of all lifeless creatures.

And the nations shall not be able.] Less able to stand before him than a glass bottle before a cannon shot.

Ver. 11. Thus shall ye say unto them.] Confession with the mouth is necessary to salvation. This verse (written therefore in the Syriac tongue, which was spoken at Babylon) is a formulary given to God's people, to be made use of by them in detestation of the idolatries of that city.

The gods that made not the heaven and the earth.] The vanity of idols and heathenish gods is set forth (1.) By their impotence; (2.) Frailty. Quid ad haec respondebunt Papistae? aut qualem contradictoriae reconciliationem afferent?

Ver. 12. He hath made the earth by his power.] Here we have the true philosophy and right origin of things: Felix qui potuit rerum cognoscere causas. Almighty God made the earth, the main bulk and body of it. {#Ge 1:1} He alone is the powerful Creator, the provident Disposer, the prudent Preserver of all things both in heaven and in earth; therefore the only true God.

Ver. 13. When he uttereth his voice.] Again, when he thundereth, {#Ps 29:3} it raineth amain, lightneth in the midst of the rain (which is a great miracle), and bloweth for life, as we say, no man knowing whence or whither. {#Joh 3:8} All which wondrous works of God may well serve for a theological alphabet, and cannot be attributed to any god but our God.

And he causeth the vapours to ascend.] See #Ps 135:7. {See Trapp on "Ps 135:7"}

Ver. 14. Every man is brutish in his knowledge.] Or, Every man is become more brutish than to know. That was therefore a hyperbolical praise given by Philostratus to Apollonius, Non doctus sed natus sapiens, that he was not taught, but born a wise man. See #Job 11:12 Ro 1:22. {See Trapp on "Job 11:12"} {See Trapp on "Ro 1:22"} Every man is become brutish for want of knowledge (so the words may be rendered), the heathen idol makers especially; Brutescit homo prae scientia, so Vatablus. Every man is brutish, in comparison of knowledge, viz., of God's knowledge, while he goeth about to search into the causes of rain, lightning, wind, &c., which God only understandeth.

Ver. 15. They are vanity.] Vanity, in its largest extent, is properly predicated of them.

And the work of errors.] Mere mockeries, making men to embrace vanity for verity.

In the time of their visitation.] See on #Isa 46:1.

Ver. 16. The Portion of Jacob is not like them.] God is his people's "portion"; they are his "possession." Oh their dignity and security! This the cock on the dunghill understands not.

Ver. 17. Gather up thy wares out of the land.] Make up thy pack, and prevent a plundering. Reculas tuas et sarcinas compone.

Ver. 18. Behold, I will sling out the inhabitants of this land.] I will easily and speedily sling them, and sling them into Babylon; so God will one day hurl into hell all the wicked of the earth. {#Ps 9:17}

And will distress them, that they may find it so.] Just so as they were foretold it would be, but they could never be drawn to believe it.

Ver. 19. Woe is me for my hurt! my wound is grievous.] This is the moan that people make when in distress, and they find it so. But what after a while of paining?

Truly this is my grief, and I must bear it, / i.e., Bear it off, as well as I may, by head and shoulders, or bear up under it, and rub through it, wearing it out as well as I can; when things are at worst, they mend again. Crosses, as they had a time to come in, so they must have a time to go out, &c. This is not patience, but pertinace, the "strength of stones and flesh of brass"; {#Job 6:12} it draweth on more weight of plagues and punishments. God liketh not this indolence, this stupidity, this despising of his corrections, as he calleth it; {#Heb 12:5} such shall be made to cry, when God bindeth them, {#Job 36:11} as here.

Ver. 20. My tabernacle is spoiled.] I am irreparably ruined; like as when a camp is quite broken up, not any part of a tent or hut is left standing.

Ver. 21. For the pastors are become brutish.] The corrupt prophets and priests, who seduced the people from the truth, were persons that made no conscience of prayer; hence all went to wrack and ruin.

Ver. 22. Behold, the noise of the bruit is come.] This doleful peal he oft rung in their ears, but they little regarded it. See #Jer 9:11.

Ver. 23. O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himself.] He is not master of his own way, but is directed and overruled by the powerful providence; even this cruel Chaldean also, that marcheth against us.

It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps.] We know not what to do, or which way to turn ourselves, only our eyes are toward thee. Behold, we submit to thy justice, and implore thy mercy. This text doth mainly make against freewill, saith Oecolampadius; and yet the Pelagians would hence gather that man can, by his own strength, walk in the way to heaven; but he must be helped, say they, by God's grace, that he may be perfect.

Ver. 24. O Lord, correct me; but with judgment,]^{ a } i.e., In mercy and in measure. Correction is not simply to be deprecated; the prophet here cries, Correct me; David saith, It was good for me. Job calleth God's afflicting of us his magnifying of us. ^{#Jer 7:17} Feri Domine, feri clementer; ipse paratus sum, saith Luther, -Smite, Lord, smite me, but gently, and I am ready to bear it patiently. King Alfred prayed God to send him always some sickness, whereby his body might be tamed, and he the better disposed and affectioned to Godward. Ecclesiastical history telleth of one Servulus, who, sick of a palsy, so that his life was a lingering death, said ordinarily, God be thanked.

Ver. 25. Pour out, &c.] This is not more votum, than vaticinium; a prayer, than a prophecy.

And upon the families.] Neglect of family prayer uncovers the roof, as it were, for God's curse to be rained down upon men's tables, meals, enterprises, &c.

Chapter 11

Ver. 1. The word that came to Jeremiah from the Lord.] To him it came, but to be imparted to other prophets, say some; priests of Anathoth, say others, ^{#Jer 11:2} which might be the reason why they were so enraged against him, and sought his life, ^{#Jer 11:18,19} as the Popish priests did Mancinel's, Savonarola's, and other faithful preachers', for exciting them to do their duties.

Ver. 2. Hear ye the words—and speak ye.] Ye priests, whose ordinary office it is to teach Jacob God's judgments, and Israel his law. ^{#De 33:10}

Ver. 3. And say thou unto them.] Thou, Jeremiah, whether the rest will join with thee or not.

Cursed be the man that obeyeth not the words of this covenant.] It is probable that Jeremiah, when he said thus, held the book in his hand, viz., the book of Deuteronomy, which the Rabbis call Sepher Tochechoth, because of the many increpations and curses therein contained.

Ver. 4. From the iron furnace.] Where iron is melted, and a fierce fire required.

Obey my voice.] See #Jer 7:23.

Ver. 5. A land flowing with milk and honey.] With plenty of dainties. The city of Aleppo is so called by the Turks, of alep, milk; for if the via lactea milky way, it would be found there, saith one.

So be it, O Lord.] Amen, fiat, fiat. Oh that there were a heart in this people to obey thy voice! and oh that thou wouldst still continue them in this good land! &c. Our hearts should be stretched out after our amen, and we should be swallowed up in God, say the Rabbis.

Ver. 6. Hear ye the words of this covenant, and do them.] Else ye hear to no purpose; as the salamander liveth in the fire, and is not made hot by the fire; as the Ethiopian goeth black into the bath, and as black he cometh forth.

Ver. 7. Rising early,] i.e., Endeavouring earnestly. See #Jer 5:8.

Ver. 8. Yet they obeyed not.] See #Jer 7:24.

Therefore I will bring.] Heb., And I brought upon them.

Ver. 9. A conspiracy is found among the men of Judah.] A combination in sinful courses, this is not unity but conspiracy. See #Eze 22:25 Ho 6:9. Such is the unity of the Antichristian crew. {#Re 17:13} The Turks have as little dissension in their religion as any, yet are a rabble of rebels conspiring against Heaven.

Ver. 10. They are turned away to the iniquities of their forefathers.] Showing themselves herein to be a race of rebels, as good at resisting the Holy Ghost as ever their fathers were, and are therefore justly chargeable with their iniquities, which needeth not.

Ver. 11. Which they shall not be able to escape.] To avert, avoid, or abide.

I will not hearken unto them.] See #Pr 1:28 Zec 7:13 {See Trapp on "Pr 1:28"} {See Trapp on "Zec 7:13"}

Ver. 12. Then shall the cities of Judah...go and cry unto the gods.] Or, Let them go and cry unto them—q.d., let them for me. This is one of those bitter answers that God giveth to wicked suitors.

{#Eze 14:3-5 Jud 10:14} Or, if he give them better at any time, it is in wrath, and for a mischief to them.

Ver. 13. For according to the number of thy cities.] See #Jer 2:28.

And according to the number of thy streets.] See #Eze 16:31.

Ver. 14. Therefore pray not thou for this people.] See on #Jer 7:16.

When they cry unto me for their trouble.] It is not the cry of the spirit for grace, but of the flesh only for ease; it is but the fruit of sinful self-love. In thee indeed it proceedeth from a better principle, but I am at a point.

Ver. 15. What hath my beloved to do in mine house?] i.e., Mine once beloved people, which had the liberty of mine house, and was welcome thither, but is now discarded and discovenanted, as if a husband should say to his adulterous wife, What maketh this strumpet in my bed, since she hath so many paramours? {a}

And the holy flesh.] The sacrifice sanctified by the altar.

Is passed from thee.] Shall be wholly taken away from you, together with the temple.

When thou doest evil, then thou rejoicest.] Thou reeldest in thine impurities and sensualities, as dreading no danger, but slighting all admonition.

{a} Vatab.

Ver. 16. The Lord called thy name, A green olive tree.] Green all the year long, fair and fruitful; this was thy prosperous and flourishing condition, but now thy best days are over; for,

With the noise of a great tumult.] Barritu militari; the battle cry of soldiers, such as soldiers make when they storm a city.

Ver. 17. For the evil of the house of Israel.] That "evil" by a specialty, that land desolating sin of idolatry.

Ver. 18. And the Lord hath given me knowledge of it,] i.e., Of the treacherous plot of my countrymen of Anathoth against me, who should never have dreamt of any such danger; Deus pro suis excubat. God keeps watch for his own.

Ver. 19. But I was like a lamb or an ox.] Harmless and blameless, busied in my function, and not in the least suspecting any such evil design against me. "I send you forth as lambs among wolves," saith Christ, {#Mt 10:16} who, himself being the Lamb of God, was slain from the beginning of the world; his servants also are slain all the day long, and counted as sheep to the slaughter. {#Ro 8:36}

Let us destroy the tree with the fruit thereof.] Let us poison his food, so the Chaldee senseth it, Ponamus tignum taxi in sorbitiunculam. Others, Let us destroy the prophet and his prophecies together: others, Let us make an end of him either by sword or by famine, as the punishment threatened {#Jer 11:22} pointeth us to.

That his name may be no more remembered.] Sic veritas odium peperit. So the Papists have given order that wheresoever Calvin's name is found, it shall be blotted out; and by a most malicious anagram they have turned Calvin into Lucian. One of them recently took a long journey to Rome only to have his name changed from Calvin to some other, and that out of devilish hatred of that most learned and holy man,

“Ipsa a quo virtus virtutem discere posset.”

Ver. 20. But, O Lord of hosts.] Thou who art potentissimus et liberrimus, a most powerful and free agent.

That triest the reins and the heart.] And so knowest with what mind I make this complaint and request.

Let me see thy vengeance upon them.] A prophetic imprecation guided by God's Spirit, and not lightly to be imitated. So the Church prayed against Julian the apostate, whom they knew to be a desperate enemy, and to have committed that sin unto death. So perhaps had these men of Anathoth.

Ver. 21. Of the men of Anathoth that seek thy life.] Where shall a man find worse friends than at home? A prophet is nowhere so little set by as in his own country. {#Mt 13:57} Probatissimuset optimus quisque peregre vivit, saith Ennius, in Cicero. {a} Saying, Prophecy not in the name of the Lord.] A desperate speech, proceeding from a height of hatred, and coasting upon the unpardonable sin.

{a} Epist. Famil., lib. vii. cap. 6.

Ver. 22. Behold, I will punish them.] Sic tandem bona causa triumphat. The visible vengeance of God followeth close at the heels of the persecutors of his faithful messengers.

Ver. 23. And there shall be no remnant.] Behold the severity of God: their bloody design was to destroy Jeremiah's stock and fruit, stalk and grain together. {#Jer 11:19} God meteth unto them the self-same measure, leaveth them not a remnant. This is not ordinary justice. {#Jer 4:27 Isa 1:9 10:20-22} A remnant shall be left, saith he; here not so. Let Rome, that shambles of the saints and prophets, especially look to it; God is now coming to make inquisition for blood, &c.

Chapter 12

Ver. 1. Righteous art thou, O Lord, when I plead with thee.] Or, Though I should contend with thee. This the prophet fitly sets forth the ensuing disceptation, that he might not be mistaken. Thy judgments, saith he, are sometimes secret, always just; this I am well assured of, though I thus argue. {a}

Yet let me talk with thee of thy judgments.] Let me take the humble boldness so to do, that I may be further cleared and instructed by thee.

Wherefore doth the way of the wicked prosper?] viz., While better men suffer; as now the wicked Anathothites do, while I go in danger of my life by them. This is that noble question which hath exercised the wits and molested the minds of many wise men, both within and without the Church. See #Job 21:7-13 Ps 37:1 73:1-12 Hab 1:4,5; Plato, Cicero, Seneca, Epictetus, Claudian against Ruffin, &c.

Wherefore are all they happy?] Heb., At ease. Not all either; for some wicked have their payment here, their hell aforehand. To this question the Lord, who knoweth our frame, {#Ps 103:14} being content to condescend where he might have judged, calmly maketh answer, {#Jer 12:5} like as Christ in like case did to Peter. {#Joh 21:21,22}

{a} Est elegans, προθεραπεια.

Ver. 2. Thou hast planted them, and they have taken root.] All goes well with them; they have more than heart can wish. {#Ps 73:7} And in lieu of God's goodness to them, they profess largely, and pretend to great devotion; but that is all.

Thou art near in their mouth, and far from their reins.] That is, From their affections. {#Tit 1:16} Hypocrites are like that heap of heads {#2Ki 10:8} that had never a heart among them; they have vocem in choro, mentem in foro; virtutem non colunt sed colorant. Voices in the choir, minds in the market place, they do not worship in strength but in deception. That Persian ambassador—of whom before—when conversing with Christians, he had so oft in his mouth, Soli Deo gloria, made believe that he gave glory to the only true God, whenas he meant the sun, whom he worshipped as his god. The king of Bohemia, when beaten out of Prague, was encouraged by some great commanders about him that he had many princes his friends and allies that would readily assist him; to which he made no answer, but wrote the word Deus God, in large letters. But some thought he meant Denmark in D, England in E, Hungary in U, and the Swedes in S. God knows what his meaning was; but he will make "all the Churches to know that he searcheth the hearts and reins," and that he will "kill with death" all such as had rather seem to be good, than seek to be so. If Jeremiah had been one of those, he dared never to have said,

Ver. 3. But thou, Lord, knowest me, &c., / q.d., I can safely appeal unto thee, and take thee for a witness of mine innocence and integrity, that I have thee not in my mouth only, as they, but in my heart also, which is wholly devoted to thy fear, ut sit tecum, hanging toward thee, and hankering after thee continually. {a}

Pull them out as sheep.] Punish some of them presently for an example of thy providence, and reserve others of them till hereafter for an instance of thy patience. See #Jer 11:20.

Prepare them.] Heb., Sanctify them. {as #Isa 13:3 6:7} Fatted ware is but fitted for the shambles.

{a} Tremellius.

Ver. 4. How long shall the land mourn?] For the sake of those wicked wretches aforementioned.

The beasts are consumed, and the birds.] See #Jer 4:25,26.

Because they said, He shall not see our last end.] God shall not, and so they deny his providence and prescience; or the prophet shall not, though now he thunder out our punishment with so great vehemence. Compare #Jer 11:23.

Ver. 5. If thou hast run with the footmen.] Here God returneth an answer to the prophet's foregoing complaint, saith the Chaldee, partly checking him for his discontentedness, and partly exciting him to a humble submission and a well-knit resolution.

Then how wilt thou contend with horses?] If thy countrymen of Anathoth overmatch and overmaster thee, how wilt thou deal with those of Jerusalem, who are a far deal worse?

And if in a land of peace.] These are proverbial speeches, both to one purpose:

“ Ferre minora velis, ut graviora feras.”

How wouldst thou endure wounds for Christ, that canst not endure words? saith one. And how wilt thou fry a faggot that startlest at a reproach for the truth? While William Cobberly, martyr, was in durance, his wife also, called Alice, being apprehended, was in the keeper's house the same time detained, where the keeper's wife had secretly heated a key fire hot, and laid it in the grass on the back side; so speaking to Alice Cobberly to fetch her the key in all haste, she went with speed to bring the key, and taking it up in haste, did piteously burn her hand, whereupon she cried out, Ah, thou drab! Quoth the other, Thou that canst not abide the burning of thy hand, how wilt thou be able to abide the burning of thy whole body? And so she afterwards repented. {a}

{a} Acts and Mon., fol. 1719.

Ver. 6. For even thy brethren.] Let this comfort us in like case. Abel and John Diazius were butchered by their own unnatural brethren. Paul suffered most of all from his own countrymen.

Yea, they have called a multitude after thee.] {a} Or, With full mouth, as those did against Christ who cried, "Crucify him, crucify him"; and those against Paul, "Away with such a fellow from the earth"; and those against the primitive Christians, Christianos ad leones, To the lions with them. In Rhodanum, in Rhodanum, cried many at Geneva against Farellus, their faithful preacher, Into the river with him; but God preserved him from their fury, for the good of many other cities after that converted by him.

Believe them not, though they speak fair words to thee.] 'Fair words make fools fain,' we say; but be not light of belief, the world's naught:

"Mel in ore, verba lactis: Fel in corde, fraus in factis."

"Honey in the mouth, with words of milk: Gall in the heart, fraud in the act."

Ver. 7. I have forsaken my house.] A man's house is dear to him, dearer his heritage, dearest his well beloved wife. Jerusalem had been all this to God, but now for sin abandoned by him.

I have given the dearly beloved of my soul.] Or, My dearly beloved, my soul—i.e., Myself, my second self. Heb., The love of my soul. Gr. and Vulgate, My beloved soul. "God is jealous, and the Lord revengeth." {#Na 1:2}

Ver. 8. Mine heritage is unto me as a lion in the forest.] Roaring against me, and revelling in the ruin of my messengers. Ubi affectus augetur in antithesi verborum; haereditas mea, et contra me; sheep they were wont to be, now they are become lions.

Ver. 9. Mine heritage is unto me as a speckled bird.] As an owl, say some, that loveth not the light; as a peacock, say others, proud and inconstant, all in changeable colours, as oft changed as moved. God, that could not endure miscellany seed, nor linsey woolsey, in Israel, can less endure that his people should be as a "speckled bird," here of one colour, and there of another; or as a cake not turned. {#Ho 7:4-10}

Ver. 10. Many pastors have destroyed my vineyard.] Those who before were called beasts, {#Jer 12:9} are here called pastors—viz., Nebuchadnezzar's captains. See #Jer 6:3.

Ver. 11. Because no man layeth it to heart.] Heb., There is not a man putting it upon heart, that is, duly and deeply affected with my menaces, so as to take a timely course for prevention, and their own preservation.

Ver. 12. For the sword of the Lord,] i.e., Of the enemy set on by the Lord; for whencesoever the sword cometh, it is bathed in heaven. {#Isa 34:5} See #Eze 14:17.

Ver. 13. They have sown wheat.] The prophets have, say some, but to no profit.

They shall put themselves to pain.] Or, They are sick, sc., for the affliction of Joseph. {as #Am 6:6} {See Trapp on "Am 6:6"} Others {a} interpret it of the Jews, who sought to help themselves by this means and that, but lost their labours and their hopes together.

Because of the fierce anger of the Lord.] Quo laeso nihil est illaesum, tutum, et fidum hominibus.

{a} Vatab.

Ver. 14. Thus saith the Lord against all mine evil neighbours.] These were the Syrians, Moabites, Ammonites, Edomites, &c. God also hath his evil neighbours, and this may be a comfort to us in like case.

Behold, I will pluck them out, &c., and pluck out the house of Judah.] This was a different plucking.

Ver. 15. After that I have plucked them out, / sc., In both senses.
{#Jer 12:14}

I will return.] In the "midst of judgment, I will remember mercy."

And bring again every man to his heritage.] To the Church; for in every nation he that feareth God and worketh righteousness shall be accepted with him, and have a child's part, even the reward of inheritance.

Ver. 16. If they will diligently learn.] Heb., Learning, learn the ways of my people, chalked out unto them in my Word, and their conformity thereunto; for the lives of God's people are but the Word exemplified, they walk as patterns of the rule, and are of exemplary holiness. {as #Lu 1:6}

To swear by my name.] In righteousness, in truth, and in judgment.
{as #Jer 4:2}

Then shall they be built, / i.e., Blest.

Ver. 17. But if they will not obey.] The tartness of the threatening maketh us best taste the sweetness of the promise, and a mixture of them serves to keep the heart in the best temper.

I will utterly pluck up and destroy that nation.] This is fulfilled to the utmost upon the Jews, especially since the last destruction of Jerusalem.

Chapter 13

Ver. 1. Go, get thee a linen girdle.] Or, Belt, or swath.

And put it not in water.] Or, Lye, to wash it or whiten it; but take it as it is first made, Ut sorditiem magis contrahat, to show, say some, that the Jewish nation, when first chosen, was black by sin and nothing amiable; better skilled and exercised in making mortar and bricks in Egypt than in the worship of God and in good manners.

Or put it not in water, J i.e., Keep it from being rotted, as a type of God's care of, and kindness to, that people.

Ver. 2. So I got a girdle.] God is to be obeyed readily, and without questioning.

Ver. 3. And the word of the Lord came to me.] Heb., Was to me. "At sundry times," {a} or piecemeal, God spake to his servants the prophets. {#Heb 1:1}

{a} πολυμερος per gradus et momenta, non simul et semel.

Ver. 4. Arise, go to Euphrates.] A river which ran by Babylon, six hundred and fourscore miles from Jerusalem. The prophet's journey therefore thither seemeth to have been but visional, as was Isaiah's going barefoot, Hosea's marriage with a whore, Ezekiel's lying on one side three hundred and ninety days together; his journey from Chaldea to Jerusalem. {#Eze 8:3,4}

Ver. 5. So I went and hid it by Euphrates.] In the cliff of a rock, where it might lie dry, never once asking the reason. This was simple and acceptable obedience, far beyond that of the Popish novices, who yet if their padres or superiors send them to China or Peru, without dispute or delay they do presently set forward.

Ver. 6. And it came to pass after many days.] See on #Jer 13:3.

Ver. 7. Then I went to Euphrates.] See on #Jer 13:4. Those that are for an actual journey allege that Jeremiah might do this without danger in the days of Jehoiakim, who was the King of Babylon's vassal, and paid him tribute.

And, behold, the girdle was rotted, it was profitable for nothing.] This showed that the Jews should in that country lie rotting, as it were, in baseness, and servility, and sin together many years, so that God might justly have left them there still in misery, as a man leaves his rotten girdle to become dung.

Ver. 8. Then the word, &c.] Adaptat simile. fit simile, See #Jer 13:3.

Ver. 9. After this manner will I mar the pride.] Their pomp and power, wherein they pride themselves.

Ver. 10. This evil people.] Populus ille pessimus; these Poneropolitans, who are naught all over, nequitia cooperti.

Walk in the imagination of their heart.] See #Jer 9:13 11:8.

Ver. 11. So have I caused to cleave unto me.] For nearness and dearness; the loins are the seat of strongest desires and affections.

And for a name and for a praise.] That I might be magnified and glorified in them, and for them also, among other nations.

Ver. 12. Therefore.] Or, Moreover.

Thou shalt speak unto them this word.] This other paradigm or parable; an excellent way of teaching, and much used in both Testaments.

Every bottle shall be filled with wine.] Wine they loved well, and a great vintage they now expected. They shall have it, saith God; but of another nature than they look for. Their heads (not altogether unlike bottles for roundness and emptiness of all good) shall be filled with a dry drunkenness, even with errors and terrors, a spirit of giddiness, &c.

Do we not certainly know? &c.] This they seem to speak insolently and jeeringly—q.d., you should tell us some news.

Ver. 13. Behold, I will fill.] Heb., Lo, I am filling; but the liquor is such as whereof you shall have small joy. See #Jer 13:12.

Ver. 14. And I will dash them one against another.] As so many earthen bottles, brittle and soon broken. Si collidimur frangimur; If smashed and broken said those in the fable.

Ver. 15. Hear, and give ear.] Or, Hear and hearken, be not naughty. Here the prophet calleth upon them again to repent, and to that end to listen diligently, and to lay aside the highness of their hearts and the stoutness of their stomachs, since it is the Lord that speaketh. "The lion roareth; who can but fear?" {#Am 3:8} Repentance is the Removens prohibens, as being founded in humility, and wrought by the word preached. {#Jon 3:4-10 Ac 2:37-41}

Ver. 16. Give glory to the Lord your God.] Confess your sins; {#Jos 7:19} one part of repentance put for the whole. Jeremiah was as constant a preacher of repentance, as Paul, and after him Augustine, were of the free grace of God. The impenitent person robbeth God of his right; the penitent man sarcit iniuriam Deo irrogatam, seemeth to make some kind of amends to God, whom he had wronged, by restoring him his glory, which he had run away with, while he putteth himself into the hands of justice, in hope of mercy.

Before he cause darkness,] scil., Of calamity and captivity.
Curat poenitentia, ne praecurrat sententia.

Before your feet stumble.] {a} So, before ye fall upon the dark and dangerous crags and precipices of eternal perdition. Which, to prevent, work while the light lasteth; walk while it is yet day.

{a} Modestissima explicatio infaelicitatis.

Ver. 17. My soul shall weep in secret places.] Good men are apt to weep, Et faciles motus mens generosa capit. Good ministers should be full of compassionate tears, weeping in secret for their people's unprofitableness, and their danger thereby. The breast and right shoulder of the sacrifice belonged to the priest, to show that he should be a breast to love, and a shoulder to support the people in their troubles and burdens.

Ver. 18. Say to the king and to the queen.] Or Madam, the lady or mistress; that is, to the queen regent, even to Necustah, the mother of Jeconiah, say the Jews. When Beza, in the behalf of the reformed churches in France, made a speech at Possiacum before the young king and the queen mother, he spake so effectually, saith Rivet, that a great cardinal who heard it wished that either he had been dumb that day, or that they had all been deaf. This king and queen in the text might be as much convinced, though not thoroughly converted.

Humble yourselves, sit down.] Heb., Humble, sit below.

For your principalities.] Or, Your head attires.

The crown of your glory.] Or, Your crown of glory; that is, your glorious crown, of which you shall have cause enough to say, as Antigonus did of his diadem, O vilis pannus, &c. Or, as another monarch, “ *Nobilis es, fateor, rutilisque onerata lapillis,

Innumeris curis sod comitata venis:*

*Quod bene si nossent omnes expendere, nemo,
Nemo foret quite tollere vellet humo."*

Ver. 19. The cities of the south shall be shut up,] i.e., The cities of Egypt, whither ye think to flee, shall be shut up against you, through fear of the Chaldees.

Ver. 20. Lift up your eyes, &c.] Still he bespeaketh the king and the queen.

Where is the flock that was given thee?] Thee, O queen regent (for the pronoun is feminine), or thee, O state; Redde, Vare, legiones, said Augustus, bewailing the loss of so many gallant soldiers in Germany, under the command of Varus, who was there also slain.

Thy beautiful flock.] Heb., Thy flock of goodliness. See #Pr 14:28.
{See Trapp on "Pr 14:28"}

Ver. 21. For thou hast taught them to be captains, and as chief over thee,] scil., By thy crouching unto them, and craving their help, thou hast made the Chaldeans masters of all thou hast. So did the British princes Vortiger and Vortimer bring in the Saxons here, and the Greeks the Turks.

Ver. 22. Are thy skirts discovered.] Thou art brought to most miserable shame and servitude, having scarce a rag to thy back, or a shoe for thy foot.

Ver. 23. Can the Ethiopian change his skin?] Proverbial speeches arguing a very great difficulty, if not an utter impossibility, Aethiopem abluo ut candidum reddam, said Diogenes, when he reproved an ill man to no purpose; I do but wash a blackamore. And the like said Nazianzen concerning Julian the apostate. It is said that the negroes paint the devil white, as being a colour contrary to their own, and which they less well affect. Will the Ethiopian change his skin? so the Hebrew hath it.

Or the leopard his spots.] Sin is in us as the spots of a leopard, not by accident, but by nature, which no art can cure, no water wash off; because they are not in the skin, but in the flesh and bones, in the sinews and in the most inner parts. Where then is man's freewill to good? &c.

Then may ye also do good that are accustomed to do evil.] Custom in sin takes away the sense of it, and becomes a second nature; which, though expelled with a fork, as it were, will yet return again. It looks for continual entertainment where it hath once gotten a haunt, as humours fall toward their old issue. Canis qui semel didicerit edere corium, nunquam desistet, A dog who at times learns to eat flesh, will never stop, saith Lucian; an evil custom is not easy left. Nothing so weak as water; yet let much water (so sin, Satan, and custom) be joined together, and nothing stronger. It was not for nothing, therefore, that the Cretans, when they would curse their enemies with most bitter execrations, they wished that they might take delight in some or other evil custom. Modestoque voti genere efficacissimum ultionis genus reperiunt, saith the historian; {a} by a modest kind of wish they sufficiently avenged themselves.

{a} Val. Max.

Ver. 24. Therefore I will scatter them.] This was no small aggravation of their misery, that they should be thus severed one from another. So the persecutors of the primitive times relegated and confined the poor Christians to isles and mines, where they could not have access one to another for mutual comfort and support, as Cyprian complaineth. {a}

{a} Cyprian. Epist.

Ver. 25. This is thy lot.] Look for no better, since thou, by going after lying vanities, forsakest thine own mercies, being miserable by thine own election.

Because thou hast forgotten me.]

“Esque oblita mei; vitiorumque oblita caeno.”

Ver. 26. Therefore I will discover thy skirts.] Since thou hast discovered and prostituted thyself to other lovers, I will shame thee before all men.

Ver. 27. Woe unto thee, O Jerusalem! wilt thou not be made clean?] He closeth with this emphatic and most affectionate contestation, pressing them to hearty and speedy repentance, as he had done oft before, but with little good success. The cock crowed, though Peter still denied his Master. Peter knocked still, though Rhoda opened not to him. He launched out into the deep, though he had laboured all night for nothing. So did good Jeremiah here, in obedience to God, and goodwill to his unworthy countrymen.

Chapter 14

Ver. 1. The word of the Lord that came to Jeremiah concerning the dearth.] De rebus retentionum -that is, concerning the drought or dearth by restraint of necessary rain and moisture— unde frugum raritas, annonae caritas, fames, from which the shortage of grain made the year's produce expensive, resulting in famine; whereupon followed a famine, as there doth also a "famine of the Word," where the divine influences are restrained. Junius rendereth it, Super verbis cohibitionum, concerning the words of cohibitions; that is, saith he, concerning the prayers made by the prophet and other good people for the diverting of God's judgments, publicly denounced.

Ver. 2. Judah mourneth.] The prophet's pitiful complaint, bitterly bewailing the common calamity, and labouring thereby to bring them to a sense of the true cause of it, their sins. See #2Sa 21:1. {See Trapp on "2Sa 21:1"}

And the cry of Jerusalem is gone up, / sc., To heaven, for removal of this judgment. Compare #Jer 36:9 14:12.

Ver. 3. And their nobles.] Who would be sure to have it if it were to be had.

Sent their little ones.] Their boys, as they used to call their menial servants of the younger sort. See #Mt 14:2. {See Trapp on "Mt 14:2"}

To the waters.] Such as were the waters of Siloe, which only fountain, saith Jerome, Jerusalem maketh use of so long as it lasteth.

To the pits,] Or, Cisterns. {#Jer 2:13}

They covered their heads.] As close mourners do still.

Ver. 4. Because the ground is chapt.] As our hearts also are and will be, when the heaven doth not hear the earth. {as #Ho 2:21} It hath been before observed, that in the use of the ordinances, if we open our shells (our souls), the heaven will drop the fruitful dew of grace to the making of pearls of good works and solid virtue.

Ver. 5. Yea, the hind also calved in the field, and forsook it.] The loving hind; {#Pr 5:19} Alioqui studiosa sui partus, {a} that is otherwise so exceeding chary and careful of her young.

{a} Plin., lib. viii. cap. 32.

Ver. 6. And the wild asses.] Secretes alias vagae libidinis in silvis, that usually course up and down the woods, and can bear hunger and thirst a long while together. {a}

Snuffed up the wind like dragons.] Quorum est vehementissima spiratio ac sorbitio; who, in defect of water, can continue long by drawing in the air, as Aristotle {b} likewise testifieth of the goats in Cephalonia, that they drink not for various days together, but instead thereof gape and suck in the fresh air.

{a} Plin., lib. x. cap. 72.

Ver. 7. O Lord, though our iniquities testify against us.] Though our guilty consciences bring in large rolls of indictment written against us within and without, and spread before thee.

Do it for thy name's sake.] Heb., Do. A short but pithy petition. So #Jer 14:9, "Leave us not."

Ver. 8. O the Hope of Israel, the Saviour thereof.] In prayer, to pitch upon such of God's attributes as wherein we may see an answer, is a high point of heavenly wisdom.

Why shouldst thou be as a stranger in the land?] As a stranger at home, and as one that is loath to be too busy in aliena republica, in a foreign land where he hath least to do.

That turneth aside.] Into some diversorium -inn.

Ver. 9. Why shouldst thou be as a man astonished?] That knows not which way to take: first he goes one way, and by and by he returns again. Tremellius rendereth it ut vir fatiscens, as one that fainteth, hath done his utmost, and can do no more.

Yet thou, O Lord, art in the midst of us; leave us not.] Extingui lucem nec patiare tuam. This was to "stir up himself to take hold of God."

Ver. 10. They have loved to wander.] Therefore now they shall have enough of it; yet not wander so wide as to miss hell; {#Ps 95:10,11} what wonder that God seemed a stranger to them who had so far estranged themselves from him?

Ver. 11. Pray not for this people.] See on #Jer 7:16.

Ver. 12. When they fast I will not hear their cry.] At their fasts they were wont to pray earnestly, and to make their voices to be heard on high. Sed defuit aliquid intas; their hearts cried not.

Ver. 13. Ah, Lord God!] The Vulgate Latin hath it, Ah, ah, ah. Vide diligentissimam intercessionem. He seeketh somewhat to excuse the people by laying the blame upon their false prophets. Like whereunto were those Popish priests in Gerson's time, who preached publicly to the people, that whosoever would come to hear a mass, he should not be struck blind on that day, neither should he die a sudden death, nor want sufficient sustenance, &c.

But I will give you assured peace.] Heb., Peace of truth. Thus these deluders had learned to speak the language of God's true prophets. Of the high soaring, pretended spiritual language of Familists and some other sectarians one saith well, That it is a great deal too high for this world, and a great deal too low for the world to come.

Ver. 14. The prophets prophesy falsely in my name, &c.] These are certain signs of impostors in the Church in all ages, against whom, now, if ever, the temple doors had need be well guarded, and the pulpit doors have written on them, Ουδεις εισιτω αναξιος, Let no unworthy creature presume to come here.

Ver. 15. Yet they say.] Heb., They are saying. This is all their song, though the present famine doth in part confute them; but the people were willing enough to be deceived, and were therefore worthily punished. Being infatuated, they were seduced; and being so seduced, they were justly judged, as Augustine somewhere. The blind led the blind, and both fell into the ditch, though it befell the blind guides to lie nethermost.

Ver. 16. And the people to whom they prophesy shall be cast out.] They shall be no more excused by their having been deluded, than he that in his drink committeth adultery or murder is excused by his drunkenness. A drunkard, saith Aristotle, deserveth double punishment: {a} first for his drunkenness, and then for the sin committed in and by his drunkenness; so here. See on #Jer 14:15.

{a} τοις μεθουσι διπλα τα επιτιμια.—Ethic., lib. iii. cap. 5.

Ver. 17. Let mine eyes run down.] This the prophet did doubtless in good earnest; like as Samuel mourned for the rejection of Saul, and our Saviour wept over Jerusalem.

And let them not cease.] Heb., Be silent; for tears also have a voice, {#Ps 39:12} and do oft prove very effectual orators.

Ver. 18. If I go forth into the field.] The prophet here sets forth the siege as present, though it was many years after, the more to affect the people.

Yea, both the prophet and the priest go about into a land that they know not.] Or, Go about the land—sc., begging their bread, or fleeing their miseries—and men know them not, though men of such rank and quality.

Ver. 19. Hast thou utterly rejected Judah?] So as that I may not put up one prayer more for them. I cannot hold, whatever come of it; let not my Lord be angry if I shoot this arrow also after the former.

Ver. 20. We acknowledge, O Lord, our wickedness.] We, the better sort of us, do so. And so the saints have ever done in their interdealings with God, falling low at his footstool for pardoning and prevailing mercy.

Ver. 21. Do not abhor us, for thy name's sake.] This was to "continue instant in prayer." {#Ro 12:12} This was to pray on, and not to faint. {#Lu 18:1} If thy suit be not honest, never begin it; and if it be, never leave it.

Do not disgrace the throne of thy glory.] The temple, and the ark in it. The Romans held the extinction of the Vestal fire a sign of the destruction of their city, be the cause thereof what it will. {a} We may well think the same of the loss of God's ordinances, which therefore we must deprecate, as here, with all our might; for as Bodin said well of obtaining, so likewise for retaining, religion, Non disputationibus sed rogationibus, &c., the business will be the better ejected by requests than disputes. Pray therefore for the peace of Jerusalem, yea, take no nay. Deus ipse qui nullis contra se viribus superari potest, precibus vincitur. {b} The invincible God is overcome by the power of prayer. There is a kind of omnipotence in it, saith Luther.

Remember, break not thy covenant with us.] Lo, this is to be God's faithful remembrancer, {#Isa 62:6,7} suggesting unto him seasonable items.

{a} εφ ης ποτε αν αιτιας γενηται.—Dion. Halicar., lib. ii.

{b} Jerome.

Ver. 22. Are there among the vanities of the Gentiles,] i.e., The heathen idols wickedly worshipped by the Jews.

That can cause rain?] Pluit, ningit: supple Deus. These impersonals imply that the ancient Romans looked upon rain, snow, &c., as God's work. Sure it is that they come by a divine decree. {#Job 28:26} Not Jupiter, ουβριος—whatever the poets fable—nor the heavens themselves, without the divine concurrence, can give rain; but it is God Almighty who both prepareth it {#Ps 147:8} and withholdeth it at his pleasure. {#Am 4:7} The second causes do but serve the divine providence in these common occurrences.

Therefore we will wait upon thee.] For seasonable showers in this our great necessity. We will wait, or, if thou see fit, want of our will, so that thy will may be done; for that is best.

For thou hast made all these things.] Both the constellations, and rain or drought caused thereby.

Chapter 15

Ver. 1. Then said the Lord unto me.] In answer to my prayer he replied, Thou hast well prayed, sed stat sententia, I am set, I am inexorable.

Though Moses.] That chancellor of heaven, as one calleth him; who not only "ruled with God," but overruled. {#Ex 32:11-14, Nu 14:19,20}

And Samuel.] A mighty man likewise in prayer. See #1Sa 7:9, called therefore Pethuel, as some think, {#Joe 1:1} that is, a God persuader. These two were famous in their generations for hearty love to, and prayers for, that rebellious people, and did much for them. But, so the case now stood, if these favourites were alive, and should intercede their utmost for them, it should avail nothing. See #Eze 14:14.

Yet my mind could not be to this people.] This is spoken after the manner of men—q.d., I am implacably enraged, I am unchangeably resolved against them.

Cast them out of my sight.] Tell them that I have utterly rejected them, and I will ratify and realise thy speeches. See on #Jer 1:10.

And let them go forth.] Or, Let them be gone—q.d., I am the worse to look upon them.

Ver. 2. If they say unto thee.] As they will be apt enough to do in a jeer.

Such as are for death,] i.e., For the pestilence commonly called mortality, because it is so deadly a disease. Those at Genoa have lately found it so. And yet it is here reckoned first, as the least and tightest of all the four threatened judgments, which must needs be bad enough when the pest is the best of them all. The Turks shun not the company of those that have the plague, but pointing upon their foreheads, say it was written there at their birth when they should die, and of what disease. These in the text could as little avoid the deaths they were assigned to, as Aeschylus the tragedian could his being knocked on the head. For whenas he was foretold that he should die with a stroke coming from above, he shunned houses, and was wont to remain in the open air, but he was killed by a tortoise falling from the mouth of an eagle upon his bald head, mistaken for a stone. {a}

{a} Aelian, l. 1. c. 5. s. 19. 1:225,227; Valerius Maximus, l. 9. ext. c. 12. 1:375

Ver. 3. And I will appoint over them four kinds.] Heb., Families, or kindreds—i.e., quatuor cognata carnivora, dogs, birds, and beasts being added to the former four evils, {#Jer 15:2} quasi per auxesin.

Ver. 4. Because of Manasseh.] Because of his sins, idolatry and bloodshed especially, wherein the people partook and persisted, and were therefore justly punished.

The son of Hezekiah.] But altogether degenerate. He was therefore the worse, because he should have been better, and yet the worse again, because he was author publicae corruptelae, a ringleader of rebellion to others, as was Jeroboam.

Ver. 5. Who shall bemoan thee?] Heb., Who shall come out of his place to comfort thee? Or, Who shall shake his head in commiseration to thee?

Ver. 6. I am weary with repenting.] Patiendo, ac parcendo. I have so oft revoked my threats, that unless I should wrong my justice, I can do so no more.

Ver. 7. And I will fan them with a fan.] Not of purgation {a} {as #Jer 6:29,30} but of perdition. Such as that, #Jer 51:2.

In the gates of the land.] As men use to winnow grain at a windy door, where the chaff is blown quite away.

Ver. 8. The widows are increased to me.] Or, Before me; or, In my sight.

Above the sands of the seas.] Hyperbole.

A spoiler at noon day.] Nebuchadnezzar, that choice young man; for so some render the text. And so he was, when he came against Jerusalem and burned it, viz., in the eighteenth year of his reign.

And terrors upon the city.] Or, Terrors, even the city; that is, say the Septuagint and Chaldee, the army of the Chaldees, which for their numbers and order of pitching their tents, seemed to be a city.

Ver. 9. She that hath born seven languisheth.] Jerusalem, that mater multipara, a fruitful mother.

She hath given up the ghost.] Heb., She putteth out her soul. {as #Job 11:20} We read of some mothers who, hearing of their sons to be slain in battle, have fallen down dead in the place.

Her sun is gone down.] See on #Am 8:9. A Christian, when at worst, can sing, Non omnium dierum sol occidit, Not on all days the sun sets. I look for better days yet.

Ver. 10. Woe is me, my mother, that thou hast born me,] scil., In such an age wherein I may not pray for my people, nor can preach unto them to any good purpose. Buchanan bewailed it that he was born nec coelo, nec solo, nec coeculo erudite. {a} Jeremiah lamenteth here for a worse matter. Surely he might well say for his manifold sufferings:

“ *Littora quot conchas, quot amaens rosaria flores,
Quotque soporiferum grana papaver habet;
Tot premor salversis, ” & c.*
- Ovid., Trist.

A man of strife and a man of contention.] {b} Generally opposed and quarrelled, for my free and faithful discharge of my duty. This is the world’s wages to godly ministers, whom they usually make their buttmark. But God be thanked, saith he with Jerome, quod dignus sim quem mundus oderit, that I am worthy whom the world should hate. Lutherus pascitur convitiis, saith he of himself, Luther is fed with reproaches.

I have neither lent on usury,] i.e., I have neither bought nor sold, as we say, meddled nor made with them. I have had as little to do with them any way as was possible. Usura praecipuum fomentum litium. Usuary particularly starts quarrels. I have kept myself close to my calling, and yet I cannot avoid their variance and virulencies. To preach is to derive upon a man’s self the hatred of the world, saith Luther.

{a} Camden’s Elisabeth.

{b} Virum arguentem. -Arab.

Ver. 11. Verily it shall be well with thy remnant.] Heb., If it be not well, q.d., then trust me no more; thy latter end shall be comfortable; {#Ps 37:37} the end of that man is peace, be his beginning and middle never so troublesome.

Verily I will cause the enemy to entreat thee well.] Or, I will intercede for thee with the enemy. See this fulfilled, #Jer 40:4. God can speak for his in the hearts of their enemies, and make their foes to favour them, as many of the Papists here did Wickliffe, and after him Bradford.

Ver. 12. Shall iron break the northern iron and the steel?] That is, say some, shall these hardhearted Jews be too hard for me? or, for thee, Jeremiah, whom I have made an "iron pillar and brazen walls" against the whole land {#Jer 1:18} Never think it. Brighten thee they may, but not break thee. The northern iron is noted for the best and toughest.

Ver. 13. Thy substance and thy treasure.] This is spoken by an apostrophe to the people, who are here told again what to trust to for their national sins.

Ver. 14. And I will make thee to pass with thine enemies.] Or, To serve thine enemies; for there is a double reading of the text.

Ver. 15. O Lord, thou knowest.] Jeremiah had begun a complaint, {#Jer 15:10} not without some tang and tincture of human infirmity. Invalidum omne natura querulum. God graciously interrupted him, and came leaping over all those "mountains of Bether," all lets and impediments, to his comfort and best satisfaction. {#Jer 15:11,12} Nevertheless Jeremiah hath not done, but goeth on as before; et humanum aliquid patitur.

Remember me, and visit me.] He was full, and speaks thick.

Take me not away in thy longsuffering.] While thou bearest with them, take care of me, that I perish not by their perfidy and cruelty.

Know that for thy cause I have suffered rebuke.] Ceu debitorem compellat Deum, suaque adducit merita. He delivers himself as if he held God to be his debtor. This was not so well.

Ver. 16. Thy words were found, and I did eat them.] I was well apaid of thy messages that came at first to me, and of that commission thou gavest me to be a prophet; yea, I took no small delight and complacence therein; and having found this honey, I ate it; {as #Pr 25:16} but since I have met with much bitterness in this wicked world for my plain dealing. See #Eze 3:3 Re 10:10. Herodotus writeth of the river Hypanis, that for five days' journey the water of it runneth clear and sweet; and then, for four days' journey farther, bitter and brackish. The ministry is an honourable and comfortable function, but hath its troubles and encumbrances.

Ver. 17. I sat not in the assembly of the mockers.] That scoffed and mocked at God's messages and menaces. Or, I have not sat in the assembly of those that make merry; sed serius fui, spiransque compunctionem; I came not at feasts and merry meetings since I became a prophet.

I sat alone.] As Moses in like case did. {#Ex 33:7}

Ver. 18. Why is my pain perpetual? &c.] Here the prophet too freely expostulates with God, as less faithful, or less mindful at least, of the promised preservation. This was in a fit of diffidence and discontent, as the best have their outbursts, and the greatest lamps have needed snuffers. The Milesians, saith the philosopher, are not fools; yet they do the things that fools use to do. So the saints do oft as wicked ones, but not in the same manner and degree.

Ver. 19. Therefore, thus saith the Lord.] Or, Notwithstanding, man's perverseness breaketh not off the course of God's goodness.

If thou return.] If thou cast out this devil of discontent, and (accounting distrust worse than distress) apply thyself cheerfully and constantly to the work of the ministry, I will continue and confirm thee in thine office, notwithstanding thy present frailties and failings. {a} So our Saviour, presently upon their repentance for their shameful forsaking him at his apprehension, restored his disciples to their apostolic function. {#Joh 20:21-23}

And if thou take forth the precious from the vile,] i.e., The gracious from the vicious, preaching comfort to those and terror to these; not giving, as he in the fable did, straw to the dog and a bone to the ass, but to every one his proper portion, without fear or flattery. {b}

Thou shall be as my mouth.] Speaking as a prophet of mine, and as I myself would do, if in thy place.

Let them return to thee,] i.e., Conform to thee, but do not thou chime in with them, as the false prophets do.

{a} Hic vides non praescribi gratiae Dei menses et annos.

Ver. 20. And I will make thee.] See on #Jer 1:18,19.

Ver. 21. And I will deliver thee.] I will, I will; never fear it, man, but go on courageously. Deal courageously, and God shall be with the good. {#2Ch 19:11}

Chapter 16

Ver. 1. The word of the Lord came also unto me.] It is the property of this prophet to handle the same thing several ways, and by sundry effectual arguments. God's ministers must turn themselves, as it were, into all shapes and fashions, both of speech and spirit, to win people to God.

Ver. 2. Thou shalt not take thee a wife, &c.] It is very likely that this befell the prophet in a vision. Or, if otherwise, it was but for a sign, and in regard of the great calamity impendent, that he is here forbidden marriage, otherwise lawful enough, and in some cases necessary. The contrary doctrine (such as was that of the Tatian heretics and Popish canonists) is a doctrine of devils. {#1Ti 4:1}

Ver. 3. For thus saith the Lord concerning the sons—born in this place,] i.e., At Anathoth, say some; but others better, at Jerusalem. So great and grievous shall be the calamity, that married people shall be ready to wish, as Augustus did for another cause, Utinam aut caelebs vixissem, aut orbis periissem, Oh that either I had lived single, or else died childless!

Ver. 4. They shall die of grievous deaths.] Heb., Death of diseases or grievances, as did Jehoram, {#2Ch 21:18} and Philip II of Spain, &c.; they shall die piecemeal, morte valetudinariorum, by death of the sickrooms, which is a misery, especially if the disease be slow, and yet sharp, as some are.

They shall not be lamented nor buried.] Which are two of the usual dues of the dead.

Ver. 5. Enter not into the house of mourning.] Or banquets, whether at burials or bridals. {as #Am 6:7} Of funeral banquets, see #De 26:14. These the Greeks called περιδειπνα, the Latins Parentalia. See #Jer 16:7.

Ver. 6. Both the great and the small shall die.] Princes and peasants, lords and lowlies together.

Nor cut themselves, nor make themselves bald.] Neque caedetur neque calvabitur. This they had learned of the heathen, and would needs use it, though flatly forbidden them. {#Le 19:27,28 De 14:1} Now they were told that they should have little either lust or leisure to do any such matter.

Ver. 7. Neither shall men tear themselves for them.] Or, Neither shall they deal them bread in mourning to comfort any for the dead. Compare #Eze 24:17. Of feasting at funerals mention is made by Herodotus, Cicero, Lucian, Pliny, Clement, and Chrysostom. See #Jer 16:5.

Neither shall men give them the cup of consolation, / i.e., The consolatory cup, usually given at funerals to the disconsolate friends of the deceased. See on #Pr 31:6,7.

Ver. 8. Thou shall not also go into the house of feasting.] Ministers may lawfully go to feasts, {#Joh 2:1,2} but not in times of common calamity. See #Isa 22:12-14. Pliny {a} telleth us that when in the time of the second Punic war, one Fulvius Argentarius was seen at Rome looking out at a window with a rose garland on his head, the senate sent for him, laid him in prison, and would not suffer him to come forth till the war was at an end.

{a} Lib. ii. cap. 7.

Ver. 9. Behold, I will cause to cease.] See #Jer 7:34. {See Trapp on "Jer 7:34"}

Ver. 10. And they shall say unto thee, Wherefore?] This is still the guise of hypocrites, to justify themselves, and quarrel the preacher that reproveth them. See #Jer 5:19.

What is our iniquity?] Nature showeth no sin; it is no causeless complaint of a grave divine, that some deal with their souls as others do with their bodies. When their beauty is decayed, they desire to hide it from themselves by false glasses, and from others by painting; so their sins from themselves by false glosses, and from others by excuses.

Ver. 11. Because your fathers.] See #Jer 2:5 7:24,25.

Ver. 12. And ye have done worse.] See #Jer 7:26.

For, behold, ye walk.] See #Jer 9:13,11:8 13:10.

Ver. 13. Therefore I will cast you.] #Jer 10:18. Because ye have sinned wilfully and willingly, ye shall be cast out of this land, though full sore against your wills.

And there shall ye serve other gods.] ^{a} Will ye nill ye (for a just punishment of your voluntary idolatries); being compelled by your imperious enemies so to do, except ye will taste of the whip, as now the Turks' galley slaves.

Where I will not show you favour.] This was a cutting speech, and far worse than their captivity; like as that was a sweet promise, "They shall be as if I had not cast them off, and I will hear them."

{#Zec 10:6}

^{a} Notatur poena talionis.

Ver. 14. Therefore. behold.] Or, Notwithstanding, scil., these grievous threatenings and extreme desolations. Thus the Lord still remembereth his remnant, and the covenant made with them. Ministers also must comfort the precious, as well as threaten the vile and vicious. Evangelizatum, non maledictum missus es: laudo zelum, modo non desideretur mansuetudo, said Oecolampadius to Farellus in a certain epistle—Thou wert sent to preach gospel, and not law only; to pour off as well as wine into wounded consciences. I commend thy zeal, so it be tempered with "meekness of wisdom."

That it shall no more be said,] i.e., Not so much be said: the lustre of this deliverance shall in some sort dim the lustre of that, but both must be perpetually celebrated.

Ver. 15. But the Lord liveth, &c.] Or, "Let the Lord live, and let the God of our salvation be exalted." {#Ps 18:46} {See Trapp on "Ps 18:46"} How much more, then, should our redemption from sin, death, and hell by Jesus Christ obscure all temporal deliverance! See for this #Jer 23:7,8 cf. Jer 3:16.

Ver. 16. Behold, I will send for many fishers, &c.] scil., To enclose in their ἀμφιβληστορα, large and capacious nets, whole shoals of them together. These were the Chaldees, whom God sent for, arcano instinctu cordium, by putting it into their hearts to come up against Jerusalem. Howbeit, some by fishers understand the Egyptians, who lived much by fishing, and by hunters the Chaldeans. {as #Ge 10:8,9}

And they shall hunt them.] Out of all their starting holes and lurking places, as the Romans afterwards pulled them out of their secret places, &c.

Ver. 17. For mine eyes are upon all their ways.] And though they hide me from themselves, yet can they not hide themselves from me possibly, nor from my hunters, who shall ferret them out.

Ver. 18. And first, / i.e., Before I restore them. I will recompense their iniquity and their sin double, / i.e., Abundantly. {a} I will have my full pennyworths of them; not double to their deserts, {as #Isa 40:2 60:1}

With the careases, / i.e., With their idolatries, more odious and loathsome than any stinking carcasses can be.

{a} Poenarum abunde. -Jun.

Ver. 19. My refuge.] Better than those of the fugitive Jews, out of which they were hunted and murdered.

The Gentiles shall come to thee.] By faith and repentance.

Ver. 20. Should a man make gods to himself?] Nonne res haec stupore digna? Is not this a strange sottishness? The Gentiles here see it, and yet the Papists will not.

Ver. 21. I will for this once.] And "this once" shall stand for all. Affliction shall not rise up the second time. {#Na 1:9}

And I will make them to know.] Effectu magis quam affectu. Effecting more than affecting.

My hand and my might,] i.e., My mighty hand, mine irresistible power in their just punishment.

Chapter 17

Ver. 1. The sin of Judah is written with a pen of iron.] The four first verses of this chapter are left out by the Septuagint. Jerome saith they omitted them in gratiam et honorem papuli sui, in favour, and for the honour of their countrymen the Jews; but that was no just reason. "For ever, O Lord, thy word is settled in heaven," {#Ps 119:89} though there were not a Bible left on earth. These sinners against their own souls had their idolatry so deeply engraven on their hearts, that they could not get out the stamp, and the guilt thereof stuck so fast to their consciences, that they could hardly get off either the sting or the stain thereof.

It is graven upon the tables of their hearts.] Their sin lay there, where the law should have lain. {#Jer 31:33} Like as Queen Mary, when she died, told those about her that the loss of Calais lay at her heart, a place far fitter for Jesus Christ.

And upon the horns of your altars,] Whereon the blood of your sacrifices are sprinkled, and so your sin proclaimed.

Ver. 2. While their children remember their altars.] Or, As they remember their children, so they remember their altars and their groves, scil., with greatest love and delight. The Greeks call children φιλιτατα, the comedian Charissima; so were their idols to these Jews.

Ver. 3. O my mountain in the field.] Or, O my mountain and field, i.e., O ye mountaineers and fieldlings. Montani fere asperi sunt et inculti: molliores corpore atque moribus pratenses; they should all be spoiled one with another, for the sin of their high places.

Ver. 4. And thou, even thyself, shalt discontinue.] Or intermit, scil., the tillage of thy land. See #Ex 23:11 Le 26:33,34. It shall keep her Sabbaths.

Ver. 5. Cursed be the man that trusteth in man.] Disserit hic de summo bono, et de summo malo, saith one. Here the prophet discourseth of the chief good and of the chief evil. This latter he pronounceth to be to depart from God, and to depend upon the creature for help; for such a man, seem he never so manly a man (haggheber), is accursed of God, whom he robbeth of his chief jewel, that which giveth him the sovereignty, and setteth, as it were, the crown upon his head. See #Jud 9:15 Ps 78:22 52:7.

And maketh flesh his arm,] i.e., His strength; for in brachio est robur. Now three ways, saith a reverend man, {a} we make flesh our arm— (1.) By sitting down in a faithless, sullen discontent and despair when we can see no second causes; (2.) By rising up in a corky, frothy confidence when we see sufficient human help; (3.) When we ascribe the glory of our good to it, "sacrificing to our own net." {#Hab 1:16} This is to pull the curse upon our heads with twisted wrath and indignation.

Whose heart departeth from God.] He trusteth not God at all who trusteth him not over all.

{a} Mr Case.

Ver. 6. For he shall be like the heath.] Wild myrice, that neither beareth fruit nor seed, and is good for little but to burn or make besoms. See #Heb 6:8. Bastard tamarisk some call it; others, juniper.

But shall inhabit the parched places of the wilderness.] Such shall have no content or satisfaction. Compare #Mt 12:43. The unclean spirit cast out "walks in dry places," &c.; not but that dry and wet is all one with him, but it importeth his extreme restlessness.

Ver. 7. Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord.] See on #Jer 17:5 Ps 25:12 32:10 34:8 84:12 125:1 146:5, where David, having entered a caveat against creature confidence, persuadeth people, by trusting in God alone, to provide for their own safety and happiness. See #Na 1:7. Such shall have marvellous lovingkindness from God, {#Ps 17:7} above all that can be uttered (#Ps 31:19; see #Pr 28:25).

Ver. 8. For he shall be as a tree planted.] It is plain that he here alludeth to #Ps 1:3; see the notes there. The laurel, saith Pliny, is never thunderstruck. Sure it is that he who trusteth in God taketh no hurt; his heart is fixed and unmovable {#Ps 112:7,8} to endure things almost incredible. {#Ps 27:3 Isa 14:32 cf. Isa 26:4,5} True trust will certainly triumph at length, as that which leaneth on the Lord and the power of his might, the surest support.

By the river.] The Hebrew here is jubal; and the jubilee, saith one, had its name from this word, which signifieth a stream or watercourse, as carrying us to Christ, who is the truth of this type.

{#Lu 18:19}

But his leaf shall be green.] Neither falling nor fading.

And shall not be careful in the year of drought.] A metaphor, setting forth the full assurance of faith that is in some good men, such as was that holy martyr, {a} who said, I will henceforth be careless, according to my name.

“ Si fractus illabatur orbis, Impavidum ferient ruinae. ”

Neither shall cease from yielding fruit.] As they say the lemon tree doth not, but ever and anon sendeth forth new lemons as soon as the former are fallen down with ripeness. {b}

{a} John Careless, Acts and Mon., fol. 1743.

{b} Theoph., Plin.

Ver. 9. The heart of man is deceitful above all things.] The pravity and perversity of man's heart, full of harlotry and creature confidence, deceiving and being deceived, is here plainly and plentifully described; and oh that it were duly and deeply considered. "Deceitful" it is here said to be "above all things," no creature like it. Varium est, versutum, et versipelle; tortuosum est, anfractuosum et fallax, ideoque inscrutabile; It is full of turnings and windings, nooks and corners, wiles and sleights. It deceived David, as wise as he was, and tripped up his heels, as the word here used importeth; {#Ps 39:1-3} so it did Peter. {#Joh 13:37,38} Fitly doth the prophet here call our hearts "deceitful," in that word in the original, from whence Jacob had his name, because our fleshly hearts do the same things to the spirit in doing of good, which Jacob did to his brother—supplant it and catch it by the heel while it is running the Christian race. As Jehu offered sacrifice to Baal, killing his priests at the same time—and this he did in subtlety to circumvent them {#2Ki 10:19} -and as Hushai went to Absalom’s company to overthrow him, {a} so deal our deceitful hearts with us, &c. Neither is it deceitful only, but deep (so the Septuagint {b} here render it); those that are still digging in this dunghill do find it to be a very bottomless pit. Yea, it is Desperately wicked.] Desperately bent upon deadly mischief. So that he gave no evil counsel who said to his friend, Ita cave tibi, ut caveas teipsum; so see to thyself that thou beware of thine own heart. Another prayed not amiss, Lord, keep me from that naughty man—myself. Take heed of the devil and the world, said a certain martyr in a letter to his wife, but especially of thine own heart.

Quaerendi nobis, circumstant undique muros. ”

We have a Trojan horse full of armed enemies in the citadel of our hearts. We have Jebusites enough within us to undo us, quos nec fugere possumus nec fugare. who we are not able to put to flight or rout. It was no ill character, therefore, of a good man that is given by Epictetus, a heathen, that he carefully watcheth himself as his own deadly enemy. {c}

Who can know it?] None but a man’s self; {#1Co 2:11} nor not even a man’s self, for nothing is more common than self deceit. {#Ga 6:3 Jas 1:21} How much was Bellarmine, that great scholar, mistaken, and how ill-read in his own heart, when, the priest coming to absolve him on his deathbed, he could not remember any particular sin to confess till he went back in his thoughts as far as his youth! Had he but thrust his hand into his own bosom, with Moses, he had brought it out leprous, white as snow. Had he looked well into his own heart, he would have found it to be a raging sea of sin, {#Isa 57:20} where is that leviathan, the devil, besides creeping things, crawling lusts, innumerable. This made blessed Bradford never look on any man’s lewd life but he would straight cry out, Lord, have mercy upon me! for in this my vile heart remaineth that sin which, without God’s special grace, I should have committed as well as he.

{a} See Dike, Of the Deceitfulness of the Heart

{b} Βαθεια.

{c} ως εχθρον εαυτον παραφυλασσει και επιβουλον.—En. chirid, cap. 72.

Ver. 10. I the Lord search the heart.] Be it never so full of shifts and fetches, I cannot be deceived in it. The watchmaker must needs know every turning and winding in the watch. God is the heart maker and the heart mender; neither is there any creature, no, not any creature of the heart, that is not manifest in his sight, but all things are naked and opened before his eyes. {#Heb 4:13} "Naked" for the outside, and opened for the inside—dissected, quartered, and, as it were, "cleft through the back-bone," as the apostle's word {a} there signifieth; so opened as the entrails of a man that is anatomised, or of a beast that is cut up and quartered. The heart and reins are taken to be the seat of the thoughts and affections, yea, of the strongest affection, namely, that which is for generation. These are a man's inwardest and most remote parts, so that it is hard for food or physic to come at them. Covered they are also with fat and flesh, &c., and yet they are not hid from God's eye, which is indeed a fiery eye, {#Re 1:14} and therefore needeth no outward light. Man's eye is like a candle, which is first lighted, and then extinct; the angels' eyes are like the stars, which shine indeed, and in the dark, too, but with a borrowed light, neither know they the thoughts of men's hearts further than they are discovered. But God's eye is like the sun, yea, far brighter and more piercing than that eye of the world; neither needeth he a window in man's breast, as Momus wished, to look in at, for every man, before God, is all window, totus totus transparent et pellucidus. This Thales and other philosophers saw and confessed.

{a} τετραηλισμενα.

Ver. 11. As the partridge sitteth on eggs, and hatcheth them not.] Because either she is taken in an evil net, or the eggs are marred by the male, or otherwise, before they can be hatched.

So he that getteth riches, and not by right.] That crieth

“ *Rem, rem, quocunque mode rem,
Unde habeat nemo quaerit, sed oportet habere.* ”

Right or wrong, many are resolved to be rich, but are usually crossed or else cursed with a blessing for treasures of wickedness profit not, but righteousness delivereth from death. {#Pr 10:2} God sometimes giveth wealth to the wicked, as men put money into an earthen bottle, which, that they may get out again, they break the bottle in pieces.

Shall leave them in the midst of his days.] Either they shall leave him, or he them, to his unmedicinable grief and heart break. A poor fool God will be sure to make of him. He that trusteth in his riches, as every mammonist doth, shall fall; {#Pr 11:28} for although he bless himself, as well underlaid—and what should all such a one saith the world—yet the Lord abhorreth him, {#Ps 10:3} so that he many times cometh in the midst of his days to an untimely end, as did Judas, Ahab, Achan, Balaam, Ananias and Sapphira, &c. And thus many a rich wretch spinneth a fair thread to strangle himself, both temporally and eternally; he by his covetousness not only killeth others, {#Pr 1:19} but himself too.

Ver. 12. A glorious high throne from the beginning.] Therefore it is best to "trust in God at all times, ye people, and to pour out your hearts before him," since "God is a refuge for us." {#Ps 62:8} All that do otherwise shall be ashamed, {#Jer 17:13} and worthily; because, having so glorious a God resident among them, they so basely forsake him to serve and seek to idols.

Ver. 13. Shall be written in the earth,] i.e., Aeterna motre damnabuntur; they shall be hurled into hell, as not having their names written in heaven, {#Lu 10:20} where all that are "written among the living in Jerusalem" {#Isa 4:3} are enrolled. {#Heb 12:23} Non pro gloriosis sed pro probrosis habiti. See #Ps 17:14. Prudentius rightly saith, that their names that are written in red letters of blood in the Church's calendar, are written in golden letters in Christ's register in the book of life; as on the contrary, these idolaters, whose sin was with an iron pen engraven on the tables of their hearts, {as #Jer 17:1} are justly "written in the earth"—i.e., cast to hell.

Ver. 14. Heal me, O Lord, and I shall be healed.] Viz., of that cordolium heartfelt grief that my malicious countrymen cause me. The prophet was even sick at heart of their unworthy usages, and prays help and healing, ne totus et ipse labescat inter auditores deploratissimos, lest he should perish by them, and with them.

Ver. 15. Behold, they say unto me.] Heb., They are saying unto me; it is their daily dicterium, or jeer.

Where is the word of the Lord?] Whereby thou so oft threatenest us with desolation. {a} Thus profane persons fear, when they should fear. See #2Pe 3:4 Isa 5:19 Am 5:18.

{a} Ubi est? It is where? i.e., Nusquam est. It is nowhere.—Piscat

Ver. 16. I have not hastened from being a pastor before thee.] I have neither rashly taken up the work of the ministry, quo secundus abs te assam pastor, wherein I have been thine under shepherd, but was rightly called by thee thereunto, and have obeyed thy call; neither have I been over hasty to rid my hands of this so troublesome and thankless an employment. Latimer, in one of his sermons, speaking of a minister who gave this answer why he ceased preaching, Because he saw he did no good, but got the hatred of many: This, saith he, was a naughty, a very naughty answer.

Neither have I desired the woeful day.] The doleful or deadly day, sc., of their desolation, or my denunciation of it. God's ministers take no delight to fling daggers at the faces of graceless persons, whatever they may think, or to terrify them causelessly; but, as "knowing the terror of the Lord," they seek to frighten them by the menaces of God's mouth from such sinful practices as will be their ruin, and hence they are hated,

“An expectes ut Quintilianus ametur?”—Juven.

Thou knowest it.] See #Jer 12:1 15:15 2Co 1:12.

Ver. 17. Be not a terror unto me.] Let me have fair weather overhead, how foul soever it be under foot. If we have peace with God, though trouble in the world, we can take no hurt. If vapours be not got into the bowels of the earth, and stir not there, storms and tempests abroad cannot cause an earthquake; so if there be peace within, &c. But like as all the letters in the alphabet, without a vowel, will not make one word; nor all the stars in the firmament, without a sun, will make a day, so neither can all this world's good make one happy, without God and his favour.

Ver. 18. Let them be confounded.] A heavy imprecation. Let persecutors take heed how they move ministers to make intercession to God against them, as Elias did against Israel; {#Ro 11:2} as Jeremiah here and elsewhere doth against the Jews; as the Christian churches did against Julian the apostate. God will set to his fiat.

Let them be dismayed, but let not me be dismayed.] Paveant illi et non paveam ego, so the Vulgate Latin hath it. But what a stupid Latin dolt was that Popish priest who alleged to his parishioners this text, to prove, that not he, but they, were to pave the church way! So another of them, finding it written in the end of Paul's epistles, Missa est, &c., bragged he had found the mass in his Bible. So another, reading #Joh 1:44, Invenimus Messiam, we have found the Messiah, made the same conclusion.

Ver. 19. Go and stand in the gate of the children.] The sheep gate, say some, whereof see #Ne 3:1,32 12:39; or, as others, the water gate, whereof #Ne 3:26. A place it was of great resort and concourse, and therefore fittest for this new sermon to be made in first, though afterwards also he was to preach it in all the gates of Jerusalem, forasmuch as it was about a matter of greatest importance, even the serious sanctification of the Sabbath day. Diem septimum opifex mundi natalem sibi sacravit, et observari praecepit. That fourth commandment, saith Philo, is a famous precept, and profitable to excite to all kind of virtue and piety.

Ver. 20. Ye kings of Judah.] Magistrates, being lord keepers of both the tables of the law, should carefully see to it that both be duly observed. Our King Edgar made laws for the sanctification of the Lord's day, Sabbath, as have also our present governors, to their lasting renown. The first blow given to the German churches was on the Lord's day, which they carelessly observed; for on that day was Prague lost; as was likewise Constantinople on Whitsunday, as they called it. {a}

{a} Jer. Dike, Of Conscience.—Estius in lib. Sentent. Distinc., xi. cap. 2.

Ver. 21. Take heed to yourselves.] Break not the Sabbath, that ye fall not under the fierce wrath of God, who paid him home with stones who but only gathered sticks on that day. Cavete, Beware, it concerns you much.

And bear no burden.] See #Ne 13:15,16,19. {See Trapp on "Ne 13:15"} {See Trapp on "Ne 13:16"} {See Trapp on "Ne 13:19"}

Ver. 22. Neither carry forth a burden.] Let not the Sabbath of the Lord, that sanctified day of his rest, be so shamefully troubled and disquieted. Make not God's holy day a voider, as some do, to the week aforegoing.

Ver. 23. But they obeyed not.] See #Jer 7:24,26.

Ver. 24. But hallow the Sabbath day, / sc., By spending the holy time holily, else God may sue us on an action of waste. Idleness is a sin any day, but specially on the Sabbath day; spiritual idleness then, is as bad as corporal labour.

Ver. 25. Then shall there enter.] Then shall all go well with you, publicly and privately; ye shall have a confluence of all manner of comforts and contentments.

Ver. 26. And they shall come.] All the solemnity of the temple shall continue, with the exaltation of all the neighbourhood. When the high priests would so work that day like to beg the body, seal the sepulchre, and set the watch on the Sabbath—called, by an irony, the day that followed the day of the preparation {#Mt 27:62} -they forfeited all.

Ver. 27. Then will I kindle a fire.] That furious element, whereby God hath so oft punished this sin, as is to be seen in the Practice of Piety, Denison's Wolf in Sheep's Clothing, Mr Clark's Examples, &c.

Chapter 18

Ver. 1. The word which came to Jeremiah.] To show the just punishment of the people for disobeying the precept concerning the Sabbath, {#Jer 17:27} and other of God's commandments. See #Jer 7:1.

Ver. 2. Arise, and go down to the potter's house.] Whether the prophet was to go actually to the potter's house, or in vision only, it matters not. This we know, that our Saviour did actually wash his disciples' feet, and at another time set a child in the midst of them when they were striving about the primacy, expounding to them afterwards what he meant; and so it might well be here. It may not be amiss for us to go down oft with Jeremiah to the potter's house in our meditations—to consider, I mean, our original, Κεραμος ο ανθρωπος; as the "first man, Adam, was of the earth earthy," so are we ex lute lutei, from the clay, clayish.

Ver. 3. Then I went down to the potter's house.] {a} God's commands must be obeyed without sciscitation. Jeremiah saw that verbal teaching without signs would not work upon his hearers; he is therefore ready to do anything, or to go any whither, for their eternal good.

And, behold, he wrought a work on the wheels.] So the poet—

“ Amphora coepit

Institui, currente rota, cur urceus exit?”

- Hor. De Art. Poet.

{a} Officiose paret.

Ver. 4. And the vessel which he made of clay was marred.] Or, The vessel which he was making miscarried, as clay in the potter's hand.

“ Non semper feriet quodcunque minabitur arcus.”

Ver. 5. Then came the word of the Lord unto me.] See #Jer 18:1. To the visible word God always addeth the audible; as in the two sacraments.

Ver. 6. O house of Israel, cannot I do with you.] Make you or mar you at my pleasure: have I not an absolute sovereignty over you, that ye lift up the heel against me, and awake my power by your provocations?

As the clay is in the potter's hand.] What, then, hath vain man to vaunt of? or why should any proud Arminian {a} say, Quod potui, miserentis est Dei; quod volui, id meae est potestatis? That I can do good, is of God's mercy; that I will do it, is merely in mine own power? This man was sure his own potter, and not willing to owe overmuch of himself to God.

Ver. 7. At what instant I shall speak.] As God loveth to forewarn; and he therefore threateneth, that he may not punish, for he would be prevented.

Ver. 8. Turn from their evil.] If I may see such work among them, as at Nineveh God did. {#Jon 3:10} He saw not their sackcloth and their ashes, but their repentance and works—those fruits of their faith.

I will repent of the evil.] Not by any change of my will, but by the willing of a change: mutatione Rei non Dei.

Ver. 9. And at what instant I shall speak.] All is done as God the great Induperator commandeth, whether it be for or against a nation, or a particular man only. {#Job 34:29}

To build or to plant it.] As he did this kingdom of England; which was therefore anciently called Regnum Dei, kingdom of God, and reckoned among the fortunate islands.

Ver. 10. Then will I repent of the good.] I will take away mine own, and be gone; {#Ho 2:9} "curse their blessings," {#Mal 2:2} and "destroy them after that I have done them good"; {as #Jos 24:20} and all this, whether for the better or for the worse to a nation, God usually doth on the sudden; "At what instant," &c. Mercies, the more unexpected, the more welcome; judgments, the more sudden, the more direful they are.

Ver. 11. Behold, I frame evil against you.] As the potter frameth his vessel on the wheel.

Return ye now.] Curat poenitentia, ne praecurrat sententia. Mitte preces et lachrymas, cordis legatos. Let him run from regret not hasten on by feeling. Send prayers and tears as envoys of the heart. Address yourselves to God, and be at peace; so shall good be done unto you. See #Jer 3:12 7:3.

Ver. 12. And they said, There is no hope.] {a} See the like desperate return, #Jer 2:25 13:9. Actum est: vel desperatum est: vel expectaratum est -that is, we are at a point, and have made our conclusion. Thou mayest save a labour of further exhorting us; for we are as good as we mean to be, and shall not stir from our resolution. Keep thy breath to cool thy broth, &c.

We will do every one the imagination of his evil heart.] As you forsooth please to count it and call it; though we reckon that we have as good hearts as the purest or proudest of you all.

Ver. 13. Therefore thus saith the Lord.] God himself seemeth here to wonder at the desperate obstinace of this people, as not to be matched again. Like as our Saviour marvelled at the unbelief of the Nazarites, and could do for them no mighty work. {#Mr 6:5,6} {See Trapp on "Mr 6:5"} {See Trapp on "Mr 6:6"}

The virgin of Israel hath done a very horrible thing.] A "virgin" she is called, either by an irony, or else because she should have been a pure virgin, sincere in God's service, but was nothing less. What this horrible thing was, see #Jer 18:15 cf. Jer 2:13,32.

Ver. 14. Will a man leave the snow of Lebanon?] See #Jer 2:13, which may stand for a commentary on this verse. The rocks of Lebanon were still covered with snow: whence also it was called Lebanon—i.e., white. Now the Lord was to the Jews as this snow was to the thirsty traveller, cooling and comforting, and therefore in no wise to be left.

Or shall the cold flowing waters that come from another place be forsaken?] Heb., Shall strange, cool, flowing water be forsaken, or fail?

Ver. 15. Because my people hath forgotten me.] Not forsaken me only. Of all things God cannot abide to be forgotten; this is that very horrible thing, {#Jer 18:13} this is filthiness in virgin Israel, which is most abominable.

From the ancient paths.] Chalked out by the law, and walked in by the patriarchs and prophets; Heb., Paths of antiquity or of eternity. Set a jealous eye upon novelties, and shun untrodden paths, as dangerous. {a}

{a} Vepreta avia.

Ver. 16. To make their land desolate.] Not intentionally so; but yet eventually. Idolatry is a land desolating sin.

Ver. 17. I will scatter them.] Whirry and whirl them up and down, as chaff before the force of the enemy.

I will skew them the back, and not the face.] This was woeful, but just upon them for their unworthy dealing in like sort with the Lord.

{#2Ch 29:6 Jer 2:27 32:33 Eze 8:16} Every transgression and disobedience hath a just recompense of reward. {#Heb 2:2}

Ver. 18. Then said they, Come, let us devise devices.] Words savouring of a most exulcerate spirit against God and his faithful prophet, quem toto coelo hic explodunt, whom they shamefully slight, and desperately oppose, both with their virulent tongues and violent hands. Hence his ensuing complaint, and not without cause.

For the law shall not perish from the priest, &c.] As he would persuade us it shall. We shall have priests, sages, and prophets still; better than he is any. Let us therefore stop his mouth, or make him away, there will be no great loss of him.

Come, let us smite him with the tongue.] By loading him with slanders, and laying false accusations against him. Some men have very sharp tongues. He that was famous for abuses stripped and whipped, had nothing but his tongue to whip them with. Some render it, Let us smite that tongue of his—that is, tie it up and tamper it, that he reprove us no more. Or if he do, yet

Let us not give heed to any of his words,] If we cannot rule his tongue, yet let us rule our own ears, and say, Tu linguae, nos aurium domini. And is not this the very language of the Romanists? Non tam ovum ovo simile, &c.

Ver. 19. Give heed to me, O Lord.] Though they will not, yet do thou, I beseech thee. This is ordinary with good men, when wearied out with the world's misusages, to turn them to God, and to seek help of him.

Ver. 20. Shall evil be recompensed for good?] q.d., That is greatest disingenuity and unthankfulness. To render good for evil is divine; good for good is human; evil for evil is brutish; but evil for good devilish. Lo, with such breathing devils had Jeremiah here to do; and, indeed, what good man hath not? See #1Sa 24:17 Ps 35:12 109:5.

Ver. 21. Therefore deliver up their children to the famine.] He who had prayed so hard for them, could and did pray here as earnestly against them; yet not out of private revenge, but by a prophetic spirit, whereby he foretelleth their calamities auxesi verborum per hypotyposin. This is usual with the psalmist and other prophets.

And let their men be put to death.] Heb., Be killed with death. See #Re 2:23. {See Trapp on "Re 2:23"}

Ver. 22. When thou shalt bring a troop.] The Vulgate rendereth it, Latronem, a thief, or robber—viz., Nebuchadnezzar, that arch-thief, whose monarchy was grande latrociuium, grand thief, and whose regiment, without righteousness, was robbery by authority.

Ver. 23. Yet, Lord, thou knowest all their counsel.] Though I know it not, yet thou art privy to it, and canst prevent it; for wisdom and might are thine. {#Da 2:20}

To slay me.] All malice is bloody.

Forgive not their iniquity.] He knew their sin to be unpardonable; and therefore prayeth for vengeance upon them unavoidable. This was fulfilled upon the Jews by the Babylonians in respect of Jeremiah, and by the Romans in respect of Christ.

Neither blot out their sin from thy sight.] A heavy curse. Woe to such as whose debts stand uncrossed in God's book. Their sins may sleep a long time, like a sleeping debt, not called for of many years; as Saul's sin in slaying the Gibeonites was not punished till forty years after; as Joab's killing of Abner slept all David's days. Men's consciences also may sleep (in such a case) for a season; but their damnation sleepeth not, nor can their condition be safe till God have wiped out their sins for his own sake, till he have crossed out the black lines of our iniquities with the red lines of his Son's blood, and taken out of his coffers so much as may fully satisfy, &c.

Chapter 19

Ver. 1. Thus saith the Lord.] By the former type of a potter and his vessel, God had showed the Jews what he could do to them—viz., break them at his pleasure, and remake them upon their repentance. Here, by a like prophetic paradigm, is set forth what the Lord now will do to them—viz., break them so for their obstinace, as that they should never be repaired, and restored to their ancient lustre and flourish. And this the prophet Jeremiah (fortissimus ille Dei athleta, as one calleth him) that valiant champion of the Lord, telleth them freely, though he kissed the stocks and was well beaten for his boldness. {#Jer 20:2} Where it is worthy our observation, that as the prophet's task was more and more increased, so was his strength and courage. Deus gratiam multiplicat onere ingravescente. So it was with Athanasius, Luther, Latimer, Calvin, &c.

Go and get a potter's earthen bottle.] Called in Hebrew Bakbuk, {a} either from the emptiness and hollowness of it, or else from the guggling sound that it made when it was either filled or emptied. By a like figure it is said of the vulturine eagle, {#Job 39:30} that they do glutglut blood. {b}

And take of the ancients.] Of both sorts for witnesses.

{a} Onomatopoeia.

{b} Jegnalegnudam.

Ver. 2. And go forth unto the valley of the son of Hinnom.] See #Jer 7:3, that where the Jews had sinned, there they might be sentenced.

Which is by the entry of the east gate.] Or, as others render it, Portam fictilem seu testaceam, the gate of clay or brick, the potters' gate (because the potters dwelt near to it, and thereby carried forth their potsherd), called also the dung gate, saith the Chaldee paraphrase; an allusion being hereby made both to the pot he carried and to the pieces of it when broken, which should be cast to the dunghill. Inde ad gehennam via erat. This was the way to Tophet, and thither Jeremiah led them, said an expositor, that {a} considering their graves in that valley, according to #Jer 7:32, and that their bodies, those earthen vessels, should soon after be broken and carried out as dung into Tophet by the Chaldeans, and their souls into hell by the devils, they might repent, and so prevent such a mischief.

And proclaim there the words that I shall tell thee.] God took his own times to tell his prophets what they should tell the people. The privilege of infallibility, saith a divine, was perpetual to the apostles:

Prophetis vero saepius intervallatum, et fere non extra ipsos prophetandi paroxysmos durans; not so to the prophets, but while they were prophesying only for the most part; neither knew they many times what they should prophesy, till the very instant.

{a} A Lapide.

Ver. 3. Hear the word of the Lord, ye kings of Judah,] i.e., O king and thy counsellors, who are so many little kings, as King James was wont to say of the parliament men.

Behold, I bring evil upon this place.] This he spake to all, and with all authority; catholicam et miserabilem perniciem proclamans. It is credible that he spake it with as good a courage (or better), as Bishop Ridley, martyr, did those comminatory words of his to Queen Mary and her servants, when they refused to hear him preach. He uttered them with such vehemence, saith mine author, that some of the hearers afterwards confessed the hairs to stand upright on their heads. {a}

His ears shall tingle.] For grief and fear, as if he had been stoned with a thunder clap, or were ready to swoon.

{a} Acts and Mon., 1270.

Ver. 4. Because they have forsaken me.] #Jer 16:11.

And estranged this place.] Or, Strangely abused it, so as I scarce know it, or can find in my heart to own it.

Whom neither they, nor their fathers,] scil., Quamdiu probi fuerunt et pii; so long as they had any goodness in them, saith Jerome. Those afterwards that worshipped, they knew not what (as those Samaritans did, #Joh 4:22), are not worthy to be reckoned on, much less to be imitated. Walk ye not in the statutes of your fathers, neither observe their judgments, nor defile yourselves with their idols. {#Eze 20:18}

And have filled this place with the blood of innocents.] Especially of infants sacrificed to Moloch in Tophet, so filling up the measure of your sins.

Ver. 5. Which I commanded not.] Reprobatur voluntarius cultus, et factitiae religiones. See #Jer 7:31 32:35 2Ki 23:10.

Ver. 6. This place shall no more.] See #Jer 7:32. Things are repeated, that they may be the better observed.

Ver. 7. And I will make void the counsel of Judah.] As vain and empty as this earthen bottle now is. See on #Jer 19:1, and take notice of an elegant agnomination in the original.

And their carcases will I give.] See #Jer 7:33 16:4.

Ver. 8. And I will make this city desolate.] See #Jer 18:10.

Ver. 9. And I will cause them to eat the flesh.] This, as it was threatened, {#Le 26:29 De 28:23} so accordingly accomplished. {#La 2:20 4:10} Ptolemy Lathurus, king of Egypt, barbarously slew thirty thousand Jews, and forced the rest to feed upon the flesh of those that were slain.

Ver. 10. Then shalt thou break the bottle.] That the eyes of the bystanders and beholders may affect their hearts. Non alia ratio Sacramentorum est.

Ver. 11. That cannot be made whole again.] Heb., Cured. No more was the Jewish state ever restored to its ancient dignity and lustre, after the captivity; neither was Tophet ever repaired at all, but served for a mortuary chapel, a place to lay dead men's bones in.

Ver. 12. And even make their city as Tophet.] Every whit as abominable and horrid; a very hell above ground.

Ver. 13. And the houses of Jerusalem.] Wherein they had their "chambers of imagery," and their private chapels for idolatrous uses, as Papists also have. {#Eze 8:12 Zep 1}

Because all the houses upon whose roofs.] See on #Zep 1:4.

Ver. 14. And he stood in the court of the Lord's house.] A place of greatest concourse of people; and where he might meet with many hearers. Here he spread his net, that he might catch some souls; dilated his discourse at Tophet, whereof we have here but the short notes; minding them of their sin and punishment. And surely this prophet should be so much the more regarded by us, for that he so freely and fully delivered the divine messages, omitting no part thereof, either for fear or favour. Ambrose bade Augustine read the prophet Isaiah diligently, for the confirmation of his faith. We may all very profitably read the prophet Jeremiah, who is full of incitation to repentance and new obedience.

Ver. 15. Because they have hardened their necks.] Which may seem possessed with an iron sinew, so stiff they are and sturdy, having manum in aure, aurem in cervice, cervicem in corde, cor in obstinatione, {a} their hand on their ear, their ear in their neck, their neck in their heart, and their heart in obstinace, &c.

{a} A Lapide.

Chapter 20

Ver. 1. Now Pashur the son of Immer, / i.e., One of the posterity of Immer, after many generations. See #1Ch 24:14.

Who was also chief governor.] Not high priest, as some have said, but a principal priest, haply the head of the sixteenth course; or, as Junius and others think, the high priest's vicar, or second. Such as was Eleazar to Aaron his father. {#Nu 4:16}

Heard that Jeremiah prophesied these things.] Or, Heard Jeremiah prophesying; and having gall in his ears, as they say some creatures have, he was galled at the hearing of so smart a truth.

Ver. 2. Then Pashur smote Jeremiah the prophet.] Either with his fist, as Zedekiah did Micaiah, {#IKi 22:24} and as Bonner did Hawkes and other martyrs, pulling off part of their beards; or else with a staff, as they dealt by our Saviour, {#Mt 26:67} and as that Popish bishop, degrading a martyr minister, struck him so hard with his crosier staff as he was kneeling on the stairs at Paul's, that he fell down backwards and broke his head. {a} Atqui lapidandi sunt haeretici sacrarum literarura argumentis, saith Athanasius. {b} But heretics are to be stoned with Scripture arguments; and men may a great deal sooner be cudgelled into a treaty than into a tenet.

And put him in the stocks.] As they did afterwards Paul and Silas; {#Ac 16:22-24} Clerinus the martyr, mentioned in Cyprian's epistles; {c} Mr Philpot, in the Bishop of London's coal house; and that good woman who, suffering afterwards for the same cause, rejoiced much that her leg was put in the same hole of the stocks where Philpot's leg had lain before.

That were in the high gate of Benjamin.] Which might be a prison like Lollard's tower in London whereunto were sent the martyrs, many of them for their zeal and forwardness. Action and passion go together— omne agens agendo repatitur -especially if men go a little faster than others do. "They who will live godly in Christ Jesus"—and be set upon it—"shall suffer persecution." This gate-house might well be the priests' prison, whither they used to send such as they took for false prophets.

{a} Acts and Mon.

{b} Contra Arrian., orat. ii.

{c} Epist., lib. iv.

Ver. 3. Pashur brought forth Jeremiah.] To be judged, say some; but why then did he first smite him? An officer should retain the majesty of the law, and not do anything passionately. To set him at liberty, say others; as perceiving that the "word of God could not be bound," nor a prophet's mouth stopped by a prison, as Pashur also shall well perceive ere Jeremiah hath done with him. Bonner said to Hawkes the martyr, A faggot will make you believe the sacrament of the altar. He answered, No, no, a point for your faggot; God will meet with you one day. {a} So true is that of the poet,

“ *Pressa sub ingenti ceu pondere palms virescit,
Sub cruce sic florent debita corda Deo.* ”

The Lord hath not called thy name Pashur.] That is, black mouth, as some {b} derive it; or diffusing paleness, as others; but on the contrary. {c}

Magormissabib,] i.e., Terror round about, or, Fear on every side; a proverbial form of speech, denoting extreme consternation of spirit and greatest distress. Such as befell Tullus Hostilius, King of Rome, who had for his gods Payor and Pallor. Dignissimus sane qui deos suos semper haberet praesentes, saith Lactantius wittily; i.e., great pity but this man should ever have had his gods at hand, since he was so fond of them. Our Richard III and Charles IX of France, a pair of bloody princes, were Magormissabibs in their generations, as terrible at length to themselves as they had been formerly to others; and therefore could never endure to be awakened in the night without music or some like diversion. {d}

{a} Acts and Mon.

{b} Junius.

{c} q.d., Non Augustus, sed augustus; non nobilis, sed mobilis futurus es. Non tumor sed timer.

{d} Daniel; Thuan.

Ver. 4. I will make thee a terror.] Heb., I will give thee unto a terror—i.e., I will frighten thy conscience, and then turn it loose upon thee, so that thou shalt be a corde tuo fugitivus, and thy friends shall have small joy of thee, or thou help by them. See on #Jer 20:3.

Ver. 5. Moreover I will deliver all the strength of this city.] Thus Pashur prevailed nothing at all with good Jeremiah by imprisoning him, to make him give over menacing. But as Baruch wrote the roll anew that had been cut in pieces, and added unto it many like words, {#Jer 36:32} so doth Jeremiah here; he will not budge to die for it. This was to show the magnanimity of a prophetic spirit.

Ver. 6. There shalt thou be buried.] In a dunghill perhaps, as Bishop Bonner was, and have cause enough to cry out, as that great Parisian doctor did from his bier, when brought to be buried, “*Parcite funeribus: mihi nil prodesse valebit.

Heu infelicem cur me genuere parentes?
Ah miser aeternos vado damnatus ad ignes.*”

“Spare funeral costs: why was I born

By hell’s black fiends now to be torn?”

Ver. 7. O Lord, thou hast deceived me, and I was deceived.] {a} From hence to the end of the chapter the prophet, not without some tang and taint of human frailty, grievously quiritateth and expostulateth with God about the hard usage and ill success he met with in the execution of his prophetic function. But as ex incredulitate Thomae nostra contirmata est fides, Thomas’s unbelief serveth to the settling of our faith; and as Peter’s fall warneth us to look well to our standings; so when such a man as Jeremiah shall miscarry in this sort, and have such outbursts, oh be not high minded, but fear. Some render the text, Lord, if I be deceived, thou hast deceived me; and so every faithful man who keepeth to the rule, may safely say. Piscator hath it, Persuasisti mihi Iehova, et persuasus sum. O Lord, thou persuadedst me, and I was persuaded—sc., to undertake this prophetic office—but I have small joy of it. Some think he thus complained when he was put in prison by Pashnr.

I am in derision daily, every one mocketh me.] This is the world's wages. The cynic said of the Megarians long ago, Better be their horse, dog, or pander than their teacher, and better he should be regarded.

Ver. 8. For since I spake, I cried out,] i.e., Ever since I took upon me the office of a prophet, I executed it vigorously, I cried with full mouth. {#Jer 4:5 Isa 58:1}

I cried violence and spoil,] sc., Will surely befall you by the Chaldees. Or, I cried out of my misusages.

Because the word of the Lord was made a reproach unto me, and a derision daily.] This was all the recompense I reaped of my goodwill to this perverse people, and of my pains taken among them. Few sins are more dangerous than those of casting reproaches upon God's Word, as here; of snuffing at it; {#Mal 1:13} of enviously swelling at it; {#Ac 13:45} of chatting at it; {#Ro 9:19,20} of stumbling at it; {#1Pe 2:8} of gathering odious consequences from it. {#Ro 3:8}

Ver. 9. Then I said, I will not make mention of him, nor speak any more in his name,] {a} i.e., I will give over preaching. This, said Latimer in a like case, was a naughty, a very naughty, resolution.

But his word was in my heart as a burning fire.] {b} Ex sensu malae conscientiae propter illud propositum. And here was the work of the Spirit against that carnal resolution of his. God's people cannot do the things that they would, saith the apostle. {#Ga 5:17} As they cannot do the good they would, because of the flesh, so neither the evil that they would, because of the Spirit. There is a continual conflict, and as it were the company of two opposite armies. {#So 6:13} True grace will as little be hid as fire: quis enim celaverit ignem?

And I was weary with forbearing, and could not stay.] {c} Jeremiah's service among the Jews was something like that of Mantius Torquatus among the Romans, who gave it over, saying, Neither can I bear their manners, nor they my government. He began to think, with that painful patriarch, that rest was good; {#Ge 49:15} and with the olive, vine, and fig tree in Jotham's parable, that it was best to enjoy a beloved privacy. He was ready to say, Bene qui latuit bene vixit; and Bene qui tacuit bene dixit, &c. But this could not hold with him, he saw well; for as the motion of the heart and lungs is ever beating, and it is a pain to restrain it, to hold the breath, so here,

Cogitur et vires multiplicare suas.*”—Ovid., Trist.

{c} Hanc legem ex hoc loco dat concionatori ne defatigetur nec ullo tempore sileat, sive sit qui auscultet, sive non. -Chrysost, de Lazaro.

Ver. 10. For I heard the defaming of many, fear on every side.] This passage is borrowed from #Ps 31:13; {See Trapp on "Ps 31:13"} Some render the text, I heard the defamation of many Magormissabibs, many of his accomplices and Coryphaei, spies set a-work by him to defame and smear me.

Report, say they, and we will report.] Calumniare audacter; broach a slander, and we will blazon it; set it afoot, and we will set it afloat give us but some small hint or inkling of aught spoken by Jeremiah, whereof to accuse him to the king and state, and we desire no more. Athanasius was about thirty times accused, and of no small crimes either, but falsely. The Papists make it their trade to belie the Protestants, their chieftains especially. They reported of Luther that he died despairing; of Calvin, that he was branded on the shoulder for a rogue; of Beza, that he ran away with another man's wife, &c. And for their authors they allege Baldwin and Bolsecus, a couple of apostates, requested by themselves (and, as some say, hired) to write the lives of these worthies, their professed enemies. But anything of this kind serves their turn, and they cite the writings of these renegades as canonical.

All my familiars.] Heb., Every man of my peace; from such there is the greatest danger. Hence one prayed God to deliver him from his friends, for as for his enemies he could better beware of them. Many friends are like deep ponds, clear at the top, but all muddy at the bottom.

Ver. 11. But the Lord is with me as a mighty terrible one.] Instar gigantis robusti, { a } as a strong giant, and mine only champion on whom I lean. Here the Spirit begins to get the better of the flesh, could Jeremiah but hold his own. But as the ferryman plies the oar, and eyes the shore homeward where he would be, yet there comes a gust of wind that carrieth him back again; so it fared with our prophet. See #Jer 20:14,15, &c.

{a} Ut formidabilis heros. -Pisc.

Ver. 12. But, O Lord of hosts.] See #Jer 11:20 17:10.

Let me see thy vengeance on them.] Some pert and pride themselves over the ministry as if it were a dead Alexander's nose, which they might wring off, and not fear to be called to account therefor; but the visible vengeance of God will seize such one day, as it did Pharaoh, Ahab, Herod, Julian.

For unto thee have I opened my cause.] Prayer is an opening of the soul's causes and cases to the Lord. The same word for opened here is in another conjugation used for uncovering, making bare and naked. {#Ge 9:21} God's people in prayer do or should nakedly present their souls' causes without all cover shames, or so much as a rag of self or flesh cleaving to them.

Ver. 13. Sing unto the Lord, praise ye the Lord.] Nota hic alternantis animi motus aestusque. Here the Spirit triumpheth over the flesh; as in the next verses, the flesh again gets the wind and hill of the Spirit. Every good man is a divided man.

For he hath delivered the soul of the poor,] i.e., Of poor me. {as

#Ps 34:4}

Ver. 14. Cursed be the day wherein I was born.] What a sudden change of his note is here! Out of the same mouth proceedeth blessing and cursing. My brethren, saith James, these things ought not so to be. {#Jas 3:10} But here human weakness prevailed; and this part of the chapter hath much of man in it. The best have their outbursts; and as there be white teeth in the blackest blackamore, and, again, a black bill in the whitest swan, so the worst have something in them to be commended, and the best to be condemned. See on #Jer 20:7. Some of the Fathers seek to excuse Jeremiah altogether; but that can hardly be, neither needeth it. Origen saith that the day of his birth was past, and therefore nothing now; so that cursing it, he cursed nothing. This is like those among us who say they may now without sin swear by the mass, because it is gone out of the country, &c. Isidor., that Jeremiah's cursing is but conditional, if any, let that day be cursed, &c.

Ver. 15. Cursed be the man.] Let him have a curse for a reward of his so good news. Thus the prophet, in a fit of impatience, carrieth himself as one who, being cut by a surgeon and extremely pained, striketh at and biteth those that hold him; or, like him in the poet,

“ Quem non incusavi amens hominum que deumque?”

Aeneid, lib. ii.

Surely as the bird in a cage, because pent up, beats herself, so doth the discontented person. Look to it, therefore. Satan thrusteth in upon us sometimes praying, with a cloud of strange passions, such as are ready to gallow us out of that little wit and faith we have. Resist him betimes. The wildfire of passion will be burning while the incense of prayer is in offering; this scum will be rising up in the boiling pot, together with the meat. See #Jon 4:1. {See Trapp on "Jon 4:1"}

Ver. 16. And let that man be.] A most bitter curse, but causeless. The devil of discontent, where it prevaieth, maketh the heart to be for the time a little hell, {a} as we see in Moses, Job, David, Jeremiah, men otherwise made up of excellences. These sinned, but not with full consent. A godly man hath a flea in his ear, somewhat within, which saith, "Dost thou well to be angry, Jonah?" {#Jon 4:4}

{a} ταρῆταιν, thence ταρταρος.

Ver. 17. Because he slew me not, &c.] Why, but is not life a mercy? A living dog better than a dead lion. See on #Job 3:10 10:18,19.

Ver. 18. Wherefore came I forth, &c.] Passions are a most dangerous and heady water when once they are out.

That my days should be consumed with shame?] Why, but a Christian soldier may have a very great arrear. {#2Ti 4:7,8} Vincet aliquando pertinax bonitas He will conquer sometimes obstinate goodness. {#Re 2:10}

Chapter 21

Ver. 1. The word that came unto Jeremiah from the Lord.] This history is here set down out of course; {a} for Jerusalem was not besieged till #Jer 32:2, and Jehoiakim reigned #Jer 25:1 It was in the ninth year of Zedekiah that this present prophecy was uttered. {#2Ki 25:1,2} This Zedekiah was one of those semiperfectae virtutis homines, as Philo calleth some professors, cakes half-baked., {#Ho 7:8} no flat atheist, nor yet a pious prince. Of Galba the emperor, as also of our Richard III, it is recorded that they were bad men but good princes. We cannot say so much of Zedekiah; two things he is chiefly charged with: (1.) That he broke his oath and faith pledged to the King of Babylon; {#Eze 17:16} (2.) That he humbled not himself before Jeremiah the prophet, speaking from the mouth of the Lord. {#2Ch 36:12,13} Hitherto he had not: but now in his distress he seeketh to this prophet; yea, sendeth an embassy. Kings care not for soldiers, said a great commander, till their crowns hang on the one side of their heads. Sure it is that some of them slight God's ministers till they cannot tell what to do without them, as here. Kingdoms have their cares, and thrones their thorns. Antigonus cried out of his diadem, O vilis pannus, O base rag, not worth taking up at a man's feet. Julian complained of his own unhappiness in being made emperor. Dioclesian laid down the empire as weary of it. Thirty of the ancient kings of this our land, saith Capgrave, resigned their crowns; such were their cares, crosses, and emulations. Zedekiah now could gladly have done as much. But since that might not be, he sendeth to Jeremiah, whom in his prosperity he had slighted, and, to gratify his wicked counsellors, wrongfully imprisoned.

He sent unto him Pashur.] Not that Magormissabib, {#Jer 20:1} but another of his name, though not much better, as it afterwards appeared, when, seeing Jeremiah's stoutness for the truth, he counselled the king to put him to death. {#Jer 38:4}

And Zephaniah, the son of Maaseiah.] Of whom see further, #Jer 29:25-29 37:3.

{a} Est hic hysteriorologia sive praeosterus ordo.

Ver. 2. Inquire, I pray thee, of the Lord for us.] He seeketh now to the Lord, whom in his prosperity he regarded not; so doth a drowning man catch at the tree or twig, which before he made no reckoning of. Rarae fumant felicibus arae. "In their affliction they will seek me early." {#Ho 5:15} "When he slew them, then they sought him, and inquired early after God." {#Ps 78:34} Pharaoh, when plagued, calleth earnestly for Moses to pray for him; and Joab, when in danger of his life, runneth to the horns of the altar.

If so be the Lord will deal with us according to his wondrous works.] Or, It may be the Lord will deal with us, &c.—scil., As he did not long since with Hezekiah, when invaded by Sennacherib. Thus wicked wretches are willing to presume, and promise themselves impunity. See #De 29:19. {See Trapp on "De 29:19"}

Ver. 3. Then said Jeremiah unto them.] He answereth them modestly, and without insultation; but freely and boldly, as a man of a heroic spirit, and the messenger of the King of kings.

Ver. 4. Behold, I will turn back the weapons of war,] i.e., I will render them vain and useless; as it is God who in battle ordereth the ammunition, {#Jer 50:25} and maketh the weapons vain or prosperous. {#Isa 54:17 Jer 50:9} This was plainly seen at Edgehill fight.

Ver. 5. And I myself will fight against you.] This was heavy tidings to Zedekiah and his courtiers. Optassent sibi prophetas qui dixissent laeta, saith Oecolampadius; they could have wished for more pleasing prophecies; but those that do what they should not must look to hear what they would not. Such bitter answers as this they must look for who seek to God only in a time of necessity. Silence, or else sad answers, they shall be sure of.

Ver. 6. They shall die of a great pestilence.] See #Jer 16:4 18:21. Hippocrates calleth the pestilence τὸ θεῖον, the divine disease; because there is much of God's hand in it, like as there was here in the sweating sickness, wherewith the English only were chased, not only in England, but in all countries. {a}

{a} Sir John Heywood's Life of Edward VI

Ver. 7. And afterward, saith the Lord.] This is noted by the Hebrew critics for a very long verse—as having in it forty-two words, which consist of one hundred and sixty letters—and it sounds very heavily all along, to the courtiers especially. Potentis potentior torquebuntur. Power torments powerfully.

Ver. 8. Behold, I will set before you the way of life and the way of death.] They should have their option, but a very sad one. Saved they could not be from their enemies but by their enemies, nor escape death but by captivity, which is a kind of living death, and not much to be preferred before death. Only life is sweet, as the Gibeonites held it, and therefore chose rather to be "hewers of wood and drawers of water" than to be cut off with the rest of the Canaanites.

Ver. 9. His life shall be unto him for a prey.] And lawful prey or booty is counted good purchase. {#Isa 49:24} He shall save his life, though he lose his goods. And it should not be grievous to any man to sacrifice his estate to the service of his life. Why else did Solomon make so many hundreds of targets and shields of gold?

Ver. 10. For I have set my face against this city.] I have looked this city to destruction. I have decreed it, and will do it. When our Saviour set his face to go towards this city, {#Lu 9:51} he was fully resolved on it, and nothing should hinder him. See #Le 17:10 20:5.

Ver. 11. And touching the house of the king of Judah, say,] i.e., His courtiers and his counsellors. which probably were now as bad or worse than they had been in his father Josiah's days. "Her princes within her were roaring lions, her judges evening wolves." {#Zep 3:3} {See Trapp on "Zep 3:3"}

Ver. 12. O house of David.] But much degenerated from the piety of David. So #Mic 2:7, "O thou that art named the house of Jacob—are these his doings," &c. {See Trapp on "Mic 2:7"} To be a degenerate plant of so noble a vine is no small discommendation.

Thus saith the Lord.] After that the court had sent to him, he is sent to the court with these instructions.

Execute justice in the morning.] As David your progenitor and pattern did. {#Ps 101:8} Be up and at it early, and make quick despatch of causes that poor men may go home about their businesses who have other things to do besides going to law. It is a lamentable thing that a suit should depend ten or twenty years in some courts, Quo saturentur avarissimi rabulae, omnia bona pauperum exugentes, {a} through the avarice of some pleaders, to the utter undoing of their poor clients. This made one such (when he was persuaded to patience by the example of Job) to reply, What do ye tell me of Job? Job never had any suits in chancery. Jethro adviseth Moses {#Ex 18:14-23} to dismiss those timely, {b} whom he cannot despatch presently.

{a} Oecolamp.

{b} Mane, i.e., Mature.

Ver. 13. Behold, I am against thee.] I, who alone am a whole army of men, van and rear both, {#Isa 52:12} and may better say than any other, how many reckon you me at?

O inhabitant of the valley,] i.e., Of Jerusalem, called elsewhere the valley of vision. It stood high, but yet was compassed about with mountains that were higher. {#Ps 125:2}

And rock of the plain.] The bulwark and beauty of the whole adjacent country. Pliny saith that it was the most famous of all the cities of the east; he might have said of the whole world, if he had known all.

Which say, Who shall come down against us? or who, &c.] This they said out of carnal confidence in the natural strength of the place, increased by their fortifications. The Jebusites had done so, {#2Sa 5:6} and were unroosted. Security ushereth in destruction.

Who shall enter into our habitations?] Which we hold impregnable. Such like vaunts precede and presage ruin. See #Jer 49:16 Ob 3.

Ver. 14. But I will punish you.] {a} And if I take you once to do, you are sure of your full payment. Heb., I will visit upon thee according to the fruit of your actions, i.e., I will lay upon you a punishment answerable to your sins; the sin being as the seed, and the punishment as the fruit that cometh of it—q.d., " Ye have sown the wind, and ye shall reap the whirlwind."

And I will kindle a fire in the forest thereof,] i.e., In the streets, which stand as thick with houses as the forest of Lebanon doth with trees, and are built with timber fetched from that forest.

{a} Puniam vos pro meritis.

Chapter 22

Ver. 1. Go down to the house of the king of Judah.] To the palace royal of Jehoakim, son of Josiah, who reigned after that his brother Jehoahaz was carried captive to Egypt. {#2Ki 23:34}

Ver. 2. Thou and thy servants.] Thine attendants and officers, who, too oft, are evil instruments. This made the primitive Christians pray for the emperor, that God would send him Senatum fidelem, faithful counsellors. {a}

{a} Tertul. Apol.

Ver. 3. Execute ye judgment and righteousness.] Make good laws, and see that they be well executed. This the prophet presseth quasi ad fastidium, ever and anon, over and over, as the likeliest means to prevent future judgments; so Phineas found it. See #Jer 21:12.

Ver. 4. For if ye do this thing indeed.] Heb., If doing you do this word, i.e., If seriously and sedulously ye do it.

Then shall there enter in...kings sitting.] See #Jer 17:25.

Ver. 5. That this house shall become a desolation.] This stately edifice, the place of thy royal residence. Note here the prophet's boldness, and learn that truth must be spoken, however it be taken.

Ver. 6. For thus saith the Lord concerning the king's house,] i.e., Concerning the whole kingdom of Judah, saith Junius.

Thou art Gilead unto me, and the head of Lebanon,] i.e., High and happy, as these fruitful mountains, famous for spicery and other things desirable. {#Ge 37:25}

Yet surely I will make thee a wilderness.] Like as I have made them when the ten tribes were carried away captive.

Ver. 7. And I will prepare destroyers.] Heb., Sanctify them; that is, send them on mine errand, and let them forward. God's holy hand is in all such desolations.

Every one with his weapons.] Or, Tools rather, to fell with.

And they shall cut down.] Sonat icta securibus ilex.

Ver. 8. And many nations shall pass, &c.] By a personification of passengers admiring the utter ruin of so famous a city, the prophet setteth forth the cause of their desolations.

Ver. 9. Because they have forsaken the covenant &c.] In promptu causa est. Heinous sins brings hideous plagues. Ingentia beneficia, flagitia, supplicia. {a}

{a} Magdeburg.

Ver. 10. Weep not for the dead, neither bemoan him.] Lament no more for the good Josiah, lately slain in war, and yet dead in peace: Ne fletote, neque condoletote: there is no such cause, everything counted; neither shall ye have leisure so to do, because of later miseries befalling you thick and threefold. Weep ye rather for his son Challum, carried captive into Egypt; and there miserably handled, without hope of return.

Ver. 11. Which reigned instead of Josiah his father.] But was too hasty, stepping into the throne before his elder brother Jehoiakim; and therefore soon after dethroned, carried down to Egypt, and, as some say, there put to death. See #2Ki 23:33 2Ch 36:2. {See Trapp on "2Ki 23:33"} {See Trapp on "2Ch 36:2"}

Ver. 12. But he shall die in the place.] See on #Jer 22:11.

Ver. 13. Woe unto him that buildeth his house by unrighteousness.] This was Jehoiakim, cuius iniusta et insana aedificia hic accusantur; who would needs be building, but whether by fight or by wrong dealing, regarded not. This was to incur that CURSE. {#Isa 5:8 Hab 2:9,12} {See Trapp on "Isa 5:8"} {See Trapp on "Hab 2:9"} {See Trapp on "Hab 2:12"} Such injurious and therefore accursed builders were the pyramid makers in Egypt, Tarquinius Priscus, Caligula, Nero,

Phocas, ^{a} who is said to have heard this voice from heaven, Though thou shouldst erect thine edifice as high as heaven—

“ Aedificans aure, sedesque in sidera mittens, ” yet sin, that lieth at the foundation, will soon overturn all. Bernard inveigheth against some in his time, who did, with great care and cost, erigere mutes, negligere mores, build high manors, but not amend their manners, which should have been their chief care.

That useth his neighbour's service.] His "neighbour" he was, though his vassal and poor labourer.

And giveth him not for his work.] This is a crying sin. ^{#De 24:14,15 Jas 5:4} ^{See Trapp on "Jas 5:4"}

^{a} Sueton.; Niceph.

Ver. 14. I will build me a wide house.] Heb., A house of measures, or dimensions; such as is the Turk's Seraglio, two or three miles in compass, or rather such as is Westminster Hall, built by William Rufus, who found much fault with it for being too little, saying it was fitter for a chamber than for a hall for a king of England; and taking a plot for one more spacious to be added unto it, he came to an untimely end. ^{a} Sarcophago contentus, shut up in a little grave, which yet was more honour than this ambitious prince attained to; for he was "cast out and buried with the burial of an ass," as it followeth. ^{#Jer 22:19}

And large chambers.] Heb., Widened or winded; thoroughly aired. ^{b} Thus, with those Megarensians, spoken of by Plato, he built as if his life had been riveted upon eternity.

And cutteth him out windows.] Some render it, and the original will bear it, That teareth my windows ^{c} -scil., To enlarge and beautify therewith his new building: he took in, belike, a piece of God's house. This was such a piece of sacrilege as the very heathens abhorred. A certain King of Sicily, to enlarge his palace, pulled down an old temple; but the emperor, Marcus Antoninus, calleth it a beastly and lewd action, not to be spoken of without shame, protesting that it was a matter of wonder and scandal, not only to him, but to the whole city and senate of Rome; and therefore he blamed the king exceedingly for it. Our William the Conqueror is much cried out upon for throwing down thirty-six mother churches in Hampshire for the making of his New Forest, to hunt in. {d}

Ver. 15. Shalt thou reign because thou closest thyself in cedar?] Hast thou no better mediums to establish thy throne? no better defence against a potent enemy that comes to dethrone thee than a ceiling of cedar? What if thy cedar putrify not can it secure thee that thou perish not? Ah, never think it.

Did not thy father eat and drink?] Live cheerfully and comfortably, enjoying peace and prosperity through his righteousness and piety.

And then it was well with him.] Heb., Then was good to him; though he did not flaunt it out in sumptuous buildings. But you have great thoughts, and will not take it as your father did.

Ver. 16. He judged the cause of the poor and needy.] And so took a right course, a thriving way. {#Pr 29:4}

Was not this to know me? saith the Lord,] i.e., To show that he knew me soundly and savingly; while he exercised his general calling in his particular, and observed the first table of the decalogue in the second.

Ver. 17. But thine eyes and thy heart are not but for thy covetousness.] That is all thou mindest and lookest after, oculis atque animo intentus ad rem. "Hearts they have," saith Peter of such, "exercised with covetous practices: cursed children." {#2Pe 2:14} William Rufus is in story noted for such another.

Ver. 18. They shall not lament for him.] By his exactions he had so far lost his people's affections, that none were found, either of his allies or others, that bewailed his death; but, Jehoram-like as he had lived undesired, so he died unlamented Edwin-like, as he lived wickedly, so he died wishedly; {a} Mohammed-like, he lived feared of all men, and died bewailed of none. {b} See the contrary promised to his brother Zedekiah, for his courtesy to Jeremiah, #Jer 34:5.

{a} Daniel's History.

{b} Turkish History.

Ver. 19. He shall be buried with the burial of an ass.] His corpse shall be cast out, like carrion, into some bycorner. A just hand of God upon this wicked one, that he who had made so many to weep, should have none to weep over him; he who had such a stately house in Jerusalem, should not have a grave to house his carcase in: sed insepulta sepultura elatus, {a} as Cicero phraseth it; but without the ordinary honour of burial, should be cast out, or thrown into a ditch or a dunghill, to be devoured by the beasts of the earth and fowls of heaven. Our Richard II, for his exactions to maintain a great court and favourites, lost his kingdom, was starved to death at Pomfret Castle, and scarcely afforded common burial. King Stephen was interred in Faversham monastery; but since, his body, for the value of the lead wherein it was coffined, was cast into river. Let great ones so live, as that they meet not in the end with the death of a dog, the burial of an ass, and the epitaph of an ox; such as Aristotle calleth that of Sardanapalus—

“ταυτ εχω, Εφαγον και εφυβρισα,” &c.

Or that of Pope Alexander VI and his Lucrece—

“Hospes abi: iacet hic et scelus et vitium.”

{a} Philippic i.

Ver. 20. Go up to Lebanon and cry.] Jehoiakim hath had his doom and his destiny read him. {a} Followeth now Jehoiakim's part, and what, for his obstinace, he shall trust to. The prophet beginneth this part of his discourse with a sarcasm or scoff at their carnal security and creature confidence. Get up, saith he, into those high mountains here mentioned, Lebanon, Bashan, Abarim, that look all toward Egypt, and see if thence, by crying and calling for help, thou mayest be saved from the Chaldees, who are coming upon thee; but all shall be to small purpose.

But thy lovers are all destroyed.] The Egyptians, to whom thou bearest a blind affection, contrary to God's covenant.

Ver. 21. I spake unto thee in thy prosperity.] Heb., In thy prosperities, or tranquillities. Prosperity rendereth men refractory. Demetrius called a peaceable and prosperous life a dead sea; because, being not tossed with any considerable troubles, it slayeth the simple, as Solomon hath it. {#Pr 1:32} Men are usually best when worst, and worst when best: like the snake which, when frozen, lieth quiet and still, but waxing warm, stirreth and stingeth. The parable of the sun and the wind is known, Anglica gens est optima flens et pessima ridens. The English people are best crying and worst laughing. Some of those who, in Queen Mary's days, kept their garments close about them, wore them afterwards more loosely. It is as hard to bear prosperity, as to drink much wine and not be giddy. It is, at least, as strong waters to a weak stomach; which, however they do not intoxicate, yet they weaken the brain: plus deceptionis semper habet quam delectationis; it always has greater deception than amusements, it is able to entice, and ready to kill the entangled. In rest we contract rust; neither are men's ears opened to hear instruction but by correction. {#Job 33:16} God holdeth us to hard meat, that he may be true to our souls. {#Ps 119:75}

This hath been thy manner from thy youth.] "Jeshurun waxed fat, and kicked," is an old complaint. {#De 32:15} To have been an old sinner, habituated and hardened in iniquity, is no small aggravation of it: #Eze 20:13, "But the house of Israel rebelled against me in the wilderness"; there they murmured against God and Moses ten times; "forty years was he there grieved with that perverse generation." They began as soon as ever they were moulded into a state, like as Esau began to persecute Jacob in the very womb, that no time might be lost.

Ver. 22. The wind shall eat all thy pastors,] {a} i.e., The vain hope that thy governors have in foreign helps shall deceive them; for God will make the strongest sinew in the arm of flesh to crack and break.

Surely then shalt thou be ashamed.] When thou shalt see thyself so shamefully disappointed by human helps, which were never true to those that trusted them.

Ver. 23. O inhabitant of Lebanon.] Heb., O inhabitress—that is, O Jerusalem, who hast perched thyself aloft, and pridest thyself in thy strength and stateliness.

How gracious shalt thou be!] i.e., How ridiculous, when thy lofty and stately rooms wherein thou art roosted shall be to thee but as groaning rooms to women in travail.

Ver. 24. As I live, saith the Lord.] An oath which none may lawfully take but God himself, who is life itself. It is therefore sinful for any one to say, As I live, such a thing is so or so. That is God's oath. See #Nu 14:21 Ps 95:11.

Though Coniah.] So Jechoniah, or Jehoiakin, by an aphaeresis, dropping a letter, is called in scorn and contempt. Prepared he was of the Lord, as his name signifieth, for misery; and yet he was now but eighteen years old. {#2Ki 24:8} Youth excuseth not those that are wicked. This young king was scarce warm in his throne when carried captive to Babylon.

Were the signet on my right hand.] Which is very carefully kept and carried about. See #So 8:6 Hag 2:23, where good Zerubbabel, the nephew of this Jechoniah, is called God's "signet."

Yet would I pluck thee thence.] This Nazianzen fitly applieth to preachers, such as prove vile and vicious.

Ver. 25. And I will give thee into the hand.] No sooner was he plucked off God's hand but he fell into his enemies' hands. So Saul's doleful complaint was, God hath forsaken me, and the Philistines are upon me. {#1Sa 28:15}

Ver. 26. And I will cast thee out.] Heb., I will hurl thee out. To be held captive by idolaters in a strange country is no small misery. Poor Zegedine found it so among the Turks.

Ver. 27. But to the land that they desire to return.] Heb., Which they lift up their soul to quam avent totaque anima expetunt, et ad quam summe anhelant; they shall die in banishment. So they that are once shut out of heaven must for ever abide in hell, would they never so fain get out, with dragons and devils.

Ver. 28. Is this Coniah a despised, broken idol?] Interrogatio pathetica: Is he not? Who would ever have thought to have seen a king of Judah so little set by, like some old picture or inglorious trunk?

A vessel in which is no pleasure.] That is, by a modest round about phrase, A close stool, or piss pot. {so #Ho 8:8}

He and his seed.] If any he had, or shall have in his captivity.

Ver. 29. O earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the Lord.] Hear this irrevocable decree of mine, and this ensuing dreadful denunciation, which I cannot get this stupid and incredulous people to believe. His trebling of the word is {as #Eze 21:27} for more assurance. Some sense it thus, O Coniah, thou who art earth by creation, earth by generation, and earth by resolution, hear and give ear, be not proud, for the Lord hath spoken it. {as #Jer 13:15}

Ver. 30. Write ye this man childless] {a} As to succession in the royal dignity, as well as to success in his reign. The Septuagint render it, A man abdicated or proscribed. This God would have to be written—that is, to be put upon public record for the use of posterity. Our chronicles tell us of John Dudley, that great Duke of Northumberland, in King Edward VI's days—who endeavoured by all means to engrand his posterity, reaching at the crown also, which cost him his head—that though he had six sons, all men, all married, yet none of them left any issue behind them. "Be wise now, therefore, O ye kings; serve the Lord with fear."

{a} Ariri -i.e., orbus vel solus, sicut in deserto myrica. -Fuller.

Chapter 23

Ver. 1. Woe to the pastors,] i.e., To the rulers and chieftains, whether in the State or Church; woe to the wicked of both sorts; and why?

They destroy and scatter the sheep of my pasture.] So he calleth the people, how bad soever, because of the covenant with their fathers.

Ver. 2. Against the pastors.] Impostors, rather.

That feed my people.] Or, That feed upon my people, rather; attensioni gregis potius quam attentioni consulentes, more minding gain than godliness.

Ye have scattered my flock.] And worried them, as so many evening wolves, {#Zep 3:3} grievous, or fat wolves. {#Ac 20:29} {See Trapp on "Ac 20:29"}

Behold, I will visit upon you.] Ludit in voce visitare; I will visit you in another sense, for your not visiting my people according to your duty. {#Eze 34:4,6,8}

Ver. 3. And I will gather the remnant of my flock.] I will bring them back from Babylon, but especially from out of this present evil world, into the bosom of my Church, by Christ the Arch-shepherd, and by such under-shepherds as he shall make use of to that purpose. {#Eph 4:11}

And they shall be fruitful and increase.] Gignendo gentes, by begetting the Gentiles unto Christ, through the preaching of the gospel.

Ver. 4. And I will set up shepherds over them.] "Pastors after mine own heart," such as were Zerubbabel, Ezra, Nehemiah, Jehoshua the high priest, Haggai, Zechariah, Malachi, &c. Christian princes and pastors under the gospel, but especially Christ the "chief Shepherd and Bishop of our souls," who is therefore here promised, {#Jer 23:5,6} for the comfort of God's elect, who might well be troubled at that former dreadful denunciation. {#Jer 22:29,30}

And they shall fear no more.] But enjoy spiritual security, and be of an invincible courage.

Neither shall they be lacking.] Christ the good Shepherd will see to that, {#Joh 10:28,29} his under-shepherds also, whose motto is Praesis ut prosis, will have a care. {a}

{a} Bernard.

Ver. 5. I will raise to David a righteous branch.] Who shall raise up the tabernacle of David that is fallen, and close up the breaches thereof, {#Am 9:11} who shall also sit upon the throne of his father David, and of his kingdom there shall be no end. {#Lu 1:32,33} Annon hoc probe sarcitur; &c. Is not this a good amends for that which is to befall Coniah and his posterity, put beside the kingdom? Of Christ the "righteous branch," see #Isa 11:1 4:2 Zec 3:8 {See Trapp on "Isa 11:1"} {See Trapp on "Isa 4:2"} {See Trapp on "Zec 3:8"}

Ver. 6. This is the name whereby he shall be called, The Lord our Righteousness.] Jehovah Tsidkenu. {a} This is a most mellifluous and sweet name of our Lord Jesus Christ, importing his Godhead, as the righteous Branch of David {#Jer 23:5} did his manhood; and besides assuring us that as he hath for us fulfilled all righteousness, {#Mt 3:15} so he is by God made unto us righteousness, {#1Co 1:30} and that we are become the righteousness of God in him. {#2Co 5:21} This one name of Christ is a strong tower; {#Pr 18:10} it is such as will answer all our doubts and objections, were they never so many, had we but skill to spell all the letters in it. Cyprian was wont to comfort his friends thus, Venit Antichristus, sed superveniet Christus; Antichrist will come, but then Christ will be at the heels of him. We may well comfort ourselves against all evils and enemies with this consideration, Christ is "Jehovah our righteousness." God hath "laid help on one that is mighty," and he came to "bring in everlasting righteousness." {#Da 9:24} Why then should we "fear in the days of evil, when the iniquities of our heels shall compass us about." {#Ps 49:5} Domine Satan, saith Luther somewhere, nihil me movent minae terrores tui; est enim unus qui vocatur Iehovah iustitia nostra, in quem credo: Is legem abrogavit, peccatum damnavit, mortem abolevit, infernum destruxit, estque O Satan, Satan tuus {b} -that is, You, Sir Satan, your menaces and terrors trouble me not. For why? There is one whose name is called the Lord our righteousness, on whom I believe. He it is who hath abrogated the law, condemned, sin, abolished death, destroyed hell, and is a Satan to thee, O Satan. Surely this brave saying of Luther may well be reckoned among such of his sentences as a man would fetch, rather than be without them, upon his knees from Rome or Jerusalem.

{b} Luth., tom. iv. fol. 55 A.

Ver. 7. Therefore, behold the days come.] See #Jer 16:14.

Ver. 8. But the Lord liveth.] See #Jer 16:15.

Ver. 9. My heart within me is broken.] Utitur exordiolo pathetico et tragico prorsus. Being to inveigh against the priests and false prophets, those great corrupters of the people, he useth this pathetic preface, Cordicitus et medullitus doles, I am grieved to the very heart, &c.

All my bones shake.] Heb., Hover or flutter, as birds do, They shake and shudder with extreme fear and horror. Totus contremisco.

I am like a drunken man.] Totus perturbatus sum, I am not myself, not able to stand high alone.

Because of the Lord.] Through zeal of his glory.

And because of the words of his holiness.] His holy words so shamefully slighted, his dreadful threats especially.

Ver. 10. For the land is full of adulterers.] It is even become a great brothel house, as sometimes Cyprus was, and as Rome is now said to be:

“Tota est iam Roma lupanar.”

“Now Rome is entirely a brothel.”

For because of swearing (or cursing) the land mourneth.] Swearers and cursers, then, are public enemies, traitors to the State. The Jews observe that Beershaba signifies, The well of oath; and Beersaba, The well of plenty. Sure we are that for oaths the land mourneth; of which there is such store, as if men, by an easy mistake of the point, used to draw and drop them, as it were, out of the well of plenty.

And the pleasant places.] Or, Pastures, or habitations, which, being dried up, seem to mourn, and yet the inhabitants are without all sense of sorrow.

And their course is evil.] Naught all over, as we say.

And their force is not right.] Not rightly employed; they are not valiant for the truth, but violent for wrong doing.

Ver. 11. For both prophet and priest are profane.] What wonder, therefore, that the people were so? I have read of a woman, who, living in professed doubt of the Godhead, after better illumination and repentance, did often protest that the vicious life of a great scholar in that town did conjure up those damnable doubts in her soul. {a} And of another, that he desired a profane preacher to point him out a nearer way to heaven than that he had taught in his sermons, for he went not that way himself. Our Saviour foretelleth {#Mt 24:12} that "iniquity shall abound, love wax cold," &c.; and why? "Many false prophets shall arise."

Yea, in my house have I found their wickedness.] Sin is not a little aggravated as by the time, sc., If committed on the Lord's day; so by the place, sc., If done in God's house, and in his special presence. Unclean glances or worldly thoughts in hearing, &c., argue a profane heart. Like as it were a sign the orthodox party were but weak, if, while they were at sermons, Papists dared come in and put them out.

{a} Mrs Ward's Happiness of Paradise.

Ver. 12. As slippery ways in the darkness.] They shall fall without fail, for they shall neither see their way nor stand their ground. See #Ps 35:6.

Ver. 13. And I have seen folly.] Heb., Insalsity. Folly is as unpleasant to the intelligent as unsavoury meat is to him that tasteth it.

They prophesied in Baal, and caused my people Israel to err.] They sold poison to the people, as Laertius {a} saith Aristotle did—Epicurus is his witness—having first wasted his estate.

{a} Lib. x. in Epic

Ver. 14. I have seen also in the prophets of Jerusalem an horrible thing.] {a} Heb., Fedit, or fetidity; filthiness or stench, such as the devil himself, they say, leaveth behind him going out of a room. It must needs be a horrible thing when doctors turn devils, teaching such impieties, acsi ipse teterrimus Satan eas ore suo docuisset, as if the devil himself, with his own mouth, had taught the same. I would shun a heretic, saith one, as I would do a devil, for he is sent on his errand. Seducers certainly act the part of that horrid fiend, and, together with him, shall be "cast alive into the burning lake."

{#Re 19:20}

They commit adultery.] As did Eli's sons, and those two stinking goats, #Jer 29:23.

And walk in lies.] Make a trade of it. It was not for nothing that Chrysostom {b} said of those of his time, Non arbitror inter sacerdotes, multos esse qui salvi fient.

They strengthen also the hands of evildoers.] Roborant manus malignatum; while knowing the judgment of God, that they which commit such things are worthy of death, they not only do the same, but, both by their false doctrine and loose living, they countenance those that do them. {#Ro 1:32}

They are all become to me as Sodom,] i.e., Paucissimis exceptis, omnes conscelerati et inemendabiles; they are all stark naught.

{a} φρικτα.—Septuag.

{b} Hom. iii. in Act.

Ver. 15. I will feed them with wormwood,] {a} i.e., I will slay them with most bitter and grievous kinds of deaths. See #Jer 8:14 9:15.

For from the prophets of Jerusalem is profaneness gone forth into all the land.] Their place adding two wings to their sin—viz., Example and scandal, whereby it soareth higher and flieth much further. See #Jer 23:11.

Ver. 16. Hearken not unto the words of the prophets.] Stop your ears to their enchantments, and seriously decline them, as ye would do a serpent in your way, or poison in your meats.

They make you vain.] Or, Beguile you. Fair words make fools fain. See #Ro 16:18.

Ver. 17. They say still to them that despise me.] They promise security to the impenitent, and flatter people in their sinful and sensual practices. Socinians set up man's reason; Arminians, his free will; libertines, his unruly lusts; and Papists gratify his senses with their forms and pomp. In their humble supplication to King James for a toleration, they pleaded for their religion as that which was most agreeable to man's nature. Sir Walter Raleigh knew what he said, that were he to choose a religion for sensual delights and licentious liberty, he would be a Papist. No sin past, but the Pope can pardon it; none to come, but he could dispense with it; no matter how long they have lived in any sin (thought the sin against the Holy Ghost), yet extreme unction at last will salve all.

Ver. 18. For who hath stood in the counsel of the Lord?] *Quis praeter nos? so Piscator. Who hath, if we have not? say those false prophets, as if they were so many angels newly dropped from heaven.

Ver. 19. Behold, a whirlwind of the Lord,] *q.d. Though these flatterers make all fair weather before you, yet assure yourselves the tempest of God's wrath, such as shall never be blown over, is even breaking forth upon them and you together. Look to it, therefore.

Ver. 20. In the latter days ye shall consider it perfectly.] All too late ye shall subscribe to the truth of these threats, which now ye take as uttered in terror only, and will not believe till you feel. Sero, inquit Nero. Too late Nero said. Epimetheus, that after wit, had too many fellows. Sero sapiunt Phryges. The Pyyges understand too late.

Ver. 21. I have not sent these prophets.] Who I have duped you into the mouth of destruction, as that old Bethelite did the young prophet into the mouth of the lion.

Yet they ran.] They have from me neither mission nor commission, but do all on their own heads. Observabilis est hic locus contra multos qui hodie plebem docendi munus sibi arrogant, cum tamen non sint missi, saith Oecolampadius. This is a notable place against lay preachers. And, as if he had lived in those loose times of ours, he thus goeth on:—In #1Co 14:40 16:1, order is commanded to be kept; but there are now such as abide not in their own churches, but run into others, where they teach without a calling. These promote not, but hinder the cause of Christ. He is the God of peace, but they go forth and say, Mentiris; Deus amat talem constantiam et fortem confessionem: sic enim recant suam prae fractam pertinaciam, Thou liest; God loveth such constance and bold confession of the truth as we hold forth; for so they call, saith he, their stiffness and obstinace. Besides that, they come not into the congregations of unbelievers to convert them to the faith, sed nostras perplexas reddunt, so that good man proceedeth in his complaint on this text—but they trouble our churches, like as of old they came to Antioch, and made disturbance there {#Ac 15:1-2 22-29} Luther also, who lived in the same time with Oecolampadius, cries out to like purpose, Decem annis laboratur antequam ecclesiola recte et pie instituta paretur, { a } &c. We are ten or more years, saith he, ere we can settle a small church as it should be; and yet, when that is done, there creepeth in some silly sectary, whose only skill is to rail against godly ministers, is uno memento evertit omnia, and he presently marreth all. See #Jer 14:14.

{a} Tom. Oper. iv., fol. 18 A.

Ver. 22. But if they had stood in my counsel, &c.] As they vainly vaunt they do, {#Jer 23:18} and that they know more of my mind than any others.

And had caused my people to hear my words.] And not their own fancies or cunningly devised fables. {#2Pe 1:16}

Then they should have turned them from the evil of their way.] Not but that a goodly preacher may want success; {#Isa 49:4} {See Trapp on "Isa 49:4"} And, on the contrary, a bad minister may be a means of good to others, as the dull whetstone edgeth iron, and the lifeless heaven enliveneth other creatures. The head of a toad may yield the precious stone bufonites, and wholesome sugar be found in a poisoned cane. Noah's builders were a means to save him and his family, yet themselves were drowned; so was Palinurus, Aeneas's pilot in the poet. {a} But God usually honoureth his faithful labourers with some success; and they can say, as Chrysostom doth, Si decimus quisque, si unus persuasus fuerit, ad consolationem abunde sufficit. If but one in ten be converted by our ministry, yea, if but one in all, it is comfort enough. See #Jas 5:20.

{a} Virgil, Aeneid, iii.

Ver. 23. Am I a God at hand, and not a God afar off?] See I not what is done on earth, which seemeth further from me? or think ye that you live out of the reach of my rod because remote from heaven, the habitation of my holiness and of my glory?

“Iupiter est quodcunque rides, quocunque moveris.”
- Lucan.

Ver. 24. Can any man hide himself in secret places?] Hide he may God from himself, but not himself from God; though atheists are apt to think (as they say the struthiocamelus doth when he hath thrust his head in a hole) {a} that because they see none, therefore none seeth them.

Do I not fill heaven and earth?] See #Ps 139:3,5,7,11 Isa 66:1. {See Trapp on "Ps 139:3"} {See Trapp on "Ps 139:5"} {See Trapp on "Ps 139:7"} {See Trapp on "Ps 139:11"} {See Trapp on "Isa 66:1"}

{a} Plin.

Ver. 25. I have dreamed, I have dreamed, / i.e., I have a prophetic revelation in a dream. Such lying prophets were the ancient and modern enthusiasts and high attainers. Messalanian heretics they were called of old, A.D. 371.

Ver. 26. How long shall this be in the hearts? &c., / q.d., Will they never give over lying to the Holy Ghost, {#Ac 5:3} and flying against the light (of their own consciences), as bats do. Nam quod argute commenti sunt, haec aiunt ex Spiritu se dicere; studio enim suis mendaciis plebi imponunt, falsumque data opera docent; {a} for they father their falsities upon the Spirit of truth, cozening the credulous multitude. And this they do wittingly and incessantly.

{a} Oecolamp.

Ver. 27. Which think to cause my people to forget my name.] To drive them to atheism, which sometimes creepeth in at the back door of a reformation, "by the sleight of seducers and their cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive." Our Church is at this day pestered with atheists (who first have been Seekers, Ranters, Antinomians, Antiscripturists, &c.), and is even dark with them, as Egypt once was with the grasshoppers. They seemed to speak with judgment that said formerly, As Antichristianism decreaseth, so atheism prevaileth. And they seem still not to judge amiss that say that the Jesuits are acting vigorously by our sectaries to bring in Popery again— quasi postilimino -upon us. It hath been long the opinion and fear of some grave divines that Antichrist, before his abolition, shall once again overflow the whole face of the West, and suppress the whole Protestant churches— quod Deus avertat. Take we heed that these sect makers make us not forget God's name by their fopperies, as our fathers forgot his name for Baal.

Ver. 28. The prophet that hath a dream, let him tell a dream.] Or, Let him tell it as a dream, and not as a divine revelation, making more of it than the matter comes to, and

What are dreams ordinarily but very vanities, {#Ec 5:7 Zec 10:2} pleasant follies and delusions, the empty bubbles of the mind, children and tales of fancy, idle and fruitless notions, mere baubles? Why, then, should men make so much of them? why should they tell their Midianitish dreams to others with so much confidence, as if they were oracles?

And he that hath my word.] So he be sure he hath it, and can on good ground say, I believed, therefore have I spoken.

What is the chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord,] i.e., What is false doctrine to true? surely nothing in comparison; you may better set Palea, that is, chaff, upon it, than the Pope doth upon anything in the decrees of his predecessors that pleaseth him not. Shall not the whole body of Popery, founded, most part of it, upon revelations and feigned miracles (think the same of Ranters, Quakers, and some Anabaptists) prove palea -that is, chaff, hay, and stubble that shall be surely burnt. {#1Co 3:11-15} Some render the text Quid paleae cum tritico? what hath chaff to do with the wheat? {as #Ho 14:9 Joh 2:4} Away with any such mixtures. In the writings of some sectaries,

“Sunt bona mista malis, sunt mala mista bonis.”

The speech in the text seemeth to have been proverbial, and is not unlike that of the apostle, {#2Co 6:14-16} and those in human authors, Quid sceptro et plectro? Quid specillo et gladio? quid lecytho et strophio? quid hyaenae et cani? quid bovi et delphino? quid cani et balneo? {a} What has a septre to do with a quill, a surgeon's knife with a sword, bottle with a head band, a hyena with a dog, a cow with a dolphin, a dog with a bath. So what communion hath faith and unbelief, zeal and passion? &c. And yet unbelief may be with faith—"Lord, I believe, help thou mine unbelief" {#Mr 9:24} -zeal with passion; yea, in young Christians, heat and passion goeth sometimes for zeal; and yet it is but chaff, which, when blown away, the heap is little else but wheat—that is, faith, zeal, humility, though we have less pride, passion, presumption. But this by the way only.

{a} Suid.

Ver. 29. Is not my word like a fire?] As it is like solid wheat, wholesome food; {#1Ti 6:3} so it is no less like fire, that most active element, called $\pi\upsilon\rho$, because it is pure, saith one; and fire, because it was fair. It enlighteneth, enliveneth, warmeth, purgeth, assimilateth, aspieth, consumeth combustible matter, congregat homogenea, segregat heterogenea; so doth the Word, when accompanied by the Spirit, who is of a fiery nature and of a fiery operation. {#Isa 4:4 Mal 3:2 Mt 3:11} "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." {#Joh 6:63} "Did not our hearts burn within us while he talked with us by the way, and opened unto us the Scriptures?" {#Lu 24:32} When the word comes home to the heart in the power of it, the preacher was sent of God. See #Ga 2:8.

And like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces?] i.e., The rockiest hearts and sturdiest stomachs are tamed and terrified by the Word, when God once takes them to do. It is as his plough to break up their fallow ground, and as his sword to run them through, {#Jer 4:3 Heb 4:2} and to lay them for dead. {#Ro 7:9} And like as the hardest ice is broken with hot waters, as well as with hammers, so is the hardest heart with the gospel, as well as with the law.

Ver. 30. Behold, I am against those prophets.] Heb., Behold, I against, by an angry aposiopesis. {a}

That steal my word every one from his neighbour.] That filch it, either by hiding it from others, as the Popish doctors do from the common people, or by wresting it to the defence of their false doctrines, as Marcion the heretic, whom, therefore, Tertullian fitly calleth Murem Ponticum, the rat of Pontus, for his gnawing and tawing of the Scriptures, to bring them to his purpose. Or, by a fraudulent imitating of God's true prophets, taking up their parables, and making use of their expressions, such as are, Thus saith the Lord; Grace be to you and peace, &c. Wasps also have their combs as well as bees; and apes will be doing as they see men to do. Or, lastly, by causing the people to forget and lose the good that they had once learned of the true prophets. This we see daily done by the cunning fetches and flatteries of the seducers of our times, causing many to lose the things that they had wrought. {#2Jo 8}

{a} A rhetorical artifice, in which the speaker comes to a sudden halt, as if unable or unwilling to proceed.

Ver. 31. That use their tongues.] Or, Abuse them rather, to smoothing and soothing up people in their sins: lenificant linguas, id est, blando sermone alliciunt plebem, they flatter and collogue; or tollunt linguam, they lift up their tongues, viz., by extolling themselves, and speaking magnifically of their own doing. As one hath observed of some sectarians among us, that they often call upon their hearers to mark—for it may be they shall hear that which they never heard before—when the thing is either false, or if true, no more than is ordinarily taught by others, and which they have stolen out of the writings of others. {a}

And say, He saith.] See on #Jer 23:30.

{a} Dulcorantium, mollificantium. -False prophets soothe and sweeten men.

Ver. 32. That cause my people to err by their lies and by their lightness.] By their lying discourses and light or loose courses. So #Zep 3:4 Jud 9:4. If these false prophets had been of a sober, grave behaviour, the people might have been with better excuse deluded by them; as Aristotle noteth of Eudoxus (and the same is true of Epicurus himself, as Cicero telleth us) that he prevailed much in disputing for pleasure, because he was no voluptuous man himself. But these in the text were no less lewd than loud liars.

Ver. 33. What is the burden of the Lord?] Ironicum interrogandi genus: thus they profanely asked by way of scoff or despite, such as he will drive down their throats again, plaguing them for their profane malignity.

Then shalt thou say, What burden?] q.d., I will burden you to some purpose, since ye profanely count and call my Word a burden. You shall suddenly have your back burden of plagues and miseries for the contempt of it.

I will even forsake you.] And then woe be unto you, {#Ho 9:12} you shall be eased of these burdens and of me together; and that you will find misery enough. See #Jer 12:7. Learn therefore to speak holily and honourably of God's Word, lest thou hear this word of his, Thou shalt never enter into my rest.

Ver. 34. That shall say, The burden of the Lord.] Nempe per ludibrium, in contempt and derision. See #2Ch 36:16.

Ver. 35. Thus shall ye say.] God sets them a form, who otherwise knew not how to lisp out a syllable of sober language. Loquamur verba Scripturae, Let us speak the words of the Bible, saith Peter Ramus, utamur sermone Spiritus Sancti, Let us inure ourselves to Scripture expressions.

Ver. 36. For every man's word shall be his burden.] That jeer of his afore mentioned shall lie heavy upon him, and cost him dear, for under the weight he shall sink and be crushed in pieces.

Ver. 37. Thus shalt thou say to the prophet.] See on #Jer 23:35.

Ver. 38. But since ye say, The burden of the Lord.] Since ye accuse me as unmerciful, my Word as a ponderous burden, and my messengers as telling you nothing but terrible things and bloody businesses, which therefore you are resolved to slight and neglect;

Ver. 39. Therefore, behold, I, even I, will utterly forget you.] I nunc ergo, lude pasquillis et putidis diceris, saith one. Go thy ways now, thou that thinkest it a goodly thing to gibe and jeer at God's ministers and their messages. Consider of this dreadful denunciation, and thereby conceive aright of the heinousness of thy sin; for God doth not use to kill flies upon men's foreheads with beetles, to threaten heavy punishments for light offences.

Ver. 40. And I will bring an everlasting reproach upon you.] Contempt of the Word is such an enraging sin that God cannot easily satisfy himself in saying what he will do to such as are guilty of it.

Chapter 24

Ver. 1. The Lord showed me.] By showing as well as by saying, hath God ever signified his mind to his people; by the visible as well as by the audible word, as in sacrifices and sacraments, for their better confirmation in the faith.

And, behold, two baskets.] Dodaim, so called from dodim, breasts, because these two baskets resembled two breasts.

Were set before the temple.] Either visionally, or else actually there set; whether presented for firstfruits, {as #De 26:2} or set to be sold in such a public place.

Before the temple.] To show that the Jews of both sorts gloried in the same God, but were differently regarded by him, and accordingly sentenced.

After that Nebuchadnezzar.] This then was showed to Jeremiah about the beginning of Zedekiah's reign.

Had carried away captive Jeconiah.] Who was therefore and thenceforth called Jeconiah Asir, {#1Ch 3:16} that is, Jeconiah the Prisoner. He was a wicked prince, and therefore written childless, and threatened with deportation. {#Jer 22:30} Howbeit, because by the advice of the prophet Jeremiah he submitted to Nebuchadnezzar (who carried him away to Babylon, where, say the Rabbis, he repented, and was therefore at length advanced by Evilmerodah, as #Jer 52:31), he and his company are here comforted, and pronounced more happy, however it might seem otherwise, than those that continued still in the land; and this, say the Hebrews, {a} was not obscurely set forth also by those two baskets of figs, whereof that which was worst showed best, and the other showed worst, till they came to be tasted.

With the carpenters,] Or, Craftsmen. {#2Ki 24:14,16}

And smiths.] Heb., Enclosers—that is, say some, goldsmiths, whose work it is to set stones in gold; and these, thus carried away, are as a type of such, saith Oecolampadius, as are penitent and patient till the Lord shall turn again their captivity as the streams in the south.

{a} Raban., Hugo., Lyra.

Ver. 2. One basket had very good figs.] Maturas et praecoquas, ripe and ready early, bursas melle plenas, as one once called such good figs, purses full of honey.

“ Ficus habet lactis nivei, rutilique saporem

Mellis, et ambrosiae similes cum nectare succos.”

- Passerat.

The other basket had very naughty figs.] Sour and ill-tasted, because blasted, haply, or worm eaten, &c. Of the Athenians Plutarch {a} saith, that they were all very good or stark naught; no middle men: like as that country also produceth both the most excellent honey and the most deadly poison. Sure it is that non sunt media coram Deo, neque placet tepiditas, before God every man is either a good tree yielding good fruit, or an evil tree bearing evil fruit. He that is not with Christ is against him. He acknowledgeth not a mediocrity, he detesteth an indifference in religion; hot or cold he wisheth men, and threateneth to "spue the lukewarm out of his mouth." {#Re 3:15,16} The best that can be said of such neuter passives is that which Tacitus saith of Galba, Magis extra vitia quam cum virtutibus, that they are rather not vicious than virtuous; their goodness is merely negative. The world crieth them up for right honest men, but God decrieth them for naught, stark naught; they may not be endured, they are so naught. See #Lu 16:15.

{a} In Vit. Dion.

Ver. 3. What seest thou, Jeremiah?] See on #Jer 1:11.

The good figs, very good.] See on #Jer 24:2.

Ver. 4. Again the word of the Lord.] Transitio ad Anagogen: the interpretation followeth, whereby will appear the different judgment made of persons and things by God and men.

Ver. 5. Like these good figs.] Quas sic dat et arbor et aura, when once God hath made the tree good, the fruit will be good.

So will I acknowledge.] Heb., Know, that is, own, or take special notice of, and this made the difference.

Whom I have sent out of this place for their good.] It is for their good, temporal and eternal, that God chastiseth his children. Jehoiachin was preferred at length; and as the Jewish doctors say, converted, as Manasseh had been before him. Daniel and his associates were set over the kingdom. The Jews got good estates and respect in the land of their captivity, {#Jer 29:4 Es 9:4,29} and were at length sent back with many favours and privileges, &c.

Ver. 6. For I will set mine eyes upon them for good.] I will see to their safety, and provide for their necessities. See #Ps 34:15. {See Trapp on "Ps 34:15"}

Ver. 7. And I will give them an heart to know me.] {a} This was better than all the rest, scil., a sanctified use of their afflictions. This we should highly prize, and pray for.

And they shall be my people.] This falling out of lovers shall but be a renewing of love between us.

For they shall return unto me.] God must sometimes whip his people to duty, and gather them from evil, as well as entice them, ut uvae dulces sint et non labruseae.

{a} Promissio Evangelica, ut infra., chap, xxxi. 33.

Ver. 8. And as the evil figs.] Zedekiah and his subjects, who were looked upon as the happier, because at home; and derided, likely, Jeconiah and his concaptives as cowards. Sure it is, that they were not bettered by their brethren's miseries.

Ver. 9. And I will deliver them.] As men throw out naughty figs, rotten apples, or the like. All the figs were carried out, but in diverse baskets, and for diverse purposes.

To be a taunt and a curse.] As when they were called in scorn by the heathen Verpi, Apellae, Recutiti, &c., and were noted, as they are still, for a nasty people.

Ver. 10. And I will send the sword.] So #Jer 14:15 34:17.

Chapter 25

Ver. 1. In the fourth year of Jehoiakim.] See on #Jer 1:2. Above twenty years had Jeremiah spent his worthy pains upon them, illi vero ne teruntio quidem meliores facti sunt, but they were nothing the better; here, therefore, is their doom most deservedly denounced.

That was the first year.] This first year of Nebuchadnezzar, reigning alone after his father's death, fell out part of Jehoiakim's third, and part of the fourth. {#Da 1:1}

Ver. 2. Unto all the people of Judah.] The circumstances both of time when, and of persons to whom, is thus set down, for the reason given on #Jer 25:1.

Ver. 3. Rising early and speaking.] A dilucula indesinenter: as good husbands use to do, taking the best times.

Ver. 4. But ye have not hearkened.] See #Jer 7:24,26.

Ver. 5. They said, Turn ye again.] This was the sum of all the prophet's sermons, as of the apostles', "Repent ye and believe the gospel," {#Mr 1:15}

Ver. 6. And I will do you no hurt.] Heb., I will not do evil to you; as else I must. The Romans honoured their Vejoves, that they might not harm them.

Ver. 7. That ye might provoke me.] See #Jer 7:17,18.

Ver. 8. Because ye have not heard, J i.e., Not heeded them. {as #Jer 7:19}

Ver. 9. Behold, I will send and take.] By a secret instinct. {as #Jer 1:15}

And Nebuchadnezzar my servant, J i.e., Mine executioner, the rod of my wrath, {#Isa 10:5} and the scourge of the world, as Attila styled himself.

And against all these nations round about.] Who were so infatuated that they did not combine against Nebuchadnezzar, whom the Septuagint called a dove, #Jer 25:38, but he was a vulture rather, and these nations were as so many silly doves, which save themselves by flight, not fight; and sitting in their dove cots, see their nests destroyed, and their young ones killed before their eyes, never offering to rescue or revenge, as other fowls do. So dealt the old Britons when invaded by the Romans; they joined not their forces against the common enemy, sed dum singuli pugnabant, universi vincebantur. but while they fought separately, they were conquered together. {a}

{a} Tacitus

Ver. 10. Moreover, I will take from them.] See #Jer 7:34 Re 18:22.

Ver. 11. And this land shall be a desolation—seventy years.] Which commenced at the deportation of Jeconiah. {#2Ki 24:8 Jer 29:1-3 Eze 4:1 33:21} Avignon in France, was the residence of the Pope for seventy years, which time the Romans yet remember, till this day, by the name of the Babylonian captivity. {a} Luther, when he first began to stir against the Pope, wrote a book bearing title De captivitate Babylonica, which when Bugenhagius, a Pomeranian divine, first read, he pronounced it to be the most heretical piece that ever was written, but afterwards, having better considered the contents of it, he retracted his former censure; he told his colleagues that all the world besides was in deep darkness, and that Luther alone was in the light and in the right, and him he would follow. So he did, and drew many more with him. {b}

Ver. 12. I will punish the King of Babylon.] As had been previously threatened, {#Isa 13:19-22 14:21-23 21:2-10 47:5,8,9} and was accomplished. {#Da 5:25-28,30}

Ver. 13. And I will bring upon that land,] scil., By Cyrus and his successors, who out of the ruins of Babylon built two cities, Ctesiphon and Seleucia.

Ver. 14. For many nations.] The Medes and Persians, together with the rest that served under them.

And great kings.] Cyrus and Darius especially.

Ver. 15. Take the wine cup of this fury.] {a} Or, Take this smoking wine cup. A "cup" is oft put for "affliction," and wine for extreme confusion and wrath. Poison in wine works more furiously than in water. {#Ps 75:8}

And cause all the nations.] According to that power which I have put into thine hands. {#Jer 1:10} Vengeance is still in readiness for the disobedient, {#2Co 10:6} as ready every whit in God's hand, as in the minister's mouth, who threateneth it.

Ver. 16. And be moved and be mad.] As men that are overcome by some hot and heady liquor, are mad drunk.

Because of the sword that I shall send.] For it is God who puts the sword in commission, {#Jer 47:6,7} and there it many times rideth circuit, as a judge, in scarlet. There are certain seasons, wherein, as the angel troubled the pool, so doth God the nations: and commonly when he doth it to one, he doth it to more, as here, and #2Ch 15:5,6, and as at this day in Europe.

Ver. 17. And made all drink,] viz., In vision, and by denunciation.

Ver. 18. To wit, in Jerusalem.] Judgment beginneth at God's house {#1Pe 4:17} {See Trapp on "1Pe 4:17"} {See Trapp on "Mt 25:41"} Sed si in Hierosolymis maneat scrutinium, quid fiet in Babylone? saith an ancient.

Ver. 19. Pharaoh king of Egypt.] Pharaohhophra, {#Jer 44:30} of whom Herodotus {a} writeth that he persuaded himself and boasted, that his kingdom was so strong that no god or man could take it from him. He was afterwards hanged by his own subjects.

{a} Lib. ii.

Ver. 20. The mixed people.] That lay scattered in the deserts, and had no certain abode; Scenitae and Hamaxobii.

And all the kings of the land of Uz.] Job's country, called by the Greeks, Ausitis.

Ver. 21. Edom and Moab, &c.] By the destruction of all these nations we may make a conjecture at the destruction of all the wicked, when Christ shall come to judgment. All that befalleth them in this world, is but as drops of wrath forerunning the great storm: or as a crack foretoking the fall of the whole house. Here the leaves only fall upon them as it were, but then the body of the tree in its full weight to crush them for ever.

Ver. 22. And all the kings of the isles.] As Cyprus, Rhodes, and the Cyclades, subdued also by the Babylonian, saith Jerome, Rabanus, and Vatablus.

Ver. 23. Dedan, and Tema, and Buz.] The Hagarens or Saracens {#Jer 49:8}

And all that are in the utmost corners.] Qui attonsi sunt in comam; Roundheads. See #Jer 9:26.

Ver. 24. And all the kings of Arabia.] Petraea.

That dwell in the desert.] In Arabia Deserta.

Ver. 25. And all the kings of Zimri, / i.e., Of Arabia Felix. Zamarens, Pliny {a} calleth them.

{a} Lib. vi. cap. 28.

Ver. 26. And all the kingdoms.] See on #Jer 25:16.

And the king of Sheshak, / i.e., Belshazzar, that bezzling king of Babylon, while he is quaffing in the vessels of God's house to the honour of Shat, {a} the Babylonian goddess; whence those feast days were called σακεαι ημεραι, being like the Roman Saturnalia. Antichrist also, who hath troubled all the kingdoms of the earth, shall himself perish, together with his Babylon the great, which hath made the nations drunk with the wine of her fornications.

{a} Shesac, id est poculum laetitiae aut vanitatis, vel sericum tuum.

Ver. 27. Drink ye, and be drunk, and spue, and fall.] Eckius, or Eccius, otherwise by some called Jeccius, from his casting or spuing, being nonplussed by Melanchthon, and well nigh maddened, started drinking, for his own solace, and drank himself to death. {a}

So should these do of the cup of God's wrath, not only till they were mad drunk, {as #Jer 25:16} but dead drunk.

And should ye be utterly unpunished?] See on #Jer 25:18.

Ye shall not be unpunished.] But suffer as surely and as sorely.

Ver. 30. The Lord shall roar from on high.] As a lusty lion, having discovered his prey, runneth upon it, roaring so horribly that he astonisheth the creatures and sets them at a stand.

He will mightily roar upon his habitation.] Pliny reporteth of the lioness, that she bringeth forth her whelps dead, and so they remain for the space of three days, until the lion, coming near to the den where they lie, lifteth up his voice, and roareth so fiercely, that presently they revive and rise. The "Lion of the tribe of Judah" will roar to like purpose at the last day; and doth afore, when he pleaseth, roar terribly upon his enemies, to their utter amazement. {#Joe 3:16 Am 1:2 3:8}

He shall give a shout, as those that tread the grapes.] When they have their feet in the winepress, and the new liquor in their heads, as one phraseth it.

Ver. 31. For the Lord hath a controversy with the nations.] {a} A disceptation, which showeth that his revenge to be taken upon them shall be just and lawful. It shall well appear to be so, at that day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God. {#Ro 2:5}

{a} Disceptatio catholica.

Ver. 32. Behold, evil shall go forth from nation to nation.] See on #Jer 25:16.

Ver. 33. And the slain of the Lord shall be, &c.] Such an utter destruction of the wicked is expected by the Jews at the coming of their Messiah, as of all people under heaven they are the most apt to work themselves into the fool's paradise of a sublime dotage, being light, aerial, fanatical.

Ver. 34. Howl, ye shepherds.] Uhulate, volulate. Shriek and roll. This is spoken to the governors and grandees; for in public calamities such usually suffer more than meaner men. The corks swim, saith one, when the plummets sink. If a tree have thick and large boughs, it lieth more open to lopping.

And ye shall fall like a pleasant vessel, / i.e., Irremediably. Like as a crystal glass or China dish once broken cannot be pieced again.

Ver. 35. And the shepherds shall have no way to flee.] Who had formerly divers strongholds. See #Am 2:14.

Ver. 36. For the Lord hath spoiled their pastures, / i.e., Their kingdoms and states, or their flocks.

Ver. 37. And the peaceable habitations.] Heb., The habitations or folds of peace. The fierce anger of the Lord hath unrooted them, their dwellings are demolished.

Ver. 38. He hath forsaken his covert, as a lion.] God hath, or, as some will, Nebuchadnezzar hath. He is come out of Babylon his den, to range about for prey. Ut in praeda involet.

Because of the fierceness of the oppressor.] Of the dove, say some, who also tell us that the Chaldees had in their standard this picture of a dove. But of that there is no such certainty.

Chapter 26

Ver. 1. In the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim.] What a sudden change was here, soon after the death of good Josiah! And was there not the like in England after the death of that English Josiah, Edward VI? Within a very few days of Queen Mary's reign were various learned and godly men in various parts committed to prison for religion, and Mr Rogers, the proto-martyr, put to death, as was that holy prophet of God, Uriah the son of Shemaiah of Kirjathjearim, not many weeks before Jeremiah was apprehended and questioned for his life, as is here related, his adversaries being pricked on by pride and malice.

Ver. 2. Diminish not a word.] Or, Detract not aught, viz., for fear or favour, lest I confound thee before them. {#Jer 1:17; see there} Haec, instar speculi omnium temporum, pastoribus inspicienda sunt. Here is a mirror for ministers.

Ver. 3. That I may repent me of the evil; because of the evil.] Flagitium et flagellum sicut acus et filum; evil of sin produceth evil of pain. See #Jer 4:4,6.

Ver. 4. If ye will not hearken unto me.] A conditional menace, the contrary promise whereunto see #Jer 26:13. And this was the sum of all Jeremiah's sermons.

Ver. 5. Both rising early, and sending them.] See #Jer 7:13 11:7 25:3.

Ver. 6. Then will I make this house like Shiloh.] This same threat Jeremiah had uttered in good Josiah's days, {#Jer 7:12-14} and no harm ensued. Now, tempora mutantur; truth breedeth hatred; and the prophet is in danger, for discharging his conscience, to be murdered; as were Rogers, Bradford, Taylor, and other famous preachers in those dog days of Queen Mary.

Ver. 7. So the priests and the prophets.] Like unto these prophets were the scribes and the lawyers in Christ's time. {a}

{a} Verbum Domini parit crucem. The word of God brought forth the cross.—Oecol.

Ver. 8. That the priests and the prophets, &c.] So they dealt by Stephen, {#Ac 7:57,58} by Arnulph, an excellent preacher of the truth according to godliness at Rome, A.D. 1125, in the time of Pope Honorius II. Hic clericorum insidiis necatur. {a} This good man was put to death by the instigation of the clergy, against whose avarice, pride, and luxury he bitterly inveighed, and was therefore much favoured by the Roman nobility; as was likewise Wickliffe by the English, and Huss by the Bohemian; but the envious priests wrought their ruin.

Ver. 9. Why hast thou prophesied in the name of the Lord?] Who doubtless hath not sent thee on this errand; but thou speakest it of thine own head, and shalt dearly answer it.

And all the people were gathered.] That many headed multitude, that neutrum modo, mas modo vulgus. See #Jer 26:16.

Ver. 10. When the princes of Judah heard those things.] Pii viri sunt quibus doluit populi impietas; good men they were, saith

Oecolampadius. They might be so, some of them at least; and it was well done of them here to pass an impartial sentence for the innocent prophet against the priests and people. But Pilate did so for a while for our Saviour; and these princes soon after turned Jeremiah's cruel enemies {#Jer 37:15} for his plain dealing. {#Jer 34:1-7}

And sat down in the entry of the new gate.] The east gate, saith the Chaldee paraphrast; called the new gate because repaired by Jotham, {#2Ki 15:35} saith Lyra.

Ver. 11. Then spake the priests and the prophets.] Against a priest and a prophet; but he had earnestly inveighed against them, {#Jer 23:1,2,14,15,33,34} and hence the hatred. As Erasmus told the Duke of Saxony that Luther had been too busy with the Pope's triple crown and with the priests' fat paunches, and was therefore so generally set against.

Saying, This man is worthy to die.] Sic Papicolae nostri saeculi. These are the very words of Popish persecutors.

For he hath prophesied against this city.] This holy, and therefore, it must be believed, inviolable city. Novum crimen, C. Caesar, &c. These sinners against their own souls, traitors also to the state, will neither see their evil condition, nor hear of it from others, as having gall in their ears, as they say of some kinds of creatures.

Ver. 12. The Lord sent me to prophesy against this house.] In this apology of the prophet thus answering for himself with a heroic spirit, five noble virtues, fit for a martyr, are by an expositor well observed: (1.) His prudence in alleging his divine mission; (2.) His charity in exhorting his enemies to repent; (3.) His humility in saying, "Behold, I am in your hand," &c.; (4.) His magnanimity and freedom of speech, in telling them that God would revenge his death; (5.) His spiritual security and fearlessness of death in so good a cause, and with so good a conscience.

Ver. 13. Amend your ways.] Fall out with your faults, and not with your friends. See #Jer 7:3.

And the Lord will repent him of the evil.] This he often inculcateth. Ideo minatur Deus ut non puniat. Therefore God will threaten so as not to punish. See #Jer 18:8.

Ver. 14. As for me, behold, I am in your hand.] See here how God gave his holy prophet a mouth and wisdom, such as his adversaries were not able to resist. The like he did to other of his martyrs and confessors, as were easy to instance. If the queen will give me life, I will thank her; if she will banish me, I will thank her; if she will burn me, I will thank her, said Bradford to Cresswell, offering to intercede for him. {a}

To do with me as seemeth good and meet unto you.] But this I can safely say, Non omnis moriar. All that ye can do is, to "kill the body." Kill me you may, but hurt me you cannot. Life in God's displeasure is worse than death. I am not of their mind who say,

“κακως ζην κρειον η θανειν καλως.”
- Euripid. in Aulide.

Better live basely than die bravely. Faxit Deus ut quilibet nostrum epilogum habeat galeatum. God grant that, whether our death be a burnt-offering of martyrdom, or a peace offering of a natural death, it may be a free will offering, a sweet sacrifice to the Lord.

{a} Acts and Mon., 1462.

Ver. 15. Ye shall surely bring innocent blood, &c.] So Mr Rogers, our proto-martyr in Queen Mary's days: If God, said he, look not mercifully upon England, the seeds of utter destruction are sown in it already by these hypocritical tyrants, and Antichristian prelates, double traitors to their native country. {a}

{a} Acts and Mon.

Ver. 16. Then said the princes and all the people.] The mobile vulgus. changeable mob, on #Jer 26:9. The good prophet is acquitted, as Athanasius afterwards was often; for if to be accused were enough to make a man guilty, none should be innocent.

Ver. 17. Then rose up certain of the elders.] Viri illi admodum venerabiles erant, saith Oecolampadius. These were very worthy men, whether princes or pleaders, well read in the annals of the times, as great men ought to be.

Ver. 18. Micah the Morashite.] See on #Mic 1:1.

Zion shall be ploughed like a field.] See #Mic 3:3.

Ver. 19. Did Hezekiah king of Judah.] Laudable examples are to be remembered; and, as occasion requireth, imitated. That was a very good one of Constantine the Great, when the Arians brought accusations against the orthodox bishops, as here the false prophets did against Jeremiah, he burned them, and said, These accusations will have proper hearing at the last day of judgment. {a}

{a} Sozomen.

Ver. 20. And there was also a man.] This seemeth to be the plea of the adverse party, producing an example opposite to the former, and showing what the way was now, whatever it had been heretofore. New lords, new laws.

According to all the words of Jeremiah.] Whose contemporary he was, and his memory was yet fresh bleeding.

Ver. 21. And when Jehoiakim.] This tiger laid hold with his teeth on all the excellent spirits of the times. See #Jer 36:26.

He was afraid, and fled.] Not out of timorousness, but prudence. Tertullian was too rigid in condemning all kinds of flight in times of persecution. God hath not made his people as standing buttmarks to be shot at, &c. See #Mt 10:23.

Ver. 22. And Jehoiakim sent men into Egypt.] Where he might have anything, for he was Pharaoh's feudatory and vassal.

Ver. 23. And they set forth Uriah out of Egypt.] As they did here Sir John Cheek out of the Low Countries, and frightened him into a recantation. Not so this Uriah.

And they set forth Uriah out of Egypt.] En collusio principum mundi in parricidio.

Who slew him with the sword.] Without all law, right, or reason. So John Baptist was murdered, as if God had been nothing aware of him, said that martyr. But Jehoiakim got as little by this as he did afterwards by burning Jeremiah's book; or as Vespasian afterwards did by banishing all the philosophers of his time, because they spake boldly against his vices and tyranny.

Ver. 24. Nevertheless the hand of Ahikam.] Who had been one of Josiah's counsellors. {#2Ki 22:12} By this man's authority and help Jeremiah was delivered, and God rewarded him in his son Gedaliah, made governor of the land. {#2Ki 25:22}

Ver. 1. In the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim.] By the date of this prophecy, compared with #Jer 27:12 28:1, it should seem that it lay dormant for fourteen or fifteen years ere it was recited.

Ver. 2. Make thee bonds and yokes, / i.e., Yokes with bonds, such as they are wont to be fastened with.

And put them upon thy neck.] This was to the prophet, saith the Jesuit, molesta et probrosa poenitentia, { a } a troublesome and disgraceful penance. But this was no will worship, say we; and much handsomer than the penances they put the people to in Italy, where you may see them go along the streets, saith mine author, { b } with a great rope about their necks, as if they were dropped down from the gallows. And sometimes they wear a sausage or a swine's pudding in place of a silver or gold chain, for a sign of their mortification, and that they may merit.

{ a } A Lapide.

{ b } Bee Hive of Rome.

Ver. 3. By the hand of the messengers, / i.e., Ambassadors of those neighbouring states, who might come to Zedekiah, to confederate with him against Nebuchadnezzar's growing greatness; but all in vain, and to their own ruin. Deus quem destruit dementat. The wicked oft run to meet their bane, as if they were even ambitious of destruction.

Ver. 4. Go, tell your masters.] But they would not be warned, and were therefore ruined. So true is that of an ancient, Divinum consilium, dam devitatur; impletur: humana sapicuria, dum reluctatur, comprehenditur.

Ver. 5. I have made the earth.] And I am therefore the great proprietary and Lord paramount of all, to transfer kingdoms at my pleasure. This Nebuchadnezzar, after seven years' apprenticeship served among the beasts of the field, had learned to acknowledge.

{#Da 4:23-25}

Ver. 6. And now have I given all these lands.] Nebuchadnezzar shall be monarch contra Gentes. Dicunt nugatores equitasse Nabuchodonosor super leonem, et infraenasse draconem. {a}

{a} Oecolamp.

Ver. 7. And all nations shall serve him.] All the neighbouring nations, and some others more remote; but never was any man παντοκράτωρ, universal monarch, though some have styled themselves so, as did Sesostris King of Egypt:

“Qui Pharios currus regum cervicibus egit.”

Until the very time of his land come.] The greatest monarchies had their times and their turns, their rise and their ruin.

And then many nations and great kings shall serve themselves of him.] As the Chaldeans had served themselves of the Assyrians, so did the Persians of the Chaldeans, the Greeks of the Persians, the Romans of the Greeks, the Goths and Vandals, and now the Turks, of the Romans; such an aestuarial vicissitudo there is in earthly kingdoms, such a strange uncertainty in all things here below. "Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear." {#Heb 12:28} Let us serve him, and not serve ourselves upon him, as self-seekers do.

Ver. 8. And it shall come to pass that the nation, &c.] It is better, then, to serve a foreign prince than to perish by the sword, famine, or pestilence. It should not be grievous to any man to sacrifice all his outward comforts to the service of his life.

And that will not put their neck under the yoke.] The Lord disposeth of the kingdoms of the heathens also, though in such a way as may seem to us to be mere hap hazard.

That nation will I punish.] By seeking to shun a less mischief, they shall fall into a greater; if they escape frost, they shall meet with snow.

Ver. 9. Therefore hearken not ye to your prophets.] Whom the devil setteth to work to persuade you otherwise to your ruin; as he is an old manslayer, and hath his breathing devils abroad as his agents, such as are here mentioned.

Ver. 10. To remove you far from your land.] So it would prove; and such would be the event of their false prophecies.

Ver. 11. But the nations that bring their neck.] When God bids us yoke, it is best to submit. In all his commands there is so much reason for them, that if God did not enjoin them, yet it were best, in self-respects, for us to practise them; since in serving him we shall have the creatures to serve us, &c.

Ver. 12. I spake also to Zedekiah.] See on #Jer 27:1.

Bring your necks under the yoke.] Better do so than worse: if ye will not be active in it, ye shall be passive; and that because ye would not take upon you the lighter yoke of mine obedience.

“ Deus crudelius urit

Quos videt invitos succubuisse sibi.”

- Tibul. Eleg. 1.

Ver. 13. Why will ye die, thou and thy people?] Ec quae haec pertinacia? If thou hast no mercy on thyself, yet pity the State, which is like to perish by thy pertinace. Josephus highly commendeth Jeconiah for his yielding to go into captivity for the safety of the city. Tertullian giveth this counsel to Scapula the persecutor, If thou wilt not spare us, yet spare thyself; or, if not thyself, yet thy country, Carthage, which is like to smoke for thy cruelty, for "God is the avenger of all such."

Ver. 14. Therefore hearken not unto the words of the prophets.] Quanta opus opera, saith Oecolampadius. What a business it is to beat men off from false prophets and seducers! But let the end and the evils they lead to be remembered. Cavete a Melampyge.

Ver. 15. For they prophesy a lie.] When they speak a lie, they speak of their own, as it is said of their father the devil. {#Joh 8:44 Jer 23:21,22}

Ver. 16. Behold, the vessels of the Lord's house, &c.] Notorious impudence! but it hath ever been the lot of the Church to be pestered with such frontless dissolute fellows, who dare affirm things flat opposite to the truth, and flatter men in their sin to their utter ruin. Those who are of God can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth. {#2Co 13:8}

Ver. 17. Hearken not unto them.] Life and death is let in by the ear. {#Isa 55:3} Take heed, therefore, what ye hear.

Serve the king of Babylon.] And so long as ye may have liberty of conscience upon any reasonable terms, be content; and not, as the bird in the cage, which, because pent up, beateth herself.

Ver. 18. Let them make intercession to the Lord of hosts.] Let them pray in the Holy Ghost, by whom they pretend to be inspired. Let us see what answer. So Elias called upon the Baalites to call aloud unto their god; and forasmuch as he heard them not, the people were satisfied that they were false prophets. God will fulfil what he hath foretold; but then he looketh that his servants should make intercession. Elias had foretold Ahab that there should be store of rain after a long drought; but then he went up into Mount Carmel to pray for that rain. I came for thy prayer, said the angel to Daniel. God's prophets are his favourites, and may have anything of him.

Ver. 19. Concerning the sea, and concerning the pillars, &c.] Of these, see #1Ki 7:15,23,27.

And concerning the residue of the vessels.] All the goodly plate, whether sacred or profane, that the moderation of the conqueror had left in the city. {a}

{a} Diod.

Ver. 20. Which Nebuchadnezzar took not.] See on #Jer 27:19.

Ver. 22. Until the day that I visit them.] Till by my providence I appoint a great part of them to be brought back again, and to be new consecrated to my service. {#Ezr 1:7 7:19}

Chapter 28

Ver. 1. And it came to pass the same year,] scil., Wherein Jeremiah spake to Zedekiah and the priests. {#Jer 27:12}

In the beginning.] In his first year, dividing his reign into three parts.

That Hananiah the son of Azur the prophet,] i.e., The pretended prophet. Dictum κατά δοξάν. A priest he seemeth to have been by his country, Gibeon, {#Jos 21:13,17} and a prophet he taketh upon him to be, preacheth pleasing things through flattery, and for filthy lucre likely. He saw how ill Uriah and Jeremiah had sped by telling the truth. He resolveth, therefore, upon another course. These false prophets would ever, with the squirrel, build and have their holes open to the sunny side: ever keep in with the princes and please the people.

Ver. 2. Thus speaketh the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel.] Thus this wretch makes overly bold with that Nomen Maiestativum, holy and reverend name of God; whom he entitleth also to his falsities with singular impudence, that he may pass for a prophet of the Lord, whenas the root of the matter was not in him.

Ver. 3. Within two full years.] Jeremiah had said seventy; Hananiah, a man of prime authority, some say high priest, within two years. This was some trial to good Jeremiah to be thus confronted. Jeremiah's discourse was so much the more distasted, because he not only contradicted Hananiah and his complices, but also persuaded Zedekiah to submit to the King of Babylon, and afterwards to yield up the city; whereas the prophet Isaiah, not long before, had dissuaded Hezekiah from so doing.

Ver. 5. Then the prophet Jeremiah said.] Without gall or guile. Like the waters of Siloah at the foot of Sion, {#Isa 8:6} which runs softly; he made but small noise, though he heard great words and full of falsehood.

In the presence of the priests, and in the presence of the people.] Publicly he took him up, though mildly; because he had publicly offended. See #Ga 2:14 1Ti 5:20.

Ver. 6. Amen, the Lord so do,] q.d., I wish it may be so as thou sayest with all my heart, if God be so pleased. But I know that this is magis optabile quam opinabile, rather to be wished than hoped for. I could wish, for my poor countrymen's sake, to be found a false prophet, but I see little likelihood of it.

Ver. 7. Nevertheless, hear thou now.] Audi quaeso. Hear, I pray thee; soft words, but hard arguments. See on #Isa 5:3.

And in the ears of all the people.] Whom I desire not to deceive, and to advise for the best, whatever they think of me. Let them think what they will, mode impii silentii non arguar, as Luther once said, so that I be not found guilty of a sinful silence.

Ver. 8. The prophets that have been before me, &c.,] q.d., Committamus, Anania, nos tempori, &c. Let us be judged by our peers, or rather by our ancients. It hath been ever usual with true prophets to declaim against the sins of the times, and to proclaim divine vengeance if men amend not. But thou doest nothing less than this: Ergo.

And of evil.] Or, Of famine, that greatest evil of all the three, where it is extreme. {a}

{a} Vide Piscat. in Schol.

Ver. 9. The prophet which prophesieth of peace.] As thou now doest, but time will confute thee, and event will show thee to be a liar. Two years time will be soon come up, &c. How many that have taken upon them to predict the very year and day of the last judgment have been thus confuted and confounded! See #De 18:22.

Ver. 10. Then Hananiah the prophet took the yoke from off the prophet Jeremiah's neck, and brake it.] This was a most insolent and desperate fact in Hananiah—but nihil est audacius illis deprensus -and a most dangerous temptation to the people to believe his prophesying. Such another bold henchman was Nestorius the heretic: Audax erat, saith Zanchius, et magnae loquentiae, qua unica fretus nihil non audebat, et quidem saepenumero feliciter quod volebat, obtinebat {a} -that is, Bold he was and big spoken, trusting whereunto he durst attempt anything; and too too oft he effected also that which he attempted; so that he seduced for a while the good emperor Theodosius, and caused him to eject Cyril, an orthodox bishop, whom afterwards, upon better consideration, he restored again to his place with greater honour, and condemned that hypocrite and heretic Nestorius, of whom what became afterwards I wot not; but Hananiah died, as he well deserved, for his thus daring to fight against God.

Ver. 11. And Hananiah spake in the presence of all the people.] This was prophet like indeed, first to teach by a sign, and then to show the sense of it. But what maketh a parable in a fool's mouth?

{#Pr 26:7} Excellent speech becometh not a fool. {#Pr 17:7} The people of Rome sware to Carbo that they would not believe him though he sware; so should this people have dealt by Hananiah.

And the prophet went his way.] As weary and sorry to hear and see such gross illusions: haud dubium factus ridicule omni populo praesenti; { a } being well laughed at, no doubt, by the seduced people. But he had been well inured to bear their buffooneries; besides that, the bird in his bosom sang sweetly, Conscia mens recti famae mendacia ridet. He went his way, saith one, as shunning contention, and providing for edification, which is not attained to by brawling and bitterness.

{a} Oecolamp.

Ver. 12. After that Hananiah had broken the yoke.] Which he looked upon as an eyesore while it was whole, and a real contradiction to his false predictions.

Ver. 13. Thou hast broken the yokes of wood.] That were weaker and lighter;

“ Nunc graviora feres. ”

But thou shalt make for them yokes of iron.] Thou, Jeremiah shalt, for a type of a cruel, hard, and strong bondage. Bonfinius {a} writeth of the Hungarians, that they are not to be handled gently, or kindly dealt with, sed virga ferrea in obsequio continendos esse, but kept in order with a rod of iron. Such were these refractory Jews; but they had enough of it ere God had done with them.

{a} Hungar. rer. decad. 4, lib. ix.

Ver. 14. For thus saith the Lord of hosts.] Here were right words, not as #Jer 28:2, in labris nata, non in fibris, and therefore very forcible. {#Job 6:25}

I have put a yoke of iron.] See on #Jer 28:13.

And have given him the beasts.] All shall be his, and he shall sovereign it over all, as the lion doth over the beasts of the field.

Ver. 15. Thou makest this people to trust in a lie.] Who loved to have it so, {#Jer 5:31} and were therefore justly left to obduration and horrible destruction.

Ver. 16. Behold, I will cast thee.] I will shortly lay thee low enough together with thy lordly looks, as D. Taylor, martyr, once told Gardiner, Bishop of Winchester, who reviled him and threatened him.

This year shalt thou die.] Than which thou hadst better do anything.

Ver. 17. So Hananiah died.] Two months after this prediction, {#Jer 28:1} yet the people relented not, but persisted in their obstinace to the end. Such a sward, or rather hoof, is grown over some men's hearts, as neither ministry, nor misery, nor miracle, nor mercy, can possibly mollify.

Chapter 29

Ver. 1. Now these are the words of the letter.] Heb., Of the book. It is taken for any manner of writing, whether longer, as a book, or shorter, as a letter, an epistle, cuius ornamentum est ornamentis carere, saith Politian; the two chief commendations whereof, say others, are shortness and plainness. Here we have both, and should therefore highly prize it, not as apocryphal Baruch's letter, but as parcel of holy writ, worthy of all acceptation.

Which were carried away captive.] And longed for deliverance; but are advised to have patience, and not to antedate the promises, which in their due time should be accomplished. As till then obediendum est etiam dyscolis, obedience must be yielded to the Babylonians, now their masters, and "not only to the good and gentle, but also to the froward; for this is thankworthy." {#1Pe 2:18}

Ver. 2. After that Jeconiah the king, and the queen, and the eunuchs.] Angusta et eunuchi. These eunuchs were chamberlains to queens; but not always so bold with them as Stephen the Persian presumed to be with the queen mother of the emperor Justinian II: quam flagellis sicuti servam castigavit whom he corrected with a whip just as a servant. {a} See #Jer 24:1,2.

{a} Func.

Ver. 3. By the hand of Elasah the son of Shaphan, &c.] Zedekiah, having heard by Hananiah the prophet, that within two full years Jeconiah and the captives should come back to Jerusalem, and knowing that if that should be so, he must give place and part with his royal dignity, sendeth an embassy to Nebuchadnezzar to show his obsequiousness, and is content that his messenger should carry Jeremiah's letters (of whom, haply, he had a better conceit after the death of Hananiah) to those of the captivity, to persuade them to live quietly in Babylon, and not yet to think of returning to his disturbance. {a}

{a} Calvin.

Ver. 4. Thus saith the Lord of hosts.] It was God, then, that dictated this letter to the prophet; neither is it of private, that is, of human interpretation, but the holy man wrote it as he was moved thereunto by the Holy Ghost. {#2Pe 1:20,21}

Ver. 5. Build ye houses, and dwell in them.] Mitigate the extremity of your captivity, which is likely to be long, by all honest means. Levius fit patientia quicquid corrigere est nefas; patience, as a paring knife, cutteth the cross less and less till it comes to nothing. It teacheth a man, in case he cannot bring his estate to his mind, to bring his mind to his estate, and that is as well; but impatiens quisque bis affligitur; the bullock under the yoke gets nothing by wriggling but galling.

Ver. 6. Take ye wives, and beget sons.] First get ye houses and gardens, and then take wives. So in the last commandment house is set before wife; and nature teacheth the birds to build their nests before they come together for copulation.

Ver. 7. And seek the peace of the city.] Do not tumultuate or seek to break prison, as those seedsmen of sedition, your false prophets, would persuade you, but frame to a peaceable and patient behaviour. "In returning and rest shall ye be saved, in quietness and in confidence shall be your strength" {#Isa 30:15}

And pray unto God for it, / sc., That in it you may "lead a peaceable and quiet life, in all godliness and honesty." {#1Ti 2:2} Christians should improve their waiting months upon the King of saints, to pray for kings and all that are in authority, though to them they had been tyrants, since it seemeth good to God that they should live under them. The Dutch have a proverb,

“Arbor honoretur, cuius nos umbra tuetur.”

Ver. 8. Let not your prophets and your diviners.] Your deceivers, indeed, which were also in Babylon as well as at Jerusalem; for all places are full of them, and so is hell too. But "beware of these dogs, beware of evil workers"; {#Php 3:2} three of them, the most active, no doubt, are here noted and noticed {#Jer 29:21,23} with a charge in this text, Ne committote ut decipiant vos; see that they deceive you not. The body should be kept, say physicians, in habitu athletico, in a vigorous and healthy temper, able to oppose infections. Think the same of the soul.

Neither hearken to your dreams.] "Yours," because you itch after them, listen to them, pay dearly for them.

Ver. 9. For they prophesy falsely.] As #Jer 27:15 28:15.

Ver. 10. For thus saith the Lord.] Or, But this hath the Lord said, whatever these impostors say to the contrary. Set truth against falsehood, and it will silence it, like as if a lamp be hanged over a ditch where frogs are croaking, they are forthwith hushed and made quiet.

Ver. 11. For I know the thoughts that I think.] God's thoughts run upon his children, the children of affliction especially, as a father's do upon his dear children. Omnis in Ascanio, &c.

To give you an expected end.] Heb., An end and expectation— i.e., An end of evils past, and expectation of better for the future.

Ver. 12. Then shall ye call upon me.] With mind and mouth, with spirit and speech, as Daniel did, {#Da 9:3} and as but few others did, during the captivity, as is confessed. {#Da 9:13}

And go and pray unto me.] Go into your closets, or other oratories, where you shall pour out your hearts unto me.

And I will hearken unto you.] Which shall be a surer seal of my love than your return from Babylon.

Ver. 13. When ye shall search for me with all your heart.] Not with a piece of your heart only, as do partialists and double minded men, qui in parabola ovis capras quaerunt. who search for a nanny goat instead of sheep. Johannes Groppcrus, of Colen, refused a cardinalship, but forsook the gospel. So Luther did not, who, when he was offered to be cardinal if he would be quiet, replied, No, not if I might be Pope. {a}

{a} Sleidan.

Ver. 14. And I will be found of you.] The best εὑρημα. See #Ps 32:6 Isa 55:6 65:1.

And I will gather you.] As my scattered jewels. See #Jer 13:7 24:6.

Ver. 15. Because ye have said.] From the heirs of the promises he turneth his speech to others, qui praesumendo sperant, et sperando pereunt.

Ver. 16. Know that thus saith the Lord.] Or, Therefore thus saith the Lord, whatever ye say, or your counterfeit prophets say, to the contrary.

Ver. 17. Behold, I will send upon them.] #Jer 24:10 27:8.

And will make them like vile figs.] See #Jer 24:8.

Ver. 18. And will deliver them to be removed.] See #Jer 15:4 24:9.

Ver. 19. Because they have not hearkened.] See #Jer 7:23,26 11:7,8 13:11 17:23 25:4.

Ver. 20. Hear ye, therefore.] Or, Hear ye also; ye who have lost the fruit of your afflictions, and are little the better for your being so long in the iron furnace.

Ver. 21. Thus saith the Lord...of Ahab the son of Kolaiah.] These two—though not the two elders that assaulted Susanna, as some have fabled—are singled out, as arch-imposters and filthy adulterers, to be exemplarily punished; to whom also is added Shemaiah the Nehelamite. {#Jer 29:24}

And he shall slay them before your eyes.] Vide autem iustam poenam martyrum diaboli, saith Oecolampadius. See here the just punishment of the devil's martyrs: this evil couple had prophesied, like, the destruction of Babylon, bade the Jews put themselves in a posture to return home, promised to conduct them to Jerusalem, played many lewd pranks besides, and were therefore worthily put to a cruel death by Nebuchadnezzar, in the presence of their friends and followers.

Ver. 22. And of them shall be taken up a curse.] They had blessed themselves, though the Lord abhorred them, and sought to set up themselves in the hearts of the people, being gloriae animalia, popularis aurae vilissima mancipia, as Jerome saith of Crates the philosopher; they shall therefore "leave their names for a curse." {as #Isa 65:15}

Whom the king of Babylon roasted in the fire.] Burnt them with a soft slow fire, as the Papists did John Huss, Bishop Ridley, and many other innocent martyrs; but should do rather these filthy Gergesites, their monks and friars, of whom it went for a proverb in Germany, as Luther witnesseth, Whosoever seeth any one of them, seeth the seven deadly sins.

Ver. 23. Because they have committed adultery with their neighbours' wives.] As did Eli's sons, {#Isa 2:22} those false prophets also at Jerusalem, {#Jer 23:14} Hetser, the great Anabaptist in Germany, {a} who yet died penitently, and as do still the Imailers, an order of religious men among the Turks, {b} who call them the religious brothers of love, and the Brahmins, successors to the Brachmanni, among the Indians, who are extremely impure and libidinous, claiming the first night's lodging of every bride, &c., having nothing of a man but the voice and shape, and yet these are their priests. {c}

Even I know, and am a witness, saith the Lord.] Let them carry their villany never so cleanly and closely, with their si non caste, saltem caute, yet I know all, am now an eyewitness, and will be one day a swift witness against them. Utinam animadverterent haec principes, et ille qui non in sede Petri sed in prostibulo Priapi Lampsaceni sedens fornicationes tegit, sancta coniuga vetat, mera sorenia vendit, et Dei oculos claudit, saith one.

{a} Scultet. Annal.

{b} Turk. Hist., 477.

{c} Heyl., Cosmog.

Ver. 24. Thus shalt thou also speak to Shemaiah the Nehelamite.] Or, Dreamer, dream wright, enthusiast; such as were the Messalanian heretics of old, and some of the same stamp, loaves of the same leaven, today.

Ver. 25. Because thou hast sent letters in thy name.] Such as Sadoletus, a Popish bishop, sent to Geneva in Calvin's absence, to bring them back again to the obedience of the see of Rome; and as we have many from the Romish factors sent hither, to the seducing of not a few, a subtle and shrewd way of deceiving the simple.

And to Zephaniah.] The second under the high priest Seraiah, and successor likely to that Pashur {#Jer 20:1} who was deposed for some misdemeanour, like as Dr Weston was here in Queen Mary's days, put by all his Church dignities for being taken in bed with a harlot. {a} Of this Zephaniah, see #2Ki 25:18, his office was to judge of prophecies, and to punish such as he found to be false prophets.

And to all the priests.] Who were much too forward of themselves to bandy against God's true prophets, {#Jer 26:8} and did as little need by letter to be excited thereunto, as Bishop Bonner did to be stirred up to persecute Protestants; and yet to him were letters sent from King Philip and Queen Mary, complaining that heretics were not so reformed as they should be, and exhorting him to more diligence, {b} &c.

{a} Acts and Mon.

{b} Clarke's Martyrol., 136.

Ver. 26. The Lord hath made thee priest instead of Jehoiada the priest.] That heroic reformer in the days of Joash {#2Ki 11:4,17} Therefore, as he did by Mattan the Baalite, so do thou by Jeremiah the Anathothite. But neither was Zephaniah a Jehoiada, nor Jeremiah a Mattan. Shemaiah himself was more like a Baalite, and better deserved that punishment which shortly after also befell him, as was foretold. {#Jer 29:32} A hot spirited man he was, and a firebrand, being therefore the more dangerous. He also seemed to himself to be so much the more holy, by how much the prophet whom he set against was more famous for his holiness.

For every one that is mad.] Maniacus, arreptitius, fanaticus; so God's zealous servants have always been esteemed by the mad world, ever beside itself in point of salvation. See #2Ki 9:11 Ac 26:24 Jer 43:2.

That thou shouldest put him in prison.] As #Jer 20:2.

Ver. 27. Now, therefore, why hast thou not reproved?] Or, Restrained Jeremiah? Alas! what had the righteous prophet done? He taxed their sin, he foretold their captivity; he desired it not, he inflicted it not, yet he must smart, and they are guilty. Zephaniah also is here blamed for his lenity, as bloody Bonner once was by the rest of the Popish bishops, who made him their slaughter slave.

Ver. 28. For therefore he sent to us in Babylon.] And is this all the thank he hath for his friendly counsel? Haec est merces mundi. This is the recompence of the world.

Ver. 29. And Zephaniah the priest read this letter.] For ill will, likely, and with exprobaton. Ubi insignis elucit Dei tutela, saith an interpreter, where we may see a sweet providence of God in preserving his prophet from the rage and violence of the people so incensed.

Ver. 30. Then came the word of the Lord.] Or, Therefore came, &c. In the five former verses we had narrationem causae, an account of the reasons Shemaiah's crime; in these three last, we have dictionem sententiae, the prediction of the sentence Shemaiah's doom.

Ver. 31. Send to all them of the captivity.] Send the second time; let not so good a cause be deserted. Vincet aliquando pertinax bonitas, Truth will take place at length.

Because Shemaiah hath prophesied unto you.] He hath rewarded evil thereby to himself, and to his seed after him; his posterity shall rue for it, saith Jeremiah, who was irrefracti plane animi orator, a man of an invincible courage, and might better have been called Doctor resolutus, than was afterwards Bacon the Carmelite.

Ver. 32. Behold, I will punish Shemaiah, and his seed.] As being part of his goods, and walking likely in his evil ways.

He shall not have a man to dwell among this people,] viz., At the return from Babylon; but both he and his shall perish in this banishment, which he prophesied should be shortly at an end, but shall prove it otherwise. See the like, #Am 7:17.

Neither shall he see the good.] He nor any of his. See the like threatened to that unbelieving prince, #2Ki 7:2.

Because he hath taught rebellion against the Lord.] So #Jer 28:16 Jer 23:27 Mt 5:19. To be tuba rebellionis trumpet of rebellion is no small fault. Luther was so secundum dici, sed non secundum esse; so may the best be; but let not the sins of teachers be teachers of sins, &c.

Chapter 30

Ver. 1. The word that came to Jeremiah from the Lord.] This chapter and the next are Jeremiah's thirteenth sermon, as some reckon them, and it is wholly consolatory. The author of it he showeth to be the "God of all consolation"; and this the prophet inculcath six different times in the five first verses, pro maiori efficacia, that it may take the better.

Ver. 2. Write thee all the words that I have spoken to thee in a book.] For the use of posterity, {as #Hab 2:2} and that the consolations may not be forgotten. {as #Heb 12:5}

“ Vox audita perit: littera scripta manet. ”

Ver. 3. I will bring again the captivity {a} of Israel and Judah.] This promise, Oecolampadius thinketh, was written in the book in greater letters than the rest; it was fulfilled according to the letter in carnal Israel sent back by Cyrus (upon Daniel's prayer, who understood by that book here mentioned that the time of deliverance, yea, the set time was come, #Da 9:2), but more fully in those "Jews inwardly," {#Ro 2:29} those "Israelites indeed" who are set at liberty by Christ, {#Joh 8:36} and shall be much more at the last day.

{a} Convertam conversionem. -Vulg.

Ver. 4. And these are the words.] These are the contents of this precious book; every leaf, nay, line, nay, letter whereof, droppeth myrrh and mercy.

That the Lord spake.] See on #Jer 30:1.

Ver. 5. We have heard a voice of trembling.] We were at first in a pitiful plight, scil., when the city was taken and the temple burnt (and this is elegantly here set forth, and in the two next verses); but better times are at hand:

“ Flebile principium melior fortuna sequetur.”

Ver. 6. Ask ye now, and see, &c.] Was it ever heard of in this world that a male did bear? The poets indeed fable that Minerva was born of Jupiter’s brain:

“ *Pictoribus atque poetis,
Quidlibet audendi fas est.*”

Wherefore do I see every man.] Heb., Every strong or mighty man.

With their hands on their loins.] And not on their weapons.

And all faces turned into paleness.] *Through extreme fear, the blood running to the heart, and the heart fallen into the heels. The Septuagint, for "paleness," have the yellow jaundice; the Vulgate, gold yellowness; Piscator, morbus regius; the royal sickness, the Hebrew properly implieth the colour of blasted corn. {#De 28:22} It importeth that the most stout-hearted warriors should be enervati et exanguis, more parturientium, bloodless and spiritless, as travailing women.*

Ver. 7. Alas! for that day is great,] i.e., Troublesome and terrible, somewhat like the last day, the day of judgment, which is therefore also called the "great day," because therein the great God will do great things, &c.

It is even the time of Jacob’s trouble.] Such as never befell him before. Those very days shall be "affliction," so Mark expresseth the last desolation; {#Jer 13:19} not "afflicted" only, but "affliction" itself. But though it be the time of Jacob’s troubles, let it be also the time of his trust, for there will be shortly a day of his triumph.

But he shall be saved out of it.] Not from it, but yet out of it; the Lord knoweth how to deliver his: {#2Pe 2:9} and though Sense say it will not be; Reason it cannot be; yet Faith gets above and says it shall be; I see the land.

Ver. 8. I will break his yoke from off thy neck.] The forementioned misery did but make way for this mercy, that it might be the more magnified. Let the saints but see from what, to what, and by what Jesus Christ hath delivered them, and they cannot but be thankful.

Ver. 9. But they shall serve the Lord their God.] "Without fear, in holiness and righteousness before him all the days of their lives."

{#Lu 1:74,75 Joh 8:12,31-36, Ro 8:1-4}

And David their king,] i.e., Zerubbabel of David's line, {#Hag 2:23} but especially Christ, the King of saints, as the Jewish doctors also expound it.

Whom I will raise up to them.] To be Messiah the Prince. {#Da 9:25} Christ the Lord. {#Ac 5:31}

Ver. 10. Therefore fear thou not, O my servant Jacob.] This is Isaiah like; and indeed the prophet here setteth himself verbis consolantissimis, by words of comfort, as one saith, with most cordial comforts, to cheer the hearts of God's poor afflicted.

Ver. 11. For I am with thee.] To preserve thee, and to provide for thee; to support thee, and to supply thee.

Though I make a full end of all nations.] See #Isa 27:7,8. {See Trapp on "Isa 27:7"} {See Trapp on "Isa 27:8"} #Jer 5:10,18.

But I will correct thee in measure.] Heb., According to judgment, not summo iure et rigida iustitia; not as I might, but in mercy and with moderation.

And will not leave thee altogether unpunished.] Heb., Et innocentando non innocentabo te; in very faithfulness I will afflict thee, that I may be true to thy soul, and not cruel to thy body. {a}

{a} Aliqui reddunt mundando non mundabo te, id est, non excoquam te exacte ad purum putum.

Ver. 12. Thy bruise is incurable,] i.e., Inevitable, by God's irrevocable decree. Or, It is incurable in itself; but not to me, who am an almighty Physician or surgeon. See #Eze 37:11. They seemed "free among the dead," free of that company.

Ver. 13. There is none to plead thy cause.] Thou art friendless.

That thou mayest be bound up.] Thou art helpless.

Ver. 14. All thy lovers have forgotten thee.] Thy sweethearts, thine idols, thy carnal friends, thy priests, prophets, riches, pleasures, all these have given thee the bag, as we say; they stand aloof from thy help.

They seek thee not.] Sink thou mayest, or swim, for them; thou art no part of their care.

For I have wounded thee with the wound of an enemy.] As if I cared not where I hit thee, or how much I hurt thee.

With the chastisement of a cruel one.] So it may seem, and so Job thought; {#Job 30:21} but that was his error. See here what a pass a saint may be at, and how deeply he may suffer, when his sins are increased. God, out of love displeased, may lay upon him and not spare, leave bloody wales on his back, &c. Crudelem medicum intemperans aeger facit.

For the multitude of thine iniquities.] Because thy sins are many and mighty, or bony. See #Am 5:12. {See Trapp on "Am 5:12"}

Ver. 15. Why criest thou for thine affliction?] And not rather for thy sins? cry not perii, I have died, but peccavi; I have sinned, not, I am undone; but, I have done very foolishly. See #La 3:39,40.

Ver. 16. Therefore all they that devoured thee shall be devoured.] Or, Nevertheless, or yet all they that devoured thee, &c., q.d., That thou mayest experience that in love I corrected thee and for thy good, though to thy so great grief. I will have my pennyworths on thine enemies, measuring to them as they have done to thee.

Ver. 17. For I will restore health.] It goes best with the Church when worst with her enemies. It shall do so much more when all Christ's foes shall be made his footstool.

Because they called thee an Outcast.] Concluding so from thine afflictions. The Jewish nation, saith Cicero, {a} show how well God regards them, that have been so oft subdued, by the Chaldees, Greeks, Romans, &c. This was but a slender argument, only God is moved by the enemy's insolence and insults to look in mercy the rather upon his poor despised and despited people.

Saying, This is Zion, whom no man seeketh after.] Illusio ex allusione, this was a jeer by playing upon her name, {b} as if Zion signified a dry or waste place, and therefore not much to be desired. Strabo indeed saith as much of Judea; and Mount Zion at this day, nihil habet eximium, nihil expetendum, hath no great desire in it. But certainly Judea was once a land flowing with milk and honey, and Mount Zion was in no small request. Howsoever, none ought by their bitter taunts to add affliction to the afflicted, but rather to weep with those that weep; "be pitiful, be courteous." {#1Pe 3:8}

{b} Per ludibrium et blasphemam contumeliam.

Ver. 18. The captivity of Jacob's tents,] i.e., The poor captives that now live at Babylon as strangers in tents or huts.

And the city shall be builded upon her own heap.] Or, Hill, sc., in Mount Moriah. Jerusalem shall be inhabited in Jerusalem. {#Zec 12:6} All this was prolusio perfectae liberationis in Christo, saith Junius, a type and pledge of perfect deliverance by Christ.

Ver. 19. And out of them shall proceed thanksgiving.] Mox ubi fides, inde prodit et laus et confessio. Faith is a fruitful grace, the very womb wherein all the rest are conceived.

Ver. 20. Their children also shall be as aforetime.] How easily can the Lord "turn again the captivity of his people," set them statu quo prius? "They shall be as if I had not cast them off." {#Zec 10:6} {See Trapp on "Zec 10:6"}

Ver. 21. And their nobles shall be of themselves.] Foreigners shall no more domineer over them, but they shall have governors of their own nation, who shall be more tender of them, and careful of their good. Some apply all this, and well they may, to Jesus Christ, who is here called Magnificus et Domigrator, his magnificent or honourable one and his ruler, {a} who also is one of them, and proceedeth from among them. See #De 18:18.

And I will cause him to draw near, and he shall approach unto me.] Either as God, co-equal and coessential with me, or as Mediator; and so he shall approach unto me by the hypostatical union (in respect of which he came the nearest unto God of any that ever was or could), and by the execution of his priestly office, wherein he intercedeth for my people, and reconcileth them unto me.

For who is this that engaged his heart?] Who but my Son Christ durst do it, or was fit to do it? He is a super-excellent person, as is imported by this Mi-hu-ze, Who this he?

{a} Christus Fortis ille et Gigas est. -Oecol.

Ver. 22. And ye shall be my people, and I will be your God,] sc., Through Christ, and by his mediation. As for those that are not in covenant with God by Christ, as the devil will one day sweep them, so meanwhile,

Ver. 23. Behold the whirlwind of the Lord goeth forth with fury.] Sensim sese conglomerans ac demittens in eorum capite; the vengeance of God followeth them close at heels, till at length they be wherried away by that terrible tempest at death. {#Job 27:20}

Ver. 24. The fierce anger of the Lord.] See #Jer 23:20.

In the latter days ye shall consider it.] In the days of the Messiah, but especially at the end of the world, when all these things shall have their full accomplishment.

Chapter 31

Ver. 1. At the same time,] i.e., In the beginning of Zedekiah's reign, as before, was this word uttered. Or rather, in those latter times forementioned, {#Jer 30:24} after the return from Babylon, but especially in the days of the Messiah. The modern Jews vainly apply it to the coming of their Messiah, quem tantis etiamnum ululatus exposcunt, whom they yet expect, but to no purpose.

Ver. 2. The people that were left of the sword.] Of Pharaoh's sword, who pursued them; and though he smote them not, because the Lord kept him off, yet he is said to have done it: {a} like as Balak afterwards "arose and fought against Israel," {#Jos 24:9} he had a mind so to have done, but that he was overawed: he did not indeed, because he dared not.

When I went to bring him to rest, / i.e., To the land of Canaan, after so long trouble and travel. I effected that then, though it were held improbable or impossible: so will I do this promised reduction of my people from Babylon.

{a} Fieri dicitur quod tentatur aut intenditur.

Ver. 3. The Lord hath appeared of old unto me.] This seemeth to be the people's objection. {a} You tell us what was done of old; but these are ancient things, and little pertaining to us, who are now under a heavy captivity; iam refrixit et obsoleta videtur Dei beneficentia. Hereunto is answered,

Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love.] I am one and the same. I am Jehovah that change not, whatever thou mayest think of me, because I seem angry at thy misdoings.

Therefore with lovingkindness have I drawn thee.] Or, Therefore will I draw out lovingkindness towards thee. {as #Ps 36:10} {See Trapp on "Ps 36:10"}

{a} Iudaeorum quiritantium verba. -Zegeed.

Ver. 4. Again I will build thee.] See #Jer 34:18.

Thou shalt be adorned with thy tabrets.] All shall be hail and merry with thee as heretofore: yea, thou shalt have spiritual joy, which is res severa, severe and solid, such as doth not only smoothe the brow, but fill the breast.

Ver. 5. Thou shalt yet plant vines.] Profunda pax erit: nemo te perterrefaciet. Thou shalt have plenty, peace, and security.

The planters shall plant them, and shall eat them as common things, / i.e., Shall have God's good leave and liking so to do. Heb., Shall profane them, i.e., not abuse them, but use them freely, even to an honest affluence. See #Le 19:23. {See Trapp on "Le 19:23"}

Ver. 6. The watchmen upon the mount Ephraim.] Such as are set to keep those vineyards. {#Jer 31:5}

Shall cry, Arise ye, and let us go up to Zion.] As the ten tribes first made defection, so shall they be forwardest in the reformation. England was the like alate.

Ver. 7. Shout among the chief of the nations.] Heb., Neigh unto the heads of the nations, ut illa vobis adhinniant et pariter in Christi fide iubilent, that they may join joys with you, and help to make up the choir.

Publish ye, and praise ye, and say, O Lord, save.] The saints have never so much matter of praise, but that they may at the same time find cause enough to pray for more mercy. {#Ps 18:3}

Ver. 8. Behold, I will bring them.] Here is a present answer to such a prayer; and this promise hath its performance chiefly in the kingdom of Christ, who will not suffer the least or the weakest of his to miscarry. See #Isa 35:5,6.

Ver. 9. They shall come with weeping.] Prae gaudio, inquit, flebunt, before happiness, it is said, they were weeping, they shall weep for joy, having first soaked themselves in godly sorrow by the spirit of grace and of supplications or deprecations poured upon them, {#Zec 12:10} being solicitous about their salvation.

And I will make them to walk by the rivers of waters.] Heb., To the brooks of waters, i.e., to the holy ordinances. {as #Ps 23:3}

For I am a Father to Israel.] I do all of free grace.

Ephraim is my firstborn.] And therefore higher than the kings of the earth. {#Ps 89:27}

Ver. 10. Hear the word of the Lord, O ye nations.] Hear and bear witness of the gracious promises that I make to my people; for I would have them noted and noticed.

Ver. 11. For the Lord hath redeemed Jacob.] Redemption is a voluminous mercy, an accumulative blessing.

From the hand of him that was stronger than he,] scil., The Chaldean, but especially from Satan. {#Mt 12:29 Joh 12:31}

Ver. 12. Therefore they shall come and sing in the height of Zion,] i.e., In the temple shall they celebrate that singular mercy, in the congregation of the faithful.

And shall flow together,] i.e., Flock together by troops and caravans; flock thither by shoals.

To the goodness of the Lord.] Or, To the goods of the Lord, such as here instanced, wheat, wine, and oil; whereby also better things are figured. A confluence of inward and outward mercies is here assured the saints.

And their soul shall be as a watered garden.] Where every good thing comes forward amain mens faecundata est rore coelesti. See #Isa 58:11.

And they shall not sorrow any more at all.] As those do who have not this contented godliness, but serve various lusts, to their great vexation.

Ver. 13. And make them rejoice from their sorrow.] Or, After their sorrow. I will turn all their sadness into gladness, their sighing into singing, their tears into triumphs, &c.

Ver. 14. And I will satiate the soul of the priests with fatness,] i.e., Provide liberally for my ministers; {#Isa 66:21} they and theirs shall be well maintained. Terms taken from the good and fat parts of the sacrifices, which were allotted for the priests.

Ver. 15. A voice was heard in Ramah.] It was once, when the poor captives were carried that way to Babylon, the mothers bitterly bewailing their Luctuosam faeunditatem. It was also another time, when Herod barbarously butchered the babes of Bethlehem. {#Mt 2:16-18} But now the case is altered, joy is restored, &c.

Rachel weeping for her children.] An elegant personification. {See Trapp on "Mt 2:18"}

Ver. 16. Refrain thy voice from weeping.] Take up in time, O Rachel, and the rest; God comforteth the object, {#2Co 7:7} he restoreth comfort to his mourners. {#Isa 57:18}

Ver. 17. And there is hope in the end.] Or, For thy posterity. Tribulation causeth patience, and patience experience, and experience hope; lively hope, such as maketh not ashamed, is not disappointed, Spes in fundo. Hope in the depths. God can recompense his people's patience and obedience, in their heirs and executors.

Ver. 18. I have surely heard Ephraim bemoaning himself.] Heb., Hearing I have heard; his moans and laments have rung in mine ears. So #Ho 14:8, "I have heard him, and observed him." This is God's speech concerning the Christian Church of the Jews; for in this sermon we may easily observe a frequent change of persons, tanquam in opere dramatico, as in an interlude.

Thou hast chastised me, and I was chastised,] i.e., I was chastised to good purpose, taught my duty. {as #Ps 94:12}

Turn thou me.] Give me the whole turn, that I be not as an untamed sturdy heifer, or as a cake half baked.

Ver. 19. Surely after that I was turned, I repented.] After that I had turned short again upon myself, as those penitents, {#1Ki 8:47} as Manasseh, the publican, {#Lu 18:13} and that prodigal. {#Lu 15:17}

And after that I was instructed.] Postquam ostensum fuerit mihi. {a} After that I knew myself, or rather was made known to myself—scil., by mine afflictions sanctified; for Schola crucis, schola lucis. The followers of the cross are the followers of light. Afflictions are those pillulae lucis, that serve notably to clear the soul's eye sight.

I smote upon my thigh,] { b} Sicut mulierculae in puerperio facere solent, saith Luther, as travailing women use to do. It is a token of greatest grief. See #Eze 21:12.

I was ashamed, yea, even confounded.] Abashed and abased to the utmost; my sorrow was deep and downright.

Because I did bear the reproach of my youth,] i.e., The brunt and burden of my reproachful practices in my youth. See #Job 13:26 Ps 25:7.

{a} Tremel., In Gloss. Marginal.

{b} Homer hath it oft πεπληγετο μηρω, he smote on his thigh. Cicero hath the like, lib. iii. Tuscul.

Ver. 20. Is Ephraim a dear son? is he a pleasant child?] q.d., Ay sure he is; and never more dear and pleasant than when thus beblubbered; like as some faces appear most oriently beautiful when they are most enstamped with sorrow. Heb., Is he a child of delight? q.d., He may seem to be otherwise by my hard dealing with him; but so he is assuredly—"Behold, he whom thou lovest is sick." {#Joh 11:3}

For since I spake against him, I do earnestly remember him still.] Or, So oft as I speak of him, I am mindful still of him. See #Isa 49:14,16.

Therefore my bowels are troubled for him.] Perstrepunt viscera mea. My bowels work, as that mother's did toward her child; {#IKi 3:26} as Croesus' dumb son's did, when seeing a fellow ready to kill his father, he burst out into, Kill not king Croesus. {a} See #Ho 11:8. {See Trapp on "Ho 11:8"}

Ver. 21. Set thee up waymarks.] Statue tibi statuas Mercuriales -q.d., I will surely bring thee back by the same way thou wentest hence into captivity; therefore take good notice of the way now, that thou mayest know it again another time. This God saith to quicken their faith, and to ascertain them of his love and favour; which is not like the winter sun, which casteth a goodly countenance when it shineth, but giveth little heat and comfort, &c. We must also set up waymarks, observe how we fell from the Lord, repent and do our first works.

Set thine heart towards the highway.] This is done, saith Augustine, when God is sought for God's sake. Sed vix diligitur Iesus propter Iesum, saith the same Father; but this is rarely done.

Ver. 22. How long will thou go about?] Hunting after human helps, and—refusing to set thy heart on the right straight way {#Jer 31:21}—fetch a compass, to thy loss of time and labour.

O thou backsliding daughter.] Who wast at times O virgin of Israel. {#Jer 31:21}

For the Lord hath created a new thing in the earth.] Or, Will create; he is even about it.

A woman shall compass a man.] i.e., Say some, the Jews (who are now looked upon as weak women, and may say Imbelles damae, quid nisi turba sumus?). shall compass about, and conquer the Chaldees, those men of might— Sicut hostis circumdat hostem. Or, As others sense it, the Church Christian, how weak soever at first it may seem, and inconsiderable, yet shall be able, by the confession of her faith, to resist her most potent persecutors, and by faith to overcome them, {#1Jo 5:4} as she did in the apostles, {#Ac 4:13,14,33 5:18,19 38-42} in the noble army of martyrs and confessors. The text is generally understood to be Christ's wonderful conception in the womb of his virgin mother.

Ver. 23. Thus saith the Lord of hosts.] Et haec pertinent ad regnum Christi propriissime. These words also, to the end of the chapter, do most properly pertain to the kingdom of Christ, saith Oecolampadius.

As yet.] Or, Yet again. {as #Jer 31:5}

The Lord bless thee.] This prayer is daily made for the Church by all her children.

Ver. 24. Husbandmen, and those that go out with flocks.] Agricolae et pecuarii; the citizens of the Church shall be plain hearted and profitable persons, living together in amity, and not jarring, as husbandmen and shepherds oft do; Cain and Abel for instance.

Ver. 25. For I have satiated the weary soul.] Or, I will satiate, fill them with my fulness, so that they shall have enough for their own, and not emulate others. A good man shall be satisfied from himself, {#Pr 14:14} as knowing within himself that, whatever he hath here, little or much, he hath in heaven a better and more enduring substance. {#Heb 10:34}

Ver. 26. Upon this I awaked.] Out of my prophetic dream.

And my sleep was sweet unto me,] i.e., The promises (Christ in the promises) were sweet unto me, and I was as much refreshed therewith, as with sound sleep after hard toil or travel.

Ver. 27. I will sow the house of Israel.] I will repeople the country, and raise up many believers to Christ.

Ver. 28. Like as I have watched over them.] I have been sedulous and assiduous.

To pluck up and break down, &c.] See #Jer 1:10,11 10:12 18:7.

So I will watch.] I will make them a plentiful amends.

Ver. 29. In those days they shall say no more.] There shall be rectius de operibus Dei iudicium, a more correct judgment passed upon God's proceedings. See about this byword, #Eze 18:2.

Ver. 30. But every one shall die for his own iniquity,] i.e., Every unbeliever shall: neither shall the gospel save him.

Ver. 31. I will make a new covenant.] The same for substance with the former made with Adam, Noah, Abraham, Moses, and the Israelites in the wilderness; but new in respect of the form thereof, the manner of dispensing it—viz., more clearly, freely, effectually, and spiritually now under the gospel, than in those days of yore, when they saw the face of God only in that dark glass of the ceremonies; whereas we, with open face, &c. {#2Co 3:18}

Ver. 32. Not according to the covenant.] Not so, but a great deal better, in regard of larger measures of the Spirit now poured out upon all flesh: together with the efficacy thereof in the hearts of God's covenanters, who have a duplicate of God's law written within them. {#Jer 31:33} Lex iubet, gratia iuvat: hence it is an "everlasting covenant," and the fruits of it are "sure mercies," "compassions that fail not," as is here set forth.

Ver. 33. I will put my law in their inward parts.] This the apostle calleth the "law in their minds," opposed to the "law of their members"; {#Ro 7:23} for the natural man is inversus decalogus, oposed to the law, "he is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." But God putteth into the hearts of his people the counterpart of his holy law; he stamps, as it were, a decalogue upon their spirits; he puts into them an inward aptness, answering the law of God without, as the lead answereth the mould, wax the seal, as tally answereth tally: or as indenture indenture.

And I will be their God, and they shall be my people.] This promise is divini mellis alveare, as one calleth it, The hive of heavenly honey.

Ver. 34. And they shall teach no more every man his neighbour.] Deest coactio, non deerit cohortatio. {a} Men shall learn with much less ado, because "taught of God," and lively illightened by his Holy Spirit: et quando Christus magister, quam cito discitur quod doetur? saith Augustine; when Christ becomes a man's teacher, he must needs be a forwardly scholar. Some make this to be the sense of the words, that in gospel times the truths of Christ, and the knowledge of the Son of God, should be so evident, that men might get more of themselves without a teacher, than with one in the legal administrations; as Paul also showeth, 2 Cor. iii. Not that men should have no need of teaching at all in those times; for the best know but in part, and must daily grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. {#2Pe 3:18}

For they shall all know me.] All mine elect shall know me in some competent measure: know the principles, {#Heb 6:1,2} and go on unto perfection, ib.

For I will forgive their iniquities.] In heaven, and in their own consciences also, {#Zec 3:4} provided that they put this and the like promises in suit by their prayers. {#Mat 3:16} Augustine, Mr Perkins, and Archbishop Ussher expired with crying for mercy and forgiveness.

{a} Oecolampadius.

Ver. 35. Thus saith the Lord, which giveth the sun, &c.] For their better security and settlement; he borroweth a comparison from the surest things, sun, sea, &c.

Which divideth the sea when the waves thereof roar.] Or, Who when I trouble the sea, the waves thereof roar, but cannot pass their bound which I have set them. See #Isa 51:15.

Ver. 36. If those ordinances depart from before me.] If they alter their constant course.

Then shall the seed of Israel cease.] Then shall the faithful fail, and the Israelitish nation be utterly abolished.

Ver. 37. If heaven above can be measured.] By man; for God measureth it with his span. {#Isa 40:12}

And the foundations of the earth be searched out.] If any man can dig or dive to the centre.

Ver. 38. That the city shall be built to the Lord.] Jerusalem shall be re-edified, the Church eternally re-established by Christ.

From the tower of Hananeel.] #Ne 3:1 12:39 Zec 14:10.

Unto the gate of the corner.] #2Ki 14:13 Zec 14:10.

Ver. 39. Upon the hill Gareb.] Versus collem scabiosi, toward the hill of the scabby, so Tremellius rendereth it; and Junius thinks it was so called because thither they used to send their lepers and lazars. {poor and diseased person} At Geneva in times of Popery there, they had in an empty place certain cottages set up whereunto they sent their lepers, wherewith that city then abounded, through the horrible filthiness that was there in those days committed. But from the year 1535, wherein they embraced the purity of the gospel, there hath been not above one leper seen in that city. So testifieth Matthaeus Cottherius in his Exposition of the Revelation, printed at Sedan in France, A.D. 1625.

And shall compass about to Goath,] alias Golgotha, as some think, but these places here mentioned, as also those #Zec 8:3 14:4, as they were known to the ancients, so to us at this day they are unknown. Travellers tell us that Jerusalem is now a poor obscure place, governed by a Turkisk Sanzak, and that Golgotha, or Calvary, is in the very midst of the town.

Ver. 40. And the whole valley of the dead bodies.] Of Rephaim, say some; of Tophet, say others. See on #Jer 31:39.

Shall be holy unto the Lord.] So is the holy Catholic Church, the New Jerusalem which is above especially.

It shall not be plucked up nor thrown down any more for ever.] This cannot be applied to the earthly Jerusalem, which was plucked up and thrown down by the Romans once and again; but especially by Aelius Hadrian the emperor, who laid the whole country waste almost, drove the Jews utterly out of it, set a sow of white marble over the chief gate of Jerusalem in reproach of their religion, and called the city by his own name, Aelia, commanding the Jews not once to look towards it from any tower or hill. It must be therefore meant to be the Church, which cannot be ruined.

Chapter 32

Ver. 1. The word that came to Jeremiah.] What this word was, see #Jer 32:26.

In the tenth year of Zedekiah.] The city had now been a year at least besieged; and yet these "sinners against their own souls" went on to do wickedly, and held the prophet prisoner, for the faithful discharge of his duty. Full forty years had he been prophesying to them, and for many years he had foretold this siege, and the following deportation, but could never be believed. {a} And now he is imprisoned, but not left destitute by God of prison comforts, such as made his prison a paradise, and his sleep sweet unto him. {as #Jer 31:26}

{a} Notanda est tam diutina populi pertinacia.

Ver. 2. And Jeremiah the prophet was shut up in the court of the prison.] Where he had some liberty more than at some other times. {#Jer 37:16,20,21} So had Paul at Rome, {#Ac 28:16,30} Bradford in the counter, &c.; this was a mercy, and so they esteemed it. Good people were suffered to come about them; and they made use of that opportunity to do what good they could.

Ver. 3. For Zedekiah had shnt him up.] He who before had set him at liberty, and thereby haply hoped to have stopped his mouth; but that might not be.

Behold, I will give this city.] This holy city, as the false prophets styled it, and therefore held this prophecy little better than blasphemy.

Ver. 4. And Zedekiah king of Judah shall not escape.] As he hoped to have done, either by his wiles or by his wealth; and accordingly attempted it, but all in vain.

And he shall speak with him mouth to mouth.] This was no small punishment to Zedekiah, that he must look him in the face from whom he had so perfidiously revolted, even against oath; and hear his taunts, before he felt his fingers. How, then, will graceless persons do to stand before the King of kings, whom they have so greatly offended, at that great day? See #Re 9:17.

Ver. 5. And there shall he be until I visit him.] sc., With death; but the prophet useth a general term, that might be taken either in good part or bad for his own safety's sake.

Ver. 6. The word of the Lord came unto me, saying.] He had God's word for his warrant, and this bore him out against the jeers of the ungodly, who would easily think it a very simple part in him who prophesied a desolation of the whole land to go about to buy land.

Ver. 7. Behold, Hanameel the son of Shallum.] This Shallum and Hilkiah the father of Jeremiah were brethren. And it was no less an honour to Hanameel to have such a kinsman as Jeremiah, than afterwards it was to Mark to be Barnabas's sister's son.

Buy thee my field that is in Anathoth.] The priests, though they had no grain fields, yet they had meadows for their cattle, gardens and orchards in the suburbs of their cities, which in some cases they might sell one to another, till the year of jubilee howsoever. Some say that if such a field were so sold to a kinsman as here, it remained to him for ever. But the possession of the Levites might at any time be redeemed. {#Le 25:32}

For the right of redemption is thine.] See #Le 25:25,32 Ru 3:12 4:3,4.

Ver. 8. So Hanameel my uncle's son came to me.] God ruleth and boweth men's wills and all second causes according to the good pleasure of his will; he doth also so frame and contemper them among themselves, that there may be a harmony and correspondence between them.

Then I knew that this was the word of the Lord.] Or, That it was a business of God—sc., for the better settling of the faithful in the assurance of a return out of captivity.

Ver. 9. And I bought the field.] This was bravely done, to make a purchase at such a time, when the enemy was seizing upon all. That Roman is famous in history who dared to purchase that field near Rome wherein Hannibal had pitched his camp. {a} Verum eorum res non erant ita deplorates; but the Romans were nothing near so low at that time as the Jews were at this.

And weighed him the money.] That was the manner of payment in those times. {b} Hence the Hebrew shekel from shakal, to weigh {#Ge 23:16} -our English word scale seemeth to come from it), the Greek στατηρ from ισταται ponderare to weigh {#Ex 30:13 Mt 27:9} or of statera, for a balance the Dutch and English mark {c} cometh from a similar origin.

Even seventeen shekels of silver.] No great sum, not much over forty shillings; but it might be as much as the thing was worth, considering the times especially.

{a} Liv., lib. xxvi. Plutar. in Annib. Flor., lib. ii. c. 6.

{b} Olim moneta librabatur. Pater puellae id aurum in dotem viro appendit

{c} Unde et nomen marcharum hodie nobis superest. -Zegegin.

Ver. 10. And I subscribed the evidence.] Heb., I wrote in the book, and sealed it. Men love to be upon sure grounds in things temporal; oh that they were as wise for their souls!

Ver. 11. So I took the evidence of the purchase, both that which was sealed, &c.] There were then two copies of these contracts and covenants, for preventing of later claims and quarrels.

Ver. 12. And I gave the evidences of the purchase unto Baruch.] Who was Jeremiah's household servant, and his scribe or notary, such as was afterwards Paulus Coneordiensis to Cyprian.

In the sight of Hanameel, &c.] Here was good husbandry, which Bishop Andrews was wont to say was good divinity. {a}

Before all the Jews who sat in the court of the prison.] Whither they came likely to hear the prophet, as the well affected here did to hear and see the martyrs in Queen Mary's days. To Mr Bradford (by his keeper's courtesy) there was such resort at his lecture and ministration of the sacrament, that commonly his chamber was well nigh filled therewith. {b}

{a} Fuller's Church Hist.

{b} Acts and Mon., 1457.

Ver. 13. And I charged Baruch.] See on #Jer 32:12.

Ver. 14. That they may continue many days.] Even beyond the seventy years of captivity, and then be produced again.

Ver. 15. Houses and fields and vineyards, &c.] However unlikely it may seem, like as it did to Moses, that the people should eat flesh a month together. He thought that God had made an unadvised promise, and prays him to consider that the people were six hundred thousand footmen, and that the flocks and herds would not suffice them. Jeremiah seemeth to object some such matter in his following prayer, especially #Jer 32:25. But God answereth them both alike—viz., that his hand was not waxen short, that nothing was too hard for him, that he was never nonplussed, &c. See #Jer 32:27 Nu 11:23.

Ver. 16. I prayed unto the Lord, saying.] His heart began to boil with unbelief and carnal reasonings; he therefore setteth himself to pray down those distempers. As a man may sleep out his drunkenness, so he may pray away his perturbations. It was Job's restraining of prayer, Eliphaz thought, that made him so far to forget himself, and to extravagant. {#Job 15:4}

Ver. 17. Ah Lord God!] This interjection in the beginning of his prayer showeth that his heart was greatly grieved and perplexed. Nevertheless he reineth in his passions, and runneth not out into a brawl instead of a prayer, as Jonah did. {#Jon 4:1} {See Trapp on "Jon 4:1"}

Thou hast made the heaven and earth by thy great power.] God's might and mercy are the good soul's Joachin and Boaz, whereon it ever resteth. These two doth Jeremiah in this prayer of his chiefly plead and flee to.

And there is nothing too hard for thee.] Heb., Nothing is hidden from thee, or wonderful with thee. But for my part I am at a great stand, neither know I how to bring both ends together.

Ver. 18. Thou showest lovingkindness.] See on #Jer 32:17.

And recompenseth the iniquity.] Thou art not made all of mercy either, as silly folk are apt to conceit it.

Into the bosom of their children.] Who have it in full measure, long though it be first sometimes. Such parents are parricides.

The great, the mighty God.] Surgit hic oratio. Let us learn to represent the Lord to ourselves in prayer under fit notions and attributes; this will both increase faith and inflame affection.

Ver. 19. Great in counsel and mighty in work.] See on #Isa 9:6 28:29.

For thine eyes are upon all the ways of the sons of men.] Oh that we could always look upon these eyes of God as looking on us! it would be a notable retentive from evil and incentive to good.

To give unto every one according to his ways.] God's providence (which is nothing else but the carrying on of his decree) is that helm which turneth about the whole ship of the universe.

Ver. 20. Who hast set signs and wonders.] #Ps 78:43 106:22 135:9.

Even unto this day.] Oresius writeth ^{a} that the tracks of Pharaoh's chariot wheels are yet to be seen at the Red Sea. Fides sit penes authorem.

^{a} Oros., lib. i. cap. 10.

Ver. 21. And hast made thee a name.] As #Isa 63:11-13 Ps 136:10-21 Ps 105:44 Ne 9:24,26.

Ver. 22. {See Trapp on "Jer 32:21"}

Ver. 23. {See Trapp on "Jer 32:21"}

Ver. 24. Behold the mounts.] Raised by the enemies as high as the walls, that they might fight with the besieged upon even ground.

Ver. 25. And thou hast said unto me.] Which now I cannot but seriously wonder at, seeing how things are carried; yet I have obeyed thee without questioning.

For the city is given.] Or, Though the city be given.

Ver. 26. Then came the word of the Lord.] See on #Jer 32:1.

Ver. 27. Behold, I am the Lord, the God of all flesh.] Yea, of the "spirits of all flesh"; {#Nu 16:22} but what can weak flesh do against the Almighty?

Is there anything too hard for me?] See on #Jer 32:15,17. Still God is careful to confirm and comfort his ministers, and here he doth Jeremiah much what in his own words.

Ver. 28. Behold, I will give this city.] As #Jer 32:3.

Ver. 29. With the houses, upon whose roofs.] Such was their impudence, and so far was this now from being, as once, the holy city. It was become a very Poneropolis, excessively superstitious, as was afterwards Athens. {#Ac 17:22}

Ver. 30. Have only done evil before me.] Have made it their whole practice to provoke me, like as #Jer 32:23 they are said to have "done nothing of all that God commanded them to do," so cross grained they were, and "to every good work reprobate."

Ver. 31. From the day that they built it.] Ever since Solomon beautified it, and made it the metropolis. Nevertheless Hegeſippus was out, in saying that Jerusalem was so called quasi ἱερὸν Σολομῶντος. Solomon made it famous by his magnificence; but odious by his idolatry there.

Ver. 32. Because of all the evil.] Their omissions {#Jer 32:23} and commissions, {#Jer 32:30} doing evil as they could.

Ver. 33. And they have turned unto me.] See #Jer 2:27.

Though I taught them.] See #Jer 7:13,25:3 26:3.

Ver. 34. In the house which is called by my name.] Templi periphrasis haec est emphatica, atque argumentosa.

Ver. 35. And they built.] See #Jer 7:31 19:5.

Ver. 36. And now therefore.] Or, Yet now notwithstanding, when God thus cometh in with his non-obstante what may not he do?

Ver. 37. Behold, I will gather them.] See #Jer 16:15 23:3. This was fulfilled especially in that golden age, and perpetual jubilee of the gospel, that began five hundred years after.

Ver. 38. And they shall be my people.] See #Jer 24:7 31:33.

Ver. 39. And I will give them one heart.] Oneness or singleness of heart in my service, and unanimity among themselves, until they all come unto that oneness of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, &c. {#Eph 4:13}

That they may fear me for ever.] This the Jews say (but falsely) a man may do by the power of nature. See #Jer 32:40 Eze 36:26,27.

Ver. 40. And I will make.] See #Jer 31:31 Eze 39:29.

Ver. 41. Yea, I will rejoice over them.] Volupe mihi erit; it shall be as great a pleasure to me to bless them, as it can be to them to obey me. See #Jer 24:7 Ps 119:2,10.

Ver. 42. So will I bring upon them.] #Jer 29:10 31:28.

Ver. 43. And fields shall be bought.] For an assurance whereof I have caused thee to buy this field now.

Ver. 44. Men shall buy fields for moneg.] All shall be statu quo prius in that great restoration of all things. And with this chapter endeth the commentary of Jerome upon Jeremiah.

Chapter 33

Ver. 1. Moreover, the word of the Lord came unto Jeremiah the second time.] To the same purpose with the former, {#Jer 32:1} which is reckoned his fourteenth sermon, as this his fifteenth; by both we see that "the word of God is not bound," though the preacher may; {#2Ti 2:9} "It runs and is glorified," is free and not fettered. {#2Th 3:1}

While he was yet shut up.] God forsaketh not his prisoners, but giveth them oft extraordinary comforts. Philip, Landgrave of Hesse, being a long time held prisoner by Charles V for the defence of the gospel, was demanded what upheld him all that time? he answered, Divinas martyrum consolationes se sensisse, that he felt in his soul the divine consolations of martyrs, in whom as the afflictions of Christ do abound, so do comforts by Christ abound much more. {#2Co 1:5}

Ver. 2. Thus saith the Lord the maker thereof.] i.e., Of the promise of restoration. {#Jer 32:41-44} Or of Jerusalem, which he is said to make in the sense that he "made Moses and Aaron," that is, "advanced" them. {#1Sa 12:6, marg.}

The Lord is his name.] Jehovah the essentiator, who giveth being to all things, and particularly to his word.

Ver. 3. Call unto me, and I will answer thee.] Thou hast a promise, and I will perform it; but so as that thou Jeremiah, and such as thou art, Daniel, Ezekiel, Nehemiah, &c., pray over the promise. The angel told Daniel he came for his prayer's sake. {#Jer 10:12}

And show thee great and mighty things.] Or, Abstruse and reserved things. God's praying people get to know much of his mind above others; like as John, by weeping, got the book opened; and Daniel, by prayer, had the king's secret revealed unto him in a night vision. {#Da 2:18,19} Bene orasse, est bene studuisse, said Luther; who, because he had much communion with God by prayer, so holy truths were daily more and more made known unto him, he knew not how nor which way, as himself said.

Ver. 4. Which are thrown down by the mounts.] Or, Catapults, or engines of demolition, used to batter with. See #Jer 32:24.

And by the sword.] Or, Mattocks—scil., After that the enemy had entered the city, and cried, as #Ps 137:3,

“Destruite, ex imis subvertite fundamentis:”

Down with it, down with it, even to the ground.

Ver. 5. They come to fight with the Chaldeans.] But they fight not in God's name; for he hath, for all their wickedness, hidden his face from them; therefore they fight with such sorry success; the houses which they would defend are filled with their dead caresses. This whole verse would be hemmed in with a parenthesis.

Ver. 6. Behold, I will bring it health and cure.] Una eademque manus vulnus opemque feret. This is God's usual method and manner of dealing with his people, {#Ho 6:1} as a skilful physician, primo pungit, deinde ungit.

“ Enecat, ut possit vivificare Deus.”

And I will reveal {a} unto them abundance of peace and truth.] Why then, feri, Domine, feri; such gold as "peace and truth" cannot be bought too dear. The Chaldee here hath it, Revelabo iis portam poenitentiae, I will reveal unto them the gate of repentance, and show them how they may walk in the way of peace and truth.

{a} Revelabo., i.e., re ipsa exhibebo.

Ver. 7. And I will cause the captivity of Judah.] As #Jer 24:5 30:3 32:44. They shall be as if I had not cast them off, and I will hear them. {#Zec 10:6}

Ver. 8. And I will cleanse them from all their iniquity.] Which must therefore needs be a filthy and loathsome thing, else what need cleansing? Christ, for this cause, came by water and blood.

And I will pardon all their iniquities.] This clause expoundeth the former, and containeth the mother mercy.

Ver. 9. And it shall be to me a name {a} of joy,] i.e., An honour, that I shall take singular delight in.

And they shall fear and tremble for all the goodness.] Which bodes no good to them; for the Church's welfare is ever joined with the downfall and destruction of her enemies.

{a} In nomen laetum, i.e., laetificum.

Ver. 10. Again there shall be heard in this place.] God loveth to help his people, when they are forsaken of their hopes.

Ver. 11. The voice of joy.] See #Jer 7:34 16:9.

The voice of them that shall say, Praise the Lord of hosts, for he is good.] This carmen intercalare the Jews sang joyfully at their return from Babylon, {#Ezr 3:11} and the saints shall have cause to sing throughout all eternity.

And of them that shall bring the sacrifice of praise.] Even "the calves of their lips, giving thanks to his name," {#Heb 13:15} together with other evangelical sacrifices, as contrition; {#Ps 51:17} confidence; {#Ps 4:4} alms deeds; {#Heb 13:16} the obedience of faith; {#Ro 15:16} self-denial, {#Ro 12:1} &c. The Talmudists say that the sacrifice of praise here mentioned shall continue when all other sacrifices are abolished; and this we see verified in the Christian Church.

Ver. 12. In all the cities thereof shall be an habitation of shepherds,] i.e., Several sorts of buildings, yea, even sheep cotes and lodges for shepherds and their flocks. All these promises are antitheta, opposite to those menaces, #Jer 7:34,16:9 cf. 25:10 31:24.

Ver. 13. Shall the flocks pass again under the hand of him that telleth them.] As shepherds used oft to tell their sheep. Christ the great Shepherd and Bishop of souls knoweth all his sheep, and calleth them by name; he hath them ever in numerato, for he numbereth the stars also. See #Joh 10:3,11,12.

Ver. 14. I will perform that good thing.] Praestabo verbum istud optimum, as Tremellius well rendereth it. I will perform that best word or promise, viz., concerning Christ, in whom all the former and future promises are Yea and Amen, to the glory of God. {#2Co 1:20}

“ Haec dicenda bono sunt bona verba die.”

Ver. 15. I will cause the branch of righteousness.] See the same, #Jer 23:5. The sweet promise concerning Christ can never be too often repeated. The Greek and German versions have that clause here also as there, "And a king shall reign and prosper, or understand."

Ver. 16. And this is the name wherewith she shall be called, The Lord is our righteousness.] Heb., This is that he shall call her, Jehovah our righteousness; called the Church shall be by Christ's own name, which is a very high honour, as being his spouse, and making up one mystical body with him. Hence she is called "Christ," {#1Co 12:12} and "the fulness of him who filleth all in all." {#Eph 1:23} See #Jer 23:6, with #Eze 48:35.

Ver. 17. David shall never want a man.] The man Christ Jesus. {#Lu 1:32,33}

Ver. 18. Neither shall the priest want a man.] The same man Christ Jesus, who is, as a King everlasting, so a priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek; and his sacrificing of himself once is more than equivalent to the daily perpetual sacrificing. Whereunto may be added the continuance of an evangelical ministry in the Church to the world's end. {#Mt 28:20 Eph 4:11-13}

Ver. 19. And the word of the Lord, &c.] Iterum de perpetuitate regni Christi tractat et iurat, saith Oecolampadius. Once more he treateth of the perpetuity of Christ's kingdom, and assureth it as by oath.

Ver. 20. If ye can break my covenant of the day.] God hath hitherto kept promise with nights and days, that one shall succeed the other; and will he not then keep in touch with his people?

Ver. 21. Then may also my covenant.] See #Jer 33:17,18. The poet hath somewhat like this:

*“Iungantur ante saeva sideribus freta,
Et ignis undae, tartaro tristi polus,
Lux alma tenebris, roscidae nocti dies, ” & c.
- Sen. in Octavia.*

Ver. 22. As the host of heaven.] See #Ge 13:16 15:5.

So will I multiply the seed of David.] True believers.

And the Levites.] Godly ministers. See #Ps 68:11.

Ver. 23. Moreover.] Or, Again. Idem repetit; the same thing is repeated, that it may be the better believed.

Ver. 24. Consider thou not what this people have spoken.] This unbelieving, misgiving, desponding people of mine.

The two families.] Iudah et Israel habentur pro properipsemate.

Ver. 25. If my covenant be not with day and night.] See on #Jer 33:20. If there be not a constant intercourse of either.

Ver. 26. Then will I cast away the seed of Jacob.] The body of the faithful, whom he ruleth by his Word and Spirit. {#Ps 105:1,6 Ro 9:6 Ga 3:16,17 6:16}

And will have mercy on them.] This is a complexive promise, and better than money, answereth all things.

Chapter 34

Ver. 1. The word that came to Jeremiah from the Lord.] Still he voucheth his author for more authority sake. And this is held to be his sixteenth sermon.

And all the kingdoms of the earth of his dominion.] For never any monarch was master of the whole earth.

Ver. 2. Go and speak unto Zedekiah.] Tell him plainly what shall become of him and his, though thou be sent to prison for thy plain dealing.

Ver. 3. And thou shalt not escape.] Whatever vain hopes thou mayest nourish, and although thou thinkest thou hast a stake in store, howsoever the world goes with the rest. See #Jer 32:4,5.

Ver. 4. Yet hear the word of the Lord.] A word of comfort. The Lord is good to all, and his tender mercies are over all his works. {#Ps 145:9} Out of his philanthropy he giveth this wicked prince a mitigation of his just punishment, and a further time to repent. {as #Re 2:21} And possibly this goodness of God might in time lead him to repentance. {as #Ro 2:4}

Thou shalt not die by the sword.] And yet Josiah, his father, a far better man, did; so unsearchable are God's judgments, and his ways past finding out.

Ver. 5. But thou shalt die in peace.] Yet not as his father Josiah did, in that peace of God, unless he amended his manners, for he was reckoned among the naughty figs.

And with the burnings of thy fathers, the former kings.] With the usual solemnities at the exequies of the better sort of kings: Nec una fuit veteribus sepeliendi ratio. See #2Ch 16:14 21:19. The Jews have a tradition that Nebuchadnezzar, upon a festival day, caused him to be brought out of prison, and so abused him before his princes to make them sport, that for shame and grief thereof he died soon after; and then Nebuchadnezzar, to make him some recompense, caused him to be honourably buried, suffering his former subjects to burn sweet odours and to bewail his death. {a}

And they will lament thee.] The dues of the dead are, honorifice lugeri et honeste sepeliri, to be honourably lamented and laid up; which yet is not granted to all good men, but heaven makes amends. Planctus haec fuit formula iuxta Seder Olam, Heu! quia mortuus est Rex Zedechias bibens faeces omnium cetatum; i.e., Luens peccata priorum saeculorum—interprete Genebrardo.

For I have pronounced the word.] Both the comminatory part of this message and the consolatory. But Zedekiah was so moved at the former that he regarded not the latter.

{a} Joseph. Antiq., lib. x. cap. 11.

Ver. 6. Then Jeremiah spake all these words.] Never fearing what might follow; and he had no sooner done but he was clapped up. See #Jer 32:3.

Ver. 7. And against all the cities of Judah which were left.] These were not many, for the Chaldean conqueror, as an overflowing scourge, had passed through Judah, and gone over all, reaching even to the neck. {as #Isa 8:8}

Ver. 8. This is the word that came to Jeremiah from the Lord.] Here beginneth a new sermon, reckoned the seventeenth; and here ought to begin a new chapter, saith Piscator.

After that the king Zedekiah had made a covenant.] In their distress they made some shows of remorse, and some overtures of reformation. So did Pharaoh. {#Ex 8:8,15,28,32 9:28,34 10:17,20} And the Israelites of old. {#Jud 10:15,16 Ps 78:34-36; see the notes there} Daemon languebat, &c. Pliny, in one of his epistles to one that desired rules from him how to order his life aright, I will, said he, give you one rule that shall be instead of a thousand: Ut tales esse perseveremus sani, quales nos futuros esse profitemur infirmi, i.e., That we continue to be as good in health as we promise and begin to be at the time of our sickness.

Ver. 9. That every man should let his manservant.] Should manumit and dismiss him at six years' end, according to the law. {#Ex 21:1,2} The seventh year {a} was called the year of liberty, and then they were to let go their brethren that served them, and this in a thankful remembrance of their deliverance from the Egyptian servitude. But this they had neglected to do; and now, to pacify God's wrath, and to prevent, if it might be, the Chaldeans' cruelty, this course they took, and not altogether without success, for the siege was thereupon raised for a season; and had they returned to God with all their heart and with all their soul, who knows what might have been further done for them? But they did nothing less; therefore came wrath upon them to the utmost.

Ver. 10. Then they obeyed, and let them go.] They seemed to be very good as long as it lasted. See on #Jer 34:8. So when God lays siege to men by sickness or otherwise, then covenants are made and kept for a while concerning the putting away of their sins; but no sooner doth God slack his wrath but they retract their vows, and return to their wonted wickedness:

“Aegrotus surgit, sed pia vota iacent.”

Ver. 11. But afterwards they turned, and caused their servants.] Stimulante avaritia. Covetousness prompting and pricking them on thereunto for that is the root of all evil. {#1Ti 6:10} The Chaldeans had drawn off, to go, belike, to fight with the relief that was coming out of Egypt; {#Jer 37:7,11} and now these silly Jews thought themselves out of the reach of God’s rod perfidiously repealed their vows, re-bondaged their servants, and are therefore worthily threatened with a more cruel servitude to the Chaldeans for this their relapse and breach of covenant with God.

Ver. 12. Therefore the word of the Lord.] Of God the Son. {a}

Came to Jeremiah from the Lord.] From God the Father.

{a} Junius.

Ver. 13. I made a covenant with your fathers.] Heb., I cut a covenant. See #Jer 34:18.

Out of the house of bondmen.] Such were you when there; why then should you pull up the bridge before others which yourselves have gone over? make slaves of those whom God had made free? {#Le 25:39,42}

Ver. 14. At the end of seven years let ye go.] He layeth before them God’s law, which they had transgressed, out of #Ex 21:2 De 15:12. A law so full of equity, humanity, and benignity, that the more honest heathens approved and observed it, as the Romans and Athenians. Only these latter had an action at law (which they called ‘Αποστασιον) for a master against his servant, ungrateful for his manumission, and not doing his duty to his master, for such were again to be made bondslaves, if the crime could be proved against them. {a}

{a} Val. Max., lib. ii. cap. 1.

Ver. 15. And you were now turned.] Being frightened into a temporary reformation: but all was in hypocrisy, as now well appeareth. Falling stars were never but meteors.

In proclaiming liberty every one to his neighbour.] Your servants were your neighbours, and "their flesh as your flesh," {#Ne 5:5} and should have been so considered. In the law the servant paid the half shekel as well as his master. And in the gospel, as there is "neither Jew nor Greek, so neither bond nor free, but all are one in Christ Jesus," {#Ga 3:28} whether he be lord or lowlies. Servus est domini sui συναδελφος.

And ye had made a covenant before.] And have not all done so in baptism, that Beersheba, or Well of an oath?

Ver. 16. But ye turned.] Exprobrat recidivum Iudaeorum scelus, qui scilicet primam virtutem turpiter deluserint et violarint. He upbraideth them, and deservedly, with their apostasy and perjury. Peter also thundereth against such. {#2Pe 2}

And polluted my name, / scil., By the violation of your solemn vow; so doth every profligate professor and ungirt Christian.

Whom he had set at liberty at their pleasure.] Liberty is a desirable and delectable commodity. Those that live in Turkey, Persia, yea, or but in France, &c., esteem it so.

Ver. 17. Ye have not hearkened unto me in proclaiming liberty.] Ye have not done it, because ye have not continued to do it; ye have lost the things that you had wrought.

Behold, I proclaim a liberty for you.] God loves to retaliate. Here he abandoneth these apostates to the plagues instanced. Let them use you at their pleasure, saith God; I have no mercy for such merciless wretches, neither care I what becomes of you.

Ver. 18. That have transgressed my covenant.] His covenant he calleth it by a weighty emphasis, because about a business by him commanded, and wherein he was engaged, not as a bare spectator, but as a severe avenger of their perjury.

When they cut the calf in twain.] To show the correspondence of wills whereunto the contractors did bind themselves, and the punishment of dissection or other violent death whereunto they submitted themselves, in case they broke promise. The rise of this rite in covenanting, see #Ge 15:9,10,17. The heathens {a} used the like ceremony, {b} as is to be seen in Homer, Cicero, Livy, Virgil:

“ Et caesa iungebant faedera porca. ”

The Romans cut a sow in twain; and when it was divided, the Faeciales or heralds gave one half to one party, and the other half to the other, and said, So God divide you asunder if you break this covenant; and let God do this so much the more as he is more able.

{a} Hom. Il., lib. iii; Tul. de Invent.; Liv., lib. i.; Virg. Aeneid., 8.

{b} Hinc faedus a faedo animali diviso.

Ver. 19. The princes of Judah.] These were most of them cut in pieces by the King of Babylon, as the calf had been.

Ver. 20. And their dead bodies.] #Jer 7:33 16:4.

Ver. 21. Which are gone up from you.] But will be upon you again ere long; they are but gone back to fetch beer, as it were. You have deceived your servants with a vain hope of liberty, and so you do now yourselves. See #Jer 37:8,21.

Ver. 22. Behold, I will command] i.e., By a secret instinct I will move.

Chapter 35

Ver. 1. The word that came to Jeremiah from the Lord.] The eighteenth sermon, ordine tamen arbitrario non naturali, delivered various years before the former, and here placed, not in its proper order, but as it pleased him that collected them into this book.

Ver. 2. Go unto the house of the Rechabites.] So called of one Rechab, the father of, Jonadab, who was famous for his piety in Jehu's days, {#2Ki 10:15} three hundred years at least before this prophecy of Jeremiah. They were of the posterity of Jethro, Moses' father-in-law, and lived up and down in the land upon their employments, weaned from the world, and exercising themselves in the law of God. See #1Ch 2:55, where they are called the "families of the scribes that dwelt at Jabez," as being men learned in the laws of God. Of them came the Essenes, a studious and abstemious sect among the Jews; and they might better than those Donatists have taken to themselves the title of Apotactici, so called from their renouncing the world.

And give them wine to drink.] Heb., Make them drink wine—i.e., set it before them, and then leave them to their own liberty.

Ver. 3. Then I took Jaazaniah.] Whether actually or in vision only it skilleth not; but the former way probably.

Ver. 4. And I brought them into the house of the Lord.] That it might be made a public business, and so the better work upon all that should hear of it.

The son of Igdaliah, a man of God.] A priest and prophet or teacher of the people. So in the New Testament others are called God's children, his servants, and his people, but ministers only are called God's men. {#1Ti 6:11 2Ti 3:17}

Which was by the chamber of the princes.] Or, Of the prefects of the temple, that were next under the high priests.

Ver. 5. Drink ye wine.] It was a double temptation unto them: 1. To have pots and cups of wine set before them; 2. To be bid drink it by a prophet, and at prophet's chamber. But they were resolved, in obedience to their father Jonadab, to forbear. Yet if Jeremiah had said, Thus saith the Lord, Drink wine, they ought to have done it; but this he did not.

Ver. 6. We will not drink wine.] This they were resolved on, not because they were persuaded, as Mohammed's followers are, that in every grape there dwelt a devil, but because Jonadab, the son of Rechab, their progenitor, {#2Ki 10:15} had two or three hundred years before charged them to forbear; not thereby to establish any new arbitrary service, or any rule of greater perfection of life ^{a} (as the Papists misallege it in favour of monkery and other will worships and superstitious observances), but only as a civil ordinance about things external, the foundation whereof is laid in the Word, which commandeth modesty, humility, sobriety, heavenly mindedness, &c.

Ver. 7. Neither shall ye build house.] But be content and dwell in tents, as the ancient patriarchs were, and as your ancestors in Midian, removing from place to place, after the manner of the old nomades; so shall ye be the better prepared for a change in the state, which this good old man might foresee and foresignify to his nephews, enjoining them therefore to follow their shepherdy only, as men less addicted to the world, and bent for heaven.

That ye may live many days in the land.] While ye obey my charge. Long life is promised to children that obey their parents.

Where ye be strangers] The Rechabites were originally Midianites; but Jethro, of whom they came, was a famous proselyte in the Church; his son Hobab a guide to God's people in the wilderness; and his posterity impeded and incorporated into the body of God's people. ^{#Jud 1:16} Nevertheless they counted and called themselves "strangers," alienigenae, as those that looked for a better country above. See #Heb 11:9.

Ver. 8. Thus have we obeyed the voice of Jonadab.] Obedience to parents, in things not unlawful, is very commendable. Aristotle saith, ^{a} It is not good for a man to dissent from the gods, from his father, and from his teacher. We read of a king of Poland who carried the picture of his father in a plate of gold about his neck, and when he was going about any great business, he would kiss that picture and say, God grant I may observe my father's charge, and do nothing unworthy of him, &c.

We, our wives, our sons, and our daughters.] As themselves were obedient to their father, so had they their children obedient to them, whereas ill children are punished in their posterity. One complained that never father had so undutiful a child as he had. Yes, said his son, with less grace than truth, my grandfather had. ^{b}

{b} Fuller's Holy State.

Ver. 9. Nor to build houses, &c.] Jonadab, being a prudent and withal a mortified man, might foresee that the Israelites, being so wicked a people, could not long continue. He knew also that wine was oft an occasion of drunkenness, trading in the world, of earthly mindedness; fair houses, of loathness to leave the world. Haec sunt quae nos invitos faciunt mori, as that emperor once said of stately buildings. He, therefore, for a quiet life, and for their souls' health, forbade them the use of these lawful things, and they accordingly forbore them.

Ver. 10. But we have dwelt in tents.] And fed much upon dairy produce, as did Heber the Kenite, who was one of them, {#Jud 4:19} living in abstinence and bodily labour, that we might be free to divine contemplations.

Ver. 11. Come, and let us go to Jerusalem.] So then it was lawful for them to dispense with those their observances, in that inevitable necessity; like as also they might have drunk wine rather than have perished. But what can be reasonably pleaded for that man of sin, who taketh upon him to dispense with God's holy law, and de iniustitia facere iustitiam, ex nihilo aliquid, ex virtute vitium, {a} to make righteousness of unrighteousness, vice of virtue, something of nothing?

So we dwell at Jerusalem.] But better they had kept out, and held to their old course; for so they might have escaped some way.

{a} Bellarm., De Pontif. Rom., lib. iv.

Ver. 12. Then came the word of the Lord.] Then, after this famous example of obedience thus proposed, an excellent way of teaching surely. Reason should rule, and therefore lodgeth in the brain; but when reason cannot persuade, example will.

Ver. 13. Will ye not receive instruction, to hearken to my words?] Quae est illa portentosa pertinacia? What a strange stiffness and obstinace in you is this! Am not I to be better esteemed and obeyed by you than Jonadab is by the Rechabites?

Ver. 14. The words of Jonadab, ... not to drink wine, are performed.] So are the words of Mohammed to like purpose, to this day, by the Turks; so are the commands of the Popish padres to their young novices, though it be to make a voyage to China or Peru,

“ Per varios casus, per tot discrimina rerum.”

For unto this day they drink none.] Neither dwell in houses, as you do and may do, eating of the fat and drinking of the sweet without restraint, so that you keep within the bounds of sobriety. I command you nothing but what in reason should be done for a worldly good, as well as for a spiritual.

Rising early and speaking.] I began early with you, my law I gave you in Horeb, eight or nine hundred years since, and from that time to this I have constantly and instantly called upon you by my messengers for obedience, whereas it is not yet full three hundred years since Jonadab left this charge with his Rechabites, and, dying, left none to see it fulfilled, or to reprove them for their neglects.

Ver. 15. I have sent unto you all my servants the prophets.] But all to no purpose. See on #Jer 35:14.

Saying, Return ye now every man from his evil way.] And was this so great a matter, to part with that which profiteth you nothing, yea, which undoubtedly will undo you?

And go not after other gods.] For wherein can they bestead you?

And ye shall dwell in the land.] This was more than ever Jonadab could promise, or promising perform, to his nephews.

But ye have not inclined your ear.] See #Jer 7:24,26,11:8,17:23 34:14.

Ver. 16. Because the sons of Jonadab.] This was a lively way of confuting their contumacy, far more convincing than that of the heathens not changing their gods, or the beasts knowing their owners, the birds their seasons.

But this people have not hearkened unto me.] Whereas, "if I be a father, where is mine honour? and if a master, where is mine obedience?" {#Mal 1:6} {See Trapp on "Mal 1:6"}

Ver. 17. Behold, I will bring upon Judah.] Aut poenitendum aut pereundum. Men must either repent, or perish; obey God's law, or bear the penalty; no remedy. {#Heb 2:2 2Th 1:8}

Ver. 18. Because ye have obeyed the commandment.] Obedience to parents hath an ample recompense of reward, as that which is good and acceptable before God and men. {#1Ti 5:4}

Ver. 19. Jonadab the son of Rechab shall not want a man to stand before me for ever,] i.e., To be beloved by me, and to be in special favour with me, lifting up pure hands in all places of their abode. Captive they were carried among the Jews; but they returned also again with them (as appears #1Ch 2:55), erantque Deo cordi et curae and they were dear to God.

Chapter 36

Ver. 1. And it came to pass in the fourth year.] This whole chapter is historical and narrative, as also are some others besides this. Historias lege, ne fias historia.

Ver. 2. Take thee a roll {a} of a book,] i.e., A volume. {as #Isa 8:1} {See Trapp on "Isa 8:1"}

And write therein.] Jeremiah had a command to write; so have not our empty scripturients, whose rapes on the innocence of paper, as one phraseth it, make the press almost execrable. Ista prurientis calami scabies potius est, quam scriptio. {a}

All the words that I have spoken unto thee.] The sum and substance of all thy sermons for these twenty-three years past. See #Jer 1:2 25:3.

{a} Olim liber erat instar mappae geographicae.

{b} Pineda.

Ver. 3. It may be that the house of Judah will hear, &c.] See here the utility of the Holy Scriptures, and the excellent use that may be made of reading them. A man may be thereby doubtless converted where preaching is wanting, as various were in Queen Mary's days, when the Word of God was precious; {a} as Augustine was by reading Rom. 13., Fulgentius by the Frophet Jonah, Franciseus Junius by John 1., &c.; the eunuch, {#Ac 8:26-39} and those noble Bereans, {#Ac 17:11} were notably prepared for conversion by this ordinance.

That I may forgive their iniquity and their sin, / i.e., Their sins of all sorts, giving them a free and full discharge.

{a} Foxe's Martyrol.

Ver. 4. Then Jeremiah called Baruch, ... and {a} Baruch wrote from the mouth.] Dictantis ab ore pependit. Jeremiah, it seemeth, had either not written his prophecies, or not so legibly, or in loose papers only; now he hath them fair written out into a book, making the same use of Baruch as afterward Paul did of Tertius, {#Ro 16:22} who himself wrote no very good hand, as some have gathered from #Ga 6:11; {See Trapp on "Ga 6:11"}

{a} Baruch iste notarius et diaconus Ieremiae, simulque propheta fuit. -Oecolamp.

Ver. 5. I am shut up.] Or, I am detained, or restrained; haply by some legal pollution that he had contracted, as by touching a dead carcase, &c.; or by some bodily infirmity, or by the lying in wait of his enemies, or by the Spirit of God, {as #Ac 16:6,7} for a punishment to the Jews by the prophet's absence and silence, and for the safety of his servant in those perilous times.

Ver. 6. Therefore go thou, and read in the roll.] A minister, when he cannot himself officiate, must provide another in his stead.

Which thou hast written from my mouth.] And which the Holy Ghost hath put into my mouth, both matter and words.

Upon the fasting day.] A very fit time for the reading of the Scriptures, that the people then convened might hear and fear, and supplicate, and convert, and God might heal them. The fast here mentioned was not the ordinary yearly fast, called the day of expiation or atonement, but another that was conceptivum et liberum, kept on some special occasion for the averting of God's judgment, such as was that at Nineveh. There was afterwards, indeed, a yearly fast kept in November, to bewail this wicked practice of King Jehoiakim in cutting and casting into the fire this blessed book. {a}

{a} Genebrard., Ex Menologio Hebraeor.

Ver. 7. It may be they will present their supplication.] Heb., Their supplication will fall before the Lord. Fasting of itself is but a "bodily exercise," and profiteth little. If the soul be not afflicted, rebel flesh tamed, prayers edged, and reformation effected, men fast to no purpose. {#Isa 58:3,5 Zec 5:5,7}

Ver. 8. And Baruch the son of Neriah did according, &c.] Nihil de sua saliva admiscens. He faithfully performed the prophet Jeremiah's commands, not standing to cast perils, being thereunto heartened and hardened by Jeremiah {#Jer 45:5}

Ver. 9. They proclaimed a fast.] Haply for fear of the Chaldeans, who, having lately beaten Pharaohnecho, was like enough to invade Judea; or else, because of that great dearth. {#Jer 14:1,2,12 36:6}

Ver. 10. Then Baruch read in the book.] He read with a courage, verbis non solum disertis sed et exertis, out of a chamber window, that the people under him might the better hear.

In the chamber of Gemariah.] Who himself, it seemeth, was not present, but his son Micaiah was, and carried his father and the rest of the princes the news. {#Jer 36:12}

Ver. 11. When Micaiah the son of Gemariah had heard.] With what affection he heard the book read by Baruch is uncertain. We have many Herodian hearers before us a second time—such, I mean, as have a Herod's heart toward the preacher, and little do we know who they are that sit before us; those precious balms we bring break their heads with a witness, and make the blood run about their ears.

Ver. 12. Then he went down into the king's house.] For there was his father and the rest of the princes, suam aulam vel gulam confectantes, following their court delights, while the people were now humbling themselves before the Lord, and trembling at his Word. Great men are, many of them, of that Earl of Westmoreland's mind, who profanely said, I need not pray to God, since having tenants enough to pray for me.

Ver. 13. Then Micaiah declared unto them.] See #Jer 36:11.

Ver. 14. Therefore all the princes sent Jehudi.] Apparitorem regis, ut ex sequentibus constat. -Jun.

Ver. 15. And they said, Sit down now] ^{a} This was some courtesy and token of good respect to Baruch. These princes were not all out so bad as their king.

Ver. 16. They were afraid, both one and other,] ^{a} Expavescunt et sese mutuo respiciunt; they were afraid, and looked one upon another, being much distracted at this new and unexpected occurrence; neither wist they at first what to do, being affected after a sort, and smitten with the weightiness of the business.

We will surely tell the king.] They durst do no otherwise; for if these things should have come to the king's ear, and they not first tell him, they might come into the danger of his displeasure.

^{a} Alter alterum intuentes vel alloquentes. -Piscat.

Ver. 17. Tell us, How didst thou write all these words at his mouth?] Praeposteram movent interrogationem; they put an odd question, saith one, when they should rather have bethought themselves of breaking off their sins by repentance. God loves obedience and not questioners, saith Luther.

Ver. 18. And Baruch answered them.] Answerably ^{a} to the question they asked him. ^{#Jer 36:17} Dignum patella operculum.

And I wrote them with ink in the book.] The use, then, of writing with pen and ink is ancient among the Hebrews.

Ver. 19. Go hide thee, thou and Jeremiah.] This was well, but not all. They draw not Baruch before the king to answer what he had done; but why do they not take him to the king with his roll, and plead both for it and him too? Had they been true patriots and hearty friends to the truth, they would have done so; but they knew that this wicked king could not endure the prophets, ^{#Jer 26:21 36:26} and one of their company had been the king's agent in bringing Uriah the prophet out of Egypt to be butchered by him. ^{#Jer 26:22}

Ver. 20. And they went in to the king.] God by his providence so disposed it, that both king and princes, whether they would or not, should hear their doom; and as for some of the princes, they seem to have some good affections wrought in them, but too weak to work unto true "repentance to salvation."

Ver. 21. So the king sent Jehudi.] See on #Jer 36:14.

Ver. 22. Now the king sat in the winter house.] There sat he, in that his stately and sumptuous palace built by iniquity, {#Jer 22:13,14} curans cuticulam ad focum, keeping himself warm in his winter chamber, and careless of calling upon God; while the people, cold and empty, were fasting and praying in the temple, and hearing the Word read by Baruch.

In the ninth month, / sc., Of the sacred year, which month was part of our November and part of December, a cold season; but that thing of naught, his body, which he now made so much of, was shortly after to be cast out unburied, in the day to the heat, and in the night to the frost. {#Jer 36:30}

Ver. 23. When Jehudi had read three or four leaves.] Vespasian is said to have been patientissimus veri, { a } very patient of truth; so was good Josiah, whose heart melted at the hearing of the law; {#2Ch 34:27} but so was not this degenerate son of his, Jehoiakim, but more like Tiberius, that tiger, who tore with his teeth all that displeased him; or like Vitellius the tyrant, of whom Tacitus { b } saith, Ita formatae principis aures, ut aspera quae utilia: nec quidquam nisi iucundum et non laesurum acciperet, That his ears were of that temper that he could hear no counsel, though never so profitable, unless it were pleasant, and did suit with his humours.

He cut it with the penknife.] Why? what could he dislike in that precious piece? Of Petronius's Satyricon one said well, Tolle obscaena et tollis omnia; of Jeremiah's prophecies I may safely say, Tolle sancta, et tollis omnia. But this brutish prince could not away with downright truth, &c.

And cast it into the fire.] O stultitiam! quid innocentes chartae commeruerant? { c } O madness! what evil had those innocent papers deserved that they must die this double death, as it were? Those magical books at Ephesus were worthily burned; {#Ac 19:19} Aretine's love-books are so lascivious that they deserve to be burned, saith Boissard, { d } together with their author; many seditious pamphlets are now committed to Vulcan to be corrected, and more should be;

but, O sancta Apocalypsis! as that martyr once said when he took up the book of the Revelation, cast into the same fire with himself; so, O holy Jeremiah! what hast thou said or written to be thus slashed, and then cast into the fire? Jehoiakim is the first we read of that ever offered to burn the Bible. Antiochus, indeed, did the like afterwards, and Dioclesian the tyrant, and now the Pope. But though there were not a Bible left upon earth, yet "for ever, O Lord, thy Word is stablished in heaven," saith David. {#Ps 119:89}

Until all the roll was consumed.] So far was he from repenting of his wickedness, that he fed his eyes with such a sad spectacle, and was ready to say, as Solon did when he burned the usurers' bonds in Athens, that he never saw a fairer or clearer fire burn in all his life.

Ver. 24. Yet they were not afraid.] Ne paulum quidem percussi sunt. The king and his servants, those court parasites, were not stirred at all at such a Bible bonfire, but jeered when they should have feared, &c.

Nor rent their garments.] Such was their stupor seu non-curantia, their security and insensibleness of that high offence, for which their posterity keep a yearly fast. See on #Jer 36:6. Rending of garments in token of grief was in use also among the heathens. Homer saith Priamus rent his clothes when he heard of the death of his son Hector. The like hath Virgil of his Aeneas:

“ Tum pater Aeneas humeris abseindere vestem Auxilioque vocare deos. ”

Suetonius {a} saith the like of Julius Caesar, &c.

{a} Pro concione fides militum flens et veste a pectore discissa imploravit. -Suet., cap. 55.

Ver. 25. Nevertheless Elnathan.] Who had before been active for the king in apprehending and slaughtering the prophet Uriah, {#Jer 26:22} but now haply touched with some remorse for having any hand in so bloody an act.

Had made intercession to the king.] Verum frigide admodum, but very coldly; and such cold friends the truth hath still not a few, at kings' courts especially.

Ver. 26. But the king commanded Jerahmeel the son of Hammelech.] Or, The king's son, whom he might employ against these two servants of God; as once the King of France sent his son and heir with an army against the Waldenses. It is not for nothing, therefore, that the curse is denounced against Jehoiakim and his posterity. {#Jer 36:30,31}

But the Lord hid them,] i.e., He provided for them a hiding place in some good man's house, and there safeguarded them from these bloodhounds who hunted after their precious lives. There is no fence but flight, nor counsel but concealment, to secure an innocent subject against an enraged sovereign.

Ver. 27. Then the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah.] Jehoiakim took an ill course to free himself from trouble, as he counted it, by burning the roll; for God's Word cannot be burnt, no more than it can be bound. {#2Ti 2:9} And "shall they thus escape by iniquity?" No, verily; for it followeth, and is not more votum than vaticinium, a wish than a prophecy, "In thine anger cast down the people, O God."

{#Ps 56:7}

Ver. 28. Take thee again another roll.] Revertere, accipe. God's ministers must be steadfast and unwearable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as they know that their labour is not in vain in the Lord. {#1Co 15:58}

And write in it all the former words.] If all the tyrants on earth should fight against the very paper of the Scriptures, striving to abolish it, yet they could not possibly do it. There will be Bibles when they shall be laid low enough in the slimy valley, where are many already like them, and more shall come after them. {#Job 21:31,32}

Ver. 29. And thou shalt say to Jehoiakim,] i.e., Add this doleful doom of his to the new written roll, and direct it to Jehoiakim. Some think the prophet told him these things to his face, like as Eliah presented himself to Ahab, whom before he had fled from, and dealt freely with him; but that is not so likely.

Ver. 30. He shall have none to sit upon the throne of David,] i.e., None to make any reckoning of, for his son Jeconiah reigned but three months and ten days. And Zedekiah is not looked upon as his lawful successor, because he was his uncle, and set up likely by Nebuchadnezzar for a reproach to Jehoiakim and Jeconiah; and in as great spite as once Attilus, King of Suesia, made a dog king of the Danes, in revenge of a great many injuries received by them, appointing counsellors to do all things under his title.

And his dead body shall be cast out in the day to the heat.] This was that infamous burial of an ass wherewith he had formerly been threatened. {#Jer 22:19} His father Josiah was one of those few that lived and died with glory; but he did nothing less. Of Jehoiakim it may be said, as was afterwards of Ethelred, King of England, Eius vitae cursus saevus in principio, miser in medio, turpis in exitu asseritur. {a} It was said of his life that it was savage at the start, wretched in the middle and repulsive at the end.

{a} Malms., lib. ii. cap. 10.

Ver. 31. And I will punish him and his seed.] See on #Jer 36:26. The like is threatened to Zedekiah, {#Jer 21:7} who was therefore the worse, because he should have been warned by his brother's miseries.

And I will bring upon them.] See #Jer 35:17. Malis horrendis adobruentur omnes.

Ver. 32. Then took Jeremiah.] Who is therefore famous for his obedience; which is then only right, when it is prompt and present, ready and, speedy, without delays and consults, as here.

And there were added besides unto them many like words.] So little is gotten by relucting against the Word of God, and persecuting his messengers. What do wicked men hereby but entangle themselves more and more, as one that goeth among briars? {a} "Did not my word take hold of your fathers?" {#Zec 1:6} {See Trapp on "Zec 1:6"} What do they else, but as she in the history, who, disliking her looking glass for showing her truly the wrinkles in her old withered face, broke it in displeasure; and then she had for one glass many, every piece thereof presenting to her the decay of her beauty, which she was so loath to take notice of. The best way is to pass into the likeness of the heavenly pattern. See #Mic 2:7. {See Trapp on "Mic 2:7"}

Ver. 1. And king Zedekiah the son of Josiah.] This also and the next chapter are, as the former, historical, and so easily understood, that to set long notes upon them were, saith one, {a} rather to obscure them than to explain them.

{a} A Lapide.

Ver. 2. But neither he nor his servants did hearken.] And this was their undoing—scil., that they humbled not themselves before this holy prophet, speaking unto them from the mouth of the Lord. {#2Ch 36:12}

Ver. 3. Pray now unto the Lord our God for us.] This king would seem to have some more goodness in him than his brother and predecessor Jehoiakim; but he played the hypocrite exceedingly, as in other things, so in this, that he begged the prophet's prayers, but would not obey his preaching. The like did Pharaoh, Saul, Simon Magus, &c. Hezekiah sent to the prophet Isaiah for prayers, but withal he humbled himself and lived holily, which Zedekiah did not.

Ver. 4. Jeremiah came in and went out.] He was yet at liberty; as the saints have some halcyons times, yet are never unexercised, as we see in the apostles, but especially in Paul. {#Ac 5:13}

For they had not put him in prison.] Not yet they had. It was in our late wars a like difficult thing to find a wicked man in the enemy's prisons, or a godly man out of them.

Ver. 5. Then Pharaoh's army was come out of Egypt.] This, then, seemeth to be the occasion that moved Zedekiah to send to the prophet for his prayers—viz., that God would be pleased to prosper the Egyptians coming to raise the siege, and to keep off the Chaldeans from returning to Jerusalem. But God had before signified his will to the contrary; and the Jews, trusting to human helps, took not a right course for their own preservation. See #Jer 34:17-22

Ver. 6. Then came the word of the Lord.] In answer to the messengers that came to request prayers.

Ver. 7. To inquire of me.] Or, To seek to me, to set me to work for you at the throne of grace.

Behold Pharaoh's army, &c.] The Talmudists tale here of what frightened back the Egyptians is not worth the telling. It may be read in Corn. A Lapide upon #Jer 37:5.

Ver. 8. And the Chaldean shall return.] See #Jer 32:12,29.

Ver. 9. Deceive not yourselves.] As far too many do, qui praesumendo sperant, et sperando pereunt. hope beforehand and will die hoping.

For they shall not depart,] scil., For altogether; not for any space of time, or to any purpose. Like hereunto is that in #Mt 9:24, "The damsel is not dead."

Ver. 10. For though ye had smitten.] Pro auxesi adiecit hyperbolen; he useth a hyperbolic supposition for illustration.

And there remained but wounded men among them.] God cannot be without a staff to beat a rebel. Virum malum vel mus mordet, saith the proverb; A mouse will bite a bad man. Milez Cobelitz, a Christian soldier, sore wounded and all bloody, seeing Amurath, the great Turk, viewing the dead bodies after a victory, rose up out of a heap of slain men, and making toward the conqueror, as if he would have craved his life of him, suddenly stabbed him in the bottom of his belly with a short dagger which he had under his coat, and so slew him. {a}

Yet should they rise every man in his tent.] It is God who strengtheneth or weakeneth the arm of either party. {#Eze 30:24} Those that fight against spiritual wickedness in their own strength are sure to be foiled; and although the unclean spirit may seem to be cast out, yet he will return to his old house, and bring seven worse with him.

{#Mt 12:43-45}

Ver. 11. For fear of Pharaoh's army.] Or rather, Because of Pharaoh's army, whom now they drew off to encounter.

Ver. 12. Then Jeremiah went forth out of Jerusalem.] Where he saw there was so little good to be done by his ministry. This, some think, was an infirmity in him. Mr Greenham, upon such a ground as this, was persuaded to leave his charge at Dry Drayton, in Cambridgeshire, and to go to live at London, where he died of the plague; and, as some reported, repented on his death bed of having so done.

To go into the land of Benjamin.] To Anathoth, his own home; and if he went thither for his own safety or convenience sake, why might he not?

To separate himself thence in the midst of the people.] Ut lubricificaret exinde in medio populi; {a} that he might slide or slip away thence in the throng undiscerned.

{a} Pagnin., Vatab.

Ver. 13. Irijah, the son of Shelemiah, the son of Hananiah.] Of that Hananiah, say the Rabbis whose death Jeremiah foretold. {#Jer 28:16,17} This Hierias ferox adogescens, as Josephus calleth him, a fierce young man, bearing Jeremiah a grudge, layeth hold on him in the gate, and layeth treachery to his charge; unicum crimen eorum qui crimine vacabant. {a} Saying, Thou fallest away to the Chaldeans.] Jeremiah had spoken much of the Chaldeans' power, and foretold their victory. Hence he is here falsely accused of falling away to them, and being false to his country. Indeed, if the Chaldees could have fetched off Jeremiah, as the French King Louis did Philip de Comines from the Duke of Burgundy—whose affairs thereupon declined immediately—they might have made very good advantage of him; but he was far enough from any such compliance with them, and could better have said than ever Cicero did, Ne immortalitatem contra temp. aceiperem, I would not be false to my country for more than all this world's good.

{a} Tacitus.

Ver. 14. Then said Jeremiah, It is false.] Satanae pectus mendaciis faecundissimum est. {a} It is no news for innocence to be slandered, and to go with a scratched face.

But he hearkened not unto him.] Right or wrong, he must come before the princes, who do also handle the good prophet very coarsely.

{a} Luther.

Ver. 15. Wherefore the princes were wroth with Jeremiah.] Upon the captain's false suggestion, which they should better have sifted into first before they had believed it; for pellucet mendacium, nec per omnia quadrat, a lie is oft so thin, that it may be seen through and soon found out.

And smote him.] Perhaps with their own hands, as bloody Bonner buffeted some of the martyrs, pulling off part of their beards.

And put him in prison.] Causa nondum cognita; before they had heard his defenee. These princes were worse than Jehoiakim's, {#Jer 36:19} or, if they were the same men, they were now grown worse; and here was, as Bernard {a} hath it, sedes prima, et vita ima; ingens autoritas, et nutans stabilitas.

In the house of Jonathan the scribe.] As bad as Lollard's tower to our martyrs, or the Bishop of London's coal house, which Mr Philpot thought to be the worst prison about London. {b}

{a} De Consider., lib. ii.

{b} Acts and Mon.

Ver. 16. When Jeremiah was entered into the dungeon.] {a} Heb., Into a place or house of the pit or hole, where the prophet could neither walk nor handsomely lie down, when worse men a great deal had what liberty they listed.

And into the cabins.] Or, Cells, where they scarce put any but traitors, and similar foul offenders. Such they had at Athens, called barathrum, the infernal region, at Rome, tullianum, underground execution chamber, or profundum maris, &c., deep sea into which whosoever was put could hardly be put to more misery.

And Jeremiah had remained there many days.] Till the return of the Chaldees likely. Canes lingunt ulcera Lazari. Dogs licked the sores of Lazarus.

{a} In domum cisternae.

Ver. 17. Then Zedekiah the king.] Being now in distress because of the Chaldees come again, and willing to hear from the prophet some word of comfort, which yet might not be, unless he had been better. If comfort be applied to a graceless person, the truth of God is falsified.

Is there any word from the Lord?] Any new oracle, and different from that of destruction, which thou hast so often rung in our ears, ad ravim et nauseam usque?

And Jeremiah said, There is,] scil., A word from the Lord, but the same as before; for thou must mend ere the matter will mend with thee.

Ver. 18. What have I offended against thee?] As I know mine own innocence, so I would thou shouldst know that I am no stoic, or stock, indolent, or insensible of my grievous sufferings through the cruelty of thy princes, who have committed me to this ugly prison.

Ver. 19. Where are now your prophets?] Let them appear now if you please, and upon trial made let truth take place. To this most equal motion when the king said nothing, the prophet proceedeth to move again for himself, that he might be removed at least to a more convenient place, unless they meant an end of him.

Ver. 20. Therefore hear now I pray thee, O my lord the king.] As stout as he was and impartial in delivering God's message, in supplicating for himself he is very submissive and humble to his sovereign, not daring to "speak evil of dignities," though he had wrongfully suffered much from them.

Ver. 21. Then Zedekiah the king commanded.] For this courtesy of his to the prophet, God granted him a natural death, and an honourable burial in Babylon.

That they should commit Jeremiah into the court of the prison.] Where he might have more liberty and better accommodations, and where his friends, eum adire et audire possent, might come and hear him. See #Jer 22:2.

And that they should give him daily a piece of bread.] And a piece of a cake, we say, is better than no bread. I read of a gracious woman who said that she had made many a meal's meat upon the promises when she wanted bread. But Jeremiah, besides the promises, {#Jer 1:8 and elsewhere} was here, by a sweet providence, sustained in the prison during that extreme famine in the city, whereof we read in the Lamentations, when it was no small mercy to have a morsel of bread to keep him alive. Sic amara interdum dulcescunt. Who would not trust so good a God?

Chapter 38

Ver. 1. Then Shephatiah.] Here was aliud ex alio malum, one affliction on the neck of another. Matters mend with us as sour ale doth in summer, said Bishop Ridley once, when he was prisoner. Poor Jeremiah might well have said so, if ever any, as appeareth by this chapter, where we find him in a worse hole than was that of Jonathan; but his extremity was God's opportunity.

Shephatiah the son of Mattan, and Gedaliah, &c.] These four princes here named to their eternal infamy were no small men, as appeareth in that the king was not he that could do anything against them. {#Jer 38:5} The grandees of the world are greatest enemies usually to the truth. Little they had to say against his doctrines; they quarrel with his affection, as a perturber of the public peace. {#Jer 38:4}

Ahab charged the like crime upon Elijah; the Jews upon Christ, and afterwards upon Paul; the heathen persecutors upon the primitive Christians; the heretics still upon the orthodox, that they were seditious, antimonarchical, &c.

Ver. 2. Thus saith the Lord, He that remaineth in the city.] This is the self-same truth which he had preached before, and for the which he suffered. See #Jer 21:9. He is constant to his principles, and although it be commonly said and seen that he who receives a courtesy sells his liberty; yet it was not so with this holy prophet. He had received some enlargement, and care was taken by the king that a piece, or a roll of bread should be brought him daily to the prison out of the baker's street: but that stoppeth not his mouth.

Ver. 3. Thus saith the Lord.] And as long as the Lord saith so, I must say so too, whatever come of it. {#Jer 1:9,10}

Ver. 4. For thus he weakeneth the hands of the men of war.] Thus out of carnal policy is piety impugned. So #1Ki 12:27 Joh 11:48 Jer 38:1.

Ver. 5. Then Zedekiah the king said, Behold, he is in your hand.] O nihil regem, qui ne verbulo quidem cruentis viris obluctatur! O king of clouts, saith one, who, knowing the prophet's innocence and these princes' blood thirstiness, durst not say a word for him or against them! This inconsistency of his, and impotence of spirit, proceeded merely from diffidence and distrust in God.

Ver. 6. Then took they Jeremiah.] Whom the king had now (against his conscience, as afterwards Pilate dealt by Jesus), either through fear or favour, betrayed unto his deadly enemies; and so he was in a pitiful plight, in a forlorn condition. But Jeremiah, de profundis, out of the deep called upon God (whom he found far more facile than these princes did Zedekiah), "Thou drewest near," saith he, "in the day when I called upon thee; thou saidst, Fear not." {#La 3:57} I called upon thy name, O Lord, out of the low dungeon.

And they let down Jeremiah with cords.] With a murderous intent there to make an end of him privily, ut ibi praefocatus moreretur; ille vero usque ad collum mersus ibi manebat, said Josephus, that he might there pine and perish; but God graciously prevented it.

And in the dungeon there was no water but mire.] A typical hell it was, worse than Joseph's pit, {#Ge 37:24} or Heman's lake, {#Ps 88:6} or any prison that ever Brown the sect master ever came into, who used to boast that he had been committed to thirty-two prisons, and in some of them he could not see his hand at noonday. He died at length in Northampton jail, A.D. 1630, whereto he was sent for striking the constable requiring rudely the payment of a rate. {a}

So Jeremiah sunk in the mire.] Up to the neck, saith Josephus, and so became a type of Christ. {#Ps 69:2}

{a} Fuller's Church Hist., 168.

Ver. 7. Now when Ebedmelech the Ethiopian.] But a proselyte, and a religious prince; a stranger, but (as that good Samaritan in the Gospel) more merciful than any of the Jewish nation, who gloried in their privileges. See #Ro 2:26,27.

One of the eunuchs.] And eunuchs, say the Rabbis, are ordinarily more cruel than other men; but so was not this Cushite. Piety is the fountain of all virtues whatsoever.

Which was in the king's house.] As Obadiah was in Ahab's, Nehemiah in Artaxerxes's; some good people in Herod's; {#Lu 8:3} and Nero's; {#Php 4:22} Cromwell and Cranmer in Henry VIII's.

The king then sitting in the gate of Benjamin.] Sitting in judgment, where Jeremiah's enemies had once apprehended him for a fugitive, but durst not try it out with him, though Ebedmelech there entreated with the king for him in the presence of some of them, as it is probable.

Ver. 8. Ebedmelech.] Not more the king's servant (so his name signifieth) than God's. Joseph of Arimathea was such another, who went boldly to Pilate and begged the body of Jesus. Faith quelleth and killeth distrustful fear.

Ver. 9. My lord the king, these men have done evil.] What a brave man was this, to oppose so many princes, and so potent that the king himself dared not displease them! It was God's holy Spirit that put this mettle into him, and gave him the freedom of speech. {#Ps 119:46}

And he is like to die for hunger in the place where he is.] Or, Who would have died for hunger in the place where he was.

For there is no more bread in the city.] Cum panum annona sit pauca et parca. What need he to be doubly murdered?

Ver. 10. Then the king commanded Ebedmelech.] A sweet providence of God thus to incline the heart of this effeminate, cruel, inconstant, and impious king, to hearken to the motion, and to give order for the prophet's deliverance from that desperate and deadly danger. A good encouragement also to men to appear in a good cause, and to act vigorously for God, notwithstanding they are alone, and have to encounter with divers difficulties.

Take from hence thirty men with thee.] Four or fewer might have done it; but perhaps the princes with their forces might have endeavoured to hinder them, but that they saw them so strong.

Ver. 11. So Ebedmelech took the men with him and went.] The labour of love that this Ethiopian performed to the man of God is particularly and even partly described, for his eternal commendation, and all men's imitation.

Ver. 12. Put now these cast clouts.] Hence some gather that the prophet was put into this loathsome hole naked, or very ill clad at least. The fathers allegorise this story to set forth the vocation of the Gentiles and the rejection of the Jews.

Ver. 13. So they drew up Jeremiah with cords.] And God was not unrighteous to forget this their work and labour of love. {#Heb 6:10 Jer 39:17,18}

And Jeremiah remained in the court of the prison.] Manacled and fettered, as some {a} gather from #Jer 40:4.

{a} R. David, Vatabl.

Ver. 14. Then Zedekiah...took Jeremiah into the third entry.] Which was right over against the king's house. This wretched king was so overawed by his counsellors that he dared not advise with God's prophet in their presence, or with their privacy.

Ver. 15. If I declare it unto thee.] It is for the sins of a people that a hypocrite reigneth over them. {#Job 34:30} Such a one was Zedekiah; and the prophet here freely reproveth him for his hypocrisy.

And if I give thee counsel, will thou not hearken?] Or, And though I advise thee, thou wilt not hearken to me. Thou art set, and hast made thy conclusion beforehand.

Ver. 16. So the king Zedekiah sware secretly unto Jeremiah.] But what credit was to be given to his oath, who was notoriously known to be a perjured person, as having broken his oath of fidelity to Nebuchadnezzar?

As the Lord liveth, that made us this soul.] Hence the truth of that assertion is cleared up unto us, that men's souls drop not down from heaven, nor are propagated by their parents, but are created by God, and infused into their bodies.

I will not put thee to death, neither will I, &c.] The former part of the prophet's condition he sweareth to perform, but saith nothing to the latter, as having no such liking to it. So many come today to hear, who resolve to practise only so far as they see good.

Ver. 17. If thou wilt assuredly go forth.] Jeremiah was semper idem, one and the same still; no changeling at all, but a faithful and constant preacher of God's Word.

Ver. 18. But if thou wilt not go forth.] See #Jer 32:39. Thus Zedekiah hath it both ways, that it may abide by him; but he was uncounselable and irreclaimable.

Ver. 19. Then Zedekiah said unto Jeremiah, I am afraid of the Jews.] Thus hypocrites will at one time or other detect themselves, as Zedekiah here plainly declareth that he more feared the loss of his life, honour, wealth, &c., than of God's favour and kingdom; so do the most among us. Pilate feared how Caesar would take it if he should release Jesus. Herod laid hold on Peter, after he had killed James, that he might please the people. The Pharisees could not believe, because they received glory from men. This generous king cannot endure to think that his own fugitives should flout him; but to be ruled by God, and his holy prophet advising him for the best, he cannot yield. Thus still vain men are niggardly of their reputation and prodigal of their souls. Do we not see them run wilfully into the field, into the grave, into hell? and all lest it should be said they have as much fear as wit.

Ver. 20. They shall not deliver thee.] This the good prophet speaketh from the mouth of the Lord, to cure him of that causeless fear, and to bring him to a better obedience; but it was past time of day with him to be wrought upon by anything that could be spoken, though never so well.

So it shall be well unto thee, and thy soul shall live.] This is also the voice of the gospel, and the result of all the promises.

Ver. 21. Bat if thou refuse to go forth.] Promises and threatenings make an excellent mixture; the tartness of the one giveth us better to taste the sweetness of the other.

Ver. 22. And, behold, all the women that are left.] These shall mock thee and make songs of thee, exagitanes regem socordissimum, for a simple and sorry man, who hath undone them altogether with himself, by listening to flatterers and false prophets.

Thy feet are sunk in the mire.] In the mire of misery, where the prophet's unworthy usage in the miry dungeon is hinted, and the king twitted with it, as some hold. Some again think that Zedekiah in his flight did run into some quagmire, where he was taken.

And they are turned away backward.] Thy flatterers have now left thee in the lurch.

Ver. 23. So shall they bring out all thy wives and thy children.] Or, Thy women (whether wives or concubines, that crew of wanton creatures) and thy sons; for his daughters were left behind. {#Jer 41:10 43:6} If, therefore, thou hast any care of those that are, or ought to be, most dear unto thee, be ruled by me.

And thou shalt cause this city to be burnt with fire.] Heb., Thou shalt burn this city:

“ Quicquid delirant reges, plectuntur Achivi.”

Ver. 24. Let no man know of these words,] Muliebriter deprecatur rex incredulus fidelem. Thus he who feareth not God, feareth his own servants and counsellors.

And thou shalt not die.] The crafty king would seem to be solicitous of the prophet's safety, but mainly intendeth his own.

Ver. 25. But if the princes hear.] In such fear stood he of his princes, and might truly say, as the Assyrian once did, Are not my princes altogether kings? {#Isa 10:8} or as the Emperor of Germany did, I am king of kings, meaning that the princes of his empire would do what they wished for all him. Zedekiah was only an image of a king.

Ver. 26. Then shalt thou say unto them, I presented my supplication.] This was to tell part of the truth only (which might lawfully be done), and not to tell an officious, or at least an oblique lie, as some would make it to be.

Ver. 27. So they left off speaking with him.] Indigni utique qui ultra monerentur. The princes were far worse than the king, ^{a} who yet himself was one of the best. They therefore were slain by the Babylonian princes, when the king's life was preserved, though with the loss of his eyes, which yet might be a means to open the eyes of his mind.

^{a} In una impietate solum stabiles.

Ver. 28. So Jeremiah abode in the court of the prison.] Which now God had made to him a sanctuary of safety, and a very Bethlehem, or house of bread. God can easily turn a prison into a paradise, and brown bread and water into manchet and wine, as he did to the martyrs. One of them dated his letter thus, From the delectable orchard of the Leonine prison.

Chapter 39

Ver. 1. In the ninth year of Zedekiah.] See on #2Ki 25:1.

Came Nebuchadnezzar.] He came to the siege in person, but soon after retired himself to Riblah, i.e., to Antioch in Syria, there to take his pleasure, and therehence to send supplies to his forces as need required.

Ver. 2. And in the eleventh year.] See on #2Ki 25:2. The sacking of Jerusalem occurred four hundred and nineteen years after the building of the temple, (1004 to 588 BC) in the forty-seventh Olympiad, and when Tarquinius Priseus was king of Rome.

The city was broken up.] See on #2Ki 25:4.

Ver. 3. In the middle gate.] Called the second gate (#Zep 2:10; see #Jer 1:15). Jeremiah lived to see many of his prophecies fulfilled. Jerusalem was taken in or about the fortieth year of his prophesying, as it was afterwards by the Romans, in or about the fortieth year after our Saviour's ministry started.

Even Nergalsharezer, Shamgarnebo.] Here we have a list of the Babylonian princes who first broke into the city. Their names are harsh and barbarous (such as are now to our ears the Turkish Bashaws, Beglerbegs, Sanzacks, &c.), but good enough for such to hear as would not yield to the sweet name and counsel of a gracious God. Those names that have Sar or Rab in them are deemed to be names of office; as Sarezzer, master of the treasures; Rabinag, master of the magicians, &c.

Ver. 4. When Zedekiah the king saw them.] Not entered, but ready to enter. See #2Ki 25:4.

He went out the way of the plain.] Intending likely for Egypt; but his journey was shortened. So was Muliasses, king of Tunis, when fleeing from his son Amidas, he was discovered by the sweet perfumes he had about him; and being brought back, had, like Zedekiah, his eyes put out with a burning hot iron.

Ver. 5. But the Chaldeans pursued.] See on #2Ki 25:5.

Ver. 6. See on #2Ki 25:6,7.

Ver. 7. See on #2Ki 25:7.

Ver. 8. See on #2Ki 25:8.

Ver. 9. See on #2Ki 25:11,12.

Ver. 10. See on #2Ki 25:11,12. Sic vides miras rerum vices. See what a wonderful turn of things was here on the sudden, and how that of Seneca was here made good, Una dies interest inter magnam civitatem et nullam, There is but a day's difference sometimes between a great city and no city. Josephus and some others say that the Rechabites, as men peaceable, and given much to contemplation, were also left in the land. This destruction of Jerusalem was, saith Oecolampadius, a kind of type of the general judgment. For like as in Jerusalem the wicked perished, but the poor and peaceable were not only spared, but enriched, so shall it be at that day.

Ver. 11. Now Nebuchadnezzar...gave charge, &c.] He had heard of Jeremiah and his preaching by those Jews that, by the prophet's persuasion, fell to the Chaldees; and now that promise took place, I will cause the enemy to entreat thee well: {#Jer 15:11}

“ Tandem bona causa triumphat.”

Ver. 12. Take him, and look well to him.] A wicked man, we see, may be loving and liberal to a godly minister for self ends. Let no man, therefore, rest in it alone as a sure sign of an honest man.

Ver. 13. So Nebuzaradan, &c.] These, who before were so active in destroying the city, are now no less active in honouring the good prophet. All things work together for good to the godly: their greatest enemies shall one day do them honour.

Ver. 14. They sent and took Jeremiah.] But why did they not also loose him from his bonds? {#Jer 40:1}

And committed him unto Gedaliah.] Who being a chieftain among the Jews, fell to the Chaldees (as it may seem) before the city was taken, according to Jeremiah's counsel, and is now set over the land, and hath the prophet Jeremiah committed to his care.

The son of Ahikam.] Who had rescued the prophet. {#Jer 26:24} {See Trapp on "Jer 26:24"}

Ver. 15. Now the word of the Lord.] Which is never bound, {#2Ti 2:9} but runneth and is glorified. {#2Th 3:1}

Ver. 16. Go and speak unto Ebedmelech the Ethiopian.] Who yet was an Israelite indeed by his faith and religion, as was likewise Jether the Ishmaelite. {#Ich 7:17 2Sa 17:25}

Thus saith the Lord of hosts.] Who will not fail to give, unto him who showeth kindness to any prophet of his, a prophet's reward. {#Mt 10:41,42}

Behold, I will bring my words upon this city for evil.] See #Jer 20:16 44:27.

And they shall be accomplished in that day before thee.] Thou shalt see it, but shalt survive it. And this prophecy may be unto us instead of a most certain history.

Ver. 17. But I will deliver thee in that day.] From the sword, the famine, and the pestilence. "A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand, but it shall not come nigh thee; only with thine eyes shalt thou behold and see the reward of the wicked"; {#Ps 91:7,8} and that the Lord is sure, though slow, tarditatem supplicii gravitate compensans. {a}

And thou shalt not be delivered into the hands of those men.] Zedekiah's courtiers, who do bear thee an aching tooth for thy kindness to my prophet, and have vowed revenge.

{a} Val. Max.

Ver. 18. For I will surely deliver thee.] Heb., Delivering, deliver thee. It would be a great stay of mind, if God should say the same to us in particular and by name, as he doth here to this Ethiopian. And yet he saith no less to us in the precious promises, which we are by faith to appropriate.

But thy life shall be for a prey unto thee.] Pro lucre cessura est. For saving my prophet's life, thou shall have thine own; so sure a gain is godliness.

Because thou hast put thy trust in me.] What may not faith have at God's hands? Those that trust him, do, after a sort, engage him to deliver them, and to do them good.

Chapter 40

Ver. 1. The word of the Lord which came to Jeremiah.] This word, what it was, Jeremiah will show, {#Jer 42:7} after the circumstances of his enlargement related, and other matters of story premised. Vatablus rendereth it, Actio quam gessit Dominus cum Ieremiah.

After that Nebuzaradan had let him go from Ramah.] Which was the place of rendezvous, whither Jeremiah was also brought, with the rest of the captives, and manacled also—as he was found in the court of the prison—but soon set free and dismissed. A difference shall one day—at that great day especially—be discerned "between the righteous and the wicked; between him that serveth God, and him that serveth him not." {#Mal 3:18} Jeremiah is here, by some oversight of the officers, contrary to Nebuchadnezzar's command, {#Jer 39:11,14} but not without a special providence of God, brought bound to Ramah, ad opprobrium gentis, et in gloriam suam: that the Jews, now captives, and to be carried to Babylon, might see their madness in persecuting so true a prophet, and persevering in their sinful practices, to their so utter undoing, against all admonition.

Ver. 2. And the captain of the guard took Jeremiah.] Took him and loosed him, as he should have done before.

Saying, The Lord thy God hath pronounced this evil upon this place.] Oratio militaris, sed bene theologica. A strange speech to come out of such a man's mouth. How could the captives present hear it, and not be affected with it? Thus Balaam's ass sometimes rebuked his master's madness, but to little good effect.

Ver. 3. Now the Lord hath brought it, and done according.] A bad man, we see, may speak piously. Samuel himself could not have spoken more gravely, severely, divinely, than the fiend did to Saul. {#1Sa 28:13-20} Well then may lewd men be good preachers, &c.

Ver. 4. And now, behold, I loose thee.] I dismiss thee with all due honour, as a true prophet, however undervalued and afflicted by thine unworthy countrymen.

Come, and I will look well unto thee.] Heb., I will set mine eye upon thee, that is, I will give thee singular respect, and observe thee to the utmost.

Behold, all the land is before thee.] What could Pharaoh say more to Joseph? {#Ge 47:6} or Abraham to Lot? {#Ge 13:9}

Ver. 5. Now while he was not yet gone back.] But yet showed by his looks or otherwise, {a} that he was not willing to go to Babylon; Nebuchadnezzar, who had already set his eyes upon him, {as #Jer 40:4} perceiving it, said,

Go back unto Gedaliah.] Who shall both protect thee and provide for thee.

So the captain of the guard gave him victuals,] i.e., Necessaries for his journey; for he came out of prison nudus tanquam ex mari, bare and needy.

And a reward.] Or, A present, fit for a prophet, donum honorarium, such as they used to give the seers, {#1Sa 9:8 1Ki 14:3} and such as he might safely and comfortably take, as from God himself, who had promised it. {#Jer 15:11}

Ver. 6. Then went Jeremiah unto Gedaliah.] Blessing himself from the Chaldeans' proffered kindness (as Luther also did alate from the great Turk, who invited him to him, and promised him to be his good lord), he maketh Moses's choice, {#Heb 11:25} and David's, {#Ps 84:10} rather to abide with God's poor people in the promised land, than to be great in the court of Babylon. How few at this day would have been of his mind!

Ver. 7. Now when all the captains of the forces that were in the fields.] The dispersed Jews, with their captains and centurions, such as had lain lurking during the siege, or had fled when Zedekias did, and escaped.

Heard that the king of Babylon had made Gedaliah.] Whom they knew to be a pious and prudent man; and would be a father unto them instead of a king. Nebuchadnezzar might have set a Babylonian governor, who would have ruled them with rigour. But God, in mercy to his poor people, moved him to make choice of this man, famous for his mildness and integrity; to whom therefore they resort, but not all for the same good end, as the sequel showed; for Ishmael was a very Judas.

Ver. 8. Then they came to Gedaliah to Mizpah.] Where Samuel dwelt, {#1Sa 7:16,17} not far from Shiloh.

Even Ishmael.] Who was of the blood royal {#Jer 41:1} and envied Gedaliah his so great preferment, whom he looked upon for a transfuga, deserter and a traitor, for revolting to Nebuchadnezzar, which yet he did in obedience to God's word by the prophet Jeremiah.

Ver. 9. And Gedaliah sware unto them,] viz., That what he spake was from his heart, and out of good affection to them all.

Ver. 10. As for me, behold, I will dwell at Mizpah.] To agitate for you, to the Chaldeans; and to secure you to mine utmost.

But ye, gather ye wine.] Humanissima haec sunt, pia, et utilissima Gedaliae verba ad populum. It was a wonder the Chaldees, after so long a siege, had left any fruits behind them. Soldiers today lay all waste mostly.

Ver. 11. Likewise when all the Jews.] Who had fled into foreign parts, for help and safety.

Ver. 12. And gathered wine and summer fruits very much.] So is God wont to reward those that love their country.

Ver. 13. Moreover Johanan came to Gedaliah to Mizpah.] Ishmael perhaps had solicited them to take part with him.

Ver. 14. That Baalis the king of the Ammonites.] Set on work by Beelzebub the prince of devils to hinder so good a work.

But Gedaliah believed them not.] No more did Julius Caesar those that forewarned him of the conspiracy against him. The Duke of Guise, the same day that he was slain by the command of Henry III, King of France, had a scroll laid under his napkin, as he sat at dinner, wherein was written, that his life was in danger; he underwrote: They dare not; and so threw it from him under the table. But it proved that they both dared to do it, and did do it, the same day. {a} Gedaliah, likely, thought that Ishmael dared not attempt anything against him, because of the Babylonians; besides, he knew his own innocence, and Ishmael's pretended familiarity with him, which he might think the other captains envied. Sure it is, that good Gedaliah was too secure. Nam qui omnia credit, et qui nihil credit, ex aequo peccat. {b} It is no less a fault to believe nothing, than to believe everything; sine vano publica fama. Reports are neither to be overly heeded, nor overly slighted, especially where life is concerned.

{a} Speed, 1212.

{b} Seneca.

Ver. 15. Let me go, I pray thee, and I will slay Ishmael.] He offereth his service for the slaying of Ishmael, and it had been happy he had done it, sed immodico obsequio sibi fidem derogat, his forwardness rendereth him suspected. Gedaliah seemeth to have been of our Queen Elizabeth's temper, who was heard to profess, that she could believe nothing of her people that parents would not believe of their children. {a}

{a} Camden.

Ver. 16. Thou shalt not do this thing.] This just man would not have any man die indicta causa, before his cause had been heard, were he never so wicked.

For thou speakest falsely of Ishmael.] So Gedaliah thought, but it proved otherwise. Ishmael is pleaded for, but without cause. Queen Elizabeth complained that in truth she had oft found treason; so shall all princes, who therefore had need to be very cautious, and yet not overly credulous. King's craft is not easily learned.

Chapter 41

Ver. 1. Now it came to pass in the seventh month.] Within two or three months after the destruction of Jerusalem. So soon did this wicked wretch, so spurred on by ambition, which ever rideth without reins, renew the miserable fate of his forlorn country. And the like did Barcocab and his seditious complices after the last devastation, thereby bringing upon themselves again the Roman forces, who thereupon, under Adrian the emperor, utterly took away both their place and their nation.

That Ishmael of the seed royal.] And therefore affecting the kingdom, or at least the ruledom; and envying that Gedaliah—a new man, or mushroom rather, -should be preferred before him.

And the princes of the king.] Who had been princes and grandees, as the Hebrew hath it, in Zedekiah's days, with whom likely they fled and escaped, stealing away by night, though he could not. {#2Ki 25:4}

Even ten men with him.] Whom Ishmael had promised probably to restore their principalities when he should be king, or viceroy at least under Baalis King of Ammon, the great engineer of all the ensuing mischief wrought by Ishmael and these ten desperadoes together with their retinue.

Came unto Gedaliah.] To whom before they had done homage, and now came pretending to give him a friendly visit.

“ Tuta frequensque via est per amici fallere nomen:

Tuta frequensque licet sit via, crimen habet.”

And there they did eat bread,] i.e., They feasted. Much treachery and cruelty hath been exercised at feasts. Absalom slew Amnon at a feast; so did Zimri King Elah; so did Alexander Philotas; so doth the Great Turk many of his bashaws; the black gown is cast upon them as they sit with him at supper, and then they are strangled. {a}

{a} Turkish History.

Ver. 2. Then arose Ishmael.] Taking the opportunity when Gedaliah and his guests were mero graves, saith Josephus, merry with wine, and so less able to resist.

And the ten men that were with.] They and their followers being pugnaces et audaces, barbarous and brutish persons, skilful to destroy. {#Eze 21:31}

And smote Gedaliah the son of Ahikam.] See on #Jer 41:1.

And slew him whom the king of Babylon had made governor.] Yea, for that very cause, per invidiam et libidinem regnandi. So true is that of the tragedian, {a} “Simul ista mundi conditor posuit Deus, Odium atque regnum.”

{a} Sen. in Thebaide.

Ver. 3. Ishmael also slew all the Jews that were with him.] Not the Chaideans only. His sword knew no difference; but, being fleshed in blood, he killed all that came in his way. And the rather that his wickedness might not be noticed— mortui non mordent -but that he might carry on his bloody design the better.

Ver. 4. And no man knew it.] Heb., A man knew not. See on #Jer 41:3.

Ver. 5. That there came certain from Shechem and from Shiloh.] Innocent men, qui ne verbulo quidem immanem bestiam offenderant, who had not so much as by the least word offended this brutish, butcherly man; but came in the simplicity of their hearts to worship God, and to wait upon Gedaliah by the way, which last seemeth to be Ishmael's main quarrel against them. See here #Ec 9:12. {See Trapp on "Ec 9:12"}

Having their beards shaven, and their clothes rent, and having cut themselves.] These might be well minded men, though partly through ignorance of the law in those blind times, and partly through excess of passion, they went too far, heathen-like, in their outward expressions of sorrow {#Le 19:27 De 14:1} for the public calamity of their country.

To bring them to the house of the Lord, / i.e., To the place where God's house lately had been, though now razed and ruined, that there they might worship as they could, and bewail the desolation of the city and temple, as Jerome saith the Jews did yearly the destruction of the second temple, bribing the Roman soldiers that kept it to let them come to the place and weep over it.

Ver. 6. And Ishmael came forth of Mizpah to meet them.] This was another manner of meeting than that at Mizpah in Samuel's days. {#Isa 7:3-6} O tempora! O mores!

Weeping all along as he went.] Oh deep dissimulation and crocodile's tears! {a} That creature, having killed some living beast, lieth upon the dead body, washeth the head thereof with her warm tears, which she afterwards devoureth together with the body. Tears, saith the author of the Turkish History, {b} speaking of Andronicus, another Ishmael, by nature were ordained to express the heaviness of the heart, flowing from the eyes as showers of rain from the clouds. In good men the most certain signs of greatest grief and sure testimonies of inward torment; but in Andronicus you are not so. You proceed of joy, you promise not to the distressed pity or compassion, but death and destruction. How many men's eyes have you put out! How many have you drowned! How many have you devoured! Thus he; and much more to like purpose.

Come to Gedaliah the son of Ahikam.] This he saith fraudulently, like Sinon in the poet, that he might fish and find out how they stood affected to Gedaliah, whom he so deadly hated, that he slaughtered these poor folk for once owning him, or owing him any service.

{b} Turkish History, fol. 56.

Ver. 7. Ishmael the son of Nethaniah slew them.] This hell hound having once, as other hounds, dipped his tongue in blood, can put no period to his unparalleled cruelty.

He, and the men that were with him.] His slaughter slaves, his assassins to help him; for he alone could not have done this bloody execution, unless he had taken as much time thereunto as that Popish villain did in doing to death those poor Protestants of Calabria, A.D. 1550. For as Ishmael here brought these eighty innocent men into the midst of the city as into a pound, and there slew them, so eighty-eight poor professors of the truth according to godliness, being all thrust up in one house together, as sheep in a fold, the executioner comes in, saith Mr Foxe, and among them takes one and blindfolds him with a muffler about his eyes, and so leads him forth to a larger place, where he commandeth him to kneel down, which being done, he cutteth his throat, and so leaving him half dead, and taking his butcher's knife and muffler all of gore blood, cometh again to the rest, and so leadeth them one after another till he had despatched them all. {a}

{a} Acts and Mon., 859.

Ver. 8. But there were ten men found among them.] Qui miro astu sibi ab indigna morte provident, who pleaded for their lives, were spared.

Slay us not, for we have treasures in the field.] And these we will willingly part with for the redemption of our lives. They knew that soldiers would do much for money, and what is wealth in comparison with life? Wicked worldlings would say the like to death, if their tale might be heard. Henry Beaufort, Cardinal, Bishop of Winchester, and Chancellor of England, in the reign of Henry VI, perceiving that he must die, murmured at death, that his riches could not relieve him till a further time. {a}

So he forbare, and slew them not.] Ambition covetousness strove for mastery in this man, and here covetousness conquereth cruelty.

This also was it that put him upon carrying his poor countrymen captive, as hoping to make prize of them.

{a} Foxe's Mart., vol. i. p. 925

Ver. 9. Now the pit...was it which Asa the king had made for fear of Baasha.] He had made it for some unknown use in the wars, and now it was filled with the dead bodies of men; for a punishment, say some, of his confederating with Benhadad King of Syria. Ut semper impiorum foedera et consilia nobis sint suspecta.

Ver. 10. Then Ishmael carried away captive.]

“Auri sacra fames quid non mortalia cogit Pectora?”

Even the king's daughters.] His own kinswomen, whom the Babylonian had spared. It may be he meant to marry one of them, as our Richard III would have done his niece Elizabeth, and so to have reigned in her right.

And all the people that remained in Mizpah.] Who found less favour from a false brother than they had done from a professed enemy; so hath the Church ever done from heretics than from heathens.

Ver. 11. But when Jehanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains, heard of all the evil.] Ishmael did what he could to conceal the wickedness till he had gotten away with his prize; but rumour outran him, even “Fama, malum quo non aliud velocius ullum.”

Ver. 12. Then they took all the men, and went to fight with Ishmael.] This act of theirs carrieth the commendation of fortitude, of charity, and of piety. Like as did that of Abraham in rescuing Lot; of Gideon and Jehoshaphat in delivering the Israelites from their barbarous and blood-thirsty enemies; of Scanderbeg, Hunniades, Gustavus King of Sweden, &c. Unless Ishmael and Johanan did as Ishmael the Persian King of Selymus, and the Great Turk, who, fighting for the empire of the East, masked their aspiring thoughts under the veil of zeal to their religion. {a} It well appeareth now to the world that neither of them were right, whatever they pretended.

And they found him by the great waters that are in Gibeon.] Where, in David's days, those youngsters of Helkathhazzurim had sheathed their swords in their fellows' bowels. {#2Sa 2:16}

{a} Turkish History, 515.

Ver. 13. Then they were glad.] God, when he pleaseth, can suddenly, and beyond all hope, exhilarate men in the midst of miseries, and give deliverance. The like hereunto befell the poor Christian captives when Hunniades had overthrown Mesites, the Turkish general. {a}

{a} Ibid., 269.

Ver. 14. So all the people cast about and returned.] Their hearts were with Johanan before the battle, as the Athenians' were with Flaminius the Roman general, who came to rescue them, though their bodies were detained by the tyrants within the walls of their city.

Ver. 15. But Ishmael the son of Nethaniah escaped.] But with what honour, with what conscience could this Judas live among the Ammonites? Surely this defeat could not but be more shame to him before the King of Ammon, and more vexation to his proud heart, than death itself. The like befell Stukely, the English traitor, in Spain.

Ver. 16. Then took Johanan all the remnant.] This evil act of theirs doth quite overturn the glory of the former; while against the ancient command of God, the covenant made with the Chaldees, and the consent of the prophets, they will needs down to Egypt, to lean upon that broken reed that never did them good, but evil.

Ver. 17. And they departed.] They rolled from place to place; but being out of God's precincts they were also out of his protection, and could expect no good.

And they departed, and dwelt in the habitation of Chimham, which is by Bethlehem.] Where it seemeth that David, or Solomon, {#1Ki 2:7} had given him some lands, which he called by his own name, as men love to do, {#Ps 49:11} Goruth Chimham. Josephus saith there is a village near Bethlehem that is still so called. See #2Sa 19:38.

To go to enter into Egypt.] This was to go out of God's blessing, as we use to say, into the world's warm sunshine; this was to put themselves into the punishing hands of the living God.

Ver. 18. Because of the Chaldeans, for they were afraid of them.] But they should rather have "sanctified the Lord God in their hearts, and made him their dread." {#Isa 8:13} "The fear of man bringeth a snare: but whoso putteth his trust in the Lord shall be safe." {#Pr 29:25} {See Trapp on "Pr 29:25"}

Because Ishmael the son of Nethaniah had slain Gedaliah.] And together with him many Chaldeans, whom Johanan and his captains should have cautioned and better guarded; as the king of Babylon would better tell them, they thought, and with it to punish them for their neglect. {a}

{a} Ob incastodiam.

Chapter 42

Ver. 1. Then all the captains of the forces and Johanan.] Or, Even Johanan; he among the rest, and above the rest. Ille huic negotio non interfuit modo, sed etiam praefuit.

And Jezaniah the son of Hoshaiah.] Brother, belike, to that Azariah, {#Jer 43:2} a noble pair of brethren in evil.

And all the people.] Who follow their rulers; as in a beast the whole body followeth the head.

Drew near.] They came as clients use to do for counsel.

Ver. 2. Let, we beseech thee, our supplication be accepted before thee.] Here they seem to humble themselves before Jeremiah the prophet; which, because King Zedekiah did not, he came to ruin. {#2Ch 36:12}

And pray for us unto the Lord thy God.] Good words may be found even in a hellish mouth sometimes. Who would think but these men had spoken what they did unfeignedly, and from their very hearts? whenas it soon after appeared that all was no better than deep dissimulation. They had made their conclusion beforehand to go down to Egypt, only in a pretence of piety, and for greater credit, they would have had God's approbation; which, since they cannot, they will go on with their design however, fall back, fall edge. O most hateful hypocrisy! O contumacy worthy of all men's execration!

Ver. 3. That the Lord thy God may show us the way.] But they had set themselves in the way to Egypt before they came with this request to the prophet: why went they else to Goruth Chimham, the road toward Egypt? {#Jer 41:17} why were they also so peremptory, when they knew God's mind to the contrary? {#Jer 43:7}

And the thing that we may do.] Good words all along; but those, we say, are light cheap: Quid vero verba quaero, facta cum videam? They were as forward to speak fair, as their ancestors were in the wilderness; but oh that there were a heart in this people, saith God, to do as they have said!

Ver. 4. I have heard you; behold, I will pray.] The wisdom from above is persuasible, easy to be entreated, {#Jas 3:18} and good men are ready to every good work. {#Tit 3:1} Jeremiah hoped they might speak their whole hearts, and promiseth to do his best for them, both by praying and prophesying.

Whatsoever thing the Lord shall answer you, I will declare.] Sic veteres nihil ex se vel potuerunt, vel protulerunt. The prophets spake as they were inspired by the Spirit of truth. Christ spake nothing but what was consonant to the Holy Scriptures. The apostles delivered to the churches what they had received of the Lord. {#1Co 11:23} Polycarp told the churches that he delivered nothing to them but what he had received of the apostles. {a}

{a} Irenaeus, lib. iii.; Eccles. Hist., lib. iv. cap. 14.

Ver. 5. The Lord be a true and faithful witness between us.] Did these men know what it was so solemnly to swear a thing? Or were they stark atheists, thus to promise that with an oath which they never meant to perform?

“ At sperate Deum memorem fandi atque nefandi. ”

Their king, Zedekiah, paid dearly for his perjury to God and men.

Ver. 6. Whether it be good, or whether it be evil,] i.e., Whether it please us or cross us. Veniat, veniat verbum Domini: et submittemus ei, sexcenta si nobis essent colla, said a good man once—that is, Let God’s Word come to us once and he shall be obeyed, whatever come of it. These in the text seem to say as much, but they say it only; neither was it much to be liked that they were so free of their promises, and all in their own strength, without any condition of help from heaven: as if the matter had been wholly in their own hands, and they had free will to whatsoever good purpose or practice.

“ O caecas mentes hominum!”

“O the blind mind of men”

We will obey the voice of the Lord.] Yes, as far as a few good words will go.

“ Pollicitis dives quilibet esse potest.”—Ovid.

Ver. 7. And it came to pass that after ten days.] So long God held his holy prophet in request; and so he doth still his best servants many times, thereby tying, as it were, the sacrifice to the horns of the altar. How impatient those wretched roysters were of such a delay, we may well imagine (the Chinese use to whip their gods when they will not hear and help them forthwith); but God held them off as unworthy of any answer, and seemed by his silence to say unto them, as in #Eze 20:3, "Are ye come to inquire of me? As I live, saith the Lord, I will not be inquired of by you."

Ver. 8. And all the people, from the least unto the greatest.] For the Word of God belongeth to all of all sorts; and as the smaller fish bite first, so the poor are evangelized {#Mt 11:5} when the richer stand off.

Ver. 9. Unto whom ye sent me to present your supplication.] Heb., To make your supplication fall in his presence. This I have not ceased to do ever since, but had no answer till now; and it may be that now you may the better regard it. Cito data eito vilescunt. Soon given, soon worthless.

Ver. 10. Then will I build you.] Promittitur felicitatio; parabola ab architectura et agricultura desumpta. God promiseth to bless and settle them by a twofold similitude, used also by the apostle, {#1Co 3:9} "Ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building." See #Jer 24:6.

For I repent me of the evil.] A term taken from men, {#Ge 6:6} though repentance in men is a change of the will; but repentance in God is only the willing of a change, mutatio rei, non Dei. See #Jer 18:8.

Ver. 11. Fear not the king of Babylon.] See on #Jer 41:18.

For I am with you to save you.] Not only to protect you from the Babylonian, but also to incline his heart to clemency toward you.

{#Jer 42:12}

Ver. 12. And I will shew mercies unto you.] Tender mercies, such as proceed from the heart, and of a parent, nay, a mother. This was more than all the rest.

Ver. 13. But if ye say, We will not dwell in this land.] Because more barren than Egypt, and besides beset with many and mighty enemies

Neither obey the voice of the Lord your God.] Which you ought to do, whatever come of it, since rebellion is as witchcraft. {#Isa 15:22,23}

Ver. 14. Saying, No; but we will go into the land of Egypt.] Infamous for idolatry, luxury, and the oppression of your ancestors there, besides God's express prohibition and {#De 17:16} commination of it, as the last and greatest plague. "The Lord shall bring thee unto Egypt." {#De 28:68}

And there will we dwell.] The prophet now, by their looks, or some other way, perceived their purpose so to do, whatever they had promised. {#Jer 42:5,6}

Ver. 15. If ye wholly set your faces.] As now I see ye do, and shall therefore tell you what to trust unto; with the froward God will wrestle. {#Ps 18:26}

Ver. 16. Then it shall come to pass, that the sword which ye feared shall overtake you there.] Categorice intonat propheta. God hath long hands; neither can wicked men anywhere live out of the reach of his rod.

And the famine whereof ye were afraid.] Egypt was very fertile, the granary of the world, and yet God could cause a famine there; he hath treasures of plagues for sinners, and can never be exhausted.

Ver. 17. They shall die by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence.] Three threats, answerable to those three promises, {#Jer 42:10-12} in case of their obedience.

Ver. 18. As mine anger and my fury hath been poured forth,]{ a} scil., Like scalding lead or burning bell-metal, {b} which runneth fiercely, spreadeth far, and burneth extremely.

Upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem.] Out of which fire I have late pulled you as a brand; the smell thereof is yet upon your clothes, as it were: Cavete. Beware.

{a} Metaph. a metallis.

{b} The substance of which bells are made; an alloy of copper and tin, the tin being in larger proportion than in ordinary bronze.

Ver. 19. Go ye not into Egypt.] Be ruled, or you will rue it when you have learned their evil manners, and shall perish in their punishments. It is better for you to be in cold irons at Babylon than to serve idols in Egypt at never so much liberty. Your fathers brought a golden calf thence; Jeroboam brought two.

Ver. 20. For ye dissembled in your hearts.] Heb., Ye seduced in your souls or in your minds. The Vulgate hath it, You deceived your souls, and not God, by playing fast and loose with him, by dealing with him ac si puer esset, scurra, vel morio, and if he should be a boy, a buffoon or an idiot.

Ver. 21. But ye have not obeyed the voice of the Lord.] Nay, you take a clean contrary course, as if ye would despitefully spit in the face of Heaven, and wrestle a fall with the Almighty.

Ver. 22. Now, therefore, know certainly that ye shall die.] In running from death ye shall but run to it, as Jonah did.

“ Quo fugis, Encelade? quaeunque accesseris orss, Sub Iove semper eris. ”

Chapter 43

Ver. 1. And it came to pass, that when Jeremiah had made an end, &c.] See here how wicked men, and hypocrites especially, grow worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived. Balaam being resolved to curse, however, went not as at other times but set his face toward the wilderness. {#Nu 24:1,2} Now he would build no more altars, but curse whatever came of it; so would these refractories, without God's good leave, go down to Egypt, putting it to the venture. Jeremiah's sweet words were even lost upon them.

Ver. 2. Then spake Azariah.] See on #Jer 42:1.

And all the proud men.] Pride is the root of rebellion. See #Jer 13:15. These men's pride budded, {as #Eze 7:10} and as the leprosy, brake forth in their foreheads. See #Ho 7:1. {See Trapp on "Ho 7:1"}

Saying unto Jeremiah, Thou speakest falsely.] By this foul aspersion, not proven at all, they seek to discredit his prophecy, like as the Jews do to this day the New Testament, and the Papists the Book of Martyrs and other monuments of the Church, saying of them, So many lines, so many lies.

Ver. 3. But Baruch, the son of Neriah, setteth thee on against us.] A likely matter. What should Baruch gain by that? but malice careth not how truly or rationally it speaketh or acteth, so it may gall or kill Jeremiah and Baruch must be said to be in league together, and to collude for a common disturbance, like as the Papists say Luther and Zuinglius did; whereas they knew nothing one of another for a long time after that they began to stickle against Popery in several climates; and when they did hear of one another, they differed exceedingly, in the doctrine of the sacrament especially.

Ver. 4. So Johanan the son of Kareah, &c.] Nothing is more audacious and desperate than a hypocrite when once discovered. Now these subdoli show themselves in their colours, appear in their likeness, going on end with their work.

Ver. 5. But Johanan...took all the remnant of Judah.] Whose preservation had been but a reservation to further mischief, a just punishment of their incorrigibleness.

Ver. 6. And Jeremiah the prophet, and Baruch the son of Neriah.] This was not without a special providence of God, that these desperadoes might still have a prophet with them, for the making of them the more inexcusable. If it befall any of God's faithful servants to be hurried whither they would not, as it did Jeremiah and Baruch here, Paul also and Peter, {#Joh 21:18} Ignatius, Polycarp, and other prisoners and sufferers for the truth in all ages, let them comfort themselves with these examples.

Ver. 7. Thus came they even to Tahpanhes.] A chief city of Egypt, called also Hanes. {#Isa 30:4} Jerome calleth it Tunis, and Herodotus, Daphnis Pelusiae.

Ver. 8. Then came the word of the Lord unto Jeremiah in Tahpanhes, saying.] And although many more words besides came to him while he was there, and many remarkable passages happened, yet the Holy Ghost has recorded no more thereof than what we find in this and the next chapter.

Ver. 9. Take great stones in thine hand.] Bricks, wherewith Egypt abounded, as being much of it muddy by reason of the inundation of the river Nile; hence also their chief city was called Pelusium, or Daphnis Pelusiae. See #Jer 43:7. It is ordinary with Jeremiah to join paradigms with his prophecies, as here, that they might be the more evident, and take the deeper impression.

Ver. 10. Behold, I will send and take Nebuchadnezzar.] By a secret instinct put into his heart.

And will set his throne upon these stones.] This was dangerous for Jeremiah to say at the court gate, and in the hearing of so many disaffected Jews, who would be ready enough to make the worst of everything. Some say they stoned him with brickbats {a} for this very prophecy.

{a} A piece or fragment of a brick; properly, according to Gwilt, less than one half of its length. It is the typical ready missile, where stones are scarce.

Ver. 11. And when he cometh.] Being sent and set on by God.

He shall smite the land of Egypt.] As for their idolatry, &c., so especially for harbouring these perfidious Jews, whom divine vengeance still pursues hot foot, and will not allow them to live anywhere, since they would not be persuaded to live in God's good land, and by his good laws.

Ver. 12. And I will kindle a fire in the houses of the gods of Egypt.] Goodly gods they were, that could not keep their temples from burning! Diana, said one jestingly, was so busy at the birth of great Alexander that she could not for some while be at Ephesus, where her stately temple was at the same time set on fire by Herostratus.

And he shall array himself with the land of Egypt, as a shepherd putteth on his garment,] i.e., Easily and speedily shall he carry away the spoil of that rich country, there being none there to hinder him, either in taking them or carrying them away:

“Pastor enim secure portat tectumque, laremque.”

Ver. 13. He shall break also the images of Bethshemesh.] Or, Heliopolis, where the sun was worshipped with great superstition, as Herodotus {a} writeth. The Hebrews also called this city On, or Aven—that is, vanity or iniquity—as well they might, for the abominable idolatry there committed. Josephus {b} saith, that five years after this prophecy, Nebuchadnezzar, who had Egypt given him as pay for his pains at Tyre, invaded Egypt; and the king thereof being slain, he set up another there, and took the Jews that remained alive away into Babylon.

Chapter 44

Ver. 1. The word that came to Jeremiah.] No word of comfort—how could it be, as long as they lived in open rebellion against the Lord?—but all of reproof and threatening. For what reason? they were obdurate and obstinate, and did daily proficere in peius, grow worse and worse.

Which dwell at Migdol.] To these chief cities Jeremiah resorted to speak unto them. Noph, alias Moph {#Ho 9:6} is held to be Memphis, now Alcair.

Ver. 2. Ye have seen all the evils that I have brought upon Jerusalem.] And should have been warned by this exemplum terrificum, dreadful instance of mine indignation. They that will not take example, are worthily made examples.

Ver. 3. Because of their wickedness.] That root of all their wretchedness.

Ver. 4. Howbeit I sent unto you all my servants.] Here the badness of men and goodness of God come equally to be considered.

Saying, O do not this abominable thing which I hate.] It were happy if this saying of God were always shrilly sounding in our ears, whenever we are about to do anything that is evil; it would surely be a notable retentive from vice.

Ver. 5. But they hearkened not.] See #Jer 7:24,26.

Ver. 6. Wherefore my fury and mine anger was poured forth.] A metaphor from metals. See #Jer 42:18.

Ver. 7. Wherefore commit you this evll against your souls?] This land desolating, soul destroying sin of idolatry.

Ver. 8. In that ye provoke me to wrath.] This is a most pithy and piercing sermon all along, not unlike that preached by Stephen, for the which he was stoned, {#Ac 7:54,57,58} and likely enough that this was Jeremiah's last sermon also.

Ver. 9. Have ye forgotten the wickedness of your fathers?] Mira hic verborum apparet emphasis. What a powerful and pressing discourse is this! Sed surdis fabulam, but they were as a stake in the water that stirreth not.

Ver. 10. They are not humbled.] Not tamed, not affected with attrition, much less with contrition for their sins. This I tell thee, Jeremiah, for to them I am weary with talking to so little purpose. Plectuntur sed non flectuntur: corripiuntur sed non corriguntur.

Ver. 11. Behold, I will set my face against you for evil.] I will be implacable, as you are irreclaimable.

Ver. 12. That have set their faces.] I also will set my face against such, {#Jer 44:11} and they shall all be consumed and fall. Oh what work hath sin made in the world!

Ver. 13. For I will punish them.] Let them never think that they shall one day be settled again in their own country; they could easily come down into Egypt.

“Sed revocare gradum,” &c. “Hic labor,” &c.

I will watch them for ever going back again; let them set their hearts at rest for that matter, it will never be.

Ver. 14. For none shall return, but such as shall escape,] sc., From these fighters against God, Johanan and his complices. The Talmudists tell us—but who told them?—that Nebuchadnezzar, at his conquest of Egypt, sent back into Judea Jeremiah and Baruch, &c.

Ver. 15. Then all the men which knew that their wives had burnt incense.] And by suffering them so to do had consented to what they had done; for qui non, cum potest, prohibet, iubet.

And all the women that stood by.] Mulieres quicquid volunt valde volunt. Women, as they have less of reason than men, so more of passion, being wilful in their way, and oft carrying their men along with them. {a} “ *Sicut ferrum trahit magnes:

Sic masculum suum trahit Agnes.* ”

Answered Jeremiah, saying.] One of the women speaking for the rest; and that might well be one of Zedekiah's daughters, the men conniving, and well content therewith. See #Jer 44:19.

{a} Omne malum ex Gynaecio, All evil is from the women's apartments.

Ver. 16. As for the word which thou hast spoken unto us in the name of the Lord, we will not hearken unto thee.] This is just woman-like. See #Jer 44:15. When man lost his freewill, saith one, woman got it; and whereas there came twelve kabs (measures) of speech at first down from heaven, women ran away with ten of them, say the Rabbis merrily. Here they are very talkative and peremptory; in some there is a strong inclination, a vehement impetus, to whoredom, which the prophet Hosea calleth a spirit of whoredom. Such there was in these women to idolatry; they were fully set upon it.

Ver. 17. But we will certainly do whatsoever thing goeth forth out of our own mouth.] Heb., We will doing do every word that hath gone forth from our mouth; that we may be dicti nostri dominae, as big as our words, our vows especially, {as #Jer 44:25} which we made to worship the queen of heaven, in case we came safe into Egypt.

To burn incense to the queen of heaven.] See #Jer 7:18.

As we have done, we and our fathers, our kings and our princes.] Antiquity is here pleaded, and authority, and plenty and peace. These are now the Popish pleas, and the pillars of that rotten religion. It is the old religion, say they, and hath potent princes for her patrons, and is practised in Rome, the mother Church, and hath plenty and peace where it is professed, and where they have nothing but mass and matins. These are their arguments, but very poor ones, as were easy to evince. But as women, counted the devouter sex, have always carried a great stroke with their husbands, as did Eve, Jezebel, Eudoxia, &c., the women of Antioch could much against Paul and Barnabas; {#Ac 13:50} so the people are indeed a weighty but unwieldy body, slow to remove from what they have been accustomed to. {a} The Irish will not be persuaded to put gears and harness on their horses, but will have the plough still tied to their tails as they have been; neither in matters of religion will they be drawn to leave their old mumpsimus {b} for the new sumpsimus, {c} so powerful is usage, and so sweet our present though perverse opinions and persuasions.

For then had we plenty of victuals.] Just so doth the Church of Rome borrow her mark from the market's plenty or cheapness of all things. But one chief reason of that is the scarcity of money that was in our fathers' days, and the plenty thereof that is in ours, by means of the rich mines in the West Indies, not discovered till the days of Henry VII. Holinshed saith that some old men he knew who told of times in England when it was accounted a great matter that a farmer could show five shillings or a noble together in silver.

And were well, and saw no evil.] Ubi utilitas ibi pietas, saith Epictetus; and deos quisque sibi utiles cudit, saith another: for profit men will be of any religion. If the belly may be filled, the back fitted, &c., modoferveat olla, so the pot may boil, much will be yielded to. {d} It is well observed that the Papists are most corrupt in those things where their profit, ease, or honour is engaged. In the doctrine of the Trinity, and other points that touch not upon these, they are sound.

{a} Plus valet malum inclitum quam bonum insolitum.

{b} One who obstinately adheres to old ways, in spite of the clearest evidence that they are wrong; an ignorant and bigoted opponent of reform.

{c} A correct expression taking the place of an incorrect but popular one

{d} Ὅταν το συμφερον εκει το ευσεβες. Si ventri bene, si lateri. -Horat.

Ver. 18. But since we have left off to burn incense to the queen of heaven, we have wanted all things.] This was non causa pro causa. Not unlike hereunto was that gross mistake of certain Lutheran ministers, who not long since, consulting at Hamburg about the causes and cure of Germany's calamities, concluded it was because their images in churches were not adorned enough, which therefore they would procure done. {a}

{a} Burroughs on Hos., tom. i. p. 465.

Ver. 19. And when we burnt incense to the queen of heaven.] So the Papists also call the Virgin Mary, and idolise her, as the word here rendered to worship her doth properly signify: Idoli reiectitii appellatorem in eam transferentes.

Did we make her cakes without our men?] i.e., Without our husbands' privity and approbation. But is that a sufficient excuse? Should not God be obeyed rather than men? A wife is not to perform such blind obedience to her husband as Plutarch prescribeth, when he layeth it as a law of wedlock on the wife to acknowledge and worship the same gods, and none else, but those whom her husband honoureth and reputeth for gods. {a}

{a} Plutarch. Moral., 318.

Ver. 20. Then Jeremiah said unto all the people.] The prophet, without any special command from God, moved with a spirit of zeal, confuteth that blasphemy of theirs, and showeth plainly that idolatry maketh no people happy, but the contrary; though this be an old plea, or rather cavil, answered fully long since by Cyprian against Demetrian, Augustine De Civit. Dei, and Orosius.

Ver. 21. Ye, and your fathers, your kings, and your princes.] This was another thing they stood much upon, that their fathers had done it: so had their grandees. If men can say, "We have sinned with our fathers," they think it is enough. The heretic Dioscurus cried out, I hold with the fathers, I am cast out with the fathers, &c. Yea, Jerome once desired leave of Augustine to err with seven fathers whom he found of his opinion. But what saith the Scripture? "Be not ye the servants of men." {#1Co 7:23} And what said a great politician? I will not live by example, but by rule; neither will I pin my faith on another's sleeve, because I know not whither he may carry it.

Did not the Lord remember them?] When you thought he had forgot them. Sin may sleep a long time, like a sleeping debt, not called for of many years, &c.

Ver. 22. So that the Lord could no longer bear.] His abused mercy turned into fury. See #Jer 15:6.

Ver. 23. Because ye have burnt incense, &c.] See #Jer 42:21 43:7.

Ver. 24. Hear the word of the Lord.] Not my word only. See on #Jer 44:20.

Ver. 25. Ye and your wives.] Who ought to be the better, but are much worse the one for the other, the devil having broken your head with your own rib.

We will surely perform our vows.] A little better than many Popish votaries (and others also not a few) do today; not unlike him in Erasmus, who in a storm promised the Virgin a picture of wax as big as St Christopher, but when he came to shore would not give a tallow candle. {a}

{a} Erasm. Col. in Nauf.

Ver. 26. Behold, I have sworn by my great name.] Jehovah, my incommunicable name, my proper name, or by myself, and that is no small oath.

Ver. 27. Behold, I will watch over them for evil.] I will watch them a shrewd turn, as we say. I will take my time to hit them when I may most hurt them.

Ver. 28. Yet a small number.] Methe mispar; men of number, a poor few: still God reserveth a remnant for royal use.

Shall know whose word shall stand.] Because they are so peremptory and resolute, I shall try it out with them. I shall be as cross as they, yet still in a way of justice.

Ver. 29. That I will punish you in this place.] Which you looked upon as a place of surest security and safeguard, and would not hearken to me opening my bounties bosom to you at home.

Ver. 30. Behold, I will give Pharaohhophra.] Called also Vaphres, and by Herodotus, Apries, being nephew to Necho, who slew Josiah. A very proud prince he saith Apries was, slain by Amasis, who succeeded him. But others gather from this text, and from #Eze 29:19 31:11,15,18, that he was slain by Nebuchadnezzar. Josephus {a} also and Jerome say as much. {b}

Ver. 1. The word that Jeremiah the prophet spake unto Baruch.] It is thought that Jeremiah preached his last when he prophesied in the foregoing chapter the destruction of Pharaohhophra, and together with him of the Jews that were found in Egypt by Nebuchadnezzar. Lapides loquitur. He seemed to them to speaking stones, as the proverb hath it; and therefore they stoned him to death, as Epiphanius and others report. This word that he spoke to Baruch belongeth to #Jer 36:32, and should have been annexed unto it in a natural order, as appeareth both by the date and by the matter. Baruch had, with much pains and patience, first written out Jeremiah's prophecies, and then read them to the people, and afterwards to the princes. For this piece of work he expected belike some good piece of preferment, as the apostles also did for their forsaking all and following Christ. {#Mt 18:1-4 19:27-30 20:21-29, &c.} Thus flesh will show itself in the best, and in many things we offend all. But instead of any such thing, Baruch, together with his master, Jeremiah, was sought for to be slaughtered; and besides, he meets with here a contrary prophecy, whereby, before he is comforted, he is sharply reprov'd, 1. For a dastardly despondency of mind, because his rising expectation, it seems, was frustrated; 2. For a vain, ambitious self-seeking, which was not hid from God.

Ver. 2. Thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel, unto thee, O Baruch.] Whom he knoweth by name, and for whom he hath in store an ample recompense of reward; for never yet did any one do or suffer aught for God's sake, that complained of a hard bargain.

Ver. 3. Thou didst say,] i.e., Thou didst think, like a poor pusillanimous creature as thou art. But Jeremiah could pity him in this infirmity, because it had sometime been his own case, {#Jer 15:10} and may befall the best. Pray for me, I say, pray for me, said Father Latimer, for sometimes I am so fearful and faint hearted that I could even run into a mouse hole.

For the Lord hath added grief to my sorrow.] So do we oft complain, non quia dura sed quia molles patimur, without cause, through feeble-mindedness. And when we speak of our crosses, we are eloquent oft beyond truth; we add, we multiply, we rise in our discourse, as here.

Ver. 4. Behold, that which I have built, &c.] A metaphor, as is before noted, ab architectura et agricultura. I am turning all upside down, and wouldst thou only go free and untouched of the common calamity? It is no whit likely; thou must share with the rest.

Ver. 5. And seekest thou great things for thyself?] This is, saith one, as if a man should have his house on fire, and instead of seeking to quench his house, should go and trim up his chambers; or as if, when the ship is sinking, he should seek to enrich his cabin.

Seek them not.] For what so great felicity canst thou fancy to thyself in things so fading, as the case now stands especially?

But thy life will I give thee for a prey.] Which, in these killing and dying times, in such dear years of time, is no small mercy.

Chapter 46

Ver. 1. The word of the Lord which came to Jeremiah against the Gentiles.] God had at first set him over the nations and over the kingdoms—as a plenipotentiary—"to root out and to pull down, and to destroy and to throw down, to build and to plant." {#Jer 1:10} This power of his the prophet had put forth and exercised against his own nation of the Jews, whom he had doomed to destruction, and lived to see execution done accordingly. Now he takes their enemies, the neighbour nations, to do, telling them individually what they shall trust to. And this indeed the prophet had done before in part, and in fewer words, under the type of a cup of wine to be divided among and drunk up by the nations, {#Jer 25:15-33} but here to the end of Jer.

51. more plainly and plentifully. Isaiah had done the same in effect (Isa. 13-24), Ezekiel also, from Eze. 25-33, that by the mouth of three such witnesses every word might stand, and this burden of the nations might be confirmed. Jeremiah beginneth fitly with the Egyptians, who besides the old enmity, had lately slain good King Josiah, with whom died all the prosperity of the Jewish people, who were thenceforth known, as the Thebans also were after the death of their Epaminondas, only by their overthrows and calamities.

Ver. 2. Against Egypt.] First, That the Jews might not rely on that broken reed, as they did to their ruin, because they would never be warned.

Against the army of Pharaohnecho.] Who had beaten Nebuchadnezzar Priscus at Carchemish, and gotten all the country from Egypt to Euphrates; but was afterwards himself beaten out again, by Nebuchadnezzar II, surnamed Magnus, in the first year of his reign, which was the fourth year of Jehoiakim, who also was glad to become his tributary. {a} Now this overthrow of the Egyptian, who was driven out of all Syria, as far as Pelusium, by the Babylonian, is here foretold.

{a} Joseph., lib. x. cap. 7.

Ver. 3. Order ye the buckler and shield.] So Pharaoh is brought in bespeaking his forces, when he was going to fight against Nebuchadnezzar. Or so the prophet bespeaketh the Egyptians ironically, {a} and by way of scoff; q.d., Do so, but all shall be to no purpose, {b} See the like #Isa 8:9. Congregamini et vincemini. We are assembled and will be conquered. Yea, though upon Pharaoh's shield should be the same inscription that was once upon Agamemnon's, This is the terror of all mortal wights. {c}

Ver. 6. Let not the swift fly away, / i.e., Think to save themselves by flight.

Nor the mighty man escape, / i.e., Think to save himself by his might, be he never so stout hearted.

Toward the north, / i.e., Toward Carchemish, the stage of the war, where Pharaohnecho had beaten Nebuchadnezzar the elder, and is now beaten in the same place by Nebuchadnezzar the younger, alterna victoria in another victory. {a}

{a} Herod., lib. ii., ἀλλοπροσαλλος.

Ver. 7. Who is this that cometh up like a flood?] Pharaoh with his forces is here notably described, vivo sermonum colore, and compared to an impetuous river, that threateneth to overflow and swallow up all. See #Isa 8:7.

Ver. 8. Egypt riseth up like a flood.] Like the Nile. The Egyptians were an ancient, proud, luxurious people.

And he saith, I will go up and cover the earth.] See the like vain vaunts of this proud people, #Ex 15:9,10.

Ver. 9. Come up, ye horses, / i.e., Ye horsemen, all the cavalry of Egypt. {as #Ex 14:7}

And rage.] Or, Bestir yourselves as if ye were wild or mad: instar furiarum discurrere per campos.

The Ethiopians and the Lybians.] The Africans that were confederates and auxiliaries to the Egyptians.

Ver. 10. For this is the day of the Lord God of hosts.] See #Isa 34:5-8.

Ver. 11. Go up unto Gilead, and take balm.] See #Jer 8:22 cf. Ge 37:25; q.d., Thy calamity is no less incurable than ignominious.

Ver. 12. The nations have heard of thy shame.] Of the shameful defeat given thee; so that thou who wast once a terror to them art now a scorn.

For the mighty man hath stumbled against the mighty.] And this is the sum of the talk that goeth of thee.

Ver. 13. The word that the Lord spake.] Another prophecy, but against Egypt also. God had yet a further quarrel to that country for the death of good Josiah; their delivering up Uriah, God's faithful servant, to the sword of Jehoiakim; their idolatry, pride, perfidy, &c.

How Nebuchadnezzar...should come and smite the land of Egypt.] In the twentieth-fifth year of his reign, as Jeremiah also had set forth by a sign. {#Jer 44:30}

Ver. 14. Publish in Noph, and in Tahpanhes.] See #Jer 44:1.

For the sword shall devour roundabout thee.] Egypt was no whit amended by the former discomfiture at Carchemish; therefore is now wholly subdued by the Babylonian conqueror, about three and twenty years after. And the like befell the Greek empire, overturned by the Turks.

Ver. 15. They stood not, because the Lord did drive them.] He struck a panic terror into them; and then no wonder that men flee at the noise of a shaken leaf.

Ver. 16. Yea, one fell upon another.] See #Jer 46:12. In a confused flight it is wont so to be.

And they said.] The auxiliary and stipendiary soldiers said so, when once they saw that there was no good to be done for the Egyptians, Nebuchadnezzar having so wasted all.

Ver. 17. Pharaoh king of Egypt is but a noise,]_{i a} A mere flash, one that vaunteth and vapoureth, and that is all. So of Charles VIII, King of France, Guicciardini saith, that in his expedition to Naples he came into the field like thunder and lightning, but went out like a snuff; more than a man at first, and less than a woman at last.

He hath passed the time appointed.] He let slip his best opportunity, which, in giving battle, is sometimes the loss of all. Charles, King of Sicily and Jerusalem, was for this fault called Carolus Cunctator, i.e., The Delayer.

{a} Strepitus est.

Ver. 18. As I live.] Formula iurandi elliptica, et Deo propria. Let none presume to swear in that sort.

Surely as Tabor is among the mountains.] As Tabor surmounts and commandeth the little hills round about it, and Carmel the adjoining sea, over which it hangeth a promontory, so shall Nebuchadnezzar come into Egypt and subdue the whole country.

Ver. 19. O thou daughter dwelling in Egypt.] But not likely to dwell long there.

Furnish thyself to go into captivity.] Heb., Make thee instruments or implements of captivity. Sarcinis reculisque collectis, prepare to be packing.

Ver. 20. Egypt is like a very fair heifer.] Vitula elegans, a trim bullock; {a} worshipping Apis the bull and Mnevis the cow, and unaccustomed to the yoke of subjection, {as #Ho 10:11} but I shall bring her to it.

Destruction cometh.] Or, Excision from the north cometh, cometh, certo, cito, penitus venit {#Eze 7:6} There come those that shall cut up this fair heifer or fat calf.

{a} Iuvenca petulca.

Ver. 21. Also her hired men in the midst of her like fatted bullocks.] Heb., Bullocks of the stall, not like to do much good service in respect of their luxury and petulancy; fat Eglon had but sluggish soldiers. Campania with her delicacies marred Hannibal's forces. These mercenaries carried themselves as if hired non ad militiam sed saginam. not to fight, but to fat themselves

Ver. 22. The voice thereof (of Egypt) shall go like a serpent.] {a} Submissa voce loquetur. She shall hiss and whisper, as being daunted and damped, scarce able to mutter or utter aught for fear.

{#Isa 29:4}

{a} Vox trepida et prae metu instar serpentum stridula.

Ver. 23. They shall cut down her forest,] i.e., Her many cities. Herodotus telleth of one thousand and twenty cities that were in the land of Egypt in the days of King Amasis.

Because they are more than the grasshoppers.] The Babylonian sellers are; and those many hands will make light work. {a}

{a} Lib. ii.; Diodor., lib. i. cap. 31.

Ver. 24. The daughter of Egypt shall be confounded.] This is, in plain terms, the sum of all that had been said before. {a}

{a} Subiungit epiphonema.

Ver. 25. The Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, saith.] And shall he say and not do? {#Nu 23:19} Shall the word of God be broken {#Joh 10:35}

Ver. 26. Behold, I will punish the multitude of No.] Called populous No, {#Na 3:8} populous as Nineveh; so Galilee of the Gentiles. Some render it nourishing No. {a}

And their kings.] Here Calvin conjectureth that Pharaoh had made many of his princes kings for his greater magnificence; but this came down soon after. A bulging wall is near unto a downfall.

And Pharaoh.] Hophra. {#Jer 44:30}

And all them that trust in him.] As the Jews in Egypt did.

And afterward it shall be inhabited.] Forty years after {#Eze 29:13} -sc., in the days of Amasis, whom Cambyses the Persian conquered, after which it remained subject to the Persian monarchs one hundred and fifty years, saith Eusebius, being but a base and tributary kingdom.

{a} Hodie dicitur Alexandria. Today it is called Alexandria.

Ver. 27. But fear not thou, O my servant Jacob.] If Egypt find so much favour, {as #Jer 46:26} what mayest not thou hope for? See the same, #Jer 30:10.

Ver. 28. Fear thou not, O Jacob, &c.] See #Jer 30:11.

But correct thee in measure, &c.] God dealeth much otherwise with his own people than he doth with unbelievers, whose prosperity, as it is full of thorns, so their adversity is but a foretaste of eternal torment; whereas "all things," even afflictions also, "work together for good to them that love God."

Chapter 47

Ver. 1. Before that Pharaoh smote Gaza.] Called also Gazer and Gazera, having its name not from the Persian Gaza, signifying wealth or treasure, but from a Hebrew word signifying strength. It was first smitten by Pharaoh at his return from Carchemish likely, after he had slain Josiah, and afterwards worsted the Babylonian at Euphrates. Next by Nebuchadnezzar; this and the four other satrapies of the Philistines were overrun then when he came against Egypt. After that it was besieged and taken by Alexander the Great, who laid it waste. Yet was it built again and called Constantia, after the name of Constantine the Great's sister, being one of the chief cities in Syria, and having received the faith. {a}

{a} Euseb., De Vit. Constant., lib. iv.

Ver. 2. Behold, waters rise up out of the north.] The Chaldean, as a mighty torrent, shall overflow the whole country, and bury all as it were in one universal grave of waters, as once at the deluge. So #Isa 8:7. This seemeth to have been done somewhat before Egypt was destroyed, when Moab, Ammon, and Syria, and therein Palestine, drank of the same cup.

Ver. 3. The fathers shall not look back to their children.] Though never so dear to them—φιλτατα the Greeks call them, and the Latins have their filius of φιλος—but shall be solicitous of their own lives only. Qui de Deo ne tantillum quidem fuerant solliciti.

For feebleness of hands.] Through fear and fail of vital spirits, so as to forget natural affection also.

Ver. 4. Because of the day that cometh to spoil all the Philistines.] God will find a time of vengeance to fall upon the wicked enemies of his people, though he bear long with them. Patientia Dei quo diuturnior, eo minacior. "The wicked practiseth against the just, and guasheth upon him with his teeth. The Lord shall laugh at him, for he seeth that his day is coming." {#Ps 37:12,13}

And to cut off from Tyrus and Sidon.] The inhabitants whereof were the Philistines' kinsmen and confederates, but could not rescue them or deliver themselves from the Chaldean conqueror.

The remnant of the country of Caphtor.] These Caphtorim were neither the Cappadocians, the Cyprians, nor the Colchians, as sundry make them; but as of the same lineage with the Philistines, {#Ge 10:13,14} so their complices and confederates, with whom therefore they were to fare alike.

Ver. 5. Baldness is come upon Gaza, / i.e., Extreme grief, which might have been prevented, had she profited by her former calamity. {#Jer 47:1} But till God come in with sanctifying grace, afflictions, those hammers of his, do but beat upon cold iron. {#Le 19:27,28 Jer 16:6}

Ashkelon is cut off.] Or, Is silenced; which was wont to be full of singing, dancing, and loud luring. Here was born, they say, Herod the infanticide, surnamed therefore Ascalonita. {a}

With the remnant of their valley.] Palestine lay most of it low, and was yet to be laid lower.

{a} Adrichom.

Ver. 6. O thou sword of the Lord.] So called because whencesoever it cometh it is bathed in heaven. {#Isa 34:5} See #Jer 25:29 Jud 7:18,20.

How long will it be ere thou be quiet?] Erisne in opere semper? Wilt thou ever be eating flesh and drinking blood? War, the shorter the better. Of the pirates' war, as the Romans called it, Augustine {a} reporteth to the just commendation of Pompey, that it was by him incredibill celeritate et temporis breuitate eonfectum, quickly despatched and made an end of.

{a} Aug., De Civit. Dei.

Ver. 7. How can it be quiet?] Heb., How shalt thou be quiet? Here the prophet quieteth himself howsoever by a humble submission to his holy will, who had put the sword in commission. God's will is the rule of right, neither can force or entreaty prevail aught against it in this world, much less in the world to come, where each one must hold him to his doom, which is irreversible.

Chapter 48

Ver. 1. Against Moab.] That bastardly brood, infamous for their inveterate hatred of God's Israel, at whom they were anciently irked, fretted, vexed, though no way provoked, {#Nu 22:3} whom also they outwitted, by the counsel of Balaam, in the business of Baal-peor, {#Nu 25:1-3,16-18} had been plagued and judged by the kings of Israel, by David especially, as also by Sennacherib, {#Isa 15:1-16:14} but were no whit amended; and are therefore here, and #Eze 25:9, threatened with utter destruction by the Chaldeans, and that very much in a scoffing way; like as they were a proud, petulant, scornful people, despisers of all other nations, but especially of the Jews, their near neighbours and allies.

Woe unto Nebo.] Their oracular city, as it may seem by the name. See #Isa 15:2.

Kiriathaim is confounded.] It is of a dual form, and so seemeth to have been Bipolis, a double city; as was of old Jerusalem, and as are now Rome, Prague, Craeovia.

Misgab is confounded.] It signifieth the high place, and is the same, say some, with Bamoth, {#Nu 21:20} and Selah. {#Isa 16:1}

Ver. 2. There shall be no more praise of Moab.] This may be taken either of a city so called, {a} or of the whole country, as now Muscovia is oft put for all Russia.

In Heshbon they have devised evil against it.] Or better thus, De Heshbone, &c. As concerning Heshbon, they, the Chaldees, have devised evil against it. There is an elegant allusion in the original to the names of the places both in Heshben and in Madmen. {b}

{a} Ariopolis dicta.

Ver. 3. A voice of crying.] They would not cry for their sins: they shall therefore cry for their miseries with desperate and bootless tears, and yet worse one day.

Ver. 4. Moab is destroyed, / i.e., Shall be shortly.

Her little ones have caused a cry to be heard.] While they either are forsaken of their parents, {as #Jer 47:3} or else see them to be slain or carried away captives.

Ver. 5. Continual weeping shall go up.] Heb., Weeping with weeping shall go up—i.e., they shall weep abundantly.

Ver. 6. Flee, save your lives.] Whatever else ye lose.

And be like the heath in the wilderness.] Which is little worth. See #Jer 17:6. Sit there sad and solitary.

Ver. 7. For because thou hast trusted in thy works.] Thy creature confidence and thine idolatry have undone thee.

Chemosh shall go forth into captivity.] Chemosh— unde Κωμος— was the Moabites' god, and is thought to be the same with Bacchus or Priapus. He is here called Chemosh by way of contempt.

Ver. 8. And the spoiler shall come, / i.e., Nebuchadnezzar.

As the Lord hath spoken.] Who hath given him a commission, and made him his executioner.

Ver. 9. Give wings unto Moab.] Let him flea his utmost— addat timor alas: but the Chaldean eagle will easily overcatch him.

Ver. 10. Cursed be he that doeth the work of the Lord deceitfully.] Or, Slackly, or hastingly, to the halves: Late pater haec sententia. The work of destroying Moab is here mainly meant. But the text taketh in all lawful employments; these are God's works, and must be done vigorously, with all our might, in obedience to God, and for his greatest glory. Not soldiers only that have a good cause and in a good calling must likewise take a good courage, and do execution lustily, but magistrates also, who are keepers of both tables of the law, must do right to all without partiality, accounting it better to be counted a busy justice than an honest gentleman. Ministers must look to the ministry which they have received of the Lord, to fulfil the same. {a} Every man in his particular place and station must be "not slothful in business, but fervent in spirit, serving the Lord": non tanquam canis ad Nilum, sed ut Cygnus ad Thamesin: in God's immediate service especially men must stir up themselves to take hold of him, minding the work, and not doing it in a customary, formal, bedulling way. A very heathen {b} could say, Ignavia in rebus divinis est nefaria, Dulness in divine duties is abominable. And Numa, king of the Romans, made a law that none should be careless or cursory in the service of God; and appointed an officer to cry oft to the people at such a time, Hoc agite, Mind what ye are about, and do it to your utmost. He that is ambitious of God's curse, let him do otherwise.

{b} Aristides.

Ver. 11. Moab hath been at ease from his youth.] And his ease hath destroyed him. {as #Pr 1:32} He dwelleth near the mare mortuum, and is become a very mare mortuum, i.e., a dead sea. Because he hath had no changes, therefore he feareth not God. {#Ps 55:19} Sibi constat in facultatibus, &c., he is rich and testy. Here is good booty for the soldiers, who should therefore bestir them.

And he hath settled on his lees.] As having never been turned out of his country, which may well be called his mother, as the lees are called the mother of wine. But now his time is come to be transvasated, to be emptied from vessel to vessel, to be carried captive.

Ver. 12. That I will send him wanderers.] Peregrinantes qui peregre agant eum; the Chaldean vagrants, as he proudly calleth and counteth them; but they shall make a vagrant of him in good earnest.

And shall empty his vessels, &c.] Moab abounded with the best wine; but dwelling so near Sodom, his grapes also became grapes of Sodom and clusters of Gomorrah: his manners were Sodomitish too. It was but time therefore to send those that should empty his vessels and break his bottles, carry him into another country, where he might get a new taste, and his scent be changed.

Ver. 13. As the house of Israel was ashamed of Bethel.] When their golden calf was carried into captivity.

Ver. 14. How say ye, We are mighty?] q.d., Ye have great cause to crack, and to stand upon your pantofle. {a} {as #Jer 48:2,29,30}

{a} A slipper or sandal.

Ver. 15. Moab is spoiled.] Quae hucusque, eadem maiore cum luce repetit. The same again, but with more exornations.

Ver. 16. The calamity of Moab is near to come.] See on #Jer 48:15.

Ver. 17. All ye that are about him, bemoan him.] And that ye may not want a form, say ye, How is the strong staff broken!

Ver. 18. And sit in thirst,] i.e., In want of all things.

Ver. 19. Stand by the way and espy, &c.] What brave rhetoric is here? Tenendum quidem, prophetas et apostolos non affectasse artem dicendi: vide tamen quanta etoquentia peroret Spiritus, Sanctus. {a}

{a} Egregia est prosopopeia.

Ver. 20. Moab is confounded.] See on #Jer 48:15.

Tell it in Arnon.] In the cities standing upon that river.

Ver. 21. And judgment is come upon the plain country.] Such as the most part of Moab was.

Ver. 22. And upon Dibon, and upon Nebo.] These cities beyond Jordan belonged to Israel; but Moab had seized them, and now God's judgment cometh upon them.

Ver. 23. And upon Kiriathaim.] See on #Jer 48:1.

And upon Bethmeon.] "Baiith" Isaiah calleth it. {#Jer 15:2}

Ver. 24. And upon Bazrah.] Called also Bezer. {#Jos 21:36}

Ver. 25. The horn of Moab is cut off,] i.e., His strength, power, glory, kingdoms; his sultans and princes, saith the Chaldee.

Ver. 26. Make ye him drunk.] Ebrietas modis omnibus maledicta. But here is meant a dry drunkenness with the fierce wrath of God. Most things here spoken are to be found in Isaiah, but here more clearly expressed. See #Jer 25:17,21.

Moab also shall wallow in his vomit.] As once he did when drunk with wine to the derision of others, so now he shall when drunk with wrath. It will be a woe time with drunkards one day doubtless.

Ver. 27. For was not Israel a derision unto thee?] sc., When he was carried captive by Shalmaneser, didst not thou make thyself merry in his misery, and compose comedies out of his tragedies?

Was he found among thieves?] Was he therefore obnoxious because religious? What reason hadst thou to shout after him, as one would do after a thief that is taken stealing?

Thou skippest for joy.] Thou shakest thyself, that is, thy head; or thou laughest till thou art ready to break thy midriff; {a}

“ Petulanti splene cachinnas.”

{a} Impotentissime cachinnaris

Ver. 28. And be like the dove.] That is glad to creep in at any cranny of the craggy rock, to be hid from the hawk.

Ver. 29. We have heard the pride of Moab.] See #Isa 16:6. Proud he was then, and the same he is still; no changeling is he.

Ver. 30. I know his wrath.] Passion is the eldest daughter of pride. See #Isa 16:6.

His lies shall not so effect it.] Heb., His bars. Lies were his refuge, his strength, the bars he trusted to and leaned on.

Ver. 31. Therefore will I howl.] #Isa 16:7 15:5.

Ver. 32. I will weep with thee for the weeping of Jazer.] Or, More than the weeping of Jazer—i.e., saith Junius, more largely and lamentably than Isaiah bewailed Jazer. {#Isa 16:8,9}

Ver. 33. And joy and gladness is taken.] See #Isa 16:10.

Their shouting shall be no shouting.] Their cheer shall be changed, their note altered from what it was wont to be at their gathering in the vintage. So it shall one day fare with the drunkards and belly gods, whose laetitia vertetur in luctum, plausus in planctum, &c., mirth shall be turned into mourning, clapping of hands into wringing of hands, hallooing into howling.

Ver. 34. From Heshbon even unto Elealeh.] See #Isa 15:4,5,9.

As a heifer of three years old.] Which at that age beginneth to low after the bull.

Ver. 35. Moreover I will cause to cease.] Such a scarcity there shall be of people. See #Jer 48:7 Nu 21:28.

Ver. 36. Therefore my heart.] See #Isa 15:5 16:11.

Ver. 37. For every head shall be bald.] This was the doings among the Easterlings, in times of mourning.

Ver. 38. There shall be lamentation.] See #Isa 15:3.

Like a vessel wherein is no pleasure.] See #Jer 22:28.

Ver. 39. How hath Moab turned the back with shame?] Heb., Neck.

“ Submisit tristi colla superba iugo.”

Ver. 40. Behold, he shall fly as an eagle.] To an eagle Nebuchadnezzar is compared, for his strength, swiftness, and ravenousness.

Ver. 41. Kerioth is taken.] Of this city, some say, was Judas Iscariot.

As the heart of a woman in her pangs.] Which is very low: neither is such a one in case to defend herself.

Ver. 42. Because he hath magnified himself against the Lord,] i.e., Against his people, who are as the apple of his eye.

Ver. 43. Fear and the pit.] See #Isa 24:17.

Ver. 44. He that seeth.] See #Isa 24:18.

Ver. 45. Stood under the shadow of Heshbon.] As thinking they had had a good bush on their backs.

But a fire shall come forth out of Heshbon.] As once before it did, {#Nu 21:28,29} and became a proverb.

Of the tumultuous ones.] Of those revelling gallants.

Ver. 46. Woe be unto thee, O Moab.] See #Nu 21:29.

Ver. 47. Yet will I bring again the captivity of Moab.] Laetiora demum annuntiat. But because this was never that we find fulfilled in the letter, therefore it was a presage of the calling of the Gentiles to an interest in Christ, and benefit by him.

Chapter 49

Ver. 1. Concerning the Ammonites.] Who are taxed in Scripture for their pride, petulance, and contempt of God's Israel, whom they had always infested, and now grossly injured, by encroaching upon part of their country, which they had seized on, as if Israel had been heirless, and themselves next of kin, which was nothing so. See #Zep 2:8.

Hath he no heir.] Yes, Judah and Benjamin, not yet captivated.

Why then doth their king inherit gad?] i.e., Gilead (Gad's portion beyond Jordan), because it lieth convenient to him. This they would have done long before—viz., in Jephtha's days: but then it would not be. Afterwards, Saul and David subdued them; but in Jehoshaphat's time they came again, together with the Moabites, and the men of Mount Seir, to make a disturbance; but were defeated. {#2Ch 20:1,22-24} Now, when those Israelites beyond Jordan were carried away, and their land desolated, first by the Syrians, {#2Ki 10:32,33} and afterwards by the Assyrians, {#2Ki 15:29} then in likelihood it was that the Ammonites thus invaded the country, and laid it to their own, {cf. #Am 1:13} that they might dwell alone in that part of the earth.

Ver. 2. Behold, the day is come, saith the Lord,] scil., After the subversion of the Jewish nation {#Eze 21:25-27} For judgment commonly beginneth at the house of God.

And I will cause an alarm of war to be heard in Rabbah.] Megalopolis, the metropolis of the Ammonites; it was afterwards called Philadelphia, from Ptolemy Philadelph, who re-edified it.

And it shall be a desolate heap.] Hob., A hillock of desolation.

And her daughters.] The neighbour towns and villages.

Then shall Israel be heir unto them that were his heirs.] It hath been often observed, that God loveth to retaliate. How this was fulfilled, see #/APC 1Ma 5:6, and Joseph., lib. xiii. cap. 21.

Ver. 3. Howl, O Heshbon.] A city of the Gadites, but seized upon, it seemeth, first by the Ammonites, and then by the Moabites. {#Jer 48:2,24,25}

For Ai is spoiled.] Not that Ai, #Jos 7:1, but another of that name beyond Jordan—Gaja, Ptolemy calleth it.

And run to and fro by the hedges.] Hide you behind the hedges.

For their king.] Or, Malcham their idol—as Chemosh. {#Jer 48:7}

Ver. 4. Wherefore gloriest thou in the valleys?] Because fat and fertile, as being near to Sodom and Gomorrah, that pleasant plain. {#Ge 13:10}

O backsliding daughter.] {a} Or, Untoward and refractory. Sept., Thou daughter of rashness, or of impudence, quae ita lascivis sicut puella quae libidinatur, et virum quaerit, saith Oecolampadius.

That trusted in her treasures.] Never yet true to those that trusted them. {#1Ti 6:17 Ps 52:7}

Who shall come unto me?] Or, Who can come at me?

{a} Appellat homines regni erroneos filiam vagam.

Ver. 5. Behold, I will bring a fear upon thee.] Panicum vel bellicum. Panic or war.

Ver. 6. I will bring again the captivity.] Then, when Christ shall come, the Gentiles also shall be freed from the tyranny of sin, and terror of hell.

Ver. 7. Is wisdom nowhere in Teman?] The Edomites, and especially the Temanites (of whom Eliphaz, Job's friend, was one), were famous for wisdom, {#Ob 8} which although it be of excellent use for putting things to the best, yet without the fear of God, which is the beginning of wisdom, {#Pr 1:7} and his blessing, it proveth not only unprofitable, but pernicious also. It is, saith James, "earthly, sensual, and devilish." See what the Scripture speaketh of it. {#Job 12:2,12,13 1Co 3:18-21}

Ver. 8. Dwell deep.] Hide yourselves in holes of the earth, grotts in the ground, clefts of the rocks, where you may best secure yourselves from the pursuing enemy.

Ver. 9. If grape gatherers, &c.] See on #Ob 5.

Ver. 10. I have uncovered his secret places.] Where he had hid himself, or his treasures, those sinews of war.

And he is not, / scil., Any more a state or a people. Time shall triumph over him, so that he shall but live by fame.

Ver. 11. Leave thy fatherless children, &c.] Thus God speaketh to the profane Edomites in derision, but to all true Israelites in serious sadness: and so it is very comfortable, and must needs be a good stay of mind to a dying saint, as it was to Claviger, a dutch divine {a} He was held happy of whom Cassiodore saith, So many sons, so many counsellors to the state, {b} but he is happier that can say, So many children, so many of God's clients, heaven's heirs, &c.

{a} Selnece, Paedag. Christ., par. 2. p. 379.

Ver. 12. Behold they whose judgment, &c.] See #Jer 25:29 Ob 19.

Ver. 13. I have sworn by myself, saith the Lord.] Because it seemed incredible that Bozrah should be beaten down; as also to show how exceedingly God was incensed against the Edomites, to whom therefore also no comfort is spoken, as is to Ammon and Moab in later times.

Ver. 14. I have heard a rumour from the Lord.] See on #Ob 1:1.

Ver. 15. For, lo, I will make thee.] See on #Ob 2, whence Jeremiah took this, and more besides, or else Obadiah from him.

Ver. 16. Thy terribleness, / i.e., Thine insolence and cruelty wherewith thou frighten folk. Or thine idol, that terrible business, so called in contempt.

Though thou shouldst make thy nest.] See #Ob 4.

Ver. 17. And Edom shall be a desolation] Heb., For a desolation. See on #Jer 49:13.

Ver. 18. As in the overthrow of Sodom.] See #Ge 19:24,25.

And the neighbour cities.] Whereof see #De 29:23.

No man shall abide there.] As little as in the Dead Sea, where no creature can live.

Ver. 19. Behold, he shall come up.] Nebuchadnezzar shall.

Like a lion from the swelling of Jordan.] As lions at such a time are forced to quit their dens near Jordan.

Against the habitation of the strong,] i.e., Against Idumaea.

But I will suddenly make him run away from her.] As having soon conquered her; or rather, I will suddenly make him overrun it —i.e., get above it, and become master of it.

And who is a chosen man, that I may appoint over her?] Or, For I will give charge to him that is a choice one against her, i.e., to Nebuchadnezzar.

For who is that shepherd that will stand before me?] q.d., There is no standing before God, and his lion sent by him.

Ver. 20. Therefore hear the counsel.] Now by counsel things are established.

And his purposes.] Or, Contrivements that he hath contrived. {a}

Surely the least of the flock.] The meanest of Nebuchadnezzar's men shall drag them out of their shelters, as dogs do a dead carcass.

{a} Ανθρωποπαθεια.

Ver. 21. In the Red Sea,] i.e., A long way off; yet not so far as the dotting Talmudists say the serpent's cry was heard (when the angels came down and cut off his legs, according to that doom passed on him, #Ge 3:14), viz., all the world over.

Ver. 22. Behold, he shall come up and fly.] See #Jer 48:40,41.

Ver. 23. Concerning Damascus.] The chief city of Syria, so pleasantly situated, so rich and luxurious, that one compareth it to Corinth or Ephesus. Julian the emperor, in his Epistles, calleth it the city of Jupiter, and the eye of the whole East. Tamerlane would not come into it, lest he should be detained there by the delights and delicacies of it. He destroyed it in a displeasure, and built three towers with the skulls of those he had there slain (for a trophy) with singular skill. It was built again by the Soldan of Egypt, and is now possessed by the Turks.

There is sorrow on the sea: it cannot be quiet.] Or, There is sorrow as upon the sea, which cannot rest.

Ver. 24. And fear hath seized on her.] Horrorem febrilem apprehendit; {a} she shaketh as in a fit of an ague.

{a} Piscat.

Ver. 25. How is the city of praise not left?] Why is so praiseworthy and renowned a city so demolished? See #Jer 49:23. Cause enough there was, because it was a valley of vanity, {#Am 1:3-5} and Comus, Venus, and Bacchus there made their dividend, and shared their devotes.

Ver. 26. Therefore her young men.] Or, Surely.

Ver. 27. And I will kindle a fire.] See on #Am 1:4.

Ver. 28. Concerning Kedar.] These Kedarenes, the offspring of Kedar, Ishmael's son, {#Ge 25:13} dwelt, or rather abode for most part, in Arabia the stony, or desert. Hagarenes they were also called, and afterward Saracens, of Sarah, their chief city, saith Stephanus; {a} or of Sarach, for more credit sake, as others hold. Of this people came Mohammed, that grand impostor, and the Turks, who have now gotten into their hands so great a part of the habitable world. A rude people they were in Jeremiah's days, and uncivilised; yet because wicked, they are here doomed.

And concerning the kingdoms of Hazor.] Their head city.

{a} Lib. de Urbib.

Ver. 29. Their tents and their flocks.] For which they were termed scenitae and nomades, as living a pastoral life in tents.

And they shall cry unto them, Fear is on every side.] Magormissabib might be their word, wherewith, loudly uttered, they might frighten and overcome these enemies; like as the Britons, our ancestors, once overcame a mighty army of Saxons and Picts in this land, by ringing out the word Hallelujah with a courage among the mountains near where the enemy had camped. {a}

{a} Ussier., De Brit. Eccles. Primord.

Ver. 30. Flee, get you far off.] See on #Jer 49:8.

Ver. 31. Arise, go you up into the wealthy nation.] Or, Quiet nation, that dwelleth without care. Heb., In confidence: but such a security doth not secure any, but oft betrayeth. Infelix felicitas quae non est in Domino, saith Oecolampadius here: There is no true happiness or safety but in God.

Ver. 32. Them that are in the uttermost corners.] Or, That have the corners of their hair cut. See #Jer 9:26 25:23.

Ver. 33. And Hazor shall be a dwelling for dragons.] See #Jer 9:11 10:22 51:37.

Ver. 34. Against Elam, / i.e., The Medes, say some; the Persians, say others; or a people between both, whose head city was that Susa where Alexander found fifty thousand talents of gold, besides silver. Aristagoras also thus cheered up his soldiers that besieged it: This city if you can but take, cum Iove de divitiis licet certetis, you may vie with Jove himself for wealth. These Elamites joined with the Chaldees against the Jews when they first wasted Judea, and carried away Jehoiakim. Hence they are here so threatened for their cruelty then.

Ver. 35. Behold, I will break the bow of Elam.] In the use whereof they excelled, being very skilful archers. {#Isa 22:6} Guns today carry it as bows of old.

Ver. 36. And upon Elam will I bring the four winds, / i.e., Great concussions, enemies on all sides, Scythians and Sarmatians especially out of the north. Calvin thinks this prophecy was fulfilled after Alexander's death, when his captains strove most fiercely for the kingdoms of the earth which he had subdued.

Ver. 37. For I will cause Elam to be dismayed, J q.d., They trust in their great strength, and hold themselves insuperable; but I can easily dispirit (and so destroy) them. See #Jer 49:5,14,29.

Ver. 38. And I will set my throne in Elam, J i.e., I will solemnly execute my judgments upon these people, as if I sat in my judgment seat in a public court in the midst of them. {a}

{a} Diod.

Ver. 39. I will bring again the captivity of Elam.] Principally by bringing them to Jesus Christ. And so we read {#Ac 2:9} of Parthians, Medes, and Elamites among those first and best believers. Eusebius {a} also telleth us that in the Council of Nice there was a bishop from Persia; and Theodoret, a very good man, in addition a great writer, served the churches of the Elamites. {b}

Chapter 50

Ver. 1. The word that the Lord spake against Babylon.] Which was built by Nimrod, as Nineveh was afterwards by his nephew Ninus. {#Ge 10:11} Of the greatness of this city, besides what we read in holy writ, much may be read in Herodotus and Pliny. It was the head city of the Assyrian and Chaldean monarchy, which lasted above seventeen hundred years, till Cyrus the Persian took the kingdom. Isaiah prophesied against it in several chapters. Habakkuk maketh it his whole business. Jeremiah had set forth how Sheshach, that is, Belshazzar, should drink the dregs of the cup of God's wrath. {#Jer 25:26} Here, and in the next chapter, he discourseth it more at large, showing how it was that Babylon was to drink of that cup; and for more certainty, it is spoken of in this prophecy as already done.

Ver. 2. Declare ye among the nations.] Let all take notice of the good news; there shall be a general jail delivery, sing therefore Io triumphe.

Say, Babylon is taken.] So #Isa 21:9.

Bel is confounded.] This Bel was Nimrod, whose nephew Ninus set him up for a god. Merodach (a restorer of their empire, ^{a} whereof Nimrod had been founder) was likewise idolised. They are called "dirty deities"—foedites et stercora, a name good enough for them—and said to be confounded. See #Isa 46:1. "Sorrows" also; because "their sorrows shall be multiplied that hasten after another God." ^{#Ps 16:4}

Ver. 3. For out of the north there cometh up a nation against her, J i.e., Out of Media and Persia, which lay northward from Chaldea. The Jews had their bane out of the north (as had been foretold, #Jer 1:14,15), scil., from Babylon. And now Babylon is to be baned from the same quarter. This was some comfort, doubtless, to the poor Jews in captivity.

Which shall make her land desolate.] This was not fulfilled till many years after. Cyrus indeed began it, but Seleucus Nicanor finished it, by building near unto it another great city called Seleucia. ^{a}

^{a} Plin., lib. vi. cap. 26.

Ver. 4. In those days, and at that time.] Destructio Babel salus est populo Dei; so shall it be at the ruin of Rome.

The children of Israel shall come, and the children of Judah together.] In better times they could not agree; but when they were both in a weeping condition, misery bred unity, as it did also between Hooper and Ridley, when they were both in prison for the truth.

Going and weeping.] Tears of sorrow for their sins, and tears of joy for their deliverance by Cyrus, but especially by Christ.

They shall go and seek the Lord their God.] Whom they had long been without, and do now long and linger after.

Ver. 5. They shall ask the way to Zion with their faces thitherward, ^{ a } As intent upon it, and minding nothing else in comparison. It is good for a man to have his face set towards heaven, and to make religion his business, looking at other things by the by, and out at the eye's end, as it were.

Come and let us join ourselves to the Lord.] Be so joined to the Lord, so glued unto him, as to be one spirit with him in a conjugal perpetual covenant. {b}

{a} Accurate sciscitabuntur.

Ver. 6. My people have been lost sheep.] Per avis peccatorum aberrantes; lost in the maze of sin and misery.

Their shepherds have caused them to go astray.] True also of Papists and sectaries, miserably misled by their pretended pastors—impostors rather.

Ver. 7. All that found them have devoured them.] As ravenous creatures do wandering sheep. Stragglers are a fit prey for seducers.

And their adversaries said, We offend not,] i.e., God will have it so; {#Jer 40:2} but this was no good plea. {#Jer 2:3}

The habitation of justice.] Or, In the habitation of justice; in a land of uprightness have they dealt unjustly, {#Isa 26:10} which was no small aggravation of their sin.

Even the Lord, the hope of their fathers.] But these, as degenerate children, have no such hope.

Ver. 8. Remove out of the midst of Babylon.] "Ho, ho, come forth." {as #Zec 2:6} "Away, this is not your rest, for it is polluted." {#Mic 2:10} See #Isa 48:20 Re 18:4.

Be as the he-goats.] That lead the flocks, generose et festinanter, freely and readily. Sheep are fearful, and therefore go behind; goats are not so, and therefore go before. There is good hope, saith one, that we are going out of Babylon, when the he-goats go before the flock; when men of public place and authority are active for reformation.

Ver. 9. From the north country.] See on #Jer 50:3.

Their arrows shall be as a mighty expert man.] Or, Of a potent prosperous man, that can hit where he pleaseth, and that without fail.

None shall return in vain.] No shaft shall, or no soldier shall miss of booty; for whereas Babylon, like a sea, had taken in the wealth of all nations, so it was meet that it should be exhausted, like as Rome was by the Goths and Vandals, and as Constantinople was by the Turks and Tartars.

Ver. 10. And Chaldea shall be a spoil.] See on #Jer 50:9.

Ver. 11. Because ye were glad, because ye rejoiced,]^{ a } scil., In a thing of naught, ^{as #Am 6:13} and in the miseries of my people ye were madly merry; therefore shall ye be let bleed in the vena cava, hollow vein.

Because ye are grown fat.] Ye have laughed yourselves fat, you have fattened yourselves as in a day of slaughter or of good cheer. It was at a feast that Babylon was taken.

And bellow as bulls.] Or, Neigh as steeds, lusty steeds.

^{a} Causam ponit petulantiam et dicacitatem. -Oecol.

Ver. 12. Your mother shall be sore confounded,] i.e., Babylon, your mother city, or Babylonia, your country; or your monarchical greatness, which being in the last place laid waste after other nations, ^{as #Jer 25:25,26 was foretold} shall with shame cry out, Heu tam cito me quae primas obtinebam, &c. How is it that I, who was the head of nations, am now the tail, &c.

Ver. 13. It shall not be inhabited, but be wholly desolate.] Babylon standeth not now in the same place as of old, nor is there hardly any ruins of the old city remaining, as travellers tell us. Pausanias saith that in his time there was nought to be seen of it but the walls only; and Jerome saith ^{a} that in his it was turned into a park for deer. Omne in medio spatium solitude est. See on #Jer 50:3.

^{a} Lib. viii. in Isa. xiii.

Ver. 14. For she hath sinned against the Lord.] Yea, she is a sink of sins, the contagion of the world, the shop of Satan, the adversary of the saints, &c. So, and much more than so, is spiritual Babylon, Cito itidem casura, ei essetis viri (said Petrarch long since), that groaneth for a downfall.

Ver. 15. Shout against her round about.] As they did once at Jericho; she shall come down assuredly.

She hath given her hand,]{ a; i.e., She hath yielded, and cried quarter; add hereunto that two princes of Babylon, being displeased by Belshazzar, sent for Cyrus to take the city, and showed him how he might best do it. This was "giving the hands" saith Calvin.

As she hath done, do unto her.] Neque enim lex iustior ulla est.
See #Jud 1:5. {See Trapp on "Jud 1:5"}

{a} Deditio est signum. Dare manus est fateri ae victum.

Ausonii videre.”—Virg.

Ver. 16. Cut off the sower.] Leave not so much as a husbandman alive, who yet are generally spared, as harmless and useful; they were left and let alone by the Chaldeans when they carried away the Jews. {#2Ki 25:12} But here is enjoined a more severe execution.

Ver. 17. First the king of Assyria hath devoured him.] Many Assyrian kings successively, but especially Sennacherib.

Hath broken his bones.] Heb., Hath boned him hath left nothing of him but the bare bones.

Ver. 18. As I have punished the king of Assyria.] And accordingly so he did; for as Sennacherib first lost his army, and then his life, and then soon after that monarchy was dissolved; so after that Belshazzar was slain, the empire was translated unto the Persians.

Ver. 19. And I will bring Israel again to his habitation.] Or, To his fold, or his pastures. See #Jer 50:6,17.

Ver. 20. The iniquity of Jacob shall be sought for, and there shall be none.] Because to the justified no sin is imputed. Nihil oblivisci solet praeter iniurias. He forgetteth nothing but injuries only, said Cicero of Caesar, flatteringly, say we of God truly. This to have known is to feed in those soul fattening pastures. {#Jer 50:19}

For I will pardon them whom I reserve.] Tegam quod fuit; quod erit, regam. I will cover what was; which will be, for I will rule.

Ver. 21. Go up against the land of Merathaim, and against the inhabitants of Pekod.] Two Babylonian provinces. {#Eze 23:23} Calvin rendereth it, The land of exasperators, and the inhabitation of visitation, i.e., that deserve to be punished. This is God's commission to Cyrus.

Utterly destroy after them,] i.e., Their posterity. {as #Da 4:11}

Ver. 22. A sound of battle is in the land.] Barrites militaris; this is, not the joyful, but the woeful sound; for war is a woe which no words, however wide, can sufficiently set forth. {a}

{a} Sequitur executio. -Oecol.

Ver. 23. How is the hammer of the whole earth cut asunder!] Babylon was the maul or hammer of many nations, Nimrod began it, and his successors took after him. Charles Martel, King of France, was so called for like cause. Augustine also was worthily styled Haereticorum malleus, the hammer of heretics; and Mr Arthur Hildersam, Schismaticorum malleus, the maul of schismatics.

Ver. 24. I have laid a snare for thee.] Thou wild bull. {#Jer 50:27} Babylon was unexpectedly taken by a stratagem, while they were in the midst of their revels.

And thou wast not aware.] The palace was suddenly seized upon; but some parts of the city knew not that the enemy was entered till three days after; for it was the greatest city that ever the sun beheld, saith Pausanias, {a} and the most suddenly surprised.

Because thou hast striven against the Lord.] Heb., Hast mingled thyself with the Lord, in certamen scilicet, to wrestle a fall with him, and to try masteries.

{a} Aristot., Polit., Paus., Arcad.

Ver. 25. The Lord hath opened his armoury.] Heb., Treasury. Now God's armoury is omne id sub coelo, usque ad diabolos; all things, both in heaven and under the cope of heaven, as far as the very devils, whereby he is able to subdue his enemies, and to bring them to nothing. Out of this treasury God took Darius and Cyrus, with their forces, and set them upon this expedition.

Ver. 26. Come against her.] This he speaketh to the Medes and Persians, who, though they were farther remote than they that could hear the prophet, yet God, who spake by him, could and did speak home to their hearts, stirring them up by a secret instinct to do this execution.

Ver. 27. Slay all her bullocks.] Heb., Sword them, sheath your swords in their sides. See #Jer 50:24.

Ver. 28. The vengeance of his temple.] Spoiled and burnt by the Chaldeans, those wasters, as their name also signifieth. Woe, then, to such as destroy God's living temples!

Ver. 29. According to all that she hath done.] See #Jer 50:15.

For she hath been proud against the Lord.] Who setteth himself in battle array against the proud. {#1Pe 5:5}

Ver. 30. Therefore shall her young men.] See on #Jer 49:26.

Ver. 31. Behold, I am against thee, O most proud.] Heb., O pride, in the abstract—i.e., O Belshazzar; as of a certain Pope was said,

“ Conditur hoc tumulo et scelus et vitium.”

Ver. 32. And the most proud shall stumble.] Heb., Pride, or that man of pride. Praefractarius ille, so Oecolampadius rendereth it, that stubborn man, who will do wickedly against conviction of conscience.

Ver. 33. The children of Judah and the children of Israel were oppressed together.] Or, Were oppressed alike—scil., in their several deportations; and God, mindful of his covenant, showeth himself sensible of it, though for the present he seemed not to care what became of either of them; —

“ Ille dolet quoties cogitur esse ferox.”

Ver. 34. Their Redeemer is strong.] Or, But their strong avenger, whose name is the Lord of hosts; he shall thoroughly plead their cause—i.e., right their wrongs.

That he may give rest to the land.] See on #2Th 1:8,9.

Ver. 35. A sword is upon the Chaldeans.] Those sworn swordsmen of the devil.

Ver. 36. A sword is upon the liars,] i.e., The prognosticators and wizards. Mendaces nominat divines, as it was wont here to be said—a friar, a liar.

Ver. 37. A sword is upon their horses.] Upon all their military preparations; whereof see Herodot., lib. i.

They shall become as women.] Elumbes, cowardly and crest fallen.

A sword is upon her treasures.] Which bow inestimable they were, see Strabo, lib. xv., and Plin., lib. xxxiii, cap. 3.

Ver. 38. A drought is upon her waters.] Which Cyrus did so drain by many outlets, that without any great difficulty he took the city, assaulting it on two sides. Frontinus saith, ^{a} that thrice Babylon was taken by this stratagem; (1.) By Semiramis; (2.) By Cyrus; (3.) By Alexander the Great.

And they are mad upon their idols.] ^{b} Deos terrificos et truces, statues of their kings and worthies, which were of a huge, vast stature. See #Da 3:1.

Ver. 41. Behold, a people shall come from the north.] As #Jer 50:3,9 6:22.

Ver. 42. Against thee, O daughter of Babylon.] In like sort as thou didst once against God's Israel. ^{#Jer 6:23} Now thou shalt meet with thy match.

Ver. 43. The king of Babylon, &c.] See #Jer 6:24 Da 5:6.

Ver. 44. Behold, he shall come up.] See #Jer 49:19.

Ver. 45. See on #Jer 49:20.

Ver. 46. See on #Jer 49:21.

Chapter 51

Ver. 1. Behold, I will raise up against Babylon, and against them that dwell in the midst,] scil., Of the land of Chaldea, in the royal seat and centre of that great monarchy.

A destroying wind.] {a} Blasting and boisterous. See #Jer 4:11,12.

Ver. 2. And I will send unto Babylon farmers.] Who shall make as clean work as they once did in Judea, disperse her inhabitants, and dissipate her riches.

Ver. 3. Against him that bendeth.] Periphrasis Babylonii, omnibus gentibus infesti.

Ver. 4. Thus the slain shall fall.] Both within the walls and without, των φονων ουτ αριθμος ουθ ορος, there shall be neither measure nor end of manslaughter, as Plutarch saith of Rome in Sulla's time.

Ver. 5. For Israel hath not been forsaken.] Heb., Widowed.

Though their land was filled with sin.] Heb., Guilt, or delinquency, or devastation. The Scripture hath been fully made good to us of this nation, while the fulness of sin in us hath not yet abated the fulness of grace in God toward us. See those four gracious yets, #Zec 1:17. {See Trapp on "Zec 1:17"}

Ver. 6. Flee out of the midst of Babylon.] See #Jer 1 8. So, in the Hew Testament, we are called upon to flee and avoid the corruptions of the world and of Antichrist. {#1Jo 2:7,8 Eph 5:6 Re 14:3-5 18:4}

For this is a time, &c.] As #Jer 50:15,25,27,28 46:10.

Ver. 7. Babylon hath been a golden cup.] See #Jer 25:15 Re 17:4.

In the Lord's hand,] i.e., Oeconomia et dispensatione eius: He had the mixing and distributing of it.

Ver. 8. Babylon is suddenly fallen.] #Jer 50:2. So ruet alto a culmine Roma So Rome will be destroyed from its highest heights.

{#Re 14:8 18:2,10}

If so be she may be healed,] q.d., Try you may, but it is to no purpose. See #Jer 46:11.

Ver. 9. We would have healed Babylon.] Say the foreign nations that came to help her, or the people of God, {a} say others, that were kept captive by her, as Daniel and the rest.

But she is not healed.] Or, She could not be healed. See #Ho 7:1.

For her judgment reacheth unto heaven.] It coelo clamor, proportionable to her sin. {#Re 18:5}

{a} Vox electorum. -Oecolamp.

Ver. 10. The Lord hath brought forth our righteousness,] i.e., Our just cause, and the righteousness of our religion, derided by the Babylonians.

Ver. 11. Make bright the arrows,] q.d., Do so, O Chaldeans, if ye think it will boot you anything at all for the shoring up of your tottering state, whereas the Lord is resolved to bring it down.

Ver. 12. Set up the standard.] An irony all along, {a} as #Jer 51:11.

{a} Hortatio ironica. -Piscator.

Ver. 13. O thou that dwellest upon many waters.] Euphrates and Tigris especially, famous rivers running from Babylonia into the Persian Sea. Hence most geographers hold, and not improbably, that that land was a part of the garden of Eden; fruitful it was beyond credulity.

Thine end is come, and the measure (Heb., the cubit) of thy covetousness.] Cuius avaritiae totus non sufficit orbis. The covetous cormorant's mouth, with his Give, give, shall shortly be stopped with a spadeful of mould, and his "never enough" quit with fire enough in the bottom of hell.

Ver. 14. Surely I will fill thee with men as with caterpillers.] So they shall seem both for multitude and humming noise, barritu militari.

They shall lift up a shout against thee.] As peasants did at their harvest home. See #Jer 48:33.

Ver. 15. He hath made the earth by his power.] And can therefore easily and quickly unmake this great monarchy. See #Jer 10:12. {See Trapp on "Jer 10:12"}

Ver. 16. When he uttereth his voice, &c.] See #Jer 10:13.

Ver. 17. Every man is brutish.] See #Jer 10:14.

Ver. 18. They are vanity.] See #Jer 10:15.

Ver. 19. The portion of Jacob, &c.] See #Jer 10:16.

Ver. 20. Thou art my battle axe, and weapon of war.] Cestra fuisti mihi, Thou hast been my pole axe, such as horsemen use to batter their enemies' helmets and other harness.

Ver. 21. And with thee.] O Babylonian king.

Will I break in pieces.] Or rather, Have I broken in pieces. And hence thy perdition.

Ver. 22. With thee also will I break (or, By thee have I broken) in pieces man and woman.] But especially my people of the Jews, whom I more valued than all the men and women in the world besides.

Ver. 23. The shepherd and his flock, the husbandman and his yoke, &c.] This particular enumeration is very emphatic. {so #Jer 50:35,37,38}

Ver. 24. And I will render unto Babylon.] See #Jer 50:15,29 Isa 47:6,8 10:5,6,12.

In your sight.] You, my prisoners of hope, shall live to see it. {#Ps 79:10}

Ver. 25. O destroying mountain.] O Babylon, thou that art amplitudine et altitudine instar montis; for thy large command and lofty buildings like a mountain, and that dost abuse thy power to other men's destruction.

And will make thee a burnt mountain.] A great heap of ashes and rubbish, such as burned and ruined cities are.

Ver. 26. And they shall not take of thee a stone.] Thou shalt never be re-edified. So it is foretold of Rome,

“ Tota eris in cineres quasi nunquam Roma fuisses.”

Ver. 27. Set up a standard.] Thus God the great Induperator bespeaketh the Medes and Persians as his field officers.

Prepare the nations against her.] Heb., Sanctify, call them together to wage this sacred war against Babylon.

Call together against her the kingdoms of Ararat, Minni, and Ashchenaz,] i.e., Of both the Armenias and of Aseania, subdued by Cyrus before he marched against Babylon. {a} Vatablus will have Ashchenaz to be Gothland; the Jews, Germany; but these were too far remote.

{a} Xenoph., Cyrop., lib. vii.

Ver. 28. Prepare against her.] Heb., Sanctify. {as #Jer 51:27}

With the kings of the Medes.] Darius and Cyrus.

Ver. 29. And the land shall tremble and sorrow.] As a travailing woman, so shall it be pained.

Ver. 30. The mighty men of Babylon have forborne to fight.] At Cyrus's first coming they gave him battle; but being worsted, they from thenceforth remained in their holds till Babylon was taken.

Their might hath failed.] Or, Their courage is shrunk, as Jacob's sinew did. {#Ge 32:32}

They became as women.] See #Jer 50:37.

Ver. 31. One post shall run to meet another.] Observe how punctually all things were foretold in the several circumstances more than fifty years before.

At one end,] sc., Where Euphrates had run, till diverted and dried up by Cyrus. See on #Jer 50:38.

Ver. 32. And that the passages are stopped.] Or, Taken, seized, surprised. {as #Jer 48:41}

And the reeds.] Or, Marshes, made by Euphrates overflowing. It is well observed that the Babylonians might by this prophecy have been forewarned and forearmed against Cyrus's stratagem; but they slighted it, and never inquired after it likely.

Ver. 33. The daughter of Babylon.] Proud of her wealth and strength, as young maids many are of their beauty.

And the time of her harvest shall come.] When God shall put in his sickle, and cut her down, being ripe and ready. See #Re 14:16 Ge 15:16.

Ver. 34. Nebuchadnezzar...hath devoured me, he hath crushed me.] A graphical description of the Babylonian cruelty.

He hath cast me out.] He hath gorged himself with me, and laid up his gorge.

Ver. 35. The violence done to me and to my flesh.] Torn and tossed as carrion by that ravenous beast; the Lord look upon it and requite it.

Ver. 36. Behold, I will plead thy cause.] Not so much verbally as really. Here is a present answer to Israel's cry.

Ver. 37. And Babylon shall become heaps.] See #Jer 50:39.

Ver. 38. They shall roar together like lions.] When hunger bitten. The Babylonians terrified, and the Persians tumultuating together. The old Latin version hath it, They shake their shaggy hair.

Ver. 39. In their heat I will make their feasts.] Or, I will dispose their drinkings—that is, I will pour into their cups the wine of my wrath. Now, poison mixed with wine worketh the more furiously. God can punish one kind of drunkenness with another worse.

That they may rejoice.] That they may revel it and sleep their last; and so they did, as being slain in a night of public solemn feasting and great dissoluteness, which was soon turned in moerorem et metum, into heaviness and horror. Ecce, hic compotationum est finis. Behold this is the end of the party.

And not wake.] Till awakened by the sound of the last trump. The Chaldee here hath it, They shall die the second death, and not be quickened in the world to come—sc., unto life everlasting.

Ver. 40. I will bring them down like lambs to the slaughter.] All that which followeth here to the end of this oration is no less easy than elegant in holding forth the power, justice, and truth of God in fulfilling this prophecy exactly, though several years after.

Ver. 41. How is Sheshach taken?] i.e., How is Babylon destroyed beyond all expectation? See #Jer 25:26.

Ver. 42. The sea is come up upon Babylon.] A sea of hostile forces; what wonder, therefore, though she be taken?

Ver. 43. Her cities are a desolation.] See #Jer 2:6 9:12.

Ver. 44. And I will punish Bel in Babylon.] Nimrod was after his death called the Babylonian Saturn; Belus, who succeeded him, the Babylonian Jupiter, as Berosus testifieth. This idol of massy gold, and of a huge size, was carried away by Cyrus; thus Bel was punished.

And I will bring forth out of his mouth that which he hath swallowed up.] Bolum ex ore Bell. Such an elegance there is also in the original. {a} Of the rich presents, spoils, costly furniture found in Bel's temple, see Diodore, lib. ii. Those taken from God's temple at Jerusalem, and laid up in his, {#2Ch 36:7} he was forced to regurgitate. {#Ezr 1:7 5:14 Job 20:12,15}

Yea, the wall of Babylon shall fall.] Which yet was strong to a miracle, as being two hundred cubits high—of the king's cubits, which were larger than ordinary—and fifty cubits thick, having a hundred brazen gates, and many stately towers, &c.; all shall down, saith the prophet.

{a} Plotinus ap August., De Civit. Dei, lib. ix. cap. 16.

Ver. 45. My people, go ye out of the midst of her.] This is much pressed, {#Jer 48:6} and it was but need; for many of the Jews were as hardly drawn to depart thence as a dog, ab uncto corio, from a fat morsel.

Ver. 46. And lest your heart faint.] Or, And let not your hearts faint.

And ye fear for the rumour, / sc., Of Cyrus's coming. Fear it not, all is for the best to you; your redemption draweth nigh.

A rumour shall both come one year, / sc., Of Cyrus's preparation, and then another of his expedition toward Babylon.

Ruler against ruler, / i.e., Cyrus against Belshazzar; so Constantine against Maxentius, Maximinus, Lucinius, &c.; this was for the best to the poor Church of Christ.

Ver. 47. I will do judgment, &c.] See #Jer 43:12,13 Ex 12:12.

And all her slain shall fall.] Her dancers, one rendereth it; their merry dance shall end in a miserable downfall.

Ver. 48. Then the heaven and the earth, &c., shall sing.] Est hyperbolica prosopopoeia. This is an exaggerated personification. There shall be, as it were, a new face set upon the world, and all the creatures shall appear to be well paid at the downfall of Babylon, under the oppressions whereof they even groaned and laboured. See what a similar general joy there will be at the ruin of Rome! {#Re 18:20}

Ver. 49. So at Babylon shall fall the slain of all the earth.] Or rather, Of all the land—i.e., of all Babylon, or Assyria. When God once cometh to make inquisition for the blood of his saints, woe to the wicked, &c.

Ver. 50. Ye that have escaped the sword, / sc., Of the Medes and Persians, who at the taking of the city killed all promiscuously.

Go away, stand not still.] Haste home to your own country, for therefore hath the Lord delivered you from so many deaths and dangers. See #Jer 51:25.

Remember the Lord afar off.] Should not we mind heaven, and hasten thither? If a heathen could say, ought we not much more, Fugiendum est ad clarissimum patriam; ibi Pater, ibi omnia, Haste we home to heaven; there is our Father, there are all things.

Ver. 51. We are confounded, because we have heard reproach.] This is the Jews' lamentation, as in the next verse we have the answer to it.

Ver. 52. Wherefore, behold, the days come.] So soon is God up at the cry of his poor people. {#Ps 12:5}

I will do judgment.] See #Jer 51:37,49.

Ver. 53. Though Babylon should mount up to heaven.] As her walls are said to have been of an incredible height (see on #Jer 51:44), and her tower to have been little less than four miles high, threatening heaven, as it were.

Ver. 54. A sound of a cry cometh from Babylon.] See #Jer 48:3.

Ver. 55. Because the Lord hath spoiled Babylon.] Heb., Is spoiling. For it was long in doing; but as sure as if done together, and at once. In like sort many of the promises are not to have their full accomplishment till the end of the world; as those about the full deliverance of the godly, the destruction of the wicked, the confusion of Antichrist, &c.

And destroyed out of her the great voice.] Of the revellers and roaring boys; or of their enemies, as some rather sense it, breaking in upon them.

Ver. 56. For the Lord God of recompenses.] Princeps ille et arbiter iustae talionis. God, who loveth to retaliate.

Ver. 57. And I will make drunk.] See #Jer 51:39.

Ver. 58. The broad walls of Babylon.] See on #Jer 51:44. Or, The walls of broad Babylon, that greatest of all cities, saith Strabo; {a} the compass whereof within the walls was near upon seventy miles, saith Pliny. {b}

{a} Lib. xvi.

{b} Lib. vi. cap. 26.

Ver. 59. The word which Jeremiah the prophet commanded Seraiah.] This is now the last part, viz., a type used for confirmation of this long time preceding prophecy, uttered at Jerusalem haply in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, which was the first of Nebuchadnezzar, and now to be read at Babylon in the fourth year of Zedekiah, which was seven years before the destruction of Jerusalem, and above sixty years before the destruction of Babylon. God loveth to foresignify, but Babylon would not be warned, which was a just both desert and presage of her ruin.

When he went with Zedekiah.] In company with him, say some, out of the Jews' chronicle. At which time Nebuchadnezzar, who had made him king, took an oath of him to be true to him, which he afterward brake, and was punished accordingly. {#2Ch 36:13} Others think that Seraiah went not with Zedekiah, but for him, and from him, with a present to Nebuchadnezzar, that he might keep his favour, or that he might be reconciled unto him after his revolt from him. {#2Ki 24:20}

And this Seraiah was a great prince.] One that opposed the rebellion against Nebuchadnezzar, or a peace maker at court, or the great chamberlain. Heb., A prince of rest; or, Prince of Menucha, a place so called, {#Jud 20:43} or a quiet, honest, and humble prince; otherwise he would not have been thus commanded by a poor prophet, especially in a matter of so great danger, as it might have proved if publicly noticed.

Ver. 60. So Jeremiah wrote in a book all the evil.] For Babylon's commination, if at least the book were read publicly, as some hold it was, and the Jewish captives' consolation.

Ver. 61. When thou comest to Babylon, and shalt see, / sc., The sinfulness as well as the stateliness of that city.

And shalt read all these words.] Or, Then shalt thou read all these words. They who hold he did it publicly, extol the authority of the prophet, the boldness of Seraiah, and the mildness of the King of Babylon, somewhat like that of the King of Nineveh; {#Jon 3:6-9} but the most think he read it privately, yet not in some closet apart by himself, but in some private house to his countrymen who came unto him.

Ver. 62. Then shalt thou say, O Lord, &c.] The promises are to be prayed over, and then we may expect their accomplishment. Prayer also added to the outward sign, according to God's holy Word, maketh it a sacramental sign.

Ver. 63. Thou shalt bind a stone to it.] See the like symbol or chria, #Re 18:21, where, by the mighty angel, Alcazar understandeth the prophet Jeremiah.

Ver. 64. Thus shall Babylon sink.] Ceremonies are to little purpose unless they have divine expositions annexed unto them.

And they shall be weary.] That seek either to save it or to restore it.

Thus far the words of Jeremiah, / sc., Concerning Babylon. See the like concerning Moab. {#Jer 48:47}

Chapter 52

Ver. 1. Zedekiah was one and twenty years old, &c.] For the exposition of this whole chapter, see the notes on #2Ki 24:17-25:30 2Ch 36:11-21 Jer 39:1-3, &c. It is altogether historic, and set here fitly by Ezra, or some other prophet, as an appendix to the foregoing prophecy, and as a preface to the Book of the Lamentations, which is nothing else but Jeremiah's elegy over their doleful captivity—not over King Josiah's death, as Jerome would have it; nor yet is it that book that Jehoiakim cut, and afterwards cast into the fire, {#Jer 36:22,23} as some of the Jewish doctors have noted. The Septuagint have set this title upon it: And it came to pass after that Israel was carried captive, and Jerusalem laid waste, the prophet Jeremiah sat weeping, and wailing, and bitterly lamenting the case of his people. Thus they knit together this chapter and the ensuing Lamentations, which the Jews also are still said to read together in their synagogues on the ninth day of the month Ab, which answereth to our July, because that on that day the city was taken and destroyed by the Chaldeans.

Lamentations

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. How doth the city sit solitary.] Some {a} tell us of Jeremiah's cave, near to Aceldama, where he sat in sight of the city now destroyed, and made her this epitaph—not altogether unlike that which David once made for his dear Jonathan. {#2Sa 1:17} There he hath his Echa admirantis et commiserantis, his wondering and condoling. How once, and again, and a third time. {#2Sa 1:19,25,27} And our prophet hath the self-same, in sense at least, three different times in this one verse; whence the Hebrews call the whole book by the name of Echa (How), which is the first word in it, and beginneth with the first letter of the Hebrew alphabet. For it must be observed here that, for memory's sake especially, this piece of Holy Writ is most of it made up in order of alphabet, viz., the four first chapters, and all of it with singular artifice in a poetic strain. Take that one passage for a taste, #La 5:16: Oi na lanu, chi chattanu, which soundeth rhythmically, i.e., woe to us that we have sinned. And whereas other poetry is the luxury of such learning as is in words restrained, in matter usually loose, here it is altogether otherwise; for the prophet or poet, whether id sibi negotii credidit solum dari, maketh it his whole business to set forth his people's misery in the cause thereof, their sins and excesses, pressing therefore to patience, to repentance, to earnest prayer, and to a confident expectation of a gracious issue, together with a sanctified use of all their sufferings. He had himself been a man of many sorrows all along; and now had his share as deep as any in the common calamity. Besides which he could truly say with Cyprian, Cum singulis pectus meum copulo, maeroris et funeris pondera luctuosa participo: cum plangentibus plango, cum deflentibus defleo, i.e., in St Paul's words, "Who is weak, and I am not weak? grieved, and I grieve not? offended, and I burn not?" {#2Co 11:29} And this he expresseth in a stately style and figurative terms, full of passion and compassion, as to show his love to his country, so to work upon his hard hearted countrymen, and to excite them to repentance and better obedience.

How doth the city.] Lately a city, yea, the city, the most famous of all the cities of the East, saith Pliny; but now, alas! of a city become a heap. So true is that of Seneca, speaking of a great city burned to ashes, Una dies interest inter magnam civitatem et nullam, There was but one day between a city and no city.

Sit solitary.] Sit on the ground in a mourning posture, as Job did among the ashes, and as Vespasian, after the last destruction of Jerusalem by his son Titus, caused money to be coined, whereon was stamped the picture of Judea in form of a captive woman, sitting sorrowfully under a palm tree.

“How sits this city, late most populous,
Thus solitary! like a widow thus!
Empress of nations, queen of provinces
She was, that now thus tributary is.”

That was full of people.] Full indeed, at the three solemn anniversary feasts especially. Josephus testifieth that at the last destruction of this city by the Romans there were more than eleven hundred thousand people in it. And although Judea was not over two hundred miles long and fifty miles broad, nothing nearly as large as England, yet what huge armies brought they into the field in the days of David, Asa, Jehoshaphat, &c.! Augustine saith there were three million present at that passover, whereof one million one hundred thousand perished by the sword and famine, one hundred thousand were led to Rome in triumph. {b}

How is she become as a widow] Having lost her king, if not her God. Happy if in this last respect she be but quasi vidua, as a widow only, and no more. See #2Co 6:8. {See Trapp on "2Co 6:8"} If God at any time should say unto her, as #Zec 10:6, "She shall be as if I had not cast her off, and I will hear her." Or if she could say of herself as that good widow in the story did, Sola relicta solum Deum sequor, Being left alone, I will follow after God alone.

She that was great among the nations.] So was Athens, once the glory of Greece, for both arts and arms, now a dog hole in comparison. Sparta also, that other eye of Greece, is now a small burrow called Misithra, having nothing to boast of but the fame and thoughts of its former greatness.

And princess among the provinces.] In David's and Solomon's days especially, when that state was in the flourish—i.e., the praise of the whole earth, and terror to all nations.

How is she become tributary!] And by that means melted and exhausted, as the Hebrew word importeth. So was England once, when the Pope's ass. Oh the huge sums that he sucked hence, to the wasting and impoverishing of the land! Of one of his agents here it is recorded, that at his departure he left not so much money in the whole kingdom as he either carried with him or sent to Rome before him. Some of them derive their mass from the Hebrew word mas in the text, signifying tribute; and in some respects well they may—Per eam scilicet pietas omnis liquefacta est et dissoluta, saith Rivet—for it is the bane of men's souls, and a purge to their purses

{b} Serm. de Tempore, 204.

Ver. 2. She weepeth sore.] Heb., Weeping she weepeth—i.e., sadly and soakingly, or as we say, savourly, seeking that way to ease her sorrow, which is so deep and downright.

“Expletur lachrymis, egeriturque dolore.”

In the night.] When grief may have its full forth, and when widows are most sensible of their solitary and forlorn condition. She weeps when she should sleep.

“Iam iacet in viduo squallida facta toro.”

And her tears are on her cheeks.] Haerent et perennant, seldom or never are they off. As hinds by calving, so she by weeping, cast out her sorrows. {#Job 39:3}

Among all her lovers she hath none to comfort her.] Optimum solarium sodalitium, saith one; and Affert solarium lugentibus suspiriorum societas, saith another father. It was no small aggravation of Jerusalem's misery, that her confederates proved miserable comforters, and her allies kept aloof off, so that she had none to compassionate her. This is also none of the smallest torments of the damned ghosts, that they are unpitied of their best friends and nearest relations.

All her friends have dealt treacherously with her.] The Edomites and Moabites. Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and Johanan the son of Kareah, &c. Every sinner shall one day take up this lamentation. And why? "They have forsaken the fountain of living waters, and hewed them out broken cisterns, that can hold no water." {#Jer 2:13} Ver. 3. Judah is gone into captivity.] But with no goodwill. God hath driven them out for their cruel oppressions and hard usage of their poor brethren that served them; thus the Chaldee paraphrast, and not amiss. Others {a} thus: Judah, i.e., the inhabitants of the kingdom, goeth away, i.e., willingly leave their country, goods, and dwelling, sc., before the desolation of Jerusalem, because of affliction, i.e., extremity of trouble, and great slavery, &c.

She dwelleth among the heathen.] Where she can get nothing better than guilt or grief.

She findeth no rest.] No more than did the dove in the deluge. {#Ge 8:9}

All her persecutors took her in the straits,] i.e., At the most advantage to mischief her—a term taken from hunters or highwaymen. The Chaldees took the city when it had been first distressed with famine; and then the Jews that went down to Egypt for succour and shelter after Gedaliah's death, they caught there, as mice in a trap, as this prophet had foretold them (Jer. 42-44), but they would not be warned. Mitsraim proved to be their Metsarim—i.e., Egypt their pound, or prison.

{a} Jun., Udal.

Ver. 4. The ways of Zion do mourn.] So they seem to do because unfrequented, overgrown with grass, and out of their kindly order.

Her priests sigh.] For want of employment.

The virgins were afflicted.] Or, Discomfited. Those that are usually set upon the merry pin, and were wont to make mirth at those festivities,

And she is in bitterness.] Zion is; but for nothing so much as for the decay of religion, and the loss of holy exercises. When this befalleth, all things else are mere Ichabods to good people, {a} See #Zep 3:18.

{a} Cultus Dei desertus est, et omnia luctifica. -Jun.

Ver. 5. Her adversaries are the chief.] Heb, Are for the head. This was threatened. {#De 28:13,14,43,44} This, when it happens, is a great grief to the godly. Therefore the prophet Nahum, for the comfort of God's Israel, is wholly in setting forth the destruction of their enemies, the Assyrians.

Her enemies prosper.] See #Jer 12:1. They prevail, and do what they wish; so that there seemeth to be neither hope of better, nor place for worse.

For the Lord hath afflicted her.] Not so much her adversaries and enemies, or her oppressors and haters, as the words properly signify—that is, those that oppress them in action, and hate them in affection. {a}

Her children are gone into captivity.] Those that were able to go; for the rest were slain. {#La 4:9}

Before the enemy.] Driven before them, as cattle.

{a} Cavet Scriptura ne haec potestas detur adversariis. -Oecolamp.

Ver. 6. And from the daughter of Zion all her beauty is departed.] Her glory, {as #Isa 5:14} that is chiefly the temple, and the service of God in it. It is now Ichabod with her. The beauty and bulwark of a nation are God's holy ordinances.

Her princes are become like harts, / i.e., Heartless, bereft of courage. They dare not make headway against an enemy.

Before the pursuer.] R. Solomon here observeth that the Hebrew word פִּרְרָר is written in full, {Hebrew Text Note} so as it is scarcely anywhere else, to note the fulness of the persecution.

Ver. 7. Jerusalem remembered in the days of her affliction.] Misery is the best art of memory. Then those privileges we prized not in prosperity, we recount with regret. Bona a tergo formosissima: the worth of good things is best known by the lack of them; {a} and as we see things best at a distance, so here. Afflictions are pillulae lucis, that do notably clear the eyesight.

The adversaries saw her,] sc., With a spiteful and scornful eye.

And did mock at her Sabbaths.] Calling the Jews in contempt, Sabbatarians, and jeering them as those that lost more than a seventh part of their time that way, and telling them, in scorn, that now they might well a while to keep a long Sabbath, as having little else to do. Juvenal thus describeth a Jew—

“ Cui septima quaeque fuit lux

Ignava, et partem vitae non attigit ullam.”—Satyr. v.

Paulus Phagius telleth likewise of a black mouthed Egyptian, who said that Christians were a colluvies {b} of most loathsome, lecherous people, that had a foul disease upon them, and were therefore fain to rest every seventh day.

{b} A collection or gathering of filth or foul matter; spec. foul discharge from an ulcer. ⒺD

Ver. 8. Jerusalem hath grievously sinned.] Perpetuo, assidue, et graviter peccavit. Heb., Hath sinned sin, hath sinned sinningly, doing wickedly as she could, {#Jer 3:4} and having many transgressions wrapped up in her sins and their circumstances. {#Le 16:21} And this is here acknowledged as the true cause of her calamity. Profane persons lay all the blame in this case upon God, as he in the poet—

“ O patria, O divum domus Ilium, et inclyta bello

Maenia Dardanidum: ferus omnia Iupiter Argos Transtulit...

Postquam res Asiae Priamique evertere gentem Immeritam visum superis, " & c.—Virg., Aeneid., ii.

Therefore she is removed.] Heb., Therefore is she unto removing or wandering, as Cain was {a} when he went to live in the land of Nod, or as a menstruous woman is separated from the society of others. Nidah for Niddah.

All that honoured her.] When her ways pleased the Lord.

Because they have seen her nakedness.] Her infamous wickednesses, for which she hath done penance, as it were, and is therefore despised. Or else it is a term taken from a naked captive woman.

Yea, she sigheth, and turneth backward,] sc., To hide her nakedness from public view. Or, going into captivity, she looked her last look toward her dear country, and fetched a sigh.

Ver. 9. Her filthiness is in her skirts.] Taxat impudentiam insignem. {a} She rather glorieth in her wickedness, than is any whit abashed of it—a metaphor from a menstruous woman that is immodest. Oh quam Vulgatee hoc hodie malum. Oh how comon this present time of evil. See #Isa 3:9. But whence this gracelessness

She remembereth not her last end,] i.e., What a black tail of plagues sin draweth after it, and that for all these things she must come to judgment. Memorare novissima is a good preservative from sin; but most men are of Otho the emperor's mind, who thought it a piece of dastardy to speak or think much of death; {b} whereas Moses assureth us that by keeping out the thoughts of death, we keep our spirits void of true magnanimity, and that one of those that will consider their latter end would chase a thousand. {#De 32:30}

Therefore she came down wonderfully.] Heb., With wonderments. Her incogitancy and inconsiderateness, together with the licentious wickedness following thereupon, being more heavy than a talent of lead, {#Zec 5:7} brought her down with a powder, as we say, ita ut ad miraculum corruerit.

O Lord, behold mine affliction.] If not me, as utterly unworthy, yet mine affliction, as thou once didst Hagar's; {#Ge 16:13} and if I may obtain no favour, yet why should the enemy insult to thy dishonour {#De 32:27 Ps 35:26 38:16 Jer 48:26,42 Zep 2:10}

{a} Paschasius.

Ver. 10. The adversary.] The common enemy both of God and us, out of hatred of the truth and the professors thereof.

Hath spread out his hand.] His plundering and sacrilegious hand.

Upon her pleasant things.] But especially those that were consecrated to the service of God in the temple. The Rabbis here by pleasant or desirable things understand principally the book of the law, which, say they, the Moabites and the Ammonites sought for in the temple, that they might burn it, because therein was forbidden their admission into the Church for ever.

Ver. 11. All her people sigh.] And so think to ease their grief.

They shall seek bread.] The staff of life, which, without repair by nutrition, would be soon extinct so in the spiritual life, which made Job prefer the Word before his "necessary food." There is a "famine of the Word" which is much worse; {#Am 8:11 Isa 6:9,10} pray against it, and prevent it.

They have given their pleasant things for meat.] Which must be had at any rate; much more must the food of the soul. Our forefathers gave five marks, or more, for a good book; a load of hay for a few chapters of St James, or of St Paul, in English, saith Mr Foxe. {a} The Queen of Castile sold her jewels to furnish Columbus for his discovering voyage to the West Indies, when he had showed his maps, though our Henry VII, loath to part with money, slighted his proffers, and thereby the golden mines were found and gained to the Spanish crown. {b} Let no man think much to part with his pleasant things for his precious soul, or to sacrifice all that he hath to the service of his life, which, next to his soul, should be most dear unto him. Our ancestors in Queen Mary's days were glad to eat the bread of their souls in peril of their lives.

To relieve the soul.] Heb., To make the soul come again; for A nimantis cuiusque vita in fuga est, Life must be fetched again by food when it is fainting away.

See, O Lord, and consider.] Quam delicata epulatrix facta sim; to what hard meat I am held, to how strait an allowance; see it, and be sensible of my prisoner's pittance, and how I have made many a meal's meat upon the promises when I have wanted bread, as that good woman once said.

{a} Acts and Mon., 750.

{b} Keckerm., Praefat. Geograph.

Ver. 12. Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by the way?] Siste viator. Stay, passenger, hast not a tear to shed? &c. Sanchez thinks that this is Jerusalem's epitaph, made by herself, as to be engraven on her tomb to move compassion. The Septuagint have οἱ πρὸς ὑμᾶς, Hei, id vos subaudite, clamo, Woe and alas, cry I to you; make ye nothing of my misery? I wish the like may never befall you — Ne sit super vos -for so some render the words.

Behold, and see if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow.] What we see in the water seemeth greater than it is, so in the waters of Marah. See #La 3:1. It is sure that "no temptation, taketh us but what is human, or common to man." {#1Co 10:13} But what did the man Christ Jesus suffer! All our sufferings are but chips of his cross, saith Luther, not worthy to be named in the same day, &c.

Wherein the Lord hath afflicted me.] This was yet no small allay to her grief, that God had done it. The Stoics, who held that all came by destiny, were noted for their patience, or rather tolerance, and equanimity in all conditions.

Ver. 13. From above hath he sent fire into my bones.] Like as when the marrow and natural moisture is dried up by a violent fever; or rather, as when the solid parts of bodies below are lightning-struck from above, and scorched by these sulphurous flames that pierce into them.

And it prevailed against them.] Or, And he ruled it—viz., the fire; i.e., He directed and disposed it.

He hath spread a net for my feet.] And so hampered me, an unruly creature, ut constricta fuerim in ruinam, that there is no escaping from him; yea, the more I strive to get out, the faster I stick.

He hath turned me back.] Laid me on my back.

He hath made me desolate and faint.] My calamities come thick, one in the neck of another; words are too weak to utter them; and yet here is very great copia and variety of words, so that Paschasius saith this book may well be called, The Lamentations of Lamentations; like as Solomon's Song is called for its excellence, The Song of Songs.

Ver. 14. The yoke of my transgressions is bound by his hand.] Compactum est. Or, Is bound upon his hand; that is, the Lord carrieth them in his continual remembrance.

They are wreathed.] Wrapped and wreathed together as a strong cord. My sins are twisted together, saith one, and sadly accented; so are the punishments of my sins, saith the Church here, neither can I get free, but as the heifer, by wriggling against the yoke, galleth her neck, so do I

And come up upon my neck.] Praeclarum scilicet monile, et torques, mearum virtutum index, et insigne.

He hath made my strength to fall.] Heb., He hath caused my power to stumble i.e., so to stumble as to fall; for he who stumbleth and yet falleth not, getteth ground.

From whom I am not able to arise.] Only God can raise me; and it is a work worthy of God, who

“Deiecit ut relevet: premit ut solaria praestet.”

Ver. 15. The Lord hath trodden underfoot.] As unsavoury salt; that is, he hath covered with the greatest contempt.

All my mighty men.] Vulgate, My magnificos, or gallants, in whom I too much trusted.

In the midst of me.] In the very bosom of their mother; as Caracalla killed his brother Geta, consecrating the sword wherewith he so killed him.

He hath called an assembly against me.] Vocant adversum me tempus, so the Vulgate version hath it; and Calvin to the same purpose, He hath called the time against me—i.e., a set time wherein to destroy my strong ones. Howbeit one ^{a} maketh this inference from the words, for the very time which we have condemned, we shall be condemned; and for every day which we have spent idly, we shall be shent severely. This is true, but little to the present purpose; like as Hushai said, Ahithophel’s counsel was good, but not now.

The Lord hath trodden her as in a winepress.] By another like metaphor, God is said to have threshed Babylon as a threshingfloor.

{#Jer 51:33}

{a} Dr Playfair.

Ver. 16. For these things I weep.] I, Jerusalem; ^{as #La 1:2} or, I, Jeremiah.

“Nam faciles motus mens generosa capit.”—Ovid.

Mine eye, mine eye runneth down with water.] Continuitatem significat: imo emphasin dicit. Niobe like, I weep excessively and without intermission. God would not have the wounds of a godly sorrow to be ever so healed up but that they may bleed afresh again upon all good occasion. As for worldly sorrow, there must be a stop put to it, lest what we have overly wept, we be forced to unweep again.

Because the comforter that should relieve my soul is far from me.] This was very sad, and made both eyes run down with water. God stood aloof off; men were slack to shore up a poor sinking soul. This was a condition and complaint not unlike that of Saul, "I am sore distressed; for the Philistines are upon me, and God is departed from me." (#ISa 28:15)

Ver. 17. Zion spreadeth forth her hands.] But to whom? To God? She should have done it sooner—namely, while he stretched out his hands to her all the day long. To the Babylonian? At barbarus nil nisi iras spirat, but his tender mercies are mere cruelties. God will not take the wicked by the hand, saith Bildad; (#Job 8:20) men may not, whenas God will not. No better course can be taken in this case than that prescribed, #La 3:40,41; then God will repent, and men shall relent, toward a distressed creature.

And there is none to comfort her.] See #La 1:16. This is oft complained of as a most heavy affliction.

The Lord hath commanded.] What marvel, then, that their hearts were so set off from him, Who had been so careless of keeping God's commands?

Jerusalem is as a menstruous woman among them.] Or, As an abomination, tanquam quisquiliae, vel tanquam foetidae aliquae sordes. God's people are more shamefully slighted and reproached in the world than any else, and the godliest most of all.

Ver. 18. The Lord is righteous.] Whatever I suffer, or say haply in my passion, that may seem to sound to the contrary. Righteous art thou, O Lord, and just are thy judgments, said David; (#Ps 119:137) and after him Mauricius the emperor, when deposed by the traitor Phocas; and the noble Duplessis, when he heard of the death of his only son, slain in the Low Countries.

For I have rebelled against his commandments.] Heb., Against his mouth, and have therefore deserved thus to feel the weight of his hand; to hear the rod, and who hath appointed it, because I would not hear the Word and who preached it. I have embittered his mouth, as some render the Hebrew text, and therefore am worthily embittered by him.

Hear, I pray you, all people.] See #La 1:12. But how agreeth this with that of David in #2Sa 1:20, "Tell it not in Gath?" It is answered that David there would not have that slaughter in Gilboa to be reported as the hand of the Philistines, but of God.

My virgins and my young men are gone into captivity.] Are carried out of this land, the sign of God's favour, and of heaven itself. And here lay the pinch of their grief. Let young ones and maids— quibus hodie fraena laxari solent -obey God, unless they had rather perish.

Ver. 19. I called for my lovers, but they deceived me.] My confederates, idols, and other sweethearts, never yet true to any that trusted them. See #Jer 22:20 30:14.

My priests and mine elders, &c.] What then became of poor folk? and how gracious was God to Jeremiah in the provision made for him by the king, who yet loved him not!

Ver. 20. Behold, O Lord, for I am in distress.] Thus ever and anon she is lifting up her soul to God, by a holy apostrophe, in some short yet pithy expressions. And surely if a long look toward God speedeth, {#Ps 34:4,5 Jon 2:4,7} how much more a hearty ejaculation, as here!

My bowels are troubled.] Lutulant, bulliunt, vel intumescunt: non solum fluctuant, aut strepunt, ut alibi. My bowels boil and bubble, or are thick and muddy, as waters are after and in a tempest: or it is a metaphor from mortar made by mingling water with lime and sand. She was in a great perturbation, and sought ease by submitting to God's justice, and imploring his mercy.

Mine heart is turned within me.] Or, Turneth itself upside down. See #Ho 11:8.

For I have grievously rebelled.] This was the right way to get ease and settle all within—viz., to confess sin with aggravation, putting in weight, laying on load.

Abroad the sword bereaveth, at home there is as death.] Famine especially, which is worse than the sword. {#La 4:9}

“Et plurima mortis imago.”

“Even the most intense image of death.”

R. Solomon interpreteth it of evil angels.

Ver. 21. They have heard that I sigh, .] My friends have, and yet they pity me not: this was a great vexation, and is much complained of. See #La 1:2,16,17,19.

All mine enemies have heard of my trouble: they are glad.] This επιχαίρεκακια is the devil’s disease: the wicked compose comedies out of the saints’ tragedies, and revel in their ruins. But God’s people, in this case, have a double comfort: (1.) That God hath done it, and not the enemy; that he hath a holy hand in all the troubles that befall them. (2.) That their enemies shall not escape scot-free, but be soundly punished.

That thou hast done it.] Or, But thou hast done it; and sure we are thou wilt not overdo.

Thou wilt bring the day that thou hast called.] The dismal day of vengeance that thou hast threatened Babylon with, especially by Isaiah and Jeremiah.

And they shall be like unto me.] Their future desolation is my present consolation.

Ver. 22. Let their wickedness come before thee.] God had pronounced Babylon’s destruction, and therefore the Church might safely pray it: think the like of spiritual Babylon. God seemeth to forget the insolencies of his enemies, and deliverance of his people; we must mind him, and then it will be done. Only let us see to it, that our fire of zeal for God’s glory burn clear, without the smoke of self-ends and of private revenge.

As thou hast done unto me for my transgressions.] This was it that put a sting into all her sufferings; but then she had this to support her, that her sighs for her sins were many, and that her heart was faint or heavy through fear of wrath; yet not without hope of mercy, which made her thus to repair unto him by prayer. Qui nihil sperat, nihil orat.

Chapter 2

Ver. 1. How hath the Lord covered the daughter of Zion with a cloud!] Heb., With a thick cloud: nothing like that bright cloud wherein he appeared to his people, as a token of his grace, at the dedication of the temple. {#1Ki 8:10} How comes it about, and what may be the reason for it? Oh in what a wonderful manner and by what strange means hath the Lord now clouded and covered his people (whom he had established as Mount Zion) with blackest calamities and confusions, taking all the lustre of happiness and of hope from her, and that in his anger, and again in the day of his anger!

“Tantaene animis coelestibus irae?”

And cast down from heaven to earth,] i.e., From the highest pitch of felicity to the lowest plight of misery. This was afterwards indeed Capernaum's case; but when Micah the Morashite prophesied in the times of Jeremiah that "Zion should be ploughed as a field, and Jerusalem laid on heaps," {#Mic 3:12 Jer 26:18} it seemed a paradox, and very few believed them. Christ's disciples also had a conceit that the temple and the world must needs have one and the same period, which occasioned that mixed discourse made by our Saviour. {#Mt 24:1-3} But God's gracious presence is not tied to a place. The ark, God's footstool (as here it is called) was transportative till settled in Zion; so is the Church militant in continual motion, till it come to triumph in heaven; and those that with Capernaum are lifted up to heaven in the abundance of means, may be brought down to hell for an instance of divine vengeance.

And remembered not his footstool.] The temple, and therein the ark, to teach them that he was not wholly there included, neither ought now to be sought and worshipped anywhere but above.

Sursum corda.

Ver. 2. The Lord hath swallowed up all the habitations of Jadah.] Κατεποντισε, {a} as the sea swalloweth up a ship; as an earthquake swalloweth up whole townships; as fire swalloweth up fuel, or as Moses' serpent swallowed up the sorcerers' serpents.

And hath not pitied.] This was worse than all the rest. {#Isa 47:6}

He hath thrown down.] Not shaken them only, and so left them standing, but utterly subverted them, and that in great displeasure, Deo irritato, et irato. God set on the Chaldees, and was the author, not of their evil will, but of their work.

He hath brought them down to the ground.] Though for their height they seemed to threaten heaven.

He hath polluted the kingdom and the priests.] Which were held holy and inviolable. Profanavit regnum coeli, say some Rabbis here, He hath profaned the kingdom of heaven; for so they accounted the commonwealth of Israel, which Josephus calleth Θεοκρατειαν, a God government. But now God had disprivileged them, and cast them off as a thing of naught.

{a} Septuag.

Ver. 3. He hath cut off in his anger all the horn of Israel,] i.e., All the strength and beauty, the royal majesty especially. {#Ps 89:24 132:17}

He hath drawn back his right hand.] Wherewith he was wont to shelter them and to fight for them. Or, Israel's right hand—scil., by disabling them; for it is God that strengtheneth and weakeneth the arm of either party. {#Eze 30:24}

And he burned against Jacob.] Or, In Jacob—i.e., He declareth his displeasure among his people as clearly as a flame of fire that is easily discerned.

Ver. 4. He hath bent his bow like an enemy.] He doth not only help the enemies, but himself fighteth against us with his own bare hand.

He hath bent his bow, id est, vim suam ultricem, saith Origen; that is, his avenging force. So the poet feigneth that Apollo shot his deadly shafts into the camp of the Grecians.

He stood with his right hand.] Heb., He was set. Vulgate, Firmavit dextram suam; he held his right hand steadily, that he might hit what he shot at.

In the tabernacle of the daughter of Zion.] In Jerusalem, that was sweetly situated, as a tabernacle pitched in a pleasant plain, but now a field of blood.

He hath poured out his wrath like fire,] i.e., Abundantly and most vehemently, perinde ac Aetna, Hecla, &c.

Ver. 5. The Lord was an enemy.] This the secure and foolish people would not be drawn to believe, till now they felt it; therefore it is so reiterated.

He hath swallowed up Israel, he hath destroyed, &c.] This he had said before, {#La 2:2} but in cases of this kind people love to say the same things over and over. Redundanti copia exponit quae antea dixerat.

And hath increased...mourning and lamentation.] Heb., Lamentation and lamentation—q.d., this is all he hath left us. And this she speaketh mourning, but not murmuring: Non litem intendit Deo, sed confessionem edit.

Ver. 6. And he hath violently taken away his tabernacle.] Redit ad deplorandam religionem: nothing grieves a good soul so much as the loss of religious opportunities. Old Eli's heart was broken before his neck at the news of the ark taken.

As if it were of a garden.] As if it were some cottage or hovel set up for a short time in a garden for the repose of the gardener. {#Isa 1:8}

He hath destroyed his places of the assembly.] Whence we were wont to hope for help in answer to our prayers. There it was that he formerly "brake the arrows of the bow, the shield, and the sword, and the battle." {#Ps 76:3} {See Trapp on "Ps 76:3"} Hence {#2Ch 4:9} the great court of the temple, where the people used to pray, is called Gnazarah; that is, help and defence.

The king and the priest.] Zedekiah and Seraiah, and with them the kingdom and the priesthood.

“ Haec iam pro vill, sub pedibusque iacent.”

Ver. 7. The Lord hath cast off his altar.] She goeth over it again, as the main matter of her grief, that she was bereft of the outward exercises of religion. His altar God had cast into a corner, as that which was an eyesore to him; his sanctuary he abhorred or dissolved, &c. Longe fecit, procul removit a se quasi rem odiosam, sibi ingratham et molestam.

They have made a noise in the house of the Lord.] Where God was wont to be praised with heart and voice, now the enemies reboate and roar out Io triumphe, Io Paeon, Victoria, All is our own.

Ver. 8. The Lord hath purposed to destroy.] Non casu, non subito, non temere, sed maturo el destinato decreto. God’s providence (which is nothing else but the carrying on of his decree) extendeth to smallest matters, much more to the subversion of states and cities.

He that stretched out a line,] scil., Of destruction, or a levelling line. See #2Ki 21:13 Isa 34:11. Jerusalem was built by line, and so it was destroyed by him who doeth all things in number, weight, and measure.

Ver. 9. Her gates are sunk into the ground.] So they seem to be, because laid on the ground, and covered with rubbish. The Rabbis fable, that the gates sank indeed into the ground, that they might not come into the enemy’s power, because the ark had once passed through them; and when the priests that carried it sang, "Lift up your heads, O ye gates," &c., they opened of their own accord.

The law is no more,] scil., Read, or regarded. Inter arma silent leges, The noise of wars drowns the voice of laws.

Her prophets also find no vision from the Lord.] See #Ps 74:9. {See Trapp on "Ps 74:9"} Jeremiah was alone, and haply thought, when he saw all ruined, that he should prophesy no more. Ezekiel and Daniel were far remote. This was no small affliction that is here complained of. How woe begone was sinful Saul, when in his distress he could have no answer from God either by Urim or vision, &c., but had the devil to preach his funeral!

Ver. 10. The elders of the daughters of Zion.] Who sat once aloft passing sentence, and held themselves, haply, too high to be told their duties by a poor prophet.

Sit upon the ground.] After the manner of mourners.

And keep silence.] Who were wont to be the oracles of the country.

They have cast dust upon their heads.] Those white heads of theirs, which they had stained with foul practices.

They have girded themselves with sackcloth.] Heb., Sacks, instead of silks.

The virgins of Jerusalem.] Who were wont to walk haughtily, and with outstretched necks. {#Isa 3:16}

Hang down their heads to the ground.] As if they were ashamed of themselves, and had small joy of their beauty and former bravery.

Ver. 11. Mine eyes do fail with tears.] Those fountains (as the Hebrew word signifieth) are even drawn dry. I have wept till I can weep no more, as David did; or I have wept myself blind, as Faustus the son of Vortigern (once king of England) is said to have done.

My bowels are troubled.] Heb., Bemuddled. See #La 1:20.

My liver is poured upon the earth.] I have well nigh vomited up my gall. {as #Job 16:13}

For the destruction.] Heb., The breach even to shivers, as young trees or ships are broken by tempests.

Because the children and sucklings swoon in the streets.] Miserabile etiam hostibus spectaculum; a rueful sight.

Ver. 12. They say to their mothers.] Lege et luge. Gather and mourne.

“ *Tu quibus ista leges incertum est, Lector, ocellis:
Ipse quidem siccis scribere vix potui.* ”

As oft as I read the Lamentations of Jeremiah, saith Gregory Nazianzen, {a} my voice faileth me, and I am overwhelmed with tears. The misery of that poor people cometh under my view, as it were, and my heart is therewith very much affected and afflicted.

Where is corn and wine.] Frumentum dicunt, non panem. They say grain not bread. Grain they would have been glad of, though unground, saith one; wine they ask for, and not water, which noteth an ill custom in their mothers to drink wine, and to give it their little ones; but by grain and wine here may be meant necessary food, to keep them alive.

When their soul was poured out into the mother’s bosom.] As it were giving them their lives again, seeing they yielded them no food to preserve them alive.

{a} Orat. i. Pacificat.

Ver. 13. What thing shall I take to witness for thee?] q.d., Thou art such a mirror of God’s heavy judgments, that I know not whence to borrow arguments, nor where to find examples for thy comfort, so matchless is thy misery. It exceedeth that of the Egyptians under Moses, of the Canaanites under Joshua, of the Philistines under David, of the Hebrews under Eli, &c. It is even imparallel and inexpressible. I have but one simile to set it forth by, and it is this,

Thy breach is great, like the sea.] As far as the sea exceedeth the rivers, so doth thy calamity exceed that of other nations.

Who can heal thee?] None but an almighty Physician. Surely, in man's judgment, thy bruise is incurable, and thy wound is grievous.

{#Jer 30:12}

Ver. 14. Thy prophets.] Thine, and not mine; for thou art miserable by thine own election, accessory to thine own ruin.

Have seen vain and foolish things for thee.] Visions of vanity, sapless and savourless stuff; the fruit, or rather froth, of their own fancies. {#Jer 23:9-14}

And they have not discovered thine iniquity.] Conviction maketh way for conversion, and so preventeth utter subversion.

But have seen for thee false burdens,] viz., Against Babylon, in confidence whereof thou hast been hardened and heartened in thy sinful practices, to thine utter undoing.

And causes of banishment,] scil., Eventually, and as it hath proved.

Ver. 15. All that pass by thee clap.] See #La 1:17.

Is this the city?] God's palace upon earth, the porch of paradise, &c., as they said of Jezebel when she lay torn with dogs, Is this that Jezebel?

“ O quantum haec Niobe, Niobe mutatur ab illis?”

Ver. 16. All thine enemies opened their mouths against thee.] They speak largely and freely to thy dishonour, the very banks of blasphemy being broken down, as it were.

We have swallowed her up.] But shall find her to be hard meat, such as they shall digest in hell. See #La 2:2,5.

Certainly this is the day that we look for.] Pray we that the Papists may never see here their longlooked for day, as they have long called it.

Ver. 17. The Lord hath done that which he hath devised.] Or, Performed what he purposed. See #La 2:8.

He hath fulfilled his word that he had commanded.] That is, his threats annexed to his commands, and of as great authority as they.

In the days of old.] And not two or three days only since. God's menaces are ancient and infallible, not uttered in terrorem only; neither is his forbearance any acquittance.

And he hath caused thine enemy to rejoice over thee.] Still the prophet calleth off this distressed people from the jeers and insolencies of their enemies, whom they too much looked upon, to the just judgment of God, who turned those dogs loose upon them, to bark at them and to bait them, in the manner said before.

Ver. 18. Their herd cried unto the Lord, / i.e., They cried seriously at least, if not sincerely. Some think it was not a cry of the spirit for grace, but only of the flesh, for ease and freedom from affliction; wherefore the prophet in the next words turneth to the walls of Jerusalem, which were now broken down, bidding them weep, since the people would not. And surely the stony walls of men's houses, standing with bells of water on their faces before foul weather, shall witness against such hard hearts as relent not, and so prevent not the terrible tempest of God's wrath for their iniquities. There are those who render and sense the text thus: "Their heart crieth against the Lord,"—i.e., The adversaries set their whole power to devise blasphemy against God; let the Church therefore pray in hope to be heard, and to speed the better for the other's insolence. These by wall understand the people within the wall. Others, O mure, qui nunc es mera ruina; O poor shattered wall; or, O city, which art now nothing but bare walls, without housing and inhabitants.

Ver. 19. Arise, cry in the night.] A fit time for meditation and prayer, as we read of David, {#Ps 119:55,148} and of the Son of David. {#Lu 21:37}

In the beginning of the watches.] When others are in their first—which is their deepest and sweetest—sleep, break thyself of thy rest, that thou mayest give God no rest. {#Isa 62:6,7} Omnibus signis et modis miseriam tuam expone Domino; bestir thee every way, all is but little enough.

Pour out thine heart like water.] That is, saith Sanchez, Weep till thou hast wept thy very heart out, if it were possible. Or as others, Pour out thine heart to God in humble and ingenuous confession and supplication; but then pour it forth as water (whereof every drop will come out), and not as oil, whereof some will still stick to the sides of the vessel. Tundens pectus et non effundens vitia, ea consolidat, saith Augustine. He who pretendeth to repent, and yet parteth not with his sins, doth but increase them.

Lift up thine hands toward him.] But with thy heart. {#La 3:41}

For the life of thy young children.] See on #La 2:11,12.

Ver. 20. Behold, O Lord, and consider to whom thou hast done this.] Even to thine own inheritances, who suffer harder and heavier things commonly than any others. And why? Ingentia beneficia, ingentia flagitia, ingentia supplicia; their offences are increased, their punishments are aggravated by their obligations.

Shall the women eat their fruit, children of a span long?] That they did so in the siege of Jerusalem by the Chaldees, it appeareth by this question. In the famine of Samaria, under Joram, they did likewise; {#2Ki 6:28,29} as also at the last destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans; {a} and at the siege of Sancerra, in France, A.D. 1572. See the sad effects of sin, and shun it, if but for the ill consequents of it.

Shall the priest and the prophet be slain in the sanctuary of the Lord?] It seems they were so—but who they were we read not—although God had cautioned, "Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm." Priests were slaughtered, where they used to slaughter beasts for sacrifices; but it may be they were nothing better than Thomas Becket, the devil's martyr, here, and Adam Benton, that butcherly archbishop in Scotland, who, when himself was butchered, cried out, Kill me not, for I am a priest. {b}

{a} Joseph. de Bel., lib. vii. cap. 8.

{b} Acts and Mon.

Ver. 21. The young and the old lie on the ground in the streets.] Oh, the woe of war! oh, the bloody work that the sword maketh wheresoever it is in commission! Well may it be called "an evil, an only evil," by an antonomasy. {a} {#Isa 45:7}

{a} The substitution of an epithet or appellative, or the name of an office or dignity, for a person's proper name, as the Iron Duke for Wellington, his Grace for an archbishop. Also, conversely, the use of a proper name to express a general idea, as in calling an orator a Cicero, a wise judge a Daniel. CED

Ver. 22. Thou hast called as in a solemn day my terrors,] i.e., My terrible enemies the Chaldees, being called in by thee their generalissimo, came on as cheerfully as if they had come to a solemn feast or some merry meeting, and not to a siege and to a bloody war, which they cannot but know to be utrinque triste, such as both sides usually suffer by.

Those that I have swaddled and brought up.] Singula haec verba ponderanda sunt; singula enim ingens habent pathos. Here every word is very ponderous and pathetic; indeed, this whole book is so, which is the reason that there is no great coherence in some places thereof to be discovered. For as he that is under some grievous affliction, without observing of order, now cries, now prays, now laments, now complains, &c.; so doth the prophet here, in the name of the Church, pour forth himself tumultuously in a flood such words as his grief ministered unto him; and grief is no methodical speaker.

Chapter 3

Ver. 1. I am the man.] Here Jeremiah, in the name and place of all the Jewish people, setteth forth his sufferings very passionately and elegantly. Ουδεν γαρ του παθοντος ρητορικότερον, saith Synesius; for nothing is more rhetorical than a man in misery. See on #La 1:12.

By the rod of his wrath,] i.e., Of God's wrath, whom yet he nameth not prae magnitudine affectus, {a} but referreth to him all his sufferings; and he alludeth here, say some, to that rod. {#Jer 1:11}

{a} Oecolamp.

Ver. 2. He hath led me and brought me into darkness.] Perstat semper in metaphora a pastoritia, say some, who by rod in the foregoing verse understand God's shepherd's wand, wherewith, when he is displeased, he driveth his unruly sheep into dark and dangerous places. {#Ps 23:3,4 Mic 7:9}

Ver. 3. Surely against me is he turned.] Metaphora a colaphizantibus. A metaphor from buffeters, who double their blows, beating their adversaries on both sides, as the smith doth his red hot iron upon the anvil till he hath shaped it. {a}

Ver. 4. My flesh and my skin hath he made old.] Withered it and waned it, so that I am not like myself; facta videbor anus, as she said. See #Ps 32:3.

He hath broken my bones.] Decayed and impaired, and that with greatest torment, as befalleth when bones are broken.

Ver. 5. He hath builded against me.] Bulwarks and batteries.

And compassed me with gall and travel.] Or, With venom and vexation. See #Jer 8:14. In these and the like hyperbolic expressions we must note that words are too weak to utter the greatness of the saints' grief, when they lie under the sense of God's wrath and heavy displeasure.

Ver. 6. He hath set me in dark places.] Dungeons haply, which are a kind of graves, and where poor prisoners lie as forgotten. The Persians called their prisons ληθαζ, oblivions. And Ezekiel saith that Babylon was to the Jews as a grave, where they lay for dead till those dead bones lived again. {#Eze 37:1-14}

As they that be dead of old.] Free among the dead and forgotten. It may be said of a saint, in some cases, that “ Vivit, et est vitae nescius ipse sum.”

Ver. 7. He hath hedged me about.] Sorrounded me with troubles, brought me into straits inextricable and importable.

Ver. 8. Also when I cry and shout.] As poor prisoners use to do for relief and release.

He shutteth out my prayer.] Or, Shutteth his ear to my prayer. This was very grievous to any good heart; more than it could be to Cicero, a stranger to the true God, who yet bewaileth the matter to his brother in these words, I would pray to the gods for those things; but that, alas! they have given over to hear my prayers.

Ver. 9. He hath enclosed my ways with hewn stone, / i.e., Most strongly and closely, so that none can come at me.

He hath made all my paths crooked.] So that all things go cross with me; and although they were never so well devised, yet still they sort out unto the worst.

Ver. 10. He was unto me as a bear lying in wait.] So that if I do but offer to stir, or seek to make escape, I am in danger to be devoured.

And as a lion in secret places.] God hath many ways and means to bemeet with sinners. He can stop them in their course, as he did Balaam, Jonah, and others.

Ver. 11. He hath turned aside my ways.] As #La 3:9.

And pulled me in pieces.] As a bear or lion doth the silly sheep that falleth into their paws. Carnali quadam intemperie haec effusa sunt. The Vulgate hath it, Confregit me. He hath broken me in pieces; scil., Attempting to leap over his hedge; {#La 3:7} his stone wall. {#La 3:9} In the year 1590, Nicolas Frischlin, that famous poet, orator, and philosopher, attempting to escape out of prison, was so broken, a capite ad talos, a cute ad ossa. from the head to the heels, from the skin to the bones. {a}

{a} Alsted., Chron., 480.

Ver. 12. He hath bent his bow.] #La 2:4.

And set me as a mark.] Which he is sure to hit. The Benjamites, {#Jud 20:16} the Parthians, Alcon the Cretan, Domitian the Emperor, were excellent archers; but

“ Non semper feriet quodcunque minabitur arcus; ”

God’s arrow never misseth the mark.

Ver. 13. He hath caused the arrows of his quiver to enter into my reins.] {a} Heb., The sons of his quiver, by a Hebraism. So Horace hath—“Pharetram gravidam sagittis.”—Lib, ii. od. 21.

“Full quiver of arrows.”

Job hath many like complaints. {#Job 7:20 8:4 16:12,13}

Ver. 14. I was a derision, to all my people.] Or, To all peoples. Our Saviour suffered all this and much more for us.

And their song all the day.] Or, Their lute, or kit, whom they played on at pleasure, and desired no better sport.

Ver. 15. He hath filled me with bitterness.] Heb., Bitternesses: {a} alluding, as some think, to that ius seu embamma in quo intingebant agnum Paschalem, sauce of bitter herbs wherewith they did eat the Passover—the juice of them expressed—to mind them of the bitter afflictions which they suffered in Egypt.

He hath made me drunk with wormwood.] Or, Hensbane, or wolfsbane rather, succo cicutae.

Ver. 16. He hath also broken my teeth with gravel stones.] Comminuit scrupis dentes meos -i.e., With gritty bread. See #Pr 20:17.

He hath covered me with ashes.] The Greek and Latin have it, He hath fed me with ashes, which was worse than that bread made most of sawdust, wherewith they fed the martyrs in the Marian times.

Ver. 17. And thou hast removed my soul far off from peace.] Prosperity and I are twain; we are utterly unacquainted.

Ver. 18. And I said.] But not so wisely. I was even almost tumbling into the pit of desperation. I was straddling over it, as it were, but God preserved me.

My strength and my hope is perished.] My strength to bear these miseries, and my hope to be ever freed of them.

Ver. 19. Remembering mine affliction and my misery, the wormwood and the gall,] i.e., The bitterness that was in it, but of mine own commingling. Impatiens quisque bis affligitur, Impatience redoubleth an affliction.

Ver. 20. My soul hath them still in remembrance.] But it is not good to plod overly much in this case. Such bitter pills should be swallowed whole, and not chewed upon, unless it be for our further humiliation.

Ver. 21. This I recall to my mind.] This? What? God's infinite mercies, that cape of good hope; see #La 3:22 Ps 119:56; "This I had"—that is, this comfort, or this ability to keep thy precepts.

Ver. 22. It is of the Lord's mercy that we are not consumed.] That we are yet on this side hell. This sentence was much in the mouth of that famous Maria Aegyptiaca, and should be in all our minds and mouths for a lenitive.

Because his compassions fail {a} not.] Or, Are not spent, wasted, but, as the oil in the cruse, as the spring ever runneth, the sun ever shineth, &c. This should ever shine in our hearts as the sun doth in the firmament.

{a} Exarescunt torrentes, metalla exhauriuntur, flumina deficiunt, prata item cum fructibus, &c.

Ver. 23. They are new every morning.] Yea, every moment. We have continual experiments.

Great is thy faithfulness.] God's mercy moved him to promise; his truth to perform. See #2Sa 7:18,21. {See Trapp on "2Sa 7:18"} {See Trapp on "2Sa 7:21"}

Ver. 24. The Lord is my portion.] And that is enough for me, should I never have more. {See Trapp on "Ps 16:5"} That which giveth content in any portion is (1.) The favour and presence of God; (2.) That it is from the hand of a Father; (3.) That it comes to us in the covenant of grace; (4.) That it is the purchase of Christ's blood; (5.) That it is an answer of prayers, and a blessing from above on honest endeavours, &c. Vide autem, pie Lector, saith an expositor: See here, good reader, how this prophetic lamentation beginneth to be a guide to godliness. For it doth not, after the manner of silly women, throw out empty words without wisdom; but teacheth all along, either overtly or covertly, that all things here below, how highly soever esteemed, are vanity and soon lost; but the grace of God is solid and stable; {a} Christum tollere nemo potest. Christ is a portion unlosable, as one {b} once answered to those that asked him why he was still merry and cheerful.

Said my soul.] {c} Not my mouth only; but I speak it from my very heart, which rejoiceth in God my portion more than the many do in the increase of their grain and wine. {#Ps 4:7}

Therefore will I hope in him.] Expectabo ut teneam per speciem, quem teneo per spem.

{a} Pet. a Figueir.

{b} Deicola Abbas.

{c} Emphatice loquitur.

Ver. 25. The Lord is good unto them that wait for him.] Which few can skill of, and I have somewhat to do to hit on, but would not now have missed of for all the world. {a}

To the soul that seeketh him.] Not giving over till he findeth him.

{a} Et hoc apertam cruditionem continct. -Figu.

Ver. 26. It is good that a man should both hope and quietly wait.] Heb., Be silent: not with a pythagoric or monastic silence, ut non liceat loqui locis et horis certis, but with a humble submission to God's holy will, a patient and peaceable behaviour under his hand; waiting for a good use thereof, and a gracious issue in the best time—to frame the heart whereunto, Aurea his subnectitur sententia.

Ver. 27. It is good for a man that he bear the yoke from his youth.] The yoke of God's law, and the discipline of afflictions: it is good to be betime in God's nurturing house, and remain a good while there, that he be trained up in the school of afflictions, that he be a well-beaten soldier to the cross. {a} The description of such a one followeth.

Ver. 28. He sitteth alone.] Sessio solitaria, as being much in meditation, according to that counsel of the preacher, "in the day of adversity consider."

And keepeth silence.] When God's hand is upon his back, his hand is upon his mouth. See on #La 3:26.

Because he hath borne it upon him.] Or, When he hath taken it upon him; taken up his cross, as being active in suffering.

Ver. 29. He putteth his mouth in the dust.] He lieth low at God's feet: putting himself into the hands of justice, yet in hope of mercy. See #1Co 14:25.

If so be there may be hope.] Heb., Peradventure there is hope—q.d., doubtless there is; however, I will try, since I have lost many a worse labour.

Ver. 30. He giveth his cheek to him that smiteth him.] Humility, the product of affliction sanctified, is still at her lesson, or rather practising what she hath learned. David, having suffered by Absalom, can well enough bear with Shimei's tongue smitings; and the apostles, after they had been in prison, departed from the council, rejoicing that they were so far graced as to be disgraced for the name of Jesus. {#Ac 5:41}

He is filled full of reproach.] He can bravely bear all contumelies and contempts for his conscience, taking them as crowns and confirmations of his conformity to Christ.

Ver. 31. For the Lord will not cast off for ever.] No, not at all, however he may seem to some so to do. Non deserit etiamsi deserat, saith a father: He doth not put his people far from him, as the word here signifieth.

Ver. 32. For though he cause grief.] As sometimes he doth "in very faithfulness," and that he may be true to his people's souls.

Yet he will have compassion.] He will repent and return, and leave a blessing behind him, that is certain. {#Joe 2:14}

Ver. 33. For he doth not afflict willingly.] Heb., From the heart. {a} Non nisi coactus, as that emperor said when he sealed a writ for execution of a condemned person: I would not do it but upon necessity. It goeth as much against the heart with God as it can do against the hair with us:

“ Ille dolet quoties cogitur esse ferox.”

{a} Non est Deo volupe, proprium, aut per se intentum. Poenas dat dum poenas exigit. -Sen. de Augusto.

Iustus etiam supplicii illacrymavit et ingemuit. — De Vespasiano Suetonius.

Ver. 34. To crush under his feet all the prisoners of the earth,] i.e., All those that are in misery, to lay more load upon them, and so to crush them to pieces, yea, to grind them to powder. This he could as easily do as bid it be done: but he takes no such delight in severity and harshness.

Ver. 35. To turn aside the right of a man.] To wrest his right by false witness and corrupt means, as wicked men use to do before the face of the Most High, or of a superior under colour of law. God liketh none of all this, though again for excellent ends he allows it so to be, and orders it when so it is.

Ver. 36. To subvert a man in his cause.] By sleight of hand to tilt the balance of justice on one side.

The Lord approveth not.] Heb., Seeth not. Non videt -i.e., non ei visum est, it seemeth not good unto him; he liketh it not.

Ver. 37. Who is he?] Tam imprudens et imperitus? Can any one be so simple as to think that the enemy could do aught against us but by the divine permission and appointment? God, as he made all by his power, so he manageth all by his providence. This the Egyptians hieroglyphically set forth by painting God, (1.) As blowing an egg out of his mouth—that is, as making the round world by his word; (2.) To compassing about that orb with a girdle—that is, keeping all together, and governing all by his providence.

Ver. 38. Out of the mouth of the Most High proceedeth not evil and good?] i.e., Prosperity and adversity; q.d., Who doubteth of that? {#Am 3:5 Isa 45:7} Talk not then of fate and blind fortune.

Ver. 39. Wherefore doth a living man complain?] Mourn immoderately, or murmur causelessly. 1. If he mourn, let him mourn for his sin as the cause of his suffering; let him revenge upon that. 2. If he be tempted to murmur, let him remember that he is yet alive, and that is more than his part cometh to, since it is the Lord's mercy that he is not consumed, and sent packing hence to hell. Life in any sense is a sweet mercy, even that which to the afflicted may seem a lifeless life. {as #Pr 15:15} Let this patient us, that we are yet alive.

A man for the punishment of his sins.] Heb., Man for his sin. For sin doth as naturally draw and suck punishments to it as the loadstone doth iron or turpentine fire; wherefore also the same word in Hebrew signifieth both.

Ver. 40. Let us search and try our ways,] i.e., Make accurate inquiry into them; so shall we soon find ourselves to be a whole newly found world of wickedness. Search we therefore, and do it thoroughly. Many either search not at all (they cannot endure these domestic audits: it is death to them to reflect and recognise what they have done), or as though they desired not to find. They search as men do for their bad money; they know they have it, but they would gladly have it to pass for current among the rest. Heathens will rise up in judgment against such, for they prescribed and practised self-examination: Pythagoras once a day;

*“ Non prius in dulcem declines lumina somnum,
Quam prius exactae reputaveris acta diei, ” & c.*

Phocylides thrice a day, if Stobaeus {a} may be believed.

And turn again to the Lord.] Let self-examination end in reformation, else sin will be thereby but emboldened and strengthened, as idle vagrants and lawless subjects are, if questioned only, and not punished and restrained. Of turning again to the Lord; {See Trapp on "Zec 1:2"}

{a} Serm.

Ver. 41. Let us lift up our hearts with our hands.] Holy hearts, pure hands. Instead of wrangling with God, {as #La 3:39} let us wrestle with him in prayer; this is the only way to get off with comfort. Nazianzen saith, that the best work we can put our hands unto is, in coelos eas extendere, ad precesque expandere, to lift them up to God in prayer. But then it must be with a true heart. {#Heb 10:22} See #Job 11:13. {See Trapp on "Job 11:13"}

Ver. 42. We have transgressed and have rebelled.] We have committed evil and omitted good, and failed in the manner, and are therefore justly punished. Let God hear such words fall from our mouths, set to work by our hearts, and then we may have anything.

Ver. 43. Thou hast covered with anger.] Overwhelmed us with thy judgments. None out of hell have ever suffered more than the saints: they have felt the sad effects of displeased love.

Ver. 44. Thou hast covered thyself with a cloud.] Hid thy face from us, and secreted thyself as a judge doth when he hath passed sentence upon a malefactor, that he may not be solicited to reverse it.

That our prayers should not pass through.] The veil of the temple was of no debarring matter, but thin and pervious, that the incense might easily pass through it into the Holy of holies: but now it was otherwise; God had set a bar between him and his people.

Ver. 45. Thou hast made us as the offscouring.] Eradicationem, saith the Vulgate; rasuram potius, not the rooting out, but the scrapings off. As the Jews did rather extrinsecus radere peccata quam intrinsecus eradicare, {a} shave off their sins outwardly, than root them out from within: so God made them as despicable as the parings of a pavement, or of a leprous house.

And refuse.] See #1Co 4:13. {See Trapp on "1Co 4:13"}

{a} Bern.—Exverras, scobes et ramenta. Excrementa et excrementa.

Ver. 46. All our enemies have opened their mouths against us,] i.e., Reviled and derided us. See #La 2:16.

Ver. 47. Fear and a snare is come upon us.] Heb., A pit; great terror, and no way to escape. See #Isa 24:17,18.

Ver. 48. Mine eye runneth down.] Heb., Mine eye descendeth; i.e., falleth, as it were, wholly away. See #La 1:16 2:18.

Ver. 49. Mine eye trickleth down, and ceaseth not.] Put fire under the still, and water droppeth from roses. Fiery afflictions cause drops of repentance; and repentance, like the philosopher's stone, maketh golden afflictions. {#1Pe 1:7}

Ver. 50. Till the Lord look down.] Let God but see the rainbow of sound repentance in our hearts, and he will soon shine forth, and cause it to clear up.

Ver. 51. Mine eye affecteth my heart.] Iisdem quibus videmus oculis flemus, We see and weep with the same eyes. But Pliny {a} wondereth where that humour is at other times that floweth out of the eyes so readily and plentifully in case of grief.

Because of all the daughters of my city.] Or, Prae omnibus filiabus, ‘ More than all the daughters,’ &c.; more than the most passionate women use to weep when they are most grieved.

{a} Lib. ii. cap. 32.

Ver. 52. Mine enemies chased me sore.] In a most eager and extreme manner, with utmost cruelty and craft.

As a bird.] Beaten from bush to bush.

Without cause.] Jeremiah and the godly party might say so; but not Zedekiah and other perfidious ones.

Ver. 53. They have cut off my life in the dungeon.] Where I led a lifeless life; such as did Roger, Bishop of Salisbury, in King Stephen’s time, who sustained such miseries in prison, ut vivere noluerit, mori nescierit, that live he would not, and yet die he could not.

And cast a stone upon me.] As they did upon the mouths of dens, dungeons, or sepulchres, to make sure work. The Chaldee hath it, They stoned me.

Ver. 54. Waters flowed over mine head.] Many and great miseries have overwhelmed and oppressed me, both in body and soul. These are frequently compared to waters.

Then I said, I am cut off, / sc., From the land of the living; but God was better to me than my hopes.

Ver. 55. I called upon thy name, O Lord, out of the low dungeon.] See #Ps 130:1 Jon 2:1. {See Trapp on "Ps 130:1"} {See Trapp "Jon 2:1"}

Ver. 56. Thou hast heard my voice.] Seem a man’s case never so desperate, if he can but find a praying heart, God will find a pitying heart. Prayer is the best lever at a dead lift.

Hide not thine ear at my breathing.] As breathing is a proof of animal life, so is prayer, though never so weak, of spiritual. If therefore you cannot speak, weep— fietu saepe agitur non affatu, tears also have a voice; {#Ps 39:12} if you cannot weep, sigh—a storm of sighs may do as much as a shower of tears; if you cannot sigh, yet breathe, as here. God feels breath; and happy is he that can say, In te spero et respiro, In thee I hope, Lord, and after thee I breathe or pant.

Ver. 57. Thou drawest near.] This thou hast done, and this I hope thou yet wilt do. Experience breedeth confidence.

Ver. 58. O Lord, thou hast pleaded the causes of my soul.] Whereof those Babylonians were no just judges.

Thou hast redeemed my life.] It is the life, nay, the soul of the saints, that the wicked hunt after, though they do not always profess so to do.

Ver. 59. O Lord, thou hast seen my wrong.] Thou hast seen it and art sensible of it; that is my comfort; for εχει θεος εκδικον δμμα.

Judge thou my cause.] As #Ps 43:1.

Ver. 60. Thou hast seen all their vengeance.] See on #La 3:59. The saints fare the better for their enemies' spite and cruelty; and they may very well plead and present it to God in prayer.

Ver. 61. Thou hast heard their reproach.] Their spiteful speeches and taunting terms have come into thine ears.

And all their imaginations.] Heb., Their contrivements. As the eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and his ears are open to their prayers, {#Ps 34:15} so he both seeth the ill carriage and heareth the ill language of graceless persons against the godly.

Ver. 62. The lips of those that rose up.] See on #La 3:61.

Ver. 63. Behold their sitting down, and their rising up.] Or, At their both sitting down (to eat), and at their rising up (from eating). I am their music master, their table talk, and the matter of their mirth; they make sport with us, as the Philistines did with Samson. David complaineth of the like evil dealing. {#Ps 35:15-17}

Ver. 64. Render unto them a recompense.] Call them to an account, and requite them. Let their music be marred, and the meal once ended, send them in a reckoning.

Ver. 65. Give them sorrow of heart.] In place of their mad mirth and sinful music; turn their psalm—as the Vulgate rendereth the word music in the foregoing verse—into a black santis, as they call it, ferale carmen, a doleful ditty. Dabis eis scutum cordis, saith the Vulgate. And, indeed, the word rendered sorrow signifieth a shield or cover. It noteth, saith one, the cardiaca passio, {a} whereby the heart is so oppressed, and there is such a stopping, that it is as it were covered sicut scute, as with a shield; there is a lid, as it were, put over the heart to keep off the most refreshing cordials, and so the heart is suffocated with sorrow. {b} It is as if he should say, Put them into such a condition that no creature may yield them the least refreshment. Spira was in this condition.

Thy curse upon them.] All the curses written and unwritten in thy book. This is not more a prayer than a prophecy. How effectual Christ's curse is, may be seen in the withered fig tree in the Gospel, presently dried up by the roots.

{a} A Lapide.

{b} Mr Burrough's Hos. Operculum cordis, vel apostema cordis.

Ver. 66. Persecute and destroy them in anger.] Since they are thine and our implacable and irreformable enemies, be thou, Lord, implacably bent against them, to their utter destruction; and since they think us not worthy to breathe in the common air—whom thou hast made heirs of the world together with faithful Abraham our progenitor—destroy them from under these heavens of thine, in the compass and cope whereof thou reignest and rulest all.

From under the heavens of the Lord.] Do thou, O Christ—to whom the Father hath committed all judgment—root them out from under the heavens of thy heavenly Father. Thus some paraphrase the words, and observe therehence the mystery of the Trinity; like as they do from #Ge 19:24.

Chapter 4

Ver. 1. How is the gold become dim.?] How by way of wonderment again, as #La 1:1.—q.d., Quo tanto scelere hominum, et qua tanta indignatione Dei? {a} What have men done, and how hath God been provoked, that there are such strange alterations here all on the sudden? By gold, and fine gold, here understand the temple overlaid by Solomon with choice gold; or God's people, his spiritual temple, who had now lost their lustre and dignity.

The stones of the sanctuary are poured out.] Come tumbling down from the demolished temple.

{a} Pet. a Figueir.

Ver. 2. The precious {a} sons of Zion.] Those porphyrogeniti, as the Greek emperor's children were called, because born and bred up in a room made up of precious stones. Understand it of the Jews in general—God's peculiar people, precious in his sight, and therefore honourable; {#Isa 43:4} of Zedekiah's sons in particular, who—as did also the rest of the Jewish nobility, if Josephus {b} may be believed—powdered their hair with gold dust, to the end that they might glitter and sparkle against the beams of the sun. The precious children of the Church are all glorious within by means of the graces of the Spirit, that golden oil, {#Zec 4:12} and the blessings of God "out of Zion," {#Psa 134:3} which are far beyond all other the blessings of heaven and of earth.

As earthen pitchers.] Weak and worthless.

{a} πημοι.—Sept.

{b} Antiq., lib. viii. cap. 7.

Ver. 3. Even the sea monsters.] {a} Heb., Whales or seals, which, being amphibii, have both a willingness and a place convenient to suckle their whelps.

The daughter of my people is become cruel.] She is so perforce, being destitute of milk for want of food, but much more by feeding upon them. {#La 4:10 2:20} Oh, what a mercy is it to have meat! and how inexcusable are those unnatural mothers that neglect to nurse their children, not out of want, but wantonness! Surely as there is a blessing of the womb to bring forth, so of the breasts to give suck; {#Ge 49:25} and the dry breasts and barren womb have been taken for a curse, {#Ho 9:14} as some interpret that text.

{a} Lamiae.—Vulg.

Ver. 4. The tongue of the sucking child cleaveth.] For want of suck. That was a miracle which is recorded of the old woman of Bolton, in Lancashire, who took up a poor child that lay crying at the breasts of her dead mother—slain, among many others, by Prince Rupert's party—and laying it to her own dry breasts, that had not yielded suck for above twenty years before, on purpose to still it, had milk come to nourish it, to the admiration and astonishment of all beholders. This and another like example of God's good providence for the relief of little ones whom their mothers could not relieve, may be read of in Mr Clark's "Mirror for Saints and Sinners," edit. 3, fol. 495, 507.

And no man breaketh it unto them.] The parents either not having it for them, or not having a heart to part with it to them.

Ver. 5. They that did feed delicately.] Such uncertainty there is of outward affluence. Our Richard II was famished to death. {a} Henry Holland, Duke of Exeter, grandchild to John of Gaunt, was seen to run on foot bare legged after the Duke of Burgundy's train, begging his bread for God's sake. This I saw, saith Philip de Comines. This Henry was brother-in-law to King Edward IV, from whom he fled.

They that were brought up in scarlet.] Qui nutriebantur in croceis seu cocceis, that were gorgeously arrayed, or, that rolling on their rich beds, wrapped themselves in costly quilts.

Embrace dunghills.] {b} There take up their lodgings, and there also are glad to find anything to feed on, though never so coarse and homely. The lapwing is made a hieroglyphic of infelicity, because he hath as a coronet upon the head, and yet feedeth upon the worst of excrements. It is pity that any child of God, washed in Christ's blood, should bedabble his scarlet robe in the stinking guzzle of the world's dunghill; that anyone who hath heretofore soared as an eagle should now creep on the ground as a beetle, or wallow as a swine in the mire of sensuality.

{a} Speed, lib. iii. cap. 4.

{b} In fimetis victum quaeritant prae inopia. -Jun.

Ver. 6. For the punishment of the iniquity of Zion is greater.] For Sodom was destroyed by angels, Zion by malicious men. The enemies were not enriched by Sodom, as they were by Zion. Sodom was destroyed in an instant; not so Zion, for she had her punishment piecemeal; first a long siege, and then the loss of all, after a world of miseries sustained in the siege. Julius Caesar was wont to say, It is better once to fall than always to hang in suspense. Augustus wished that he might die suddenly. His life he called a comedy, and said that he thought he had acted his part therein pretty handsomely. Now, if he might soon pass through death, he would hold it a happiness. Soldiers' wish is thus set forth by the poet:

“ Quid enim? concurritur, horae

Momento aut cita mors venit aut victoria laeta.”

It is the ancient and manful fashion of the English (who are naturally most impatient with lingering mischiefs) to put their quarrels to the trial of the sword, as the chronicler observeth. {a}

{a} Speed, 963.

Ver. 7. Her Nazarites.] Who served God in a singular way of abstinence above other men. These had their rules given them, {#Nu 6:1-21} which while they observed,

They were purer than snow, whiter than milk.] Temperance is the mother of beauty, as luxury is of deformity. This is nothing to the Popish votaries, those epicures and abbey lubbers:

“ Quorum luxuriae totus non sufficit orbis.”

Some by Nazarites here understand their nobles, and such as wore coronets on their heads. Nezar is a crown; {#2Sa 1:10 2Ki 11:12} thus Joseph was a Nazarite; {#Ge 49:26} so Daniel and his three associates, in whom that was verified,

“ Gratior est pulchro veniens in corpore virtus.”

Ver. 8. Their visage is blacker than a coal.] Heb., Their visage is more darkened than blackness—scil., With famine, fear, grief, and care; those vultures have so fed upon them that all sightliness and loveliness is lost. Think the same of apostates, God may complain of such. {as #Mic 2:8}

Ver. 9. They that be slain with the sword are better.] They suffer less pain in dying; they are soon despatched. See on #La 4:6. But famine is a hard weapon.

“ *Triste genus mortis miseris mortalibus omne:
Est tureen imprimis triste perire fame.* ”

For these pine away.] By a lingering death, as Drusus the Roman, to whom food being denied, he had eaten the stuffings of his bed, saith Suetonius; and our Richard II, who was tantalised and starved to death at Pomfret Castle, where his diet being served in and set before him in the wonted princely manner, he was not suffered either to taste or touch thereof. {a}

Stricken through for want of the fruits of the field.] Those "precious fruits of the earth," as James the apostle calleth them. {#Jas 5:7} These as a sword defend us from death; and the want of them, as a sword, runneth us through. In the time of Otho the emperor, there was so great a scarcity of bread grain in Germany for three years together that many thousands died of hunger; in remembrance of which great dearth there is yearly baked at Erfurt a little loaf, such as was then sold for much money. {b}

{a} Speed, 766.

{b} Melanchth.

Ver. 10. The hands of the pitiful women have sodden.] Sodden them rather than roasted them, lest they should be discovered by the smell, and so in danger to be despoiled of them, as it happened at the last siege by the Romans. Lege et luge. Assemble and mourne.

They were their meat.] In eadem viscera, ex quibus exierant, retrusi sunt; they returned into the same bowels whence they came forth.

Ver. 11. The Lord hath accomplished his fury.] Which he had long deferred, but now hath paid it home. Cave ne ira delata fiat duplicata.

He hath poured out his fierce anger.] As it were by whole buckets or pailfuls. God's anger may be let out in minnows as there may be much poison in little drops. But woe be those on whom it is poured!

He hath kindled a fire in Zion.] His wrath is like fire, that furious element, which at first burneth a little upon a few boards; but when it prevaieth, it bursteth forth into a terrible flame.

Ver. 12. The kings of the earth, &c.] These, knowing how impregnable a piece Jerusalem was; how the Jebusites of old held out the tower of Zion against David; how long it had kept out Nebuchadnezzar—viz., for two years' time almost; how it had been preserved by God against Sennacherib, &c., looked upon it as in a son insuperable, and could not but see a divine vengeance in the destruction of it.

Ver. 13. For the sins of her prophets.] These, these were the right cause of her ruin. Not that the people were not faulty—for they "loved to have it so" {#Jer 5:31} -but those were the ringleaders in that general defection.

Ver. 14. They have wandered as blind men in the streets.] Well might a certain expositor say, Hic versus cure sequentibus varie exponitur. The sense, in short, is this, saith one, that the Jews, misled by their prophets and priests, were so blind in knowledge that every example of sin led to evil, which, for want of grace, they could not refrain from.

Ver. 15. They cried unto them.] The enemies in a mockery said aloud unto the Jews.

Depart ye; it is unclean; depart, depart.] Mimesis {a} -q.d., You that are so pure, and (as people say profanely among us), so Pope holy, that none must come near you, but get away as far and as fast as they can, as if they were lepers, &c.

They said among the heathen.] The blind Ethnics, beholding the Jews' wickedness, have judged that it was impossible God should suffer them any longer to live in his good land, since they would not live by his good laws.

{a} A figure of speech, whereby the supposed words or actions of another are imitated

Ver. 16. The anger of the Lord hath divided them.] Say the heathen still concerning the wicked Jews; continuat^r enim hic instituta mimesis.

He will no more regard them.] Heb., Look after them—scil., Facie blenda ac benevola, in mercy; he hath utterly rejected them. For what reason?

They respected not the persons of the priests.] But vilely entreated them. See #2Ch 36:16. Sacerdotes apud omnes gentes sunt venerabiles ob ministerium.

Ver. 17. As for us, our eyes as yet failed.] With long and vain looking. {as #Ps 119:82,123} "For, As for us," some render, Cum adhuc essemus, while as yet we were—scil., a nation, for now we are none. Fuimus Troes.

In our watching we have watched for a nation,] sc., For the Egyptians. {#Jer 2:18,36 37:7,8}

Ver. 18. They hunt our steps.] There is an elegance in the original, as if we should say, They hunt our haunts.

That we cannot go in our streets.] Because of their forts, from whence they shoot at us. Satan doth so much more—

“ *Cui nomina mille,
Mille nocendi artes.* ”

Our end is come.] We are an undone people.

Ver. 19. Our persecutors are swifter than the eagles.] Those swiftest of all fowl, whom Pindarus therefore calleth the queen of birds as the dolphin of fishes, for like swiftness. The Egyptians, their pretended helpers, were slow as snails; the Chaldees swifter than eagles.

They pursued us.] Or, They chased us, or traced us, like bloodhounds.

They laid wait for us in the wilderness.] They met us at every turn, and left us no means of escape.

Ver. 20. The breath, of our nostrils.] King Zedekiah, in whose downfall we drew, as it were, our last breath. The Chaldee paraphrast understandeth it of Josiah, with whom, indeed, died all the prosperity of the Jews as with Epaminondas did that of the Thebans, and with Theodosius that of the Western Empire.

The anointed of the Lord.] Who yet, for his perfidy, was vilely cast away like Saul, as though he had not been anointed with oil. {#2Sa 1:21}

Was taken in their pits.] A term taken from hunters (#Eze 12:13; see #La 4:20 Jer 52:8).

Under his shadow.] As the chickens do under the hen's.

Ver. 21. Rejoice and be glad.] This is spoken to Edom by a certain ironic and bitter concession—q.d., Do so if thou hast any mind to it; but thou shalt soon be made to change thy cheer. Thy fleeing at us shall be soon turned into fearing for thyself, thy mirth into mourning.

That dwellest in the land of Uz.] Job's country, called also Syria, saith R. Solomon, and haply from Seir. Evil is at next door by to those who rejoice at the evils of others.

The cup shall pass through unto thee.] The quaffing cup of God's wrath. {#Jer 25:18,29}

And shalt make thyself naked.] {a} To the scorn of all, as drunkards, who are void of shame and common honesty, baring those parts that nature would have covered. See #Jer 49:10.

{a} Ut ebria et amotae mentis. as the intoxicated and the insane.

Ver. 22. The punishment of thine iniquity is accomplished, O daughter of Zion.] A word of comfort in the close of this doleful ditty. The Sun of righteousness loveth not to set in a cloud. See #Isa 40:1. Profane elegies have no comfort in them, as this hath.

He will no more carry thee away into captivity,] i.e., No more in haste, after thy return from Babylon. Carried away they were again, many ages later, by the Romans, {a} whom to this day they therefore call "Edomites," and the Pope's hierarchy "the wicked kingdom of Edom," which they say shall be certainly destroyed, as is here also foretold; and then shall they be brought back again to Jerusalem, and there resettled by their Messiah. See the Chaldee paraphrast upon this text.

He will discover thy sins,] i.e., Punish thee soundly for them in the sight of all men. See on #Ps 32:1,2 Job 20:27.

{a} Accommodant huc #Isa 21:11, legentes pro Dumah Roma.

Chapter 5

Ver. 1. Remember, O Lord, what is come upon us.] This last chapter is a brief recapitulation {a} of what had been said in the four former, that they might be the better remembered and considered by the reader. The ancient Greek and Latin Bibles style it "Jeremiah's prayer." Herein the prophet, or rather the Church, layeth open, as a leper, {b} her sores and sufferings, and beggeth to be remembered and considered of God. Not that either forgetfulness or inobservance can be found in him, for all things, both past and future, are present with him, but these are metaphoric expressions, and he alloweth us to be his "remembrancers."

Consider, and behold.] Heb., Behold and see Affectum cum effectu coniuncture significat.

Our reproach.] This is that which man's nature is most impatient for. To the saints it is so much the more grievous, because they do quarter arms with Christ.

{a} Propheta per ανακεφάλαιωσιν repetit omnia mala supra commemorate, et remedium petit a Domino.
-Figueir.

{b} A poor and diseased person, usually one afflicted with a loathsome disease; esp. a leper.

Ver. 2. Our inheritance is turned to strangers.] So the Jews called all other nations, as the Greeks, barbarians. From hence to #La 5:19 there are so many verses, so many different complaints. While we are in this "vale of misery and valley of tears," we are sure of many ailments, and still to have somewhat to cry for.

Ver. 3. We are orphans and fatherless.] And so are become thy clients, just objects of thy pity. {#Ho 14:3}

Ver. 4. We have drunk our water for money.] Fire, water, and air are common good, quae iure naturae sunt omnium et singulorum, saith Cicero. {a} Lysimachus paid dear for a cup of water when he parted with his kingdom for it. Dives would have done as much in hell for a drop, and could not have it.

Our wood is sold to us.] This was strange to them—who had enough of their own growing, or might have it from the commons for fetching—but just upon them for their abuse of it to the service of the queen of heaven. {#Jer 7:18}

{a} Offic., i.

Ver. 5. Our necks are under persecution.] For that we would not stoop to the sweet yoke of thine obedience, but held it heavy, now, we are under an intolerable yoke of extreme slavery.

We labour, and have no rest.] Who once troubled God's holy rest by bearing burdens, and working thereon. {#Jer 17:21} In many places among us God's Sabbath is made the voider, and dunghill for all refuse businesses. The Sabbath of the Lord, the sanctified day of his rest, saith a reverend writer, {a} is shamelessly troubled and disquieted. The Sabbath was never so profaned, saith such another reverend man {b} yet living, with heart, hand, foot, tongue, pen, and press, as of late. And is it not just with God that those who would jostle his religious rest out of its right, should be restless in their condition? {as #La 5:5} Thus he. All wicked men, acted and agitated by the devil day and night, may well cry out as here, We labour, and have no rest; but they are not sensible of this woeful servitude.

{a} Bishop King on Jonah, lec, vii.

{b} Mr Ley's Fast Sermon before Parliament, April 26, 1643.

Ver. 6. We have given the hand to the Egyptians, and to the Assyrians.] Enemies to the Chaldeans, no less than they were to us; but hard hunger, that driveth the wolf out of the wood, hath made us glad to be beholden to them for bread; so ill have the cruel Chaldees relieved and rewarded us for our work.

Ver. 7. Our fathers have sinned, and are not.] They had their payment, but not comparable to ours, who have outsinned them, and do therefore justly bear the punishment of both their sins and our own too. Nobis foret iucundias semel emori, quam vitara invitara vivere.

Ver. 8. Servants have ruled over us.] And they are usually most insolent, as was Tobiah the servant. {#Ne 2:19} Cicero, after the defeat given to! Pompey, complaineth in a certain epistle, Lords we could not away with, and now we are forced to serve our fellow servant. This was Canaan's curse, to be a servant of servants. {#Ge 9:25} {See Trapp on "Ge 9:25"}

Ver. 9. We gat our bread with the peril of our lives.] So did our good ancestors the bread of life, while their preachers also were glad to do as Jotham did, {#Jud 9:21} when they had delivered what they had to say, run away, and flee for their lives. See #2Sa 23:17.

Because of the sword of the wilderness.] Where rovers and robbers lay in wait for us; neither could we pass them without apparent peril.

Ver. 10. Our skin was black like an oven.] Or, As a chimney, {#Isa 31:9} being still beaten upon with the fire that is within it,

Because of the terrible famine.] Propter procellas famis, because of the tempests of famine, which, like a violent storm, beareth down all before it.

Ver. 11. They ravished the women in Zion.] Heb., They humbled, i.e., they dishonored: although Virgo invita vexari quidem potest, violari non potest. The Chaldee paraphraseth thus, The wives were ravished by the Romans, and the maids by the Chaldees; for the Jewish doctors do understand this book of the Lamentations concerning both the destructions of Jerusalem.

Ver. 12. Princes are hanged up by the hand.] Made to die a dog's death, and, as some {a} will have it, by their own hands, αυτοχειρες.

The faces of the elders were not honoured.]

“ Magna fuit quondam capitis reverentia cani: Inque suo precio ruga senilis erat, ”— Ovid.

But now it was otherwise with the Jewish elders, who haply were not worthy of their years, as we say; like as the princes had done wickedly with both hands earnestly, and were therefore not undeservedly hanged up by the hand; but if Quakers among us might have their way, our families, saith one, would soon be like the cabins of the Lestringonians in Sicily, where everybody was at liberty, and none regarded or revered their seniors or superiors.

{a} Calvin.

Ver. 13. They took the young men to grind,] i.e., To do any base and abject business. {#Ex 11:5 12:29} Frustra enim hic Hieronymus et alii Sodomiticum quid cogitant.

And the children fell under the wood.] Being not able to stand under such unreasonable burdens as were laid upon their backs.

Ver. 14. The elders have ceased from the gate.] Where they were wont to sit, {#Ge 34:20} to judge between party and party.

The young men from their music.] From their ordinary and honest recreations and disports.

Ver. 15. The joy of our heart is ceased.] Heb., Keepeth Sabbath, i.e., is vanished, and that because we made not God's Sabbath our delight. {as #Isa 58:13}

Ver. 16. The crown is fallen from our head,] i.e., All our glory, both of Church and State, because we refused to serve God, which indeed is to "reign in righteousness." Now neither is all this, nor any of this, spoken to exasperate or exulcerate people's hearts to fret against God, or to faint under their pressures, but to put them upon the practice of true humiliation, that so they may not lose the fruit of their afflictions, whence the following passage.

Woe unto us that we have sinned!] Which, as it runneth sweetly and rhythmically in the original, so it pointeth us to that savoury and sovereign practice of lamenting our sins more than our miseries, and humbling ourselves to the utmost under the mighty hand of God, that he may lift up in due season.

Ver. 17. For this our heart is faint.] Ponit symbolum vere contritionis, we are sin sick even at heart; our sins are as so many daggers at our hearts, or bearded arrows in our flesh.

For these things our eyes are dim.] We have well nigh wept them out; whereby, nevertheless, our minds have been enlightened. Lachrymae sunt succus cordis contriti, seu liquores animae patientis.

Ver. 18. Because of the mountain of Zion, which is desolate,] q.d., Next unto our sins (which are our greatest sorrow), nothing troubleth us more than this, that the public exercises of piety are put down; Zion, the seat of God's sanctuary, is desolate.

Ver. 19. Thou, O Lord, remainest for ever.] Alioqui totus totus desperassem, as that good man said once in like ease, Otherwise I should have but small joy of my life. But thou art everlasting, and invariable in essence, truth, will, and promises. This is mine anchor hold.

Thy throne from generation to generation,] i.e., Thy most equal and righteous ordering of all things, utut nobis quaedam confusiuscule currere videantur, though some things may seem to us to be somewhat confusedly carried, and even to run on wheels, yet it shall one day appear that there was a wheel within a wheel, {#Eze 1:15,16} that is, an overruling and all disposing Providence.

Ver. 20. Wherefore dost thou forget us?] Since thy covenant runs otherwise. {#2Sa 7:14 La 5:1}

And forsakest us so long time?] Heb., To length of days. {as #Ps 23:6} Not for seventy years only, but to the end of the world; till "wrath is come upon us to the utmost." {as #1Th 2:16}

Ver. 21. Turn thou us unto thee.] That thou mayest turn thee to us. {as #Zec 1:3} Let there be a thorough reformation wrought in us, and then a gracious restoration wrought for us.

Ver. 22. But thou hast utterly rejected us.] This is a sad catastrophe, or close of this doleful ditty, {a} Sometimes God's suppliants are put hard to it in the course of their prayers; the last grain of their faith and patience seemeth to be put into the scale. When the Son of man cometh with deliverance to his praying people, shall he find faith in the earth? Hard and scarce; and yet he comes oft when they have even done looking for him. He is seen in the mount; he helpeth those that are forsaken of their hopes: hallelujah. Sure it is that God cannot utterly reject his people whom he hath chosen. {#Ro 11:2-5} Tremellius rendereth it—and so the margin of our Bibles hath it, and I think better—For wilt thou utterly reject us, or be extremely wroth with us—scil., supra modulum nostrum -according to thine infinite power, and above all that we are able to bear? I cannot think it, neither doth it consist with thy covenant.

Here (as also at the end of Ecclesiastes, Isaiah, and Malachi) many of the Hebrew Bibles repeat the foregoing verse, Turn thou us unto thee, O Lord, &c., yet without points, lest anything should seem added thereby to the holy Scriptures. {Hebrew Text Note} The reason hereof read in the end of the prophecy of Isaiah. {See Trapp on "Isa 66:24"} This is also here observed by the most renowned Mr Thomas Gataker, whom, for honour's sake, I name, and to whose most accurate and elaborate annotations upon Isaiah and Jeremiah I have been not a little beholden all along. These he finished not long before his death, to the great glory of God and good of his Church. And of him, and this worthy work of his, I may fitly say, as a learned man doth of Magellan of Portugal (that great navigator), that the strait or sea now called by his name—Fretum Magellanicum—una navigatione simul et immortalem gloriam et mortem ei attulerit -was both his death and his never dying monument. {b}

Ezekiel

The Book of the prophet Ezekiel.] The book of Ezekiel, so the Hebrews call it, and forbid any to read the beginning and ending of it till he be thirty years of age, because it is so abstruse and mysterious. Nazianzen ^{a} calleth this prophet, the beholder of great things, and the interpreter of visions and mysteries. Another ^{b} calleth him the hieroglyphic prophet. A third, Jeremiah veiled, a band shut up, and you know not what is in it, &c. ^{c} Contemporary he was to Jeremiah, though in another country, and a great confirmer of what he had foretold, but could not be credited. To him, therefore, as to many others, Ezekiel became, according to the import of his name, "The strength of God," who mightily enabled him, as Lavater well notes, with a stout and undaunted spirit, to reprove both people and princes, and to threaten them more terribly and vehemently than Jeremiah had done before him. But, in the substance of their prophecies, there is no small conformity. Ferunt Ezechielem servum Jeremiae prius extitisse, saith Nazianzen. ^{d} Some have affirmed that Ezekiel had sometimes been Jeremiah's servant, as was afterwards Baruch.

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. Now it came to pass in the thirtieth year, J scil., Since the book of the law was found, and that famous passover kept in King Josiah's days, ^{#2Ki 22:1-23:30} since the eighteenth year of his reign. ^{#2Ki 23:23} So elsewhere, they began their account from some memorable mercy or remarkable accident; as from the promise made to Abraham, the birth of Isaac, the departure out of Egypt, the division of the kingdom into that of Israel and the other of Judah, &c.

In the fifth day of the month.] Which was the Sabbath day say some, Compare #Eze 3:16. Then was this holy prophet in the Spirit, as was afterwards also John the divine upon the Christian Sabbath.

^{#Re 1:10}

As I was among the captives.] In Chaldea. That rule of the Rabbis, therefore, holdeth not—viz., that the Holy Ghost never spake to the prophets but only in the Holy Land.

By the river of the Chebar.] Which was rivus vel ramentum Euphratis, a part or channel of Euphrates. There sat the poor captives, {#Ps 137:1} and there this prophet received this vision here, and his vocation in the next chapter. It is observed, that by the sides of rivers various prophets had visions of God; by a river side it was that Paul and his company met to preach and pray. {#Ac 16:13} And of Archbishop Ussher, {e} that most reverend man of God, it is recorded, that to a certain place by a water side he frequently resorted, when as yet he was but very young, sorrowfully to recount his sins, and with floods of tears to pour them out in confession to God.

That the heavens were opened.] Not by a division of the firmament, saith Jerome, but by the faith of the believer. The like befell Stephen the proto martyr, when the stones were buzzing about his ears; {#Ac 7:55-60} and, if we may believe the monkish writers, Wulsin, Bishop of Salisbury, when he lay dying. {f}

And I saw visions of God,] i.e., Offered by God, or excellent visions. Ut montes Dei, cedri Dei, civitas Dei. Ezekiel was not only a priest and a prophet, but a seer also. Abraham was the like. {#Joh 8:56 Ge 20:7} This was no small honour.

Ver. 2. In the fifth day.] The Sabbath day, likely, that queen of days, as the Jews call it. See on #Eze 1:1.

Which was the fifth year of Jehoiakim's captivity.] With whom Ezekiel and other precious persons, called by Jeremiah good figs, were carried captive. {#Eze 40:1}

Ver. 3. The word of the Lord came expressly.] Heb., By being hath been, or hath altogether been— Existendo extitit. Accurate factum est it really wrought upon me and made me a prophet.

Unto Ezekiel the priest.] Whom, therefore, some have called Urim and Thummim in Babylon.

The son of Buzi.] That this Buzi was Jeremiah, so called because despised for his plain dealing, as some Rabbis have affirmed, is as true as that Ezekiel himself was the same with Pythagoras the philosopher; which yet some ancients have fondly fancied.

In the land of the Chaldeans] Though a polluted land, {#Mic 2:10} and the dwelling place of wickedness, {#Zec 5:8,11} the mother of harlots, and abominations of the earth. {#Re 17:5}

By the river Chebar.] The Rabbis {a} call it the Sabbath river; and, further, tell us that it runneth not, but resteth on the Sabbath day.

“ Credat Iudaeus Apella: Non ego. ”—Hor.

And the hand of the Lord was there upon him.] Not only came God’s Word expressly to him, but the power and Spirit of God came mightily upon him; so that he felt the intrinsic virtue of this hand, as one phraseth it, the Spirit of God in his own heart; it was a quick and lively word unto him, and to as many as believed.

{a} Sabbatian.

Ver. 4. And I looked, and, behold.] In this ensuing mysterious vision of a whirlwind, four cherubims, four wheels, a throne upon the firmament, formidabilis Dei forma proponitur, is set forth "the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord," as it is expounded, #Eze 1:28, that hereby the people’s arrogance might be the better subdued, the prophet’s doctrine more reverently received, and the prophet confirmed in his calling. The sum of this celestial vision is, that the divine providence doth rule in the world, and is exercised in all parts thereof, and not only in heaven, or in the temple, or in Jewry, as the Jews then thought. As for the changes in the world, which are here compared to wheels, they befall not at all adventures, or by haphazard, but are effected by God, though all things may seem to run upon wheels, and to happen as it fortuneth.

At the day of judgment, at utmost, men shall see a harmony in this discord of things, and providence shall then be unriddled. Meanwhile, God often wrappeth himself in a cloud, and will not be seen till afterwards. All God's dealings be sure will appear beautiful in their season, though for the present we see not the contiguity and linking together of one thing with another.

A whirlwind came out of the north,] i.e., Nebuchadnezzar with his forces. See #Jer 1:13-15, Fitly compared to a whirlwind for suddenness, swiftness, irresistibleness. A Lapidie telleth of whirlwinds in Italy which have taken away stabula cum equis, stables with horses; carried them up into the air, and dashed them against the mountains, {see #Hab 1:6,7,9,10} and consider that those Chaldeans were of God's sending.

A great cloud.] Nebuchadnezzar's army, {#Jer 4:13} that peditum equitumque nubes {a} {#2Ki 25:1 Eze 39:9} that stormed Jerusalem.

And a fire infolding itself.] Heb., That receiveth itself within itself, as in a house on fire. Understand it of Nebuchadnezzar's wrath against Jerusalem, much hotter than that furnace of his seven times more than ordinarily heated, {#Da 3:19} or rather of God's wrath in using Nebuchadnezzar to set all on a light fire.

And a brightness was about it.] The glory of divine presence, shining in the punishment of evildoers.

Out of the midst thereof as of the colour of amber.] Not of an angel called Hasmal, as Lyra, after some Rabbis, will have it. Jarchi confesseth he knoweth not what the word Hasmal meaneth. This prophet only hath it here, and #Eze 1:27 8:2, as Daniel also hath some words proper to himself.

{a} Liv.

Ver. 5. Also out of the midst thereof,] i.e., From God's glorious presence.

Came the likeness of four living creatures,] i.e., Angels; {#Eze 10:8,14,15,20} Intelligentias animales, Cicero {a} calleth them. See like visions, #Da 7:9 Re 4:6,7. These are said to be four, because God by his angels diffuseth his power through the four quarters of the world.

They had the likeness of a man,] sc., For the greater part, they had more of a man than of any other creature, as hands, legs, &c. {#Eze 1:7,8}

{a} Quest. Acad., lib. iv.

Ver. 6. And every one had four faces.] To set forth, saith an expositor, that the power of angels is exercised about all creatures. It is as if the angels did bear on them the heads of all living creatures —i. e., did comprehend in themselves all the elements and all the parts of the world; not as if they did move or act by their own power, but as they are God's hands and agents, employed by him at pleasure, for the good of his Church especially, {#Heb 1:14} as being fit and ready to every good work. So should we strive to be. {#Tit 3:1}

And every one had four wings.] To set forth their agility, their incredible swiftness, far beyond that of the sun, which yet, if Bellarmine {a} reckoneth right, runneth, in the eighth part of an hour, seven thousand miles; others say many more.

{a} De Ascens. ment. in Deum, grad. 7.

Ver. 7. And their feet were straight feet.] Importing their right progress in executing God's will. We must also "make straight or even paths for our feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way." {#Heb 12:13} See #Eze 1:9.

And the sole of their feet was like the sole of a calf's foot] Round, and therefore easily turned. Hoc ad agilitatem et varietatem cursus spectat. The angels, because they see every way, so they are apt to go every way, and this with the greatest facility that can be.

And they sparkled.] So swiftly they went, that their feet seemed to sparkle or strike fire.

Like the colour of burnished brass.] Burnished, not blemished; polished, not polluted.

Ver. 8. And they had the hands of a man under their wings.] Faces, wings, hands, all to express, saith one, the sufficiency of God's providence for all means of help. A little of the angels, saith another, is set forth by these faces, wings, hands, feet, but the distinct knowledge of angels, as angels, is reserved till we are like the angels in heaven. Great angels they are, but act invisibly for the most part; their hands are under their wings.

Ver. 9. Their wings were joined one to another.] To show the unity of angels, the uniformity also of their motions in God's service; there is a suitability and agreeability between them.

They turned not when they went,] sc., Till they had effected that which they went for; and then they did. {as #Eze 1:14}

They went every one straight forward.] The angels, in the execution of their office, kept a straight course, without deviating or detracting, without cessation or cespitation. Our eyes should also "look right on," {#Pr 4:25} and we should make "straight steps for our feet." {#Heb 12:13} This is angel-like. St Paul, that earthly angel, did so.

{#Php 3:13,14}

Ver. 10. They four had the face of a man, and the face of a lion.] Hereby is set forth the wisdom, strength, serviceability, and perspicaciousness of the holy angels for the Church's good, all things requisite to great undertakings; neither forbear they to serve us, though we have the scent of the earth and hell about, us. Quantumnis eos, proh dolor, foetore peccatorum non raro laedamus, Deumque offendamus, {a} Though, by the stench of our sins, we do frequently annoy them, and offend God.

And they four had the face of an ox.] Angels are obsequious, painful, patient, useful. The ox is of those beasts that are ad esum et ad usum; to consume food and to be useful, and is truly called Iumentum a iuvando, the beast of burden from help.

They four also had the face of an eagle.] Angels are sharp sighted, {#2Sa 14:20} vigorous and vivacious, swift beyond belief, {#Da 9:21} and if they be once upon the wing, there is no escaping for any wicked people or person.

{a} Polan.—Would any great prince attend a lowly man full of sores and vermin?

Ver. 11. And their wings were stretched upward.] Faces and wings are both turned toward God, at whose beck and obedience the holy angels wholly are; {#Ps 103:20} or hereby may be imported the swiftness, sublimeness, and equality of their service.

Two wings of every one.] See on #Eze 1:9.

And two covered their bodies.] See on #Isa 6:2.

Ver. 12. And they went every one straight forward.] See on #Eze 1:9.

Whither the Spirit was to go, they went.] That is, the Spirit of God, by whose direction and conduct the angels do all things; he is the great agent that setteth angels to work. Let us also be "led by the Spirit of God," so shall we approve ourselves "sons of God." {#Ro 8:14}

Ver. 13. Their appearance was like burning coals of fire.] Angels are actuosi et efficaces ut ignis, of a fiery nature, and of a fiery operation, as is also the Holy Spirit, {#Isa 4:4 Mt 3:11 Ac 2:3} whereby they are actuated. Angels are all on a light fire, as it were, with zeal for God and indignation against sin; let us be similarly affected. Paul was a heavenly spark; John Baptist, "a burning and shining light." Chrysostom saith that Peter was a man made all of fire, walking among stubble; Basil was a pillar of fire; Latimer cried out, Deest ignis. In Bucholcere vivida omnia fuerunt, &c. {a}

It went up and down among the living creatures.] The fire and flame did. Heb., It made itself to walk of its own accord and pleasure.

And the fire was bright.] Let us also labour to kindle and keep quick the fire of zeal upon the hearth of our hearts, without all smoke or smudge of sin.

And out of the fire went out lightnings.] "The Lord is known by the judgment which he executeth"; his noble works done by those instruments of his, the holy angels, are quickly noted and noticed, as in Sennacherib's army.

{a} Melch. Adam.

Ver. 14. And the living creatures ran and returned.] As soon as ever their work was done, they came back to him who sent them out to know his further pleasure, and to do him more service. When the angel had lessoned the good women about our Saviour's resurrection, he biddeth them "go quickly and tell his disciples," &c., and then dismisseth them, with "Lo, I have told you," {#Mt 28:6,7} q.d., Begone now about your business, you have your full errand; why linger ye? pack away.

As the appearance of a flash of lightning.] Which appeareth and disappareth in an instant.

Ver. 15. Behold one wheel upon the earth.] Things here below are exceedingly mutable, and therefore compared to wheels, because they may seem to run on wheels, and to have no certain course, but to be turned upside down eftsoons; such is the various, promiscuous administration of them, to many men's thinking. To set us right herein, here we have the vision of the four wheels; for each of the four living wights had a wheel by him, {#Eze 1:16 10:9} to show that God governeth all the four quarters of the world by the ministry of his angels. This the poets hammered at, but hit not on, in their foolish fable of Fortune's wheel. St James speaketh of the wheel (τροχος) of nature; {#Jas 3:6} and, indeed, this world is of a wheeling nature, movable and mutable. But God, who moves this wheel, who ruleth the world, is unchangeable and eternal, {#Jas 1:17} and his providence and the ministry of his angels sets all the wheels in the world in motion.

Ver. 16. The appearance of the wheels...was like unto the colour of a beryl.] Heb., As the eye or colour of Tarshish—i.e., the sea, or beryl, which is of a sea colour, even sea-green; whereby is represented the flux and fluctuating constitution of things here below.

And they four had one likeness.] There is the same instability of things in one place as in another, and the same overruling providence.

Their appearance and their work were as it were a wheel in the midst of a wheel.] God hath a wheel, providence, in all the wheeling businesses of the world. These are so one within another, as that all their motion dependeth on the angels, whom he also moderateth and ordereth at his own pleasure. Whensoever, therefore, we see such things come to pass that we can see no reason for—as the Churches overthrown, the wicked exalted, &c.—consider that one wheel is within another, and the wings of the angels are one within another. {a}

{a} Dr Preston.

Ver. 17. When they went, they went upon their four sides.] Or, According to their four sides—i.e., through the four parts of the world, as they were moved by the four living creatures.

And they returned not when they went.] But kept on straight forward, without stopping or stepping back. A figure of the constant and consonant harmony which is in all the works of God's providence toward the world, but especially toward his Church. {a}

{a} Diod.

Ver. 18. As for their rings they were so high.] Apsides earum tam amplae seu altae ut propterea formidabiles. The rings or strokes, Heb., backs, of these wheels were so broad and high that they struck terror into the beholders. It is hard to take the altitude of second causes. Well might one write a book of the vanity of sciences, and another a tractate Quod nihil scitur. I would see the proudest of you all define the nature of a straw, as one preached in Cambridge to all the scholars; so of a flower, of a fly, &c. Well might David say, "Thy judgments, Lord, are a great deep," {#Ps 36:6} such as hath neither bank nor bottom. Well might Paul cry out, "Oh the depth! how unsearchable are his ways." {#Ro 11:23}

And the rings were full of eyes.] Instead of cart nails. Understand hereby God's all-seeing providence, which never erreth, but always ordereth the world's disorders to his own glory.

Round about them four.] The Divine providence is like a well drawn picture, which eyeth all that are in the room. See #2Ch 16:9 Ps 34:15 Zec 4:10 Job 34:21 36:7 Jer 16:17 32:17.

Ver. 19. And when the living creatures went, the wheels went by them.] The angels are God's hands, as it were, whereby are acted and agitated this lower world and the second causes therein.

The wheels were lift up.] The spirits of the creatures were heightened and elevated to some unwonted and more than ordinary service, by some special instinct. We use to say, Magnarum rerum tarda molimina; When there are many wheels, some will be always out. But it is otherwise here; and that of Ambrose is verified, Nescit tarda molimina Spiritus Sancti gratia; God can soon effect great things by his powerful grace.

Ver. 20. Whithersoever the spirit was to go.] See #Eze 1:12; and take notice that whatever the instrument is, or means of this or that occurrence, God is the main agent. It is Christ who by his Spirit, Spiritus vitalis, worketh all in all in his Church. {#1Co 12:16 Eph 1:11 Col 3:21} There falleth not a hair from a man's head, nay, not a bristle from a sow's back, saith Tertullian, without God.

For the spirit of the living creatures.] Or, Of life. The Divine inspiration was the procreant cause of the wheels' motion. This is here called haruach, that spirit by an excellence: est Deus in nobis. The spirit is in the wheels, as an invisible but irresistible agent. "The heart of the king is in the hand of the Lord, he turneth it whithersoever he will." {#Pr 21:1}

Ver. 21. When those went, these went; and when those stood, these stood.] This is but the same again as before, but more fully and plainly. See the similar passage in #Joh 1:2.

Ver. 22. And the likeness of the firmament.] The glory of God in Christ is revealed to the prophet in this ensuing vision, even that great "mystery of godliness, God manifested in the flesh," {#1Ti 3:16} whereof this was a kind of prelude. To like purpose also was that vision. {#Isa 6:1 Joh 12:39-41}

Upon the heads of the living creature.] Between them and the Lord Christ as a screen, and supplied likely the office of that other pair of wings. {#Isa 6:2 Ex 24:10}

Was as the colour of the terrible crystal.] Heb., Of the formidable frost, that is, of the most vehement frost, a periphrasis of crystal. {a} All things above are dreadfully glorious, as all things below are pellucid, pervious, and clear to God's eye, like a diaphanous body. {#Heb 4:13} Mountains of brass are as transparent to him as the clearest crystal. The firmament is so clear that Christ seeth through it. It is "a molten looking glass"; {#Job 37:18} and those atheists are utterly out who ask, "How doth God know? can he judge through the dark clouds" {#Job 22:13}

Ver. 23. Were their wings straight,] sc., When they flew; for at other times they covered their bodies with them, {#Eze 1:11} in reverence to Christ their Creator and Lord.

The one toward the other.] They serve the Lord Christ with one shoulder or consent; they do all mind the same thing.

Ver. 24. And when they went, I heard the noise of their wings.] A very great noise, as is here set forth by a threefold similitude—Congeries similium faciens ad amplificationem.

Like the noise of great waters.] Which fall with a horrible fragor; as with the catadupes, for instance. See #Ps 46:3.

As the noise of the Almighty,] i.e., As thunder. {#Ps 29:4 18:13}

The voice of speech.] When a man crieth aloud, lifteth up his voice like a trumpet, sic clamans ut stentora vincat.

As the noise of an host] Barritus ille milltaris, besides the roaring of cannons, rattling of wheels, beating of drums, &c. This none hear but the spiritual man, who "discerneth all things," {#1Co 2:15} and hath his senses habitually exercised to discern good and evil. {#Heb 5:14}

They let down their wings.] As expecting a new commission.

Ver. 25. And there was a voice from the firmament,] i.e., From above the firmament, even from Christ on the throne.

When they stood.] When all was hushed. So #Re 8:1, there was half-an-hour's silence in heaven, that is, in the Church on earth, when the seventh seal was opened. Sedate and silent spirits are fittest to hear Christ's voice. {#Job 4:16}

Ver. 26. And above the firmament.] See on #Eze 1:22.

Was the likeness of a throne.] Far beyond that of Solomon. {#1Ki 10:18,19} That was of ivory, but this of sapphire; that had a rich canopy over it, but this the azured sky under it; {see #Ex 24:10} all to set forth Christ's kingly dignity and surpassing majesty.

And upon the likeness.] All was but likeness and appearance, because all was visional here.

As the appearance of a man.] This was the man Christ Jesus, and this is the last and best part of the vision—viz., Christ set by his Father in super celestial places, far above all principality and power, &c. {#Eph 1:20,21} One of Augustine's wishes was to have seen Christ on earth. Bede comes after, and wisheth rather to have seen Christ in his glory, and on his heavenly throne.

Ver. 27. And I saw as the colour of amber.] See #Eze 1:4. Heb., Chashmal, which being read backward, as the Cabbalists observe, is Lammashach, or Lammashiach -i.e., Messiah.

As the appearance of fire.] Christ is very terrible in his executions; and even "our God" (as well as the Jews' God) "is a consuming fire." {#Heb 12:29 Ex 13:21}

From the appearance of his loins even upward.] This may well be understood of Christ's divinity, as the parts downward of his humanity, partaking of the same most resplendent glory, by virtue of the hypostatical union, and having partner agency with the Godhead, according to its measure, in the works of redemption and mediation.

Ver. 28. As the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud.] Here, as in the salt sea, or as in a pot of honey, the deeper the sweeter. The rainbow was set for a sign of the covenant of mercy to mankind {#Ge

9:12 Isa 54:12 Re 10:1} {See Trapp on "Re 10:1"}

This was the appearance, &c.] For no more of God can be seen by any mortal creature. {#Ex 33:20} This and other prophets saw the chariot, but not the rider in it, as the Rabbis say.

I fell upon my face.] {a} As astonished, and as adoring the divine Majesty.

And I heard a voice.] This the Vulgate prefixeth before the next chapter.

{a} Quasi facies suos submitbens.

Chapter 2

Ver. 1. And he said unto me.] Christus solio sic insit ab alto. Christ from his lofty throne thus bespake me, who had now my mouth in the dust, and had no more to say but this, "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth."

Son of man.] So this prophet is called almost a hundred times in this book; four times in this short chapter. The reason hereof I take to be this, saith a judicious divine, {a} he had visions both more in number and more rare in kind revealed unto him than any other prophet had. Now lest he should be exalted out of measure, through the abundance of revelations, the Lord often putteth him in mind of his estate by nature, that he was but a "son of man," a mortal man, even a worm.

Stand upon thy feet.] God, for good ends, casteth down sometimes those that are dearest to himself; but then he comforteth the abject.

{#2Co 7:6}

“Deiecit ut relevet, premit ut solaria praestet.”

And I will speak unto thee.] So #Da 10:11. Oracles are for standers, not prostrate ones. They require utmost attention of body, intention of mind, and retention of memory. See #Nu 23:18 Jud 3:20. {See Trapp on "Nu 23:18"} {See Trapp on "Jud 3:20"}

{a} Dr Gouge.

Ver. 2. And the Spirit entered into me.] This was right, when word and Spirit went together. See #Isa 59:21. {See Trapp on "Isa 59:21"}

And set me upon my feet.] Called me off from earthly cares, and made me hear savingly. In the Scriptures the Holy Ghost speaketh ρητως, {#1Ti 4:1} "Let him that hath ears to hear, hear," &c. Let him draw up the ears of his mind to those of his body, that one and the same sound may pierce both.

Ver. 3. I send thee to the children of Israel.] So they will needs call themselves. But what saith God in #Mic 2:7? "O thou that art named the house of Jacob, is the Spirit of the Lord straitened? are these his doings?" {See Trapp on "Mic 2:7"}

To a rebellious nation.] Heb., Gentiles. So the Jews call us Christians in scorn. So God calleth them here in great contempt "a rebellious nation." See #Am 9:7 Genres apostatrices, as the Vulgate here hath it. The Jews call the Turks Ishmaelites, the Ethiopians Cushites; but Christians they call Gojim, an abominable nation, and Mamzer-goll, a bastard people.

They and their fathers have transgressed against me.] A serpentine seed they are, a race of rebels; neither good egg nor bird, but mali corvi mala ova.

Even unto this very day.] Being nothing bettered by all that they have suffered. See #Jer 16:13 Isa 1:5.

Ver. 4. For they are impudent children.] Heb., Hard of face. Sin hath added such an impudence in their faces, that they can blush no more than a sackbut. Os tuum ferreum, saith Cicero to Piso, that brazen face of thine; and Durus hic vultus lachrimare nescit, thou canst not blush, much less bleed, for thine offences, saith Seneca to one.

And stiff hearted.] Duri cordes, incurvi cervicati, quosque citius frergeris quam flexeris, such as will sooner break than bend. Many of our hearers, alas! are no better. We do even wash a tile sheard, draw water with a sieve, &c.

I do send thee unto them.] About hard service; sed curare exegeris, non curationem, {a} It is the care, and not the cure, of the charge that is charged upon thee.

Thou shalt say unto them.] Proficiscere et prophetato. Thou shalt be as my mouth. {#Jer 15:19}

{a} Bernard.

Ver. 5. And they, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear.] Some refractories will not so much as hear a minister of God; but bid him, as those old Italians once did the Roman ambassador, Ad quercus dicere, se interim alia acturos, speak to the posts; they had somewhat else to do than to give ear to them. See #1Co 1:22. Of those also that do hear, scarce the hundredth man believeth our report, saith Calvin; Nay, scarce the thousandth man, saith Chrysostom.

For they are a rebellious house.] This was small encouragement. Hence prophets have so hung off, as Moses, Isaiah, Jonah, Jeremiah, &c. Knox, when called first to preach, burst forth into abundance of tears. Bradford was hardly persuaded by Bucer to enter into the ministry, &c. {a}

Yet shall know that there hath been a prophet among them.] Let them prove incorrigible, they shall also prove inexcusable, and self-condemned. See #2Co 2:16. {See Trapp on "2Co 2:16"} Convinced they shall be, if not converted; and who knows how the word, now slighted, may hereafter work upon them? Saepe fit ut audientes verbum moleste, suscipiant fructuose, {b} They may better bethink themselves.

{a} Acts and Mon.

{b} Jerome.

Ver. 6. Be not afraid of them.] Of their lordly looks—such as Steven Gardiner set upon Dr Taylor, and was well told of it {a} -of their bitter scoffs, dreadful threats, as if they could undo us at their pleasure. Our times are in God's hands; kill us they may, but hurt us they cannot. See #Jer 1:17 Mt 10:25. When Bonner said to Hawkes, A faggot will make you turn; No, no, said Hawkes, a point for your faggot, you shall do no more than God permits you. ^{b} A minister of God should live by faith, and not die by fear. He should make his hearers afraid of him rather, as Herod was of the Baptist, Valens of Basil, &c. When Euxodia the Empress threatened Chrysostom, Go tell her, said he, that I fear nothing but sin. I will rather choose to die, said Calvin, than comply with those that refuse to submit to Church discipline.

Though briars (or rebels) and thorns be with thee.] Refractarii et spinei, ^{c} such as thou canst not handle without hurt, deal with without danger; ^{#2Sa 23:6 Ps 55:21 58:10 Mic 7:4} catching, they are and scratching, as sharp pointed thorns. ^{#Nu 33:55}

And thou dost dwell among scorpions.] Which are most venomous and perilous creatures, joined with fiery serpents. ^{#De 8:15} Pliny saith that there is not one minute wherein it doth not put forth the sting to do mischief. ^{d} It is also a crafty creature, et occultis machinationibus ferit and it kills with hidden devices. The Church's enemies are cruel crafties. ^{#Ne 4:11}

Be not afraid of their words.] Their bubbles of words.

Nor be dismayed at their looks.] Their swellings and browbeatings.

Though they be a rebellious house.] A race of rebels.

^{a} Acts and Mon.

^{b} Ibid., 1443.

^{c} Quasi boves aestro agitati. -Theodoret. Monitoribus asperi. -Hor.

^{d} Semper in ictu est. -Plin., lib. viii. cap. 29. Ferit obliquo ictu et inflexu.

Ver. 7. And thou shalt speak my words.] God's word must be spoken, however it be taken.

Whether they will hear.] See #Eze 2:5. Christ, once at least, preached away the most of his hearers. ^{#Joh 6:66} Beza so delivered himself with that evidence and efficacy of truth in Colloquio Possiaceno, that Cardinal Lorrain wished that either he had been dumb, or that his hearers had been deaf. Too many of ours are so, &c.

For they are most rebellious.] Heb., Rebellion, in the abstract, as if they had been transformed into sin's nature.

Ver. 8. Be not thou rebellious like that rebellious house.] It is no hard matter to symbolise with sinners. See #Isa 6:5, with the note. To dwell among them is dangerous, for sin is catching, and often in epidemic proportions. Precious therefore, and worthy of all acceptance, is the apostle's counsel. {#Ro 12:2} Lawyers tell us that we must not look so much what men do at Rome, as what they ought to do.

Eat that I give thee,] i.e., The roll, {#Eze 2:9} that is, whatsoever I shall henceforth dictate unto thee, do thou get it by heart, digest it, propound it to the people, work it first upon thine own, and then upon the affections of thine hearers. See Rev. iv., and observe how alike the Lord dealt with Ezekiel and John the Divine.

Ver. 9. Behold, a hand was sent.] A hand from heaven. A hand is index rei et instrumentum operationis sign to the matter and the tool of working.

And, lo, a roll of a book.] {a} The Jews folded or rolled up their books upon a cedar stick, to preserve them from dust and other dangers. See on #Isa 8:1.

{a} Palmoni bammidabber {#Da 10}

Ver. 10. And he spread it before me.] Till Christ unfold heavenly mysteries, men understand them not. {#Re 5:5 Mt 11:27 JJo 1:8,9 5:15} He is the excellent interpreter.

And it was written within and without.] To show abundance of miseries coming on the Jews and others.

Lamentation, and mourning, and woe.] Foretold all along this volume till chapter 40; sad songs, doleful ditties. גִּימִיט, gemitus sicut columbae moaning like doves. {#Isa 38:14}

Chapter 3

Ver. 1. Son of man, eat that thou findest.] Eat this roll or volume, without equivocation, or so much as questioning; yield simple obedience to the heavenly vision. It was in vision doubtless that the prophet did eat the roll, and not in very deed, as the foolish patient did the physician's recipe, or as Mr Lewis of Manchester made the bishop's summoner eat the citation which he brought for his wife, a martyr in Queen Mary's days, by setting a dagger to his heart, and to drink to it when he had done. {a} It was non reipsa, sed spiritu, saith an interpreter. See #Eze 3:10.

Eat this roll, and go speak unto the house of Israel.] First learn, and then teach others, that thou mayest utter my mind readily, dexterously, and affectionately, speaking a corde ad cor—ex intimo cordis affectu -and digging thy discourses out of thine own bosom, as it is said of Origen, and after him of Petrus Comestor, who merited that title, because, by his often allegations of the holy Scripture, he seemed to have eaten it up and digested it.

{a} Acts and Mon.

Ver. 2. So I opened my mouth.] Without delays or consults, I obeyed Christ's command, et hausit quodammodo donum prophetiae, {a} and yielded to become a prophet. This was well; but not long after, Ezekiel, through infirmity of the flesh, would have declined the office, and therefore sought to lurk among his countrymen at Telabib, {#Eze 3:15} till Christ called him out again and newly employed him. {#Eze 3:16}

And he caused me to eat that roll.] See on #Eze 3:1.

{a} Alsted. Chronol., 347.

Ver. 3. Cause thy belly to eat, and fill thy bowels,] i.e., Deeply and duly ponder and practise those holy truths thou hast to press upon others; preach thine own experiences, &c. See #1Ti 4:15.

And it was in my mouth as honey for sweetness.] So was God's law to good David; {#Ps 119:29,103} to Augustine, Scripturae tuae sunt deliciae meae, saith he, Thy Scriptures are my delight; to Alphonsus, King of Arragon, who professed he would rather lose his kingdoms than be without the knowledge of God's blessed book, which he had read over above a dozen times, together with such commentaries thereupon as those times afforded. See #Re 10:10.

Ver. 4. Go, get thee unto the house of Israel.] This was a hard task, all things considered; but hard or not hard, there was a necessity of going on God's errand. Ubi mel ibi fel. Necesse est ut eat, non ut vivat, Where there is honey, there is bitterness. It is necessary to go but not to live, as he once said.

And speak with my words unto them.] But see they be mine, and then I will bear thee out; then also they will the sooner take impression. Speak as the oracles of God. {#1Pe 4:11}

Ver. 5. For thou art not sent to a people of a strange speech and of an hard language.] Heb., Deep of lip and heavy of tongue. Qui strident sermone, et quasi e profundo gutture barbarum loquuntur. As Jonah was so sent, and those that now preach to the natives in New England in their own language, not without some good success.

But to the house of Israel.] Among whom thou must use vulgari et vernaculo sermone, who also are well seen in the Scriptures; they are indeed God's library keepers, which is no small privilege, {#Ro 3:2} and therefore the better to be dealt with.

Ver. 6. Surely had I sent unto them, they would have hearkened.] Or, If I had sent thee to them, would they not have hearkened unto thee? It may seem by the Ninevites that they would, for they repented at the preaching of Jonah, {#Mt 12:41} at one single sermon made by a mere stranger, who sang so doleful a ditty to them that their city should be shortly destroyed, &c. Vatablus rendereth this text, Dispeream nisi te audissent, ei ad cos te misissem. And couldst thou but skill of foreign languages, thou couldst not easily be without disciples. The punishment of strange language, saith a grave divine, {a} was a heavy punishment, next to our casting out of paradise and the flood.

{a} Mr Whatel. Prototyp.

Ver. 7. But the house of Israel will not hearken unto thee.] They will not. See the like, #Joh 5:40 8:44. A man's will is his hell, saith Bernard. And it is easier, saith another, to deal with twenty men's reasons, than with one man's will. What hope is there of those that will not hear; or, if they do, yet have made their conclusion beforehand, and will stir no more than a stake in the midst of a stream?

For they will not hearken unto me.] Speaking unto them in the Scriptures. See #Ho 8:12 Mt 10:24,25 Joh 15:18, &c. Let this speech of God to the prophet comfort faithful ministers, contra cervicosos et cerebrosos istos hypocritas, that reject or resist their preaching. What are we that we may not be slighted, whenas Christ himself the arch-prophet is?

Impudent.] Heb., Stiff of forehead. This was a point next the worst. Illum ego periisse dice cui periit pudor, said that heathen: {a} he is an undone man who is past shame.

{a} Curtius.

Ver. 8. Behold, I have made thy face strong against their faces.] I have steeled thy forehead and strengthened thine heart, that thou shalt budge for none of them. I have rendered thee insuperable.

Ver. 9. As an adamant, harder than flint.] Heb., Strong above a rock. Instar rupis quae in mari vadoso horridi Iovis, et irati, ut ita dicam, Neptuni fervidis assultibus undique verberata, non cedit, aut minuitur; sed obtendit assuetum fluctibus latus, et firma duritis, tumentis undae impetum sustinet ac frangit. This {a} invincible courage and constance in God's ministers the mad world calleth and counteth pride and pertinace; but these know not the power of the Spirit, nor the privy armour of proof that such have about their hearts. {b}

Fear them not, &c.] See #Eze 2:6.

{a} John Wower, Polymath.

{b} Durus ut his animus solido ex adamante creatus. -Hesiod.

Ver. 10. Son of man, all my words receive in thine heart, &c.] This is to eat the roll, to turn it in succum et sanguinem, that it may surely nourish. See on #Eze 3:1-3.

Ver. 11. Go, get thee to them of the captivity.] The fruit whereof they have lost in great part, because so little amended thereby.

Unto thy people.] For I can scarce find in my heart to own them. So #Ex 32:7. God fathers that rebellious people upon Moses.

Whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear,] q.d., Let them choose; and if they have a mind to it, be miserable by their own election. See #Eze 2:5.

Ver. 12. Then the spirit took me up, and I heard behind me, &c.] This was for the prophet's encouragement, and to put mettle into him, as it were, that he might the better bear up amidst all, since he should shortly bear a part in that angelic concert, whose λειτουργια εστι ψαλμωδια, as Theodoret hath it, their daily service is singing of psalms.

Blessed be the glory of the Lord from his place,] i.e., From heaven, where saints and angels glorify his name without ceasing or satiety. Monica, after a discourse with her son Augustine about the happiness of heaven, concluded thus: Quantum ad me attinet, fili, nulla re amplius delector in hac vita. Quid hic facio? As for me, what make I here, since I take no more pleasure in anything that is here to be had? A picture of a globe of the whole earth, saith one, set out with all the brave things that sea and land can afford, with this sentence encircling it round, "To be with Christ is far better," is a Christian's emblem, and should be his ambition.

Ver. 13. I heard also the noise of the wings of the living creatures.] In consent with the former doxology.

That touched one another.] Heb., Kissed; noting the love and good agreement that is between the holy angels. No woman is so well affected to her sister as they are one to another in serving God and his people.

And the noise of the wheels.] As the angels, so all actions and motions do, as they can, sing praise to God.

Ver. 14. So the spirit lifted me up.] As it did afterwards also Philip, {#Ac 8:39,40} not visionally, but really.

And took me away.] To Telabib.

And I went in bitterness, in the heat of my spirit.] {a} Heb., I went bitter in the hot anger of my spirit, q.d., I was in a great pet, as considering that God's truths must be spoken, however they are taken: and full ill they would be taken from me by mine untoward countrymen. This made me, for the time, much out of temper; but I soon denied myself, and got the better of mine unruly passions. For,

The hand of the Lord was strong upon me.] I was overpowered by the Spirit of God, who soon brought those high thoughts of mine into captivity and conformity to Christ. {#2Co 10:5}

{a} Hic ecce pillula voluminis in ore dulcis, in ventre dissoluta, ventrem torquet et lancinat. -A Lapide.

Ver. 15. Then I came to them of the captivity of Telabib.] Which was the name of some chief place or plantation of the Jews in captivity, saith Diodat. It was in the middle part of Mesopotamia, saith Junius, between two rivers, Chebar and Saocorah.

I sat where they sat.] Skulking and lurking, or at least not acting according to my prophetic function, and the gift bestowed upon me, which I ought to have stirred up and exercised for the good of my fellow captives. This he freely confesseth, as giving glory to God, and taking shame to himself.

Seven days.] Which circumstance of time increased his sins, saith Polanus.

Ver. 16. And it came to pass at the end of seven days.] Probably on the Sabbath day, that day of grace, and opportunity of holiness. God glorifieth his free grace in coming to his offending prophet, as the physician doth to his sick patient, and by setting him to work again, sealing up his love to him: like as he also did to the eleven apostles, by sending them abroad to preach the gospel, after that they had so basely deserted him at his apprehension, and death upon the cross.

Ver. 17. Son of man.] So Christ constantly calleth this prophet, to keep him humble. See #Eze 2:1.

I have made thee a watchman.] I, who am the chief Bishop and Shepherd of souls, {#1Pe 2:25} have set thee in thy watch tower, with charge to look well to my flock with golden fleeces, precious souls, that none be lost for want of warning. See therefore that thou be Episcopus, not Aposcopus; an overseer, not a byseer; a watcher, not a sleeper: Somnoleatia Pastorum est gaudium luporum. {a} Shall the shepherds sleep whenas the wolves watch and worry the flock? {#Ac 20:29,30} Herodotus {b} telleth of one Euenius, a city shepherd, who for sleeping and allowed the wolf to enter the fold and kill sixty sheep, had his eyes pulled out. God threateneth the like punishment upon sleepy watchmen, idol shepherds. {#Zec 11:17}

Therefore, hear the word at my mouth.] Who am the arch-prophet, the only doctor of my Church; {#Mt 23:8 17:4} admonish them therefore in my words, foresee and foretell them their danger in my name and stead. See #Hab 2:1 2Co 5:20.

{a} Ephrem., Tract. de Tim. Dei.

{b} Lib. ix.

Ver. 18. When I say to the wicked, Thou shalt surely die.] When I bid thee tell the wicked from me, it shall be ill with him; for "the reward of his hands shall be given," {#Isa 3:11} even "death the wages of sin," {#Ro 6:23} death of all sorts, which is the just hire of the least sin: woe then to the wicked, say.

And thou givest him not warning.] Heb., Non expolieris; Gr., Non distinxis; if thou do not distinctly and clearly warn him, seeking to rub off his rust, and to make his soul clear and circumspect. {as #Ps 19:12 Ec 4:13}

To save his life.] That "iniquity may not be his ruin." Sin hales hell at the heels of it.

But his blood will I require at thine hand.] These are fulmina, non verba, not words, but thunderbolts, saith Erasmus. This sentence sounding much in his ears made Augustine constant and instant in preaching, and warning the people of their danger. Bernard {a} also, for the same reason, thus bespeaketh his hearers: If I deal not freely and faithfully with you, it will be to your loss, and mine own danger. Timeo itaque damnum vestrum: timeo damnationem meam, si tacuero.

{a} Lib. iii. De Verb. Dom., Sermon. 12.

Ver. 19. He shall die in his iniquity.] Because now he falleth with open eyes. Many sorrows shall be to such wicked as will not be warned. {#Ps 32:9,10} {a}

But thou hast delivered thy soul,] scil., From thine other men's sin. {#1Ti 4:16}

{a} De Temp., 99.

Ver. 20. Again, When a righteous man.] So esteemed by others, and haply also by himself; a self-deceiver.

Doth turn from his righteousness.] As he may soon do, where it is but a semblance. Falling stars were never but meteors.

And commit iniquity.] This a righteous man, rightly so called, doth not. {#Joh 8:34 1Jo 3:8} {See Trapp on "1Jo 3:8"}

And I lay a stumblingblock before him,] i.e., I cause him to prosper in his sin, saith Vatablus, which is a heavy judgment. Fatted ware is but fitted for the shambles.

Because thou hast not given him warning.] Hast not uncased and unkennelled the hypocrite, driving him out of his starting-holes. {a}

And his righteousness.] His works that were materially good, but not formally and eventually. Bonum non sit nisi ex integra causa.

Shall not be remembered,] i.e., Reckoned to him he shall not thereby set off with God, or make amends by his good deeds for his bad; nay, his dissembled sanctity shall pass for double iniquity, and he shall be held therefore the worse, because he pretended to be better.

{a} A hole in which a hunted animal takes refuge; transf. a place in which a criminal or a hunted enemy finds refuge.

Ver. 21. Nevertheless if thou warn the righteous.] As the best may need to be warned, and must take it for a mercy.

“ *Acer et ad palmae per se cursurus honores,
Si tamen horteris, fortius ibit equus.*”—Ovid.

Ver. 22. And the hand of the Lord,] i.e., The Spirit of the Lord, whereby he led his prophet into all truth and holiness.

Arise, go forth into the plain.] Or, Valley, where thou mayest be alone and at liberty, solitary and sedate, that I may further converse with thee.

Ver. 23. Then I arose and went forth.] Such prompt and present obedience meeteth with mercies unexpected.

As the glory which I saw.] The same as before for the prophet's further confirmation. So #Ac 10:10, and so God sealet to us again and again in the sacrament of the supper, showing us all his goodness. {as #Ex 33:19}

And I fell on my face.] The nearer any one draweth to God, the more doth rottenness enter into his bones.

Ver. 24. Go shut thyself within thine house,] q.d., Thou hast a mind, I perceive to do so; but it is not thy wisest way to decline thine office, how hard soever it seemeth.

Ver. 25. Behold, they shall put bands upon thee.] Thy friends shall bind thee for a madman. See #Mr 3:21. {See Trapp on "Mr 3:21"}

Ver. 26. And I will make thy tongue.] A spiritual and a special judgment upon the people, thus to silence the prophet. So he dealt by our ancestors, upon the setting up of Queen Mary.

Ver. 27. But when I speak with thee.] As speak I will with thee again, by prophetic revelation, ere long be.

He that heareth, let him hear.] See #Eze 2:5; whether more or fewer hearken to thee, be not troubled, I shall have my purpose howsoever.

Chapter 4

Ver. 1. Thou also, son of man.] Hitherto we have had the preface: followeth now the prophecy itself, which is both concerning the fall of earthly kingdoms, and also the setting up of Christ's kingdom among men. The siege, famine, and downfall of Jerusalem is here set forth to the life, four years at least before it occurred, not in simple words, but in deeds and pictures, as more apt to affect men's minds: like as he is more moved who seeth himself painted as a thief or scoundrel hanged, than he who is only called so. This way of teaching is ordinary with the prophets, and was used also by our Saviour Christ; as when he set a child in the midst, washed his disciples' feet, instituted the sacraments, &c. {a}

Take thee a tile.] An unburnt tile, saith Lyra, and so fit to portray anything upon. Some take it for a four square table, like a tile or brick, that will admit engravement. Jerusalem, the glory of the East, was here pictured upon a tile sheard. How mean a thing is the most stately city on earth to that city of pearl, the heavenly Jerusalem!

And portray upon it the city.] Not with the pencil, but with the graving tool. Where yet, as in Timanthes' works, more was ever to be understood than was delineated.

{a} Oecolampadius.

Ver. 2. And lay siege against it.] This to carnal reason seemeth childish and ridiculous; not unlike the practice of boys that make forts of snow; or of the Papists' St Francis, who made him a wife and children of snow; fair, but soon fading comforts; or of his disciple Massaeus, who is much magnified, because at his master's command he did—not Diogenes-like, tumble his tub, but—himself tumble up and down as a little one, in reference to that of our Saviour, {a} "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." {#Mt 18:3} But it must be considered, that what the prophet did here, he did by the word and command of the most wise God. This made the sacrifices of old, and doth make the sacraments still, to be reverend and tremendous; because holy and reverend is his name who instituted them. It cannot be said so of Popish ceremonies, men's inventions; they have not God's image or inscription, and are therefore frivolous and fruitless, worthily cast out of our churches.

{a} Sedulius., lib. iii. cap. 2.

Ver. 3. Moreover take thou unto thee an iron pan.] Sartaginem ferream, in token of God's hard and inflexible hatred bent against so hard-hearted a people; whom he will therefore fry as in a pan, and see the as in a pot, {#Jer 1:13} so that they shall "pine away in their iniquities."

Set thy face against it, and thou shalt lay siege.] This the prophet was to do in the name and person of God and his soldiers, the Chaldeans. Hard hearts make hard times, yea, they make Deum, natura sua mollem, misericordem, et melleum, durum esse et ferreum, as one saith—God to harden his hand, and hasten men's destruction.

Ver. 4. Lie thou also upon thy left side.] Which for so long a time to do, could not but put the prophet to great pain, and try his patience to the utmost, especially if he lay bound all the while, as Theodoret thinketh he did, to set forth Jerusalem's great miseries during the siege, or rather God's infinite patience in bearing with their evil manners with so perverse a people.

Thou shalt bear their iniquity,] i.e., Represent my bearing it, and forbearing to punish them for it.

Ver. 5. Three hundred and ninety days.] That is, say some, the siege of Jerusalem shall continue so many days—via, thirteen months, or thereabouts. But they do better, who, taking a day for a year in both the accounts, {as #Eze 4:6} and making the forty of Judah to run along with the last year of Israel's 390, end both at Nabuzaradan's carrying away to Babylon the last relics of Israel and Judah: and begin Israel's years at Jeroboam's apostasy, and Judah's at Huldah's prophecy in the eighteenth of Josiah's reign, when the law was found but not observed by that idolatrous people, as appeareth by the complaints made of them by Zephaniah and Jeremiah; neither were they warned by their brethren's miseries, the ten tribes being now carried into captivity. Compare #Eze 1:1,2 3:15,24-27 8:1.

Ver. 6. And when thou hast accomplished them.] That is, art within forty years of accomplishing them.

Thou shalt bear the iniquity of the house of Judah forty days,] i.e., Years, beginning at the eighteenth year of Josiah; or, as others compute it, at his thirteenth year, and ending them in the eleventh of Zedekiah, which are the bounds of Jeremiah's prophecy. A very learned man yet living observeth, that God doth here set and mark out Judah's singular iniquity by a singular mark; for that they had forty years so pregnant instructions and admonitions by so eminent a prophet as Jeremiah, yet were they impenitent to their own destruction. And the like may well be said of Dr Ussher, that prophet of Ireland, who, upon the toleration of Popery there, preaching before the State at Dublin upon a special solemnity, made a full and bold application of this text unto them in these very words: From this year, said he—viz., A.D. 1601—will I reckon the sin of Ireland; and dare say that those whom you embrace shall be your ruin, and you shall bear this iniquity. {a} And it happened accordingly; for, forty years after—viz., A.D. 1641—began the rebellion and destruction of Ireland, done by those Papists and Popish priests then connived at.

{a} Dr Ussher's Funeral Sermon, by Dr Bern. 39.

Ver. 7. Set thy face toward the siege of Jerusalem.] Steel thy countenance, be stern and resolute, to show that the Chaldees should be so. Thus this prophet proceedeth to write, as it were, in hieroglyphics, and to preach in emblems.

And thine arm shall be uncovered,] i.e., Thou shalt do thy work bodily; which, when soldiers and servants set themselves to do, they make bare their arms, ut fine expeditiores, for quicker despatch. Even orators also pleaded with their right arm, as Oecolampadius here noteth, stripped up and stretched out.

And thou shalt prophesy against it.] By these signs and dumb shows at least. See #Eze 3:26.

Ver. 8. And, behold, I will lay bands upon thee.] To show that he was unchangeably resolved to ruin Judah, {a} whom the prophet here personateth. Some make the sense to be this, I will give thee strength to hold out in that thy long lying on one side till the city be taken. Of a nobleman of Louvain it is told, that he lay sixteen years in one posture—viz., with his face upwards. And Pradus saith he saw a madman who had lain upon one side fifteen years.

{a} Pertinacis poenae simulachrum est. -Oecolamp.

Ver. 9. Take thou also unto thee wheat and barley, &c.] Promiscuam farraginem; to show what shall be the condition of the city in the time of the siege. Miscellan bread shall be good fare, but hard to come by in that grievous famine.

Three hundred and ninety days shalt thou eat thereof.] Not sleep all the while, as some Papists would have it, grounding their conceit upon their Trent translation of #Eze 4:4, Sleep thou also upon thy left side, &c.; but lying and sleeping are distinct things, as may be seen, #Ps 3:5 4:8.

Ver. 10. Twenty shekels a day.] Five ounces, or ten at most; not prisoners' pittance, qua proinde per diem trahitur magis anima quam sustentatur. See this complained of, #La 1:11,19 2:11,12,19,20 4:4,9,10 5:6,9,10. They had sinned in excess, and now they are punished with cleanness of teeth. The famine of the word is far worse.

Ver. 11. From time to time shalt thou drink,] i.e., At thy set times, in stata tempera comparcito, make no waste: the least drop is precious.

Ver. 12. And thou shalt eat it as barley cakes.] Baked on coals made of homely fuel, man's dung burnt. {a}

And thou shalt bake it with dung.] For want of wood. {#La 5:4} To the hungry soul every bitter thing is sweet. {#Pr 27:7}

In their sight.] This, then, was more than a vision.

{a} Panem exhibuit Papa non ad purum ignem, sed ad olea Quaestionariorum, Sorbonistarum, et Canonicorum coctum. -Pol.

Ver. 13. Eat their defiled bread.] Not able now to observe that ceremonial purity in their meats which God had commanded. This was just upon them for their worshipping those their dungy deities.

Ver. 14. Ah Lord God! behold, my soul hath not been polluted.] Neither had it been here by eating suchlike bread, because God bade him do it, and his command legitimateth anything. But a good soul feareth and deprecateh all kind of pollution: "Keep thyself pure"; {#1Ti 5:22} "Abstain from all appearance of evil." {#1Th 5:22} The prophet in this prayer of his is very pathetic, Ah Domine Iehovi: not Iehova, but Iehovi. See the similar passage in #Ge 15:2,8 De 3:24 9:26.

For from my youth up.] Let us be as careful of spiritual uncleanness; sin is the devil's excrement, the corruption of a dead soul. {a} Constantinus Copronymus is reported to have delighted in stench and filth. The panther preferreth man's dung before any meat; so do many feed greedily on sin's murdering morsels.

{a} Polan.

Ver. 15. Lo, I have given thee cow's dung.] This was some mitigation. Something God will yield to his praying people when most bitterly bent against them.

Ver. 16. Behold, I will break {a} the staff of bread.] Bread shall be very scarce, and that which men have shall not nourish or satisfy them; they shall have appetitnm caninum. See #Isa 3:1; {See Trapp on "Isa 3:1"} and take that good counsel, {#Am 5:14,15} lest we know the worth of good by the want of it.

{a} מרקק contabescere, foetidum fieri.

Ver. 17. And be astonied.] At their straits and disappointments.

And consume away for their iniquity.] They shall "pine away in their iniquity"; {#Le 26:31} this is the last and worst of judgments there threatened, after those other dismal ones.

Chapter 5

Ver. 1. And thou, son of man.] See on #Eze 2:1.

Take thee a sharp knife.] This was the King of Babylon. {as #Isa 7:20} The Turk is at this day such another. Mohammed I was, in his time, the death of 800,000 men. Selymus II, in revenge of the loss received at Lepanto, would have put to death all the Christians in his dominions. {a}

Take thee a barber's razor.] Not a "deceitful razor," {as #Ps 52:2} but one that will do the deed—sharp and sure. Pliny {b} telleth us, out of Varo, that the Romans had no barbers till 454 years after the city was built; ante intonsi fuere.

And cause it to pass upon thy head and upon thy beard.] As hairs are an ornament to the head and beard, so are people to a city. But, as when they begin to be a burden or trouble to either, they are cut off and cast away; so are people by God's judgments, when by their sins they are offensive to him; dealing as Dionysius did by his god Aesculapius, from whom he presumed to pull his golden beard. David felt himself shaved in his ambassadors; so doth God in his servants—whose very hairs are numbered {#Mt 10:30} -in his ministers especially—who, by a specialty, are called God's men {#1Ti 6:11 2Ti 3:17} -with whom to meddle is more dangerous than to take a lion by the beard or a bear by the hair.

Then take the balances to weigh.] This showeth that God's judgments are just to a hair's weight: and capillus unus suam habet umbram, saith Mimus.

And divide the hair.] Dii nos quasi pilas habent, saith Plautus; Imo quasi pilos, saith another.

{a} Turkish History, 885.

{b} Lib. vii. cap. 59.

Ver. 2. Thou shalt burn with fire a third part,] i.e., With famine, pestilence, and other mischiefs, during the siege of Jerusalem. Pythagoras gave this precept among others, Unguium, criniumque praesegmina ne contemnito. But God findeth so little worth in wicked people that he regardeth them not, but casteth them as excrements to the dunghill, yea, to hell. {#Ps 9:17}

And smite about it with a knife.] They shall be slain with that sharp knife or sword, {#Eze 5:1} after that the city is taken.

Thou shalt scatter in the wind.] Sundry of them shall flee for their lives; but in running from death they shall but run to it. {#Am 9:1-4 2:13-16}

Ver. 3. Thou shalt also take thereof a few in number.] A remnant is still reserved, "that the Lord God may dwell among men." {#Ps 68:18} See #Jer 44:28 2Ki 25:12 Isa 1:9 6:10.

Ver. 4. Then take of them again, and cast them into the midst of the fire.] Thus "evil shall hunt a wicked man to overthrow him"; {#Ps 140:11} {See Trapp on "Ps 140:11"} he shall not escape, though he hath escaped; his preservation is but a reservation to further mischief, except he repent.

And burn them in the fire.] Such he meaneth as were combustible matter; for there were a sort of precious ones among them, who being brought by God through the fire, were thereby "refined as silver is refined, and tried as gold is tried." {#Zec 13:9} {See Trapp on "Zec 13:9"}

Ver. 5. This is Jerusalem,] i.e., This head and beard so to be shaved. {#Eze 5:1} By the hair of the head some think the wise men of that city are figured out, and by the hair of the beard are the strong men; the razor of God's severity maketh clean work, leaving no stub or stump behind it.

I have set it in the midst of the nations.] As the head, heart, and centre of the earth. See #Ps 72:10 Eze 38:12; and God had peculiar ends in it, that the law might go forth out of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem, and that all nations might flow into it. {#Isa 2:2,3} Talis est Roma Christianis, Such now is Rome to Christians, saith A Lapidè; but lay a straw there, say we; or, as the Gloss saith upon some decrees of popes, Haec non credo, I believe it not. See #Re 17:5.

Ver. 6. And she hath changed my judgments into wickedness.] This was a foul change; this was to do evil as she could; {#Jer 3:5} this was ingratitude of the worst sort, such as Socrates called ειλκρινη αδικιαν, manifest injustice. Such a wretched change is complained of, #Jer 2:11 Ro 1:23,25 Jude 4, but nowhere in so high an expression as this, as one observeth.

More than the nations.] Because the Jews had better laws but worse dispositions than they.

Ver. 7. Because ye multiplied,] scil., Your transgressions and superstitions, or because ye have abounded with blessings, and made me so ill a requital. Some render it Quia tumultuastis vos plus quam vicinae gentes; and indeed there were many murders committed among them, and many revolts from foreign princes whom they had sworn to serve.

Neither have done according to the judgment of the nations.] But have outsinned them, qui deos suos quamvis viles et multos non mutant, who change not their gods (as you have done me, #Jer 2:10,11), but follow the natural light of reason (some of them at least do so, #Ro 2:14), which you have debauched. See #1Co 5:1 Eze 16:46-48.

Ver. 8. Behold, I, even I, am against thee.] Whether thou wilt believe it or not. Thou boldest it unlikely, but shalt find it true, and that I am very serious, not saying these things in terrorem only. Ecce me adversum te venientem, so some render it; Behold I am upon my march against thee, and will punish thee surely, severely, suddenly.

And will execute judgments.] For the non-execution of my judgments in the former sense taken. {as #Eze 5:7}

In the sight of the nations.] In whose sight thou hast so sinned, and who will rejoice at thy sufferings.

Ver. 9. And I will do in thee that which I have not done.] None shall suffer so much here or sink so deep in hell, as a profane Jew, a carnal gospeller, who is therefore worse than others, because he ought to be better. Oh, the height and weight of those judgments that shall be heaped upon such! See #La 4:6.

And whereunto I will not do any more the like.] For where ever read we that the fathers did eat their sons in an open visible way? and the sons the Fathers?

Ver. 10. Therefore the fathers shall eat the sons.] See this fulfilled in the pitiful mothers; {#La 4:10} and may it be thought, saith one, that their hungry husbands shared not with them in those viands? Oh, the severity of God. Cavebis, si pavebis.

And the whole remnant of thee will I scatter.] A miserably dejected people the Jews are to this day, banished out of the world, as it were, by a common consent of nations.

Ver. 11. Wherefore, as I live, saith the Lord.] This is God's usual oath (in this prophet especially), and therefore should not be used as an oath or asseveration by any other, since he only liveth (to speak properly).

Therefore will I also diminish thee.] Or, I will break thee down; or, I will shave thee. {as #Eze 5:1 Jer 48:37}

Ver. 12. A third part of thee, &c.] See #Eze 5:2.

Ver. 13. Then shall mine anger be accomplished.] God is then said to be angry when he doth what men do when angry—viz. (1.) Chide; (2.) Smite.

And I will be comforted.] This also is spoken after the manner of men, who are much comforted when they can be avenged. Their song is, Oh, how sweet is revenge!

“ Animumque explesse iuvabit. ”—Virgil

The same word in Hebrew that signifieth vengeance, signifieth comfort also; for God will be comforted in the execution of his wrath. But what a venomous and vile thing is sin, that causeth the most merciful God to take comfort in the destruction of his creature!

And they shall know that I the Lord have spoken it in my zeal.] That is, seriously threatened by my prophets, whom they have vilipended and derided, but shall now feel the weight of their words.

When I have accomplished my fury in them.] This he doth not usually all at once, but by degrees. He suffereth not his whole wrath to arise till there be no remedy. {as #2Ch 36:16}

Ver. 14. Moreover, I will make thee waste.] In ariditatem, a dry and barren wilderness, whose fruitfulness and pleasantness is so much celebrated, not only by divine, but profane authors also. See #Ps 107:34. {See Trapp on "Ps 107:34"}

In the sight of all.] See on #Eze 5:8.

Ver. 15. So it shall be a reproach and taunt.] See this fulfilled, #La 2:15,16.

An instruction.] They shall enjoy thy folly, grow wise by thy harms. I will make thee an example to the heathen. {a}

An astonishment.] A terror, some render it.

{a} Exemplum.—Vulg.

Ver. 16. When I shall send upon you the evil arrows of famine.] Not to warn you, as Jonathan's arrows did David, but to wound you to the heart, and to lay you heaps upon heaps. {#De 32:23,24}

And break your staff of bread.] See #Eze 4:16. Penuria fiet pecuniae, saith Oecolampadius here; You shall want money to buy you bread.

Ver. 17. Evil beasts, and they shall bereave thee.] Rob thee of thy children, destroy thy cattle, make thee few in number, and thy highway desolate, as was long before threatened. {#Le 26:22 2Ki 17:25}

I the Lord have spoken it.] I Jehovah, who will give being to my menaces as well as to my promises.

Chapter 6

Ver. 1. And the word of the Lord came unto me.] Junius observeth that this and the two following prophecies, viz., those in Eze. 7,8, were delivered on the Sabbath day; that is the proper season for preaching.

Ver. 2. Set thy face toward the mountains of Israel,] i.e., The Jews, who are haughty, and hard as mountains, who are aspera et inculti, rough and rude, as mountaineers use to be. In Mount Olivet itself, besides other mountains, they boldly set up their idols, even in the sight of the Lord; so that he never looked out of the sanctuary but he beheld that vile hill of abominations; called therefore, by an elegant alliteration, the Hill of Corruption. {#2Ki 23:13}

Ver. 3. Behold, I, even I, will bring a sword upon you.] Because ye are polluted by man's sins, and so made hateful unto me. For as God thinks the better of the places wherein he is sincerely served, yea, where his saints are born, {#Ps 87:5} or make abode, {#Isa 49:16} so the worse of such places where Satan's seat is.

Ver. 4. Your images shall be broken down.] Heb., Your sun images, whence also Jupiter Hammon had his name, which Macrobius {a} saith was the same with the sun. See #2Ch 23:5.

And I will cast down your slain men.] Cruentatos vulneratos, vel interfectos vestros; such as when wounded, fly to their idols for safety.

Before your idols.] Heb., Your dii stercorei, dunghill deities, more loathsome than any excrements.

{a} Lib. i. Sat., cap. 23.

Ver. 5. And I will lay the dead carcasses of the children of Israel, &c.] That in the very places where they have sinned there they may suffer. So in the valley of Hinnom, and at Pilate's praetorium, &c.

Ver. 6. In all your dwelling places.] Omnia everram et evertam funditus. I will turn all topsy-turvy.

Your works shall be abolished.] Those toilsome toys, your idols and monuments of idolatry. This the prophet telleth them again and again, that he might waken them, and work them to repentance.

Ver. 7. And ye shall know that I am the Lord.] That I am dicti mei Dominus, one that will be as good as my word. So shall all, not idolaters only, but broachers of heresies also, quae furore et foetere cultores suos faciunt, saith Oecolampadius here.

Ver. 8. Yet will I leave a remnant.] For royal use. See on #Eze 5:3.

Ver. 9. And they that escape of you shall remember me.] Here beginneth that true repentance never to be repented of. {#Ps 22:27 20:7}

Because I am broken off from their whorish heart,] i.e., I am troubled, saith Piscator. I am tired out, saith Zegedine, and made to break off the course of my kindness. I am broken off from their whorish heart—so Polanus rendereth it; that is, saith he, I leave them, though loath to do it: the breach is merely on their part; for they have an impetus, a spirit of whoredoms in them, that causeth them to err, and go whoring from under their God. {#Ho 4:12 9:1}

And with their eyes.] Those windows of wickedness through which the devil (who is εἰδωλοχαρής, as saith Synesius) doth oft wind himself into the soul.

And they shall loathe themselves.] {a} They shall displease themselves, saith the Vulgate; but that is not enough. Pudefient in faciebus suis, say others. They shall bleed inwardly, and blush outwardly, deeply detesting their former abominations, and not waiting till others condemn them, they shall condemn themselves.

{a} κοψονται.—Sept.

Ver. 10. And they shall know.] By woeful experience. He that trembleth not in sinning shall be crushed to pieces in feeling, said blessed Bradford.

And that I have not said in vain.] In terrorem only,

Ver. 11. Thus saith the Lord God.] Sic ait Dominator Dominus.

Smite with thine hand.] Manibus pedibusque obnixe omnia facito; do thine utmost by gestures and speeches to make this stupid people perceive their sin and danger.

Alas for all the evil abominations.] Propter omnes abominationes pessimas; {a} we cannot call sin bad enough; the worst word in a man's belly is too good for it. O perdita Israel, dicere vult, quae tot malas abominationes operata es, &c.

{a} Oecolamp.

Ver. 12. He that is far off shall die of the pestilence.] Pluribus verbis hunc locum tractat. Ointments must not only be laid upon the part that acheth, but also robbed and chafed in; so must menaces and promises, that they may soak and sink into the soul.

Ver. 13. Then shall ye know that I am the Lord.] Vexatio dabit intellectum; smart shall make wit. See #Eze 6:10. Four times in this chapter are these words used: Verba toties inculcata, viva sunt, vera sunt, sana sunt, plana sunt. {a} The words are driven home often, they are alive, they are true, they are wholesome, they are plain.

Among their idols.] See on #Eze 6:4.

Where they did offer sweet savour.] Idolatry is costly.

{a} Augustine.

Ver. 14. Than the wilderness toward Diblath.] Which was horriditate nobile, bordering upon that terrible howling wilderness mentioned by Moses. {#De 8:15 Jer 48:22}

Chapter 7

Ver. 1. Moreover the word of the Lord came unto me.] Five or six years afore it happened. God loveth to foresignify, to forewarn, or ere he punish. Let us, upon whom the ends of the world are come, take warning, and think we hear the trump of God sounding as here, "An end is come, is come, is come; it watcheth for thee, behold it is come." {#Eze 7:2,3,6}

Ver. 2. An end, the end is come.] Exitium et excidium. Great kingdoms have their times and their turns, their rise and their ruin. The wicked's happiness will take its end, surely and swiftly.

Upon the four corners of the land.] Heb., The four wings, called also the "four winds." {#Mt 24:31} They had defiled the land from corner to corner; {as #Ezr 9:11} God therefore now would sweep it all over with the besom of utter destruction.

Ver. 3. Now is the end come upon thee.] Even upon thee, O Israel. Who would ever have thought it {#La 4:12}

And I will send mine anger upon thee.] Reveal it from heaven. {as #Ro 1:18}

And will judge thee according to thy ways,] i.e., I will punish thee for thy ways. {as #Ho 4:9 Ob 15}

And will recompense upon thee.] Heb., I will give or put upon thee all thine abominations—q.d., Thou hast hitherto put them upon me, but I will have a writ of removal, and set them upon their own base.

{as #Zec 5:11}

Ver. 4. And mine eye shall not spare thee.] #Eze 5:11. See on #Jer 13:14.

And thine abominations shall be in the midst of thee.] Ut quae antea latuerant, in aperture prodeant.

And ye shall know that I am the Lord.] That smiteth you. {#Eze 7:9}

An evil, an only evil,] viz., Without mixture of mercy, or that shall smite thee down at one only blow. {as #1Sa 26:8 Na 1:9} The Vulgate, after the Chaldee, rendereth it, An evil after an evil—q.d., Lighter and lesser judgments have done no good upon thee. Now I will finish the work, and cut it short in righteousness. {#Ro 9:28} Ruinam praecedunt stillicidia. Drops precede disaster.

Ver. 6. An end is come, the end is come.] Still the prophet ringeth this doleful knell in their ears, whom sin and Satan had cast into such a dead lethargy, that they could not easily be aroused. Battologia est, sed necessaria verborum redundantia, saith Pintus.

It watcheth for thee.] Which hitherto lay at the door, {#Ge 4:7} sleeping dog sleep, as we say. In the Hebrew there is an elegant alliteration between hakets, "an end," and hekits, "watcheth." See #2Pe 3:3.

Ver. 7. The morning is come unto thee.] {a} The morning of execution (as #Jer 21:12 Ps 101:8 cf. Ho 10:15 Ge 19:23,24), worse than the Sicilian Vespers or the French massacre. Thine utter destruction, bene mane in te irruet, shall be upon thee early, as it was upon Sodom, and as the morning light breaketh in upon those that are fast asleep. Sicut decoctores multa sibi promittunt, interim pereunt. So it befalleth the wicked. {b}

The day of trouble is near.] Hajom mehumah. "Day" in Hebrew is thought to have its name from the stir and noise that is made in it, the humming noise and bustle of business. A troublesome and tumultuous day is here forethreatened, such as that in #Isa 22:5 Zep 1:14-17.

Not the sounding again of the mountains.] Not an empty sound, or an echo— resonabilis echo {c} -but a worse matter, that shall do more than beat the air.

{a} Visitaberis summo mane, id est mature. -Piscat.

{b} Florulenta felicitas occidit. -Oecol.

{c} Virgil.

Ver. 8. Now will I shortly pour out my fury.] See on #Eze 5:13.

And I will judge thee, &c.] See on #Eze 7:3.

Ver. 9. I will recompense.] The same as before. Nunquam satis dicitur, quod nunquam satis discitur.

That I am the Lord that smiteth.] Think not that I am made all of mercy, or that I will ever serve you for a sinning stock. Ye shall know that I have verbera flogging as well as ubera, plenty and can so set it on as no creature can take it off.

Ver. 10. The morning is gone forth.] Matutina sententia, The decree bringeth forth, {as #Zep 2:2} {See Trapp on "Zep 2:2"}

The rod hath blossomed.] You have had your floralia, good times and shall shortly have your funeralia, funeral. Nebuchadnezzar (that rod of my wrath) is at hand.

Pride hath budded.] And will shortly bring forth, viz., the bitter fruit of your bold rebellion. Not much unlike to this was the almond rod seen by Jeremiah. {#Eze 1:11}

Ver. 11. Violence is risen up into a rod of wickedness.] Their oppressions speak them most wicked, and will make them most wretched.

Nor of their multitude.] Or, Their tumultuous persons, their Thrasos, saith Tremellius, quantumvis circumstrepant famulatio numeroso, with all their train and retinue, that keep a clutter.

Neither shall there be wailing for them.] Their dearest friends shall not dare to lament the loss of them, for fear of the enemies who are present would punish it. We read in the Roman history of one Vitia, who was put to death by the command of Tiberius, for that she had lamented Geminus her son executed as a friend to Sejanus. {a}

{a} Tacit.

Ver. 12. The time is come, the day draweth near.] Advenit illud tempus, pertigit ilia dies. Let this voice ever sound in the ears of those negligent spirits who cry Cras Domine, tomorrow Lord, wiling away their time as she in #Re 2:21, and so fooling away their own salvation, as those virgins. {#Mt 25:1-12}

Let not the buyer rejoice.] He shall have no such great joy of his purchase, since the enemy shall shortly take all, et qui latifundia habuerunt, ne latum pedem retinebunt, and those who have large estates will not keep back enough for a foot, and no man shall be master of his own, nay, not of a molehill.

For wrath is upon all the multitude thereof.] Or, Upon all the wealth thereof. To like purpose the apostle in #1Co 7:29; "This, then, I say, brethren, The time is short," or trussed up, contracted. "Let them that have wives be as though they had none, they that weep as though they wept not, they that rejoice as though they rejoiced not, and they that buy as though they possessed not," &c. Rebus non me trado sed commodo, said the wise heathen. {a} Hang loose to all things here below, and labour after that undefiled and unfadable inheritance. {#1Pe 1:4-7}

{a} Sen.

Ver. 13. For the seller shall not return,] scil., At the year of jubilee, by reason of the land's desolation.

Which shall not return.] Or rather, It shall not return, scil., void and ineffectual, but shall be accomplished.

Neither shall any strengthen himself in the iniquity of his life.] That is but an ill defence. "The spirit of power and of a sound mind" are fitly set together. {#2Ti 1:7} Men's iniquity will be their ruin. Munster rendereth the text thus: For that whenas the vision was to the whole multitude thereof, no man returned, neque ullus propter iniquitatem suam pro anima sua se roberabat; neither did any one (by reason of his iniquity) strengthen himself for his own soul, i.e., use means to escape the just punishment of it.

Ver. 14. They have blown the trumpet, even to make all ready.] But all to no purpose, since God hath dispirited them (as he did the old Canaanites, the Saxons and Piers in that Victoria Hallehuatica, the Germans against the Hussites in Bohemia, &c.), and struck them with a panic terror, with utter despondency, so that they were feeble and fainthearted, and the strong were become as tow. {#Isa 1:31}

Ver. 15. The sword is without, and the pestilence, &c.] No safety can be to such as are pursued by the divine vengeance, called therefore by the Greeks Αδραστεια, because there is no outrunning of it. {a} Of these three judgments (seldom separated) see #Eze 4 2,3,16,17

Ηξει Δωριακος πολεμος και λιμος {β} επ αυτω.

{a} Αδραστεια, οτι ουκ αν τις αυτην αποδρασαιτο.

{b} ορ λοιμος

Ver. 16. But they that escaped of them.] Here we have the mournful repentance of them that escaped, Fere autem fit ut, malo demure accepto, oculos aperiamus, saith Lavater here.

All of them mourning, {a} every one for his iniquity.] Thus Hezekiah "mourned as a dove." {#Isa 38:14} And we mourn sore like doves, saith the Church; {#Isa 59:11} happy if it be every man for his iniquity, and not for the punishment of it only or mainly. See that it be a "sorrow according to God," a sorrow to a "transmentation." {#2Co 7:10,11}

{a} הַמַּתְּ eulantes, ut pueri solent qui virgis coercentur.

Ver. 17. All hands shall be feeble.] As after some grievous disease, or as in extreme cold weather, ye shall not be able to handle your arms, wherein ye so trust. God strengtheneth or weakeneth the arms of either party. {#Eze 30:24}

And all knees shall be weak as water.] Fluent aquis: puta sudore ex gravi angustia, vel potius urina, ex pavore. {a} Not to those that wait upon God. {#Isa 40:30,31} Let wicked Thrasos think on this.

{a} Vulg., Jerome, Septuag.

Ver. 18. They shall also gird themselves with sackcloth.] They shall be a miserable mourning people for a long while.

Horror shall cover them.] Such heartquake as is in earthquakes—horripilatio.

Shame shall be upon all faces.] Pudor a rebus putidis, {a}
-Ashamed they shall be of their doings, ashamed of their disappointments.

And baldness upon all their heads.] A sign of sorrow among the Jews. The Romans (contrariwise), in times of sorrow, suffered their hair to grow, saith Plutarch; so did Mephibosheth in David's days.

{a} Scal.

Ver. 19. They shall cast their silver in the streets.] As burdensome, and not beneficial to them {a} Thus Judas threw away his wages of wickedness; and many, on their deathbeds, detest their cursed hoards of ill gotten goods, saying unto them, as once Charles V did, Abite hinc, abite longe, -Away from me, away, away.

Their gold shall be removed.] Shall be for a dunghill, saith the Vulgate; it shall be esteemed, as it is, the guts and garbage of the earth.

Their silver and their gold.] See #Pr 11:4 Zep 1:18 Ec 5:8, {See Trapp on "Pr 11:4"} {See Trapp on "Zep 1:18"} {See Trapp on "Ec 5:8"}

They shall not satisfy {b} their souls.] Silver and gold are not eatable, as Midas found, and the great Caliph of Babylon, whom Haabon the great Khan of Tartary starved to death in the midst of his infinite treasures, which though they were in valour great, and with great care laid together, yet served they him not now to suffice nature best contented with a little. {c}

Because it is the stumblingblock of their iniquity.] Their wealth is the occasion of their wickedness, and they are much the worse men for their worldly substance. See #Ps 52:7, with the margin; #Jer 5:27,28 Lu 16:9,13.

{a} Ne sit ponderi quod prius fuit luxuriae. -Jerome.

{b} Plato in Cratylo scribit Tantalum dictum esse quas πλαντατον, i.e., infelicissimum

{c} Turkish History, 113.

Ver. 20. As for the beauty of his ornament.] That is mine ark, saith Junius; or my silver and gold, {#Eze 7:10} as others.

He set it in majesty.] In superbiam posuit, placed it pride, so some render it; they were proud of their abundance—their good and their blood rose together, as the proverb is.

Therefore have I set it far from them.] I will—for their ingratitude and abuse my good things—take away mine own and begone, as #Ho 2:8,9.

Ver. 21. And I will give it into the hands.] So he did the pleasant land to be plundered, the sanctuary also to be rifled and ransacked by the Babylonians, Syrians, Romans, &c. See #La 1:10, {See Trapp on "La 1:10"}

And to the wicked of the earth.] Sept., To the pests of the earth.

Ver. 22. My face will I turn also from them.] From the Chaldees, that they may spoil at pleasure; or from the Israelites, that they may perish without help.

And they shall pollute my secret place.] Even the Holy of holies, whereinto none was to enter but the high priest once a year; yet, besides these Babylonian burglars, Heliodorus and Pompey did; but the one fell mad, and the other never prospered after it.

For the robbers shall enter into it.] Effractores; by this name, breach makers, the Jews at this day term our nobles and grandees.

Ver. 23. Make a chain.] Which is an emblem of bondage.

For the land is full of bloody crimes,] i.e., Capital crimes, unjust sentences, and other deadly evils.

Ver. 24. Wherefore I will bring the worst of the heathen.] Velut carnifices; who may plunder you to the life, and take away your lives. {#Hab 1:6,7,9} The Jews were bad enough, but the Chaldees were worse, if worse might be; malignants above measure, Poneropolitans, breathing devils. A hard knot must have a harder wedge, as the proverb is.

I will also make the pomp of the strong to cease.] I will crush the crests of those potentates, and lay them low. See #Isa 14:11,12.

Their holy places shall be defiled.] Sacella et lararia eorum; their chapels or oratories made in or near unto their houses for divine worship.

Ver. 25. Destruction cometh.] Not ἐξίλασμος ηκει, Mercy shall come, as the Septuagint ill render it, but utter excision, as when a weaver cutteth the web he hath finished out of the loom. {#Isa 38:12}

They shall seek peace.] Of God, but all too late; of the Chaldees, but all in vain; for they were cockatrices, and would not be charmed. {#Jer 8:17,15 12:12 16:5} Note here how Jeremiah and Ezekiel say the same thing, as being acted by the same spirit.

Ver. 26. Mischief shall come upon mischief.] Aliud ex alio malum; I will heap mischiefs upon them. {#De 32:23} War is called "evil" or "mischief" by a specialty. {#Isa 45:7}

And rumour shall be upon rumour,] sc., Of Nebuchadnezzar's advance, acts, and achievements.

Then shall they seek a vision of the prophet.] As a drowning man catcheth at the sprig of a tree, which before he slighted.

But the law shall perish from the priest.] Not only prophecy, which is an extraordinary gift, shall fail them, but also the ordinary preaching of God's Word, and all good advice and provision of human wisdom. And yet this foolish people were wont to soothe up themselves and say, The law shall not perish from the priest, nor wisdom from the ancient. {#Jer 18:18}

Ver. 27. The king shall mourn.] Πενθησει; with a funeral mourning, as the Septuagint express it; with a continued mourning, as the Hebrew importeth.

The prince shall be clothed with desolation.] Opplebitur tristitia ad stuporem.

And the hands.] Which they had so often lifted up to vanity.

According to their deserts.] See #Eze 7:3,4,8,9.

Chapter 8

Ver. 1. In the sixth year.] Of Jeconiah's captivity.

In the sixth month.] Elul, answerable to our August.

In the fifth day.] Which was Sabbath day, saith Junius.

As I sat in mine house.] In Mesopotamia, among the captives.

And the elders of Judah sat before me.] {a} As their wont was, upon the Sabbath day. {#2Ki 4:23} These Jews were ever learning, but never came to the knowledge of the truth. Yet God still bore with them, and taught them better. {b}

That the hand of the Lord God fell there upon me,] i.e., The Spirit (the spirit of prophecy, saith the Chaldee), to whom the absolving and perfecting of God's work is congruously attributed. He is fitly said to brood the waters, {#Ge 1:2} to overshadow the Virgin Mary, {#Lu 1:35} to seal the elect, {#Eph 4:30} to add ultimam manum; for God the Father doth all by the Son, through the Holy Ghost. Ezekiel had here a mighty impulse of the Spirit, which fell upon him quasi fulgur efficax et penetrans, as lightning.

{b} Hinc apparet μακροθυμία Dei. -Lavat.

Ver. 2. Then I beheld, and lo a likeness.] Of a man, likely. This was the Lord Christ, whose eyes are like a flaming fire, {#Re 1:14} and even our God (as well as the Jews' God) is a consuming fire. {#Heb 12:29} Here, in the fire, was set forth his vengeance against the wicked; in his brightness upwards, his majesty, say some; his clemency, say others.

As the colour of amber.] Or, Of a coal intensely hot, as #Eze 1:27

Ver. 3. And he put forth his hand.] As to me, it seemed; for all was visional, not real.

And took me by a lock of mine head.] Tanquam herus inofficiosum servum. The prophet seemeth to have had no great mind to the matter, but there was no remedy. Ducunt volentem fata, nolentem trahunt.

Where was the seat of the image of jealousy.] Of Baal, likely, for whom wicked Ahaz had been so zealous {#2Ki 16:14} and against whom God was ever so jealous, as to devour whole lands by the fire of his jealousy. {#Zep 3:8}

Ver. 4. And behold the glory of the God of Israel,] i.e., The glorious God of Israel. {#Ac 7:2} {See Trapp on "Ac 7:2"}

Was there,] scil., At the inner gate, where that image of jealousy stood. The Jews were great idolaters before the captivity, not so afterwards. {#Ro 2:22}

According to the vision.] See #Eze 3:23. This befell for his further confirmation, ne remum abjiceret, ut aiunt: this was now the third time, and all was but enough.

Ver. 5. The way toward the north.] Where was the greatest concourse of idolaters.

At the gate of the altar.] Why so called, see #2Ki 16:14.

This image of jealousy in the entry.] Idolatry committed in God's own temple was most abominable, as when an adulteress hath her gallants under her husband's nose, Messalina-like.

Ver. 6. That I should go far from my sanctuary.] Which is now become omnium turpitudinum arx (as was once said of Pompey's great theatre at Rome), a receptacle of all roguery, et impiae gentis arcanum, as afterward Florus unworthily called it.

And thou shalt see greater abominations.] All sins are not equally sinful then, as the Stoics affirmed, but there are degrees of abominations. See #De 32:5. {See Trapp on "De 32:5"}

Ver. 7. And he brought me.] Mystagogus ille angelus. that angel who showed the sacred places.

To the door of the court.] Of the priests' court.

A hole in the wall.] Which should have been kept in better repair.

Ver. 8. Behold a door.] A secret door, by which they entered into their idol chapel. Such privy passages there are in the Popish monasteries, and in the whole Romish religion not a few. Ante paucos annos suaviter convivebant monachi et nonnae, {a} &c. The Council of Trent was carried by the Pope with such infinite guile and craft as that themselves will even smile at the triumphs of their own wits, when they hear it but mentioned, as at a master stratagem. But the author of the history of that Council hath found a hole in the walls of Rome, and many of our worthy champions have digged and discovered their detestable practices.

{a} Oecolamp.

Ver. 9. Go in, and behold the wicked abominations.] No words are bad enough for sin. Solomon calleth it "wickedness of folly, even foolishness of madness"; {#Ec 7:25} "mischievous madness"; {#Eze 10:13} so #Lu 16:11, "mammon of unrighteousness," and "abominable idolatries." {#1Pe 4:3}

Ver. 10. And behold every form of creeping things.] These, belike, were their dii minorum gentium, their petty deities, their common idols, whereof as there was great number, so not so great respect given unto them. This piece of idolatry the Jews had learned of the Egyptians, who madly worshipped oxen, asses, goats, dogs, cats, serpents, crocodiles, the bird ibis, &c. Propter impietatem ingens stultitiae exuperantia ostenditur; saith Theodoret on this text; Besides their impiety, were these men in their wits, think we? And what shall we say of Popish superstition? Do not they religiously worship Agnus Dei's, relics of saints, painted doves resembling the Holy Ghost, the ass whereon Christ rode, they say, on Palm Sunday? The tail of that ass they show still at Genoa, and require low obeisance to be done thereunto. {a}

{a} Wolph. Mem. Lect.

Ver. 11. And there stood before them seventy men of the ancients.] The whole Sanhedrim, or great council, haply. Councils may err, and have done often. The ill example of these ancients was very attractive. Magnates magnetes.

Jaazaniah the son of Shaphan.] A chieftain among them, and haply president of the council, whom they called Nasi, or prince. His father Shaphan was scribe in Josiah's days, as some think. {#2Ki 22:12}

And a thick cloud of incense went up.] Abundantia nubis. Papists to this day cense their images; Semel singulis thuributum ducat sacerdos, saith the Roman mass book. The primitive Christians were pressed by their persecutors to throw at least a little frankincense into the fire; which, when Origen and Marcellinus did, through infirmity of the flesh, they were cast out of the hearts of good people, and branded with the name of Thurificati i.e., Incensed persons.

Ver. 12. What the ancients of Israel do in the dark?] Idolatry is a deed of darkness. The Athenians had their Eleusinia, the Romans the rites of their Bona Dea, and the Egyptians their Osiridis Pamyli, all done in the dark. The Popish temples are many of them dark, and some so stuffed with presents and memories that they are thereby made much the darker.

For they say, The Lord seeth us not.] Atheism is the source of all sinfulness. These fools, being in the dark, thought that God could not see what they did there.

The Lord hath forsaken the earth.] Hath cast off all care of us, and therefore we must see to ourselves, look us out some other deities. See #Jer 18:15. What a base speech is that of Pliny, {a} Irridendum vero curam agere rerum humanarum, illud quicquid est, Summum! It is no way likely that God taketh care what becometh of man's matters. Os durum! Harsh mouth!

{a} Lib. ii. cap. 7.

Ver. 13. Turn thee yet again,] q.d., Little didst thou think, Ezekiel, that thy countrymen of Jewry were so prodigiously abominable as now thou seest! and what more sure than sight?

Ver. 14. And, behold, there sat women.] These were priests of Isis, whose impious and most impudent kind of worship is largely described by Herodotus, Diodorus Siculus, Plutarch, and Eusebius, as celebrated with very unseemly ceremonies, worse, if it might be, than those of Priapus. But who would ever have looked for such immodest doings among God's professed people? See #1Co 5:1.

Weeping for Tammuz,] i.e., For Osiris, king of Egypt, and idolatrously adoring his image, which his wife Isis had advanced.

Ver. 15. Hast thou seen this?] q.d., And canst thou easily believe thine own eyes? Nevertheless, these flagitious persons have the face to say, "In all my doings they shall find none iniquity in me that were sin." {#Ho 13:8} Say not Popish idolaters still as much?

Thou shalt see greater abominations.] Idolatry is stintless.

Ver. 16. Were about five and twenty men.] These, say some, were the king and his council See #Eze 11:1.

With their backs toward the temple.] And yet in a part of it. Hoc fuit signum nimiae improbitatis. Veluti Dominum in certamen provocantes. Here to turn their posteriors upon God's house and ark, which they were commanded to look towards as a type of Christ, was to bid open defiance to him, and to renounce his service, cum ingenti contumelia sanctitatis Domini! Oh, the unspeakable patience of God!

And they worshipped the sun.] So did the Persians, under the name of Mithra; the Assyrians, of Osiris; the Egyptians, of Orus son of Isis, &c. Heathens thought that Christians did so too, because anciently they prayed with their faces eastward. {a}

{a} Tertul. Apol.

Ver. 17. And, lo, they put the branch to their nose.] In honour the sun, whose heat produceth the most redolent wines; or they might be branches of laurel dedicated to the sun. R. Solomon rendereth it, They put a stink to my nose, even ventris crepitum pro suffitu. Vah, vah, vah! {a}

{a} ιδου, αντοι, ως μυκτηριζοντες.—Septuag.

Ver. 18. Mine eye shall not spare.] #Eze 5:11 7:4.

And though they cry in mine ears, &c.] Because it is the cry of the flesh for ease, and not of the spirit for grace.

Chapter 9

Ver. 1. He cried also.] God, to whom vengeance belongeth, calleth aloud and with a courage, as we say, to the executioners of his wrath, to come and fall on.

Cause them that have charge over the city.] Proefecti urbis -i.e., the angels, here called the visitations or visitors of Jerusalem, the prefects of the city.

Every man with his destroying weapon.] Called {#Eze 9:2} a maul, or battle axe, telum dissipatorium.

Ver. 2. And, behold, six men came.] Ad hunc Dei clamorem vel clangorem; the angels came, the Chaldees came, at the call of this Lord of hosts, who hath all creatures at his beck and check.

By the way of the higher gate.] Called also the new gate, {#Jer 26:10} built by Jotham. {#2Ch 27:3}

Toward the north.] Where stood the idol of jealousy, and whereby Nebuchadnezzar entered.

“ Per quod quis peccat, per idem punitur et ipse.”

One man among them.] This was a created angel, say some; {#Eze 10:2} Christ, the angel of the covenant, say others, with more likelihood of truth.

Clothed with linen.] As high priest of his people, and in addition an offering for them, and that without spot. {#Heb 9:14}

And a writer's inkhorn by his side.] An ensign of his prophetic office, say some, as his linen clothing was of his priestly; and of his kingly, that he was among, or in the midst of, the six slaughtermen, as their captain and commander.

They went in and stood beside the brazen altar.] Where they might receive further instructions from God. So in the Revelation, those angels that were to pour out the vials of divine vengeance, are said to come out of the temple.

Ver. 3. And the glory of the God of Israel,] i.e., The Son of God appearing upon the glorious chariot, {#Eze 1:3 3:23} and being "the brightness of his Father's glory, the express image of his person."

{#Heb 1:3}

Was gone up from the cherub,] i.e., From those four cherubims upon which the glory of the Lord did then appear to the prophet. {#Eze 8:4} He was gone from his ark, to show that the refractory Jews were now discovenanted; and from his mercy seat, to show that he would show them no more mercy. Many moves God makes in this and the two following chapters to show his loathness utterly to move; and still, as he goeth out, some judgment cometh in. Here he removeth from the cherubims in the oracle to the threshold; and upon that removal see what followeth; {#Eze 9:3-7} so for the rest see #Eze 10:1,2,4,18,19 11:8-10,22,23; and when God was quite gone from the city, then followed the fatal calamity in the ruin thereof. But that he went away by degrees, and not soon and at once, was an argument of his very great love and longsuffering. He left them step by step, as it were, and pled loath to depart; but that there was no remedy. Tied he is not to any place, as these fond Jews thought he was to their visible temple, which now he is about therefore to abandon, and to make their very sanctuary a slaughterhouse.

Ver. 4. And the Lord.] That great Imperator; General.

Go through the midst.] Discriminate; make a difference; "take out the precious from the vile." God will sever his saints from others in common calamities, and deliver them, if not from the common destruction, yet from the common distraction.

And set a mark upon the foreheads.] Vulgate, Et signa Thau. Whatever this mark was, it was signum salutare. The letter Tau some think it was, as part of the word Tichieh—i.e., Thou shalt live; according to that, "The just shall live by his faith." Or as part of the word Torah—i.e., The law, to show that these had the law of God written in their hearts, and this made them mourn to see it so little set by. Howsoever, it is not the sign of the cross, as Papists would have it, but rather the blood of the cross, wherewith, when believers are sprinkled from an evil conscience, as the houses of the Israelites in Goshen were with the blood of the paschal lamb, they are sure of safety here and salvation hereafter. The election of God is sure, and hath this seal, "The Lord knoweth who are his," {#2Ti 2:19} and it shall appear by them. {#Ps 91} Tau is the basis of the Hebrew alphabet, saith one, and marking by Christ is the basis of all true comfort and sound profession. Tau endeth and closeth up the alphabet, saith another; so he who persevereth to the end shall be saved. The mark here mentioned was not corporal but spiritual, even the merit and spirit of Christ, the value and virtue of his death and sufferings.

Of the men that sigh and cry.] That sigh deeply and cry out bitterly for their own and other men's sins and miseries, and this out of piety and pity. These are not many, yet some such are found in all ages. {#Re 11:3} Inter vepres rosa nascitur, et inter feras nonnullae mitescunt. {a} Let us mourn in time of sinning: so shall we be marked in times of punishing.

{a} Ammian.

Ver. 5. Go ye after him.] Go not till he hath marked the mourners, so chary and choice is God of his jewels. Mercy is his firstborn, saith one, and visits the saints ere judgments break out. {#Isa 26:20,21}

Ver. 6. Slay utterly old and young.] {a} A dreadful commission; see it fully executed, #2Ch 36:17: all sorts, sexes, and sizes of people were corrupted; and since there was no hope of curing, there must be cutting.

But come not near any upon whom is the mark.] These were the "precious sons of Zion," the "excellent ones of the earth"—as whatsoever is sealed is excellent in its kind, {#Isa 28:25} hordeum signatum. -these are the darlings, the favourites; handle them gently therefore for my sake, touch not mine anointed, come not near any such to fright them, but keep your distance.

And begin at my sanctuary.] From whence went forth profaneness into the whole land. {#Jer 23:15} These sanctuary men were an ill generation; at them therefore begins the judgment. God will be sanctified in all that draw near unto him. Nadab and Abihu found the flames of jealousy hottest about the altar. Uzzah and the Bethshemites felt that justice as well as mercy is most active about the ark. Murderers must be drawn from the altar to the slaughter. {#Ex 21:14} Holy places were wont to be refuges; not so here, but the contrary.

Then they began at the ancient men.] At those seventy seniors, {#Eze 8:11} whose foul offences had flown far upon the two wings of evil example and scandal.

{a} Immedicabile vulnus ense recidendum.

Ver. 7. Defile the house.] Once hallowed by myself, but now abhorred and rejected as a stew or sty of filthiness.

Fill the courts.] That where they have sinned, there they may suffer, as did Ahab. {#IKi 22:38 2Ki 9:26}

Ver. 8. And I was left.] And, as I was apt to think, alone. {#Ro 11:3}

I fell upon my face and cried.] This is the guise of the gracious in evil times, as may be seen in Moses, Jeremiah, Paul, Athanasius, Ambrose, &c.

Ah, Lord God!] Adonai Jehovi (not Jehova, as elsewhere usually), so the saints have sometimes prayed, tanquam singultientes in patheticis precibus, {a} or rather sighed out their most earnest suits to God. {as #Ge 15:2-8 De 3:24 9:26}

Wilt thou destroy all the residue of Israel?] Brevis quidem est haec querimonia prophetae: at multa complectitur. {b} This is a brief but a complexive complaint, and hath much in it.

{a} Polan.

{b} Lavat.

Ver. 9. The iniquity of Israel is exceeding great.] Nimls veldt. Still there is a cause, to be sure; and God's judgments are sometimes secret, ever just; and as swift rivers, when they once fall into lakes or seas, are at rest, so are our restless minds, when once they fall into the depth of the Divine justice, duly considered.

And the city full of perverseness.] Or, Wresting of judgment. Declinatione et detorsione iudicii. Mutteh, i.e., mishpat din Mitteh, saith the Hebrew scholiast; {a} that is, judgment turned from the bias, as it were: when the balance of justice is tilted on to one side, as Paul's word, κατα προσκλισιν, importeth. {#1Ti 5:21}

For they say, The Lord hath forsaken the earth.] See on #Eze 8:12. Hic est fons omnium scelerum, saith A Lapide: hinc ruunt homines in celerum abyssam, saith Theodoret. When men are once turned atheists, what will they not dare to do? What should hinder them from laying the reins on the neck, and running riot in wickedness?

{a} One who writes explanatory notes upon an author; esp. an ancient commentator upon a classical writer.

Ver. 10. And as for me also.] Quapropter etiam ego, Wherefore also I; and there is a stop by an elegant aposiopesis. {a} Mine eye shall not spare.] #Eze 5:11 7:4 8:18. See a just commentary upon these words, #Jer 9:3-17.

{a} A rhetorical artifice, in which the speaker comes to a sudden halt, as if unable or unwilling to proceed.

Ver. 11. And behold the man reported the matter.] The Vulgate hath it respondit verbum, as if he had been asked before whether he had done as was bidden.

I have done as thou hast commanded me.] So did David; {#Ps 119:112 Ac 13:22} and the Son of David; {#Joh 17:4 14:31} and Paul, witness his famous vox voice προαγωνιος. {#2Ti 4:6-8} Let every of us so carry the matter toward God that at death we may say with that servant in #Lu 17:9, "Lord, it is done as thou hast commanded."

Chapter 10

Ver. 1. Then I looked, and behold in the firmament.] Heb, In that expanse or firmament mentioned, #Eze 1:22.

That was above the head of the cherubims.] Called before "living creatures." {#Eze 1:5,13-15,19} Now God is represented as in his temple, where things are more clearly descried and described. {#Ps 29:9} In his temple doth every one speak of his glory. Cherubims the angels are called, from the greatness of their knowledge, saith Jerome, as God's Rabbis; or rather, because the Lord rideth upon them {#Ps 80:1 99:1} as upon his chariot. {#Ich 28:18} Here they are said to be under the firmament and near the throne to execute God's commands with expedition. It is not therefore as those miscreants said, {#Eze 9:9} The Lord hath forsaken the earth.

There appeared over them as it were a sapphire stone,] i.e., Jehovah in his glory.

As the appearance.] It was but as, and as the appearance: we cannot see God as he is. Some have seen Mercabah velo harocheb, say the Hebrews, the chariot, but not the rider therein.

Ver. 2. And he spake unto the man.] See #Eze 9:2. Christ, who had marked the mourners, scattereth coals upon the rebellious city: "kiss the Son lest he be angry, and ye perish."

And scatter them over the city.] To show that Jerusalem was to be burnt by the Chaldees, as must likewise Rome by the kings of the earth; for strong is the Lord who judgeth her. {#Re 18:8}

And he went in my sight.] Saints see and foresee that which is often hid from others.

Ver. 3. Now the cherubims stood on the right side., / i.e., On the south side; being now removed from the north door, {#Eze 8:3,4 9:3} as loathing that place of so great idolatry.

And the cloud filled the inner court.] {a} To signify that now upon God's departure, there should be darkness in the temple, yea, in the priests' courts. See #Ps 18:11 Re 15:8.

{a} Significat sequentia tempora nubila fore. -Lav.

Ver. 4. Then the glory of the Lord went up from the cherub,] i.e., From the cherubims; so it had done once before, {#Eze 9:3} and returned again, to show that he was even driven out by the people's impenitence.

And stood over the threshold of the house.] As taking his last leave of it.

And the house was filled with a cloud.] Sublatenter abit a suo loco Dominus. {a} So #Isa 6:4; "The house was filled with smoke." Josephus saith, that when God departed, a voice was heard out of the temple, saying, Let us leave these seats; like as, a little before the last desolation of it, there was heard Migremus hinc, Let us go hence. And a heathen writer saith, that a voice greater than man's was heard, that the gods were thence departing. {b}

{b} Audita maior humana vox, excedere deos. -Tacit.

Ver. 5. And the sound of the cherubims' wings was heard.] As applauding Christ's act, and rejoicing thereat.

As the voice of the Almighty God,] i.e., As thunder. {#Ps 29:3} Hereby might also be signified insignis et insolita mutatio in urbe, a notable noise that should be made in the city by clattering of arms, neighing of horses, roaring of enemies, &c. The Hebrew word here used is Shaddai, which signifieth vastatorem et victorem, saith Aben Ezra, a waster and a victor.

Ver. 6. When he had commanded the man.] Christ as mediator was at his Father's command. {#Mt 12:18 Joh 14:31 15:10}

Then he went in and stood beside the wheels.] As considering, saith one, the mutability and uncertainty of all things, and observing the equity of the divine proceedings.

Ver. 7. And one cherub stretched forth his hand.] The holy angels, whom the Jews looked upon as ministers of God's grace unto them (Josephus calleth them the keepers of the Jewish people), are here brought in as ministers of those weapons wherewith they were to be destroyed.

Who took it, and went out.] Nevertheless the city was not burned till four or five years after this vision.

“ Tam piger ad poenas Deus est, ad praemia velox.”
- Ovid.

Meanwhile, how jovial were the Jews! as if no such judgment were likely to befall them.

Ver. 8. And there appeared the form of a man’s hand under their wings.] Quasi gladius intra vaginam, as a sword within the scabbard, ready to be drawn out for execution. The hand, saith Aristotle, is the instrument of instruments. Nature hath given us hands, saith Cicero, multarum artium ministras, &c., to act and do business. Angels have neither hands nor wings, to speak properly, yet are said here to have both, to show their activity and celerity in God’s service. Hands of a man they are said to have, to show that they do all prudently and with reason; and these hands are under their wings, saith one, to signify their hidden nature and operation. A good man, like a good angel, saith another, {a} hath the wings of contemplation, the hands of action, the wings of faith, the hands of charity, wings whereon he raiseth his understanding, and hands wherewith he exciteth his will, &c.

{a} Essays Mor. and Theol., p. 33.

Ver. 9. And when I looked, behold the four wheels.] This chapter compared with the first, do, like glasses set one against another, cast a mutual light.

As the colour of a beryl stone.] Lapidis berylli thalassiss. See #Eze 1:16. Wheels are voluble, and the sea tumultuous; so are all things and places in this present life: lay hold on life eternal.

Ver. 10. As if a wheel had been in the midst of a wheel.] So intricate and perplexed often times are God’s ways and works, that the wisest men know not what to make of them. {#Zec 14:6} In that day the light shall neither be clear nor dark, but between both, tanquam ηως κροκοπεπλος.

Ver. 11. Upon their four sides.] That is, to their several quarters assigned them by God, who doth things methodically, and in order.

But to the place whither the head looked.] {a} That is, God, who guided the whole chariot by a universal and equal inspiration. {#Eze 1:12,20,21}

Ver. 12. And the whole body,] viz., Of the cherubims. {as #Eze 1:19-21} The wheels are said to be full of eyes. God, who overruleth all, is ολοφθαλμος, All eye. His providence is like a well drawn picture, which vieweth all that are in the room. {a}

{a} Omnia in omnes partes illustrat Dei providentia. -Jun. Dei providentia oculatissima. -A Lap., Diod.

Ver. 13. It was cried unto them.] By him who sat upon the throne calling for their obedience, as indeed all things here, yea, even the senseless creatures, are God's servants. {#Ps 119:91}

O wheel.] O round world—q.d., Hear the voice of thy Maker and Master; or, Oh how unstable and changeable art thou!

Ver. 14. The face of a cherub,] i.e., Humana quidem, sed splendidissima, saith Junius: Facies pueri alati, saith another. There are those who tell us, that in the Syriac tongue, the word cherub is taken from a word which signifieth drawing the plough, which is the bullock's proper labour. We must believe therefore, say they, that cherub signifieth properly the figure of a bullock, under which hieroglyphically was represented an angel. The laborious preacher's face shall once shine as an angel's.

Ver. 15. Were lifted up.] Or, They lift up themsdves—scil., to follow and attend their departing Lord.

That I saw by the river of Chebar.] And now saw again, for further confirmation.

Ver. 16. And when the cherubims went.] Angels have a great stroke in ordering the affairs of the world, as hath already been noted. {See Trapp on "Eze 1:6"} Quod vero eandem rem saepe repeto, lectori molestum esse non debet, saith Lavater, in his preface to this prophet.

Ver. 17. When they stood.] See #Eze 1:21.

The spirit of the living creatures.] Or, Of life. God governeth all events; he moveth the angels, they the wheels. No clock hath so certain motions as the vicissitudes of all things are overruled by God.

Ver. 18. Then the glory of the Lord departed.] This the stubborn Jews would never be drawn to believe possible, till it befell them; hence they hear of it so often, but to little good purpose as to them.

Ver. 19. Over the east gate.] The gate of the court where the people met, and prayed with their faces westward; here now stood the cherubims, and here stood the glory over them, that all the city might see that God was going from them, and seek by all good means to retain him with them.

Ver. 20. And I knew that they were the cherubims.] Now at last I knew. Divine light is darted into the soul by degrees, and at different times.

Ver. 21. Every one had four faces apiece.] Ad taedium usque eandem rem repetit, ut nihil excusationis haberent. These careless and cross-grained Jews are told the same things thus over and over, to leave them without all excuse, if they would not be wrought upon by all.

Ver. 22. They went every one straightforward.] Let us, by their example, learn to advance forward to the high prize of the heavenly calling in Christ Jesus.

Chapter 11

Ver. 1. Moreover the Spirit lifted me up.] The same Spirit of God that lifted up and acted the living weights and the wheels; like as the same breath causeth the diverse sounds in the organs.

Unto the east gate.] Of the outward court. {#Eze 10:19}

Five and twenty men.] Proceres populi, the senators of the city, with their prefect or president. The like number is now at Rome, and likewise at London; an alderman in each of the twenty-four wards, and a mayor. See #Re 4:4.

Among whom I saw Jaazaniah.] I saw them, and knew them by name; but for no good.

“Iudex locusta civitatis est malus.”—Scaliger.

Ver. 2. These are the men that devise mischief.] That whet their wits and beat their brains about it; the politicians of the time, who, like children, are ever standing on their heads, and shaking their heels against heaven.

And give wicked counsel.] As Balaam and Ahithophel did of old, as Machiavel did at Florence, and Gondamor here did of later times. The prophet here nameth a couple, and taketh the same liberty to reprove them that they took to do amiss.

Ver. 3. Which say, It is not near,] sc., The evil day is not. The vision that he seeth is for many days to come; and he prophesieth of the times that are far off. {#Eze 12:22,27} See #Am 6:3 Isa 29:1 2Pe 3:4. And this was likely the evil counsel they gave the king and people, lulling them asleep in the cradle of carnal security.

Let us build houses.] Though Jeremiah hath counselled us to the contrary, {#Jer 29:5} though he, with all the wit he hath, hath told us that this city is the caldron, and we are the flesh. {#Jer 1:13} Some such thing Jeremiah had indeed foretold, and these profane scoffers made a jeer at it. Captant argutias quibus elevant omnem fidem doctrinae coelestis. This made good Jeremiah complain heavily: #Jer 20:7,8, "I am in derision daily, every one mocketh me," &c. Our prophet Ezekiel, though he name him not, yet confirmeth his holy sayings, and threateneth his scurrilous adversaries. Ministers should stand by and for one another.

Ver. 4. Therefore prophesy against them, prophesy.] Urger et repetit, ne cunctetur. Out of greatest indignation against these pests, he pricketh him on to prophesy, as having vengeance "in a readiness for the disobedient." {#2Co 10:6} Mockers shall be sure to have their "bands increased." {#Isa 28:22}

Ver. 5. And the Spirit of the Lord fell upon me.] Et irruit in me Spiritus Iehovae; with force and power. It was a mighty lapse from a God much offended.

Thus have ye said.] As #Eze 11:3; but better ye had held your peace. Or, Thus have ye thought, and as good ye might have spake out.

For I know the things that came into your mind.] Heb., And the ascensions of your spirit, I know it; i.e., I know them every one, as if they had all been but one. I understand your ironies, your sly jeers and will deal with you accordingly. See #Lu 24:38 De 31:21.

Ver. 6. Ye have multiplied your slain in this city.] Called therefore a bloody city, {#Eze 22:2 9:9 7:23} and it shall therefore despume you; Vos sicut spumae eieciemini. Evil counsellors are cruel and bloody-minded; their craft is never but accompanied with cruelty, and their cruelty seldom without craft. "None of them wanteth their mate," as the Scripture speaks of those birds of prey and desolation. {#Isa 34:16}

Ver. 7. Your slain.] Whether ye have slain them outright, or have laid them bleeding and dying by your oppressions; for a poor man's livelihood is his life. {#Mr 12:44 Lu 8:43} He is in his house like a snail in his shell, crush that, and you kill him.

And this city is the caldron.] {a} Thus their own words, spoken in mockery, are wittily retorted upon them, and driven back again down their throats as it were.

But I will bring you forth out of the midst of it.] As rotten flesh, to be cast out; or as filthy scum, to boil over.

Ver. 8. Ye have feared the sword.] And yet they made as if they feared nothing; they doubted not but to die in their nest; but all guilt hath fear, and all such fear hath torment.

And I will bring a sword upon you.] Such as all your craft can never keep off. Ineluctabilis vis fatorum, cuius fortunam mutare constituit, consilia corrumpit. {a} See #Pr 10:24. {See Trapp on "Pr 10:24"}

{a} Velleius, lib. ii.

Ver. 9. And I will bring you out of the midst thereof.] The same again, for better assurance. We use to do so oft when we threaten aught.

Ver. 10. I will judge you in the border of Israel.] In the northern border, even at Riblah. {#2Ki 25:6,21 Jer 52:10,24,27}

Ver. 11. This city shall not be your caldron.] Ye shall not be so happy as to die in your own native country, atque ante ora patrum {a} but elsewhere, at Riblah or Antiochia.

{a} Virgil.

Ver. 12. And ye shall know that I am the Lord.] That which ye would not take knowledge of by the words of your prophets, ye shall now be made to know by the swords of your enemies.

For ye have not walked in my statutes.] When God is about to proceed in judgment against evildoers, there is ever a cause for it, and they shall know it.

Ver. 13. And it came to pass that when I prophesied.] God heweth men by his prophets, and slayeth them by the words of his mouth, and his judgments are as the light, or lightning, that goeth forth. {#Ho 6:5} Elisha hath his sword as well as Jehu and Hazael. {#IKi 19:17} See #Jer 1:10 2Co 10:6.

Pelatiah the son of Benaiah died.] Suddenly, {a} and before his time, in Solomon's sense. {#Ec 7:17} Driven away he was in his iniquity Cerinthus, Arius so were Ananias and Sapphira, Cerinthus, Arius, Stephen Gardiner, Cardinal Pool, Dick of Dover, as they called the persecuting suffragan {b} there; Nightingale, parson of Becking, &c. See #Pr 6:14,15.

Then fell I down upon my face.] Out of a holy solicitude about God's elect, lest they also should have perished, as Petaliah had done, whose very name might seem somewhat ominous, for it signifieth "the escaped one of the Lord"; and therefore his sudden death might portend destruction to the remnant of Israel.

And cried with a loud voice.] Sudden or singular judgments put saints upon humble, earnest, and argumentative prayer.

{b} A bishop considered in regard to his relation to the archbishop or metropolitan, by whom he may be summoned to attend synods and give his suffrage. ED

Ver. 14. Again the word of the Lord came unto me.] In answer to my prayer, though there was something in it of unbelief and human frailty. See #Ps 31:22. {See Trapp on "Ps 31:22"}

Ver. 15. Thy brethren, even thy brethren,] i.e., Thine unbrotherly brethren of Jerusalem seek to unbrother and to unchurch thee and the rest of thy fellow captives. See #Isa 65:5. Papists and sectaries deal so by us.

The men of thy kindred.] Viri vindiciarum tuarum, or they that have the right of redemption.

And all the house of Israel.] Tota domus Israelis, quanta quanta est. The Jerusalemites challenged the Lord, and the land, and all therein, to be theirs, excluding, and as it were excommunicating, the captives at Babylon, who were dear to God. So dealt the scribes and Pharisees by the Christians; {#Joh 16:2 Ac 26:9-11} so did the Rogatian heretics and the Donatists, who gave themselves out, as now the Papists do, to be the only Catholics. The Arians called the orthodox, by way of scorn and contempt, Ambrosians, Athanasians, Homousians, &c.

Get ye far from the Lord.] Gressus removete, profani: Ita in malam crucem: εις κορακας. Ye are cut off from the people of God, and may go whither you will; we are heirs and owners of the promises, ye are outcasts and abjects.

Ver. 16. Although I have cast them.] What a cornucopia of comfort may this promise be to poor prisoners, forlorn exiles, and such as by sickness or otherwise are necessitated to keep from public ordinances, that they shall have God's presence and protection, the comfort and conduct of his Spirit, &c.

Yet I will be to them as a little sanctuary.] Sanctuarium modicum. By hearing their prayers, sanctifying their natures, bringing to their remembrance what things they have heard and learned touching me and my will, themselves and their duties. They should in Babylon worship God in spirit and in truth; and in the life to come the Lord God Almighty and his Lamb should be their temple. {#Re 21:22}

Ver. 17. I will even gather you from the people.] How impossible or improbable soever you may think it, and those of Jerusalem pronounce it. The prophet Isaiah in many chapters of his gospel, which beginneth at Eze. 40, setteth himself to cheer up these poor captives with good hopes of a return, after a little while, paulisper; as some render the word megnāt in the foregoing #Eze 11:16.

Ver. 18. And they shall take away all the detestable things.] So God calleth their idols and monuments of idolatry, not deigning to call them by their usual names. After the captivity the Jews would never endure idols. They chose rather to die than to suffer Caligula's statue to be set up in their temple by Petronins. To this day they say that there is an ounce of the golden calf in all their sufferings.

Ver. 19. And I will give them one heart.] Opposed to a "divided heart," such as the Paphlagonian partridges are said to have; {#Ho 10:2} that is, partly for God, and partly for the world. {#Eze 33:31} This oneness of heart truly and entirely cleaving to God alone, is that boon that David so dearly beggeth, {#Ps 86:11} that he might attend upon God without distraction. {#1Co 7:35} And as the visible beams are wholly bent upon the thing that is beheld by the eye, and as it were centred in it, {a} so might his desires and endeavours be entirely carried toward God, and firmly fixed upon him.

And I will put a new spirit within you.] The same soul for substance, but altered in the frame, renewed in the qualities thereof. {#Mr 16:17} They shall "speak with new tongues"; so we read of a "new song"; the strings are the same, but the tune is changed. See #Ps 51:12 Eph 4:23 2Co 5:17.

And I will take away the stony heart.] Extraham, say the Septuagint. I will draw or pull it out, which none can do but the hand of Heaven. God only can make the flinty heart fleshly, that is, sensible, soft, pliant, penetrable, buxom, and obedient to his holy will.

{a} Plin., lib. xi. cap. 37.

Ver. 20. That they may walk in my statutes.] The covenant of grace is suited to all the exigencies and indigencies of a poor saint. It is "ordered in all things." {#2Sa 23:5}

Ver. 21. But as for them.] This is added lest any wicked men should misapply the promises, as they do qui sperando praesumunt et praesumendo pereunt.

Ver. 22. Then did the cherubims.] Now God is utterly leaving the refractory Jews. He did so much more after their rejection of Christ and his gospel.

Ver. 23. From the midst of the city.] From the east gate.

And stood upon the mountain.] Mount Olivet. There he made his last stand, to see if they would meet him with entreaties of peace, that he might stop or step back. Here it was that Christ wept over the city, and hence he went up to heaven; after which came the Romans and destroyed it.

Ver. 24. By the Spirit of God,] i.e., In a supernatural rapture.

Ver. 25. Then I spake unto them of the captivity.] These were his proper charge, and now God's chiefest care. To them therefore he delivered the whole counsel of God, which he had seen and heard for their better settlement.

Chapter 12

Ver. 1. The word of the Lord also came unto me.] This variety of visions shows the great unbelief of the people, whose captivity and calamity is here further described and assured by a new type, which is set out in #Eze 12:1-6;, and then applied in #Eze 12:7:16. One sermon pegs in another, and the man of God must stick to his work, and επιστηθι, stand over it. {#2Ti 4:2}

Ver. 2. A rebellious house.] Heb., A house of rebellion, domus perduellis, that hath cast down the gauntlet of defiance against me.

Which have eyes to see, and see not,] sc., To any good purpose. They will not see, {#Isa 26:11} and who so blind as such? They wink wilfully, which is no small aggravation of their sin. {#Joh 9:4 Eph 4:18}

Which have ears to hear, and hear not,] i.e., Castigatores non evadunt. They are not a button the better for what they hear. They draw not up the ears of their minds to the ears of their bodies, that one sound might pierce both.

Ver. 3. Therefore, thou son of man,] i.e., Nevertheless do thou as thou art bidden, and let what thou doest and sayest be for a testimony against them, stick in their souls and flesh, as the envenomed arrows of the Almighty throughout eternity.

Prepare thee stuff for removing.] Heb., Instruments, or vessels. Convassa res tuas, collae sarcinas, pack up and away. See if this way thou canst work upon them.

It may be they will consider,] sc., By this express sign, though they profit not by thy plain preaching. Ministers must study their people's souls; turn themselves into all forms and shapes, of spirit and of speech, to win upon them.

Ver. 4. Thou shalt bring forth thy stuff.] Arma viatoria; travelling bags for an ocular demonstration. What surer than sight?

Go forth at even.] The king and his men of war were glad to do so, {#2Ki 25:4} but it would not do.

Ver. 5. Dig through the wall.] Make any shift. Necessitas magnum telum. He that digged Mortimer's hole, as they call it, at Nottingham Castle, earned his liberty dearly. God might have said to the prophet at once, Get thee gone out of thy country—how sad a thing that is Ovid when banished setteth forth in many elegant elegies, sed cuncta per partes digerit -but he must do it piecemeal and by degrees, that it may the more affect them.

Ver. 6. In their sight shalt thou bear it upon thy shoulders.] To show that King Zedekiah himself should carry out some of his most precious things upon his shoulders when he fled. See #Eze 12:12. This was a base thing for a king to do. King Alphonsus indeed is renowned for drawing a poor perishing man out of a ditch, and bearing him on his back to a place of relief.

Thou shalt cover thy face.] In token that Zedekiah should be made blind. A just hand of God upon him who had eyes and saw not, {#Eze 12:2} like as it was upon Muleasses King of Tunis, who had those eyes of his dug out which had been inlets of lust, and which he oft covered with his hat pulled over them, that he might listen the better to wanton ditties and profane music.

For I have set thee for a sign.] Portentum, a sign portending their going into captivity.

Ver. 7. And did as I was commanded. Though well laughed at for my labour by the mad world, ever beside itself in point of salvation, and looking upon God's Jordans as Naaman did, with Syrian eyes.

The outward signs in our sacraments are in themselves mean and ordinary matters; yet the minister is to make use of them, and the people to climb up to heaven by them as ladders of life Hence even in the ancient church liturgy they had their Sursum corda, Lift up your hearts. Rideant athei et ringantur.

Ver. 8. And in the morning came the word of the Lord.] Mane, id est, mature. God not only betime, but timeously, admonished his people; but they refused to be reformed—would have none of his counsel.

Ver. 9. Hath not the house of Israel...said unto thee, What doest thou?] {a} q.d., Nothing less. So stupid they are, or so stubborn, that they never once asked any such question; or if they did, it was in a jeer, as who should say, You are a wise man to trouble yourself and us in this foolish and childish manner; a great deal of gravity sure you show therewith.

{a} Quid sibi vult quod ita migras? Tu, habet emphasin.—Lavat.

Ver. 10. This burden concerneth the princes in Jerusalem.] There is an elegance in the original. Princes who overburden their people shall one day have their back burden of miseries. Potentes potenter torquebuntur.

Ver. 11. I am your sign.] And so it pleases you to make me your mocking stock. Sed risus hic est Sardonijs. Of such mirth one may safely say, "It is mad; and of such laughter, What doeth it?" {#Ec 2:2}

Like as I have done.] My removal is mira, nova inimica, et ludicra; a marvel, newly hostile, and a show; but upon you it will fall heavily and horridly. That which hath befallen me in type only, shall befall you in truth and reality.

Ver. 12. And the prince that is among them.] Zedekiah, that profane, wicked prince. {#Eze 21:25}

Shall bear upon his shoulders in the twilight.] His precious things (see on #Eze 12:6). This, though it be not recorded in the holy history, yet that it was so, we are assured by this scripture. Great men in exigents stoop to low offices. This load upon his shoulders might hinder his flight and further his surprise, as it did Bajazet's, when he was beaten out of the field by Tamerlane, that he stayed to water his horse. The Vulgate rendereth it, but not well, in humeris portabitur, he shall be carried on men's shoulders. The Pope, indeed, is ordinarily so carried; but he was glad to foot it when forced by the German and Spanish soldiers; A.D. 1527, he was glad to secure himself in his castle St Angelo.

They shall dig through the wall.] The door haply, or inlet of some underground passage.

He shall cover his face.] See on #Eze 12:6. This he did haply through fear, or shame, or for a disguise; but his sin found him out. Ver. 13. My net also will I spread upon him.] Princes usually love hunting and fowling. Lo, the Chaldees shall hunt him and overcatch him.

And he shall be taken in my snare.] Snares are set secretly, catch suddenly, hold certainly. A stronghold the Hebrew word here used doth also signify. {a}

Yet shall he not see it.] For his eyes were put out at Riblah. {#2Ki 25:7} And yet, behold, a greater blindness that befell him than this. Josephus {b} testifieth that Zedekiah not understanding these words of Ezekiel, and thinking them to be contrary to Jeremiah's words, he resolved to believe neither of them.

{a} Jun.

{b} Joseph. Ant., lib. vi. x., cap. 10.

Ver. 14. And I will scatter toward every wind.] His bodyguard, σωματοφυλακες. Esquires of his body, auxiliaries. I will put him into a helpless condition. {#Ps 146:3} If the Lord do not help thee, whence shall I help thee? said that king to her that cried to him for help. {#2Ki 6:27}

Ver. 15. And they shall know that I am the Lord.] The Lord God of heaven, the great and terrible God. {#Ne 1:5} This they shall know magno suo male, his great wrong, who would not take knowledge what was said unto them by the prophets.

Ver. 16. But I will leave a few men.] Heb., Men of number, a company scarce considerable in comparison of the many.

That they may declare all their abominations.] Give glory to God, take shame to themselves, and thereby do much good to those heathens hardened before by their evil behaviour. Vere magnus est Deus Christianorum, Truly, great is the God of the Christians, said one Calocerius, a heathen.

Ver. 17. Moreover the word, &c.] See on #Eze 12:1.

Ver. 18. Eat thy bread with quaking.] With tumult and trepidation, as a frightened and perplexed person that eateth his bread in peril of his life.

Ver. 19. They shall eat their bread with carefulness.] Better fast than feed on such bread. Men may sooner by their carking care add a furlong to their grief, than a cubit to their comfort, saith one.

Because of the violence.] The Jews were ever, and are still, a covetous and cruel people.

Ver. 20. And ye shall know.] By woeful experience. {#Eze 12:15}

Ver. 21. And the word of the Lord.] See #Eze 12:1.

Ver. 22. What is that proverb.] We have also many profane proverbs common among us, as, Thought is free; Every man for himself, and God for us all; Words are but wind; In space comes grace; Fair and softly goes far, &c. The Greeks had many such ill proverbs, Chrysostom complaineth.

The days are prolonged.] Ludibrium crassum: gross mockery, "Because judgment is not speedily executed," &c.

Ver. 23. The days are at hand.] Opponit aliud dictum fere tot syllabarum; a plain and plenary confutation.

Ver. 24. For there shall be no more.] God could have really confuted them by present execution; but he is patient.

Ver. 25. For I am the Lord.] And that you shall shortly feel to your small comfort. What I have uttered with my mouth, I will perform with my hand without fail.

For in your days.] Within six years.

Ver. 26. Again the word.] See on #Eze 12:1.

Ver. 27. For many days.] Either it is nothing, or long hence.

Ver. 28. There shall none of my words be prolonged.] Abused mercy turneth into fury.

Chapter 13

Ver. 1. And the word of the Lord.] See on #Eze 12:1.

Ver. 2. Prophecy against the prophets.] Illis enim crania mala feruntur accepts. See #Jer 23:32,33,38.

That prophecy out of their own hearts.] Whose prophecies came by the will of man, {#2Pe 1:21} and not cum privilegio. with by right.

Ver. 3. Woe unto the foolish prophets.] Wise enough they were in their generation—and so are the foxes, whereto they are compared {#Eze 13:4} -but in the things of God, silly simples, blinder than moles.

That follow their own spirit.] Aud their own fancies, acted and abused by that great lying spirit.

And have seen nothing.] Nothing from God, though they thought and pretended they had seen something. All was but lies; {#Jer 27:10} dreams; {#Jer 23:32} things of naught. {#Eze 22:28} As Antipheron Orietes in Aristotle thought that everywhere he saw his own shape and picture going before him; so here. Now a woe is denounced against these; vae woe, is a little word, but very comprehensive, as there is often much poison in little drops.

Ver. 4. O Israel, thy prophets are like the foxes.] Cowardly, crafty, cruel, greedy: venatores elidunt, et cum mortuae videntur, reviviscunt. Heretics are such, and false prophets; Arius, for instance.

Ver. 5. Ye have not gone up into the gaps.] Reclaimed the people from their impieties, those inlets of plagues, nor interceded for them by your prayers to God to turn away wrath, but hastened it. Ye have built indeed a wall, and daubed it with mortar, but such as is untempered, {#Eze 13:10} arena sine calce, like ill architects.

Neither made up the hedge.] To keep foxes out of God's vineyard; it is even opentide.

To stand in the battle.] As David's three worthies did in the barley field and delivered it. {#1Ch 11:14} Or as Marulla the maid of Lemnos, who, like a fierce amazon, desperately fought with the Turks in defence of her country, Coccinum, a city in that island, and kept them out till more company came to her relief, moved with the alarm. {a}

{a} Turkish History, 417.

Ver. 6. They have seen vanity.] This is soon seen. {#Eze 13:3}

Saying, The Lord saith.] By a lying pretence, familiar with falsaries, to father their fancies upon God.

Ver. 7. Have ye not seen a vain vision?] i.e., I appeal to your own consciences, have ye not falsely feigned all? Seducers are extremely impudent, with perverse minds, and cauterised consciences.

Ver. 8. Behold, I am against you.] Heb., Be hold I against you, by an angry aposiopesis. {a} The Chaldee hath it, I will send my wrath against; you, and that is an evil messenger; for who knoweth the power of thy wrath? saith Moses. {#Ps 90:11}

{a} A rhetorical artifice, in which the speaker comes to a sudden halt, as if unable or unwilling to proceed.

(ED)

Ver. 9. And my hand shall be upon the prophets] God's hand is a mighty hand; {#1Pe 5:6} the heaven is spanned by it, the earth held in the hollow of it.

They shall not be in the assembly of my people,] {a} Or, In the secret, or councils; they shall have no communion with them. A heavy threat; for the communion of saints, next unto communion with God, is the greatest comfort here attainable.

Neither shall they be written,] As members of that commonwealth, —much less of the Jerusalem that is above, {#Isa 4:4} -but rooted out of the world, written in the earth (#Jer 17:13; see #Ps 69:28).

Neither shall they enter.] They shall never come back out of Babylon, nor enter into heaven.

-Jun.

Ver. 10. Because, even because.] Heb., For that, and for that; an angry epizeuxis. {a} See #Eze 13:8.

Saying, Peace, peace.] Making all fair weather before them, whenas the storm of God's wrath (never to be blown over) was bursting out upon them.

And one built up a wall.] Ipsæ oedificabat parietem; one of the devil's chief dirt-daubers, such as was Shemaiah, Hananiah, &c., {#Jer 29:31} who, together with their women upholsterers that sewed pillows to all arm holes, {#Eze 13:18} made foul work, and did much mischief among God's people; like as do the Jesuits and Jesuitists (into whom all the old seducers have fled and hid themselves) at this day.

And, lo, others daubed it.] By cunning collusion they plastered and parjetted over the mud walls that was so set up. Ita extruunt illi vel potius destruunt ecclesiam Dei; { b} such proper builders were these. Like unto whom are the Popish priests, who bring the poor people into a fool's paradise, and such idle ministers among us as shoot off at best, a few popguns against gross sins; or when they have done their worst at it, lick them whole again with, I hope better things of you, or, I hope there are none such here, &c. Many silly people also judge themselves honest because the daubing minister will give them the beggarly passport, and so die like lambs, being woefully cheated, and willing to be so. {#Jer 5:31 Mt 24:11}

With untempered mortar.] Which will make but a bulging wall, not like to stand long.

{a} A figure by which a word is repeated with vehemence or emphasis. (ED)

{b} Jun

Ver. 11. Say unto them.] Tell them so from me, and they may trust to it. Dei dicere est facere. For God, to say is to do.

That it shall fall.] And the fall of it shall be great, as #Mt 7:27, where our Saviour seemeth to allude to this text.

There shall be an overflowing shower.] The Chaldean army. {#Isa 59:19 8:7,8}

Great hailstones.] Sept., λιθους πετροβολους, catapults, battering rams, to make breaches in stone walls. The Hebrew is Elgabiah, i.e., grandis grandinis lapides, huge hailstones of God's own hurling. {a}

{a} Alloquitur grandinem velut imperator suos milites. -Lavaf.

Ver. 12. Lo, when the wall is fallen.] As fall it will, and with a force, because made of ill mortar; and they that stand under it for shelter shall perish, as did sometimes seven and twenty thousand of Benhadad's men in Aphek. Vocat autem eloquentiara secularem et rhetoricam inanem, lutum sine palea, &c., saith Oecolampadius here—i.e., by untempered mortar is meant worldly eloquence and empty rhetoric in sermons; this is as sand without lime, or as lime without litter, hair, chaff, or the like stuff to hold it together.

Where is the daubing?] What is your false doctrine come to? your work is lost, if not your souls. {#1Co 3:15}

Ver. 13. I will even rend it with a stormy wind.] Vento turbinum; with a whirlwind or hurricane. See #Isa 25:4 29:6 Jer 23:19.

And great hailstones in my fury.] Thrice in this one #Eze 13:11: is fury threatened, so hot is God's displeasure against seducers.

Ver. 14. So that the foundation thereof shall be discovered.] So that all men shall see your falsehoods. See #2Ti 3:9 Re 17:16. The old whore is first made naked and then desolate. Mr Philpot, martyr, dealt plainly by the Popish prelates in open convocation when he said to them, Before God ye are all bare arsed. God hath detected you, &c. {a}

And ye shall be consumed.] See on #Eze 13:12.

{a} Acts and Mon.

Ver. 15. Thus will I accomplish my wrath.] God's wrath is dreadful, when let out in little minims only; but when to be accomplished, who can abide or avoid it?

Neither they that daubed it.] It may very well be that some of these cementaries of Satan were slain by the people, when once they saw themselves cheated by them into remediless misery.

Ver. 16. To wit, the prophets of Israel.] A name too good for them; but so they would needs be called. See #Tit 1:12 2Pe 2:1.

Ver. 17. Likewise, thou son of man.] A prophet's work is never done. Agricolis redit labor actus in orbem.

Set thy face against the daughters.] The prophet had rather have contended with men than women, and more honour it had been for him; but he must do as bidden. Mulieres genus fragile sunt; Women are delicate; yet the prophet must set his face against them as stout agents for the devil, who hath ever made great use of them. Such were Noadiah; {#Ne 6:14} that apocalyptical Jezebel, Bridget Matild; those two Jezebels of New England, Mrs Hutchinson and Mrs Dyer, our recent most impudent preacheresses in London and elsewhere. {a}

{a} Mr Weld's "Sectar. of New England." Matildis Comitissa, vulgo dicta filia S. Petri.

Ver. 18. That sew pillows.] In token of most certain and constant rest and peace.

To make kerchiefs.] Vela vel pepla. The Roman soothsayers, caput velabant cum volebant exordiri suos exorcismos, used the like ceremonies; so did those that gave oracles at the den of Trophonius.

To hunt souls.] And so to destroy them. See #Pr 6:26. Women are insinuating creatures, especially when they have a repute for holiness, and are esteemed prophetic.

Will ye hunt the souls?] O indignum facinus Are precious souls no more set by?

Upon the head of every stature.] Fitting the humours of all sorts and sizes of people, by prophesying to the younger of pleasure, and to the elder sort for profit. David, by a like art, tells old men of gold and silver, young men of honey and honeycomb, to be found in God's statutes. {#Ps 19:10}

Will ye save the souls alive that come unto you?] q.d., I hardly think you will. Will ye not kill and eat, as the hunter doth his prey? or rather, will not the devil deal by you both as the cock master doth by his fighting cocks, take pleasure in their mutual killing one another, that he may make a supper of them both?

Ver. 19. For handfuls of barley end for pieces.] Like so many base gypsies or common beggars. {a} Cato upbraided Marcus Caelius, and worthily, that, being a pleader, he would sell either his tongue or silence for a morsel of bread. These were low prized prophetesses. See #Mic 3:5.

To slay the souls,] scil., By denouncing death to them, or by stirring up the people to slay them as miscreants.

That hear your lies.] Such as deceive expectation; for so the word here used signifieth.

{a} A. Gell.

Ver. 20. Behold, I am against your pillows.] God's hatred against sin is such that he hateth anything that is made use of about it. The serpent was cursed because he had been abused by the devil.

To make them fly.] High pitches, αεροβατουντις: as our high attainers, with their new truths and strange speculations, do now pretend to do. Such were the Swenkfeldians—Stinkfeldians, Luther called them, for their ill savour. Swenkfeldius himself bewitched many with those lofty terms, which were much in his mouth, of illumination, revelation, deification, the inward and spiritual man, &c. {a}

{a} Scultet. Annal.

Ver. 21. And they shall be no more in your hand.] God's own people may be, for a time, in the hand of seducers, and taken in their nets, carried away by their false opinions; but God will at length deliver his people out of their hand.

Ver. 22. Because with lies ye have made the heart of my people sad.] False doctrines and wicked practices grieve the hearts of the godly, and strengthen the hands of the ungodly, as these unhappy times do abundantly evince. The times truly are good (and in many respects better than they have been), but the days are evil.

By promising him life.] Though he walk in hell's ways.

Ver. 23. Therefore ye shall see no more vanity.] By rendering you not only contemptible, but ridiculous. Or by redding the world of such pestilent people.

Chapter 14

Ver. 1. Then came certain of the elders unto me.] Rulers and chieftains of the captives in Babylon, pretending to be far better than those elders at Jerusalem, complained about in #Eze 8:11,12, but indeed no better; nay, so much the worse, because they had lost the fruit of all their afflictions, and were as arrant hypocrites as those veteratores old hands, the scribes and Pharisees, that came to John's baptism and to our Saviour's sermons, with evil and exulcerate minds.

“ Non omnes sancti qui calcant limina Templi.”

A Doeg may set his foot as far within the sanctuary as a David.

And sat before me.] Demurely and, to see to, devoutly. But why could they not stand to hear the Word of God for reverence sake? Balak did so, {#Nu 23:18} though a king; and Eglon, though unwieldy; {#Jud 3:20} and a better man than they both, Constantine the Great, as Eusebius {a} records, and further tells us, that being pressed, after long time of hearing, to sit down, with a stern countenance he answered, It were a great sin in me not to hear with utmost attention when God is speaking.

{a} De Vita Const.

Ver. 2. And the word of the Lord came.] Lest the prophet, seeing these seniors coming thus unto him, should favour them too far, God uncaseth them, as he doth mostly such gross hypocrites in this present life; Jeroboam and his wife, Ananias and Sapphira, Simon Magus, and others for instance. How else indeed should the name of such wicked wretches rot as they must? {#Pr 10:24-29}

Ver. 3. These men have set their idols in their hearts.] Though they would seem to abhor idols, yet the devil is at inn with them, and their hearts are no better than so many idol temples, as thou wouldst easily perceive hadst thou but my fiery eyes, and couldst see their insides as I do. Sustulerunt stercoreos deos suos super cor suum, {a} they have laid their dungy deities upon their very hearts; a place where I only should be by right, for it is the bridal bed.

And put the stumblingblock of their iniquity,] i.e., They are impudent sinners, as the scholiast {b} interprets it, and resolved of their course whatever comes of it.

Should I be inquired of {c} at all by them?] q.d., No, never; I scorn the motion, I abhor such ludicrous devotion as this is. Away with it. Piscator rendereth the words, An ergo serio interrogor ab eis? Thinkest thou that I am seriously sought unto by these? q.d., Nothing less.

{a} Piscator.

{b} One who writes explanatory notes upon an author; esp. an ancient commentator upon a classical writer.

ED

{c} Hoc significat crassum Dei contemptum et quasi professam rebellionem.

Ver. 4. I the Lord will answer him.] Or, As I am the Lord (oath wise), I will answer him, but with bitter answers

According to the multitude of his idols,] i.e., As by his abominations he hath well deserved; or, concerning the multitude of his idols; that is a sin he shall be sure to hear of, and to suffer for.

Ver. 5. That I may take the house of Israel in their own heart.] Ut deprehendam, or, as others, ut reprehendam; that I may convince their consciences of their impieties, and sting them to the heart with unquestionable conviction and horror.

Because they are all estranged from me.] And fallen in with the devil, who is εἰδωλοχαρής, as saith Synesius, a great promoter of idolatry. Idola sunt prima saliva, et initium deficiendi a Deo. {a} Idolatry paveth the way to utter apostasy.

{a} Oecolamp.

Ver. 6. Repent, and turn yourselves.] Or, Turn others; for true converts will be converting their brethren. They like not to go to heaven alone.

And turn away your faces.] Alii dicunt uxores vestras, saith Lavater here; your wives, which are according to your hearts, like as in water face answereth to face. Wean them from their idols, and win them over to the true God.

Ver. 7. For every one of the house of Israel.] The same over again, and yet no win repetition: Duris enim illis capitibus res non potuit satis inculcari, to these dizzards nothing could be said too much.

Or of the stranger.] But proselyted to the Jewish religion, as Jethro, who was the first of that kind that we read of.

Which separateth himself from me.] As a harlot doth from her husband. See #Ho 4:14 9:10.

I the, Lord will answer him by myself.] Non verbis sed verberibus; not with words, but with blows. Or, According to my most holy truth and justice; or, By myself—scil., do I swear that I will do it. See #Eze 14:4.

Ver. 8. And I will set my face against that man.] Vultuose torveque illum intuear. I will look him to death. Or, Laying aside all other business, I will see to it that he be soundly paid.

And will make him a sign and a proverb.] That when men would express a great punishment upon any, they shall resemble it to his, as the Jews did to Ahab's and Zedekiah's, that naughty couple, {#Jer 29:22} and the heathens to that of Tantalus {a} and Tityus.

And I will cut him off from the midst of my people.] This is yet a further and a more formidable menace; this is far worse than to be a byword to the people.

{a} Tantalus, q. τάλαντατος, Ut vult Plato.

Ver. 9. I the Lord have deceived that prophet.] I had not only a permissive, but an active hand in that imposture; not as a sin, but as a punishment of other sins. See #1Ki 22:20 Job 12:16 Jer 4:10 2Th 2:11.

And I will stretch out mine hand upon him,] i.e., Upon that false prophet, who, although he hath thus acted, not without my providence, yet hath sinned against my law, which is the rule men must walk by, or else suffer for their transgression. Aut faciendum aut patiendum. Now God hath long hands, as we use to say of princes; neither may any think to live out of the reach of his rod.

Ver. 10. And they shall bear the punishment of their iniquity.] Neither shall excuse other; but as they have sinned together, so shall they suffer together, quia volentes et scientes errabant, they wilfully went astray. Quandoquidem hic populus vult decipi, decipiatur; they shall infallibly perish. An evil pilot may easily drown himself, and all that are with him, on the same bottom.

Ver. 11. That the house of Israel may go no more astray.] Thus "when God's judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness." {#Isa 26:9} Those elect that were bad will become good, and they that were good will be made better. Poena ad paucos, metus ad omnes. When a few are punished, all fear.

Ver. 12. The word of the Lord came again to me.] The utter destruction of this perverse people is once again denounced and declared to be inevitable.

Ver. 13. Son of man.] See on #Eze 2:1.

When the land sinneth against me,] i.e., The inhabitants of the land; not as if the land itself were alive and indued with reason, as Origen {a} doated, and as Plato held that the Spirit of God was the soul of the world.

By trespassing grievously.] Praevaricando perfide; by doing evil as men could.

Then will I stretch out my hand.] See #Eze 14:9.

And will break the staff.] See #Eze 4:16 5:16.

And I will send famine.] Extreme famine, a heavy judgment, as hath elsewhere been shown out of sacred and profane history.

{a} Hom. 4, in loc.

Ver. 14. Though these three men.] See on #Jer 15:1.

Noah, Daniel, and Job.] What could not these three, so mighty with God, have done if the matter had been feasible? Daniel was now alive and in his prime; Ezekiel, his contemporary and fellow prophet, envieth him not, but celebrateth him; as also Peter doth Paul. {#2Pe 3:15,16}

They should deliver but their own souls.] Because the decree was past, an end was come. {#Eze 7:2,4-6,10}

Ver. 15. If I cause noisome beasts.] As lions, wolves, bears, serpents, &c. Great hurt hath been done not only by such, as #Nu 21:6 2Ki 2:24 17:25,26 Jos 24:12; but also by tamer creatures when set on by God. Rebellis facta est, quia homo numini, creatura homini. {a} Rats, conies, frogs, wasps, moths, have done much mischief.

{a} Augustine.

Ver. 16. Though these three men were in it.] All alive, and lustily tugging; yet it would not do. In common calamities heathens had their supplications and sacrifices. Papists have their litanies and processions, though to small purpose. Let us, in the like ease, up and be doing, that the Lord may be with us.

They shall deliver neither sons.] Heb., If they deliver sons, &c.; q.d., then never trust me more. Formula iurandi elliptica.

Ver. 17. Or if I bring a sword.] The sword, whensoever it comes is bathed in heaven. {#Isa 34:5}

Sword, go through the land.] When the sword rideth circuit, as a judge, it is in commission. See #Jer 47:6,7.

Ver. 18. Neither sons nor daughtens,] {a} Though never so dear to them: τα φίλτατα, the Greeks call them.

{a} Omnis pestilentiae coeca et delitescens est causa. -Fernel.

Ver. 19. Or if I send a pestilence.] Which Hippocartes calleth το Θειον, because God hath a special hand in it. Physicians can give no good reason for it.

In blood,] i.e., In great slaughter, laying heaps upon heaps.

Ver. 20. Neither son nor daughter.] Though it were an only one, and so more dear to them.

They shall but deliver.] Howbeit a good man also may die of the plague, as did Oecolampadius, Greenham, &c.

Ver. 21. My four sore judgments.] Every one of the four (Cardan reckons three more of like nature, viz., earthquakes, inundations, and great winds) are sore judgments indeed. Each of them is pessimum, most wicked, i.e., perniciosum. Cavete. Dangerous. Beware.

Ver. 22. Yet, behold.] See a thing sudden and serious.

They shall come.] Be captives here, as you are.

And ye shall see their way.] How wicked it was, and worthy of punishment.

Ver. 23. And they shall comfort,] i.e., Quiet and qualify your spirits.

Chapter 15

Ver. 1. And the word of the Lord came unto me.] This shortest chapter is added to all the foregoing as a corollary. It consisteth of a type or simile, and the application thereof. It is God's usual way, and should be ours, to teach by similitudes. See #Ho 12:10. {See Trapp on "Ho 12:10"}

Ver. 2. What is the vine tree more than any tree?] The Jews took upon them, because a "vine brought out of Egypt," and such as God's own right hand had planted. But insomuch as they were now become fruitless and also useless "trees twice dead, plucked up by the roots," {#Jude 12} what had they to glory in above other nations? Surely they were therefore worse than others, because they ought to have been better. True it is that a vine in itself, considered with the fruit it beareth, is no contemptible tree. But if it be withered or pulled out of the earth, it is no way comparable to other trees or shrubs, which, when felled, are put to sundry good uses that the vine — lignum tenus, gibbosum et tortuosum -a crooked, low, writhen thing—will never serve to; as to make spears, doors, tables, ships, houses, &c.

Ver. 3. Shall wood be taken thereof to do any work?] No, hardly. It is good for nothing; no, not so much as to make a pin or a peg of to hang a hat or bridle on, because it is a sappy and brittle wood. Think the same of that empty vine, the profligate professor, being abominable, disobedient, and unto every good work reprobate. {#Tit 1:16}

Ver. 4. Behold, it is cast into the fire for fuel.] But then it must be taken before it be overly dry; and so Cornelius A Lapide testifieth that they burn little else in Italy but fagots made of vine branches. See #Joh 15:6. {See Trapp on "Joh 15:6"}

The midst of it is burned.] Ustulatum; scorched and seared, so that it is altogether unuseful, and is therefore cast again into the fire, out of which, for some other purpose, it had been pulled. Woe to apostates; the hottest fire in hell abideth them.

Ver. 5. Behold, when it was whole.] The Jews, when at best, were too too bad; a foolish people and unwise, disobedient and gainsaying all the day long. How much more then now that they are hardened and seared with so many judgments?

Ver. 6. As the vine tree.] Adaptat parabolam. Here beginneth the apodosis or application of the parable. That which is not for fruit is for the fire. Salt which hath lost the savour is thrown out.

So will I give the inhabitants of Jerusalem.] Those sinners in Zion; {#Isa 33:14} those sacrificing Sodomites; {#Isa 1:10} I will make them a fiery oven in the time of mine anger; I will swallow them up in my wrath; {#Ps 21:9} besides that, hell gapeth for them.

Ver. 7. And I will set my face against them.] See #Eze 14:8 Le 17:10.

They shall go out from one fire.] And then think themselves safe and happy; but this is but gaudium lachrymosum; their preservation is but only a reservation; for Another fire shall devour them.] A man pulleth a brand out of the fire sometimes, and then presently casteth it in again. He gathereth up the stick ends, but it is to cast them into the middle of the fire. So dealeth God often with the wicked; to whom also whatsoever they suffer here is but a typical Tophet. See #Am 5:19 Jer 48:43.

And ye shall know that I am the Lord,] i.e., True of my word, and terrible in mine executions. The prophets could not get you to believe that your sins were so heinous, that my wrath was so hot, that your judgments were so heavy, &c.; but now ye shall surely feel what you would not then believe, and cry out, Nos insensati, &c. Oh we fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets had spoken unto us.

When I set my face against them.] As being fully resolved to have my full blow at them, and to pay them home.

Ver. 8. And I will make the land desolate.] The land itself often suffereth, propter incolarum inemendabilem malitiam, "for the wickedness of them that dwell therein." {#Ps 107:4} Idolatry especially is a land desolating sin.

Because they have committed a trespass.] A grand trespass, a wickedness with a witness; they have deeply revolted, and backslidden with a perpetual backsliding. Apostates, as they sin not common sins, so, with Korah and his complices, they die not common deaths many times.

Chapter 16

Ver. 1. Again the word of the Lord came unto me.] For the better setting on of what had been said in the foregoing chapter, for cutting the combs of the self-conceited Jews, and convincing them of their wickedness and wretchedness thereby. The chapter consisteth of law and gospel, {#Eze 16:60} and is a lively type, animae peccatricis et poenitentis, of an offending and repenting soul.

Ver. 2. Cause Jerusalem to know her abominations.] Which as yet she taketh no knowledge of. Rebuke her therefore sharply, that she may be sound in the faith, if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth.

Ver. 3. Thy birth.] Heb., Thy cutting out. Compare #Isa 51:1.

And thy nativity.] Vide insignem genealogiam, vide γενεθλοιν pudendum. Mutato heroine de te fabula narratur. Cicero {a} saith the old Britons were as barbarous as the Scythians.

Thy father was an Amorite.] {b} An Amorite thou mayest seem to be rather than an Abramite; for thou hast filled the land, as they did, {#Ezr 9:11} from end to end with thine uncleanness.

And thy mother an Hittite.] Those worst of women. {#Ge 27:46}

{a} De Nat. Deor.

{b} Duris genuit te cautibus horrens Caucasus. -Virg.

Ver. 4. Thy navel was not cut.] None was so courteous as to do any of these necessary good offices for thee, a poor, forlorn, helpless wretch. No creature is so shiftless as a newly born babe, which, cast out and left to the wide world, must needs perish. {a}

{a} Plut., lib. De Amore Proles.

Ver. 5. None eye pitied thee.] No, not thy mother, in whose heart God had planted natural affection for that purpose. Neither would thy Lucina become thy Levana (two heathen deities), to take thee up from the ground, where thou layest, alas! weltering in thy gore, and more like to a slain than a live child.

Ver. 6. And when I passed by thee.] Not by chance, {as #Lu 10:31} but of free choice, and according to mine eternal purpose.

And saw thee in thy blood.] In this deplorable condition. Blood is in this verse thrice mentioned, to set forth the greatness of man's misery in his pure, or rather impure, natural state, and the freeness of God's grace toward him all along. {#Mt 11:26}

I said unto thee, Live,] God speaketh spiritual life to his poor people, {#Isa 55:3} and often repeateth to them his precious promises, whereby they come to "partake of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust." {#2Pe 1:4}

Ver. 7. As the bud of the field.] He prosecuteth the allegory of a miserable maiden, with whom the matter beginneth to mend. Iam enim menses patiebatur, ubera creverant et pili circa pubem; so that now she was marriageable.

And thou art come to excellent ornaments.] Heb., To ornaments of ornaments, such as virgo nobilis, cum iam est nubilis, habet, young ladies have, when grown up especially.

Whereas thou wast naked and bare.] Heb., Nakedness and rejection. God looked upon us and loved us, whenas yet we had not a rag to our backs. Cum tu nuda esses, argue nudissima.

Ver. 8. Behold, thy time was the time of love.] When thou wast both fit for marriage, and desirous of it. For as the man misseth his rib, so the woman would be in her old place again, under the man's arm or wing. See #Ru 3:1,9.

And I spread my skirt over thee.] See #Ru 3:9. {See Trapp on "Ru 3:9"} I covered thy nakedness, and took thee into my care and company as a wife. A marriage rite is imported by this expression.

Yea, I swear unto thee, &c.] So much ado God hath with us to make us believe. The apostle mentioneth "the work of faith." She hath somewhat to do before she can fasten.

Ver. 9. Then washed I thee with water.] I cleansed thee from all thy pollutions by the merit and Spirit of my dear Son. See #1Co 6:11.

And I anointed thee with oil.] Newly married wives were usually washed, anointed, and richly arrayed. The dead also were washed, as Dorcas; and embalmed, as Jacob; and #Pr 31:8, they are called bene chaloph, which signifieth "change of raiment." Death strips us all, but happy are they whom Christ hath spread his skirt over. See #2Co 5:2-4.

Ver. 10. I clothed thee also with broidered work.] Phrygionica veste variegata. With variety of precious graces, whereby thou didst outshine Solomon in all his bravery; for one grain of faith is of better worth than all the gold of Ophir, and one remnant of hope beyond all the gay clothing in the world.

And girded thee about with fine linen.] The Church hath a rich wardrobe for woollens and linens; God's plenty of both.

Ver. 11. I decked thee also with ornaments.] See #Eze 16:7; such as render thee amiable and admirable. Christ himself, who was not moved at all with the offer of all the world's good, {#Mt 4:9,10} confesseth himself ravished with them. {#So 4:9}

Ver. 12. And I put a jewel on thy forehead.] Heb., On thy nose. See on #Ge 24:47.

Ver. 13. Thus wast thou decked with gold and silver.] Yea, with far better habiliments; for what is gold and silver but the guts and garbage of the earth? It was observed of Queen Elizabeth (as of her father before her), that she loved to go very richly arrayed. Her sister Queen Mary had, at her coronation, her head so laden with jewels, that she could hardly hold it up. King Richard II had one coat of gold and jewels valued at 30,000 marks. This was much, but nothing to the Church's beauty and bravery, which yet was all but borrowed, as is said in the next verse.

Thou didst eat fine flour and honey,] i.e., The very best of the best. Thou didst eat of the fat, and drink of the sweet of my holy ordinances.

Ver. 14. And thy renown went forth.] Pliny saith of Jerusalem that it was the most famous of all the cities of the East; of the world he might have said, all things considered.

Through the comeliness which I had put upon thee.] As Abraham's servant put the jewels upon Rebekah. See on #Eze 16:13. That is a famous canon ^{a} of the second Arausican council, Tales nos amat Deus, quales futuri sumus ipsius dono, non quales sumus nostro merito: God loveth us such as we shall be by his free gift, and not such as we are by our own merit.

^{a} Canon 12.

Ver. 15. But thou didst trust in thine own beauty.] Thou grewest proud of it, and thoughtest there was none such; whenas thou mightest well have said of it, as he in the holy history did of his hatchet, "Alas, master, it was but borrowed."

And playedst the harlot.] Being fair and foolish.

“Lis est cum forma magna pudicitiae.”

Because of thy renown.] Being puffed up with the greatness of thy name and fame, which should have made thee more morigerous. {#Pr 27:21} {See Trapp on "Pr 27:21"}

And pouredst out thy fornications.] Indifferently and impudently, like a filthy strumpet.

His it was.] Quicumque vult; come as come would: so detestably insatiated wast thou. The Papists boast of their Church that she is a pious mother, that shutteth her bosom to no man. Meretricis scilicet hoc est meretricissimae.

Ver. 16. And of thy garments thou didst take.] Thou sparedst for no cost to trick up thy mawmets and monuments of idolatry. No more do Papists: witness their churches, yea, their cloisters and churchyards (for want of room within), stuffed with their vowed presents and rich vestments. Besides that they do garnish and furnish out their heretical doctrines with testimonies of Holy Scripture, which they wrest, and with authority of ancient fathers, whom they wrong, Quaerit diabolus a te ornari, said Augustine to a scholar of his, who was learned and lewd; that is, The devil would fain be dressed up by thee.

The like things shall not come.] Such a desperate idolomany as thine can hardly be matched or met with anywhere. So an Englishman Italianate Italianised is even a devil incarnate. Julian the apostate was by some called Idolian.

Ver. 17. Images of men.] To be thy gallants, with whom thou mightest adulterise and idolise. Vah scelus! Surely he is a rare man that hath not some or other idol whereon he bestows pains and cost, "Little children, keep yourselves from idols." {#1Jo 5:21}

Ver. 18. And tookest thy broidered, &c.] See #Eze 16:16.

Ver. 19. My meat also...thou hast even set it before them.] Either as consecrated to them, or otherwise to be consecrated by them, which made Daniel so scrupulous of meddling with the king's meat.

{#Eze 1:8}

Thus it was.] Just so, and no otherwise, however thou would palliate the business, and art ready to put me to my proofs. {as #Jer 2:35}

Ver. 20. Whom thou hast born unto me.] Who at their birth were mine by virtue of my covenant, and who should therefore have been consecrated unto me. {a} Polanus here giveth this good note: A Church, though it be idolatrous, may bring forth children to God, by bestowing upon them the sacrament of initiation or regeneration; and God will acknowledge them for his children, till such time as he hath given a bill of divorce to that Church. {b} This is done whereas she openly betaketh herself to the bed of another husband, by disowning Christ for her God, Lord, Bridegroom, and Mediator; as the Asiatic Church hath done, by defecting first to Nestorianism, and now to Mohammedanism. Let this be well noted against the Anabaptists of these times.

{a} Diod.

{b} Pol. in loc.

Ver. 21. That thou hast slain my children.] Note that he yet calleth them his children, though so born, and so murdered. See on #Eze 16:20.

Ver. 22. Thou hast not remembered the days of thy youth.] Hence all thy haughtiness and hauntness. We should often say, as that noble Iphicrates the Athenian once did, Εξ ὀτων εἰς οὐρανόν, From how small to how great matters hath the Lord raised me!

Ver. 23. Woe, woe unto thee, saith the Lord God.] A double woe will fall very heavy here and hereafter; woe and alas for evermore.

Ver. 24. That thou hast also built unto thee.] How stintless is sin, and how like is this to Jeremiah's preaching! {#Jer 2:3-8}

An eminent place.] Or brothel house, that thy madness may appear to all men.

Ver. 25. And hast made thy beauty to be abhorred.] By being made so cheap and common. Sin is a reproach to any people, {#Pr 14:34} idolatry especially. {#Ipe 4:3}

And hast opened thy feet.] See on #Eze 16:15.

Ver. 26. Great of flesh.] Torosi, scil., propter potentiam et petulantiam. The prophet persisteth in the metaphor, from the manner of shamelessly lascivious women: such as was Messalina, the wife of Claudius the emperor; and she in Apuleius that entertained the ass. See #Eze 23:20. Flesh is here and elsewhere taken for the privities, quod est membrum prorsus carneum.

Ver. 27. I have stretched out my hand over thee.] To cut thee short. {as #Ho 2:9}

And have diminished thine ordinary food.] Diminui demensum tuum. What should a father do but snatch away the meat from his child that marreth it? or a husband, but hold his wanton wife to straiter allowance?

The daughters of the Philistines, which are ashamed of thy lewd way.] It must needs be most lewd that Philistines were ashamed of. Zimmah signifieth wickedness with a witness. Jerome interpreteth it an execrable and villanous filthiness. So is Popish idolatry in the eyes of modern Jews; and the hellish blasphemies darted out against God and Christ so ordinarily and openly by pseudo Christians, abominable to the Turks, who do punish them for it with great severity.

Ver. 28. Thou hast played the whore also with the Assyrians.] By making sinful leagues, and gadding so much about to change thy way. {#Jer 2:36}

And yet couldest not be satisfied.] It is as easy to quench the fire of Etna as the thoughts set on fire by lust.

Ver. 29. In the land of Canaan.] Thou hast lived in my good land, but not by my good laws.

And yet thou wast not satisfied.] See on #Eze 16:28.

Ver. 30. How weak is thine heart.] Weak as water, melted in spiritual lust, putrefying alive, and perishing daily, as Tiberius said he perceived himself to do at Capreae. {a} This is here uttered by way of admiration; and the word rendered heart, being elsewhere of the masculine gender, is here made feminine, to show how idolaters are effeminated to a base and sensual esteem of God and his service. {Hebrew Text Note}

The work of an imperious whorish woman.] {b} Of a strong whore; {c} weak to do good, but strong to do evil; so are all idolaters with their hippomanes et cacoethes. The word rendered imperious signifieth a sultanness or queen; who, if with a queen, what will she not dare to do? See it in that whore of Babylon, who sitteth as a queen, &c. The unbridled boisterousness of idolaters, see #Jer 44:16,17.

{a} Sueton.

{b} Pervicacissimae et procacissimae.

{c} Une paillardie robuste. -French.

Ver. 31. And hast not been as an harlot, in that thou scornst hire.] Whore should be written hore, as coming from the word hire; as the Latin meretrix a merendo. Harlot is said to come of Arlet, mother to our William the Conqueror; in spite to whom, and disgrace to his mother, the English called all whores harlots, adding an aspiration to her name, according to their manner of pronouncing.

Ver. 32. Which taketh strangers instead of her husband.] This is a foul mistake; wedlock should be chaste. The window of the ark shut, that the waters of the flood enter not into it.

Ver. 33. They give gifts to all whores.] See #Eze 16:31. Harlots are cruces and crumenimulgae, saith the comedian, crosses and suck purses. See #Lu 15:14.

“ *Nuda Venus picta est, nudi pinguntur amores:
Nam quos nuda capit, nudos dimittat oportet.* ”

Ver. 34. And the contrary is in thee, &c.] The Jews, before the Babylonish captivity, were madly and above measure set upon the sin of idolatry, say their own Rabbis; so that if one clothed never so richly had seen an idol on the further side of a broad pool, he would have gone through thick and thin, etiam in cloacalem foetulentam, end even in foul smelling sewers to have worshipped it. {a}

{a} Oecolamp.

Ver. 35. Wherefore, O harlot.] A name good enough for such an odious housewife, the shame of her sex. He is not worthy of an honest name whose deeds are not honest.

Hear the word of the Lord.] Hear thy doom, thy sentence: stoned thou shalt be as an adulteress, slain with the sword as a murderess, burned with fire as an incendiary, because thou hast burned thy children in honour of Moloch. {a}

{a} απ εργων ου καλον ουκ εστιν επι καλα.

Ver. 36. Because thy filthiness.] Heb., Thy poison, aerugo tua. your ill will, Thy filthiness issuing from thee by reason of thine overly frequent and excessive adulteries. He meaneth the infamous fluxes of whores, saith Diodat.

And by the blood.] Heb., Bloods, because scattered about in several drops.

Ver. 37. With whom thou hast taken pleasure.] Or, With whom thou hast been commingled. Iocundata es.

And will discover thy nakedness unto them.] This is by modest women taken for a very great punishment. Polyxena, when she was sacrificed, took great care to fall handsomely. The Milesian maids would not be kept from killing themselves till there was a law made that such as so did should be drawn naked through the market. Till the days of Theodosius senior, if a woman were taken in adultery, they shut her up in a stews, and compelled her beastly, and without all shame, to play the harlot, ringing a bell while the deed was doing, that all the neighbours might be made privy to it. This evil custom that good emperor took away, making other laws for the punishment of adultery.

Ver. 38. And I will judge thee as women that break wedlock.] See #Le 20:10 De 22:22. The Egyptians cut off the harlot's nose, and the adulterer's privy members; the Romans beheaded them; the old Germans whipped them through the streets; Canutus, the Danish king in this land, banished them; Tenedius, a king in another land, did cut them in sunder with an axe; by our laws they are to be hanged, as by the Jews' laws to be stoned. {#Eze 16:40}

And shed blood.] See #Eze 16:35.

I will give thee blood.] God loveth to retaliate.

Ver. 39. They shall throw down thine eminent place.] So did the Turks throw down many both images and churches in Christendom, when people would not be persuaded to cast images out of their churches.

They shall strip thee also of thy clothes.] So the Spaniards did the Dutch, when once they grew fond of the Spanish fashions, as Lavater here notes.

Ver. 40. They shall also bring up a company against thee.] The Chaldeans, that "hasty and bitter nation." {#Hab 1:6}

And they shall stone thee.] See on #Eze 16:35.

Ver. 41. In the sight of many women.] Those matrons whom thou hast misused; and many others who may well be warned, by thy just punishment, to keep their faith to God and man.

Ver. 42. So I will make my fury toward thee to rest.] Sept., I will dismiss mine anger upon thee. Like as when Haman was hanged, Ahasuerus's wrath was pacified; {#Es 7:10} and as when Jonah was cast overboard, the sea was calmed.

Ver. 43. Because thou hast not remembered, &c.] Thou hast not cared to converse with thyself, nor to recogitate my goodness, and thine own badness.

But hast fretted me.] Or, Hast kept a stir with me; or rather, Stirred up thyself against me; and all through want of reflection and self-examination. See #Jer 8:6.

I also will recompense thy way upon thy head.] As the arrows of those Thracians, thrown up against Jupiter, for raining upon them unseasonably, came down again upon their own heads, {a} so here.

{a} Herodot.

Ver. 44. Behold, every one that useth proverbs.] Omnis paraemiator paraemiabit. That is skilful at, and exercised in gibing and jeering; as was Socrates—called therefore ο Σκωπτων, the Scoffer—Democritus, Lucian, Sir Thomas Moore, Erasmus, &c.

Shall use this proverb.] This taunting proverb.

As is the mother, so is her daughter.] The birth followeth the belly. Κακου κορακος κακον ωον. Ill birds lay ill eggs. Qualis hera, talis ancilla, &c.

Ver. 45. Thou art thy mother's daughter.] As like her as if spat out of her mouth; so like her, that thou art the worse again.

Your mother was an Hittite.] And doth therefore seek her daughter in the oven, because she had first been there herself. See #Eze 16:3.

Ver. 46. She and her daughters,] i.e., Her cities and villages.

That dwell at thy left hand.] Thou art well set up therewhile, well neighboured.

That dwelleth at thy right hand.] That did do so, but new dwelleth with devils; being "thrown out for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire." {#Jude 7}

Ver. 47. Yet hast thou not walked after their ways.] But hast out sinned them. Nolunt solita peccare, Do not make a habit of sinning, saith Seneca of some, They will not sin in an ordinary way. Et pudet non esse impudentes, saith Augustine of others; i.e., they are ashamed not to be past shame.

But as if that were a very little thing.] Paululum pauxillumque; A peccadillo.

Ver. 48. As I live, saith the Lord God, Sodom thy sister hath not done.] Heb., If Sodom thy sister hath done, &c.; q.d., Then let me never be trusted more. Here, then, is a double oath taken by God, to assure this people that they had outsinned Sodom—a truth that they would not easily assent to. To this day we cannot get men to believe that their natures are so naught, their lives so lewd, their state so dangerous, as the preachers make them. Their hearts are good, their penny good silver, &c. The prophet Isaiah lost his life, say the Rabbis, for calling the rulers of Jerusalem rulers of Sodom, and the people of Judah people of Gomorrah. {#Isa 1:10}

Ver. 49. Behold, this was the iniquity of thy sister Sodom, pride,] i.e., Haughty mindedness and high conceitedness of their own surpassing excellence and stable felicity. This was the first firebrand that set Sodom on fire.

Fulness of bread.] Gourmandise and surquedry. This fulness bred forgetfulness, and this saturity security.

“*Luxuriant animi rebus plerumque secundis:
Nec facile est aequa commoda mente pati.*”

And abundance of idleness.] Tranquillitas tranquillitatis, rest of rest; and this abused to idleness, deep idleness, which is the devil’s pillow, and the mother of many mischiefs; for he shall not but do naughtily that does nothing.

Neither did she strengthen the hand of the poor.] Inhospitable they were, and unmerciful. The two angels might have lain in the streets for them; neither would they let them rest when Lot had lodged them.

Ver. 50. And they were haughty.] This sin of theirs is once more instanced as the root of the rest, the hate of heaven, and gate to hell.

And committed abomination before me.] That unnatural filthiness which taketh its name from them. This in the Levant is not held a vice, and in Mexico it is one of the Spanish virtues.

Therefore I took them away as I saw good,] sc., By raining down hell from heaven upon them. Hereby also God gave men an example of that rule, that heinous sins bring hideous plagues, as Herodotus also saith of the fall of Troy.

Ver. 51. Neither hath Samaria committed half thy sins.] And yet thou lookest aloof upon her as a far greater sinner than thyself, because already carried captive, whenas thou hast done and spoken evil things as thou couldst, {#Jer 3:5} outdone her a fair deal.

And hast justified thy sisters.] Who may well seem saints in comparison of thee, and yet are as naught as need to be.

Ver. 52. Thou also which hast judged thy sisters.] Passed many harsh and rash censures upon them, not looking at all to the hinder part of the wallet.

Bear thine own shame.] Thou shalt do it sure enough; for where sin is in the saddle, there shame is on the crupper. Accept therefore the punishment of thine iniquity; {#Le 26:43} give glory to God, take shame to thyself.

Ver. 53. When I shall bring again.] Or, If I bring again, which I shall never do. The Jewish doctors indeed would from this verse gather that Sodom and all shall one day be restored again; but that is like to be a long day. The Jews, as they had taken up the opinion of Pythagoras about transanimation, so they had that other of Plato about the great revolution or restitution of all things after certain years.

Then will I bring again the captivity.] The Jews were never perfectly restored, in respect to the glory of the temple, and the state of the kingdom, &c.

Ver. 54. In that thou art a comfort unto them.] #Eze 14:22. Solamen miseris socios habuisse doloris; to have companions in misery is some kind of comfort.

Ver. 55. When thy sister Sodom and her daughters.] See on #Eze 16:53. The Jews still dream that all this shall be done at the coming of their long looked for Messiah, and in his reign on earth for a thousand years. {a} That then also Jerusalem shall be rebuilt and made up of gold, silver, and precious stones, &c. So apt are they to work themselves into the fool's paradise of a sublime dotage.

{a} Jerome in loc.

Ver. 56. For thy sister Sodom was not mentioned.] Thou thoughtest her not worthy to be named in the same day with thee, and little dreamedst that thou shouldst be matched with her in misery. Or thus, Thou wouldst neither hear nor speak of her, though I had thrown her forth for an example of divine vengeance. {#Jude 7}

In the day of thy pride.] Heb., Prides; for pride buddeth, {#Eze 7:10} and, like a great swelling in the body which breaks and runs with loathsome and foul matter, it breaks forth into odious practices.

Ver. 57. Before thy wickedness was discovered,] sc., By my punishments, by my sending the Syrians and Philistines upon thee, in the days of Ahaz, to spoil and despise thee. Compare #Isa 9:12.

Ver. 58. Thou hast borne thy lewdness,] i.e., The punishment of it, and yet art little the better. See #Isa 9:13.

Ver. 59. I will even deal with thee.] I will avenge upon thee the quarrel of my covenant. {#Le 26:25}

Ver. 60. Nevertheless I will remember my covenant.] Here beginneth the evangelical part of the chapter, which is for the comfort of the elect, who would be frightened to hear those direful threats; like as in a house we cannot beat the dogs but the children will fall to crying.

Ver. 61. And be ashamed.] With a saving and savoury shame, such as was that of Ezra and of the penitent publican, proceeding from true compunction, and producing repentance never to be repented of.

When thou shalt receive thy sisters.] Not Sodom only and Samaria, but all the Gentiles whom thou hast imitated; but now shalt become a worthy example of better things.

But not by thy covenant.] Made with thee in Mount Sinai, but by a covenant of grace made in Mount Zion.

Ver. 62. And I will establish my covenant.] My new spiritual and eternal covenant, grounded upon the Messias, and made with the whole Israel according to faith. {#Jer 31:31-34 2Co 3:3 Heb 8:8}

Ver. 63. That thou mayest remember.] Thy many strayings.

And never open thy mouth.] To extenuate thy sins, or to murmur at thy sufferings; but be silent and submissive.

Chapter 17

Ver. 1. And the word of the Lord came.] In the foregoing chapter God had threatened the inhabitants of Jerusalem for violating their covenant with him; and here he threateneth them no less for breach of covenant with men. In case of disobedience to himself, he showeth much patience many times; but in case of disloyalty to a lawful sovereign, against oath especially, he is quick and severe in his executions.

Ver. 2. Son of man, put forth a riddle.] Acue acumen, sharpen a sharpening, or whet a whetting. The prophet might have expressed God's mind in fewer words; but then it would not have taken so deep an impression. Parents must whet God's word upon their children, {#De 6:7} ministers upon their people, and Christians upon one another for the increase of love and good works. {#Heb 10:24} Riddles exercise the wit, and parables help the memory, and excite both attention and affection.

Ver. 3. A great eagle with great wings.] An eagle, that king of birds, is a fit emblem of an emperor; {a} as it is here of Nebuchadnezzar the Great. {#Eze 17:12 Jer 48:40 49:22} Monarchs, as eagles, have quick eyes, long talons, fly high pitches, aim at great matters, strive to get above all others, choose themselves high and firm seats, &c. See #Job 39:27-30, with the notes. Ajax is called αἰτός, an eagle, in Pindarus; so is King Pyrrhus in Plutarch, and took delight in that title. The Spaniard was well laughed at by Captain Drake and his forces when they took Santo Domingo, 1585, and found in the townhall the King of Spain's arms, and under them a globe of the world, out of which issued, not a well-plumed eagle, but a flying home, with this inscription, Non sufficit orbis the world is not enough. We could not so well bridle his Pegasus at Santo Domingo, yet we put a stop to him at Jamaica; but we have lately pulled his plumes in Flanders to some purpose, by gaining from him Dunkirk, now {b} held by the English, and likewise Berghen, another place of great strength, now held by the French; the good news whereof came to us yesterday, being June 27, 1658. Praised be the holy name of God for ever.

Came unto Lebanon,] i.e., Unto Judea, which lieth near the forest of Lebanon, which forest also lieth in the way from Babylon to Judea.

And took the highest branch of the cedar.] Taleam, the top branch. This was Jeconiah. {#2Ki 24:12}

{a} Vide Pier. in Hieroglyph.

{b} This was written June 28, 1658.

Ver. 4. He cropped off the top of his young twigs,] i.e., The nobles carried into captivity with their king, as is to be seen #Eze 17:12. So true is that saying of the Rabbis, Nulla est obiectio in lege quae non habet solutionem in latere, There is no riddle in the law that hath not a solution by the sides of it; and so little cause had that Jesuit,

Barradius, to borrow an argument from this text to prove the Scriptures to be a riddle and obscure.

And carried it into a land of traffic.] Babylonia was so. See #Re 18:11. Rome is so, where all things are saleable and soluble. Omnia Romae vaenalia; as was long since complained.

He set it in a city of merchants.] Some city of Babylon, saith Diodat, assigned to the Jews, which was commodious for traffic, to keep them from all thoughts of war and state policy.

Ver. 5. He took also of the seed of the land.] No foreigner, but one of their own country, and of the blood royal too—viz., Zedekiah. This was a great mercy; as that most spitefully done of Attilus, king of Suecia, to make a dog king of the Danes; as did likewise Gunno, king of the Danes, make a dog king of Norway, appointing counsellors to do all things under his title and name.

And planted it in a fruitful field,] i.e., In Judea, that good land—as Rabahakeh also yieldeth it to have been, whatever Strabo saith to the contrary—where Zedekiah might have lived bravely and reigned prosperously, could he but have been content with his condition:

“*At Paris ut vivat regnetque beatus,
Cogi posse negat.*”—Horat., Epist. ii.

He placed it by great waters, and set it as a willow tree.] A well contented person grows up prosperously, as the willows by the water courses.

Ver. 6. And it grew.] And yet it had a great fall—viz, from a tall cedar to a low vine. Zedekiah, though he had still the title of a king, and was not left without wealth and dignity, yet it was far inferior to that of his predecessors.

“Magna repente ruunt, summa cadunt subito.”

Whose branches turned toward him,] i.e., Toward Nebuchadnezzar, now the chief lord of the land. To him looked and leaned the lords of the land, and so long they did well, for they and the whole kingdom thrived.

Ver. 7. There was also another great eagle,] sc., Pharaoh, another potent monarch; why called an eagle, see on #Eze 17:3.

And, behold, this vine did bend her roots toward him.] Which was the worst chare for herself that ever she did. The devil of discontent put her upon this unhappy project, whereby, instead of mending herself, she soon marred all; so true is that of Solomon, "Wisdom is better than weapons of war: but one sinner destroyeth much good." {#Ec 9:18} Zedekiah little thought once ever to have been a king; Nebuchadnezzar made him so, whenas he might as well have refused him for the rebellions of his two predecessors. He had also dealt nobly with him, though his vassal, and would have defended him against any adverse power, &c., so that he had no reason at all to rebel, but that he was infatuated and besotted by ambition and avarice, which Plutarch finely and fitly calleth νοσηματα συμφορταταις δυναστειαις, diseases natural to potentates.

Ver. 8. It was planted in a good soil.] He was well enough, if he could have kept him so.

“ O fortunates homines, bona si sun norint!”

But discontent enjoyeth nothing: Zedekiah liketh not to be a vine, he must be a cedar. Aut Caesar aut nullus. Either Caesar or nothing.

Ver. 9. Shall it prosper?] How should it? say. "Hath ever any waxed fierce against God (or his substitute) and prospered?" {#Job 9:4} Is perfidy and perjury the right way to prosperity? I trow not.

Shall he not pull up?] He that is the great eagle, {#Eze 17:3} who would be upon them before they were aware.

Without great power, or many people,] i.e., For any great need there shall be of them, since the work shall be done with little ado. If the Chaldeans were but a few, and they all wounded men, they should yet rise up and burn this city, saith Jeremiah. See #2Ch 24:23,24. It is no hard matter, we know, to pluck up a vine, root and branch; God telleth us in the next verse that he can do it with a wind —with a wet finger, as we say.

Ver. 10. Shall it not utterly wither?] As Jonah's gourd did when smitten with a worm; as Phocas's wall came down with a witness, because built upon mines of gunpowder—sin lay at the bottom, as one told him—which, being once fired, would blow up all.

When the east wind toucheth it.] Which is very hurtful to vines, saith, Columella. As all creatures, so the winds are God's agents; as to purge the air—Rupertus calleth them the besoms of the air—and to refresh men's spirits, so to execute many of God's judgments upon his rebels, as here. Aliorum perditio nostra sit cautio; Let other men's destruction be our instruction.

It shall wither in the furrows where it grew,] i.e., In Egypt, where it rained not, but was all watered by furrows drawn from Nile, to run into all their fields. Here this vine should thrive, one would think, if anywhere—viz., in moist and fat furrows but it could not, because blasted by God's curse.

Ver. 11. Moreowr, the word of the Lord came unto me, saying.] God had one saying more to this rebellious house by way of explication here, and another of application for comfort and encouragement to the better sort among them. {#Eze 17:22-24}

Ver. 12. Know ye not what these things mean?] q.d., It is much you should not. There is no such great difficulty in the parable, but that ye are self-blinded, and will not see far off; either your wits serve you not in the things of God, or if they do, you will make believe otherwise. Are ye not, therefore, rightly called a "rebellious house"

Tell them.] For their learnings, and that they may be left without excuse. See on #Eze 17:4.

Ver. 13. And hath taken an oath of him.] An oath of allegiance. Heb., Hath brought him into an execration, or an oath with cursing, that he shall be true and loyal to him, and hold his kingdom of him as his liege lord, and pay him tribute. This, though we find not in the book of Kings, yet from what we here find, we are sure it was so.

Ver. 14. That the kingdom might be base.] The mighty of the land being taken away, {as #Eze 17:13} and the spirits of the vest imbed by burdens and oppressions in their estates and liberties.

But that by keeping of his covenant.] The breach whereof was the break neck of the state, as it hath been of many others, and will be shortly of the Turks—who hold that there is no faith to be kept with dogs, that is, with Christians—and of the Popes, who hold that there is no faith to be kept with heretics, that is, with Protestants; and for all others, it is written by an Italian, no stranger to the court of Rome, that their proverb is, Mercatorum eat, non regum, stare iuramentis, that it is for merchants, and not for monarchs, to stand to their oaths. Shall such stand? shall they thus escape by iniquity?

Ver. 15. But he rebelled against him.] As Ottocarus, king of Bohemia, did against Rodolphus, the first emperor of Germany, by the instigation of his queen; and as Ladislaus, king of Hungary, did against Amurath, the Turkish emperor, by the encouragement of Capistranus, the Pope's agent, to the very great reproach of the Christian religion.

Ver. 16. As I live.] So surely will I punish perjury and treachery. Histories are full of examples in this kind, and I have elsewhere recited some of them. That of Henry III of France, related by a reverend man, ^{a} deserves to be memorised: After great differences between him, the Cardinal, and Duke of Guise, he was reconciled unto them, confirmed the reconciliation with many oaths, took the sacrament upon it, and gave himself to the devil, body and soul, in case he meant or should attempt anything against them. Yet, saith the story, he caused the Duke to be killed in his own presence, and the Cardinal, his brother, the next day after. Here was breach of covenant; but did he prosper, escape, do such things, and have deliverance? No; within eight months after, he was slain by a friar in the midst of his army.

^{a} Mr Greenhill.

Ver. 17. Neither shall Pharaoh.] God will cause the strongest sinew in the arm of flesh to crack. See #Ps 33:10,11.

Ver. 18. Seeing he despised the oath.] Despised it ex fastu quodam, out of pride and disdain, as the word signifieth, as Pascenius the Papist jeereth at King James for inventing the oath of allegiance. There is in our chronicles a memorable story of one Sir Ralph Percy, slain upon Hegely Moor, in Northumberland, by the Lord Mountacute, general for Edward IV. He would in no way depart the field, though defeated; but, in dying, said, I have saved the bird in my breast, meaning his oath to King Henry VI ^{a} Had false Zedekiah done so, he had, for this once at least, escaped; but ambition—whose motto is said to be Sic mea fata sequor So I follow my destiny—was his ruin.

{a} Speed.

Ver. 19. Surely mine oath.] Because taken by my name, so that I am deeply engaged, highly concerned in it.

Ver. 20. And I will spread my net upon him.] See on #Eze 12:13. The history telleth us that when Zedekiah, with his nobles, were gotten into the plains of Jericho, and thought themselves out of danger, those great hunters the Babylonians caught him, and carried him to their king.

Ver. 21. And all his fugitives.] See on #Eze 14:13,14.

They shall know.] Sero sapient: vexatio tandem dabit intellectum. All too late they shall acknowledge it.

Ver. 22. I will also take of the highest branch of the high cedar.]

{a} Understand this great and precious promise of Zerubbabel and his successors, but especially of Christ and his kingdom. How oft in the prophets is he styled the "branch." {#Isa 11:1} And how ordinary is it with God, after dreadful threats against the wicked, to come in with his attamen nevertheless for the comfort of his elect, who in their deepest distress have cause enough to encourage themselves in the Lord Christ their God, as did David at the sack of Ziklag. {#1Sa 30:6} Here they are excited, in the loss of all else, to fetch comfort from Christ's descent from David, his exaltation to the kingdom of the Church universal, his bounty and benefits, his bringing in the fulness of the Gentiles, and his setting forth of his Father's glory.

A tender one.] Tenellum. Christ, of weak and low beginning.

And will plant it.] Upon Zion, {#Ps 2:6} spiritual especially. Upon Calvary, saith Theodoret, expounding the Septuagint, who render the text thus, I will hang it upon the high mountain of Israel.

{a} Insignis est haec prophetia. -Lavat.

Ver. 23. In the mountain.] In the Church, that highest top.

And it shall bring forth boughs, &c.] Christ shall yield food and defence to all his.

All fowl of every wing,] i.e., The just, saith the Chaldee, who mind heavenly things, and mount upward.

Ver. 24. And all the trees of the field,] i.e., All men, high and low.

Have brought down.] This God loves to do, as heathens could say.

Have exalted the low.] Lavater thinks our Saviour alluded to this text in that parable {#Mt 13:3-8} of the grain of mustard seed.

Chapter 18

Ver. 1. And the word of the Lord came unto me.] This is oft prefaced by the prophets to make their sermons more authoritative and authentic. Pausanias telleth us that some heathen sages, to add weight to their works, were wont to prefix Θεος, Θεος, i.e., God, God.

Ver. 2. What mean you?] Or, What is come to you?— quoae vos dementia cepit? -that you do so toss this sinful and senseless proverb among you, both at Jerusalem {#Jer 31:29} and also here at Babylon.

“ Delicta parentum

Immeritus Iudaeae luis? ”

Must I be blasphemed rather than you faulted? Is it for your fathers' sins only that ye suffer? And do ye thus think to put off the reproofs of the prophets, as if yourselves had not seconded and outsinned your fathers, and are therefore justly punished?

The fathers have eaten sour grapes.] Sin is no better. It is an "evil and a bitter thing to forsake the Lord." {#Jer 2:19} What wild sour grapes your fathers both bred and fed upon, see #Isa 5:2,8,11,20-22; and it was woe, woe unto them.

And the children's teeth are set on edge.] Or, Stupefied. But is there not a cause? and are there not sins enough with you, even with you, to procure your ruth and your ruin? but that I must be injurious rather than you be found obnoxious?

Ver. 3. Ye shall not have occasion any more.] For I will shortly take an order with you; and not by words, but by blows, vindicate my just judgments from your cavils and scurrilities.

Ver. 4. Behold all souls are mine.] So that to show my sovereignty I may do with them as I see good. Howbeit, let me tell you that I slay none but for his sins, i.e., idque ipsi sua iniustitia eventit, non iniuria mea, the fault is merely in himself; so little reason is there that you should be thus quarrelsome and contumelious against me.

The soul that sinneth it shall die,] i.e., Shall suffer for his sin either here or hereafter, without repentance. Every man shall bear his own burden, every tub shall stand upon its own bottom, and every fox yield his own skin to the flayer, as the Jews at this day proverbially can say.

Ver. 5. But if a man be just.] Keep faith and a good conscience; do good acts, and have good aims; do all as well as any, not this or that, but this and that too, as here it followeth, duties of piety, and duties of charity.

Ver. 6. And hath not eaten upon the mountains,] i.e., Hath not offered there to idols; for at their sacrifices they feasted. {#Ex 32:1-6} The people sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to play. See #Eze 20:28 Ho 4:13.

Neither hath lift up his eyes to the idols.] As every Papist doth daily, and is therefore no righteous person, such as is here described. Neither helpeth it, that they are the "idols of the house of Israel," and not the idols of the nations.

Neither hath come near to a menstruous woman.] Though his own wife. {#Le 18:19 20:18} Adulter enim est uxoris propriae ardentior amator; said a heathen; There is a time to embrace, and a time to refrain from embracing. {#Ec 3:5}

Ver. 7. And hath not oppressed any.] Either by force or fraud.

Hath given his bread to the hungry.] Negative goodness alone is little worth. Men must not only rob the hospital, as we say, spoil the poor by violence, but "draw forth their souls," and their sheaves both, "to the hungry," and clothe the naked with a garment, or they cannot have the comfort and credit of just men.

Ver. 8. He that hath not given forth upon usury.] Of this sin, see what I have said elsewhere. {#Ex 22:25 Ps 15:5 Ne 5:10}

Neither hath taken any increase.] Interest we call it now, after the French, who first helped us to that fine word. {a} But let the patrons of usury consider that what distinctions soever they bring for it, God alloweth here of no usury, but condemneth both Neshec the biting, and Tarbith the toothless usury, as equally naught.

That hath withdrawn his hand from iniquity.] Whether it be injury to another, revenge, raking together riches of unrighteousness, reaching after honours, &c.

Hath executed true judgment.] Without partiality or passion, whether he be a judge or an arbitrator.

{a} Nihil interest inter funas et foenus; nihil inter mortem distat et sortem. -Ambros.

Ver. 9. Hath walked in my statutes.] Qui leges iuraque servat. It is as if the prophet had said There are many more characters of a righteous man, but I shall shut up all with this: He that is right in his obedience for matter, manner, motive, and end, he is the man I mean; "He shall surely live."

Ver. 10. If he beget a son.] As he may; for grace is not hereditary. Heroum filii noxae.

That is a robber.] Effractor. A breach maker, whether upon the laws of God, or of men; one that is a pestilent son, as the Septuagint here have it, a plague to his parents, and to his country.

And that doth the like to any one of these things.] Or, That doth to his brother besides any of these, as there are mille artes nocendi.

Ver. 11. And that doth not any of these duties.] Bare omissions may undo a man. Not robbing only, but the not relieving of the poor, was the rich man's ruin.

Ver. 12. Hath committed abomination.] Such is every of the sins here instanced, whatsoever some can say in defence of them. Hath given forth upon usury, and all.

Ver. 13. He hath done all these abominations.] Or, If he have done but one of them, and undo it not again by true repentance.

He shall surely die.] Neither shall his father's righteousness privilege him, or prevail at all for him.

His blood shall be upon him.] He is felo de se, his own death's man, and his mends he hath in his own hands, as they say.

Ver. 14. Now, lo, if he beget a son that seeth.] And withal sigheth, his eye affecting his heart with grief and dislike.

And considereth,] viz., Of the ill consequence of those courses, et cavet et pavet. And consider and be frightened.

Ver. 15. That hath not eaten.] See on #Eze 18:6.

Ver. 16. See on #Eze 18:7.

Ver. 17. See on #Eze 18:8,9.

Ver. 18. Spoiled his brother by violence.] A man had as good deal with a Cossack or a cannibal as with a truly covetous criminal. "They hunt every man his brother with a net." {#Mic 7:2}

And did that which is not good among his people.] It should be every man's care to be some way serviceable to God and profitable to men. Let no man turn himself into a cipher, nay, into an excrement, that lives in the world to no purpose, yea, to bad purpose. Oh it is good to do something whereby the world may be the better, and not to come hither merely as rats and mice, only to devour victuals, and to run squeaking up and down.

Ver. 19. Yet say ye, Why? doth not the son bear the iniquity of the father?] Thus these unreasonable refractories will not be said, but continue chatting against God, quasi dicant, certe tu non potes negare, &c. {a} Some are ἀτοποι; {#2Th 3:2} they have no topics; there is no talking to them; they will not be set down with right reason.

When the son hath done that is lawful and right.] What a meek, sweet, and satisfactory answer doth God make to these importunate complainers against him! Here we have their replication and his duplication; as #Eze 18:25, we have their triplication and his quadruplication. Oh the infinite patience of our good God!

{a} Piscator.

Ver. 20. The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father.] The innocent son shall not, unless it be in temporals only, and that in some cases. {#De 24:16 2Ki 14:6 2Ch 15:4} It was the cruel manner of Uladus, prince of Valachia, together with the offender, to execute the whole family, yea, sometimes the whole kindred. {a} A like cruelty was used in Scotland by the Pope's appointment upon the kindred of those that had slain David Beaton, in revenge of the death of that butcherly bishop. {b} Lavater {c} telleth us here, out of the annals of the Switzers, his countrymen, that when Albertus, the son of Rodolphus Caesar, was slain by his nephew John Hapsburg and some other nobles, his children, Duke Leopold and Agnes Queen of Hungary, put to death not the murderers only, but their children and kinsfolk also not a few, and utterly overturned divers strongholds in Switzerland. But this was not the way of God, nor did it prosper in their hand. Cruelty calleth aloud for vengeance.

The righteousness,] i.e., It shall be well with the righteous, and woe with the wicked. {#Isa 3:10,11}

{a} Turkish History.

{b} Acts and Mon.

{c} Lav. in loc.

Ver. 21. But if the wicked will turn, &c.] That is, saith Theodoret, so far am I from punishing one for the sins of another, that I am ready to receive a returning sinner, how far or how fast soever he hath run out.

And keep all my statutes.] For the best and rightest repentance is a new life, saith Luther.

Ver. 22. All his transgressions.] So true is that of an ancient, Quem poenitet peccasse, poene est innocens -Penitence is nearly as good as innocence.

In his righteousness.] Or, For his righteousness, tanquam ob causum sine qua non, et ob promissionem Dei, {a} not of merit, but mercy and free grace.

{a} Piscator.

Ver. 23. Have I any pleasure at all that the wicked should die?] No, verily; for then he should do nothing but do and undo, make a world and unmake it again, since we provoke him continually; but he is longsuffering.

“ Atque dolet quoties cogitur esse ferox.”

And not that he should return.] Had not I rather pardon than punish? Is not this last my work, my strange work {#Isa 28:21}

Ver. 24. But when the righteous.] He that is good in his own eyes, and passeth for good in the esteem of others, but yet is not really righteous, if such a one do utterly fall away, and lose that little that he seemed to have, what wonder? Common grace can never hold out, or stretch to eternity. Bellarmine saith well, That which is true grace, veritate essentiae, only may be lost: not that that is true veritate firma soliditatis, with the truth of firm solidity; which latter, being rightly understood, may be called special, as the other common grace.

Ver. 25. Yet ye say.] Ye will still hold your own, and no reason shall persuade you. A stubborn man standeth as a stake in a stream, lets all pass by him, but he standeth still where he was.

Is not my way equal?] This he had said before but he saith it again, $\Delta\iota\varsigma$ και τρις τα καλα. Cicero, aggravating the fact of a parricide, useth these words, Matrem tuam occidisti: quid dicam amplius? Matrem tuam occidisti -Thou hast killed thy mother, man: what should I say more? then hast killed thy mother, I tell thee.

Are not your ways unequal?] They are so, and that apparently: but that your mouth is out of taste, and ye cannot relish truth; your eyes are sore, and ye cannot behold the sunbeams; you are prejudiced, biased, perverted.

Ver. 26. When a righteous man turneth,] q.d. Shall I say the selfsame over again to you? I had need do so surely, and all little enough.

And dieth in them,] sc., In his wicked ways: this undoeth him. It is not falling into the water that drowneth a man, but long lying under it.

Ver. 27. Again, when the wicked man turneth away.] This also he had said before, {#Eze 18:21-23} but men had need to hear this sweet promise over and over, because there is in the best a natural Novatianism to doubt and question pardon for sins, if great and grievous ones especially.

Ver. 29. Because he considereth.] Consideration necessarily precedeth conversion. {#Ps 119:59 La 3:40 Jer 8:6} The prodigal came to himself first, and then went home to his father. See on #Eze 18:14.

Ver. 29. Yet saith the house of Israel.] Yet; for all that I can say to the contrary. They will still hold their own; they will be dicti sui domini, &c., such was their impudence and petulance. God therefore gives over the confutation, and comes to the conclusion of this contestation.

Ver. 30. Therefore I will judge you.] I will word it no longer with you, but clear up and vindicate my justice, which you have calumniated, in your deserved destruction, except ye repent.

Repent and turn yourselves.] Or, Others. Lay aside your complaints and contumelies against me, and take notice that the best thing you can do is to "take hold of my strength that ye may make peace with me, and ye shall make peace with me." {#Isa 27:5}

Ver. 31. Cast away from you, &c.] And so evidence the soundness of your repentance. He that repenteth with a contradiction, as continuing in his sins, shall be pardoned with a contradiction—that is, cast into hell.

All your transgression.] All, as well as any; else ye do but take pains to go to hell. Gideon's one bastard slew all his seventy sons; so will one bastardly sin, reserved and allowed, slay the soul. Men should do by their sins as our forefathers did by the Danes here, make an utter riddance of them; and as the Sicilians did by the French among them, whom they not only massacred to a man, but also ripped up all their own women that were with child by the French, that not one drop of French blood might remain among them.

Make you a new heart.] Wait upon God for it in the constant use of means, that ye may bring forth fruits meet for repentance.

Ver. 32. For I have no pleasure.] See on #Eze 18:23 33:11.

Chapter 19

Ver. 1. Moreover take thou up a lamentation.] A threnodia, a doleful ditty. In all ages things joyful and sorrowful were made up in songs and ballads for popular use.

For the princes of Israel.] Those four last kings—princes rather than kings, because vassals to Egypt and Babylon—who, by starting unnecessary wars, wrought their own and their country's ruin.

Ver. 2. What is thy mother?] Whereby is meant thy city of Jerusalem and people of the Jews, who took these four for their kings, and soon had enough of them.

A lioness.] So called for her nobleness, courage, and cruelty.

She lay down among lions.] Alludit ad coitum It signifieth that this state, by conversing with other heathen princes, had been corrupted by them and conformed unto them.

She nourished her whelps among young lions.] From whom they took in but few good principles for young princes. Wickedness is soon learned Of a certain prince of Germany it was said, Esset alius si esset apud alios, his company undid him: So it did Julian the apostate.

Ver. 3. And she brought up one of her whelps.] This was Jehoahaz.

It became a young lion.] Cunning and cruel, and having never a good property, though the son of good Josiah; who might better have said than that pope did of his wicked son, Caesar Borgia, Haec vitia me non commonstratore dedicit, He never learned it of his father.

It devoured men.] He was a very cannibal to his subjects, and made no more conscience to undo a poor man, to seek and suck his blood, than to eat a meal's meat when hungry. {#Ps 14:4}

Ver. 4. The nations also heard of him.] His lion-like disposition and practices were soon noised and noticed.

He was taken in their pit.] As lions are taken by their hunters. Tyrants hold not their own long those beasts are "made to be taken and destroyed"; as Nero, whom the senate judged to death as an enemy to mankind; ^{a} and as Commodus, who was, saith Orosius, cunctis incommodus, a mischief to mankind.

^{a} Ex conducto omnes conveniunt ut eum capiant.

Ver. 5. Now when she saw that she had waited and her hope was lost.] She looked for Jehoahaz's return out of Egypt, as Sisera's mother did for his safe and victorious return from the battle; but all in vain. "The hope of the hypocrite shall perish."

Then she took another of her whelps.] A brat of the same breed, and of no better condition. Judea changed her lords oft, but not her miseries. So did Rome in the times between Augustus and Constantine the Great; the names of those few of them that were good might be written within the compass of a signet, as one said. Scarce any of them died a natural death, unless it were Vespasian, qui solus imperatorum mutatus in melius, ^{a} who also was the only emperor that became better by his preferment.

^{a} Tacitus.

Ver. 6. He went up and down, &c.] Of whom he learned to king it, and to lionise it. See #Eze 19:2,3.

Learned to catch the prey.] To pull his subjects, and to make havoc, as our Henry III did, who was therefore called Regni dilapidator. destroyer of the kingdom.

And devoured men.] As #Eze 19:3; see #Jer 20:17.

Ver. 7. And he knew their desolate places.] He had made them desolate, and bereft them of their right owners, whom he had devoured, and then seized them for himself. Some read and render it, He knew their desolate widows—i.e., He first killed up their husbands, and then lay with the widows: the men he devoured, the women he deflowered. Such work this wicked prince made, till God took him in hand; as he did also the other three here lamented, of whom may be said, as Plutarch doth of Galba, Otho, and Vitellius, emperors, that they were like kings in a tragedy, which last no longer than the time that they are represented on the stage.

Ver. 8. Then the nations set against him on every side.] Nebuchadnezzar, with the neighbour nations his auxiliaries.

They spread their net over him.] As they did also over the two last kings, though not here specified, Jehoiakim and Zedekiah, because they chose rather to run the hazard of ruin by rebellion, than to continue safely with slavery.

He was taken in their pit.] See #Eze 19:4, an ordinary way of taking lions, as Pliny telleth us. Leones maxime foveis capiuntur.

Ver. 9. And they put him in ward in chains.] Or, Hooks. As lions are not looked upon, but through a grate. In claustrum. God knows how to hamper the most truculent tyrants, as he did also Bajazet.

They brought him into holds.] Into some strong tower, or rock, where he died; and his body was afterwards thrown out upon a dunghill. {#Jer 22:18}

Ver. 10. Thy mother is like a vine in thy blood.] The same lamentation is here continued, though under another parable—viz., of a wasted vine. Jerusalem was once a generous fruitful spreading vine. It began to be so again in some sort under Zedekiah, if he could have been contented. See on #Eze 17:5,8.

Ver. 11. And she had strong rods for sceptres.] So firm were the branches of this vine, so many and likely to succeed him in the kingdom were Zedekiah's children; his nobles also were men of great parts, and fit for greater employments.

And she appeared in her height.] High she grew, and in addition high minded, and so ripe for ruin.

Ver. 12. But she was plucked up in fury.] And so thrown with a force to the ground, as a man doth a dry or barren plant.

The east wind dried up her fruit.] See #Eze 17:10. It is ventus urens et exsiccans; burning and drying wind this was Nebuchadnezzar and his army.

Ver. 13. And now she is planted in a wilderness.] Babylon was no wilderness, but fruitful beyond credulity, ^{a} But the poor captive Jews had little joy from it, for some time at least.

In a dry and thirsty ground.] In terra sicca et sitiouloſa. So it was to them, though never ſo well watered, becauſe they wanted there the waters of the ſanctuary, and many other comforts of their own country. See #Ps 137:1-6

^{a} Herodot., lib. i. cap. 193; Plin., lib. vi. cap. 26.

Ver. 14. And fire is gone out of a rod of her branches,] i.e., Zedekiah, by his perjury and rebellion, hath ruined all, ſet all on a light fire.

So that ſhe hath no ſtrong rod, &c.] None to ſpeak of till Shiloh come. Rulers indeed they had after this and governors, ^{#Hag 2:21} but no kings of their own nation.

This is a lamentation.] See on #Eze 19:1.

And ſhall be for a lamentation.] Jeruſalem plangitur et plangetur. The nation of the Jews ſhall never want matter for mourning.

Chapter 20

Ver. 1. And it came to paſs.] This chapter fitly followeth the former. There theſe malcontents had complained that the fathers had ſinned and the children ſuffered. Here is evinced that there was never a better of them, that a viperous brood they had been from the firſt, that they were ſome of them naught all. ^{a}

In the ſeventh year,] ſcil., Of Jeconiah's captivity: and every year ſeemed ſeven, till the ſeventy were expired. The years of our miſery we reckon; not ſo of our proſperity, which yet we ſhould duly prize and improve.

That certain of the elders of Iſrael.] Not Ananias, Azarias, and Miſael, as the Jews fable: but worſe men, rank hypocrites.

Came to inquire.] But were resolved of their course, and had made their conclusion before they came. {#Eze 20:32} Either the prophet should chime in with the false prophets, who told them they should be sent home ere long, or else they would, for peace sake, worship idols and comport with the Babylonians; which yet, if they had done, it might have proved nothing better with them than it did with those renegade Christians in Turkey, who, falling down, many thousands of them, before Solyman II, and holding up the forefinger, as their manner is, in token of their conversion to Mohammedanism, he asked what moved them to turn? they replied, it was to be eased of their heavy taxations. He, disdainng that baseness, or not willing to lose in tribute for an unsound accession in religion, rejected their conversion, and doubled their taxations. {b}

{b} Sir Henry Blunt's Voy. into Levant p. 111.

Ver. 2. Then came.] See on #Eze 18:1.

Ver. 3. Are ye come to inquire of me?] q.d., I scorn the motion, I loathe your false looks, be packing with your putrid hypocrisy. God will detect and shame gross hypocrites, as he did Jeroboam's wife, the rotten hearted Pharisees, Ananias and Sapphira, that sorry couple, that consented to "tempt the Holy Ghost," as these elders also did—that is, to make trial whether he be omniscient, and able to detect and punish them.

I will not be inquired of by you.] "The sacrifice of the wicked is abomination; how much more when he bringeth it with a wicked mind?" as these did. {#Pr 21:27}

Ver. 4. Wilt thou judge them?] Or, Wilt thou excuse them? or, Wilt thou intercede for them? If thou hast never so good a mind to do so, yet do it not; rather reprove them for, and convince them of, their sins; spare thy charity, and exercise thine authority of "having in readiness to revenge their disobedience." {#2Co 10:6} An causam ageres eorum? Abigendi sunt potius quam docendi. Ostendit Dominus ulcus profundum esse.

Cause them to know the abominations of their fathers.] By themselves avowed, abetted, augmented; their fathers' iniquity they have drawn together with cart ropes of vanity.

Ver. 5. In the day when I chose Israel.] Declared them to be my firstborn, and so higher than the kings of the earth. {#Ps 89:27}

When I lifted up mine hand unto them, saying, I am the Lord your God.] This sweet promise is not so easily, and, indeed, is never enough, believed, and is therefore here confirmed by God's solemn oath thrice repeated, "that by two immutable things, wherein it was impossible for God to lie, his people might have strong consolation."
{#Heb 6:18}

Ver. 6. Into a land that I had espied for them.] Humanitus dictum. Finding it out, as it were, by diligent search. {#Nu 10:33} Look how a father findeth out for his son a habitation fit for him, a help meet for him, other things necessary for his comfortable subsistence; so dealt God by his Israel. He brought them to a land which himself had carefully sought out; his eyes were always upon it, from the beginning of the year even unto the end of the year. {#De 11:12}

Flowing with milk and honey,] i.e., Abounding with choice and cheap commodities.

Which is the glory of all lands.] Or, Flower; decorem et desiderium. It was so then, it is not so now, since the Jews were disprivileged and dejected; but as in the earthly paradise, after man fallen, cecidit rosa, mansit spina, the rose fell off, the brier whereon it grew remained; so here. See on #Da 8:9 11:16.

Ver. 7. Then said I unto them,] viz., While yet in Egypt. This we find not in Exodus; it is enough that we find it here. See #Job 5:9.
{See Trapp on "Job 5:9"}

Cast ye away every man the abominations of his eyes.] The idols to which your eyes are lifted up, {#Eze 18:6} and which are, or should be, to you, as Alexander called the Persian maids, dolores oculorum, eye griefs.

Ver. 8. But they rebelled against me.] I might say what I would, but they would do what they list. Good they were ever, if I may call it so, at resisting the Holy Ghost, obstinate idolaters from the very first; so that God had even as much ado to forbear killing them, as ever he had Moses in the same country for neglecting to circumcise his child. {#Ex 4:24}

Neither did they forsake the idols of Egypt.] This we read not of in Exodus either; it is enough that we have it here. The ingratitude of these Israelites was the greater, because God had done much for them, and was daily admonishing them of better things.

Then said I, I will pour out my fury.] It was not therefore for nothing that Israel suffered so much in Egypt. Many now marvel at their own miseries, but think not of their sins, the cause.

Ver. 9. But I wrought for my name's sake.] Lest the heathens should say to my dishonour, Me non voluisse aut valuisse eos educere, that I either would not, or could not, bring them out of the house of bondage. Ergo quod nomen suum in nobis servandis asserat, sperandum est. It is also well to be hoped that God will deal favourably with the reformed churches, though ill deserving, for the dishonour that else would redound to himself. Fiat, fiat.

Ver. 10. Wherefore I caused them.] With a strong hand and an outstretched arm I caused it, against all the force of Egypt. {#Ex 13:18} God hath also mightily brought England out of Egypt spiritually, and dealt with it, not according to his ordinary rule, but according to his prerogative.

And brought them into the wilderneas.] Where I was not any "wilderness unto them, or land of darkness," {#Jer 2:31} but a God all-sufficient, raining bread from heaven upon them, and setting the flint abroad, rather than they should pine and perish.

Ver. 11. And I gave them my statutes.] Which were far beyond the laws of the twelve tables in Rome, whereof yet Cicero affirmeth that they were far beyond all the libraries of philosophers.

And shewed them my judgments.] Statutes and judgments are usually put in Scripture for one and the same, though the lawyers make a difference of them. Prosper's conceit was, that this people were called Judaei. because they received ius Dei the law of God.

Which if a man do.] But that he can never do exactly; evangelically he may, and that sufficeth to life eternal.

Ver. 12. Moreover also, I gave them my Sabbaths.] A sweet mercy, without which the best would even grow wild. What a wretch then was that Egyptian in Phagius, who said that those Jews, and after them the Christians, had a loathsome disease upon them, and were therefore fain to rest the seventh day!

To be a sign between me and them.] A distinctive sign of my distinguishing grace to Israel above others, who jeered them for sabbatising, as those that lost a seventh part of their precious time. To be also both a sign of a godly person—anciently, when the question was propounded, Servasti Dominicum? Hast thou kept the Lord’s-day? the answer was returned, I am a Christian, and can do no less—and a means of conveying more holiness into his heart.

Ver. 13. But the house of Israel rebelled.] They did little else; they made it their trade for forty years long. {#Ps 95:8-11}

And my Sabbaths they greatly polluted.] They vehemently violated; either they rested only thereon, or else they shamelessly troubled and disquieted that sanctified day of God’s rest. The world, saith one, {a} is now grown perfectly profane, and can play on the Lord’s-day without book.

Then I said, I would pour out my fury.] God’s sayings are of two sorts; some are the sayings of his eternal counsel, and these are immutable; others of his threatening only, and these oft are conditional. God therefore threateneth that he may not punish, saith an ancient.

{a} Bishop King on Jonah.

Ver. 14. But I wrought for my name’s sake.] Oh how oft are we beholden to this motive, and do escape fair by this means! See on #Eze 20:9.

Ver. 15. Yet also I lifted up mine hand.] Here we have an epitome of Exodus and Numbers.

Flowing with milk and honey.] See on #Eze 20:6. If it be not so fertile and desirable now, it is for the Jews’ inexpressible guilt in crucifying the Lord of glory. The like befell Sodom—once as the garden of God, now a dead sea, where nothing can live.

Ver. 16. For their heart went after their idols.] Heb., Their duncy deities; those dirty delights carried them sheer away from God and goodness. Any beloved sin will do so.

Ver. 17. Nevertheless mine eye spared them.] It was by a non obstante of God's mercy, and by a prop of his extraordinary patience, that they subsisted.

Ver. 18. Walk ye not in the statutes of your fathers.] With this text Frederick IV, prince palatine, answered another prince, who pressed him to be of his late noble father's religion. Laban swore by the god of Nahor, or Abram, and of their idolatrous fathers; but Jacob sware by the "fear of his father Isaac," his immediate father more right in religion. {#Ge 31:53} Joshua would not follow the footsteps of his forefathers, {#Jos 24:15} but a better precedent. Christ saith, Ego sum veritas, non vetustas; I am the truth not antiquity, and contradicteth that which was said of old by those Kadmonim, who had corrupted the letter of the law by their false glosses. {#Mt 5:21} Antiquity must have no more authority than it can maintain.

Ver. 19. Walk in my statutes.] This is a surer and safer way. Lex, lux: "The commandment is a lamp, and the law is light." {#Pr 6:23} Come, therefore, to this light, that your deeds may be made manifest that they are wrought in God. {#Joh 3:21}

Ver. 20. And hallow my Sabbaths.] By abandoning as well spiritual idleness as corporal labour.

And they shall be a sign.] See on #Eze 20:11.

Ver. 21. See on #Eze 20:13.

Ver. 22. See on #Eze 20:14.

Ver. 23. See on #Eze 20:15.

Ver. 24. See on #Eze 20:16.

Ver. 25. Wherefore I gave them also statutes that were not good.] i.e., I gave them up to their own inventions and hearts' lusts (which was worse than to be delivered up to Satan), because they were ingrati gratiae Dei, as Ambrose hath it; they received the grace of God in vain. By "statutes not good," some understand the ceremonial laws, which commanded neither virtue nor vice in themselves. Others, such decrees and ordinances of God in the wilderness as were not good for them, but hurtful; as that for the execution of the calf worshippers, of the Baalpeorites, of Korah and his company, of the murmurers at Kibrothhattaavah, &c. Solon being asked whether he had given the best laws to the Athenians? answered, The best that they could bear.

Ver. 26. And I polluted them in their own gifts,] i.e., I rejected both their persons and presents as unclean. So God would do our best performances (wherein there would not else be so much as truth and sincerity found), were they not wrought in us by the Holy Spirit, and perfumed with Christ's sweet odours poured into them.

Ver. 27. Your fathers have blasphemed me.] Because they trembled not at my judgments while they hung in the threatenings, but went on wilfully in their wickedness, putting it to the venture. This is a kind of blasphemy. Compare #Nu 15:30,31. This is a sin scarce to be expiated with any sacrifice: such a sinner must be cut off.

Ver. 28. For when I had brought them into the land.] It hath been already observed that good turns aggravate unkindnesses, and men's sins are much increased by their obligations.

Ver. 29. And the name thereof is called Bamah,] i.e., A high place; a name good enough in itself, but, as used by them, as odious to all good hearts as a brothel house is to a chaste matron. She is the worse to pass by it, and spitteth at it. So should we in like case. {#Ex 23:13 Ps 16:4 Ho 2:16,17 Zec 13:2 De 12:2}

Ver. 30. Are ye polluted after the manner of your fathers?] q.d., Are you good at that indeed? and have you yet a face to threadbare that paltry proverb of yours, The fathers have eaten sour grapes? &c. Give over, for shame.

Ver. 31. And shall I be inquired of by you?] Is it ever likely to do well, think you? Of witches' good prayers, as some call them, one saith well: Si magicae, Deus non vult tales: si piae, non per tales. See #Jer 7:9,10. {See Trapp on "Jer 7:9"} {See Trapp on "Jer 7:10"}

Ver. 32. And that which cometh into your mind shall not be at all.] You are laying a plot for an accommodation with the Babylonish idolaters, a compliance with them, and thereby you think to ingratiate, to get their favour and friendship. But please not yourselves in such a project; it will never be. So, no peace with Rome. The Moderater, Sancta Clara, and other such as sought to bring us together, made a pretty show, saith one, if there had been no Bible. Such carnal professors are not unlike these in the text, as seeing the wicked's full cups, and their own harder condition, are ready to revolt, that "waters of a full cup may be wrung out to them" also. {#Ps 73:10}

We will be as the heathen.] And so help ourselves as we can, since God will not help us.

Ver. 33. Surely with a mighty hand.] You are ready to say, as in #Jer 2:31, We are lords; we will come no more unto thee; but I shall sure subdue you as so many perverse slaves or sturdy rebels. So unhappy is apostasy; so little is got by struggling, or by starting aside like a deceitful bow. God will rule over such with rigour; he will have the better of them to their small comfort.

Ver. 34. And I will bring you out from the people.] The heathens with whom you have incorporated, hoping so to shun me, and to be out of the reach of my rod; but I shall sure find and ferret you out of all your starting holes; I shall be meet with you. So God was here with the English by the sweating sickness, which hunted and haunted also our countrymen in foreign parts, singling them out from others. It reigned, or rather God reigned by it, some forty years together. {a}

{a} Sennert. De Febrib., lib. iv. cap. 15.

Ver. 35. And I will bring you into the wilderness of the people.] Into the most solitary and savage places of the world, for a fulness of misery without the benefit of any good society.

And there will I plead with you face to face,] i.e., Solus cum solis et sine arbitris, Having you there alone, I will punish you to some purpose.

Ver. 36. Like as I pleaded with your fathers in the wilderness.] Where their carcasses fell thick and threefold, till they were all consumed. "Behold we die, we perish, we all perish," said they once to Moses in a pet; "shall we be consumed with dying?" {#Nu 17:12,13}

Ver. 37. And I will cause you to pass under the rod, and I will bring you into the bond of the covenant.] Why, then, Feri, Domine, feri, Smite, Lord, smite, so my sins may be pardoned, and my soul saved. Hic seca, hic ure, ut in aeternum serves, Here suffer, here burn that you may protect us in eternity, said an ancient: Do even whatsoever thou wilt with me, so I may come to heaven, though I come to it by weeping cross.

Ver. 38. And I will purge out from among you the rebels.] Making first a difference, and then a riddance of them from among my covenanters.

And they shall not enter into the land of Israel.] But either die by the way, or, if they live to enter, they shall find it a strange land to what they or their fathers left it. See #Jer 44:14. Lavater maketh the sense to be, They shall not enter into the heavenly Canaan. {a} See the like, #Ps 95:11.

{a} Non eos perducam ad promissiones aeternas. -Oecol.

Ver. 39. Go ye, serve ye everyone his idols,] q.d., You may for me; and I had rather you would, than dissemble, as you do, and play on both hands, to the scandal of the weak, and scorn of the wicked. For my part, I have done with you for ever; take your own course.

And with your idols.] Away with these abominable mixtures. I will be served truly and totally, or not at all.

Ver. 40. For in mine holy mountain.] In my Church, and among my faithful people, for to these he now speaketh comfort.

There will I accept them.] Ibi occurram eis, scil., quasi in amplexum sponse; so some render and sense the text; i.e., there I will meet them, and accept them with much sweetness.

And there will require your offerings.] Not forbid and refuse them, as I did theirs. {#Eze 20:39}

Ver. 41. And I will be sanctified in you.] I will get me great glory by you among the heathen, while you are non aliunde noscibiles quam de emendatione vitiorum pristinorum, as Tertullian saith of the primitive Christians, no otherwise to be known better from others than by an alteration in you for the better.

Ver. 42. Into the land of Israel.] A pledge of a better place.

Ver. 43. Ye shall remember your ways.] Recognition is the first thing in reformation. See #Eze 16:61.

And ye shall loathe yourselves.] Dissecabimini in faciebus vestris. {a} Ye shall be, as it were, slashed with a sword over your faces, like as those {#Ac 2:37} were pricked at heart: they felt their sins as so many daggers at their hearts.

{a} Percutietis facies vestras. -Sept.

Ver. 44. And ye shall know that I am the Lord.] A sin pardoning and heart sanctifying God; a rich rewarder of all that diligently seek me. {#Heb 11:6}

Ver. 45. Moreover, &c.] See on #Eze 18:1.

Ver. 46. Set thy face.] Prophecy freely and boldly against Jerusalem, which is south from Chaldea.

Against the forest.] Against Judea, which is mountainous and woody, having good and bad trees in it.

Ver. 47. Every green tree.] Good and bad shall to the fire together.

{#Eze 21:3 Lu 23:31}

Shall be burnt therein] Or scorched, if they may escape so.

Ver. 48. That I the Lord.] Who myself am a consuming fire. {#Heb 12:29}

Ver. 49. Doth he not speak parables?] Nonne artifex est parobolarum iste? Qui erga non vult intelligi, vult negligi. {a} He is so high that we cannot take him, and shall therefore slight him as a madman, or not much better. A preacher shall have much ado to please a profane people. Neither maketh it much to the matter; but it is grievous, ah, Lord.

{a} Davus sum non Oedipus.

Chapter 21

Ver. 1. And the word of the Lord.] See #Eze 18:1.

Ver. 2. Set thy face.] See on #Eze 20:46.

And drop thy word.] See #De 32:2 Am 7:16. As drops of rain follow one upon another, so do words. Speak thick, speak home, though they forbid thee to drop such vinegar or nitre on their galled conscience. {#Mic 2:6,11}

Toward the holy places,] i.e., Against the temple, which they so cried up, {#Jer 7:4} like so many oyster wives, ad ravim usque.

Ver. 3. Behold, I am against thee.] That is misery enough, for all the creatures are soon against such; as a nobleman's servants draw their swords when their lord once draweth.

And will cut off from thee the righteous.] Who are sometimes wrapped up with the wicked in a common calamity. The husbandman cutteth down his corn and weeds together, but for a different end and purpose. If the righteous also be judged of the Lord, it is that they may not be condemned with the world. {#1Co 11:31}

Ver. 4. Seeing then that I will cut off from thee the righteous.] Velut eodem contubernio deprehensos. This is repeated for more assurance, because it might seem strange. The Septuagint hath it, The unrighteous and the wicked. The Chaldee, I will make the righteous flee, and destroy the wicked. But the Hebrew verity is as before; neither need we wonder, since the best have their infirmities.

Ver. 5. Have drawn forth my sword.] And put it in commission; not to return till the circuit ended, till it hath done full execution.

Ver. 6. Sigh therefore, with the breaking of thy loins.] Gemituque et gestu dolorem referas; show greatest grief, such as is deep and downright; sigh till thy buttons fly; or as a travailing woman. Non ut praeficae in funeribus solent.

Ver. 7. For the tidings.] Of the Chaldeans' coming. This was to the wicked as those knuckles of a man's hand were afterwards to Belshazzar, to write them their destiny; or as Daniel was to him, to read it unto them. Whenas the righteous man is no whit "afraid of evil tidings, his heart is fixed trusting in the Lord." {#Ps 112:7}

And every heart shall melt, &c.] As wax before the fire, which, before the danger, seemed to be made all of steel or adamant. The wicked, when in adversity, are woefully despondent and crest fallen, as was the king of Sodom; {#Ge 14:9-11} Manasseh among the bushes; {#2Ch 33:12} and others not a few, who in their prosperity seem to face the heavens and to draw the devil himself to a duel.

And all hands shall be feeble.] The spirits and blood being run to the heart, in that fright to relieve it.

And all knees shall be weak as water.] Heb., Shall go into water—that is, they shall bepiss themselves for fear, saith Jerome; they shall be all on a cold sweat, say others; or their knees shall shake, instar aquae tremulae, like trembling water, and knock together, as Belshazzar's did. {#Da 5:6}

Ver. 8. Again the word.] See on #Eze 18:1.

Ver. 9 A sword, a sword is sharpened.] {a} Not only drawn, but sharpened, that it may wound swiftly and deadly; furbished also, that it may the more affray and make the quicker despatch. And that no doubt may be made of it, the ward sword is doubled.

{a} Exacutus et extersus, sharp and clean.

Ver. 10. Should we then make mirth?] Not if we be in our right minds; for would it not be now a mad mirth, whenas we should be most serious and seek God? See #Isa 22:12-14. {See Trapp on "Isa 22:12"} {See Trapp on "Isa 22:13"} {See Trapp on "Isa 22:14"}

It contemneth the rod of my son.] Other judgments forerun the sword, which, when they will not do the deed, the sword will then contemn the rod; that is, it will set at naught whatever those have done, and come furbished and sharpened for the slaughter. See #Eze 21:3.

Ver. 11. To give it into the hand of the slayer.] Nebuchadnezzar, who will therewith lay about him lustily, as Eleazar once did till his hand clave unto the sword, {#2Sa 23:10} or as since Scanderbeg, who killed many hundred Turks with his own hand, and fought oft with so much eagerness, that the very blood brake forth at his lips. {a}

{a} Turkish History.

Ver. 12. Cry and howl, son of man.] While others make mirth, {as #Eze 21:10} and are insolent against God. Mourners shall be marked, {#Eze 9:4} comforted. {#Isa 57:18}

Smite therefore upon thy thigh.] See on #Jer 31:19.

Ver. 13. Because it is a trial.] Sore and sharp; therefore cry and howl, especially since they are not bettered. Hang heavy weights on rotten boughs, they presently break; the best divination of men is at the parting way. See #Eze 21:21.

And what if the sword contemn even the rod?] q.d., What doth this silly rod do here? will they not stoop? will they not put their necks under the yoke of God's Son? {#Eze 21:10} Let me come; I will make them either bow or break, either yield or bleed.

Ver. 14. Smite thy hands together.] So to show what I will do shortly. {#Eze 21:17}

Let the sword be doubled the third time.] Doubled and trebled, till it hath made an utter end of this untoward generation.

Which entereth into their privy chambers.] Ferreting and fetching them out of their lurking holes.

Ver. 15. Ah! it is made bright.] By this doleful exclamation the prophet venteth himself tanquam coram deformitatem cladis cerneret, {a} as if he had seen the execution.

{a} Oecolamp.

Ver. 16. Go thee one way or other.] This he speaketh to the bright and sharp sword, stirring it up to make impression that way whereunto it was appointed, quocunq;ue occurrent tibires comparatae. {a}

{a} Tremel.

Ver. 17. I will also smite mine hands together.] As animating the enemy and rejoicing at thy ruin. {a} Chaldee, I will bring revenge upon revenge;

“Animumque explesse iuvabit.”

“And he will help satisfy the spirit.”

{a} Exultat quasi hortator gladii saevientis. He exalts just as I will exhort the angry sword.—Jerome.

Ver. 18. The word of the Lord.] See on #Eze 18:1.

Ver. 19. Appoint thee two wags.] Pinge duas vias, ut #Eze 4:1; by prophetic action draw out two ways, by either of which Nebuehadnezzar may march against Egypt, his present aim, as the great Turk's now is Italy.

Choose it at the head of the wag to the city.] All this the Jews heard and slighted, as being infatuated, and so fitted for destruction. Ver. 20. And to Judah in Jerusalem the defenced.] Either against the one or the other of them—not against both at once, {a} for they were both strong, and Jerusalem was well aware of it—for they had both revolted from Nebuchadnezzar, and one of them was enough at once to undertake.

{a} Ne Hercules quidem contra duos.

Ver. 21. For the king of Babylon stood at the parting.] Heb., At the mother of the way; ubi via una in ducts bifidata est. {a}

To use divination.] Without which, and offering sacrifice, the very heathens held it not fit to fight. But this their art of divination was, as one saith of alchymy, Ars falsissima et fallacissima.

He made his arrows bright.] Vulg., He mingled his arrows; that is, saith Jerome, he took two arrows, writing upon the one Jerusalem, and upon the other Rabbath. Then, putting them into a quiver together, he took one out, being blindfolded; upon which seeing Jerusalem written, he divined that he should go with success against Jerusalem.

He consulted with images.] In which the devil sometimes spake. See Aug., De Civitate Dei, lib. iv. cap. 18.

He looked into the liver.] This was much practised by the Roman generals, as by Caesar, when he went against Pompey. {b}

{a} Ubi se via findit in ambas. -Virg.

{b} Lucan.

Ver. 22. To appoint captains.] Heb., Rans; fierce and forward, to lead on their soldiers, let them get off as they could.

To open their mouth.] To storm and take it by an onslaught, and with a general slaughter, non sine barritu militari, vociferatione, et clangore insolenti.

Ver. 23. And it shall be to them as a false divination.] The Jews shall believe nothing, till wrath comes upon them to the utmost.

They shall laugh at Nebuchadnezzar's fopperies, and think thee, O Ezekiel, to be little wiser than him; ludificabuntur te, adeoque teipsum, divinationis nefariae, quam de Nebuchadnetzare praedicat, incusabunt; {a} but they shall rue this their madness.

To them that have sworn oaths.] But cared not at all to keep them. Lingua iuravi, mens iniurata est. The swore with their mouths but not from the heart. {b}

But he will call to remembrance the iniquity.] The perfidy and perjury which they make nothing of. They that harden themselves in any one sin, put God in mind, as it were, of the rest, which he had seemed to have forgotten. {c}

{a} Jun.

{b} Medea.

{c} Iusiurandum tanquam mantile adhibent quo novae noxae quotidie extergeantur.-Pacuvius.

Ver. 24. Because ye have made your iniquity.] Your old sins, by an addition of new ones.

Your sins do appear.] You are scandalous, shameless as Sodom. {#Isa 3:9}

Ver. 25. And thou profane.] Or, Worthy to be wounded to death.

Wicked prince.] Zedekiah, who now hath his own told him plainly by a prophet. See the like done, #1Sa 13:13 1Ki 18:18 2Ki 3:13,14. {See Trapp on "1Sa 13:13"} {See Trapp on "1Ki 18:18"} {See Trapp on "2Ki 3:13"} {See Trapp on "2Ki 3:14"}

Ver. 26. Remove the diadem.] This was a fine linen cloth, wherewith the king's head used to be bound about, {a} and then the crown was set on.

Take off the crown.] Our Richard II, when to be deposed, was brought forth crowned and in royal robes. Never, saith the chronicler, was prince so gorgeous with less glory and more grief.

This shall not be the same.] Haec non erit haec. This crown or kingdom shall not be as it hath been.

Exalt him that is low.] Jeconiah, or, as some will, Christ the King of the Church.

And abase him that is high.] ^{b} Zedekiah. Let him not henceforth be the master of a molehill, nor owner of his own liberty. In him let it appear that mortality is but the stage of mutability.

^{a} Diadema, of διαδειν circumligare.

^{b} Just the same that Cambyses threatened unto Egypt, τα μεν ανω κατο, τα δε κατω ανω.—Herod., lib. ii.

Ver. 27. I will overturn, overturn, overturn it.] Curvam, curvam, curvam ponam eam, so the Tigurines translate. A crown there shall be still, but such as shall hang on one side of the head, as it were. Princes of the people there were. Those three high priests, Alexander, Aristobulus, and Hircanus, who called themselves kings, had very ill Success.

Until he come.] Christ the rightful King of Israel. To this text alludeth Nathanael. ^{#Joh 1:49}

Ver. 28. Concerning the Ammonites.] Who had likewise rebelled against Nebuchadnezzar, and were very injurious to God's people. See #Eze 25:3,6 Zep 2:8,9.

“Τβρις και Μαγνητας απωλεσε και Κολοφωνα.”

Ver. 29. To bring thee upon the necks of them that are slain.] To deal inhumanly with the dead, or to raise thyself upon the Jews' ruin.

Ver. 30. Shall I cause it to return?] No, but it shall still eat your flesh and drink your blood, till none remaineth.

In the land of thy nativity.] In thine own nest, and on thine own dunghill.

Ver. 31. Into the hand of brutish men.] Or, Of burning men, Ardelionum, artificum perditionis.

Ver. 32. Thou shalt be no more remembered.] ^{a} The Ammonites were so rooted out by the Medes and Persians, that besides what we find in the Bible, there is no mention of their name. A type of such as are destroyed for ever in hell, being fuel for that black fire, and eternally forgotten.

Chapter 22

Ver. 1. Moreover the word.] See on #Eze 18:1.

Ver. 2. Wilt thou judge?] Or, Plead for, or excuse? See #Eze 20:4.

The bloody city.] The saints' slaughter house.

Ver. 3. In the midst of it.] Publiae et impune.

Against herself.] As a sinner against her own soul.

Ver. 4. Thou hast caused thy days.] Thou hast accelerated thy punishment, as the old world did.

Ver. 5. Shall mock thee, which are infamous.] This was forethreatened. {#De 28:37} Our natures are most impatient of reproach; for there is none so mean but thinks himself worthy of some regard. Gens haec, saith Giraldus Cambrensis of the wild Irish, sicut et natio quaevis barbara, &c.; No nation is so barbarous, but that although they know not what belongeth to honour, yet do they exceedingly affect to be honoured, and will not abide to be reproached.

Ver. 6. Behold the princes of Israel.] Here beginneth the black bill or bed roll. And as in a fish corruption beginneth at the head, so in a nation at the rulers.

Ver. 7. In thee have they set light by father and mother.] Whom very heathens honoured as their θεοι εφεστιαι, household gods.

In the midst of thee, &c.] So Jerome complaineth of his country, In mea patria deus venter est, et in diem vivitur; that they were all belly gods, and had no goodness in them. So Bede complaineth of the ancient Britons immediately before their destruction by the Saxons. Bradford crieth out against the iniquity of the times in King Edward's days. You all know, saith he in a certain letter of his, there was never more knowledge of God, and less godly living, and true serving of God. It was counted a foolish thing to serve God truly; and earnest prayer was not past upon. Preaching was but pastime; communion was counted too common; fasting was far out of use; alms was almost nothing. Malice, covetousness, and uncleanness was common everywhere, with swearing, drunkenness, and idleness.

{a} &c.

{a} Acts and Mon.

Ver. 8. Thou hast despised mine holy things.] These are all foretokens of a perishing people. Emphasin habet quod dicit sancta mea, Sabbata mea. Shall that which hath the impress of God upon it be slighted, as his sabbaths, sacraments, ordinances? The holy God should in all his holy things be "sanctified in righteousness." {#Isa 5:16}

Ver. 9. In thee are men that carry tales.] Heb., Men of slanders. {#Ex 23:1 Le 18:16} Whisperers, backbiters, tale bearers—pedlars, the Hebrew word, signifieth such as drop a tale here and another there—are virī latrones, thieves, as the Septuagint here translate, yea, they are murderers. The devil was first a slanderer, and then a murderer. His agents first take away the credit of the Church, and then wound her. {#So 5:6} The primitive Christians were first belied, and then cruelly handled; so were the French Protestants before the massacre of Paris. Humphry, Duke of Gloucester was by the people of England, notwithstanding the open showing of his body, and his pretended crimes, thought to be doubly murdered—viz., by detraction and deadly practice—saith the chronicler.

Ver. 10. In thee have they discovered their father's nakedness, i.e., Carnally known their father's wives or concubines, Reuben-like. See #1Co 5:1. {See Trapp on "1Co 5:1"}

Humbled her, i.e., Ravished her: which was a double crime. See #Le 18:19 20:18 15:25.

Ver. 11. And one hath committed.] So the poet—

“ Hic thalamum invasit natae, vetitosque Hymenaeos, Ausi omnes immune nefas, ausoque potiti, ” &c.
- Virg. Aen., lib. vi.

Ver. 12. Thou hast taken usury and increase.] Usura quasi propter usum rei, saith one, and foenus quasi funus. Such money to necessity, is like cold water to a hot ague, that for a time refresheth, but prolongeth the disease. It is like the timber worm, which is wonderfully soft to touch, but hath teeth so hard that it eateth the timber. See on #Eze 18:13.

And hast greedily gained of thy neighbour.] Sept., Thou has consummated the consummation of thy wickedness in oppression.

And hast forgotten me.] All the forementioned evils are resolved into this as the root and origin of them. ^{a} See the like, #Ro 3:18.

Ver. 13. I have smitten my hand.] In token of utmost indignation, as #Nu 24:10.

At thy dishonest gain which thou hast made.] The Jewish doctors observe, that, whereas twenty-four different abominations are here reckoned up, the destruction of the city is attributed chiefly to covetousness. Lycurgus foretold his Lacedaemonians that filthy lucre would be the overthrow of their city, and it proved so. ^{a} The same is reported of Constantinople, of Babylon, the seat of the great Caliph, taken and sacked by Haalon, brother to Mango the great Khan of Tartary, who starved to death the rich but wretched Caliph in the midst of his hoards; ^{b} like as the Roman soldiers first slew Ruffinus, who affected to be co-emperor with Arcadius, and then cutting off his right hand, carried it up and down the city, crying out to the people, Date stipem viro avaritiae inexplebilis, ^{c} Give an alms to a man of insatiable covetousness.

Ver. 14. Can thine heart endure, or can thine hands be strong?] Interrogatio continens latentem ironiam -q.d., Misella superbula, erisne ferendo mala futura? Thou pour, proud thing of nought, canst thou make thy party good with me? Canst thou either in mind or body bear my wrath? will not thine heart soon fall into thy heels, and thine hands be enfeebled when I shall grapple with thee, and take thee to do?

And will do it.] Thou thinkest, likely, that all these are but terrible words, devised on purpose to frighten silly people, but I will do it.

Ver. 15. I will scatter thee.] #De 4:27 28:25,64.

And will consume thy filthiness.] By thy captivity and misery I will refine and reform thee {a} {#Zec 13:9}

{a} Heb., Faciam ut integretur.

Ver. 16. And thou shalt take thine inheritance in thyself,] q.d., I will abandon thee. Or, Thou shalt be profaned and polluted.

And thou shalt know that I am the Lord.] Thou shalt know me by my punishments, whom thou wouldst not know by my benefits.

Ver. 17. And the word of the Lord] See #Eze 18:1.

Ver. 18. The house of Israel is to me become dross.] Recrementum argenti; offal stuff. Silver they were once, but now nothing less. Haec ad nos quoque transferenda sunt. This is even our case; we are quite degenerate, and altogether unlike our zealous progenitors.

“ Heu! pietas ubi prisca! profana O tempora! Mundi Faex, vesper, prope nox! O Mora! Christe veni. ”

All they are brass.] See on #Isa 1:22.

Ver. 19. I will gather you into the midst of Jerusalem.] Velut catinum fusorium, as into a red hot furnace, or fiery crucible. {#Eze 24:10}

Ver. 20. As they gather silver and brass.] The righteous perish with the wicked; but either it is temporally only, or else the seemingly righteous, who are no better than "reprobate silver."

And I will leave you there.] A terrible threat. God will bring his enemies into the briars and there leave them. See #Eze 29:5. His own he will not leave, or at least not forsake. He will be with them in the fire and water, &c. "Lord, leave us not," saith the Church. {#Jer 17:17}

Ver. 21. And ye shall be melted in the midst thereof.] As in a fiery furnace. Such was anciently Egypt; {#De 4:20} afterwards Babylon; and in the year 1453, Constantinople, where cruelly perished by the hand of the Turks a very great multitude of Christians.

Ver. 22. As silver is melted.] The same again for better fastening. Tam diligenter de his malis concionatus est, ut conciones eius vix sine taedio legantur aut recitentur. {a}

{a} Lavat.

Ver. 23. And the word.] See #Eze 18:1.

Ver. 24. Thou art the land that is not cleansed.] From thy filthiness, and the fire of my judgments.

Nor rained upon.] Non computa; no mercy shown thee, no good done upon thee by all.

Ver. 25. There is a conspiracy of her prophets.] They are all agreed to deceive the people and to persecute the true prophets. Here we have a lively description of the present Popish clergy.

Ver. 26. Her priests have violated my law.] {a} By infringing, and enforcing it to speak what it never meant; to go two miles when it would go but one, &c.

They have put no difference.] They have not taken out the precious from the vile, but made it open tide, and admitted all pellmell, as they say.

And have hid their eyes from my Sabbaths,] i.e., Either framed excuse that they might themselves break it; or else connived at others that have.

{a} Plane palamque contra faciunt, quam ipsis imperavi lege. -Jun.

Ver. 27. Her princes in the midst thereof.] Lupis ferociores et voraciores erant. There was in this state, as physicians say there is in some diseases, corruptio totius substantiae, a general defection: and here they are particularly told of it; so, as Isocrates saith in his oration to Philip King of Macedonia, That which is spoken to all is spoken to none. See #Mic 3:11 Zep 3:3.

Ver. 28. And her prophets have daubed them.] Similes iis qui parietem incrustant luto friabili et solubili. See #Eze 13:4, &c.

Ver. 29. The people of the land have used oppression.] Or, Deceit. Eadem hodie fiunt: charitas refrixit; omnia iniuriis, calumniis, rapinis plena sunt.

Ver. 30. And I sought for a man among them,] i.e., A competent company of holy men, as once at Sodom; {#Ge 18:23-32} at Jerusalem. {#Jer 5:1}

That should make up the hedge.] Which sin had thrown down.

And stand in the gap.] By his piety and prayers. The Primum Mobile, say astronomers, turneth about with such swiftness, that but for the counter motion of the planets and other spheres all would be fired; so would this wicked world but for the saints, who keep a constant counter motion to the corrupt practices thereof.

Ver. 31. I have consumed them with the fire.] Since thou wouldst not be cleansed, nor rained upon in the day of indignation. {#Eze 22:24}

Chapter 23

Ver. 1. The word of the Lord.] See #Eze 18:1.

Ver. 2. There were two women.] This is the same in effect with #Eze 16, but there more plainly, here parabolically expressed. Sermo est eraditus et elegans, simul tamen spurcas et obscaenus, {a} to set forth the hatefulnes of idolatry, creature confidence, and adultery.

The daughters of one mother,] scil., Synagogae, vel Sarce. Some think the prophet alludeth to Jacob's two wives who were sisters.

{a} Lavat.

Ver. 3. And they committed whoredoms in Egypt.] See #Eze 20:8 Jos 24:14.

They committed whoredoms in their youth.] Like the strumpet Quartilla in Petronius, who said, Iunonem ego meam iratam habeam, si unquam me meminerim virginem fuisse. {a}

There were their breasts pressed.] Violatam virginitatem mammaram laxitas consequitur.

{a} Petron. Satyricon.

Ver. 4. And the names of them were Aholah,] i.e., Her tent, not mine (so he calleth Samaria, or the ten tribes). What have I to do with it or her Compare #1Ki 12:16,28,31. She is gone to her tent, and hath set her up tabernacles, where to worship her golden idols.

The elder.] So called because more numerous and potent than the other two tribes. She was also first in the defection.

And Aholibah.] That is, my tent is in her. So Jerusalem is called, because the temple and testimonies of God's special presence were there, as King Abijah well pleadeth it. {#2Ch 13:10,11}

Samaria is Aholah.] In figure she is; though some have held that these were the names of two notorious strumpets in Egypt.

Ver. 5. And Aholah played the harlot when she was mine.] Fornicata est sub me, under colour and covert of a marriage made with me. See what a fair gloss Jeroboam set upon his foul idolatry. {#1Ki 12:28}

On the Assyrians, her neighbours.] So they were now become, by the conquest of Syria.

Ver. 6. Which were clothed with blue.] With rich and gorgeous attire. Vestis luxuriae nidus.

Ver. 7. Thus she committed her whoredoms with them.] Heb., She bestowed her whoredoms upon them; she was no niggard. A little entreaty served turn. Cuilibet sui copiam faciebat, such was her idol madness.

Ver. 8. Neither left she her idols brought from Egypt.] Witness her two golden calves brought thence by Jeroboam, in imitation of Apis, a calf dedicated by the Egyptians to Serapis, their chief idol.

“ Quis nescit, qualia demens

Aegyptus portenta colat? ”—Juvenal.

For in her youth.] See on #Eze 23:3.

And poured their whoredoms upon her.] This kind of language and the like is here and elsewhere used, not to teach men to speak or do foul things, but the contrary. Of Petronius's Satyricon it is said, Tolle obscaena, et tollis omni: and that he was impurissimus scriptor purissimae Latinitatis. Of our prophet it may as truly be said, Tolle sancta et tollis omnia. See on #Eze 23:2.

Ver. 9. Wherefore I have delivered her.] #2Ki 17:23.

“ Per quod quis peccat, per idem punitur et ipse.”

Ver. 10. These discovered her nakedness,] i.e., They have shamefully punished her for a stinking strumpet. {as #Eze 23:26}

And she became famous.] For her sins and punishments, much talked of. Heb., A name.

Ver. 11. And when her sister Aholibah saw this.] And yet would not be warned; which was a just both presage and desert of her utter destruction.

She was more corrupt.] She was therefore the worse, because she should have been better.

Ver. 12. She doted.] Amantes amentes. Loving her lovers. See #Eze 23:5.

Ver. 13. Then I saw that she was defiled.] Whence it is that man's nature is so prone to idolatry, and why that sin is compared to adultery, see Polanus upon this chapter, pp. 538-540.

Ver. 14. For when she saw men portrayed upon the wall.] So unbridled was her lust that she fell to doting upon those quos tantum per umbram et imaginem aspexerat, whose pictures only she had beheld. In some Popish churches there are to be seen wanton pictures, such as do rather kindle lust than quicken devotion. An eyewitness {a} hath told us in print that in some places they will assemble various of the fairest courtezans, when they would draw a picture of the Virgin Mary, to draw the most modest beauty of a virgin out of the flagrancy of harlots.

{a} Spec. Eur.

Ver. 15. Girded with girdles.] Rich clothes are oft but fine covers of the foulest shame. If every silken suit did cover a sanctified soul, it would be brave.

Ver. 16. And as soon as she saw them with her eyes.] Here began the mischief. Ut vidi ut perii! Conciliatorem peccati oculum Talmudici nominant.

“ Oculi sunt in amore duces.”

Many have died of the wound in the eye.

And sent messengers unto them.] Being themselves, therefore, not long after, sent into captivity unto them, that they might have enough of them.

Ver. 17. Into the bed of love.] Or, Of breasts, which are the symbols of love and seats of delight, as naturalists note. See #Pr 6:19 7:18.

And her mind was alienated from them.] Heb., Loosed or disjointed, to dote another while upon the Egyptians. Etiam vota post usum fastidia sunt.

Ver. 18. Then my mind was alienated from her.] So #Jer 6:8; see there.

Ver. 19. In calling to mind the sins of her youth.] This was to recommit them, because she remembered them with delight. It argueth an unmortified frame when recalling former evil acts proveth a snare.

Ver. 20. Whose flesh is as the flesh of asses.] Qui sunt bene mentulati (honos sit nutibus) et qui semine abundant. Commodus the emperor, who had never a good property in him, was for this called the Ass, as Jerome noteth.

And whose issue is as the issue of horses.] Fluxus equorum est fluxus eorum -that is, they are extremely libidinous and superstitious, so that there is no ho with them. Circumfluunt et exundant omni scelere et impietate copiosissime.

Ver. 21. Thus thou calledst to remembrance.] See #Eze 23:19.

Ver. 22. Therefore, O Aholibah.] Flagitium et flagellum sunt ut acus et filum. Sin and punishment are inseparable companions; they are tied together with chains of adamant.

Ver. 23. Pekod, and Shoa, and Koa.] The inhabitants of these several countries, subject to the Babylonians. See #Jer 50:21. Koa is by Strabo called Gaugamela.

Ver. 24. I will set judgment before them,] i.e., I will put thee into their hands to be punished.

And they shall judge thee according to their judgment.] Without mixture of mercy; whereas I use in the midst of judgment to remember mercy.

Ver. 25. And they shall take away thy nose and thine ears.] He seemeth to allude to the custom of the Egyptians, which was to cut off the nose and the ears of the adulteress. {a} John, a certain antipope, was served in like sort by the Romans. {b} Paul II deserved to be so served; of whom it is recorded that he was so proud that he painted his face to please his concubine; and that he was once in a mind to have taken to himself the name of Formosus, but that he thought it was ominous because his predecessor of that name came to so ill an end. {c}

{a} Rhodigin., lib. xxiv. cap. 45.

{b} Pet. Damian, lib. i. cap. 21.

Ver. 26. They shall also strip thee out of thy clothes.] Wherein thou hast so much prided thyself.

And take away thy fair jewels.] Instrumenta mundi tui; the instruments of thy decking. {#Isa 3:18-24}

Ver. 27. Then will I make thy lewdness to cease from thee.] Thy prepensed wickedness. This benefit thou shalt reap and receive of thine enemies' cruelty.

Nor remember Egypt.] Without regret.

Ver. 28. I will deliver thee.] God hath a holy hand in all the evils that befall his people, by whomsoever.

Ver. 29. And they shall deal with thee hatefully.] As ill as the wit of malice can devise to do.

All thy labour,] i.e., All that thou hast laboured for. Oh, lay up grace, quae nec eripi nec surripi potest.

And the nakedness of thy whoredoms.] Nuditas tua scortationibus dedita. {a}

{a} Piscator.

Ver. 30. Thou art polluted with their idols.] Whereby thou thoughtest to have purged away thy sins, as Papists also do; but it proveth otherwise.

Ver. 31. Therefore will I give her cup into thine hand.] An allusion to the manner of feasts, whereat the symposiarch or governor gave every guest his cup fitly tempered. God is the great Modimperator.

Ver. 32. Thou shalt drink of thy sister's cup deep and large.] Yea, though it have eternity to the bottom.

Ver. 33. Thou shalt be filled with drunkenness and sorrow.] That dry drunkenness, ut si catapotium bibas.

Ver. 34. And thou shalt break the sherds thereof,] i.e., Of the cup, which thou shalt cast away with utmost indignation: but thou hast thy bane.

And pluck off thine own breast.] For a revenge of thy fornication therewith committed.

Ver. 35. Because thou hast forgotten me.] This was the source of all their sins, and cause of all their calamities.

And cast me behind thy back.] As a harlot loatheth her husband. It is laid to David's charge that in that foul fall of his he had "despised God's commandment." {#2Sa 12:9}

Ver. 36. Wilt thou judge?] See #Eze 20:4 22:2.

Ver. 37. And blood is in their hands.] Adultery is the devil's nest egg, and causeth many sins to be laid one to and upon another; as here, murder, idolatry, &c.

To devour them.] Not only to purge and to dedicate them.

Ver. 38. They have defiled my sanctuary in the same day.] When they had done evil as they could, they exercised mine external worship that they might seem religious. So #Isa 66:3.

Ver. 39. For when they had slain.] When their hands were full of blood, and even reeking hot therewith. This was detestable impudence.

Then they came the same day into my sanctuary.] Citra conscientiam, as if they had done God good service. So Erasmus ^{a} telleth of a fierce friar, Augustine of Antwerp, who openly in the pulpit there preaching to the people, wished that Luther were present, that he might bite out his throat with his teeth; so doing he would nothing doubt to resort to the altar with the same bloody teeth, and receive the body of Christ. Fiducia in federibus.

^{a} Eras. Ep., lib. xvi. ad obtrect.

Ver. 40. Ye have sent for men.] Ye have trusted to foreign forces and carnal combinations.

For whom thou didst wash thyself.] Omnino te comparas ut Thais impudentissima, ad pelliciendos et inescandos amatores; thou hast acted the whore to the life to inveigle thy paramours.

Ver. 41. And satest.] For entertainment sake.

Whereupon thou hast set mine incense] So fighting against me, as it were, with mine own weapons, and abusing my best gifts to my greatest dishonour, contrary to #Pr 3:9.

Ver. 42. And a voice of a multitude being at ease.] Or, Being jolly and jocund, as at brothel houses.

And with the men of the common, sort.] Heb., To the men. The basest and most abject people also were taken into confederacy; even Arabians, Ethiopians, Tartars, so cheap didst thou make thyself, so fond wast thou of their fopperies.

Ver. 43. To her that was old in adulteries.] Inveteratae et detritae, withered and overworn.

And she with them?] Is she—as Helen was παλαι γυνή—the same still, no changeling yet?

Ver. 44. Yet they went in unto her.] They committed idolatry without mean or measure, being woefully hardened and habituated therein.

Ver. 45. And the righteous men.] So the Chaldees are called, because less wicked than the Jews (as the Scythians were better than the Athenians, and now the Indians than the Spaniards), and because they executed the righteous sentence of God upon those flagitious Jews.

Ver. 46. I will bring up a company.] A numerous army, which shall make much havoc and slaughter.

Ver. 47. And the company shall stone them.] As by the law they did adulteresses.

Ver. 48. Thus will I cause lewdness to cease.] Thus, if it may be done no otherwise. Thus still, if men will not mend by fair means, they are taken away by death, that they may sin no more.

That all women may be taught.] That all cities and states may hear, and fear, and do no more so.

“ Exemplo alterius qui sapit, ille sapit. ”

Ver. 49. And ye shall bear the sins,] i.e., The punishment of your idolatry; neither shall ye have colour of cause to complain of my severity.

And ye shall know that I am the Lord God.] This comes in ever and anon, velut versus intercalaris, and hath much weight in it to set on what is said before.

Chapter 24

Ver. 1. Again in the ninth year.] Of Jehoiakim's captivity, {#Eze 1:2} three years before the destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar.

Ver. 2. This same day.] Ezekiel in Mesopotamia is told by God, and telleth others the very day that Nebuchadnezzar laid siege to Jerusalem. {#2Ki 25:1 Jer 39:1 52:4} Heathen historians all us of Apollonius Tyanaeus, that in the self-same day and hour wherein Domitian the emperor was slain at Rome, he got up into a high place at Ephesus in Asia, and calling together a great multitude of men, he spake these words, Καλως Στεφανε, ειγε Στεφανε—Well done, Stephen, strike the murderer home, pay him soundly; thou hast struck him, thou hast wounded him to the heart, thou hast slain him outright; {a} I commend thee for it. This, if it were so, was brought to him by the devil doubtless. Our prophet had a better intelligencer.

Ver. 3. Set on a pot.] Deus cum propheta loquitur tanquam cum coquo: anything to make them sensible of their danger, and the destruction of their city now fully determined. This pot is Jerusalem, and a lively representation of hell, saith A Lapide; {a} the pouring of water into it, a long siege; the flesh, the citizens; the fat, the rich ones, lauti et lascivi; the bones, the stoutest and best warriors, &c. These scurrilous Jews had jeered at Jeremiah's caldron or pot; {#Jer 1:13 Eze 11:3} now they are cast into the pot, and their jeer driven back down their very throats.

{a} Repraesentat Tartarum, et ollam Vulcaniam inferni.

Ver. 4. Gather the pieces thereof into it.] Let people of all sorts flock into the city for safety sake, that there, as in a pot, they may be boiled by a long siege, and have sorrow enough.

Ver. 5. Take the choice of the flock.] The king and his peers.

And burn also the bones.] The dry bones, the common people, for these will burn like wood.

And let him seethe the bones.] The choice bones. {#Eze 24:4}

Ver. 6. Woe to the bloody city,] i.e., Blood guilty, and full of crimes capital that call for blood.

To the pot whose scum is in it.] Who are hardened in their wickedness, which is evident to all men, and are not amended by punishments.

Let no lot fall upon it,] i.e., Let none escape unpunished. In wars often they cast lots to save some and slay some.

Ver. 7. For her blood is in the midst of her.] She careth not who knows of her murders and oppressions. He seemeth to allude to that law, that blood being let out of a beast should be covered in the ground.

She set it upon the top of a rock.] Super limpidissimam petram, saith the Vulgate, as glorying in it. So Abimelech slew all his brethren upon one stone; {#Jud 9:5} the Jews crucified our Saviour on Mount Calvary.

She poured it not.] Pudet et non esse impudentem. It is shameful not to be shameless.

Ver. 8. I have set her blood upon the top of a rock.] {a} Where it will be seen afar off and for a long time. As her sin was in propatulo, in open view, so, to cry quittance with her, shall her punishment likewise be; my visible vengeance shall follow her close at heels as a bloodhound.

{a} Agit cum illa ex lege talionis. -Pol.

Ver. 9. Woe to the bloody city.] See #Na 3:1 Hab 2:12.

I will even make the pile for fire great.] They shall undergo a long and sore siege.

Ver. 10. Heap on wood, &c.] See on #Eze 24:3.

And spice it well.] Vulgate, Coquatur tota compositio; let the whole composition be boiled, till all the virtue be boiled out; a metaphor from apothecaries.

Ver. 11. That the brass of it may be hot, and may burn.] This Gregory {a} fitly applieth to Rome, taken and wasted by the Lombards. This city, ever since it was Papal—and then it first began to be so—was never besieged, but it was taken by the enemy.

{a} Iam vacua ardet Roma: iam enim et ipsa olla consumitur, in qua prius carnes et ossa consumebantur.

-Hom. 18 in Ezek.

Ver. 12. She hath wearied herself with lies.] With seeking and trusting to lying vanities, creature comforts. Others render it, She hath wearied me with lies—i.e., With false promises of amendment; others, Frustra sudatum est, Pains is taken with them to no purpose.

And her great scum went not forth out of her.] But is sodden into her partly, and partly sodden over into the fire. A godly man cleareth himself of sin, as spring water worketh itself clean; as the sea will endure no poisonous thing, but casteth it upon the shore; as the sweet water, made brackish by the coming in of the salt water, gets to be sweet again, so do God's people work out brackish and sinful dispositions, &c. The good heart admitteth not the mixture of any sin; though sin may cleave to it as dross doth to silver, yet, like right wine or honey, as the scum ariseth, still it casteth it out; so here.

Ver. 13. In thy filthiness is lewdness,] i.e., Thou art desperately stiff and stubborn; thy disease is complicated, and threateneth death.

Because I have purged thee,] i.e., Called upon thee by my prophets to "cleanse thyself of all filthiness of flesh and spirit"; sought also to purge thee by the soap of afflictions, and by the cudgel of calamities. {#Isa 1:16 27:9 cf. Isa 1:5-7}

And thou wast not purged.] From thy sin, which had gotten into thy very frame and constitution, was weaved into the texture of thine heart.

Thou shalt not be purged.] But shalt perish in thy sins—which is worse than to die in a ditch—"and pine away in thine iniquities." {#Eze 24:23} He who is filthy, shall be filthy still; a fearful sentence.

Till I have caused my fury to rest upon thee.] Till I have purged thee in hell fire, which will be ever doing, but never be done; donec omnia tela vindictae meae in te exhausero, till I have emptied my quiver, spent my wrath upon thee.

Ver. 14. I the Lord have spoken it.] And you may write upon it, Sententia haec stabit. Think not that these are only big words, bugbear terms, devised on purpose to frighten silly people; for do it I will, yea, that I will.

Ver. 15. Also the word of the Lord.] See #Eze 18:1.

Ver. 16. Behold, I take from thee the desire of thine eyes,] i.e., Thy wife, who is impendio dilecta et visu pergratiosa, thy dearly beloved and greatly delighted in.

With a stroke.] With pestilence, palsy, or some similar sudden death. This was no small trial of the prophet's patience and obedience. Let us learn to hang loose to all outward comforts.

Yet neither shalt thou mourn nor weep.] Which, might he have done, would have been some ease to him; {a} for “ Expletur lachrymis, egeriturque dolor.”

As hinds by calving, so do men by weeping, cast out their sorrows.

{#Job 39:3}

{a} Est quaedam flere voluptas. -Ovid. Fletus aerumnas lennet. -Sen.

Ver. 17. Forbear to cry.] Heb., Be silent, and so suffocate thy sorrows; Ne plangas, ne plores. Not as if the dead were not to be lamented—tears are the dues of the dead, {a} Mors mea ne careat lachrymis -or that it were unbeseeming a prophet to bewail his dead comfort, but to set forth by this figure the greatness of their ensuing sorrow, bigger than any tears; for, Curae leves loquuntur ingentes stupent.

Bind the tire of thy head upon thee.] Mourners, it seems, used to go bare headed and bare footed, to cover their mustaches, to eat what their friends sent them in at such a sad time to cheer up their spirits. {#Jer 16:5,7} The prophet must do none of all this, but keep his sorrows to himself. {b}

{a} Πατροκλον κλαιωμεν: ο γαρ γερας εστι θανοντων.

{b} Singultus devorat.

Ver. 18. And at even my wife died.] Though a good woman probably, and to the prophet a great comfort, the sweet companion of his life and miseries, yet she died suddenly, and by some extraordinary disease; all things come alike to all.

And I did in the morning as I was commanded.] Grievous though it were, and went much against the hair with me, yet I did it. Uxorem posthabuit praecepto Dei. Obedience must be yielded to God even in the most difficult duties, and conjugal love must give place to our love to him.

Ver. 19. Wilt thou not tell us.] They well knew that there was something in it more than ordinary, for the prophet was no stoic, but sensible enough of what he suffered.

Ver. 20. Then I answered them.] The prophet was ready to tell them the true meaning of all; so should ministers be. See #Job 33:23. {See Trapp on "Job 33:23"}

Ver. 21. Behold, I will profane my sanctuary.] I will put it into the hands of profane persons to be spoiled and polluted, for a punishment of your manifold pollutions of it.

The excellency of your strength.] The Jews had too high a conceit of, and did put too much confidence in, their temple, which therefore they called, as here, the "excellency of their strength," the "desire of their eyes," and that which their soul pitied, animarum indulgentiam. "The temple of the Lord!" they cried; but the Lord of the temple they cared not for. {#Jer 7:4}

Ver. 22. And ye shall do as I have done.] Your grief shall be above tears, you shall be so overgone with it; besides you shall have neither leisure nor leave of your enemies to bewail your losses, &c.

Ye shall not cover.] See on #Eze 24:17. Antonius Margarita, a Christian Jew, hath written a book of the Jewish rites or superstitions at the burial of the dead, and otherwise; so hath Leo Modena, another Jew, but no Christian.

Ver. 23. But ye shall pine away for your iniquities.] Non tam stupidi prae maestitia, quam prae malitia stipites. {a} This was long since threatened, {#Le 26:39} and it is reserved to the last, as not the least of those dismal judgments.

{a} Oecolamp.

Ver. 24. Thus Ezekiel is unto you a son.] Portentum; portending no good to you. Whether he were made dumb till these things were fulfilled, as some gather from #Eze 24:27, I have not to say.

Ver. 25. When I take from them their strength.] Their kingdom, temple, all.

And that whereupon they set their minds.] Heb., The lifting up of the soul, or the burden of their souls, that whereof they are most solicitous.

Ver. 26. To cause thee to hear it,] viz., The performance of that which now thou tellest, but canst not be believed, till experience, the mistress of fools, hath better taught it them.

Ver. 27. In that day shall thy mouth be opened.] Meanwhile make use of a sacred silence, wait till a new prophecy concerning this people shall be committed unto thee, as was done Eze. 33. Till then, prophesy against foreigners, Ammonites, Tyrians, Egyptians.

Chapter 25

Ver. 1. The word of the Lord.] Contra gentes; against those nations chiefly that molested the Jews after their overthrow by the Babylonians. Sins they had enough besides, but for none did they suffer more deeply than for their malignity towards God's poor afflicted. The Ammonites, Moabites, Edomites, and Philistines are here more briefly threatened; the Tyrians and Egyptians more at large, because it seemed impossible that they should be brought down.

Ver. 2. Set thy face against the Ammonites.] Look upon them firmiter, torvo, et minaci vultu, as if thou wouldst look through them; and having so lightened, thunder accordingly.

Against the Ammonites.] Who have had their part already of threatenings, {#Eze 21:28} but not their full due.

Ver. 3. Because thou saidst, Aha.] Insolently insulting over mine Israel when under hatches; as when a tree is down, every man will be pulling at the branches, and Leoni mortuo vd mus insultat. But it is ill meddling against God's Church, be it but by a frown or a trump, as here. An aha or an euge shall not escape unpunished. {#Ps 35:21}

Ver. 4. I will deliver thee to the men of the east.] To the Arabians, Keturah's posterity, who were shepherds and camel masters.

They shall eat thy fruit and drink thy milk.] Sept., πιοτητα, Thy fatness. Est enim adeps lac coagulatum. The Ammonites, as now the Flemmings, were γαλακτοφαγοι, butter boxes, as we say, and lived much upon dairy products; so do we. Let us use our plenty to God's glory, lest we lose all.

Ver. 5. And I will make Rabbah.] The metropolis of the Ammonites. It signifieth that great city; and was afterwards rebuilt by Ptolemy Philadelph, and called Philadelphia.

“ Valet ima summis

Mutare, et insignem attenuat Deus Obseura premens," &c.
- Hor., lib. i. Od. 34.

Ver. 6. Because thou hast clapped thine hands.] Manibus plaudis, pedibus complodis, &c. God is very sensible of the least indignity and injury, affront or offence, done to his poor people, by words, looks, gestures, &c. Cavete. Beware.

Ver. 7. Behold, therefore I will stretch out my hand upon thee.] God loveth to retaliate.

I will cause thee to perish out of the country.] So little a distance is there again, saith Seneca, between a great city and no city.

"Ludit in humanis divina potentia rebus: Et certam praesens vix habet hora fidem."

Ver. 8. Behold, the house of Judah is like unto all the heathen.] As ill-protected and provided for as they; as much scourged by the Babylonian. See to the contrary in #De 33:29, "Happy art thou, O Israel; who is like unto thee, O people saved by the Lord, the shield of thy help, and who is the sword of thine excellency! and thine enemies shall be found liars unto thee; and thou shalt tread upon their high places!" Some read it, 'Behold the house of Jehovah,' and note an emphasis in that word, as savouring of contempt and blasphemy, as in #2Ki 18:33,34.

Ver. 9. Behold, I will open the side of Moab.] Heb., The shoulder—that is, the border that is fortified—to let in the enemy; like as the side being opened, an entrance is given into the body through the ribs for the destruction thereof, because the strongest defence is taken away. {a}

{a} Dr Mayr.

Ver. 10. That the Ammonites may not be remembered among the nations.] A fearful hand of God upon them, as it was also upon some other peoples, who are so utterly extinct that the learned can now hardly divine where their seats were.

Ver. 11. And I will execute judgments upon Moab.] Or, In Moab, where was no care to execute justice and judgment; sed frigeabant leges: ius situm erat in manibus, &c. Might overcame right.

Ver. 12. By taking vengeance.] Heb., By revenging revengement; out of a vindictive spirit rejoicing at Judah's harms, and saying, They were well enough served. See the prophecy of Ob 10-16 and #Ps 137:7 Their father Esau was of a spiteful spirit, {#Ge 27:41} and they took after him, proceeding upon the old score. Hence they are put for God's and the Church's enemies by a specialty. {#Isa 63:1-6 Joe 3:9-17 Am 9:1-10} A learned man hath given us this note: Esau signifieth a doer or a worker; Edom, a ruddy, bloody, or earthy man. These Edomites were a type of justiciaries, who will needs be saved by their works and merits. These are the deadliest enemies of God's people, war upon them continually, seek and suck their blood, and shall at length suffer condign punishment.

And hath greatly offended and revenged himself upon them.] Wishing, as Caligula did by the people of Rome, that they had all but one neck, {a} that he might cut them off at one blow. Plane sunt serpentes, saith Luther concerning hypocrites, quo nullum est animal vindictae cupidius, they are very serpents, than which there is no living creature more revengeful.

{a} εἶθ' ἓνα αὐχένα εἶχετε.

Ver. 13. I will stretch out mine hand upon Edom.] God hath vengeance ready for revengers. Immune verbam est ultio, saith Seneca; they shall not escape unpunished. See #Pr 24:17,18. The Duke of Bourbon being displeased at Cardinal Wolsey, intended to have sacked Rome, and taken the Pope; but at the first assault of the town, the Duke was the first man that was slain.

Ver. 14. I will lay my vengeance upon Edom.] Edam ultionem in Edom. See #Eze 25:13.

By the hand of my people Israel.] In the time of the Macchabees likely this was done. Or, By the hand wherewith I shall smite my people; that is, by the Babylonians: so Piscator.

According to my fury.] And not as the commanders will. Titus would have saved the temple at Jerusalem from being burned, but the soldiers would not. {a}

{a} Josephus.

Ver. 15. Because the Philistines have dealt by revenge.] See on #Eze 25:12,13. Heathens thought revenge lawful, and tallying of injuries to be but justice. But Christianity teacheth us that non minus mali est referre iniuriam, quam inferre, {a}

For the old hatred.] The Philistines were of the old inhabitants the Canaanites, and kept up a deadly feud.

{a} Lactant.

Ver. 16. I will cut off the Cherethims.] These were a part of the Philistines. {#Zep 2:5} There is an elegance in the original: q.d., Excindam excissores, I will cut off the cutters.

And destroy the remnant of the sea coast.] Palestina lay upon the midland sea. {#Zep 3:5}

Ver. 17. And I will execute great vengeance upon them.] Heb., Vengeances. I will pay them for the new and the old together.

Chapter 26

Ver. 1. In the eleventh year.] Of Jehoiakim's captivity and Zedekiah's reign.

In the first day of the month,] i.e., Of the fifth month, when the news came to Tyre of the destruction of Jerusalem twenty days before, which occurred on the ninth day of the fourth month. {#2Ki 25:1}

Ver. 2. Because that Tyrus hath said.] Wicked men shall give account for their "hard speeches also," {#Jude 15} if not sooner, yet certainly at the last day, with the whole world all on a light fire about their ears. Tyre was the chief city of Phoenicia, built before Solomon's temple, saith Josephus; {a} and anciently called Sarra, {b} saith Servius, of the Hebrew tsor, which signifieth a rock, because it was built upon a rock. It became the most famous and wealthy market town of the whole East; and having so great a resort to it from all parts, it was a very sinful place; and framing comedies out of the Church's tragedies, hath this prophecy to champ upon, for a rebater of its pride and petulance.

Aha.] See #Eze 25:3.

That was the gates of the people.] Whereinto they entered by troops and caravans, for religion and traffic.

She is turned unto me.] Vide hic ingenia mercatorum. Her ruin shall be my rise. Lo, this is the world; envy and avarice rejoice at, and are fed with other men's tears and losses; sed gaudent pyraustae gaudium. Contrariwise, God is rich to all that call upon him; {#Ro 10:12} and in spiritual things there is no envy, because they may be divided in solidum, in the whole, one may have as much as another, and all alike.

I shall be replenished.] Mercibus et opibus; with wars and wealth. But how long will it hold?

{a} Antiq., lib. viii. cap. 2.

{b} Sarrano dormiat ostro. -Virg. Gorg., lib. ii.

Ver. 3. Therefore thus saith the Lord God.] And thy merchants will soon do thee word of it; for they are great newsmongers, and ill news is swift of foot. {a}

Behold, I am against them.] Neither can thine Apollo help or deliver thee out of my hands; no, though thou chain that idol and nail him to a post, that thou mayest be sure of him; for so these Tyrians did when Alexander besieged their city and took it.

{a} αι γλαραι ποδοκεις.—Pindar.

Ver. 4. And they shall destroy the walls of Tyrus.] Which thou holdest to be inexpugnable. Hence this and the two following chapters, purposely to undeceive thee, if it may be.

I will also scrape her dust from her.] Brought from other places, to make her gardens; for she was built upon a rock, et in petram glabram: to a naked rock will God now reduce her.

Ver. 5. It shall be a place for the spreading of nets.] Of fishers' nets, hung up in the sun to be dried. The prophets usually fetch their comparisons from things the people were most acquainted with and accustomed to as here. Let ministers now do the like.

Ver. 6. And her daughters which are in the field,] i.e., Other cities and colonies sent out by her, and subject to her; as she was olim partu clara urbibus genitis, as Pliny saith of her, the mother of many fair cities, Leptis, Utica, Carthage. Some take it literally for people of both sexes.

Ver. 7. Behold, I will bring upon Tyrus Nebuchadnezzar.] A name as dreadful then as was at any time the name of the great Turk: a man as famous for his valour and victories as ever was Hercules, saith Megasthenes in Josephus, ^{a} and such as whom we may well call, as Orosius doth Alexander, magnum miseriarum gurgitem, et totius Orientis atrocissimum turbinem, The great troubleworld.

^{a} Antiq., lib. x. cap. 13.

Ver. 8. He shall slay with the sword.] See on #Eze 26:6.

He shall lift up the buckler.] Or, A continued series of bucklers, Ferre queant subter densa testudine casus.”

“- ut omnes

Ver. 9. He shall set engines of war.] Helepoles inieciat. A graphic description of a siege.

And with his axes.] Or, Battering rams, or slings. Heb., With his swords; Gr., With his lances, ferramentis mueronatis helepoleos. Vide Am. Marcell, lib. xxiii.

Ver. 10. Thy walls shall shake.] With the noise of one chariot, walls and windows seem to shake; what, then, with the rattle of so many? Methought I heard the noise and fright that shall be at the last day, said one, ^{a} that was at the taking of a town in the low countries. The fragor and terror was so great, say the Turkish histories (speaking of a bloody battle between Amurath III and Lazarus, despot of Sernia), that the angels in heaven, so they are pleased to hyperbolise, amazed with that hideous noise, for that time forgot the heavenly hymns wherewith they always glorify God. ^{b}

When he shall enter into thy gates.] As our Henry VIII did into Tournay, a city of France, which was ever counted so impregnable, that this sentence was engraven over one of the gates, Iannes ton me a perdu ton pucelage, i.e., Thou hast never lost thy maidenhead.

{a} A Lapide.

{b} Turkish History.

Ver. 11. And thy strong garrisons.] Or, Statues, or idols. Their chief idols were Apollo, Hercules, and Astarte. {a} See on #Eze 26:3.

{a} Curt., lib. iv.; Plut. Probl.

Ver. 12. And they shall make a spoil of thy riches.] Raked together by right and wrong. See on #Eze 26:2. Male parta male dilabuntur.

{a} Sallust.

Ver. 13. And I will cause the noise of thy songs to cease.] The Tyrians were much addicted to music. {#Isa 23:16 Eze 28:13} Pleasure mongers shall suffer deeply, by pain of loss and pain of sense.

And the sound of thy harp.] Qua tu, O Tyre, mercatrix quasi meretrix mercatores ad te pellicis, wherewith thou gettest custom.

Ver. 14. Thou shalt be built no more,] i.e., Not in haste, and not at all by the same inhabitants, nor with the like neatness and celebrity. Some say it was not built in the same place with Palaetyrus, or old Tyre; yet was it a famous city again, near unto which our Saviour wrought miracles, in which Paul abode seven days with the brethren. Here Origen died, {a} Ulpian the great lawyer was born, {b} &c. Of this city read Gul. Tyrius, de Bello Sacro, lib. xiii. cap. 1.

{a} Jerome.

{b} Ulp. Digest. Tit. de Cens.

Ver. 15. Shall not the isles.] See the like, #Isa 23:1-16

Ver. 16. All the princes of the sea,] i.e., Of the neighbouring islands.

Clothe themselves with trembling.] Luth., With mourning.

Ver. 17. And they shall take up a lamentation.] The like shall be done shortly at Rome. {#Re 18:9}

That wast inhabited of seafaring men.] Who are usually the worst of men, whence the proverb, Maritimi mores, &c.

On all that haunt it.] Haunt the sea, littorales qui sunt fere duri, horridi, immanes, latrociniis dediti, feri et inhospitales, tales olim Britanni.

Ver. 18. Now shall the isles tremble.] And seeing thy shipwreck, they shall look better to their tackling. Alterius perditio tua sit cautio. {a}

At thy departure.] Into captivity. Or, Tuus exitus, hoc est, tuum exitium.

{a} Isidor.

Ver. 19. When I shall bring up the deep upon thee.] As #Eze 26:3; great forces.

And great waters shall cover thee.] So that thou shalt be irrecoverably lost, as places drowned, and never seen any more; Goodwin sands here in Kent, for instance. These did once belong to Goodwin, Earl of Kent, as his lands; but in the reign of William Rufus they were flooded, and remain to this day a dangerous sandy place, where perished, this present year 1658, Col. Reynolds and others, in their return from Mardike.

Ver. 20. With the people of old time.] The multitude of those that are dead from the beginning of the world; or with the people of the old world, as Jerome will have it; and that the Tyrians' destruction, both temporal and eternal, is hereby hinted.

When I shall set glory in the land of the living,] i.e., In Judea (where the living and true God is worshipped, and where are the right heirs of life) will I re-establish my Church, which is my glory; or when I shall glorify mine elect in mine heavenly kingdom.

Ver. 21. Yet shalt thou never be found again.] See on #Eze 26:14.

Chapter 27

Ver. 1. The word of the Lord.] See on #Eze 18:1.

Ver. 2. Take up a lamentation for Tyrus.] Fitly here compared to a goodly ship, {a} and her desolation to a dismal shipwreck. Theodoret's note on the text is, that when we correct sinners, or threaten them, it should be done with commiseration and compassion. Here we have God's own example for it.

“ Ille dolet quoties cogitur esse ferox.”

{a} Apud Horat. Resp. navis nomine significatur. -Carm. lib. i. od. 14.

Ver. 3. O thou that art situated at the entry of the sea.] As now the city of Venice is,

“ Media insuperabilis unda.”

Environed with her embracing Neptune, to whom (as the ceremony of throwing a ring into the sea implieth, saith one) she marrieth herself with yearly nuptials. But hath she so learned Christ? and doth not the Nebuchadnezzar of Constantinople now threaten her sore?

Thou hast said, I am of perfect beauty.] So that nothing can be added to me: I am ocellus orbis. But who made thee to differ? Is not all thy beauty borrowed? will not this thy bulging wall down ere long?

Ver. 4. Thy borders are in the midst of the sea.] Wherewith thou art compassed and crowned, as it were, {#Isa 23:8} being half a mile distant from the continent, till first Nebuchadnezzar, and then Alexander the Great, by casting earth, wood, and stones into the sea, made of it an island, a peninsula, &c.

Thy builders.] The Sidonians, saith Justin; {a} 240 years before Solomon's temple was built, saith Josephus. {b}

{a} Lib. xviii., lib. viii.

{b} Ant., cap. 2.

Ver. 5. They have made all thy ship boards.] Of the most precious materials, which, with thy rich freight, did incite and entice the arch-pirate to surprise and make prize of thee.

Ver. 6. Of the cakes of Bashan.] Those very best of the best. See #Eze 27:5.

Out of the isles of Chittim,] i.e., Of Greece and the Archipelago, {#Ge 10:4} far set and dear bought. Benches and decks might well have been made of worse matters: sed opulentiam fere sequitur superbia, luxus, libido, &c.; wealth breeds swelth, which is a dangerous symptom, as in the body, so in the mind too.

“ Pulcherrima regna

Luxuries vitiis, odiisque superbia vertit.”

- Claudian.

Ver. 7. Fine linen.] When coarse canvas might have served the turn as well.

From Egypt.] Which is held to be the finest, whitest, and costliest. Oh this unnecessary bravery! Luxus est antea mbulo ruinae: Luxury portends your ruin, how many hath it utterly undone! When a man shall see a cloak embroidered over with woods and parks and lordships, and lined with obligations and bonds and statutes, will not the beggar soon catch such a prodigal by the back?

From the isles of Elishah,] i.e., Of Italy, saith the Chaldee paraphrast; of Greece, say others; the Fortunate islands, say some, which are called the Elysian islands for their pleasure and plenty.

Was that which covered thee.] The poop deck of thy ships. Of Cleopatra's sumptuous ship or barge, the poop deck whereof was of gold, the oars silver, the sails purple, &c., see Plutarch in Anton.

Ver. 8. The inhabitants of Zidon.] Famous all the world over for their skill at sea and otherwise.

Thy wise men were thy pilots.] Wise they had need to be that sit at the stern of a state. Let them not therefore be ignorant, or idle, or otherwise faulty, lest they mar all: let them be active Argonauts. They have their names here in the Hebrew from the ropes of the ship, which they as pilots must skilfully order, shifting sails according to the wind. Counsel also, in that tongue, hath its name from the same root. {a}

{a} הלובחת

Ver. 9. The ancients of Gebal.] Great architects, {#1Ki 5:18} but persecutors of the Church. {#Ps 83:7}

Thy calkers.] Or, Stoppers of chinks, stuppa, pice, aliaque materia, when the ship springeth a leak.

Ver. 10. They set forth thy comeliness.] They were to thee both for muniment and for ornament.

Ver. 11. And the Gammadims.] These were not pigmies, as the Vulgate rendereth it; nor Medes, as Symmachus; nor Cappadocians, as the Chaldee paraphrast; but Syrians of a city called Gamalla, whereof see Pliny. {a}

{a} Nat. Hist., lib. ii. cap. 91.

Ver. 12. Tarshish,] i.e., The Carthaginians, say some; the citizens of Tarsus, another colony of the Tyrians, say others.

They traded in thy fairs.] Heb., In thy derelictions, because they left their commodities behind them, taking others in exchange; for,

“Non omnis fert omnia tellus.”

Ver. 13. Javan, Tubal, and Meshech,] i.e., Grecians, Spaniards, and Muscovites or Cappadocians, who were naturally of a servile disposition: they were anciently called Meschines, saith Josephus, {a} of Meshech, the son of Japhet. {#Ge 10:2}

They traded the persons of men,] i.e., They bought and sold slaves, as now they do in Turkey.

{a} Lib. i. cap. 6.

Ver. 14. They of the house of Togarmah,] i.e., The Germans, saith the Targum, who are still excellent horsemen. The Jews call the Turks the house of Togarmah.

Ver. 15. The men of Dedan.] Arabians. {#Ge 10:7} The Septuagint render them Rhodians.

Horns of ivory.] The elephant's two great tusks, crooked as horns.

And ebony.] Hebenum, which hath affinity with Eben, which signifieth a stone, for ebony is a wood hard and heavy as a stone. The Chaldee rendereth it peacocks.

Ver. 16. The wares of thy making.] Heb., Works. The Tyrians were ingenious workmen, as Hiram, whom Solomon therefore so admired that he called him his father.

And agate.] Or, Chrysoprasus, or crystal, or carbuncle, or onyx. Jerome confesseth that he knoweth not what to call it.

Ver. 17. Wheat of Minnith.] Where the best grew, even the kidneys of wheat, as Moses hath it. {#De 32:14 cf. #Jud 11:33 Ac 12:20}

Pannag.] Rosin or balsam, whereof Judea yielded the best in the whole world.

For the wine of Helbon,] i.e., Of Aleppo, say some, famous then for wine, now for milk, whence also it hath its name, for the Turks call milk alep; and if the Via lactea Milky Way were on earth, it would be found there, saith one.

Ver. 19. Dan also.] Anciently called Laish. {#Jud 18:29} Javan, or the Grecians, were great travellers. {a}

Going to and fro.] Discursatory.

“ Impiger extremos currit mercator ad Indos.”
- Horat.

{See Trapp on "Ps 38:11"}

{a} Graecus vagabundus. -Vatab.

Ver. 20. in precious clothes.] Heb., Clothes of freedom, such as are worn by gallants and magnificos.

For chariots.] Or, Saddles or trappings, ad vehiculum for carriages.

Ver. 21. They occupied with thee in lambs.] Heb., They were the merchants of thy hand, or at thy hand, for cattle could not be carried far.

In these were they thy merchants.] Merchants are as useful in a commonwealth as mechanics, for exporting and importing commodities; only they must observe the gospel standard, "Whatever ye would that men should do to you, do ye the same to them."

Ver. 22. The merchants of Sheba and Raamah,] i.e., Ethiopians and Indians. Erat enim Tyrus emporium propemodum totius mundi.

{a}

With chief of all spices.] All aromatic wares. Pliny reports of cinnamon that in his time a pound of it was worth a thousand denarii, that is, 150 crowns of our money. Galen writeth that it was hard to be found, except in the storehouses of great princes.

{a} Oecolamp.

Ver. 23. Haran.] In Mesopotamia, or Charrae, in Parthia, where Crassus was slain.

And Channeh,] Or, Chalne, where the tower of Babel was built nine miles high. {a}

And Eden.] Where paradise once was: sed periit rosa, mansit spina.

Chelmad,] i.e., Medea, saith the paraphrast.

{a} The tower of Babel was 9164 paces from the ground.

Ver. 24. In all sorts of things.] In omnibus perfectissimis; in the very best commodities, whether for worth or workmanship.

Ver. 25. Thou wast replenished and made very glorious.] Or, Very heavy: {a} as a ship, though not top full, may yet have freight enough to sink it; so had this metaphorical ship Tyre enough to sink it, though not enough to satisfy it.

{a} Aggravata es.

Ver. 26. Thy rowers have brought thee into great waters.] Narrat Tyri naufragium. Here beginneth the prophecy of Tyre's woeful shipwreck. {a}

The east wind.] Called the "Mariner's misery." The Chaldees were east from Tyre, the great wealth whereof solicited their poverty to set upon them, as the wealth of Cyprus did the Romans.

{a} Omnium horum ruinam et rapinam praenunciat.

Ver. 27. Shall fall into the midst of the seas.] As a ship that sinketh, and cannot be buoyed up again.

Ver. 28. The suburbs shall shake.] Or, The waves, or the boats which they throw out of the ship. See on #Eze 26:10.

Of the cry of thy pilots.] At their Conclamatum est: but why, did they then steer no better? Here we see—all covet, all loose.

Ver. 29. And all that handle the oar.] That have escaped to land with their lives.

Ver. 30. To be heard against thee.] Or, For thee, or over thee. {#Eze 27:31 Re 18:11,15,16}

Ver. 31. And they shall make.] Moerebunt induti saccis, inducto calvitio. If this had been for sin, as it is offensivum Dei, et aversivum a Deo, then it had been right.

Ver. 32. What city.] An elegant mimesis.

Like the destroyed.] Quae obmutuit, like her that lost her voice and life together.

Ver. 33. When thy wars.] Good things are fairest on the back side; the worth of them is best known by the want of them. Our eye seeth not things but at a distance.

Ver. 34. In the depths of the waters,] i.e., In the overflowing of the wars. {#Eze 27:26}

Ver. 35. They shall be troubled in their countenance,] i.e., Appalled and dispirited.

Ver. 36. The merchants shall hiss at thee.] Either as astonished at thee, or rather as deriding thee, {a} like as he who seeth another fall into the dirt, first pitieth him and then jeereth him. See the like, #Jer 19:8 49:17.

Thou shalt be a terror.] Because God hath hanged thee up in gibbets, as it were. Or thou wast a terror once, but now a scorn.

And never shalt be any more.] See on #Eze 26:14.

{a} A Lapide.

Chapter 28

Ver. 1. The word of the Lord.] See on #Eze 18:1.

Ver. 2. Say unto the prince of Tyrus.] Princes must be told their own, as well as others. It was partly by flattery that this prince was so high flown. His glory, wealth, and wit also had so blown him up that he forgot himself to be a man. Tabaal, Josephus, out of Berosus, calleth him; Diodorus Siculus, Ithobaal; others, Ethbaal. A most proud and presumptuous person he was, and a type of the devil, who is the "king of all the children of pride." {#Job 41:34} Here he holdeth himself to be wiser than Daniel; {#Eze 28:3} yea, to be the sum and perfection of all wisdom; {#Eze 28:12} to excel the high priest in all his ornaments, os humerosque Deo similis {#Eze 28:13} yea, to be above Adam (ib.); above the cherubims; {#Eze 28:14} lastly, to be God himself, and to sit in his seat. {#Eze 28:2} O Lucifer outdevised! And yet as there were many Marii in one Caesar, so by nature there are many Ethbaals in the best of us; for "as in water face answereth to face, so doth the heart of a man to a man." {#Pr 27:19} Julius Caesar allowed altars and temples to be dedicated unto him, as to a god; and what wonder, whereas his flatterers told him that the freckles in his face were like the stars in the firmament? {a} Valladerius told Pope Paul V, and he believed it, that he was a god, that he lived familiarly with the Godhead, that he heard predestination itself whispering to him, that he had a place to sit in council with the Divine Trinity, &c. Prodigious blasphemy! Is not this that "man of sin," that Merum scelus, pure wickedness spoken of by Paul in #2Th 2:4? See more of this there. Was it not he that made Dandalus, the Venetian ambassador, roll under his table, and, as a dog, eat crusts there? and that suffered the Sicilian ambassadors to use these words unto him, Domine Deus papa, miserere nostrum; O Lord God the Pope, have mercy upon us. And again, O Lamb of God, that takest away the sins of the world, grant us thy peace.

In the midst of the seas.] Where none can come at me. Yes, Nebuchadnezzar could, and did, though after thirteen years' siege, as Josephus writeth. A hard tug and hot service he had of it; but yet he did the deed, as did afterwards also Alexander the Great, who never held anything unseizable.

{a} Sutton.

Ver. 3. Behold, thou art wiser than Daniel.] That oracular man, who was πανσοφος, as one saith of Homer, και παντα ανθρωπεια επισταμενος, the most wise and knowing man alive. His name was now up at Babylon; and Ezekiel, his contemporary, commendeth him; so doth the Baptist, Christ; and Peter, Paul. {#Eph 3:15} Though there had been a breach between them, {#Ga 2:14} there was no envy. But such another braggart as this in the text was Richardus de Sancto Victore, a monk of Paris, who said that himself was a better divine than any prophet or apostle of them all. {a} But how much better, saith Gregory, {b} is humble ignorance than proud knowledge!

{a} Paraei, Hist. Sac. Medul.

{b} Moral., 17:

Ver. 5. Thine heart is lifted up because of thy riches.] Like as the higher the flood riseth, the higher also doth the boat that floateth thereon. A small blast will blow up a bubble, so will a few paltry pounds puff up a carnal heart.

By thy great wisdom.] Here God did nothing. And such, for all the world, saith Oecolampadius, are our freewill men, with their ego feci, this I did. Such feci's I did it's are no better than faeces, dregs saith Luther; that is, dregs and dross.

Ver. 6. Because thou hast set thine heart as the heart of God.] Thou thinkest thy wisdom to be divine, and thyself the only one. The Tyrians were famous for their great wisdom, {#Zec 9:2} and they are said to be the inventors of many arts; yet should they not have overly weaned themselves in this sort; which because they did, let them hear their doom.

Ver. 7. Behold, therefore I will briny strangers upon thee.] Who shall not at all regard thy great wisdom, but grasp after thy wealth, and suck thy blood for it. Neither will they favour thee the more because thou art a king, but slay thee the rather, and say, Hunc ipsum quaerimus, This we seek ourselves, This is the right bird, as that soldier said who slew the most valiant King of Sweden at the battle of Lutzen.

Ver. 8. They shall bring thee down to the pit.] There shall lie the greatness of the god of Tyre.

And thou shalt die the death.] Death will make no difference between a prince and a peasant, a lord and a lowly. The mortal scythe is master of the royal sceptre.

Ver. 9. Wilt thou say before him that slayeth thee, I am God?] That will prove a poor plea, and thou wilt soon be confuted, as afterwards great Alexander confuted his flatterers, when, being wounded in fight, he showed them his blood.

Ver. 10. Thou shalt die the death of the uncircumcised.] Not only a temporal, but an eternal death, as they must needs do that are out of the covenant of grace, whereof circumcision was the seal. This is the sad catastrophe of such as dream of a deity. Of which number were Caligula, Herod, Heliogabalus, Dioclesian, and other monsters, uncircumcised vice gods, as we may, in the worst sense, best term them.

Ver. 11. Moreover the word.] See on #Eze 18:1.

Ver. 12. Take up a lamentation for the king of Tyre.] Who shall have little leisure to lament for himself, his destruction shall be so sudden. See on #Eze 27:2.

Thou sealest up the sum,] i.e., Thou art a pattern of perfection, in thine own conceit at least; for a seal hath in it the perfect form of him that is thereby represented, and then is a letter perfected when the last act of setting to a seal is done to it. ^{a} Tu es omnibus numeris absolutum exemplar; so Vatablus and the Tigurines.

^{a} Litterae consignatae et clausae et absolutae sunt. -Oecolamp.

Ver. 13. Thou hast been in Eden.] As a bird of paradise, or as a tree growing there—^{a} “γαγεννημενον εκ Διως ερνος.”—Hom.

Thou art equal to Adam in the state of innocence; and thy Tyre is no whit inferior to the garden of God.

“*Flores in pratis fragrant, et purpura campis:
Gemma coloratis fulget speciosa lapillis.*”

Every precious stone was thy covering.] Not thy diadem only was decked with them, as the Pope’s triple crown is at this day with gems of greatest value, but thy royal robe—not inferior, haply, to that of Demetrius, king of Macedonia, which none of his successors would wear propter invidiosam impendii magnificentiam, it was so extreme stately and costly—yea, thy pantofies possibly, as Dioclesian’s the emperor holding forth his feet to be kissed, as doth also the Pope at this day, who hath the cross in precious stones set upon his pantofle, to the great reproach of Christianity.

The sardius, topaz, and the diamond.] Nine of those rich stones that were set in the high priest’s rationale or breastplate. See on #Eze 28:2.

The workmanship of thy tabrets.] At thy birth, and at thine inauguration, there was great mirth made, concrepantibus tympanis, tibiis et tubis. What a deal of joy and jollity was there lately expressed in many places for the birth of the prince of Spain.

{a} φυτον ουρανιον.—Plato.

Ver. 14. Thou art the anointed cherub.] Or, Thou art a cherub ever since I anointed thee for protector. {a} As the cherubims cover the ark with their wing, so dost thou thy people; and therefore takest upon thee as if an earthly angel.

Thou wast upon the holy mountain of God.] Thou hast been in heaven: or, at least, on Mount Sinai with Moses, where God appeared with millions of his angels, having a fiery pavement under his feet. {#Ex 24:10}

In the midst of the stones of fire,] i.e., Of seraphims, say some, those flaming creatures of lightnings and thunderbolts, say others, which thou hurlest about at thy pleasure.

“ Saevum praelustri fulmen ab arce venit.”

{a} Trem.

Ver. 15. Thou wast perfect in thy ways] As the evil angels also were; but now it is otherwise. Heaven spued out them in the very first act of their sin, and soon after they were created. Look thou therefore to speed accordingly, since iniquity is found in thee. Potentes potenter torquebuntur.

Ver. 16. By the multitude of thy merchandise.] Many merchants think they may do anything for their own advantage; cheating and overreaching pass for virtues with them. {a}

And thou hast sinned.] By suffering it so to be; for there is a passive injustice as well as an active.

I will cast thee.] I will bring thee down with a vengeance, and make thee an example of that rule, Great sins have great punishments. {b}

{a} Multae sunt fraudes ubi mercatura fervet. -Oecolamp.

{b} Μεγαλων αδικηματον μεγαλαι εισι αι τιμωριαι παρα του Θεου.

Ver. 17. Thine heart, &c.] Fastus inest pulchris.

By reason of thy brightness.] Thine own splendour hath dazzled thee. Magna cognatio est, ut rei sic et nominis, divitiis et vitiis.

That they may behold thee.] And beware by thee.

Ver. 18. Thou hast defiled thy sanctuaries,] i.e., Thy kingly palaces, where thou art looked upon and honoured as a god, but a wretched one, and which for stateliness may vie with my sanctuary. Add hereto, that as none might come into the temple but priests only; so none might come into the palace but confiding persons. The Turks at this day suffer no stranger to come into the presence of their emperor, but first they clasp him by the arms, under colour of doing him honour, but indeed to bereave him of the use of his hands, lest he should offer him any violence. {a}

Therefore will I bring forth a fire in the midst of thee.] Thou shalt perish by thine own sins, as a house is burnt by fire kindled within itself.

And I will bring thee to ashes.] Which shall remain as a lasting monument of the divine displeasure; as did the ashes and cinders of Sodom; and Herodotus saith the same of the ashes of Troy.

{a} Turkish History, 715.

Ver. 19. Thou shalt be a terror.] As kings exceed all others in glory, so their fall is oft with so great ignominy, that they become a wonder and a terror to all people.

Ver. 20. Again the word of the Lord.] See #Eze 18:1.

Ver. 21. Set thy face against Zidon.] An ancient and eminent city of Phoenicia, little inferior to Tyre: in Joshua it is called "Zidon the great." {#Jos 11:8} A very superstitious place, and a great enemy to God's people.

Ver. 22. Behold, I am against thee.] Heb., I against thee—by an angry aposiopsis.

I will be glorified,] viz., In thy just destruction.

And shall be sanctified in her.] See on #Le 10:3.

Ver. 23. For I will send into her.] These are God's evil angels.

And the wounded shall be judged in the midst of her.] This was done likely by Nebuchadnezzar; but certainly by Artaxerxes Ochus the Persian, as the prophet Zechariah had foretold, {#Zec 9:3-5} and as Diodorus Siculus hath left upon record.

Ver. 24. And there shall be no more a pricking brier.] For God will take away the Canaanite out of the land, {#Zec 14:21} omnem spinum dolorificum: he will by his judgments provide for his own glory, and for his people's comfort.

Ver. 25. Then shall they dwell in their land.] Provided that they cleave close to me; otherwise I will out them again. It hath been elsewhere noted that the promises are with a condition; which is as an oar in a boat, or stern of a ship, and turns the promise another way.

Ver. 26. And they shall dwell safely therein.] Or, In confidence. And this is reiterated here to show what a mercy of God it is to live secure, and free from the fear of enemies.

Chapter 29

Ver. 1. In the tenth year.] The year before Jerusalem was taken. {#Eze 24:1}

In the tenth month.] Called "Tebeth," {#Es 2:16} and it answereth to our January, saith Bede. Chronology is the eye of prophecy, as well as of history.

Ver. 2. Set thy face against Pharaoh.] This was Pharaohhophra, whom Herodotus {a} calleth Apries, and saith that he gave out that no god, how great soever, could deprive him of his kingdom. Dionysius, the tyrant of Sicily, also was wont to say that his kingdom was tied unto him with chains of adamant; but it proved otherwise. Noli gloriari. Do not brag!

And against all Egypt.] Which held itself able to hold out against all the world, and is therefore here threatened at large in this and the three next chapters.

{a} In Euterp.

Ver. 3. The great dragon.] Or, Whale, or crocodile, the figure of Pharaoh; whose princes also and people are fitly compared to lesser fishes, and Egypt to waters, wherewith it aboundeth. These shall all suffer together, saith the prophet: Principis enim calamitas, populi clades est. {a} Compare #Ps 74:13,14.

That lieth in the midst of his rivers.] That lieth at ease in the swollen waters of his Nile, and battleth.

Which hath said, My river is mine own.] The river Nile watereth Egypt, and maketh it fruitful beyond credulity. They do but cast in the seed, and have four rich harvests in less than four months, say travellers. Hence the Egyptians were generally proud, riotous, and superstitious above measure:

“Nequitias tellus scit dare nulla magis.”

- Plin., Paneg.

The most poisonous flies are bred in the sweetest fruit trees. See on #1Ti 6:17.

And I have made it for myself,] i.e., Useful and serviceable to my country with much pains and expense, by ditches, channels, water courses, &c. These were cleansed and repaired by the command of Augustus Caesar, when he had subdued Egypt, and reduced it into a province. {b} Some render it, Ego feci me ipsum, I have made myself; a most arrogant speech!

“*Sum felix; quis enim neget hoc? felixque manebo;
Hoc quoque quis dubitet? tutum me copia fecit.
Maior sum quam cui possit fortuna nocere.*”—Ovid.

{a} Oecolamp.

{b} Sueton.

Ver. 4. But I will put hooks in thy jaws.] Speaking to Tyre, a sea town, sea metaphors were made use of. Now he fetcheth them from waters and fishes, that he may frame himself to his hearers. A good precedent for preachers.

To stick unto thy scales.] Thy subjects shall all follow thee into the field, that there you may all fall together. Had they kept themselves in Egypt, they might have been far safer; for that country could hardly be come at by an enemy. But they went forth to meet their bane, as if they had been ambitions of destruction. God had a holy hand in it.

Ver. 5. And I will leave thee thrown into the wilderness.] As fish when they are caught are cast upon the dry land, and there they die: for how should a fish live out of his own element? It may be the Chaldees fought Pharaoh and his forces in the wilderness, killed him and cast him out unburied, which the heathens held a great unhappiness: for they thought their ghosts could not pass the river Styx, but must wander through hell's waste wildernesses, unless their dead bodies were buried.

I have given thee for meat.] Whale's flesh is no better worth.

Ver. 6. And all the inhabitants, &c.] Shall feel my power in their just destruction, though they think themselves insuperable.

Because they have been a staff of reed.] See this fully expounded in the next words; see also on #Isa 36:6 Jer 37:7,8. Egypt was a reedy country; as Pliny ^{a} telleth us, Arando autem ipsa per se fluctuat, et in necessitate eludit.

^{a} Lib. xiii. cap. 11.

Ver. 7. When they took hold of thee by thy hand,] i.e., Made a covenant with thee, and hoped for help from thee. See #Job 8:20. The Holy Scripture is its own best interpreter.

Thou didst break.] So unfaithful are many friends, so uncertain are all human helps.

And madest all their loins to be at a stand.] Thou leftest them in the lurch, as we say, to shift for themselves as they could.

Ver. 8. And cut off man and beast.] With both which thou aboundest exceedingly, as being a very fruitful country; populosa et pecorosa.

Ver. 9. Because he hath said, The river is mine, and I have made it.] With this proud speech he is twice twitted. ^{see #Eze 29:3} The Egyptians so trusted in their river Nile, as if they needed no help from heaven.

“Aegyptus sine nube ferax,” saith Claudian. ^{a} And Lucan to like purpose:

“Terra suis contenta bonis, non indiga mercis

Aut Iovis; in solo tanta est fiducia Nile.”

How much better might God have said to these Egyptians, than Vespasian did, Haurite a me tanquam a Nile, Come ye to me, "the fountain of living waters," and "hew not out thus to yourselves broken cisterns that can hold no water!" But they used in mockery to tell the Grecians, that if God should forget to rain, they might chance to starve for it; they thought the rain was of God, but not the river:

“ *Te propter nullos tellus tua postulat imbres:
Arida nee pluvio supplicat herba Iovi.* ”
- Tibul. de Nilo.

God therefore threateneth here to dry it up, and so he did; ingratitude forfeiteth all. In the reign of Cleopatra, Nile overflowed not the banks for two years together, saith Seneca. He brings in Callimachus, telling of a time wherein it had not done so for nine years' time. Hence Ovid: {b}

“ *Creditur Aegyptus caruisse iuvantibus arva
Imbribus, atque annis sicca fuisse novem.* ”

Thus their gold flowing {c} and fruit giving {d} river failed them, because they attributed too much to it. In Joseph's time they had seven years' famine.

{a} Epigram. 6.

{b} Art., lib. i.

{d} καρπ ωδοτης.—Nazianz.

Ver. 10. And against thy rivers.] The jealous God will down with the earthly idol, whatever it be. See on #Eze 29:9.

And I will make the land of Egypt utterly waste.] Heb., Waste of wastes.

From the tower of Syene,] i.e., From south to north.

Ver. 11. No foot of man or beast shall pass through it.] This was solitudo solitudinis indeed, a dreadful desolation. When it happened no history mentioneth, but that it was so is most sure. Oh the dismal effects of sin in all ages, as now in various parts of Turkey, utterly unpeopled, though once flourishing!

Ver. 12. In the midst of the countries.] Palestine, Moab, Edom, Judea, &c. See #Jer 46:18-20

And her cities.] Which are said to have been twenty thousand in the reign of Amasis, the chief whereof were Alexandria, Thebes, Babylon, Memphis, &c.

Ver. 13. Will I gather the Egyptians.] God loveth to help men that are forsaken of their hopes. Cyrus sent them home likely about that time that he took Babylon; and his son Cambyses had somewhat to do to subdue them, so high they were soon grown and headstrong. Humbled they were, but not humble; low, but not lowly.

Ver. 14. Into the land of Pathros.] A part of the lower Egypt; a corner of the country, say some, but big enough to hold the remnant that returned.

And they shall be there a base kingdom.] Reditum et regnum illis promittit, sed humile. A kingdom God promiseth them, but base and abject, because subject and tributary to the Persian, so that the Israelites shall no more lean upon it. God often removeth occasions of sin from his people, taketh away their stumblingblocks, that they may not fall under his heavy displeasure.

Ver. 15. It shall be the basest of the kingdoms.] And worthily, for their worshipping the basest creatures, {see #Ro 1:23,24} but especially for their faithlessness to God's Israel.

For I will diminish them.] As God hath likewise done the Persians at this day—who have undone their confederates, the Egyptians and Georgians {a} -and the Grecians no less, who have now lost their liberty, and are so degenerate, by means of the Turkish oppression, that in all Graecia is hardly to be found any small remembrance of the glory thereof. {b}

{a} Turkish History.

{b} Ibid., 260.

Ver. 16. And it shall be no more the confidence.] For I will cut them and keep them short enough; I will pull their plumes, so that they shall not stretch their wings beyond the nest; they shall have nothing so many clients and adherents.

Which bringeth their iniquity to remembrance.] Creature confidence is so hated of God, that it inmindeth him of former miscarriages also, and causeth him to plague men for the new and the old together.

Ver. 17. In the seven and twentieth year.] Of Jeconiah's captivity, as Ezekiel ordinarily counteth, or of Nebuchadnezzar's reign, say the Jewish doctors; {a} whereas Tyre was overthrown, some part of Egypt wasted, Jeremiah and Baruch taken into his protection.

The word of the Lord came.] This was Ezekiel's last sermon, his swan song, showing wherefore and whereby Egypt should be so laid waste.

{a} Sedar Olam.

Ver. 18. To serve a great service.] For thirteen years together, as saith Josephus.

Every head was made bald,] sc., By continual carrying, upon their heads and shoulders, earth, wood, and stones—for which they were much laughed at by the Tyrian soldiers—to fill up that strait of the sea which separated Tyre from the continent, before it could be taken.

Yet had he no wages.] The Tyrians, when they saw they could hold out no longer, had sent much of their wealth away to Carthage and other places; much of it also they cast into the seat saith Lyra; so that Nebuchadnezzar, at his entrance, found nothing but a bare rock,—saith Jerome, out of an old Assyrian chronicle.

Ver. 19. Behold, I will give the land of Egypt.] As pay for his pains at Tyre. God is a liberal paymaster, and his retributions are more than bountiful; serve him, therefore, with cheerfulness.

Ver. 20. I have given him the land of Egypt.] As the great Turk gave his soldiers the rich spoil of Constantinople; {a} and as Tamerlane never forgot the good service of his servants, nor left the same long unrewarded, often saying that day to be lost wherein he had not given them something. {b}

Because they wrought for me.] By mine instinct, though beside their own intent.

{a} Turkish History, 345.

{b} Ibid., 227.

Ver. 21. The horn,] i.e., The strength, power, and authority, in the kingdom of Christ especially. {#Lu 1:69}

The opening.] Occasion to bless my name.

They shall know.] Nebuchadnezzar also, and his Babylonians.

Chapter 30

Ver. 1. The word of the Lord.] See #Eze 18:1.

Ver. 2. Woe worth the day.] Ah! de die ista. This shall be the voice much more of reprobates at that last "day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God." {#Ro 2:5} Enoch foretold this dreadful day before Noah predicted the deluge. That day is longer before it comes, but shall be more terrible when it is come.

Ver. 3. A cloudy day.] Heb., A day of a cloud, which was rarely seen in Egypt.

Ver. 4. Great pain.] Heb., Pain upon pain, as the throes in childbirth.

Ver. 5. Chub.] Certain Africans, who shall be worse put to it than were those succeeding Africans, who had a prophecy (but not of like credit with this of Ezekiel), that when the Romans sent an army into their country, Mundus cum tota sua prole periret, which made them think the world should then be at an end. But afterwards the Romans sent an army thither under the conduct of one Mundus, who in battle was slain, together with his sons, by the Africans, and discovered the illusion of the devil. The Septuagint render Chub Spaniards, which I like the better, saith Lavater, {a} because Strabo saith Nebuchadnezzar came with his victorious army as far as Spain.

{a} Lib. xv.

Ver. 6. They that uphold Egypt shall fall,] i.e., Their confederates; or, as some, their tutelar gods. Herodotus writeth that Cambyses wasted with the sword Egypt and Ethiopia, killed their god Apis, and defaced all their idols. This he did, doubtless, rather in scorn of all religion than hatred of idolatry.

And the pride of her power shall come down.] Tumbling down as a great and weighty bullet from a very high and steep mountain.

From the tower of Syene.] See #Eze 29:10.

Ver. 7. And they shall be desolate.] See #Eze 29:10.

Ver. 8. And they shall know that I am the Lord.] Men will not take knowledge of this till they have paid for their learning, Vexatio dat intellectum. Smart makes wit. {a}

When I have set a fire in Egypt.] War is fitly compared to fire; it feeds upon the people. See #Isa 9:19. {See Trapp on "Isa 9:19"}

{a} Non est perissologia: repetitur cum fructu. -Lavat.

Ver. 9. In that day shall messengers go forth from me,] i.e., The Chaldeans, by an instinct from me to subdue Ethiopia also.

In ships.] For Nile was navigable:

“Lene fluit Nile.”—Claudian.

To make the careless Ethiopians.] Heb., Confident Cush. Security ushereth in calamity.

As in the day of Egypt.] That cloudy day, {#Eze 30:3} when clouds of blood were dissolved upon them. Or that dismal day of old, when they perished in the Red Sea. {#Ex 15:10}

Ver. 10. I will also make the multitude.] Or, The great noise and hurry. They shall have no more cause to complain that they are too many of them, so that they cannot one live by another.

Ver. 11. The terrible of the nations.] Tyranni gentium. Homo homini lupus.

Ver. 12. And I will make the rivers dry.] The Chaldees shall drink them up; {as #2Ki 19:24} or I will dry them up, for a punishment of your vain trust in them, and boasting of them. {#Eze 29:3,9}

And sell the land.] Pass it away utterly from you. "The earth is the Lord's"; he is the true proprietary.

Ver. 13. I will also destroy their idols.] He did so by Cambyses. See on #Eze 30:6. He doth so still by the Turks. When they invade Popish countries, they break down their mawmets.

Out of Noph.] Called also Moph, {#Ho 9:6} afterwards Memphis (the metropolis of idolatry; Nazianzen calleth it ανοια, the mad city, because ειδωλομανης, madly set upon idols, Apis especially), afterwards Babylon, and now Alcair; famous for its incredible greatness, fair situation, pillars and pyramids. It was the seat royal of the sultans, till taken by the Turks from Camson Gaurus and the Mamelukes about the year 1515.

And there shall be no more a prince.] For forty years at least.

Ver. 14. And I will set fire.] See on #Eze 30:8.

In Zoan.] Or Tanis, the inhabitants whereof are said to be those giants called Titans.

And will execute judgments in No.] Populous No, {#Na 3:8} called afterwards Alexandria, now Scanderoon.

Ver. 15. And I will pour my fury upon Sin.] {a} Called afterwards Pelusium, and now Damiata.

The strength of Egypt.] The key of the kingdom.

{a} Deserto Sinis nomen dedit.

Ver. 16. I will set fire in Egypt.] See #Eze 30:8.

Ver. 17. Aven.] Called also Heliopolis, and Thebe.

Phibeseth.] Or Bubastis, called by Ptolemy, Heroum civitas.

Ver. 18. At Tehaphnehes.] Or, Daphne, the gate of Egypt, at which the Chaldees entered.

A cloud shall cover her.] See #Eze 30:3.

Ver. 19. And they shall know.] See on #Eze 30:8.

Ver. 20. In the eleventh year.] The year wherein Jerusalem was destroyed, notwithstanding Pharaoh's fair promises and proffers to relieve her.

Ver. 21. I have broken the arm.] Ita ut nulla arte vel ope; so that by no means or medicines it can be made whole again. Losses received in war can hardly be repaired.

Ver. 22. And will break his arms.] I will utterly disable him, and drive the field of him. He shall neither be able to defend himself or offend his enemy. See #Ps 37:17.

Ver. 23. And I will scatter the Egyptians.] Send them captive into other countries, as by a whirlwind or hurricane. This metaphor we have often met with. He was afterwards hanged.

Ver. 24. And I will strengthen the arms of the king of Babylon.] {a} God, as he sends the sword, {#Eze 14:17} musters the men, {#Isa 13:4} orders the ammunition, {#Jer 50:25} renders the weapons vain or prosperous, {#Isa 54:17} so he strengtheneth and weakeneth the arm of either party.

{a} Herod.

Ver. 25. But I will strengthen.] See #Eze 30:25.

And they shall know.] See on #Eze 30:8.

Ver. 26. See #Eze 30:23. They would hardly believe it, and therefore are so often assured of it.

Chapter 31

Ver. 1. In the third month.] Two months after the former prophecy, and a month before the city was taken.

Ver. 2. Speak unto Pharaoh.] Unto Pharaohhophra. {#Eze 29:2} Say unto him (though it will be to small purpose), "Hear, and give ear, be not proud, for the Lord hath spoken it." {#Jer 13:15}

Whom art thou like in thy greatness?] q.d., Thou thinkest thyself the only one, and that there is none such; but what sayest thou to the Assyrian, whom yet the Babylonian hath now laid low enough?

Ver. 3. Behold, the Assyrian was a cedar.] See #Eze 17:3,22,23 Da 4:10,11. {See Trapp on "Eze 17:3"} {See Trapp on "Eze 17:22"} {See Trapp on "Eze 17:23"} {See Trapp on "Da 4:10"} {See Trapp on "Da 4:11"} The cedar is a very tall, fair, shady, leafy, and lively tree. Such was Esarhaddon, King of Assyria, once a most potent monarch, now not the master of a mole hill. Now, therefore (by an argument from the greater to the less), if he so fell through his pride, shalt not thou much more?

Ver. 4. The waters made him great.] He had a confluence of all prosperities. Watered he was, non aquis sed abyssis; est autem abyssus, inexhausta felicitas et rerum affluentia. He overabounded with all outward happiness. In wealth, victories, and triumphs, he gave place to no man.

Ver. 5. And his boughs were multiplied.] Amplissima ludit copia verborum. {a}

{a} Oecolamp.

Ver. 6. All the fowls.] See #Da 4:12.

Ver. 7. Thus was he fair in his greatness] Once again he setteth forth with how great power and glory God had adorned this first monarchy.

Ver. 8. The cedars in the garden of God.] No kingdom in the world was comparable to the Assyrian for thirteen hundred years together.

Ver. 9. So that all the trees of Eden...envied him.] Summa petit livor. The tallest trees are weakest in the tops, and envy always aimeth at the highest.

Ver. 10. Because thou hast lifted up thyself.] Here he comes to describe casum et cladem, the downfall and destruction of this flourishing empire, beginning with a short apostrophe to Pharaoh: "Be not high minded, but fear." Believe not him who said, Decent secundas fortunas superbiae, {a} Pride well becometh prosperity; but rather believe what another saith, and experience confirmeth, Sequitur superbos ultora tergo Deus, {b} God punisheth the proud surely and severely. A better author than either of them telleth us that "pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall. Better it is to be of a humble spirit with the lowly, than to divide the spoil with the proud." {#Pr 16:18,19}

{b} Seneca.

Ver. 11. I have therefore delivered him into the hand of the mighty one.] Of Merodach Baladan, who of governor had made himself King of Babylon; and in the twelfth year of his reign, having overcome Esarhaddon, son to Sennacherib, and last monarch of Assyria, he adjoined that whole empire to the Babylonians, and reigned after that forty years. {a}

He shall surely deal with him.] Heb., In doing he shall do unto him; i.e., he shall do what he list with him; {b} as Tamerlane since did with Bajazet, whom he carried about in an iron cage, using him on festival days for a footstool, and feeding him like a dog with crumbs fallen from his table. All which Tamerlane did, not so much for hatred to the man, saith the historian, {c} as to manifest the just judgment of God against the arrogant folly of the proud.

{a} Metashenes, Josephus, lib. i. cap. 2.

{b} Pro libitu tractabo. -Piscat.

{c} Turkish History, 220.

Ver. 12. And strangers have cut him off.] The greater wealth the greater spoil awaiteth a man; as each one desireth to lop the tree that hath thick and large boughs and branches.

And his boughs are broken,] i.e., His vassals, homagers, and auxiliaries.

And all the people of the earth.] Who once sheltered under his shadow. But the rule is,

“Arbor honoretur cuius nos umbra tuetur.”

And have left him.] And joined themselves to the Babylonian.

“Sic cum fortuna statque caditque fides.”—Ovid.

Ver. 13. Upon his ruin shall all the fowls.] His dead body shall want decent burial, as afterward did great Alexander’s, great Pompey’s, our William the Conqueror’s, Richard III’s, &c.

Ver. 14. To the end that none of all the trees.] This is the use men should make of God’s heavy judgments upon others. This man’s father Sennacherib had a statue set up in Egypt, saith Herodotus, {a} with this inscription, Let him that looketh upon my misery learn to be modest and to fear God.

Neither their trees stand up in their height.] Neque stent in seipsis; neither stand in themselves, because of their height. Magna repente ruunt: in te stas et non stets, said the oracle to Augustine, Thou standest on thine own bottom, thou wilt surely down.

For they are all delivered unto death.] Without difference, pell mell, lords and lowlies together; as the poet also singeth,

“*Sub tua purpurei veniunt vestigia reges,
Deposito luxu, turba cum paupere mixti;
Omnia mors aequat.*”—Claudian.

{a} Lib. ii.

Ver. 15. I restrained the floods thereof.] I made them keep home, as mourners use to do.

And I caused Lebanon to mourn for him.] Heb., To be black; i.e., in mourning habit. Athenienses non nisi atrati sapiunt, said one.

Ver. 16. I made the nations shake at the sound of his fall.] As the earth seems to shake at the fall of some mighty cedar.

“Sic subito casu, quae valere, ruunt.”

Shall be comforted.] In so noble a companion and partaker of their misery. Compare #Isa 14:1-3

Ver. 17. They also went down into hell with him.] It was wont to be said that hell was paved with kings' crests and shavelings' bald pates. Henry VIII was told on his deathbed that he was now going to the place of kings. See #Isa 30:33. What a coil kept this Esarhaddon in his time, as being superstitibus terror, praemortuis laeitia, complicibus exitium, sui ipsius ruina! {a}

{a} Oecolamp.

Ver. 18. To whom art thou like?] He fitly returneth to Pharaoh, applying all this discourse to him.

In the midst of the uncircumcised.] #Eze 28:10.

This is Pharaoh.] This is like that of the poet,

“ Hic finis Priami fatorum: hic exitus ilium

Sorte tulit.”—Virg., Aeneid., lib. ii.

Chapter 32

Ver. 1. In the twelfth month.] About a year and a half after the city was taken.

Ver. 2. Take up a lamentation,] i.e., A lamentable prophecy, destructive to the Egyptians; and it is very likely that they heard of it but heeded it not; tanquam monstra marina Dei verba praetereuntes.

Thou art like a young lion.] For pride, fierceness, and cruelty.

And thou art as a whale.] Or, Crocodile; thou domineerest over sea and land, far and wide; thou playest rex.

Thou camest forth with thy rivers.] With the arms of thy Nile into the midland sea, insanis bellis inquietans omnia, breeding a great bustle in the countries near adjoining.

Ver. 3. I will therefore spread out my net.] Thou shalt be taken in an evil net, when thou little thinkest of it: "Evil shall hunt the violent man, to overthrow him." {#Ps 140:11} Look how Leo cassibus irretitus ait, Si praescivissem; and as the whale, enclosed by fishers, is lugged to land, done to death, cleft in pieces with axes, his flesh being made a prey for birds and beasts, his blood far and near drenching the earth, so shall it fare with Pharaoh and his forces.

Ver. 4. Then will I leave thee upon the land.] As whales are sometimes left by an ebb, while they pursue lesser fishes. There was one so taken near Greenwich lately, {a} a piece of whose flesh was showed unto me.

{a} In June 1658.

Ver. 5. With thy height.] Celsitudine tua; {a} with thy glory, which thou holdest dearer than thy flesh or life.

{a} Oecolamp.

Ver. 6. I will also water with thy blood.] Instead of thy river Nile.

The land wherein thou swimmest.] Egypt, where thou sportest, as the whale doth in the mighty waters.

Even to the mountains.] {a} A most elegant hyperbole, the like whereto see #2Ki 21:16.

{a} Natabunt colles et valles cruore tuo.

Ver. 7. And when I shall put thee out.] Or, Extinguish thee, who art for thy power and glory as one of the world's great luminaries.

I will cover the heaven, {a} &c.] So great a fume, or rather so vile a snuff, shall exhale, that the heavens shall seem to be muffled, &c. It shall be once again deep darkness over all the land of Egypt; another hyperbole.

{a} Hypallage poetica.

Ver. 8. All the bright lights of heaven.] See #Eze 32:7. All this shall befall the world really and without a hyperbole at the last day {#Mt 24:29}

“Impiaque aeternam patientur saecula noctem.”

Ver. 9. I will also vex.] Or, Grieve. See #Ec 7:3, where the same word signifieth anger and sorrow. Nebuchadnezzar's growing greatness shall be a cut and a corrosive to them.

Ver. 10. When I shall brandish my sword.] As fetching my blow at them too, and aiming where to hit them.

Every man for his own life.] Which he knows he hath forfeited, and hath now great cause to fear, since his neighbour's house is on fire. {a}

{a} Iam proximus ardet. -Ucalegon.

Ver. 11. The sword of the King of Babylon.] Here is that delivered plainly which was before parabolically.

Ver. 12. By the swords of the mighty.] Or, Of the heroes, or giants.

The terrible of the nations.] Grassatores, as Munster hath it; inexpugnabiles, as the Vulgate; such as with whom there is no dealing.

Ver. 13. All the beasts thereof.] Egypt, a most moist and fat country, was full of cattle.

Ver. 14. Then will I make their waters deep.] There shall not be men left to drive them by ditches and channels into their grounds and pastures, for the making of them fruitful.

And cause their rivers to run like oil,] i.e., Smoothly and silently.

“ Lene fluit Nilus, sed cunctis amnibus extat

Utilior, nullas confessus murmure vires. ”

- Claudian.

Ver. 15. When I shall make the land...desolate.] See here the sad effects of sin, and beware.

Then shall they know that I am the Lord.] Pleraque supra habuimus: ideo sum brevior; saith Lavater on #Eze 32:12.

Ver. 16. This is the lamentation.] And this is the epilogue of this former prophecy; the latter followeth, being of the self-same argument—viz., a funeral dirge and exequies over Egypt.

Ver. 17. In the fifteenth day of the month,] i.e., Of the twelfth month, {#Eze 32:1} and about a fortnight after the former prophecy. God loves to foretell, and to do it often.

Ver. 18. Wail for the multitude.] Prophesy their destruction, but do it not without grief and regret.

Cast them down.] Do thou foretell it, and I will not fail to fulfil it. {#Jer 1:10} {See Trapp on "Jer 1:10"} Let them know that hell gapeth for them; and here I give thee the keys thereof. So God doth to every faithful minister; {#Mt 16:19} not to Peter only, nor to his pretended successor, the Pope, whom therefore Luther bravely slighted in these words of his, Contemptus est a me Romanus et favor et furor, -I care neither for the Pope's favour nor frowns.

Ver. 19. Whom dost thou pass in beauty?] What art thou better than other thy compeers and complices in sin? Thou must also dance down to hell down to hell, with the rest.

Be thou laid with the uncircumcised.] Strangers to the covenant, whereof circumcision was a seal Sinners the Chaldee here calleth them, such as the devil sweeps. They are his birds, saith Mr Bradford, martyr, ^{a} whom, when he hath well fed, he will broach them and eat them, chew them and champ them, world without end, in eternal woe and misery.

^{a} Serm. of Repent., p. 70.

Ver. 20. They shall fall.] Carcases have their names both in Greek and Latin from falling. ^{a}

“ Fit subito funus, qui modo virus erat.”

We wonder now and then at the sudden death of a man. In war many thousands exhale their breath without so much as, Lord have mercy on us! Death heweth its way through a wood of men in a minute of time, &c.

^{a} πτωμα. Cadaver.

Ver. 21. The strong among the mighty.] Who might have seen many fair summers, had they not been cut off by Pharaoh's sword.

Shall speak to him out of the midst of hell.] What they say to him, see #Isa 14:10, where we have the like personification in poetry.

Ver. 22. Ashur is there.] To wit, in the belly of hell, among the uncircumcised, as Lazarus and other saints are in the bosom of Abraham, the place of bliss. Slain they were with the sword; but that was but a beginning of their sorrows, a trap door to eternal torment. Virgil, by a like figure, brings in Aeneas going down to hell, and there seeing Agamemnon, Dido, the Titans, Cyclopes, and other tyrants.

Ver. 23. Whose graves are set in the sides of the pit.] In the bottom of the burning lake, which from the high top of a kingdom is a foul fall. Their being there buried may import that they shall never come out.

Which caused terror.] As breathing nothing but blood and slaughter, raising a tempest wherever they came, so that they became terrores terrae, terrors of the earth, as dreadful as devils.

Ver. 24. There is Elam.] The Persians, who in the reign of Cyaxares had been subdued by the Scythians, and slain in great number. {#Jer 49:34, &c.}

Into the nether parts of the earth.] Into hell, as that rich glutton in #Lu 16:23, where our Saviour seemeth to allude to this place, {a}

Yet have they borne their shame.] Carried the matter of it to hell with them, where is perpetual shame and confusion, beside the vexing snuff they have left behind them upon earth.

{a} Jun.

Ver. 25. They have set her a bed,] i.e., The devils have set the Persian multitude a bed, but an uneasy one, such as they set for that rich wretch, {#Lu 12:19,20} who thought to take his ease, but was not suffered.

With all her multitude.] The grave is the "congregation house of all living." {#Job 30:23} Hell is of many dead, that die in their sins.

He is put in the midst.] In the hottest fire of hell.

Ver. 26. There is Meshech and Tubal,] i.e., Say some, the Cappadocians and Spaniards; others, the Scythians and Sarmatians.

And all her multitude.] See #Eze 32:25.

Ver. 27. Which are gone down to hell with their weapons of war.] They died not gloriously as conquerors, nor were buried triumphantly with their arms under their heads, as valiant warriors were wont to be; sed ingloria vita recessit, but they died like dogs and were basely buried, and yet that was not the worst of it either.

But their iniquities shall be upon their bones.] They shall rue for their cruelty and bloodshed. These shall be as a murdering weapon in their bones {#Ps 42:10} throughout all eternity.

Ver. 28. Yea, thou shalt be broken.] Thou, O Pharaoh, shalt have a deeper degree of torment in hell. Potentes potenter torquebuntur.

Ver. 29. They shall lie with the uncircumcised.] Though they were circumcised, as now the Turks are, yet that shall not profit them. Faciunt et vespae favos, et “ Simia quam similis turpissima bestia nobis!”

Ver. 30. There be the princes of the north,] i.e., Saith Junius, The Syrians, Tyrians, and others.

And all the Zidonians.] All the hunters, saith the Vulgate, taking the word appellatively.

Which are gone down.] The same again, ad maius pathos.

Ver. 31. Pharaoh shall see them.] This is the epilogue or preclose of this doleful ditty.

And shall be comforted.] This was a miserable comfort, the Like whereto is that of some profane persons among us, who, when threatened for their foul practices, use to reply, If we do go to hell, yet we shall have company.

Ver. 32. For I have caused my terror.] By Pharaoh’s exemplary punishment. This will make good men tremble at my judgments, and bad men beware how they come under my wrath.

Chapter 33

Ver. 1. Again the word of the Lord came unto me, saying.] A new commission to preach again to his countrymen, which he had not done since #Eze 24:27. {See Trapp on "Eze 24:27"}

Ver. 2. Speak to the children of thy people.] I say, "of thy people"; for I can scarce find in my heart to own them, they be so bad.

When I bring the sword upon a land.] The sword is of God’s sending; {#Eze 14:17} and whencesoever it cometh, it is bathed in heaven. {#Isa 34:5} Think the same of any other public calamity, {#Am 3:6} and therefore frame to a patient and peaceable behaviour under it. Among philosophers the most noted sect for patience was that of the Stoics, who ascribed all to fate.

Ver. 3. He blow the trumpet.] Hence the ancients {a} infer that a bishop must preach, and that Praelati officium est sollicitudo non celsitudo. He taketh upon him the office of a constant preacher, saith Gregory, that undertaketh to be a minister.

{a} Clemens, Bernard.

Ver. 4. His blood shall be upon his own.] The blame shall rest wholly upon himself. Not to be warned is both a just presage and desert of destruction.

Ver. 5. But he that taketh warning.] Foresight is the best means of prevention.

Ver. 6. He is taken away in his iniquity.] This is a dismal kind of death, far worse than that of dying in prison, or of dying in a ditch.

As the watchman's hand.] By whose treachery, or indiligence at least, he miscarried.

Ver. 7. {See Trapp on "Eze 3:17"}

Ver. 8. {See Trapp on "Eze 3:18"}

Ver. 9. {See Trapp on "Eze 3:19"}

Ver. 10. Thus ye speak.] {a} But not well, while ye have hard thoughts of God and heavy thoughts of yourselves, as if your sins were unpardonable, and that ye were already ruined beyond relief; whereas true repentance is a ready remedy, a plank after shipwreck, that would set you safe, and render you right again. This they had been told before, {#Eze 18:25-32} but to little purpose: the word was not mingled with faith in their hearts, and did therefore run through them, {#Heb 2:1} as water runs through a riven vessel.

And we pine away in them.] Ita punimur ut pereamus. And so be punished and perish. This the prophet had threatened, {#Eze 24:23} and they still stomachfully object it to him: it lay as hard meat, and they raise a cavil upon it, whereto the Lord answereth,

Ver. 11. As I live, saith the Lord God, &c.] This is one of those precious places, those mellifluous honeycombs, which we should go on sucking towards heaven, as Samson once did towards his parents. {#Jud 14:9} Here, if anywhere, we may find "strong consolation." God, when he swears, desires certainly to be credited, saith Tertullian. {a} Oh happy we, for whose sakes God vouchsafeth to swear! and oh, thrice wretched we, if we believe not God, no, though he swear to us! Oh, saith Theodoret here, who can ever sufficiently admire the Lord's great goodness, who, being so shamefully slighted by the sinful sons of men, doth yet swear his readiness to receive them graciously who have revolted grievously? Well might Nazianzen say that God delighteth in nothing so much as in man's conversion and salvation: {b} φοβεισθαι βουλευται, ου φονευσαι, saith Basil—i.e., he would we should fear him, not fall by his hand: Redire nos sibi, non perire desiderat, as Chrysologus phraseth it, return unto him, not "perish from the way." {#Ps 2:12}

For why will ye die?] Turn ye must, or burn. See #Eze 18:31,32.

{a} Lib. de Poenitent., cap. 4.

{b} Suffundere mavult sanguinem quam effundere. -Tertul.

Ver. 12. Say unto the children.] The same as before, only with a proviso of perseverance in well-doing, for else all is lost. Non enim quaeruntur in Christianis initia sed finis, saith Jerome, The end is better than the beginning.

Ver. 13. When I shall say to the righteous.] See on #Eze 18:24.

If he trust to his own righteousness.] As thinking that he hath thereby purchased a licence to commit iniquity.

Ver. 14. Thou shalt surely die,] viz., Except thou repent; for that altereth the case. Penitence is almost as good as innocence.

If he turn from his sin and do.] These two parts make up true repentance.

Ver. 15. Give again that he had robbed.] Quod rapuit reddideret. The law for restitution, see #Nu 5:6,7.

Ver. 16. None of his sins.] This is point blank against the doctrine of purgatory.

Ver. 17. Yet the children of the people say.] This was a second cavil of theirs. See #Eze 33:10 18:25. Archesilas was surnamed Cavillator: so might these well have been.

Their way is not equal.] There is no equity at all in this causeless quarrel of theirs.

Ver. 18. When the righteous turneth.] To set them down, if right reason would do it (and man should be mancipium rationis, a slave to reason), he repeateth what he hath said before.

Ver. 19. He shall live thereby.] Provided that he rest not in his righteousness, but learn to live by the faith of the Son of God. {#Ga 2:20}

Ver. 20. Yet ye say.] But therein ye lie, which is not the guise of God's children. {#Isa 63:8}

I will judge you every one after his ways.] And so wring a testimony, if not from your mouths, yet from your consciences, of mine impartial justice; such as is that in #De 32:4, "A God of truth, and without iniquity, just and right is he."

Ver. 21. In the twelfth year.] Some read the eleventh year; and indeed it was wonder that such ill news came no sooner, for αἰ βλαβαι ποδωκεις, saith Sophocles.

That one that had escaped.] {a} This God had promised. {#Eze 24:26}

The city is smitten,] i.e., Sacked and burnt. This man spoke much in few.

{a} Superates tragis.

Ver. 22. The hand of the Lord,] i.e., The Spirit of the Lord, which acted me and carried me out. {#2Pe 1:21 1Co 12:3}

And my mouth was opened.] As God had promised. {#Eze 24:27} And this happened before the messenger's narration. This was much for the prophet's honour.

Ver. 23. Then the word of the Lord.] See #Eze 18:1.

Ver. 24. They that inhabit those wastes of the land of Israel.] Those poor few now left in the land. {#2Ki 25:12,22 Jer 40:5,6} Surely they are poor, they are foolish, they have lost the fruit of their affliction; Miserrimi facti sunt et pessimi permanent, as Augustine saith of some in his time, They are nevertheless wicked for being wretched.

Speak.] Bubbles of words. Antiquum obtinent. They are no changelings, not at all crest fallen.

Abraham was one.] {a} And no such one but that we may match him. Thus these proud hypocrites hit up their counter for a thousand pounds, and stand upon their comparisons without all shame or sense.

The land is given to us.] And here we will hold our own, for we are well worthy.

{a} Verba faecis populi recitat. Abrahae se conferre, imo praeferre audebant.

Ver. 25. Ye eat with the blood.] Which wicked Saul would not do, {#ISA 14:32-34} much less would righteous Abraham have done it, since it was against the light and letter of the law. {#Ge 9:4 Le 7:26 De 12:16} Nay, ye do worse things; and are you Abraham's children, and heirs of the promised land, together with that faithful patriarch? I think not. See a like manner of reasoning, #Mic 2:7 Joh 8:39. So the learned Linaker, having read our Saviour's sermon in the mount, and considering how little it is lived among us, broke out into these words, Certainly either this is not gospel, or we are not right gossellers.

Ver. 26. Ye stand upon your sword.] Vivitur ex rapto. He that hath the longest sword carrieth it among you: ye are also very revengeful, ready to say with him in the poet,

“ Virtus mihi numeri, et ensis

Quem teneo.

Dextra mihi deus, et telum quod missile libro.” {a}

Ye work abomination.] This R. Solomon understandeth de venere obscaeniore. It is in the original, Ye women work abomination, as prostituting yourselves to an unnatural filthiness, as the casuists complain still of some Spanish courtezans. {b}

And shall ye possess the land,] q.d., Ye shall be set up: what should you expect better than exilium et excitium, banishment and destruction?

{a} Caparene ap. Statum. Theb., 2. Mezent. ap. Virg. Aeneid, 10.

{b} Martin Vivald., in Candelab.

Ver. 27. They that are in the wastes.] #Eze 33:4.

Shall die of the pestilence.] Or else of the famine, which is worse. When, where, and how this was fulfilled upon them, we read not; in Egypt likely, whither they went after Gedaliah's death; if not sooner at home, as Jeremiah also had before prophesied. {#Jer 42:13,14}

Ver. 28. For I will lay the land most desolate.] Heb., Desolation and desolation. God made clean work there; there was not a Jew left in the country. See #Zec 7:14.

Ver. 29. Then shall they know.] By woeful experience.

Ver. 30. The children of thy people.] These captives in Babylon, no whit better than those in Jewry.

Still are talking.] Detracting from thee, and deriding thee.

By the walls.] Susurros miscentes clancularios; fearing lest any one behind them should hear them, they get the walls at their backs.

Come, I pray you, and hear.] Thus they jeer; {a} and there are too many such scoffers at this day.

{a} Uti otiosi et sauniones in foro facere solent.

Ver. 31. And they come unto thee.] Very goodly.

And they sit before thee.] Very demurely, and, to see to, devoutly, taking up all the seats.

They hear thy words.] But they were as heartless in hearing, as they were listless in praying. {#Eze 33:10}

They will not do them.] Of the Athenians also it was said of old, that they knew well what was good and right, but would do neither.

Their heart goeth after their covetousness.] Their heart is on their halfpenny, as we say; neither can the loadstone of God's Word hale them one jot from the earth. It should be Sursum corda; up from the heart, but when many men's bodies are in sacculis, in their purse, their hearts are in sacculis, in their purse, as Augustine complaineth; as serpents have their bodies in the water, their heads out of the water, so here; as those Gergesites, they more mind a swine sty than a sanctuary. {a}

Ver. 32. As a very lovely song.] Or, A love song. {a} The word leaves no more impression upon carnal men's consciences than a sweet lesson upon the lute in the ear when it is ended, for then both the vocal and instrumental sweetness dissolve into the air and vanish into nothing. Happy was Augustine, who, coming to Ambrose to have his ears tickled, had his heart touched.

{a} Canticum amatorium. -Vatab.

Ver. 33. That a prophet.] See on #Eze 2:5.

Chapter 34

Ver. 1. And the word.] See #Eze 18:1.

Ver. 2. Prophecy against the shepherds.] Good shepherds they should have been, but they were naught, {#Jer 23:1-4} and naught would come of them, for their maladministration.

Woe be to the shepherds of Israel.] Both to princes and priests, by whose evil government the people were so bad, as in the former chapter is fully set forth. Qualis rex, talis grex; the sheep will follow the shepherd; the common people are like a flock of cranes— as the first fly, all follow.

Should not the shepherds feed the flocks?] Such flocks especially as have golden fleeces, precious souls. Oh feed, feed, feed, saith our Saviour to Peter! {#Joh 21:15} feed them for my sake, as the Syriac there hath it, rule them well, teach them well, go before them in good example, do all the offices of a faithful shepherd to them, and be instant, or stand close to the work; {#2Ti 4:2} Dominus prope, the Arch-shepherd is at hand.

Ver. 3. Ye eat the fat.] Ecce, lac et lanam recipitis. This ye might do, if in measure, for the workman is worthy of his wages, {see #1Co 9:7} but ye gorge yourselves with the best of the best. Et si ventri bene, si lateri, as Epicurus in Horace, If the belly may be filled, the back fitted, that is all you take care for. In parabola ovis capras quaeritis, et vestrum maxime compendium spectatis; ye are all for your own ends, nourishing your hearts as in a day of slaughter, or of good cheer. {#Jas 5:5}

Ye kill them that are fed.] Heb., Ye sacrifice them; so ye pretend, but mind your own fat paunches. See #Pr 7:14.

But ye feed not the flock.] As being falsi et ficti imo picti pastores, mock shepherds.

Ver. 4. The diseased have ye not strengthened.] Five sorts of sheep are here reckoned up that needed the shepherd's best care and cure, but nothing was done; or, if anything, it was overdone, for with force and cruelty they ruled over them. See #1Pe 5:3.

Ver. 5. And they were scattered, because there is no shepherd.] None but an idol shepherd, {#Zec 11:17} a foolish shepherd; {#Eze 34:1-5} and the sheep, being a foolish creature, even to a proverb, {a} and apt to wander into harm's way, will never return to the fold, if not fetched back, but stick in the thorns, or die in a ditch, or run into the wolf's mouth.

{a} προβατων ηθος; and προβατιου βιον ζην.

Ver. 6. My sheep wandered.] Through the shepherd's supine negligence, or bloody truculence. Surely, as the herd of deer forsake and push away the wounded deer from them, so did these cruel shepherds, being non pastores sed impostores, non episcopi sed aposcopi, non praelati sed Pilati, as Bernard wittily; sheep biters rather than shepherds; "greedy dogs"; {#Isa 56:10,11} "grievous wolves." {#Ac 20:29}

And none did search or seek after them.] Nec erat qui quaereret aut requireret.

Ver. 7. Therefore, ye shepherds, hear the word of the Lord.] And oh that this word might ever sound aloud in the ears of all shepherds as the voice of heaven's trumpet!

Ver. 8. As I live, saith the Lord, surely because,] ^{a} God here seemeth to be in a great heat, in a perturbation of spirit, causing a kind of impediment in his speech, so thoroughly was he moved against these lewd shepherds, whose faults he rippeth up again to make better way to their sentence.

Because my flock became a prey.] To the Chaldees, but especially to that old man slayer.

Because there was no shepherd.] None but a company of nominals, or rather nullities.

^{a} Hyperbaton aetiologicum.

Ver. 9. Therefore, O ye shepherds.] See #Eze 34:7,8.

Ver. 10. Behold, I am against the shepherds.] Heb., Lo, I against, —by an angry aposiopesis. ^{a}

And cause them to cease from feeding the flock.] They shall be officiperdae, quondams, laid aside like broken vessels, as have been some kings of this land in their several generations—one of recent remembrance—Popish bishops not a few, Bonner and others, outed and deprived.

^{a} A rhetorical artifice, in which the speaker comes to a sudden halt, as if unable or unwilling to proceed.

Ver. 11. Behold, I, even I, ^{a} will both search.] Ego, ego reposcam et anquiram. Rather than the work shall be undone, I will do all myself, and then it is sure to be well done. Aristotle telleth of a certain Persian, who, being asked, What did most of all feed the horse? answered, The master's eye; and of a certain African, of whom, when it was demanded, What was the best manure or soil for a field? answered, The owner's footsteps—that is, his presence and perambulation. Praesul ut praesit et prosit suis, ab iis non absit, Shepherds should reside with their flocks; the Arch-shepherd will not fail to do so.

{a} Ego, ego, nominativus absolute positus -OEconom., lib. i.

Ver. 12. As a shepherd.] He prosecuteth the allegory drawn from shepherdy all along, striking still upon the same string with much sweetness.

So will I seek out my sheep.] See #Mt 15:24 Ps 119:176 Isa 40:11.

In the cloudy and dark day,] i.e., In the time of their calamity and captivity. When things are at worst, God himself will set in; he reserveth his holy hand for a dead lift.

Ver. 13. And I will bring them out from the people.] This they could very hardly believe, therefore he assureth them of it again and again. God will do the like for all his elect, seem it never so impossible.

And fled them upon the mountains of Israel.] Which are very high mountains; but the Church, God's hill, is higher. {#Isa 2:2} {See Trapp on "Isa 2:2"}

Ver. 14. I will feed them in a good pasture.] Daily and daintily; feed them among the lilies; {#So 2:16 Ps 23:1-3} feed them with the flesh and blood of my dear Son {#Joh 6:51-58}

There shall they lie in a good fold.] Having a blessed calm in their consciences, full of spiritual security, and freed from all annoyances {#Mic 5:5}

Ver. 15. I will feed my flock.] Doing all the offices of a good shepherd for them, and charging mine undershepherds to do so too.

And I will cause them to lie down.] By giving rest to their souls, {#Mt 11:28} together with many happy halcyons, that they may serve me without fear. {#Lu 1:74}

Ver. 16. I will seek that which was lost, &c.] As he did Peter, Paul, the good thief, Matthew, Zaccheus, the disciples after their shameful flight, Augustine, all us who, like sheep, were gone astray, &c.

But I will destroy the fat.] Pinguem et petulcam; such as in whom fulness breedeth forgetfulness, as in Jeshurun. {#De 32:15} Queen Elizabeth was told, in a sermon by Mr Deering, that once she was tanquam ovis, like a meek sheep, but now tanquam indomita iuvenca, as an untamed heifer; and therefore wished her to meet God by repentance. Here good Oecolampadius complaineth, and cause enough he had, of some of Christ's fatter sheep who were too too haughty and troublesome to their fellows. The Lutherans of Suevia he might well mean, who, in their Syngramma, used him very coarsely; and Luther himself, in his book of private mass, set forth A.D. 1533, passeth a very uncharitable censure upon his disease and death.

And I will feed them with judgment.] Putting a difference, and dealing with them as it is fit.

Ver. 17. And as for you, O my flock.] I have a saying to you also, such as are unruly especially, as well as to your shepherds.

Behold, I judge between cattle and cattle.] Between sincere Christians and hypocrites, sheep and goats; and can soon shed them, and show them to the world, who are fierce rams, and who are nasty goats. At last day, howsoever, all shall out, and a separation shall be made. The precious shall be taken out from the vile.

Ver. 18. Seemeth it a small thing unto you.] Extenuant hypocritae suam culpam honesto titulo. {a} Hypocrites make the best and the least of their sins, which good men acknowledge with aggravation; but the works of the flesh are manifest. And here we have a lively picture of the Popish clergy, who eat up the best, and tread down the rest, et pro salutaribus aquis suam salivam hominibus obtrudunt, and for wholesome, obtrude brackish waters upon men to quench their thirst,

{a} Oecolamp.

Ver. 19. And as for my flock, they eat.] The poor, misled, and muzzled people are glad to eat such as they can catch. They are fed with traditions, legendary fables, indulgences, vowed pilgrimages, penances, &c. If Luther had not come in our way, say they, we could have persuaded the people to have eaten grass.

Ver. 20. I, even I, will judge between the fat cattle.] These are, saith Augustine, those that presume of their own strength, and boast of their own righteousness, being proud, insolent, and void of charity.

Ver. 21. Because ye have thrust with side and with shoulder,] ^{a} i.e., With pretence of law on your side, and with power in your hand to do what you list; for who can withstand you?

And pushed all the diseased with your horns,] i.e., With your excommunications and persecutions. See #Isa 66:5.

Till ye have scattered them abroad.] For how should they abide it? They drive them out of the fold, flock, pasture, so that they must either fly or die.

^{a} Toto corpore et conatu.

Ver. 22. Therefore will I save my flock,] viz., By Christ the true shepherd, who once found out him whom the Jews had unjustly excommunicated, ^{#Joh 9:35} and gave him encouragement. He knows all his sheep by name, ^{as #Ex 33:12,17} and hath promised them safety here, and salvation hereafter. ^{#Joh 10:27} It is not with the saints, as #Isa 31:4, or as #Am 3:12, but as #Jer 31:10-12.

Ver. 23. And I will set up one shepherd.] Who, indeed, is the only shepherd. Magistrates and ministers are shepherds; but Christ is the "good shepherd"; ^{#Joh 10:11} the "great shepherd and bishop of souls"; ^{#1Pe 2:25 Heb 13:20} the true shepherd, above all for skill, love, and power; above Jacob, above David, of whom he descended, and by whose name he is here called. ^{so #Jer 30:9 Ho 3:5 Eze 37:24}

Even my servant David,] i.e., Christ, the son and successor of David, not David George as that odious heretic who died at Basil blasphemously applied this text to himself, as if he had been the man here intended. The Jews themselves confess that Messiah is here meant.

He shall feed them.] This is thus repeated, as that which containeth a world of comfort. It showeth also that Christ will do it to the utmost. Jacob was a sedulous shepherd; Christ much more.

Ver. 24. And I the Lord will be their God.] This is that beehive of heavenly honey we so oft meet with in the Old Testament, which therefore those sectaries have so little reason to reject.

And my servant David a prince among them.] Captain of the Lord's hosts, {#Jos 6:2} captain also of his people's salvation, {#Heb 2:10} Messiah the prince. {#Da 9:25}

Ver. 25. And I will make with them a covenant of peace.] Pactum pacis, pacis omnimodae {#Jer 31:13 Isa 11:10 Joh 14:27}

And will cause the evil beasts.] That were wont to worry the flock. I will set them safe from Satan and his imps, his instruments, such as was Nero the lion, and bloody Bonner, the Pope's slaughter slave here.

Ver. 26. And I will make them a blessing.] By blessing them with all spiritual benedictions in Christ Jesus, {#Eph 1:3} so that they shall be felices et faecundi, happy and fruitful.

There shall be showers of blessing.] Or, Very large showers {#2Co 9:6} of divine doctrine, {#Isa 55:9} and of righteousness. {#Ho 10:12}

Ver. 27. And the tree of the field shall yield her fruit.] There shall be a confluence of all comforts and contentments.

When I have broken the bands of their yoke.] Freed them from the Babylonish bondage, but especially from the tyranny of sin and terror of hell; when I have broke the devil's yoke from off the necks of their souls.

Out of the hands of those that served themselves of them.] As did the devil, whose drudges they were, and who had them wholly at his beck and check.

Ver. 28. And they shall no more be a prey to the heathen.] As the Jews then were, and are to this day, being used by the Papists as sponges. The Christian Hebrews also suffered with joy the spoiling of their goods; but then, for an allay to their grief, they knew within themselves that which did sufficiently support them, and make up their loss. {#Heb 10:34}

Ver. 29. And I will raise up for them a plant of renown,] {a} i.e., Christ the true tree of life. Or the Church planted and rooted in Christ, and much renowned all the world over. Christ mystical is a vine covering the whole earth.

And they shall be no more consumed with hunger.] They shall have enough of all good things, a sufficiency, though not a superfluity; a David's sat habeo, because the Lord hath heard the voice of my supplications. {#Ps 116:1}

Neither bear the shame of the heathen any more.] God will bring them in credit with those which formerly slighted and reproached them. God fashioneth men's opinions, ruleth their tongues, promiseth to them who, by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory and honour and immortality, eternal life, where the saints shall shine as the sun in his strength. {#Ro 2:7 Mt 13:43}

{a} Plantam pacis. -Sept.

Ver. 30. Thus shall they know that I the Lord their God am with them.] They shall understand the lovingkindness of the Lord; {#Ps 107:43} they shall know the salvation of their God; {#Ps 50:23} they shall have a plerophory of faith. {as #Ro 8:38}

Ver. 31. And ye my flock...are men.] Sheep ye are, but rational sheep, having your spiritual "senses habitually exercised to discern good and evil," {#Heb 5:14} so that ye "taste and see" my goodness. {#Ps 34:8}

Chapter 35

Ver. 1. Moreover the word of the Lord.] #Eze 18:1.

Ver. 2. Set thy face.] #Eze 6:2.

Against Mount Seir.] Inhabited by the Edomites.

And prophesy against it.] This had been done before, {#Eze 25:12} but not enough. God hath a further saying to them, and that for the comfort of his poor people who might thus object. Peace and security from danger is promised us in the foregoing chapter; but we have still many deadly enemies, and none worse than our near allies and next neighbours the Edomites. Here, therefore, they are heavily threatened with utter desolation for their malignity against Israel, and their blasphemy against God.

Ver. 3. Behold, O Mount Seir, I am against thee.] Ecce ego ad te; have at thee.

And I will stretch out my hand against thee.] I will have my full blow at thee.

I will make thee most desolate.] Heb., Desolation and desolation. I will make an utter end; desolation shall not rise up the second time; {#Na 1:9} I will make short work. {#Ro 9:28}

Ver. 4. I will lay thy cities waste.] Even Teman, Dedan, Bozrah, mentioned in Scripture; besides many others mentioned by geographers, Maresa, Rhinocorura, Raphia, Gaza, Anthedon, &c.

And thou shalt know.] To thy small comfort.

That I am the Lord.] A Lord of lords, a God of gods, "a great God, a mighty and a terrible, which regardeth not persons, nor taketh reward." {#De 10:17}

Ver. 5. Because thou hast had a perpetual hatred.] A hereditary deadly feud against Israel. Heb., An enemy of ages, yea, of many ages continuance; such as is, as we use to say of Runner, the older the stronger.

And hast shed the blood of the children of Israel.] Ut diffluent; hast let out their life blood: all malice is bloody.

In time of their calamity.] Watching the worst time to do them the most mischief.

In the time that their iniquity had an end.] When I had in a manner done with them, yet thou hadst not done with them; but didst stir up Nebuzaradan to burn the city and temple with fire. This was to help forward the affliction. {#Zec 1:15} {See Trapp on "Zec 1:15"}

Ver. 6. I will prepare thee unto blood.] Thou shalt have blood thy bellyful, which thou hast so greedily sought and sucked. Satiabis te sanguine quem sitiisti, cuiusque insatiabilis semper fuisti, as the Scythian queen said to Cyrus's head.

Even blood shall pursue thee.] As a bloodhound. It shall, it shall, believe me it shall.

Ver. 7. Most desolate.] See #Eze 35:3. Iterum repetit, ne excidisse videatur. I am in good earnest.

Ver. 8. And I will fill his mountains.] Oh the woe of war! The Greek word {a} for it signifies much blood.

{a} πολεμος η πολυαιμος. Bellum a belluis. War from wild beasts.

Ver. 9. I will make thee perpetual desolations.] For thy perpetual hatred. {#Eze 35:5}

And thy cities.] See #Eze 35:4.

Ver. 10. Because thou hast said.] Ungodly men must answer for their ungodly speeches also. {#Jude 15}

These two nations.] Israel and Judah.

Shall be mine.] Such was their avarice and ambition that they made account all was their own; they had in their hopes devoured these two countries which God had reserved for a better purpose. He kept the room empty till the return of the natives; and the land kept her sabbaths, resting from tillage, &c. And yet these miscreants added,

Whereas the Lord was there.] Or, Though it be a Jehovahshammah, as #Eze 48:35; be it that the Lord is there—scil., to keep possession against us—we will out him, and have it in despite of him. O tongues worthy to be pulled out, cut in gobbets, and driven down their throats, that did thus blaspheme!

Ver. 11. I will do even according to thine anger.] Let the Romish Edomites expect the like punishment: their malice and mischief will come home to them.

And according to thine envy.] That quicksighted and sharp fanged malignity which none can stand before. {#Pr 27:4}

Ver. 12. And that I have heard all thy blasphemies.] Of both sorts; those in the first table against myself, and those in the second table against my people.

They are laid desolate.] And we have helped after.

They are given us to consume.] Heb., To devour. Nay, but stay till they be; and then know that ye may devour that on earth, that ye shall digest in hell.

Ver. 13. Thus with your mouth ye have boasted.] Heb., Magnified, setting your mouths against heaven, your tongues also have walked through the earth. {#Ps 73:9; see the notes there}

And have multiplied your words against me.] When it would have better become you to have multiplied your words before me in prayer and praises, as the Hebrew word (עַתָּה) here used, mostly signifieth.

Ver. 14. When the whole earth rejoiceth,] scil. For my people's deliverances. Or, When the whole land, scil., of Israel, rejoiceth; as it is sometimes hale and well with the Church, when the wicked are in the suds. Judea was the world of the world, as Athens was the "Epitome of Greece," the "Greece of Greece."

Ver. 15. As thou didst rejoice.] As thou wast sick of the devil's disease, rejoicing at other men's harms; so, by a strange turn of things, others shall rejoice at thy just destruction, and revel in thy ruins: and at the last day especially, when thou shalt be awarded thy portion with the devil and his angels. {#2Th 1:6-8}

Thou shalt be desolate, O Mount Seir.] This was accordingly effected shortly after by Nebuchadnezzar and his Chaldees, as Josephus {a} testifieth; and is daily executed on the Church's enemies, who shall all be ere long in the place that is fittest for them —scil., under Christ's feet.

And all Idumea, even all of it.] The Edomites, that thought of seizing on others' lands, lost their own. They who covet all, do oft lose all; yea, even the pleasure of that they possess; as a greedy dog swalloweth the whole meat that is cast him, without any pleasure, as gaping still for the next morsel.

{a} Lib. xii. cap. 11.

Chapter 36

Ver. 1. Prophecy to the mountains of Israel.] Better things than thou didst to Mount Seir in the foregoing chapter. See #Isa 3:10,11.

{See Trapp on "Isa 3:10"} {See Trapp on "Isa 3:11"}

Ye mountains.] That is, ye mountaineers, qui sere asperi atque inculti. Sed

“ Nemo adeo ferus est qui non mitescere possit, Si modo culturae patientem accommodet aurem. ”
- Horace

Ver. 2. Because the enemy hath said.] The Church fareth the better for her enemies petulancies and insolencies against her.

Even the ancient high places.] Or, The everlasting altitudes. Judea lay high; the Church is much higher.

Are ours in possession.] Thus the Edomites triumphed before the victory. So did the Spaniards in 1588, and God heard them, {as #Eze 35:13} for he is all-ear, all-eye, &c. He is jealous for his people, {#Zec 1:14} and jealousy is quick sighted, quick conceited.

Ver. 3. Because they have.] Heb., Because and because; importing earnestness and heat of indignation. So #Le 26:43.

And ye are taken up in the lips of talkers.] Heb., Ye are made to ascend upon the lip of the tongue, and upon the evil fame of the people. God takes it extreme ill that his people should be traduced and defamed; which yet hath been their lot in all ages; but he will not fail to vindicate them, and to avenge them.

Ver. 4. Therefore thus saith the Lord God to the mountains.] For men there were hardly any left, or not very fit to be dealt with. See #Eze 36:1.

Which became a prey.] To those man eaters, {#Eze 36:3} qui diruerunt et devoraverunt, who did eat up God's people as they ate bread, {#Ps 14:4} making themselves merry with their misery.

Ver. 5. Surely in the fire of my jealousy.] Jealousy is hot as hell; {#So 8:6} it is implacable, {#Pr 6:34,35} and very vindictive. See #Zec 1:14.

{See Trapp on "Zec 1:14"} Here God swears he will be even with these Edomites.

Which have appointed my land.] This the Lord hath never done with, so ill be took it.

Ver. 6. Say unto the mountains and to the hills.] To those lifeless creatures he directeth his speech, to show that every creature groaneth and waiteth for the redemption of our bodies. It fareth the better also in this life present, for the elect's sake, as it was once cursed for man's sin, and hath lain bedridden, as it were, ever since.

Because ye have borne the shame of the heathen.] This the Lord could not bear with any patience.

Ver. 7. I have lifted up mine hand.] Sworn solemnly. Men, when they swear, do so as taking God to witness. Three fingers they do often lift up, and hold down two, to signify, saith Lavater, that God, who is three in one, hath prepared a place in heaven for such as swear rightly, but will thrust down to hell those that forswear themselves.

They shall bear their shame.] They shall be paid home in their own coin, be overshot in their own bow, be covered with their own confusion.

Ver. 8. Ye shall shoot forth your branches.] Reflourish and fructify; the Christian churches (those spiritual mountains) shall especially. {#Re 22:2}

For they are at hand to come.] To come home out of captivity, or to return to God by repentance. The fall of Antichrist cannot be far off.

Ver. 9. For, behold, I am for you.] Or, I come to you, and I come with a cornucopia in mine hand.

Ver. 10. All the house of Israel, even all of it.] The Israel of God in the kingdom of the Messiah, totum totum, quantum quantum, not one of them shall be missing.

Ver. 11. And will do better unto you.] This must necessarily be understood of spiritual blessings by Christ; for temporals, they never had the like to those in the days of Joshua, David, Solomon, Hezekiah, &c.

Ver. 12. Thou shalt be their inheritance.] Yea, a type and pledge of that heavenly inheritance. {#1Pe 1:4 Re 21:1-10,22-27 22:1-5}

And thou shalt no more henceforth bereave them.] Provoke God to bereave them.

Ver. 13. Thou land devourest up men,] {a} scil., By pestilence, famine, sword, evil beasts: thou art an unlucky land, an unblest country, feral and fatal to thine inhabitants. Hesiod saith the like of his country Ascre; and another {b} of St David's in Wales, that it is a place neither pleasant, fertile, nor safe. Strabo saith the like of Judea, but with a despiteful mind. {as #Eze 36:5} Those malevolent spies said no less. {#Nu 13:32}

{a} Terra abortiens populos.

{b} Giral., Cambrens.

Ver. 14. Neither bereave thy nations any more.] Either by consuming them, or spuing them out. {as #Le 18:28,20:22 26:20,22} See what is said of heaven, #Re 22:3-5.

Ver. 15. Neither will I cause men to hear.] I will cut off all occasions, and remove all such stumblingblocks as whereat the nations dash and split themselves.

Ver. 16. Moreover the word.] See #Eze 18:1

Ver. 17. When the house of Israel.] Ubique Scriptura vindicat gloriam Dei, maxime autem hoc loco. {a} This place of Scripture doth singularly set forth the glory of God's grace, while it showeth that man's destruction is wholly of himself, his help only of God.

As the uncleanness.] As a menstruous clout, abhorred by all.

{a} Oecolamp.

Ver. 18. For the blood which they had shed.] These two gross sins are instanced, viz., murder and idolatry, lest they should plead, as in #Jer 2:35, "I have not sinned"; or as in #Ho 12:8, "In all my works they shall find none iniquity in me; that were sin."

Ver. 19. And I scattered them among the heathen.] Whose idols they had worshipped, and whose manners they had imitated.

Ver. 20. These are the people of the Lord.] And these are the fruits of their religion. Are these the holy people? &c. Lactantius {a} complaineth of his times, that God's truth was evil spoken of by the heathen, because Christians lived loosely and lewdly. Whereupon Erasmus {b} crieth out, O rem miseram! Oh, lamentable! Even in those purer times the piety of Christians was so much abated, that the gospel was therefore evil spoken of, for the evil lives of many that professed it. What marvel then, saith he, that Turks cry out upon us? that the banks of blasphemy are broken down in persons disaffected to the power of godliness?

{a} Lactant., de Opific. Dei; Proaem.

{b} Erasm. in Lactant.

Ver. 21. But I had pity for my holy name.] So he hath still, or else it would be wide enough with us. Some render it, I spared, or tendered, mine holy name; and, to free it from those imputations, I freely forgave my people, and re-established them.

Ver. 22. I do not this for your sakes.] To do good without respect of desert is royal, yea, it is divine.

But for mine own holy name's sake.] God maketh our utter unworthiness a foil to set forth the freeness of his love, in making us worthy whom he found not so.

Ver. 23. And I will sanctify my great name.] I will recover my reputation among the heathen, by declaring my justice in your punishment, and my mercy in your restoration. God, as he is moved by his own grace to do his people good, so he aimeth therein at his own glory.

Ver. 24. For I will take you, &c.] I will effectually call you out of darkness into my marvellous light, and cull you out from this wicked world. And this is the first thing that God here promiseth to his covenanters. More than this, he promiseth them in the following verses justification, sanctification, and preservation, or provision of temporal blessings, that nothing may be wanting to them that may make them happy. We should be often counting of this coin, telling of this treasure.

Ver. 25. Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you.] He alludeth to the legal purifications, especially that made by the ashes of a red cow mixed with running water, wherewith the people were sprinkled, and so cleansed from legal defilement. {#Nu 19:17-19} Semblably the saints, sprinkled with Christ's blood from an evil conscience by the hyssop bunch of faith, and so washed with clean water {#Heb 10:22} in baptism, the saving virtue whereof is permanent, {#1Pe 3:21} are justified and sanctified. {#1Co 6:11} This blessed sprinkling David prayeth for. {#Ps 51:2} The Baptist also, and others, sprinkled those whom they baptized, both to answer the types of the law and this prediction of the prophet, understood by Jerome {a} of baptism, which is a visible sign and seal of our being washed from the filth of sin by the merit and Spirit of Jesus Christ. {#Tit 3:5}

{a} Epist. 83.

Ver. 26. A new heart also will I give you.] For the old heart will never hold out the hardship of holiness; the old fabric must be taken down, and a new set up. See #Eze 11:19. A "new man" both in constitution and conversation one must be, or else he is no man in Christ. {#2Co 5:17}

And I will take away the stony heart.] The natural heart, which is hard and refractory, "to every good work reprobate." Hard is that which resisteth the touch. The old heart is inflexible to God's Spirit, insensible of his word and judgments, and impenetrable to his grace. Where, then, is man's freewill? Garriant illi, nos credamus; { a} there is no such thing, believe it. Nature is wholly stony: it is God alone that "of these stones raiseth up children to Abraham."

And I will give you an heart of flesh,] i.e., Tractable, and capable of divine impressions, ready to every good work. {#Tit 3:1}

{a} Augustine.

Ver. 27. And I will put my Spirit within you.] Qui mulcendo et molliendo. Who, by melting and mollifying your hard hearts, shall bring you to a better obedience.

And cause you to walk in my statutes.] Lex iubet, gratia iuvat. God undertaketh for himself and his people too, viz., to work in them what he requireth of them. Therefore it is an "everlasting covenant, ordered in all things"; and the fruits of it are "sure mercies," "compassions that fail not," &c. See on #Eze 11:20.

Ver. 28. And ye shall dwell in the land,] i.e., In Judea, or rather in the Church, {a} which began in Judea, saith the Jesuit well The Church of Rome, then, is not the mother Church; no, though we take it in its primitive purity.

{a} A Lapide.

Ver. 29. I will also save you from all your uncleannesses.] This is often promised, because not easily believed. No article of our creed is so much opposed by Satan, as that of the forgiveness of sin by Christ's merits, which is the very life and soul of a Church. All the former articles of the creed are perfected in this, and all the following articles are effects thereof: hold it fast, therefore.

And I will call for the corn.] I have it at my call, and a mandamus from me will do it at any time. See #Ho 2:21,22. {See Trapp on "Ho 2:21"}
{See Trapp on "Ho 2:22"}

And lay no famine.] Which comes also at God Almighty's call. {#Ps 105:16}

Ver. 30. That ye shall receive no more reproach.] The heathen were often twitting God's people with their outward wants and crosses, as if caused by their religion. So the persecutors did by the primitive Christians, and so the Papists still deal with the New Gospellers, as they scornfully call the Reformed Churches.

Ver. 31. Then shall ye remember.] The goodness of God shall lead you to repentance; so many mercies heaped upon so undeserving, nay, so illdeserving creatures, shall bring you to a deep detestation of your iniquities.

Your own evil ways, and your doings that were not good.] There are some things, saith one, that we can hardly forget, viz., our sorrows and our pleasures, as Esau; some things we can hardly remember, as our faults and our friends, as Joseph's butler. Augustine was famous, saith another for two of his works: his Retractions, which are the confessions of his errors; and his Confessions, which are the retractions of his life. See #Eze 20:43.

And shall loathe yourselves.] Or, Ye shall look upon yourselves as worthy to be destroyed. Or, Ye shall scold within yourselves against your iniquities. Litigabitis intra vos contra flagitia vestra.

Ver. 32. Not for your sakes.] See on #Eze 36:22.

Be ashamed.] Abashed and abased, as was Ezra, {#Ezr 9:6} Ephraim, {#Jer 31:19} the publican. {#Lu 18:13}

Ver. 33. I shall have cleansed you.] See on #Eze 36:29.

I will also cause you to dwell.] See #Eze 36:28.

Ver. 34. And the desolate land shall be tilled.] As now, blessed be God, it is in the Palatinate and other parts of Germany, though now is no small danger of a new war, quod Dominus avertat. because she turned away from God.

Ver. 35. This land.] Such a change can God soon make for worse or better. Fear him therefore; fear the Lord and his goodness. {#Ho 3:5}

Ver. 36. Then the heathen.] Haec iam ex parte fata sunt, saith Oecolampadius. This day is this scripture fulfilled in our eyes: the ruined churches are rebuilt, and the matter well amended by this blessed Reformation, and Rome knows it.

Ver. 37. I will yet for this be inquired of,] i.e., Though I have promised my people all these boons, yet I look they should put my promises in suite, by praying them over. Prayer is an indispensable duty, and must not on any pretence whatsoever be neglected.

I will increase them with men like a flock.] Plenty of men and store of children is a great blessing of God. Yet some are ready to say of them, as that rustic did of his afflictions, when he was told they were God's love tokens, Ah quam velim alios amare, non me. Oh how I wish to love others, not myself. {a}

{a} Luther.

Ver. 38. As the holy flock.] The sheep that come up for sacrifice, at the passover especially; so will I multiply the sheep of Christ, the true shepherd.

Chapter 37

Ver. 1. The hand of the Lord,] i.e., The force and impulse of the Holy Spirit, fitly called "the hand of the Lord"; {a} because holy men of old spake and acted as they were moved or carried out by the Holy Ghost. {#2Pe 2:22}

In the spirit,] i.e., In a spiritual rapture.

And set me down.] Not really, but visionally.

In the midst of the valley.] That same valley, some think, where {#Eze 1:3} he saw that glorious vision. Prophecies were often received, and prayers are best made, in one and the same place.

Which was full of bones.] So it appeared to him in his ecstasy.

{a} Manus est impellere; manus est organum agendi. -Theodoret.

Ver. 2. And, lo, they were very dry.] Ex vetustate et carie. This added to the miracle.

Ver. 3. Can these bones live?] In the resurrection at the last day he knew they should, for among the Jews that was generally believed; {#Joh 11:24} but whether in this world, and at this time, that was the question. The Jewish doctors boldly, but groundlessly, answer that these dead bones and bodies did then revive, and that many of them did return into the land of Israel, and married wives and begat children. But this is as true as that other dotage of theirs, that the dead bodies of Jews, in what country soever buried, do by certain underground passages travel into Judea, and there rest until the general resurrection.

O Lord God, thou knowest.] And he to whom thou art pleased to reveal it. Επερω. The Russians in a difficult question use to answer, God and our great duke know all this.

Ver. 4. Prophecy upon these bones.] Be thou the interpreter of my will, who by mine all-powerful word do quicken the dead, and call things that are not as if they were. {#Ro 4:17}

And say unto them, O ye dry bones.] Together with God's word many times there goeth forth a power; {#Lu 5:17} as when he said, Lazarus, come forth. {#Joh 11:43} So it is in the first resurrection, and so it shall be at the last. {#Joh 5:25,28,29} {See Trapp on "Joh 5:25"} {See Trapp on "Joh 5:28"} {See Trapp on "Joh 5:29"}

Ver. 5. Behold, I will cause breath to enter into you,] i.e., Into each number of you that belong to each body. Neither need the resurrection of the dead be held a thing incredible, {#Ac 26:8} considering God's power and truth. The keeping green of Noah's olive tree in the time of the flood, the blossoming of Aaron's dry rod, the flesh and sinews coming to these dry bones, and the breath entering into them, what were they all but so many lively emblems of the resurrection?

Ver. 6. And cover you with skin.] Superindam; that the flesh may not look ghastly. The word rendered cover is Chaldee, and found only here and #Eze 37:8.

And put breath in you, and ye shall live.] As when man was first created. {#Ge 2:7} And cannot God as easily remake us of something as at first he made us of nothing?

Ver. 7. So I prophesied.] He might have said, Why should I speak to these bones? will it be to any purpose? But God's commands are not to be disputed, but despatched without sciscitation.

And there was a noise.] A rattle, perhaps a thunderclap.

And behold a shaking.] Perhaps an earthquake, as was at Christ's resurrection. God will one day shake both the heavens and the earth. "The heavens shall pass away with a great noise; the earth also and the works therein shall be burned, and fall with a great crack." {#2Pe 3:10} Then "the Lord shall descend from heaven with a shout," &c. {#1Th 4:16} -such as is that of mariners in a storm, or of soldiers when to join battle with the enemy.

Ver. 8. Lo, the sinews and the flesh came up upon them.] The body is the soul's sheath, {#Da 7:15} the soul's suit. The upper garment is the skin, the inner the flesh; the inmost of all, bones and sinews.

Ver. 9. And say to the wind.] To the reasonable soul, that "breath of God"; {#Ge 2:7} divinae particula aerae, as one calleth it. In this better part of man he is not absolutely perfect till after the resurrection; for though the soul do in heaven enjoy an estate free from sin, pain, or misery, yet two of the faculties or operations of the soul, viz., that of vegetation and of sense, are without exercise till it be reunited to the body. Here we have a representation at least of the resurrection, which the Hebrews call Gilgul, the revolution.

Come from the four winds, O breath,] i.e., From God that gave you, return again at his command to your own numerical bodies wherever they lie. And to this text our Saviour seemeth to allude, #Mt 24:31.

Ver. 10. And the breath came into them.] De foras, from without: as at first they were infused by God, so they are still. This Augustine sometime and for some length of time doubted about, and was therefore censured boldly, but unadvisedly, by one Vincentius Victor, as Chemnitius relateth it.

And they lived, and stood up upon their feet.] As life will show itself by sense and motion. Live things will be stirring. Arida etiam peccatorum cords Deus gratis vitali vegetabit.

Ver. 11. These bones are.] That is, they signify and betoken. And here we have the accommodation or application of the preceding parable or type; where also we may soon see that this chapter is of the same subject and method with the former, only that which is there plainly is here more elegantly discoursed, viz., the deplorable condition of the Israelites in Babylon, together with their wonderful deliverance and restitution in this and the three next verses.

Our bones are dried.] We lie in Babylon as in a sepulchre; we are buried alive, as it were; we are "free among the dead," free of that company.

We are cut off for our parts,] q.d., Let them hope as hope can: we have hanged up all our hopes now that the city and temple are destroyed. Thus carnal confidence, as it riseth up into a corky, frothy hope, when it seeth sufficient help, so it sitteth down in a faithless, sullen discontent and despair, when it can see no second causes.

Ver. 12. Behold, O my people.] God owneth them still, though they had little deserved it. "Shall men's unbelief make the faith of God without effect?" {#Ro 3:3} Tumulos desperationis aperit; he openeth the graves of desperation, and lets in a marvellous light. So the Lord did for his poor Church by this blessed Reformation begun by Luther, whose book, De Captivitate Babylonica, did abundance of good. As for that wrought here in England, a foreigner {a} saith of it, that it is such as the ages past had despaired about, the present worthily admireth, and future ages shall stand amazed at. O beatos qui Deum ducem e spirituali Babylonia eos educentem secuti sunt!

{a} Scultet., Annal. Dec. 2, ep. ded.

Ver. 13. And ye shall know that I am the Lord.] Ye shall experiment it. The Reformed Churches have done so abundantly. Gloria Deo in excelsis.

When I have opened your graves.] This is spoken over and over for their confirmation who were apt to think the news was too good to be true.

Ver. 14. And shall put my Spirit in you.] Even my "spirit of adoption," that soul of the soul: this was more than all the rest. Thrice happy are they that are thus spirited; they shall live, and live comfortably.

Ver. 15. And the word of the Lord.] See #Eze 18:1.

Ver. 16. Take thee one stick.] A cleft stick, which is res vilis et exilis, a poor business in itself; but if God please to make use of so slender a thing, it may serve for very great purpose; as here by the uniting of two sorry sticks in the hand of the prophet is prefigured the uniting of Judah and Israel, yea, of Jews and Gentiles, "in the hand of the Lord," that is, in Christ Jesus, who is the hand, the right hand, and the arm of God the Father.

His companions,] i.e., Benjamin and Levi. {#2Ch 11:12,13}

Ver. 17. And join them one to another into one stick.] See on #Eze 37:16. Man and wife are as these two branches in the prophet's hand, enclosed in one bark; and so closing together that they make but one branch.

Ver. 18. Wilt thou not show us what thou meanest by these?] People, though they should not be question sick, as some in St Paul's time were, {#1Ti 6:4} yet they should be inquisitive after truth according to godliness. {#Tit 1:1}

Ver. 19. And make them one stick.] Taking away the deadly feud that hath so long time been between them, breaking down the partition wall, &c. I will once more bring them all under one king, and make them of one mind. Religion is the only best bond of affection. The very heathens honoured the primitive Christians for their unanimity. See #So 6:9. {See Trapp on "So 6:9"}

Ver. 20. Shall be in thine hand before their eyes.] That by this vision publicly acted they may be the better affected.

Ver. 21. Behold, I will take the children of Israel,] This was fulfilled when the Jews, and with them many of the ten tribes also, returned to their own country under Zerubbabel and Ezra. As for the rest of the ten tribes that returned not, they degenerated into Gentiles. The Jews say that they were shut up by Alexander the Great in the Caspian mountains, and shall therehence break forth when the Messiah appeareth. Of the Jews in general Tacitus hath observed, that they are very kind to their own countrymen, but to all others very cruel. This might haply move Alexander to serve them in that kind. There are those who understand that text, {#Re 16:12} the kings of the East, concerning the ten tribes whom they place in China, which is called the "land of Sinim," as Junius conjectureth; {#Isa 49:12} and who knows but that when all Israel shall be called, {#Ro 11:26} raised from the dead, {#Eze 37:14} joined into one stick, as here, many of those poor heathens in Asia and America may have part in the same resurrection?

Ver. 22. And I will make them one nation.] Who were before at deadly feud, and fought many bloody battles. Solemur et nos hac promissione contra schismata, Let us also comfort ourselves with this promise against schisms, saith Oecolampadius. Christ will cause the false prophets and the unclean spirit to pass out of the land; {#Zec 13:2} he will also so work in the hearts of his people, that they shall, "with one mind and one mouth, glorify God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ." {#Ro 15:6}

Ver. 23. Neither shall they defile.] After the captivity the Jews could never endure idolatry. The Popish image worship is at this day a very great stumblingblock to them.

Out of all their dwellingplaces.] Where, being mingled among the heathen, they learned their works. {#Ps 106:35}

Ver. 24. And David my servant,] i.e., Christ, who came to do the will of his Father in the shape of a servant. {#Php 2:7 Isa 42:1}

And they shall all have one shepherd.] Even David their king is for his clemency here called a shepherd, saith Jerome, tending and tendering his people. See #Eze 34:23,24

They shall also walk in my judgments.] All Christ's subjects can say, as those primitive Christians did, Nos non eloquimur magna, sed vivimus. Athenagoras in his apology saith, No Christian is a bad man, ει μη υποκρινηται τον λογον, unless he be a counterfeit.

Ver. 25. And they shall dwell in the land.] So they did for six hundred years, or nearly so; and in heaven, whereof Canaan was a type, they shall live and reign for ever.

Ver. 26. Moreover, &c.] See #Eze 34:25.

And it shall be an everlasting covenant with them.] With all the Israel of God.

And I will place them,] sc., In the Holy Land, saith Piscator; or else I understand not what this word "place them," or give them, meaneth.

And will set my sanctuary in the midst of them,] i.e., I will indwell in them, and walk in them, &c. {as #2Co 6:16} The Jews pray earnestly for the rebuilding of their material temple. Pray we as hard for the building up of the mystical temple.

Ver. 27. My tabernacle also,] i.e., Mine ordinances, those testimonies of my spedal presence. See #Re 21:3.

Ver. 28. Do sanctify Israel,] i.e., Do set them apart for mine use, and will see to their safety.

When my sanctuary.] Wherehence they shall have continual both direction and protection.

Chapter 38

Ver. 1. And the word.] This particule and showeth the dependence of this discourse upon the former. God's people shall be brought to their own country. The Lord Christ also shall sit upon the throne of his father David. But between these two great benefits the Church shall suffer much, and her enemies a great deal more, when once God takes them to do.

Ver. 2. Set thy face against Gog,] i.e., Against those last enemies of the Church, before Shiloh come; the kings of the lesser Asia and Syria before his first coming (see the books of Maccabees), the Pope and Turk before his second coming. See #Re 20:8. {See Trapp on "Re 20:8"} Against these Ezekiel is commanded to "set his face," that is, to prophesy with utmost intention of spirit and contention of speech. {a}

The land of Magog.] Or, In the land of Magog, which some make to be Gog's country, and especially Hierapolis (for which they allege Pliny, lib. v. cap. 23), a chief city of Syria. This Hierapolis had its name from the multitude of religious houses or idol temples there erected. {b} May not Rome, the metropolis of idolatry, be rightly so called?

The chief princes of Meshech and Tubal.] People neighbouring upon the Syrians, and subject unto them, great enemies to Israel. See on #Eze 27:13. In Meshech, or Cappadocia, the Turks began to grow great and formidable. As for Tubal, Jerome and Josephus among the ancients, Bellarmine and Gretserus among the Jesuits, understand it to be the Spaniards; Rabbi David and Aben Ezra take Meshech for the Italians.

{a} Virtute opus est contra Antichristum dicturo. -Polan.

{b} Ptolom, In quarta Asiae tabula.

Ver. 3. Behold, I am against thee, O Gog.] Ecce ego ad re, Have at thee, Gog,

The chief prince of Meshech and Tubal.] These two are thus conjoined to show, as some think, that Turks and Popelings shall at length join their forces to root out the true religion, and that, while they are tumultuating and endeavouring the Church's downfall, Christ shall come upon them and confound them. See on #Re 16:14,16. The Jews hold that this whole prophecy shall be fulfilled at the coming of their long looked for Messiah, and while they take all things therein according to the letter, they run into many very great errors. Propheta omnia loquitur magnificis verbis per hyperbolas.

Ver. 4. And I will turn thee back.] As he did Antiochus Epiphanes by the Jews; the Turks oft by Hunniades; the Pope's forces by the Hussites in Germany, and lately by the Swedes. It hath been long ago foretold, and for many ages believed, and by the Turks themselves not a little feared, that the Mohammedan superstition, by the sword begun, and by the sword maintained, shall at length, by the Christian sword, also be destroyed, so that the name of Gog and Magog, saith the historian, {a} shall be no more heard of under heaven. A cold sweat also stands at this time upon the limbs of the western antichrist, by reason of the growing greatness of the Protestant princes.

And put hooks into thy jaws.] A metaphor from those that catch whales. Compare #Eze 29:4.

And I will bring thee.] But for an ill bargain.

{a} Turkish History, 1153.

Ver. 5. Persia, Ethiopia, and Libya.] A numerous army from all parts. The Church is against all the world, and all the world against the Church. Hic vir totius orbis impetum sustinuit, saith one once concerning Athanasius. A silly poor maid, in the midst of many fierce and savage creatures assaulting her every moment, is a true picture of the Church, saith Luther.

Ver. 6. Gomer, and all his bands.] The Cimbrians or Cimmerians, saith Melanchthon; the Galatians, saith Theodoret.

The house of Togarmah.] The Phrygians, as some; the Armenians, as others will. Of antichrist's great power, see #Re 9:1-20 20:8. See on #Eze 27:14.

Ver. 7. Be thou prepared.] Comparator et compara te; muster up all thy forces, and see to their safety. But canst thou ward off my blows? moat thyself up against my fire?

Ver. 8. After many days thou shalt be visited,] sc., By mine heaviest judgments; for "shall not God avenge his own elect... though he bear long with them? I tell you that he will avenge them speedily." {#Lu 18:7,8}

In the latter years thou shalt come into the land.] Antiochus, that little antichrist, did, and made havoc. It is the opinion of some very grave divines that the great antichrist, before his abolition, shall once again overflow the whole face of the west; Quod Deus avertat. because God may turn away.

Which have been always waste,] i.e., A long while.

Ver. 9. Thou shalt ascend and come like a storm.] With great hurry and terror, but it shall soon blow over.

Thou shalt be like a cloud.] Sed cito transibis.

Ver. 10. Things shall come into thy mind.] Ascendent verba super cor tuum. Thou shalt machinate mischief, but it shall fall on thine own pate. Oh pray, pray, said a holy man once, Pontifex enim Romanus et Concilium Tridentinum mira moliantur, for the Pope and his Council of Trent are hatching strange businesses.

Ver. 11. I will go up to the land of unwall'd villages.] That care not to fortify their towns, but commit themselves to God, and think to escape us, but we shall soon show them their folly therein. The Hebrews have one and the same word for folly (כֹּסֵל) and confidence. (#Ps 49:14 Ec 7:25 Ps 78:7 Job 31:24) See on #Job 4:6 But "in the fear of the Lord is strong confidence; and his children," though their towns be unwall'd, "have a place of refuge."

{#Pr 14:26}

Ver. 12. To take a spoil.] Heb., To spoil the spoil, and to prey the prey. The antichristian rout are all for robbing and ravaging. What vast sums of money raked the Pope once out of England, which was therefore truly and trimly called by Pope Innocent IV, Hortus deliciarum et puteus inexhaustus, His delicate garden, and pit that could not be drawn dry.

To turn thine hand.] To plunder them to the very bones, as they say. There was a time when the Pope's receivers here left not so much money in the whole kingdom as they either carried with them, or sent to Rome before them. Of this Papal expilation King John heavily complained, and could get no remedy, but Henry VIII would bear it no longer. England is no more a babe, said he, in his protestation against the Pope; there is no man here but now he knoweth that they do foolishly that give gold for lead, more weight of that than they receive of this, &c. {a}

{a} Acts and Mon., 990.

Ver. 13. Sheba and Dedan.] The Arabians, who lived by roving and robbing.

With all the young lions.] That lie in wait for gain, as lions do for prey.

Art thou come to take a prey?] q.d., If thou art, we are ready to set in with thee, or to traffic with thee for it. Mohammed came of these Arabians; the Pope hath his money merchants' great store. {#Re 18:3-11-17}

Ver. 14. Prophecy and say unto Gog.] Say it over again, that it may be the better considered, for the strengthening of the hands and hearts of my people.

Shalt thou not know it?] sc., By thine intelligencers; and wilt thou not think to make thine advantage of it? The Pope hath his Coricaei in every corner of Christendom; the Jesuits' colleges, placed upon the walls of cities, afford them passage into the city, or abroad into the world, at pleasure, to give or receive intelligence as occasion serveth.

Ver. 15. Out of the north parts.] Ab aquilone nihil boni. From spiritual Babylon comes all mischief to the Church. The king of Syria is called "king of the north" in #Da 11:6.

A great company, and a mighty army.] Such was the army of Antiochus Epiphanes against the Jews, of the Turk against Christians, of the Pope against the Hussites, Waldenses, &c. He deceiveth the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, to gather them together to battle, the number of whom is as the sand of the sea. {#Re 20:8} He hath at his command the Italians, Walloons, Spaniards, whom Bellarmine {a} rightly reckoneth among the soldiers of antichrist.

{a} De Rom. Pont., lib. iii. cap. 16 and 17.

Ver. 16. And thou shalt come up against my people.] Oh happy they in such a privilege, maugre all thy malice! {#De 33:29}

In the latter days.] Before the coming of the Messiah, first and second.

And I will bring thee.] But for thy bane.

Against my land.] "The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof"; {#Ps 24:1} but that land where God is sincerely served is his peculiar portion. It was said of old, Anglia regnum Dei; England was the kingdom of God, {a} it is now so much more.

When I shall be sanctified in thee,] i.e., Glorified in thy just and utter destruction.

{a} Polyd. Virg.

Ver. 17. Art thou he?] It is sure enough thou art he; for I cannot be deceived in thee, nor shall fail to suppress thee.

By my servants the prophets.] Enoch {#Jude 14 Ho 2:1 Joe 3:1 Da 11:1,2 Zec 14:1 Re 20:8 2Th 2:1}

Which prophesied of thee.] Though under another name.

Ver. 18. My fury shall come up in my face.] Though it do not presently break forth. Ira Dei quo diuturnior, eo minacior.

“ Poena venit gravior, quo mage tarda venit.”

God delighteth to make fools of his enemies; he lets them prevail a while, and carry the ball on the foot, as it were, that they may fall with the greater disappointment.

Ver. 19. For in my jealousy.] God first kindleth, and then speaketh, and then shaketh the earth. His wrath is like Elijah's cloud, which was at first but a small matter to see to; or as thunder, which we hear at first a little roaring noise afar off, but stay awhile, it is a dreadful crack; or as fire, that at first burneth a little upon a few boards, but when it prevaileth, bursteth out in a most terrible flame.

Ver. 20. Shall shake at my presence.] And wriggle into their holes, as worms do in time of thunder.

And the mountains shall be thrown down.] Hyperbolic threats, to set forth the dreadfulness of God's fierce wrath, which burns as low as hell itself.

Ver. 21. And I will call for a sword.] Against Antiochus by the Maccabees; against the Turk and Pope by the Christian princes, Hunniades, Scanderbeg, Queen Elizabeth, the late and present kings of Sweden, the English and French forces in Flanders now before Gravelin, after Dunkirk and Bergen taken from the Spaniard. Certain it is, that ere long the beast and the false prophet shall be taken, and all the fowls of the heaven filled with the flesh of those kings and captains that fight against the gospel. {#Re 19:19-21}

Ver. 22. An overflowing rain, and great hailstones.] As once at the general deluge, destruction of Sodom, discomfiture of the kings of Canaan in Joshua's days. {#Jos 10:11} Some think that these judgments here threatened shall, towards the end of the world, be executed upon antichrist and his adherents according to the letter. See #Re 16:21. {See Trapp on "Re 16:21"}

Ver. 23. Thus will I magnify myself.] This end God proposeth to himself in all his works; and well he may, since he hath none higher than himself to whom to have respect. And let all this that hath been said comfort us against the rage and good success, if any such yet be, of the antichristian rout, since these are but—as he said once of decaying Carthage—the last sprunts and bites of dying wild beasts.

Chapter 39

Ver. 1. Prophecy against Gog.] Prophecy again against him, for my people's greater comfort. The Jews—noted ever to have been a light, serial, and fanatical nation, apt to work themselves into the fool's paradise of a sublime dotage—expounding this prophecy according to the letter, conclude that Christ is not yet come, because these things here foretold are not yet fulfilled. When he doth come, they say, he shall set up his kingdom at Jerusalem, gather all Israel out of all coasts unto himself there, send each one to his own tribe, and that most certainly, by the operation of his Holy Spirit. There they shall be no sooner settled, and the kingdom not yet fully established, but Gog and Magog shall bring a huge army against Jerusalem, where they shall fall by the sword, lie unburied, &c.

Ver. 2. And I will turn thee back.] Convertam vel conteram te. {a}
See #Eze 38:3.

And leave but the sixth part of thee.] Or, Strike thee with six plagues, or draw thee back with a hook of six teeth. {as #Eze 38:4}
Sextabo re.

And will cause thee to come.] This is much and often inculcated, that it is God who brings in and drives out the Church's enemies. This is a quieting consideration.

{a} In frustra vel scintillas redigam te. -Pintus.

Ver. 3. And I will smite thy bow out of thy left hand.] I will disarm thee. As Herodotus {a} reporteth of Sennacherib and his Assyrians in Egypt, that their quivers, bow strings, and targets were gnawn to pieces by mice and rats in one night, so that they were forced to flee for their lives. And as our chroniclers {b} tell us, that in the battle between Edward III of England and Philip of France, there fell such a piercing shower of rain as dissolved their strings, and made their bows unuseful.

{a} Lib. ii.

{b} Dan, 237.

Ver. 4. Thou shalt fall upon, the mountains of Israel.] Thither thou shalt come indeed, as Antiochus did into the temple, antichrist into the Church of God, {#2Th 2:4} but there thou shalt take thy end.

Ver. 5. Thou shalt fall upon the open field.] Heb., The face of the field, which thou shall dung with thy dead carcase.

Ver. 6. And I will send a fire on Magog.] So God will one day on Rome, that Radix omnium malorum root of all evil things. {#Re 18:18,19}

And among them that dwell carelessly in the isles.] Who must not think there to moat up themselves against my fire.

Ver. 7. I will not let them pollute my holy name.] As if I were less able to deliver my people, or less mindful of my promises.

Ver. 8. Behold, it is come, and it is done.] It is as good as done. So, "Babylon is fallen"—i.e., It will fall certainly, quickly, utterly.

This is the day.] O dieculam illam! O that short time. When shall it once be? O mora! Christe veni. O delay! Christ, come.

Ver. 9. And they that dwell.] Hyperbolic expressions; though the Jews hold otherwise. See on #Eze 39:1.

Shall set on fire and burn the weapons.] Do not the Church's champions so at this day, ever since they proclaimed and proved the Pope to be that antichrist; burning up his weapons—his false doctrines and heresies—by the fire of God's Word, and giving their bodies to be burned for the testimony of Jesus?

And they shall burn them with fire seven years,] i.e., Diutissime et saepissime! Most long and most often. This seven years is not yet out. The Jesuits say Satan sent Luther, and God sent them to withstand him. But there is a succession of Luthers to find them work enough still, and to burn up their weapons that the churches may be at rest.

Ver. 10. So that they shall take no wood.] This must needs be hyperbolic, as are also sundry other passages in Holy Scripture. When Luther burnt the Pope's decrees and decretals at Wittenberg, it was a fair fire doubtless, as Solon once said of the fire he caused to be made at Athens of the bills and bonds of the Athenian usurers.

Ver. 11. I will give unto Gog a place there of graves.] That is all the portion or possession he gets in the Holy Land.

On the east of the sea.] The Dead Sea, or the lake of Sodom—a fit place for antichrist to be buried in: he shall at last be cast alive into a worse lake. {#Re 19:20}

And it shall stop the noses of passengers.] By reason of stench, or the mouths of passengers from speaking evil of God's people.

And they shall call it.] For a lasting monument of God's great mercy, in ridding the country of such pests.

Ver. 12. And seven months shall the house of Israel be burying of them.] That is, a long while; like as the Reformed Churches were in rooting out Popery, those damnable doctrines, ceremonies, images, relics, bulls, and books. Here in England, the Romish religion stood a whole month and more after the death of Queen Mary, as before. December 27, it was permitted that the Epistles, Gospels, Ten Commandments, Lord's Prayer, Creed, and Litany should be used in the Vulgate tongue. March 22, when the Estates of the realm were assembled, by renewing of a law of Edward VI, was granted the whole use of the Lord's Supper—that is, under both kinds. June 24, the sacrifice of the mass was abolished, and the liturgy in the English tongue established. In July, the oath of supremacy was ministered; and in August, images were removed out of churches, broken or burnt. {a}

“ Tantae molis erat Romanam abscondere gentem.”

{a} Camden's Elisabeth.

Ver. 13. And it shall be to them a renown.] A monument or trophy of their triumph. When the Switzers, A.D. 1443, had vanquished the Thuricenses in battle, they banqueted in the place where they won the victory, using the dead bodies of their adversaries instead of stools and tables. {a}

{a} Lanquet Chron., p. 263.

Ver. 14. And they shall sever out men of continual employment.] Viros quotidianos; men that shall stick to it, making it their business: Pollinctores: vespillones. So do our public professors and others, to confute Popish tenets, and to decry their customs. In doing whereof, they are assidui et accubui. constant and near.

Ver. 15. Then shall he set up a sign by it.] A statue, pillar, or sepulchral monument, that the butlers may bury it. Oh that in like sort God would cause the prophet, all relics and rags of Popery, and other heresy, together with the unclean spirit, to pass out of our land.

{#Zec 13:2}

Ver. 16. And also the name of the city shall be Hamonah,] i.e., Multitude or tumult; and all to keep up the memory of that signal victory. Near unto the University of Cambridge, on the southeast side, there appear aloft certain high hills called Gog Magog hills; but wherefore I know not. But not far from them is Heretics' hill, so called by the Papists because Bilney and Latimer were wont there to walk.

Ver. 17. Speak unto every feathered fowl.] A further explanation of that which had been said. {#Eze 39:4}

Assemble yourselves.] #Jer 12:9 Re 19:17;

To my sacrifice.] To this great slaughter of enemies whom I do sacrifice, as it were, to my justice.

Ver. 18. Ye shall eat the flesh of the mighty.] Whose flesh may he, perhaps, more delicate.

And drink the blood.] Blood royal, of a noble alloy. Sed nihil inde colligas, quam perpetuam eorum damnationem qui verbum Dei persequuntur, quique populum Israel spiritualem exagitant. {a} It importeth the eternal damnation of atheists and antichrists.

{a} Oecolampadius.

Ver. 19. Of my sacrifice.] Or, Of my good cheer. So God calleth it, to show how well pleased he is with the destruction of his Church's enemies.

Ver. 20. With horses and chariots,] i.e., With men that ride on horses, and fight out of chariots.

Ver. 21. And all the heathen shall see my judgment.] Antiochus did so, and Maximinus the emperor, and other tyrants, when seized upon by such judgments of God as they could neither avoid nor abide.

Ver. 22. From that day and forward.] Their experience shall breed confidence.

Ver. 23. And the heathen shall know.] They shall be convinced of the equability of my proceedings, and the truth of my menaces.

Ver. 24. According to their uncleanness.] I have not shown my sovereignty, or exercised tyranny towards them, but done them right.

Ver. 25. Now will I bring again.] Three things he here promiseth his people, notwithstanding all the sorrow, (1.) Effectual vocation; (2.) Justification here; (3.) Glorification. {#Eze 39:29} The Sun of righteousness loves not to set in a cloud.

And will be jealous.] Or, Zealous; "the zeal of the Lord of hosts," his free grace, "shall effect it,"

Ver. 26. After that they have borne their shame.] Are become soundly ashamed of their sinful practices: Hoc enim ingenium est verae fidei, saith Oecolampadius, for this is the nature of true faith, to blush and bleed for sins past.

When they dwelt safely in their land.] And so settled on their lease through carnal security.

Ver. 27. And am sanctified in them,] i.e., Have fully shown my sanctity and majesty, both by their punishment and by their deliverance.

Ver. 28. And have left none of them any more there.] Here the Jews triumph and say, When was this promise ever fulfilled? and how, then, can the Messiah be come already? Hereunto it is rightly answered, that this prophecy is to be taken partly literally, and so it was fulfilled at the return of the captives out of Babylon. See #Ezr 3:1. Partly spiritually; and so Christ will at the last day raise up every one of his elect,—that Israel indeed,—and gather them to himself; not one of them shall be missing. {a}

{a} Lavat. in loc.

Ver. 29. Neither Will I hide my face any more from them.] They shall have beatiful vision and fruition for ever. See on #Eze 39:25.

For I have poured out my spirit.] Have already, and will do yet more liberally in the days of the gospel. {#Ac 2:2-7 Joh 7:38}

Chapter 40

Ver. 1. In the five and twentieth year; &c.] After the defeat of Gog and Magog cometh, in these last nine chapters, a new prophecy, aptly depending upon the former, concerning the Christian Church, and the spiritual state and constitution thereof; which is here prefigured by types of rebuilding the temple, restoring the Levitical rites, and repossessing the promised land. To those Jews who here hence expect a most glorious temple and state at the coming of their imaginary Messiah, and for whose sakes these high things are thus expressed, Christ may well say, as afterwards he did to Nicodemus, {#Joh 3:12} "If I have told you earthly things, and ye believe not, how shall ye believe if I tell you of heavenly?" The wiser of their Rabbis, ^{a} as Galatinus testifieth, convinced by good reasons, understand these chapters not of an earthly building according to the letter, but of a heavenly, and in a mystical sense. And John the divine so interpreteth this scripture ^{#Re 21:1-11,22-27 22:7} -viz., of the heavenly Jerusalem, that mother of us all. It is ordinary with the prophets to speak figuratively of the amplitude, splendour, and magnificence of the Christian Church; as #Isa 54:11,12, "I will lay thy stones with fair colours, and lay thy foundation with sapphires," &c.—that is, I will erect and raise my Church and temple among the Gentiles, and adorn and deck it with lustre and variety of precious graces. Divines observe, that God here showeth Ezekiel a new temple larger than the old Jerusalem, and a new Jerusalem larger than all the land of Canaan; yea, according to the account of some learned Rabbis, larger than all the world; for ^{#Eze 48:35} it was round about eighteen thousand measures—i.e., leucas, say they. Now in opening of this prophecy, it must not be expected that something should be said to every verse, as elsewhere hath been done; and yet we must know that there is nothing in Holy Scripture that is not useful and profitable, ^{#2Ti 3:16} though at first sight it may seem otherwise. Metals lie hidden in hardest quarries; wholesome herbs are found often in the roughest places, and precious stones in barren sands. Hippocrates saith that in the faculty of medicine there is nothing small, nothing contemptible. ^{b} Aristotle saith in all nature nothing is so mean, vile, and abject that deserveth not to be admired. The Rabbis have a saying that there is a mountain of sense which hangeth upon every apex of the Word of God, &c.

And brought me thither,] scil., To Jerusalem, in vision, that valley of vision. In the beginning of this book, the Spirit carried him into the plain of Shinar, there to see a vision purporting the destruction of the material temple. Here, toward the close of it, he is by the same hand carried to Jerusalem to see a mystical temple, set up in the stead thereof, far more stately. "The sufferings of this life are in no comparison worthy of the glory that shall be revealed." ^{#Ro 8:18}

^{b} ουδεν μικρον ουδεν καταφρονητεον.—De Part. Anim., lib. i. cap. 5.

Ver. 2. Brought he me,] i.e., The Spirit brought me, who is called God's hand, {#Eze 40:1} quia a Patre Filioque quasi marius dimanat: so he is called the "finger of God" {#Ex 8:19} -that is, his power.

And set me upon a very high mountain.] Moriah, where had stood the temple which overlooked the city, and had been a kind of heaven upon earth, wherein the holy priests and Israelites were as stars.

By which was the frame of a city.] So the temple seemed to him, for its many courts, walls, towers, gates, &c. So doth the seraglio at this day.

Ver. 3. And, behold, there was a man.] Christ the sovereign architect of his Church. {as #Re 11:1} This might well be brought in with an Ecce Behold. He appeared after another manner in that first dreadful vision. {#Eze 1:1}

Whose appearance was like the appearance of brass.] Bright and durable; importing Christ's purity and eternity.

With a line of flax in his hand.] Christ's measuring line is the Holy Scripture and the preaching of the Word; so is also his measuring rod here said to be of reed, but in #Re 11:1 of gold. Both these are in Christ's hand, to show that the power and efficacy of the Word read or preached is from him alone. {#1Co 3:9-18 2Co 10:13-17}

Ver. 4. Son of man.] A most kind compellation, holding forth Christ's philanthropy or love to mankind. He calleth us "sons of men," who for our sakes became "The Son of man," that we might become the sons of God. It is observed that Ezekiel, with the Seventy, is υιος ανθρωπου, the Son of man; but Christ is υιος του ανθρωπου—that is, the Son of Adam: he was the next and only other common person.

Behold with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears, and set thine heart, &c.] We should give all possible diligence and heed to a discourse of the New Jerusalem, that city of pearl; setting to work both our outward and inward senses, and those well exercised, to discern both good and evil. {#Heb 5:14}

Declare all that thou seest unto the house of Israel.] For therefore hast thou seen it. The manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit with. {#1Co 12:7} And as any man hath received the gift, so let him minister the same to others. {#1Pe 4:10} What use is there of a candle under a bushel?

Ver. 5. And behold a wall on the outside of the house.] Betokening God's almighty protection of his Church and chosen. {#Isa 26:1 Zec 2:9 Job 1:10 Ps 125:1,2 46:1-3}

Ver. 6. Then came he unto the gate.] Henceforth we shall read of gates, greces, posts, porches, courts, chambers, windows, &c., after the manner of Solomon's temple, now burnt to ashes. Concerning all which, various and very different are the opinions of interpreters. We shall see hereafter the whole building in heaven. Meanwhile, for many things here mentioned, we must content ourselves with a "learned ignorance," and not call it descriptionem insulsam, as that Popish commentor blasphemed, {a} or think that the holy penman spake he knew not what. This was basely to "speak evil of the things that he knew not." How much better those Rabbis who, meeting with many things here inextricable and inexplicable, say, Elias cum venerit solvet omnia.

{a} Sanctius: Argum. in hoc.

Ver. 7. And every little chamber.] Or, Porter's lodge.

Ver. 8. He measured, also the porch.] This porch, which had neither doors nor roof that we read of, was symbolum coeli: coelum enim undique conspicuum lateque patens significabat, saith Josephus. {a} It represented heaven.

{a} De Bell. Jud., lib. vi. cap. 6.

Ver. 9. And the porch of the gate was inward.] Or, This was the porch of the inner gate.

Ver. 10. And the little chambers.] Here lay the doorkeepers, whose office was to keep out the unclean. {#2Ch 23:19} Oh for such officers among us!

Ver. 11. And the length.] That is, the height of the gate.

Ver. 12. The space also before the little chambers.] Which space served either for seats, walks, or eaves rather at either end.

Ver. 13. Door against door.] The one facing the other in a direct line.

Ver. 14. Even unto the post,] i.e., The height was the same everywhere. See these things best set forth by pictures at the end of Castalio's and Lavater's annotations on the text.

Ver. 16. Narrow windows,] i.e., Narrowed, the better to let in light, and so shadowing out that spiritual illumination and joy wrought in the hearts of the children of light. See #Isa 42:7 49:6 60:19,20 Mic 7:8 Lu 2:32 Joh 3:19 8:12 9:5 12:35,36,46.

Were palm trees.] As for ornament, so in token of victory gotten by the saints, who do overcome. {#Ro 8:31-37 1Co 15:54,55}

Ver. 17. Then brought he me into the outward court.] In this temple were more courts and more chambers than ever were in Solomon's. Heaven is large, and full of mansions. {#Joh 14:2}

And a pavement made.] More costly and stately than that of Ahasuerus. {#Es 1:6} God's people are said to be living stones; {#1Pe 2:5} more precious than sapphires; {#Isa 54:11} firm as a pavement by faith, and low by humility; submitting to their teachers, {#Heb 13:17} and obeying from the heart the form of doctrine delivered unto them. {#Ro 6:17}

Ver. 18. Was the lower pavement.] See on #Eze 40:17.

Ver. 19. An hundred cubits.] Square.

Ver. 21. Of the first gate,] i.e., Of the east gate, first measured.

Ver. 22. And their windows.] See #Eze 40:16.

And they went up unto it by seven steps.] Whereby was noted the saints' progress in knowledge and holiness, {#Lu 17:5 Ro 1:17 Re 22:11} still climbing up toward the heavenly temple. {#Ps 84:7}

Ver. 31. And palm trees.] See on #Eze 40:16.

Eight steps.] See on #Eze 40:22.

Ver. 35. And measured it according to these measures.] Vilalpandus here noteth that whatsoever is measured in one gate, the same is common to all the rest.

Ver. 38. Where they washed the burnt offering.] All must be pure and clean in God's service.

“ Pura Deus mens est,” &c.

This washing of the burnt offering prefigured baptism, saith Polanus, as did the tables, {#Eze 40:39} the Lord’s Supper, wherein Christ the Lamb of God is slain in our sight.

Ver. 39. Two tables.] See on #Eze 40:38.

Ver. 40. As one goeth up to the entry of the north.] Hereby was signified, say some, that our corrupt affections must be mortified, and our lives laid down, if need be, for the truth’s sake, seem it never so hard to be done. Sicut a Septentrione venti flant asperi, as north winds are cold and comfortless.

Ver. 41. Four tables.] Not altars, nor yet oyster boards, as the Papists scornfully call our communion tables.

Ver. 42. Wherewith they slew the burnt offering.] The faithful ministers of the do daily execute their priestly offices, and have their instruments according. See #Ac 10:13 Ro 15:15,16 Php 2:17. The saints also, as spiritual priests, &c. {#Ro 12:1 1Pe 2:9}

Ver. 43. And within were hooks.] Where hung the beasts when they were flayed, and afterwards the priests’ and offerers’ portions, till after the sacrifice they were shared out.

Ver. 44. Were the chambers of the singers.] These were to set forth that pastors should have all necessary help in their places by the other church officers. The Levites were singers and porters. {#1Ch 23:2,5}

Ver. 45. For the priests.] Let none else intrude into them. See #2Ch 26:16.

Ver. 46. Which come near.] #Ex 19:22 Le 10:3 21:17,18,21,23.

Ver. 47. So he measured.] Christ doeth all things in his Church in number, weight, and measure. By his Spirit he ordereth the length, breadth, and depth of his spiritual house, and bestoweth his gifts by measure to each member. {#Ro 12:6 1Co 12:28,29 Eph 3:7 4:7}

Ver. 48. The porch of the house.] Which was covered over-head, to keep them dry in foul weather. What Christ doth for all his. See #Isa 4:5,6 25:4. {See Trapp on "Isa 25:4"}

Ver. 49. The length of the porch was twenty cubits.] After the cubit of the sanctuary, the weights and measures whereof were twice as large as those of the commonwealth, to show that God expects much more of those that serve him there than he doth of others.

Chapter 41

Ver. 1. Afterward.] This chapter is no less dark and difficult than was the former, which made Jerome ready to desist and give over commenting, but that he thought it better to say something than nothing, and was brought to know and say that the greatest part of those things he knew were but the least part of that he knew not. What I do understand is good, so I think is that I understand not, said Socrates once of a certain dark author. We may be sure it is so here, and must mirari potius quam rimari; waiting for more light, and praying to that purpose. {as #Eph 1:17,18}

He brought me to the temple.] Who had hitherto been held in the porch. There was a new church to be now erected by the preaching of the gospel; and this, the measuring of the house, {#Eze 40} of the temple, {#Eze 41} of the courts, {#Eze 42} and of all the parts, noteth.

And measured the posts.] Or, Fronts, or frontispiece, as the Vulgate hath it.

Which was the breadth of the tabernacle.] Made of old by Moses.

Ver. 2. And he measured the length thereof,] i.e., Not of the door, as Jerome would have it; but of the temple, the body and basilic thereof, called "the first sanctuary" {#Heb 9:2}

Forty cubits.] This noteth, say some, the longsuffering and patience of the saints, like as the breadth, twenty cubits, doth their charity.

Ver. 3. Then went he inward.] Toward the Holy of holies.

And the door.] Which in the second temple was but a veil, and rent at Christ's passion.

Ver. 4. And the breadth thereof twenty cubits.] So it was a just square, intimating the stability of the kingdom of heaven, a kingdom that cannot be shaken, {#Heb 12:28}

This is the most holy place.] The Holy of holies, the Oracle, the house of the soul, wherein the only firm hope of Israel resteth—so the Jews called it—the Adytum, or inaccessible place, whither none might come but the high priest only, and that but once a year.

Pompey and Heliodorus, for presuming to press into it, were heavily plagued.

Ver. 5. He measured the wall.] With the counterforts added to it for strength and ornament; these are commonly called pilasters or pillars.

Six cubits,] scil., In breadth.

Ver. 6. And the side chambers were three, one over another, and thirty in order,] i.e., Three stories, {a} and thirty in each story. Resemblably, there is a threefold rank or order of the members of the Church; there are lowermost, middlemost, and uppermost. These, as they have their several offices and gifts accordingly, so they must keep to their own stations, do their own business, live in love, and wait till called unto a higher room.

{a} Substractiones. -Polan. Coatae. -Vatab.

Ver. 7. And there was an enlarging and a winding about still upward.] This might in mind God's people of heavenly mindedness, whereby their hearts will be enlarged when got once above the world, as birds sing sweetly when got aloft into the air.

Went still upward.] Let there be continual ascensions in our hearts: Sursum corda.

Ver. 8. The foundations.] Plus rei quam ostentationis habebant, {a} The good soul rather seeks to be good, than seems to be so.

{a} Oecolamp.

Ver. 9. And that which was left.] Area pura, {a} the void place.

{a} Piscat.

Ver. 10. And between the chambers.] Vulgate, The treasures. In the Church much more room is taken up by such as are void of the treasure of God's grace than by better men, "rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom of Christ."

Ver. 11. Toward the place that was left.] Which served the faithful, saith Jerome, for an oratory, whither they went to pray.

Ver. 12. The separate place.] The temple, or at least some part of it.

Ver. 13. An hundred cubits.] The temple of Ephesus was 245 feet long, and 220 feet broad. Howbeit for spiritual employment, mystical signification, none ever came near this edifice.

Ver. 14. Also the breadth...an hundred cubits.] Whereas Solomon's temple was but twenty cubits broad.

Ver. 15. An hundred cubits.] See on #Eze 41:13.

With the inner temple and the porches thereof.] Summa et infima iuxta curat, nihil aspernatur. {a}

{a} Oecolamp.

Ver. 16. And the narrow windows...and the windows were covered.] Here Jerome cries out, "Oh the depth of the wisdom and knowledge of God!" Here be windows, but narrow and covered, which shows that we see not yet, nor can see, into heavenly things but obscurely and obliquely. How little a thing doth man understand of God. {#Job 26:14} The holy place was without windows, only there burned lights perpetually; but in the most holy place there was no light at all.

Ver. 17. By measure.] Heb., Measure. See on #Eze 40:47.

Ver. 18. And it was made with cherubims and palm trees.] Viz., Upon the partition walls. This was to teach Christians, who are the temples of God, (1.) To live like angels for holiness; (2.) To suffer, as palm trees, any pressures or pains for his sake with invincible patience. {a} By their piety in their lives, and patience at their death, the primitive Christians won much upon their persecutors.

{a} Pressa sub ingenti ceu pondere palma virescit. -Plin., lib. xiii. cap. 4. Sub cruce sic florent dedita corda Deo.

Ver. 19. So that the face of a man.] See #Eze 1:10.

And the face of a young lion towards the palm tree.] The palm tree, as it grew best in Judea, so it is probable that from the temple at Jerusalem it came at first, that the heathens put the palm for a sign of victory, and that the picture of Victory among them had in the one hand a palm, and in the other an olive branch. Wisdom (the praise of a man) and courage (the property of a lion), zeal and discretion, as they make a good mixture, so they conquer and carry it.

Ver. 20. And on the wall of the temple.] Yet this is no warrant for the use of pictures in our churches, whether for worship, as Papists, or for ornaments only, as Lutherans. At a consultation held not many years since at Hamburg by Lutheran ministers, concerning the cause and cure of Germany's calamities, they concluded it was because their images were not adorned enough, which, therefore, they would procure done. {a} A sad business!

{a} Mr Burroughs on Hos., vol. i. p. 465.

Ver. 21. The posts of the temple,] i.e., Of the doors of the temple, were not round or arched, but square; as are at this day the doors of the Pantheon in Rome, saith Vilalpandus, built of old in honour of all gods, and now consecrated by the Pope to the honour of all saints with like superstition.

Ver. 22. The altar,] scil., That for incense, whereof see #Ex 30:6,7, but here of a much larger size. See on #Eze 40:1. This altar of wood and square was a type of Christ (not of the cross, as Vilalpandus doateth), in whom our prayers come before God as incense, and he is the propitiation for our sins. {#IJo 2:2 Ex 30:1 Ps 141:2 Re 5:8} The size of this altar above that of old, showeth that the saints under the gospel would make much more improvement of the Lord Jesus in prayer, and make use of his mediation and intercession by faith in their heavenly sublimated supplications, than the saints of old were ordinarily wont to do. {a}

This is the table.] One and the same Christ is all in all to his people—an altar to sanctify them and their offerings; a table also to feed and feast them with the most precious provisions. See #Ps 23:5,6 36:9 65:5 Pr 9:1,2 Isa 25:6-8.

{a} Cobbet, Of Prayer; p. 235.

Ver. 23. Had two doors.] Understand hereby the means of grace, and ministers dispensing the same, whereby souls are brought home to Christ.

Ver. 24. Two leaves.] There are variety of ordinances.

Ver. 25. Cherubims and palm trees.] Let ministers resemble angels, and they shall be victorious, and well rewarded. The palm is a symbol of constance, and of a crown.

Ver. 26. And thick planks,] i.e., The heads or ends of thick beams or joists, supporting the rafters. We see what use there is of architecture, among other arts, in expounding Scripture. Vilalpandus saith he bestowed two and twenty years' study upon this fabric of the temple here described.

Chapter 42

Ver. 1. Then he brought me forth into the utter court,] scil., Of the temple, at both ends and on either side whereof there were spacious places, in manner of our churchyards, saith one. Sequitur locus valde confusus et multo impeditissimus, saith Castalio. This is a very dark and difficult chapter, the sense whereof I would fain learn of some other, for I know not what to make of it: thus he. Oecolampadius also to like purpose, after R. Solomon, and thus prayeth, Suggerat Dominus conanti quae ad gloriam illius, certe quae non officiant, precor, &c., i.e., The Lord help our honest endeavours, that we may do what may be for his glory, and not for the hurt of any reader. That was a holy prayer of his colleague Zuinglius in like case, and may it be ours also, Deum Opt. Max. precor ut vias nostras dirigat, &c., I beseech Almighty God to direct our ways, and if at any time, Balaam-like, we shall obstinately resist the truth, let him set his angel against us, who, with the terror of his sword, may so dash this ass (our ignorance, I mean, and presumptuous boldness) against the wall, that we may feel our feet (that is, our carnal sense and reason) crushed and broken; that we no longer dishonour the name of our Lord God. {a}

{a} Zuing. Epist., lib. iii.

Ver. 2. Before the length of an hundred cubits.] The measure mentioned in this chapter, and whatsoever followeth touching the division of the land, the seats of the tribes, the portions allotted to the prince, priests, and Levites, the manner of their sacrifices and oblations, are all new, {a} varying from that which is in Moses (though for their weakness by those outward things he shadoweth heavenly), to show both the abrogating of the legal ceremonies and the establishing of a spiritual Christian Church, the magnificence whereof is here set forth to the prophet by the Lord Christ, qui mystagogus noster est, who is our God, and will be "our guide even unto death."

{a} "The Calling of the Jew," by Finch.

Ver. 3. Which were for the inner court,] viz., Of the temple. This was a figure of the Church invisible, as the outward court, described in this chapter, was of the visible and external.

The pavement which was for the utter court.] Which might signify that those who would enter into heaven must keep themselves unspotted of the world, "undefiled in the way." {#Ps 15 Ps 24:3-5}

Ver. 4. A way of one cubit.] A narrow way, but such as led them into spacious walks of ten cubits' breadth inward. "Strait is the gate, and narrow the way, that leadeth unto life eternal"; {#Mt 7:14} but they that hit it, hold it, shall once walk arm in arm with angels. {#Zec 3:7; see the note there} "Through many tribulations we must enter into God's kingdom"; {#Ac 14:22} but there God shall set our feet in a large room. {as #Ps 31:8} We shall walk at liberty on the everlasting mountains. Let it be remembered that this narrow way is but short, it is but of one cubit, &c.

Ver. 5. Now the upper chambers were shorter.] As being a kind of cock lofts, and not so fit for habitation.

Ver. 6. Therefore the building was straitened.] As the rules of architecture direct, and as right reason required, lest the building should shrink under its own burden. Ne structura pondere dissiliret.

Ver. 7. Here the Rabbis call again for the help of their Elias. See on #Eze 40:6.

Ver. 8. Here the Rabbis call again for the help of their Elias. See on #Eze 40:6.

Ver. 9. Here the Rabbis call again for the help of their Elias. See on #Eze 40:6.

Ver. 13. They be holy chambers.] Or, Cells of the sanctuary, belonging to those that serve in the sanctuary. God appointeth his ministers their various stations, together with the bounds of their habitations,

Shall eat the most holy things.] Ministers must eat as well as others; they are not of the chameleon kind—cannot live upon air; and the Lord Christ "hath ordained that," as "they which waited at the altar were partakers of the altar," "so also should they that preach the gospel live of the gospel," {#1Co 9:13,14}

And the meat offering and the sin offering,] i.e., The priests' share out of them; for, besides they tithes and glebe, or suburbs, the priests had many rich revenues, and were far better provided for than today's gospel ministers are, however begrudged that little that is allowed them.

Ver. 14. Then shall they not go out of the holy place.] Ministers may not leave their station, lay aside their holy calling, entangle themselves with worldly cares and businesses; but hoc agere, make their ministry their business, giving themselves wholly to it. Verbi minister es, hoc age; this was Mr Perkins's motto. And "say to Archippus, Take heed to the ministry which thou hast received in the Lord, that thou fulfil it." {#Col 4:17}

But there they shall lay their garments.] And not go among the people in them, lest they make themselves overly cheap, or the people superstitious, by placing holiness in their seeing or touching those holy vestments.

And shall put on other garments.] Ministers, as in doing their office, they must use all becoming gravity and authority, as the ambassadors of Christ; {a} so, at other times, they must familiarise themselves with their people, becoming all things to all men, in Paul's sense, that they may win some.

{a} Oecolamp.

Ver. 15. Now when he had made an end of measuring the inner house.] The inner part of the Church. The Church invisible is first and chiefly to be looked into, rather than the external adjuncts, as multitude, prosperity, clarity, antiquity, &c.; the substantial rather than the accidentals. The Church of Rome borrows her mark from the market, plenty or cheapness, &c. Vilissimus pagus, saith Luther. The mean stivilage seems to me to be an ivory palace, if there be but in it a faithful pastor, and a few true believers.

Ver. 16. Five hundred reeds.] Lo, here the large extent of the Holy Catholic Church, the communion of saints. {See Trapp on "Eze 40:1}

Ver. 17. He measured the north side, five hundred reeds.] To show that many should come from all coasts and quarters to sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven. {#Mt 8:11} {See Trapp on "Mt 8:11"}

Ver. 18. He measured the north side, five hundred reeds.] To show that many should come from all coasts and quarters to sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven. {#Mt 8:11} {See Trapp on "Mt 8:11"}

Ver. 20. He measured it by the four sides.] The Church is fair and firm, for it is quadrangular; so is every true member thereof homo quadratus, square, steadfast and immovable, ἀνικητος και ακινητος, always abounding in the work of the Lord, &c. {#1Co 15:58} His heart is fixed, trusting in the Lord. {#Ps 112:1} He quits himself well in all estates, and comes off a gainer. Gold is purged in the fire, shines in the water; as, on the other side, clay is scorched in the fire, dissolved in the water. The new Jerusalem is said to lie square. {#Re 21:16} {See Trapp on "Re 21:16"}

Ver. 1. Afterwards he brought me.] Non nisi dimenso prius montis ambitu. The prophet saw not the glory of God till he had first seen the mount measured, the temple restored. Men must usually wait upon God in the use of means ere they see the King in his glory.

Even the gate that looketh toward the east.] Men must awake out of the west of wickedness, and stand up from dead courses and companies, if Christ, the Day Star from on high, shall give them light. {#Eph 5:14 Lu 1:78,79}

Ver. 2. And behold the glory,] i.e., The vision of the glory. God, who by the east gate had left the temple and the city, {#Eze 10:19} doth now the same way return, and filleth the house with the glory of his presence.

And his voice was like a noise of many waters.] Importing the multitude of his attendants, and his irresistible power, in his gospel especially, which is the power of God to salvation, and, like a mighty torrent, bears down all before it.

And the earth shined with his glory.] How can it do otherwise when the Sun of righteousness cometh in place, and irradiateth both organ and object. {#2Co 4:6} Into Solomon's temple God came in a thick cloud; not so here. Light is now more diffused than ever. Woe be to those that wink, or who seek straws to put out their eyes with, as Bernard hath it.

Ver. 3. And it was according to the vision.] Being so much the sweeter and the welcomer to me. Hence he so oft repeateth it; and the Jewish doctors observe that eight times in this one verse, visionis ac videndi vocabulum repetitur; the word for vision and to see it is made use of.

When I came to destroy the city,] i.e., To foretell the destruction of it, {#Eze 9:2,5} from which time forth it was a done thing. See #Jer 1:10. {See Trapp on "Jer 1:10"}

And I fell upon my face.] In reverence to his majesty, in admiration of his mercy, and in the sense of mine own unworthiness. The nearer any one cometh to God, the lower he falleth in his own eyes, and the more doth "rottenness enter into his bones."

Ver. 4. And the glory of the Lord.] See #Eze 43:2.

By the way of the gate.] The ordinary entrance into the temple. There, if anywhere, God is to be found. Where should a man be sought for but at his house? Say he be from home a while, yet thither he returneth; so here.

Ver. 5. So the spirit took me up.] Who was fallen upon my face. The lowly shall be lifted up.

And brought me into the inner court.] As being a priest. So is every true believer. {#1Pe 2:9 Re 1:6}

Filled the house.] God's presence is the full glory of each good soul. See #Hag 2:7.

Ver. 6. And I heard him speaking unto me.] The man Christ Jesus, standing by. Here, then, is a meeting and the mystery of the blessed Trinity; yea, here is a double mystery to be taken notice of, viz., those two wonderful unions of three persons in one God, and of Christ's two natures in one person.

Ver. 7. The place of my throne, and the place of the soles of my feet,] i.e., My Church, which is unto me instead of heaven and earth. Behold the place of my throne, &c., {#Isa 60:1} so some read it; others, As for the place of my throne, &c.

No more defile.] But hallow; for negative holiness alone is little worth.

Nor by the carcases of their kings,] i.e., Their idols; {a} not unfitly called "carcases:"—(1.) Because void of life; (2.) Stinking stuff. See #Le 26:30 Jer 16:18. These were oft brought in, and countenanced by their kings.

{a} Piscat.

Ver. 8. In their setting of their threshold by my thresholds.] By broaching falsehoods for truth, and setting human devices in competition with the good Word of God. That detestable decree of the Council of Trent is well known, whereby the Apocrypha is set cheek by jowl, as they say, with the holy canon; the Vulgate translation with the original; traditions with Scriptures, and unwritten verities with those that are written. This is intolerable presumption. Jews and Turks do the like in their Talmud and Koran; that I speak not of our sect masters, who boldly obtrude their placits without just reproof, and require to be believed.

And the wall between me and them.] Which they have wretchedly set up by their sins, to their singular disadvantage; {#Isa 59:2} or, They have come under my nose, as it were, to provoke me; or, The nearer they were to Church, the farther from God.

Ver. 9. Now let them put away their whoredom.] So shall all be well between us. See #Jer 3:1 Isa 1:18. {See Trapp on "Jer 3:1"} {See Trapp on "Isa 1:18"} Piscator; Ictus sapiat. Some read it, Now they will put away, &c.; and so they did, after the captivity, but will not be yet drawn to worship the true God aright. The Lord persuade their hearts thereto. Fiat, Fiat! Do it, Do it!

And the carcases.] See on #Eze 43:7.

And I will dwell in the midst of them for ever.] This is the same with that in #Mt 28:20, "I am with you to the end of the world." Ver. 10. Show the house.] Heb., That house—sc., Which I have showed thee in visions; the idea of that temple which shall shortly be set up, its figure and dimensions.

That they may be ashamed.] Of having dealt so unworthily with a God so gracious.

And let them measure the pattern.] Ut metiantur universe; that, by a holy geometry, they may, in the spirit of their minds, take all the dimensions of it, and be transformed into the likeness of the heavenly pattern. These are those holy and heavenly mathematics, which none can learn but those that are taught of God, and without which none can be Christ's disciple; like as none might be scholar to Plato that had not the grounds of geometry. {a}

{a} Scholae Platonis haec fuit inscriptio, ουδεις αγεωμετρητος ειστω.

Ver. 11. And if they be ashamed of all that they have done.] If they blush and bleed at heart for their iniquities. Penitents are to be taught the truth which is according to godliness, and all such are exactly to know and to do the whole will of God, as had not rather be carnally secured than soundly comforted.

Ver. 12. Upon the top of the mountain.] The Church is as a city on a hill, seen far and near, {#Mt 5:14} and the members of it are still ascending from one degree of grace to another, from strength to strength, till they see the face of God in Zion. {#Ps 15:1 Heb 12:22,23}

The whole limit thereof round about shall be most holy.] All the Lord's people are so, at least in profession, first steps, honest endeavour, divine acceptation, and shall be so one day in all perfection. {#Re 21:8,27 22:14,15}

Ver. 13. And these are the measures of the altar,] viz., Of burnt offerings, which was in the priests' court, and not at all spoken of till now.

The cubit,] viz., That of the sanctuary.

Even the bottom.] Heb., The bosom.

This shall be the higher place.] Heb., The back, as that which bore all. "We have also an altar," {#Heb 13:10} even Jesus Christ, the just one, who is both our Ariel (God's lion, #Re 5:5) and our Hareel (God's mount) of four cubits, as being "preached unto the Gentiles" in all parts, "believed on in the world, received up into glory." {#1Ti 3:16}

Ver. 14. And from the bottom upon the ground.] This so exact measuring of the altar may import, saith Polanus, the faithful and perfect preaching of the gospel by the apostles, and all faithful ministers of God's word after them. {#2Co 10:13-18 1Co 4:1,2 Re 11:1}

Ver. 15. So the altar.] Heb., Hareel, the hill of God, or the only place of sacrifices.

And from the altar.] Ariel, the lion of God; so called because the fire of this altar devoured the sacrifices, as a lion doth the prey. See #Isa 29:16.

Ver. 16. Square in the four squares thereof.] Christ, the Christian altar, is complete, firm, and fixed.

Ver. 17. And his stairs shall look toward the east.] As leading to the Sun of righteousness, and the light of eternal blessedness, arising out of heaven.

Ver. 18. These are the ordinances of the altar.] Christians also have their sacrifices, though of another alloy, to offer, and must look to the ordinances of their altar; ministers must especially.

Ver. 19. And thou shalt give to the priests.] All this is to be understood spiritually, as being figuratively spoken.

A young bullock.] Together with a goat and a ram. {#Eze 43:22,23,25} All that are Christ's have crucified the flesh, with the affections and lusts, {#Ga 5:24} and are still doing at it.

Ver. 20. And thou shalt take of the blood.] Christ, as mediator, was consecrated and qualified for the work.

Ver. 21. Without the sanctuary.] So Christ suffered without the gate. {#Heb 13:11,12}

Ver. 22. And they shall cleanse the altar.] To set forth how Christ cleanseth and sanctifieth his people. {#Heb 9:19-24 Joh 17:19 Heb 9:13,14}

Ver. 23. Thou shalt offer.] See on #Eze 43:19.

Ver. 24. And the priests shall cast salt upon them.] Christians must "have salt ^{a} within themselves," ^{#Mr 9:50} and see to it that all their speeches be seasoned with the salt of mortification and discretion; ^{#Eph 4:29 Col 4:6} so shall God make an everlasting covenant with them, even a "covenant of salt." See #Le 2:13.

^{a} Plato sal nominat Θεοφιλεστατον diis churis. Nihil utilius sale ac sole. -Coel. Rhodig., lib. vi. cap. 1.

Ver. 25. Every day a goat.] Mortification must be a Christian's daily practice.

Ver. 26. They shall purge.] Thou and they together. We must also sanctify the Lord God in our hearts. ^{#1Pe 3:15}

Ver. 27. It shall be upon the eighth day.] The services of mortified men shall be accepted, on the eighth day especially, the Christian Sabbath, in the holy assemblies.

Chapter 44

Ver. 1. Then he brought me back.] From the east gate, which was found shut, to the north gate, where the prophet received large instructions. ^{#Eze 44:4} Christ must be followed, though he seem to lead us in and out, backward and forward, as if we were treading a maze.

Ver. 2. This gate shall be shut.] Is, and shall be, save only to Messiah the Prince, and to whomsoever he, as having the keys of David, shall open it. "This gate of the Lord into which the righteous shall enter" ^{#Ps 118:20} -SC., By that "new and living way," which Christ, their forerunner, ^{#Heb 6:20} hath prepared and paved for them with his own blood. ^{#Heb 10:20} See #Heb 7:8,9,11,12,24 9:11,12.

And no man shall enter in it.] No mere man, no man unless it be Emmanuel. See #Joh 3:13.

Ver. 3. It is for the prince.] For "Messiah the Prince"; so Christ is called in #Da 9:25; or for the chief priest, who, as he had a singular privilege herein above other priests, so hath Christ, the high priest of the Church Christian, singular privileges above all his brethren.

He shall sit in it to eat bread.] He shall sit at the right hand of the majesty on high, and enjoy heaven's happiness, which is oft compared to a feast, as #Mt 8:11 22:1,2 Isa 53:11. He shall ascend up into heaven, and thence come again to judge the quick and the dead. {#Ac 1:11 Heb 9:28} Some by "prince" here understand the ruler of the people, {see #Eze 46:1,2} who is peculiarly licensed to enter in at the east gate, and there to sit, and eat and drink his part of the peace offering. Compare #Ex 24:11. It is not meant of Peter the apostle, to be sure, much less of the Pope, his pretended successor, as some of his parasites would have it.

Ver. 4. Then brought he me.] See on #Eze 44:1.

The glory of the Lord.] See #Eze 43:2,5.

And fell upon my face.] See #Eze 43:3 1:28.

Ver. 5. Mark well, and behold with thine eyes.] Summon the sobriety of thy senses before thine own judgment. See #Eze 40:4. The refining of the ministry and discipline of the Church, with the same charge in regard of the excellency of the matter repeated for attention, to #Eze 44:17, and laws prescribed to that purpose, #Eze 44:17-31.

Ver. 6. And thou shalt say to the rebellious.] Heb., To rebellion. Vulgate, To the exasperating house.

Let it suffice you.] Ye have sinned enough, and more than enough. {#1Pe 4:3} Now that I have set you up a new temple, turn over a new leaf for shame; {as #Eze 43:10} when shall it once be? {#Jer 13:27}

Ver. 7. Strangers.] Yourselves are no better; {#Am 9:7} strangers from the covenants; {#Eph 2:12} degenerate children, {#Isa 1:4} alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in you, {#Eph 4:18} and through your blind leaders of the blind, priests of your own making, &c.

Uncircumcised in heart.] Erroneous in judgment.

Uncircumcised in flesh.] Enormous in practice.

When ye offer my bread,] i.e., The fat and the blood, as it followeth, which I seem to feed upon as a man doth upon bread.

Because of all your abominations.] Or, Besides all your abominations mentioned. {#Eze 44:6}

Ver. 8. For yourselves.] Pro vestro arbitratu, non pro mea voluntate; as best suited with your own ends, and fitted to your own humours.

Ver. 9. Shall enter into my sanctuary.] See a like prohibition in #1Ti 3:3,8 Tit 1:7. Such as were the scribes and Pharisees, the Arian bishops, the Popish priests, the cleri (ut vocant)—dehonestamenta among us, till cast out.

Ver. 10. And the Levites.] The apostate priests, that for fear or favour have comported with idolaters: such as were the posterity of Ithamar, those time servers in Ezra; {#Ezr 2:61,63} those in the books of Maccabees, Demas (if Dorotheus may be believed), Paulus Diaconus, Pendleton, Pflugius and Sidonius, authors of the "Interim" in Germany, &c.

They shall even bear their iniquity,] i.e., Degradation, as a punishment of their iniquity.

Ver. 11. Yet they shall be ministers in my sanctuary.] Though lapsed, they shall not be altogether discarded, {see #2Ki 23:9 Ne 13:28} partly for the honour of the priesthood, but principally for the encouragement of such as, having fallen by infirmity, rise again by repentance. Capite minuuntur, sed non penitus efficiuntur.

Ver. 12. Because they ministered unto them before their idols.] Being carried down the stream of the times, and hurried away by violent temptation, which they afterwards regretted and repented of. So did not those Popish bishops and priests at the coming in of Queen Elizabeth, who were therefore worthily turned out, even fourteen bishops, six abbots, twelve deans, as many archdeacons, fifty prebendaries, fifteen presidents of colleges, many parsons, and other stiff mass priests. {a}

{a} Camden's Elisabeth.

Ver. 13. And they shall not come near unto me.] How great then was the love of the Lord Jesus to Peter and the rest of his disciples after his resurrection, as in sending them that sweet message, {#Mr 16:7} so in readmitting them to the work of the ministry after so foul a revolt. {#Joh 20:21-23} And doth he not the very same still for his poor sinful servants, who desire indeed to fear his name, but are often overtaken in a fault through infirmity of the flesh? Surely, Father Traves, said Mr Bradford, martyr, in a letter to him, I have clean forgotten God; I am all secure, idle, proud hearted, utterly void of brotherly love; I am envious, and disdain others; I am a very stark hypocrite, &c. {a} Thus he, and much more to like purpose, in his heavenly letters.

{a} Acts and Mon., 1511.

Ver. 14. But I will make them keepers.] Which was one of the meanest offices.

Ver. 15. But the priests, the sons of Zadok.] Who follow their father's footsteps, and are careful to fulfil the ministry that they have received in the Lord; to be best in the worst times as right heirs of Moses's benediction. {#De 33:9, &c.}

Saith the Lord God.] "Them that honour me I will honour." {#1Sa 2:20} This is a bargain of God's own making. Huius rei fides penes Deum tota est; {a} we may trust to it.

{a} Oecolamp.

Ver. 16. To my table,] i.e., To mine altar, {#Eze 41:22 Mal 1:7,12} which as often as they do, they receive a double pledge of the pardon of their own sins. {#Joh 20:23}

Ver. 17. They shall be clothed with linen garments.] As so many earthly angels, {#Mt 28:3 Re 4:4 7:13} for innocence and victory over their corruptions.

And no wool shall come upon them.] No brutish and sensual lusts and practices shall be found in them. Ex brutorum lana vestes contextuntur. {a}

{a} Lavat.

Ver. 18. They shall have linen bonnets upon their heads.] In token of constant subjection to God. {#1Co 11:6,7,10}

They shall have linen breeches.] For honesty sake; and to admonish them to procure and "provide for things honest not only in the sight of the Lord, but in the sight of men." {#2Co 8:21}

With anything that causeth sweat.] That they may not have an ill savour, or seem to do God's work to their own trouble: the Lord loveth a cheerful giver.

Ver. 19. They shall put off their garments.] See #Eze 42:14.

They shall not sanctify the people with their garments,] i.e., By the touch of their garments. See #Ex 29:37 30:29 Eze 46:20. To "sanctify the people," in this text, is to persuade them that they are sanctified by the touch or sight of the priestly vestments. The monks at this day make the silly people believe that they cannot be damned when they die if they be buried in a Franciscan's cowl.

Ver. 20. Neither shall they shave their heads.] What can the Popish shavelings say to this, qui ne pilum ullum viri bona habere videntur; as Cicero ^{a} saith of Fannins Chaereas? noting it to be a sign of crafty malice to be shaven. And indeed is so bald and heathenish a ceremony that some priests in France are ashamed of the mark, and few of them have it that can handsomely avoid it. ^{b}

Nor suffer their locks to grow long.] As women's: some heathen priests nourished their hair to a great length. A shag-haired minister is an ugly sight: bushes of vanity become not such, of any men.

They shall only poll their heads.] Or, Round them. Certainly, saith one, ^{c} the devil had forgotten this text when he raised up that reproach of Roundheads. To have hairy scalps is the garb of God's enemies. ^{#Ps 68:21}

^{a} In Orat. pro Rosc. Comaedo.

^{b} Spec. Eur.

^{c} Mr Burroughs.

Ver. 21. Neither shall any priest drink wine.] Wherein is excess.

^{#Eph 5:18 Le 10:9}

Ver. 22. Neither shall they take for their wives.] Ministers, of all men, should be careful whom they wed, for many reasons. Hear what good counsel one minister ^{a} of mine acquaintance gave another:

“ Quaere tibi uxorem quae sit Pia, Pulchra, Pudica, Provida, verborum Parca, et Parere parata.”

“Seek for yourself a wife who is pious, beautiful, chaste, has foresight, of few words, and prepared to have children.”

{a} Mr Thomas Dugard.

Ver. 23. And they shall teach.] Ministers must be able and "apt to teach." {#1Ti 3:2 Tit 1:9 Ac 20:28}

Ver. 24. They shall stand in judgment,] i.e., Stand to the right, and not stir from it; in matters of religion especially, accounting every parcel of truth precious.

They shall keep my laws.] Not observe them only, but preserve them from the violations of others.

Ver. 25. And they shall come at no dead person.] Not defile their consciences with dead works.

They may defile themselves.] So they keep a mean. Something they may yield to nature, nothing to impatience. Mens e luctu eluctetur; the mind surmounts difficulties from grief.

Ver. 26. And after he is cleansed.] This is a new sanction in the new temple, as Vatablus observeth.

Ver. 27. He shall offer his sin offering.] Because we do easily overshoot ourselves in things permitted. Licitis perimus omnes. We perish in permitting all things.

Ver. 28. And it shall be, &c.] This that followeth shall be their inheritance, {#Eze 44:29-31} and whatsoever they want more shall be made up in me.

Ver. 29. They shall eat.] See on #Eze 44:28.

Ver. 30. That he may cause the blessing.] Tithe and be rich. See #Mal 3:10. {See Trapp on "Mal 3:10"}

Ver. 31. The priests shall not eat, &c.] They shall not be greedy of filthy lucre, nor oppressive. Popish priests made so much gain of the dead, and so "devoured widows' houses," under a pretence of dirges, trentals, masses for the dead, &c., that there was a necessity in, this kingdom of a statute of mortmain {a} to restrain them.

{a} The figurative use is often based on the notion that the 'dead hand' means the posthumous control exercised by the testator over the uses to which the property is to be applied. (ED)

Chapter 45

Ver. 1. Moreover, when ye shall divide by lot.] As #Eze 48:29, where we have the division of the land, and the several seats assigned to each tribe. Here we have first provision made for the church service, which Christ's people are most zealous of, and do therefore allot, before any dividend, a portion for the Lord's house and servants, and that very large, to prefigure the largeness of the Church of the New Testament. See #Re 7:9,10, &c. Here Jerome acknowledgeth himself to be in a labyrinth. The Jews call again for their Elias. Oecolampadius comes in with his huius loci mysteria tacitus veneror; and thinks this part of the prophecy such as no human understanding can fathom. Howbeit—

“ Nil desperandum Christo duce, et auspice Christo.”

The length shall be.] {See Trapp on "Eze 40:1"}

Ver. 2. For the suburbs.] Which hath its name in Hebrew from its being severed from the city, and, as it were, cast out of it. It is better rendered, as in the margin, void places.

Ver. 3. The length of five and twenty thousand.] Here the same again is repeated, {as #Eze 45:1} and further is shown how this holy portion of ground was to be employed to the use of the priests.

Ver. 4. And it shall be a place for their houses.] Ministers should be resident upon their charges, and as incumbent, dwell near, and as it were lean over their work.

Ver. 5. For twenty chambers,] i.e., For twenty rows of chambers.

Ver. 6. And ye shall appoint the possession of the city.] After the church service settled, and the ministry provided for. Aristotle's {a} advice is πρωτον περι θειων επιμελει, first take care of divine things—that is the best policy.

It shall be for the whole house of Israel.] A rendezvous for them at festival times.

{a} Polit., lib. vii. cap. 8.

Ver. 7. And a portion shall be for the prince.] See on #Eze 44:3. Understand it of the civil magistrate, who is lord keeper of both tables of the law, and ought to have a special care of the Church's welfare. Here his portion is said to lie on both sides of the oblation of the holy portion; and {#So 8:9} magistrates are required to hem ministers in with boards of cedar, i.e., to provide for their security, that they may be "without fear among them," as Timothy. {#1Co 16:10}

Ver. 8. And my princes shall no more oppress my people.] As Samuel foretold they would do, {#1Sa 8:11-18} and accordingly they did. But in the Christian commonwealth it should be better, as indeed it was in the days of Constantine the Great, Valentinian, and Theodosius,—which three godly emperors called themselves the vassals of Christ,—and is now, blessed be God, among us at this day.

Ver. 9. Let it suffice you.] Be content with your double portion, your so large a lot; and that ye may be so, hear the laws that I lay upon you: remove violence and spoil, execute judgment and justice; take away your exactions, &c.; see that ye have just balances and a just ephah. Let these things be done, or you will be quickly undone. Is it not enough to be above men, but you must needs be above mankind, as those princes would be that would not be under the law?

Ver. 10. Ye shall have just balances.] #Le 19:35,36 Pr 11:1 16:11 20:10,23 Mic 6:10,11; {See Trapp on "Le 19:35"} {See Trapp on "Le 19:36"} {See Trapp on "Pr 11:1"} {See Trapp on "Pr 16:11"} {See Trapp on "Pr 20:10"} {See Trapp on "Pr 20:23"} {See Trapp on "Mic 6:10"} {See Trapp on "Mic 6:11"} The gospel rule is, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." {#Mt 7:12} And, "Let no man go beyond and defraud his brother in any matter; because that the Lord is the avenger of all such"; and the civil magistrate is his minister, "a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil" either by force or fraud. {#Ro 13:4}

Ver. 11. The ephah and the bath shall be of one measure.] Of the same capacity, only the ephah is the measure of dry things, and the bath of moist.

Ver. 12. And the shekel shall be twenty gerahs] #Ex 30:13 Le 27:25 Nu 3:47.

Fifteen shekels, shall be your maneh.] Or, $\mu\nu\alpha$, mina, pound weight.

Ver. 13. This is the oblation.] After order taken that both prince and people might have whereof to make oblations. {#Eze 45:9-12} Here follow laws concerning these matters also.

Ver. 14. Out of the cor, which is an homer.] Only "cor" is the Chaldee word, "homer" the Hebrew.

Ver. 15. Out of the fat pastures.] Those that are well watered and most fruitful. God must have the very best of the best, and that on pain of a heavy curse. {#Mal 1:14}

Ver. 16. For the prince,] i.e., Upon a levy made by the prince for that purpose. Of these oblations, prefiguring evangelical sacrifices, the use followeth, {#Eze 46:4} it being first premised what the prince should do over and above these offerings of wheat, barley, oil, and lambs.

Ver. 17. He shall prepare the sin offering.] Or, He shall offer, so some render it, and apply it to Christ. {so #Eze 45:22} This prince then is in addition a priest of the tribe of Judah. See #Ps 110:4 Heb 7:11-8:6. Non mirum quod hic haereant Iudaei; { a } here the Jews are puzzled.

{a} Oecolamp.

Ver. 18. Thou shalt take.] Thou, O prince, shalt.

A young bullock.] One, and no more. Ut unitas singularis sacrificii Christi intimaretur.

Ver. 19. And put it upon the posts.] This and other ceremonies were not enjoined by the law of Moses. The Jews cannot tell what to say to it. They will not see that old things are past, and all things become new.

Ver. 20. And so thou shalt.] This also is a new injunction, {see #Eze 45:19} and very comfortable to those that sin of passion or precipitancy. See #1Jo 2:1,2.

Ver. 21. In the fourteenth day.] Upon that very day, not duly observed then by the Jews, was "Christ our passover sacrificed for us." {#1Co 5:7}

Ver. 22. Shall the prince prepare.] See #Eze 45:17.

Ver. 23. A burnt offering.] In token of self-denial.

Ver. 24. A meat offering.] Made of meal, in token of mortification, and submission to God in all things.

Ver. 25. In the feast of the seven days,] i.e., Of tabernacles, wont to be of eight days. {#Le 23:34,35} Quam sunt nova omnia There are all things new. Of Pentecost here is no mention at all.

Chapter 46

Ver. 1. Thus saith the Lord God.] In this chapter are set forth rationes et ritus, the laws and rites that were to be observed by prince and people in offering their sacrifices. It is the manner of performance that maketh or marreth any duty. There may be malum opus in bona materia, ill work in a good matter.

The gate of the inner court.] Of the priests' court.

That looketh toward the east.] That pointeth to Christ, the day spring from on high, the Sun of righteousness, who shineth sweetly upon such as rightly sanctify the Sabbath, and shall much more when they come to rest with him in heaven.

Shall be shut the six working days.] Six days shalt thou labour and do all thy work. Neither doth this hinder holiness, as the abbey lubbers pretend, but further it: (1.) By preventing temptation; (2.) By nourishing experience of God's bounty and providence; (3.) By filling the heart with objects of heavenly thoughts; (4.) By stirring up to prayer and praise for each day's mercies.

But on the Sabbath it shall be opened.] That the people may see Christ in the glass of the ceremonies, and call upon his name. We under the gospel have a clearer light and free access, on Lord's days especially, and other times of holy meetings.

Ver. 2. And shall stand by the post of the gate.] Waiting at the posts of the gates of wisdom. {#Pr 8:34} Constantine the Great stood up constantly at the time of God's public worship for honour sake. So did our Edward VI.

Then he shall go forth.] And the people come in, {#Eze 46:3} whose souls are as precious to God as his.

But the gate shall not be shut until the evening.] The gate is open till the evening; be ready therefore. When the bridegroom is once gone in, the gate is shut, and fools excluded. {#Mt 25:10-12}

Ver. 3. Likewise the people of the land.] The meanest of his subjects, if faithful, may have as near access to God as himself.

Ver. 4. Six lambs without blemish.] This was a larger sacrifice than Moses had appointed {#Nu 28:9} -Christians have more cause than Jews had to sanctify the Sabbath—as that for the new moons {#Eze 46:6} was lesser. See #Nu 28:11. Hereby it appeareth that God was about to abrogate the Mosaical worship, and the Levitical priesthood: Lex enim posterior derogat priori. This the Jewish doctors would fain say something to, but cannot tell what. The wit of these miscreants, reprobate concerning the faith, will better serve them to devise a thousand shifts to elude the truth, than their obstinace will suffer them once to yield and acknowledge it.

Ver. 5. As he shall be able to give.] Heb., The gift of his hand. Some render it, According as it shall be given unto his hand—i.e., as God shall put into his heart to give; and here he is not tied, as in the law, to such a proportion, but left to his Christian liberty.

Ver. 6. And in the day of the new moon.] Which pointed them to the coming of Christ, by whom all things are become new.

It shall be a young bullock.] It was wont to be two. See on #Eze 46:4.

And six lambs and a ram.] To signify, saith Rabanus, that as it is necessary for us to keep the Sabbath; so it is likewise that we rely upon Christ for expiation as of our week days' sins, so also of those that we fall into even on that holy day.

Ver. 7. An ephah for a bullock.] This was to shadow out, saith Polanus, the communion of the saints with Christ, and that Christ offereth and presenteth his Church with himself and in himself to God the Father.

According as his hand shall attain unto,] i.e., As he is able and willing, for God straineth upon none.

Ver. 8. He shall go in by the way of the porch.] This was the prince's privilege, that, as likewise the priests, he might go in and go out at the same east gate. It is fit that the word and sword should hold together, and that magistrates and ministers should be singular in holiness.

Ver. 9. Shall go out the way of the south gate.] For more easy passage sake, in such a multitude of people. But withal to teach us many things; as (1.) Not to turn our backs upon the holy ordinances; {a} (2.) To "make straight paths for our feet"; {#Heb 12:13} not looking back with Lot's wife; {#Lu 17:32} not longing for the onions of Egypt, as those rebels in the wilderness, but advancing forward with St Paul, {#Php 3:13,14} looking forthright, {#Pr 4:25} having our eye upon the mark, and making daily progress toward perfection; (3.) That our memories are frail, and here we shall meet with many things that will withdraw us from thinking upon God; (4.) That our life is but short; a very passage from one gate to another: where to go back—i.e., to add anything to our lives—it is not granted, since our time is limited, {#Job 14:3 Ac 17:26} and we are all hastening to our long home. {#Ec 12:5} One being asked what life was? made an answer answerless; for he presently went his way.

{a} The Jews at this day depart out of the synagogue with their faces still toward the ark, like crabs going backward.

Ver. 10. And the prince in the midst of them, &c.] For example sake, Vita Principis censura est, and to see that all things be rightly carried in God's service. And although the prince hath many weighty occasions, yet he is to be at the public assemblies with the first, and to stay till the last.

Ver. 11. An ephah to a bullock, and a hin of oil.] A whole ephah, and a whole hin, whereas in the Mosaical service there was required but a certain part only of either; because the Jewish Church was but of a part of mankind, but the Church Christian is universal. {a}

{a} Polan.

Ver. 12. A voluntary burnt offering...one shall then open him the gate, &c.] Here is warrant for our week day lectures, a voluntary service well accepted; provided that afterwards one shut the gate, and men return to their honest labours.

Ver. 13. Thou shalt daily prepare a burnt offering.] God must be served daily and duly, not on the Sabbath day only. See #Ps 72:15. The Papists are at their mass every morning, and they bind much upon this text for it. They have a proverb also, Mass and meat hindereth no man's thrift.

Ver. 14. The sixth part of an ephah.] This is also different from the Levitical ordinance, {#Nu 15:3-12 28:3-5 Ex 29:40} though R. Solomon here extremely troubleth himself, but to no purpose, to reconcile them.

Ver. 15. Every morning.] Understand it of every evening also. {as #Ex 29:38}

Ver. 16. If the prince give a gift unto any of his sons.] As Jehoshaphat did cities to every one of his sons; though they long enjoyed them not, through the barbarous cruelty of their elder brother Jehoram. Christ, the Church's king, giveth all his children gifts of great price; such as the world can neither give nor take from them, "spiritual blessings in heavenly" things and "places"; {#Eph 1:3} yea, he bestoweth himself upon them, and is therefore called "The gift," {#Joh 4:10} and "The benefit." {#ITi 6:2}

Ver. 17. But if he give a gift of his inheritance to one of his servants.] As Alexander the Great, who, going to subdue a great part of the habitable world, gave away to his servants almost all he had, and when one of his officers asked him what he would leave for himself? he said, Hope. Messiah the prince, besides his choicest gifts (Dona throni) to his dear children, giveth gifts unto men, even to the rebellious also; {#Ps 68:18} these are common gifts (Dona scabelli), temporal favours, external privileges. See #Mt 7:22, 23 25:14-30 Lu 19:12-27, &c. But as "the servant abideth not in the house for ever," as the son doth; {#Joh 8:35} so these gifts to servants, but for the behoof and benefit of his sons, are but till the year of liberty, or jubilee, till the last day at utmost. {#Le 25:10} Then shall the wicked give a dreadful account of all, with the whole world flaming about their ears.

Ver. 18. To thrust them out of their possession.] Ill accidents attend such princes, as affecting to be absolute in power, will be too resolute in will, or dissolute in life; oppressing their subjects to enrich their servants and parasites.

Ver. 19. Afterward he brought me.] Here he returneth again to things sacred—viz., to show where the priests should boil and bake.

Into the holy chambers of the priests.] These holy cells or chambers are particular Christian churches, committed to the care of Christ's faithful ministers {a} {#Ac 20:28 1Pe 5:2}

{a} Polan.

Ver. 20. Where they shall bake the meat offering,] i.e., The ministers shall indite or boil good matters in their hearts for the use of the people, and then their tongues shall be as the pen of a ready writer. {#P^s 45:1} They shall not feed their hearers with crude and indigested stuff, but such as is well boiled and baked with the fire of the Holy Spirit, kindled on the hearth of their own hearts; that from the heart they may speak to the heart.

To sanctify the people.] As in promiscuous communions, where all are pell-mell admitted.

Ver. 21. In every corner of the court there was a court.] And buildings in every of them for the same purpose round about. {#Eze 46:22} These served, saith Jerome, to set forth the four parts of the world, out of all which the Church is gathered by ministers, &c. It served also, saith another, to show that in God's house, which is his Church, there shall always be provision both for his ministers and people. Those that have but from hand to mouth have their bread hot, as it were, from God's hand, which is best of all.

Ver. 22. Courts joined.] Or made with chimneys. Caminata, vaporaria. See on #Eze 46:21.

Ver. 23. With boiling places.] Such as the ancients called popinas.

“Nolo ego Florus esse, Latitare per popinas.” {a}

“I do not wish to be Florus, to hide in the kitchens.”

{a} Adrian. Imp.

Ver. 24. These are the places of them that boil.] Of God's cooks, who dress spiritual food for the use of his people. See #Eze 46:20.

Chapter 47

Ver. 1. Afterward he brought.] Christus mystagogus me duxit. Θεω επου, Follow God whithersoever he leadeth thee; this was an ancient rule among the heathens. Christo ducente et docente.

And, behold, waters issued out,] i.e., The gospel of grace, and the gifts of the Holy Ghost thereby conveyed into the hearts of believers, and poured out upon the world by the death of Christ. The prophet seems to allude to those waters, which by conduits were conveyed to the altar to wash away the blood of the sacrifices and filth of the temple, which else would have been very offensive and noisome. See the like in #Zec 14:8, where the eastern and western Churches also are pointed out. See #Re 22:1.

From under the threshold.] Quod gloria Dei dudum triverat. {a} Christ is that door, {#Joh 10:7} and fountain of living water. {#Jer 2:13 Isa 12:3 55:1} And from the temple at Jerusalem flowed forth the waters of saving truth to all nations; and first eastward, not Romeward, though the faith of the Romans was not long after spoken of throughout the whole world. {#Ro 1:8}

{a} Oecolamp.

Ver. 2. And, behold, there ran out waters.] As out of a vial.

On the right side.] The right side is a place of honour and defence. The doctrine of the gospel hath the pre-eminence, and is maintained by the right hand of God against all opposites.

Ver. 3. And when the man that had the line in his hand.] The man Christ Jesus, the sole architect of his Church, and measurer of his gospel; and that by his gospel, which is the line in his hand, nec solum recta, sed et regula, not only by riht but also by rule.

He measured a thousand cubits.] It was not for nothing that Plato said, Ο Θεος αιει γαωμετρει, God is always measuring the world.

The waters were to the ankles.] Grace is but a small thing at first; no more is the gospel. {#Mt 13:31-33} The Church were at first but a very few, {#Ac 1:15} that is, one hundred and twenty, of all the great multitudes which had formerly followed Jesus: Sed vix diligitur Iesus propter Iesum. It was more for the loaves than any great love that the most followed him.

Ver. 4. Again he measured a thousand.] This is a number of perfection. The gospel is a perfect doctrine, and is "able to make the man of God perfect, thoroughly furnished (or perfected) unto all good works." {#2Ti 3:17}

The waters were to the knees.] Grace grows by degrees; and the Scriptures have their shallows wherein the lamb may wade, like as they have their profundities wherein the elephant himself may swim. Augustine {a} condemned the Holy Scriptures at first, as neither eloquent nor deep enough for the elevation of his wit. But afterwards, {b} when he was both a better and a wiser man, he saw his own shallowness, and admired the never enough adored depth of God's holy oracles.

{a} Confess., lib. v. cap. 13.

{b} Ibid., lib. vii. cap. 21.

Ver. 5. A river that could not be passed over.] Representing, as the fathomless depth of the Scriptures—which is such as that we may well do by it as the Romans did by a lake, the depth whereof they could not sound, they dedicated it to Victory—so the abundance of spiritual graces in the Church, the love of Christ which passeth all knowledge, {#Eph 3:19} the over abounding goodness of God, {#1Ti 1:14} the super pleonasm of it, as the apostle hath it there. Oh, saith Chrysostom, speaking of this subject, I am like a man digging in a deep spring: I stand here, and the water riseth upon me; and I stand there, and still the water riseth upon me. It is indeed a sea that hath neither bank nor bottom.

Ver. 6. Son of man, hast thou seen this?] And art thou soundly sensible thereof? It is very fit thou shouldst, that God may have the glory of his great goodness and power in propagating the gospel, and bringing forward the work of his grace in the hearts of his people, maugre the malice of earth and of hell. The Reformation wrought in Germany, from how small beginnings grew it! The establishing of that among us, how imperfect soever, to be done by so weak and simple means, yea, by casual and cross means, against the force of so potent and political an adversary, this is to be looked upon as a just miracle.

To the brink of the river.] Where my work was to stand and cry, Oh the depth! Oh how great things hath God prepared for those that fear him! Oh the joy, the joy! Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, &c.

Ver. 7. Behold, at the bank of the river were very many trees.] These were trees of righteousness, fruitful Christians. Arboretum Christi est Ecclesia. The trees of Christ are the churches. See #Ps 1:3 92:12 Isa 44:3-5 55:11-13 Jer 17:8 Re 22:2, where and elsewhere it is easy to observe that John the Divine borroweth the elegancies and flowers of this and other prophets in his description of the Church Christian.

Ver. 8. These waters issue out toward the east country.] In Galilaeam anteriorem. {a} See #Ac 9:31—the churches in Galilee, "walking in the fear of the Lord and comforts of the Holy Ghost, were multiplied."

And go down into the desert.] Or, Plain; i.e., into the plains of Moab. {#Nu 22:1} The gospel worketh upon the worst, even to a transmutation.

And go into the sea.] The Dead Sea. The law of the Spirit of life which is in Christ Jesus, freeth men from the law of sin and of death. {#Ro 8:2}

The waters shall be healed,] i.e., Made wholesome and useful; so great a cure is done upon corrupt nature by the grace of the gospel. He who was before vitiorum vorago, lacus libidinum, mare sceleribus amarum ac mortuum, a lake of lusts, a guzzle of vices, a dead sea of wickedness and wretchedness, shall by a strange change become a pleasant river, pure, clear, sweet, and savoury; beset not with such mock fruit as the banks of the Dead Sea are said to be, but with trees richly laden with the choicest fruits; as was to be seen in the penitent thief, who, as soon as gospelised and converted, bestirred him and bore abundance of fruit in a very little space.

{a} Piscat.

Ver. 9. Whithersoever the river shall come, shall live.] Not die immediately, as they used to do in the Dead Sea, so bituminous and sulphurous were the waters thereof; {a} but live the life of grace here, and of glory in heaven. See #Zec 14:8 Ac 5:20.

And there shall be a very great multitude of fish,] i.e., Of Christians. See #Mt 4:19. {See Trapp on "Mt 4:19"} Christ himself, from the initial Greek letters of his names and title, was by some of the ancients called ιχθυς, a fish. {b}

And everything shall live whither the river cometh.] The gospel is the true aqua vitoe, the true aurum potabile, the true physic for the soul, {c} as one said once concerning the library at Alexandria.

{a} Plin., lib. v. cap. 16.

{b} Ιησους Χριστος υιος Θεου σωτηρ.—Aug. De Civit. Dei, lib. xviii, cap. 13.

{c} το της ψυχης ιαπειον.

Ver. 10. The fishers shall stand upon it.] Upon the Dead Sea, where formerly they had little enough to do. This sea is the wide world dead in sins and trespasses. {#Eph 2:1} These fishers are Christ's apostles and ministers, who are called fishers of men, {#Mt 4:19} and their preaching compared to fishing. {#Mt 13:47} They fish with various success, as did Peter; {#Lu 5:5} but may enclose a great multitude, as he did; {#Ac 2:41} and as Farellus, who gained five cities to Christ, who brought them to hand by whole shoals. Histories tell us of five hundred and eighty Jews converted to the Christian faith at Axvernum by one Avitus, a bishop, and baptized. {a}

From Engedi.] Called also Hazazontamar; {#2Ch 20:2} that is, the city of palms, where grew the best balsam in the world, though it were near to the Dead Sea. {b}

Even unto Eneglaim.] Which is likewise a place adjacent to the Dead Sea, where Jordan falleth into it, as Jerome testifieth.

They shall be a place to spread forth nets.] Dr Preston being asked why he preached so plainly, and did so much dilate his sermons, being of such abilities? answered, he was a fisherman. Now such, if they should wind up their net, and so cast it into the sea, they should catch nothing; but when they spread the net, they catch the fish. I spread my net, because I would catch souls, said he; and indeed he had a very happy hand at it. {c}

The fish shall be according to their kinds.] The sea, they say, hath as many kinds of living creatures as the earth hath. "There is that leviathan, and there are creeping things innumerable." {#Ps 105}

{b} Joseph., De Bel., lib. i. cap. 13.

{c} Mr Wall's "None but Christ," p. 400.

Ver. 11. But the miry places thereof and the marishes, shall not be healed.] Sensual souls are seldom wrought upon by the word. Behemoth (the devil) lieth in those fens and quagmires. {#Job 40:21} They are void of the Spirit. {#Jude 18,19} They say unto God, "Depart from us," we had rather dance to the timbrel and harp; {#Job 21:11} whoredom and wine, and new wine, take away their hearts. {#Ho 4:11} He who had married a wife, or rather was married to her, sent word flat and plain he could not come; others excused themselves more mannerly. {#Lu 14:18-20} Such persons choose to remain in the sordes filth of their sins, and so are miserable by their own election.

They shall be given to salt.] Delivered up to strong delusions, {#1Th 2:15,16} vile affections, {#Ro 1:26} just damnation. {#Re 22:11}

Ver. 12. Shall grow all trees for meat.] Arbores esibiles; these are Χρηστοι, useful Christians, such as whose lips are feeding, and their tongues trees of life. {#Pr 11:30 15:4} {See Trapp on "Pr 11:30"} {See Trapp on "Pr 15:4"}

Whose leaf shall not fade.] They will not fail to make a bold and wise profession of the truth. See on #Ps 1:3 Jer 17:8.

Neither shall the fruit thereof be consumed.] But as the lemon tree, which ever and anon sendeth new fruits as soon as the former are fallen down with ripeness. Or as the Egyptian fig tree, which yieldeth fruit seven times a year, saith Solinus, and if you pull off one fig, another groweth up presently in the place thereof.

Because their waters they issued out of the sanctuary.] Hence their so great fruitfulness, viz., from the divine influence, {#Ho 14:8} the Word and Spirit going together. {#Isa 59:21} Hence it is that the saints are "neither barren nor unfruitful." {#2Pe 1:8}

And the leaf thereof for medicine.] God's people, by their holy profession of religion, do much good to many souls, as did various of the martyrs and confessors. Lucianus, an ancient martyr, persuaded many Gentries to the Christian faith by his grave countenance and modest disposition, insomuch that Maximinus, that persecuting emperor, dared not look him in the face, for fear he should turn Christian. And so Beda ^{a} telleth us of one Alban, who, receiving a poor persecuted Christian into his house, and seeing his holy devotion and sweet carriage, was so much affected with the same, as that he became an earnest professor of the faith, and in the end a glorious martyr for the faith. The like is recorded of Bradford, Bucer, and others.

^{a} Hist. Ang., lib. i. cap. 7.

Ver. 13. This shall be the border.] Here the prophet returneth again to the dividing of the land, begun #Eze 45:1,2, &c., having hitherto interposed many most memorable matters, and of great use to the Church.

Joseph shall have two portions.] He had so by his father's will, and for his two sons adopted by his father.

Ver. 14. And ye shall inherit one as well as another.] Spiritual blessings are divided in solidum in gold coin among the community of God's people; they all partake of one and the same saving grace of God, righteousness of Christ, and eternal life, though there are several degrees of grace and of glory. See #Ga 3:26-29. All God's sons are heirs, heirs of God, and co-heirs with Christ. ^{#Ro 8:17}

Ver. 15. And this shall be the border of the land,] i.e., Of the Christian Church, the borders whereof are here set forth as far larger than those of the land of Canaan ever were.

From the great sea.] The Mediterranean Sea.

The way of Hethlon.] From one end of the kingdom of Damascus to another.

Ver. 16. Hamath, Berothah, Sibraim.] Towns of Arabia Deserta. All this is to set forth the amplitude of the Christian Church, spread far and near upon the face of the whole earth, and therefore rightly called Catholic. Roman Catholic is contradictio in adiecto, for it is a particular universal

Ver. 17. And the border from the sea shall be Hazarenan.] Forasmuch as the borders in this description of the land are set to be such as never were in the Israelites' possession, the Jewish doctors are, will they nill they, forced to confess that the land of Israel in the world to come shall be larger than ever it had been. Now gospel times are called "the world to come." {#Heb 2:5}

Ver. 18. From Hauran.] A town of Arabia Deserts (Ptolemy calleth it Aurana), but Felix in this, that it is taken into the Church.

Ver. 19. From Tamar.] Hazazon Tamar, {a} which was near the sea of Sodom. {#Eze 47:10}

In Kadesh.] Not in Rephidim. {#Ex 17:7}

{a} This was Palmyra, afterwards Adrianople.

Ver. 20. Till a man come over against Hamath.] To that place of the great sea, from which lieth a straight way from Hamath eastward.

Ver. 21. So shall ye divide.] Epilogus est. There is one and the same "inheritance of the saints in light."

Ver. 22. An inheritance unto you, and to the strangers that sojourn among you.] What can the spiteful Jews say to this? who stick not to say, that rather than the bastard Gentiles (so they call Christians) should share with them in their Messiah, they would crucify him a hundred times over and over. Under the Old Testament, though strangers lived with the children of Israel, yet they had no inheritance with them at any time, as now they are appointed to have.

Ver. 23. See on #Eze 47:22.

Chapter 48

Ver. 1. Now these are the name, of the tribes.] Who are in this chapter assigned their several seats, and the land divided among them; but this division is much different from that of old, which was a plain prediction of a perfect and total abrogation of the Mosaic polity and Levitical worship, together with a new state of the Church of God after the coming of Jesus Christ.

To the coast of the way of Hethlon.] #Eze 47:15-17. Judea was not, say geographers, over two hundred miles long, and fifty miles broad; but R. Kimchi here noteth, that the Talmudists affirm that the possession of Israel shall extend unto the utmost coasts of the earth, id quod ex spiritu dictum existima, {a} This was well and truly spoken, though they understood not what they spake, as dreaming only of an earthly kingdom. But as elsewhere, so here, the land of Canaan is put for the whole world, {#Ps 89:11,12} whereof all true believers are heirs, together with faithful Abraham, {#Ro 4:11} whether they be Jews or Gentiles. Christ's kingdom runs to the end of the earth. {#Ps 2:8 72:8}

A Portion for Dan.] This tribe, which was, for their shameful revolt from the true religion, {#Jud 18:30} cut out of the roll, as it were, {#1Ch 7:1,13,14,20,30 Re 7:5-8} is here reckoned first of those who had partem et sortem, part and lot among God's people. So true is that of our Saviour, "Many that are first shall be last, and the last shall be first." {#Mt 19:30 20:16} "Judge not therefore according to the appearance," &c. Repent, and God will re-accept. The fable of Antichrist to come of this tribe is long since exploded.

{a} Oecolamp.

Ver. 2. From the east side to the west.] The longitude is described, not the latitude. For why? Christ's kingdom is limitless, and his dominion without dimension.

Ver. 3. A portion for Naphtali.] There are many portions of inheritance in Christ's kingdom; there are also in heaven many mansions, {#Joh 14:2} all which shall be divided among the elect.

Ver. 4. A portion for Manasseh.] Which they do not, of their own accord, and as they see good, seize upon, but take their share set them out of the divine sentence.

Ver. 5. A portion for Ephraim.] An equal portion with his elder brother Manasseh. In Christ's kingdom all is of grace, nothing of merit.

Ver. 6. And by the border of Ephraim.] There is a continuity and conjunction of all the portions, to set forth the communion that is between the saints; a sweet mercy, a heaven beforehand.

Ver. 7. A portion for Judah.] Who is set next to the sanctified oblation of the Lord, wherein were the portions of the priests, Levites, city, and prince. He must be a "Jew inwardly," a confessor and witness of the truth, who shall have part and portion in the privileges of God's people.

Ver. 8. Shall be the offering.] Whereof see #Eze 45:1-7.

Of five and twenty thousand reeds.] Which being exactly cast up, saith one, come to forty-five miles, and therefore cannot be meant of any city to be built by the Jews again after their return from Babylon, but must be understood as the Church under the gospel.

Ver. 9. Unto the Lord.] As distinguishing it from other oblations; here stood the sanctuary.

Ver. 10. And for them, even for the priests.] No mention is here made of cities of refuge, as of old; "for they shall not hurt nor destroy in all God's holy mountain: but the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." {#Isa 11:9}

Ver. 11. Of the sons of Zadok.] See #Eze 44:15-18.

Which went not astray.] To be faithful with God in a common defection is a singular praise. See my Righteous Man's Recompense, p. 695.

Ver. 12. And this oblation of the land.] Ministers of God's Word may lawfully take maintenance of the Church. {#1Co 9:7-13}

Ver. 13. The Levites shall have.] But after the priests. There are degrees of officers in the Church, and good order must be well observed there.

Five and twenty thousand in length.] These different portions set together make up a perfect square, which serveth well to set forth the beauty and firmity of the Church of Christ.

Ver. 14. And they shall not sell of it.] This law is here occasionally, and by the way, inserted. It seemeth to hold forth, that lands given to the ministers of Christ under the New Testament may never be again taken away, or put to any other use, but to their maintenance for ever. See Mr Clark's Mirror, chap. of Sacrilege.

The firstfruits of the land,] i.e., This part thus consecrated to God, as the firstfruits of the earth were.

Ver. 15. Shall be a profane place,] i.e., A common place; and so all Israel were profane in a sense—sc., as compared to the priests and Levites, those consecrated persons. Symmachus and Theodotion render it λαϊκον. See #De 20:6.

And the city shall be in the midst thereof.] Ten miles at least distant from the temple, some say many more; to show, say they, what a long way he must go that would attain to eternal life. He must get above the world, howsoever, who would serve God acceptably.

Ver. 16. And these shall be the measures thereof.] This representation is merely figurative and mystical, showing us how specious and spacious the Church of Christ is.

Ver. 17. And the suburbs of the city.] These were much larger than the suburbs of the temple, as may be observed by comparing Eze.

40. See #Eze 45:2.

Ver. 18. For food to them that serve the city.] To all the citizens, who all are to turn servitors to their fellow brethren that come to the public meetings, to serve one another in love, which they that do shall not lose their reward, but verily they shall be fed.

Ver. 19. Shall serve it out of all the tribes,] i.e., At the common charge, and by a general contribution.

Ver. 20. Ye shall offer the holy oblation four square.] See on #Eze 48:13. All our dealings must be square, or else we are not of the holy portion, of the new Jerusalem. {#Re 21:16}

Ver. 21. And the residue shall be for the prince.] His occasions are many, and therefore his proportion is very large; yet must he not be regni dilapidator, the waster of the kingdom, by his profuseness, as our Henry III was called, whereby he became ill-beloved of his people.

Ver. 22. Being in the midst of that which is the prince's.] The prince was taught, by this position of his portion, to have an equal care of Church and State.

Ver. 23. Benjamin shall have a portion.] The division of the land, as it ended with Judah's portion, in speaking of the seven former tribes, {#Eze 48:8} so here it beginneth with Benjamin, in speaking of the five following.

Ver. 28. Even from Tamar.] Not Jericho, but Palmyra, called afterwards Adrianople, of the Emperor Adrian, who rebuilt and beautified it.

And to the river.] The river of Egypt, called Sihor. {#Jos 13:3}

Ver. 29. This is the land.] This is the epilogue of the whole chapter as to the greatness of the holy city. It remaineth only to touch at the situation and measures thereof, the gates also, and the ministers, together with their use and maintenance, the elegance, lastly, and perpetuity of the city.

For inheritance.] Not from the brook, as Tremellius mistranslateth it.

Ver. 30. And these are the goings out of the city.] That is the utmost bounds, as Rabbi Solomon glosseth.

Ver. 31. And the gates of the city.] Through which all the Israel of God, both Jews and Gentiles from all parts, qua data porta, ruunt, do enter into the Church of Christ, flowing and flocking thereto, as waters do to the sea, and as the doves to their windows.

Three gates northward.] Twelve in all; the reason whereof, see in the note on #Re 21:13.

One gate of Levi.] Who, though he had no lot in the land, yet he had a gate into the city, as Vatablus here noteth.

Ver. 32. Four thousand and five hundred.] And the like on each side; of all which are made up fifty-four miles, at the least, so large is the city of God. Nineveh was nothing to it; no more is Alcair, Scanderoon, or Cambalu, the metropolis of Tartary, which yet is said to be twenty-eight miles around.

Ver. 33. One gate of Simeon.] Here all along the tribes are reckoned, not as they were before in this chapter, but as they are set down in Numbers at the marching of the tabernacle in the midst of them, saving that whole Joseph hath here but one gate, and Levi is taken into the number of the twelve tribes. And forasmuch as it entereth not into the heart of man what God hath prepared for them that love him, and since this city is a type of heaven's happiness, which is fitter to be believed than possible to be expressed, therefore

I am the less troubled, saith good Oecolampadius here, that I understand no more of this surmounting matter.

Ver. 34. At the west side, &c.] See on #Eze 48:32,33.

Ver. 35. It was round about eighteen thousand measures.] See on #Eze 48:32 Re 21:16.

The Lord is there.] Jehovahshammah. This is the true Church's name, and the true Christian's happiness, such as no good can match, no evil overmatch—viz., that wheresoever he is, there God is, and therefore there heaven is; like as where the king is, there his court is. This very name implies God's everlasting being with his Church, according to those precious texts of Scripture, every syllable whereof droppeth myrrh and mercy. {#Le 26:11,12 Mt 18:20 28:20 Joh 14:23 1Co 15:28 Re 7:14-17 21:3-5 22:3-6} This is the truth of that which the temple, while it stood as a type or figure, did represent, "This is my rest for ever; here will I dwell." {#Ps 132:14} God will not forsake his Church as he did the synagogue, but have it up to heaven to him, {#Re 21:1-3} where are crowns, sceptres, kingdoms, beatiful visions, unutterable ecstacies, sweetest varieties, felicities, eternities; and all because Jehovah-shammah, the Lord is there; to him be glory and praise everlasting. Amen. So be it.

Daniel

The Book of Daniel

Written by himself (not by another of his name, in the days of Antiochus Epiphanes, as wicked Porphyry, ^{a} that professed enemy of Christianity, blaterateth), like as Xenophon and Julius Caesar wrote their own acts so wisely and impartially, as none have been so upright in writing the histories of others. This divine book is, for the matter of it, partly historic and partly prophetic. The historical part we have in the first six chapters, sc., a continuation of the history of the book of Kings during the whole time of the captivity and after it. Hence Jerome ^{b} calleth Daniel multiscum et totius mundi polyhistorem, a general historian. The prophetic part, beginning at the seventh chapter, foretelleth future things in the several monarchies but very obscurely, according to that of the angel, ^{#Da 12:9,10} "Go thy way, Daniel; for the words are closed up, and sealed till the end of the time," &c; and according to that hieroglyphic of prophecy, which hangs, they say, among other pictures, in the Vatican Library at Rome, like a matron with the eyes covered, for the difficulty. Whence it was that Paulinus, Bishop of Nola, though able, would never be drawn to write commentaries; Cajetan and Calvin would set no notes upon the Revelation; and Piscator, ^{c} after he had commented upon the other prophets, when he came to Daniel, met with so many dark and difficult passages, ut parum obfuerit, saith he, quin in medio commentandi cursu subsisterem, et calamum e manu deponerem, that he was even ready to lay down his pen, and to lay aside the business. But this he did not, as considering that the best, while here, "know but in part, prophesy but in part," &c.; and that the promise is, though none of the wicked understand this prophecy, yet the wise shall. ^{#Da 12:10} Jerome ^{d} well saith, that a prophecy is therefore obscure, because it is said at one time and seen at another. And one thing that causeth a cloud in Daniel is the transposing of the history here often used; as the prophecies contained in the seventh and eighth chapters, which were shown unto Daniel under the reign of Belshazzar, in order should be set before the sixth chapter, &c. He seemeth indeed to have been laid aside in the days of Belshazzar, that drunken sot, till the handwriting on the wall brought him more in request again. ^{#Da 5:11,12} That cock on the dunghill knew not the worth of this peerless pearl, highly prized both by his predecessor and successor, to whom he was a secretis of their privy council. Famous he was grown, and worthily, for his extraordinary wisdom {#Eze 28:3} and holiness, {#Eze 14:14} so that the angel Gabriel styleth him "a man of desires," or a desirable man. {#Da 9:23} Seneca calleth Cato virtutum vivam imaginem, a lively picture of virtues. Pliny {e} saith that the same Cato Censorius was an excellent orator, an excellent senator, an excellent commander, and a master of all good arts. Paterculus {f} saith, that he was a man as like virtue as ever he could look, et per omnia virtute diis quam hominibus propior. Livy saith, he was a man of rigid innocence and invincible integrity. Cornelius Nepos, {g} that being assayed and assaulted by many, he not only never lost any part of his reputation, but as long as he lived grew still in the praise of his virtues, as being in all things of singular prudence and industry. Lastly, Cicero saith of Cato Major, that whereas he underwent the enmities of many potent persons, and suffered no little hardship all his time, yet was he one of those few who lived and died with glory. How much more truly might all this be affirmed of Daniel the prophet than of Cato the censor! all whose virtues were but glistening sins, {h} and all whose praise worthy parts and practices were but "tinkling cymbals" in comparison. Daniel's whole life was a kind of heaven, adorned with most radiant stars of divine virtues. And although we cannot say of him as Alexander of Hales did of his scholar Bonaventure in a hyperbolic strain, that Adam seemed to him not to have sinned in Bonaventure, such was his sanctity and knowledge, {i} yet, with more colour of truth, might the like be said of Daniel, the Jews' jewel and the world's darling. He wrote this book, part of it in Hebrew and part in Chaldee, all in a short but grave style, evident and elegant, being a divine polychronicon {j} to the world's end, or, as one {k} calleth it, the Apocalypse of the Old Testament.

Chapter 1

Ver. 1. In the third year of the reign of Jehoiakim.] That wicked king, who killed the prophet Uriah; {#Jer 26:23} cut Jeremiah's prophecy with a knife, and cast it into the fire; {#Jer 36:23} was a gross idolater, {#2Ch 36:8} and therefore justly suffered.

Came Nebuchadnezzar.] Surnamed Magnus son to Nebuchadnezzar, surnamed Priscus. See #2Ki 24:1,2 2Ch 36:8. {See Trapp on "2Ki 24:1"} {See Trapp on "2Ki 24:2"} {See Trapp on "2Ch 36:8"}

Ver. 2. And the Lord gave Jehoiakim.] Because the affliction by Pharaoh (being but a money matter) had not a kindly effect, {#2Ki 23:35} a heavier is now sent; for as one cloud followeth at the heels of another, so doth one judgment of God upon another, till repentance, as the sun, do interpose, and cause it to clear up.

With part of the vessels.] Not all as yet, by a sweet providence, and for an instance of God's patience.

Which he carried into the land of Shinar.] Or, Babylonia, {#Ge 11:2} a part of the garden of Eden, as most geographers think, but now "the seat of Satan." {as #Re 2:13}

To the house of his god.] Jupiter Belus. See on #Isa 46:1.

Ver. 3. And the king spake unto Ashpenaz.] Which signifieth in the Chaldee tongue the chief chider, or controller of the king's house, as Ctesias useth Ashpamithres for chief priests. To this great officer the king commendeth the care of his school.

And of the king's seed, and of the princes.] As having been better bred, and so more hopeful. Here Nebuchadnezzar, minding nothing but the glory of his court by these noble waiters, unwittingly maketh way for the Church's comfort.

Ver. 4. Children in whom was no blemish.] Such as were Joseph, David, Artaxerxes Longimus, Germanicus, and others, in whom beauty proved to be the "flower of virtue," as Chrysippus called it. Of Galba the emperor one said, that his good wit dwelt in an ill house, like an excellent instrument in a bad case; whereas Vatinius the Roman was not more misshapen in body than in mind. ^{a} The heathens also advise us to beware of those whom nature hath set a mark upon.

And skilful in all wisdom,] i.e., Ingenious and industrious, apt and able to receive and improve instruction. Tacitus ^{b} telleth us that in the times of Vespasian and Domitian, the children of the British nobles were so witty and well bred that the Romans infinitely admired them for the debonnaireness of their natures, preferring the wits of the Britons before the study of the Gauls. And they are called Angli quasi Angeli, the English just as Angels, said Gregory the Great, concerning the English boys presented to him.

And such as had ability in them.] Daniel and his three friends are thought by some to have been bred under the prophet Jeremiah, and to have begun to prophesy some years before Ezekiel.

To stand in the king's palace,] i.e., To do him service. This is that which learned men should aim at in these studies, viz., to lay forth themselves for the public good. Paulum sepultae distat inertiae Celata virtus, ^{c}

And whom they might teach the learning.] Heb., The book—that is, the art of grammar, say some. But why not other arts also learned by books, those mute masters? Yet not so well, the mathematics especially, without a teacher. Joseph Scaliger, who was αυτοδιδακτος, self-taught, and yet proved so great a scholar, is by one called daemonium hominis, et miraculum naturae, more than a man, even a very miracle.

And the tongue of the Chaldee.] Which was not therefore the same with the Hebrew, but a different dialect, or daughter of it. The most ancient tongue was the Hebrew, preserved in Heber's family. The Hebrews and Chaldees had one common ancestor, viz., Arphaxad; and Abraham, being born in Chaldea, could speak both languages; but so could not Daniel and his fellows till they were taught. Good letters and languages are to be taught in schools and universities, Hebrew, Greek, and Latin, especially, the dignity and study whereof Christ would have to be ever kept a-foot in his Church, as appeareth by that inscription, not without a providence, set upon his cross in those three tongues. {#Joh 19:19,20}

{a} Ingenium Galbae male habitat. Deformitas corpora cum turpitudine certavit ingenii. -Paterc.

{b} In Vit. Jul. Agrico.

{c} Horat.

Ver. 5. And the king appointed them a daily provision.] A competent and comfortable subsistence and maintenance, such as whereof, in time past, those abbey lubbers had too much, and now universities and schools of learning have too little, but far less should have, might some brain-sick sectaries be heard, such as was that Weigelius, who said that in no university in the world was Christ to be found, and that Christ would not have his gospel to be preached by devils, and therefore not by academics, with a great deal more of such paltry stuff, vented by that illiterate widgeon. {a}

So nourishing them three years.] Those that stay overly long in the universities, standing there till they are sour again, and preaching only now and then, to air their great learning, shall have the rust and canker of their abilities to be a swift witness against them at that great day.

Ver. 6. Now among these were, of the children of Judah, Daniel.] Who had not his name for nought, as we say, but by a providence. It signifieth, God is my judge; and so, indeed, he was throughout his whole life, but especially when they cast him into the lions' den. {#Da 6:16} David had also a son of the same name, and that by Abigail, {#2Sa 3:3 1Ch 3:1} in remembrance haply of the right that God had done him upon the churl Nabal. {#1Sa 25:39}

Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah.] Good names all, and good men all, yet wrapt up with the rest in a common calamity, but for excellent ends, as it afterwards appeared. Meanwhile, God much sweetened the affliction to these four by their mutual society.

Ver. 7. Unto whom the prince of the eunuchs gave names.] Not without the command of the king, {#Da 5:12} as desirous to naturalise them, and by changing their right names, which had the names of God in them, El and Jah, to make them forget their religion; but that was better rooted than to be so easily razed out, though these new names were shrewd temptations to apostasy and idolatry, as being compounded by the names of the Babylonish gods, and means to make them honourable among the Chaldeans.

Ver. 8. But Daniel purposed in his heart.] The change of his name, though he utterly disliked, yet he could not help; but to show that he was still of the same religion, though he were but a child of twelve years old, or thereabouts, yet he purposeth first, and then performeth it, to keep himself pure and free from heathenish defilements. What if the vessels of the temple—by being brought into the treasure house of Nebuchadnezzar's god {#Da 1:2} -were defiled, yet these elect vessels would not. So the primitive Christians chose rather to be thrown to lions without than left to lusts within. {a} Yea, I had rather be cast pure and innocent into hell, saith an ancient, {b} than go to heaven being polluted with the filth of sin. Daniel's greatest care is, ne contra legem Dei et conscientiam impuretur; he may not pollute his conscience nor violate law of God, the lest he should be defiled in the least. Fall back, fall edge, as they say; he is fully resolved against that. So the Prince of Condi when, at the Parisian massacre, he was put to his choice by the French king, whether to go to mass, to suffer death, or to endure perpetual imprisonment, answered, As for the first, by the grace of God, I will never do it; and for the two last, I humbly submit to his majesty. Let him do with me what he pleaseth.

That he would not defile himself with the portion of the king's meat.] That which Scaliger saith of Matthew Beroaldus, Vir doctus, et, quod familiam ducit, pius, that he was a learned man; but that which was his chief commendation, he was also a godly man, may be better said of the prophet Daniel. Godly he was early, and as a child, so was also his master Jeremiah, in whose works he was well read; {#Da 9:2} Samuel; Timothy; Athanasius; Beza, who, among many other things, blessed God chiefly for this in his last will and testament, that at the age of sixteen years he had called him to the knowledge of the truth. Daniel had this happiness at twelve or thirteen. Neither was he like early fruit, that are soon rotten—Hermogenes was old in his childhood, and a child in his old age—but although he lived one hundred and ten years, as Isidor ^{c} reckoneth, some say one hundred and thirty, yet he was best at last, and may very well pass for a martyr, though he came again safe out of the lions' den, like as John the evangelist also did out of the cauldron of scalding oil, wherein he was cast by the command of Domitian, in contempt of Christianity. Daniel's piety appeareth in this, that he maketh conscience of smaller evils also, such as most men in his case would never have boggled at. He would not "defile himself with the portion of the king's meat." He scrupled the eating of it; and why? (1.) Because it was often such as was forbidden by the law of God. ^{#Le 11:13,29 De 14:3-8} (2.) Because it was so used as would defile him and his fellows against the word of God; for the heathens, to the shame of many Christians, had their grace before a meal, as it were, consecrating their dishes to their idols before they tasted of them ^{d} ^{#Da 5:4 1Co 8:10} (3.) They could not do it without offence to their weaker brethren, with whom they chose rather to sympathise in their adversity than to live in excess and fulness. ^{#Am 6:6} (4.) They well perceived that the king's love and provisions were not single and sincere, but that he meant his own profit, to assure himself the better of the land of Judah, and that they might forget their religion. Lastly, They knew that intemperance was the mother of many mischiefs, as in Adam, Esau, the rich glutton, &c. That is a memorable story that is recorded by William Schiekard ^{e} concerning eleven Jewish doctors, whom the heathen king of Pircandy having in his power, put them to this hard choice, either to eat swines' flesh, or to drink wine that had been consecrated to idols, or to lie with certain harlots. They chose rather to drink the wine than to do either of the other two. But when they had drunk wine liberally, they were easily drawn to do the other two things also. Any one of these five reasons had been of force enough to prevail with Daniel, and the other three to forbear. They knew well that the least hair casteth its shadow. A barley corn laid on the sight of the eye will keep out the light of the sun, as well as a mountain. The eye of the soul that will "see God" must be kept very clear. ^{#Mt 5:8-12}

Therefore he requested.] Modestly and prudently be propounded it, non convitiando, sed supplicando, and petitioneth for liberty of conscience, confessing his religion.

Ver. 9. Now God had brought Daniel into favour.] God is never wanting to the truly conscientious. Let them choose rather to offend all the world than to do things sinful, and they shall be sure of good success. The prince of the eunuchs dared not yield to Daniel's request, but he connived at the steward's yieldance.

Ver. 10. I fear my lord the king.] This made him stand off as he did, in pretence at least. Tertullian taxeth the heathens for this, quod maiore formidine Caesarem observarent quam ipsum de Olympo Iovem, that they feared Caesar more than they did their greatest god Jupiter. But he who truly feareth God, needeth not fear any else. {#Ac 4:19}

Ver. 11. Then said Daniel to Melzar.] Or, To the steward, alimentator, the purveyor for the pages of honour. The prince of the eunuchs might haply give him a hint to go to this Melzar, who might do it with less danger.

Ver. 12. Prove thy servants, I beseech thee, ten days.] All good means must be used for the keeping of a good conscience, and then God must be trusted for the issue. But did not Daniel herein tempt God? No; for besides that he had a word, (1.) Of precept; {#De 14:3} and (2.) Of promise, {#Ex 23:25} ex arcana revelatione certior factus est, it might be revealed unto him that no inconvenience should follow upon this course.

And let them give pulse to eat, and water to drink.] Poor fare for noblemen's sons, but such as they were well paid for. Nature is contented with a little, grace with less. The sobriety of Democritus and Demosthenes is much celebrated among the heathen. But what saith Augustine? {a} Omnis vita infidelium peccatum est, et nihil bonum sine summo bone. Whatsoever is not of faith is sin, &c. Daniel's sobriety was of another nature, of a better alloy. Papists crack much of their abstinence from certain meats and drinks at certain times; but Daniel's and Papists' fasts agree as harp and harrow. See my "Common Place of Abstinence."

{a} De Ver. Innoc., cap. 56.

Ver. 13. Then let our countenances be looked upon.] {See Trapp on "Da 1:12"}

And as thou seest, deal with thy servants.] Thus humbly they bespeak the butler, or purveyor, though themselves were nobly descended. God had made them captives, and they now carry their sails accordingly.

Ver. 14. So he consented to them in this matter.] This had been well done, if done for God's sake; but it was nothing less. He had a hawk's eye herein to his own profit; he favoured them because he meant to finger something from them. These four made a mess.

Ver. 15. Their countenances appeared fairer.] They had both better health (for Tenuis mensa sanitatis mater; saith Chrysostom, Spare diet is very healthful), {a} and their good conscience or merry heart was a continual feast to them. They had also God's blessing upon their coarser fare, and this was the main matter that made the difference.

{a} Gustato spiritu desipit omnis caro. -Bern.

Ver. 16. Thus Melzar took away.] See on #Da 1:14.

And gave them pulse.] This slender diet was some help to their studies; for leaden bellies make leaden wits, {a} saith the Greek Senary; and pinguis venter macra mens, saith Jerome, A fat belly maketh a lean mind. A body farced with delicious meats and drinks unfitteth a man for divine contemplation.

{a} γαστηρ παχεια λεπτον ου τικτει νοον.

Ver. 17. As for these four children, God gave them knowledge and skill in all learning.] Both natural and supernatural. In the art of grammar, saith Symmachus; in every book, saith the Latin interpreter. There was potus ex fonte, fletus in prece, somnns in codice, as Ambrose speaketh: they drank Adam's ale, prayed with tears, slept with a book in their hands. Whether they read the curious books of the magicians (fitter to be burnt, #Ac 19:19) is another question. Osiander thinketh that their Chaldean tutors would have obtruded upon them such kind of learning also; but as they abstained from the king's meat, so they did, likely, from such corrupt and unlawful arts. Other commendable learning they looked into, as did also Moses, Solomon, Paul, &c. But what meant Pope Paul II to condemn all learned artists for heretics, and to tell his Romans that it was learning enough for a man to be able to read and write? {a} Nebuchadnezzar was of another mind, and Daniel and his fellows went further than so. Learning hath no enemy but ignorance.

In all visions and dreams,] i.e., In all kind of prophecy. See #Nu 12:6.

{a} Jac. Rev. De Vit. Pont., 244.

Ver. 18. Now at the end of the days,] i.e., After three years' time of studying. See on #Da 1:5. Account is to be exacted of time and profiting. Pliny {a} said to his nephew, when he saw him walk out some hours without studying, Poteras has horas non perdere, You might have spent these hours better. Ignatius, when he heard a clock strike, would say, Here is one hour more now past that I have to answer for. Archbishop Ussher, {b} on his death bed, begged hard of God to pardon his omissions, who yet was never known to omit an hour, but ever employed in his Master's business, reading, writing, preaching, resolving doubts, &c.

{a} Plin. Epist.

{b} His Life by Dr Bernard.

Ver. 19. And the king communed with them.] It seems he was himself a learned king, able to pose them, and put them to it. So was Alexander the Great, Ptolemy Philadelph, Julius Caesar, Constantine the Great, Charles the Great, Alphonsus of Arragon, our Henry I, surnamed Beauclerc, and King James, who was able to confer learnedly with any man in his faculty. Alphonsus was wont to say that an unlearned king was but a crowned ass, and that he would not be without that little learning he had for all that he was worth besides.

And among them all was found none like Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah.] That which Patricius saith of the son of Juba, king of Numidia, taken captive by Julius Caesar, may fitly be applied to these four noble captives: Quicquid nobilitatis fortuna eripuerat, id longe accumulatus ei restituerat bonarum artium disciplina, What lustre soever they had lost by their captivity, was abundantly made up and restored by their excellent learning.

Therefore stood they before the king.] Who had no sooner proved them, but he highly approved them. O Hortensi admodum adolescentis ingenium, ut Phidiae signum simul aspectum et probatum est. {a} So Daniel's and the rest: neither need we wonder, since, beside all other helps, they were "taught of God."

{a} Cicero.

Ver. 20. And in all matters of wisdom.] God will honour them that honour him: his gifts and graces he giveth to pure souls, and according to their study of purity, as to Daniel chiefly.

He found them ten times better.] Masters of knowledge, skilled usque ad apices literarum, right up to the very peak of learning, {a} and therefore highly favoured by the king, who was himself a great philosopher. Daniel was a leviathan of learning, both divine and human, as one saith of Archbishop Ussher; Unicum istius cetatis miraculum et musarum delictum, as Erasmus saith of Alciat, the miracle of his age, and the muse's darling—one that better deserved, for his learning, to be called Magnus Great than ever Albertus did. The perfection even of human arts is to be found in the Church. See my Common Place of "Arts."

{a} Mr Fuller.

Ver. 21. And Daniel continued, &c.] And afterwards also, though shrewdly lifted at under Darius; {#Da 6:4} and in the third year of Cyrus he was overborne by the counsellors hired to hinder the building of the temple, whom he could not withstand, and therefore kept an extraordinary fast. {#Ezr 4:5 Da 10:3,4}

Chapter 2

Ver. 1. And in the second year.] Of Daniel's advancement. {#Da 1:19,20} Or, as Josephus hath it, post annum secundum Aegyptiacae vastitatis, in the second year after that Nebuchadnezzar had subdued Egypt, and other countries, and so established his monarchy, whereupon likely was begun a new computation of the years of his reign.

Nebuchadnezzar dreamed dreams.] All was but one dream, {a} but of many and weighty matters.

Wherewith his spirit was troubled.] God can easily trouble the troublers of his Israel, and make the ringleader of their bondage the trumpeter of their trophy, even nomen illud prolixum et terrificum, Nebuchadnezzar.

{a} Quid sunt regna omnesque res et spes mortalium nisi somnia vigilantium! -Plato.

Ver. 2. Then the king commanded to call the magicians.] These had Ham for their founder, saith Pintus; but who can tell that? Daniel haply was forgotten by Nebuchadnezzar, as David had sometime been by Saul. {#1Sa 17:55,56} A sweet providence it was that he was not called among the magicians. God will not have his matched or mingled with wicked ones.

Ver. 3. I have dreamed a dream.] His thoughts had been occupied belike about the issue of his kingdoms, and thereupon he had a divine vision. He that is moderately careful about the affairs of his lawful calling shall not be destitute of divine direction.

And my spirit was troubled.] Heb., Troubled itself. Jesus also troubled himself, but without sin. {#Joh 11:33} {See Trapp on "Joh 11:33"}

Ver. 4. Then spake the Chaldeans to the king in Syriac,] i.e., In Chaldee, whence there is here no Chaldee paraphrase; or else, if the Syriac were then a distinct tongue from the Chaldee, as now it is, it was belike their learned language, as now the Arabic is among the Turks.

O king, live for ever.] In this most officious salutation they flatter him, say some, or aver the immortality of the soul, as others, or wish him a long life, as also Daniel doth afterwards.

And we will show the interpretation.] Impostors are great braggers; but as the peacock in setting up his tail showeth his posteriors, so do these get to themselves shame.

Ver. 5. The thing is gone from me.] He had dreamed of monarchies, and now forgotten his dream. He might have hereby learned that kingdoms are but phantasmata, ludicra, empty bubbles, pleasant follies, children and tales of fancy, &c. "The fashion of this world passeth away"; {#1Co 7:31} "Surely every man walketh in a vain shadow." {#Ps 39:6}

Ye shall be cut in pieces.] Practisers of unjust; flatteries do often meet with unjust frowns.

Ver. 6. He shall receive of me gifts and reward.] This was what they gaped after, but missed, and therefore out of envy called not Daniel and his companions, as some think, lest they should share with them.

And great honour.] Great learning deserveth great honour. Aeneas Sylvius was wont to say that popular men should esteem it as silver, noblemen as gold, princes prize it as pearls.

Ver. 7. They answered again and said, Let the king, &c.] Thus these proud boasters vaunt of a false gift, and become like "clouds without rain," as Solomon hath it. {#Pr 25:14} See #Da 2:4.

Ver. 8. I know of certainty.] There is no halting before a cripple. Politicians can sound the depth of one another. {#Da 11:27}

That ye would gain the time.] Chald., Buy or redeem it—that is, make your advantage of it to evade the danger. And indeed if these sorcerers could have gained longer time much might have been done; for either the king might have died or been employed in war, or pacified by the mediation of friends, &c. Time often cooleth the rage of hasty men. {as #ISa 25:33} How Hubert de Burgo, Earl of Kent, escaped the king's wrath by a little respite, see Goodwin's Catalogue of Bish., p. 193.

Ver. 9. There is but one decree for you.] But that was a very tyrannical and bloody one. It is dangerous to affront great men, {a} though in a just cause. {#Ec 10:4}

“Saevum praelustri fulmen ab arce venit.”—Ovid.

Till the time be changed.] The Latin hath it, Till there be another state of things. See on #Da 2:8.

Tell me the dream, and I shall know that ye can show me the interpretation thereof.] If you cannot tell it, surely you cannot interpret it; since they are both of a divine instinct, and nothing is hidden from God.

{a} Procul a culmine, et procul a fulmine.

Ver. 10. There is not a man upon earth.] Yes, there is. But this is the guise of worldly wisdom, fingit se scire omnia, excusat ac occulit suam ignorantiam, it would seem to know all things, and to be ignorant of nothing that is within the periphery of human possibility.

Ver. 11. And it is a rare thing.] Exceeding man’s wit.

Except the gods, whose dwelling is not with flesh.] They cohabit not with men, that we might converse and confer with them. Here these wizards (1.) Superstitiously affirm a multitude of gods, which the wiser heathens denied, Thales, Pythagoras, Socrates, Plato, Chrysippus, &c. (2.) They deny God’s providence, as did also the Epicures, who held that the gods did nothing out of themselves. The Peripatetics also held that they had nothing to do with things below the moon; yea, the Platonists and Stoics placed the gods in heaven only, and other spirits good and bad in the air, which conversed with men, and were as messengers between them and the gods. Thus these famous philosophers became altogether "vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened." {#Ro 1:21} (3.) They seem to affirm that man can know nothing of God, unless he cohabited in the flesh with him. "But we have the mind of Christ," {#1Co 2:16} and "the secret of the Lord is with them that fear him"; {#Ps 25:14} this is a paradox to the natural man. {#1Co 2:14} Lastly, they deny the incarnation of Christ, that great "mystery of godliness, God manifested in the flesh." {#1Ti 3:16 Joh 1:14}

Ver. 12. For this cause the king was angry and very furious.] A cutting answer may mar a good cause. {#Pr 15:1} See on #Da 2:9.

And commanded to destroy all the wise men of Babylon.] So rash is rage, it is no better than a short madness. Sed de vita hominis nulls potest esse satis diuturna cunctatio, saith the orator. {a} In case of life and death nothing should be determined without mature deliberation; for, like as Saturn, the highest of the planets, hath the slowest motion of them all; so, saith one, {b} should princess which sit in their high thrones of majesty, be most considerate in their actions.

{a} Cicero.

{b} Willet.

Ver. 13. And the decree went forth that the wise men should be slain.] And the wise men were slain, saith the Vulgate; some of them likely were cut off. The end of worldly wisdom is certain destruction.

And they sought Daniel and his fellows to be slain.] Wicked decrees are wrested to the butchery of the saints; as was that of the six articles here in Henry VIII's days.

Ver. 14. Then Daniel answered with counsel.] Retulit consilium et causum; {a} he conferred with Arioch the chief slaughterman, giving him good reasons wherefor to defer further execution. This good turn he did for the magicians and astrologers who were his utter enemies.

{a} Tremel.

Ver. 15. Why is the decree so hasty from the king?] Daniel, though now in danger of his life, forgetteth not his old freedom of speech; and God so wrought, that the king, who was stiff to the magicians, was tractable to Daniel. {#Da 2:16}

Ver. 16. Then Daniel...desired the king to give him time.] Not to study or deliberate, but to pray with fervency and perseverance, which is the best help to find out secrets. {#Jer 33:3}

And that he would show the king the interpretation.] Beatus, ait Plato, qui etiam in senectute veritatem consequitur; He is happy who findeth out the truth, though it be long first, saith Plato.

Ver. 17. Then Daniel went to his house.] A house then he had, though he had lost house and home for God, and thither he repaireth, as to his oratory, well perfumed with prayers.

And made the thing known to Hananiah, &c.] That they also might pray, setting sides and shoulders to the work, as countrymen do to the wheel, when the cart is stalled.

Ver. 18. That they would desire mercies of the God of heaven.] All God's children can pray. {#So 5:8} Those daughters of Jerusalem, though not so fully acquainted with Christ, yet are requested to pray for the Church. But these three were men of singular abilities, no doubt, and were themselves deeply concerned.

Concerning this secret.] In case of secrets and intricacies or riddles of providence, prayer is most seasonable; as being Tephillah, the usual Hebrew word for prayer, a repair to the Lord for inquiry, or for his sentence. {#Ge 25:22,23}

Ver. 19. Then was the secret revealed.] Oh the power of joint prayer! It seldom or never miscarrieth. While the apostles were praying together, the house where they prayed shook; {#Ac 4:31} to show that heaven itself was shaken, and God overcome by such batteries.

In a night vision.] Vigiliae noctis; {a} as he watched in the night; for he watched as well as prayed. {#Eph 6:18}

Then Daniel blessed the God of heaven.] Who had "not turned away his prayer nor his mercy from him." {#Ps 66:20} They that pray heartily shall never want matter of praise, and such shall be ever driving a holy trade between heaven and earth, till they cease to pray; but praise God throughout all eternity.

{a} Alb. Mag.

Ver. 20. Daniel answered and said, Blessed be the name of God.] They who are slight in praying are usually as slight in praising; {#Job 35:13 Da 2:10-12} but Daniel was serious and zealous in both.

For wisdom and might are his.] These and all other excellencies are in God originally, eminently, transcendently. Daniel found it in this secret thus revealed to him; how much more may we, in the mystery of the gospel now made manifest. {#Ro 16:26}

Ver. 21. He changeth the times and the seasons, &c.] And so showeth that strength is his, such as is irresistible.

He removeth kings, &c.] As by the king's dream, Daniel was well advertised.

He giveth wisdom unto the wise.] And so showeth that wisdom is his; since all the wisdom found in the creature is but a spark of his flame, a drop of his ocean.

Ver. 22. He revealeth the deep and secret things.] Daniel hath never done, but is incessant and unsatisfiable in praising God; and although there was haste of answering the king's expectation, yet he shall stay till God have his due.

He knoweth what is in the dark.] See #Ps 139:12.

Ver. 23. I thank thee, and praise thee.] A gracious man is a grateful man; there is the same word in Greek (χαρις) for grace and gratitude. See on #Da 2:22. A thankful man will enumerate God's mercies, and redouble his praises.

O thou God of my fathers.] The very best inheritance that we can leave our children is the true God.

Who hast given me wisdom and might.] Wisdom to dive into deep matters, and might to manage it.

Ver. 24. Destroy not the wise men of Babylon.] Who yet wished Daniel destroyed. This was a noble kind of revenge, to "overcome evil with good."

Ver. 25. I have found a man.] Aulici aliorum sibi usurpant inventa.

Of the captives of Judah.] His worth deserved better respect.

Ver. 26. The king answered and said to Daniel, {a} whose name was Belteshazzar.] So the king and courtiers had called him; but he took no felicity in that idolatrous appellation, which signified a treasurer to Bel, or Baal.

Art thou able?] Interrogatio regis admiratoria.

{a} Daniel se Daniele nominat.

Ver. 27. The secret which the king hath demanded cannot the wise men...show unto thee.] And therefore thou hast done amiss, first in seeking to them, next in slaying them, though God hath a holy hand in it for their just punishment.

Ver. 28. But there is a God in heaven.] The saints are ever tender of God's glory. {#Ezr 8:22} Let these that are indued with singular gifts beware of self-admiration, apt to steal upon them.

Ver. 29. Thy thoughts came into thy mind upon thy bed.] Kingdoms have their cares, crowns are stuffed with thorns. These thoughts in the text were preparatory to the ensuing dream, {#Ec 5:2} the chief efficient or author whereof was God.

And he that revealeth secrets maketh known to thee.] Yea, maketh thee a conduit of divine revelation to the Church.

Ver. 30. But as for me, this secret is not revealed to me, &c.] So careful are God's best saints to give unto him all the glory, which they look upon as God's wife, in the enjoying whereof he is a "jealous God," admitting no co-rival in heaven or earth. "Thy talent hath gained ten talents," saith he in the Gospel; I have not done it. And, "Not I, but the grace of God that is in me," saith Paul. The glory of God and the good of his Church is the chief thing that saints aim at.

But for their sakes,] i.e., For the poor Jews' sake, to whose prayer thou owest this revelation; toward whom, therefore, thou shouldst exercise more clemency, and alleviate their misery.

Ver. 31. Thou, O king, sawest,] sc., By the force of thy fancy; for in sleep the reasonable soul cometh into the shop of fantasy, and there doth strange works, which are vented in our dreams.

And behold a great image.] A fit representation, and in a dream especially, of worldly greatness. An image, saith Theodoret, is but the figure of a thing, and not the thing itself; and this image in the text, speciem habet gigantaeam, et prorsus Chimaericam, was a kind of chimera.

Ver. 32. The image's head was of fine gold.] This is the first, and till now, altogether unheard of prophecy concerning the four monarchies of the world. Res plane digna quae memoriae tota commendetur; saith one; {a} a scripture worthy to be well remembered, because it briefly comprehendeth the history of all ages to the world's end.

His breast and his arms of silver.] The elder they are the baser; so is Rome papal, of which one of her sons, {b} over two hundred years since, complained, not without good cause, that she was become of gold, silver; of silver, iron; of iron, earth; superesse ut in stercus abiret, and that she would turn next into dung.

{a} Sleid. de 4 Monarch.

Ver. 33. Part of clay.] The best things of the world stand in an earthly foundation {a} {#Isa 40:6}

{a} Mr Huet.

Ver. 34. Which smote the image upon his feet, &c.] All the powers of the world are but a knock, soon gone. {#Ps 2:9}

Ver. 35. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, &c.] Those four mighty monarchies had their times and their turns—their ruin as well as their rise.

And the stone that smote the image became a great mountain.] The kingdom of Christ, little at first, increaseth wonderfully. Nec minor ab exordio, nec maior incrementis ulla, said Eutropius, {a} concerning Rome; may we better say concerning the Church, which shall stand when all other powers shall quite vanish and disappear for ever, seem they for present never so splendid and solid. Sic transit gloria mundi. So transitory is the glory of the world.

{a} Hist., lib. i.

Ver. 36. This is the dream.] By this time Nebuchadnezzar began much to admire Daniel, who modestly taketh in his associates, as Paul also doth Sylvanus and Timothy, when he saith, "And we will tell the interpretation thereof," sc., οὐν Θεω, God assisting us.

Ver. 37. Thou, O king, art a king of kings.] And yet the whole Babylonian empire was but as a crust cast by God, the great housekeeper of the world, to his dogs, as Luther somewhere saith of the Turkish.

Ver. 38. Thou art this head of gold.] A "head" the Babylonian monarchy is called, because it was the first of the four; and "of gold," because administered with great wisdom, fortitude, justice, and other heroic virtues, because of the glory also and greatness of it in all manner of magnificence. See #Isa 13:19 14:11 Jer 27:6. Megasthenes and Strabo ^{a} say, that Nebuchadnezzar was the mightiest of all kings, and held of the Chaldeans to have exceeded Hercules in courage.

^{a} Lib. xv., Geog.

Ver. 39. And after thee shall arise another kingdom,] ^{a} viz., That of the Persians, fitly set forth by silver, for their exceeding great wealth mentioned by many heathen authors. The two silver arms are the Medes and Persians, meeting both in Cyrus, as the two arms do in the breast; Cyrus also, by his great strength and much bodily labour all his life long, got this other empire.

Inferior to thee,] sc., In fame and felicity. Chald., Humilius; quia durius et minus tolerabile, saith one.

And another kingdom of brass.] This is the third monarchy, which is the Grecian, not the Carthaginian, as Orosius, and, out of him, Prosper, would have it; and it is fitly set forth by brass, which, as it is a metal strong and hard, so noisy and loud sounding. The belly noteth the beginning and greatness of this kingdom, saith one, ^{b} under Alexander the Great; the joints between the belly and thighs note the plucking up of this kingdom after Alexander's death, to be divided into four, whereof the principal were two—the one of the Seleucidae, the other of the Lagidae, figured here by the two thighs of brass. See #Da 11:4,5.

Ver. 40. And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron,] i.e., The Roman kingdom, fitly compared to iron for hardness and hardiness. {a} The two legs do note the division of the kingdom into the empire of the east and the empire of the west, first begun by Anthony and Augustus Caesar 40 B.C., afterwards established by Constantine, A.D. 330, and again more perfectly by Theodosius, A.D. 395.

And as iron that breaketh all these.] Of the Roman greatness much is written by many authors, how they subdued and kept under other potent nations by their legions quartered among them, and by their publicans exacting tribute of them. {b}

{a} Hard and heavy to purge and perfect the Church.—Parker, ib.

{b} Orbem iam totum victor Romanus habebat. -Pet. Arb.

Ver. 41. And whereas thou sawest the feet and toes, part of potters' clay, &c.] These "feet and toes" are the Roman empire, yet continuing, but weaker than it was before, while it consisted of "legs of iron," being now but of "feet and toes." And this empire is divided as the feet and toes are. One part is the kingdom of the Pope in the West (he whom we call the emperor hath now little or nothing to do with the empire, which was of Rome); the other part is the Turk in the East, before whom three of the horns of the empire are rooted out. See #Da 7:8.

Ver. 42. So the kingdom shall be partly strong, and partly broken.] Or, Brittle. This we see daily fulfilled in the tottering kingdoms both of that of the Turk (which laboureth with nothing more than the weightiness of itself, and yet hath been soundly battered of late by the Venetians) and the other of the Pope, which declineth also apace, and shall do every day more and more, according to that old distich:

“ Roma diu titubans, variis erroribus acta, Corruet, et mundi desinet esse caput.”

Ver. 43. They shall mingle themselves with the seed of men,] i.e., Endeavour by interchangeable marriages to reunite the divisions; but that can as little be as iron can be mixed with clay: cleave they might for a while together, but not incorporate.

Ver. 44. And in the days of these kings,] i.e., Of this fourth monarchy; for the Roman emperors were kings, as Peter also calleth them, {#1Pe 2:17} though they, to avoid the hatred of the people, refused so to be styled. The Pope, by a like hypocrisy, calleth himself the servant of God's servants, but yet stamps upon his coin, "That nation and country that will not serve thee, shall be rooted out."

Shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom.] The kingdom of his Son Christ. And here we have in few words the whole sum of the gospel, and that "truth which is according to godliness," ^{#Tit 1:1} for the revealing whereof this whole dream was revealed to the king.

But it shall break in pieces.] Christ shall reign, and all his foes be made his footstool.

Ver. 45. Forasmuch as thou sawest that the stone was cut out of the mountain.] Christ is called a stone, (1.) For strength; (2.) For continuance; (3.) For refuge; (4.) For offence. He is piorum rupes, reorum scopulus, as Val. Max. saith of Lucius Cassius's tribunal.

Without hands,] i.e., Without man's help.

And that it brake in pieces the iron, the brass, the clay, the silver, and the gold.] Broughton's ^{a} note here is, Wisely Daniel telleth first how the last shall be destroyed, and not how Nebuchadnezzar's house first should fall; so #Da 7:11,12, where he showeth his care to please the cruel tyrant, and his own readiness of wit in the allusion that is in the Chaldee between chaspa and caespa, clay and silver; which they that observe not cannot know why Daniel brake the native order of speech for clay, iron, brass, silver, and gold.

^{a} Broughton on Daniel.

Ver. 46. Then the king Nebuchadnezzar fell upon his face.] Out of admiration, and an opinion of some divinity in Daniel. See the like, #Ac 14:11 28:6. So the savages of Nova Albion stole upon the English, at their departure thence, a sacrifice, and set it on fire ere we were aware, saith Captain Drake, for they supposed us to be gods indeed.

And worshipped Daniel,] i.e., He was about to do it, but that Daniel utterly and earnestly refused it, directing him to God, the sole object of divine adoration, as appeareth by the next verse. And indeed it had been better for Daniel a thousand times to have been put to death than to have suffered an oblation and sweet odours to have been offered unto him. He had said enough before to prevent such a mischief. {#Da 2:28-30} See here how Satan tempteth the saints by extremes. Daniel, who before was destined to death, is now deified; and this was the more dangerous temptation of the two. Be not "ignorant of his wiles."

Ver. 47. The king answered unto Daniel.] Who dissuaded him, with all his might, from doing on that sort, and inculcated that God was the chief doer.

Of a truth it is, that your God is a God of gods.] Hoc fuit momentaneum, saith Calvin; this was but a flash, such as was found in Pharaoh, Saul, and other temporaries; for if it had been in truth, he would not have set up the golden idol, &c. {#Da 3:1} Nevertheless Nebuchadnezzar showed more ingenuity than our stiff unpersuadable refractories, and especially than the perverse Jesuits, of whom it is noted that they are so cross grained and quarrelsome that they had rather quaerere than credere, start questions than believe truth, and pertinaciously dispute than rest in the plainest interpretations.

Ver. 48. Then the king made Daniel a great man.] This was, saith Broughton, about two years before the captivity of Jeconiah, when the good figs were to be brought to Babylon; an encouragement for the faithful to go willingly, their own nobles being so advanced in that court.

And gave him many great gifts.] This Porphyry, that atheist, snarleth at, viz., that Daniel received these rewards and honours. But why might he not, since the gifts he could bestow upon the poor captives, his fellow brethren, and the honours he could also improve to their benefit, himself did neither ambitiously seek them, nor was vainly puffed up by them. A noble pair of like English spirits we have lately had among us, Dr Ussher and Dr Preston, contemporaries and intimate friends to one another. The former, {a} when he was consecrated Bishop of Meath in Ireland, had this anagram of his name given him, "JAMES MEATH, I am the same." The latter, {b} when he might have chosen his own mitre, but denied all preferment that courted his acceptance, had this anagram made of him, "JOHANNES PRESTONIUS, En stas pius in honore."

Behold, you stand holy, in honour.

{a} Dr Bernard in his Life.

{b} Mr Fuller's Church History, fol. 119.

Ver. 49. Then Daniel requested of the king.] Acquainting him likely that by their prayers also in part the secret had been brought to knowledge. {#Da 2:18,19}

But Daniel sat in the gate of the king.] As chief admissional, so the civilians call it, without whose leave and licenee none might come into the king's presence. Himself meanwhile had an excellent opportunity of treating with the king upon all occasions of such things as concerned the Church's good; and this privilege no question but he improved to the utmost.

Chapter 3

Ver. 1. Nebuchadnezzar the king made an image of gold.] Having taken Tyre, which was that great service spoken of in #Eze 29:18, subdued Egypt, which was his pay for his pains at Tyre, and overthrown Nineveh, as Nahum had foretold, he was so puffed up with his great success that he set up this monstrous statue of himself, to be adored by all on pain of death. That it was his own image which he here erected for such a purpose, as did also afterwards Gaius Caligula, the Roman emperor, it is gathered, (1.) Because he did not worship it himself; (2.) Because {#Da 3:12} it is distinguished from his gods; (3.) Because this was long since foretold of him, {#Isa 14:14} that, Lucifer-like, he should take upon him as a god; which because he did, he was worthily turned agrazing among beasts. {#Da 4:33} Meanwhile, take notice here of the inconstant and mutable disposition of this proud prince as to matter of religion. Velox oblivio est veritatis, saith Jerome; The truth is soon forgotten. Nebuchadnezzar, who so lately had worshipped a servant of God as a god, and not being suffered to do so, declared for the one only true God, and advanced his servants to places of greatest preferment, is now setting up idolatry in despite of God, and cruelly casting into the fire those whom he had so exalted, because they dissented. Daniel, it is likely, withstood this ungodly enterprise so far as be might, and left the rest to God.

Whose height was threescore cubits.] The ordinary cubit is a foot and half; but the Babylonian cubit, saith Herodotus, was three fingers greater than the common cubit; so that this image might be sixty-seven ordinary cubits high. The Rhodian Colosse was larger yet than this; for it was fourscore cubits high, made of brass in the form of a man, standing with his two legs striding over a haven, under which ships with their sails and masts might pass. {a} The little finger of it was as large as an ordinary man, being the work of twelve years, made by Chares of Lindum, and worthily reckoned for one of the world's seven wonders. It was afterwards sold to a Jew, who loaded nine hundred camels with the brass of it; for it had been thrown down by an earthquake. {b} This image of Nebuchadnezzar was thus great, to affect the people with wonderment—so they "wondered after the beast" {#Re 13:3} -and thus glorious, gilded at least, if not of solid gold, to perstringe their senses, and with exquisite music to draw their affections. The Papacy is in like sort an alluring, tempting, bewitching religion. Jerome compareth heresy to this golden image; Irenaeus worldly felicity, which the devil enticeth men to admire and adore.

He set it up in the plain of Dura.] In a pleasant plain, mentioned also by Ptolemy {c} the geographer, quo statua commendatior habeatur, that it might be the more regarded.

Ver. 2. Then Nebuchadnezzar the king sent to gather together the princes.] Satrapas, not so called quia sat rapiant, as Lyra doateth; for it is a Persian word signifying such as were near the king's person. Superstition first looks to wind in great ones. {#Ezr 8:11} The Vulgate are "carried away to dumb idols, like as they are led." {#1Co 12:2} They are sheepish, and will follow a leader as well into a penfold as a pasture; they also feed most greedily on the grass that will rot them.

Ver. 3. Then the princes, the governors.] These envying the new favourites, and fearing that the king, by his late confession, {#Da 2:47} had too good an opinion of the Jews' religion, came readily to this dedication, and probably had contrived it for a mischief to those three worthies, as those in #Da 6:4,5 did to Daniel.

Ver. 4. To you it is commanded.] Chald., They command; i.e., the king and his council. {as #Es 1:13,15} But what said the heathen? Obediemus Atridis honesta mandantibus, {a} we will obey rulers if they command things honest, but not else. The Bishop of Norwich asked Roger Coo, martyr in Queen Mary's days, whether he would not obey the queen's laws? He answered, As far as they agree with the Word of God I will obey them. The bishop replied, Whether they agree with the Word of God or not we are bound to obey them, if the queen were an infidel. Coo answered, If Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego had done so, Nebuchadnezzar had not confessed the living God. {b}

{b} Acts and Mon., fol. 1550.

Ver. 5. That at what time ye hear.] See on #Da 3:1. The allurements of pleasure are shrewd enticements to idolatry. {#2Pe 2:18} Sir Walter Raleigh said, Were I to choose a religion to gratify the flesh, I would choose Popery. The Catholics, in their supplication to King James for a toleration, plead that their religion is, inter caetera, among others, so conformable to natural sense and reason, that it ought to be embraced! A proper argument. I have read of a lady in Paris who, when she saw the bravery of a procession to a saint, she cried out, Oh how fine is our religion beyond that of the Huguenots!

That at what time ye hear the sound.] So in the Papacy, when the Ave Mary bell rings, which is at sunrising, at noon, and at sunsetting, all men, in what place soever, house, field, street, or market, do presently kneel down and send up their united devotions by an Ave Maria. {a}

Ye fall down and worship.] This is all that is required; de certa confessionis forma imperata, ne gry. Sic.

{a} Spec. Europ.

Ver. 6. And whoso falleth not down and worshipping, &c.] Fire and sword are idolaters' best arguments. But conscience is the fountain and spring of duty; and if that be not directed and awed by the Word of God, in vain are Acts of Parliament and proclamations, though backed with menaces; as if the spring of a clock be broken, in vain are all the wheels kept clean and put in order.

Ver. 7. All the people, nations, and languages fell down.] They that come of the yielding willow, and not of the sturdy oak, will yield with the time, and ever be of the king's religion. In Queen Mary's days here, and so in the Palatinate lately, scarce one in five hundred stood out, but fell to Popery as fast as leaves fall in autumn. See on #Da 3:5.

Ver. 8. Wherefore at that time certain Chaldeans came near, and accused the Jews.] All the Jews are accused, because some refused to worship. So still all the generation of the righteous must be charged with the pretended miscarriages of some few among them. The world, we see, is no changeling; antiquum obtinet. The Jews indeed, ever since the captivity, have abhorred idolatry; and the Papist worshipping of images, for which both Jews and Turks call them idolatrous Christians, {a} is a main scandal to them, and a let to their conversion.

{a} Spec. Europ.

Ver. 9. They spake and said,...O king, live for ever.] Thus they insinuate themselves by flattery. So #Ac 24:2,3.

Ver. 10. Thou, O king, hast made a decree.] Kings' decrees are much urged by such as are resolved to be of King Harry's religion, whether he stand for the old mumpsimus {a} or the new sumpsimus.

{b}

{a} One who obstinately adheres to old ways, in spite of the clearest evidence that they are wrong; an ignorant and bigoted opponent of reform (ED)

{b} A correct expression taking the place of an incorrect but popular one (mumpsimus). (ED)

Ver. 11. And whoso falleth not down and worshipping, that he should be cast, &c.] This with a graceless man is a swaying argument; he will rather turn than burn; as he came not frying into the world, as one said in Queen Mary's days, so he cannot go frying out of it. Epicurus in word confessed a God, but in deed denied him, because Anaxagoras was put to death for denying God at Athens, where Epicurus flourished. {a}

{a} Aug., De Civ. Dei, lib. xviii, cap. 41.

Ver. 12. There are certain Jews.] Everywhere spoken against, as were afterwards Christians, odio humani generis, saith Tacitus, {a} hated for their religion.

Whom thou hast set over the affairs.] This was it that irked these spiteful accusers: "Wrath is cruel, and anger is outrageous; but who is able to stand before envy?" {#Pr 27:4}

Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego.] Whom, though thou hast highly preferred, and by calling them by the names of thy gods, engaged them to thy religion, yet will they not yield to it, but be singular and refractory.

These men, O king, have not regarded thee.] Chald., Have set no regard upon thee. This was ever unicum crimen eorum qui crimine vacabant.

{a} Lib. xv.

Ver. 13. Then Nebuchadnezzar in his rage and fury.] His blood boiling at his heart, as brimstone doth at the match; for preventing whereof nature hath placed the heart near to the lungs, ut cum ira ascenditur, pulmonis humore temperetur; for an allay to the heat of it, lest perturbations should boil it into brine.

Commanded to bring Shadrach.] Who, it seems, were present at first, with a holy boldness, confronting their idolatries in the very teeth of the king and nobles. Daniel is excused by his absence and ignorance. But perhaps Nebuchadnezzar might show him the like favour as our Henry VIII did Cranmer, who disputing zealously against the six articles, was willed by the king to depart out of the Parliament House into the council chamber for a time, till the Act should pass, and be granted; which he notwithstanding with humble protestation refused to do. {a} And so it is likely would Daniel, who must therefore be excused as before.

{a} Acts and Mon., 1037.

Ver. 14. Is it true, O Shadrach, Meshach, &c.,] q.d., I can very hardly believe it. Certe tu non occidisti patrem; Sure thou didst not kill thy father! saith Augustus Caesar once to a parricide, whom he had in examination; and Suetonins saith that it was usual with him to examine malefactors in that way, as if he could not believe any such thing of them. Some {a} render the text Num de industria aut certo consilio? Do ye this on set purpose to cross and provoke me? Others, as Montanus, Nunquid desolatio? q.d., What! you to oppose the command of a king? If this be suffered, what disorder, yea, desolation, must needs follow! Pride ever aggravateth anything done against its own mind.

{a} Tremel., Buxtorf.

Ver. 15. Now if ye be ready that at what time ye hear.] Many can no sooner hear flattering promises of preferment, as it were Nebuchadnezzar's instruments, but they presently fall down and worship the Babylonish idol; but these three worthies were none such.

And who is that God that shall deliver you out of my hand?] What God is he? Sure a mean God he were, thou poor thimbleful of dust, could he not stay thy hand, and stop thy blasphemous mouth with a spadeful of mould, and that in a trice.

Ver. 16. Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego answered.] With a heroic faith and well knit resolution. A sound faith and a clear conscience, saith one, are able by their native puissance to pull the very heart, as it were, out of hell, and with confidence and conquest to look even death and the devil in the face.

We are not careful to answer thee.] The saint hath a quietus est rest that supersedeth all his cares. {#Php 4:7} Some render it non necesse habemus. As the king would admit no discussing his decree, but would have it absolutely obeyed, so they were at a point never to do it, nor to be removed from their religion. The heavens shall sooner fall, said that martyr, than I will start or stir an inch from what I have professed. With the like undaunted courage answered Cyprian the proconsul; Basil, the Arian emperor Valens; Dr Taylor, Stephen Gardiner; Mr Hawkes, bloody Bonner. A fagot will make you believe the sacrament of the altar, said Bonner. No, no, answered Hawkes, a point for your fagot. What God thinks meet to be done, that shall ye do, and no more. {a}

“ Paenae sunt pennae queis super astra vehor.”

{a} Acts and Mon., 1445.

Ver. 17. Our God whom we serve is able to deliver us.] And deliver us he will, either from death or through it; and we are by his grace in utrumque parati, wholly at his disposal. Never ask, then, O king, Who is that God that shall deliver you? Our God is in heaven, and doeth whatsoever he will in heaven and in earth. He well knoweth how to deliver his out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust, be he king or captive, unto the day of judgment to be punished. {#2Pe 2:9}

From the burning fiery furnace.] Sic fortissimum martyrem, saith Ambrose of Laurentius, may we as well say of these, saevissima persecutoris flarama superare non potuit; quod longe ardentius veritatis radiis accensa mens eius fervebat. The fiery zeal of these men's spirits overcame and put out the most scorching heat of the burning fiery furnace.

And he will deliver us out of thine hand.] Hereof they were well assured, because it would further set forth the cause of God, and work a greater conviction in the king and his nobles.

Ver. 18. But if not, be it known unto thee, O king, &c.] We should not condition with God, but commit ourselves unto him in well doing, as unto a faithful creator, being unchangeably resolved rather to embrace fire than to resist light. Thus did all the noble army of martyrs, besides many worthy confessors, such as were the Prince of Conde at the same massacre of Paris, who would not redeem his life or liberty by going once to mass; John Frederick, prince elector of Saxony, to whom, when Charles V, whose prisoner he then was, offered to enlarge him, and to restore him to his former dignity, if he would but only assent to the "Interim mystical" doctrine, as they then called it, he absolutely refused; {a} George, Marquis of Brandenburg, likewise about the same time, professed openly at an imperial diet held at Augsburg, Malle se, flexis ibi coram Caesarea maiestate genibus, spiculatori cervicem ferendam statim praebere, quam Deum et evangelium ipsius abnegare, i.e., That he had rather hold out his neck to be cut off by the headsman before the emperor than deny Christ and his gospel. {b} At ego Chrysostomum secutus, said Calvin, when he was pressed to administer the Lord's Supper to some notorious offenders, after the example of Chrysostom; I will die rather than do it. {c} Louis the French king being taken prisoner by Melechsala the sultan, conditions of peace being concluded between them, for more assurance thereof the sultan offered to swear that if he failed in performance, to renounce his Mohammed; requiring likewise the king to swear that if he failed, to deny his Christ to be God. {d} Which profane oath the king detesting, and wishing rather to die than to give the same, the sultan, wondering at his constance, took his word without any oath at all, and so published the league.

Ver. 19. And the form of his visage was changed.] Chal., The countenance of his face. Passionate persons vex and distemper their own hearts and bodies, {#Pr 25:28} and are exceedingly disfigured with furiousness of the looks, extraordinary panting of the heart, beating of the pulse, swelling of the veins, stammering of the tongue, gnashing of the teeth, as those in #Ac 7:54. So the tyrant that martyred Laurence stamped and stared, ramped and fared as out of his wits, swelling like a toad, looking like a devil, &c. See on #Da 3:17.

That they should heat the furnace one seven times more.] Whereas a lingering torment had been heavier, as Bishop Ridley also felt it, and other martyrs: but he spoke as his passion prompted him, which often overshoots. {#Pr 11:29}

Ver. 20. And he commanded the most mighty men.] That they might be the more strongly bound, and no resistance made.

Ver. 21. So these men were bound in their coats, &c.] Which, for haste of the execution, were never taken off, as is usually done. But these executioners were swift to shed blood, and had blood again to drink, for they were worthy.

Ver. 22. The flame of the fire slew those men.] Who were too forward in the execution, and perhaps had been chief persuaders of the king to this whole action. God useth his creatures, as he did also at the Red Sea, for the safety of his saints and destruction of his enemies.

Ver. 23. And these three men...fell down bound.] Their binders were burnt, but not their bonds so soon, lest the glory of the miracle should have been thereby defaced.

Into the midst of the burning fiery furnace.] Where yet these holy salamanders took no hurt. In the creatures there is an essence and a faculty whereby the work, as in fire is the substance and the quality of heat: between these God can separate, and so hinder their working, as here he did. Quisque sollicitus sit non tam de vita quam de vocatione, &c.

Ver. 24. Then Nebuchadnezzar the king was astonished.] God can soon astonish the stoutest; as he did Dioclesian the tyrant, who laid down the empire in a discontent because he could not, as he desired, root out Christian religion, such was the constance and courage of the professors thereof. Antoninus the emperor set forth an edict in Asia that no Christian should be persecuted; for, said he, it is their joy to die: they are victors, and do vanquish you.

Ver. 25. Walking in the midst of the fire.] As in some pleasant place. Tua praesentia, Domine, Laurentio ipsam craticulam dulcem fecit, saith an ancient, i.e., Thy presence, Lord, sweetened the furnace to these three worthies, the gridiron to Laurence, those exquisite tortures to Theodorus in Julian's time, ^{a} the Leonine prison to Algerius the Italian martyr (who calleth it in the date of his letter a delectable orchard), the fire wherein he was burnt to Bainham, the English martyr, who, in the midst of the flames, which had half consumed his arms and legs, uttered these words: O ye Papists, behold ye look for miracles; here now you may see a miracle; for in this fire I feel no more pain than if I were in a bed of down; but it is to me as a bed of roses. ^{b}

And the form of the fourth is like the Son of God,] i.e., Venustissima et quasi divina, very beautiful and angelic. The heathens reputed those to be heroes or demi-gods in whom they beheld and admired anything above the ordinary nature of men and their expectation. Truly this was the Son of God, said that heathen centurion concerning our suffering Saviour; {#Mt 27:54} that is, a divine man, such as Homer calleth αντιθεους, Θεοεικελους. This fourth person here in the fiery furnace is by many held to be Christ the Son of God, who appeared at this time in human shape.

{a} Socrates, Theodoret.

Ver. 26. Ye servants of the most high God.] This was a high title, such as David and other great princes have gloried in; {#Ps 36:1 title} {See Trapp on "Ps 36:1"} The devil gave it to Paul and his fellow labourers; {#Ac 16:17} and they who deny it to Christ's faithful ministers, loading them with names of scorn and obloquy, show therein less ingenuity than the devil himself.

Then Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego came forth.] Not till they were called had they any mind to come forth; for where could they possibly mend themselves? Any place is a paradise where God is present. Ubi imperator, ibi Roma. Where the emperor is, there is Rome. Noah was well content to lie buried, as it were, in the ark, which was made in the form of a coffin, so long as God was there with him. Nos quoque non abhorremus a sepulchris ipsis, saith an expositor, {a} We also fear not to go down to the grave so long as we may hear God saying unto us, as once he did to old Jacob thinking of his journey to Egypt, "Fear not to go down into Egypt; for I will go with thee, and I will also bring thee up again." {#Ge 46:3,4} Further, note how these three martyrs carry themselves toward the tyrant: they do simply obey his command, and come forth; they are not puffed up by the strangeness of the miracle wrought upon them, neither do they tattle, but suffer the matter itself and experience to speak, showing themselves to all sorts to be looked upon with greatest humility and modesty.

{a} Rollock.

Ver. 27. And the princes, governors, and captains.] Who were more obstinate than the king, and willing to have shut the windows lest the light should shine in upon them; but that there was no withstanding it.

Upon whose bodies the fire had no power.] See on #Da 3:23. The creatures are at a league with the saints. {#Job 5:22}

Ver. 28. Then Nebuchadnezzar spake.] Being convinced, but not converted, as appeareth by the next chapter, whatever Augustine and others charitably thought to the contrary. A wicked man may pray and praise God extemporally. {#Job 27:10}

And have changed the king's word.] Chald., Secundo loco habuerunt. They have preferred God's word before it.

Ver. 29. Therefore I make a decree.] Magistrates then have to do with men in matters of religion. {#De 13:6 Ro 13:4}

Which speak anything amiss.] But was this all he would do for God after so clear convictions? It was very poor. A professor of the Turks' law proclaimeth, before they attempt anything, that nothing be done against religion.

Ver. 30. Then the king promoted.] Restored them to their dignities, and strictly forbade others to malign or molest them.

Chapter 4

Ver. 1. Nebuchadnezzar the king.] This bare title seemed sufficient to him who came now newly out of the furnace of sharp affliction, whereby he was tamed and taken a link lower, as we say.

Unto all people, nations, and languages.] This epistolary narrative or proclamation was sent abroad a year or two before his death. And here observe, saith one, {a} an omission of twenty-seven years' history, wherein the Church in Babylon had her halcyons; the emperor being exercised in foreign wars, and the nobles disheartened from attempting anything against those four worthies, as having had formerly such ill success.

That dwell in all the earth.] Thus this great king is made a catholic preacher of humility and moderation of mind.

Peace be multiplied unto you.] Courtesy and kind language in great ones draweth all hearts unto them, as fair flowers do the eyes of beholders in the springtide.

{a} Mr Huet.

Ver. 2. I thought it good.] Chald., It was meet (or seemly) before me; It was my duty, so Junius.

To show the signs and wonders.] "Signs" they were, because evident testimonies of God's wisdom, justice, power; "wonders," because worthy to be wondered at.

Ver. 3. How great are his sons!] Mark how he is enlarged here; so should we. If David had had the thing in hand, he would have cried out also, "For his mercy endureth for ever." But Nebuchadnezzar celebrateth his kingdom only; and that also he had learned of Daniel.

{#Da 2:46,47}

Ver. 4. I Nebuchadnezzar was at rest in my house.] Having subdued all mine enemies round about. But in the year of my triumph, behold a vision of my downfall. Suspecta nobis debet esse tranquillitas.

And flourishing in my palace.] But flourishing estates free not the mind of burdensome cares. {#Ec 5:12}

Ver. 5. I saw a dream, which made me afraid.] It is seldom seen that God alloweth unto the greatest darlings of the world a perfect contentment; something they must complain of that shall give an unsavoury verdure to their sweetest morsels, and make their very felicity miserable.

Ver. 6. Therefore I made a decree to bring in all the wise men of Babylon.] Whom yet he had formerly found to be no better than braggarts and impostors. Was this man truly converted?

Ver. 7. Then came in the magicians.] As if they would do the deed. Seducers make up with boldness what they want of true worth. {#2Pe 2:19}

Ver. 8. But at last Daniel came in before me.] And why "at last?" Why was he not sooner sent for? If the soothsayers and sorcerers could have served the turn, Daniel had never been sought to. This is the guise of graceless men; they run not to God till all other refuges fail them.

According to the name of my god, and in whom is the spirit of the holy gods.] Is this the language of a true convert? Should not former sinful practices be looked upon with a lively hatred, and mentioned with utter distaste?

Ver. 9. Because I know that the spirit of the holy gods is in thee.] The spirit of divination and prophecy.

And no secret troubleth thee.] Chald., Puts thee to business. Now he who had slighted Daniel before, to get what he desired, abaseth himself below the dignity of a king to him.

Ver. 10. Thus were the visions of my head in my bed.] He readily remembereth this dream of his, and roundly relateth it; the more to befool the wise men, since the Scripture, whereof they were ignorant, but Daniel well versed in, revealeth sufficient direction for the interpretation thereof—sc., #Eze 31:1-12. The wisdom of this world is not unlike the pains taken by moles, which dig dexterously under ground, but are blind against the sunlight.

Ver. 11. The tree grew, and was strong.] See #Eze 17:12,24. Plato compareth a man to a tree inverted, with the root above and the branches below. He also calleth him φυτόν ουρανίου, a heavenly plant. Homer calleth great men γεγενημένα ἐχ Διὸς ἐρνη.

Ver. 12. The leaves thereof were fair, and the fruit.] But because pride harboured under these leaves and poisoned these fair fruits, they were broken down and trod under foot.

The beasts of the field had shadow under it.] Great is the benefit of civil government, and far extending. But most men content themselves with a natural use of it, as beasts of the field do of their food, without improvement of any higher good.

Ver. 13. And, behold, a watcher and an holy one,] i.e., A holy angel, active and watchful to know and do the will and commands of God for the good of the Church. Hence angels are said to be full of eyes, {#Eze 1:18} and to stand always beholding the face of God, {#Mt 18:10} as waiting an employment. How ready was that angel here {#Da 4:31} to interrupt the proud king from heaven, and to tell him his doom! So in the next words.

Ver. 14. Hew down the tree, and cut off his branches.] One angel seems to call to another to expedite the execution, so earnest they are in the Church's revenge. {#Re 18:21}

Let the beasts get away.] Let this great conqueror be stripped at once of his train and dignity. The Duke of Florence gave for his ensign a great tree with many spreading boughs, one of them being cut off, with this posy, Uno avulso non deficit alter; but here it was otherwise.

Ver. 15. Nevertheless, leave the stump of his roots.] Which, having life still in it, may shoot out again. {a}

Even with a band of iron and brass.] Hic ab arbore desilit angelus ad personam. This band intimateth Nebuchadnezzar's madness; for mad folk use to be bound.

Let his portion be with the beasts.] Turn him agrazing among beasts, for his beastly conditions.

{a} Pintus in loc.

Ver. 16. Let his heart be changed,] i.e., Obbrutescat, nihil humanum sapiat; a fearful judgment, and yet such as reprobates are usually delivered up to. {#Ro 1:24}

And let a beast's heart be given him.] Let his fantasy and appetite be so changed, that, upon a strong imagination that he is a beast, he may have affections carrying him in all things to do accordingly. Little is said of this in human history. The Chaldee chronicles are lost. Alpheus (as he is cited by Eusebius) {a} briefly saith that Nebuchadnezzar, rapt with madness, presently vanished out of the company of men, after that he had first foretold the overthrow of the Chaldean monarchy. The Chaldeans in Abidenus' fragments record that he was blasted by some god, and spake of Babel's fall by the Persians. {b}

And let seven times to pass over him,] i.e., Seven years; like as Solomon's temple, that seven years' work of many thousands, was by him destroyed.

{a} Lib. ix. de Praepar. Ev.

{b} Brought., Conc. of Script.

Ver. 17. This matter is by the decree of the watchers,] i.e., Of God surrounded with his holy angels as his assessors and approvers of the divine decree.

And the demand by the word of the holy ones.] Petitio haec -scil., that the tree may be cut down. It is hereby intimated, saith Piscator, that the angels, in the consultation held for the punishing of Nebuchadnezzar's pride, petitioned God that it might be so.

Ver. 18. This dream I king Nebuchadnezzar have seen.] Such as would have resolution, must fully relate their doubts. {#Ge 41:17}

Ver. 19. Then Daniel, whose name was Belteshazzar.] Which name he took no felicity at all in, but the contrary. Nevertheless, for the Chaldeans' sake, in whose tongue he wrote these things, and at whose good he therein aimed, he here addeth it.

Was astonished for an hour.] So was not Nebuchadnezzar, who was the man concerned. Ea fere est improbarum securitas; the godly, who have less cause, are frightened often, when the wicked are hardened. See #Hab 3:16. {See Trapp on "Hab 3:16"} But they who tremble not in time of threatening, shall be crushed to pieces in time of punishing. {a}

My lord, the dream be to them that hate thee.] Daniel, after a certain pause makes this mannerly preamble to the interpretation of the dream, which could not be very pleasing. But truth must be spoken, however it be taken. So Philo brings in Joseph prefacing to the interpretation of Pharaoh's baker's dream, Utinam tale somnium non vidisses, &c., I would, sir, you had not so dreamed; but since you have, I must deal plainly with you.

{a} Bradford.

Ver. 20. The tree that thou sawest.] See on #Da 4:11.

Ver. 21. Whose leaves were fair.] See on #Da 4:12.

Under which the beasts of the field dwelt, &c.] A king should to all his subjects, high and low, extend his favour according to every one's quality and degree.

Ver. 22. It is thou, O king,] i.e., It is that great empire which thou boldest and rulest.

Ver. 23. And whereas the king, &c.] See #Da 4:13.

Hew the tree down.] Sin ever endeth tragically.

Yet leave the stump.] Reserve him for a kingly state again, like as he had left a stump in Judah, spared the kingly seed, showed pity to the remnant of the Lord. The least favour that is shown to the godly shall be repaid double. {#Jer 34:17}

Ver. 24. This is the interpretation.] See #Da 4:19.

Ver. 25. That they shall drive thee.] He saith not who, whether angels or men, nor whither, for avoiding of envy and displeasure. This was a high point of heavenly wisdom, which adviseth to observe,

“ Quis, quid, ubi, quibus auxiliis, cur, quomodo, quando.”

Nebuchadnezzar, who had driven so many before him out of their countries, is now, by a just judgment of God, himself driven out from company, lest, being mad, he should do much mischief: for his brutish conditions, he had now the brutes for his companions. He was wont to be fed with dainty fare; he now eateth grass as an ox. For his purple robe, horrido pilo totus obtegitur, he is all covered with hair; and for his precious ointments he is wet with the dew of heaven, ferinae vitae damnatus. {a} His disease, say some, was the lycanthropy; not a frenzy only, as that of Ericus, King of Sweden, who, being expelled his kingdom, for grief fell mad; {b} for, besides the brutish change of his mind, his body was much changed in feeding and living among wild beasts. Deformed he was, not transformed, so that the beasts took him for a beast, as going upon all four, and feeding as they did, although in shape differing from them, as a monster among them. But when all is said that can be said, sure it is that this change was supernatural, as appeareth by the occasion, manner, degree, time, &c., every circumstance seeming a new creation. {c}

And seven times shall pass over thee.] For the glory of God's justice in his expulsion, and of his mercy in his restoration. See #Da 4:16.

Till thou know.] God will be sure to tame his rebels, for is it fit that he should lay down the bucklers first?

{a} Oecolampadius; Diod.

{b} Willet.

{c} Mr Huet.

Ver. 26. And whereas they commanded.] See #Da 4:15; and further observe how God tempereth his judgments with mercy, and that out of his mere philanthropy.

That the heavens,] i.e., The God of heaven. {#Lu 15:21 Mt 21:25}

Ver. 27. Wherefore, O king, let my counsel be acceptable unto thee.] Happy was Nebuchadnezzar in such a faithful counsellor at hand to advise him; more happy than his successors Cyrus and Cambyses were in Croesus, King of Lydia, who yet more enriched them by his counsel than by all the wealth they had from him. But Nebuchadnezzar was as yet uncounsellable, till God had tamed and humbled him.

Break off thy sins by righteousness.] Be abrupt in the work, for delays are dangerous; {#Heb 3:7,13} cut the cart ropes of vanity as soon as may be, lest they pull down upon us heaviest judgments. For the diversion of God's anger, get sin removed: {a} take the bark from the tree, and the sap can never find the way to the boughs.

And thine iniquities by showing mercy to the poor.] Nebuchadnezzar had been an open oppressor, Daniel therefore preacheth unto him of righteousness and mercy. So Paul discoursed of "righteousness, and temperance, and the judgment to come" {#Ac 24:25} before Felix (who was inexplebilis gurges, saith Tacitus, a covetous wretch) and Drusilla, a filthy adulteress. Let this be a mirror for ministers.

If it may be a lengthening of thy tranquillity.] An futura sit prorogatio. Et sane fuit aliqua prorogatio, nempe per annum.

Repentance ever findeth favour, yea, the very shadow of it, as in Ahab. {#IKi 21:29} Jerome thinks it probable that Nebuchadnezzar did for a time as Daniel had advised him, and had therefore for a temporary repentance a temporary tranquillity. Chrysostom's note upon this text is, Prolata est sententia ut non fiat. God is iudex liber, non iuratus, as Zanchy saith well, he punisheth as he pleaseth.

{a} Anticipa iudicium eius vera rescipiscentia. -Jun.

Ver. 28. All this came upon the king Nebuchadnezzar.] Because he repented not, or not thoroughly, as he had been advised, being left of God to his own heart. There is an infallibility in the curses as well as in the promises; they will surely light. {#Isa 14:23,24}

Ver. 29. At the end of twelve months he walked,] scil., A year after the dream, the interpretation thereof, and the good counsel given him thereupon. It is some wonder how he could so soon forget all; but the world, with the lusts thereof, had hardened his heart.

In the palace of the kingdom.] His idle walk, and his stately palace, were some occasion of his pride and fall. He walketh and stalketh, musing of nothing but his own greatness only.

Ver. 30. The king spake and said.] No man asking him any question, but himself trumpeting out his own praises. Ordinarily the greatest wealth is tumoured up with the greatest swelth against the Lord. Great means make great minds; yet what hath this proud prince in him of a man more than his voice and shape?

Is not this great Babylon {a} that I have built?] Why, no; it was built over a thousand years before you were born: {b} you have only beautified and fortified it. It is God that buildeth the city. {#Ps 127:1} And they were your ancestors, Nimrod and Ninus, whom he made use of for that purpose. Why, then, should you rob him of his glory, and them of their right, by your arrogance? The proud man, Sejanus-like, sacrificeth only to himself, and, Polyphemus-like, setteth up himself for the sole doer. God is not in all his thoughts. {#Ps 10:4} And for his words, hear Nebuchadnezzar here, or Mezentius in Virgil,

“Dextra mihi Deus, et telum quod missile libro.”

- Aeneid.

Or that of Grevinchovius, the Arminian, Ego meipsum discerno, atque in eo cur non mihi liceat ut de meo gloriarer? I do by my freewill make myself to differ from others, and why may not I boast of such a thing as of mine own, in answer to that of the apostle, "Who maketh thee to differ? and what hast thou which thou hast not received?" Wittily doth Luther call those braggers faeces or dregs, who have much in their mouths, haec ego feci, This was my doing; and worthily is that speech of Charles V emperor commended, Veni, vidi, sed vicit Christus, {c} beyond that of Julius Caesar, Veni, vidi, vici, because he ascribeth to Christ the honour of his conquest.

For the house of the kingdom.] The palace indeed he had built, though not the city, and therein he now prideth himself. The bramble thinks it a goodly thing to reign, and hath great thoughts and words too of his shadow, and yet all is but a shadow. The Turks build no stately edifices, besides their mosques or churches, because their abode upon earth is to be but short, they say, and therefore any dwelling may serve turn. That was a memorable speech of the forementioned Charles V, to whom, when the Duke of Venice had shown his princely palace, like a paradise upon earth, and now expected that the emperor should have exceedingly praised it, all that he said to it was this, Haec sunt quae nos invitos faciunt mori. These are the things that make us loath to depart out of the world. And no less memorable was that saying of another to a great lord who had showed him his stately house and pleasant garden, You had need, my lord, make sure of heaven; or else, when you die, you will be a very great loser.

By the might of my power.] See #Hab 1:16. {See Trapp on "Hab 1:16"}

{c} A Lap. in #2Sa 17:1.

Ver. 31. While the word was in the king's mouth.] So quick is God usually in his executions, when men are once come to the height of pride, and do invade his glory, affront his majesty. {#Jer 44:22 Ac 12:23}

There fell a voice from heaven.] By the ministry of the angels, who do extremely hate proud persons, and are ready to speak and act aught against them.

O king Nebuehadnezzar.] Not now Nebuchadnezzar my servant, as once, but mine opposite, and therefore the object of my wrath. Alexander the Great rewarded his soldier that fetched his crown out of the water, but then hanged him for putting it on his own head. God will punish those eternally that rob him of his due glory.

Ver. 32. And they shall drive thee.] See on #Da 4:25, {See Trapp on "Da 4:25"}; that new impieties work out old threatened curses, which seldom rot in the air, as we use to say of winter.

Ver. 33. The same hour was the thing fulfilled.] When least expected. The like befell the old world, Sodom, Pharaoh, Julian, &c. See #1Th 5:2,3. As they say of the metal they make glass of, it is nearest melting when it shineth brightest; so are the wicked nearest destruction when at greatest lustre.

And he was driven from men.] By his own courtiers and subjects. In him it well appeared that mortality was but the stage of mutability. The like was to be seen in Nero, and many other Roman and Greek emperors; in Belisarius, Bajazet, our Richard II, and Henry VI, who, having been the most potent monarch for dominions that ever England had, was at last not the master of a mole hill, nor owner of his own liberty. Of Henry Holland, Duke of Exeter, grandchild to John of Gaunt, mention hath been made before. Within our remembrance, in the reign of King James, the Lord Cobham, having been a man of seven thousand pounds a year, and of a personal estate of thirty thousand pounds, came nevertheless to a miserable end; for before his death he was lousey for want of apparel and linen, and had starved, had not a trencher scraper, some time his servant at court, relieved him with scraps, in whose house he died, being so poor a place that he was forced to creep up a ladder through a little hole into his chamber. {a} The like strange change befell Sir Edward Greenill, of Milcot, in Warwickshire, whom I very well knew.

And did eat grass as oxen.] By a singular judgment of Almighty God, who came down from heaven, as it were, to fight a duel with this most proud man, inspectante toto mundo, in the view of all the world. {b}

And his body was wet with the dew of heaven.] Beside the brutish change of his mind, his body was much changed by the inclemency of the air, and by his feeding and living among wild beasts. Yet was he not in truth changed into a beast, as Bodin thinketh, so as that upward he was like an ox, and in his hinder parts like a lion, as others have fabled. The substance of his body was not changed, but only the quality of his substance and of his shape. Rupertus well concludeth that this was the greatest change that is mentioned in Scripture, excepting only that of Lot's wife, who was changed into a pillar of salt.

Till his hairs were grown like eagles' feathers.] Thick and black.

And his nails like bird's claws.] Long and sharp; so that in his shape he came nearer to a wild beast than to a man.

{a} Court of King James, p. 37.

{b} Rollock.

Ver. 34. And at the end of the days.] When my pride was now subdued, but hardly to sound conversion.

I Nebuehadnezzar lift up mine eyes.] Happy he if with Simeon his eyes had seen God's salvation. Many are humbled but not humble, low but not lowly.

And mine understanding returned.] The use of his reason, whereof he had been bereft, and an opinion put into him that he was a beast. Mad men are apt to think themselves kings, horses, or other creatures than they are.

Whose dominion is everlasting.] A natural man will sooner confess God to be true, just, powerful, wise, &c., than merciful, and all because the love of God is not shed abroad in his heart by the Holy Ghost. {#Ro 5:5}

Ver. 35. And all the inhabitants of the earth are reputed as nothing.] He who hath seen any part of God's greatness will soon see his own vileness and the world's nothingness. Disce hominis ουδενειαν, et ut ira dicam nihilitatem.

Ver. 36. At the same time.] When God had hid pride from me, which could not be soon nor easily done; as when some vital part is corrupted, the cure is difficult and long in doing.

And my counsellors and my lords.] Who had ruled the kingdom in the interim, among whom Daniel haply was chief.

Ver. 37. Now I Nebuchadnezzar praise.] God, as he is the first author of all, so to him as to the utmost end, quasi circulo quodam confecto, all honour ought to return.

All whose works are truth,] i.e., Right and righteous.

And those that walk in pride he is able to abase.] See #Da 4:33.

“Ingentes quercus, annosas fulminat ornos.”

Chapter 5

Ver. 1. Belshazzar the king.] Son to Evilmerodach, grandson to Nebuchadnezzar, whose line failed in this king, according to #Jer 27:7. Of Evilmerodach, Daniel saith nothing, because nothing remarkable happen in his time but what was before related. {#2Ki 25:27}

Made a great feast.] Of this feast, see #Jer 25:26; Herodot., lib. i.; Xenoph., lib. vii. It was made, say some, upon occasion of a yearly solemnity, which continued five days together, wherein the servants bare sway in every family, having a master of misrule over them. Cyrus took this opportunity, saith Xenophon, and made himself master of the city. Nota hic Baltasaris miram vecordiam, saith one; that is, take notice of Belshazzar's strange stupidity and security, that having such a formidable enemy before the city, he should thus revel and bezzle: but he did it perhaps to show his valour, and how little he cared for the Persians, who showed themselves soon after to be no contemptible persons. Certain it is that he minded nothing less at his feast than the deliverance of God's poor people, which now he was in working. Now were the seventy years exactly ended; now therefore was Israel to be dismissed, and it was done. The Rabbis have a tradition, that Belshazzar, seeing the seventy years spoken of by Jeremiah expired, and the Jews, by the coming on of another monarch, not delivered, kept this feast in contempt of that prophecy and people. {a}

To a thousand of his lords.] Who, it is like, were all drunk for company; what wonder, then, that a land so sick of drink spued them all out? Lords and lowlies were grown desperate drunkards, ripe for ruin. Here were a thousand princes, but not one faithful counsellor to better advise this festival king, as he is called, wholly given over to dissolute lusts. Who can tell whether it were not now with him as afterwards with Vitellius the Emperor, when his enemy was at hand, Vitellius trepidus, dein temulentus, {b} to put away the fear of death, he made himself drunk?

{a} Lyra.

{b} Tacitus.

Ver. 2. Belshazzar, whiles he tasted the wine.] {a} And was mastered by it; being now in his cups, as they say, and well whittled, "swallowed up of wine," as the prophet expresseth it. {#Isa 28:7} Aben Ezra rendereth it, in consilio vini, doing as the wine advised him.

Commanded to bring the golden and silver vessels.] Being intoxicated, he casteth off all care of God and man, and falleth into the sins of sacrilege and blasphemy.

Which his father Nebuchadnezzar had taken out of the temple.] And should have restored them hither again. We read that when Gensericus had spoiled and plundered Rome, he took the vessels of gold and silver which Titus had brought from the temple in Jerusalem, and carried them with him to Carthage; these vessels, among other spoils, Belisarius met with when he took Carthage, and carried them to Constantinople. But the good Emperor Justinian would not receive them into his treasury, but sent them again to Jerusalem to be disposed of for the good of the Church, according to the discretion of the Christian bishops who lived there. {b}

{a} Iam temulentus. — Vulgate

{b} The Life of Justin, by Mr Clark, 79.

Ver. 3. Then they brought the golden vessels.] Made and appointed for a better use; as were likewise much of our Church lands, vessels, and utensils, concerning which a learned man complaineth, Possidebant Papistae, possident iam rapistae. Luther cried out earnestly against this abuse in Germany, Knox in Scotland, Calvin at Geneva: I see, said he to the senate there in a sermon, that we have taken the purse from Judas and given it to the devil; neither can I endure such sacrilege, which I know God in the end will punish most severely. Belshazzar paid dear for his boosing in the bowls of the sanctuary.

And the king and his princes...drank in them.] As if they had been swine troughs. This was to outsin his father and grandfather, who yet were none of the best.

Ver. 4. They drank wine.] To the honour of their goddess Shac; for so these feast days were called σακεα ημεραι, being like the Roman saturnalia.

And praised the gods of silver and of gold.] As if these their dung hill deities had mastered and spoiled the God of Israel, who either would not, or could not defend his temple and people from falling into the power of their invincible conqueror. This was blasphemy in a high degree, and therefore presently punished by God.

Ver. 5. In the same hour came forth fingers of a man's hand.] Taken off from the arm. This strange sight marred all the mirth immediately, making good the proverb, Ubi uber, ibi tuber; ubi mel, ibi fel. Lege Dei aeterna sancitum est ut illicita voluptas pariat ultricis conscientiae furias et supplicia, iuxta illud, Where the breast is, there is the fruit, where the honey is, there is the venom. Eternity is confirmed by the law of God that forbidden pleasures give birth to vengeful and enraged conscience and that just punishment is near. #Re 18:7. Carnal mirth goeth out in a snuff.

Upon the plaster of the wall.] When the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against unrighteousness, he would have it to be well noted and noticed by all.

Ver. 6. Then the king's countenance was changed.] How soon is carnal joy extinct, the gallantry of it checked with troubles and terrors! how suddenly is it put out as the fire of thorns! {#Ps 118:12 Ec 7:6} Surely as lightning is followed with rending and roaring; and as comets, when their exhaled matter is wasted, vanish and fill the air with pestilent vapours; so is it here.

So that the joints of his loins were loosed.] If a bare citation to judgment were so terrible to this jolly prince, what shall the judgment itself be "Knowing therefore the terror of the Lord," &c.

And his knees smote one against another.] The writing on the wall he could neither read nor understand; but his conscience had written bitter things against him, which being now held to the fire of God's wrath become legible, as things written with the juice of an onion are visible when brought to the fire. The wounds also of an accusing conscience pierce the members of the body. {#Pr 17:22} The mark that God set upon Cain was, in likelihood the perpetual trembling of his hands and whole body. Tullus Hostilius, who profanely derided the devotions of his predecessor Numa, had deservedly for his gods Pavorem fear, and Pallorem. wanness, {a} Caracalla, after the murder of his brother Geta, was so haunted with the furies of his own evil conscience, that he forbade any so much as to name him on pain of death, and was well nigh mad; so was Theodoricus the tyrant upon the sight of the fish's head set before him, wherein he thought he saw the face of Symmachus whom he had wrongfully slain. The like befell our Richard III after the murder of his two innocent nephews; and Charles IX of France after the massacre at Paris.

{a} Lactant

Ver. 7. The king cried aloud to bring in the astrologers.] Daniel seemeth not to have been in any request in the days of this dissolute prince, Neither was there any courtier that would mention him, or mind the king of him till the old queen came in. Such combibones drinking buddies are unfit comforters; many of them likely were by this time bucked with wine, and then laid out to be sunned and scorned.

Shall be clothed with scarlet, &c.] A troubled heart will give anything for release, as Cain, Spira, &c.

And shall be the third ruler in the kingdom,] i.e., Next to myself and the queen-mother. Thus he promiseth to another a third place, who could not promise to himself any place. Spirat superbiam miser.

Ver. 8. But they could not read the writing.] Utpote caecitate et stupore pervulsi; they could not so read it as to make any good sense of it. It may be the initial letters only were set down, or else without pricks, or in a strange character, the Samaritan, or some other. The honour of the work was reserved for a better man.

Ver. 9. Then was king Belshazzar greatly troubled.] In the midst of his feast he was thus damped and cast into his dumps; according to that of Amos, {#Am 8:10} "I will turn your feasts into mourning, and all your songs into lamentation." Yet find we not in him any sign of true remorse. "Whoredom and wine and new wine had even taken away his heart," {#Ho 4:11} robbed him of himself, and laid a beast in the room.

Ver. 10. Now the queen.] The queen mother, whom Herodotus calleth Nicochris, and greatly commendeth for her wisdom and ability of speech, which in a woman is a comely ornament: {#Pr 31:26} (1.) She was not at this riotous feast, which is an argument of her temperance; (2.) She prudently insinuateth into the king by the ordinary salutation, "O king, live for ever"; (3.) She adviseth him to bear up, and not to be too troubled; (4.) She maketh honourable mention of Daniel, cuius virtutum sola est admiratrix, and persuaded the king to make use of him by her own experience, We use to say thus women's wits are best at a pinch. Most sure it is that women have proven sometimes more prompt for counsel than men; {#Jud 13:23} and some we may find who, beside their sex, have little of a woman in them. See #2Sa 20:16. Herodotus maketh this Nicochris as famous as Semiramis.

Ver. 11. There is a man in thy kingdom.] Once famous for his oracles, and highly promoted by thy grandfather Nebuchadnezzar. Thus this old queen speaketh of ancient things. She was not therefore Belshazzar's wife, as Porphyry scoffingly objected, but his mother at least, if not his grandmother.

In whom is the spirits.] See on #Da 5:10.

The king, I say, thy father.] This was a check to Belshazzar for neglecting so worthy a person as Daniel, whom his grandfather had so highly honoured.

Ver. 12. Forasmuch as an excellent spirit, &c.] Very excellent is the grace of the Spirit in godly hearts, {#Col 1:29} neither can natural conscience do less than stoop and strike sail to the image of God in whomsoever.

And dissolving of doubts.] Chald., Knots; that is, perplexed and obscure speeches and sentences.

Now let Daniel be called.] Who will not obtrude himself, nor, like the marigold, open and shut with the sun; but, as the violet, which grows low and hangs the head downward, hiding itself also with its own leaves, so Daniel, were it not that the fragrant smell of his many virtues betrayed him to the world, would choose to live and die in his self-contenting secrecy.

Ver. 13. Then was Daniel brought in.] Wise men are never found to be unnecessarily forthputting, or overly forward to express themselves. They know qui bene latuit bene vixit; et qui bene tacuit, bene dixit; and when they must speak, use as few words as may be, and as direct to the point.

Art thou that Daniel.] Daniel had deserved of the Babylonian state to have been better known of Belshazzar, and better respected; but this is the world's wages.

Which art of the children of the captivity of Judah, &c.] What needed all this? he never learned it surely of his queen mother. She had spoken all good of Daniel, and inminded the king of another both office and name. He only takes notice of Daniel's captive condition, and vaunts of his grandfather's victory, moving this insolent and unseasonable question in tanta necessitate et consilii inopia, "Art thou Daniel?" &c

Ver. 14. I have even heard of thee that the spirit, &c.] This silly and shallow prince hath nothing to say but what was put into his month by his wiser grandmother; only what she discreetly concealed, viz., that Daniel was one of the captives, &c., hoc unum commemorat gloriosus rex, that he blurts out, in a way of upbraiding. {a}

{a} Oecolamp.

Ver. 15. But they could not show the interpretation of the thing.] They could not read nor interpret it. Such as seek to sorcerers are worthy to lose their labour, as a punishment of their folly. Suidas testifieth that the citizens of Alexandria in Egypt devised and decreed that astrologers should pay a certain tribute to the State out of their gettings, and that it should be called the fool's tribute, because none but fools and light fellows would resort to such for direction.

Ver. 16. And I have heard of thee.] As far off as he maketh it, Belshazzar could not be so ignorant of Daniel, as he would seem to be, since he understood punctually the dreams, honours, and troubles of his grandfather. {#Da 5:22} But this he took for a piece of his silly glory, to make it very strange, as if he had never heard of Daniel till now.

Ver. 17. Let thy gifts be to thyself.] Honours, pleasures, riches,

“Haec tria pro trino numine mmadus habet.”

But as Moses, by the force of his faith, overcame them all, {#Heb 11:24-27} so did Daniel here, throwing off the offers of them, and answering the king's proud speech with a grave invective, which he beginneth somewhat abruptly, not without indignation, as having to deal with a wicked and desperate man, rejected of God. Ministers must carry in them a retired majesty, saith one, toward the persons of wicked men. {#2Ki 3:14}

Ver. 18. O thou king, the most high God gave Nebachadnezzar.] See here the necessary and profitable use of history, which hath its name, saith Plato, παρα το ισταναι τον ρουν, from stopping the flux and overflow of impiety in others;

“Exemplo alterius qui sapit, ille sapit.”

Domestic examples are most prevalent; as not to profit by them is a great provocation, and yet all too common. {#Ps 49:14} Lamech was nothing bettered by Cain's punishment, but the contrary. Jude inveigheth against such as made no use of Sodom's ruin; this was a just presage and desert of their own.

And kingdom, and majesty, and glory, and honour.] His offences were much increased by these many obligations.

Ver. 19. Whom he would he slew.] De facto loquitur, non de iure.

See the like #1Sa 8:10-17. {See Trapp on "1Sa 8:10"} {See Trapp on "1Sa 8:11"} {See Trapp on "1Sa 8:12"} {See Trapp on "1Sa 8:13"} {See Trapp on "1Sa 8:14"} {See Trapp on "1Sa 8:15"} {See Trapp on "1Sa 8:16"} {See Trapp on "1Sa 8:17"} Lactantius {a} telleth of a certain tyrant, qui lucem vivis, terram mortuis denegabat, who would never let his subjects rest alive or dead.

{a} Lib. v. cap. 11.

Ver. 20. But when his heart was lifted up, and his mind hardened in pride.] Pride is of a hardening property, causeth men to commit sin with a high hand, as Pharaoh. The increase of the spleen is the decrease of the body; so is pride of the soul, and overturneth the whole man. Evagrius noteth it for a special commendation of Mauritius the Emperor, that he was not puffed up with his preferments.

Ver. 21. And he was driven.] See on #Da 4:22. Lege historiam, ne fias historia.

Ver. 22. And thou his son, O Belshazzar, hast not humbled thy heart.] It was no small aggravation of his sins not to be warned, and now he shall hear of it on both ears. The putting out of the French king's eyes, which promised before with his eyes to see one of God's true servants burned, who seeth not to be the stroke of God's hand? Then his son Francis, not regarding his father's stripe, would needs yet proceed in burning the same man. And did not the same God give him such a blow on the ear that it cost him his life? {a}

{a} Acts and Mon., fol. 1914.

Ver. 23. But hast lifted up thyself against the Lord of heaven.] As did also Pharaoh, Sennacherib, Herod, {#Ac 12:21-23} whose acts were set forth with false and flattering praises by Nicholas Damascenus, as Josephus {a} complaineth; but so are not Belshazzar's by holy Daniel, who yet is almost his only historiographer.

And whose are all thy ways.] Chald., Thy whole journey.

{a} Antiq., lib. xvi. cap. 11.

Ver. 24. Then was the part of the hand.] Completa peccati mensura, non differtur poena, when sin is once ripe, punishment is ready. The bottle of wickedness, when once full with those bitter waters, will soon sink to the bottom.

Ver. 25. MENE, MENE, TEKEL, UPHARSIN.] These words signify, He hath perfectly numbered, he hath weighed, and it falleth in pieces. They were the Samaritan characters, saith one, {a} therefore the Babylonians could not read them, nor could the Jews understand them, though they knew the characters, because they understood not the Chaldee tongue as Daniel did. See on #Da 5:8.

{a} Weemse.

Ver. 26. MENE; God hath numbered thy kingdom.] He hath cast up thy reckonings, taken account of thy maladministration, and calleth for satisfaction. So he dealt with Pharaoh, king of Egypt. Cum duplicarentur lateres, venit Moses, when the tale of bricks was doubled, then came Moses; and when the four hundred, or the four hundred and thirty, years of their captivity in Egypt were exactly expired, the same night were the firstborn slain. So the tyranny of the Roman emperors was numbered at the end of three hundred years after Christ, when they, sounding the triumph before the victory, had foolishly engraven upon pillars of marble these bubbles of words, Nomine Christianorum deleto qui Remp, evertabant, we have utterly rooted out the name of Christians, those traitors to the commonwealth. So, lastly, God hath numbered the Pope's kingdom, and well-nigh finished it. Let him look to the year 1666. It is plain Satan shall be tied up a thousand years; 666 is the number of the beast; Antichrist shaft so long reign; these two together make the just number. {a}

{a} Time has made a fool of Trapp as it has of many others. Ed.

Ver. 27. TEKEL; thou art weighed in the balances, {a} and art found wanting.] As the former was a term taken from creditors, so this from light coin; deprehensus es minus habere, thou art not current. Others may think thee weighty enough and worthy, but God pondereth the hearts, {#Pr 22:2} and thinketh thee fit to be refused, ut nummus reprobus so money rejected.

{a} Iupiter ipse duas aequato examine lances Sustinet. -Virg.

Ver. 28. PERES; thy kingdom is divided, and given to the Medes.] This had been long before prophesied, #Isa 13:17; yea, #Ge 9:25; and now Ham's posterity felt his father's curse. Nimrod, the founder of Babylon, came of Ham, Madai or the Medes were of Japhet, and Elam or the Persians of Shem. God's forbearances are no acquittances. Let all wicked ones look to it. What is Mene but death? Tekel but judgment? Peres but hell or utter separation from God? and all to be passed through by their poor souls if timely course be not taken. Hear this, all ye drunkards, who glory in drinking the three outs &c.

Ver. 29. Then commanded Belshazzar, and they clothed Daniel.] No nay, but they would do it; and he at length admitted it, partly that he might not seem to slight the king's courtesy and to be disaffected, and partly that thereby he might be the better known to the Persians for the comfort of God's poor people.

And put a chain of gold about his neck, and made a proclamation, &c.] All this the king commanded to be done, out of an admiration of Daniel's divine wisdom, and that he might be dicti sui dominus, as good as his word; but not a word hear we of his repentance, such was his stupidity; nor doth Daniel exhort him to it, because he saw him to be past feeling, and knew that the decree was gone forth.

Ver. 30. In that night was Belshazzar...slain.] By Gaddatha and Gobrya, two of Cyrus's commanders, who had been wronged by Belshazzar (as Xenophon {a} also testifieth), and now took revenge on him, after that they had betrayed the city, and brought in Cyrus's army. So fell that famous Babylon: fuit Ilium et inyen, gloria Teucrorum.

{a} Xenoph. Cyrop., lib. vii.

Ver. 31. And Darius.] Called by Ctesias, Δαριατος, which comes near to Dariaves, as the Chaldee here calleth him. He is thought to be the same with Cyaxares, son of Astyages, and uncle to Cyrus.

Being about threescore and two years old.] Born the same year, say the Rabbis, {a} wherein Nebuchadnezzar besieged Jerusalem and destroyed it. So Augustine was born the same day in Africa that Pelagius was in Wales, say chronologers, by a wise and watchful providence of God for the good of his Church.

Chapter 6

Ver. 1. It pleased Darius.] Chald., Pulchrum fuit coram Dario. Order, he knew, must be observed, or the kingdom could not continue; himself also was old, and needed assistants. It was honour and work enough for him illos iudicare quos constituit iudices aliorum to appoint others to judge also—as Petr. Blesensis saith that our Henry II did—to judge those whom he had made judges of others. The great Turk doth so to this day, whence few of his grandees, his viziers especially, or chief officers, die in their beds.

An hundred and twenty princes.] For his one hundred and twenty provinces, which afterward came to be one hundred and twenty-seven. {#Es 1:1} Monarchs will ever be adding.

Ver. 2. And over these three presidents.] Triumviros sive tres rationales. Three to whom the rest should audit and be accountable.

And the king should have no damage.] In his rights and in his revenues, which were, saith Herodotus, yearly fourteen thousand five hundred and threescore Euboian talents, raised out of the several satrapies.

Ver. 3. Then this Daniel was preferred above the presidents.] Chald., He became a conqueror over those exarchs; so that he might have been called, as Charles the Great once was, Pater orbis, the world's father; or as Titus, Orbis deliciae, the world's darling; or as Otho III, Mirabilia mundi, the world's wonder. He was indeed no less, and that Darius well found by him. Whether he took him with him into Medea, as Jerome, out of Josephus, relateth, I have not to say; if he did, it seemeth that after the death of Darius he returned again to Babylon, and there served King Cyrus. {#Da 6:28}

Because an excellent spirit was in him.] Not only of prophecy, but of prudence, justice, zeal, and other virtues, which, if a governor lack, he is as a sun without light, a bird without wings, a master of a ship without a helm, &c.

And the king thought to set him over the whole realm.] Thus dignity waiteth upon desert, and envy upon dignity, which made David love his hook the better after he had seen the court; and Daniel was never fond of this great preferment, whereby, for his own particular, he got nothing, nisi ut turbator viveret, occupator interiret, as he said, but vanity and vexation of spirit. High seats are never but uneasy; neither want there those who are lifting at them, and labouring to overturn them. Ferunt summos fulmina montes.

Ver. 4. Then the presidents and princes sought.] Chald., Were seeking; they made it their business so to do. Envious men are always in excubiis, set in their watch, to observe where they may fasten their fangs, and do most mischief. See #Pr 27:4. {See Trapp on "Pr 27:4"}

But they could find none occasion.] His innocence thrattled their envy, and made them, since they could not come at his heart, to feed upon their own.

Nor fault.] Neque in facto, nec in signo; and yet they waited for his halting, {as #Ps 38:16,17} and watched as eagerly for it as a dog doth for a bone. A blameless behaviour disappointeth malice, and maketh it drink up the most part of its own venom.

Forasmuch as he was faithful.] Homo quadratus; a square-dealing man, and such as against whom lay no just exception. Homo virtuti simillimus, as Paterculus saith of Cato Major, A man as like Virtue herself as could be possible.

Ver. 5. Then said these men.] But whatsoever they said, Daniel said, Ego sic vivam ut nemo eis credat, My life shall be a real refutation of their lies.

Against this Daniel.] This was the best language they could afford him. So, "Behold this dreamer," said Joseph's brethren, and "This fellow," said the Pharisees of Christ, and "This pest," said they of Paul, that most precious man upon earth. In envy is steeped the venom of all other vices.

Except we find it against him concerning the law of his God.] Whereof Daniel was both a strict observer in himself, and a zealous preserver in others. Religion, then, was the quarrel, and all the fault they could find with him— Novum crimen Gaius Caesar, &c -and yet no new accusation either. The first man that ever died, died for religion, and still, "All that will live godly in Christ Jesus" (if they will needs do it, and be set upon it), "shall suffer persecution."

“ Omnia eum liceant, nen licet esse pium”

Ver. 6. Then these presidents and princes assembled together to the king.] Or, Thronged tumultuously, as resolved to have that they came for. James and John, from the word here used, are called, Filii fremitus sive fragoris, Sons of thunder. {#Mr 3:17} It seemeth these men came to the king with a bustle and a rattle, to frighten him into a consent to their motion.

King Darius, live for ever.] This was to sprinkle him with court holy water, as they say.

Ver. 7. All the presidents of the kingdom.] Not all either, for Daniel would sooner have died a thousand deaths than have voted such a gross impiety; but he was one of the most, that knew least of the council, and it was he against whom, haec cudebatur faba, this plot was laid, though it proved at last to be against themselves.

The governors, and the princes, the counsellors and the captains.] A rabble of rebels, conspiring against heaven. Non numeranda aunt suffragia, sed expendenda.

To establish a royal statute.] But a very irreligious and injurious one, the like whereunto was that prohibition in France of Henry III, that it should not be lawful for householders to pray with their families; {a} and that of the Jesuits at Dolce, forbidding the common people to say anything at all of God, either in good sort or in bad. {b}

That whosoever shall ask a petition of any god or man.] What, not of their own gods? nor yet of Cyrus, who was co-partner with Darius in the kingdom? But, like enough, these conspiritors might think hereby the rather to ingratiate with the old dotard Darius, who feared the virtue and valour of his nephew and colleague, Cyrus, and would say with tears, as Xenophon reporteth, that Cyrus was more glorious than he, and had more applause of the people.

{a} Polan. in locum.

{b} Heyl. Geog.

Ver. 8. Now, O king, establish the decree.] Confirm it, that it may receive the force of law.

According to the law of the Medes and Persians, that altereth not.] This was too much to be given to any law made by man, so mutable a creature. I have read of a people whose laws lasted in force but for three days at utmost; this was a fault in the other extreme. The Persians' laws were therefore irrevocable, because they worshipped truth for a goddess, to whom inconstancy and change must needs be opposite and odious. But this was no good reason either, unless the law makers shall be supposed such as cannot err, nor will anything unjust, which can be truly attributed to none but God only.

Ver. 9. Wherefore king Darius signed the writing.] As well enough content to be so dignified, yea, deified. So was Alexander, the Great; Antiochus, Θεός; Herod; Domitian; Dominus Deus noster; Papa: Vah scelus! our Lord God, the pope, Ah wickedness.

Ver. 10. Now when Daniel knew that the writing was signed.] Which he knew not, belike, till it was proclaimed and published; and then, it may be, he did as much against it as Latimer did here in like case, by writing his mind unto King Henry VIII, after the proclamation for abolishing English books. See his letter in the Book of Martyrs, and marvel at his heroic boldness and stoutness; who as yet being no bishop, so freely and fearlessly adventuring his life to discharge his conscience, dared so boldly to so mighty a prince, in such a dangerous case, against the king's law and proclamation, set out in such a terrible time, take upon him to write and to admonish that which no counsellor dared once speak unto him in defence of Christ's gospel. {a}

He went into his house.] He left the court, as no fit air for piety to breathe in, and got home, where he might more freely and comfortably converse with his God. Exeat aula qui velit esse pius. Tutissimus est qui rarissime cum hominibus, plurimum cum Deo colloquitur; saith a good divine—that is, he is safest who speaketh seldom with men, but oft with God.

And his windows being open in his chamber.] This was his wont, belike, at other times; and now he would not break it, to the scandal of the weak, and the scorn of the wicked, who watched him, and would have charged him with dissimulation, should he have done otherwise. Say not therefore, what needed he thus to have thrust himself into observation? could he not have kept his conscience to himself, and used his devotions in more secrecy? Our political professors and neuter passives indeed could and would have done so. But as Basil answered once to him that blamed him for venturing too far for his friend, Non aliter amare didici, I never learned to love any otherwise; so might good Daniel here have done, his zeal for God would not suffer him to temporise, or play on both hands. It shall well appear to his greatest enemies that he is true to his principles, and no flincher from his religion. His three companions were alike resolved, {#Da 3:16-18} and Paul, {#Ac 21:13} and Luther, when to appear at Worms, and many more that might here be mentioned.

Toward Jerusalem.] For the which he was now a petitioner, since "the time to favour her, yea, the set time was come." {#Ps 102:13} There also some time had stood the temple, not without a promise of audience to prayers made in or toward that holy place, {#1Ki 8:43} which also was a type of Christ, &c.

He kneeled upon his knees.] Constantine the Great, as Eusebius telleth us, would have this as his portraiture—a man on his knees praying; to show that that was his usual practice and posture.

Three times a day.] At morning, noon, and night: thus constantly, beside other times also upon emergent occasions. All the power and policy of Persia could not keep God and Daniel asunder, no, not for a few days: {#Php 3:20 Eph 2:19} it is a part of our πολιτευμα, our city employment or spiritual trading with God, to pray; and if prayer stand still, the whole trade of godliness standeth still too. Clean Christians, therefore, typed by those clean beasts in the law, {#Le 11:3} must rightly part the hoof, rightly divide their time, giving a due share thereof to either of their callings as Daniel did; sanctifying both by prayer, and at hours of best leisure. {#Ps 55:17}

And prayed, and gave thanks before his God.] Chald., Confessed; either his sins, that he might get pardon thereof; or else God's benefits, the glory whereof he thankfully returned unto him. Prayers and praises are like the double motion of the lungs. "Let every breath praise the Lord."

As he did aforetime.] An excellent custom doubtless and most worthy to be kept up:

“Παλλας δη φιλιας απροσηγορια διελυσε” {b}

{a} Acts and Mon., 1591.

{b} Arist. Ethic., lib. viii. cap. 5.

Ver. 11. Then these men assembled.] But for ill purpose: as did also our Saviour's enemies, {#Lu 22:6} and Stephen's, {#Ac 6:9-15} the Popish counsels. At Rome they have a meeting weekly de propaganda fide, for the propagating of the Romish religion, and abolishing of heresy, as they call it.

And found Daniel praying.] The sun shall sooner stand still in heaven, than Daniel give over to pray to his Father in heaven.

Ver. 12. Hast thou not signed a decree?] But should "wickedness be established by a law?" {#Ps 94:20} See on #Da 6:7. So in France there was published an edict whereby the people were forbidden on pain of death to have in their houses any French book wherein the least mention was made of Jesus Christ. {a}

{a} Dr Arrowsmith's Tact. Sacr., p. 89.

Ver. 13. That Daniel.] He was principal president, and deserved a better attribution than that Daniel. But ill-will never speaketh well of any.

Which is of the captivity.] This also is terminus diminuent -q.d., This royal slave, whom thou hast preferred above us all, and hast moreover some thoughts to set him over the whole realm. {#Da 6:3} New men shall be much spited. It was therefore no ill counsel,

“Fortunam reverenter habe quicumque repente

Dives ab exili progrediere loco.”—Auson.

Regardeth not thee, O king.] Chald., Putteth no respect on thee. This is common, falsely to accuse God’s most faithful servants as antimagistratical, because they refuse to obey unlawful and impious decrees.

But maketh his petition three times a day.] They say not to whom he made it, which might have helped him greatly; for the king might conceive that he made it to some other man. It is an evil office to omit such circumstances as may help the accused. {#2Sa 16:3}

Ver. 14. Then the king, when he heard these words, was sore displeased with himself.] As good reason he had; but Sero inquit Nero. Now he found himself circumvented by his wily flatterers; but why was he such an Epimetheus or after wise?

And set his heart on Daniel.] But all too late. Leo casibus irretitus dixit, Si praescivissem. The fool’s ‘Had-I-wist’ should be carefully prevented. To disavow the willing of Daniel’s death, and to lay the blame upon his counsellors, is a poor shift of a weak prince.

And laboured till the going down of the sun.] Alleging reasons for Daniel’s deliverance; as that he was a loyal subject, an excellent ruler; that the decree was fraudulently wrung from the king, upon pretence of finding out false hearted subjects; that it was maliciously wrested to the ruin of a fight patriot, &c. But no reason will rule unreasonable and absurd men (Ατοποι), as they are called, #2Th 3:2, men that have no topics, nor will hear of any, as the word there signifieth.

Ver. 15. Then thase men assembled unto the king.] Or, Kept a stir with the king, from #Ps 2:1. Congregaverunt se supra regem. Doubtless, saith Broughton, Daniel’s spirit thought of David his father’s terms. {a} So #Da 6:6. They came cluttering about the king.

Know, O king, that the law of the Medes and Persians, &c.] This he knew as well as they; but they press him to do accordingly. So did those Ignatian Boutefeans in Germany, who, in the year 1582, cast abroad this bloody distich:

“ *Utere iure tuo, Cesar, sectamque Lutheri
Ense, rota, ponto, funibus, igne neca.* ”

{a} i.e., Thought of his father David's expressions in Ps. ii.; "Why do the heathen tumultuously assemble": see marginal reading.

Ver. 16. Then the king commanded, and they brought Daniel.] Besides and against his conscience, Rex regendum se praebet impiis nebulonibus, the king yieldeth to the importunity of these wretched malignants, and condemneth an innocent. See #Mt 27:24. This maketh Calvin conclude ne micam quidem pietatis fuisse in hoc rege, that there was no goodness at all in this king.

And cast him into the den of lions.] So little assurance of a continued felicity is there to any prince's favourite; witness Joab, Abner, Haman, Callisthenes, Sejanus, Ruffinus, Eutropius, Stilico, Alvarez de Luna, who told those that admired his fortune and favour with the king of Castile, You do wrong to commend the building before it be finished.

Now the king spake and said unto Danial.] Many oppressing landlords, saith one, are like Darius, that prayed God to help Daniel, but yet sent him to the lions' den. How many friends at a sneeze have we today? saith another. The most you can get from them is, God bless you, Christ help you.

Ver. 17. And a stone was brought, and laid upon the mouth of the den.] To make all sure, as they thought, and that there might be no private dealings with the keepers for Daniel's deliverance. But God had a holy hand in it, for the greater manifestation of the miracle.

And the king sealed it.] Ne, videlicet, alia perimeretur morte ab insidiatoribus, saith one, lest the conspirators, understanding that the lions did not meddle with him, should some way else despatch him, as the persecutors dealt by some of the martyrs,

That the purpose might not be changed concerning Daniel.] The Latin interpreter hath it, Lest anything should be done against Daniel. He feared not the lions so much as the men, saith the ordinary gloss there.

Ver. 18. Then the king went to his palace, and passed the night fasting.] As good reason he had, for the love and loss of such a counsellor, whom he had unwittingly betrayed, but wittingly condemned, and now he is self-condemned for so doing. His conscience was perplexed for his injustice, so that he careth neither for food nor music.

Ver. 19. Then the king arose very early in the morning.] He had lain all night on a bed of thorns, through trouble of mind, and was glad to get up, especially since sleep (the parenthesis of men's griefs and cares) was quite gone from him.

And went in haste.] Chald., With perturbation.

Unto the den of lions.] Quo venit Leo, et liberavit leonem de ore leonis {a} (say the Jewish doctors by a kind of riddle), whither came God, and delivered this Coeur-de-lion out of the mouth of the lions.

{a} Galatin., lib. v. cap. 8.

Ver. 20. And when he came to the den, he cried with a lamentable voice.] With a piteous distressed voice: far otherwise than did Daniel, {#Da 6:21} who chose rather to be cast into the den of lions than to carry about a lion in his bosom, an enraged conscience, as did Darius here, and afterwards Theodoricus, king of Italy, who had caused Boetius and Symmachus to be unjustly beheaded, but carried the horror of it to his grave. How good is it, therefore, to keep the bird in the bosom always singing as Daniel did, and as those primitive Christians, who chose rather ad leonem proieci quam ad lenonem, {a} to be thrown to lions without than to be left to lusts within, such fleshly lusts as war against the soul, {#IPe 2:11} against the peace of it principally.

Is thy God, whom thou servest continually.] A far deal better than did Cardinal Wolsey, who yet, when he came in a morning out of his privy chamber, most commonly heard two masses; and whatever business he had in the daytime (when he was Lord Chancellor), he would not go to bed with any part of his service unsaid, no, not so much as one collect. {b} Nevertheless, when he was sent for up by Henry VIII to be put into the Tower, he bewailed himself, and said that if he had been as careful to serve God as he ever was to please the king, it would have been much better with him. To be a "servant of the living God" {c} is an argument of safety. {#Da 3:17 Ps 143:12}

{a} Tertul.

{b} The Life and Death of Cardinal Wolsey, p. 18.

{c} Semetipsam detestatus est quod Regi potius quam Deo placere studuisset. -Sculd.

Ver. 21. O king, live for ever.] Daniel doth not curse the king (as some impatient spirits would have done, and as some think the damned in hell do God), but wisheth him a long and happy life, voto amabili. He useth the ordinary form, but with a better mind. His wish of the king's welfare was non in labris nature sed in fibris, it was from the heart, it was a holy prayer.

Ver. 22. My God hath sent his angel.] Glad to be employed for the safety and service of the saints, {#Heb 1:14} whence it is that these heavenly courtiers delight more in their names of ministry (as angels, watchers, &c.), than of dignity, as principalities, thrones, &c.

And hath shut the lions' mouths.] Though they were savage and hunger starved, yet Daniel was kept from the paws and jaws of these many fierce and fell lions by the power of God through faith. {#Heb 11:33} How the angel stopped the lions' mouths, whether by the brightness of his presence, or threatening them with his finger, {#Nu 22:27,33} or by making a rumble among them like that of an empty cart upon the stones, or by presenting unto them a light fire (which things lions are said to be terrified with), {a} or by causing in them a satiety, or by working upon their fantasy, &c., we need not inquire. The Lord well knoweth how to deliver his, {#2Pe 2:9} and, one way or other, will not fail to do it. {#Ps 34:19} Archimedes, the great mathematician, was slain by a common soldier who was sent for him, notwithstanding that Marcellus, the Roman general, had given charge that he should be spared. The temple at Jerusalem was burnt, though Titus the emperor had commanded the contrary. When one told the Duke of Parma that he had shot Sir Philip Sidney, instead of a reward, he cursed him for killing so incomparable a man, of whom, though an enemy, he heartily wished that he had been preserved. All that are dear to God are sure to be protected; he will rather work miracles than they shall be forsaken. {#Jon 2:10}

And also before thee, O king, have I done no hurt.] Though I have not obeyed thine edict, to the wounding of my conscience. It was therefore an unadvised speech of Philip, king of Spain, who said that he had rather have no subjects than Protestant subjects; and out of a blind bloody zeal he suffered his eldest son Charles to be murdered by the cruel Inquisition, because he seemed to favour the Lutherans. How well might this young prince have said, as here, "Against thee, O king, have I done no hurt."

{a} Aristot.; Plin.

Ver. 23. And commanded that they should take Daniel up ant of the den.] Pull him up with cords, as they did Jeremiah in like case.

{#Jer 38:11-13}

So Daniel was taken up out of the den.] A lively type of Christ's resurrection from the pit. {a} So was Joseph taken from prison, and made lord of Egypt; Samson breaking the bars, and carrying away the gates of Gaza; David, so oft oppressed by Saul, and yet exalted to the kingdom; Jonah, his being drawn out of many waters. {#Mt 12:39}

Because he believed in his God.] Of such force is faith, of such power is prayer; for it may well be thought that he prayed hard (with David, #Ps 22:21), "Save me from the lion's mouth, so will I declare thy name unto my brethren." The prayer of faith shall save the afflicted; and questionless justifying faith is not beneath miraculous in the sphere of its own activity, and where it hath the warrant of God's Word. Let such as desire a special providence believe, wait, and walk uprightly. {#2Ch 16:9}

{a} Mos priscus Christianorum fuit ut in suis sepulchris inter alia resurrectonis symbola Danielem in lacu inter leones stantem sculperent. -A Lapide in loc.

Ver. 24. And the king commanded, and they brought those men which had accused Daniel.] Chald., Which had accused accusations against Daniel. Now they shall lick of the same whip, and find, to their small comfort, the truth of that divine proverb,

"Whoso diggeth a pit, shall fall therein," {a} &c. {#Pr 26:27} See #Ec 10:8 Ps 7:16. {See Trapp on "Ec 10:8"} {See Trapp on "Ps 7:16"}

They cast them into the den of lions.] A just and proper punishment, yet not executed without too much severity, as some think, because their wives and children were cast in with them. But for that, others say that as these were part of their goods, so, by consent at least, they were partakers of their crimes, and therefore justly perished with them.

And the lions had the mastery, &c.] It is a much more "fearful thing to fall into the" punishing "hands of the living God" {#Heb 10:31} Such shall have the cauls of their hearts torn in sunder, &c. Oh "consider this, ye that forget God, lest he tear you in pieces," &c. {#Ps 50:22}

{a} ἡ δὲ κακὴ βουλή τῷ βουλευσάντι κακίστη.—Hesiod.

Ver. 25. Then king Darius wrote.] See on #Da 4:1.

Ver. 26. I make a decree.] It is the honour of princes to make laws for the maintenance of religion. {#2Ch 30:4,5}

And his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed.] Daniel's dialect touching Christ and his kingdom. {#Da 2:44 7:14,27} By conversing with that good man, Darius had learned something, as those that walk much in the sun are apt to be tanned and discoloured.

Ver. 27. He delivereth and rescueth.] By this and the foregoing verse it may be evidently seen that Darius was acquainted with Nebuchadnezzar's two dreams, and affected with them.

Ver. 28. So this Daniel prospered.] And still solicited the Church's cause.

And in the reign of Cyrus the Persian.] Under whom he affronted the counsellors hired against the returned Jews. {#Ezr 4:5 cf. 10:1,3} He lived also under Cambyses, but was out of credit with that rakeshame. {a}

{a} One who covers himself with shame; an ill-behaved, disorderly, or dissolute fellow. (ED

Chapter 7

Ver. 1. In the first year of Belshazzar.] Here beginneth, to speak properly, the prophecy of Daniel, or rather the second part of Daniel's works, which is concerning visions exhibited of God by divine revelations, not to others, but to himself. This vision is the subject and groundwork of the rest that follow to the end of the prophecy. One not unfitly compareth it to a general map of the whole world; the rest to particular tables of various countries.

Daniel had a dream and visions of his head.] God renewed unto him the same thing by vision which he had exhibited before by dream, in recompense of his religious care to know the matter and to record it for the Church's comfort. {a}

Then he wrote the dream.] It was God's will the visions of the prophets should be written {#Isa 30:10} and published to the Church. {#Isa 30:30}

{a} Jun.

Ver. 2. Daniel spake and said.] His writing is called his speaking, to teach us to receive the writings of the prophets and apostles with no less reverence than if we had heard them speak with their own mouths. {a}

I saw in my vision by night.] The night doth in Scripture frequently signify trouble. This "vision by night" was of troublesome businesses—viz., hurlyburlies in the world, and persecutions in the Church.

And behold the four winds of the heavens strove upon the great sea,] i.e., There was a huge bustle upon the earth, by means of the four successive monarchies. See #Re 13:1,11. The world is fitly called the "great sea," ever unquiet and full of commotions; which are also called "winds" for their boisterousness, contrariety of nature, and inconstance.

{a} Willet.

Ver. 3. And four great beasts.] Regnorum feritas bestiarum nomine demonstratur; saith Jerome. The fierceness of the four kingdoms is set forth by the name of beasts. Bellum a belluis. Monarchies are mostly gotten, kept, and governed with violence and tyranny. {#Ps 76:4 So 4:8} Regna mundana parantur et retinentur bellis. Commune vitium monarchiis et tyrannis.

Ver. 4. The first was like a lion.] Which is the king of beasts (as the eagle is of birds), generous, strong, fierce, fair-conditioned; so were the Assyrian monarchs in comparison of those that followed them.

And had eagle's wings.] Whereby is noted their victorious celerity and alacrity in seizing upon kingdoms. {as #Ob 4 2Sa 1:23 Jer 4:13 48:40 Eze 17:3}

I beheld till the wings thereof were plucked,] scil., By the Medes and Persians, taming Babel's insolence, and making her inhabitants tributaries and slaves, to till their ground and to maintain their garrisons, saluting them as their masters wherever they met them. {a}

And made stand upon the feet as a man,] i.e., Brought down to the common rank of men, and no longer lift up as an eagle.

And a man's heart {b} was given to it.] Which before thought itself as good as God, now had low and common spirits; not as once, imperious and impetuous.

{a} Xenophon.

{b} Cor humanum, id est, molle ac timidum. -Piscat.

Ver. 5. And behold another beast, a second, like to a bear.] Which is nothing so generous and ingenuous as a lion; but slow, dull, cruel, ravenous. Such were the Persians; a mountainous, rough, uncivil people, of barbarous and beastly cruelty.

And it raised up itself on one side,] scil., By joining with the Medes, by whose help Cyrus subdued the Syrians, Assyrians, Arabians, Cappadocians, and many more nations act easily reckoned, who, to gratify him, desired to be ruled according to his pleasure. {a}

And it had three ribs in the mouth of it.] While they conquered three parts of the known world, pushing westward, northward, and southward. {#Da 8:4} Westward by Cyrus, southward by Cambyses, and northward by Darius Hystaspis.

And they said (or, it was said) thus unto it, Arise, devour.] Intimating that it was God who turned this bear loose upon the nations, and gave them to him for a prey. Tyrants prosper by God's permission. {#Joh 19:11}

{a} Xenoph.

Ver. 6. After this I beheld, and lo another, like a leopard.] Which is a creature cruel, desirous of man's blood, crafty, spotted, and very swift of foot. So were the Grecians; Alexander especially (the founder of that third monarchy), active, bold, and headlong, but directed much by those who had been counsellors to his father Philip, a subtle prince; leopard-like, he was spotted by a mixture of virtues and vices; he was very quick of despatch, Μηδεν αναβαλλομενος, never deferring any enterprise; he much delighted in wine, and so took his death; like as the leopard is no way else to be taken but by such a bait laid for him.

Which had upon the back of it four wings.] Denoting the rapidity and celerity of Alexander and some other of the Grecian monarchs, in overrunning countries, as if they had flown.

The beast had also four heads,] i.e., This monarchy was, after Alexander's death, divided into four satrapies, or rather kingdoms. Cassander had Macedonia; Antigonus, Asia; Seleucus, Syria; and Ptolemy, Egypt.

Ver. 7. Behold a fourth beast.] Not likened to any certain beast, because none can be named so cruel which can express the cruelty of this fourth monarchy—viz., that of the Romans, no, although it were

"Προσθε λεων, μετοπισθε δρακων, μεσσηδε χιμαιρα."—Hom.

It is a nameless monster, made up of all the properties of the former beasts. {#Re 13:1,2} The Rabbis, with their "wild boar out of the wood," {#Ps 80:13} fall far short of it. Luther {a} not unfitly compareth the Church of God to a silly poor maid, sitting in a wood or wilderness, and beset with hungry lions, wolves, boars, bears, and with all manner of hurtful and cruel creatures.

Dreadful and terrible.] Because able and ready to annoy others with great evils.

And strong exceedingly.] So that it passed for a proverb, Irasci populo Romano nemo impune potest. It is not safe for any nation to fall out with the Romans; for they are sure to be tamed and tawed with their iron teeth.

And it had great iron teeth,] i.e., Conquering captains, such as Scipio—of whom Ennius sang thus:

“ Si fas caedendo coelestia scaudere cuiquam, Mi soli coeli maxima porta patet.”

Pompey, who by his great acts and achievements merited the name of Magnus; and Julius Caesar, who before the Pharsalian wars had taken a thousand towns, conquered three hundred nations, took prisoner one million men, and slain as many. {b}

And stamped the residue with the feet of it,] i.e., With their provincial magistrates, such as were Verres, Pilate, Felix, &c., said to have nails of brass, {#Da 7:19} and fitly compared to petulant wild beasts, which, when they can feed no longer, trample with their feet on the residue of the prey. The poor Jews had hard measure from them always.

And it was diverse from all the beasts.] In respect of diversity and strange multiplicity of forms of government.

And it had ten horns.] Which the angel afterwards interpreted as kings or kingdoms. {#Da 7:24} This occurred not long after Constantine the Great, when the Roman empire began to moulder and fall in pieces. About the year 456, it appeared broken into ten parts, which by a learned interpreter are thus reckoned. The kingdom of the Britons, of the Saxons, both in Brittany; of the Franks, of the Burgundians, in France; of the West Goths in the southern part of France and part of Spain; of the Sueves and Alanes in part of Spain; of the Vandals in Africa, a little before in Spain; of the Allmanns in Rhetia and Noricum, provinces of Germany; of the East Goths in Pannonia, a little after in Italy; of the Greeks in the remnant of the empire.

{a} Loc. Com.

{b} Heyl., Geog.

Ver. 8. And I considered the horns.] For without a serious and sedulous consideration I could not have kenned it. So slyly and secretly worketh the mystery of iniquity.

And behold there came up among them another little horn.] This is Antiochus Epiphanes, say some, the Great Turk, say others, the Pope, say a third sort, and with them I concur, whose kingdom is here called a "little horn," because the Pope was at first a mean minister of the Roman Church, viz., till Constantine's time. Afterwards he was only primate and metropolitan of the churches of Italy. No man took him for a prince, no, not when he began to write Volumns et iubemus, We will and command you, A.D. 606; but he grew up by degrees, and cunningly got among the ten horns, till at length he overtopped them.

Before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots.] These were, according to some, Chilperick the French king, Frederick the emperor, and King John of England, whom he made his vassal. Others reckon them to be Chilperick, the exarch of Italy in the time of Gregory II, and Desiderius, king of Lombards, slain by Charles the Great at the instigation of the Pope. For three kingdoms coming under him, let it be considered whether they be not Spain, Germany, and France; or whether this prefigured not, saith one, his triple crown.

And, behold, in this horn were eyes like the eyes of man.] In respect to his feigned courtesy and profound policy. To be sharp-sighted is commendable; but to be wittily wicked is to do the devil doubtly service.

And a mouth speaking great things.] Big swollen with blasphemies, both against God and his viceregens upon earth. Pope Boniface wrote to Philip the Fair, king of France, Volumus te scire te in temporalis et spiritualis nobis subiacere. {a} We would you should know, sir, that you are to subject yourselves to us, both in temporals and spirituals, &c. Accordingly he took upon him to overtop and command at pleasure all Christian kings and emperors. The application that the malicious Jewish doctors blasphemously make of this little horn to our Lord Jesus Christ is worthy of all execration.

{a} Alsted., Chron.

Ver. 9. I beheld till the thrones were cast down.] All these tyrannous dominions overturned. Some read it, "till the thrones were set up"; for till the last judgment Antichrist is to continue. {#Da 7:21,22,25,26}

And the Ancient of days did sit,] i.e., God Almighty, whom Thales, also a heathen philosopher, called πρεσβυτατον των οντων, the most ancient of all that are. {a} The poets say also that Saturn, the father of their gods, had his name from his fulness of years, {b} God's eternity and wisdom is set forth; by this title here, like as also is, by his "white garments," his majesty and authority; by his "hair as pure wool," his innocence and integrity in judgment; by his "throne like the fiery flame," his just anger and severity, against the man of sin especially; by his "wheels"—or the wheels thereof, viz., of his throne; for princes' thrones used in those days to be set upon wheels—"as burning fire" is set forth his facility and dexterity in executing his judgments, his efficacy also, since all things are fiery.

{a} Laert. in Vit. Thalet.

{b} Saturnus est appellatus quod saturetur annis. -Cic. de Nat. Deor., lib. ii.

Ver. 10. A fiery stream issued and came forth from before him.] The last and great judgment must needs be very dreadful, where, beside that wicked men shall give account with all the world flaming about their ears, the law they shall be judged by is a fiery law, {#De 33:2} the tribunal of fire, {#Eze 1:27} the judge a consuming fire; {#Heb 12:29} his attendants flaming seraphims; his pleading with sinners shall be in flames of fire; {#2Th 1:8} the trial of their works shall be by fire; {#1Co 3:13} the place of punishment a lake of fire, fed with tormenting temper, and kindled by the breath of the Lord. {#Isa 30:33} Well may the "sinners in Zion be afraid, and fearfulness surprise hypocrites"; well may they run away, if they can at least tell whither, with these words in their mouths, "Who among us shall dwell with this devouring fire? who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?" {#Isa 33:14}

Thousand thousands ministered unto him.] There is an innumerable company of angels, {#Heb 12:22} and when Christ cometh to judge the world, he shall bring them all with him, not one being left behind him in heaven, {#Mt 16:27} that he may have their assistance in the sentence and execution of judgment. {#1Co 6:2,3}

The judgment was set, {a} and the books were opened.] Terms taken from judgments among men, wherein indictments are read, proofs are produced, laws also are considered. The books that shall here be opened are God's records and conscience's register. Quae scripta sunt non atramento sed flagitiorum inquinamento, saith Ambrose, which are written, not with ink, but with sin's filth.

I beheld then because of the voice of the great words.] As Antichrist shall be judged for his blasphemies, so shall all ungodly men for their hard speeches, {#Jude 15} yea, for their waste words. {#Mt 12:36}

{a} Sedendo et quiescendo anima fit prudens. -Aristot. Physic., lib. vi.

Ver. 11. I beheld even till the beast was slain.] Till the whole body of the monster, and with it the Papal kingdom, came to ruin. This Bellarmine confesseth, and lamenteth that ever since we began to call the Pope Antichrist, the Church of Rome hath suffered loss. Cotton, the Jesuit, confesseth that the authority of the Pope is incomparably less than it was, and that now the Christian Church is but a diminutive.

And his body destroyed and given to the burning flame.] The Revelation, which is a heavenly commentary upon this prophecy, hath it thus, "The beast and the false prophet were cast alive," for more torment, "into a lake of fire burning with brimstone." {#Re 19:20}

Ver. 12. As concerning the rest of the beasts.] The four great monarchies, as was before noted, had their times and their turns—their rise and their ruin.

Yet their lives were prolonged for a season.] Such is the Lord's lenity, respiting his enemies for a time. {#1Ki 21:29} The Persian and Turk are yet puissant princes. The success that the Antichristian rout yet hath in some places maketh good that which was sometimes said of dying Carthage, Morientium nempe bestiarum violentiores esse morsus, i.e., The bites of dying beasts are more violent than ordinary.

Ver. 13. I saw in the night visions, &c.] Here comes in the fifth monarchy, properly so called, the kingdom being wrested from the fourth tyrant. Well might Jerome call Daniel Polyhistora, the general historian.

And, behold, one like the Son of man.] So Christ showed himself often to the fathers, before his incarnation, for their confirmation in that article which, being the ground of his passion, was to be especially believed, for the foundation of Christian faith. Christ's Godhead also, another main article, is here not obscurely deciphered, while he is said to be like the Son of man; therefore he is more than a mere man. Again, he came with the clouds. Compare #Mt 24:30, "Then shall they see the Son of man coming in the clouds," as in his chariot of state. Add hereunto his solemn, glorious access unto the Father, that Ancient of days, that is, the eternal God, as being his co-equal, of the same nature, power, glory, &c., with his Father, and coeternal unto him. So the Lamb is said to approach to him that sat upon the throne to receive the book. {#Re 5:7}

And they brought him near before him.] {a} The angels did, as great men's attendants are said to bring their masters to the courts.

{a} " Et qui asaistebant ei abtulerant eum."—sic Cyprian. legit.

Ver. 14. And there was given him dominion.] Christ hath a manifold right to the kingdom; it is his by inheritance, conquest, donation, &c. This is comfortable to consider, forasmuch as he will not reign without his members, who all hold all in capite; and have all already, (1.) In precio; in prayer (2.) In promisso; in promise (3.) In primitiis. in starting.

That all people, nations, and languages, &c.] Christ's kingdom is first universal, secondly perpetual; so was none of the former, though the Roman was very large, reaching from Euphrates to Great Britain, and the Assyrian very lasting, of a thousand and four hundred years' duration.

Ver. 15. I Daniel was grieved in my spirit.] Chald., My spirit was scabbed through, so that my body became as an empty sheath or scabbard. Oh, the terror of that last judgment, when such a man as Daniel was so frightened to see the manner of it in vision only! "If the righteous scarcely be saved," &c.

In the midst of my body.] Chald., Of my sheath: the body is but the soul's sheath (Pliny, {a} in the history of Hermetinus Clazomenius, maketh use of the same metaphor), and compared to the soul it is but as a clay wall that encompasseth a treasure, as a wooden box of a jeweller, as a coarse case to a rich instrument, or as a mask to a beautiful face.

{a} Lib. vii. cap. 52.

Ver. 16. I came near unto one of them that stood by,] i.e., To one of the holy angels. {as #Da 7:10} Let us have recourse in like case to Christ's ministers, who are called "angels of the churches"; like as angels, by a like change of name, are called "ministering spirits." {#Heb 1:14} The preaching of the gospel is taken from the angels, {#Lu 2:10} and given to the ministers: hence Paul was sent to Ananias for further direction, {#Ac 9:10,11} and Cornelius to Peter. {#Ac 10:3-5}

And asked him the truth,] i.e., The thing hereby signified. See #Joh 1:17 14:7; holy minds are industrious after knowledge.

Ver. 17. These great beasts...are four kings,] i.e., A succession of kings, all of them truculent and savage towards the saints.

Which shall arise out of the earth.] And as toads, strive who shall die with most earth in their mouths.

Ver. 18. But the saints of the Most High.] Or, The most high saints, highly exalted in Christ, and preferred far above those earth sprung mushroom monarchs, {#Da 7:17} who are of the earth earthy, and partake not of the inheritance of the saints in light. Now this is a very true definition of a Church, saith Junius here, viz., Coetus sanctorum ad excelsa, a company of saints partaking of a high and heavenly calling. {#Heb 3:1}

Shall take the kingdom.] Take it "by force," {#Mt 11:12} lay hold on the promised inheritance; yet not till it is given them, and the time is come. {#Da 7:22}

Ver. 19. Then I would know the truth.] See #Da 7:16. And take notice that godly minds are not content with the knowledge of things in gross, but covet a particular and distinct knowledge. {#Php 3:10}

Ver. 20. And of the ten horns.] See #Da 7:7.

And of the other that came up.] See #Da 7:8.

Whose look was more stout than his fellows,] i.e., Than the ten horns. Antichrist exalteth himself above kings, and above all that is august. {#2Th 2:4} {See Trapp on "2Th 2:4"}

Ver. 21. I beheld, and the same horn made war with the saints.] With the Waldenses, against whom the Pope turned his croisados, those armies of the Cross which had been first appointed against the Saracens. {a} This war began in the year 1160, and yet continueth, and must till the end of the reign of Antichrist. {#Da 7:9,10,26}

And prevailed against them.] As they did against the ancient Waldenses or Leonists, and against their posterity lately in Piedmont. Yea, it is the opinion and fear of some great divines that Antichrist, before his abolition, shall once again overflow the whole face of the West, and suppress the whole Protestant Churches.

{a} Thuan.

Ver. 22. Until the Ancient of days came.] Not by change of place, but change of providence. {#Zec 14:3,4}

And judgment was given to the saints.] As approvers of Christ's righteous judgment.

That the saints possessed the kingdom,] sc., In Christ their head.
{#Da 7:10}

Ver. 23. Thus he said.] So ready are the holy angels to further good desires. {#Mt 28:1,2}

Ver. 24. And the ten horns out of this kingdom.] He saith not kingdoms: this maketh against those that make the Seleucidae and Legidae, the fourth monarchy.

And he shall be diverse from the first.] For the first were secular kings, but he styleth himself chief bishop and head of the Church, having both Peter's keys and Paul's sword, &c.

And he shall subdue three kings.] See on #Da 7:8.

Ver. 25. And he shall speak great words.] As Pope Julius III did, when he called for his pork flesh, forbidden him by his physician as naught for his gout, al despito di Dio, in despite of God; and missing a cold peacock which he commanded to be set up for his supper, he raged extremely at his steward; and being desired to be more patient, he replied, If God were so angry with our first parents for an apple, may not I, who am his vicar, be so much more for my peacock? {a} See on #Re 13:5.

And shall think to change times and laws,] i.e., He shall usurp a power over religion and men's consciences, set up holidays, canonise saints, appoint fasts, order times, &c.

Until a time and times and half a time,] i.e., Until that time which God alone knoweth, and hath in his power.

{a} Acts and Mon., 1417.

Ver. 26. But the judgment shall sit.] And then an end of him howsoever.

Ver. 27. And the kingdom and dominion.] When once Christ's foes shall be in that place which is fittest for them, viz., "under his feet."

Ver. 28. Hitherto is the end of the matter.] This seemeth added, to stop all curious inquiries after things not revealed.

My cogitations much troubled me.] For the ensuing troubles of God's people under those godless tyrants.

And my countenance changed.] Chald., My brightnesses. I looked wan and pale; much study will cause it; {#Ee 12:12} as it did in Mr Fox, the martyrologue, so that his friends knew him not.

Chapter 8

Ver. 1. In the third year of the reign of king Belshazzar.] Which was his last year, when Babylon was closely besieged: therefore Daniel was not now really at Shushan, but in vision only. {#Da 8:2}

A vision appeared unto me.] While waking likely: and for further explication of the former vision, {#Da 7:1,2} whereof because Daniel made so good use, ampliores gratiam accipit, saith Oecolampadius, he now receiveth further grace.

Ver. 2. I saw in a vision.] God revealed himself to men waking in vision, as well as in dreams, {#Heb 1:1} wherein the prophets saw things actually done, which hereby they knew were to be done. {#1Ki 22:17}

I was at Shushan.] Which signifieth a lily, {a} so it was called for the pleasantness of the place: now it is called Valdac, of the poverty of the place. Here it was that Alexander found fifty thousand talents of gold, besides silver great store. It was once the royal seat of the kings of Persia, and gave name to the whole province Susiane. See #Ne 1:1 Es 1:1.

And I was by the river of Ulai.] Called by heathen authors Eulaeus, but better ολυαιος. It compassed the temple of Diana at Shushan round, and, as some say, the whole city. Pliny {b} saith that the waters of this river were highly esteemed, so that the Persian kings drank thereof.

{a} Athenaeus.

{b} Pliny, lib. vi. cap. 27.

Ver. 3. There stood before the river a ram.] With a golden fleece and full of flesh. This was the Persian monarch; who is also said to stand, because of his slow motion and sluggish disposition; and

"before the river," because the Persians ruled over many nations, signified by waters. {#Re 17:1} A ram stalketh stately before the flock as a captain; but they are only sheep which he leadeth. Let a dog but lay his nose over the hedge, and away they run all: so did the sheepish cowardly Persians before Alexander.

Which had two horns.] These were the states of Medea and Persia.

But one was higher than the other,] i.e., The Persians at length became higher than the Medes, and overtopped them.

And the higher came up last.] Cyrus after Darius, uniting both nations into one monarchy.

Ver. 4. And I saw the ram pushing westward, &c.] Hereby are set forth the Persian wars, and especially those waged by Cyrus, who subdued many nations and grew very great, as did also his successors, but especially Darius Hystaspes.

Neither was there any.] None could resist his rage, nor escape his reach.

Ver. 5. And as I was considering,] Such as are studious shall see more of God's mind. {#Re 1:12}

Behold, an he-goat came from the west,] i.e., From Greece and Macedon, west from Persia. This goat, more nimble, swift, and potent than a ram, was the Grecian monarch Alexander, who came capering and prancing over the whole earth—that is, over the whole Persian monarchy, and more—setting fire on all Asia, as the magicians foretold he would do, as being born the same day that Diana's temple at Ephesus was set on fire. This Alexander the Great was Dux gregis ipse caper, of all whose victories we have here a notable abridgement, more like a history than a prophecy. The high-priest Jaddus is said {a} to have shown it to Alexander in his march against Darius Codomannus, the last king of Persia, who thereby, much encouraged in his enterprise, bestowed upon the Jews many favours and freedoms.

And touched not the ground.] Alexander was notably nimble, thinking nothing too hard for him to achieve, and slipping no opportunity. When he was to encounter with Darius's army at Granicum, Parmenion persuaded him to stay till the next day, but he would not, neither was success wanting. With wonderful celerity, in six years' time, he overrun so great a part of the habitable world, that he might rather seem to fly than to march. Apelles pictured Alexander with a thunderbolt, signifying his great swiftness in his exploits.

And the goat had a notable horn between his eyes.] This notable horn is Alexander, founder of the Grecian monarchy. The Macedonians were at that time called Aegeades -i.e., goatish; the occasion whereof see in Justin, lib. vii. Alexander is here fitly called Hircus caprarum, a he-goat, {b} or the horn of sight, between the eyes of that goat—a fit emblem of a good prince, whose virtues are conspicuous as a horn is, who defendeth his people and offendeth their enemies; who, like this horn rising up between the eyes, is circumspect and well advised, doing all with counsel. {#Pr 24:6} Alexander had his father Philip's counsellors about him, who were excellent in wisdom beyond any that came after them in the same empire.

{a} Josephus.

{b} Sic Darius dicitur Aiiil -i.e., Aries Persiae, Hebraice et Chaldaice, Elam.

Ver. 6. And he came to the ram that had two horns.] He came. This may betoken the slower preparations of Philip, king of Macedonia.

And ran unto him.] Alexander did, by quick and furious marches.

“ Nil actum credens dum quid superesset agendam

Fertur atrox.”—De Cas. Lucan,

Ver. 7. And I saw him come close unto the ram.] Who stood for a while in his stoutness, and brought several huge armies into the field—not less than fifteen hundred thousand—but all would not do; the fairest states are subject to change in their greatest flourish. {#Eze 31:18}

“ In se magna ruunt.; laetis hunc numina rebus

Crescendi posuere modum.”—Lucan.

And he was moved with choler against him.] Neither would he be pacified with promise of great gifts, and of part of the kingdom, and the marriage of his daughter.

And smote the ram.] By overthrowing the Persian armies in three main battles—at Granicum, at Issus, and at Arbela, not far from which is the mountain Nicatorium, {a} so called by Alexander, as a constant trophy of that famous victory.

And there was no power in the ram to stand before him.] In that last battle at Arbela, the whole power of Persia was overturned, and Darius Codomannus was slain by Bessus, one of his own captains. It is observed that great kingdoms often fall and are destroyed under such kings as are of the same name with the founders thereof. Darius here, for instance; so Philip of Macedon, and Philip the father of Perseus, the last king of that country; so Constantine the Great, and Constantine Palaeologus; Augustus and Augustulus, &c.

And stamped upon him,] i.e., After full conquest, he crowed, insulted, triumphed; at the instance of his concubine Thais, he caused the most goodly palace in the world at Persepolis to be set on fire.

{a} Νικατοριον ορος.—Strabo.

Ver. 8. Therefore the he-goat waxed very great.] The Greeks became lords of all; their emperor was Et re et nomine magnus, not called great for nought; he began to take upon him as a god, and would be counted son to Jupiter Hammon; he called for divine honours, and slew Callisthenes, his tutor, because he would not yield thereto. This intolerable pride was a sure forerunner of his fall; his heart swelled so fast that the case could no longer hold it, but cracked. The world was a cage or little ease to him, therefore is he soon turned out of it, and of heaven's darling made the disdain of all.

{a}

And when he was strong, the great horn was broken.] Surfeiting and drunkenness cast him into a fever, whereof he died in the flower of his youth and height of his enjoyments—such is the instability of earthly monarchs' worldly glory:

“ Magna repente raunt, summa cadunt subito.”

Being not unlike those flores horae, flowers of the hour, very pleasant for the time, but dead and withdrawn in a trice. The vanities of this life, saith one, {b} at our most need, and when we least think, quite forsake us, leaving even them that most sought after them, and most abounded in them, shrouded often times in the sheet of dishonour and shame. Great Alexander lay unburied thirty days together; his conquests above ground purchased him no title for habitation under ground. The like befell Pompey the Great, our William the Conqueror, and others of the like reputation.

And for it came up four notable horns,] i.e., Four potent princes, out of the shipwreck of his empire; which four, in process of time, came to two. {#Da 11:5,6}

{a} Alexander orbi magnus, Alexandro orbis angustus est. -Seneca, Athenaeus.

{b} Turkish History, 331.

Ver. 9. And out of one of them.] Out of the posterity of Seleucus, king of Syria.

Came forth a little horn.] This was Antiochus, surnamed Epiphanes, illustrious; Polybius called him Epimanes, the madman. He is here called a "little horn," because he was vile and base from the very first to the last of him; indeed, he was born a prince, but without a kingdom, a mere nullatenensis, till he became a usurper. He was sent for a hostage to Rome by his father, Antiochus the Great, whom the Romans had cudgelled into a treaty, taking away from him the best part of his kingdom. After his father's death, he stole away from Rome and seized upon the kingdom of Syria, casting out of it his nephew Demetrius, who was the rightful heir. Afterwards he got into his hands also the kingdom of Egypt, under colour of protector to his young nephew, Ptolemy Philometor; and being therehence discharged by the Romans, and made to answer Parebo, I will be gone, he went thence in a rage, and like a madman wreaked his teem, as we say, upon the poor Jews, playing the devil among them.

Toward the south,] i.e., Egypt,

And toward the east.] Persia, which he also conquered.

And toward the pleasant land,] i.e., Judea, called here Decus Capreolus, the delectable and desirable country, by reason of its great prerogatives. So #Eze 20:6 Ps 48:2.

Ver. 10. And it waxed great, even to the host of heaven.] Or, Against the host of heaven, so the Church militant is called. The saints are the world's great luminaries, yea, the only earthly angels, although wicked people count and call them the "filth and offscouring of all things."

And of the stars.] Such as shone in the light of holy doctrine; {#Re 1:10} persecutors' spite is specially against such. {#Zec 13:7}

Ver. 11. Yea, he magnified himself.] He extolled or extended himself, such was his insolence.

Even to (or against) the prince of the host.] Christ, the captain of his people's sufferings, and of their salvation. {#Heb 2:10} He bare a hostile spirit against the God of the Jews—such a hell hound hardly ever was born—casting him out of his place, and setting up in his room Jupiter Olympus—that is, the devil; he defaced also and burned up the books of the law, all he could light on. {#RAPC 1Ma 1:54-59}

Ver. 12. And an host was given him.] Or, The host was given over, for the transgression against the daily sacrifice. The Jews were grown to a great height of profaneness, even in Malachi's days, as is to be seen #Mal 1:1-3:15, and by this time, doubtless, they were become much worse; God therefore, for punishment, turned this tiger loose upon them.

And it cast down the truth to the ground.] The doctrine of truth, together with the professors thereof. The like whereunto is still done by the Romish antichrist, to whom some apply all this part of the chapter as the proper and genuine sense of the text. See the visions and prophecies of Daniel expounded by Mr Thomas Parker of Newbery, in New England, pp. 43, 44, &c.

And it practised, and prospered.] Wicked practices against religion may prosper for the time. {#Ac 12:1-3} It was therefore no good argument that the Earl of Derby used to George Marsh, martyr, telling him that the Dukes of Northumberland and of Suffolk, and other of the new persuasion, had ill luck, and were either put to death, or in danger so to be. And again, he rehearsed unto him the good hap of the queen's highness, and of those that held with her, and said that the Duke of Northumberland confessed so plainly. {a}

{a} Acts and Mon., 1421.

Ver. 13. And I heard one saint speaking,] i.e., One holy angel; for they are solicitous of God's glory, and sensitive to the saints' sufferings, whereof they would have a speedy end. And should not we be so too, weeping with those that weep, and rejoicing with those that rejoice?

And another saint said unto that certain saint which spake.] Anonymo illi qui loquebatur, so Piscator rendereth it; others, To the wonderful numberer who spake—i.e., who commanded Gabriel to declare the vision to Daniel. {#Da 8:16} This was Jesus Christ, the Wisdom and Word of God. He who knoweth all the secrets of his Father as perfectly as if they were numbered before him.

How long shall be the vision.] It appeareth, then, that angels know not all secrets, but that their knowledge is limited; they know not so much, but they would know more. {#Eph 3:10 1Pe 1:12}

Concerning the daily sacrifice.] The loss whereof was a just matter of lamentation to godly minds. See #Zep 3:18.

And the transgression of desolation.] Transgression is a land desolating evil. {#La 1:9}

And the host to be trodden under foot,] i.e., The professors of the truth were overturned; some by persuasion, others by persecution.

Ver. 14. And he said unto me.] Not to the angel, but to me, who should have proposed the question; the holy angel did it for me.

Unto two thousand and three hundred days.] Heb., To the evening and morning two thousand and three hundred—i.e., to so many natural days consisting of twenty-four hours, which in all do make up six years, three months, and twenty days. This point of skill Daniel here learneth of the wonderful numberer Christ, who hath all secrets in numerato, and will put a timely period to his people's afflictions. Not full seven years did they suffer here, much less seventy, as once in Babylon. How he moderateth the matter., see on #Re 2:10; how this prophecy was fulfilled, see #/RAPC 1Ma 1:12-14 2Ma 4:12-16 cf. 1Ma 4:52-45.

Ver. 15. And it came to pass, when I, even I Daniel.] Not another, as that black-mouthed Porphyry ^{a} slanderously affirmed, that not the prophet Daniel saw and uttered these prophecies so long before they happened, but another who lived after the reign of Antiochus wrote a history of things past, and entitled it falsely to Daniel, as a prophecy of things to come. Os durum! Harsh mouth.

Then, behold, there stood before me.] They who seriously and sedulously seek after divine knowledge, shall find means to attain unto it. {#Re 13:1}

Ver. 16. And I heard a man's voice.] This was the man Christ Jesus, the great doctor of his Church, and commander of angels, viro similis, quia incarnandus.

Make this man to understand.] Angels and ministers make men to understand secrets, "give the knowledge of salvation to God's people," {#Lu 1:77} not by infusion, but by instruction.

Ver. 17. So he came near where I stood.] Let our obedience be like that of the angels, prompt and present.

I was afraid.] Through human frailty and conscience of sin.

Understand, O son of man.] Ezekiel and Daniel only of all the prophets are so called; haply lest they should be "exalted above measure with the abundance of the revelations."

For at the time of the end shall be the vision,] i.e., That this vision of the daily sacrifice intermitted for so many years, and the abomination of desolation, the picture of Jupiter Olympus, set up in the sanctuary, shall be toward the end of the Greek monarchy.

Ver. 18. I was in a deep sleep.] In a prophetic ecstasy or trance, wherein I was laid up fast, losing for the time all manner of action and motion, that my soul might be more free to receive divine revelations.

But he touched me, and set me upright.] Heb., Made me stand upon my standing, who was yet all the while in a deep sleep. The touch of the angel kept him from reeling to and fro, and made him stand firmly.

Ver. 19. In the last end of the indignation.] In the final end of the Greek persecution, which shall not pass the Lord's appointed time.

Ver. 20. The ram which thou sawest.] See #Da 8:3.

Ver. 21. And the rough goat.] Hirtus hircus. See on #Da 8:5.

Ver. 22. Now that being broken.] See #Da 8:8.

Ver. 23. And in the latter time of their kingdom.] In the one hundred and thirty-seventh year of the Greek monarchy.

When the transgressors are come to the full.] Heb., Are accomplished; when the Jews are grown stark naught. This was the reason why God set over them such a breathing devil, as was Antiochus, for a punishment of their open impiety and formal apostasy. When Phocas the traitor had slain Mauritius the emperor, there was an honest poor man, saith Cedrenus, who was earnest with God in prayer to know why that wicked man so prospered in his design; to whom answer was returned by a voice, that there could not be a worse man found and that the sins of Christians and of Constantinople did require it.

A king of fierce countenance.] Heb., Hard of face—that is, brazen faced, impudent, and withal acute, subtle (acutus et astutus), and of a deep reach. Antiochus, Julian, the Duke of Alva, were such.
Ver. 24. Not by his own power.] But by his policy rather, and by the perfidy of others. {#Da 11:23}

And he shall destroy wonderfully.] Mirificentissime. In three days he slew fourscore thousand in Jerusalem; forty thousand were put in bands, and as many sold.

And shall prosper, and practice.] Shall do whatsoever he wishes; as if he were some petty god within himself.

And shall destroy the mighty.] So the Jews are called, because stout and undaunted, and while they kept close to God, insuperable; as when otherwise, weak as water. See #Ho 13:1. {See Trapp on "Ho 13:1"}

And the holy people.] Federally holy at least.

Ver. 25. And through his policy also.] Incumbens intelligentiae suae, leaning on his own wit, Versutulus et versatilis, and that great elixir called reason of state, which can make, for a need,

“ Candida de nigris, et de candentibus atra.”

And by peace shall destroy many.] Undo them by promises of prosperity and preferment, which are dangerous baits; {#Mr 4:9} "they were sawn asunder, they were tempted." {#Heb 11:37} Julian the apostate went this way to work, and prevailed to make many apostates.

He shall also stand up against the Prince of princes.] God Almighty, by destroying the daily sacrifices, and by setting up idolatry in the temple.

But he shall be broken without hand,] i.e., By the visible vengeance of God, {#RAPC 1Ma 6:8-13 2Ma 9:5-11} who laid upon him a loathsome disease (Tetro morbo), and wrapped him up in the sheet of shame.

Ver. 26. And the vision of the evening.] See #Da 8:14. Lyra by the "morning" would have understood the time of Antiochus; by the "evening" the time of antichrist, who was prefigured by Antiochus.

Is true.] Heb., Truth, and so plain that I need say no more of it.

Wherefore shut thou up the vision.] Keep it to thyself in sacred silence, and reserve it in writing for posterity. See #Da 12:4-9 Isa 8:16.

For it shall be for many days,] i.e., For about three hundred years hence. The Lord would have visions concealed till toward the accomplishment.

Ver. 27. And I Daniel fainted, and was sick.] So deeply affected was he with the vision, and should we be with the word preached; it should work upon our very bowels, and go to the hearts of us. {#Jer 4:19 Ac 2:37}

Afterwards I rose up, and did the king's business.] viz., King Belshazzar's, with whom, though he was out of grace, yet not out of office under him, and will not therefore be indiligent. Malo mihi male esse, quam molliter, {a} Let us not neglect the work of the Lord, though less able to perform it. A sick child's service is doubly accepted.

But none understood it.] Daniel disguised his sorrow for Zion before scorers. {#Es 5:1} Taciturnity is no contemptible virtue.

{a} Seneca.

Chapter 9

Ver. 1. In the first year of Darius,] i.e., Of Darius Priseus, who, together with Cyrus the Persian, took Babylon, and with it the kingdom or monarchy of the Chaldeans, {#Da 5:31} by the consent of Cyrus, who married his daughter, and had the kingdom of Media with her for a dowry, after Darius' death, as Xenophon {a} testifieth.

The son of Ahasuerus.] Called Cyaxares by the Greek historians. Both these names signify a great prince, an emperor; like as now we say the Great Turk, the Great Cham of Cacaia, &c.

{a} Cyrop., lib. viii.

Ver. 2. I Daniel understood by books.] Consideravi in libris. Daniel was a great student in the Scriptures, and well knew that there was no readier way to speed in heaven than by putting the promises in suit. The like also was done by Jacob; {#Ge 32:9,12} {See Trapp on "Ge 32:9"} {See Trapp on "Ge 32:12"} {#2Sa 7:19,25} by Eliah, {#IKi 18:42-44} and others. If we speak in our prayers no otherwise than the Lord doth in his promises, there shall be a sweet concert of voice, begun by the Spirit in the promises, seconded in the spirit of faith by the saints' prayers, and answered by God in his gracious providences. Daniel here took this course; and had not only what he begged, but a revelation concerning the Lord Christ beyond expectation.

Ver. 3. And I set my face unto the Lord God,] i.e., Toward the habitation of his holiness at Jerusalem, but especially in heaven. I looked up unto the hills from whence I looked for help. This Daniel did daily, {#Da 6:10} but now with more than ordinary intention and devotion he presenteth δεησις ενεργουμενη, an inwrought prayer (as St James calleth it, #Jas 5:16), edged with fasting and downright humiliation. He doubteth not thereby to set God to work, as David did {#Ps 119:126} He knew that a long look toward God speedeth, {#Ps 34:4,5 Jon 2:4 7} how much more an extraordinary prayer!

Ver. 4. And I prayed unto the Lord my God, and made my confession.] The saints themselves, when they sin against God, are suspended from the covenant; hence it is their custom when they seek the Lord for any special mercy, to begin with humble confessions, as doth David, Ezra, Daniel.

O Lord, the great and dreadful God.] It is good in the beginnings of our prayers to propound God to ourselves under such attributes and spiritual notions as wherein we may see the very thing we pray for. Haec est ars orandi et mendicandi.

Ver. 5. We have sinned, and have committed iniquity, and have done wickedly, and have rebelled.] Mark how full in the mouth the good prophet is, and how he exaggerateth, confessing against himself and his people, laying on load. Good men extenuate not their offences; every sin swelleth as a toad in their eyes.

Ver. 6. Neither have we hearkened.] Sins of omission are in a special manner to be lamented in prayer; {#Jer 9:1,10,13} for as omission of diet breedeth diseases, so of duties.

Ver. 7. O Lord, righteousness belongeth unto thee.] Let God be justified in all his judgments; say of him as in #De 32:4; -"A God of truth, and without iniquity; just and right is he."

But unto us confusion of faces] {a} While we look upon flagitia aequae ac flagella nostra, our sins and miseries, we cannot but blush and bleed before thee.

{a} Deo da claritatem, tibi humilitatem. -Aug.

Ver. 8. O Lord, to us belongeth confusion of face.] The same again is acknowledged, not without a special emphasis, q.d., We are extremely abashed and abased to the utmost.

Ver. 9. To the Lord our God belong mercies and forgivenesses.] Matchless mercies, pardons ready prepared for poor penitents, not for proud Pharisees, such as Bellarmine was, if at least it be true that is reported of him, that when the priest came to absolve him, he could not remember any particular sin to confess, till he went back in his thoughts as far as his youth. Vae hominum vitae quantumvis laudabili, saith an ancient: Woe to the best, unless they may find mercy with the Lord. And Fuligat telleth us that Bellarmine, when he came to die indeed, begged of God to reckon him among his saints, non aestimator meriti, sed veniae largitor; not weighing his merits, but pardoning his offences.

Ver. 10. Neither have we obeyed.] See on #Da 9:6.

The voice of the Lord our God] It is the Lord who speaketh in and by his ministers. This because men either know not or weigh not, they run another way when God calleth to them, as young Samuel did. {#ISa 3:5}

Ver. 11. Yea, all Israel.] There is a general defection; the whole body of Israel hath deeply revolted, a rabble of rebels have taken up arms against heaven, even a giant-like generation.

Therefore the curse.] Confirmed by oath, by adjuration, and execration.

Is poured upon us.] As by whole pailfuls. The Vulgate hath it, Stillavit super nos maledictio, The curse hath dropped upon us. There may be much poison in little drops howsoever.

Because we have sinned against him.] This he hath never done with, but still holdeth his finger on this sore, as his greatest grievance.

Ver. 12. And he hath confirmed his words.] What he had spoken with his mouth he hath fulfilled with his hand. There is an infallibility, as in God's promises, so in his menaces.

And against our judges.] By whose remissness all was out of order; hence they smarted before and above others.

For under the whole heaven.] This verse is an abridgment of Jeremiah's Lamentations.

Ver. 13. All this evil is come upon us.] But unless God set in and sanctify, his hammers (afflictions) do but beat upon cold iron. {#Jer 2:30}

Yet made we not our prayer.] Little or no right prayer was made by the captives all those seventy years (and yet they had their set yearly fasts, #Zec 7:1-5), because they failed therein both quoad fontem et quoad finem. {See Trapp on "Zec 7:5"}

That we might turn from our iniquities.] This they had no mind to, therefore they lost those prayers they made; they fasted to themselves and not to God (#Zec 7:5. See on #Joh 3:10).

And understand thy truth.] Those that turn from their iniquities shall know more of God's truth. The pure in heart shall see God. {#Mt 5:8}

Ver. 14. Therefore hath the Lord watched upon the evil.] To bring it at the just time, and when it might do us most mischief, but all in a way of justice, {#Isa 31:2} as Daniel acknowledgeth in the next words.

For the Lord our God is righteous.] See #Da 9:7.

For we obeyed not his voice.] Neither that of his word nor that of his rod. {#Jer 31:19 Mic 6:9 Isa 9:13,14}

Ver. 15. And now, O Lord God, that hast brought thy people.] Thanksgiving is an artificial begging; and every former mercy is a pledge of a future. {#2Ch 20:10 7:12}

And hast gotten thee renown.] Heb., Made thee a name, and yet a greater name hast promised to make thee by bringing us back from Babylon. {#Jer 16:15}

We have sinned, we have done wickedly.] Such as desire mercies, must first deny their worthiness of them, {#2Sa 5:18} confessing their sins with utmost aggravation.

Ver. 16. O Lord, according to all thy righteousness.] Not that of equity, but the other of fidelity. {#1Jo 1:9}

Thy holy mountain.] So Jerusalem is called, because dedicated to the Holy One; who also chose it for the seat of his royal residence, the place of his holy oracle.

Thy people are a reproach.] And this reflecteth upon thee, as needs it must, since they do quarter arms with thee.

Ver. 17. Now therefore, O our God.] Since thou hast shown us our sins, and seen our reproach, whereof we are sure thou art very sensible. {#Ps 79:4}

Hear the prayer of thy servant.] Who assumeth the boldness to plead his interest in thee, and his relation to thee.

And his supplications.] Which are nothing else but prayers redoubled and reinforced, {as #Ge 32:11 Isa 63:16}

And cause thy face to shine upon thy sanctuary.] Do it, oh do it now; for "the time to favour Zion, yea, the set time is come." And this I can tell, because "thy servants take pleasure in her stones, and favour the dust thereof." {#Ps 102:13,14; see the notes there} That whole psalm, being "A prayer for the afflicted," may seem to have been made by this prophet Daniel.

For the Lord's sake,] i.e., For thine own sake, or for thy Son Christ's sake, the mediator and advocate of his people: for so he was in the Old Testament also, {#Heb 9:15} like as still he is the high priest of the New. And while the people were praying outside, the priest was offering incense within the temple, {#Lu 1:9,10} so is Christ interceding for us while we are praying. "Whatsoever therefore ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him." {#Col 3:17}

Ver. 18. O my God, incline thine ear and hear; open thine eyes, and behold, &c.] Thus growing to a conclusion of his prayer he prays more earnestly: he stretcheth out his petitions, as it were, εκτενης, upon the tenters, with those good souls in #Ac 12:5; he stirreth up himself and taketh better hold, as resolved not to let him go without the blessing. The like, before him, did good Hezekiah, with whom he concurreth in the very letter of his request. {#Isa 37:17} {See Trapp on "Isa 37:17"}

For our own righteousnesses.] Which are nothing better than a rotten rag, a menstruous clout, such as a man would not deign to take up or touch.

But for thy great mercies.] Through the merits of the promised Messiah.

Ver. 19. O Lord, hear; O Lord, forgive.] This was to pray, yea, this was to strive in prayer; {#Lu 13:12} to strive, as those of old did, in the Grecian exercises, some whereof were with fists and bats; to strive and struggle, even to an agony, as the Greek word signifieth, and as the Lord Christ did, who, "being in an agony, prayed yet the more earnestly"; {εκτενεσθερον, #Lu 22:44} he sweat and sweltered out, as it were, his soul, through his body in prayer. Be we now "followers herein of Christ as dear children," and of Daniel here, who is a worthy pattern to pray by. Cold suitors, who want the aspiration of the spirit to pronounce Shibboleth, do but beg a denial.

O Lord, hearken and do; defer not.] This is coelum tundere, preces fundere, misericordiam extorquere, {a} as those primitive

Christians did; to bounce at heaven gates, to tug hard with God, to wring the blessing out of his hands, who looks to be importuned, and counts it for a kindness to be asked forgiveness, as Ambrose {b} saith of Theodosius the emperor.

{a} Tertul.

{b} Beneficium se putabit accepisse, cum rogaretur ignoscere. -Ambr., Orat. de Exit. Theod.

Ver. 20. And whilst I was speaking and praying.] When, haply, I had now new done; and yet not so done but that my heart was yet lifting and lifting, as a bell rope is oft hoising up after men have done ringing the bell.

And confessing my sins.] So precious a saint was not without his sins. These therefore he confesseth, that he might be the fitter to beg mercy for the Church; having first made his own peace with God, and so in case to lift up "pure hands" in prayer. The like doth David.

{#Ps 26:6 51:7}

For the holy mountain of my God.] This was his main request, and to God marvellously acceptable. Surely if the Lord saw us, Daniel-like studying his share more than our own, we might have what we would, and God even think himself beholden to us, as one phraseth it.

Ver. 21. Yea; whilst I was speaking in prayer.] This he recogniseth and celebrateth as a sweet and singular mercy. God sometimes heareth his people before they pray; {#Isa 65:24 Ps 21:3} David was sure up early when he anticipated the Lord with his prayer; {#Ps 88:13 119:147} sometimes while they are praying, as he did those in #Ac 4:31 12:5,17, and Luther, who came leaping oat of his study, where he had been praying, with Vicimus, Vicimus, in his mouth that is, we have gained the day, got the conquest; but if not so, yet certainly when they have now prayed. {#Isa 30:12 Jon 2:1 Jer 33:3 Mt 6:7} Luther {a} affirmeth that he often got more spiritual light by some one ardent prayer than ever he could do by the reading of many books, or by most accurate meditation thereupon.

Even the man Gabriel,] i.e., The angel Gabriel in man's shape.

Whom I had seen in the vision.] And whom I had good cause to remember the longest day of my life for the good offices he had done me formerly.

Being caused to fly swiftly.] Heb., With weariness of flight. Not that the angels flee as fowls—though a certain friar, a liar certainly, undertook to show to the people a feather of the angel Gabriel’s wings—or that they are ever wearied with speeding God’s commissions and commands for the Church’s good; Sed datur hoc assumptae speciei, but these things are spoken to our apprehension. According to the account of astronomers, it must be above a hundred and sixty millions of miles from heaven to earth. All this space the angel came flying to Daniel in a little time.

Touched me.] With a familiar touch, in token of encouragement; prensando mimum, ut solent qui contactu familiari promptam benevolamque mentem indicant.

About the time of the evening oblation.] When the joint prayers of God’s people were wont to come up before him, quasi manu facta; and Daniel hopeth they may do so again. Qui nihil sperat, nihil orat. He who hopes for nothing, asks for nothing.

{a} Ipse ego in una aliqua ardenti oratione mea plura saepe didici quam ex multorum librorum lectione aut accuratissima meditatione consequi potuissem. -Tom. i.

Ver. 22. And he informed me, and talked with me.] Rather than the saints shall want information and comfort, God will spare one out of his own train to do them any good office; {#Lu 1:19 Ga 3:19} neither will the greatest angel in heaven grudge to serve them.

I am now come forth to give thee skill.] Not by infusion, for so the Holy Ghost only, but by instruction, as was before noted. It is well observed by one, that this following oration of the angel containeth an abridgment of the New Testament, and a light to the Old; for confirming Daniel, as touching the ensuing deliverance out of Babylon’s captivity, he further advertiseth and assureth him of the spiritual deliverance which Christ shall effect by his gospel at his coming; and therefore, describing the times most accurately, he plainly setteth forth the salvation of the Church Christian, and the destruction of the stubborn and rebellious Jews, who judge themselves unworthy of eternal life.

Ver. 23. At the beginning of thy supplications.] Thy prayer was scarce in thy mouth ere it was in God's ear. The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and his ears are open unto their cry. {#Ps 34:15} {See Trapp on "Ps 34:15"} He heard at the very first, but answered not till Daniel had tugged with him. See #Jas 5:16,17.

For thou art greatly beloved.] {a} Kimchi readeth it, A man of measures, a man every inch of thee. But the word is not Hamiddoth, but Chamudoth, 'a man of desires,' a favourite in heaven, because desirous of things truly desirable. {b} Christ is said to be totus totas desiderabilis, lovely all over. {#So 5:16} The saints are also so in their measure, as on the contrary the wicked are not desired, {#Zep 2:1} but loathed and abhorred. {#Pr 13:5}

Therefore understand the matter.] Good men shall know God's secrets. {#Ge 18:17,19 Ps 25:14}

{a} Desideratissimus es. -Trem.

{b} Rerum expetendarum cupidus. -Vatab.

Ver. 24. Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people,] i.e., Seventy weeks of years; ten jubilees, which make up four hundred and ninety years. Thus the very time is here particularly foretold when the Messiah should be revealed and put to death. The like hereunto is not to be found in any other of the prophets, as Jerome well observeth. This, therefore, is a noble prophecy, and many great wits have been exercised about it. Cornelius a Lapide speaketh of one learned gentleman who ran out of his wits, after many years' study upon it. The doctors are much divided about the beginning and ending of these seventy weeks. "From the outgoing of the word," {#Da 9:25} seemeth to me to fix the beginning of these weeks on Cyrus's decree concerning the holy city and the temple to be rebuilding. The end and period of them must he at the death of Christ, though some will have it at the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans. I choose rather thus to compute than to dispute. It is well observed by the learned that the Jews, after their seventy years' captivity, have seven seventies of years granted for the enjoying of their own country (God's mercies bear the same proportion to his punishments which seven—a complete number—have to n unit), besides the mercy of mercies, the grace of the Messiah.

Upon thy people.] Of whose welfare thou art so solicitous and inquisitive.

To finish the transgression.] Transgressionem illam; that great transgression of our first parents in paradise; that whereby sin entered into the world, and death by sin. {#Ro 5:12} Now Christ, by his death, took away the power, and destroyed the dominion of all sin. {#Ro 6:11,12}

And to make an end of sins.] Heb., To seal up sins, that they come not into God's sight against us, ever to be charged upon us. A metaphor, say some, from the Jews' manner of writing in rolls, which, being wrapped up, and sealed on the backside, all the writing was covered.

And to make reconciliation for iniquity,] viz., By the expiatory and propitiatory sacrifice of himself for his elect, whereby the divine justice is fully satisfied.

And to bring in everlasting righteousness.] Those "righteousnesses of the saints," {#Re 19:8} both imputed and imparted righteousness, called here "everlasting," as that which shall make the saints accepted of God for ever, never can be lost as Adam's was.

And to seal up the vision and prophecy,] i.e., To fulfil all the prophetic predictions concerning the life and death of the Lord Christ.

And to anoint the most holy.] This was done when Christ was baptized, say some; but others better, when he ascended into heaven, consecrating it to the service of God therein to be performed by the elect throughout all eternity; like as Moses once consecrated the most holy place to the ceremonial service there to be performed by the high priest.

Ver. 25. Know, therefore, and understand.] See on #Da 9:24. Here the angel brancheth the whole seventy sevens into three heads, or into three distinct periods of time.

Shall be seven weeks.] Which make forty-nine years. These the angel purposely speaketh of apart, because they chiefly concerned the reparation of the city made under the Persian monarchy. Within this first seven weeks, or forty-nine years, the street of Jerusalem was rebuilt, and the wall with trench, though the times proved troublous, and full of straits.

And threescore and two weeks.] Which make four hundred thirty-four years, the events of which are mentioned {#Da 9:26} as those of the seven years following, {#Da 9:27} out of which it might easily be supplied, and is therefore here omitted by the angel.

Ver. 26. And after threescore and two weeks.] See on #Da 9:25. Within these threescore and two weeks befell the Jews many memorable things, as may be seen in #Da 8 Da 11.

Shall Messiah be cut off.] Excindetur; not abscindetur; cut off—that is, by wicked hands crucified and slain; {#Ac 2:23} not only cast out of the synagogue, and excommunicated, as that malicious Rabbi read and sensed this text. Others of the Jewish doctors, by the evidence of these words, have been compelled to confess that Messiah is already come, and that he was that Jesus whom their forefathers crucified. See for this R. Samuel's Epistle to R. Isaak, set down at large by Dionys. Carthus. in his commentary on this text. See also R. Osea's lamentation for this inexpiable guilt of the Jewish nation, recorded by Galatinus, lib. iv. cap. 18. Polanus reporteth that he, living some time in Moravia, where he used the help of some Rabbis for the understanding of the Hebrew tongue, heard them say, that for this ninth chapter's sake, they acknowledged not Daniel to be authentic, and therefore read it not among the people, lest hereby they should be turned to Christ, finding out how they had been by them deceived.

But not for himself,] i.e., Not for any fault of his, nor yet for any good to himself, but to mankind; whence some render these words, Et non sibi vel nihil ei, There being nothing therein for him: others,

When he shall have nothing, i.e., nothing more to do at Jerusalem, but shall utterly relinquish it, and call his people out of it to Pella, &c.

And the people of the prince that shall come,] i.e., Titus's soldiers, whose rage he himself could not repress, but they would needs burn down the temple, which he would fain have preserved, as one of the world's wonders. {a} Messiah the prince had a hand in it doubtless, whence also those Roman forces are called his armies.

{#Mt 22:7}

Shall destroy the city.] That slaughter house of the saints.

And the sanctuary.] That den of thieves.

And the end thereof shall be with a flood,] i.e., Their extirpation shall be sudden, universal, irresistible, as was Noah's flood. How this was fulfilled, see Josephus, Hegesippus, Eusebius, &c.

And unto the end of the war, &c.] The Romans shall have somewhat to do; but after tedious wars, they shall effect it.

{a} Joseph.

Ver. 27. And he (Messiah) shall confirm the covenant {see #Da 9:24} with many.] Heb., With his Rabbis, that is, with his elect. Compare #Isa 53:11 Job 32:9 Jer 41:2.

For one week,] i.e., In the last seven years of the seventy.

And in the midst of the week,] i.e., In three years and a half he shall, by his passion, disannul the Jewish sacrifices and services.

And for the overspreading (or wing) of abominations,] i.e., For the abominable outrages committed by the seditious Jews, those zealots, as they called themselves, who filled the temple with dead bodies. Others, from #Mt 24:15,16 cf. Lu 20:20,21, think the Romans to be meant, who set up their eagles (their ensigns) in the temple, together with the images, first of Caligula, and then of Titus, their emperors.

Even until the consummation.] Until the end, and to the utmost. The Jews have often attempted, but could never yet recover their country, nor are like to do. Perpetua et consummatissima consumptione urgentur.

Shall be poured.] As if the windows of heaven were opened, as once they were at the flood. See #Da 9:26.

Chapter 10

Ver. 1. In the third year of Cyrus, king of Persia.] This whole chapter is but a preface to the ensuing prophecy, or visional prediction, recorded in the two following chapters. It beginneth at the third year of Cyrus's empire, and reacheth till the time of the Jews rising from the dust of their dispersion, say some; to the end of the world, say others, with whom I concur.

A thing was revealed unto Daniel.] Who now must needs be very old, yet at those years (a hundred or more) gave himself to understand and search into divine secrets. The more any one knoweth of God, the more he would still know. Moses, newly come from the mount, crieth to God to show him his glory. David, that gulf of holy learning, is often at his, Teach me thy statutes, &c.

And the thing was true,] i.e., Plain and proper; not, as former visions, figurative and obscure.

But the time appointed was long,] scil., Till all be fulfilled, which will not be till the last judgment.

And he understood the thing.] And so was the better able to propound it to the Church; for what a man doth not himself understand, he cannot well and fitly deliver to others.

And had understood the vision,] scil., Given unto him; for unless God give us both sight and light, we perceive not heavenly doctrine, neither indeed can do.

Ver. 2. In those days I Daniel was mourning.] Though a great man still, and in great account, yet not now so great at court as to hinder and defeat the malicious designs of Cambyses's counsellors; who, being bribed by the Jews' adversaries, put a stop to the temple work at Jerusalem. {#Ezr 4:1-4} This disaster cast good Daniel into his dumps, so that he fasted three full weeks, a tanto et tali, sed non a toto, and longer might, had not the angel taken him off by an answer of peace. {#Da 10:12} Abstinet ab omni cura cultuque corporis, sua sponte. See the like, #1Sa 31:13.

Three full weeks.] Heb., Weeks of days, to distinguish them from those seventy weeks of years. {#Da 9:24}

Ver. 3. I ate no pleasant bread.] Bread he ate, for animantis cuiusque vita in fuga est, life will fail if not maintained by food, but coarse bread panem cibarium, atrum, et siligineum, and no more of that either than needs must. He voluntarily abridged himself of lawful delights, macerating and mortifying his flesh, that he might communicate with his poor afflicted brethren, and pray the harder for them. Fasting inflameth prayer, and prayer sanctifieth fasting.

Neither did I anoint myself at all.] All delights of sense must be laid aside in a time of solemn humiliation, but yet without annoyance and uncomeliness, as music, mirth, perfumes, brave apparel; {#2Sa 12:20 Joh 3:8 Ex 33:4-6 1Ki 21:27} cheerfulness, outward joy, and pleasure (#Mr 2:20 Lu 5:35 cf. Mt 9:15 Jud 20:26 1Sa 7:6). It is spoken of as a foul sin; #Isa 58:3, "Behold in the day of your fast ye find pleasure."

Ver. 4. And on the four and twentieth of the first month.] The day is thus noted, because the matters here revealed were most memorable.

As I was by the side of the great river.] Meditating likely, because the city was full of noise and tumult, and praying. {as #Ac 16:13} Broughton giveth this reason, because Seleucus Nicator, founder of the Seleucidae, much spoken of in the ensuing vision, built his chief city upon this river.

Which is Hiddekel,] i.e., Sharp swift; called also Tigris, from the swiftest of all beasts, the tiger; but Curtius and Pliny ^{a} say, that Tigris in the Median language signifieth an arrow. Here Daniel was personally present, and not visionally only. See #Da 10:7.

^{a} Plin, lib. vi. cap. 7.

Ver. 5. Then I lifted up mine eyes, and looked,] viz., After my long fasting, praying, and meditating. So Moses and Elias, those great fasters, met together with our Saviour gloriously in the mount at his transfiguration. It is abstinence, not fulness, that makes a man capable of heavenly visions of divine glory.

Behold a certain man.] Heb., One man; a singular man, a glorious person; Messiah the prince, described here by his habit and parts as a judge, say some, or as a priest, say others. See #Da 12:6,7 Re 1:13-15 10:5.

Clothed in linen.] To show his innocence and purity, as also his righteousnesses, imputed and imparted, wherewith he clotheth his saints, ^{#Re 19:8} that fine white linen and shining.

Whose loins were girded with fine gold of Uphaz.] Or, Of Ophir; Peru, haply, or Malaca, or Sopbala. This golden girdle about his loins denoteth Christ's strength and alacrity. ^{#Ps 93:1 Lu 17:8}

Ver. 6. His body also was like the beryl.] Of an azure colour, like the heavens. The "second Adam is the Lord from heaven." ^{#1Co 15:47} Some render it the chrysolite, which is of the colour of the sea; to note, say they, his power to purge the Church by his Word, Spirit, and judgments, as by the water of the sea.

And his face as the appearance of lightning.] Which both shineth and terrifieth, and soon appeareth from the one end of the heaven to the other; ^{#Mt 24:27} Christ suddenly discovereth all things though never so remote. ^{#Ps 90:8 Eze 1:13}

And his eyes as lamps of fire.] To note his omniscience, his wrath also and readiness to revenge. ^{#Jer 32:19}

And his arms and his feet like in colour to polished brass.] Scintillantes purissime. To note his omnipotence in the execution of his wrath while he trampleth on his enemies, as he that hath brazen arms and feet cart easily break in pieces a potter's vessel.

And the voice of his words like the voice of a multitude.] Strepitus -i.e., Maris. Or, As the noise of many waters, {#Re 1:15} noting the efficacy of Christ's doctrine. See #Ac 2:4.

Ver. 7. And I Daniel alone saw the vision.] Holy prophets alone are capable of holy visions. {#2Pe 1:19}

For the men that were with me saw not.] Sensible they were of some alteration upon the waters, and somewhat wrought upon; not for their information, but separation from Daniel, that he might more freely undergo the heavenly rapture. See the like, #Ac 9:7.

But a great quaking fell upon them.] Through sense of sin and fear of wrath. This served to show the truth of the vision.

Ver. 8. Therefore I was left alone.] Daniel, though much frightened, keepeth his station, when the rest fled and hid themselves. Good is the counsel of the apostle, #Heb 12:13, "Make straight steps unto your feet, lest that which is halting be turned out of the way; but let it rather be healed."

For my comeliness, &c.] See #Da 7:15,28 8:27.

Ver. 9. Yet heard I the voice of his words.] What these words were is not here expressed; but by comparing, they may be gathered to be the same with those, #Da 8:18, bidding Gabriel to draw near and speak unto the prophet.

Then was I in a deep sleep.] See #Da 8:18. The more the outward man is bound, the fitter he is for holy communion with God. {#2Co 12:2,3}

Ver. 10. And, behold, an hand touched me,] i.e., The hand of the angel Gabriel, who was sent by Christ to dictate unto Daniel the prophecy following. It is Christ's use to signify prophecies by his angel, {#Re 1:1,2} and this angel is accordingly strengthened by Michael {#Da 10:21} -that is, by Christ.

Which set me upon my knees.] In a praying posture; but yet he continued trembling, {#Da 10:11} and was not raised and restored but by certain degrees, the better to frame and fit him to a religious attention and docility.

Ver. 11. O Daniel, a man greatly beloved.] Such shall know God's secrets. {#Pr 3:32} See #Da 9:23.

Stand upright.] Heb., Stand upon thy standing. God by his grace and Word will raise up those that humble themselves in his presence.

“ Deiecit ut relevet.”

Ver. 12. Fear not, Daniel.] Disquieting and expectorating fears should be laid aside. {#1Jo 4:18}

For from the first day.] See on #Da 9:23. Let us but find a praying heart, and God will presently find a pitying heart, though he may delay for a season to send in an answer. Though Daniel heard nothing of his prayers for three weeks' time, yet was the angel at work all that while for the removal of impediments. Daniel in the meanwhile wrought hard with God, as it is elsewhere said of Jonathan. {#1Sa 14:45}

And I am come for thy word.] Brought hither by thy prayers. God will come, but he will have his people's prayers lead him into the field as it were.

Ver. 13. But the prince of the kingdom of Persia withstood me.] By this prince of Persia some understand wicked Cambyses. Others, {a} an evil angel, that by his suggestions swayed Cambyses to oppose and retard the rebuilding of the temple. There is a principal devil, prince of this world; and there are, as some hold, princes or principal spirits in countries and nations under him. {#Eph 6:12}

But, lo, Michael, one of the chief princes,] i.e., Christ the Lord of angels, head of the Church. {#Da 12:1 Re 12:7} By these chief princes may be understood the three persons in trinity, or the created angels. The Septuagint translate the word εὐσθουμωντων, the cheerful ones, who serve the Lord readily, freely, and joyfully in his wars; making Zion as dreadful to all her enemies, {#Ps 68:17} as those angels once made Sinai, at the delivery of the law.

And I remained there with the kings of Persia.] With Cambyses and his counsellors, to repress their rage, and to blast their designs against the Church; which, when it is opposed, the holy angels interpose. {#Ps 34:7}

{a} Melancthon, Osiander, Pappus.

Ver. 14. Now I am come.] As it were with weariness of flight. {as #Da 9:21} Comfort will come at length. {#Heb 10:37}

In the latter days.] Toward the end of their state, and not long before the coming of the Messiah, who shall begin another age, and as it were a new world. {#Eze 38:8 Heb 2:3}

Ver. 15. I set my face toward the ground, and I became dumb.] Coharrui totus, et vex faucibus haesit. See how deeply God's darlings are again affected at the hearing of his holy Word. {#Hab 3:16}

Ver. 16. And, behold, one like the similitude,] i.e., The angel in human shape. {as #Da 10:10}

Touched my lips.] Restored unto me my speech. Good affections wanting expression shall have God's furtherance.

And said unto him that stood before me,] i.e., To Christ, whom he had seen. {#Da 10:5,6}

My sorrows are turned upon me.] Heb., My bowels, which are even strained and straitened.

And I have retained no strength.] It is ordinary with God's people in their prayers to complain much of their own weakness. {#Jer 31:18}

Ver. 17. For how can the servant of this my lord.]. Qui tantulus sum, et tam imbecillus. God's praying servants use to speak as broken men. They well understand, (1.) Their distance; (2.) Dependence.

Talk with this my lord.] Prayer is a holy interparlance with the divine Majesty: εντευξις. {#1Ti 2:1}

Neither is there breath in me.] I am hardly able to bear up or breathe. Human frailty cannot endure God's presence without fainting. {#Re 1:17}

Ver. 18. Then there came again and touched me.] Not all at once, but by four degrees, was Daniel raised: (1.) He is set upon his knees and palms of his hands, {#Da 10:10} an emblem of prayer; (2.) He is caused to stand upon his feet, though trembling and silent; {#Da 10:11,15} (3.) His mouth is opened to speak, though not without much weakness, fears, and sorrows; {#Da 10:17} (4.) He is fully strengthened here. God loves to hold his praying people long in request. He is also "a God of judgment"—one that well understandeth when and how to bestow his favours; "Blessed are all they that wait for him." {#Isa 30:18}

Ver. 19. Be strong, yea, be strong.] Holy angels are ready to strengthen such as are ready to faint in holy duties.

Ver. 20. Knowest thou wherefore I come unto thee?] q.d., I told thee that before, {#Da 10:14} and I look thou shouldst remember it.

I will return to fight with the prince of Persia.] To defeat and prevent his tyranny and cruel intents against thy people, {see #Da 10:13} not without the devil's hand and help.

And when I am gone forth,] sc., Out of Persia.

Lo, the prince of Grecia.] Great Alexander, whom I will fetch in, so that the Persians shall have henceforth little leisure or mind to meddle with the Jews. There were other Grecian captains also before Alexander, who found the Persians somewhat to do, as Leonidas, Miltiades, Themistocles; but he overturned their monarchy.

Ver. 21. In the scripture of truth,] i.e., In God's infallible and unchangeable decree, which, for our apprehension, are here compared to court rolls and records, ex usu forensi. And God's providence, which is nothing else but the carrying on of his decree, is that helm which turneth about the whole ship of the universe.

And there is none...but Michael your prince.] But how many reckon we him at? as that king once said of himself to his fearful soldiers. He alone is a whole army of men, van and rear both. {#Isa 52:12}

Chapter 11

Ver. 1. Also I,] i.e., I, Gabriel the angel, glad of such an office, for the good of God's people, whereunto also I was sent by Christ. {#Da 10:9,10}

In the first year of Darius the Mede.] Who now began to think of sending home the captive Jews, but had some hesitations and fluctuations of mind about it.

I stood to confirm and to strengthen him.] Angels cannot enlighten the mind, or powerfully incline the will of man, for so the Holy Ghost only doth; but, as instruments of the Holy Ghost, they can stir up phantasms of the Word read or heard. They can also propose truth and right to the mind, advise and persuade to it as counsellors, and inwardly instigate as it were by speaking and doing after a spiritual manner, suggesting good thoughts, as devils do evil; yea, they can strangely wind themselves into men's imaginations, so as to appear to them in their dreams. {#Mt 1:20}

Ver. 2. And now I will show thee the truth.] The plain, naked truth, in proper and downright terms, dealing with thee more like a historian than a prophet. Truth is, like our first parents, most beautiful when naked.

Behold, there shall stand up yet three kings in Persia.] Three besides Darius, viz., Cyrus, Cambyses, and Darius Hystaspis; for as for Smerdis or the Magus, who took upon him to be the son of Cyrus, and usurped the throne after Cambyses for six months, the holy angel holds him not worth naming. {a}

And the fourth shall be far richer than they all.] This was Xerxes, who was called the hoarder of his kingdom, like as his father Darius had been called the huckster, regni caupo, the huckster of the kingdom, for his unmeasurable riches gathered out of all the East, and prepared for the war against Greece.

And when he shall be strengthened by his riches.] Which were never true to those that trusted them.

He shall stir up all.] He shall bring into the field a million of men, and cover the seas with his ships, thinking to bear down all before him; but was shamefully defeated by the Grecians, and forced in a small fishing boat to get back into Asia, where, falling into inordinate lust and cruelty, he was killed by Artabanus, and left this war hereditary to his successors, until the ruin of the Persian kingdom by great Alexander, of whom in the next verse.

{a} Herodot, in Thalia.

Ver. 3. But a mighty king shall stand up.] Alexander the Great, the founder of the Greek monarchy; who, with thirty thousand footmen, and five thousand horsemen, overran and subdued a great part of the habitable world. See #Da 8. The devil, by his oracles, foretold him of his victories, having stolen his skill out of this prophecy of Daniel.

Ver. 4. And when he shall stand up.] And seemeth to be best underlaid, set to live, as we say, when he standeth on his best bottom, expecting ambassadors at Babylon from all the world, requiring divine honours from his Grecians, and enjoining the Jews that their dates should be taken from his reign, and that all the priests' sons born that year should be called Alexanders.

His kingdom shall be broken.] As brittle ware is apt to be.

And shall be divided toward the four winds.] Sic transit gloria mundi. So fleeting is the fame of the world. Fitly compared to the wind, {as #Da 2:35} to a dream, to a shadow, to a dream of a shadow. Great Alexander's kingdom was first broken into many pieces by twelve of his princes, until, eleven years after his death, it became quadripartite, &c. Here is foretold being divided among four of his chieftains, Cassander, Antigonus, Seleucus, and Ptolemy, till at length these two last got all into their hands, and yet were ever jarring and warring, as appeareth by what here followeth.

And not to his posterity.] For all his kindred were killed by Cassander, with whom it happened accordingly.

Nor according to his dominion.] For although they were all sovereign princes, yet they fell far short of Alexander in command and warlike fame. {#Da 8:22}

Ver. 5. And the king of the south shall be strong.] Ptolemy, king of Egypt, together with his whole family, line, and race, the Lagidae, shall be eminently strong; and a great enemy he was to the poor Jews, as Josephus {a} explains.

And one of his princes,] i.e., Of Alexander's princes, meaning Seleucus Nisanor, king of Syria, together with his house and line, called the Seleucidae.

And he shall be strong above him,] i.e., Stronger than Ptolemy, and that the poor Church shall feel; for Judea lay between these two potent princes, and was therefore beaten on both sides. Perinde ac isthmus inter duo maria interiacens, or as bread grain ground between two millstones. This was here foretold, and much more, three hundred years before it happened, that we may know that there is an omnipotent and omniscient majesty, who decreeth and doeth whatsoever himself pleaseth.

His dominion shall be a great dominion,] viz., As long as it will hold. Besides Syria and Babylon, Seleucus had more of Asia than ever any had but only Alexander. So our Henry VI, till deposed, had been the most potent monarch for dominions that ever England had; yet afterwards he was not the master of a mole hill, nor owner of his own liberty, as hath been said before.

{a} Antiq., lib. xii. cap. 1.

Ver. 6. And in the end of years.] In process of time, after that these two kings had sufficiently worried and wearied out one another in bloody wars.

They shall join themselves together.] Heb., Shall associate themselves, viz., in a friendly amity, and shall make interchangeable marriages, but to little purpose, as it proved. So Calo Joannes, the Christian emperor of Trebizond, gave his daughter Despina in marriage to Usuncassanes, king of Persia, but with ill success; for he soon after lost his empire. {a}

For the king's daughter of the south.] Bernice, or, as others call her, Berenice or Beronice, i.e., the daughter of innocence or purity, the daughter Ptolemy Philadelph so called for that he married his own sister, and therefore his daughter Beronice was not rightly named. {b}

Shall come to the king of the north.] To Antiochus Theos, king of Syria, so the Milesians first surnamed him, because he had driven out their tyrant Timarch, and he took it upon him, to his utter undoing; for this god was afterwards poisoned by his wife, Laodice. {c}

To make an agreement.] Marriages made in policy, to serve dishonest ends, are ever of ill success. {#1Sa 18:21,28}

But she shall not retain the power of the arm.] Her interest in her husband, her queendom, and her life were soon after lost. She was not sent home again, as Anne of Cleves was here, but sent out of the world, together with her son and all her retinue, by Laodice, whom Appian maketh to be her own sister; but that is not likely.

Neither shall he stand,] i.e., Antiochus Theus, who was poisoned by his jealous wife—a just punishment from a "jealous God."

Nor his arm.] His young son by Bernice.

And he that begat her.] Her father, Ptolemy Philadelph, who died soon after.

{a} Turkish History, 464.

{b} Junius.

{c} Pausan., Appian.

Ver. 7. But out of the branch of her roots.] One of her stock; her own brother both by father and mother.

Shall one stand up in his estate.] Ptolemy Euergetes shall succeed his father Philadelph; and making war against Seleucus Callinicus, son of Antiochus Theos by Laodice, in revenge of his sister Bernice's death, shall prevail on and overrun the greatest part of Callinicus's kingdom.

Ver. 8. And shall also carry captive their gods.] Goodly gods they were the while, and likely to defend their worshippers! He brought back also the Egyptian idols, carried away by Cambyses, rather in scorn of all religion than hatred of idolatry, and was thereupon called by that superstitious people, Euergetes, that is, Benefactor. See #Lu 22:25.

Ver. 9. So the king of the south shall come into his kingdom.] Called out of Syria by a commotion at home, the Parthians invading Egypt; but he soon quelled them, and quieted his own country. Josephus ^{a} writeth that this Ptolemy Euergetes, in his return out of Syria, went to Jerusalem, and in thankfulness to the God of the Jews, offered his oblations at the temple there. Of his father Philadelphus also he reporteth, that he redeemed one hundred and twenty thousand Jews that were slaves in Egypt, and sent them home, and bestowed many rich gifts upon the temple at Jerusalem. ^{b}

^{b} Antiq., lib. ii. cap. 2.

Ver. 10. But his sons.] Callinicus's sons—viz., Seleucus, Ceraunus, and Antiochus Magnus, quasi duo fulmina belli.

Shall be stirred up.] As not enduring that Ptolemy Philopator, son of Euergetes, should possess any part of Syria under their noses.

Shall assemble a multitude of great forces.] Seventy thousand footmen, and fifty thousand horsemen, saith Polybius. ^{a}

And one shall certainly come.] One, not both; because Ceraunus, who seemed to be as swift and as irresistible as lightning, and therehence had his name, ^{b} was slain by Nicanor, so that Antiochus the Great was king alone.

And shall overflow and pass through.] To wit, against the captains of Ptolemy in Syria, Attalus, and Theodatus.

And he shall be stirred up, even to his fortress.] To Ptolemy's fortress, or fortified city, Raphia, which lieth in the entrances of Egypt, saith Jerome.

{a} Lib. v.

{b} Ceraunias id est fulmineus: quod audaci et veloci ingenio praeditus. -Justin.

Ver. 11. And the king of the south.] Ptolemaeus Philopator, so called, say some, per antiphrasin, because he killed his father. He slew also his both sister and wife Eurydice, and was otherwise very vicious, and yet victorious.

Even with the king of the north,] i.e., With Antiochus the Great, who was so called perhaps, saith one, {a} for undertaking much, and performing little.

And he shall set forth a great multitude.] Sixty-two thousand footmen and six thousand horsemen.

And the multitude.] Antiochus's army, himself hardly escaping with life through the deserts. {b}

{a} Pausan., lib. v.

{b} Spoliavisset regno Antiochum, si fortunam virtute iuvisset. -Justin.

Ver. 12. His heart shall be lifted up.] So that he shall slight his enemy, and not pursue his victory, but give himself up to a luxurious life. Vincere scis, Hannibal, victoria uti nescis, said that Roman general.

Ver. 13. For the king of the north.] Antiochus the Great.

Shall return,.] After Philopator's death, to fight against his young son and successor Epiphanes.

And shall set forth a multitude greater than the former.] Gathered out of the upper parts of Babylon. He called in the help also of Philip, king of Macedon, and other princes. His army is said to have consisted of three hundred thousand footmen, besides horses and elephants. {a}

And shall certainly come.] Heb., By coming he shall come, i.e., surely, swiftly, suddenly; but to small purpose.

And with much riches.] Gold, silver, purple, silks, ivory, as Florus {b} and Gellius {c} testify.

{a} Jerome.

{b} Lib. ii. cap. 8.

{c} Lib. v. cap. 5.

Ver. 14. And in those times there shall many stand up against the king of the south.] Many of the Jews who supplied Antiochus in this expedition of his against Egypt, both with men and other warlike provision. Howbeit various Jews, called here "robbers" {a} or refractories, fierce, furious, and desperate fellows, adhered to Ptolemy Epiphanes, who gave them permission to build a temple in Egypt, which was accordingly also done by Onias, not far from Memphis, upon pretence of fulfilling that prophecy, {#Isa 19:19} called here establishing the vision.

But they shall fall.] As they did afterwards by the Romans, who destroyed the Jews there in great multitudes, and burnt their mock temple.

{a} Effractores, praevaricatores.

Ver. 15. So the king of the north shall come,] i.e., Not the Romans, as some would have it, but Antiochus Great still. He had been foiled at Raphia, now he greatly prevaieth against the Egyptians. If we princes, said our Henry VII, shall take every occasion that is offered, the world shall never be quiet, but wearied with continual wars.

And the armies of the south shall not withstand.] Scopas, the Egyptian general, though very skilful and valiant, shall be beaten by Antiochus into Sidon, besieged there, and forced to yield, all the power of Egypt being not able to raise the siege and relieve Scopas. The battle is not always to the strong. {#Ec 9:11}

Ver. 16. And he shall stand in the glorious land.] Heb., The land of ornaments—that is, Judea, which, lying between these two potent princes, was perpetually afflicted, as grain is ground asunder lying between two heavy millstones. Now Judea is called the "glorious" or beautiful land, ^{a} not so much for the fertility thereof (Babylon was much more fertile), nor for the miracles done therein (many great works had been likewise done in Egypt), as for the sincere service of God there set up; this is the beauty and bulwark of any nation. Foreign writers have termed England, the fortunate island, the terra florida, the kingdom of God, the paradise of pleasure, &c. Plato commendeth the Attic country for this, that the inhabitants were αυτοχθονες—the right natives that grew out of it at first ^{b} -but especially for this, that it was θεοφιλης, a place that loved God, and was interchangeably beloved of God. ^{c} May that be evermore England's commendation!

Which by his hand shall be consumed.] God's Church goes to wreck, both by south and north; all the comfort is, that whether north or south wind blow on God's garden, they shall blow good to it at length. ^{#So 4:16}

^{a} In #Eze 20:6,15, it is called the comeliness of all countries.

^{b} ανθρωποι οκουν οι αυτοι αι.—Thucyd.

^{c} τυγχανει ουσα θεοφιλης.—Plato.

Ver. 17. He shall also set his face.] Antiochus longed sore to be lord of Egypt, and therefore undertook a third expedition against Epiphanes; but that not succeeding to his mind, he seweth the fox's skin to the lion's hide, and seeketh to get that by treachery which by open hostility he could not.

And upright ones with him.] Or, Equal conditions with him. He shall palliate his treachery with very fair pretences; he shall seem to do righteous things, drawing a fair glove over a foul hand; thus shall he do.

And he shall give him the daughter of women.] The fair Cleopatra, his beautiful daughter, filiam e mulieribus selectam; like as Saul gave Michal to David, to be a snare to him.

“Munera pulchra quidem mittis, sed mittis in hamo.”

- Martial.

Corrupting her.] Suborning her to make away her husband, Ptolemaeus Epiphanes. This was devilish policy, simulata necessitudo duplex simultas, but it took not.

But she shall not stand on his side, neither be for him.] As became a good wife, she clave to her husband; so did the before mentioned Michal, in whom, though we find no great store of religion—for both she had an image in the house, and afterwards mocked David for his devotion—yet nature had taught her to prefer a husband to a father.

Ver. 18. After this he shall turn his face unto the isles.] Missing of his design for Egypt, and losing also much in Asia Minor, which Epiphanes got of him by means of his Queen Cleopatra, Antiochus, as an enraged lion, falleth upon foreign countries, as Hellespont, Chersonesus, Euboea, Rhodes, Cyprus, Samos, Colophon, &c. He marcheth also with his army into Greece, being stirred up thereunto by Hannibal, who, being vanquished in Africa by Scipio, had fled to Antiochus into Asia, and there hatched what mischief he could against the Romans.

But a prince for his own behalf,] i.e., Scipio, the Roman consul; or, as some will, Marcus Acilius, their general.

Shall cause the reproach offered by him to cease,] i.e., Shall recover the countries that he had taken from the Roman State, and shall also drive back again, down his throat, those contumelies and opprobrious speeches that he had thrown out against the Romans; who afterwards overcame him thrice by sea and land, forced him to accept very hard conditions, shred him of a great part of his kingdom, and called him, in contempt, Antiochus, sometime the Great. {a}

{a} Liv., dec. 4, lib. xviii., Appian. in Syriac.

Ver. 19. Then he shall turn his face.] Not accepting the aforesaid hard conditions; till, beaten again by the Romans, he was forced so to do. He fled into the utmost parts of his kingdom of Syria, and there kept him in forts, not daring to wage war any more.

But he shall stumble and fall, and not be found.] He and his army shall be hewn in pieces by the rude rabble in the Elymeans' country, while he went about to rob the temple of their Jupiter Bolus. {a}

{a} Strabo, lib. xvi.

Ver. 20. Then shall stand up in his estate a raiser of taxes.] Heb., One that causeth an exactor to pass over, who shall gather no less sums of curses than of coin. This was Seleucus Philopator, son to Antiochus the Great, and his father's darling—whence also he had his surname—but not the people's darling, as Scipio was at Rome, whom they called Corculum, or sweet heart; for this Seleucus, king of Syria, being the Romans' tribute gatherer—to whom he was to pay, according to his father's agreement, a thousand talents by the year—he was hated of the people, and poisoned by Heliodorus, a great man about him, in favour of Antiochus Epiphanes, his brother and successor in the kingdom.

Ver. 21. And in his estate shall stand up a vile person.] This was his true title—as "wicked" was Haman's {#Es 7:6} -though he affected to be called Epiphanes, Illustrious or famous; and Josephus reports that the Samaritans, to curry favour with him when he tormented the Jews, styled him Antiochus, the mighty God. Oh, detestable!—surely that which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God; {#Lu 16:15} but the bramble thinketh it a goodly thing to reign, so doth not the vine and fig tree. {#Jud 9:8-15} A good man honoureth them that fear the Lord, but contemneth a vile person. {#Ps 15:4} Mr Foxe, when one asked him, saying, Do ye not remember such an honest, poor man, for whom you did something? Yes, said he, I forget lords and ladies to remember such. And again, when a great lord and wicked met him in the streets, and asked him, How do you, Mr Foxe? he said little. Do you not know me? said the great lord. No, not I, said Mr Foxe. I am such a one, said he. Sir, I desire, said Mr Foxe, to know none but Christ and him crucified.

To whom they shall not give the honour of the kingdom.] But he shall take it, whether the nobles will or not; and so might well have been called, as his father sometimes was, Antiochus Hierax, the hawk or puttock, for his swooping and ravaging.

But he shall come in peaceably.] Under pretence of a protector to his nephew Demetrius, as did our Richard III.

And shall obtain the kingdom by flatteries.] Winning men's hearts by presents, courtesies, and secret practices.

Ver. 22. And with the arms of a flood shall they be overflown.] The Egyptians shall, by the forces of Antiochus Epiphanes, who, in the minority of his sister Cleopatra's son, Ptolemy Philometor, invaded Egypt, and overthrew his two captains, Euleus and Leneus, as with a storm or flood.

Yea, also the prince of the covenant.] Tryphon, the chief contriver of a covenant between the two kings, after the former overthrow. He was removed by Antiochus, that himself might do what he wished in Egypt, when his nephew Philometor was yet a minor.

Ver. 23. He shall work deceitfully.] Outwitting the wisest among the Egyptians, who yet were held great politicians. See #Isa 19:11,13.

And shall become strong with a small people.] He shall come in, as protector and co-adjutor to his nephew Philometor, with a small number, lest the Egyptians should be frightened; but being thus gotten in, he shall play his pranks to some purpose.

Ver. 24. He shall enter peaceably, even upon the fattest places of the province,] i.e., Upon Memphis, in the very heart of the country.

And he shall do that which his fathers have not done,] i.e., Rob and spoil, as never any of his ancestors did before in Egypt.

And he shall scatter among them the prey.] Throwing handfuls of money among the Vulgate as he went along the streets; and all to ingratiate, and to steal away their hearts. {a} Absalom did the like at Jerusalem. {#2Sa 15:6}

And he shall forecast his devices against the strongholds.] By sowing dissension between Philometor and Physcon, his younger brother. The devil was as great a monster then as since, with his divide et impera, make division and get dominion.

{a} Ptole. Hypom., lib. i. and v.

Ver. 25. And he shall stir up his power and his courage.] Antiochus shall, himself being stirred up by the devil, that restless spirit, who continually maketh ado in the world. Fuit etiam Antiochus ingenio inquieto, versatili, turbido, vago et vario: unde multa machinatus est, pauca ad felicem exitum perduxit. Howbeit, in this second expedition against Egypt, he prospered.

Ver. 26. Yea, they that feed of the portion of his meat.] His own courtiers, captains, and pensioners, corrupted by Antiochus, betrayed Philometor. See #/Apc 1Ma 1:16-20. In trust I have oft found treason, said Queen Elizabeth.

Ver. 27. And both these kings' hearts shall be to do mischief.] Philometor being beaten, shall seek agreement, give great gifts to Antiochus, and feast him, sed reconciliatione vulpina, but with a fox-like and feigned amity, each of them still retaining their ancient hatreds. "Burning lips and a wicked heart are like a potsherd covered with silver dross." {#Pr 26:23}

And they shall speak lies.] This is ordinary with the wicked; {#Ps 62:9} but it is the property of the godly man to "speak the truth from his heart." {#Ps 15:2}

For yet the end shall be at the time appointed,] i.e., The end of those wars shall be at the time when God seeth good, and hath predetermined it.

Ver. 28. Then shall he return into his land with great riches.] But little content. Gain, when it is either the "Mammon of unrighteousness," or "wages of wickedness," is true loss.

And his heart shall be against the holy covenant,] i.e., Against the Jews, God's covenanters, and against the true religion. The Church is haeres crucis, saith Luther: the truth goes seldom without a scratched face.

Ver. 29. At the time appointed.] After two years.

And come toward the south.] Toward Egypt. {#/RAPC 1Ma 1:29}

But it shall not be as the former.] Expedition, #Da 11:25.

Or as the latter.] Mentioned #Da 11:40. God oft crosseth the wicked in the height of their hopes. {#Job 20:6}

Ver. 30. For the ships of Chittim shall come against him,] i.e., Publius Popilius, the Roman envoy, shall come in Italian or Grecian ships, and shall, in the name of the senate and people of Rome, command Antiochus to depart with his army out of Egypt, and that forthwith. {a} So true found Antiochus that of the poet,

“ Omne, sub regno graviore, regnum est.”

Therefore he shall be grieved, and return.] And reck his wrath upon the poor Church of God, turning his rage against the Jews.

And have intelligence with them that forsake the covenant.] None are so dangerous and desperate enemies to the truth as apostates and renegades, such as were here, Jason, Menelaus, &c., {#/RAPC 2Ma 4:7-10,23-28} who privily packed with Antiochus against the city and people.

{a} Joseph., lib. xii. cap. 6; Liv., dec. 5, lib. v.; Appian. in Syr.; Justin.

Ver. 31. And arms shall stand on his part,] i.e., Antiochus's princes and commanders, whom he sent to spoil Jerusalem; such as were Philip the Phrygian, Andronicus, Apollonius, Bacchides, &c., who made havoc of God's people, and revelled in their ruins.

And they shall place the abomination of desolation.] The abominable idol of Jupiter Olympius. The like whereunto was done here in England in those Marian times, of abhorred memory, which yet lasted no longer than those of Antiochus, scil., five or six years.

Ver. 32. And such as do wickedly against the covenant.] Apostates sin not common sins, as Korah and his complices died not common deaths. Forsakers of the covenant {#Da 11:30} will soon become wicked doers against the covenant, as here, till they become altogether filthy. {#Ps 53:3 1Pe 2:20,22 Mt 12:43,45 Lu 9:62}

“— non debet aratro, Dignum opus exercens, vultum in sua terga referre.”
- Sedulius.

But the people that do know their God.] The faithful Hassideans and zealots, who know and worship their God aright, these shall persevere, and overcome all allurements and fears of the world; Irritamenta et terriculamenta.

Ver. 33. And they that underaand, &c.] God shall provide, in the worst of times, that his people shall have teachers and faithful monitors. I find in the registers (and wonder at it, saith Mr Foxe) ^{a} that, in Queen Mary's days, one neighbour resorting to, and conferring with another, eftsoons, with a few words of their first or second talk, did win and turn their minds to that wherein they desired to persuade them touching the truth of God's Word and sacraments.

Yet they shall fall by the sword, and by flame.] The instructors especially shall. Of this persecution the apostle seemeth to speak. {#Heb 11:35,37}

^{a} Acts and Mon.

Ver. 34. They shall be holpen with a little help.] With the valiant Asmonians or Maccabees, who were but a handful, and yet did great exploits against the Antiochians; so did the Hussites in Bohemia against the Pontificians. But why were they helped with a little help? That, through weaker means, they might see God's greater strength.

But many shall cleave to them with flatteries.] So did the false Samaritans. See on #Da 11:21. And so the Donatists went to the Goths, when the Arians prevailed. Hypocrites will not sail in a storm; something they will do for God, but little or nothing it is they will suffer.

Ver. 35. And some of them of understanding shall fall.] Depth of divine knowledge, and height of holiness, is no target against persecution; the best fall under it soonest. None out of hell have ever suffered more than saints.

To try them.] As hard weather tries what health: hang heavy weights on rotten boughs, and they suddenly break. Withered leaves fall off in a strong wind; not so the green, that have sap.

And to purge, and to make them white.] As foul and stained clothes are whitened by lying abroad in cold frosty nights. Black soap maketh white clothes; so, said that martyr, doth the black cross help us to more whiteness, if God strike with his battledores. {a} {b} You know the vessel, before it be made bright, said John Charles the martyr, in a letter to Mr Philpot, another martyr, is soiled with oil and other things, that it may scour the better. Oh happy be you, that you be now in this scouring house, for shortly you shall be set upon the celestial shelf as bright as angels, {c} &c. Refiners of sugar, saith another author, {d} taking sugar out of the same chest, some thereof they melt but once, other again and again; not that it hath more dross in it, but because they would have it more refined: so dealeth the Lord with his best children, &c.

{a} Acts and Mon.

{b} A beetle or wooden 'bat' used in washing, also (when made cylindrical) for smoothing out or 'mangling' linen clothes; hence also applied to similarly shaped instruments, e.g. the paddle of a canoe, a utensil for inserting loaves into an oven, or glassware into the kiln, etc. ED

{c} Acts and Mon., 1743.

{d} Dr Goodwin.

Ver. 36. And the king shall do according to his will.] In Judea he shall, though in Egypt he could not, because the Romans trumped in his way, {#Da 11:30} put a stop to his rage there. But the Jews were looked upon by the proud Romans as a despicable people; and of the God of the Jews Cicero {a} speaketh basely, not holding him worthy to be compared with Bacchus or Venus, &c.

And he shall exalt himself, &c.] A type and picture of the Pope of Rome. {#2Th 2:4}

Till the indignation be accomplished.] Till God have avenged the quarrel of his covenant, and the set time of deliverance be come.

{a} Orat. Pro. Flacce.

Ver. 37. Neither shall he regard the God of his fathers.] He shall disannul his own ancient religion, caring neither for the old mumpsimus, {a} nor the new sumpsimus, {b} as they say, but showing himself to be a rank atheist. See #/RAPC 1Ma 1:43.

Nor the desire of women,] scil., In an honest lawful way of matrimony; but be addicted to vagrant lust, yea, and to the sin against nature with women, as some sense it, a Deo prohibito et perdito, in which case the Turkish women, when so abused by their husbands (those filthy beasts), may sue a divorce; which they do by taking off their shoes before the judge, and holding them the soles upward, but speaking nothing, for the unnameableness of the fact. {c}

Nor regard any god.] See my Commonplace of Atheism.

{a} One who obstinately adheres to old ways, in spite of the clearest evidence that they are wrong; an ignorant and bigoted opponent of reform. (ED)

{b} A correct expression taking the place of an incorrect but popular one (mumpsimus). (ED)

{c} Sir Henry Blount's Voyage into the Levant.

Ver. 38. But in his estate shall he honour the God of forces.] Or, As for the Almighty God, in his seat he shall honour, yea, he shall honour a god whom his fathers knew not, &c.; that is, in God's holy temple at Jerusalem Antiochus shall set up Jupiter Olympius, who was none of the dii Syri; for the Syrians worshipped Apollo, Diana, Atargatis, as Strabo {a} testifieth. See #/RAPC 2Ma 6:2.

Shall he honour.] This doubling of the word seemeth to show the angel's indignation at the indignity of the fact. See the like #Ge 49:4.

{a} Geog., lib. xvi.

Ver. 39. Thus shall he do in the most strong holds.] Heb., In the fortresses of munitions, i.e., both in the temple (called elsewhere, #Da 11:31, a stronghold), and in the places of defence near unto the temple, where he set a garrison, to force the people to worship his idols.

Whom he shall acknowledge and increase with glory.] Or, Those whom he shall acknowledge (to be favourers and furtherers of his abominable idolatry), those he "shall increase with glory"; he shall raise and prefer them, as he did Jason, Menelaus, &c.

And, he shall cause them to rule over many.] In praestantes illos, so Piscator rendereth it; over the godly Jews, God's Rabbis.

And he shall divide the land,] scil., Of Judea.

For gain.] Heb., For a price. Sic omnia Romae venalia. All things are saleable and soluble at Rome.

Ver. 40. And at the time of the end.] The year before his death.

Shall the king of the south.] Ptolemy Philometer.

And the king of the north.] Antiochus's third expedition into Egypt, {see #Da 11:39} in favour of Physcon.

And shall overflow,] i.e., Victoriously overturn Egypt.

Ver. 41. He shall enter also into the glorious land.] Judea, {as #Da 11:16} but for no good. In Greece they say, Where the Grand Seignior once setteth his foot, there groweth no more grass.

But they shall escape.] Because they shall side with him.

Ver. 42. He shall stretch forth his hand also.] He shall be very victorious toward his latter end, that he may be the riper for ruin; fatted ware are but fitted for destruction.

Ver. 43. Shall be at his steps,] i.e., Obey him as their captain.

Ver. 44. But tidings out of the east, &c.] It is seldom seen that God alloweth to the greatest darlings of the world a perfect contentment; but something or other they must have to trouble them still.

Ver. 45. And he shall plant the tabernacles of his palace,] i.e., He shall pitch his tent-royal (in token of full power given to his captains Lysias and the rest) in Emmaus, near to Jerusalem, to keep the Jews in subjection. {#/RAPC 1Ma 3:40 4:3}

Between the seas.] The Dead Sea and the Medditerranean Sea, which are the bounds of Judea, called here the glorious holy mountain. {a}

Yet he shall come to his end.] A loathsome and lamentable one. See #/RAPC 1Ma 6:8 2Ma 9:5-12 not so much because he would have spoiled the temple of Diana, but because he did spoil the temple at Jerusalem.

{a} Polyb.; Joseph., lib. xii. cap. 12.

Chapter 12

Ver. 1. And at that time,] i.e., In the last days, and toward the end of the world; for in this chapter seemeth to be set forth the state of the Church in the last times, that it shall be most afflicted; yet she shall be fully delivered by Christ's second coming to judgment. Cyprian was in like sort wont to comfort his friends thus: Venit Antichristus, sed superveniet Christus; Antichrist cometh; but then Christ will come after him, and overcome him.

Shall Michael stand up,] i.e., The Lord Christ (that Prince of angels, and protector of his people), not a created angel, much less Michael Servetus, that blasphemous heretic, burned at Geneva, who was not afraid to say, as Calvin reporteth it, se esse Michaelem illum, Ecclesiae custodem, that he was that Michael, the Church's guardian. David George, also another black-mouthed heretic, said that he was the one David foretold by the prophets, {#Jer 30:9 Eze 34:23 Ho 3:5} and that he was confident that the whole world would in time submit to him.

Which standeth for the children of thy people.] For all the Israel of God, to whom Christ is a fast friend, and will be while "the government is upon his shoulder." {#Isa 9:6}

And there shall be a time of trouble.] To the Jews by the Romans (after Christ's ascension, #Mt 24:21), to the Christians by the Romists.

And at that time thy people shall be delivered.] The elect, both Jews and Gentiles, shall be secured and saved.

Every one that shall be found written in the book.] Called the "writing or catalogue of the house of Israel," {#Eze 13:9} and the "Lamb's book of life," {#Re 21:27} which is nothing else but conscriptio electorum in mente divina, saith Lyra, the writing of the elect in the divine mind or knowledge; such are said to be written among the living in Jerusalem. {#Isa 4:3}

Ver. 2. And many of them that sleep in the dust.] "Many" for all; {as #Ro 5:18,19} these are said to sleep, which denoteth the immortality of the soul and the resurrection of the body. (The soul liveth in the sleep of death, as it doth in the sleep of the body in this life). And this the poor Jews, when to lose land and life for the truth, are here seasonably and plainly told of (amidst other things that are but darkly delivered) to bear up their sinking spirits. Awake they shall as out of of a sweet sleep, those that are good, and then be full of God's image. {#Ps 17:15} The wicked also shall "come forth," but by another principle, and for another purpose; they shall come out of their graves like filthy toads against this terrible storm, &c.

Some to everlasting life.] Which is here first mentioned in the Old Testament. See #Mt 25:45 Joh 5:29.

And some to shame and everlasting contempt.] Christ shall shame them in that ample amphitheatre, and doom them to eternal destruction. Gravissima poenarum pudor est, saith Chrysostom. Oh, when Christ shall upbraid reprobates, and say, Ego vos pavi, lavi, vestivi, &c., which way will they look? or who shall say for them? They shall look then upon him whom they have pierced and lament, but all too late, οἴκονται, κοῦνονται; they shall be sore ashamed of their sinful practices, which shall all be written in their foreheads; and this shall be as a bodkin at their hearts, that ever they turned their backs upon Christ's bleeding embracements, while they refused to be reformed, hated to be healed.

Ver. 3. And they that be wise.] And in addition do what they can do to wisen others to salvation, as all wise ones will; for goodness is diffusive of itself, and would have others to share with it. Charity is no churl.

Shall shine as the brightness of the firmament.] A good amends for their present sufferings. {#Da 11:33 Ro 8:18} Solomon allowed little or no considerable reward to his workmen, {#So 8:12} but Christ doth. For they shall shine as the firmament; yea, as the stars; yea, as the sun in his strength; {#Mt 13:43} yea, as Christ himself shineth, they shall appear with him in glory. {#Col 3:4} Their souls shall shine through their bodies as the candle doth through the lantern; their bodies shall also be so lightsome and transparent, saith Aquinas, that all the veins, humours, nerves, and bowels shall be seen as in a glass; for so the light pierceth the firmament and stars. Let us therefore keep these bodies of ours clean and free of filth, that they may be fit vessels and receptacles of such a transcendent glory.

And they that turn many to righteousness.] Heb., That justify many; scil., Ministerially, as instruments in Christ's hand; for "we preach Christ," yea, we give what we preach; "we give the knowledge of salvation for the remission of sins"; {#Lu 1:17} we deliver men from hell; {#Job 33:24} we save the souls of them that hear us. {#1Ti 4:16}

As the stars for ever and ever.] What a glorious place is heaven then! Festinemus ad clarissimam patriam: corrigamus mores et moras, &c. What though Christ's ministers be here slighted and slurred? they shall one day shine as stars, yea, the meanest of them, velut inter stellas luna minores. What then the Doctores seraphici? Ver. 4. But thou, O Daniel, shut up the words.] Since the full understanding of them is reserved to later times, and event will prove the best interpreter, as it doth in all prophecies, which are as riddles till accomplished; {a} and men must meanwhile be content with a learned ignorance. But what meant Jachiddes the Jew to give us this gloss upon the text, God sealed up the time of the coming of the Messiah, revealing it only to Daniel; and that his coming might be accelerated by their deserts, like as for their sins, which are many, it is retarded? He concludeth well, howsoever: God will one day give us a clear vision—viz., when he shall bring back our captivity, then shall we understand things as they are.

Even to the time of the end.] The time appointed. {#Da 12:9}

Many shall run to and fro.] For increase of divine knowledge they shall spare for no pains, care, or cost, as the Queen of Sheba, the Ethiopian eunuch, &c. See #Pr 18:1 Ac 17:11,12. Increase of knowledge is promised only upon our industry, and it is especially promised to these later times, {#Joe 2:28} wherein we find to be (as in our climate) much light, little heat; our heads are so big (like children that have the rickets) that the whole body fareth the worse for it. Bullinger thus interpreteth the text, that toward the end of the world men shall run to and fro, being certain of nothing, but distracted in opinion, variis se adiungent sectis, {b} they shall join themselves to divers sects. They shall run to and fro, saith another expositor, velut canes famelici, as hungry dogs, and there shall be much knowledge in the world; that is, there shall be innumerable opinions and sects abroad, wherewith many being infected shall be at no certainty in the matters of salvation. For the confirmation, therefore, and comfort of the last ages of the world, wherein these things shall befall, "shut up the words," and "seal the book."

{a} Omnis prophetia priusquam compleatur, aenigma est. -Irenaeus.

{b} Zegedin.

Ver. 5. Then I Daniel looked.] As being as yet unsatisfied.

And, behold, there stood other two.] Angels, on each bank of the river Tigris, by whose interrogation Daniel is further resolved about the vision.

Ver. 6. And one said,] i.e., An angel inquisitive about the affairs of the Church, for Daniel's further information.

To the man clothed in linen.] Of whom see #Da 10:5.

Which was upon the waters.] See #Da 8:16.

How long shall it be to the end of these wonders?] i.e., The forementioned mysteries, viz., concerning the saints' sufferings, the end of the world, the coming of Christ, the resurrection of the dead, life and death everlasting.

Ver. 7. And I heard the man.] The man Christ Jesus.

When he held up his right hand and his left hand.] Assuring and assevering the matter with both hands earnestly.

That it shall be for a time, and times and a half,] i.e., For a time most certain with God, and by him determined, but to us uncertain and unknown. Broughton thinketh that this term of "three years and a half" showeth the term of Christ's persecution in the days of his flesh, which was just so many years, But there is more in it than so.

See #Re 6:11, a parallel text, and such, like glasses set one against another, do cast a mutual light.

When he shall have accomplished to scatter the power.] When the Church shall be at the greatest under, when the number of the elect shall be consummated, and they sorely afflicted by the devil and his agents, then shall Christ appear to their relief, as it were, out of an engine. See #2Th 2:7-12 1Ti 4:1-3 Re 6:12-17

Ver. 8. And I heard, but I understood not.] This he ingenuously confesseth, for the best know but in part. {#1Co 13:12} And if any man thinketh that he knoweth ought, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know. {#1Co 8:2} Let this be noted by such as profess to know, beyond the periphery of human knowledge, all that is knowable. Any created understanding is but, as Aeschylus saith of fire stolen by Prometheus, παντεχνου πυρος σελας, a spark of the all-wise God's fire. The prophets themselves understood not some things that were shown unto them without a further light from the Father of lights, whose alone it is to enlighten both organ and object, as Plato {a} also could say.

What shall be the end of these things?] An end he much desired, and the angel for him. {#Da 12:6} But men must have patience, and wait God's end. "Ye have need of patience or tarryance," saith the apostle, {#Heb 10:36} "that after ye have done the will of God (and suffered it too, grievous though it be for the present) ye may receive the promise." Good men find it often more easy to bear evil than to wait till the promised good be enjoyed.

Ver. 9. And he said, Go thy way, Daniel.] Quiesce, tibi satis esto -q.d., Though dearly beloved, yet of some things thou must be content to be ignorant. It should suffice thee to be of God's court, though not altogether of his council. See #Da 12:13. There is a laudable and learned ignorance, as of unnecessaries, of impossibles, or of unprofitables; such as are the term of our lives, the end of the world, the reprobation of others, &c.

For the words are closed up,] viz., Till future ages, which are more concerned in them, and till which these things shall be concealed.

Ver. 10. Many shall be purified, and made white, &c.,] q.d., It is enough for thee to know, and that I should now tell thee, quales sint futuri homines postremi saeculi, what kind of folk there shall be towards the end of the world. Some shall be good people, and they shall meet with hard measure, but all shall be for the best unto them in the end. See #Da 11:35. Others shall be as bad, and so desperately set upon sinning that they shall mind nothing else—no, not when these prophecies are fulfilled—but be "destroyed for lack of knowledge." {#Ho 4:6} Infatuati seducentur, et seducti iudabuntur; being infatuated they shall be seduced, and being seduced they shall be judged, as Augustine's note is on #2Th 2:10.

Ver. 11. And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away,] sc., By Antiochus, as hath been before said; and with the knowledge whereof I would have thee to rest satisfied.

There shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days.] Which are the three years and a half mentioned before, saith Diodate, with thirteen days over, for some unknown reason. The wonderful numberer hath all in numerato. The Russians use to say in a difficult question, God, and our great duke, know all this. The Jews in like case say, Messiah, when he comes, will tell us all things we desire to be informed of.

Ver. 12. But blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days.] Here are forty-five days more than in the former number; and probably they were, from the restoration of God's service until the death of Antiochus—a blessed time to God's poor persecuted people, as was here the death of Queen Mary—or else until some other signal mercy, as the victory that Judas Maccabaeus and his brethren had about that time over the Edomites, Ammonites, and Moabites, who thought to root Israel quite out.

Ver. 13. But go thou thy way.] Here Daniel to his great comfort hath a fair and favourable dismissal out of this life before those great clashings and confusions should come which had been foreshown to him. So Augustine and Pareus died a little before Hippo and Heidelberg were taken.

Till the end be.] Whenever it shall be, sooner or later, thou shalt be sure to awake out of the dust of death unto everlasting life. {as #Da 12:2}

Yea, thou shalt "shine as the stars for ever and ever." {#Da 12:3} All that thou hast to do now is, to prepare for such an end, and to wait till thy change shall come, comforting thyself against death with the hope of a blessed resurrection.

For thou shalt rest.] Thy soul shall rest in Abraham's bosom, thy body in the grave as in a bed of down, until the resurrection of the just. Mors aerumnarum requies rest from death of affliction, was Chaucer's motto.

And stand in the lot,] i.e., In thine own order, {#1Co 15:23} and in that degree of heavenly glory which shall be given thee as thy lot—in allusion to the promised land, divided among the Israelites by lot—and as the reward of a faithful prophet, instrumental to the good of many, who shall bless God for thee throughout all eternity.

“ *Ipse quidem studui bene de pietate mereri:
Sed quicquid potui, gratia, Christe, tun est.
Quid sum? Nil: Quis sum? Nullus: Sed gratia Christi Quod sum, quod vivo, quodque laboro, facit.* ”
